"...When a long Train of Abuses and Usurpations, pursuing Invariably the same Object, evinces a Design to reduce them under absolute Despotism, It is their Right, it is their Duty, to throw off such Government, and to provide new Guards for their future Security." While the people wait for answers, the politicians argue about the best method of looting the people without bringing on a political revolution, or worse. Should the confiscation be accomplished by hiking taxes, or by massive deficits, or by a combination of both? The people's best answer, if they can wait and endure that long, is to know what to do in the Fall of 1986 when all of the Representatives and one third of the Senators must seek re-election. But if the people cannot be alerted, that long expected national bankruptcy seems inevitable.

WRANGLE OVER WRANGEL AND THE WEATHER WAR

There had been so many unusual phenomena that were never explained. On the night of May 15, 1972 over Western Alaska there was a sudden flash of daylight intensity which lasted several seconds. It was followed by a second similar flash. Observers said they changed color from blue to green to white, then faded to orange or faint red. There were reports of at least four similar incidents in 1975. In December 1977 and January 1978 there was a series of aerial blasts or booms along the East Coast. On December 2 at 10 a.m. a boom was heard off South Carolina. At 3:45 p.m. same day, a similar boom was heard off the coast of New Jersey and Connecticut. On December 15 five blasts off the South Carolina coast. Such unexplained explosions followed on December 21, 22, and January 13. Then on November 16, 1982 five mysterious morning booms within a 39-minute period were heard over Delaware. During this time in other parts of the world, mysterious lights were spotted, earthquakes occurred, weather patterns were unusual. On September 28, 1983 United Press International reported that mysterious smoke plumes had been seen in the Arctic Ocean in the vicinity of Bennett Island. The report stated that "Despite close study of space photographs of 'explosive events' on a remote Soviet island off Siberia, intelligence experts have been unable to conclude if the blasts were man-made, military sources said. Mysterious plumes of smoke, one rising almost 4 miles into the air and another that trailed for more than 150 miles, were spotted in February, March and April by U.S. weather satellites, operated by the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, as they passed over Bennett Island....Several years ago, a U.S. satellite spotted 'an event' near the Antarctic, south of South Africa." Bennett Island is located in the East Siberian Sea, northwest of Wrangel Island, which is an American-owned island taken over by Soviet Russia, apparently with the permission of the U.S. State Department. There are known to be concentration camps on the island and mysterious installations have been noted from the air.

In our local daily, The Post, of March 3, 1985 there was a belated story by Andrew Alexander of the Cox News Service. Dated Washington, the article began: "As they watched it rise toward the heavens through the moonlit night, it assumed a terrifying likeness to a mushroom cloud. It was last April 9 off the northeastern coast of Japan and no less than four airline pilots saw it erupt like a nuclear explosion, billowing to a height of 60,000 feet and expanding to a diameter of 200 miles - all within a span of just two minutes. Then it inexplicably disappeared, leaving scientists unable to fathom what it was, where it came from or where it went. But almost as baffling now, a year later, U.S. government agencies have shown only scant interest in finding out. Spokesmen for the Defense Department, the Federal Aviation Administration and the Department of Energy all say they have conducted only cursory investigations. The National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration has a satellite photograph of what it believes was the mystery cloud, but officials report that no one has subjected it to computer enhancement, which might reveal more about the cloud's origin. Nor has the Central Intelligence Agency shown any interest...It was of more than passing interest to Capt. Charles McDade that night last April when he spotted it out the cockpit of his Japan Air Lines Boeing 747 cargo jet enroute from Tokyo to Anchorage....Mike Howe, captain of a Flying Tiger Lines cargo flight about 20 minutes behind, also saw the cloud and monitored McDade's Mayday alert. But according to an FAA investigator's report, Howe's radar gave 'no indication of the cloud.' Immediate speculation was that a Soviet nuclear submarine, possibly on maneuvers from its base near Valdivostok, had accidentally exploded. But that theory was scotched when no radioactivity was found and because Japanese monitors picked up no unusual shock waves, according to a U.S. Defense Department intelligence official.

"Thomas Bearden, a retired Army Lieutenant Colonel and nuclear engineer, is convinced it was caused by an advanced Soviet weapon using electromagnetic beams. By crossing the beams (scalar waves) while generating 'negative energy' from a transmitting station thousands of miles away, he believes it is possible to 'withdraw' energy and direct it elsewhere. 'You wouldn't have a flash,' said the 54-year-old Bearden, who now works for a defence contracting firm in Huntsville, Ala. 'Instead, you would have a cooling effect in the area where the beams are crossed and it would produce something like an instantaneous condensation above the ocean that would suck up a lot of moisture and would look like a big mushroom cloud.'..." Bearden's explanation of how the Soviets are doing this is quite technical, but as we understand it, two or more very powerful transmitters transmitting "negative energy" electromagnetic (scalar) waves are necessary. When their beams cross, energy can be sucked up, directed elsewhere, thus creating most unusual weather conditions, earthquakes, tornadoes, closing down power plants, causing radio interference, etc. The extremely low (ELF) frequencies involved can also create "standing waves" which can, among other things, redirect and change the course of air streams, thus causing the kinds of weather we've been experiencing for the past seven years in the United States, as well as earthquakes, tornadoes, plumes, mushroom clouds, booms and bursts, and other things that have not been explained by government authorities.

You will recall that, for the past seven years, people have been saying each year, "This is the worst winter we ever had." Arid conditions in Africa have contributed toward one of the worst periods of starvation ever experienced in recent years in that continent. And in Europe and the United States, weather has been most unusual. On May 27, 1983 we wrote: "Spring weather in the middle of winter, winter weather in the middle of spring, torrential rains, floodings, tornadoes, earthquakes; you name it, we've had it." Then to bring us up to date, on Tuesday, March 5, 1985, The Associated Press reported: "A real nasty storm virtually shut down the Upper Midwest yesterday, as up to 28 inches of wind-driven snow closed airports and highways." 13 people were reported killed, thousands stranded, schools, businesses and government offices closed from the Dakotas to Michigan. In other parts of the country there were floods, spots where rain had not fallen for months. And, there was a disastrous earthquake in Chile.

Is there a connection between bad weather, mushroom clouds, smoke plumes, booms and bursts of energy, and the wrangle over Wrangel Island? Well, Thomas A. Bearden, previously mentioned, is an expert on the subject. He has studied and helped apply some of Nikola Tesla's theories, knows much about what the Soviets are doing in this connection, has written several books on the subject, one of the latest of his booklets being titled "Star Wars Now! The Bohm-Aharonov Effect, Scalar Interferometry, and Soviet Weaponization." (For further information write Tesla Book Co., 1580 Magnolia Ave., Millbrae, CA 94030). During a lengthy radio interview conducted by talk-show host William Jenkins, Col. Beardon discussed the Soviet development of Tesla weapons, including their use for weather control. Slightly edited for purposes of brevity and continuity, we quote a part of that interview. Col. Beardon is speaking: "I want to point out what the latest thing was that the Soviets have done for us. Here's what appears to have happened. Just before the death of Brezhnev there started a whole series of micro-air quakes, and micro-

THE WRANGEL WRANGLE

Public Statement in 1978 by Young Americans for Freedom, titled:
"Wrangel Island: The Chronology of a Polar Panama".

At the Young Americans for Freedom National Convention in New York a resolution was posed by 500 delegates requesting President Carter to deal with a training base for foreign espionage agents operated by the Organization for Counter-Infiltration by the Soviet Union, on Wrangel Island, Alaska.

* * * * *

The following was transcribed from the tape of a radio broadcast made in 1978 by the eminent Dr. Stewart McBirnie who presides over a large church in Glendale, CA, is a noted author, commentator, researcher, and an occasional consultant to the United States Congress.

By 1920, Stefannson became worried that the new Soviet State, on orders from Moscow, might try to take Wrangel Island.

On April 21, 1924, Stefannson sold Wrangel Island to the Lomen Bros. Co., of Nome, Alaska.

On May 13, 1924, Secretary of State Charles Evans Hughes declared that the Lomen Bros. were the owners of the island.

On August 20, 1924, the Soviet Gunboat, October, armed with cannon and soldiers, landed, evicted the Americans and kidnapped various people.

On February 18, 1930, U.S. Attorney General William Mitchell acknowledged that the Lomen Bros. Co. was the owner of Wrangel Island, and that the Soviet occupation was in violation of international law.

In 1939, the Department of the Navy was planning to build a naval air station on Wrangel Island in order to protect the Philippines from an attack by Japan; but Secretary of State Cordell Hull did not want to bring up the dispute with the USSR at that time, so the idea was tabled.

On February 2, 1973, the Subcommittee to Investigate the Administration of Internal Security Laws, of the Committee of the Judiciary, U.S. Senate, discovered that the Soviets were already operating a special KGB camp for training of foreign espionage agents, as well as having established three concentration camp zones for torturing Soviet political prisoners on Wrangel Island.

On August 27, 1974, at a meeting in Moscow, the US and the USSR wrote up a protocol which, if approved by the Department of State, would grant the Soviet Union the formal use of Wrangel Island, Alaska without going to the United States Congress for its approval.

On September 19, 1974, at 10:30 p.m. in the Westward Hotel, Anchorage, Alaska, the approved protocol was signed by V. Denisov for the USSR and Ronald O. Skoog and Harold T. Jorgenson for the United States.

On November 24, 1974, at Vladivostok, USSR, President Gerald Ford, at the direction of Secretary of State Henry Kissinger, approved the above protocol.

On December 12, 1974, at a meeting in Moscow, Russell Train signed for the United States Government a memorandum in the field of environmental protection which included the protocol signed at Anchorage on September 19, 1974; and the memorandum was also signed by Y. Israel for the government of the USSR.

On April 14, 1975, in a transfer ceremony at the Bethel, Alaska Airport the formal use of Wrangel Island was given to the Soviet Union by the United States Government. (Please note that the use, not the possession of Wrangel Island was given the USSR, and this without the consent and approval of the U.S. Senate. And this protocol involved the one island, not the other islands and the oil-rich seabed surrounding same, which now is said to belong to the USSR. And at the present time the State Department is discussing the formal give-away of this Alaskan property. We trust this will conclude this wrangle over Wrangle.

earthquakes and micro-quakes of all kinds. All across the country they started in various places. They were up around Washington and Boston. They've been for some time off the coast of Florida. They were in Alabama, Mississippi, up in Michigan, over in California, upstate Washington, and so forth, at odd places here and there, throughout the nation. What apparently they (the Soviets) were doing with two or more very powerful transmitters, was putting an interference pattern over the United States or all across North America. Now, the underground net just about went bananas because, all of a sudden, they started picking up transmissions at various cities all over the country. And these transmissions were up around 40 megahertz and they were using some of the ELF that's known to be psycho-active against human beings. It's like a big square checkerboard had been placed across the United States. And, in the center of each of those squares it's just exactly like you had a transmitter sitting there, because energy is produced and maintained at the frequency and with the modulations on it they wish. And it's coming from the transmitters in Russia. Now what this means is that there are a set of virtual and invisible transmitters all across the US. It's just as if the Russians had been permitted to come in here and build physical equipment. But there isn't anything physical sitting on the ground to transmit the energy. But you can get the effects, nonetheless. Now I think they finished this thing just at the beginning of spring (in 1983). That's when all the quakes began to subside and it looked like they had it adjusted and, as you know, coincidence or what, we got the worst weather we ever heard of shortly thereafter with huge dips that the jetstreams actually made. They bent down from California, they swung down through Texas, swung across Louisiana, over through Alabama, then bent back up northward to roar up the mountain chain of the east coast. And so, we had the most abnormal weather we've had in something between forty and a hundred years. And the most destructive weather. And there is a good possibility that that, or a good portion of that, was due to the Russians tampering with the weather with a net they'd finished adjusting all across the U.S. (In Washington) they think that's a bit far out and a little too hard to believe. But they're coming around. They're going to find out what's being done in the laboratories ... those mechanisms that have been produced in the laboratory. They're for real. They work....A more definitive paper on this overt weather engineering over North America is in preparation." (Unquote).

Col. Bearden is one of a group of scientists and engineers who are convinced that the USSR is far ahead of the US in the development of "Tesla War Weapons", including the Weather War Weapon which he has described. If this be true, it also is true that the primary purpose is not to destroy but to control, and the Soviets could not have done it on their own. They received abundant help from the US. On June 19, 1977 the world's largest electromagnet, essential for the transmission of "scalar waves", was flown from Chicago to Moscow in a U.S. Air Force C-5 Galaxy. A $13 million computer known as Cyber 76, designed for "weather research", was slipped into Russia despite Congressional protests. It is interesting that this "weather war aid" to the USSR began immediately after Secretary of State Cyrus Vance, on May 18, 1977, signed a formal agreement with the USSR not to use weather modification as a weapon in time of war. We apparently lived up to the agreement, the USSR had no intention of doing so, and our own "secret government" aided and abetted in its violation. As someone said, our real enemies are not in Moscow and our real friends are not in Washington.

THE DESIRE TO BE DECEIVED

Said Dara Kerr, 10, a fifth-grader in Boulder, Colorado: "I thought there must be something wrong with being president of Russia. They keep on dying when they become president, maybe because so many people hate them." Noting that a new generation was coming into power in the USSR a former undersecretary of state said: "We've got to be very careful to underscore that they're all cut from the same cloth. We tend to give too much emphasis to a new face or a new style." Both the observation and the warning should be heeded. But if the media are correct, and they are now and then if it's planned that way, the people of the United States are far more excited and pleased about the appointment of Mikhail Gorbachev as the new secretary general of the Communist Party of the USSR than were the people of that collectivist empire. In the USSR there was little excitement at the Nomenklatura level (the Soviet aristocracy). Naming new communist party secretary generals had become something of a habit. Brezhnev to Andropov to Chernenko to Gorbachev in less than three years makes it something of a commonplace. So the Soviet elite was well prepared to make the transfer fast and comparatively unpretentious. Chernenko's death was announced within two hours of its happening. Less than six hours later a new secretary general of the communist party had been elected. And this would take some doing. 320 members of the Central Committee were scattered throughout the Soviet Republics. They had to be called together to vote for their new leader. Likewise unprecedented was the funeral that was held just two days after the death. There are said to be 18 million communist party members in the USSR. That they had another new leader may have seemed important to them. But for the rest of the millions of the proletariat, they probably couldn't have cared less. The secretary general of the communist party was dead; long live the secretary general of the communist party. So what? They'd still have the same old struggle to feed, clothe and find living space for their families while keeping themselves out of trouble with the domestic arm of the KGB. Whether it was Gorbachev, or any other of the eleven-man Politburo that really runs the USSR, would make little difference to the proletariat that suffers the never-ending dictatorship. The only exciting thing about the change-over was the fact that a funeral procession was held and some of the workers in Moscow were given a brief vacation from work so they could watch the parade. Also unusual was the fact that the Soviet delegation in Geneva was told not to come to the funeral, but stay there and meet with the U.S. delegates and talk about treaties.

Here in the United States, on the other hand, there was page after page of print that came close to being adulation; and hours of TV discussion about how that "new generation leadership" is going to be a good thing. Gorbachev was praised by the British as well as the American and Canadian and, we presume, the rest of the Trilateral Nation opinion-makers. He not only had charisma, he had Western-style charisma. And his wife was oh, so charming. One commentator went so far as to suggest that Mikhail and Raisa Gorbachev were like a Russian reincarnation of the American John and Jacqueline Kennedy. Typical was the first paragraph of the article in USA TODAY of March 12: "Mikhail S. Gorbachev dresses like a banker, appears comfortable in a Rolls-Royce and jokes about Marxism. His wife, Raisa, is at ease with Westerners, studies philosophy and wears her hair fashionably short. The pair so charmed Britain last December that the press dubbed them 'the new Gucci comrades.' "

Indicative of the welcome to the "new generation leadership" was the change in attitude of President Reagan and Vice President Bush. The President made it very plain that he had no desire to meet with Brezhnev, Andropov or Chernenko. But he told the press that he'd welcome a meeting with the new secretary general of the communist party while wearing the hat of the president of the USSR. And George Bush, while attending the funeral of Chernenko, invited the new secretary general to come to Washington. The change in attitude seems to stem from the knowledge that the new red leader favors detente and wants to talk about arms control. Interestingly, the American delegation in Geneva which Secretary of State Shultz was thinking about heading personally, is being headed by one Max Kampelman. The following statement of his qualifications for the post appeared in Walter Scott's "Personality Parade," in the Parade weekly of March 10. The question was asked: "Is it true that Max Kampelman, chief honcho of President Reagan's new arms-control team, is a Democrat, a former legal counsel to the late Sen. Hubert Humphrey and a former conscientious objector who was excused from military service in World War II?" The answer: "Kampelman, 64, is all the things you say. In World War II, his draft board declared him a conscientious objector and assigned him to alternative civilian duty. In 1955, however, Kampelman experienced a change of heart about taking up arms and joined the Marine Corps Reserve for seven years." One might wonder how much "change of heart" may be experienced by Kampelman as he deals with the Soviet delegates who, as communists, have experienced no such change of heart and are going to remember that treaties, like pie crusts, are made to be broken. As early as February 1962 - 23 years ago - the following appeared in the Chattanooga News-Free Press:

"Now that US indecision and lack of firmness have allowed the Communists to break previous agreements by illegally walling off East Berlin, Washington is talking about a new 'compromise' with the Reds under which the Berlin situation would be kept as it is now and, supposedly, armed conflict would be avoided. In the light of such talk, it is highly significant to recall a report of the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee, released by its chairman, Senator James O. Eastland, about two years ago: 'The staff studied nearly a thousand treaties and agreements... which the Soviets have entered into... the staff found that in the 38 short years since the Soviet Union came into existence, its government had broken its word to virtually every country to which it ever gave a signed promise.'"

We are reminded of the warning given by Hilaire du Berrier when talk of the resumption of arms-control meetings was contemplated. He wrote: "Any politician who promises such talks, for the sake of votes, and any editor who calls for them, is only raising hopes in American minds and leading America into quicksands. The implication is that arms limitations and other negotiations will be conducted between the American government and the Soviet. How can this lead to any solution for peace when the Soviet Communist Party is the Soviet Government? The same men form both; all they do is change caps. The Supreme Soviet is Russia's Parliament. The real source of power is the Central Committee of the Communist Party. In 1975, Leonid Brezhnev, speaking as head of the Soviet Government, launched a lulling drive for detente with the West. Then, speaking as secretary general of the Soviet Communist Party, he told his countrymen: 'International detente does not in any way signify the abandonment of our struggle of ideas.' Read: We may promise the West peace and friendship, but this is only so we may undermine them from within.

"Mr. Robert Conquest wrote in his column in the Daily Telegraph of December 1st, 1984: 'Western leaders must not create the appearance of success in disarmament negotiations without real achievements; doing so, they would deceive their countries and, worst of all, provoke a unilateral disarmament. The danger is real because of both the secrecy in the socialist countries and domestic manoeuvring of certain Western politicians, who are prepared to jeopardize the delicate global balance for transitory political situations at home.' Politicians must not be forced to outdo each other with promises of 'talks with Russia'. The only possible talk with Russia should start: 'Have whatever form of government you want, but cease your sapping operations in countries that are free. Get out of Afghanistan and stop planning expansion. Forget the Leninist theme that the revolution of 1917 was only the first step towards a communist world. Drop the Kremlin statement of policy which holds that the existence of sovereign capitalist states is only a transitory historical phase on the way to a socialist world and that the duty of Soviet Russia is to make that transition period as short as possible.'

"Dimitry Manuilsky's statement of policy has been repeated ad nauseum: 'The bourgeoisie will have to be put to sleep. So we will begin by launching the most spectacular peace movement on record.... The Capitalist countries, stupid and decadent, will rejoice to co-operate in their own destruction. They will leap at another chance to be friends. As soon as their guard is down, we will smash them with a clenched fist.'... When President Nixon went to Moscow in the spring of 1972, chief of government Brezhnev declared: 'The foreign policy course of our State is called a peace offensive. We must continue this most noble offensive in the name of the present and future of mankind.' A few days later he told his own people through the official party organ, Kommunist: 'Peaceful coexistence is a special form of class struggle. One must be prepared for the struggle to intensify into an even more acute confrontation of the two social systems'." (Unquote).

The fact that should be remembered is that the policies of the Communist International have never changed. As our unnamed ex-official said, "They're all cut from the same cloth. We tend to give too much emphasis to a new face or a new style." The policies enunciated by Lenin, Manuilsky, Brezhnev, and all the rest of the Communist hierarchy are the same policies that will be pursued by this man with a law degree and a Western-style charisma. What he will tell the world is one thing. What he will tell his Communist Komrades is something else and very different. He will speak one way as head of government, and another way as head of the Communist Party. It must also be remembered that the secretary general of the Communist Party is no longer a dictator. This was evident when Nikita Khrushchev, thought to be the absolute head of the government of the USSR, was fired from his post and sent into retirement. The real rulers of the USSR are the members of the Politburo, normally an eleven-member "board of directors" (now only ten because of the death of Chernenko). They are selected (or elected) by the Central Committee of the Communist Party, a 320-member body that has total power and rubber-stamps whatever decisions are made by the Politburo. Note that these members of the Politburo and the Central Committee form the hierarchy, the elite of the Communist Party. Whatever Gorbachev, as secretary general of the Party, may do or say must have the approval of the other members of the Politburo and the rubber-stamp of the Central Committee. If he goes against Communist Party policies, or steps out of line as did Khrushchev, he will be fired. Therefore, to think that things will be different under Gorbachev is a form of self-deception.

It is noteworthy that Gorbachev was named general secretary of the Communist Party. He was not named President of the USSR (though he'll probably be so named in the near future). This points up the fact that the government of the USSR is a two-tiered affair. All major decisions are made by the heads of the Party, but the USSR is in theory governed by the Supreme Soviet which serves as a Parliament, having 1500 members, meets twice a year to rubber-stamp all decisions of the Politburo. A part of the Supreme Soviet is the Council of Ministers which would be comparable to our Executive Cabinet. A member of the Politburo always presides over this "cabinet." There also is a Defense Council which is somewhat similar to our chiefs of staff and national security council, also with a member of the Politburo chairing the meetings. Then there is the Presidium, the head of the bureaucracy which runs the domestic end of government; its head is called the President of the USSR, and he is always a member of the Politburo and, since Brezhnev, also secretary general of the Communist Party. To say this more simply: The Soviet Government is a vast bureaucracy somewhat similar to our own, except that a high-ranking Communist is always at the head of every department within the bureaucracy. To say it another way: the Soviet governments run the 15 "republics" that make up the Soviet Socialist Union; but the Communist Party runs the Soviets. If you are familiar with the stated purpose of the One Worlders, to eventually merge the United States and the USSR, the following comparison may seem important:

There is a Soviet Socialist government that governs the USSR, but the Communist Party governs the governors. Here in the United States there is also an elected government that governs, but to a great extent there is an oligarchic-type Elite which governs the governors! This has been called an "Invisible Government," but is no longer so invisible. Also of importance in this "merging" process is the little select band of monopoly capitalists of the West whose members have direct and free access to the Kremlin and the members of the Politburo; such men as Armand Hammer, David Rockefeller, Averell Harriman, to name three of the principals. Just what plans and policies may be made by these members of America's "Invisible Government" and the Soviet Union's Communist Government are seldom known by the massive proletariat of the USSR or the dwindling bourgeoisie of the USA; until it is too late for anyone to do anything about it.

Since this discussion of Gorbachev's position in world affairs has opened the door, let's go a step further and note how Marx's adaptation of a theory of Hegel's has influenced modern history. On page 378 of the late Carroll Quigley's revealing Tragedy and Hope, which he subtitled "A History of the World in Our Time," there is the following explanation: "Marx derived from Hegel what has come to be known as the 'historical dialectic'. This theory maintained that all historical events were the result of a struggle between opposing forces which ultimately merged to create a situation which was different from either. Any existing organization of society or of ideas (thesis) calls forth, in time, an opposition (antithesis). These two struggle with each other and give rise to the events of history, until finally the two fuse into a new organization (synthesis)." To the proponents of the New World Order, this usually is described as Capitalism (thesis) versus Communism (antithesis), which oppose each other, but finally are to merge into the New World Order (synthesis).

Another comparison that could contribute toward the merging: In the West there is the managing elite: megabankers, some multinationalists, leaders of such exclusive groups as the TLC, CFR, Club of Rome, Bilderbergers, Round Table, Royal Institute, Atlantic Institute, OECD, etc. These contribute toward an International Establishment that controls governments. In the USSR there is something similar: the Nomenklatura. The Soviet Union resembles a giant corporation managed by members of this elite group. They enjoy special privileges according to their rank. These include high salaries, good apartments, holiday homes (dachas), chauffeured cars, access to hospitals and resorts denied the general public, special schools for their children, access to exclusive, well stocked stores with abundant consumer goods and food at low prices. They are the ranking Communists and form a Soviet aristocracy similar to the aptly-named Eastern Establishment. There is a connection between the two, and the merging continues. Where were our watchmen at the gates?

BUT NOT BY BREAD ALONE

There was a time when Russia was known as the "breadbasket of Europe." But due to the debits of socialism and the credits of private enterprise the scene has shifted and now the United States is called the "breadbasket of the world." Despite the reports that one-third of the nation's farms have serious financial difficulties, and 145,000 are in critical condition, American farmers still produce enough food to feed us, to sell abroad, and to give away. The Agriculture Department estimates that in 1984 the U.S. exported 49 metric tons of corn, 42.2 million metric tons of wheat, and 19.5 million metric tons of soybeans. These figures would seem to indicate that our vital farming industry is healthy. But, it isn't. In the past four years 20,000 farms have been auctioned off. There were 844 foreclosures in 1982, 1,357 in 1983, 1,422 in 1984, how many in 1985 is anybody's guess, but the Agriculture Department estimates that twelve percent of our remaining farmers will go out of business by the end of this year. And as foreclosures multiply, big banks reap rewards and small farm banks go broke. The Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC) listed 231 troubled or out-of-business banks in 1984, which was double the 1983 number, probably half of what the 1985 number will be. Then there's the Farm Home and Credit Administrations which estimate they have $25.2 billion in delinquent loans to farmers. The total U.S. farm debt is said to be over $215 billion. That's more than Brazil's and Mexico's debts combined. As we began writing this Report, the following events had occurred, and this is only a sampling taken from one newsweekly and two newspapers, one local and one national:

On March 4th, hundreds of farmers singing "God Bless America" gathered near the White House, urged Congress to pass and the President to sign a debt-relief measure into law. Said a spokesman: "We're in the middle of a farm collapse. We're seeing family farmers, main street businessmen, agriculture banks, and the entire economic system fall to its knees." Congress duly passed a debt-relief measure and sent it to the White House on March 5th. As he had promised, President Reagan vetoed it on March 6th. Receiving no emergency relief from the federal government, the pressure began to be applied to State governments. Problem is, as one Governor remarked: "Some of the States with the most severe farm problems are also the ones with the lowest revenues." As foreclosures continue, some banks have had the aid of SWAT teams and there have been murders of men who sought to protect their property. One authority notes that the suicide rate among farmers is 30 percent higher than it is for people in other occupations. Sometimes some of the happenings are published in national dailies. Like the following which appeared in the March 19th issue of USA TODAY: "Glenwood, Minn. - In a winter that has seen few bright points for farmers, it was a symbolic victory. Overwhelmed by 500 demonstrators shouting 'No Sale! No Sale!' Pope County Sheriff Gerald Moe was blocked from the county courthouse steps and postponed Monday's foreclosure sale on Jim Langman's 280-acre farm. The scene was a replay of a March 8 demonstration that blocked the sale of Langman's farm. Langman, former president of the Minnesota chapter of the American Agriculture Movement, has become a rallying point for hundreds of farmers who face foreclosure and are turning militant. 'We will not be silent witnesses to the destruction of our farms and communities,' said Paul Wellstone of Groundswell, which organized the rally. 'We are determined. We are right. We will win this struggle.'" By contrast, earlier in the day Reggie and Kitty Pityer's farm in Viroqua, Wis., was sold without a hitch. The Pityers - who owed $460,000 to the bank - asked 50 fellow farmers not to interfere."

Then, there's the other side of the story. Walter Williams, an economics professor at George Mason University, was asked for his definition of social justice. His response: "Social justice is where I keep what I produce and you keep what you produce. You can't have what's mine unless I give it to you. Social justice means there's neither illegal nor legal theft...That's precisely the problem in America today. Too many think they have rights to the fruits of their fellow American's labor. Take the troubled farmers. They think they have a right to use government to confiscate your earnings to grant them loan guarantees, crop supports, and other bailouts. They say government ought to help. But big government can't give them anything it doesn't first take from you...Granted, government caused much of the farm problem, but the farmers asked - In fact, begged - for it." Granted that there is a very serious farm problem, but it also must be granted that agribusiness is better than it ever was, and it is the middle class, independent farmer who is being deprived of his land, sometimes of his life by a swat team. Behind it all is the same old Hegelian Formula being used for the advantage of the "chosen few". To even begin to understand how we have ended up with a harvest of problems, we must go back in time to before the Great Depression. As Patrick Henry said 210 years ago in similar troublous times: "I have but one lamp by which my feet are guided, and that is the lamp of experience." Shall we light that lamp?

Back before President Wilson helped to maneuver the U.S. into World War I, we were a little tyke living on a farm in Kansas. We have been told that at that time about the only federal employes ever seen in our county were the clerk at the Post Office and the mail carriers. One year just before harvest time there was a great hail storm which totally destroyed the wheat crop. There was no Farm Credit Administration, no farm subsidies, no federal handouts. The only recourse was to the local banker where, at that time, "your word was your bond." Mortgages were seldom foreclosed, payments were just extended until after the next harvest. And

"What a Difference a Day Makes"

A recent news item reminded Senator Steve Symms (R-Idaho) of the words from an old musical standard: "What a difference a day makes, 24 hours." The dispatch detailed the trial of a Chicago man accused of murdering his infant son in June 1983. As described by Senator Symms, "The man allegedly slammed the infant's head on the floor minutes after birth because of the baby's birth defects. During the trial the Cook County medical examiner testified that surgery might have corrected the defects." The point is that "Under our existing legal code the parents could have killed the child prior to its birth and no one would have cared - hence, 'what a difference a day makes.' We would have called it an abortion - one of 4,000 that are performed each day in the United States. But because the alleged killing came minutes after the birth, the law calls it murder - a crime punishable under our legal system." Prior to its birth "the infant was a fetus, according to the pro-abortion people, and it is easier to kill a fetus than kill a baby - it sounds more clinical and dispassionate. After the birth, even an abortionist has to call it a "baby." ...In the past dozen years...16 million babies - or 'fetuses' to the cold world of the surgical instruments - have perished because our judicial system, in its great wisdom, has decided that an unborn baby is a non-human mass of biological matter. Steve Symms wonders, as all Americans should: "How can we as a nation plead with the Almighty for peace and expect Divine help when we cannot clean up the carnage in our own back yard?" A postscript for perspective: Combat-related deaths from the Revolutionary War, the Civil War, World War I, World War II, the Korean War, and the Vietnam War totaled 1.16 million Americans - fewer than the present rate of convenience killings by abortion in this country each year."

(R.W.Lee In "The Review of the News," March 20, 1985).

the farmers, and the local bankers and businessmen prospered without federal handouts of any kind. But things began to change when that same old Conspiratorial Group, which some say never existed or exists, brought about the Great Depression for their own benefit. This brought in the New Deal and a government which tried to control farm production, stabilize food prices, and collectivize the farmers. John T. Flynn explained in his The Decline of the American Republic (1955), that "with the election and inauguration of President Roosevelt, the whole banking and economic system was swept into collapse."

"This was in 1933," wrote Mr. Flynn, "and it was as of this date and amid these scenes that President Roosevelt inaugurated an incredible series of adventures that defied almost every sentence in the Constitution. (He) brought into existence a collection of commissions and bureaus empowered to take over the direction, supervision and in some cases the management of vast areas of American industry and finance....The central organism in this fantastic circus was the National Recovery Act (NRA) and the Agricultural Adjustment Act (AAA)....It was, although few Americans realized it, modeled on Mussolini's corporative State...Organized for farms (was) the AAA, directed by Henry Wallace, under whose guidance food and crops were destroyed to create scarcities and thus raise prices. The 'slaughter of the little pigs' became the classic example of this insane scheme. The AAA was empowered to make the rules for farming, farm labor, crop controls, prices - all supervised by a vast bureaucracy which was authorized to compel compliance by rugged powers buttressed by the ability to reward complying farmers with generous government checks. The farm and the farmers became wards of the federal government on a scale which even the socialist agricultural arrangements later instituted in Britain never attempted." The AAA; when challenged was declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court, primarily because of its redistribution characteristics, taking money from some to give it to others. But, to quote Thomas James Norton in Undermining the Constitution: "With the trickiness in the use of language which characterized the National Industrial Recovery Act, the Agricultural Adjustment Act and the Bituminous Coal Act (all three held unconstitutional), to make believe that they were not what they were, Congress passed the second AAA and called it an act for 'Soil Conservation,' ...The second AAA was as lawless as the first."

Much of the New Deal programming was modified or changed when FDR & Co. engineered the U.S. into World War II, but government involvement in farming did not cease and new farm programs have been added onto new farm programs until only those farm owners who admit to being "wards of the State" have been able to operate profitably. And to provide new farm loans new organizations were formed, such as the Farm Credit System, the Farmers Home Administration, the Commodity Credit Corporation, etc. In an article, Poisoning the Good Earth, by Henry C. Scuteguazza, the author declares that "the prize for extravagance must be awarded to price support programs. In 1980, the Agriculture Department paid farmers $3 billion above what they would have received on the open market for their products. The amount paid reached $21 billion in 1983. The government pays farmers 17 cents per pound for sugar, even though the world market price ranged from 4 to 7 cents per pound. Milk products have approximately 18 government-subsidized cents attached onto every gallon. The Agriculture Department pays honey producers $94 million in price supports, an amount which happens to equal the total value of the output. In keeping with this philosophy, the government also makes subsidies equaling 90 percent of the value of the rice crop, and 200 percent of the value of our wool. There are price supports for wheat, corn, soybeans and other feed grains, cotton, tobacco and other commodities. In fact, as James Bovard reported in USA Today, 'Total government agricultural spending was more than double farmers' net income in 1983'."

As a result of such give-aways, things were looking great for farmers from 1973 to 1981. There was easy credit, value of land appreciated because of rampant inflation, and many farmers went into debt buying expensive machinery, etc., to expand their operations. And they borrowed money to do it. Loans soared from $73.3 billion in 1974 to $182 billion in 1983. Thousands of farmers went deeply into debt to overplant and overproduce. But, as though it was planned that way (and our lamp of experience suggests that it probably was) this golden age of agriculture became an era of drought when unexpected things began to happen. There was a worldwide recession, a strong U.S. dollar, high interest rates, President Carter slapped an embargo on grain sales to the USSR when that evil empire invaded Afghanistan. In short, the bottom dropped out of the market for farmers, despite the government subsidies. And, like the drunkard asking for "more of the hair of the dog that bit him," farmers are asking, even demanding, more subsidies and more loans. As our farm expert, Henry Scuteguazza, has reported; "Farming is the single most government-controlled, regulated, supported and manipulated sector of the U.S. economy. And that fact has allowed many of the marginally successful farmers to survive - at everyone else's expense. Many of the farmers who are now drowning in the quicksand of debt are in the hole because they became land speculators. Over the boom years they purchased land because they expected the price to rise. But since 1982, the price of fertile acreage in Iowa and Illinois, which peaked at $3,500 per acre, has declined to $2,000 or less. Given this, and the steep interest rates of the 1980s, the farmers who wanted to be real estate moguls, and the banks who extended easy credit, are now sweating it out." (Quoted from On Principle, 8-pages, 26 issues per year, $45. 601 Ewing St., Suite B-7, Princeton, NJ 08542).

All things considered; prices are too low, there are massive surpluses of grain with no ready market, thousands of farmers are being forced into bankruptcy, as are hundreds of the local banks that extended too much credit to farmers instead of to governments of the less developed nations or those in the Communist bloc. And, as in the New Deal era, there is evidence that this situation has been planned deliberately in order that there can be created a monopoly control over the Nation's most vital and important industry. Under the rule of caveat emptor (let the buyer beware), it may be said that the farmers brought it on themselves by buying too much land, acquiring too expensive farm equipment, and producing too much grain. But they still are victims of a corporative state program that began fifty years ago, lay more or less dormant for a while only to be revived during Lyndon Johnson's Great Society program, and then came full bloom as a result of the soaring inflation and the rocketing interest rates of the 1970's. With deep sadness and misery for hundreds of thousands, we might say that the era of family farming is ending, is being replaced by an Agribusiness Monopoly. If there were a way of restoring freedom to the farmer, it would be by way of returning farming to the free market. But habits cannot be changed overnight. For fifty years, the country's farmers have been induced to act in ways that are self-destructive in the long-run. A phase-out of welfarism could occur, farm programs could finally be returned to pasture and private enterprise restored. But there is only one Book which tells us how, yet if it's ever read these days, it's probably read in the form of some spiritless translation. And only "If My people which are called by My Name, shall humble themselves, and pray. . . ."

Year Thirty-Two Number Twelve March 29, 1985

THE URGE TO MERGE

Sometimes there occurs some unexpected slip-up, some human error, some tragic mishap that helps to expose, slow down, or even thwart the plans of highly-placed schemers. A senseless slaying might have become such an incident. Major Arthur D. Nicholson, while on a reconnaissance mission in East Germany, was murdered. It immediately reminded people of the shooting down of the Korean airliner in which Congressman Larry McDonald and 268 others were murdered on September 1, 1983. The circumstances may have been different, but another American had been killed by the Soviets. The first reaction of the State Department was to call the death of Major Nicholson an act of murder. Soviet officials said he was shot and left to die because while on a "legal spying" mission, he was taking pictures of a military installation. Upon second thought, American officialdom called the murder an accidental death. The actual details may never be known publicly, but the psychological reaction was immediately apparent, and people were angry. The killing of Major Nicholson, regardless of how the media tried to modify the story, produced a smear of blood on the picture of peace and friendship that was being painted by the media since the appointment of Mikhail Gorbachev as the world's top Communist. To paint him as an angel of peace and good will to men while being the world's number one Communist leader, is a difficult task. And the murder of another American official made it even more difficult. You'll recall how the media drew a picture of him as the Russian version of John Kennedy. Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher aided by telling the world, "I like Mr. Gorbachev. We can do business together." London's Sunday Times abetted by describing his wife Raisa as "Soviet realism's answer to Princess Di. Her wit, trim figure, stylish blond hair, and tailored clothes" made her the perfect mate for the husband who was said to possess "real Western-style charisma." President Reagan contributed to the build-up. While Brezhnev and Andropov served as secretaries general of the Communist Party and therefore President of the USSR, our President referred to the USSR as an evil empire and expressed no desire whatsoever to meet either of them. But when Gorbachev was appointed to top membership in the Politburo, President Reagan immediately said he'd meet with Gorbachev if he were asked. Gorbachev ignored the statement and semi-invitation, so Mr. Reagan then mentioned that the UN General Assembly would be meeting in New York in the fall, and Gorbachev would probably be there to speak. Since Comrade Gorbachev would be in New York City, it would be convenient for him to come on down to Washington and have a friendly chat in the Oval Office, or perhaps at Camp David. Or even at the Soviet Embassy if that were preferable. Meanwhile, editors and commentators were forecasting all the good things that might develop as a result of such a charismatic, intelligent, lawyer having become the world's top Communist.

When highly-placed people make plans, all things seem to work together to bring them to fruition. Great emphasis was placed in the alleged importance of the arms limitation confab that was going on in Geneva. President Reagan outdid the former LBJ in strongarming, threatening, demanding that Senators and Representatives vote approval for the release of $1.5 billion to build those 21 MX missiles - or else. Not so much that the missiles were needed as military weapons, but they were sorely needed as political weapons to fire at the Russian delegation in Geneva. Also, after Gorbachev received his appointment, there was an increased scurry of exchanges between bankers, traders and industrialists who want to make deals with the Soviets. Most significant: Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige announced that he will head a delegation going to Moscow to discuss trade, "the first high-level meeting on trade between the two superpowers since 1978," the Commerce Department said. According to AP "Mr. Baldrige will join Soviet Foreign Trade Minister Nikolai Patolichev in a meeting May 20-21 of the U.S.-U.S.S.R. Joint Commercial Commission. The commission last met in December 1978, before the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. . . . Following a meeting with Mr. Gorbachev in Moscow, Secretary of State George P. Shultz said last week that the administration "wants to proceed with a sense of realism" in dealing with the Soviets. He added that "we're ready to undertake a genuinely constructive dialogue and try to work out concrete solutions to problems." (Unquote). But while the U.S. Administration was promoting "a sense of realism", the Soviet government was calling for a "New Detente" which would work for its benefit as did the "Old Detente", and Gorbachev was beginning to show his fangs. The March 30 issue of Human Events included the following: "New Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev, whom the New York Times and other media think may be a man of peace, has, in the words of the Washington Post's Moscow correspondent, Dusko Doder, 'issued Moscow's sternest warning to date to Pakistan for its support of Afghan rebels, and well-informed circles here reported today (March 15) that the Kremlin was considering unspecified actions against Pakistan if President Reagan

WE RECEIVED A COPY - WE PASS IT ON
(But Without the Names)

Dear _____:

I appreciate your having received the copies of Child Abuse in the Classroom when I stopped at your home the other afternoon. I would have liked to have chatted with you further but there was no time. I can appreciate the desire to put God back in the public schools. With all due respect for the efforts of Phyllis Schlafly and others, any effort to improve the government, socialistic, humanistic, ungodly, degrading school system will have no lasting effect. A book or two may be taken off the shelf at one school but what about the others? A teacher may be removed because of his/her filthy practices but there is a thing called tenure and he/she easily moves to another location. Legislation to protect pupil rights such as the Hatch Amendment will not insure excellence in education. Who will enforce the legislation but the other side? How are you going to get God back in the schools when the Supreme Court won't even permit a moment of silence?

The Christian must get back to bedrock. Government public schools are not in God's organizational chart. Children are a gift from God to the parents and the parents are entrusted with bringing them up in the ways of the Lord. How can children be taught Christian principles in a one hour class Sunday morning that will have a lasting effect when from Monday through Friday, all day, humanist experts are propagating their view? . . . The government, socialistic, humanistic, ungodly, degrading school system now teaches the world view of secular humanism. The lukewarm Christians permit the militant humanists to assume command because they have been conned into the world view of do-nothing instead of the world view of the Reformation and early America.

The Bible says that God is Truth, Knowledge and Wisdom. All activities must be God-centered. . . . Many families have decided that it is imperative to teach their children at home or have banded together in a church and formed a Bible-based school. . . . There are several organizations in the educational field that provide excellent help in getting the unconcerned parents started.

Praise Him continually, continues his military pressure on Nicaragua.' Gorbachev's harsh warning, hinting at possible military action, came on March 14 during his meeting with Pakistani President Mohammed Zia ul-Haq and Foreign Minister Sahabzada Yaqub Khan, who had attended the funeral of Konstantin Chernenko. So much, then, for the fleeting hopes of those who have been banking on a new era of friendship with the newest – and clearly very ruthless – Kremlin dictator." Following this warning, it seems that Gorbachev took no time in issuing new orders concerning the Afghanistan situation. A string of military posts along the Afghan-Pakistani border had previously been manned by Afghan troops. But those troops had been very lax in permitting Afghan patriots to come and go between the two countries. In order to seal off a strategic stretch of the Tour Kham Highway running from the Khyber Pass toward Kabul, Soviet troops took over the military posts and ousted the Afghan troops. Indications are that if Pakistan continues to aid Afghan resistance fighters, and if the United States continues to aid Pakistan, then the Soviet Union is going to increase its aid to Nicaragua, while at the same time attacking Pakistan, perhaps militarily, because of that country's aid to Afghan patriots. While the Soviet Union has increased its attempts to control the country, a new plan has been adopted. Realizing that there may never be a complete conquest of Afghanistan in this generation, the Communists are now rounding up Afghan children, tearing them away from their parents, and flying them back to the USSR where they will be sent to school and thoroughly indoctrinated with Marxist-Leninist theories. Then, after whatever number of years that may take, the indoctrinated victims will be flown back to Afghanistan for the purpose of thoroughly socializing whatever may be left of the original native population. The Soviets seem agreed that this may be the only way in which they can totally control the whole country.

As the leaders of the United States, in office or otherwise, seek ways to be nice to the Soviets and promote their new leader as a man of peace, the leaders in the Kremlin are pursuing an exactly opposite course. It might be said that the nicer we treat the Soviets, the more they hate us. In an article written by Major General Henry Mohr (U.S.A. Ret.) and published in the St. Louis Globe Democrat, he points out that "Hate America" is the indoctrination theme being applied to the Soviet Union's population, and particularly to its Armed Forces. He notes that the "Hate America" propaganda clashes sharply with the sugar-coated Moscow-backed "peace movement." And Americans should be careful not to confuse Moscow's propaganda war, executed through numerous front organizations in the United States, with genuine efforts for peace. The Moscow-manipulated peace movement (with Gorbachev presented as a man of peace) serves only the interests of the Soviet Union and the Internationalist Cartel. At its core is the U.S. Peace Council (USPC) organized in 1979, which is an affiliate of the World Peace Council (WPC), which in turn is an arm of the Central Committee in Moscow, the committee that selected Gorbachev to become secretary general of the Communist Party, USSR. So, there is this Soviet-backed peace movement that promotes U.S. unilateral disarmament; while at the same time the Soviet government is engaged in an internal "hate America" program. Nevertheless, our leaders will go right on "proceeding with a sense of realism" as defined by George Shultz and the Establishment Elite. Unless something is done to change this course, total surrender will be our only course.

Because of the anniversary of that awful Yalta Agreement (it's 40 years old this month), columnist Richard Maybury wrote that "for four decades, the superpowers (U.S. and U.S.S.R.) have been carving up the world into their two spheres of influence with little regard for the innocent individuals living in the path of the carving knife. . . . At Yalta, President Franklin D. Roosevelt and Stalin decided that Eastern Europe would be placed within the Soviet sphere of influence and Western Europe within the American sphere of influence." But that's only a small part of the story. At Yalta, in addition to Eastern Europe, the Soviet Union was given the Kurile Islands (near where Korean Flight 007 was shot down), was given the Chinese-Eastern Railway, was allowed to keep Outer Mongolia which Russia had seized from China while Chiang Kai-shek still was its President. At Yalta it was agreed that all anti-Communist refugees from the USSR would be forcibly returned (Operation Keelhaul). It was also decided at Yalta that the UN would be started with a conference in San Francisco in April 1945 (which we attended as a war correspondent). There it was decided that the Soviet Union would have three votes, all other nations only one. In a syndicated column Phyllis Schlafly wrote:

"The verdict of history...is that Yalta was a sellout and a betrayal. The U.S. Secretary of State, Edward Stettinius, Jr. (CFR-Ed.) conferred every morning and evening with Alger Hiss (CFR-Ed.), who was later convicted of falsely swearing he was not a Communist spy....Three weeks before Yalta began, Stettinius ordered that Hiss be given all the top-secret files and documents pertaining to the Conference. At the negotiating table, Stettinius sat at Roosevelt's right, and Hiss sat immediately behind the President....The official Yalta Papers make clear that Stalin had planned from the start to locate the Big Three Conference on his own territory so he could dominate it. Alternate sites considered had included Scotland, Alaska, Athens, Cyprus, Istanbul, Jerusalem, Alexandria, Rome, and the French Riviera. Winston Churchill commented that 'If we had spent ten years on research we could not have found a worse place in the world than Yalta....It is good for typhus and deadly lice which thrive in these parts.' Obviously, the typhus and deadly lice were not the only 'bugs' at Yalta. Our diplomats should be constantly on guard against all kinds when they meet with the Soviets."

Forty years after Yalta, a meeting of the "Big Two" is being planned, and the results of that meeting between President Reagan and Comrade Gorbachev could be quite similar, since the Soviet leader is naming the terms, the conditions, and the place of the Summit. And similarly, CFR advisers will be on hand to advise President Reagan on what to do and say and sign. Another similarity: Stalin was a dictator, in supreme command of the USSR. Gorbachev is being pictured as also being a dictator. Which isn't true, of course. Stalin was the last of the line. Malenkov succeeded Stalin but soon disappeared. Then came the Troika, which disappeared when Khrushchev was fired. As for Brezhnev, Andropov and Chernenko, they were just the chairmen of a committee which actually rules the USSR. Also Gorbachev, who is secretary general, but still just the chairman of a ruling committee. However, in Western eyes he is being hailed as the real ruler of Russia, and will probably be accepted as such by our State Department. If there is a real ruler who directs foreign policy, it is Andrei Gromyko who has been Foreign Minister from Stalin to Gorbachev, and still controlling all contacts with the West, and who will be sitting at Gorbachev's right hand when any modern day "Yalta" is convened.

We are at a crucial point in history, a time as dangerous as the time when, on March 23, 210 years ago, Patrick Henry delivered that famous speech which ended with the words, "Give me liberty or give me death!" One difference between then and now: his audience didn't applaud and sit down. Instead, they cried "To Arms! To Arms!" Another difference: Our Founding Fathers didn't try to make deals with enemy powers. Nor did they support and sustain enemy countries. The cry of "Millions for defense, not one cent for tribute" should still be our slogan. Historians tell us that only about ten percent of the people resisted British tyranny in 1776. But think of what they accomplished! Should we permit their accomplishments to be completely liquidated?

THE FALLING AWAY OF THE AMERICAN FAMILY

"It is the policy of these United States to discourage the parental care of children. More specifically, your government intends through its policies to eliminate the full-time mothers of small children, and to replace them with social parenting."

"No politician has actually said this," wrote Allan C. Carlson in "The Decline and Fall of Mom and Apple Pie," "Nonetheless," he continued, "these are true statements. Since 1962, motherhood has faced subtle attack under the terms of the so-called 'child care debate.' Pressure is now growing for a new wave of 'reform'. Numerous conferences, reports, and research findings were released in 1984 demanding substantially higher federal subsidies for the nonparental care of children....The 1984 platforms of both major political parties pledged to support schemes transferring more income from families which care for their own children to families which do not. The Democrats called, in addition, for corporations to assume the responsibilities of child care. It's an appropriate time, then, to review how we arrived at this point, and to ask whether this is the way we honestly want to order our common life." (Quoted from "Persuasion at Work," a publication of the Rockford Institute).

Mr. Carlson has pointed to one important but generally overlooked phase of what has come to be a kind of civil war in these United States: Secular Humanism versus Christianity. In 1984 there arose the greatly publicized evil of child abuse in the homes of America, of incest and rape of children by members of the child's own family. Granted that these are evils that should be stamped out, but they are evils that have always existed which suddenly became spotlighted as national crises. Phyllis Schlafly retallated by pointing to a far more widespread evil in her book "Child Abuse in the Classroom," in which she published excerpts from official transcripts of proceedings before the Department of Education. Her work received no national headlines, no mention by book critics. Nevertheless, the book is being sold in great numbers (Pere Marquette Press, P.O.Box 495, Alton, Illinois 62002. $4.95). This book, along with Samuel Blumfeld's "NEA, Trojan Horse in American Education," articles and publications by Barbara Morris, The Mel Gablers, and others, has not only aroused parents, but also has aroused the NEA, change agents in the schools, the purveyors of child pornography, et al. The NEA, through the U.S. Department of Education which it controls, began fighting back to "save the schools" and make friends and allies of the parents who send their children to government schools. The Department of Education sponsored a seminar held recently in Indianapolis, titled: "Parents as Partners in Educational Excellence." Similar seminars are being planned: two in each federal region (we still have those ten federal regions). In his book, "Schooling for a Global Age," John Goodlad explained: "Parents and the general public must be reached also. Otherwise, children and youth enrolled in globally oriented programs may find themselves in conflict with values assumed in the home. And then the educational institution frequently comes under scrutiny and must pull back."

Because the educational institution has come under scrutiny, in at least one respect, the NEA has gone on the defensive. It has produced a manual designed to train NEA members how to defend themselves when criticized by parents. Members of the NEA are warned that "If you answer "yes" to any of these questions, be prepared to defend yourself." Some of the questions follow: Do you teach sex education? Do you permit students to review information on abortion or birth control? Is death education discussed in class? Do you ever indicate that it may be OK to lie? Do you permit students to read books with "dirty words?" Do you teach that "anything goes" or "If you feel it's OK, do it?" Do you train your students to be "global citizens?" Do you teach humanism? Do you ask students to fill out "snoopish questionnaires?" And more questions of a similar nature are listed, questions which should not be answered directly. Instead, teachers are taught to intimidate the questioner by crying "censorship," "academic freedom" and "intellectual freedom" rather than attempting to defend individual materials. Whenever it might be pointed out that children are graduated from public high schools who can neither read nor write, add nor multiply adequately to meet college entrance requirements, the answer should be, "But we need better equipment, better accommodations and more money." Also, to improve its image, the educational establishment has sponsored a series of articles appearing in the media which insist that the public schools are getting better and better. For instance, a story just out of Chicago (April 3, 1985), claims that "Public Schools score as well on college admission tests as private school students with similar backgrounds, a new study says. The study looked at College Board Achievement test scores for 80,000 Florida students and 100,000 students nationally. It was presented here Tuesday at the Educational Research Association convention....The findings contradict the controversial James Coleman report of 1982, which showed that private schools provide a superior environment and produce better students. Martha Chang (who wrote the latest one) says her study differs

COMPUTER 'SPY' DEVICE

The following information was sent to us by a subscriber in Christchurch, New Zealand, who informs us he has read the information in no other publication. To the best of our knowledge, neither has it been published in any American periodical or newspaper. The article reads:

"Cannes (France). - A Dutch engineer has developed a device costing $50 which apparently can locate, receive and reproduce text typed on a computer terminal within 1km. The device could oblige people using terminals for handling confidential information to screen their terminal with aluminum foil or with a more sophisticated faraday cage. The inventor, Wim van Eck, from the Dutch Neher Telecommunications Laboratory, demonstrated his device at the third world congress for the Protection and Security of Information Technology and Communications here, known as Securicom.

"The device, judged here to have incalculable consequences, is based on the fact that each cathode ray tube emits unique rays that are similar in principle to an individual finger - or screen - print. The device can locate and receive these rays, and then reproduce them on an ordinary television screen. The reproduced text can also be recorded on a video tape recorder so that the user has a complete record of text handled on the computer terminal being monitored.

"The technique was already known to military specialists who treated it as a confidential matter. A Securicom official said this was the first time the procedure had been made public." (NZPA-Copyright).

from Coleman's because she considered more variables - gender, academic or regular curriculum, years of course work in the subject tested grades and college plans." (Unquote). In other words, this latest report was rigged to present government schools in a more favorable light. But anyone actually believing the report probably also still believes that the moon is made of green cheese.

However, there's little need to repeat in this Report what government schools are doing to children or what effect they'll have on future society, or why they should be replaced by home schooling, private schools, and/or community and church supported schools for those students whose parents can't meet tuition requirements. As Allen Carlson indicated, it's better to review how we arrived at this point in our educational system. And, whenever we look back and check the record, three names always seem to stand out: A German named George Frederick Hegel (1770-1831), an American named Horace Mann (1796-1859) and an Englishman named Charles Darwin (1809-82). In justice to the three, perhaps we should mention that it wasn't entirely what they did or said personally, but their evils were magnified by those who followed after them and retranslated their ideas or altered much of their work.

Take the case of Hegel, who is better known for his formation of the Hegelian Dialectic (a thesis, at war with an antithesis, which produces a synthesis). But in the realms of religion and education, his work may have become even more dangerous than the effect his dialectic materialism may have had on Karl Marx. Hegel developed a religious theory similar to what is commonly known as Pantheism. He denied that God is a Person, or that there is a Triune Godhead, or a God with whom one might form a covenant or receive the promise of salvation. Hegel's view was that God is absolutely impersonal, is everything that exists, that the entire universe is nothing more than God's mind, or spirit, or energy, in the process of achieving its own more perfect universe. Because man is a part of nature, he is therefore made in the image of God (even as is a tree or a butterfly). But man is superior because he has become a god "knowing good and evil," with the ability to determine for himself what is good and what is evil. This is, of course, the "bottom line" when discussing "Values Clarification." It assumes that the student is able to determine for himself what is good or evil and then act upon that decision, as did Eve, as it is recorded in Genesis 3:6.

When Hegel's pantheistic philosophy reached the then young United States, Samuel Blumenfeld observed: "This was heady stuff for the Harvard intellectuals whose Puritan ancestors believed in the depraved, fallen nature of man and his need for salvation through Christ. They preferred Hegel's vision of a pantheistic universe, in which God was reduced to a state of harmless energy, and Man elevated to the position of God. It was a wonderfully sinless universe in which mankind was free to create heaven on earth. Christ was indeed divine, but only in the sense that all men are divine....But then along came Marx and the materialists who said that the dialectical conflict was indeed the historical process whereby the world was evolving but that the divine energy idea was a lot of bunk. Soulless matter in motion was all there was, and Man was just another form of matter." (Unquote). And thus was established the base upon which the religion known as Secular Humanism is founded; which is now accepted as the State religion. The humanist's reasoning is simple, but fatal: If there is no God to hand down His law to His creatures, then the only law is man's law, and the State is supreme for there is no other law above it. So, the State stands in the place where God ought to be. This Secular Humanism is the religion that has replaced God in the government classrooms of America. The Humanist leaders created this false idea of the separation of church and state in order to keep Christianity out of the classrooms of America; then they ignored their own precept by putting Man where God ought to be, and then uniting church and state!

It was in the 1880s that Hegelianism began to infect American intellectuals. Then along came Charles Darwin who, in the eyes of the intellectuals, presented a theory to prove that God didn't create the universe; but that it just happened in some way not yet satisfactorily explained. And then came from nowhere came a spark of life which, through the eons, evolved men who now are so perfected that they can themselves take control over the processes of evolution in the future.

It was Horace Mann who probably did most to change America's social, academic and even political direction from that laid down by the Founding Fathers. Backed by the Unitarians, he became the Secretary of the newly created Massachusetts Board of Education. He immediately began promoting the idea of government-controlled public education throughout the States. His political influence and the backing of the Harvard Unitarians made it possible for him to create the first State normal school. Such teachers' colleges have become the very symbol of Statism in education. In October, 1849, a National Convention of the Friends of Education was held in Philadelphia. Out of it grew the NEA. An organizing convention was held a year later, with Horace Mann presiding. He told the audience: "By a national organization of teachers, great and comprehensive plans may be devised, to whose standards each State may be gradually brought into conformity....Now we want uniformity in these matters, so that we may speak a common language, so that the same terms shall express the same ideas all over the country....On all school subjects we want....the universal adoption of the best way."

That is how it all began in the United States. And in education, as in most matters, "What ye sow, so shall ye reap."

KIDNAPPING MADE LEGAL

"Every child in America that enters school at the age of 5 is mentally ill because he comes to school with allegiance toward our elected officials, toward our Founding Fathers, toward our institutions, toward the preservation of this form of government. We have patriotism, nationalism, sovereignty - all that proves that children are sick, because the truly well individual is the one that has rejected all those things, and is what I would call the true internationalist child of the future." So declares the noted Harvard educator, Dr. Pierce. In keeping with this theme, fellow humanist Ashley Montague has put it more simply: "The American family structure produces mentally ill children." And what would they do about it? They would use the powers of that form of government which they would destroy in order to separate children from their parents at birth, protect them from the spiritual influence of the Church of Christ and the moral precepts instilled in children by the families of God. They would provide for these children what they call "social parenting." There is little excuse for not being informed of the attempts of these evil people to destroy all faith in Christ and to instill instead faith in Man. Preachers and parents have been thrown in jail, churches padlocked, because those parents chose to send their children to a Christian school. Children have been taken from their parents and placed in foster homes or state institutions because those parents chose to educate their own children. Not that the evil ones, with the backing of some State governments in many cases, have been totally successful. The trend toward the building of more church and private schools, and the teaching of children at home has continued to grow. And State governments have begun to look with disfavor on government schools and give more favor to private, church and family education. Last March 22, Governor Bill Clinton of Arkansas signed into law a measure allowing parents to teach their children at home through the 12th grade. Of course, there are certain requirements. The State Department of Education is to issue a list of standardized tests, and starting at 9 the children must be tested by their parents. And in signing the bill, Gov. Clinton did it in a very private ceremony without press coverage and "word is only now just beginning to get around the state that it's now the law," said Rep. Tim Hutchinson, a Christian school administrator and chief sponsor of the bill. "The governor wanted to sign the measure quickly without fanfare because his office had started to get a lot of negative calls from school superintendents." Said Tom Holiman, director of the Christian Home Education Association, "It isn't going to result in a massive sociological upheaval, but it's going to be something that will have to be reckoned with by public school authorities."

Of course, the Humanists, the change agents, the NEA and the teachers' unions are not going to give in because there has been some small victories of the Christian opposition in some States. The final aim is to kidnap, legally, all of the children from all of the parents (save those of the "elect") and prepare them for their role in the New World Order. But this cannot be done in one quick step or in one administration. So, the present plan is to induce parents to accept the role as "partners with the government" in the education of their children. The U.S. Department of Education is sponsoring a series of seminars titled "Parents as Partners in Educational Excellence." If parents should accept any such role in the education of their children, government automatically becomes the "senior partner," and any parental influence in the government schools becomes meaningless. Along with this "partnership with government" plan is the often heard statement that "the children belong to the state." Which is, of course, diametrically opposed to all Biblical injunctions concerning the responsibility of parents in the rearing and education of children. Then, when and if it is firmly established and accepted by the people that their children belong to the State, then the State as we now know it will become just an administrative unit in a World Government that, in the eyes of the Secular Humanists, will become a Man-made heaven on earth.

The conflict between the religion of Christ and the religion of Man became intense with the so-called "Period of Enlightenment" when "philosophy and vain deceit, after the tradition of men, after the rudiments of the world" began to weaken the faith of many and vain philosophers began to deny the very existence of God. In his "The Society of the Future," H. Van Riessen observes: "The Cross brings us to the very heart of the antithesis between Christianity and Humanism. Nietzsche, the extremist of all humanists, wished to divest himself of everything reminiscent of Christianity and desired to be the prophet of the Antichrist. Nietzsche understood that the Cross of Golgotha signified the parting of the ways. The Cross is to him the deepest humiliation of all that is human, the most awful decadence, a sign of the civilization of weakness. One and the same spirit rules and unites the offended Jew, the wise Greek, the aristocratic Roman, the hardened humanist, the perplexed Pharaoh. This is the spirit of self-maintenance and self-redemption. To such men, redemption through Christ remains foolishness, a cause of mirth or an object of scorn."

Humanism received a real boost when atheists and unbelievers learned of the works of Charles Darwin in his "Origin of the Species." The theory of evolution began to replace the faith in Creation, and Humanism in its present form found evolution to be the rock upon which its faith had to be built. Notable in its promotion was the Huxley family of England, and later of the United States. Grandfather Thomas Huxley (1825-95) was a biologist and educator, held many public offices, and was a chief exponent of evolution. He believed that "progress is achieved by the human control of evolution, which has become the creed of the hardened humanist who actually believes that Man, through careful planning and education, can create a "heaven on earth," which is usually called the New World Order. According to Carroll Quigley, as mentioned in his book "The Anglo-American Establishment," Grandfather Thomas Huxley was a member of "The Club," an elitist group which was something of a forerunner of Cecil Rhodes' Secret Society and Milner's Round Table Group which were so powerful until after World War II. Thomas Huxley's grandson, Aldous, is known to the world principally because of his book The Brave New World, which is often listed alongside Orwell's 1984, and similar utopian works. Aldous became well known in the United States because he left his native England and settled down in California, where he did most of his writing. His half-brother Julian, also Thomas' grandson, also became a biologist and a principal promoter of the theory of evolution. He also came to America, taught at Rice, from 1946 to 1948 served as director general of UNESCO. A leading Humanist, he fought Christianity almost as fiercely, but not as effectively, as Madalyn Murray O'Hair who presently is engaged in trying to induce the Federal Communications Commission to order the banning of the reading from the Bible on radio and/or television.

Despite the fact that the U.S. Supreme Court has affirmed that Secular Humanism is a religion, most people assume that it is little more than a form of humanitarianism and merely a humane concern for mankind and its welfare. But Julian Huxley, a leading Humanist, stated very plainly that Humanism is even more than a religion; it is a faith. Religion is a form of worship while faith, to quote the Scriptural definition, is "the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen;" and "even so faith, if it hath not works, is dead, being alone." (Hebrews 11:1; James 2:17). In a kind of Antichrist imitation, Julian Huxley wrote, shortly after he had served in 1952 as president of the First International Congress in Amsterdam where the International Humanist and Ethical Union came into being, and we quote:

"I use the word 'Humanist' to mean someone who believes that humans are just as much a natural phenomenon as an animal or plant; that their body, mind, and soul were not supernaturally created but are all products of evolution, and that they are not under the control or guidance of any supernatural being or beings, but have to rely on themselves (sic) and their own powers. And I use Faith in the sense of a set of essentially religious beliefs.

"How, then, can a Humanist be religious, you may ask? Isn't religion necessarily concerned with supernatural beings? The answer is NO. Religion of some sort seems always to have been a feature of human life; but some religions are not concerned with God, and some not with any sort of supernatural beings. Humanist beliefs are based on human knowledge, especially the explosion of knowledge of the hundred years since Darwin published The Origin of Species, which has revealed to us a wholly new picture of the universe and our place in it. We now believe with confidence that the whole of reality is one gigantic process of evolution. This produces increased novelty and variety and ever higher types of organization; in a few spots it has produced life and in a few of these spots of life it has produced mind and consciousness. Rejecting the supernatural, Humanist morality is an impulse to achieve the fulfillment of humanity's possibilities in the next phase of evolution.... So humanity's most sacred duty is to realize their possibilities of knowing, feeling, and willing to the fullest extent, both in the development of individuals, in the achievement of societies, and in the evolution of the whole human species.

"And I believe that a wider understanding of the extent to which humanity falls short of realizing their splendid possibilities will stimulate them to learn how they can be realized, and that this will be the most powerful religious motive in the next stage of our human evolution. As a Humanist that is my Faith." (underlining added for emphasis).

While Julian Huxley wrote books to promote the religion of Humanism at the adult level, it was John Dewey who won its widespread acceptance in the educational establishment. And he used the same vehicle that Horace Mann had used to gain government control over American education: Teacher Colleges, where future teachers were taught how to expel God and enroll Man as the master of the universe. Textbooks were produced to promote belief in humanistic doctrines which include belief in evolution; that man is his own authority and not accountable to any higher power; that there are no absolute rules by which man must live; that immorality, perversions of any sort, sexual promiscuity and such are acceptable modes of "self-expression;" that government ownership or control of the economy should replace private ownership of property and the free market economy; that "global citizenship" is the wave of the future; and that since all ends at the grave, euthanasia and suicide are endorsed.

In a most informative tract the Mel Gablers have given illustrations of how Humanism has been written into textbooks used in government schools. We quote a few:

ON EVOLUTION: "Infants can grasp an object such as a finger, so strongly that they can be lifted into the air. We suspect this reflex is left over from an earlier stage in human evolution, when babies had to cling to their ape-like mothers' coats while mothers were climbing or searching for food." (From "Understanding Psychology," Random House).

ON SELF AUTHORITY: "Think of a situation that would probably result in a difference of opinion between yourself and your parents. How would you defend your position? With what arguments would your parents counter? Write a dialogue between your parents and yourself." (Rebels, Ginn, a Grade 8 basal reader).

ON SEX: "Everyone must develop his own set of principles to govern his own sexual behavior." (Psychology for Living, McGraw Hill/Webster).

ON DRUGS: "Your decision about using marijuana is important to you. You should be the one to make it." (Good Health For You, Laidlaw.)

ON SITUATION ETHICS: "If a situation pressures a person to act in a certain way, then the person is not likely to be judged as the cause of the act." (Experiencing Psychology. Science Research Associates.) "Let each pupil decide for himself about each. Emphasize that this is not a test, and there are no 'right' or 'wrong' answers." (Man and Society. Silver Burdett.)

ON SEX EDUCATION: "Each instructor uses 'sex terms' differently. Write down all the terms referring to body parts and elimination and pronounce them in private, a little louder than necessary, or at a volume level suited to the classroom." (Married Life. Bennet.)

ON MORAL VALUES: "The moralistic value system remained firm in the rural areas and small towns of America until World War II.... Since World War II, rural and small town America began to pass into history. Today urban America, with a changing set of values is taking over.... Protestant evangelists continue to crisscross the land, attempting to revitalize the old religion, the old culture.... They preach the old values, the old standards, the 'old time religion.'... But now they represent a waning culture." (Perspectives in American History. Field.)

ON ANTI-FREE ENTERPRISE: "The Communist governments provide many benefits for their workers.... The governments also provide for health care, long vacations, and old age income. Personal income tends to be low.... But expenses are also low. Most people in Eastern Europe can meet their daily needs without much difficulty." (World Geography. Follett.)

ON ONE WORLD GOVERNMENT: "'Go where you may and search where you will... Search out every wrong.... Then you will agree with me that, for revolting barbarity and shameless hypocrisy, America has no rival." (Many People, One Nation. Random House.) "Write a constitution for a world government." (American Government: Comparing Political Experiences. Prentiss Hall.)

ON DEATH EDUCATION: "The Experience of Dying... The individual experiences a cosmic consciousness, characterized by a sense of unity with other people, nature, and the universe; a feeling of being outside time and space; and extraordinary feelings of contentment and ecstasy." (Life and Health. Random House.) "Dying as an Orgasmic Event. The thought of death sometimes occurs in a sexual context.... in that the event of orgasm, like the event of dying, involves a surrender to the involuntary and the unknown." (Life and Health. Random House.)

ON SEXUAL PERMISSIVENESS: "Activity C... 1. Have students write a one-sentence statement on 'Why sex urges can be fun for an adolescent.'... 'What are some of the positive values found in communal living?'" (Finding My Way. Bennett.)

ON RELIGION: "Anthropologists studying human customs, religious practices, ritualism, and the priestcraft came to the conclusion that men created their own religious beliefs so that the beliefs answered their own special needs. The God of the Judeo-Christian tradition was a god worshipped by a desert folk.... and heaven was high above the desert, cool and pleasant. The Eskimos.... reversed the concept.... To the anthropologists religions were functional; they served men's needs, and they were clearly man-created." (Perspectives in United States History. Field.)

YET WHO WILL CALL IT CONSPIRACY?

No doubt you've heard stories about that mythical character, the meanest man in town. A song was written about him, he became so popular. One version of the story went like this. He was so mean and despicable that almost everybody in town hated him. The rest of the people disliked and distrusted him and avoided him as much as possible. Except for one kindly old gentleman who never said anything bad about the mean old man and who insisted, like Will Rogers, that he had never met a man he didn't like. Well, as our version goes, the mean old man finally died. The town leaders were at a loss as to what to do about the situation. They felt there should be a decent burial, and that meant there ought to be someone who would say something nice about the deceased. So, they called on the kindly old gentleman who had never said anything bad about anybody. The kindly old gentleman thought and thought. Then he suddenly smiled and said, "Well, he certainly could whistle a good tune."

Sometimes we feel that our Uncle Sam has come to be like that kindly old gentleman. Back in our childhood Uncle Sam was often seen at Fourth of July parades, or at patriotic meetings. He'd be wearing a red, white and blue ensemble, would be standing straight and tall, and everybody would think of him as the symbol of the spirit of America, the land of the free and the home of the brave. But that noble character who was created by a cartoonist who worked for the communications media, has become changed. His character has been altered by the very media which created him. Now he's like that kindly old gentleman who never met a man he didn't like. Our new Uncle Sam keeps going out of his way to find something nice to say about - or do for - the meanest governments in the world. And about their leaders. We remember how Franklin Roosevelt refused to say anything bad about the USSR because some of his best friends were Communists. And how Harry Truman used to refer to Stalin as "good old Uncle Joe." And how the media which created Uncle Sam in the first place, have put words in his mouth about Mr. and Mrs. Gorbachev being the Jack and Jackie Kennedy of Russia. Now they're having Uncle Sam act as though Deng Xiaoping of Red China is just an Oriental Milton Friedman, a monetarist who's going to turn Socialist China into a Capitalist Cathay. As one columnist said, the people who work for the controlled media "get eyestrain from peering into the dark void of communist nations, squinting to spot some faint glimmer of light. They'll seize on anything: changes in Soviet leadership, Cuban 'literacy,' Nicaraguan 'elections,' Chinese 'liberalization.'" Anything nice that can be said about the meanest nations in the world. Like the Sandinista government being the "legitimate government" of Nicaragua and therefore we have no right to try to help its victims. There seems to be a constant drive to find ways to prove that communist governments are not irredeemably evil. There was one slight exception to this rule when four United States Senators suddenly cancelled their proposed trip to Moscow because one of their staff aides was refused a visa. It seems that this aide, one John Rich, had written some truthful things about the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan and the attempted genocide of its citizens. So, when the Kremlin refused to grant a visa to Mr. Rich the Senators cancelled their own visas and stayed in Washington.

Not so with Tip O'Neill and the House junketeers who have recently returned from their totally unnecessary and unconstitutional trip to Moscow at taxpayers' expense. They were careful to get back in time to talk and vote against a bill to give $14 million to the Contras. We call the junkets of Members of the House unconstitutional actions because according to the Separation of powers detailed in the Constitution, the House has no part in foreign affairs unless money or national matters are involved. The President is empowered to act in all matters concerned with foreign affairs, with the advice and consent of the Senate. The House has nothing to do with treaties, or with the appointment of Ambassadors and other officers concerned with foreign affairs. So, unless those Representatives were concerned about loans or gifts to the USSR, or were worried about national defense, etc., they had no reason for flying to Moscow, except to greet Gorbachev and see whatever sights they were permitted to see. Senators yes. House Members no. We might add that this ought to apply to Presidents as well. We fail to see where the Constitution gives a President any authority or duty to visit any foreign country. That's what Secretaries of State, Ambassadors, et al are all about. The President is supposed to stay at the Nation's home in Washington and manage the central government, with the theoretical advice and consent of the House if domestic affairs or the spending of public funds are involved. Woodrow Wilson was the first violator of this rule. He went to Paris to help make a mess of the Peace Treaty that laid the foundation for a Second World War, and to try to get the United States committed to a world government by way of the League of Nations Charter which was made a part of that Paris Peace Treaty. It would have been far better if Wilson had stayed in Washington. And he might have kept Col. House at home in Texas and let the

THE REALITY OF THE HUMANIST BATTLE

The American Humanist Association's 1985 Conference was held in Kansas City, Missouri, March 29-31. The 1985 Humanist of the Year Award was presented to economist John Kenneth Galbraith. Sol Gordon was presented the Award for Personal commitment and scholarly contribution. Workshops included one session titled: "Pornography: A Humanist Issue," conducted by Sol Gordon, Lester Kirkendall, et al. (Perhaps those who are saying that humanism is non-existent, that it is just a fabricated hoax, and that it cannot be defined, will take note of this conference. Perhaps they will also take note of the following):

A special fund-raising letter from the American Humanist Association stated, emblazoned in red on the envelope: "A Shocking Message from the White House." It then quoted part of President Reagan's statement: "...the battle in this country is basically a spiritual battle. The real issue is: are we going to make God an integral part of our country or are we going to let the Humanists take over?" The fundraising letter, written by Frederick Edwards, the Executive Director, says: "In naming 'Humanism' their modern demon, exponents of the religious-political right have taken aim at every principle Humanists hold dear. Free inquiry, separation of church and state, reproduction choice, unfettered artistic expression, a free press, population growth control, the betterment of the natural environment, and, above all, the primacy of reason and intelligence over superstition and ignorance - all of these cherished principles are in grave danger of being thrown in the ash-heap....Now in this time of great peril for Humanism and Humanist principles, we simply must join hands and close ranks."

Conclusion: The Humanists know that a spiritual battle rages for the minds and souls of people. They are dedicated to stamping out Christian "superstition and ignorance." All they need for victory is for Christians to stick their heads in the sand and "play like" the problem is imaginary, merely "scare tactics" used by radical and unreasonable Christians. Will they succeed? The answer may very well rest with you!

Secretary of State (Robert Lansing) do the negotiating and treaty making in Paris. Since Wilson's trip to Paris, with a few praiseworthy exceptions, Presidents of the United States have galloped all over the globe getting entangled in alliances, involving themselves in other governments' business, telling them how to run their country if they expect to get any handouts from the United States, etc. At a time when some really serious problems are facing this and other Nations, there's this big commotion over our President visiting cemeteries and former concentration camps in West Germany. Makes Uncle Sam look like Uncle Sap. And the pity of it: it probably was planned that way. Here's our mythical Uncle Sam seeking nice things to say about the Soviets while it's notable that all kinds of bad things are being said about the groups who are fighting the Soviets. Take the Contras, for example. They are being accused of all sorts of brutality and atrocities and a Communist-inspired propaganda campaign is being waged to get Congress, especially Tip O'Neill's bloc in Congress, to permanently cut off all aid to the Contras, who are really our allies, as we did to the Nationalist Chinese, the South Vietnamese, the Cambodians, the Afghan freedom fighters and the South Africans who are trying to save themselves from a takeover by the Soviets. As Don McAlvany says, "It's called 'throwing your friends to the wolves' and (in the case of the Contras) will be the betrayal of yet another American ally. This new version of Uncle Sam must never do or say anything bad against our enemies, and must never say or do anything good for our friends. You may or may not subscribe to the McAlvany Intelligence Advisor, but we're going to take the liberty of reprinting a part of what was written in the April 1985 issue of that newsletter:

* * * * *

If the Nicaraguan Contras fall, Honduras, El Salvador, Costa Rica and Guatemala will all fall in quick succession to the Soviet/Cuban/Sandinista juggernaut. There are already (according to U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service officials) some 3 million Mexican and several hundred thousand Central American illegals in the Los Angeles area alone. If Houston, Dallas, Austin, San Antonio, Albuquerque, Phoenix, Tucson, Denver, etc. are considered (not counting Miami and other Southeastern States-Ed.), the total number of illegals must be 10-15 million. Dr. Frank Aker, a respected Defense Department analyst, projects that as the communist "revolution without borders" sweeps northward, up to 18 million more Mexicans and Central Americans will come thundering across the border from Brownsville to Tijuana. ¶ It is now emerging that the Soviet KGB, the Cuban DGI, and Nicaraguan intelligence are infiltrating thousands of communist agents into the U.S. with these aliens in preparation for eventual insurrection, terrorism, and revolution on U.S. soil. An umbrella group of U.S. far left/communist groups, called the Sanctuary Movement is busy smuggling Central American and Mexican leftists into the U.S. via a sort of "underground railroad"; giving them legal aid, jobs, and liaison with revolutionary contact groups. (These leftist groups, incidentally, are in the forefront of cutting off U.S. aid to the Nicaraguan Contras and the El Salvador government, and the anti-South African movement). ¶ On March 17, a training session for Hispanic radicals was held in Houston, Texas. A list of the sponsors reads like a Who's-Who of the left: The Communist Daily Worker, Coalition for Peace and Justice in Central America, Committee for a Democratic Palestine, the Free South Africa Movement, Supporters of Feyadeen, Houston-Gulf Coast Labor Council for Latin American Advancement, Nuclear Freeze Campaign, and dozens more. The planning session was to prepare for the "April Mobilization for Peace and Justice" which is a campaign of nationwide demonstrations for:

- 1) No U.S. intervention in Central America.
- 2) Building a just society by creating jobs and cutting the U.S. military budget.
- 3) Reversing the arms replacement/opposing plans for a Navy base with nuclear weapons on the Gulf Coast.
- 4) Opposing Apartheid/ending Racism - opposing U.S. government and corporate support for South African apartheid.

5) Stopping the deportation of Central American refugees - stopping the prosecution of Sanctuary workers.

In short, the Soviets and their friends are infiltrating thousands of deep cover agents into the U.S. via the Mexican/Central American influx, planning to radicalize and mobilize tens or hundreds of thousands of illegal Hispanic aliens throughout the Southwest, and in the wake of the "victorious communist revolution" in Central America and Mexico, ignite a revolutionary firestorm in the American Southwest. The next five years won't be dull!

While these well-financed Leftist/Communist/Gulliberal gangs are working in behalf of "the rulers of the darkness of this world" in preparation for the planned terrorism and revolutionary action within North as well as South and Central America, other agents of these same "rulers" are working to build up yet another Big Power enemy of the United States. Not satisfied with having produced the Soviet Behemoth, now they're stirring up the Chinese Red Dragon and making it into a superpower. The signal was given when Deng Xiaoping announced that a small amount of controlled free enterprise was being granted the people, and that some "free trade zones" had been set up. So these same "rulers of the darkness of this world" who operate out of New York City and Washington, D.C., are going all out to induce American businessmen to start making deals with agencies of the central government of China. Labor is cheap and the market largely unexplored, so investing in the "new capitalist China" is being promoted. This in spite of the fact that it's all just a Communist ploy and Deng has no intention of deserting Marx, Lenin, Stalin and Mao. Last October 22 he told his comrades in Peking that Communist China was not going capitalist, that the State would retain control of production. "We should not allow young people to become captives of capitalist ideologies or ideals," he said. On March 9 he reiterated his policy: "We must let our people, including our children, know that we are sticking to socialism and communism." On March 27 Prime Minister Zhao Ziyang, in a nationwide broadcast, hinted that China's taste of capitalism was a very temporary thing. He warned the people to be "modest and prudent" and he had changed from his usual business suit to a Mao jacket when he spoke. Furthermore, Israel and Red China have established a secret military relationship. Israel is selling $4 billion of the very finest military equipment to China along with Israeli military advisers to train and assist. So, the bankrupt United States will finance the bankrupt Israel in arming and making a Big Power out of the previously sleeping dragon. Most important indication of what's happening: President Reagan has announced he will appoint Winston Lord as the new envoy to Communist China. Lord is president of the Council on Foreign Relations. Normally he's too busy acting as David Rockefeller's general manager of the CFR to be called for other jobs. But when Henry Kissinger made that secret 1971 flight from Islamabad, Pakistan, to Peking to "open China to the West," Winston Lord flew with Kissinger to Peking. It was George Shultz who asked President Reagan to name Lord to the diplomatic post in Red China. All of this while the USSR and the PRC are busily mending their bridges which we as American taxpayers are financing. And yet, as Gary Allen would say, "None Dare Call It Conspiracy."

THIS SECOND AMERICAN REVOLUTION

Put the "isms" all together to form a composite body and the head of that body still shouts "Conspiracy." And this is the legendary eleventh hour in the Conspirators' timing. Different names are used. The men who claim to rule the world refer to it as their New World Order. The Humanists and Behavioral Scientists may talk of "Global 2000," named after that series of reports submitted to the Carter administration in the last months of Carter's term, and which proposed that the Humanist's Millenium should begin in the year 2000. The odd-ball religionists and occultists usually talk in terms of "New Age" or "The Rainbow" or the "Aquarian Conspiracy." There are other names and other groups promoting what amounts to, in its final analysis, a War Against Christianity, which connotes an attack on Biblical morality, private property, free enterprise and individual liberty. Whatever the "ism" or its stated aims, the final objective entails the establishment of a World Government, a new world religion, and a total destruction of family life as we have known it - a world in which "The State" is the only god that can be worshipped or talked about.

In the progress toward these ends, a state of near hopelessness had begun to develop among Christian patriots. A little less than two years ago John Waddey, Director of the East Tennessee School of Preaching and Missions wrote: "Evil men are waxing worse and worse. Those who hold the false philosophies of humanism, evolution, and hedonism and other similar views are boldly and militantly attacking Christianity and its value system from every side. Most public schools have been captured by these hellish forces. Higher education is generally brazen in its anti-Christian program of attack. The TV and movie industry is almost wholly controlled and used by these evil attitudes. The news media print glowing reports of their conquests and shames and ridicule those who dare oppose them. Most of the mainline Protestant churches have been successfully infiltrated and captured with hardly a struggle. The few remaining ones are under open siege. Denominational teachers and theologians....are among the chief spokesmen for skepticism, immorality and every ungodly moral evil. Our children are being seduced and corrupted by these heathen forces before our very eyes. Our churches are feeling the same pressures in their own memberships. Our moral and spiritual standards are being eroded as pressures mount to conform to modern society. Brethren, one can only hide from a belligerent enemy so long, one can run from the bully only so far. Sooner or later there comes the time when there is no place to run or hide. Inevitably, we will be forced to stop, turn and do battle. The question is, should we wait until every outpost has fallen and the final fortress is surrounded and under attack? Or, should we now, while we yet have a little strength and influence in our society, unsheath the sword and make our stand for God, Christianity, marriage and the family, and morality? The question in many minds seems to be, is it right for Christians to do something other than go to worship, be morally good, and to evangelize?" (Unquote). In writing the above, we are sure that brother Waddey felt that if America is to be saved, the Christian Americans must do the leading in the fight. Hence the question, is it right for Christians to do something other than worship? That question was answered in a most forceful and absolute way by another Christian pastor, Dr. Michle Proctor of the All American Memorial Church in Hollywood, Florida. He wrote and we quote a portion of his message.

"The Russian Baptist listened intently as an interpreter conveyed a question put to him by a small group of Americans. As soon as he grasped the meaning of the question, the Russian sprang to his feet and replied rapidly in his native tongue....This happened at an unspecified location in Switzerland. The Russian, who had spent six years in a Siberian concentration camp for the "crime" of printing and distributing portions of the Bible, had sneaked out of his country and was meeting with the American Christians. The American had just asked the man from Russia this provocative question, "How do you Russian Christians understand and interpret the meaning of Romans 13:1, which declares that "the powers that be (governmental authority) are ordained of God," and that the Christian citizen is to be subject unto them?" The interpreter then conveyed the answer of the Russian: "I'll tell you how every true Christian in Russia understands Romans 13:1. We understand the Biblical passage to say, consistently with all Scripture, that the governmental authority has been ordained of God to do the will of God. But when government denies the existence of God and persecutes the people of God, it is not of God but of Satan." The Russian was saying, in no uncertain terms, that Christians are not obliged to obey those decrees which are anti-God. I agree. The key to proper understanding of this passage is to notice its clear statement that the sphere of government is limited to a) the restraint of evil, and b) the praise of God and good. This two-fold function of God ordained government is declared in verses 3 and 4: "For rulers are not a terror to good works, but to the evil. Wilt thou then not be afraid of the power? Do that which is good and thou shalt have praise of the same. For he (governmental authority) is the minister of God to thee for good...a revenger to execute wrath upon him that doeth evil."...The "Higher Powers" mentioned in Romans 13:1 are, in a Constitutional System such as ours, those who rule in harmony with our U.S. Constitution...A moment's reflection will lead any thoughtful person to see that it is impossible to be subject, at the same time, both to the authorities who uphold the Constitution and those who violate it....It cannot be both ways. To be subject to spurlous and criminal "Authorities" who trample God-ordained constitutional freedoms, is to aid them in the execution of their crimes, to bolster their tyrannical regimes, and to share responsibility for their persecution and plunder of God's people. That is the work of the Devil, and Christians should have no part of it." (Unquote).

For some seventy years most Christians had been going along with and disregarding the rape of our Republic, it's slow deterioration into "democracy," then into Corporate State Welfarism, the loss of liberties and the sealing of the fate of our children and grandchildren. But, suddenly, things began to change. There was the much publicized treatment accorded Pastor Sileven and his people in Nebraska. There were constant though partially concealed reports of children being kidnapped by the authorities because their parents had chosen to teach them at home in a Christian atmosphere. There were stories of parents being jailed, their homes taken from them and their children lost to them because they sought to obey the ordinances of God. Such events began to arouse sleeping Christians. Then there began a crusade against the Federal Reserve System, another popular revolt against the Gestapo-like tactics of the IRS and certain agencies of the Treasury Department. Slowly, the "climate of opinion" began to shift throughout the country. Men dared to point out publicly to those alleged "higher authorities" in State and National Governments, that there had been a violation of the Constitution in regard to its gold and silver clause. Patriot Tupper Saucy went to jail and his wife and children suffered physically at the hands of the court, and he was imprisoned without legal cause or due process. But, as Thomas Jefferson would say, martyrs are needed when the Tree of Liberty needs nourishment. (There really was an elm named the Liberty Tree in Boston under which the "Sons of Liberty" often gathered to call out "Liberty, Property and No Stamps!") Other martyrs were Ed and Sharon Pangelinan who were jailed, suffered the loss of their children and their property at the hands of one Judge Strawbridge of Decatur, Alabama. Their "crime," was their determination to teach Christian values to their own children in their own home. Such actions on the part of judges only add to the fire of resentment and the cause of liberty was deeply involved. Then there is the case of patriots Red Beckman and Bill Benson who went to work checking records and visiting archives in State Capitals to prove that the Sixteenth, Income Tax Amendment, was never legally ratified. A book is being written and lectures have been arranged. Also, that modern counterpart of what Samuel Adams called the "Committee of Correspondence," and now is referred to as the alternate press (newsletters) have become bolder in tone, less hesitant to tell the whole truth whenever it is revealed to their editors. In more direct, physical action, anti-abortionists have put the torch to some of those hellish places dedicated to the legal murder of unborn babies. There again there have been martyrs. To further irritate those alleged "higher powers," the IRS estimates that possibly twenty million persons may have evaded or avoided the payment of income taxes for 1984. And yet again, the revolt against unconstitutional and illegal actions on the part of governmental authorities was heightened when it was learned that all of those hundreds of protesters and demonstrators arrested for their actions against South Africa's policy of apartheid were released and never tried for their offenses. Because District of Columbia judges refused to hear the cases, demonstrators were directed to move onto the University of California campus at Berkeley and "do their thing." 150 were said to have been arrested. But the three judges in Alameda County refused to hear the cases, and told the amazed and protesting prosecuting attorney that "their own anti-apartheid sentiments have compromised their judicial impartiality." So, the communists, dupes, fools, ignorant and what Communist leaders used to call "fellow travelers on the road to Socialism" are being organized and sent to some 60 other college and university campuses in a variety of States to conduct similar anti-apartheid demonstrations. We feel urged to add, parenthetically, that there is more than ever meets the eye of the media-reader in regard to these anti-apartheid protests. About all we see or hear from the media concerning South Africa have to do with Bishop Tutu and similar "communists wearing Christian clothes", and the rioting gangs who defy the police and sometimes get killed. But American historian Otto Scott, much respected and the author of such books as his latest "The Other End of the Rainbow," told John Rees of The Review of the News that "The Calvinist Government of South Africa is more Christian than any modern government that I have encountered. They have more ministers in their parliament than any other in the world. They teach Christianity in their schools. They are converting the blacks to Christianity. They have resorted to deficit spending to improve the condition of the blacks...." So, it becomes apparent that this war against South Africa and its friends is just one more bit of evidence of the overall global war against Christianity.

But back to the American scene. The "climate of opinion" has so shifted and the revolt and potential revolution have become so threatening to the Conspirators that they have found it necessary to fight back with every weapon at their command. And they have most of the weapons in the material sense. Therefore, any right-wing protester who becomes bothersome immediately is labeled a vigilante or a neo-nazi. Swazi teams have been sent out at the instigation of some highly-connected banks, to make examples of certain people so that other people will fear what might happen to them if they protest too strongly. Even murder may be involved, and has been.

The timing was right for the Conspirators. Almost coexistent on the calendar of events were several important items:

- 1) The 40th anniversary of the end of the European phase of World War II.
- 2) The 10th anniversary of the fall of Saigon, ending the Vietnam War.
- 3) The observation of "Holocaust Week."
- 4) The vote on aid to the Contras.
- 5) The proposed budget.
- 6) The anti-apartheid protests and demonstrations.
- 7) The Economic Summit scheduled to be held in West Germany in May.
- 8) The controversy over the Reagan trip to a West Germany military cemetery.

Each of these provided fodder for the mills of the media. Almost overnight the three most maligned men in American became Ronald Reagan; Patrick Buchanan, his new director of communications; and Ted Turner who wanted to buy CBS. The media began to ask if a man who has successfully operated a network for several years is capable of operating a network. The top entrepreneur of them all was accused of not having enough business acumen to run CBS. As for the President and his "new staff" (it's become a new staff now that Pat Buchanan has become a chief adviser to the President), U.S. News asked, "Is White House Losing its Magic?" and commented that "A barrage of blunders and bad news in mid-April threatened to shatter Ronald Reagan's image as a politician who can do no wrong....The setbacks not only encouraged the President's once cowed critics to press fresh attacks but raised questions about whether Reagan and, more especially, his revamped team of advisers have lost their magic touch. Two public humiliations for the White House triggered the reversal. The President gave ground on military aid for the contras in Nicaragua, and under fire he hastily added a tour of the Bergen-Belson concentration camp to balance his visit to a German military cemetery after May's economic-summit meeting....At home, Reagan faces mounting resistance in Congress on the budget, international trade and tax reform. Overseas, he is starting to lose momentum in dealings with the Soviet Union." (Unquote).

When the vote on aid for the contras drew near, a well organized blockade of the White House was provided by characters who suddenly appeared out of the shadows. Women without shoes, men who appeared to have neither shaved nor bathed for weeks, an estimated 25,000 of them who came equipped with all the necessary audio equipment to shout at ear-splitting level "Stop Contra aid," and "Don't go to Bitburg." Other groups shouted "Save South Africa," "Save Social Security," "Stop All Wars," and some slogans and slurs that shouldn't be printed. One marvels at the power of the Conspirators to suddenly bring so many unkempt but well organized creatures to such a place in so short a time. And we might suspect that none of this would have happened if the Conspirators were not really worried and felt they had to fight back.

For seventy years the Conspirators have had their way and they have almost destroyed our Christian civilization. But suddenly there has begun to be an awakening. And the enemy knows it is being threatened. So, hard times are coming, real troubles can be expected. But can we win? Gary North, editor of Remnant Review thinks we can. In a recent newsletter he wrote: "We shouldn't be pessimistic. We've got the proper principles, and eventually these principles are going to triumph. Our knowledge of conspiracies offers us a shovel by which to bury the plans of evil men. This knowledge must not paralyze us with fear concerning 'these powerful men.' Like Goliath, they are vulnerable, and for similar reasons. Our 'shovel' is not to be used to dig our own graves. As God said to Joshua after the death of Moses, and just before the invasion of Canaan, ". . . Only be strong and very courageous, that thou mayest observe to do according to the law,. . . turn not from it to the right hand or to the left, that thou mayest prosper whithersoever thou goest. (Joshua 1:6-7)." The best defense is good offense. We must take the offensive. And we must be governed by this vision: they are evil and will eventually lose: we are righteous and will eventually win. Therefore: 'My hand out of your wallet; your hand out of my wallet; no handouts by the government, and handcuffs for the thieves.' I think principled people can and will recapture this country."

MAKING MOUNTAINS OUT OF MOLEHILLS

Theo Hallet is the Mayor of Bitburg, a town in West Germany that had become famous because of its military cemetery where the remains of thousands of victims of World War II lie buried. Men of many nationalities who gave their lives in that great war are honored each year in solemn commemoration of the day the war ended in Europe. Each year for the past 25 years officials from NATO and its member nations, including a high representative of the U.S. Government, gather to honor the dead and pray for an end of such wars. In past years the American representative at this ceremony usually has been the commanding general of the nearby American airbase. But this year there was to be a higher ranking representative of the U.S. Government who might be asked to lay a wreath and speak appropriate words. Since the President of the United States was to be in West Germany to attend an economic summit, why not invite President Reagan to attend and participate in the observance? So thought Chancellor Helmut Kohl who extended the invitation. Mayor Hallet expected no controversy. In a telephone conversation with Spotlight correspondent Paul Chevasson he said "Bitburg was chosen for the Reagan visit because nothing has ever happened on past occasions to mar this event. We are a pro-American township. We have no street demonstrations here against the 'Yankis' or the U.S. military as happens in some other cities." There was no "right versus left" controversy involved; not at first that is. Richard Nixon approved and may have helped sponsor the idea. Henry Kissinger approved. Secretary of State George Shultz explained that "What the President is trying to do in that visit is emphasize themes of rebuilding peace, reconciliation. They are themes about which the President feels very strongly, including his very strong feeling about the Nazi concentration camps and the horror that they represent....The President's purpose and effort will be to emphasize these themes....and the statements he makes and the way he comports himself I think will be fully in keeping with those themes. We hope those will be the things people will see and remember." So spoke the man who represents the Eastern Establishment and is the ranking member of the President's Cabinet. We beg to differ. Your editor hopes that people will see and remember that this whole affair was a demonstration of power and the influence of the Zionist Party which found a molehill and built it into a mountain of protest and criticism of a man who dared to stand against the so-called Jewish Lobby and do what he felt to be morally right. The controversy over Bitburg spilled over into other areas, including the question of aid to the Nicaraguan Freedom Fighters. In final analysis the Bitburg Battle was just one incident in a long war which has been rightly labeled World War III. However, in this present war, words, not bombs, have become the principal weapon, at least up to the time of this writing. A review of the record is important.

On May 1 in 1776 a German professor named Adam Weishaupt established a secret society known as the Order of the Illuminati. When the things its members did in secret did not spread its Satanic doctrines as fast as Weishaupt and his initiates desired, they organized a series of "reading clubs" where their doctrines could be broadcast. They also sought to control newspapers, magazines, plays, music, all communications media known at that time, and thus gain control of the world. Their plans were suspended temporarily when Bavarian authorities discovered and put an end to the Order. But Illuminism resurfaced and became the principal doctrines of the French Revolution. About 100 years later the plans for gaining control over the world were restated in a controversial document known generally as "The Protocols of the Elders of Zion." The authorship of the Protocols is a matter of great dispute, which need not concern us inasmuch as the fact that here was a clear statement of how the world could be captured, and how it should be governed. And here again, we see the importance attached to the control of communications and the engineering of consent. We quote from a part of Protocol No. XII:

"What is the present role of the press? It serves to arouse furious passions or egotistical party dissensions which may be necessary for our purpose. It is empty, unjust, inaccurate, and most people do not understand what end it serves. We will shackle it and keep a tight rein on it. We will also do the same with other printed matter...We will convert the products of publicity....into a source of income....Not one notice will be made public without our consent. This is already being done by us, since the news from all parts of the world is received through several agencies in which it is centralized....Anybody who wishes to become an editor, a librarian, or a printer, will be obliged to obtain a diploma, which in case of disobedience will be immediately revoked. With such measures, thought will become an educational instrument in the hands of our government...."

In a remarkable book, "Public Relations," by Edward L. Bemays who has been called the father of public relations, the story is told of how the clever use of propaganda became a principal weapon in World Wars I and II. He wrote on page 157: "Democracy has been defined as government by the consent of the governed. But today our society is so complex that it is not government alone that needs the public's consent. Every group and, for that matter, every individual needs the understanding and support of public opinion, in order to become integrated into our democratic society. To achieve this integration, the individuals or groups who wish to present their case to the public must employ one or more of the media of communication. These media - the press, motion pictures, radio, television, and so on - are now immense in their impact, reaching millions of people, sometimes the entire nation." Unquote. Bemays coined the phrase, "The Engineering of Consent" to describe the means through which ideas could be promoted or defeated, causes won or lost through the media.

The Communists were quick to take advantage of what we have termed "making mountains out of molehills," in order to deceive and conquer. Dimitry Manuilsky of the Lenin School of Political Warfare is often quoted as boasting that Moscow would launch the most spectacular peace movement the world had ever seen and when her enemies' guard was down, would destroy them with a clenched fist." When NATO was formed and American military bases were set up, and nuclear and other weapons were installed in England and the countries of West Europe, such a peace campaign was launched by the Soviet. Hilaire du Berrier comments: "Foolish women set up camps in the proximity of American bases in Britain, determined to prevent the deployment of arms which would save England from a repetition of 1939. And the saddest part of the dupery was that millions who clamored for pacifism in the West refused to believe they were marching to the beat of Russian drummers. Never did they ask themselves if pacifism had spared the Afghans. This is the way wars are started, not avoided." By the clever use of propaganda, aided by the communications media of the U.S. and the nations of Western Europe, the Soviets built a mountain of emotion and a demand for disarmament - even unilateral disarmament. Sidney Webb, co-founder of the Fabian Society, explained how these "useful idiots" could be used, to march "to the beat of Russian drummers" in pacifist demonstrations, in aiding the Sandinistas, in aiding the Zionist Party to "get even" with Ronald Reagan, or whatever use that seemed expedient: "To play on those millions of minds, to watch them slowly respond to an unknown stimulus, to guide their aspirations without their knowledge - all this in high capacities or humble, is a big and endless game of chess of extraordinary excitement." But H du B explained how the mountain failed to achieve its purpose in this particular case:

"Andrei Gromyko, Soviet Russia's Minister of Foreign Affairs, with his years of experience was terrified by the West's lead in technology. For ten years Soviet scientists had been experimenting with weapons designed to destroy missiles in space. When America began the same experiments accompanied by the deployment of Cruise and Pershing II missiles which would outmatch Russia's preponderance of multi-warhead missiles pointing westward, Gromyko warned Soviet generals that Russia needed time. He had made the same pleas with Andrei Grechko, the war minister who preceded Dimitri Ustinov. At last he found an ally in Yuri Andropov, the KGB chief who rose to the peak of Soviet power before he died. Between them the two men set a plan in motion to disarm America through the sort of mass demonstrations which brought humiliation and defeat in Vietnam. Pacifist demonstrations would prevent the deployment of America's superior arms in Europe.... This was the Soviet game and exciting it might have been, but it was also desperate, and it failed. As the fall of 1983 approached, Moscow's 'peace march' organizer in West Germany, Herr Jo Leinen, advised his masters in the Kremlin that they would have to take another tack. Lenin had recognized that faceless terrorism is subversion's last card before open war. So terrorism it had to be. In war by terrorism it is imperative that national communist parties take their distances, that they maintain a respectable image and disavow any connection with those following the orders of Moscow's other arm. Lenin wrote: 'We will never reject the principle of terror. It is a form of military operation which can be usefully employed, or which can be necessary in certain periods of the battle,' but those conducting such actions must appear to be on their own. On January 15th, 1985, the French terrorist group, Direct Action, delivered a five-page communique to the press which amounted to an announcement of mobilization and declaration of war. Direct Action, or Action Direct as it is called in French, announced that it was forming a merger with West Germany's Red Army Faction under a single command. Gone was any pretense that their goal is a class struggle. Instead of masking their activities with drivel about social rights, independence movements and ideologies, the new force of international terrorists draws its killers from a dozen nations. They are of all colors but bound by the same hates. They are directed against the same enemies, trained in the same camps, financed by the same backers and sheltered in the same sanctuaries. They announced that their fusion into a single force is: 'To establish a political-military front for the waging of guerrilla warfare against the bases, strategies and structures of NATO, American imperialism and the enemy, Reagan'." (H du B Reports, Letter 10, March, 1985. Monthly, $75 per year. American address: P.O.Box 786, St. George, Utah 84770.)

Confirmation of the above comes from "Intelligence Digest," a British publication which, in its April 22 issue, reports that "1985 has already earned the title of the 'Year of Terrorism.' A coordinated onslaught is being directed against European targets by terrorist groups that, despite national and ideological differences, arm, assist, and finance each other.

"As we have seen in Ireland, terrorism is often a hydra-headed monster. Leaders killed or imprisoned find replacements. In the German Federal Republic a 'new generation' has arisen; instead of the Baeder-Meinhof gang there is now the Red Army Faction. With Direct Action in France and the Fighting Communist Cells of Belgium it has entered into an alliance with Italian, Portuguese, and also Middle-East terrorists. Specially-favoured targets are key individuals and installations of, or those connected with, NATO and industries that serve West Germany - the front lines against the Warsaw bloc. Belgium has logistic importance: its territory carries the oil pipeline from the sea to NATO's central front in Germany...France (like Britain on occasions) has been criticized in allied circles for permitting its territory and capital to become a haven and battleground for international terrorism....In Spain the military wing of the Basque separatist ETA blew up the pipeline connecting the two military bases of Rota and Zaragoza....Portugal is a relative newcomer to the Euro-terrorist scene. Of deep concern is the vulnerability to attack by the terrorist group known as the Popular Forces of the 25 of April of the substantial NATO coal stocks held on the south bank of the Tagus close to crowded centers of population. The wounding of 70 US servicemen in a bar near Athens and the murder of a pro-Western news editor are outrages claimed by the hitherto unknown Cyprus National Front. It remains to be seen whether such acts of terrorism will encourage, or further weaken, an already undependable NATO ally." (Intelligence Digest, 17 Rodney Road, Cheltenham, Glos. GL501HX).

Dave Doubrava of The Washington Times, writes: "The United States is ill prepared to deal with terrorism and most Americans do not realize how terrorist groups use propaganda and psychological warfare in this country to achieve their ends...State-sponsored terrorism has added a new dimension to the problem of preventing violent acts against governments and individuals, but the United States government's response to it is fragmented and erratic....Joel Lisker, staff director and chief counsel for the Senate Subcommittee on Security and Terrorism and a former FBI agent and Justice Department official, said the government's anti-terrorist activities are 'fragmented between 23 agencies. There needs to be some kind of steering committee. Nobody has a broad overview, or cares about it. A lot can be done, but I don't think anybody cares about it.' He said the Justice Department has 'abdicated its responsibility,' particularly under the Foreign Agents Registration Act, in investigating groups that propagandize in behalf of terrorist groups....Mr. Lisker said the subcommittee, headed by Sen. Jeremiah Denton, R-Ala, plans hearings next month (May) into terrorism and 'will take pains to make terrorism a major issue....Arnaud de Borchgrave, editor-in-chief of The Washington Times and an expert on Soviet disinformation, criticized the major media organizations in this country, saying many journalists today 'make it their duty to turn our sworn enemies into misunderstood innocents.' He said the perceptions of Congress and the American people are shaped by a 'liberal media' that virtually ignores stories detailing the Soviet Union's involvement in supporting terrorist groups, and the interconnections between terrorist groups and their support organizations here. Such is 'a willful, intentional distortion' of the facts, he said." He might have added that such an act involving national security can be called treason.

Our European sources state that terrorism has replaced pacifism as a major weapon in the Soviet arsenal. And we feel that the order was given by someone bigger than Gorbachev. The chief individual enemies seem to be Ronald Reagan, Margaret Thatcher, and the Pope, each of whom escaped the first attempt on their lives. However, in this new phase, the principal aim will be "to seek maximum psychological impact by striking at populations," to stir up "the sort of hysterical people who make up the 'peace marchers' of today." Targets will be airports, crowded stores, theaters, sports centers, places where crowds gather and the feeling may be planted that no citizen is safe. Sooner or later an apathetic West will realize that World War III has started and terrorists, be they individual muggers or group dynamiters, have no rights when national and individual security is involved. In times like these "Watch ye, stand fast in the faith, quit ye like men, be strong." (1 Corinthians 16:13).

THE CLOUDS THAT SHROUDED THE SUMMIT

Every year since 1975, the leaders of the Trilateral Commission have arranged an Economic Summit which is attended by the heads of State and Government of the members of the Trilateral Nations. But this year the 11th annual Economic Summit was so overshadowed by conflicting events that little has been heard about this important meeting of government heads which was concluded on May 6th at Bonn, West Germany. The plan arranged by the Trilats and the participating secret and semisecret organizations, called for the meeting to be held in conjunction with the 40th anniversary observance of the end of the European phase of World War II. But Chancellor Helmut Kohl of West Germany had a plan of his own. Every year since 1957 ranking officials of the United States, France, United Kingdom and West Germany met to honor the war dead at a cemetery at Bitburg. Since President Reagan was going to be in Bonn for the Economic Summit meetings, why not ask him to represent the United States and appear as a special guest at the Bitburg ceremony? President Reagan thought it an excellent idea because there was a great need for reconciliation between The U.S. and the Nations of Western Europe, and this would work to the advantage of them all. But one thing was overlooked: There were some German troops buried in the cemetery, along with the allied dead. When the Jewish organizations learned of this, they must have thought, "What a way to stir up a wave of anti-semitism on a world-wide scale." When antisemitism is at a low ebb, it's difficult to meet the annual quota on Bonds for Israel. The resulting Zionist-inspired, media-promoted uproar became so intense that the most important event of the week - the Economic Summit - was mostly overlooked or underplayed. Contributing to the lack of media coverage was the fact that this Eleventh Economic Summit was more or less a failure. The heads of State and Government didn't go along with all the proposals President Reagan was told to request. President Mitterand of France refused have anything to do with the Strategic Defense Initiative (so-called Star Wars). And none of them would agree to a proposed new round of talks on General Agreement of Tariffs and Trade (GATT). Mitterand demanded that any such discussion on tariffs and trade should be accompanied by a conference on a new monetary system. Canadian Prime Minister Brian Mulroony said things were "pretty tense" whenever Mitterand (a Socialist) got into the discussions. But Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone summed it all up by saying the other participants were acting like children. So, they all gave up, applied enough pressure on Mitterand to get him to sign the final communique, and they adjourned until next year. For the first time in eleven years things didn't go as the "world rulers" wanted them to go. By "world rulers" in this case, since the international bankers were not personally involved but only represented, we refer to the Trilateral Commission, the Council on Foreign Relations, the Bilderberger Group, The Paris based Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD), and other secret and semi-secret supranational groups that are cooperating to create a new World Economic Order. However, the "power brokers" did achieve one aim. Their goal is to divide the world into a series of regional world governments, each of them being controlled by a One World Government. The first of these to be created was the European Community. And President Reagan's last and most important address in Europe was to be to the members of the European Parliament, giving sanction to that body as a Regional World Government.

The failure of this Eleventh Economic Summit must have been a disappointment to the builders of the New International Economic Order. For which we can be thankful. It seems that the timing got out of hand. The Trilateral Commission held its annual meeting April 21-23, so its instructions to the seven Trilateral Nations were handed out approximately two weeks before the summit conference. However, it was decided that the Economic Summit was to coincide with the observance of the end of the European war, and the Bilderberger Group was caught short. It was not scheduled to meet until May 10-13 at Port Chester, N.Y.; too late to finalize its demands upon the heads of State and Government who had already met in Bonn. The Trilateral Commission is controlled by the London and New York Megabankers, whose chief spokesman is David Rockefeller. But the Bilderberger Group is a more Europe-oriented organization whose leadership is shared by the Rockefeller-Rothschild coalition. Rockefeller the upstart and Rothschild the veteran have never seen eye to eye in all things. Mitterand would have been waiting for instructions from the Paris-based Rothschild combine, and this may have been the reason he was such a "bad boy" at the economic summit, refusing to agree because he had not been told what to agree to. An added reason for the Bonn Summit failure: President Reagan has an obstinate streak in him that sometimes manifests itself. Possibly encouraged by Pat Buchanan, he absolutely refused to bow to the will of the Zionists and the Media in the matter of his attendance at the Bitburg ceremony. So, for a time, the world's most hated man is one Ronald Reagan. Let's hope he stays with us on the right side of the aisle for the rest of his term.

The idea of the need for an annual Economic Summit was first proposed by Henry Owen of the Brookings Institution, who also served as an Ambassador-at-Large under President Truman. In 1968 the World Planners were at a kind of crossroads. The United Nations had failed them in that it had become little more than a Soviet-sponsored debating society at which third world leaders were able to vent their spleen against Israel and South Africa, and demand more aid from the industrialized nations. The IMF and World Bank were under fire, and other things were not working out exactly as they desired. Henry Owen surveyed the situation, wrote an article entitled "Foreign Policy Premises for the next Administration," which began: "We are, at this very moment, passing through an age of transition...Traditional uses of national power by developed countries are not likely to figure as prominently in the future as in the past....The U.S. role, in particular, is likely to decline; and multilateral groupings and cooperation offer the most promising - if still imperfect - way of filling the resulting vacuum...Here is a task which can give substance to the concept to a community of developed nations made up of the United States, Western Europe and Japan. For only if these three industrial giants cooperate closely can the task be discharged." Shortly after this statement was read by the power brokers, Zbigniew Brzezinski was commissioned to set up a group of biggies who would work toward the formation of a Trilateral Commission. This Commission, composed of carefully chosen leaders, should address itself to four purposes: 1) Create a demand for a redistribution of the earth's wealth along terms proposed by the Commission; 2) Create a single international currency for the world, which would be controlled by the IMF, which would become a world central bank similar in power to the Federal Reserve System, but on a global scale; 3) Remove all nationalistic economic barriers to so-called "free trade"; 4) Step up efforts to encourage the flow of private investment to the developing countries.

What Henry Owen proposed in 1968 became a reality in 1975 with the inauguration of the first economic summit at Rambouillet (near Paris). Jeremiah Novak, in an article entitled "Trilateral Governance," stated: "Far faster than most people realize the domestic and foreign policy of the United States is being influenced by a new supranational 'directory' operating on a governmental and private basis through clearly discernable institutions. Under the aegis of the Trilateral Commission and noted trilateralists in other countries in Western Europe and Japan, this supranational 'directory' - a new superstate - is gradually coming into control of the world economy. It is this 'directory' which sets the pace for economic development and which determines its institutional shape....Policy making in the age of Trilateralism has shifted from the Congress and even from the Administration of the United States to the supranational summits, where it is directly influenced by the members of the Trilateral Commission, the supranational preparatory groups and the supranational OECD. President Carter (as well as President Reagan who succeeded him) is not the President of the United States, but the general manager of a subsidiary of a supranational institution. Policy comes from the summits to the Administration, and it is not the result of the desires of the American people or of the summit countries, who are unaware that the summits have been institutionalized into a semi-federal supranational directory."Of course summitry is just one part of the means by which a supranational directory (world government) gives orders to the established governments of Japan and the Industrialized West. But that this Eleventh Economic Summit was pretty much a failure is important news. It adds evidence to the feeling that there is a change in the air, that established governments are not about to surrender their sovereignty and their independence to this supranational directory. But it's too early to celebrate. Because where Summitry is slipping, other control factors are gaining in power. One indication was President Reagan's recognition of the European Parliament as the arm of an accepted and legitimate Regional World Government.

Along with the Summitry scheme was the program to create a new world order through the establishment of a series of conventions, treaties, and organizations which would operate like the existing UN agencies, as world rulers in their own limited areas. Such as the Seabed Treaty, the various human rights conventions, the genocide convention, etc. This was called "Piecemeal Functionalism" and, along with Summitry and the creation of Regional World Governments, would all work together toward the creation of that final New International Economic Order, and the Supranational Directory which would govern over all. This "Piecemeal Functionalism" called for a central authority which would bind together all the pieces. That meant the United Nations had to be re-installed as a world authority. The process began seriously when Jimmy Carter signed a set of human rights declarations which were to be carried out by the UN. Then when Ronald Reagan became President of the U.S. a step was taken which seemed to be for the good of the U.S. - Jeane Kirkpatrick was named U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations. It was an excellent nomination to a post that was better left unfulfilled. And she did an excellent job at the U.N. She found a way to put an end to the jibes and cat-calls being directed against anything American, did the best job of representing the United States that had ever been done in that organization. But she did her job too well. We mean no disrespect, but when she spoke people listened; and because she spoke at the U.N., that organization began to take upon itself something of an aura of respect. The U.N. began to be taken seriously once again. It appeared that the United States was again treating the United Nations as a respectable world body worthy of respect, and having authority as a world government! By honoring the United Nations with an American presence that body began to regain lost authority. It would have been a far better thing if our government had turned its back on the United Nations as it once did to its predecessor, the League of Nations, and had asked the Communist spy ring to just leave the country, instead of paying so many of its bills and treating it as a world authority worthy of respect. In short, while Jeane Kirkpatrick was promoting the interests of the United States she also, perhaps unwillingly and reluctantly, was promoting the interests of the United Nations by speaking to its Council.

In a somewhat similar manner, Jeane Kirkpatrick's old boss and new party leader was guilty of the same kind of error: speaking too well at the wrong places. He consented to deliver his most important speech before the European Parliament in Strasbourg, France. His honoring this struggling body that's trying to establish itself as a Regional World Government, played directly into the hands of the bulldozers of the New World Order, and especially into the hands of the UN-sponsored, Socialist-blueprinted New International Economic Order. Ever since the introduction of the Marshall Plan for rebuilding Europe after World War II, the Socialist-minded power brokers have been attempting to do away with all the national governments of Western Europe and unite them into a Regional World Government. The idea of European Unity probably began when Winston Churchill suggested that the French and the British should adopt a common citizenship, an idea that Charles deGaulle rejected very firmly. Then, in 1948 when the Marshall Plan was established, it was suggested that the American aid to Europe be distributed cooperatively between countries. This inspired the Belgian Socialist Paul Henri Spaak, the French political leader Robert Schumann and the Internationalist economist Jean Monnet to suggest and promote the formation of a European Common Market. In 1949 the foreign ministers of 10 European Nations organized a Council of Europe. At about this same time a number of prominent individuals from Europe and the United States, under the direction of a somewhat mysterious person named Dr. Joseph H. Retinger, organized what came to be known as the Bilderberg Group. This group decided to back and promote the idea of creating a United States of Europe. But even with the backing of the influence and money of the Rockefellers and the Rothschilds, the going was very tough. Most Western Europeans are nationalistic to the core, have no desire to see their native lands swallowed up by a Global Behemoth. Finally, in 1958, the "European Community" was founded and was granted some economic sovereignty but no political power. According to The Christian Science Monitor, "Over the years the (European) Parliament has grown somewhat in stature. Direct elections were agreed on in 1974, and in June 1979 some 111 million Europeans elected 410 deputies to sit at Strasbourg." But it can be said that the European Nations were against the idea and were coerced (economic pressure) into accepting this Parliament as a kind of central government. Furthermore, the Parliament must function in seven different national languages, 42 possible language combinations; and things will get even more complicated when Spain and Portugal become members. All in all, this Regional World Government that is being built needed a boost, and Ronald Reagan was there to provide it at Strasbourg, hisses and jeers to the contrary notwithstanding. As The Christian Science Monitor opined: "His appearance at Strasbourg today presents a victory for European Community democracy." But something more needed to be added. Spain and Portugal, especially the latter, were not happy about becoming members of this Regional World Government. As Europe, magazine of the European Community, noted back in January 1983: "The question of Spanish and Portuguese membership in the European Community is turning into an acid test of the E.C., which is being accused by some people...of virtual paralysis. The enlargement of the Community to include the countries of the Iberian peninsula is regarded as a stimulating challenge...."

In short, the new Regional World Government was still in trouble, needed to have Spain and Portugal within its economic control. Now, since Portugal was very reluctant about giving up its economic sovereignty and national independence to some northern central government, Portugal needed a prod in the right direction. And here was Ronald Reagan in Europe. A quick trip to Lisbon and a talk with the right people would provide the prod. And that's why Reagan went to Portugal. Not so much to protect American interests, but that the "Great Communicator" might enhance the power brokers' interests in their new Regional World Government.

THE HIDEOUS STRENGTH OF THE SOCIALIST CONSPIRACY

In a world so filled with terrorism and violence it seems significant that much of it is committed by the very governments that, at least in theory, are created to prevent such things. Murder of millions in Cambodia, Afghanistan, Ethiopia and other parts of Africa; continual wholesale bloodshed in the Middle East; Revolution and resurrection in South and Central America; thousands of aliens pouring into the United States every day, among them an untold number of terrorists and agents provocateurs; these are but a few of the horrors that beset America and the world. The daily press advises of a new worldwide wave of killings and bombings inspired by Libya's Muammar Khadafy and Iran's Ayatollah Ruhollan Khomeini. A responsible newsletter editor titles his latest issue "Countdown to World War III." Ron Robison of "Young America's Foundation" reports that "Right now the campuses are flooded with Marxist speakers from the Nicaraguan government and from the communist rebels in El Salvador....At many colleges like Dartmouth, Yale and the University of Iowa, the college administration is actually using its power to eliminate student conservative organizations." Christian groups and organizations are banned in most universities, colleges and high schools. Robert Conquest is recognized as one of the foremost authorities on communist history. He and John Manchip White have written a book, "What to do when the Russians come." They suggest how it may be done: "Initially American surrender might not be given such a harsh name. America would be allowed to save a certain amount of face....by disguising the unpleasantness of formal surrender under some rubric as a 'disarmament agreement'. America would agree to the dispatch of Soviet 'inspection teams' to monitor the 'agreement'. The teams would be military and would set up bases in key areas. Their consistent and rapid reinforcement, which the United States would be powerless to halt, would naturally lead, without undue loss of time, to full-scale Soviet control". (Page 18). The authors give some advice to the victims: "Your best course is to lay in, as far in advance as you can, an ample supply of provisions. In the first days of the occupation, keep off the streets. Stay indoors. Keep away from the windows. Remain at the back door of the house. Do not reply to any knock on the front door. If you hear your front door being broken in, try to smuggle your family out of an exit at the rear if you can do so without running into any patrols that may be prowling in the back.... The usual procedure is for groups of five or six soldiers, or sometimes more, to enter a house, hold the males at gunpoint and rape the females". (Pages 20-21. This book is published by Stein and Day, Scarborough House, Briarcliff Manor, New York, NY 10510. $14.95).

The foregoing presents a picture of what has happened in lands where the Communist invaders have taken control. It could happen here. But it is doubtful, because the Power Elite that plans to rule the world has devised a different set of plans for the countries of the West, especially for those countries that are represented by members of the Trilateral Commission, the Bilderberger Group, OECD, Club of Rome and such builders of the New World Order. For example, when Khrushchev said "We will bury you," he said later that he was not speaking of military action, or of political power, but of economics; not of ballistic missiles, but of finance capitalism. And he was speaking, not simply as a Communist, but as an Internationalist and a Marxist. There is a difference.

Sixty-five years ago, when Socialism was beginning to be recognized by a few as a menace to the many, the New York State Legislature set up a select committee to investigate seditious activities within the State. The committee published a four volume report which came to be known as the "Lusk Report," one of the most informative and important reports on the subject of Socialism and its offspring Communism ever published. It stated an essential fact which most of us have forgotten, overlooked, or never knew, that: "Socialism in its exact and scientific sense is based on certain definite principles, and not on various states of mind. It has a theory of both industrial and political society that involves a radical reconstruction of the present world, making its political organization subordinate to its economic or industrial organization." Note those last eleven words: If the political is subordinate to the economic, then the latter will be the agency used to subordinate the political to the financial. If the set-up is international, and it is, then it must necessarily be true that all will be under the control of ORGANIZED INTERNATIONAL FINANCE. The Lusk Report went on to state: "It is a peculiar fact that there exists not a single system of Anglo-Saxon socialism, nor a single system of Latin Race Socialism. In fact, the only scientific, concrete, and perfectly systematic scheme is of German-Jewish origin - the scheme of Karl Marx. This is the basis for the materialism of present day Socialism, for its antagonism to religion, to ethics, and to all idealism based on principles, on sentiments and intellectual concepts that do not relate to purely material life and wealth interests."

Yet another significant fact: The Marxian rules of procedure are still being followed. They have not been materially changed from 1848 up to the present. This in spite of the fact that during those 137 years kings have fallen, nations have been absorbed, other nations have lost their identity, governments have been wiped out, new political parties have been organized and dropped, old political parties have reversed their platforms, we have ceased to be a Free Enterprise Republic and have become a Corporate, Welfare State Democracy. And there have been great technological changes. But the party leadership behind socialism has never lost its unseen power and its platform has not been subjected to any basic change. The aim remains a world in which the political is subordinate to the economic and the industrial; and thus all will be under the control of organized international finance. Marx and Engel composed a ten point program which would, when fully installed, destroy a nation. And that would lead to the establishment of a financial dictatorship, which was the final goal.

In order to carry out this program, two schools of Socialism developed. Our former editorial associate and publisher, Upton Close, referred to it as the "two churches that make up the religion of Marxism." In 1950, speaking to the Oklahoma City Chamber of Commerce, Upton explained: "The importance of this is that we Americans are in danger of being misled completely, misled as to the interpretation of current events because of one of those sectarian differences in the Marxist church. We have today two branches of that faith that, so far, each in its respective field, from its standpoint, is eminently successful. Together they are destroying the free people of the world.

"One branch has its headquarters in London. It is the branch which grew out of the British Fabian Society which was originally the British Marxist Society and which planned so cleverly because of the shrewd brains that were in it - the brains of George Bernard Shaw, H.G. Wells, the Webbs, Ramsay MacDonald, Herbert Morrison, Harold Laski, John Strachey and the rest of the younger ones; Atlee, Shinwell, etc.

The other branch of the Marxist church is the one that has had the big publicity among us - the branch in Moscow - the one that our government propagandists out of Washington spent so much time adulating, building up, praising 'good old Joe', creating friendships, preparing us to be brothers to the Russians. Until about a year ago (1949-Ed). Then, just like shifting a lever, the government propagandists began damning the Moscow group (but always protecting and aiding them). But, by continually concentrating the American mind and its fears and dislikes (or admiration and likes) on the Moscow church, those who put out the propaganda are able to hide from the American people the Marxist moves that are going on here and that are contemplated to reach success here while our eyes are diverted to a Marxist peril on the other side of the water...."

It was a two-staged attack. While militant, Moscow type Socialism was threatening us, we were being taken over by the Fabian Socialists. While the Communist school (or church) intends that the world be Marxist, the Fabian school demands that the Marxist One World be dominated by organized international finance or, to use a more familiar term, State Capitalism, as it is presently practiced in the Communist countries. History proves that our greatest danger came from the Socialists within the country, not from those in Europe or Asia. Fabianism was introduced to the United States through the formation of the Intercollegiate Society in 1905. According to the almost forgotten Dies Committee, "The movement was placed in charge of a group selected to represent the largest possible number of universities and colleges in the different parts of the United States. Jack London, worldfamous radical, acted as the first chairman of the affair. The secretary of the society was Harry L. Laidler (Socialist propagandist) and up to 1916 it had successfully organized chapters in 72 or more of our largest educational institutions....After the ISS changed its name to the League for Industrial Democracy in 1921, the organization expanded greatly and among its new officers were to be found Prof. John Dewey, Robert Morss Lovett, John Haynes Holmes, Stuart Chase, Norman Thomas, Paul Porter and Paul Blanshard. In later years came many more individuals who were to fill important roles: Dr. Harold Rugg, Frank Murphy, David Saposs, Harold Lasswell, Morris Ernst, Frederic C. Howe, H.S. Raushenbush, George Soule, and Rexford Guy Tugwell. The Roosevelt New Deal was Fabian to the core. In that previously noted speech, Upton Close commented: "The great Apostle of English Socialism to America was Harold Joseph Laski...said to have an almost hypnotic influence over those whom he chose as his disciples. At the age of 21 he arrived from Oxford to lecture at Canada's McGill University. After two years there he spent four years as lecturer at Harvard, giving also lectures at Amhurst and Yale....Laski had a formative influence on American students in English universities, particularly those chosen for brilliance and sent on scholarships provided by the bequest of Cecil Rhodes, the diamond magnate of South Africa, whose purpose was to join forces of Britain and the United States in a world control of resources and economy. Laski intended that one world economy to be Marxist."

The central theme of Scientific Socialism is Economic Planning, that is, planning that will succeed in making politics and political organizations subordinate to economic and industrial organizations, and under the control of organized international finance. The first steps were taken when President Franklin Roosevelt threw out the Democratic Platform on which he was elected, and adopted instead the ten points of Marx's Communist Manifesto plus some of Benito Mussolini's Fascistic programs. Economic Planning at a Fabianism involves two things. First, all banks, savings and loan companies, credit unions and all institutions having to do with financial transactions must be under the control of a single national authority. In this connection there was that Bank Secrecy Act, the current move to make all S&Ls forego their State or private insurance pools in favor of federal agencies. The fate of the Ohio Savings Banks and the more recent Old Court S&L of Baltimore are examples. Final aim is centralized control over all financial institutions with the Federal Reserve System in absolute control; it in turn being under the control of a Global Central Bank.

The second, and even more important step involves the absolute control of the personal buying and selling and trading of every individual. That's where the Internal Revenue Service will act as a National Secret Police, with more power than the Gestapo or the KGB ever had. On Tuesday, May 14, a release appeared in the Gannett newspapers headlined, "IRS Warns Cheaters: Here We Come." The article reads: "The IRS, aiming to collect $100 billion in unpaid taxes to help cut the budget deficit, will use computers to cross-check information on millions of taxpayers. By next year, IRS will check returns of every divorced or separated parent by children's names to prevent both from claiming exemptions for the same kids; test a system in Dade County, Fla. and San Mateo County, CA., for collecting some of the $1.7 billion a year in unpaid capital gains tax. IRS will buy lists of real estate transactions to compare to its taxpayer lists. IRS has plans to use individual financial data not included on returns, such as bank transactions over $10,000, to prepare two-year taxpayer 'profiles', and to complete lists of high-income people to see if they file returns. IRS could match easily obtained data - such as real estate records - with its taxpayer lists."

This article is an understatement of what the IRS really has in mind. There is a Strategic Plan which the insiders at IRS refer to as a Five Year Plan, but one which is supposed to be installed and operating by next October 15th. You'll recall that taxpayers' refund returns have been held up, that erroneous tax bills have been sent to thousands of taxpayers who didn't owe IRS any money, and there was the admission that thousands of tax returns had been 'lost', etc. Well, all of this was because that new super computer recently installed in Martinsburg, West Virginia, has been busy at what IRS considers a more important task. Being fed into this computer is information on every taxpayer in America, with State tax records, State, County and local records of every kind; such things as voter registration roles, property tax records, automobile registration and drivers license records, credit union records, administration records, Farmers' Home Loan, FHA, and every other record of any kind that can be obtained and fed into the computer. This information will be used to compile a "personal information file," or "profile," as the IRS calls it, of every individual in the United States. The "profile" will be so complete that IRS will know it if you vote, apply for any kind of license, build a swimming pool or even a dog run in your back yard, buy, sell or trade anything, or use a credit card for any transaction. The proposed system is so set up that any Internal Revenue Agent, anywhere he may be, can have at his fingertips a computer terminal which will give him everything he wants to know about any individual. The "Five Year Plan" which IRS hopes to have in operation this fall, will give IRS more power over every individual than the Nazi Gestapo or the Soviet KGB ever had!

The insiders at IRS call it a "Strategic Plan" to collect taxes more efficiently, but it's really a blueprint for disaster in that the personal activities of every individual will be on record in Big Brother's Super-Computer, and the information will be available for the use of any IRS agent anywhere in the USA. The "profiles" will include Judges, Governors, Legislators, the President, every individual. This is dictatorship as even Orwell didn't conceive it in his 1984.

While the minds of Americans are being focused on what the Moscow Socialists are doing to take over the world (certainly a serious situation but only half the plan), we here in the United States are being taken over and made economic slaves from within, by the Marxist society that originated in London. Unless something is done about it by someone with the power to do it, October 15th may be our last day of liberty. More about this later.

MAKING THE WORLD SAFE FOR DEMOCRACY

Two hundred years ago, long before socialists began talking about an alien theory called Separation of Church and State, preachers often delivered election sermons from their pulpits. In those days Yale College (not yet a university) existed for the purpose of raising up Christian ministers who would deliver more election sermons. President of Yale in those days was Ezra Stiles, D.D. who, in an Election Sermon preached on May 8, 1783 before the Governor and General Assembly of the State of Connecticut, asked them to consider "What reason we have to expect that, by the blessing of God, these States may prosper and flourish into a great American Republic, and ascend into high and distinguished honor among the nations of the earth. 'To make thee high above all nations which he hath made, in praise, in name, and in honor'." After noting that "our system of dominion and civil polity would be imperfect without the true religion;" he then remarked that "All the forms of civil polity have been tried by mankind, except one, and that seems to have been reserved in Providence to be realized in America." His reference was to a unique kind of Republic - a Representative Republic. There was no thought, then, of the United States ever becoming a Democracy. The idea was abhorrent to the men who would frame the Constitution of the United States.

But soon after the founding of our "unique kind of Republic," a revolution very different from our own was being fought in France; and the ideas being preached by the Illuminists and the Jacobins were seeping into America because in our own Revolution France had been a great help and there was much sympathy toward the Marquis de Lafayette, Thomas Paine and others who were involved in our Revolutionary War and then went to France to become involved in that Revolution. As a result, while the Washington and Adams administrations held to the Constitutional assertion that ours was a representative republic, the Jefferson administration felt that the people should rule directly. Which was a commendable policy so long as the electorate was informed and responsible. But, simply because man is conceived in sin is sufficient reason for democracy never being workable as a stable and permanent form of government. As Professor Alexander Fraser Tytler had observed while our thirteen original States were still colonies of Great Britain: "A Democracy cannot exist as a permanent form of Government. It can only exist until the voters discover they can vote themselves largesse out of the public treasury. From that moment on the majority always votes for the candidate promising the most benefits from the public treasury with the result that Democracy always collapses over a loose fiscal policy, always to be followed by a Dictatorship." Fisher Ames (1758-1808) was, like most of the Founding Fathers, a strict Constitutionalist and he detested the very word Democracy. He is one of those neglected patriots and we would never have heard of him had not Rousas Rushdoony mentioned him in the book "The Nature of the American System," in which he included some of Ames' writings. The Democratic Party was not yet in existence and Ames was referring to Democracy as opposed to Constitutionalism when he wrote:

"All democrats maintain that the people have an inherent, unalienable right to power; there is nothing so fixed that they may not change it; nothing so sacred that their voice, which is the voice of God, would not unsanctify and consign to destruction....The will of the majority is not only law, but right; having an unlimited right to act as they please, whatever they please to act is a rule. Thus virtue itself, thus

LEST WE FORGET

Hon. Larry McDonald of Georgia
In the House of Representatives
February 7, 1980

Mr. Speaker, while we may all argue about the details of this or that past event, there is no doubt that the position of America in the world has sadly declined since 1945. Our prestige has seldom been lower in the world and militarily we are No. 2 despite some huffing and puffing from the White House and its spokesmen. Therefore, it might be useful to recite how we got to this sad state. A chronology of this retreat from greatness follows:

CHRONOLOGY OF EVENTS

1945. U.S. and allies won WW II. The world was in a shambles and the U.S. was in the driver's seat. At the Yalta and Potsdam Conferences, the U.S. gave all of Eastern Europe to the Russians, including East Germany, Poland, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Rumania, Yugoslavia, and Bulgaria. 1949. U.S. lost Mainland China to the communists (650 million people) by cutting vital arms and support to our wartime ally, Chiang Kai-shek. 1951. U.S. fought our first "no-win war" in Korea against the communists. MacArthur was fired for advocating winning. 1956. Hungarian Revolution was crushed by Russia. The West didn't lift a finger. 1958. Cuba fell to Russia. U.S. Government first pulled the rug out from under Batista by cutting off vital arms and supplies and giving covert aid to Castro forces. 1962. Vietnam War began. Our second "no-win war." 1968. Czechoslovakian independence revolt crushed by Russia. The West didn't lift a finger. 1972. U.S. pullout from Vietnam began - after 10 years and 50,000 Americans dead - on terms the communists had demanded in 1964. Called "peace with honor." (The first U.S. military surrender in our 200-year history). 1973. Arab oil embargo - instigated by Soviets. 1974. South Vietnam fell to communists; 17 million souls and billions of dollars in U.S. weapons lost. (The U.S. first cut aid to South Vietnam and then reneged on our peace treaty promises.) 1974. Portugal had communist revolution and narrowly escaped communist rule. 1975. Portugal pulled out of Angola and Mozambique. Soviets took over both countries with the help of Cuban troops (15,000 in Angola).

1976-1979. The Carter Era - The Decline Accelerates.

1976. Rhodesia forced to accept Black Rule by the U.S. (under Kissinger-pre-Carter.) 1976-1977. Lebanese Civil War - pro-West government toppled. Effective control taken by pro-Soviet Syria and PLO. 1977. Pro-Western Zaire invaded by Soviets (using Cuban, East German and Black guerrillas). U.S. cut military aid to Zaire in midst of invasion. France, Morocco, Egypt and Saudi Arabia intervened to save Zaire. 1978. Rhodesian war escalated by Soviet/Cuban-backed Patriotic Front - as Rhodesia moved toward Black Rule, and U.S. and Britain reneged on all Kissinger promises (September 1976) and gave diplomatic support to the Patriotic Front. 1978. Zaire invaded by Soviets using Cuban and East German troops. Carter again cut back on aid to Zaire. France and Belgium intervened and again saved the Mobutu Regime. 1978. The Horn of Africa conquered by the Soviets with the most massive airlift since WW II and the use of 20,000 Cuban troops. Carter reneged on promised arms aid to Somalia and forced Iran and Saudi Arabia to cut arms to Somalia which subsequently lost the war to Ethiopia, Russia and Cuba. 1978. Panama Canal was given by the U.S. to the pro-Cuban, pro-Soviet Marxist Torrijos regime. 1978. Nicaraguan revolution began, led by Soviet/Cuban-backed Marxist Sandinista guerrillas. Carter Administration backed Sandinistas against the pro-Western Somoza. 1978. U.S. began pullout of troops from South Korea amidst massive North Korean military buildup. General Singlaub fired by Carter for warning of coming war. 1978. Afghanistan fell to Soviets. 1978. Soviet backed Vietnam invaded Chinese-backed Cambodia. 1978. U.S. broke relations with Taiwan, scrapped U.S.-Taiwan Mutual Defense Treaty, recognized Red China and established diplomatic and trade relations with the PRC. 1978. Iranian Revolution heated up. 1979. Shah of Iran toppled by radical Moslems, Soviet KGB, Iranian Communist Party, PLO, and Libya. 20 billion in U.S. arms lost. Iran became radically anti-Western. Carter Administration withdrew support from Shah at critical point in revolution. 1979. Communist South Yemen invaded pro-West North Yemen. Thousands of Cuban troops and Soviet advisors currently massing in South Yemen for conquest of North Yemen and Oman. 1979. China invaded Vietnam in defiance of the Soviets and won a limited war. 1979. Saudi Arabia moving to normalize public faith, thus common honesty, are no more than arbitrary rules which the people have, as yet, abstained from rescinding." But there are other definitions of democracy which should be noted. Roger Baldwin, a social reformer, joined Jane Addams, Clarence Darrow, Arthur Garfield Hays and a few other "liberals," founded the American Civil Liberties Union, which Baldwin headed until 1950. His definition of democracy: "Real democracy means strong trade unions, government regulation of business, ownership by the people of industries that serve the public." This is what Communists would call Socialism; and what Fabians would call Industrial Democracy. Then there is Clarence Strett's definition. Streit, a Rhodes scholar, author of "Union Now" and promoter of regional world governments as a step toward total world government, gives this interesting explanation: "Democrats cannot...quarrel with Soviet Russia or any other nation because of its economic collectivism, for democracy itself introduced the idea of collective machinery into politics. It is a profound mistake to identify democracy and Union necessarily or entirely with either capitalist or socialist society, with either the method of individual or collective enterprise. There is room for both of these methods in democracy. Democracy not only allows mankind to choose freely between capitalism and collectivism, but it includes Marxist governments, parties and press...."

The Idea of converting our Representative Republic into a Democracy remained more or less dormant until Col. Edward Mandell House engineered the election of Woodrow Wilson to the Presidency of the United States and then became Wilson's "alter ego." Wilson was elected on the promise that he would keep the country out of war. But, even as FDR who was to follow with the same deception, he decided that we should enter the European War which came to be known as World War I. We were going to "Make the World Safe for Democracy." With a few peaceful interruptions, we've been trying to make the world safe for democracy ever since. The greatest achievement in this program was the creation of International Communism with its nominal headquarters located in the Kremlin.

Perhaps as a protest against this promotion of democracy, the U.S. War Department in 1928 while Calvin Coolidge was President, published a Training Manual which was distributed throughout the U.S. Army. In that Training Manual were definitions explaining the difference between a Democracy and a Republic. These precise and scholarly definitions were considered as a proper guide for U.S. soldiers and U.S. citizens by the Chief of Staff of the United States Army, and they were published under the authority of the United States Government and were - until FDR became President - accepted as authentic in any court of proper jurisdiction. We quote:

"DEMOCRACY:

"A government of the masses.

"Authority derived through mass meeting or any other form of 'direct' expression.

"Results in mobocracy.

relations with the Soviet Union and moving away from the U.S. 1979. Uganda invaded by Marxist Tanzania. Idi Amin overthrown. A Marxist regime should follow. 1979. A pro-Soviet coup in Grenada - former leaders executed. 1979. Nicaragua invaded by communist troops from Marxist Sandinista National Liberation Front, Panama, Cuba (all armed and backed by the Carter Administration,) Honduras, El Salvador, and Guatemala will all come under communist attack with the fall of Nicaragua to the Marxists. All of Central America expected to fall to Soviets within 18 to 24 months. 1979. The Soviets and Cubans massing arms and troops for imminent attacks on Zimbabwe-Rhodesia and Zaire. 1979. Radical Islam beginning to rise in the Arab countries for the first time in over 700 years. This fanatical religious movement is rabidly anti-West and anti-Israel and advocates the elimination of all "infidels" through "holy war." 1979. Radical occupation of U.S. Embassy in Teheran....1979-1980. Massive occupation of Afghanistan by Soviet troops.....(from the Congressional Record, Thursday, February 7, 1980, page E457).

"Attitude toward property is communistic – negating property rights.

"Attitude toward law is that the will of the majority shall regulate, whether it be based upon deliberation or governed by passion, prejudice, and impulse, without restraint or regard to consequences.

"Results in demagogism, license, agitation, discontent, anarchy."

"REPUBLIC:

"Authority is derived through the election by the people of public officials best fitted to represent them.

"Attitude toward property is respect for laws and individual rights, and a sensible economic procedure.

"Attitude toward law is the administration of justice in accord with fixed principles and established evidence, with a strict regard to consequences.

"A greater number of citizens and extent of territory may be brought within its compass.

"Avoids the dangerous extreme of either tyranny or mobocracy.

"Results in statesmanship, liberty, reason, justice, contentment, and progress.

"Is the 'standard form' of government throughout the world.

"A republic is a form of government under a constitution which provides for the election of (1) an executive and (2) a legislative body, who working together in a representative capacity, have all the power of appointment, all power of legislation, all power to raise revenue and appropriate expenditures, and are required to create (3) a judiciary to pass upon the justice and legality of their governmental acts and to recognize (4) certain inherent individual rights. Take away any one or more of those four elements and you are drifting into autocracy. Add one or more to those four elements and you are drifting into democracy."

The preceding definitions and explanations were published on November 30, 1928, by the U.S. War Department and distributed to all Army posts. But shortly after the "bank holidays" in the thirties, hush-hush orders from the White House suddenly demanded that all copies of this Training Manual No. 2000-25 be withdrawn from the Government Printing Office and the Army posts, to be suppressed and destroyed without explanation.

* * * * *

And now for a "shocker". The otherwise commendable platform of the Populist Party of the United States, adopted on February 29, 1984 by its National Committee, contains the following plank which proposes a "pure democracy" and we quote:

"Rejuvenate Democracy by Allowing More Participation in Government by the People. Amend the Constitution to provide for the direct election of the president after regional primaries and the direct election of federal judges. Initiative, referendum and recall should be encouraged at all levels of government and in all states. The people should be able to vote directly on vital issues. Bring proportional representation to America." If the Populist Party is to call itself conservative and pro-Constitutional, its leaders must strike that plank from its party platform.

"Am I therefore become your enemy because I tell you the truth?" Gal. 4:16.

ABUSE OF THE INNOCENTS: BOTH CHILDREN AND PARENTS

Perhaps you've already read this in Lottie Beth Hobbs' widely circulated Pro-Family Forum Alert. But we feel it should be reprinted, far and wide, just in case it hasn't received the attention it deserves:

"....Existing laws provide for prosecution of any person who assaults or harms another, whether child or adult. However, under the very emotionally-charged and widely-publicized umbrella-term 'Child Abuse,' the state (government) has seized children from innocent parents - putting parents and children through emotional trauma which will affect them for the rest of their lives. In efforts to 'protect' children, the pendulum has swung so far to the other extreme that victimized parents all over the nation are beginning to organize in an effort to be heard - such as the Group V.O.C.A.L. (Victims of Child Abuse Laws). Some states already have laws mandating that not only professionals dealing with children but also non-professionals (everybody!) MUST report 'suspected' child abuse or neglect, or else be subject to prosecution. Yet the 'reporter' is granted immunity from any penalty in case someone is falsely accused! Innocent parents have little or no recourse, and some have gone through indescribable nightmares - all in living colors!

"What happens when a parent is the victim of a false report? A father explained it at a Senate hearing in Minnesota where legislation is now pending. Their neighbor had voluntarily reported the man and his wife for child sexual abuse of their two pre-school daughters - based on the fact that when he held the 2½-year-old she tried to unbutton his shirt! Just days before Christmas, the two little girls were taken from their home. Over two weeks passed before the parents were even interviewed or allowed to answer the charges. During that time the parents had no idea where their little girls were or now they were responding to the forced separation during the Christmas season. These children were not victims of child abuse, but they were victimized by a system which now encourages people to think the worst of their neighbors, by a system which ignored the right of innocent parents to care for their children. But perhaps the worst of all is that the 'protectors' actually abused the children by inflicting upon them the emotional trauma of being separated from the love, comfort, protection, and security provided by parents and home, a deep emotional abuse which will likely leave permanent scars!

"No doubt you are familiar with one of the most publicized cases - where 21 individuals in Scott County, Minnesota, were charged with sexual abuse and the children were taken from their homes. After weeks of separation and complete emotional turmoil, all charges were dropped by the Minnesota Attorney General! How much evidence did authorities have prior to arresting the parents and removing the children from their homes? The following quotes are taken directly from the Report on the investigations prepared by the Minnesota Attorney General:

In many instances arrests and the removal of children from home resulted in persons being charged with abusing children at a time when these children had either denied the abuse or had not even been interviewed! In several other instances parents were arrested and charged with abusing their own children even though these children denied the abuse through several weeks of interrogation and separation from their parents. Likewise, the suspects themselves, their spouses, or friends were seldom, if ever, interviewed prior to being charged. Thorough background

Investigations, prior to criminal accusations being made, were not done'."

"Why did (some of the) children lie about their parents abusing them? The Attorney General's Report states: 'In some cases these children were told that reunification with their families would be facilitated by 'admissions' of sex abuse by their parents and other adults'." Parents are being treated worse than hardened criminals! Criminals are read their rights. Criminals have the right to know what the charges are. Criminals have the right to due process of law...Parents who actually harm their children should be prosecuted under criminal law. However, when social workers can enter a home and confiscate children, and when parents are presumed to be guilty until proven innocent (and yet without a chance to prove their innocence through weeks of separation from their own children) have we already crossed the line between freedom and tyranny?" (Quoted from "Pro-Family Forum Alert," May, 1985. Published monthly except July, August and December. $10.00 per year. Address: P.O.Box 8907, Fort Worth, Texas 76124).

This "emotionally-charged and widely-publicized umbrella-term Child Abuse" is an example of the use of the Marxian, Hegelian Dialectic. The aim is to create a crisis so that children can be "legally" separated from their parents, especially from Christian parents. The "justification" for such action is based upon the unscriptural premise that children are the property of the State. Hence, children must be "educated" in government schools or in schools that are approved by and controlled by the State. In some States, as in Alabama, it is a criminal act for parents to take their children out of a government school and teach them at home, or send them to a Christian school which has not met all the biased rules and regulations imposed on it by the State. There was the case of the padlocking of the Faith Baptist Church in Louisville, Nebraska, the jailing of the Pastor and the fathers of the children attending the school which it operated. The mothers fled across a State line with their children in order to keep the children from being "confiscated" by the State authorities. It is good to know that the U.S. Supreme Court has recently upheld a decision by the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals in a $66 million lawsuit against the sheriff, his deputies, and the State police for raiding and interrupting a worship service at the church. The court ruled that the law enforcement officers violated the

OUR NATIONAL GESTAPO

The plans for the strengthening of the power of the IRS were outlined in our DBR #19, "The Hideous Strength of the Socialist Conspiracy." Confirmation comes from Allen Keyte, editor of World Affairs Review, 98 Malleson Road, Gotherington, Cheltenham, Glos. GL52 4EY, United Kingdom. In his Review of 15 May, Keyte writes:

"Big Brother, in the form of the IRS, is certainly starting to move ahead in the US. All IRS returns are being computerized so that on a quick scan any obvious omissions can be picked out. The system provides for the automatic freezing of bank accounts and other securities until all questions are satisfactorily answered. Can you now doubt that the next stage will be to link up with other countries all over the world to control all of our assets? This underlines the need for financial and personal privacy, and the need to 'lose' some of your assets away from prying eyes -- and computers."

The May 1985 issue of The Moneychanger features an interview with Paul DesFosses, who worked for almost 20 years with the IRS and is President of the National Coalition of IRS Whistleblowers. DesFosses gives complete details of what the IRS is doing -- illegally, but that doesn't stop the IRS -- to complete a computerized "profile" of every taxpayer in the United States. He explains how the IRS "Five Year Tax Strategy Plan" is being developed, and why it is a "Blueprint for Disaster for America." For a copy write to E.Sanders, Moneychanger, 868 Mt. constitutional rights of those present in the church by entering the private property of the church. But on May 3, 1985 there was a similar, and even more violent, raid on Calvary Temple in East Point, Georgia, which we shall discuss later in this Report. And there is the continuing case of the much publicized imprisonment of Edmund and Sharon Pangelinan, of Decatur, Alabama. This is a long story of persecution and harassment which began in January of 1984. The Pangelinans had enrolled their two children in the West Decatur Elementary School in the fall of 1983. But the children and the parents were unsatisfied and, at the Christmas break, Ed and Sharon removed Ruben, age 10, and Marisa, age 8, from the school and, after checking on the Christian and private schools in the area, decided to teach their children at home. There was never any question of the quality of education the children were receiving. The charge - a criminal charge - was that the Pangelinans were violating the so-called "compulsory attendance law" by not sending their children to a "State approved" educational facility. They were charged, convicted, sentenced to 90 days in jail. After a series of "ins and outs" that cost the Pangelinans their home and all their assets in fighting the case, they were informed that they would be allowed to serve their sentences only between Tuesday morning through Thursday evening. They refused, were then ordered to appear in court with their children, whom they had previously sent to be with relatives in another State, lest they be separated permanently, by court order. The Pangelinans said they would never permit their children to be brought into the court. Whereupon the judge sentenced them to jail once again, this time for contempt of court. Which means, in reality, they have been given a life sentence! Upon being sentenced, the Pangelinans made the following statement, which we quote in full:

SENTENCING STATEMENT

By Edmund and Sharon Pangelinan
April 15, 1985

Your Honor, we wish to make a statement for the record, as to the reasons why we should not be sentenced. ¶ In addition to the Defendant's Recommendations For Sentencing, we wish to add the following: ¶ The State, this Court, and the Court of Judge David Bibb, have forced us into separating our family. This done under the guise of prosecuting us for the "best interests of the children." ¶ How is it possible that the children's best interest is served, when the parents they so love, and who so love them, are forced to protect them by means of separation from a state that has usurped the authority given only to the parents, along with definite responsibilities, by God Almighty? And we proved, in this court, that we were meeting these responsibilities very well. ¶ Be that as it may, we've been found guilty of the charge of "contributing to the delinquency" of those self-same children, by a jury that was given improper instruction, and who were coerced by the Assistant District Attorney through an improper and untruthful summation. ¶ However, the one and only thing of which we are truly guilty, is of loving our children, even to the exclusion of our own welfare. We therefore stand before you to be judged and sentenced of that fact only, regardless of the "criminal statute" you may attach to it. But, if we were to act in any other way than we have acted, under the conditions in which we were forced to act, then we would have to face a Judge far more awesome than any to be found here on earth. ¶ Therefore, if Alabama statutes condemn us for being obedient to our scriptural duties, if the practice of Constitutional liberties, and the parental rights we've exercised in loving our children, then love is our "crime." Love of our God, our children and our Constitution. This being said, we have no choice left but to submit our cause to the Supreme Judge of us all.

(Read to the Court of Judge Cecil Strawbridge prior to sentencing of Edmund and Sharon Pangelinan for allegedly "contributing to the delinquency" of their minor children, Ruben and Marisa. Authored by Sharon Pangelinan. Reviewed and approved by Edmund Pangelinan.

Commenting on this case, Robert McCurry, Pastor of Calvary Temple in East Point, Georgia, asked editorially: "Can this really be happening in America? Is the Constitution of the United States dead? Has justice fled from the land? Where is the conscience of America? It couldn't happen in America? It certainly shouldn't happen in America. But alas! it has happened in America!...The principle issue that the Pangelinans are standing for is not home education. Their concern is for a much greater cause. The fact is, in the past few years America has witnessed a trend in the loss of many God-ordained and Constitutionally-protected liberties that would have caused America's founding fathers to shake their heads in disbelief. This trend has been especially pronounced in an unprecedented and ever-increasing and accelerating conflict between agencies of American civil government - at federal, state and local levels - and the American people regarding their parental and religious liberties. Many parents have been and continue to be harassed by government and forced to incur enormous financial expense as a result of being civilly and criminally accused, prosecuted, and even incarcerated for nothing more than exercising their God-ordained and Constitutionally-protected rights to practice their religious faith by teaching and training their children at home or sending them to a church educational ministry."

It may have been because of the Christian American stand taken by Pastor McCurry and the majority of his congregation that a local attorney found an occasion and excuse to raid Calvary Temple at a time when services were being held. It seems that an adulterous wife, angered at her Christian husband who was trying to get her to repent and be redeemed, found a cooperating attorney who caused an unsuspecting judge to issue an order permitting the wife to claim their children and take over their home. The attorney, instead of serving whatever papers he had on the husband in the normal manner, called out the Police and disrupted a meeting of worshippers at the Temple. Police from four jurisdictions arrived, complete with helicopter, ambulances and riot gear. It was a full-scale raid. One Fulton County Deputy went berserk, knocked men down, shoved women and children around, pushed the Pastor out the door, threw his wife against the wall. The police proceeded to treat people as though they were criminals, destroyed church property in the process; until finally the Fulton County Sheriff arrived and brought the situation under control. The Judge was shocked at what had happened, as was the Sheriff, and charges are pending in what is something of a repeat performance of what happened in Louisville, Nebraska. Said Pastor McCurry: "The abuse of police power against the Calvary Temple Church can - and eventually will - be used against every church in America unless these unbridled powers are brought under control in the Name of the Lord Jesus Christ and bound by the chains of the Constitution of the United States and the Bill of Rights. This is the Lord's hour for his people....to get off the defensive, get on the offensive, and take dominion in the Name of the Lord Jesus Christ over the wicked powers that have marshalled themselves against....religious liberty, His people, and the family." MORE TAXES BUT NO MORE RETURNS

It's now an open secret. The Internal Revenue Service Strategic Plan has been exposed for what it really is. What we wrote in our Report #19 of May 17 is now confirmed. They call it a Five Year Plan (copying Lenin?) but two years of the plan are almost completed, so 1988 is the year when the whole new system of tax collection is to become effective. Big Brother (the master computer) is preparing a "Profile" of every taxpayer in America. That "Profile" will be a total description of you, what you buy and sell, where your interests lie, what church you attend, what clubs or associations you belong to, how your children are doing in school, what your hobbies are. Everything that Big Brother needs to know to control you completely. Lawrence Patterson's "Monthly Lesson in Criminal Politics" for June, 1985 carries much detail. Patterson said "Document 6941, a non-public secret document....details plans to revolutionize the levying and collection of Federal Income Taxes....It outlines plans to computerize non-tax personal data on every taxpayer....and by 1988 to make possible the elimination of any citizen participation in the calculation of tax....Now 'Tax Reform' can be exposed for what it is - a fraud on the public....As soon as the system can be set in place, there will be an arbitrary calculation - not by your CPA - but by a gov't official using data that is possibly erroneous. What's more, there can be no objection to the amount of tax levied. It will simply be levied against your bank account by a mailed or computerized notice to your bank....These revolutionary ideas have not been the topic of any Congressional oversight. They have been kept totally secret until a few days ago, when it was revealed in an interview with IRS Commissioner Roscoe Egger....We are told of 'tax simplification' and a 'fair tax' when in reality the move will allow the gov't to do what is unfair; to calculate tax without citizen participation and arbitrarily deduct those amounts directly from one's account, without filing any tax form whatsoever....An April 9th Washington Times and a US News article both carry the blatant admission: 'Tax simplification is simply a plan to allow IRS to do away with the filing of individual tax returns and for the gov't to calculate the tax for all citizens,...Egger stated....there will be no longer a need for a citizen to file a tax return.' In the IRS "Strategic Plan Document 6941" plans are outlined to computerize "all sorts of data based upon non-return highly questionable sources of non-tax information. Taxpayer "Profiles" were begun in the Spring of 1984 in earnest. By 1988 a five year profile will exist on every one of 96 million taxpayers in the United States. By 1988 every agent will have a computer console from which to work. He will be able to call up data on all of the five-year period in the 'taxpayer computer profile', and will sooner or later have the authority to simply notify one's bank to deduct the additional tax which 'they' deem may be due at any particular time." Much more information on this subject is contained in Patterson's publication of June 30. For details write to P.O.Box 37432, Cincinnati, Ohio 45222).

IRS Commissioner Eggers notes that his plan won't work unless there is some "tax reform and tax simplification." That's the real reason behind this sudden fury over a new and improved tax program. There also are some other financial and economic changes that must be made before the whole new program can be put into effect. For example, there is a need for all banks to do away with whatever State guarantees they may have, and depend entirely upon federal insurance. If the banks refuse, then they'll simply be gobbled up in mergers by Chase Manhattan, Citibank, Bank of America, or some other Megabank. In this age of centralization it seems that competition from the States in social, economic, monetary or political matters is not to be permitted. Alexander Hamilton is winning out at long last against James Madison and Patrick Henry. Everything must be federalized at the national level before they can be centralized and collectivized at the global level. This same spirit of centralism has permeated the business level as well. All the bigger corporations are seeking ways to take over smaller corporations and merge them into a kind of inter-industrial monopoly. Which, as an afterthought, reminds us of the article written by Dr. Michle Proctor, Pastor of the All American Memorial Church in Hollywood, Florida. He wrote:

"Karl Marx, author of Das Kapital, was the first to use the word 'Capitalist' to describe America. He used the word with implications of reproach. According to the Encyclopedia Britannica 'Capitalism has been accepted by those whom it was meant to stigmatize.' Our American dictionaries picked up capitalism and let it refer to our free enterprise system. Why do we keep this term 'of reproach'? Why is it we cannot tell the world that the key to our success and prosperity is because we have a competitive system, not a capitalistic system. Capitalism means that we have only one goal: Money. That does not fit our religion or the legal system which charters our American corporations. It is true that most States have laws for profit and non-profit corporations, but no corporation was ever chartered by any State to make money. Corporations are chartered to give a service or to make a product. It is hoped that a profit will result, but the product or service comes before profit. . . Competition is a basic law of survival which is a law of nature." Socialists and Monopolists please note.

Then Dr. Proctor went on to touch on one of your reporter's pet peeves: "We Americans muddle our minds....Leaders brand our country as having a true democracy. We Americans give the pledge to the Flag with the words, 'and to the Republic for which it stands.' We follow the pledge with a prayer to save our great democracy. . . . The truth is that we do not understand the words we use. We sing the Battle Hymn of the Republic but we scream for more democracy. Our Chief of Staff for the Secretary of War, General C.P. Summerall, understood democracy when he said, 'Democracy is one of the earliest forms of government, and one of the worst was the true democracy, in which every question was submitted to the will of the people. We see the outbursts of this even in our day (it was then 1931) in what is known as mob rule. It naturally and inevitably degenerates into demagogery.' I doubt that any comment needs to be made about our government of today." (Unquote).

But getting back to our original theme, that certain changes must be made before Commissar Egger's Five Year Plan can be put into operation. One of these has to do with the growing taxpayer rebellion against the IRS, which is getting bigger and bigger, stronger and stronger. The Spotlight of June 10 reported that "Nearly 300 patriots from across the country recently gathered in Chattanooga, Tennessee, where they honored Constitutional authority and freedom fighter F. Tupper Saussy. Saussy recently served 83 days of a 90-day sentence in the federal penitentiary in Atlanta, having been jailed for contempt of court....after Saussy refused to submit to what he perceived as the un-Constitutional procedural conduct of a federal court hearing in which he was facing charges of 'willful' failure to file income tax returns for 1977, 1978 and 1979. . . On hand was an array of speakers, all of whom, like Saussy, have felt the heavy hand of government tyranny. . . . Organized by Charles Riely, founder and director of the Golden Mean Society, the symposium featured former Rep. George Hansen whose battles against federal tyranny, especially that of the IRS, have become legendary. Hansen announced that he is organizing what he calls the "New Continental Congress," which is sponsoring a special project known as Victims of Government United Everywhere (VOGUE)." Also present and speaking was former IRS agent Paul J. Desfosses whom we mentioned in a previous Report; and Rev. Robert McCurry whose church was recently raided by county agents, and is leader of the Coalition of Unregistered Churches. We also quoted him at length in a previous Report. He described the manner in which the federal and State bureaucracies have waged war against religious groups and Christian families. And among the 300 who attended this symposium were Red Beckman and Bill Benson, the two men who did the essential research and wrote the book "The Law That Never Was," which is filled with authentic documentation from 48 State Capitals and the National Archives in Washington, D.C. - they have 17,000 documents in all, certified and notarized - proving that the 16th, Income Tax Amendment, was never ratified and is therefore a fraud put over on the people of the United States. They found that only four out of a necessary 36 States had legally ratified the Amendment. Therefore, the 16th Amendment is not a law although it has been recognized as such simply because a Secretary of State, Philander Knox, said it was legally ratified while knowing at the time that he was lying! Benson and Beckman have a certified copy of a memorandum written by the Solicitor General of the United States and addressed to the Secretary of State. On page 6 of this memorandum are the words: "In the certified copies of the resolutions passed by the legislators of the several states ratifying the proposed 16th Amendment it appears that only four of these resolutions, those submitted by Arizona, North Dakota, Tennessee and New Mexico, have quoted absolutely accurately and correctly the 16th Amendment as proposed by the Congress." "You see," said Bill Benson, "they knew right then and there that the 16th Amendment was not legal, was not ratified correctly. Red Beckman didn't write this. I didn't write this, no present day attorney wrote it, they wrote it back in 1913."

So far, so good. But what can be done about it? There is proof that the 14th Amendment was never legally ratified. There is considerable controversy over whether the State of Ohio is legally a member of the Union. There have been other errors and deliberate illegalities of great importance. But nothing has ever been done about them. For example, the United States Congress could abolish the Federal Reserve System by a simple vote. But they'll never do it, for reasons as varied as the purchasing price of Senators and Congressmen. Recognizing this fact, Red Beckman is sure that by working through the Grand Jury System a "Born Again Republic" is possible. But there again, some education is involved. In an important interview conducted by The Moneychanger while that symposium of patriots, was in session, Beckman said:

"We've sat here now for two days. This makes the third day, and we've heard all these speakers and a lot of badmouthing of the IRS. I've heard just about everything that's been said, and I haven't heard one single person, one single speaker, put his finger on where the IRS got its power. We listened to George Hansen and we listened to an ex-IRS agent, and not one single speaker. . . has put his finger on the source or their power. Where did the IRS get the power? Did they get it from the IRS Code? Did they get it from the judge sitting on the bench? Did they get it from Congress? Did they get the power from the 16th Amendment? Nobody has put a finger on it. The IRS got every bit of the power that they have, all of this terrorism that they have perpetrated against the American people, every bit of it came from the 12 people sitting on a jury that didn't know that each one of them is supposed to have a crown on his head, that each of them is a sovereign individual and that they are the ones with the authority in that court. The IRS Code has absolutely no authority in that court. The judge has no authority, the prosecutor has no authority, these people are all servants. It is those 12 people sitting on that jury that have the authority in a courtroom, and you didn't hear that in this whole meeting, not from one single person. . . . We've got to get this evidence into the hands of prospective grand jurors and trial jurors. When we get this documentation into their hands, they're going to sit there on that jury and they're going to recognize that this judge is an outlaw. They're going to recognize that he's not an honest man, that he has no integrity, and then they're going to make their decision. Particularly the grand juries. In the hands of informed grand jurors this book ("The Law That Never Was") will be the tool that they need, a tool to indict. They're going to subpoena the federal judge, and they're going to ask that federal judge questions. They're going to subpoena the US attorney, they're going to put him under oath, and they're going to take testimony. They're going to question him, and they're going to ask, What's the situation here, what's going on? We want to know. They're going to ask, Do you know the 16th Amendment was ratified, or do you just believe it was ratified? . . . We have to zero in on why these people (on the grand jury) are rubber stamps. They went to a government school so that the government could control what they understand and what they know. People's comprehension of how our government is supposed to function came through a government school. It's not a school; it's a brainwashing surgery center, you see. Where they take the brain out and wash it real well and carefully in their own solution so that the mind is controlled. We've got our work cut out for us. We've got to educate the American people. . . You see, we've been so patriotic that what they did was tamper with our minds. They got people to thinking that our government and the United States of America are one and the same. The government is not synonymous with the United States of America. The government is our servant. You and I are the United States of America. We are this nation, we have allowed government to become our master, because they were able to control our minds. We've allowed our government to become sovereign. . . . You see, we've had such a drought, such a shortage of truth in this country for so long, and we're in such serious difficulty now that the American people know that there's something wrong, and they want to know the truth now, and we're going to make the truth available to them. That's what The Law That Never Was is all about: the truth. Truth is the most effective antidote for the poison of the lie." (Excerpted from "The Moneychanger" for June, 1985, P.O.Box 241203, Memphis, TN 38124. STOP PRESS : As we were preparing this Report word came that Commis-sar Roscoe Egger had adopted a new tactic in regard to his Five Year Plan. The House ~~and~~ Means Committee had begun holding public hearings on President Reagan's proposal for his new tax program. So Egger, instead of using the Executive Order method which has worked so often to thwart Congress in the past, decided to submit his Strategic Plan for hearings with and possible inclusion in the President's plan. When this was announced via AP, the usual brainwashing technique was used. According to Egger this Five year Plan which could make economic slaves of us all, was really a "giant step toward fairness, growth and simplicity." It gives the taxpayers a chance to "avoid even filing a tax return within a few years." The IRS would simply "determine whether a person was due a refund or owed taxes and send out a check or a bill." There was no mention of the personal "Profile" that the IRS Master Computer will hold over the head of every taxpayer. Egger did say that certain changes must be made regarding the Income Tax Code before his Five Year Plan can work. So, when all the smaller, independent banks, savings and loan and other institutions dealing with investors' money have been closed down by the FDIC or merged into a bigger bank, when the new tax program is actually passed, when the expected "funny money" replaces the Federal Reserve notes, then Egger's Five Year Plan will begin, and every income tax agent in the country will have at his finger tips and the touch of a button, your personal "Profile." And when and if that happens, may God have mercy on us all!

WHEN ALL THE PIECES ARE FITTED TOGETHER

In the past 32-plus years of this publication your reporter has always tried to concentrate on one principal subject in each issue. There are times, however, when there have been so many un-American, un-Christian and un-Constitutional acts and statements on the part of our leaders, official and otherwise, that trying to deal with just one subject would be similar to trying to fix a broken tailpipe when an automobile's whole exhaust system, including catalytic converter and muffler, had been blown to smithereens. So, we shall attempt to demuffle a few exhaustive instances. In the first place, we note with sadness and a certain amount of trepidation that President Reagan has surrendered once again to the demands of our national enemy, the USSR. He has agreed to "go the extra mile" and destroy a submarine and some nuclear missiles to meet the terms of the SALT II Treaty. This after the U.S. Senate has repeatedly refused to ratify the treaty, and after President Reagan himself has stated time after time that the Soviet Union has violated the terms of the treaty. Traitorous as it may sound, he is surrendering because this may make it easier to negotiate a new arms limitation treaty with the Soviet; a treaty which any knowledgeable American knows will be violated any time it suits the International Communist drive for world conquest. Let there be a flashback:

It was eleven years ago; in the spring of 1974. The Watergate was just beginning to spill over. Both President Nixon and his Secretary of State, Henry Kissinger, were seeking some way to divert the attention of the American public from the developing Watergate sensation. It seemed a good idea to "make a deal" with the USSR. So, Nixon and Kissinger, representing the USA; and Brezhnev and Gromyko, representing the USSR, got together and composed an arms limitation agreement that came to be called SALT II. According to its terms, which were violated by both parties, certain modernization and replacement of offensive arms were to be allowed, subject to certain limitations which were never lived up to by either party. But there was one key provision in the treaty that was kept by the United States and ignored by the Soviet Union. We let the Soviets know what we were building in the way of nuclear arms; while the Soviets kept their developments a dark secret. In regard to arms limitation the treaty read: "The limitations must be subject to adequate verification by national technical means." As Phyllis Schlafly and Chester Ward noted in their important book, "Kissinger on the Couch": "Never in history have so few words with such a reassuring sound so degraded the defense of the lives and liberty of free people." Let it be sufficient to say that by 1980 as the Carter administration drew to its end the statement made by authors Schlafly and Ward proved to be correct. And when Ronald Reagan became President, he said as much and refused either to see or talk to the Soviet signers - and violators - of Salt II. Yet, less than five years later, we witness another of those Presidential about-faces. Now we are to honor and abide by SALT II as a friendly gesture toward our worst national enemy; even though the Senate has refused to ratify the treaty. No further comment at this time.

In the second place, despite overwhelming opposition on the part of the people who understand it as a booby-trap, the U.S. Senate is on the verge of ratifying the so-called Genocide Convention. Charles Wheeler, writing in The Washington Times, observes that: "Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole has received a 'tidal wave of calls' from conservatives who object to U.S. ratification of the Genocide Treaty, although Sen. Jesse Helms has added qualifications designed to resolve their objections. The treaty, officially called the International Convention on the Punishment and Prevention of the Crime of Genocide, has been pending in the Senate since 1949. Although it has never come to a vote, the Foreign Relations Committee two weeks ago passed the treaty to the full Senate for the sixth time in 36 years. The overwhelming majority of calls to Sen. Dole have been pleas to keep the treaty from coming to a vote again, said a Dole staffer, 'Our receptionists have been hit with a tidal wave of calls - last week it was at fever pitch. . . ninety-nine percent of the callers are against the treaty. They want the Senate not to bring it up.' Historically, conservatives have opposed the treaty because they say it covers genocide for racial or religious reasons, but ignores political genocide, which serves to prevent atrocities by communist nations. They argue the treaty would subordinate the U.S.

SAFETY FOR CRIMINALS, DANGER FOR POLICE, LESS HOPE FOR VICTIMS OF CRIME
(By Robert B. Patterson)

Recently the Supreme Court by a 6-3 decision ruled that a policeman may not shoot a fleeing suspected criminal unless his (the policeman's) or somebody else's life is threatened. A dissenting Supreme Court justice stated that the ruling would require arresting officers to make highly technical legal decisions in midstride in the dark. One police chief commented wryly that maybe in the future he should issue track shoes instead of pistols to his men.

Most burglaries are committed at night in unlighted locations. Most dangerous criminals are armed. The reason criminals halt or freeze when ordered to do so by a lawman is that they think he may shoot if they do not. Now, thanks to our Supreme Court, the criminal can safely flee, knowing that the policeman will have to outrun him and then overpower him physically. Pretty good odds for a young punk. If the officer shoots and injures or kills the culprit, he is subject to a lawsuit for damages or he can be tried for murder. If the officer guesses wrong and is hesitant he has a good chance of ending up dead with no witnesses. Quite a dilemma for a conscientious law enforcement officer with a family to support.

Very few innocent people have been killed or wounded by law enforcement officers. Many officers in line of duty have been and are being killed by criminals. Officers do not kill kids running away from a watermelon patch. There are over 280,000 burglaries (breaking and entering) each year in the United States. This gives a trigger happy criminal lots of opportunities to shoot a lawman.

In the case which triggered the Supreme Court decision, the facts are these: In Memphis, Tennessee, one night in October, 1974, police were called to the scene of a burglary in progress. Black officer Elton Hyman heard a door slam and saw someone running from the house. He shouted, "Police. Halt." The suspect started over a fence and the policeman fired once. The bullet struck the young black in the head. He died later. Tragic, but avoidable if the suspect had followed orders. The youth's father sued police and city officials for what he charged was a flagrant violation of his son's civil rights. His request for damages has been remanded for reconsideration in light of the Supreme Court's decision.

Let's suppose the officer had not shot and the suspect had used the fence as a shield and shot the officer. That would have been the end of it other than the usual police funeral. The courts would have had little interest in the case. Maybe the killer would have been apprehended and convicted but most likely he would have gone free. Even if caught and convicted the medium prison term for murder is only 5.3 years. The Supreme Court's ruling has made our country safer for criminals and more dangerous for policemen. (No wonder police chiefs are telling citizens that the police can no longer protect them, and that law-abiding citizens had better find others ways in which to protect themselves and their families).

Constitution to the World Court and place individuals outside the protection of due process of law. The Helms's qualiflers, or reservations, attempt to answer conservatives' objections by requiring the U.S. government's consent before any treaty dispute involving the United States is submitted to the World Court." (Unquote). And that's the real danger this year. Sen. Helms thought the treaty was sure to be ratified, so he offered an amendment that would make it more palatable. Senators might think the Helms amendment would make the treaty acceptable, and vote for it. But the treaty still allows extradition of U.S. citizens to foreign tribunals, still exempts politically motivated genocide as is being practiced in Afghanistan, Cambodia, and other nations under communist attack. Had Helms stuck with Senators Steve Symms, James McClure, Jeremiah Denton and others who are solidly against the treaty in any form, Senator Dole might not have been tempted to offer the treaty for a vote. Aside from its awfulness as a treaty, we should add that any international treaty of this nature which mentions some international authority that supersedes the authority of the United States government is just one more step in that piecemeal march toward total world government. For this reason, even if the Genocide Convention were a good treaty, it must be rejected.

In the third place, our governments, federal, state and local, are succumbing to the pressure of those in our society who have been given up to vile affections: "for even their women did change the natural use into that which is against nature: And likewise also the men, leaving the natural use of the woman, burned in their lusts one toward another; men with men working that which is unseemly, and receiving in themselves that recompence of their error which was meet." (Is this "recompence of their error" a direct reference to something like the AIDS epidemic?) As a favor to homosexuals, a New York City public school has been opened. It's called the Harvey Milk School, a memorial to the homosexual activist who was shot to death in San Francisco. The New York Times of June 6 tells about a "Homosexual Alumni Return to Yale." The story begins: "Throats catching with emotion, a group of old Blues raised their voices in a rousing chorus of Yale's alma mater: 'For God, for country, and for Yale!'. . . Sporting lavender bulldog pins, these Yalies were members of a new organization, Yale Gay and Lesbian Alumni, or Gala. . . . With bittersweet memories of college years often spent apart from the mainstream, Yale's homosexual alumni came back this weekend to a mixture of hostility, indifference and acceptance. . . . The Yale group is part of (a) recently formed coalition of groups of homosexual and lesbian alumni from Ivy League colleges.

Some international color to the story: On May 12, 1985, the Independent Alternative Homosexuals of West Germany raised a pink granite monument to homosexuals killed in Nazi concentration camps. One of the guests to have been at the ceremony was the internationally known homosexual activist, Rick Rapaport, who had become "famous" in certain circles when he managed a "fantastically successful" Gay Pride Week at Michigan State University. But Rapaport didn't make it to the West German Homosexual gathering. He had died eight days earlier, of AIDS.

A sign of the times that is worth noticing: That Homosexual Bill of Rights has been reintroduced in Congress, with 99 Congressmen sponsoring it. This bill would amend the Civil Rights Act of 1964 by adding the words "affectional or sexual orientation" to color, religion, and sex as groups to be covered by the Civil Rights Act. In the bill "affectional or sexual orientation" is defined as male or female homosexuality, heterosexuality and bisexuality by orientation or practice, by and between consenting adults. This would make homosexuals another recognized minority group, and by so legalizing homosexuals, this would mean that the Civil Rights Act of 1964 would apply to "public facilities, federally assisted opportunities, and equal employment as well as to housing sale, rental, financing and brokerage services" for lesbians and homosexuals. What this would mean is that all schools; public, private and religious, would be forced by law to hire homosexuals and lesbians as teachers, coaches, and counselors. It also could require religious institutions to hire homosexuals as pastors, priests, rabbis or other employees. And no discrimination against homosexuals or lesbians would be permitted in the sale or rental of real estate. Every business, large or small, would be required to hire homosexuals and lesbians under the same affirmative action rules that presently apply to other minorities. If this Homosexual Bill of Rights were added to the Civil Rights Act, it would also 1) allow lesbians and homosexuals legally to adopt children; 2) force normal college students to share dormitory rooms with homosexuals and lesbians; 3) force hospitals to hire lesbian or homosexual doctors, nurses, orderlies, and paramedics; 4) Force police and fire departments to hire homosexuals and lesbians; 5) force the armed services to keep homosexuals and lesbians in the service instead of giving them an undesirable discharge; 6) qualify homosexual and lesbian lovers as "families" eligible for low income public housing, food stamps and welfare; 7) make it difficult to fire homosexuals or lesbians without the risk of a discrimination suit; 8) nullify all State laws making homosexual or lesbian acts a crime.

The gay rights community has gained enormous political clout. This Homosexual Bill of Rights had a total of 79 Congressmen and 5 Senators sponsoring it when it was first introduced in the 98th Congress. It may be recalled that when Walter Mondale was a Presidential Candidate he promised that if elected the Gay Rights Act would be passed within a few months, or he would make it law through an executive order. The Gays are determined to get such a bill passed despite Mondale's defeat. The danger: Most Americans are not even aware that such a bill has been introduced, or that there is so much support for it in Congress. Nor are most Americans aware of the impact it would have on their own lives, jobs, families, schools and churches if this bill were passed. Ask your Congressman about it.

Finally, be prepared for the Great Trek of 1986. Flashback: In 1934 while we were working as an associate editor of the Shanghai Evening Post & Mercury and a stringer for UP, word came that Mao Tse-tung was retreating. He and his troops and followers had begun a twisting, torturous, six-thousand-mile trek across China to Yen-an. We thought at the time that would be the end of the Communist threat against China and Chiang Kai-shek's Nationalist Government. How wrong we were. Well, to bring the flashback up-to-date, the anti-nukes of the world are planning similar treks across America and parts of Europe. It is reported that on March 1, 1986, 5,000 anti-nuclear activists will begin a "great peace march" across the United States, to end up in Washington, D.C., where a 255-day vigil and demonstration period will be held. This will be phase one of the anti-nuke campaign. Phase two consists of a massive "civil disobedience effort" in which the organizers plan to have 250,000 of their followers go to jail. Phase three is a march to Berlin, in which 25,000 West and East Germans are expected to participate. And phase four, if required, will be a "mass communications" crusade to "get the Soviet citizenry to pressure Kremlin leaders". Leader David Mixner, who organized many of the Vietnam protests, and was Sen. Gary Hart's co-chairman in the latter's presidential nomination campaign, heads the anti-nuke rally, and says it is the aim of what he calls "PRO-Peace" to "create an atmosphere that will make it impossible for our leaders not to take nuclear weapons down." If Mao Tse-tung were alive, would he applaud this imitation of his Great Trek?

WORLD WAR III IS A NEW KIND OF WAR

Just seven weeks ago, on May 3rd, we wrote: "Our European sources state that terrorism has replaced pacifism as a major weapon in the Soviet arsenal. And we feel that the order has been given by someone bigger than Gorbachev. The chief individual enemies seem to be Ronald Reagan, Margaret Thatcher, and the Pope, each of whom have escaped the first attempt on their lives. However, in this new phase, the principal aim will be "to seek maximum psychological impact by striking at populations," to stir up the sort of hysterical people who make up the 'peace marchers' of today." Targets will be airports, crowded stores, theaters, sports centers, places where crowds gather and the feeling may be planted that no citizen is safe." In this past week, Americans have felt the "psychological impact" of a terrorist action that began at an airport, with the skynapping of a TWA 727 jet with 153 persons aboard. 104 of them were said to be United States citizens, one of whom was beaten half to death, then shot and his body thrown out of the plane onto the runway at Belrut Airport. This murder occurred because the man was a Navy frogman, had the guts to stand up to the murderers. The ordeal and continuing horror began on May 14th when Shi-ite terrorists boarded the plane at the Athens Airport. Four days later our State Department was prompted to make a positive statement. It warned travelers to stay away from that airport, and not fly in any plane landing at or taking off from it. That same night in a nationally televised news conference President Reagan repeated the warning, added that there should be an expansion of an air marshals program, said he would ask for a full investigation from the Socialist Greek government of all the events leading up to the hijacking, and he suggested that American airports might be closed down for all planes from countries that have "lax airport security." But, over and above all the things the President said in an unusually halting manner as though groping for the right words, was the admission of utter frustration. "I've pounded a few walls myself when I'm alone about this. It is frustrating. . . "

There was a time, not too many years ago, when a United States Passport was a respected document. When an American traveled in a foreign country, there was always the feeling that there was the full force and impact of the United States Government to provide security and protection, at least so long as one acted in a decent and respectable manner. American citizens could travel anywhere in the civilized world and be at least respected as a representative of a respected and greatly admired American Republic. Now that passport seems to have been relegated to the role of nothing more than an identification card. It may even bring humiliation and mistreatment to its holder, as happened at Athens on May 14th. Nowadays the credit card outranks the passport. And when the President of the United States admits to the world that he is frustrated, even humiliated and helpless because of the brutal and inhuman actions of a small group of terrorists, it is no wonder that we have become a laughing stock to some foreigners and a Satan to those who hate us, principally because of our aid and support to their greatest enemy, Israel.

The President's chief excuse for being about to do nothing: "You have to be able to pinpoint the enemy" before you start shooting. And "there's the rub." There's little doubt as to who the enemy really is, but how can one prove it when that enemy never seems to be directly involved in the terrorism? It was Lenin who laid down the dictum that "faceless terrorism is subversion's last card before open war." And in almost every instance in which Americans have died at the hands of terrorists, the terrorists have been faceless. In journalism's traditional five "W's", as mentioned by the President, we know why, when, where and what, but who remains a mystery. In what may have been sheer desperation, our State Department accepted one Nabih Berri as the "who." He was born in Sierra Leone, received a law degree in France, settled down in Detroit where he raised a family, and then divorced, going to Lebanon in 1974 where he became one of many leaders in the Shi-ite Amal, the religion's military wing. He claims to be in charge. Maybe he is. But in Lebanon, nobody ever seems to be in charge of anything. However, in the case of faceless terrorism, Berri was selected as the face with which to negotiate. Yet WHO is really in charge of terrorist activities on a world-wide scale is one of those open secrets that cannot be proved. Lenin had written, "We will never reject the principle of terror. It is a form of military operation which can be usefully employed, or which can be necessary in certain periods of the battle." Then Lenin went on to explain that those engaged in terrorist activities must always appear to be on their own, and can never be traced back to their connections with communism. So, this Nabih Berri has become the one with whom to negotiate, and has become extolled and praised by the media as though he were the hero in the plot. Aptly put was the statement of Arnaud de Borchgrave, editor-in-chief of The Washington Times who criticized the media, saying many journalists "make it their duty to turn our sworn enemies into misunderstood innocents." He said Congress and the American people are shaped by the liberal media that virtually ignores stories detailing the Soviet Union's involvement in supporting terrorist groups. They willfully, intentionally distort the facts, said the expert on Soviet disinformation.

But, with the media abetting, with our federal government fearful of telling the whole truth because it might disturb our trade relations with the USSR, how can one ever get to the facts of the case with proof? This Shi-ite chieftain in the "Movement of the Depressed" is a leader in just one of many similar terrorist groups. Their religious support comes from Iran, their arms come from Soviet Satellite States, their training is in camps hidden throughout the world and financed by Kadaffi, by other friends of the Kremlin, and by the Kremlin itself. Speaking of the world-wide terrorist activity, Hilaire du Berrier noted that "the new force of terrorists draws its killers from a dozen nations. They are of all colors but bound by the same hates. They are directed against the same enemies, trained in the same camps, financed by the same backers and sheltered in the same sanctuaries." While testifying at the trial of Bulgarian terrorists who are said to have planned and assisted in the attempted assassination of the Pope, Mahmet Ali Agca tried to make the judges think he was insane by telling them "I am Jesus Christ. I proclaim the end of the world." But in his calmer moments he admitted that he was trained in terrorism by Bulgarian and Czechoslovakian experts, and said that the Soviet Union was the center of international terrorism. He spoke of the Gray Wolves, a group of Turkish terrorists who received their training in a camp which was under the control of the Syrian secret service. But in the camp, in addition to the Turkish group, were terrorists from France, Italy, Spain, Germany, and the Middle East. So, when all the little pieces are put together, it's obvious that President Reagan's "WHO" is the Soviet Union. But how does one prove it and how does one say it without making World War III a declared war?

Since it has been definitely established (by Nabih Berri) that the Shi-ites are responsible for the hijacking, kidnapping and murder in the TWA Flight 847 incident, it is well to understand something of their connection with the "holy war" that is being waged, as a result of which 104 Americans became victims. There are two principal "denominations" dividing the Moslems; The Sunni and the Shi-ite. The Shi-ites are the more militant; the original Assassins were Shi-ites. They reside mainly in Iran and are loyal to Khomeini. A large number of them also reside in Lebanon, and they are fighting all the other sects, the Christians and the Jews, in an attempt to drive Israel completely out of Lebanon so they can take over for themselves, with the consent and support of Syria, a kind of Communist satellite which presently provides about the only military control that exists in Lebanon. While all the horror connected with the TWA hijacking drew the headlines in America, other Shi-ites were battling against Palestinians for control of a West Beirut refugee camp. According to the police, 560 people have died as a result of that single battle, which was still in progress at our press time. Also, in addition to the TWA hijacking, there were two other hijackings the day before. The Shi-ites hijacked a Boeing 727 before it took off from the Beirut airport, ordered all the passengers to leave, then blew up the plane. After that, a number of Palestinians who had been ordered to leave Beirut, were put in a second plane, a Lebanese-owned Middle East Airlines jet. This second plane was then hijacked while on its way to Jordan. But this was something of an aborted project, since the passengers were safely transferred to another Boeing 707 and they were flown to Amman, while the hijackers were flown to another airport. So, the ill-fated TWA and its 153 original passengers was the third hijacking in a two-day period.

Ulf Sultan, the pilot of the first Boeing 727 told reporters that the Shi-ite hijackers planted plastic explosives in the cockpit after the passengers left the plane. "Each of them (the hijackers) was like a full army, carrying a machine gun, plus two revolvers, plus hand grenades, plus dynamite, plus plastic explosives." They used some of their armament to blow up that particular plane, at the Beirut airport. Meanwhile, on another part of the same airport, other Shi-ite hijackers took over the cockpit of Flight 847 and, using its radio facilities, broadcast an appeal to all other Muslims who had not yet joined them in their Jihad "holy war." According to Newsweek the radio message, broadcast in Arabic, went like this:

"In the name of Allah, the all-compassionate, the merciful. Where are you Arabs? Jerusalem is calling you, you that claim yourselves Muslims. . . To the people who surrendered to Israel, to Mubarak and Arafat, Hussein and Saddam (Hussein of Iraq), to the usurpers of the thrones, Jerusalem can only be liberated by the hands of the believers, to the real revolutionaries. To the people of Palestine, we say . . . It is only through Islam that you can liberate your land." So, commented Newsweek: "No longer limited to terrorists and radicals, Islamic fundamentalism has become a genuine theology of liberation for the Muslim masses wherever it is preached. And while it is hardly a brand-new phenomenon, it has taken on fresh energy since the Islamic revolution that installed the hard-line Ayatollah Khomeini in Iran. In recent weeks alone, fundamentalist pressures and reaction to them triggered a coup in the Sudan and riots in Malaysia. . . In Tunisia, fundamentalist students have effectively taken control of the national university that President Habib Bourguiba built to be an engine of modernization. Just last week in Cairo the government had to resort to a powerful show of arms against Egyptian fundamentalists who demand that the most sophisticated and Westernized of Muslim nations adopt the rigid Islamic legal code called the Shariah as the civil law. In Afghanistan, Soviet troops confront Muslim rebels whose sustaining power is their fierce fundamentalism. And throughout the gulf states, reports James Bill, an Islamic specialist at the University of Texas, a populist fundamentalism is bubbling up from the masses, challenging Muslim elites to align themselves more closely with the words of the Prophet Muhammed and the will of Allah." (Unquote). Figures vary and figures often lie, but it is estimated that there are approximately two million Iranians, mostly Shi-ites and mostly students, who could be waiting for the call to include the United States as a target in the "Holy War." One Shi-ite leader (not Nabih Berri) announced that the White House is one of the "houses of Satan" that they may destroy.

Our military establishment was not idle. After the bombings of American barracks and embassies in Beirut, a series of "Delta Force" anti-terrorist units was trained and ready for whatever emergency might arise. At least one of those anti-terrorist units was flown to the Middle East and was ready to do whatever it might in an attempt to free the American hostages. But, as has happened before, the commercial communications media couldn't wait and published this information, alerting the Shi-ite terrorists and causing them to make preparations for any potential attack. It is said that this is why those remaining forty hostages were removed from the TWA plane and placed in hideouts throughout Beirut, in groups of three or four to each confinement point. An armada of at least seven U.S. Navy ships carrying more than 100 warplanes and helicopters and 1,800 Marines sailed toward Lebanon. The Delta Force anti-terrorist unit was probably on the carrier USS Nimitz which was nearby. But both the Delta Force and the men aboard the Nimitz were helpless, thanks at least in part to the media. Perhaps to show their thanks, or possibly just to take advantage of another opportunity for world-wide publicity, the terrorists allowed an ABC television crew to approach the plane in which TWA pilot John Testrake was still imprisoned by the hijackers. The television crew was allowed to talk to Testrake. A picture of him still in the cockpit with a terrorist hijacker standing behind him and displaying a gun, appears on the front page of The Miami Herald (and other metropolitan dailies). Pilot Testrake told the news team, "The Lord has taken very good care of us . . . and He will see us through to the end."

To present further evidence that these hijacking and terrorist attacks can happen anywhere, and that this so-called "Holy War" is a World War, there was a bombing at an airport terminal in West Germany. Three were killed, 43 were injured. Similar terrorist activity was occurring in other parts of the world. The chief scene of such operations at present seems to be airports. Athens, Beirut, Amman, Frankfurt, what airport comes next on the terrorist schedule?

How to deal successfully with this new kind of war is a question still unresolved. President Reagan is frustrated, the U.S. Navy is helpless, no one in authority seems to know what to do, how to do it, and to whom to do it. It is reported unofficially that those individual terrorists responsible for the bombings of American installations in Beirut were identified, found and executed. But that didn't stop the atrocities, it just expanded them into other parts of the world, to Spain where American servicemen were killed, and so on, no one knowing just where the terrorists will strike next. Getting rid of the terrorists that do the bombings is no answer. Muslims are anxious to be killed in action, that gives them an immediate passport to their vision of heaven. They die more happily if they can take a few "American devils" with them, be they men, women or children. It was Secretary of State George Shultz who, perhaps unwittingly, gave the answer as to how to win a war against terrorists. When commenting on the situation at Beirut Airport and the chances for rescuing the remaining hostages, Shultz said that Nabih Berri had declared himself to be the leader of the Shi-ite forces, had projected himself into the picture as the one man who can give orders that will be obeyed, and that makes Nabih Berri personally responsible, and he will be held accountable. And there, we believe, lies the solution: Don't bother chasing down and killing the terrorists. Go after their leaders! Identify them and hold them responsible for whatever has happened.

A final thought: Going after leaders reminds us that none of this present "Holy War" would have occurred if it were not for those responsible for that Balfour Declaration which started it all. Those with eyes to see will understand.

TESTIMONY BY MR. KENNETH WHITE
Opposing IRS Tax Simplification Proposals before the U.S. House of Representatives Committee on Ways and Means
June 17, 1985

Mr. Chairman, my name is Kenneth White, and I am President of the Virginia Taxpayers Association. We have previously presented testimony to the Ways and Means Committee on two other matters on May 1, 1980 and December 1, 1982, and the frequency of our appearance before both Senate and House committees in the last six years has made us the leading state taxpayer organization in the U.S. in presenting to Congress the broad views of grass roots taxpayers who are unrepresented by any special interest lobby.

In connection with President Reagan's current tax reform recommendations, and specifically concerning the proposals of the Internal Revenue Service now before this Committee -- Internal Revenue Service Strategic Plan, Document 6941 (5-84) -- which Commissioner Egger has already summarized for you but which have so far had little, if any, formal public comment, we must frankly advise you that the ordinary citizen's reaction to this plan will be most serious. In fact the Virginia Taxpayers Association states without qualification that the IRS request for permission to carry out a five-year plan to revolutionize the levying and collection of federal "income" taxes, involving elimination of any citizen participation in the calculation of such taxes and direct assessment by the IRS of such taxes using computer-assembled and generated data by 1988 is the most alarming and dangerous plan that has ever been presented to this Committee and must be summarily rejected as a gross violation of the United States Constitution.

When we consider the totality of systematic gathering by a government agency, without permission from any individual and without any allegation of wrongdoing against anyone, of all possible information from state tax records, county and local records of every kind including voter registration rolls, property tax rolls, automobile registration and driver's license records, credit union records, administration records, Farmers' Home Loan and FHA records, license applications, building permits, credit card records, commercial transaction records and every other kind of record that can be fed into a computer sufficient to develop a complete "personal profile" of every taxpayer, there can be no serious question that this massive process goes far beyond the firm barrier against unreasonable search established by the Fourth Amendment and the right to privacy secured by the Ninth and Tenth Amendments.

A number of members of Congress have expressed concern in recent years over increasing invasion of privacy, and certainly now is the time for Congress to adhere to basic principles. Even though the Privacy Act of 1974 has not blocked all government invasion of privacy, the act does declare at 5 USC 552a (e) (2) that:

"Each agency that maintains a system of records shall collect information to the greatest extent practicable directly from the subject individual when the information may result in adverse determinations about an individual's rights, benefits, and privileges under federal programs;" (emphasis added) and yet in the IRS proposal now before the Ways and Means Committee there will be no information collected directly from the subject individual even though admittedly such computer-generated information is virtually guaranteed to "result in adverse determinations" about an individual's rights" under a Federal program.

In this connection, we understand that moves are now under way by certain members of Congress and by the administration to cancel Privacy Act protections, and we must therefore warn every member of Congress in the strongest possible language that the Privacy Act must not be weakened in any way!

We are of course familiar with the misnamed Bank Secrecy Act, which declares that there is no bank secrecy, and with court decisions holding that citizens have no privacy rights over "third party records", yet even bank records now are not automatically gathered by the IRS on all individuals without any specific requests for such information to the banks themselves.

Certainly after the scandalous IRS computer fiascos Americans have witnessed this year, there can be no confidence in accurate hands-off functioning of an all-encompassing new and gigantic IRS computer in Martinsburg, West Virginia, receiving multiple input from other lesser computers, each also subject to error. Even non-computer specialists are aware of the mathematical law of GIGO -- garbage in, garbage out -- and with the carefully planned and cultivated intimidation of ordinary citizens by the IRS, millions of average taxpayers will be afraid to question IRS tax assessments from the new computer which are not even mathematically correct.

If anyone thinks IRS actions have caused too many unnecessary headaches this year, just wait until you members of Congress start getting complaints about this new IRS computer system. We in the Virginia Taxpayers Association can confidently state that a great many citizens will see to it that you as individual members of Congress get the full blame for this fearsome catastrophe, if indeed you permit it to happen.

What is of course immediately obvious about this whole plan is that it makes possible on a hitherto unimagined scale omnipresent direct governmental control over the lives of individual Americans that must be truly frightening not only to civil libertarians but to objective analysts of political history. Orwell's novel "1984" was more prophetic than he knew, for it was last year when the IRS began in earnest to assemble taxpayer "profiles". And remember that not only will ordinary citizens be "profiled" but also U.S. judges, federal prosecutors and yes, you, as individual members of Congress, just in case you might "get out of line" with whoever ultimately controls the Big Brother computer system. This Committee should not delay in telling the Internal Revenue Service to immediately cancel and withdraw this monstrous IRS "Strategic Plan", Document 6941, for there is no longer any way its dreadfully oppressive impact can be kept from the American public.

Another extremely far-reaching development requires fundamental consideration at this point, to wit, the recent finding by two independent research groups, one led by a former criminal investigator for the Illinois Department of Revenue, after thorough and painstaking inspection of the original documents at the National Archives and after actual visits to 48 state capitals where certified copies of all the relevant legislative records were obtained, that the 16th Amendment was never ratified by the requisite number of states, and thus is null and void.

Details of this authoritative research are summarized in two volumes, The Law That Never Was, by Bill Benson and M.J. "Red" Beckman (Constitutional Research Association, Box 550, South Holland, Ill. 60473), and XVI, The Constitution's Income Tax Amendment Was Never Ratified, by Burton Linne (American Liberty Information Society, 1377 K. St., N.W., #336, Washington, D.C. 20005). Both research groups established that Secretary of State Philander C. Knox on February 25, 1913, with only a few more days to serve in office before his term expired with arrival of a new cabinet in Washington, declared by fraud that the 16th Amendment had been ratified, knowing full well that in fact fewer than 36 states, the required three-fourths of the states, had lawfully ratified the amendment and submitted the necessary certification. If anyone today should seek to argue that the 16th Amendment has been around for 72 years and cannot be challenged now, that argument has been disposed of by the Supreme Court in its landmark case, Baker v. Carr, U.S. 214 (1962), which tossed out multiple government apportionment systems that had been in effect far longer than 72 years.

Certain U.S. district courts which in recent cases formally admitted into evidence the documents showing that the 16th Amendment is null and void have attempted to reject this evidence on the legal terminology grounds that what is involved here is a political question not subject to resolution by the judicial branch, on the theory that the amendment was made effective by the political act of one man, Secretary of State Knox. This position of these district courts, however, also is overruled by the Supreme Court, in Dillon v. Gloss, 256 U.S. 376 (1921), which has made clear that the effective date of an amendment is not the date when it was certified by the secretary of state but the date when ratification is consummated. And in the case of the 16th Amendment, of course, ratification was never consummated.

We in the Virginia Taxpayers Association presented to this Committee five years ago the basic 1916 findings of the Supreme Court in Brushaber v. Union Pacific Railroad Co., 240 U.S. 1, and Stanton v. Baltic Mining Co., 240 U.S. 103, neither of which has been overruled, that the U.S. "income" tax is an indirect excise tax and that the 16th Amendment was not needed to permit such a tax. . . . The problem this Committee and Congress now have, however, is that most members of the general public believe existence of the 16th Amendment was required to permit the kind of tax the Internal Revenue Service has been attempting to collect from average citizens. The truth is of course that the kind of tax permitted by the Brushaber and Stanton findings (supra) is either a purely voluntary tax or a "privilege" tax (see American Airways v. Wallace, 57 F. 2d 877,880 . . . based upon a special state-created privilege, which most people have not actually received. Thus if the perception in the public minds that an effective "income tax" 16th Amendment exists is removed -- as will inevitably take place -- the average person who works for a living and is still expected by the IRS to pay an "income" tax (under the present methods) will want to know what "privilege" he is still being taxed on. Certainly, as we have already pointed out, this average person will not sit still for an IRS-computed and assessed "income" tax, but particularly so when he becomes aware that there is no longer a 16th Amendment.

We want to make clear here that death of the 16th Amendment in no way affects the corporate income tax, for that does rest upon a state-created privilege, the grant of a corporate charter.

We appreciate and heartily concur with the many truthful remarks President Reagan is making about the intolerable present tax system in his campaigning around the country, but we must also point out that what the President currently considers "tax reform" is at best meaningless in the light of what is lawfully permitted under the Constitution. For the past 13 years we in the Virginia Taxpayers Association have been telling the federal government to stop its excessive spending, but instead Congress has heedlessly and recklessly mushroomed its waste of the people's resources without regard to either law or sound financial thinking, to the point that now everyone realizes the nation is gravely ill financially. Our declaration to you today cannot be advice on the best way to "stay revenue-neutral" in the face of increasing unwillingness by Americans to pay taxes which they do not lawfully owe -- a revolt we have publicly warned about for years -- but rather that the Ways and Means Committee has a duty to inform the House that funds simply cannot be made available to the U.S. government under any kind of an individual "income tax" system to meet present levels of expenditure, let alone projected future increases. And one final warning: If Congress fails to obey the law, which regrettably has too often been the case, it openly invites public anarchy. Thank you.

* * * * *

The Year of Our Lord 1913 was a fateful year in the history of the Republic of the United States. At least five associated acts occurred which were to bring about the slow destruction of our Republic and the enslavement of its citizens:

- 1). in 1913, through the machinations of the Internationalist "Colonel" Edward M. House and the political maneuverings of former President Theodore Roosevelt who weakened the Republican Party through the creation of his short-lived Bull Moose Party, Thomas Woodrow Wilson became the 28th President of the United States and the first Democratic President in 20 years.
- 2). Just before the incoming Wilson Cabinet was to take over, Republican Philander Chase Knox as Secretary of State single-handedly and fraudulently declared the 16th Income Tax Amendment to have been ratified by the requisite number of States.
- 3). In 1913, in order to weaken the Constitutionally enumerated rights of the States, the 17th Amendment to the Constitution was ratified, providing that U.S. Senators should be "elected by the people" instead of the Legislatures of the respective States.
- 4). Shortly before the Christmas recess in 1913, the Morgan-Rockefeller interests arranged for the passage of the Federal Reserve Act.
- 5). In order to evade the effects that this new "Law That Is Not a Law" might have on his financial interests, John D. Rockefeller, Sr., created the first of the many Rockefeller Foundations that were to follow.

Of these five associated acts, the one which was to bring the most misery upon the citizens of the United States was the 16th Amendment. Its implied powers have slowly developed, until now the Internal Revenue Service is able to seize your paycheck, your house, clothes and car, and to order criminal trials to imprison or financially punish those who aren't sufficiently "voluntary" in their payments to Big Brother. The American Liberty Information Society (op cit) says "Constitutional scholars have held that the 16th Amendment cuts off every American from his 1776 political birthright to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness." How much more true that will be if Congress should approve the "Internal Revenue Service Strategic Plan" which is so completely explained in Kenneth White's testimony before the House Ways and Means Committee.

Also, in view of the fact that the 16th Amendment is "A Law That Never Was," it is essential that this be understood by all citizens of the United States, so that the assumed power of the IRS over the captive citizens be broken once and for all time. Help save the Republic by helping to spread the word.

THE WAR THAT IS MISUNDERSTOOD

One wonders if an apathetic America will come to realize, before it is too late, that World War III started long ago, and that terrorists form the front-line troops in this continuing "war to end wars." For the past weeks the biggest battle in this war has been staged at Beirut in the Middle East. But it isn't understood, even by our own administration, that this is not an isolated battle against a small group of murderers, but just one engagement in a global internationalist struggle for Christian survival. To prove that the war is world-wide and international in character, note that when the terrorists took over TWA Flight 847 they did it at the Athens airport and it involved a flight scheduled for Rome. Also, the terrorists and their agents, those who supplied them with weapons and arranged for their passage, spoke to each other not in Arabic or any other language of the Middle East, but in the German language. Original plans were to force the pilot to fly to every airport that would receive the terrorists. At each airport they would murder an innocent hostage, throw the body onto the tarmac, then fly to another airport to repeat the process. Their plan worked at Beirut, where they beat to death and shot Navy diver Robert D. Stethem, tossed the body onto the runway. A second Navy diver, Clinton Suggs, said he was to have been the second to be murdered. But by that time circumstances and fresh orders caused the TWA to remain at Beirut, and the planned murder of other hostages was halted. Then for the remaining 43 American hostages, a new kind of torture began. They were forced to become propagandists for the murdering terrorists, and this before invited U.S. television cameras. Certainly some turned "chicken," some accepted the brainwash, others felt that they must either lie or die. So they lied and, along with the chicken-hearted and the brainwashed, they told a watching and listening world how well they were being treated by their potential murderers, how they were beginning to understand that there were two sides to the story, that the terrorists were really nice people simply standing up for what they believed, and there was the plea that nothing should be done to try to rescue them by force. The television interviewers played right into the hands of the publicity-seeking terrorists by asking leading questions that forced the still helpless victims to lie again and again about their treatment and their attitude toward the kidnapers. Only after they had left Damascus and arrived in Frankfurt, West Germany, did some of them tell the truth. They told of beatings, threats, time spent in underground bunkers. Said Robert Brown of Stow, Mass., "In some cases they kicked the passengers in the ears, I was kicked in the face once." Navy diver Suggs said he was tied up, blindfolded, hit in the stomach, was told that he was next to die. "I thought I was dead. I prayed. I asked the Lord to receive me in His Arms." Suggs also spoke of TWA purser Uli Derickson who stepped between him and the hijacker who was beating him and said, "Enough, enough." Said Suggs, "She diverted him. She saved my life."

Further evidence that this was not an isolated incident involving one small group of terrorists was soon to follow. On the day the 39 American hostages were freed, "a new wave of terrorism blasted airline facilities in Madrid and Rome, while a bombing aimed at U.S. military personnel damaged cars in Athens," wrote Timothy McQuay of USA TODAY. In Madrid a woman was killed and 27 people were injured when a bomb exploded in a British Airways office and damaged a TWA office in the same building. Meanwhile, machine-gun fire struck a nearby Royal Jordanian Airlines office. In Rome a suitcase bomb exploded in the baggage area of the international airport, leaving 15 wounded. In Athens, a blast occurred outside a hotel housing

U.S. military officers. In the United States, incendiary bombs caused a sudden fire which roared through Baldwin Hills, a fashionable Los Angeles suburb, sending 47 homes up in flames "like matchsticks," and partially destroying another 50 homes. At press time two were known to be dead, more deaths expected.

These were incidents in a continuous war which the Western World has failed to recognize as such, and which has frustrated officials in established governments (but not the elitists who control the acts of officials in established governments). What has seldom been mentioned in the press is the fact that Nabih Berri, the "hero" of the latest Battle of Beirut, still has roots in Dearborn, Michigan. There is an area in Dearborn called "Little Beirut" where an estimated 30,000 Shiite Moslems reside. They have formed a 1,500-member militia "armed with machine guns, grenades and bazooka launchers." Paul Tharp, correspondent for the New York Post, reported the story, quoted Dennis Berry, 24, a cousin of Nabih Berri, who boasted of the machine guns stolen from tanks at the Ford Motor Company Rouge plant, and said they were prepared to back Nabih Berri all the way. There are unconfirmed reports that thousands of Shiite Moslems are living in and around Washington, D.C., and that if the word is ever given, terrorism will engulf our Nation's capital. How Nabih Berri came to be the representative of the U.S. government in the Beirut hijacking affair is interesting. When Berri left Dearborn and returned to Beirut he became a ranking Shiite Amal leader as well as a chief justice in the Lebanon government. When the Beirut hijacking occurred the man in Washington who took charge was National Security Adviser Robert McFarlane (CFR). McFarlane follows Henry Kissinger and Zbigniew Brzezinski in that important post, and if the new left-leaning U.S. News is correct McFarlane is about to outshine them both as a representative of the Rockefeller interests. McFarlane had met Nabih Berri while in Lebanon. According to U.S. News McFarlane was at home in his suburban Washington residence when he picked up his security-guarded telephone and "placed a call to Shiite Amal leader Nabih Berri in Lebanon to ask him to act as intermediary between Washington and the Shiite terrorists who had hijacked a TWA jetliner." This is like asking a fox to guard a chicken house, but we are told that "McFarlane has orchestrated the key deliberations among Reagan and his aides in the White House Situation Room." Other sources indicate that McFarlane, being busy at the White House, named one Reginald Bartholomew (also CFR) to work as his field commander in the "Battle of Beirut". Between the two, President Reagan had little or nothing to do with the affair except to make appropriate pronouncements at pertinent times, and to meet and greet the 39 hostages when they came home.

We repeat: These were incidents in a continuous war. It is centered in the Middle East because that is the position best suited to the Soviet strategists as well as the oil magnates. The Shites are but a part of a growing Moslem movement which is called a Holy War, "Islamic Jihad." This, in turn, is supported by Iran and Syria, the latter being supported by Soviet Russia, the former playing into Soviet hands without knowing it. As Hilaire du Berrier reports, "In the eye of the storm that has raged since the U.S. partitioned Palestine into an Arab and Jewish state in 1947 lies Lebanon." Throughout history that part of the world has known little peace. But "through an unwritten agreement drawn up in 1943, Lebanon had a Maronite Christian for a President, a Sunni Moslem for a Vice President, a Shia (or Shiite) Moslem as speaker of the House and an Orthodox Christian as deputy speaker. The 99-member House was divided on a similar basis. Lebanon was the crossroads of the Arab and Christian world and Beirut was its market place." This strange coalition government seemed to be working and according to Middle East authority John Bullock of the London Daily Telegraph, they would have reached an accommodation." But, when the partition of Palestine occurred, "a 52-mile border separated Lebanon from the new state of Israel and attacks against Israel were inevitable." Israel thought that by supporting the Maronite Christians against the Moslems, Lebanon could be turned into Christian buffer state. So, according to H du B, "Israel supported the Christians during the 1975-76 civil war. It was a mistake, Israel's leaders thought that with the help of the Christians they could become the dominant power in the area. It was a hopeless dream from the start. Despite the 1943 agreement giving the presidency to the Maronites, Lebanon was an Arab Moslem nation with a Christian minority, most of whom considered themselves non-Arab, and for the Christians, Israeli friendship was a poisoned gift. . . . A greater mistake came on June 7, 1981. Israel was already a nuclear power, but without warning and in defiance of world opinion she bombed the nuclear reactors Iraq has installed near Bagdad. . . . Iraq was knocked out but Syrian influence soared. Syria's President Hafez-el-Assad had had irrefutable proof that only a security pact with Soviet Russia could insure an Arab nation against an Israeli 'Pearl Harbor-type' attack, so the security pact was made and there will be no surprise attack on Syria's nuclear reactors. In this climate President Jimmy Carter committed the American taxpayer to waste an extra $2 billion in 1979 on an Israeli-Egyptian peace plan which other Arab nations regarded as an exercise in cynicism. Never did the American President understand that he was fatally weakening the Christians with the Moslem majority in Lebanon by permitting Israel to extract too high a price and then reaffirming the same sort of security pact with Israel that Syria has with the Russians. From then on two tiny states had the world's great powers by the tail. . . . For Russia it was ideal. A classic war is expensive. Guerrilla warfare is cheaper. But terrorism is cheapest of all. Terrorism is guerrilla warfare in cities instead of in mountains and forests. By being conducted against crowds it leaves no man or woman with a feeling of security. Thus nations are destabilized by a small force from within, for which invisible backers may disclaim responsibility, and the threat of armies coming in for the kill is ever-present. Moral influence is a euphemism for power possessed but not actually used. By permitting America's power to decline, the Carter Administration destroyed America's moral influence in the world." (Quoted from H du B Reports, May, 1985. American address: P.O.Box 786, St. George, Utah 84770. $75 per year).

The situation: The Soviet Union supports Syria and Syria supports Lebanon. Being Shiite territory, Iran also supports the Arabs of Lebanon. On the other hand, the United States supports Israel and Israel is fast weakening, primarily because of its economic situation. In the TWA 847 hijacking aftermath, Israel rejected aid to the United States, while Assad of Syria interceded and arranged for the release of the 39 American hostages. Columnist Joseph Sobran noted in a column in the St. Louis Globe Democrat of June 26, that "Americans are beginning to get angry at Israel and not without reason, though not without much purpose, either." Commenting on Israel's refusal to aid the U.S. in the hostage release, Sobran wrote:

"Israel has a powerful lobby in the United States looking after Israel interests. There is no U.S. lobby in Israel, unfortunately, to look after American interests. This was all too apparent as the Israelis refused to help get the United States off the hook with the Shiite terrorists by releasing the 700 Shiite prisoners it seized in Lebanon in April, and over U.S. protests (feeble, needless to say), then removed them to Israel. Having precipitated the crisis, 'our only reliable ally in the Middle East,' as its lobbyists call it, allowed the United States to take the heat alone. A sullen Yitzhak Rabin, the Israeli defense minister, appeared on ABC's 'Nightline' to reject, with undisguised contempt, the suggestion that Israel release the 700 unilaterally. . . . Israel has taken billions in American aid, along with effusive expressions of U.S. support, while dealing very deviously with the United States. Recently it admitted having acquired several hundred American-made krytons - timing devices useful for nuclear weapons - whose sale abroad is illegal under U.S. law. That story died out quickly, as had an earlier story that Israel had acquired bomb-grade enriched uranium produced in the United States. Israel is confident that it can get away with this kind of conduct indefinitely. The power of the Israeli lobby is only part of the reason. The main reason is that Americans are, collectively, a primitive tribe - emotional, forgetful, gullible, manipulable. We don't hold grudges. Our attention span is too short. We have no idea what we are doing in the Middle East, beyond 'seeking peace' and negotiating the return of the current batch of hostages.

"Probably Israel can weather any flare-up of American outrage. One thing Americans never do in their moments of high dudgeon is to draw lessons from experience that may prove useful when the emotion has died down. Consider the Lavon affair, another of those stories that died out quickly (like the attack on the U.S.S. Liberty-Ed.). In 1954, a series of bombs exploded in American-owned buildings in Egypt. It looked like the work of Arab nationalists. But it wasn't. It was the work of Israeli agents, who were caught trying to plant more bombs, with the goal of wrecking Arab-American relations. . . . But the larger lesson of the Lavon affair transcends Israeli ethics: It is that Israel has a natural interest in discord between the Arab world and the United States. In this, for once, its interests coincide with that of the Soviet Union. . . . The Soviets want to generate hostility toward the United States everywhere. Getting the Moslem world furious at us is quite a windfall for them, especially at a time when they are incinerating Moslems in Afghanistan. This couldn't have been accomplished without our help. The Israelis, from motives of self-preservation, don't want to face the Arab world alone. They can't be altogether displeased when Moslem terrorists become the focal point of American public interest. It confirms the American alignment with Israel. The Israelis have nothing to gain from an early and amiable resolution of the TWA hostage crisis. But before we go into the Arab world with guns blazing, we ought to ask ourselves whether we really want the role that might best serve Israeli interests. What do the Israelis have to offer us that is worth incurring the lasting enmity of 750 million Moslems, from Africa to Indonesia? How have we profited so far from our 'special relationship'? If it were so obviously good for us, it wouldn't take the Israeli lobby to pressure us into it. The Middle East is nothing to be sentimental about, and anger can be as sentimental as sympathy. Israel is not really our friend; but Islam can never be our friend. It is a vast, ancient, xenophobic way of life. We can live at peace with it only by keeping at a certain remove (sic). If we don't antagonize it, it can be a huge bulwark against communism." (Unquote).

"How much longer will Israel First Millennialists in this nation continue to support Israel over all?" asks the editor of Christian News, a Lutheran weekly tabloid. He points out that "While Christians recognize the threat of Islam, they certainly should recognize what the Israel First Millennialists fail to admit. Israel has been responsible for much of the terrorism in the Middle East. Israel has not treated the Arabs fairly. Many Fundamentalists have been urging the U.S. to remain on Israel's bandwagon. Perhaps it would be best for us to stop meddling all over the world and mind our own business. Let all the feuding factions in the Middle East and elsewhere settle their own problems. We should get out of the Mid-East." We say Amen. It might end this new kind of war that most Americans don't really understand. Only the Mega-bankers and the Monopoly Capitalists (that includes the Communists) know why we are so involved in Mid-East affairs. We have been fighting wrong wars at wrong times for wrong reasons ever since Teddy Roosevelt charged his way up San Juan Hill in Cuba. Will we never learn that our founding fathers really knew what they were talking about when they warned against entangling alliances with other countries in other parts of the world?

TO WAR TO REGAIN RESPECT?

Never in the history of the world has any other Nation spent or given away so much in money, resources, material and cannon fodder as has the United States of America; and all this in such a short space of time. A rude and minimal guesstimate would reveal that since the start of World War II, in it and the following was not of our own making and for no benefit to our own country, there have been sacrificed or given to others over half a million American dead, 238 billion dollars in assistance and countless more billions in private and public aid up to and including the current Communist-created famine in Africa. Our Nation and its U.S.-based Megabankers and Multinational moguls have built the Soviet Union, nourished it, developed it into a militaristic monster. They currently are doing the same for Communist China. Our government has sent troops and arms to every continent and to countless corners of the globe to protect nations and states from the Communist Juggernaut which our own government and its overriding Eastern Establishment created. A subscriber and correspondent recently sent us the following seldom-if-ever published material:

"Have you ever thought of all the air and naval bases that the United States has built and that have been turned over to the Soviets?

1) The Wheelus Air Force Base in Libya - It was the largest U.S. air base outside the States. It was turned back to the Libyans who, in turn, turned it over to the Soviets.

2) The Habbaniyah Air Base in Iraq which was the next largest base outside the U.S. Although it was under British command it was built by the United States, and has been turned over to the Soviets.

3) In Vietnam the Da Nang and Camrahn Bay Bases. One was a big air base and the other a great naval base. They were left intact for the Vietnamese and soon after were taken over by the Soviets.

4) The Chah Bahar and a second base on the Persian Gulf in Iran (I do not remember the second base's name). At the time of the bust-up in Iran the American personnel was pulled out and nothing was salvaged. Everything was left in place. The Iranians took them over but they couldn't run them. Soon thereafter the two bases were turned over to the Soviets.

"If ever our Indian Ocean Fleet has a fight with the Soviets, the Soviet forces will be stationed at Naval and Air Bases that we built and equipped. Now, after the Wheelus and Habbaniyah flascos, how come there wasn't a little foresight used about the Vietnamese and the Iranian bases? We build, we walk out, leave the bases intact for the Soviets. Why. Could it be treason?"

Overlooking for the moment the reasoning behind the plan, it is true that when the British-based Round Table Group determined that the British Empire should be liquidated and replaced by a series of Dominions (the U.S. to be one of them eventually), it was decided that the United States should take over the job of policing and financing all the Nations and States that had not been turned over to the Communists. Hence, Uncle Sam came to be called Uncle Sugar, and protector of the West. So we gave and gave, protected and protected. To friends as well as enemies. One might at least expect respect for a Nation that was trying to purchase love. But, as Paul Johnson, author of "Modern Times," observed: "The worst thing is to go around asking to be loved. That invites contempt. People of the West know in their hearts they're very dependent on America and are, in their rational moods, grateful. But if you're dependent on someone you tend to resent them. . . . The hate (against America) doesn't come to the surface when America is acting strongly. It comes up when America appears to be weak and indecisive."

The United States was far from weak and indecisive at the end of World War II. It was, in every respect, the strongest Nation in the world. Europe and the USSR were, by contrast, weak and struggling for recovery. But to have only one powerful Nation would make difficult the old "Balance of Power" strategy by which governments had been ruled by the unseen powers ever since Nations came into being in Europe. More importantly to the World Rulers, having just one powerful Nation would make use of the ever-successful Hegelian dialectic impossible. The plan called for a Capitalist Nation (thesis) to be challenged by a Communist Nation (antithesis) in order to bring about One World Socialism (synthesis). Therefore, the United States must be weakened and made to appear indecisive; while the USSR must be strengthened and her actions made more decisive. The weakening of the USA and the strengthening of International Communism began with the Korean "Police Action." Although labeled a UN War, the dismissal of General MacArthur, the refusal to end the war and the creation of a stalemate condition which exists to this day, caused plenty of weakening and strengthening of nations in the eyes of the world. Then came Vietnam, a no-win war causing the whole world to look upon the United States as weak and indecisive, while the Communists were strong and victorious, gained American-built air and naval bases and much armament and equipment for the Communists. There had been a war over the Suez Canal in which the US and the USSR sided with each other against both Britain and France; this further weakening and making America seem indecisive. There followed assorted sinkings of U.S. Ships, the shooting down of U.S. airplanes and other incidents in which there was no U.S. retaliation. Then the United States started trying to handle things in the Middle East. Their weakness and indecisiveness were on exhibit for all the world to see. Then came the first hostage controversy in Lebanon when an attempt to save the hostages became a costly fiasco. Meanwhile the hijackings, the shooting down of American planes, the killing of American troops continued - all without retaliation. David Gergen, a contributing columnist in U.S. News of July 15 wrote:

"American blood now stains the soil in capitals around the world. Paris, 1982: Terrorists shower machine-gun bullets on two American women in a restaurant. Athens, 1983: Two gunmen murder an American naval officer. Beirut, 1983: A truck bomb wrecks the U.S. Embassy, killing 17 Americans; another later demolished the U.S. Marine headquarters, killing 241 Americans. San Salvador, 1985: Terrorists kill four off-duty American Marines. Beirut, 1985: Hijackers brutally beat Robbie Stethem, killing him even before they shoot him. The toll rises higher, higher yet - at least 320 Americans. . . murdered by terrorists since the 1980s began. Except for suicide drivers, not one drop of terrorist blood, apparently, has been spilled in return. When will terrorists pay the same price as their victims? How many more of our citizens must die? How much longer before America strikes back - an eye for an eye? The nation mourns. . . and waits."

The United States was being rocked by a series of foreign and domestic crises, the prestige of the country and its leadership was on the line. Weakness and indecisiveness ruled. Then came the Hostage Crisis, and the weakness and indecisiveness continued. Americans were at last aroused. It was inevitable that Reagan's Carter-like handling of the crisis would be mentioned. One editorial was headlined "Jimmy Reagan." The weakness and indecisiveness had reached a climax of inaction, and people demanded action. What made the situation even worse: in order to get the hostages released, the US had to appeal to Syria, one of the Nations promoting terrorism, to intercede.

To make the situation even more acute, Senator Jeremiah Denton's Security and Terrorism Subcommittee released a statement saying there have been 32 acts of suspected sabotage in domestic nuclear facilities and 14 actual attempted bombings. At a conference on nuclear terrorism another speaker warned that a powerful nuclear device could be fitted into an auto trunk and is smaller than a bale of marijuana "to which our borders are virtually transparent." Sen. Denton reminded his listeners of the kidnapping of General Dozier by the Red Brigade in Italy, said he was interrogated about NATO and U.S. nuclear installations. Sen. Denton also recalled that one POW with extensive nuclear knowledge disappeared and was never to be seen again. "We assumed he was tortured to death to get at secrets." The Senate Subcommittee Report explained how Syria provides refuge for terrorists, has established "an extensive infrastructure for recruiting and training terrorists who operate against Israel, the United States, and the Arab Mideast." The report also stated that Syria, Libya and Iran cooperate, coordinate their efforts, "especially when the targets are the United States, Israel or France."

It seems that the U.S. had lost so much prestige among nations that even the CFR felt it was time for President Reagan to talk like an American instead of an international pacifist. He was scheduled to give an address before the annual convention of the American Bar Association, so he delivered one of his toughest speeches. He branded Iran, Cuba, Libya, North Korea, and Nicaragua (but failed to mention Syria) as members of an international "Murder Inc." cartel which he said harbors a fanatical hatred of America and which is fomenting worldwide terrorism. Some of the President's words: "The American people are not - I repeat - not going to tolerate intimidation, terror and outright acts of war against this nation. We are especially not going to tolerate these attacks from outlaw states run by the strangest collection of misfits, looney tunes and squalid criminals since the advent of the Third Reich. The terrorists represent a new international version of Murder Inc., and their sponsors are united by fanatical hatred of the United States, our people, our way of life, our international stature. Terrorists are trying to cause us to retreat, retrench, to become 'Fortress America.' Their real goal is to expel America from the world. These terrorist states are now engaged in acts of war against the government and the people of the United States. And under international law, any state which is the victim of acts of war has the right to defend itself. We will act to indict, apprehend, and prosecute those who commit the kind of atrocities the world has witnessed in recent weeks." The President also hinted that the Soviet Union has a close relationship with terrorist states. Moscow denied, of course, said it is Washington that is "sponsoring state terrorism worldwide."

A lot of words, but no real action was indicated by the President. However, in mentioning Nicaragua as a member of this new version of "Murder Inc.," there was a hint that in order to save face and regain respect, war might be the answer. A limited war, of course. One against Nicaragua. It will be remembered that when the United States was at a similar low point in international respect the action against Granada did much to restore confidence in the United States, even though the Media did their best to destroy that confidence and label the United States as the "bad guy" in the engagement. An invasion of Nicaragua, certainly justified and overdue, would do much to restore prestige and diminish that feeling of weakness and indecisiveness on the part of the United States. An Intelligence Report from Britain last June 26 indicated that such an invasion had already been planned. We quote from parts of that report:

"US planning to invade Nicaragua. Our observer in Panama writes: . . . In Central America it has become an accepted fact that (US armed intervention in Nicaragua) is inevitable, even if it is not considered politic to debate it publicly. The only question is when. That the United States is prepared for such a surgical strike is also becoming quite evident. At the beginning of June the New York Times published a series of articles with the military preparations so detailed as to embarrass Washington, and two days later the paper was obliged to publish a retraction that, at least in Panama, did not convince anybody. . . This operation, to be successful politically as well as militarily, must be quick and decisive like Granada, so as not to give the European governments time to build up opposition. They are ignorant of the real facts and listen to contrary propaganda. The mopping up can be left to the present contras. They would become the army of the new anti-communist government. Russia understands this very well and is walking a tight-rope in trying to avoid creating any serious provocation. There are at least two Russian freighters cruising around in the Pacific. They are loaded with advanced military equipment, including fighter planes, and Reagan has already warned that they or their cargo will be destroyed at once if any attempt is made to unload in Nicaragua."

Then comes this item from the June 30 issue of World Affairs Review: "There are increasing numbers of US troops operating in Honduras (apparently just training) and similar build-ups of advisers are reported in Costa Rica and Panama. What is the purpose of this build-up? I believe that we are about to witness a Granada type operation to try and sort out the Nicaraguan situation once and for all. With instability growing throughout the whole of Central America, if the United States is to make a move, now would seem the best time, before the Soviets have the chance to move in more substantial supplies of weaponry."

Further evidence: About a month ago the Wall Street Journal reported that some 450,000 reservists have been notified that they may be called up soon. Their training is now weekly rather than monthly. Gary North in his July 5th Remnant Review lists several facts which seem to point toward a Granada type invasion of Nicaragua. He comments: "These are rumors. I cannot verify them . . . other factors lead me to believe that these rumors are grounded in fact. . . What I am arguing here is that the United States has been rocked by a series of foreign and domestic crises, and that the prestige of the country and its leadership is on the line. I believe that President Reagan is now aware of the military threat as he was not even a month ago. Human Events recently ran a brief article reporting that even the President had been shocked by a national security briefing which several senators had also been given. These crises I believe are forcing the President into an offense-oriented stance." (Unquote). The President's tough speech before the American Bar Association certainly indicates that he has taken an offense-oriented stance. But he was careful not to say too much. Because if there is to be an invasion of Nicaragua it must be a Granada type operation, not another "Bay of Pigs"; and the media, as with Granada, must not be permitted to accompany the landing parties.

* * * * *

As the citizens of a Nation once looked upon by so many as the hope of the world, and because there were no watchmen awake at the gates, we are beset with many national problems. But whether they be the FRS, the IRS, government schools, immigration, abortion or any other national issue; or whether they be international problems such as terrorism, Communism, fanatical Shi-ism, invasion from the South, or whatever problem; let us understand that the first principle of war is to know your enemy; and the first principle of victory is to know Him Whom you must follow. And "What shall we say to these things? If God be for us, who can be against us?"

DO THE MEDIA CONTROL THE COUNTRY?

"...There shall be false teachers among you, who privily shall bring in damnable heresies,...And many shall follow their pernicious ways; by reason of whom the way of truth shall be evil spoken of. And through covetousness shall they with feigned words make merchandise of you; whose judgement now of a long time lingereth not....These are wells without water, clouds that are carried with a tempest; to whom the mist of darkness is reserved for ever. For when they speak great swelling words of vanity, they allure through the lusts of the flesh, through much wantonness, those that were clean escaped from them who live in error. While they promise them liberty, they themselves are the servants of corruption: for of whom a man is overcome, of the same is he brought in bondage....For it had been better for them not to have known the way of righteousness....But it is happened unto them according to the true proverb, The dog is turned to his own vomit again; and the sow that was washed to her wallowing in the mire." (Selected from II Peter, 2:1-22).

What St. Peter wrote in the 1st century remains true in the 20th. In 1914 there was no radio or television to deceive and misinform the people. Movies were not yet used as instruments of pornography and propaganda. Aside from the stage which could serve only a few in large communities, the printed page reigned supreme. At that time, before World War I, John Swinton, an editor of note, spoke of that one reigning communications medium when he addressed the 1914 dinner of the American Press Association. You may have read these words before for they are often quoted. But, in view of the power of the media in 1985, they bear reprinting. He told his associates of the Fourth Estate:

"There is no such thing as an independent press in America, if we except that of little country towns. You know this and I know it. Not a man among you dares to utter his honest opinion. Were you to utter it, you know beforehand that it would never appear in print. I am paid one hundred and fifty dollars a week so that I may keep my honest opinions out of the newspaper for which I write. You too are paid similar salaries for similar services. Were I to permit that a single edition of my newspaper contained an honest opinion, my occupation - like Othello's - would be gone in less than twenty-four hours. The man who would be so foolish as to write his honest opinion would be on the streets in search of another job. It is the duty of a New York Journalist to lie, to distort, to revile, to toady at the feet of Mammon, and to sell his country and his race for his daily bread, or what amounts to the same thing, his salary. We are the tools and the vassals of the rich behind the scenes. We are marionettes. These men pull the strings and we dance. Our time, our talents, our lives, our capacities are all the property of these men - we are intellectual prostitutes." (When Editor Swinton spoke of "the rich behind the scenes" he was referring to that same ever-existing coterie that was mentioned in a novel by Benjamin Disraeli in which Sidonia (Lionel Rothschild) speaks to Coningsby (Disraeli): "So you see, my dear Coningsby, the world is governed by very different personages from what is imagined by those who are not behind the scenes." Walter Rathenau referred to this same ever-existing coterie when, in 1909 in the Christmas edition of the Neue Freie Press he wrote: "Three hundred men, all acquainted with each other, control the economic destiny of the Continent." He himself was one of the three hundred, was associated with 84 large concerns, either as a member of the supervising board or as a managing director.

Disraeli and Rathenau spoke of the ruling coterie in Europe. Here in the United States in one of the very first public references to the Council on Foreign Relations, The Saturday Evening Post of October 4, 1947 noted that the Rockefeller Foundation had made a grant of $139,000 to the CFR to prevent, "If they can," a repetition of what they call "the debunking journalistic campaign that followed World War I." Charles A. Beard, the well known historian, remarked that this project meant "The foundation and the Council do not want journalists or any other persons to examine too closely and criticize too freely the official statements relative to our basic aims and activities during World War II. In short, they hope that, among other things, the policies and measures of Franklin D. Roosevelt will escape in coming years the critical analysis, evaluation and exposition that befell the policies of Woodrow Wilson and the entente allies after World War I." (Quoted from "American Manifest Destiny and The Holocausts, an historical and sociological encyclopedia of domestic and foreign affairs." Examiner Books, copyright 1979. Present price and address not known by your reporter).

In 1914 there was only the press. In 1947 there was radio but television was in its infancy. However, in 1985 relatively instantaneous sight and sound is possible to and from any part of the world, or even the moon. Television has come of age and in a sense has come to dominate the media. If you are accustomed to receiving your daily dose of misinformation from the boob tube, then you will know that the "time, talents, lives and capacities" of these "intellectual prostitutes" remain the tools, and they the vassals of the "rich behind the scenes." Before cancer was discovered and "gotten out" of President Reagan, before the White House press corps was able to mentally dissect the bowels and inner organs of the ailing Ronald Reagan, as it had periodically dissected his brains at previous press conferences, Clarence B. Carson wrote an article for The Review of the News of July 17. Referring to that appalling treatment of the hostages, to the slurs and sly innuendos against the United States and the not too subtle praise of the hijackers, kidnappers and murderers, Dr. Carson wrote:

"Do we really need a State Department any more? After all, our foreign policy is already in the capable hands of CBS, ABC, NBC, and other news organizations. Surely it is wasteful duplication for both the government and the news organizations to have representatives in all those foreign countries...Come to think of it, why do we need a President any more? The media are willing to make all the decisions that he does, and in their view much more competently to boot...With the Executive branch under the de jure as well as the de facto control of the media, we might be able to dispense with Congress as well. We may be stuck with the Supreme Court for a while, however, because the media have placed that body on such a high pedestal that every time five justices sneeze reporters think it becomes the Law of the Land." These are just selected quotes from Dr. Carson's article. He went on to point out that the network news programs have maneuvered themselves into the ridiculous position of being the force behind the throne; "or, more precisely, in front of the throne," that news programs are now the main avenue for obtaining control over government through which power is exercised, that the networks serve virtually as a protective shield for the machinations of International Communism. He might have added that the networks also form a protective shield for the machinations of International Finance.

One of the chief goals of the media, in conjunction with certain foundations and those "rich behind the scenes," is to cause the transfer of the wealth and resources of the Union of South Africa into other hands. The campaign is waged on the basis of South Africa's alleged violations of human rights, its apartheid policy and its refusal to allow "one person, one vote" to all the tribes who would surely destroy each other if given such a right. While neglecting the awful records of the USSR and its satellites, of Communist China and of the Blacks of the other countries in Africa, the Republic of South Africa is so attacked and misrepresented that our own

President, the Congress, and every federal agency is working to destroy a Nation whose destruction will also bring about the destruction of the United States if it ever happens. There have been boycotts of almost every variety placed on trade with South Africa. While we were all engrossed with furor or anxiety over the Beirut hijacking, George Shultz ordered the FBI's Counter-Intelligence Division to add South Africa to its list of "criteria" countries, that is, "hostile foreign powers." This means that officials and visitors from South Africa may have their rooms wiretapped, their mail opened and read, and all the treatment that is allegedly given diplomats and commercial and trade officials from the USSR, Cuba and the Warsaw Pact Nations, will also be given any visitors from South Africa. It is interesting to note that while South Africa is now treated as a "hostile foreign power," Communist Yugoslavia, Mainland China, Angola and Mozambique are not.

Perhaps a series of flashbacks will help to put South Africa in its proper perspective. In the early seventeenth century Caucasians began pouring into the new world that is now known as the United States. At about the same time Dutch pilgrims began settling in an area now known as South Africa. In America the new settlers had to push the native Indians back and finally assign them to reservations. The Dutch found no Blacks when they landed, but soon afterward Blacks began pouring in for purposes of safety, food and jobs. So the Dutch eventually found it wise to try to assign reservations for them according to their tribes. The reservations were called homelands. In America the Indians, so long as they remained in reservations, were cared for by the government, but no attempt was ever made to teach them to care for themselves or establish their own governments. In contrast, those on "reservations" in South Africa were taught and trained to create their own governments and become independent nations. The South Africans did what the Americans did in regard to the "natives," only the South Africans did it better. For this they are being criticized, condemned and threatened with extinction as a Nation.

In the middle of the 19th century something was to happen in America which was not destined to happen until the middle of the 20th century in South Africa: Media-inspired war because of the alleged mistreatment of Blacks. In South Africa, Black natives had poured into the country voluntarily, while in the United States the Blacks were kidnapped in Africa, transported to the United States and made slaves. History records that from the very beginning, slavery was condemned and was being slowly eliminated. This was being done in the nations of Western Europe simply by the passage of appropriate laws. But in America the abolitionists, the media and the "rich behind the scenes" wanted war. Horace Greeley's New York Tribune campaigned for abolition of the slaves at the same time it was employing Karl Marx as a European correspondent. Harriet Beecher Stowe wrote a series of articles for the abolitionist newspaper, the National Era, then had the articles published as a book titled "Uncle Tom's Cabin; or, Life Among the Lowly." The terrorist John Brown raided the Harper's Ferry arsenal, became a Northern hero upon his execution. Such media crusading and mob violence led to an attack on Fort Sumpter and the War Between the States began. Supposedly fought to free the slaves, Count Otto von Bismark, Chancellor of Germany at the time, told the true story, which is never seen in history books published in America. In 1876 he told a reporter: "It is not to be doubted, I know of absolute certainty that the division of the United States into two federations of equal power had been decided upon well in advance of the Civil War by the top financial power of Europe (la Haute Finance). These bankers were afraid that the United States, if they were to remain entirely one and were to develop into one Nation only, would achieve economic and financial independence, and this latter would completely upset the capitalist domination of Europe over the world." Confirming this was the infamous and suppressed "Hazard Circular" sent in July 1862 by an agent of "The City" bankers of London to certain bankers in the United States. It read in part:

"Slavery is likely to be abolished by the war power and chattel slavery destroyed. This I and my European friends are in favor of, for slavery is but the owing to labor and carries with it the care of the laborers, while the European plan, led by England, is that capital shall control labor by controlling wages... This can be done by controlling the money. The great debt that capitalists will see to it is made out of the war, must be used as a means to control the volume of money. To accomplish this the bonds (debts created in conducting the war) must be used as a banking basis. We are now waiting for the Secretary of the Treasury to make this recommendation."

When President Lincoln learned of this plot, he did his best to circumvent it. He wrote to a friend, Wm. P. Elkin, Nov. 21, 1864: "It has been a trying hour for the Republic; but I see in the near future, a crisis approaching that unnerves me and causes me to tremble for the safety of my country. As a result of the war, corporations have been enthroned, and an era of corruption in high places will follow, and the money power of the country will endeavor to prolong its reign by working upon the prejudices of the people until all wealth is aggregated in a few hands, and the Republic is destroyed. I feel at this moment more anxiety for the safety of my country than ever before, even in the midst of war." Because he worked against these "rich behind the scenes" he was murdered. As in other assassinations, the man charged with the killing was caught, executed or imprisoned. But the conspirators behind the scenes are never exposed or brought to justice. Nor has it ever been admitted that Lincoln's death had to do with a bankers' plot to divide the Nation and gain control of America's wealth. As Otto Scott points out: "To a considerable extent, the campaign against South Africa reflects a similar misunderstanding. Arguments for black freedom and political rights are as American as apple pie and blue jeans. They are embedded in our history. Most Americans were taught from their earliest school days that the abolitionists were heroic, and the Civil War was a great triumph because it brought about the emancipation of the slaves. That the emancipation was accomplished in every other country by the stroke of a pen is not mentioned in American schools. The death toll of the Civil War, its savagery, its cost to a shattered South and to desolate New England farms are only briefly mentioned. Reconstruction, with its disorder, its punitive measures against Southern whites, its corruption, is barely mentioned in the classrooms of the North." ("The Other End of the Lifeboat," by Otto Scott. Regnery Gateway, Inc., 940 North Shore Drive, Lake Bluff, Ill. 60044. Clothbound, $18.95).

A similar war is being prepared against South Africa. And the real reasons for the war are the same. The United States was prospering as no other young Nation had ever prospered. Industry in the North, agriculture in the South, vast and as yet unexplored mineral resources and natural wealth. No wonder those "rich behind the scenes" coveted its wealth, sought by any means to control its destiny. We find the same situation existing in South Africa today. The coterie that controls South Africa can control the world. The world's largest reserves of essential chromium, vanadium, platinum, gold and manganese are in South Africa. The USSR contains lesser amounts of the same vital minerals. Together, under either Capitalist or Communist control, the modern world would be at their command in every respect. And yet, as the Media and their controlling coterie point the way to our destruction, we follow that way, neglecting utterly the One and Only Way that leads to salvation, nationally as well as individually.

THE MANAGEMENT BY CRISIS TECHNIQUE

"It has been laboriously documented by many 'liberty groups' that the Power Elite (International Bankers, Multinational Corporations, etc.) and their subordinate groups such as the Trilateral Commission and the Council on Foreign Relations, have over the last two decades developed a technique by which they can actively transform the present nation-state system into their 'New World Order.' The technique is called 'Management by Crisis.' Simply stated it works as follows:

- 1.) The power Elitists create, invent, or find an existing crisis.
- 2.) They widely advertise the crisis.
- 3.) Always citing world renowned academics, they propose their solution to the crisis.

This process which they use in every instance is designed in such a way and portrayed at such an angle that at least one of three goals is achieved:

- A.) The crisis climatizes the population to the need of a 'New World Order,' and/or
- B.) The crisis initiates or expands on the placement of the actual machinery to be used in the 'New World Order.' This machinery may be legislative, corporate, legal, economic and so on....and/or

C.) The crisis actually helps destroy the present nation-state system." So stated the editor of The Prophecy Newsletter, who cited the current nuclear arms race as one of the most potent tools that these Crisis Managers have to create a state of panic, and they are handling it very carefully to assure its most effective use. The editor refers to a number of groups subordinate to the Power Elite in addition to the TLC and CFR, such as: The Illuminati, Masons, Bahai's, Learned Elders of Zion, Bilderbergers, Roundtable Group, Club of Rome, Parliamentarians for World Order, Members of Congress for Peace Through Law, Campaign for U.N. Reform, World Federalist Association, Zionist Conspiracy, Jesuit Conspiracy, Congressional Clearing House on the Future, the various religious and occult groups, that make up the New Age Movement, and others."

Now, let's analyze: Management by Crisis is the term used instead of the Marxist-Hegelian Dialectic theory which you will recall as the "thesis vs. antithesis develops a synthesis" technique that was used by Karl Marx to promote International Socialism, even as it is now used by the Monopoly-Capitalistic Power Elite to promote that same International Socialism. As for the creation, invention or finding of these crises, think of the number that exist today: Nuclear arms crisis, Environmental crises, Middle East crisis, South African crisis, economic crises throughout the world, Terrorist crises, Shiite 'Holy War' crisis, abortion crisis, budget balancing crisis, school prayer crisis, and on and on.

When the Power Elitists have selected a crisis to "advertise," at least three very powerful groups swing into action. The Communications Media headline and highlight the situation in every possible way in order to stir up popular opposition to the existing situation, or thesis. The tax-exempt Foundations provide finances, academic "experts," promote the crisis through the schools and universities.

And finally, the World And National Councils of Churches convert any political, economic, or social crisis into a moral crisis (as with the present South African crisis). Finally, when these "advertising" and propagandizing establishments have swung into action and popularized the issue throughout the country (or the world if the shoe fits), then there are hundreds of supposedly independent groups that go into action staging parades, strikes, attacks on institutions, people, even buildings.

How these particular groups are activated and used to create demands for a change that will aid the building of the New World Order, is seldom publicized.

On November 9, 10 and 11, 1984, a "Social Management Seminar" was held at the Washington Hilton Hotel. Attending were representatives of more than one hundred activist and futurist organizations whose varied aims are to promote some aspect of the New World Order. Called WorldView 84, the chairman was Ervin Laszlo, director of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR). Born in Budapest, Hungary in 1932, he received a doctorate in philosophy from Sorbonne, University of Paris in 1970, became project director of the Club of Rome's "Goals for Global Society," in 1975 and 1976, then became director of UN's UNITAR, continued his teaching and writing on subjects relative to the New World Society. In his opening speech at the WorldView 84 seminar he said:

"There is evidence that shows that the system that we have put in place since World War II - the global economic and social techno-industrial system - cannot be indefinitely sustained, that in fact it is already on its last legs....Any straightline projection of present trends finds the world socio-economic system running into the unyielding wall of overpopulation, underdevelopment, polarization; with lines of demarkation widening between rich and poor, East and West, North and South, the city and the countryside. We live in a crucial epoch, at the tail end of one world civilization and at the dawn of another....My main concern is to show that in the coming period of transformation we shall, indeed, have a chance to be masters of our destiny." (underlining added). Thus did Laszlo lay out the ground rules of the changes that must be made by leaders of the sponsoring World Future Society and the related organizations in attendance at the seminar. The call was made to all the organizations to work together to develop the kind of society that would fit into the New World Order. This is called "networking," and Marilyn Ferguson, author of The Aquarian Conspiracy and a leader in the New Age Movement explained that "Networking is the system of organization that binds together all of the groups committed to a New World Order in such a way that most people don't see them or think that they are conspiracies. If any outsiders become too curious, the network must be set up so that "it's center is elsewhere....and its life does not hinge on any of them," that is, any one of the hundreds of organizations involved in the conspiracy.

Master of Ceremonies at the WorldView 84 symposium was Congressman Bob Edgar (D-PA.), who is chairman of the "Congressional Clearinghouse on the Future (CCF), belongs to "Members of Congress for Peace Through Law" (MCPL), and was a signer of the 1976 Declaration of Interdependence. MCPL boasts a membership of 131 Congressmen and Senators, and 82 of them signed the 1976 Declaration of Interdependence. Edgar said it was necessary to form a new organization, the Congressional Clearinghouse on the Future, because the present United States Congressional system is only responsible to one nation....a system such as this cannot be expected to deal with long term problems."

Since the present most important "crisis" has to do with "the danger of a nuclear holocaust," Robert Strange McNamara, U.S. Secretary of Defense (1961-1968), World Bank President (1968-1981), Trilateral Commission Member, CFR member, director of the World Future Society and most recently involved, with Cyrus Vance and Donald McHenry, in the South African crisis, sent a special report to the WorldView 84 symposium, stating among other things that "nuclear weapons serve no military purpose whatsoever. They are totally useless except only to deter ones' opponent from using them." Therefore all the activist and futurist groups should continue to promote unilateral disarmament. This World Future Society of which McNamara is a director is one of the most important of all the proponents of the New World Order. Founded in 1966, it has "chapters, committees or coordinators in approximately 91 cities of the world, with local groups sponsoring lectures and other activities. Among its other publications is The Futurist, a bi-monthly which claims to have "the largest circulation of all future-oriented journals....discusses what actions people may take to improve the future." One of its articles concerning "crime and public safety" provides an indication of what its real goal is. We quote the opening paragraphs of that article:

"The adult criminal of the twenty-first century may be less common than his twentieth century counterpart, in part because of the way society treats children from the moment they are born. Parental care in the year 2000 may be different from today's, and better, since by then the movement to license or certify parents may be well under way. In most cases, certified couples would be allowed to have their own natural children. In some instances, however, genetic scanning may find that some women and men can produce 'super' babies but are not well suited to rear them. These couples would be licensed to breed, but will give up their children to other people licensed to rear them. The couple who raises the child will be especially suited to provide love and compassion and take the best possible care that the child feels wanted and needed in society....could lead to better development of their egos and, thus, of their capabilities. Child breeding and rearing, then, may be considered too important to be left to chance. This change in attitude will have a major impact on the criminal justice system in that wanted children will have fewer environmental reasons to turn to crime, and controlled breeding will result in fewer biological reasons for crime...." In connection with this and regarding the computerized use of the notorious "Planning, Programming, Budgeting System" which has been sponsored under various different names by the World Future Society (among others), there is being promoted a global system which "allows for the students of the Soviet Union, Peoples Republic of China, the United States and the whole world to be kept up with on the same computer system. Each pupil may be identified by a Universal Birth Number - an identification number assigned to an individual at birth by the Bureau of Vital Statistics of a State, using a combination of digits representing area code, birth registration number, and year of birth." According to this plan, area codes are assigned to all the nations of the world. This student data system is outlined in a book titled "Student Public Accounting," and subtitled "Standard Terminology and Guide for Managing Student Data in Elementary and Secondary Schools, Community/Junior Colleges, and Adult Education," a part of "State Educational Records and Reports Series, Handbook V, Revised 1974," Georgia State Board of Education, Atlanta, Georgia. An opponent of Global Education comments: "With a student data system framework in place that allows for the keeping of records on all students of the world, it's no wonder we have 'global' education." The State Plan for Global Education in Florida: Findings and Recommendations, issued by the Florida Advisory Council on Global Education, Dec. 1981, explains: "In fact, the extent to which the people of the world have been internationalized demands that Floridians alter ways in which they view themselves as they relate to the world and to others....Florida's and the Nation's security, prosperity, and way of life are dependent in large part on citizens developing the capacity to be able to participate in international economic, social, cultural and political policies and decisions."

At this WorldView 84 symposium much time was spent in discussing economics and finance. The general conclusion: "It is readily apparent that we now have a World Economy and we must form a World Government with enough power to regulate it." As for such regulation, one of the principal speakers was Jay W. Forrester, Sloan School of Management, Massachusetts Institute of Technology. He pointed out, and correctly we fear, that "government debts are so out of control that the entire present economic system must collapse." Here, then, is the crisis which must be managed in accordance with the Management by Crisis Technique of the New World Planners. So, up steps Robert Gross, World Future Society member, Associate Director of the International Business and Banking Institute, to present the solution:

"Developing countries even now do not have sufficient margins in their balance of trade to make repayment of their debts....Eventually the only escape will be default. Loans subject to default equal more than the net worth of the entire American banking system. Reverberations from such defaults will shake the financial structure of the country and the world. The World Constitution and Parliament Association is already in the process of setting up a Provisional World Government to take over in the event of the collapse of the global infra-structure." In addition, the Independent Commission on International Development Issues, commonly known as the Brandt Commission after its chairman Willy Brandt, presently head of the Socialist International, was discussed and approved, as it has already been approved and promoted by the UN.

All things relating to the creation, establishment and maintenance of The New World Order (World Government) were discussed, and plans laid down for promotion and execution of the various pieces in the plot by the various activist and futurist groups attending this WorldView 84 symposium. The Heritage Education and Resource Organization (HERO), P.O.Box 202, Jarrettsville, MD. 21084, has provided much of the information concerning WorldView 84 which is contained in this Report. It has also compiled a partial list of those groups represented at the November 1984 meetings. They include, arranged alphabetically:

Alliance Network Incorporated, American Humanist Association, Anticipatory Sciences Incorporated, Association for Humanist Psychology, Baha'i, Brookings Institute, Butterworth Scientific, Campaign for a Positive Future, Campaign for United Nations Reform, Center for New National Security, Center for Social Organization of Schools, Center for War/Peace Studies, Club of Rome, Council on Foreign Relations, Essential Research Association, Europhot, Fellowship of Inner Light, Foundation of I, Futures Network, GAMMA Group, Global Education Association, Global Futures Network, Global Tomorrow Commission, Global 2000 Project, Ground Zero, Hudson Institute, Institute for Alternative Futures, Institute for a Theological Future, Institute for Futures Forecasting, International Institute for Educators for World Peace, Metanetwork, National Peace Academy, New Options Incorporated, New World Foundation, N.O.W., Planetary Initiative, Religious Humanists, SRI International, The Hunger Project, The International Monetary Fund, The World Bank, Trilateral Commission, TRW, UNITAR, World Citizens Assembly, World Constitution and Parliamentary Association, World District Agency, World Federalist Association, World Future Society, World Future Studies Federation, World Policy Institute, World Service Authority, World Watch Institute, and Y.E.S.

The leaders of the hundreds of organizations represented at WorldView 84 would have us believe their funds come from the grassroots. Instead they are coming from the Power Elite. Here are some of the corporate patrons that the World Future Society lists: Alliance Network, AT&T, Bic Pen Co., Control Data Corp., General Electric, General Motors, GTE Labs, IBM, Mitchell Energy Corp., Ortho Pharmaceuticals, Weyerhaeuser, and Xerox. By looking at the sources of support for David Rockefeller's Trilateral Commission, and then comparing them to the World Future Society list, the following corporations support both: Control Data, GE, GM, IBM, Weyerhaeuser and Xerox. So, you see, Management by Crisis is formed by what they call Networking, but what we call Conspiracy.

GOVERNMENT OF, BY, AND FOR WHOM?

There's an ancient proverb that says, "Whom the gods would destroy, they first make mad." Since our federal government seems to honor many gods in addition to the Only True God, perhaps the proverb applies to us, as does the Second Psalm which says the same thing but in more explicit and descriptive terms. Let us write of a few of the ways in which our country seems to have gone mad, thus awaiting potential destruction.

1) Knowing full well that the government of the Soviet Union has made thousands of treaties and agreements with scores of nations and states and, at its convenience, has broken every one of them, including those made with the government of the United States, Secretary of State George Shultz still traveled to Helsinki hoping to arrange for more treaties and agreements which can be broken at the Kremlin's will. Likewise, President Reagan is being schooled for a trip to Geneva where he will meet with Prime Minister Gorbachev of the USSR, to discuss the provisions to be enumerated in more treaties and agreements which can be broken when the fulness of time has come for the Soviets.

2) Our Administration, our Congress, our press, our churches, our hypocritical liberals and socialists, the stupid among our conservatives have joined hands with the Communists in helping to destroy our only pro-Western, stable ally in Africa. Having finished off Rhodesia and made of it a dependent of the West for food and sustenance, now comes the destruction of South Africa. And when it goes, the United States cannot be far behind.

3) Our government stands by steeped in controversy and argument about what to do about it while an enemy continues to gobble up our neighbors in Central and South America and the Caribbean.

4) Our Administration and our Congress are stalemated, on the legendary horns of a dilemma regarding how to write a budget and revise a tax code.

5) After dishonoring or re-interpreting our honored and time-tested Constitution of the United States, evil men and brainwashed citizens hope to arrange in 1987 a national convention where a new constitution can be introduced and ratified; a regional world constitution more to the liking of those who are preparing us for our respective niches in a New World Order. We -- and you -- could go on citing further instances of how we are being made mad before our potential destruction. But let's discuss some of the more important facets of this madness.

The headline stated: "Road to US-Soviet Summit Talks Will Begin in Helsinki This Week." If we have learned any lessons from history we should know that this is just a well staged show to keep us all amused, bemused, confused and even hopeful. The article tells us that "The United States will launch a major new effort in the Finnish capital of Helsinki this week to improve tense American relations with the Soviet Union - a first step on a long road to November's US-Soviet summit in Geneva. If American plans work, President Reagan hopes in the months ahead to develop what top administration officials are calling an 'agenda for the future' to improve relations between the two superpowers." So, with TV cameras there to make it a world stage, Secretary of State George Shultz met the new Soviet foreign minister, Eduard Shevardnadze as they and their entourages attended the tenth anniversary of the signing of the Helsinki Accords; agreements that were honored in one way and dishonored in all other respects by the Soviets. The Helsinki Agreement confirmed the original Yalta Agreement in that it gave all of Eastern Europe to the USSR. The Soviets didn't really honor the agreement, they just took it for granted and took Eastern Europe. As for the human rights accord, the Soviets ignored and disregarded that from the beginning.

In the Helsinki production, the Soviet lead was played by a new actor. The grim visaged Gromyko had been kicked upstairs to a new assignment and was replaced by the smiling and younger man with the name only a Russian can pronounce properly. Otherwise, the play was something of a repeat performance. Secretary Shultz said human rights promises had not been kept by the Soviets. Minister Shevardnadze said the United States was still promoting an arms race, was showing "a reluctance to negotiate and resolve in a businesslike manner the issues that cause anxiety throughout the world." As for human rights violations, Shevardnadze said Moscow "has not allowed and will not allow anyone to interfere in its internal affairs" The Afghan genocide supposedly being an "internal affair." Shultz countered by saying "Pious declarations are cheap. Real progress can only be seen in its effect on human beings." As this Report was being written, the Helsinki conference was still in session, but nothing startling could be expected. Abdul Halim Shams, a former Afghan official who escaped execution by the Soviets and now lives in exile in California, said it best: "I speak not just from my own experience in Afghanistan, but from what anyone should know of Soviet history. When have the Soviets ever kept a treaty, pledge or agreement? There are thousands of treaties and agreements they have broken. Many of the countries that signed those treaties are now occupied by Communist troops - like Afghanistan. Why should Free World leaders meet with Gorbachev, talk with him, negotiate with him? He is a murderer. The American leaders say they will not negotiate with terrorists like the PLO, but Gorbachev is the head of a worldwide network of terrorists. This is my message to the people of the United States. We trusted the Soviets; we signed treaties; we signed agreements. Do not think that they will honor treaties with you any more than they did with Afghanistan." Let us repeat: "Whom the gods would destroy..."

Last May Herbert Beukes was named South African Ambassador to the United States. He arrived in Washington, waited for recognition, but was never invited to the White House to present his credentials. As the US House-Senate conference committee met to complete a final version of legislation imposing economic sanctions on South Africa, the Pretoria government gave up in exasperation, recalled Ambassador Beukes. Globescan of 20 July noted: "The fight for South Africa is white hot. Guerrillas armed by the USSR and supported by American churches blow up installations and murder people daily. The US is training and arming communist Mozambique on one side and helping communist Angola on the other. Industries controlled by international banks threaten to boycott, the U.S. Congress threatens legal sanctions, and the harangue of the Western press never stops. South Africa's President Botha, caught between black rebellion and an eroding white power base, has until the end of the current parliament, 1989, to change the face of South African politics. Botha has already shifted on three major points: acceptance of a common South African citizenship for blacks in the homelands, acceptance of universal suffrage, and acceptance of power sharing with blacks at the highest level of government. This shift is so great that some white South Africans are beginning to wonder if Mr. Botha will just turn the country over to the blacks as Ian Smith did in Rhodesia." (Globescan, North American service bureau, 2223 Wisconsin Ave. N.W., Washington, D.C. 20007. $95 per year.) As though it were retaliation for Botha's first steps toward eventual surrender, Human Events of August 3 observed that "Black revolutionaries, inspired by the pro-Communist African National Congress, have deliberately been fostering murderous violence against black 'collaborators,' i.e., anyone cooperating with the Botha government, including black policemen and black legislators....As a result, nearly 300 blacks have been killed this year....More than 250 black members of the elected local government councils have been forced to resign, mainly because of assaults on council members, their homes and businesses. At least five councilors have been killed....'sometimes in gruesome assaults where victims were doused with gasoline and set alight. Many councilors' homes are guarded 24 hours a day by police.' Hundreds of homes of black policemen have also been gutted by firebombs." (Unquote). Note that the communist-led revolutionaries kill hundreds of their own blacks and that news never appears in the American press. But when the authorities try to defend people against the revolutionaries and as few as five are killed, the news is front page material for the metropolitan dailies. Said Donald McAlvany in his Intelligence Advisor: "The hypocrisy and double standard of American liberals is incredible: The US is providing millions in financial aid to communist Zimbabwe (over $200 million in recent years) whose black government has massacred over 40,000 Metabele tribesmen since coming to power in 1980 we are supplying millions (over $75 million) in economic and military aid to communist Mozambique in spite of the fact that that the Soviet surrogate has 18,000 Soviet bloc troops and advisors in its country and 200,000 to 300,000 of its black citizens in concentration camps where over 75,000 have already died; we are pumping over $20 billion in nuclear technology, computers, and military hardware into the communist Peoples Republic of China, in spite of the fact that it killed over 60 million of its own people over the past 35 years and still has one of the most oppressive communist regimes in the world; we are selling billions in high technology computers, grain etc., to the Soviet Union - our arch enemy which is hellbent on destroying us; and by way of contrast we are trying to cut off all trade with tiny South Africa to topple that government, for alleged 'human rights violations.' Have we forgotten how over the past 10 years American liberals (and the US State Department) used the same kind of propaganda campaign to bring down the government of the Shah and replace it with Khomeini; to bring down the government of Somoza in Nicaragua and replace it with the Sandinistas; or to bring down the government of Ian Smith in Rhodesia and replace it with Robert Mugabe's communist regime of terror in Zimbabwe?....It's as if the US were high on drugs and has become suicidal; trying to destroy itself and take its friends with it. If we succeed in destroying South Africa the US will not survive as a free nation for more than 5 years." (Emphasis as in original. Quoted from "The McAlvany Intelligence Advisor," P.O.Box 39810, Phoenix, AZ 85069. Monthly, $77 per year.)

And now, let's shift the scene to our own Southern back yard. A high ranking military leader has stated that if the United States does not move to eradicate the Soviet/Cuban/Sandinista axis within the next six to twelve months, it will be too late for all of Central America. He added that nothing short of a Grenada type invasion, but on a larger scale, will "stop the Soviet Juggernaut from taking all of Central America and much of Latin America over the next 2-4 years." The situation is that serious, and all that has been done is a Congressional vote of $28 million to the Nicaraguan Freedom Fighters, with certain restrictions on how the money should be spent. What has not been mentioned by the US Media is the Soviet development of Guyana as a gigantic concentration of military bases. It will be recalled that Grenada was being developed by the Soviets and Cubans, when a quick and successful and important cleanup was accomplished at the request and with the assistance of Grenada's neighboring island states in the Caribbean. But this setback to the Soviets was but a temporary difficulty. Already they had been building some air fields in Guyana. So they simply forgot Grenada and concentrated all their efforts on Guyana. This is a country on the north coast of South America, with Venezuela to the west, Suriname to the east, and Brazil bordering in the south. The country was already controlled by the Marxists, so the Soviets, Cubans and their surrogates proceeded to build up what has been described as the greatest concentration of military bases and installations in the world, outside the Soviet Union. Reliable Intelligence sources say there are over 100 air fields, twelve of them capable of handling long range Soviet bombers which could fly over the east coast of the United States and return within a few hours. There also are numerous military bases and communications centers, and all the facilities necessary for a potential war. The Communist presence in Guyana threatens the vital shipping lanes, oil refineries and storage facilities. All shipping in the Caribbean and through the Panama Canal could be stopped at any time. Also in Guyana there are several major guerrilla training bases being run by Cubans. There are reportedly 15,000 Cuban troops and advisers, 100 North Koreans, 100 Bulgarians, and an undisclosed number of Soviet, East German, Eastern Bloc, Libyan and PLO troops and terrorists in the country, ready to be flown to wherever their leaders might direct.

This development in Guyana must be considered in connection with similar military developments in the North Polar region. Remember the controversy over the Soviet seizure of the American owned Wrangel Island, and the establishment of concentration camps there? Also there is the current deal to hand over other important islands in that area, now held as Alaskan territory but about to be given to the USSR unless something can be done to prevent a give-away similar to that of the Panama Canal. A principal purpose of the Soviets has been the building of important air bases and nuclear installations in the Polar region. This would provide a North-South nuclear pincer, with Soviet bombers flying from Guyana across the United States and Canada to bases in the Polar region; and the return of same to Guyana. We are of the firm opinion that a nuclear attack of this nature would never occur. But the threat of such a sudden sneak attack would provide ample ammunition for those who are advocating unilateral nuclear disarmament for the United States; something which would amount to abject surrender to the USSR without a shot having been fired or a bomb of any nature dropped. Lenin spoke of the eventual encirclement of the United States. The psychological encirclement is in its final stages.

While minimizing the possibility of a nuclear war between the superpowers, there is always the chance that the power elite might lose control of the communist monster it has created, and we must be prepared. Also, there is the psychological importance of the threat of a nuclear attack. There also is the still unrecognized fact that we are at war without seeming to know it. This spring and summer has seen the greatest outbreak of terrorist activity in modern history, and we must never forget that the governments encouraging these terrorists have the ability to create suitcase size nuclear bombs. Key targets in this "guerrilla war in the cities instead of the mountains and forests" are the United States, Great Britain, France, South Korea, and South Africa. The three countries directly involved in this war against the West are Syria, Iran and Libya. Behind them are the USSR and its satellites and surrogates. It is a waste of time to try to fight these terrorists on their own terms. Action must be taken against those governments that back them. As Globescan states: "All air, road, and sea links with these countries should be severed. No postal, telex, or telephone contacts with these countries should be admitted. All trade with them should cease and Western diplomatic recognition should be withdrawn." But, instead of imposing sanctions against Iran, Syria and Libya, our government imposes sanctions against our ally South Africa, while also encouraging trade with the USSR and other communist countries. As the proverb says: "Whom the gods would destroy, they first make mad." Unless our Nation returns to the One True God Who has sustained it to this point, it, too, must face destruction.

THE N.E.A. BARES ITS FANGS

Do you consider yourself to be a fanatic, one who will say anything and stop at nothing to gain a point? Do you lie, distort, defame, use fear as a motivator? Are you an evangelical bigot or a political poltroon? According to an executive director of NEA you're one or more of those things if you are against secular humanism, values clarification, death education, sensitivity training, and any of the other things being promoted in the schools by NEA. At the last NEA Annual Representative Assembly (convention), held in Washington, D.C. last June, NEA President Mary Futrell told delegates that the NEA planned to work on its image, move away from its left leaning political activities, etc. But a speech by Jim Wolf, a member of the NEA Executive Committee, gives a complete lie to any notion that the NEA is cleaning up its act. Lewis addressed the Kansas-NEA last April 27, 1985. We are reprinting that speech, because it tells everyone just what the NEA stands for and what it wants to do. Speaking before the Kansas-NEA Representative Assembly, Jim Lewis of the NEA Executive Committee said the following.

* * * * *

In the last three years on the NEA Executive Committee, I've given somewhere in excess of 200 speeches to various education employees, parents, and community groups; and the only time I get truly nervous is when I talk to my colleagues from Kansas. It's kind of like playing before the hometown crowd. For some reason, I feel nervous this morning.

Education's plight today reminds me very much of the fate of two fellows who were hiking in the woods, and as they turned a corner they ran right square into an angry bear. One of the gentlemen froze but the other fellow sat down on the ground, took his backpack off his back, and began taking off his hiking boots and putting on his running shoes. The fellow who was frozen with fear said to the friend sitting on the ground, "What are you doing? We can't possibly outrun that bear." His seated friend said, "I don't have to outrun the bear, I just have to outrun you." That's where education is. We're trying to outrun defense at the national level for an adequate level of funding. We're trying to outrun a whole lot of issues in the state of Kansas to get our proper priority in the legislative agenda. And at the local level we fight for our place in the community agenda. That whole process has been going on nation-wide for the last year and a half. One of the things that we've debated constantly as the NEA is (sic) -- are we a union or are we a professional association? In 1983, Don Cameron, the executive director of NEA, said, "I think this debate has gone on long enough. Let's declare a victory, and we'll call ourselves a professional union." That makes us unique in the union movement. As a matter of fact, it is that uniqueness that serves us very well. Because never before in our history have our abilities at collective bargaining, our abilities at political action, our educational prowess been more needed and more in demand. What we face today and tomorrow as a professional association is mind-bending in significance. And I want to discuss with you what lies ahead for us, both as professionals and as unionists.

Specifically, I want to talk to you about a new threat from the Radical Right aimed at public education and directed at NEA. The Radical Right in this country is a growing group of individuals with huge sums of money to spend and who are often helped by public apathy and ignorance. I want to clarify - when I say the "Radical Right", I am not talking about conservatives. There's been conservative movements in this country for years, and rightfully so. I want to clarify for you that when I talk about the Radical Right, I am not talking about Republicans, because I am one of those and I am not a member of that radical group. I'm not talking about the right even for individuals to differ politically, but what I am talking about is a well planned, well financed, well-connected assault on America's teachers and on public education. I am talking about fanatics, extremists, and ideologues who will say anything and stop at nothing in order to achieve their goals. I'm talking about Phyllis Schlafly (sic) and the Eagle Forum. I'm talking about Jerry Falwell and the Moral Majority. I'm talking about Terry Dolan and NCPAC, Paul Weyrich and the National Conservative Union, Susan Staub and the National Right to Work Committee, Jesse Helms and the Congressional Club, Sally Reed and the National Council for Better Education. I'm talking about Samuel Blumenfeld and his book, N.E.A.: The Trojan Horse in American Education. I'm talking about Mel and Norma Gabler and their efforts to censor textbooks in Texas. I'm talking about Richard Viguerie and the Conservative Digest, and I'm talking about Eugene Methvin and the Readers Digest. I'm talking about T.V. evangelists like Tammy and Jim Baker, Pat Robertson and the 700 Club, Jimmy Swaggert and James Robison. These people and others are on the move. They have big bucks, they have powerful allies in Congress and the White House, and they have their ministries. They are a threat to democracy, but they are in fact lethal to education. They profess that their way is the only way. Their values, the only values. Their answers, the only answers, that they own America and they intend to keep it that way. They say that in this country there is an anti-American, anti-God conspiracy everywhere and it must be eradicated, and the places where it must be eradicated most are with the NEA, the secular humanists, and the communists. All of the groups and individuals I have mentioned have some things in common. They meet regularly, they exchange information, they quote each other in books. If you pick up their books and read them, you'll find that they appear scholarly, I mean they have footnotes and everything! And what they do is quote one another. Blumenfeld quotes Reed who quotes Rankin who quotes Blumenfeld and it goes in a wonderful circle. They lie, they distort, they defame and what's worst of all, they scare me, because they hear God speaking only to them and they have no sense of humor.

Now we've had radical right movements throughout history, and you can't have a radical right movement if they don't have a scapegoat or enemy. For instance, for the Nazis it was the Jews. For the Romans, it was the Christians. For the Catholic church it was the heretics. For the Protestants it was the witches. For the know-nothings, it was the Catholics, Jews and Blacks. For McCarthy it was the communists. But for the New Right, the enemies are public education and secular humanism. Radical right-wing groups always polarize and emotionalize their issues. They see everything as we-and-they, good-and-black, Christian-and-atheist and most recently white-and-black. They must create a sense of alarm or their logic will not stand up. They want control of America without using the normal political processes. And they use fear as their motivator. All across this land, small but vocal groups are achieving success with this witches brew of fear and fantasy. Books have been pulled from libraries all across this country as a result of their activities. I mean terrible books - anti-God and anti-family books by such anti-God and anti-family authors as Charles Dickens, William Shakespeare, Walt Disney, J.D. Salinger, Mark Twain, Geoffrey Chaucer, Edgar Rice Burroughs, Judy Bloom, James Baldwin and others. All across America, right-wing groups are circulating petitions to discourage secular humanism. And they're beginning to demand prior parental permission before teachers can talk about certain subjects in school -- subjects like values clarification, drug and alcohol abuse, death education, nuclear war, interpersonal relationships, human sexuality, imagery, political affiliation, personal religious beliefs, and sensitivity training. And they're encouraging parents to turn in to school boards and the proper authorities any teacher they suspect of teaching secular humanism. The Department of Education in Washington has the responsibility to accept complaints about secular humanism as a part of the Hatch Amendments that were passed last year. And part of what they have done is to ask each local school district to write their own definition of secular humanism. I would suggest that it will vary greatly from one place to another in this state as well as across the nation.

What is secular humanism? No one really knows. How many of you in this room go every day into your classroom and have written at the top of your lesson plan "turn the kids into secular humanists today?" How many of you in this room have ever read the Manifesto I & II? Well, you're not doing your job. You're supposed to have read that, committed it to memory, and live by it. The Gablers in Texas say that secular humanism is faith in man instead of faith in God. Dr. James Kennedy of the Coral Ridge ministry says it is Godless, atheistic, evolutionary, amoral, collectivist, socialist, a communist religion. A mailing from the Eagle Forum, "Stop Textbook Censorship" committee says it is violent and disturbing films, private journals kept in the classroom to be shared only with teachers, personal attitude surveys, and a concentrated effort to make children independent. I think we're probably guilty of that last one. Rev. Timothy LeHaye says it is responsible for most of the evils in the world today. It has taken over our government, it has taken over the United Nations, it has taken over education, T.V. and most other influential things in our lives. A pamphlet circulated by the Pro-Family Forum, a Phyllis Schafly (sic) group, calls it among other things a belief in equal distribution of wealth, control of the environment, the removal of American patriotism, disarmament and creation of a one-world socialist government. But what are the effects? In Palm Beach, Florida, the teaching of sex education, evolution and classroom discussion of values has been attacked for destroying home-taught values and promoting secular humanism. Reacting to one parent's complaint about personal inquiries and the teaching of humanistic philosophy, the Cobb County, Georgia school system has prohibited teachers from initiating classroom discussion on two topics -- abortion as a means of birth control and homosexuality -- and has restricted discussion of seven others -- evolution, abortion as a social, political or governmental issue, communism, religion, witchcraft and the supernatural, values clarification, and questions directed at students to reveal personal or family information. And the fallout of this hoax as defined by Norman Lear's People for the American Way and as information has been gathered by NEA's Freedom of Inquiry Center shows a destructive effect on education. In St. David, Arizona, a chapter of the Eagle Forum showed a film on secular humanism, the one that many of you saw here in Kansas a couple of years ago; and the local school board ended up at a meeting taking the works of Homer, Hawthorne, and Hemingway off required reading lists for English. In Lincoln County, Oregon, funds for guidance and counseling programs were eliminated because they were allegedly part of the secular humanist conspiracy. And in Hamburg, New York, a school program calling for effective parenting information for children is under attack as promoting secular humanism. In our own state, talk to Jerry Stogsdall and Roy Gunter from United Urban, because they debated Samuel Blumenfeld on the radio about his book, N.E.A.: The Trojan Horse In American Education. Or talk to Jo Neuberger from Cherryvale who had newspaper articles - public forum letters that were made up - at least the individuals can't be found that wrote the letters - about these kind of topics. It's here and it's here to stay and it's not surprising that the Radical Right attack schools and try to discredit them, because they can't control them. It's not surprising that they would attack the NEA, because we stand in their way. Our membership nation-wide this year is up 27,000 members and we have become the largest independent labor organization in the United States, surpassing even the Teamsters union. But with all of our gains, our work is still cut out for us, both at the bridge table and at the bargaining table. We cannot stand by because we are committed to every boy and girl's opportunity to learn and to get an education and because of our commitment to protecting our members. We have to stand tall against these insidious attacks that want to stifle intellectual curiosity and substitute narrow partisan values for open inquiry by children. As a union, we must work to see that appropriate academic freedom clauses are in place in our contracts, employment language is solid, and policies for parental challenge to materials used in school are spelled out.

Let me suggest what's going to happen in the fall when we come back to work. The attacks on NEA and on teachers and on secular humanism are going to increase. And they're going to try to separate NEA from its members. When you come back in the fall, there will be movies produced in this country about NEA, what it does, and what a terrible organization it is. There will be for the first time conducted in many locals across this country anti-membership drives, put on not by teachers, but by outside groups. There will be more rival organizations for educators to join, like Concerned Citizens for a Better Education that are not either founded or committed to education interests. And there will be a cozying-up on the part of the leaders of the radical right to the American Federation of Teachers and Albert Shanker, whose personal philosophy parallels theirs very closely. For 128 years, NEA has stood against those who have wanted to undermine education. For 128 years, NEA has stood for open minds, open schools, and teacher's freedom to teach. For 128 years, the NEA has been in the business of protecting its membership, and we cannot and will not turn aside from those responsibilities now. We have to go on the offensive. We have to go on the offensive against these evangelical bigots. We have to go on the offensive against these right-wing fanatics. And we have to go on the offensive against the political politruons that they have put in place and defeat them when they run for re-election to office. To do that we must first of all alert our colleagues to the depth and the width and the breadth of this particular problem and what a threat it is. Secondly, we have to alert our communities to what's going on and the destructive programs that are aimed at their schools. We also have to negotiate the language to protect our students and our members from these attacks, and we have to work with school boards and administrators to form coalitions to ward off the attacks of the radical right. Our efforts will need to be coordinated as never before and we'll need to have solidarity of purpose as never before. But most important of all, if we are to succeed, each local association is going to have to renew, invigorate, begin or form a local public relations program so the people in the communities in which schools exist, where these attacks will occur, understand the positive things that are going on in America's public schools and the schools just down the street from where they live. Let me tell you, I believe we can do it. I believe we can write yet another positive chapter in the history of public education. Because we're a great organization. We are the leaders, we are the heart of a profession, we're the protectors of our students' opportunities and the standard-bearers for the education profession. We must succeed, and I believe we will succeed. Thank you very much.

The NEA gives us all the ammunition we need, if we use it properly. NEA Executive Committeeman Jim Lewis tells the whole nation exactly what NEA is and what it wants to do. We pray that his speech receives the widest circulation possible.

AND HOW THE HUMANISTS HOWL

Call this Chapter Two. Last week (Chapter One), under the title "THE N.E.A. Bares Its Fangs," we published a speech by one Jim Lewis, a member of the Executive Committee of the National Education Association (NEA). In an address he delivered last April 27, he made three observations. 1) He badmouthed many of the patriotic leaders who have talked and written against the activities of the NEA. 2) He explained in unmistakable language just what the NEA stands for and what it wants to do. 3) He expressed a real fear that "the attacks on the NEA and on teachers and on secular humanism are going to increase." Therefore, "we have to go on the defensive." At about the same time that the NEA Committeeman was defending the NEA, that cooperating and collaborating group known as the secular humanists was presenting a similar defense of its goals and an attack on its enemies. Free Inquiry is an official voice of Secular Humanism, and the following article appeared in that publication. We do not have a copy of Free Inquiry so we are reprinting the article as it appeared in the August, 1985, issue of The National Educator.

EDUCATION AND FREE INQUIRY A Statement from The Academy of Humanism

An unprecedented attack on the public schools is now under way in the United States. This attack endangers the teaching of science, the development of critical intelligence, and the viability of the educational process itself. This assault has targeted secular humanism for special condemnation. Conservative religionists and biblical fundamentalists consider secular humanism to be the cause of America's alleged moral decline. They blame secular humanism for the climbing divorce rate, the increase in teenage pregnancy, the rise in alcohol and drug abuse, and many other problems that are common to all Americans.

An alarming illustration of this is the most recent enactment of an amendment in 1984 to the Education for Economic Security Act by Senator Orrin G. Hatch (R-Utah) prohibiting the expenditure of federal funds for the "teaching of secular humanism" in magnet schools. The Hatch measure did not provide a definition of what constitutes "secular humanism" but left this to the U.S. Department of Education which in turn delegated the responsibility to local school boards. According to the Washington Post (January 10, 1985), Ed. Darrel, spokesman for Senator Hatch's Labor and Human Resources Committee, said that religious conservatives define secular humanism as those things that "get in the way of a Christian education." Compounding the threat of this legislation is another recent Department of Education rule that implements an amendment sponsored by Senator Hatch to an education bill passed by Congress in 1978. This rule was designed to prohibit psychological and psychiatric testing without parental approval, but it has been interpreted to mean that federal funds will be denied to schools that ignore parent's objections to the content of classroom materials. Senator Hatch and other critics of secular humanism have said that their goal is to remove what they claim to be the teaching of the ERRATA: In the first printing of last week's DBR, there is an error in the first paragraph on page one. The name "Jim Wolf" appears, and it should read, "Jim Lewis." Call it a metaphoric slip because of the title of the Report: "The N.E.A. Bares Its Fangs." A correction will be made in all future printings.

"religion of secular humanism" from the public schools. The critics of secular humanism have launched a nation-wide campaign in an effort to form groups of "concerned citizens." These groups distribute materials and letters to parents urging them to protest the inclusion in school curricula of what they consider to be secular doctrine. To be barred from classroom discussion is a long list of "sensitive courses and subjects, including moral education, moral dilemmas, values clarification, human sexuality, organic evolution, world government, population control, the roles of males and females in society, and so on.

We believe that the problems and issues of contemporary life are inescapable; evasion and ignorance are not avenues to solutions. We do not believe that any one group has the answers to these or related problems. By questioning, seeking alternatives, and encouraging free inquiry, we have a far better chance of success than by limiting the coming generation to the narrow fields of study recommended by the critics of secular humanism. There is a vast difference between indoctrinating students into a specific faith - or none - and teaching them how to appraise evidence and weigh arguments carefully, which is the business of education. If the schoolteachers of America cannot engage in free inquiry and raise fundamental questions in order to develop an appreciation for science, reason, and critical intelligence, then education becomes merely a mechanical process of rote learning. All education involves a moral component, and teachers therefore are concerned with developing moral character, an appreciation for intellectual honesty, and the ability to reflect upon and wrestle with moral problems. Throughout the entire history of Western civilization there has been a rich philosophical literature focusing on the need to develop a sense of moral responsibility and a capacity for autonomous moral choice. Human beings can learn to take a reflective approach to morality, which would include a moderation of selfish and thoughtless desires and a compassionate concern for the needs of others. Those who thoughtfully consider moral choice recognize that moral problems are often highly complex and involve many competing rights and many "goods" and "bads," and that only an informed and educated mind can make wise decisions. However, to the conservative religionist, any effort to develop a rational ethical philosophy independent of religious faith, or any attempt to discuss values without reference to the Bible, is considered to be teaching "the religion of secular humanism" and therefore should be prohibited. These critics do not accept freedom of choice.

Humanists are surely not opposed to reform of public schools or to changes in curricula. Informed parental participation on the local level should be encouraged, but this differs from the vociferous intimidation of teachers and educators by vigilante groups. We deplore the unwarranted intrusion of the federal government into the school curriculum, and we urge Congress to reconsider the two Hatch amendments. Their use could denude the schools of intelligent content and minimize the effectiveness of teachers in the all-important task of educating our children. If American education is to serve the nation's youth as they face the awesome problems of the future, then all Americans must resist every effort by sectarians under any guise to undermine the teaching of science and critical thinking in our schools. We call upon all teachers, administrators, parents, and concerned citizens to join us in resisting this dangerous assault on public education. Those who deny free inquiry, not those who would cultivate it, are the real corruptors of our youth.

* * * * *

This Statement from the Academy of Humanism was endorsed by a group of men calling themselves "Humanist Laureates." Interestingly, of the fifteen "Laureates" listed all but four are university professors, as was John Dewey, the co-author and initial signer of Humanist Manifesto I. Best known of the current "Laureates" probably is Sidney Hook of the Hoover Institute on War, Revolution and Peace, Stanford University. The author Isaac Asimov also is prominent in liberal-socialist circles. Other prominent humanists, signers of the Humanist Manifesto II but not necessarily designating themselves "Laureates," are Corliss Lamont who was connected with more than 100 Communist Front organizations; Lester Mondale, brother of U.S. Presidential aspirant Walter Mondale; B.F. Skinner, the Behaviorist; James Farmer of Black revolutionary fame; Betty Friedan, Founder of N.O.W.; Gunnar Myrdal, the Swedish professor who authored the racial revolution in America and so influenced the U.S. Supreme Court that it abandoned the Constitution in many of its rulings and adopted Social Justice as its criterion by which its decisions should be rendered.

It is interesting to note the differing manner in which the two organizations responsible for installing Secular Humanism where Christianity ought to be, defend their doctrines. The NEA is a labor union. Therefore its attitude is more common, sometimes virulent. It names names and condemns its enemies as fanatics, liars, distorters of facts, bigots, political poltroons, etc. But its higher echelon partner, the Academy of Humanism, is almost religious in its attitude toward its opponents. It doesn't use harsh and labor-union language, it simply speaks another language in a different tongue. Or, as Barbara Morris says, it speaks with a forked tongue. Like Communism, which is a close relative of Secular Humanism, it gives different meanings to words. For example, they fear that the enemies of secular humanism might succeed in preventing the teaching of science in the schools. But when they use the word science, they don't mean the kind of science that put men on the moon, made important discoveries and created a longer and better life for millions of humans. When the humanists speak of science, they're talking about "social science," which is certainly socialistic but not scientific, and which leads to brainwashing of students in the study of history, geography, morality, promotes values clarification, death education, sensitivity training, destroys traditional religious beliefs, and so on. In his diatribe against his opponents, NEA Committeeman and Secular Humanist Jim Lewis remarked that "they exchange information, they quote each other....Blumenfeld quotes Reed who quotes Rankin who quotes Blumenfeld and it goes in a wonderful circle." Well, let's extend that circle and quote Barbara Morris who is well versed in the evils of secular humanism, author of Change Agents in the Schools and other books, letters and articles dealing with the evils of secular humanism. She comments that when Humanists speak of "developing critical intelligence" they are once again engaging in semantic deception. The term 'critical intelligence' and other similar-sounding phrases are code terms for values clarification which is the ultimate assault on the belief system taught at home and church." "Let's tear apart a few more propositions of these 'Humanist Laureates'." she continues. "Humanists say: 'We believe that the problems and issues of contemporary life are inescapable; evasion and ignorance are not avenues to solutions. We do not believe that any one group has the answers to these or related problems.' Please note that those 'problems and issues' are undefined. The world is full of problems. Which problems and which issues are they talking about? Who decides which problems and issues are to be solved? From whose point of view? The answer is clear: Only those 'problems and issues' that serve and promote the Humanist cause will be deemed worthy of consideration. 'The environment,' 'overpopulation,' 'nuclear weapons,' 'world government,' 'abortion,' 'homosexuality,' etc., etc. You know beforehand that any or all 'problems and issues' will NOT be considered from a non-Humanist point of view.

"Humanists say: '...teaching them (children) how to appraise evidence and weigh arguments carefully...is the business of education...' Who says it's the 'business of education?' When did parents and the church authorize the government schools to teach children to become skeptics or to encourage them to question parental/church teaching and conventional wisdom?...Why should the government school be allowed to abrogate or deny the right of non-Humanist parents to teach their children 'moral responsibility' based on Christian teaching," (Quoted from an article by Barbara Morris appearing in the August, 1985, issue of The National Educator, 1110 South Pomona Avenue, Fullertown, CA 92632. $ 10 per year).

Originally, Humanism was little more than just another philosophy dealing with concerns for man and his welfare. Then Secular Humanism as a religion began to appear in the United States at about the same time Fablanism was imported from London. In 1905 a group of young men met together in lower Manhattan, and the Intercollegiate Socialist Society was organized. In 1921 it became the League for Industrial Democracy. Robert Morss Lovett of the University of Chicago became its first president. Lovett also was a signer of Humanist Manifesto I, and a member of the NEA! John Dewey of "Progressive Education" Infamy was its first vicepresident, became president of the LID in 1941. Dewey also was co-author and a signer of Humanist Manifesto I, and a leading member of the NEA! Dewey wrote in an article titled "Can Education Share in Social Reconstruction": "I do not think...that the schools can in any literal sense be the builders of a new social order. But the schools will surely as a matter of fact and not of ideal share in the building of the social order of the future according as they ally themselves with this or that movement of existing social forces." Later professors like Willard Givens and George Counts of the NEA were to be more positive, claimed that the schools themselves would build the new social order. Lawrence Cremln in his history of Dewey's Teachers College where teachers were trained to bring in the new social order, wrote: "The course for American teachers was clear: they would have to gain power and use it to help create a new society."

A part of the new society must include a new religion; and Humanist Manifesto I made provision for this. Its opening paragraph reads: "The time has come for widespread recognition of the radical changes in religious beliefs throughout the modern world. The time is past for mere revision of traditional attitudes....In order that religious humanism may be better understood we, the undersigned, desire to make certain affirmations which we believe the facts of our contemporary life demonstrate" (emphasis added).

This first Manifesto was written in 1933. The second Manifesto was published in 1973. In its preface, Edwin Wilson wrote: "As in 1933, humanists still believe that traditional theism, especially faith in the prayer-hearing God, assumed to love and care for persons, to hear and understand their prayers, and to be able to do something about them, is an unproved and outmoded faith. Salvationism, based on mere affirmation, still appears as harmful, diverting people with false hopes of heaven hereafter. Reasonable minds look to other means for survival" (emphasis again added). That "other means for survival" is the atheistic, secular religion of Humanism which has been so successfully promoted by the NEA, the Humanists and the Fablans, that it has become the State Religion of America! And it was done through government schools! Certainly schools are needed, but not schools that drain taxpayers, make illiterates of children, and defy the God of our Fathers in every respect. We applaud those who are trying to save the government schools. But ever since World War I the radical and atheistic left has controlled those schools and the only real answer is a return to community schools as they existed before Horace Mann made schools government institutions and the NEA made them anti-Christian training camps for numbered creatures in a New Social Order.

Year Thirty-Two Number Thirty-Three August 23, 1985

"AND IF THE BLIND LEAD THE BLIND . . ."

Legend tells us that once upon a time there was an emperor with no clothes. For the longest time no one noticed. There have been many naked emperors since, and people seldom notice for a long time. Charles Mackay called such mass deceptions "Extraordinary Popular Delusions and the Madness of Crowds," and he wrote a book describing many such delusions and madneses. In a foreword to the book, Andrew Tobias noted that "Anyone taken as an individual is tolerably sensible and reasonable. As a member of a crowd, he at once becomes a blockhead. There are lynch mobs and there are crusades. There are runs on banks and there are fires where if only people hadn't panicked, they would all have escaped with their lives. And there was the mass murder at Jonestown." There is a delusion and madness concerning Communism which fits into this picture. Whittaker Chambers wrote that "Socialism almost always enters into coalition with communism, dragging along a whole flutter of people who are not even as well-defined as socialists. These are the vaguely humane and progressive, somewhat articulate as a rule, intellectually and politically rather genderless people that perhaps every civilization in collapse breeds as a symptom of waste product." In commenting on the current Communist-induced popular delusion and madness of crowds concerning South Africa, Joseph Sobran called those who have fallen for the madness "members of a hive." He wrote:

"I myself like to use the metaphor of a beehive, in which different sorts of bees serve complementary functions and cooperate by instinct. No bee has to know how the whole hive's system works in order to play its part. It knows its friends by sight and the whole hive swarms together against common enemies. The politically progressive Hive includes Communists, fellow travelers, socialists, liberals, 'moderate' Republicans, campus activists, feminists, gay activists, civil rights workers, civil libertarians, anti-nuke types, and so forth. Somehow you know, for all their surface diversity, they're playing on the same team. And they dimly know, too. They can spot each other across a crowded room, and they almost never attack the Queen Bee in Moscow. A few of the bees have grown up within the Communist Party. Others, the great majority, have had much more normal backgrounds. Maybe they were radicalized by Peter, Paul, and Mary in the '60s, or had the old consciousness raised more recently by subscribing to Rolling Stones. However it happened, they inhaled the vapors of the progressive sensibility somewhere along the line and today they turn up in peace marches, anti-apartheid demonstrations, and gay rights rallies. For every bee who adopted socialism as an ideology, there must be a thousand who were absorbed into it by a sort of etiquette. Nobody ever told them that Communism was actually good, they just gathered subliminally, that anti-communism, even if it doesn't lead to nuclear holocaust, is in - well - bad taste.... Liberal bees are sincerely indignant about South Africa's apartheid system. It never occurs to them that they could get equally indignant about 'sexism' in Saudi Arabia. It's more fun - much more natural - to join the swarm in front of the South African Embassy than to be a lone picketer at the Saudi Embassy...." In all the liberal press's discussion of AIDS, have you seen a single word of disapproval of homosexual acts? Heaven forbid! That would be 'judgmental.' And 'judgmental' is one of the Hive's most severely judgmental words. We mustn't be judgmental toward homosexuality, or Communism. Of course it's OK to be judgmental about South Africa. That's called 'speaking out,' and it shows excellent taste." (Unquote).

So much for the drones, sensation-seekers, misfits and genderless who are there when the bees swarm. But the metaphor of the Hive doesn't explain those leaders who, to return to a previous metaphor, keep telling us that the emperor really is dressed in the finest of silks and sables, when he's really naked. What of those leaders who publicly condemn the South African government while saying not a word about the truly horrible acts ordered by the government of the USSR in regard to Afghanistan, or the murder of thousands in the "democratized" state of Zimbabwe, or the murder of millions by the Red Chinese Government, and all the rest of the atrocities that are far worse than anything happening in South Africa? Allen Keyte, who edits World Affairs Review was really shocked. He wrote, and we quote:

"Whilst I've been taking a short holiday, with my family, the politicians of the Western world seem to have been affected by the sun which shone down so gloriously over the last weeks. I could not believe what I was hearing as attack after attack was launched against the Botha government in South Africa. Yet again the Soviet campaign of disinformation is having its way. The various minority groups, including the church leaders are having their way in imposing the minority view on the majority because they are more vocal. I have repeatedly warned that we in the West must wake up if we do not wish to end up being dominated by the communist power brokers who are so anxious to control us all. But all of our cries have apparently been to no avail and the West is determined to capitulate to communism whenever and wherever it can. It is quite ridiculous to talk of the dire plight of the blacks in South Africa unless we also look at the other areas such as Uganda (where black mutilates and murders black) or the Soviet Union and Communist China who maintain the largest slave camps in the world. Why attack South Africa and not take positive and punitive action against the major infringers of personal liberty and human rights? The answer is, of course, that the communist propaganda machine has again left us standing. They have their way whilst we drift aimlessly like a ship without a rudder....despite the imperfections which remain in South Africa, the blacks who live there have the highest standard of living on the continent and, quite plainly, many who live outside South Africa wish to work there. Can the same be said about Uganda, the Soviet Union, or Communist China? Of course not. The only figures which I have seen indicate that those living under truly repressive regimes are constantly trying to escape. One of my observers in South

ABOUT THAT NEW COLORED CURRENCY

From "The New York Times," August 11, 1985:

Fearful that coming electronic color copying machines would be so good they might be used to reproduce paper currency, the United States Treasury began in 1978 to consider altering the bills. The changes under review to foil would-be counterfeiters were narrowed by last November to these three: a multicolored pastel tint in the margins of bills, so delicate that even the best machines could not duplicate it; a "security thread," visible when a bill was held up to light, but not when the bill was lying flat for copying; and holographic or other optically varied bills that would seem to shift in color or form when moved. The Treasury was expected to decide by mid-1985.

"The projects are still pretty much in research," reports Peter H. Daly, deputy director of the Bureau of Printing and Engraving, and the target now is a decision before the end of the year. After a decision to change, Mr. Daly notes, it would take up to two years to issue the new bills. The first of the new color super-copiers are expected out "around 1988," he says, with the threat to money materializing in the 1990's. By then "laser scanners driven by a home personal computer" should be available, he says, adding: "They also can be used to make printing plates -- that's what we're afraid of."

Africa recently wrote as follows:

"In case you get the impression that the country is now in turmoil and ungovernable, let me assure you that we in the towns have seen nothing of the unrest, except the horrors shown on TV. What is going on has little or nothing to do with Apartheid or reforms – it is the usual tactic of the communists (or their agents) to try and exploit a sensitive situation of change. The sufferers are all blacks who favor orderly change and in particular all who are employed in the forces or as local politicians. The object (at this time) seems to be to scare all blacks off from any such posts. It has, however, only had limited success. What we see is the ease with which primitive masses can be excited into a frenzy and to killing of innocent compatriots. You perhaps saw the murder of a black woman in a crowd? That horror came about simply by somebody pointing at her and saying "police informer." The crowd immediately stoned and set fire to her body. I don't think that Western politicians understand the really primitive blacks (some of them have just come out of the bush and really belong to the stone age.) The fact that there are a growing number of educated, sophisticated blacks who deserve a better place in society complicates the situation.'

"The above letter shows just a few points which I am certain are never debated in the West. Is this because our leaders are fools...or merely politicians? Whatever their excuse, the situation in South Africa has been sadly misread and we shall all pay for it when the Soviet Union becomes the controller of all significant supplies of chromium, cobalt, manganese, molybdenum, platinum, titanium, nickel, vanadium, and tungsten. If we are not actually denied these vital materials then we shall be held to ransom on the price we must pay...The communist disinformation campaign has long been aimed at several specific targets but there can be no doubt – South Africa has always been the major target. You realise this. Then why don't our leaders? Why are they so determined to lead us all into a state of subservience to the communist superpowers?" (Quoted from the August 15, 1985 issue of "World Affairs Review," 98 Malleson Road, Gotherington, Cheltenham, Glos GL52 4EY, U.K. US$ 127.00 per year).

There's an answer to that question, "Why are they (our leaders) so determined to lead us all into a state of subservience to the communist superpowers?" What you'll never read or hear via the commercial communications media is that the majority of our leaders, elected, appointed and otherwise, are themselves subservient to a Power Elite that aims to create a New International Economic Order which is to be a Socialist One World Order. This Power Elite, generally considered to be headed by the Rockefeller interests in America, the Rothschild interests in Europe, and the Oppenheimer interests in South Africa, is of the opinion that Communist control will not affect their financial interests. In fact, David Rockefeller has openly admitted that it is easier to deal with Socialist governments. For that reason a branch of the Chase Manhattan Bank is prominently located on Red Square in Moscow, and it and other megabankers and multinational corporations are dealing profitably with all the existing socialist governments in the world (much of this at U.S. taxpayers' expense). In short, there is a certain "Communist-Capitalist Alliance" and these two forces work together, secretly in most cases, toward the building of this One World Order.

Because of this alliance, the media, which control most people's thinking, would have us believe that here is a case of an emperor wearing clothes when he is actually naked. The disinformation is on the part of the Western media as well as the Soviet disinformation campaign. For example, we are told that the people leading the agitation in South Africa are striving for "freedom" and "democracy." Nothing could be farther from the truth. This is simply part of a continuing campaign to put the whole world under Communist domination – for the benefit of the Power Elite. Step by step, other parts of the African continent have been given "freedom and one-man, one-vote;" and in every case totalitarian control has resulted. As M. Stanton Evans noted in an article in the August 24th issue of Human Events, these same battle cries and promises that are being heard regarding South Africa have been heard before in Angola, Mozambique, Tanzania, Ethiopia, etc., and instead of "freedom" and "democracy" the result has been "a military dictatorship or one-party oligarchy, generally of Marxist-Leninist persuasion." Says Mr. Evans: "Among the clearest examples of this problem is South Africa's neighbor to the north, Zimbabwe. Events in this troubled nation are a certain giveaway as to the real intentions of the 'democracy' brigade not only in Africa itself but in the U.S.A. In Zimbabwe, after all, these forces had a chance to support a non-Communist, freely elected black majority government, and turned it down flat. They wanted, and got, a Marxist ruler instead. In 1979, despite the effort of terrorists to disrupt the voting, moderate black leader Abel Muzorewa won a free and open election to head a black majority government in Zimbabwe. Rep. Stephen Solarz (D.-N.Y.) - currently in the forefront of the attack against South Africa - played the role of hatchetman in trying to discredit Muzorewa's victory. A new election was forced, bringing about the triumph of Marxist Robert Mugabe. Once he was elected, Solarz's nit-picking questions about election 'fairness' ceased forthwith. The Marxist outcome imposed by Solarz and Co. on Zimbabwe is now in prospect for South Africa. To foretell the outcome in this case, we need only to note the cast of characters waging the war of guerrilla agitation in that country who are lauded and supported by anti-South Africa forces here, and who may be expected to take control in the event of a successful revolution. It is Mugabe all over again - only more so. At the core of the South Africa agitation is the African National Congress, often portrayed in the U.S. media as a worthy and progressive organization....(It) is a faithful subsidiary of the global Communist movement. The group has been under the effective control of the South African Communist party since the 1940s. Its official paper, Sechaba, is published in East Germany. Its 'freedom' broadcasts, urging blacks to kill other blacks, are beamed out of that well-known citadel of liberty, Marxist Ethiopia." The mythical head of the ANC is Nelson Mandella, but he's been in prison for twenty years. The black revolutionaries know him only as a hero-figure. His name is exploited internationally for its propaganda value. The real leaders of the ANC seem to be Joe Slovo, a white Communist; and Abram Fischer, also a white Communist. The blacks are said to be fighting the whites, but whites are leading the blacks.

Briefly: The Rev. Falwell says Bishop Tutu is a phony. He's right. So are all the one-man, one-vote principles for which Tutu supposedly stands. Freedom and democracy are merely catch words, to catch the unwary who will aid in achieving the real goal, which is Marxist-Leninist domination of South Africa. Also phony is all the hullabaloo concerning economic sanctions. The House passed the anti-South Africa bill. The Senate is expected to approve when that body reconvenes after its summer holiday, which included many paid vacations in foreign countries for many Senators and Congressmen. When the Senate approves, then President Reagan is expected to veto. The veto will probably stand. But if it doesn't, the megabusinesses involved will find other ways to circumvent the ban. Monopoly Capitalists are not about to lose out when the Communists take over. Only the people will suffer as more countries surrender to the Communist-Capitalist Alliance. As the Book says, "If the blind lead the blind...."

"WE HAVE MET THE ENEMY AND HE IS U.S."

Thomas Woodrow Wilson, as President of the United States, was the Nation's Chief Executive, was Commander-in-Chief of all the armed forces, and was considered to be the man wielding the most political power in all the land. And yet, on one occasion he had admitted openly: "There is a power somewhere so organized, so subtle, so watchful, so interlocked, so complete, so pervasive that they better not speak above their breath when they speak in condemnation of it." Woodrow Wilson knew whereof he spoke; for, through the subtle control of his alter ego, Colonel Edward M. House, he had become a mouthpiece and active agent of that "power" of which he spoke. Before the rise of men like Andrew Carnegie, John Pierpont Morgan, John D. Rockefeller, and other "economic royalists"; before the passage of the Federal Reserve Act, the alleged ratification of the Sixteenth, Income Tax Amendment and the Seventeenth Amendment calling for the populist election of U.S. Senators; that "power" of which Wilson spoke was centered in the capitals of Europe and particularly in "The City" which was the financial heart of London. It was this "power" that, in the middle of the 19th century, became concerned over the rise in economic strength and personal freedom of the citizens of the United States. This "power" reasoned that if a United States was permitted to grow, it would overshadow the influence and control over the world of the "power." Military measures having been tried, and having failed, it was decided to create a racial conflict which could cause the death of the Union of States. The "power" came so very close to accomplishing its purpose that animosity between the Industrial North and the agricultural South continued for decades.

We mention this because that same "power" now is trying the same plan against another Republic, and again because of reasons other than racial. As Al Owen of Newsletter Digest points out, "South Africa is not a social issue. It is not about freedom, or desegregation, or the right to vote. The Soviets themselves are surrogates to international banking. They want control of South Africa's strategic materials. Once this power is gained, it will be almost impossible to reverse, and the ultimate goal of control over the United States will be virtually assured." Then Al Owen said something that adds to what Woodrow Wilson had said some seventy years ago: "World power is now concentrated in the hands of a few - incredibly wealthy, incredibly powerful, owing allegiance to no nation or ideal. They no longer make any secret of who they are, or their goals. They can be defeated only if knowledge of their activities and methods reaches enough people in time." (Newsletter Digest, 2335 Pansy Street, Huntsville, Alabama 35801. $75 per year. Single Issue: $3.50.)

Use of the racial issue had almost destroyed the United States in a War Between the States. Why not try it again, this time against South Africa? Meanwhile, however, a kind of test case would be tried out, again against the USA. To take political advantage of the racial turmoil that would be developed in the "power's" behalf by Martin Luther King and others, the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace commissioned a Swedish Marxist named Gunnar Myrdal to write a book, "An American Dilemma" which would provide the intellectual padding that would be used to justify the U.S. Supreme Court's 1954 desegregation edict. Actually Myrdal didn't really write the book. He was provided $250,000 by the Carnegie Corporation together with sixteen collaborators - all with communist front affiliations and at least four of them members of the Communist Party. Later, in 1973, the Carnegie Corporation granted Myrdal $15,000 for a study of race relations; this one being prepared at the radical Center for the Study of Democratic Institutions. Myrdal's pro-communist writings so impressed the Warrencourt that many of its decisions came to be based, not on Justice as defined by the Bible or by our civil bible, the Constitution, but on Social Justice as defined by Myrdal, who said that Americans had a "relatively low degree of respect for law and order," that our legal system was "anarchistic," and that adoption of the U.S. Constitution "was merely a plot against the common people." Here was that necessary emotional stimulus that made it possible for Lyndon Johnson to initiate his "Great Society" program which is the principal reason for the judicial and welfare dilemma in which we find our country today. Only recently, for example, has Attorney General Ed Meese called for the revocation of the "Miranda Decision," which has kept so many criminals out of jail and in the streets, alleys, banks and other people's homes committing muggings and murders, robberies and rapes, arsons and assorted other felonies.

Since the racial crisis in America was something of a tryout for what was planned for the Republic of South Africa, the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace went one step beyond the Myrdal endeavor. It also financed a study titled "Apartheid and United Nations Collective Measures" which included a blueprint for a U.N. invasion of South Africa, specifying the necessary troop strength, cost, and casualties it would take to conquer that anti-Communist ally of the United States. We hear much of the socialistic and internationalist activities of the Rockefeller, Ford, Guggenheim and other great foundations. But not enough has been written of the activities of that first of them all, the Carnegie Corporation. The Carnegie Endowment for International Peace was created in 1910, to induce the United States to enter World War I. According to William P. Hoar, author of Architects of Conspiracy, Carnegie, J.P. Morgan and Otto Kahn floated a half-million-dollar loan to push America into the war, and the sinking of the Lusitania was a part of the successful scheme. In 1934 the Carnegie Corporation spent $340,000 on the "Commission on Social Sciences of the American Historical Association." According to Fabian Socialist Harold Laski this whole "Social Science" curriculum that has helped to destroy traditional American education, was "at bottom, stripped of its carefully neutral phrases, an educational program for a socialist America." The Carnegie group, headed for a time by Alger Hiss, continued to develop its "racial crisis" programming. Textbooks promoting socialism, regional and world government, were financed by the Carnegie Corporation, as was the Behavioral Research Laboratory of Palo Alto, California. In 1968 Edith Kermit Roosevelt wrote that "These foundation-funded books reveal a fine pattern that amounts to an incitement to the sort of arson and guerrilla warfare that took place in Watts, Washington, D.C. and elsewhere." Were these trial runs for the sort of racial turmoil that would later engulf the Republic of South Africa? As William P. Hoar wrote in a somewhat different context: "One does detect a pattern. And what these men (Foundation men like Rockefeller, Kissinger, Brzezinski, etc.) are doing is all too clear. In fact, they don't even deny it. The Carnegie Endowment's William Maynes Jr. has admitted that 'the Endowment participated in the World Order Models Project, an attempt by scholarly teams from several continents to posit a desirable 1990 world order and concrete steps to achieve it.'" (Emphasis added).

A most difficult thing for most people to understand is: How can the Power Elite promote economic sanctions against anti-Communist South Africa while at the same time promoting open and unrestricted trade with the USSR, Red China and their satellite and surrogate nations? The answer is, of course, that the Power Elite has something in mind that is far more important than any temporary shut-down of trade with South Africa. As Al Owen said, "The Soviets themselves are surrogates to international banking." From the beginning of Lenin's establishment of Bolshevism

(as a complement to Menshevism, Anarchism, Syndicalism, Christian Socialism, Fabian Socialism, etc.) the International Bankers and certain industrial leaders of Europe and America have financed and sustained the growth of International Communism, under whatever name it might appear. One of the chief financiers of the Bolshevik Revolution of 1917 was Max Warburg of Germany, brother of Paul Warburg who came to the United States to establish a central banking system (the Federal Reserve). Jacob Schiff, a brother-in-law of the Warburgs, contributed $20 million to the Russian Revolution. Max Warburg of Germany contributed $6 million. Similar amounts were said to have been given by Alfred Milner representing the Rothschild interests as well as head of the Round Table Group, J.P.Morgan, Frank Vanderlip, John D. Rockefeller, Averell Harriman, and other International Bankers. Gary Allen author of the important book None Dare Call It Conspiracy, first published in 1972, observed that:

"In the Bolshevik Revolution we have some of the world's richest and most powerful men financing a movement which claims its very existence is based on the concept of stripping of their wealth men like the Rothschilds, Rockefellers, Schiffs, Warburgs, Morgans, Harrimans and Milners. But obviously these men have no fear of international Communism. It is only logical to assume that if they financed it and do not fear it, it must be because they control it. Can there be any other explanation that makes sense? Remember that for over 150 years it has been standard operating procedure of the Rothschilds and their allies to control both sides of every conflict. You must have an 'enemy' if you are going to collect from the King. The East-West balance-or-power politics is used as one of the main excuses for the socialization of America. Although it was not their main purpose, by nationalization of Russia the Insiders bought themselves an enormous piece of real estate, complete with mineral rights, for somewhere between $30 and $40 million. We can only theorize on the manner in which Moscow is controlled from New York, London and Paris. Undoubtedly much of the control is economic, but certainly the International bankers have an enforcer arm within Russia to keep the Soviet leaders in line." (Emphasis added).

We also know that this Power Elite which is composed of International Bankers and Multinational Industrialists, Manufacturers, Mineral seekers and Exploiters of slave labor, not only established Communism but has spent billions over the past decades and induced Western governments to spend more billions, to keep Communism alive, growing and strengthening until now the USSR has become militarily competitive. Antony Sutton in his three volume Western Technology and Soviet Economic Development has proved this fact, using for the most part official U.S. State Department documents. He has shown that virtually everything the Soviets possess has been acquired from the West. As Gary Allen comments: "It is not much of an exaggeration to say that the USSR was made in the USA. The landscape painters, unable to refute Sutton's monumental scholarship, simply paint him out of the picture." And virtually bookburn his proof of their treason.

Lately, some of the members of the Power Elite have exposed themselves, and have boasted openly of their aims and plans. The Trilateral Commission, for example, claims to have no secrets from the public. However, the Bilderberg Group and similar secret clubs of the Power Elite still meet and plan in secret. Back in 1980 Bill Moyers, journalist and member of the Council on Foreign Relations, broadcast the following description of his "leader":

"David Rockefeller is the most conspicuous representative today of the ruling class, a multinational fraternity of men who shape the global economy and manage the flow of its capital. Rockefeller was born to it, and he has made the most of it. But what some critics see as a vast international conspiracy, he considers a circumstance of life, and just another day's work....Private citizen David Rockefeller is accorded privileges of a head of state....He is untouched by customs of passport offices and hardly pauses for traffic lights. Rockefeller is the supreme example of how multinational companies do business." (Quoted from "Architects of Conspiracy," Western Islands publisher, 395 Concord Ave., Belmont, MA 02178).

The overall plan of these Conspirators who are "above the law" and owe allegiance to no country, seems to be to continue the overt competition and brinkmanship between the USSR and the USA until such time as the whole world is prepared for acceptance of their New World Order, which will be a Socialist and anti-Christian order. standing in the way of its completion is not the USSR or its activities, but the Republics of the United States and South Africa. Otto Scott refers to these two Nations as being adrift in a lifeboat, the United States at one end of it and South Africa at The Other End of the Lifeboat, which is the name of his excellent book dealing with the true conditions in that other Republic, and explaining how we both got in such a position. There is however, this difference, at least at this writing: the government of the United States is actually cooperating with the Monopoly Capitalists and their Communist Surrogates; whereas the government of South Africa is resisting the Socialist takeover with every bit of strength at its command. But with the whole world against it, one wonders how long this nation can stand.

Says Al Owen of Newsletter Digest (op cit) in regard to the South African situation, and some of the following is repeated: "Long years of preparation are beginning to pay off. The African National Congress, operating out of Zambia, is well funded ($12 million from Scandinavia alone, plus an endless supply of weapons and explosives from the USSR); it is successfully inciting South African blacks, especially the teen-agers, to riot. The Soviets' Cuban surrogate has a firm base in Angola, ready hopefully to move in when it's time for the kill. The point is: South Africa is not a social issue. It is not about freedom, or desegregation, or the right to vote. The Soviets themselves are surrogates to international banking. They want control of South Africa's strategic materials. Once this power is gained, it will be almost impossible to reverse, and the ultimate goal of control over the United States will be virtually assured. World power is now concentrated in the hands of a few - incredibly wealthy, incredibly powerful, owing allegiance to no nation or idea. They no longer make any secret of who they are, or their goals. They can be defeated only if knowledge of their activities and methods reached enough people in time."

And Gary North in a bonus issue of his Remnant Review adds: "What we face is an entrenched enemy which is doing endless deals with our mortal enemies. Until the policies of this political, academic, and media Establishment are at last repudiated by the American public, we will continue to drift into nuclear blackmail. The question is: When will these policies be perceived as suicidal by the voters? Answer: not until the economy falls to produce the promised goodies at low cost. People are pocketbook oriented. Sophisticated theories are irrelevant to them. What they want is goods. As long as the system delivers the goods they will not rebel... In other words, as long as the system seems to be working, the best we can hope for is time to prepare ourselves for the period when it will no longer be working properly. This means economic preparation. It also means intellectual, institutional, and even political preparation." (And most important of all, spiritual preparation).

GORBACHEV GETS WHAT HE WANTS

THANKS TO THE EDITORS OF TIME

Disinformation is a new word that came into the English language by way of writings about Communism and the USSR. It has to do with the lies, half-truths and distortions of truth practiced by those experts at psychological warfare, special agents of the KGB. The American equivalent of the word is misinformation, which Webster's Collegiate Dictionary defines as giving "untrue or misleading information to; understanding wrongly; explaining wrongly," deliberately and with premeditated purpose when the word becomes disinformation. Knowing how the minions of our Eastern Establishment have always cooperated with their creation, Communist Russia, it should come as no great surprise when a national magazine such as Time devotes what amounts to sixteen pages of pictorial and printed paeans of praise for "Moscow's Vigorous Leader," Mikhail Gorbachev. Beginning with a "Man of the Year" type cover picture of Gorbachev, appropriately bordered in red with words carefully concealing the mark on his forehead, the special report calls Gorbachev confident and tough, a glad-hander, a new and thoroughly acceptable "new type of Kremlin leader." Time says "Though he has been in power less than six months, Gorbachev has already become a more vibrant presence to the 278 million citizens of the U.S.S.R. than his recent aged and often ailing predecessors." From that opening sentence on, the reader will find an expertly prepared document of disinformation about the man, his alleged quest for peace, his desire to limit the manufacture of nuclear weapons, etc.; but not a word about the progress of his attempts at genocide in Afghanistan, or his recent successes in the Middle East. This exclusive interview granted Time is an attempt to make the people of America like the Chairman of the Communist Party which rules the USSR, and to prepare us all to accept the giveaways that can be expected when President Reagan and Chairman Gorbachev meet at a tentative Summit in Geneva next November 19-20. Tying in with Time was a delegation of U.S. Senators who met with Gorbachev just prior to the re-convening of the Senate after its summer jaunts. Senators Byrd of West Virginia, Thurmond of South Carolina, Warner of Virginia, Sarbanes of Maryland, Mitchell of Maine, and Nunn of Georgia were told by Gorbachev that he may be willing to agree to a number of things if the United States will only cease and desist with its so-called "Star Wars" program. Presidential spokesman Larry Speakes dismissed the charges made by Gorbachev in the Time interview, said the Reagan administration "has heard such talk before and challenged the Soviets to put their proposals on the table. "Our views are quite different from that presented by Mr. Gorbachev" in Time magazine's interview. James McCartney of the Knight multipaper chain hinted that there still is "growing evidence that hopes for significant accomplishments at the November summit are fading fast in the administration." Which would indicate that Gorbachev's exclusive interview with Time and his conference with Senators did not have the desired effect. However, as it has been in the past ever since Yalta, if and when the President of the United States and the Chairman of the Communist Party meet at a Summit, the Communists always win. Some background seems appropriate:

The idea probably began as a result of that meeting between Churchill and Roosevelt when the two issued the Atlantic Charter in August, 1941, at which time Roosevelt once again promised Churchill that he would find a way to get the United States formally into World War II. Pearl Harbor proved to be the way he found. At the next Summit the Big Two had become the Big Three with Stalin calling the shots. Because of his ill health FDR had tried to get Stalin to meet with him and Churchill at some closer place, such as Quebec. But Stalin insisted that they meet at Teheran, Iran, November 27 to December 2, 1943. At that Summit, "Uncle Joe" was formally given half of Poland. It should be remembered that World War II began supposedly because Britain and France acted against the Nazi and Soviet invasion and division of Poland. But after the Nazis attacked the Soviet Union the Soviets became an ally of the Western Powers, and half of the Poland that Britain and France went to war to protect was given the USSR. That was the beginning of the present and existing age of sorrows for the Poles. At Teheran it was also agreed that the USSR would be given Lithuania, Latvia and Estonia. But all of this was kept secret at the time because FDR was coming up for reelection and "there were in the United States from six to seven million Americans of Polish extraction, and, as a practical man, he did not wish to lose their vote," this according to the minutes of the Teheran meeting. For the same reason the giveaway of the Baltic States to Stalin was not revealed until after the election. It also was at Teheran that it was decided the loyal Yugoslavian patriot General Mikhailovich should be sacrificed so Josip Broz Tito could become dictator of that country. Other giveaways to Stalin could be mentioned, but suffice it to report that Robert Sherwood, in his book Roosevelt and Hopkins wrote: "If there was any supreme peak in Roosevelt's career, I believe it might well be fixed at this moment, at the end of the Teheran Conference."

Next came the Yalta Summit, February 3-12, 1945. Much has been written about Yalta. Let it be noted that Alger Hiss was at FDR's side, testified later that "It is an accurate and not inmodest statement to say that I helped formulate the Yalta Agreement to some extent." Here the giveaway of Poland, half of Germany, and those Congress now refers to as the "Captive Nations" was accomplished by the USSR. The betrayal of China also was accomplished at Yalta so that Senator Joseph McCarthy was to say: "It is my judgment that we lost the peace in Europe at Teheran. It is even clearer that we lost the peace in Asia at Yalta."

The Potsdam Summit of July 17 to August 2, 1945 was different in that Harry Truman was now President of the USA, and Clement Atlee of the Labour Party had replaced Churchill as Prime Minister of the United Kingdom. The atom bombs had been dropped at Hiroshima and Nagasaki, and this was a "reparations" conference. Germany was the principal loser at this one; with the industries of West Germany being shipped to Russia, and German assets in Bulgaria, Finland, Romania and Eastern Austria were wiped out. West Germany was supposed to become nothing more than a "farming and fishing" country. The miracle of its recovery should still amaze the world. It was after Potsdam that Winston Churchill declared: "An Iron Curtain has descended across the Continent. Behind that line lie all the capitals of the ancient states of Central and Eastern Europe."

After the Potsdam Summit some tension began to develop between the East and the West, the Cold War was announced, and George Kennan's "Containment Policy" was adopted, supposedly as a means of limiting the gains of the USSR to what it had already won at Teheran, Yalta and Potsdam. There was the Berlin Blockade in 1948, the Korean "Police Action" beginning in 1950. The "Powers" decided that the tension between East and West should be eased; so "Big Four" talks were held at the old League of Nations building which now housed the European headquarters of the UN. So Eisenhower of the United States, Eden of Great Britain, and Faure of France met with Khrushchev of the Soviet Union. The "Policy of Containment" was scrapped and replaced by the policy of "Coexistence," and the "Spirit of Geneva" was born. Here President Eisenhower played right into the hands of the Soviets by suggesting that East and West should exchange "blueprints" of their military establishments, and that photo reconnaissance missions over each other's national territories should be allowed. Fortunately, nothing came of this except the shooting down of the U2 spy plane over USSR territory. In September, 1959, Khrushchev was invited to come to the United States. A three-day meeting was held at Camp David after which Eisenhower and Khrushchev issued a joint statement about the importance of disarmament. Vice President Richard Nixon retaliated the courtesy call of Khrushchev by visiting the Soviet Union, at which time the "kitchen debate" was held. Another "Big Four" Summit was supposed to be held in Paris in May, 1960. The "Big Four" now consisted of Eisenhower, DeGaulle of France, Macmillan of Great Britain, and Khrushchev. But sixteen days before the Summit was to be held, the U2 plane was brought down. Khrushchev declared Eisenhower to be treacherous, a bandit; he demanded an apology and stalked out of the Elysee Palace where the Summit was to be held. One should compare this incident with the Soviet shooting down of the Korean 007 flight and the statements by the Soviets at that time.

There followed Summits at Glassboro, New Jersey in June, 1967, L.B. Johnson representing the United States; then a Moscow Summit that produced the SALT Treaty prepared by Dobrynin of the USSR and Henry Kissinger of the USA. This first treaty was ratified by the Senate in August, 1972. Salt II has never been ratified but has been observed by the USA and ignored by the USSR. A Vladivostok Summit in 1974 produced SALT II, but it was not signed until later. Gerald Ford was President at this time and there were indications that Kissinger did all the negotiating, Ford merely attended, not really knowing what was going on. For complete reports on these treaties, Kissinger on the Couch, by Phyllis Schlafly and Admiral Chester Ward remains a classic of its kind.

Gerald Ford was more experienced, more understanding at the Helsinki Summit, July 29 to August 2, 1975. There he confirmed the Red absorption of the Baltic States, half of Germany, and the States of Central and Eastern Europe. Some 35 heads of state signed a treaty referring to "Questions relating to the Security of Europe," in which force, threat of force, or coercion against other states were violations of the Spirit of Helsinki. Leonid Brezhnev signed this treaty and soon thereafter violated it by ordering the invasion of Afghanistan, among other violations in Poland, and those of a somewhat lesser nature in the captive nations and in the USSR itself. Finally came the Vienna Summit which was attended by Jimmy Carter who at this time signed the SALT II Treaty but, as we said, the Senate has never ratified it. That's when the MAD policy (Mutual Assured Destruction) began to take shape as the official policy of the United States. We have lived under it ever since.

When Ronald Reagan became President in 1981 he began his first term acting like a conservative and "telling it like it is" in regard to that evil empire known as the Soviet Union. There was little or no thought of the possibility of a Summit. However, as the 1984 election loomed, things began to change. Walter Mondale had made the charge that all other Presidents had held talks with the head of the Soviet Government. Was Reagan afraid of any such Summit? Because it was election time, Reagan issued a statement saying that he would be willing to meet with Andropov if anything good could be accomplished. However, no sooner had Reagan issued the statement than Andropov died, to be followed by Chernenko. Then there was talk of a possible Summit meeting between Reagan and Chernenko, but before anything could be arranged, Chernenko also disappeared from the scene. When Gorbachev came to power there was much changing of the guard in the Kremlin; highlighted by the "kicking upstairs" of Gromyko and the announcement of Chevamadzze as the new Soviet foreign minister. There was a chance that Gorbachev and Reagan might meet at the opening of the annual United Nations General Assembly meeting. But when Armand Hammer went to Moscow soon after Gorbachev was elected to his post, Hammer told Gorbachev not to count on any such meeting. So, with Hammer apparently acting as a kind of go-between, it was arranged that there should be this Summit at Geneva in November.

We have written this probably dull outline of Summits to point out that every time one has been held, the Communists have won victories or had their previous victories confirmed. Not once has the United States done anything but lose to the Soviet. Only disaster for America and for the Free World has followed any such meeting. As Barry Goldwater says in his Conscience of a Conservative, "negotiations are simply an instrument of political warfare for the Communists. For them, a summit meeting is another battle in the struggle for the world." And we have lost every battle. And yet, obviously at the dictate of the Power Elite that controls the governments of the world, we're at it again, most people knowing beforehand that promises made by the Soviet leaders are just like pie crusts, to be crushed at appropriate times.

Time has produced a picture of Mikhail Gorbachev as a man to be trusted; one with whom we can deal, as Margaret Thatcher phrased it. But we prefer the statement of Monsieur Pierre de Villemarest, expert on Soviet affairs, who said; "Gorbachev is Stalinism with computers." If one recalls what Stalin did to his own people and to the people of the world while dictator of the USSR, one can easily understand how important that statement by de Villemarest really is. As Hilaire du Berrier wrote: "American and Western liberals were prepared well in advance to embrace the team that was being formed by Andropov, kept on ice by Chernenko and put in power in March 1985. It took Gorbachev 16 weeks to move his personal team into key positions from which Soviet expansionism will now be directed. 'New world order' will be drummed into western ears until anyone who questions it will be a 'lunatic fringer.' 'Peace through trade' is going to be pushed as though Afghanistan never existed." Du Berrier was right, because between June and the end of August at least sixteen American and European commercial delegations visited Moscow. Then the visits of American appointed officials and elected Congressmen and Senators began.

If a company's purchasing agent dealt continually with an agent of the same wholesaler, knowing all the time that the wholesaler's agent was cheating him and his company on every deal that was made; one would be justified in believing that this purchasing agent was lacking in loyalty to his company, that he was in cahoots with the wholesaler's agent, or that they both were in cahoots with some third party who meant harm to both the purchaser and the wholesaler. The same can be applied to agents of the United States government in their deal-making with the Soviet Union. Perhaps even more serious than the treaty-breaking of the USSR is the fact that the American treaty-makers are in cahoots with some Power Elite that uses such treaty-making for its own profit and purposes. Secretary of State George Shultz is a Director of the Council on Foreign Relations, of which David Rockefeller is Chairman of the Board and Winston Lord was President until his recent resignation to become Ambassador to Red China. It was Winston Lord who insisted that the Trilateral Commission doesn't run the world, the Council on Foreign Relations does. And the Directors of the Council on Foreign Relations are dedicated to the goal of establishing a new economic world order as well as to the eventual merging of the United States and the Soviet Union into a One World Government. We could begin by demanding that there be no more Summits or other foreign entanglements.

THE CONSPIRACY TO KILL THE CONSTITUTION

September 17th should be honored as an important date in the history of the United States, for it was on September 17th, 1787 that our Nation became a Republic. The date should be honored as we once honored July 4th, when liberty was proclaimed throughout the land. It was on September 17th, 1787 that some very wise men completed four months of labor and produced the Constitution of the United States. A national celebration of the event is planned for two years from now, and preparations are already being made for its observance. But some groups of very powerful, influential and very dangerous people are planning to make of that 200th anniversary of our Constitution a memorial to its death. They plan to replace it with a "Newstates Constitution" which was prepared several years ago and awaits ratification at a selected and appropriate time. This, if it happens as planned, will be the second major step in the conspiracy to prepare this Nation for its place as a member state in a One World Government. The first major step occurred in 1976, on the occasion of a similar national celebration in honor of the Declaration of Independence. These dangerous groups of whom we spoke did their very best to subvert that worthy commemorative event. A historian by name of Henry Steel Commager wrote a Declaration of Interdependence and the World Affairs Council of Philadelphia (one of those dangerous groups) called for the establishment of a "new world order" and decried our national Independence as "narrow notions of national sovereignty" and "nationalistic chauvanistic nationalism." Over 120 U.S. Congressmen signed that nefarious Declaration of Interdependence, but such a furor was aroused when people heard about it that many of them withdrew their endorsements. This gave those dangerous groups evidence that it was not yet time to go all out in their determination to destroy the United States as a sovereign and independent Nation. But that merely gave more intensity to the educational program which had been designed to brainwash the American public into the acceptance of their New World Order. In 1976 the Philadelphia World Affairs Council launched a 13-year Bicentennial Era Program to promote in the schools and through the media a program to make popular "Interdependence," "globalism," and "world order." This "conditioning" program was endorsed and directed by the Aspen Institute for Humanistic Studies, and was co-sponsored by such internationalist groups as the Council on Foreign Relations, the American Assembly, the Fund for Peace, the National Education Association, the Foreign Policy Association, and, of course, the Trilateral Commission. As The Review of the News of August 14, 1985 accurately stated: "By the time the two-year Bicentennial of the U.S. Constitution rolls around (1987 through 1989), these haters of limited government intend to have orchestrated a popular 'consensus' in favor of scrapping our constitutional system for some new form of government." The article continues:

"Throughout this century, a myriad of organizations has sprung forth - usually from the ranks of the Rockefeller-dominated CFR - to promote world government. Such hoary institutions as the United World Federalists, League of Nations Association, Atlantic Union, World Constitutional Convention, and the United Nations Association readily come to mind. During the 1960s the influential Center for the Study of Democratic Institutions under Robert M. Hutchins and Paul Hoffman (CFR) brought forth a new "Constitution for a United Republics of America," and a grandiose "World Constitution," both written by New Deal Fabian Socialist Rexford Guy Tugwell. The Institute for World Order, headed by former Treasury Secretary C.

Douglas Dillon (CFR) and the World Order Models Project directed by Professor Saul H. Mendlovitz (CFR) have for years unabashedly pushed for terminating our national independence. According to Mendlovitz there 'is no longer of a question of whether or not there will be world government by the year 2000. The 1970 book Between Two Ages by Zbigniew Brzezinski proposed a new twist: political and economic merging of nations on a regional basis as a transitional stage to world government. This caught David Rockefeller's imagination and resulted in his forming the high-powered Trilateral Commission (TC) to pursue that objective." (Unquote).

These internationalists have some hurdles to jump before they can actually scrap our Constitution. First, there must be a Constitutional Convention. No such convention has ever been called since that original one which resulted in the writing of the Constitution. However, the Constitution provides that such a convention can be called if two-thirds (34) of the States pass resolutions calling for a such a convention for the purpose of "proposing Amendments to the Constitution. So the conspirators have hit upon the idea of a "Balance-the-Budget" Amendment. Many conservative groups have joined with the liberals, Fabians, Communists, and internationalists in calling for such an Amendment. So 32 of the needed 34 States have passed such resolutions. Whether they can ever reach the necessary 34 resolutions is as doubtful as was the count on the defeated Equal Rights Amendment. But the internationalists find ways of getting around the strict provisions of the Constitution when they so desire. As we shall explain later. Regardless of what the internationalists may say about limiting a Constitutional Convention to just one proposed Amendment, this is sheer nonsense. At the first and only such convention in American history, the Founding Fathers met to make amendments to the Articles of Confederation. Instead, they scrapped the Articles and produced an entirely new Constitution. This is exactly what the one worlders hope to do at this proposed second convention. Secondly, if the one worlders did succeed in offering this "Newstates" or some similar constitution, it will still be necessary for three-fourths of the States to ratify it before it can replace our honored and time-tested Constitution of the United States. So, those who hate our present Constitution will probably go right on "Amending" it to death, as they have attempted in the past. However, to add pressure and promote, there have been two new "world order" groups formed. There is the "Committee on the Constitutional System" which is composed of a group of some 200 very prominent and influential individuals representing the kind that are sometimes accepted as members of the CFR: government officials, big businessmen, international lawyers and financiers, and academics. C. Douglas Dillon, previously named, co-sponsors the group along with Lloyd N. Cutler (CFR, TC), former Counsel to President Carter. There also is the group known as Project 87 which is chaired by the liberal historian James MacGregor Burns (CFR). These groups are determined to kill or at least revise and add Amendments to the present Constitution. As one hard-line conservative said: "These one-worlders are going to hijack the Constitution one way or another if a Constitutional Convention is called.

This Committee on the Constitutional System (CCS) is a powerful and influential organization that cannot be taken lightly. Along with Lloyd Cutler and Douglas Dillon are former Defense Secretary and World Bank president Robert McNamara, former Senator J. William Fulbright, Congressman Henry Reuss, and representatives from the Rockefeller Foundation, the Brookings Institution, the Woodrow Wilson Center, the Sloan Foundation, and the University of Chicago Law School. Phyllis Schlafly, writing as National Chairman of the National Defense Committee of the D.A.R., commented: The big names of individuals and foundations involved in this project reveal what enormous power in business, finance, the media, politics, and academia is behind their plan to rewrite our Constitution. This powerful elite group is developing a plan for a constitution similar to but slightly different from the one written by Rexford Tugwell. At a Washington, D.C. news conference held on May 30, 1984, a plan was proposed for a new constitution with some of the following objectives: 1. Increase the terms of House members from two to four years, with all elections to be held in Presidential years. 2. Force all voters to cast a single vote for a package slate consisting of the President, Vice-President, and the voter's own House and Senate candidates. 3. Change a large number of House seats from election by district to election "at large" in order to increase the possibility that the political party which wins the White House will also control Congress, and that the "at large" members of the House would take a "nationwide" or "global" view of issues rather than the so-called "provincial" view of members elected directly by district. 4. Permit the President to dissolve Congress when he thinks it necessary, and call for new Congressional elections. 5. Make Senate ratification of treaties possible by a simple majority rather than a two-thirds vote. 6. Eliminate the 22nd Amendment which limits Presidents to two terms. 7. Eliminate the Electoral College. 8. Eliminate the requirement that all appropriations bills must originate in the House. 9. Give the Federal Government, instead of the State Governments, the power to regulate and supervise cities. There's much more which shows clearly that the intent of this Power Elite is to destroy all checks and balances that exist in our present Constitution, and create a European style parliamentary system which the Establishment Elite could more easily control and command. Considering all this, it's easy to understand why a Con Con must not be held.

Even without any Con Con the Establishment Elite has been able to so shape the existing Constitution so that its original intent at providing us with a Republic has become impossible. We are, unfortunately, a Democracy; something which the Founding Fathers feared and did their very best to prevent. It was a Republic we couldn't keep because the guards at our gates were asleep. A few examples:

There was the case of the Fourteenth Amendment which was never officially ratified but still remains and is accepted as a legal part of the Constitution. Back in the Great Society era when the 14th Amendment was responsible for so much civil disturbance and for the enthronement of Welfare Statism, David Lawrence, then editor and publisher of the U.S. News & World Report wrote an extended article documenting the facts of the case in regard to the 14th Amendment "that isn't a law" but is still accepted as though it were. The gist of the evidence: At the end of the shooting phase of the War Between the States, a radical Northern Congress, as punishment to the Southern States, among other punitive measures designed and demanded the ratification of what became known as the 14th Amendment. The Southern States refused to ratify. So Congress declared that those States no longer existed as States and did not belong to the Union. Military officers were placed in command of the five "military districts" that had once been States, and the freed Negroes were allowed to take over, were encouraged to go to the polls and elect Governors and Legislators of their choice. As a result, these five "military districts" again became States so they could ratify the proposed 14th Amendment. This was, of course, a clear violation of the Constitution, because only the legislatures of sovereign States may vote on Amendments. To add to the crimes against the Constitution: when the legislatures of the Northern States of New Jersey and Ohio heard of this outrage, they withdrew their ratifications. That left the proposed Amendment one vote short of ratification. Nevertheless, the Southern-hating Secretary of State declared that the unratified Fourteenth Amendment was now a part of the Constitution. A radical Congress made no objections. So, as William P. Hoar stated, "We live with that decision and its many destructive consequences to this day."

Then there is the current case of the Sixteenth, the Income Tax Amendment, which is not a law but which continues to be accepted as a part of the Constitution. Two separate investigations have been made and books have been written documenting the fact that the Sixteenth also was not ratified. Bill Benson and "Red" Beckman wrote The Law That Never Was (Constitutional Research Association, Box 550, South Holland, Ill. 60473); and Burton Linne published XVI, The Constitution's Income Tax Amendment Was Not Ratified (American Liberty Information Society, 1377 K Street N.W., #336, Washington, D.C. 20005). Both of these research groups established the fact that Secretary of State Phllander C. Knox on February 25, 1913, declared by fraud that the 16th Amendment had been ratified, knowing full well that far fewer than the necessary 36 States had ratified the proposed Amendment. For further details refer to our Reports # 22 of June 7, 1985; and # 25 of June 28, 1985.

For criminal political duplcity, consider the 25th Amendment to the Constitution, sometimes called the Rockefeller Amendment. David's brother, Nelson Rockefeller had always wanted to become President of the United States. He had tried in 1960 and again in 1964, but failed in his attempts to win the nomination. We like the way Phyllis Schlafly tells the story, and we quote: "Realizing that he would never be elected by the people or even chosen as a Presidential nominee by his party's National Nominating Convention, and belonging to that elite group of very wealthy men (with enormous tax-exempt foundations to finance their projects) who believe they are destined to rule over the rest of us, he and his friends devised another route: the 25th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution. This Amendment, for the first time in our nation's history, permitted someone to become President or Vice President by appointment rather than by the customary nomination/election process. Designed and lobbied for by Rockefeller's friends (such as Herbert Brownell), the 25th Amendment sailed through Congress and through three-fourths of the State Legislatures without significant news coverage or debate, despite the fact that it is one of the most complicated and intricate portions of our Constitution. It went into the U.S. Constitution in 1967 and was ready and available when Spiro Agnew was forced to resign as Vice President in 1973 and was replaced by the appointment of Gerald Ford. After Richard Nixon was forced to resign as President in 1974, Gerald Ford became the first (and only) man in American history to be President without being elected by the people. And then, Nelson Rockefeller achieved a large measure of his lifelong dream. He was appointed (not elected) Vice President by President Gerald Ford (who himself had been appointed, not elected).... While he was Vice President, Nelson Rockefeller....put himself on record in favor of calling a constitutional convention to make a 'national critical appraisal of the American Constitution'." (Unquote).

On Constitution Day, September 17, 1796, in his Farewell Address, President George Washington said: "Towards the preservation of your Government and the permanency of your happy state, it is requisite not only that you....resist with care the spirit of innovation upon its principles, however specious the pretexs....One method of assault may be to effect in the forms of the Constitution alterations which will impair the energy of the system, and thus undermine what cannot be directly overthrown." Our Constitution has been wounded and weakened by unratified or dangerous and unnecessary Amendments, by evasion and avoidance, and by criminal disregard. And yet it has served us well for nearly 200 years. If a constitutional convention is called in 1987 it could kill our Constitution and take us another step toward totalitarian world government. We need no new constitution; we need to restore the one we have.

AIDES ROCKS U.S.A.

"One of the biggest problems which genuine public opinion faces is that the world's office holders are less and less known in their true form. They are presented to us as actors. A great actor may portray Napoleon on the stage brilliantly without possessing the smallest knowledge of military strategy. He is an actor and we see only the actor. We know nothing of the real person behind the actor." So declared a Special Office Brief from London, which went on to remark: "Today the world's office holders are schooled by professionals, physically made up by experts, and produced on the screen by show business experts. The real person is deliberately concealed both in respect of his or her true physical appearance and as to his or her abilities. The speeches are written by professionals who themselves have no constitutional responsibility. Few, if any, statesmen now in office are capable of appearing on a public platform without make-up to deliver an explanatory speech about world affairs. Moreover questions and answers for television interviews are (for the most part) pre-arranged. The public never sees or hears the real person and cannot judge what the statesman himself really knows, believes or plans.... Only a handful of people meet in private persons holding exalted positions. They are not supposed to relate their genuine impressions or if they do are never again invited. Time and time again we learn only long afterwards that such a visitor discovered a Minister to be a mere puppet. It was only years afterward that we learnt that when still Prime Minister Churchill had little idea where he was or what the conversation was about. We were told only long afterwards where as one would have thought the British Nation was entitled to know that its Prime Minister was no longer mentally functional....Everyone concerned knew exactly what such persons as George Washington, William Pitt, Abraham Lincoln or Gladstone really were. Only a tiny inner circle has the least idea of what our contemporary public personalities are composed. If we judge from the extent of make-up and stage management the reality must leave a good deal to be desired."

With that introduction, and without mentioning the state of FDR, let us remark that the professional actor, Ronald Reagan, now acting as President of the United States, made his first prime-time television appearance since undergoing cancer surgery July 13, and talked and answered what may have been pre-arranged questions for a little more than half an hour on Tuesday, September 17th at 8 p.m., est. He quipped that he would not give Gorbachev a "friendship ring" when they meet in secret summit; he called for free trade for all; defended his past and present economic policies; said he wouldn't bargain with Gorbachev regarding "Star Wars" development; defended his sanctions against South Africa; and answered (or at least pretended to answer) some questions regarding the AIDS epidemic which now involves innocent children as well as homosexuals. The President said his administration is spending money to combat AIDS (a shortened name for Acquired Immunodeficiency Syndrome, first called GRID (Gay Related Immune Deficiency) but later changed to sound less sinful and criminal. He said that "with our budgetary constraints and all it seems to me that $126 million.... has got to be something of a vital contribution." But he didn't explain that the money was being spent to aid victims, not to halt the epidemic. When asked what may have been a pre-arranged question: "If you had younger children would you send them to a school with a child who had AIDS?" the President said he's glad he doesn't have to face that problem personally, said he can understand both sides of the problem, then added, "It is true that some medical sources have said that this cannot be communicated in any way other than the ones we already know and which would not involve a child being in school. And yet medicine has not come forth unequivocally and said, this we know for a fact that it is safe. And until they do, I think we just have to do the best we can with this problem. I can understand both sides of it." But this is no answer, he's just begging the question. AIDS is a disease that is beginning to assume epidemic proportions. 450,000 to 670,000 persons will come down with the terminal disease of AIDS in the next four years. So say those who should know. And all that is being done about it is to seek ways to cure what is admittedly an incurable disease! They seek to cure when they should be seeking to kill its spread. Dr. Paul Cameron of the Institute for the Scientific Investigation of Sexuality states: "Health officials are calling for the elimination of smoking but are reluctant to condemn homosexual acts. Moreover, toleration of the 'gay lifestyle' is being advanced in our public schools, on television, and in the movies. There are public laws in nearly every state to guard the public health against the ravages of tuberculosis. The unhealthful spread

THE PANAMANIAN LAUNDROMAT

Much previously concealed history came to light when the beheaded body of Hugo Spadafora was found under a bridge in Costa Rica near the border of Panama. Spadafora was a physician who decided to become an "internationalist guerrilla." In 1965 he fought with rebels in Portugal's African colony of Guinea. That war finished, he returned to Panama to become a friend and associate of Omar Torrijos, the strong man dictator of Panama. When Torrijos organized an "internationalist brigade" to fight in the overthrow of President Anastasio Somoza of Nicaragua, Spadafora left his post as vice minister of health under Torrijos, and commanded the rebel brigade Torrijos had created. When Torrijos died in a plane crash in 1981, Spadafora became involved in a bitter feud with the military chief who replaced Torrijos. At the time of his death, Spadafora was conducting guerrilla operations in an attempt to overthrow the present government of Panama. His death brought back memories:

For years the international banking interests in the United States had been trying to get the United States government to give the Panama Canal and the Canal Zone to Panama. There was so much popular resentment against any such move that nothing much had been accomplished until Jimmy Carter became President of the United States. At that time Sol Linowitz, member of the Council on Foreign Relations, member of the Trilateral Commission, former Ambassador to the Organization of American States, and international banker, was appointed a special negotiator for the Panama Canal and Zone Treaties with the title of Ambassador. Linowitz began talks with pro-Communist dictator Torrijos and the deal went through despite popular opposition to the give-away of American property. A similar give-away is in process now as our State Department negotiates with the Soviet Government to give away thousands of square miles of oil-rich Alaskan seabeds and five islands which belong to the United States. But that's another story we've told in previous Reports.

At the time of the Panama Canal give-away, there was much popular resentment because it seemed that the Canal which was crucial to our Navy's defense of the hemisphere, was being turned over to the Communists. But there was an even more important part of the give-away which was carefully hidden from the public. The drug traffic with South America had grown so great that there was need for a "Banker's Sanctuary" where money could be laundered. After Torrijos died, the Communist threat seemed to disappear, and the real story behind the give-away of the Canal and its Zone began to surface. The following article appearing in the British Intelligence Digest of 11 September brings the story up-to-date. We quote:

of disease from prostitution is placed under legal control by barring public solicitation and classifying it as a crime in most states. And yet, the disease called AIDS mounts to epidemic proportions as homosexuality is promoted by the media and in our public schools with 'tolerance' policies." Little or no restrictions are placed on employment of homosexuals or AIDS carriers. AIDS victims are permitted to go to school with other children. It seems that once a person acquires AIDS that person also acquires a special set of civil rights. Instead of being quarantined, the victims are protected by the law as they intermingle with people in a community.

We might recall that history records a somewhat similar situation when the disease to be feared was leprosy. We are now told that leprosy is not infectious, but in Biblical times it was feared even as AIDS is feared today. But the victim was not allowed to mingle with others, was ordered to stay "without the camp," was required to let the hair of his head go loose, to cover his upper lip, rend and tear his clothes, wear a sign and when within the hearing distance of anyone cry "Unclean,

PANAMA LAUNDERS DRUG MONEY.

In Panama, the political uncertainties and the economic stagnation continue to paint a very sobering, if not sombre, picture for the country's 2½ million population. What is more, as the day approaches when the Canal - together with its maintenance costs, operation, and defense - become the sole responsibility of Panama in December 1999, so do long-term foreign investments become progressively more difficult to attract. In 1980, long-term foreign investments amounted to $120m. In 1984 they dropped to $70m. This year, Panamanian bankers expect they will not reach the $50m mark. Yet the country is attracting another kind of investment - only short-term investment to be sure, but an infusion of capital which runs into hundreds of millions of dollars a year. This is the money of the cocaine kings of Colombia, which goes to Panama to be laundered before being directed to other parts of the world, most of it to the United States. Panama offers ideal opportunities for money launderings. Its currency is the US dollar, and it can be transferred to any part of the world as swiftly and efficiently as it can from the United States. Yet the money-laundering checks which apply in the United States do not apply in Panama. To take advantage of this and many other opportunities, more than 200 banks (from just about every corner of the earth) have established branch offices in Panama. Three major banks operating in Panama were named in the United States recently in connection with the money-laundering business. One of them is the Banco de Colombia, which until two years ago operated as a branch of the Banco de Colombia in Bogota. It has since broken all connection with its Bogota headquarters and operates under a local board of directors, but it has been permitted to maintain its Banco de Colombia name. The big money for which Panama has become a clearing house just flows in and out, except perhaps for 1% which remains as time deposits, or in checking accounts to facilitate future transactions. According to the US Drug Enforcement Administration (DEA) at least a dozen banks in Panama are involved in the money-laundering business. Most of the other banks unwittingly participate in the sinister but lucrative enterprise of moving millions of dollars around from one bank to another, until the money gets lost in the maze of corporate accounts and interlocking companies so that it becomes impossible to identify its destination. (Quoted from "Intelligence Digest," a summary of political and economic intelligence, 17 Rodney Road, Cheltenham, Glos. GL50 1HX, United Kingdom.)

Does this explain why it seemed so important to certain special interests that the Panama Canal be given away to another country, where the usual rules and regulations controlling banking activities are under the control of an accommodating government? And, if the international banking interests are so deeply involved with the big-time drug traffickers, just how is our government going to police effectively what has become America's greatest crime?

unclean." Contact with any other person was strictly forbidden. And there were no exceptions. Miriam, sister of Moses, who had watched over the ark that contained her infant brother, committed an act of insubordination, was made a leper, and was cast "without the camp" until she was healed in answer to the prayers of Moses. The difference: Lepers were often healed. But with AIDS there is no healing; not yet, anyway.

In later years and throughout history there have been plagues; bubonic plague, scarlet fever, measles, tuberculosis, typhus. In every case, until the plague was brought under control, the victims were quarantined. As a child we recall being isolated and kept out of school because of mumps. Richard Restak, a Washington neurologist, says: "Only sentimentalists refuse to make any distinction between the victims of a scourge and those not presently afflicted. Scientists are unsure why the AIDS virus targets the white blood cells that are the only indispensable element of the body's immune system. But the threat of AIDS demands from us all a discrimination based on our instinct for survival against a peril that, if not somehow controlled, can destroy society....In the presence of considerable ignorance about the causes and effects of the syndrome, the benefit of the doubt should not be given the victim of AIDS.

"This is not a civil rights issue, this is a medical issue," said Dr. Restak, adding: "To take a position that the AIDS virus must be eradicated is not to make judgments on moral or life styles. It is to say that the AIDS virus has no civil rights." (Emphasis added). However, while the medical profession is still unable to say unequivocally, in President Regan's words, "We know for a fact that it is safe," the Los Angeles City Council unanimously approved an ordinance making it illegal to discriminate against AIDS patients in regard to jobs, housing and health care. An AIDS patient may, for example, work as a dental hygienist. He may clean your teeth even if he has an unsuspected cut in one of his fingers, this despite the fact that the AIDS virus can be transmitted from bloodstream to bloodstream. The supposedly authoritative Center for Disease Control spokesmen say children with AIDS can go to public schools, but still admit that if there is a fight and blood is spilled, there is danger; that there is danger if an AIDS victim throws up, has diarrhea, or can't control his body secretions. This is a disease that is only partially understood. is presently untreatable. and is invariably fatal. To such a problem, history knows but one answer: quarantine and isolation of the victims. We spoke of leprosy as a similar syndrome. Due to great migrations during the Crusades, leprosy assumed epidemic proportions in the 13th century. To save society, leper colonies were established and such colonies and leprosariums still exist. There is such a National Leprosarium in Camille, Louisiana. We hear unconfirmed rumors of concentration areas set up by the federal government, just in case. Since there is only one solution to the problem of a disease that can become epidemic, for the general welfare and the common good.....

SAMORA THE SAME

Another of those too-frequent examples of how our national government glad-hands and gives gifts to our enemies while turning a cold shoulder to our friends, was witnessed on Thursday, September 19 when President Reagan played host to the Communist dictator, Samora Moises Machel, self-appointed president of Marxist Mozambique. On the day before the red carpet treatment was accorded this Marxist murderer, Arnaud de Borchgrave, editor-in-chief of The Washington Times, published the following editorial:

"President Reagan will host a Communist dictator this week, not one he is trying to overthrow nor one that he is cultivating as a counterforce to the Soviet Union, but Samora Machel of Mozambique. Facing overthrow by an anti-Communist insurgency, this dictator will be here to ask for help. Even more of a travesty, he will probably get it.

"Trained in Algeria and the Soviet Union, Mr. Machel took over Frelimo, the Front for the Liberation of Mozambique, shortly after a letter bomb killed its first leader, the more moderate Eduard Mondlane, in 1969. He was handed power without election when the Portuguese left Mozambique in 1975, and he moved quickly to nationalize all private buildings, churches, education, medicine, and law. Like Pol Pot (whose victory Mr. Machel hailed as a 'victory over the most cruel and bloodthirsty aggressor of our time, American imperialism'), Mr. Machel depopulated the cities and forced new settlements in the uncultivated bushland. (Mass returns to the cities occurred when these settlements failed to produce enough food.) By October of 1976 Mr. Machel controlled his own East German-trained security force, which began rounding up the politically unreliable and sending them to 'mental decolonization centers.' Those who escaped from the Ruarua concentration camp in Cabo de Delgado Province tell of daily beatings, random killings, and bodies tossed out to be eaten by hyenas.

"But Mr. Machel has changed, the State Department insists, though the change is less observable to others. Mozambique has abstained on several UN votes, but has yet to side with the US. The only other evidence is Mr. Machel's openness to Western investment and to loans from the International Monetary Fund. He's willing to accept money he so desperately needs, to be sure. But does that make him our friend - this man who is surrounded by Soviet and East German guards and advisors, has repeatedly affirmed his indissoluble ties with the Soviet Union, and has yet to breathe the word 'elections'?

"The Soviet Union is spread too thin to enable Mr. Machel to beat back the rebels; lacking an oil industry, he cannot pay for Cuban mercenaries as Angola can. So he is turning to the West, so to speak. Here he finds not lovers of freedom anxious to see his bloody regime toppled, but tycoons drooling over the commercial possibilities. We now have in Africa what we were accused of having in Central America in the '50s: 'a United Fruit Company foreign policy.' What's good for Gulf Oil, etc. A shameful week for the United States, indeed." (Unquote).

Arnaud de Borchgrave, who wrote the preceding, is a respected conservative editor who knows whereof he writes. In contrast, we have a United Press International dispatch concerning the same incident. It was published the day after Marxist Machel was entertained at the White House. The article was headlined: "Reagan Halls Mozambique President's Shift Toward West." The opening paragraphs of the story depicts all sweetness and light between two presidents; one claiming to be a conservative, the other proclaiming himself a Communist. We quote:

"Calling each other 'Amigos,' President Reagan and Marxist President Samora Moises Machel explored yesterday ways of bringing the once Soviet-dominated South African nation closer toward the West. 'Democracy and respect for fundamental human liberties are not only consistent with our values as a free people, but are also the surest pathway to economic progress, internal reconciliation and international peace,' Mr. Reagan told Mr. Machel, who helped lead a colonial revolt to independence from Portugal in 1975. Noting that his country, wracked by drought, internal violence, and a poor economy, remains 'backward and underdeveloped,' Mr. Machel said, 'We seek the participation of the United States and of its private sector' in developing Mozambique's natural resources.'

"Mr. Reagan and the Mozambique president, accompanied by top aides, held a two-hour meeting and working lunch at the White House. Mr. Reagan praised Mr. Machel for 'a sincere desire to improve the lot of his people' and told him his quest for Western investment would prove that 'the freer people are in the arena of economics, the more enterprising they become and the more society benefits as a whole.' After their departure statements outside the White House, Mr. Reagan turned toward Mr. Machel and said, 'Amigos.' Mr. Machel returned the compliment." (Unquote).

In fairness to UPI we should add that in later paragraphs, for the benefit of those who might read the article to the end, UPI did admit that "On Capitol Hill a group of Reagan's conservative allies objected to his meeting with the Marxist leader, saying the president had gotten bad advice from the State Department. Also that Sen. Malcolm Wallop, R-Wyo., announced he was introducing a bill to provide up to $5 million in aid to the pro-Western freedom fighters who are trying to topple the Machel regime." There also was mention of Mozambique's unusual country flag. These Marxist flags were flying all along Pennsylvania Avenue for all to see, and one of them was perched on the front fender of the 20-foot-long black limousine that had transported Machel and his aides as they drove to the White House to ask for American aid in defeating pro-American freedom fighters, who had a very good chance of ousting Machel if he didn't get help. The flag depicts a Soviet AK-47 rifle and a bayonet superimposed on an open book, the book being a depiction of Karl Marx's "Das Kapital." No wonder Paul Weyrich, head of the Coalition for America said it was "a sad day for those of us who support the Reagan administration," and it was "absolute nonsense" for the State Department to claim that Machel is loosening his ties with the Soviet Union and turning toward the West. The flaunting of those Communist flags along Pennsylvania Avenue should be enough to convince anyone seeing them, that Machel is just another Communist dictator seeking aid from the United States. And reasonably sure of getting aid because our State Department always seems eager to help our enemies and ignore our friends. But, as further proof of borderline treason on the part of the U.S. State Department, let's look at the record, which is not unknown to George Shultz and his CFR and TLC comrades in the Reagan administration.

After the establishment of the United Nations and the decolonization frenzy struck Africa, Portugal tried to hold onto Angola and Mozambique. When all other Nations had given up their colonial holdings, Portugal was still holding onto her's in the 1970s. The attack against Portugal at that time was somewhat similar to the present worldwide attack on South Africa, and for the same ultimate reason. As Otto Scott explains in his book, The Other End of the Rainbow: "At stake in Africa were the counters of the old game: the land, its resources, mastery over people, strategic military positions....The game in Angola and Mozambique was to gain control by whatever means: persuasion through the UN, force of arms through guerrilla movements, propaganda through the West that might persuade Western governments to allow the USSR or Mao's China to replace the Portuguese. One very important reason to gain control of Angola and Mozambique was that they were next to South Africa, and could provide jumping-off places for an invasion of the last white bastion on the continent. Very little of this sort of basic argument appeared in the Western media....The fighting that took place in Angola and Mozambique was covert but savage. Portugal was daily castigated in the UN, and by Western liberals in the press, for refusing to move with the tides of change. South Africa kept an eagle's eye on both its neighbors; changes in either could bring peril closer to Pretoria, Cape Town and Durban."

South Africa still keeps an eagle's eye on Angola and Mozambique. South African troops frequently cross over into Angola to wipe out some of those "jumping-off places" that have been created by a Communist dominated Angola. Less tension exists between South Africa and Mozambique at present because Mozambique depends on vital supplies of foodstuff, electricity, etc., from South Africa, and also because Machel's dictatorial hold over the country is weak, militarily ineffective, and is receiving less and less aid from the USSR. It is reported that over half of the land comprising Mozambique is now in the hands of freedom fighters. This is the principal reason for Machel's visit to the White House; he needs help from the US to gain Communist control over the whole country. In the 1970s much more help was given by the USSR to Frelimo, the Front for the Liberation of Mozambique. Samora Machel, Algerian and Soviet trained, was active and in 1969, when Frelimo's leader, Eduard Mondlane, was killed by a letter bomb, Marxist Machel was on the spot ready to take charge. Then when the Portuguese finally gave up the fight to save their colonies, Machel immediately declared himself to be president of the new "peoples republic." This without benefit of election. No election has been held since Machel took charge, although one is promised for sometime next year.

One of the first things Machel did in 1975 was ask for a security force to protect him from possible assassination. The Soviets responded by sending him a well-trained East German security force. Surrogate forces have been added since that time and intelligence sources estimate that at the present time there are in Mozambique about 2,000 Cubans, 500 East Germans, 1,000 Soviets, 3,000 Libyans, and a unit of Ethiopian pilots who fly the Soviet-supplied MIGs. It seems that the USSR can supply Machel with manpower, but not with sufficient money needed to support the forces and his very expensive government. Also, since Machel became dictator, some 300,000 men, women and children have been herded into prison camps, or executed. Over 2,000 children have been sent to Cuba for special training. Over 75,000 political opponents have been killed.

In order to make it appear that Machel has really had a change of heart and is leaning toward the West, some names have been changed. The re-education camps are now said to be model villages. Operation Production, the original name for the resettlement of people in the bushlands, is now likened to a kind of summer vacation. But everything remains nationalized and under strict control, including the media, education, medicine, churches, industry, you name it and you'll find it nationalized.

Out of the Mouth of Machel would be an appropriate title for a full page protest against President Reagan's hosting of Communist dictator Machel, published by "The Conservative Caucus." The protest assumes that President Reagan was badly served by his State Department and asks why George Shultz did not give him the whole story on Samora Machel. The assumption is questionable because President Reagan probably knew all about Machel before he was invited to the White House. Furthermore, at a time when New York City is filled with Communist and pro-Communist leaders who are meeting at the United Nations General Assembly sessions, it is significant that of all the Communist leaders who might have been invited to visit President Reagan, the dictator of the nation bordering the Republic of South Africa should have been so honored. Machel controls those "jumping-off places" in case open invasion of South Africa is attempted. In any case, the quotations from Chairman Samora provide definite proof of Machel's affiliations: "Samora the same;" a Communist asking for help from the United States in order to help destroy the United States. Here are a few of those direct quotes:

* "Field Marshal Samora Machel, the chairman of the Frelimo Party and president of the People's Republic of Mozambique, has sent the warmest and most fraternal greetings to Konstantin Chernenko, secretary general of the CPSU and the chairman of the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet of the Soviet Union....President Samora Machel reiterated his conviction that the ties of fraternal friendship, militant solidarity, and cooperation already existing between the two parties, peoples, and states would continue to develop even further in support of peace and the progress of the peoples of Mozambique and the USSR." (Federal Broadcast Information Service, Oct. 1, 1984).

* "Our country gives its political, moral and diplomatic support to the ANC of South Africa, SWAPO, the Polisario Front, the Revolutionary Front for an Independent East Timor, and all peoples who in various parts of the world, particularly in Latin America, the Caribbean, and Asia, struggle for independence, defense of their revolutionary gains, peace, justice, and progress. Our people have been waging a vigorous struggle to attain the independent and peaceful reunification of Korea, the holding of tripartite talks in order to frustrate the actions of the American imperialists and their lackeys, who are determined to 'fabricate' two Koreas, and prepare the groundwork for the peaceful reunification of the country." (FBIS March 6, 1985).

* "Imperialist aggression....has not separated the people from their party and nation, and it has not shaken our determination to defend and preserve the Mozambican socialist fatherhood. As a Frontline country which gloriously knew colonial oppression and knows the importance of the solidarity of peoples, we supported the liberation struggle of the Zimbabwean people, as well as the just struggle of the South African people led by the ANC and the Namibian people led by SWAPO." (FBIS July 1, 1985).

* "The Frelimo Party and the Communist Party of Cuba (PCC) signed in Havana yesterday an accord of cooperation in the field of propaganda." (FBIS Dec. 3 1984).

* "President Samora Machel yesterday congratulated Andrey Gromyko for his election as chairman of the USSR Presidium of the Supreme Soviet....The Mozambican leader stated that during these ten years of independence the Mozambican people - who are the victims of various forms of imperialist aggression - have seen with satisfaction that the friendship between the Mozambican and Soviet peoples is indestructible." (FBIS July 31, 1985).

There is continuity: Franklin Roosevelt's "Some of my best friends are communists;" Harry Truman's references to "Uncle Joe;" Ronald Reagan's "Amigos." But there also is a mounting protest, a spiritual resurgence, a political awakening: demands that we get out of the UN, the tax rebellion, support for farm families; all these and more, and a slow awakening to the remembrance that governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed, and that "whenever any form of government becomes destructive of these ends," it is the right of the people to reform it and restore its original Constitutional form and structure. If God be for us....

XXXX FOR ADULTS ONLY

The sealed brown envelope bore this printed warning: "Caution! Please don't allow school age children to read the contents of this letter." We opened the envelope and found another sealed envelope inside it. Printed on it in big, black letters was yet another warning: "XXXX - FOR ADULTS ONLY." We opened this second envelope and found the letter, typed on a legal size sheet of paper. We glanced toward the end of the letter and found that Beverly LaHaye had signed it. As head of "Concerned Women for America," she and her group have done outstanding work in the fight against pornography, adultery, sex education in the schools, secular humanism, and all the other unChristian and antiChristian activities that have infested our society. Since this letter was written by Beverly LaHaye, it would be important, and she probably needed help. So we decided to reprint her letter. We hope Beverly approves, for she neither requested it nor did we ask her permission to reprint the letter. However, we do take a slight exception to her notes of warning. With regret we believe that the things Beverly discusses in the first part of her letter are things already known to most children who attend government (public) schools. It is the parents and grown-ups that will be shocked, especially at the second half of her letter. So, with the extra spacing between sentences and paragraphs as in the original (necessary for emphasis), this is what Beverly LaHaye wrote.

* * * * *

Dear Friend,

What would you do if there were a female sex education teacher (who was also the girls' swim coach) in your local public school who did any of the following things?

- * The teacher had the girls' swimming team swim in the nude in the school gym - on one occasion a male was present.
- * She required members of the girls' swimming team to practice without their bathing suits if they arrived late in class.
- * The teacher encouraged the kind of relationship with the girls on her team where they bought her adult-oriented, sexually-deviant gifts.
- * She frequently used foul language in class, for example, on the first day of one class, she told the students, "You all look like s."
- * In a co-ed sex education class, she required boys and girls to hold hands and repeat slang expressions for sex acts.
- * In a mixed class, the teacher directed the students to use slang terms for women's breasts.
- * She compelled girls to sit on her lap and kiss her.
- * She read pornographic books on masturbation to her co-ed sex education class.
- * The teacher described in detail physical positions for homosexual acts.
- * She told students that homosexuality is preferred to heterosexuality because homosexuals spend more time with each other when having sex.

* The teacher required the students to play "charades" and act out slang expressions for sex.

*She advocated in class the legalization of prostitution.

*She told students that sex outside of marriage was acceptable as long as they used contraceptives.

* She told students that abortion was appropriate and was only another form of contraception.

* She divided a co-ed class and assigned one side the responsibility of debating for homosexuality and the other side debating against it, regardless of the students' personal beliefs. The teacher had just finished a section where she had emphasized the merits of homosexuality.

*She encouraged students to come to her with all their problems and told them that they could come to her house if they wanted to get drunk.

If you had a public school teacher like this in your area, you would be outraged. I am confident that you would take whatever steps of action you could to try to put a stop to this kind of influence upon your children and the children in your city.

As you have probably figured out by now, these examples are not hypothetical. According to students in the Red Lion (Pennsylvania) School District, their sex education teacher, Marlene Stein, did all of these things and more.

The parents were outraged when these things came to light! Pastors and other Christian leaders helped to rally the people in support of the parents. Together they began to circulate a petition to ask the school board to conduct an investigation and to remove the teacher from her position. Hundred of citizens signed the petition - mothers, fathers, grandmothers, grandfathers, interested citizens, neighbors - people just like you and me.

Based on the advice of the school district lawyer, the school board refused to take any advice against the tenured teacher by a unanimous vote.

The teacher did not consider herself fortunate to get away with all of this. No, she not only continued her practices, she also struck back and sued 113 people who had participated in the effort to speak up for what is right. She is suing these citizens for exercising their constitutional right to Petition for a Redress of Grievances. She claims that they have invaded her privacy, defamed her character, and interfered in her teaching contract. She sued a grandmother in her eighties who did nothing more than sign the petition to the school board. She sued pastors who responsibly spoke out in the community. She sued parents who were acting to protect their children. She sued a Christian television station for broadcasting the news of this situation.

This teacher's brazen actions cannot go unchallenged. I don't believe that we can leave these citizens unprotected and maintain our motto, "Protecting the rights of the family through prayer and action." If there were ever a time for us to stick together as Christian people throughout the nation, it is in this situation, Concerned

OOPS!!! In last week's Don Bell Reports we committed two errors; humbling errors because both were due to carelessness and inattention to the titles of the original texts from which we were quoting. Towards the bottom of page two we gave a wrong title to a book by Otto Scott. We called it "The Other End of the Rainbow." The real name of the book is "The Other End of the Lifeboat." Again, on page four we quoted from several items which we credited to the "Federal Broadcast Information Service." The correct name is the "Foreign Broadcast Information Service." Sorry.

Women for America has agreed to defend the vast majority of these defendants. There are a few who have hired their own counsel, such as the local secular media. We are presently defending approximately ninety of the defendants – parents, pastors, concerned citizens, and the grandmother in her eighties who signed the petition. Because of the numbers of people involved, the cost of this case is going to be staggering. Our team of attorneys have already spent countless hours interviewing the defendants and preparing pretrial motions and defenses. A law firm in Pennsylvania which examined the case before we took it, estimated the cost to exceed $250,000 to defend this case.

I want to ask your help in three ways.

First, I want to ask that you would pray for those involved. Pray that God would shield and protect these Godly people who have spoken up for righteousness.

Second, since a petition to investigate and remove the teacher was the source of the lawsuit, our right to petition is at stake. I have asked Michael Farris, our general legal counsel, to draft a petition to the Red Lion School Board, which would allow you to express your concern without getting all of us added to the lawsuit. I have enclosed this petition. If you believe that these kind of charges should be investigated and appropriate action taken, then please sign the petition and return it to us. At the appropriate time, we will see to it that the petitions are delivered to the school board to show them that the American Christian public backs people who stand up for righteousness.

Third, I want you to prayerfully consider giving the best gift that you can to CWA's Education and Legal Defense Foundation to enable us to pay for this case. Please give generously. Let me remind you what is at stake. We are not merely defending the right of Christians to speak out against unrighteousness. We are not merely opposing a radical and immoral style of teaching. We are protecting children from immoral indoctrination which could destroy them. Please pray, return the petition, and give generously. Your friend, (signed) Beverly LaHaye.

We cannot reproduce the petition sent us. But we can give you its text:

Re: Marlene Stein, Sex Education Teacher

We believe that immorality should never be taught to the public school students in this country. When this happens, it not only affects the local community, it also filters throughout our country as people move and act after they leave school.

We believe that the situation involving Marlene Stein merits your most thorough investigation. If you find immoral teaching and handling of young people, we respectfully urge that you take swift and decisive action.

In the gradual deterioration and potential destruction of American education and Christian morality, this is a new tactic: A radical and immoral sex education teacher being able to use the courts to sue 113 people who are standing up for decency and righteousness and the protection of children, because she says they have invaded her privacy, defamed her character, and interfered with her teaching. The fact that such a case can be taken to court and treated seriously under such circumstances seems a sad commentary on the state of American jurisprudence. It is supposed that this teacher can do this against Christians, parents and concerned citizens, because she has tenure. The NEA, education's Trojan Horse which boasts that it is the biggest labor union in the country, has been able to establish a system which makes it almost impossible to discharge a teacher if that person has worked as a teacher in a public (government) school for three years or more. This same tenure system applies to the entrenched federal bureaucracy which actually runs our country. No matter how bad a person may be, either morally or as a worker, that person is generally safe on the job until retirement or voluntary resignation. And Marlene Stein has tenure. Therefore the court is on her side. This makes the defense of those Christian parents and concerned citizens that much more difficult, and costly.

This gradual destruction of American education and Christian morality began with Horace Mann and the Unitarians. There was help from the Hegelian doctrines which also aided Karl Marx in his preparation of the Communist Manifesto. Then came the theories of Charles Darwin, and finally the Leninist ideals and "progressive" teachings of men like John Dewey. But not all Americans have been asleep to what has been happening to the government schools. There has been a constant warfare, but with NEA winning most of the battles. Things came to something of a crisis when, in April 1983, a National Commission on Excellence in Education published an alarming report, "A Nation at Risk: The Imperative for Educational Reform." This official report predicted very dire consequences for our nation unless immediate and widespread reform was carried out. The report stated that "the educational foundations of our society are presently being eroded by a rising tide of mediocrity that threatens our very future as a nation and a people." This ignited a flurry of activity on the part of State legislatures and Boards of Education. Some changes were made to improve education. But for the most part, the cry was for more money to do more of the same things that had wrecked the schools in the first place. Meanwhile, with the public alerted, the NEA became desperate, because the public had answered with the unprecedented establishment of private and church related schools. Steps were taken to get all of such schools under strict government control. There was the case of the padlocking of a church in Nebraska, the jailing of the pastor and the parents of the children attending the school. As has happened often in such cases, the government won the first rounds in the battle; but when the victims persevered and stood their ground, they finally won out. We hear that the pastor involved in this particular case is now thinking about running for governor to "complete the cleanup."

Then came the attack on those parents who chose home schooling for their children. But in spite of government pressure and the jailing of some parents, home schooling has become "the wave of the future," and the parents who insist their children are theirs and not the State's, are winning. However, that Tree of Liberty demands the blood of patriots if it is to survive. And the time has come when citizens, instead of worrying about the survival of their fortunes, had better worry about the survival of their country and the fate of their children.

WRONGS OF THE NEW RIGHT

This world war in which we are presently engaged is being fought on three fronts: Economic, Financial, and Military. The economic front involves the death of family farms and small businesses and their merger into agribusinesses and multinationals, the crossing of national boundaries as seen in the establishment of Japanese industries within the United States, and the present war against South Africa which aims to destroy its private enterprise and small business and establish monopoly control of industry, society and government.

The financial front involves efforts to create a similar worldwide money monopoly. Its principal proponents have been maneuvering for weeks to create a battle plan. On October 1 Treasury Secretary James Baker called a secret meeting which was attended by Federal Reserve Board Chairman Paul Volcker and officials of the five largest U.S.-based banks: Bank of America, Manufacturers Hanover, Citibank, Morgan Guarantee, and Chase Manhattan. All we really know about what happened was the suggestion that Paul Volcker should become president of the World Bank as soon as A.W. Clausen's term expires next July. This would seem to indicate that the World Bank is to become a Global Central Bank in fact as well as name, and that redistribution of the world's wealth will be one of its principal tasks. That meeting ended, they all flew to Seoul, Korea, where money ministers of 148 countries have been meeting. Arriving in Seoul, James Baker said he had a three-point program to present which would call for the IMF, the World Bank, and the International Banks cooperating in the making of some $20 billion in new loans to deal with the developing countries' debt problems. The Big Banks are already in trouble, and if they are to loan more billions to countries that can't even pay the interest on present loans, one wonders what the outcome will be. Complications arise when it is realized that comparative upstart James Baker heads the important American delegation to this IMF-World Bank meeting; at a time when the United States has admitted itself to be a debtor nation, and when checks issued by the government would bounce if Congress didn't approve a new borrowing which will bring the national debt to two trillion dollars.

More in the headlines at this time is the military phase of this world war, which is being manifested in terrorist activity, the latest incident being the hijacking of an Italian cruise ship, the Achille Lauro. In this terrorist phase of this world war the central battle front remains the Middle East and the Mediterranean. In this type of warfare the Israeli government seems to be the only government that knows what to do about terrorist attacks, and does it. In this they deserve respect, not condemnation. However, the Israeli government acts only when Israeli nationals or Israeli interests are directly involved. For example, although the 747 incident revolved around the demand that Shi-ite prisoners of war be released by Israel, since no Israeli personnel or interests were directly involved, Israeli officials simply stood by, released prisoners according to their own schedule, while President Reagan and his State Department figuratively wrung their hands and expressed sympathy for the American victims directly involved. The same has been true of the most recent hijacking of the Achille Lauro. It was an Italian ship sailing from an Egyptian port. Citizens of many nations, especially the Italian crew and the American passengers, were involved and faced possible murder. Again, the hijacking involved a demand that Israel release certain Palestinian prisoners, but no Israeli nationals were directly involved; no Israeli interests were directly involved, so Israel remained non-involved.

On the other hand, whenever Israeli interests are directly involved, it seems to matter not who will suffer if anyone or anything gets in its way. For example, during the so-called Six-Day War in 1967, there was an American intelligence-gathering ship, the USS Liberty, in the general area but not in the war zone. Molshe Dayan, then Israeli Defense Minister, may have thought that the Liberty might pick up intelligence harmful to the Israeli effort, and he ordered that the ship be destroyed. Although it had no weapons other than light machine guns, was flying an American Flag that was clearly visible in broad daylight, the Liberty was attacked, and it was certainly no accident. One report reads: "On June 8, 1967, at 2:00 p.m., all hell broke loose. Three Mirage fighter planes headed straight for the Liberty, their rockets taking out the forward machine guns and wrecking the ship's antennae. The Mirages were joined by the Mystere fighters, which dropped napalm on the bridge and deck, and repeatedly strafed the ship. The attack continued for over 20 minutes. In all, the ship received 821 holes in her sides and decks. Of these, more than 100 were rocket size. As the aircraft departed, three torpedo boats took over the attack, firing five torpedoes, one of which tore a 40-foot hole in the hull, killing 25 sailors. The ship was in flames, dead in the water, listing precariously, and taking water. The crew was ordered to prepare to abandon ship. As life-rafts were lowered into the water, the torpedo boats moved closer and shot them to pieces. One boat concentrated machine-gun fire on rafts still on deck as crewmen tried to extinguish the napalm fires. Petty Officer Charles Rowley declared, 'They didn't want anyone to live.' At 3:15 the last shot was fired, leaving the vessel a combination morgue and hospital. The ship had no engines, no power, no rudder. Fearing further attack, Captain McGonagle, despite severe leg injuries, stayed at the bridge." (Quoted from Chapter 6 of "They Dare To Speak Out" by former Congressman Albert Findley). In this unprovoked attack on the USS Liberty, 34 U.S. Sailors were killed, 171 injured. But almost no news of the attack, or of the miracle of the survival of a part of the crew, was ever published by the controlled communications media in the United States. The excuse given: President Johnson was afraid of losing the "Jewish vote" in the next election. Admiral Thomas Moorer, former chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff is quoted as saying: "I've never seen a President - I don't care who he is - stand up to them (the Israelis). It just boggles your mind."

WHY NOT SANCTIONS AGAINST THE USSR?

To prevent a potential veto by Congress, President Reagan announced his own sanctions against South Africa. While this potential stalemate between the Administration and the Congress was developing, Senator Malcolm Wallup moved an amendment which would apply similar sanctions to the Soviet Union and other Communist states. His amendment was, of course, rejected, 57-37, but he did tell the senators what most of us would like to tell all the congressmen and senators and administrators in Washington. Here are excerpts from his remarks in the Senate.

I cannot understand why the sponsors of this resolution do not threaten economic war on the world's worst offenders instead of on its lesser offenders. Why do they not threaten economic war on the nations that sponsor terrorism against Americans or are preparing to make war upon us? The world's worst offenders against human rights are the Soviet Union, as well as other Communist countries and other dictatorships along with them....Who in here will argue that....South Africa deserves to be singled out for United States economic warfare? Take Zimbabwe. The power of the government over its people is secured by punitive battalions trained and advised by North Korean specialists in punitive anti-civilian operations. Let's take a look at Ethiopia, another country that the managers of this resolution and its sponsors are not willing to threaten economically. Are blacks better off in Ethiopia than they are in South Africa? Listen to the State Department's human rights report from 1984: "Persons expressing opposition to the regime or who are believed not to support it are routinely arrested by security police and subjected to torture in varying degrees. Some executions have been reported as well. The individual citizen enjoys no legal protection and may be detained at any time, and be held indefinitely without any prospect of trial." Do the managers of this bill think that the situation in Ethiopia is preferable to the situation in South Africa? If not, why is not Ethiopia covered in this bill?....What about Mozambique? The Cuban-led forces and the North Korean trained punitive battalions there are fighting a war against the population. Yet the Foreign Relations Committee votes out economic aid for the regime, money with which it can get bullets to shoot its own civilians. What about Angola, whose rulers would not last a day without their Cuban army, a puppet regime and as cruel and oppressive a regime as the world has ever seen, a regime from which blacks flee to go live and work in South Africa? Let me ask the distinguished members of the Foreign Relations Committee why they threaten economic sanctions not on the countries which black refugees flee from but on the one country that the black refugees flee to.....

In a review of Findley's book, Christian News, published weekly by Lutheran News, Inc., a non-profit organization, Box 168, New Haven MO 63068, the reviewer states: "AIPAC - The American Israel Public Affairs Committee - is now the preeminent power in Washington lobbying, says Paul Findley, a congressman from Illinois for twenty-two years in his recently published They Dare To Speak Out.... Findley's re-election campaign became the principal target of Israel's lobby. Findley, who was eventually defeated writes: 'I did not realize how deeply the roots of Israeli interest had penetrated U.S. institutions.' Findley shows how both conservative and liberal congressmen compromise their principles to satisfy Israel's lobby. The former congressman writes: 'AIPAC is only a part of the Israeli lobby, but in terms of direct effect on public policy it is clearly the most important.... It is no overstatement to say that AIPAC has effectively gained control of virtually all of Capitol Hill's action on Middle East policy.... When a lobby stifles free speech nationally on one controversial topic - the Middle East - all free speech is threatened'."

* * * * *

It is said that American foreign policy toward the Middle East is controlled by the Zionist Lobby, especially its American Israel Public Affairs Committee. There is a precedent. During most of the first half of this century American foreign policy was greatly influenced, almost controlled, by the British Foreign Office and its associated financial institution known as "The City." The facts are spelled out in Carroll Quigley's book, "The Anglo-American Establishment," and his "Tragedy and Hope." There was the dream of a world government controlled by the English speaking Nations. The Rhodes Secret Society followed by the Rhodes Scholarship plan; the Round Table; Milner's groups; the Pilgrim Society; the English Speaking Union; and others; all headquartered in England and influencing United States foreign policy. The Council on Foreign Relations began as a subsidiary of the Royal Institute of International Affairs. It might be said that the United States entered World War I to save England, and entered World War II to establish Communism as a Hegelian antithesis to Capitalism. Slowly over the years that British domination began to be transferred to New York and Washington, so that the European-born Bilderberger Group came under the control of the Rockefeller interests, "Union Now" had its headquarters in the United States. The Atlantic Alliance was an American creation, as was NATO. Then came the Trilateral Commission in which American independence was to become subservient to multinational interdependence. But it all began when American foreign policy was greatly influenced by the British Establishment.

And now we have a somewhat similar situation in that American foreign policy toward the Far East is controlled by a group representing a foreign government. Paul Findley writes: "Whether based on fact or fancy, the perception is what counts: The American Israel Public Affairs Committee (AIPAC) means power - raw, intimidating power. Its promotional literature regularly cites a tribute published in The New York Times: 'The most powerful, best run and effective foreign policy interest group in Washington.' A former Congressman, Pete McCloskey puts it more directly: 'Congress is terrorized by AIPAC.' Other Congressmen have not been so candid on the public record, but many House and Senate members privately agree. Over the years the pro-Israel lobby has thoroughly penetrated this nation's governmental system....In the 1984 elections, by July 1, pro-Israel PACs had distributed $1.49 million to Senate candidates and $684,465 to House candidates." Findley then quotes Thomas A. Dine, AIPAC's executive director as saying after AIPAC's 1982 election achievements: 'Because of that, American Jews are thus able to form our own foreign policy agenda.' Later, when he reviewed the 1984 election results, Dine credited Jewish money, not votes: 'Early money, middle money, late money'." Dine claimed credit for defeating three Senators who had voted for the sale of AWACs to Saudi Arabia. He said these successes "defined Jewish political power for the rest of this century." Israel receives one-fourth of all U.S. foreign aid, and many Congressmen feel uncomfortable being recorded as favoring it. But, intimidated by Israel's friends, they are even less comfortable being recorded in opposition. Says Findley: "How much of the lobby's power is real, and how much illusion, is beside the point. Because they perceive it as real, few Congressmen wish to take the chance.

Something which strengthens immeasurably the political power of the Israeli lobby is the attitude of those that many people call "Christian Zionists." Before the establishment of the political state called Israel, people spoke of Christian values, Christian traditions, Christian morality, etc. Nowadays whenever the word is used in any such sense, it carries a hyphen: Judeo-Christian! That prefix is seen before the word Christian in almost every religious reference. Says Findley: "Fundamentalists and evangelical groups have been active in this campaign....Jerry Falwell and Pat Robertson proselytize tirelessly for ever-increasing backing of Israel....Radio and television broadcasters Jim Bakker, Kenneth Copeland, Oral Roberts, Jim Swaggart and others routinely proclaim the sanctity of Israel through scriptural quotations, usually from the Old Testament, and then reinforced with political and strategic arguments supplied by the broadcaster. Falwell has declared: "I don't think America could turn its back on the people of Israel and survive. God deals with nations in relation to how those nations deal with the Jew."

There is much talk about that fallacious doctrine called separation of Church and State. But where Israel is concerned, all holds are barred. One wonders when, if ever, we'll have an Administration that bases its foreign policy on American interests, not those of a foreign nation. As for the alleged religious implications involved, in its reference to Paul Findley's "They Dare To Speak Out," Christian News advises: "Every preacher and theologian, particularly Fundamentalists, in the U.S. should read this book. It contains thousands of facts and hundreds of footnotes." We might also recommend that they re-read St. Paul's description of the New Jerusalem.

"WE DARE TO PROTEST"

In one of the last articles written by Taylor Caldwell at the end of a brilliant career she signed off with the following statement:

"...many of us still dare to protest and will continue to do so while God gives us breath. To be effective we know we must direct our attacks on the real criminals, the wealthy and powerful and the secret elite of the world - the conspirators laboring day and night to enslave us. Even our own government is now their victim. For it is the conspiratorial elite who choose our rulers, nominate them and remove them by assassination or smear. I have fought these enemies of liberty in every book I have written. But too few have listened to me, as too few have listened to others who have warned of the conspirators. The hour is late. Americans must soon listen and act - or endure the black night of slavery that is worse than death."

What is the nature of this conspiracy about which Taylor Caldwell speaks? After decades of research and inspired writing she explains in her article from which we quote. Words, phrases and sentences in parenthesis are direct quotes.

"With the rise of the industrial civilization in the world about 200 years ago, there also arose a social body which we know as the middle class. Before that most of the world suffered under a system in which people were slaves of their government. But this middle class formed a buffer between the slaves and despotic governments. The middle class made the dream of liberty possible, set the limits on governmental privilege and tyranny, demanded that rulers obey the just laws as closely as the people, and enforced a general civic morality." Taylor explains that the self-chosen elite that had ruled the nations through their governments, realized that they were threatened. "Little wonder that the elite hated the middle class which challenged them in the name of 'God-given liberty.' Clearly, if the elite were to rule again, the middle class had to be destroyed."

"In the early 19th century this elite looked for a way to regain its power and extort tribute from the people, and destroy the burgeoning middle class...Through the 'League of Just Men' elitists conspirators sought a fanatic to cloak the point of their purpose in slogans and cant. The man they hired was Karl Marx. Certainly Marx was no laborer...he hated the middle class which he contemptuously called 'the bourgeoisie.'...He did not attack the waiting despots - no indeed for they were of one mind with him...Marx was made to order by the self-styled elite. They financed his sedition all over Europe and in America...and the plan began to succeed...He called for the redistribution of wealth. Not wealth from the elite, with their vast fortunes in every country of the world - inherited fortunes, which could not be taxed as income - but wealth from the strong middle class...Only earned income would be vulnerable to seizure.

"The rest is sad contemporary history. Few in America heeded what Thomas Jefferson had said long ago, that when we are taxed on our earned incomes, in our food and drink, in our coming and going, in our property, we would face the return of slavery and the re-establishment of an all-powerful and despotic elite. So it is that we of the middle class are being destroyed in an ever-increasing power and despotism of a central government controlled by a conspiratorial elite, and in everlasting wars to subdue us and drive us to our knees. Do not believe for an instant that the world's conspiring elite in every nation have so much as a serious quarrel among them. They have just one object: control through tribute....And they use wars for their purposes just as they use inequities, harassments, bullying, capriciousness and extortion of their graduated income tax....Behind this attack are the self-styled elite, secure in their own power and riches. Most of them have huge fortunes which are tax exempt. But every man and woman of us - we of the middle class - are taxed in our food and drink, in our property, in our incomes, in our comings and goings....But many of us still dare to protest....!!"

* * * * *

Perhaps the most important single statement made by Taylor Caldwell in this article is something so few people understand: The elitists hired Karl Marx, not to attack them, but to attempt to destroy their mutual enemy, the middle class which Marx called the bourgeoisie. It is seldom stressed that Marx's closest friend and collaborator was Frederick Engels, son of a wealthy Flemish textile manufacturer, a man who was a lifelong socialist but at the same time pretended to be a member of the self-styled elite. Without Engels' support, Marx could never have become so infamous. Engels helped write the Communist Manifesto and assisted in many other works, including Das Kapital. He was especially important in adapting Hegel's dialectics to the Communist program. But most important of all, Engels financed Marx, supported his family, made it possible for Marx to devote his full time to writing Communist theses. The only salary Karl Marx ever received on a steady basis apparently came from a regular column he wrote proclaiming the alleged merits of Communism in Horace Greeley's New York Tribune.

As a hireling of the elitists Marx was author of the policies that brought to the United States the graduated income tax, inheritance taxes, the public school system, the central banking system, plans for the redistribution of the wealth of the middle class in our unconstitutional federal welfare programs and other programs that have a Communist origin.

After Marx died, elitists took his Hegelian Dialectics into international areas probably never dreamed of by Marx or Hegel. The elitists determined to set up a Communist empire which would serve as

BOY SCOUTS NOW DENY GOD OFFICIALLY

Irving, Texas (UPI) - The Boy Scouts of America said Saturday (Oct. 12) it has changed its rules on religion and readmitted a West Virginia teenager who was denied the rank of Life Scout because he does not believe in God or a supreme being. Paul Trout, 15, of Shepherdstown, W. VA., was reinstated Thursday after officials at the organization's national headquarters in Irving agreed to delete language from the organization's literature that defines God as a supreme being, Boy Scout spokesman Raul Chavez said. The Boy Scout officials also decided to instruct local troops not to question their members about specific religious beliefs, Chavez said. Trout was denied the Life Scout rank by his local troop in Charlottesville, Va., last April after he told a review board that he did not believe in God or a supreme being. Life Scout is scouting's second highest rank below Eagle Scout.

an antithesis to the free enterprise system which they called capitalism, and which had developed out of the industrial revolution and Adam Smith's The Nature and Causes of the Wealth of Nations. They popularized, and everyone accepted, the term capitalism, to hide their own monopoly capitalism, then they financed Communism as an opponent of Capitalism; with the elitists playing one against the other to attain their own ends. Hence the ever-increasing wars which Taylor Caldwell mentioned.

In all of this the important thing to remember is that Communism is employed by the elite to destroy their common enemy: free enterprise as has been developed by the middle class.

A current example of how Elitism and Communism work together to gain their ends can be seen in the situation in South Africa. While the so-called capitalist nations are busy enacting sanctions against the Republic of South Africa, not a word is spoken of sanctions against The USSR, China, or Nations supporting terrorism. Only sanctions against South Africa are ever mentioned. Meanwhile, our supposed enemy, the USSR is taking steps to help the Elitists destroy free enterprise in South Africa. In cooperation with the elitists, the International Communists are moving ships and troops into the area, and taking unreported diplomatic steps that are generally not reported by the elitist-controlled media. Allen Keyte, well-informed editor of the independent World Affairs Review reports in his October 15 issue: "What is the Soviet Union up to in the region? If you believe that it is an accident that the Soviet fleet seems to be intensifying in the area, then you have not been reading my reports over the last year or so. The new nerve centre for Soviet action in South Africa has moved right into the middle of the country. The location is Maseru, capital of Lesotho (formerly Basutoland), where it has recently opened up an embassy. Lesotho is an independent state situated right in the middle of South Africa, some 200 miles from Johannesburg and 600 miles from Cape Town. The ambassador is Vladimir Ivanovich Gavryushkin, who is NOT a diplomat but a senior official of the International Department of the Soviet Communist Party...The International Department, and not the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, controls Soviet policy abroad. In fact so senior and important is this Department that it actually controls most of the KGB's overseas activities...Rather like Gorbachev he (Gavryushkin) is soft spoken and utterly ruthless. Clearly he will not be concentrating his efforts on Soviet relations with the 1.25M population of Lesotho...Gavryushkin together with other associates throughout Southern Africa are working day and night on plans to make South Africa ungovernable. They believe they have already achieved a great deal by getting the world media to support the total destruction of apartheid immediately" (World Affairs Review, 98 Malleon Rd., Gotherington, Cheltenham, Glos GL52 4EY, U.K.)

CONCLUSION: While the USSR prepares Communist leaders to take over the South African government, the USA and Western Nations enact sanctions and boycotts, so the present South African government "will fall but without it being apparent that it was pushed."

We'll try to make it the last of its kind. Don and Ginny.

Some examples of how the elitists utilize Capitalist-Communist collaboration to advance their plans are more obvious than the hidden collaboration against South Africa. Take Angola as an example. While Jonas Savimba's UNITA (Freedom Fighters) battle to regain control of his country from the puppet communist regime now enslaving the people, Gulf Oil Co. is pumping about $1.5 billion annually into the pockets of those communist leaders. $900 million of that money goes to pay the Cuban troops who are "protecting" the interests of Gulf Oil and helping to keep the puppet communist regime in power. Another example? Communist controlled Mozambique provides a sanctuary for the ANC terrorists that are causing most of the racial turmoil in South Africa. Recently President Reagan arranged for a loan to Mozambique, money which will aid that country in its attacks on South Africa. Yet another example? While the USSR is committing genocide in Afghanistan, we continue to trade with and give aid to the USSR, never even thinking of enacting sanctions against the USSR, as we have done against the Republic of South Africa. At the same time, President Reagan is asking the Senate to ratify that genocide treaty which the communist nations violate daily, both at home and abroad.

But the greatest of all collaborations between Capitalism and Communism has been occurring this past week as the United Nations celebrated its 40th birthday. Communist controlled from the very beginning, its New York "world capital" buildings and land were donated by the Rockefeller family. Communist dominated and Capitalist supported (at taxpayer expense), the UN is little more than a sanctuary for foreign spies who are here to destroy the United States. Former New Hampshire Governor Meldrim Thomas, Jr., spoke at a Sept. 21 symposium of conservatives and patriots, where he was the featured speaker. He received a standing ovation when he concluded with these words:

"Here, friends, is one of the great problems of the world today: namely, that monstrous organization, the United Nations, conceived in deceit, born in fraud on October 24, 1945 in San Francisco, and nurtured in large part for four decades by the taxpayers of America. This evil collection of worldwide misfits and international welfare cheats hasn't even won a war, hasn't produced a dime's worth of value, and hasn't alone secured ten minutes of peace in any corner of the world. Most Americans believe that the world would be a better place in which to live if the hypocritical and communist dominated United Nations was sent packing. While seven of our presidents, from Truman to Reagan, have paid lip service to and supported the United Nations with billions in American taxpayers' dollars, most Americans would like to join former Ambassador Charles Lichenstein at the New York dock to wave a final bye-bye to this infamous institution."

"Many of us still dare to protest and will continue to do so while God gives us breath...But too few have listened...The hour is late. Americans must soon listen and act - or endure the black night of slavery that is worse than death."

Year Thirty-Two.....Number Forty-Two.....November 1, 1985

A CLEAR AND PRESENT DANGER

November, 1985 will be a dangerous month for the United States and for what is left of the so-called Free World. Principal reason: The events and circumstances surrounding the fact that this month the President of the United States will debate with the Chairman of the Communist Party of the USSR in Geneva, Switzerland. Weeks ago that virulent disease known as Summit Fever broke out all over the world, but especially in the United States. "A frenzy of speeches, polls, letters, and lobbying activities is testimony to the strength of the disease," wrote reporters for Insight, a weekly magazine published by The Washington Times. "While officials prepare for the talks, groups on both sides of the disarmament debate are working to press their case. The summit promises to be a major event, with top television news personnel highlighting a contingent of as many as 5,000 reporters and hundreds of support personnel." Preparing for this global spectacular, Gorbachev has, for weeks, insisted that the United States must scrap its plans for a Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI). We are told by experts that the Soviets have already installed their version of SDI and don't want the United States to catch up with them in defense preparations. The US has responded with "refusal to bargain" and demands that the USSR scrap certain nuclear weapons, honor agreements, and agree to some sort of on-sight inspection. Neither side will agree to any of this, and it would have been better if a summit had never been arranged. However, Gorbachev sought to win support for his side from the Nations of Western Europe, put on a pin-stripe suit and went to Paris. Then he traveled to Sofia, Bulgaria, where a meeting of the leaders of the Warsaw Pact Nations was being held. This was something of a preliminary NATO-type summit which prepared the leaders of all the captive nations to back up everything Gorbachev might say or do at the Geneva summit. And, of course, in the United States and Western Europe all the crowds of anti-nukes and "peace lovers" and their brainwashed followers are doing their thing with rallies, pickets, lobbies, cries for banning bombs and everthing else connected with nuclear energy, especially in the United States.

But what Gorbachev and his pack and the brainwashed followers were doing was not nearly so important as what was being done in the United States by officials who ought to know better or ought to be tried for treason if they did know better. The Summit Fever gave a rise in temperature to World Federation, Atlantic Union, and similar One Worlders who saw an opportunity to advance their cause by reviving what amounted to a dead issue. For 37 years the Globalists have tried to get the US Senate to ratify that nefarious document misnamed The Genocide Treaty. Each time a new Congress was installed, the Senate either let the treaty die in committee or voted it down. This time, however, something new had been added. An important Summit Conference was coming up and Gorbachev would be much more amenable if that Genocide Treaty were ratified before the Summit began. So said the hirelings of the CFR-Trilat Elite. They put pressure on Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole. He held back, said he would allow the treaty to get to the floor for vote only if President Reagan asked him to do so. So the pressure was shifted to the President. Obediently, he reneged, wrote a letter to Dole, spoke out in favor of the Genocide Treaty at a B'nai B'rith meeting which he addressed. And obediently, Senator Dole responded, went to work on the Senate, came up with the names of 46 who could be counted on to vote for the treaty if and when it came up for decision. So, there is a chance that, even as you read this Report, the US Senate may have ratified that fraudulent would-be Genocide Treaty, thus taking us one step closer to total world government.

This misnamed treaty has provided the USSR and Red China with a coverup for their acts of genocide in the USSR, Red China, as well as in Afghanistan, Cambodia, Nicaragua, Ethiopia, Zimbabwe, Angola, etc. This is because the treaty does not call it genocide if the mass murdering is committed for political reasons. What the treaty does do is vaguely define "mental injury" due to "religion, ethnicity, or nationality" as genocide. Merely advocating genocide by any person or group is called a crime. Thus, all citizens, be they missionaries, police, soldiers, government officials, businessmen, or plain citizens, can be accused of the crime of genocide and then be tried in an international court outside the United States or whatever country in which the alleged crime was committed. AND HERE'S THE RUB:: The idea of world law overriding all national, state and local law; and world courts having jurisdiction over individuals from any country has long been the dream of the Globalists. As far as they dared go previously was the establishment of an International Court of Justice in Holland, where Nations and States may be tried for alleged or actual international crimes against other nations or states. But this World Court has no jurisdiction over individuals or groups, only governments. It has never amounted to much and recently the US government declared that it would not be bound by decisions of that World Court. What is really desired by the Globalists is an international tribunal where individuals and groups could be tried, as if they were already world citizens and therefore subject to world law. The universal adoption of this Genocide Treaty would provide a way in which any person or group of persons could be tried in a court in which decisions would supersede any and all national, state and local laws. This is the real aim of the promoters of this nefarious Genocide Treaty. But before it can become global in authority, it must be made law through the approval of all nations, especially the United States! That approval (or continued disapproval) is in the hands of 100 United States Senators. And those Senators are being told that its ratification is important for President Reagan before he meets Chairman Gorbachev. Out of party loyalty to the President 12 Republicans have joined with 34 Democrats in favor of ratification of the treaty. As we said, those who know better ought to be tried for treason.

But the favors for the USSR, the multinational corporations, the Megabankers and the Globalists in general, didn't stop with the Genocide Treaty. There was the manipulation of the Most Favored Nation (MFN) status that was created when the Central Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) was established in 1947. Those Nations without the MFN status have to pay higher tariff rates on imports and exports. In 1947 almost any nation that was a member of the UN also was accorded MFN status. When the trouble with Castro began, the agreement with Cuba was renounced. Then the Trade Expansion Act of 1962 specifically banned MFN status for all Communist countries. However, in 1974 the Jackson-Vanick Amendment made it possible for the President to place any country back on the MFN list if he deemed it advisable. So that in 1984 MFN status had been returned to Yugoslavia, Romania, Afghanistan, Red China, and Hungary. Still excluded were all other Communist countries, including Bulgaria, East Germany, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, East Germany, Poland and the Soviet Union. Now, however, to make Gorbachev more amenable on November 19 and 20, as well as to aid the megabankers and the multinationals, all Communist nations are to be replaced on the MFN list.

Then there's that little talked about "food for peace" program that is conducted by the Agency for Internal Development (AID), under which some of the Communist countries that the USSR can no longer support in the manner to which they are accustomed, are supported by American taxpayers. Angola is an example. In 1984 Angola received $2,726,000 in "food aid". Mozambique received $9,379,000 in 1984 under the same giveaway program. This, we repeat, is money that American taxpayers give these Communist countries because the USSR can no longer afford to feed them. We as taxpayers are keeping the Communists in power in these countries. Gorbachev should show his gratitude. There's another reason for helping these countries, of course. Both of them border on the Republic of South Africa, provide sanctuary for the terrorists and revolutionaries that are trying to destroy the South African government.

This, by the way, is only part of the story of US aid to Communist Angola. Recently a coalition of 15 American and European banks arranged for a $350 million loan and export-credit package with Angola. It seems that UNITA, the Angolan freedom fighters, had been making such advances that the Communist regime of Jose Eduardo dos Santos was in danger of falling. And since Cuban troops are acting as security guards for Gulf Oil Corporation, which is a subsidiary of US Chevron, it seemed that, even while Congress was thinking about giving aid to UNITA, the bankers were giving aid to the Communists. The New American weekly of November 4 notes that: "Angola's experience contrasts sharply with the treatment accorded South Africa by the international banking community. At the same time Western banks were extending new loans to Angola, they were also demanding payment on old loans from South Africa...In the words of Chris Ball, managing director of Barclays National Bank in South Africa, 'The (international) bankers have accomplished in two weeks what politicians haven't done in two years'." Just to make the situation seem more political than economical or financial, The New American adds: "The new loans also come at a time when the current world oil glut has caused banks to be hesitant in major foreign oil exploration efforts." Interestingly, some of those same American banks that refused to renew loans to South Africa have intervened in Angola to prop up a Communist regime that is on the verge of being overthrown by proWestern Freedom Fighters. One might ask why bankers support Communism and work to destroy free enterprise? It isn't just the bankers, however. The Export-Import Bank, the U.S. government's official export credit agency, has made credits and guarantees to Communist Angola for more than $261 million since the Communists seized power in Angola in 1975. That's more American taxpayers' money being used to support Communism when, officially we're supposed to be fighting Communism! Is this what the Geneva Summit is all about; to find more ways of helping the Communists conquer without letting the people know?

Yet another favor to the Soviets: When the Korean airliner, the KAL 007, was shot down by a Soviet fighter on September 1, 1983, with a loss of 269 American lives, among them Congressman Lawrence McDonald, one feeble gesture in retaliation by the US government: the USSR was denied air landing rights on US land. But now all is to be forgotten and the State Department has announced that an agreement is being worked out to restore the Kremlin's air landing rights in the United States. This before the Geneva Summit begins, of course.

Never since Munich has there been so much summit fever in the air. That was 47 years ago when Chamberlain met Hitler and spoke of "peace for our time." The pre-propaganda battle leading up to the Geneva Summit is similar except more intense, thanks to television. President Reagan is said to be spending half of his working hours boning up, preparing speeches, interviewing anyone who might have the slightest knowledge of Soviet-American relations, including Jimmy Carter. National Security Adviser McFarlane spends each morning briefing the President or bringing in "experts" to advise him. The president gave a special television address on BBC, is preparing one to be translated into Russian and offered to Soviet TV. He gave a special interview to the four chief Soviet news correspondents who are stationed in Washington. Out of all of this the President says he expects little more than to "eliminate some of the paranoia" in US-USSR relations. An observer might conclude: What a fuss about just another media spectacular!

In our DBR of Sept. 6, 1985, we pointed out how, in every previous Summit Conference, the United States has been the under-dog, supposed to lose, it being planned that way. This upcoming Geneva Summit will be much of the same. The string of losses really began when Woodrow Wilson went to Paris in 1919. The result would have been a world government if the Senate hadn't refused to ratify the Paris Peace Treaty and its League of Nations Charter codicil. Then FDR plunged into disastrous Summiting before and during WWII. All presidents followed suit. And now comes President Reagan's turn. It's time to pray that he won't give our country away to the One Worlders.

Dr. Clarence Carson spotted the reason why we can never win at a Summit when he wrote: "A meeting between those whose beliefs and aims are unreconcilable cannot reconcile them. The differences between the US and the USSR are not personal eccentricities of leaders; they are organic. Neither history nor reason supports the expectations which the major media try to arouse about the prospects of progress through the practice of summitry." Knowing this, sit back and try to enjoy the show.

"A meeting between those whose beliefs and aims are unreconcilable cannot reconcile them," said Dr. Carson. It contains a special meaning for Christians: "Be not unequally yoked together with unbelievers: for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? and what communion hath light with darkness? (2nd Corinthians, 6:14).

THE PRINCE AND THE UN-PAUPER

As the One World Planners and their media mercenaries were doing their utmost to keep all eyes glued on the planned events leading up to the likewise planned Summit at Geneva, Switzerland; the residents of the Town of Palm Beach, Florida were girding themselves to resist - or endure if inevitable - a foreign invasion which also had international reverberations. On the world scene, there were defections, a fascinating bit of double agency, a long-time political prisoner in Russia on a hunger strike suddenly being treated like a human being and allowed a 24-minute long-distance telephone conversation with relatives in America, while his ailing wife is permitted to go abroad for treatment. And there was George Shultz suddenly given audience with the Great Gorbachev himself, to build an agenda for the futile Summit debates. All this and more to bemuse both the bourgeoisie and the proletariat. But in the Town of Palm Beach the priority problem was how to tolerate the rude and unwelcome invasion of a Capitalist-Communist, without offending the visiting Prince and Princess who were being used by Armand Hammer for the purpose of raising money for a private project: to support a chain of World Colleges that were created to train future leaders for a future Communist World. Even the ordinarily leftleaning Miami Herald sensed the impropriety, ruthlessness and rudeness of Hammer, lifelong friend of equally ruthless Communist Dictators beginning with Lenin. The Herald dared to defend the people of the Town of Palm Beach against their autocratic internationalist invader. Nick Ravo, Herald staff writer, on November 3, in a threecolumn front page article reported, and we quote in part:

"For the past six weeks the town of Palm Beach has turned up its nose at Dr. Armand Hammer, the millionaire industrialist, former whiskey distiller, art collector, philanthropist, semi-pro diplomat, Watergate bit player, and one-time friend of Russian Revolution leader V.I. Lenin. Town officials almost banned his Nov. 12 ball featuring Prince Charles and Princess Diana because the $10,000-per-couple tickets are deemed too expensive and the proceeds will benefit an out-of-town charity. Some Palm Beachers also winced at Hammer's self-promotion. A few even called him a Communist." Then the reporter spent over half a page explaining why Hammer is called a Communist. Nick Ravo's article is one of the most nearly accurate that we have read in a commercial newspaper in several years. Here are selected quotes:

"The 87-year-old oil tycoon may be the only capitalist in the world who gets friendlier treatment in Moscow than in Palm Beach...Armand Hammer was born two years before the turn of the century in New York's East Side, the son of a Russian Jewish immigrant doctor. During the 1880s the father, Julius, became a prominent member of the Socialist Labor Party, and in 1919 he became one of the founders of the American Communist Party. Two years later he was sentenced to three years in Sing Sing prison for performing an illegal operation on the wife of a Russian diplomat...By the time he graduated from Columbia University College of Physicians and Surgeons in 1921, Hammer already had become a millionaire by expanding his father's pharmaceutical business. While waiting during the summer of 1921 to start his internship, he ventured to Bolshevik Russia with an army field hospital and became a personal friend of Lenin. For the next nine years Hammer lived most of the time in the Soviet Union. He married a Russian baroness-turned-entertainer, swapped grain for caviar and other Russian goods. He also ran an asbestos mine, a pencil factory and became the sole American concessionaire for several companies, including Ford Motor Co. and US Rubber. When he left the Soviet Union in 1930 he brought with him millions of dollars in Czarist art treasures. During the next 20 years Hammer busied himself by collecting art, starting and selling 11 whiskey distilleries and making fortunes in livestock feed and purebred Angus cattle. Then in 1957 at age 59 a bored Hammer took over Occidental Oil Corp., a moribund oil exploration company selling for 59¢ a share, and turned it into a global giant, one of the 20 largest companies in the Nation. Since then the international wheeler-dealer has done things like purchase the Cities Service Oil Co. for $4 billion and toured the world with his multimillion dollar art collection, which includes 100 works by the likes of Rembrandt, Renoir and Reubens, and the Codex Hammer, a rare manuscript by Leonardo de Vinci. Hammer also has dabbled in foreign affairs, for both business and altruistic reasons. He has met with scores of foreign leaders and every America president since Herbert Hoover. He sent his personal physician to the Soviet Union to treat the late Soviet President Konstantin Chernenko. He's the only person that can fly his own plane into Russia...One Monday he met with Gorbachev, the next Monday with President Reagan and the following Saturday with Deng Xiaoping...Hammer was given a luxury apartment in Moscow by the late Soviet Premier Leonid Brezhnev...Much of Hammer's time, however, is spent on his Boeing 727, named Oxy 1, a luxurious machine so complete that it even has a cardiac defibrillator on board." (Unquote).

Mary Sanford, one of the very few Palm Beach residents who will cooperate in any way with Armand Hammer, and who is organizing the ball at the Breakers Hotel, has sold very few of the $10,000 tickets to Palm Beach residents. To buy the tickets, a host of Hollywood stars and TV luminaries are flying in, along with some of the CFR and Tri-lateral Commission biggies who are themselves world citizens who happen to reside in the United States. Said ball organizer Mary Sanford, "A lot of people don't like him, and a lot of people are jealous of him. He has disturbed a lot of people by wanting to use this town for his charity and because he is taking money out of this town for his charity. I will say one thing for him though. He has a lot of courage to come here." Town Council member Nancy Douthit who did her best to keep Hammer from coming, was more blunt. She said he was raising money in Palm Beach for schools which were "a training ground for the KGB." Prince Charles and Princess Diana will not be staying in Palm Beach. They will be guests at the Palm Beach Polo and Country Club which is 18 miles from the Town of Palm Beach. There things are buzzing with people trying to buy reasonably priced tickets to see Prince Charles play polo and get a chance to greet Princess Diana. They'll be in Palm Beach only for the invitation-only ball being held for the benefit of the United World Colleges. The couple will spend the night at a villa on the polo club grounds, not at the Breakers. Hammer, we presume, will take the loot, board his Boeing 727 and fly back to Los Angeles. The people of the Town of Palm Beach who are rightfully proud of their town, would love to properly entertain the royal couple, but as for Armand Hammer; no, thank you.

Something that is bothering conservatives, especially Britons and citizens of Nations forming the Commonwealth is the close relationship between Prince Charles and Armand Hammer. This is brought out in an article written by a Canadian, John Cotter, which appeared in the British Views-Letter Candour, Sept., 1985, under the title: "The Prince and the Un-Pauper." We quote important passages from that article:

* * * * *

A friend of both Prince Charles and Dr. Armand Hammer, the oil billionaire, was quoted in the Toronto Globe and Mail, July 1st, 1985, as saying, "Charles treats Hammer like a father. He is enormously fond of him and consults him all the time...The friendship is not considered appropriate at Buckingham Palace and is being maintained at some cost. It is a rather strange friendship but it is a true one." The Globe and Mail continued: "When the Prince's second son, Harry, was born, it was widely bruited in the press that Dr. Hammer was to be godfather but that the Queen intervened to prevent it." Dr. Hammer is head of the Occidental Petroleum Corporation and many other business interests...made a twenty million dollars fertilizer deal with the Soviet Union in 1974. He has establishments in both Moscow and Peking, but his principal residence and business headquarters is in Los Angeles. He is very much a one-worlder - a Communist one-worlder, that is! He puts up the money for the United World Colleges for Prince Charles, who is President of the United World Colleges International Council. Needless to say, the United World Colleges - with a Communist multimillionaire financing them - are Marxist-inspired and serve as training grounds for the future Nomenklatura of a Marxist one-world. The colleges are in Canada, Wales, the USA, Singapore, Swaziland and Italy. Two more are due soon in Venezuela and India...It is reported that Dr. Hammer is to make a violently anti-American movie from his California studios with the new Soviet President Andrei Gromyko's son as its script writer. In his column in The Toronto Sun on July 7th, 1985, William Stevenson wrote: "The script, written by Gromyko Jr. with great professionalism, contains every anti-American distortion you can imagine, and others beyond the imagination of anyone not working for the KGB's department of active measures, otherwise known as disinformation." Gromyko Jr. works for Georgy Arbatov, Director of the Institute of US and Canadian Studies in Moscow, the main Soviet centre for the study of North America. Former Canadian Liberal Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau stayed with Georgy Arbatov in Moscow for a month in June and July of this year. Mr. Trudeau is off to Peking in October.

Why do super-capitalists like Dr. Hammer and many others back Communism, which is supposed to be "against capitalism"? The answer is of course, Capitalism is not abolished by Communism! All that happens is that capitalism is turned into a State Monopoly with a new, very small minority of a privileged elite of commissars, managers and bureaucrats holding down the best positions in the Marxist state; the nomenklatura they are called in Soviet Russia...The privileges of Capitalism, and its potentialities for abuse, are simply transferred to new hands. No wonder many rich and influential individuals are Communists, like Dr. Hammer. Communism is simply a confidence trick where a cabal of unscrupulous men, but with a most effective propaganda machine at their disposal, acquire power by pretending to nationalise a nation's wealth for "the workers." A good example was furnished by the first post-war socialist government in Britain under Clement Atlee. A Socialist Minister, G.R. Strauss, already an elite, public school educated millionaire, nationalised ninety-six steel firms but retained his own metal works. He thus acquired power over ninety-seven firms. Some was called it the "Steal Bill."... Once we realise what Communism really is it is easy to understand why so many ultra-rich people - The Trilateral Commission, the Council on Foreign Relations, the Bilderberg Group, the Club of Rome, the Aspen Institute, etc. - are all working towards a one world Marxist dictatorship.

(But to return to Prince Charles), he was greatly influenced by his great uncle Earl Mountbatten, who advised him and the Queen and the Duke of Edinburgh to keep in step with "the Revolution" to avoid being assassinated, as was the Tsar Nicholas II of Russia in 1918. Both Mountbatten and the British Royal Family were closely related to the Tsar. Ironically, his advice did not stop Mountbatten from being himself assassinated by the Communist IRA in 1919. Mountbatten had a world-wide network of socialist friends with whom he kept in close touch; he was not, of course, killed for his far-left political sympathies but because he was a symbol of Royalty.

The late Edwina Mountbatten was the millionaire grand-daughter of Sir Ernest Cassel, a multimillionaire Jewish international financier and behind-the-scenes adviser and personal financier to the freespending King Edward VII. The Cassel-Edward VII friendship is strikingly similar to the current Armand Hammer-Prince Charles friendship. Cassel was a business associate of Jacob Schiff of Kuhn Loeb & Co. The New York Journal-American of February 3rd, 1949, stated: "Today it is estimated by Jacob's grandson, John Schiff, a prominent member of New York society, that the old man sank about twenty million dollars for the final triumph of Bolshevism in Russia." Cassel put up part of the money for the London School of Economics, which had the declared purpose of "training the future Socialist bureaucracy of Britain." Harold Laski dominated the LSE for many years in the 1930s and 1940s, while his friend Felix Frankfurter masterminded the New Deal on similar principles in the United States. Both Pierre Trudeau and John Kennedy studied under Laski at the London School of Economics.

* * * * *

Deduction: King Edward's friend Cassel financed a London school created to train Fabian leaders; Prince Charles' friend Hammer finances World Colleges created to train Communist leaders. Yet, sometimes Kings, Princes and Presidents are assassinated, not because of their political or moral suasions, but because they are symbols of royalty or Bible-based lawful authority. The more things change, the more they remain the same.

Reminiscent of the French Revolution: Leftist cartoonists and pornographic scribblers engage in smear tactics to "level" the lawful standards of a community. And a friend of Princes, Presidents and Communist Dictators lends a hand to the "leveling" process. It is good to know there are those who dare to stand against such "levelers."

"DON'T ROCK THE LIFEBOAT"

To act as the official appointed representative of the government of one country, to be suspected of being an undercover agent for the government of a second and adversary country, and at the same time to serve as the spokesman for a power elite that aims to control the destinies of the governments and the peoples of both of those countries; this would be quite an undertaking for any man. But the power elite knew that Henry Kissinger was up to the task. Furthermore, to negotiate treaties between these two governments, treaties which seemed so very important but which were never intended to be kept; treaties which seemed to manifest open hostility but which were secretly designed to have these two countries working together without the people knowing it, toward the end of creating a New World Order; this seemed as difficult as the problem of trying to describe it. But Henry Kissinger was able, adept, and undiscovered. In 1972 while inducing President Richard Nixon to sign a "Declaration of Principles" at the Moscow Summit of that year, a new word came into the language of diplomacy. As the editor of the French Communist newspaper Le Monde observed the manipulations of those principals at the Moscow Summit, he used a word to describe what he saw as the spirit of the new Soviet-American relations. He called it detente. Kissinger liked the word, adopted it as his very own, and the French word gained a place in American dictionaries: "An easing, as of discord between nations." But in actual practice that word came to have different meanings to different people, depending upon their political and/or economic persuasions.

Concerning detente, Admiral Chester Ward and Phyllis Schlafly wrote in their 846-page Kissinger on the Couch: "Exactly what Kissinger has done to the military power of the United States - both strategic, nuclear and conventional - has been established by conclusive evidence. He has never wavered from his consistent course of unilateral disarmament." What did detente mean to Kissinger himself? Elmo Zumwalt, then Chief of Naval Operations as well as a CFR member (as was Kissinger), said Kissinger told him: "The day of the United States is past and today is the day of the Soviet Union. My job as Secretary of State is to negotiate the most acceptable second-best position available." (Recorded on page 179 of Call It Conspiracy, by Larry Abraham. Double A Publications, 18000 Pacific Highway South, Suite 1105, Seattle Washington 98188. 326 pages, hard cover, $16.95.)

Again quoting Ward and Schlafly, page 501: "His (Kissinger's) entire theory of a new world order, based upon 'subtle triangular negotiations' and a 'pentagonal equilibrium,' depend upon the Kremlin and Peking going along with it, at least in appearance. The price they exacted from Henry Kissinger for letting him appear as engineer and creator of that detente which is presented to us as 'the crowning achievement of 20th-century diplomacy' is a commitment by the United States not to oppose Communist ideology and not to oppose expansion of communism. This is not speculation or hypothesis. It is embodied in the Declaration of Principles that Henry Kissinger talked Richard Nixon into signing at the Moscow Summit of '72."

Detente remained the official policy of the United States government until the day when the Soviets invaded Afghanistan and President Jimmy Carter suddenly awoke to a realization of the awful things the Communists could do to people. Among other things, he stopped the shipment of grain to the USSR and in other ways indicated that detente was dead. We mention all of this as a prologue because Henry Kissinger is still on the team as a member of the President's Foreign Intelligence Advisory Board, and as another Summit approaches there is talk of a return to "those good old days of detente." The British Intelligence Digest of 6 November reports: "The clamour in the West for detente is growing, together with a demand that President Reagan must wave a magic wand to bring it about. There is even nostalgia about the good old days of the previous period of detente, about a decade ago, when there was apparently a mutual spirit of goodwill." The new idea is to find ways to get along with and be friendly to "that evil empire."

UNCONSTITUTIONAL INCOME TAX AMENDMENT UPDATE

By Peter Baker, Washington Times correspondent

In 1913, Congress wove together 30 choice words, sent them to the States and in the process gave birth to the federal income tax. Or did it? More than 72 years later, an Arlington man claiming the 16th Amendment to the Constitution was never properly ratified is taking his case to court - risking a possible 95 years in prison should his gambit fail.

Burton Linne, a 54-year-old former engineer and sales consultant, was arraigned in federal court this week on 19 counts of mail fraud, five counts of failing to file income tax returns and one count of conspiracy to defraud the government. But Mr. Linne and his four co-defendants said they are innocent because the crimes they are charged with are based on the income tax amendment, which they contend failed ratification in 1913. "This is not the defense of a criminal trial, but the defense of a principle," said Mr. Linne, chairman of the American Liberty Information Society. "We've been behaving within the law - as we understand it - all along."

The problem is Mr. Linne and the Internal Revenue Service disagree over his interpretation. In a brief filed in U.S. District Court in Alexandria, Mr. Linne claimed that only 32 of the 48 States at the time actually adopted the amendment as proposed. At least 36 States - three quarters - were required constitutionally. The secretary of state at the time "perpetrated a criminal fraud upon America by proclaiming the amendment ratified even though he supposedly knew only 32 States had passed it, said Mr. Linne.

On the surface, Mr. Linne's claim may appear far-fetched, but he insists his evidence is accurate according to records in the National Archives in Washington. According to research presented in his book, "The Constitution's Income Tax Amendment Was Not Ratified," several States passed the amendment but not as originally proposed....Milton Gustafsar (director of the National Archives diplomatic branch) said he has received several calls lately asking about the 16th Amendment and its ratification. And Mr. Linne said a number of people have contacted him about his fight, offering support or wanting to join his organization....If U.S. District Judge Albert V. Bryan Jr. grants an evidentiary hearing to deal with the 16th Amendment's ratification Mr. Linne said he intends to subpoena former Treasury Secretary Donald Regan Internal Revenue Service Commissioner Roscoe Egger Jr., Senate Majority Leader Robert Dole and Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, Illinois Democrat and chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, in order to prove his allegations. Mr. Linne's high-stakes case comes to trial Dec. 17, although he hopes an evidentiary hearing will be held before then.

"This is no puny swatting of a few political dissidents, a few 'tax protesters,' by Big Brother's tax collectors," said Mr. Linne. "This is the most important case in this century. The shoe is on the other foot."

And some very strange things are happening to make the US position at the Summit extremely weak. For example: Those three intelligence stories that make us look inexperienced and silly. It all began when President Reagan said he was going to talk about much more than nuclear reductions and star wars. He was going to bring up the subject of human rights and Afghanistan. And then came some tests of our own attitude toward human rights as shown in the intelligence stories. There was the case of the Soviet sailor Miroslav Medvid. The man jumped overboard twice, slashed his wrists when he was forcibly returned to the Soviet ship. The story as reported by the Washington Inquirer bears repeating:

"For an entire week, the attempted defection of Soviet Sailor Miroslav Medvid was dealt with routinely by the Washington bureaucracy so as to preserve the appearance of normal US/Soviet relations. Medvid's plans were carefully laid. He put his personal documents in a glass jar, slipped into the Mississippi River near New Orleans where his ship, the 120,000 ton Marshal Konev, was waiting to take on US grain, and swam ashore. That was late Thursday night, and the first American contacts reportedly made by the totally soaked sailor were found in a Belle Chasse, Louisiana jewelry store. Sailor Medvid produced a note that said, 'New Orleans Politizia - USSR.' It was all down the hill from there. Turned over to the harbor police, the US Border Patrol came in for questioning. An INS contract translator, Mrs. Irene Padoch, reportedly said that the Soviet sailor wanted to stay in the United States. She related that fact to the Border Patrol after nearly an hour on the telephone with Sailor Medvid in the early hours of Friday morning. Nevertheless, according to informed witnesses, the Border Patrol tried to return Medvid to his ship later on Friday. For a second time, Medvid made a break for freedom, but was captured and forceably returned, making a gesture with his hands indicating that his throat would be cut by the Soviet.

It was not easy to get the Soviet sailor back off the Soviet grain ship and, reportedly, the White House eventually threatened the use of force. However, when the Ukranian sailor again appeared for examination in a 'non-threatening environment' it was with a constant Soviet escort. Beaten down eventually by interrogators who evidently were under instructions that a defection would not be useful to the success of the summit just now, the State Department persuaded Medvid to sign a statement in Russian (not Ukranian, his native tongue) that he wanted to return to the USSR and that he was doing so of his own free will. For three days a group of congressmen coalescing around Rep. Don Ritter of Pennsylvania tried to reverse the conclusion-oriented summary justice that had been accorded Soviet Sailor Medvid. The Department of State simply stonewalled all inquiries and insisted that all requirements of the law had been fulfilled with regard to defectors. Daily inquiries at the noon briefing by the Washington Inquirer met the same kind of arrogance. . . Secretary Shultz asserted that Medvid's response 'was very clear that he wished to go home. Under those circumstances, I think to hold him against his expressed will would have been a great mistake and so we didn't do that.' . . The Inquirer noted that Medvid could have been given drugs and that the man interviewed had not even been identified as the same man who originally jumped ship. Secretary Shultz injected, 'Do you have a question or are you making a speech, or what?'. . . Clearly, neither Secretary Shultz nor anyone else in the administration wanted to hear any more about the defection. When the Inquirer wanted to know why the Department of State had not provided Medvid with an attorney, the microphone was killed and Secretary Shultz shouted at the Inquirer: "You're out of order!" Everything attempted to save the sailor from certain prison or worse had failed. 'They did not wish to save him, summed up a Washington-based group: "You don't even have to know any language to know this. . . If your dog is sick, if your dog is crying, you don't need to know the English language to know'." "A defection would not be useful to the success of the summit," was the State Department's justification for sending a man to his death when he cried out for help.

Then there was the case of the revolving-door KGB colonel, Vitaly Yurchenko. This was an exceptional case to break just before the summit, making the CIA look like kidnapers and torturers unable even to hang onto a victim. Was Yurchenko a planted defector, was he actually tortured and then permitted to escape while dining at a restaurant in Georgetown, was he a heartbroken lover, or was he simply overtaken by a fit of nostalgia and a desire to go home even if it meant death? We only know that what happened "was not useful to the success of the summit." The alleged conservative columnist with the New York Times, William Safire, thinks all the proposed theories "overlook the fact that this spy is a trained liar who long ago chose deception as a way of life. In the grand tradition of Yuri Nosenko and 'Fedora,' Mr. Yurchenko was a fake defector. He came over to diddle the (CIA) Director, make our spooks look like saps and titillate the FBI with dark hints about Congress." Whatever one believes, his defection came just after President Reagan said he was going to bring up the human rights question before Gorbachev at the summit. To have the tale of a kidnapped and tortured Soviet to throw the charges back at Mr. Reagan would please Mr. Gorbachev, we can be sure. And, final advice on the eve of the Great Media Extravaganza: "Don't rock the lifeboat, be sure that the Great Communicator meets the Communist Chairman in the finest fettle possible. As in the case of the treatment of the dissidents, do whatever may be useful to ensure the success of the show."

* * * * *

The first of this particular season of summit sessions began in 1972 when the controversial Kissinger induced the pragmatic Nixon to sign that consistently violated "Declaration of Principles." As for this confrontation of 1985, Kissinger, on Ted Turner's Super-Station indicated that all we should expect is an agreement to seek agreement. And Mr. Nixon, writing about the summit in the Fall 1985 issue of Foreign Affairs, official organ of the CFR, looks upon this as one in a long chain of sessions which should occur each and every year. He thinks: "The one absolute certainty about the Soviet-American relationship is that the struggle in which we are engaged will last not just for years but for decades." And "Gorbachev, at 54, is a man who does not need to be in a hurry. We must not give him an opportunity to delay making a deal with one president in the hope that he might get a better one from the president who is to succeed him." So, we should have summits every year till time runs out and the merging of the nations is complete and the need for competition eliminated. Yet, "He that sitteth in the heavens shall laugh; the Lord shall have them in derision . . . Blessed are all they that put their trust in Him." (Psalm 2).

THE MILLS OF MORAL DEATH

" . . . for the children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light." So said a certain rich man to his steward in a parable recorded in Luke 16:8. Sadly, this seems to hold true for every generation. Certainly in this generation the wise ones among the children of this world are showing the greater wisdom. Too many of the children of light are engulfed in darkness, forgetting that they are to be the light of the world, and are meekly waiting to be raptured. Of the ones acclaimed to be wise among the children of light, they are inclined to allow themselves to be deceived and do the work of the devil while thinking that they are doing the work of the Lord. For example: Five years ago when the vast majority of Christian Americans were working for the nomination of Ronald Reagan, they vigorously opposed his chief rival, George Bush. Later, when Mr. Reagan chose to accept Mr. Bush as his running mate, those same Christian Americans were shocked by such a selection, and prayed that Reagan would live and occupy the White House through his entire terms. They knew that Bush had been a member of the Trilateral Commission, of the Council on Foreign Relations. Later he was exposed as a ranking member of "The Order," which researcher Antony Sutton and others consider the very heart of the the conspiratorial cult that intends to rule the world. And yet, knowing all these things, a majority of the Christian Americans have followed certain leaders and are willing to accept, and promote the nomination and election of George Bush to replace Ronald Reagan when the latter steps down if by incapacity, death, or end of term. Certainly, in political matters, the children of this world are wiser.

There is the present example of a plan being promoted by Education Secretary William Bennett. Stripped of its deceptive wording, this is little more than an alternate step in the plan to get all church and private schools in the nation under the firm control of the federal Department of Education. People forget that what Caesar finances, Caesar has every right to control. In this particular case Caesar would give the poor parents of a child an average of $600 per year in the form of a voucher which could be used to pay for private school tuition. Christian parents should know that this is just a trap to give Caesar greater control over the training and forming of the Nation's children. But the majority seem to be in favor of the plan. Senator Orrin Hatch, who should know better and surely does, has volunteered to steer the necessary legislation through the Senate, and at this writing the appropriate Representative is being sought to guide the legislation through the House. The proposal is, in itself, ludicrous, wouldn't be accorded a second thought except that the majority of Christians seem to be clamoring for it as a way of equal distribution of favors in education. The average tuition for a high school student in a private school averages around $3600 per year. A voucher worth $600 toward such a bill should convince anyone that the proposed legislation is not what it's said to be, and that it is like the camel's nose that is allowed into a tent which the camel finally takes over completely. But, as education writer Matt Scanlon of the Knight-Ridder chain observes: "Administrators of private schools hailed the proposal as a way to give poor students the advantages of a private school education. The local headmaster of a Christian school admitted that it might help to lift the financial burden from some parents but he also "expressed concern that the federal government would start setting guidelines for private schools." Which is, of course, the real, although unwritten, purpose behind this proposed legislation.

There is not a single word in the U.S. Constitution which allows for federal control of education. Nor is there anything in the Holy Bible which allows for any person or agency other than the parents, to accept responsibility for teaching their children; except in the case of those destined for the Levitical priesthood, which has nothing to do with this generation since all children of the light are now "a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people; that ye should shew forth the praises of Him Who hath called you out of darkness into His marvelous light." (I Peter 2:9.) That we all do not live up to that calling gives reason for the fact that the children of this world are wiser than the children of light. But this was not always the situation in America as regards education. Lest we forget, let's recall our calling in respect to the teaching and training of children.

Early education in America was founded upon private education in the home, churches, and schools in which the Bible was the foundation stone for character building as well as intellectual insight. When formal education was offered at the township level, it was always under parental control and was Biblically-based. However, there was one differentiation which has seldom been mentioned. In the Colony of Massachusetts, as early as 1647 there was enacted a statute which declared that the schools should be maintained by direct taxation as well as individual subscription. And thus did politics enter into the educational program. This compulsory system of supporting common and grammar schools in each township, partly through direct taxation and enforced by indictment, was then adopted by some of the other New England Colonies, namely, Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Connecticut, and Rhode Island. However, there were six colonies (or states, depending upon the time) which refused to accept this New England system until after the War Between the States. In comparing the results of these two systems, Zach Montgomery, Assistant Attorney General of the U.S., an office then connected with the Department of the Interior, wrote the following in 1886:

"Both of these communities (the New England States and the Southern States) started on their career of existence about the same time; both were composed mainly of people from the same part of Europe; people who spoke the same language and had been accustomed to the same laws, manners, and usages; people who possessed the same Christian religion, pretty much all of whom (outside of little Maryland) were of the protestant faith, and took as their religious guide the same Bible, and even the same translation of that Bible. The two communities, the one with its New England public school system and the other without it, travelled along, side by side, for about two hundred years, until A.D.1860, when the eighth United States decennial census was taken. . . Now, mark you! How stand the criminal lists? Massachusetts and her five sisters, out of her native white population of a little more than two and a half million, had on the first of June, 1860, just 2,459 criminals in prison, while Virginia and her five comparatively unlettered companions, with a native population of over three millions, had but 477 in prison . . . a disproportion of more than six criminals in New England to one in the other community. . . Of those who in one year had died by suicide, New England had one to every 13,285 of the entire population, while Virginia and her five sisters had but one suicide to every 56,584, and of those who perished, the victims of their criminal lusts, New England had one to every 84,737, while her neighbors that had never enjoyed her educational advantages had but one such victim to every 128,729. . . The New England system produced one insane person to every 800 native-born inhabitants, while the rejection of that system resulted in one insane in 1,682 inhabitants. . . Even after the civil war, which raged with such terrible fury over the Southern and Southwestern States during the years from 1861 to 1865, whereby property to the value of thousands of millions of dollars was destroyed, a servile race was emancipated, and the very foundations of the whole social and political fabric upheaved and broken to atoms - even after all the bad government which bad white men and bad black men had succeeded in forcing upon the subjugated States - still, when the census reports for 1870 were published, they showed that neither their native white criminals nor paupers counted in the proportion even of so much as one to where those counted two who had been for two hundred years subjected to the ravages of the New England public-school system. And this precious system of education is the great boon for which in 1870 the American people were paying to the tune of $64,030,673, while at the same time they were grinding through this mill of moral death no less than 7,628,060 children." (End of quotation.)

This 100-year-old record of compulsory government-sponsored public schools versus a similar record of private schools (Montgomery called them "Parental and anti-Parental School States Compared), should show us very clearly why the universal compulsory attendance public schools should be scrapped in favor of private schools for those that can afford them, home schooling for those that can provide it, and church or community supported schools for those that can have neither, and that this system should be adopted on a Nation-wide scale. As Barbara M. Morris wrote in her important booklet on "Tuition Tax Credits": Let's give our children and grandchildren a fighting chance for a free, productive future. Let us make certain they are educated. Let us do it without government intervention of any kind.

But let's get back to the record. Even though the New England schools were compulsory and government supported, the Bible was still the foundation stone for character development. "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom" remained the standard by which all things were taught. So that, as Rosalie J. Slater observed in her "Teaching and Learning America's Christian History": "At the time of the Declaration of Independence the quality of education had enabled the colonies to achieve a degree of literacy from 70% to virtually 100%. This was not education restricted to the few." But some sixty years later along came Horace Mann who in 1838 became the Secretary of the Massachusetts Board of Education. And he began to promote a kind of education that was diametrically opposed to that of the Founding Father generation. This "father of the public school movement" 1) supported forced taxation for state schools which undermined parental control and was the near death of private schools; 2) de-emphasized the Biblical doctrine of salvation as the basis of character development, replacing it with the humanistic doctrine of the perfectability of man; 3) encouraged group thinking and study rather than individual initiative; 4) standardized teacher training, textbooks, and everything taught by the great founder of America's educational system, Noah Webster.

Then, in the early decades of the Twentieth Century came the great transformation of our Nation from a Republic to a Democracy. Came the Federal Reserve Act; the 16th, Income Tax Amendment; the Tax-Exempt Foundations so the plutocrats could avoid it; the 17th Amendment providing for the direct election of U.S. Senators; and John Dewey with his progressive method of education, derived largely from his exposure to Communist education in Russia. He and those of his ilk sounded the death knell for Bible-based education in the United States. They implanted a new religion called Humanism. In his book Education Today Dewey wrote: "Our schools . . . are performing an infinitely significant religious work. They are promoting the social unity out of which in the end genuine religious unity must grow (emphasis added)." Our public schools were to usher in this new man-made heaven-on-earth. Instead, they brought in the failure of federal control of welfare, failure of the jurisprudence system, crime, corruption, and a permissive society that has produced more of a hell than a heaven on earth. After Dewey, to complete what we might call the decline and fall of the American Education System, came the consolidation of school districts (from 238,000 in 1930 to 16,000 today) so the government could better install centralized control; came the Fabian writers of Socialist textbooks, the conversion of a teacher's association into a labor union, the training of change agents, and the establishment of a federal Department of Education. To better control the government schools and the children in them, came the Planning, Programming and Budgeting System (PPBS), about which we wrote 13 years ago, and published in a now unobtainable series of Reports titled "Proofs of a Conspiracy to Build a Total Managed Global Society." This is a system under which and under various names our government now operates. PPBS has become a "computer-compatible tool" for the management of people, money, services, resources, production and distribution. In most States, government (public) school systems and the children under them are managed by PPBS under the guise of insuring "accountability." As Barbara Morris predicts, "Once schools are fully computerized, then the government, and corporate educational programs as well as schools could be linked, with the federal government on the controlling end of the system." Some call this Corporate Socialism, others call it Fascism, or Fabianism. Under any name it is Totalitarianism and forms a link in a chain comprising the New World Order, which requires a One World, Socialist Government for its maintenance.

In The American Covenant, The Untold Story, Marshall Foster and Mary-Elaine Swanson have written: "The public school bureaucracy, which now is the largest in the history of the world, has been 'vaccinating' the vast majority of America's youth for several generations against what it considers to be 'the infectuous disease of absolute moral values,' our Christian heritage, and our Christian Republic which was built upon these truths. Today, as public education collapses before our eyes, damaging millions of young lives in the process, we are witnessing an inevitable consequence of 250 years which cannot be corrected by simply putting voluntary (pluralistic) prayers back in the schools. A complete change of philosophy and leadership is needed. Through a knowledge of America's Christian history, not only can the progressive public school be exposed, but the positive alternative of the 'Principle Approach' to education used in early America be instituted in its place. Criticizing the status quo is an American past-time, but the real question is: How many of us will be willing to sacrifice our time and our private funds to rebuild . . . Learning the deeds of our Fathers will not only cause us to repent but will give us the wisdom to restore the broken down walls of our culture."

THE GREAT NUCLEAR WEAPONS SCAM

The Odd Couple met on the prepared stage at Geneva, played their parts while insisting that they were not acting. Audiences were barred during the dialogue, microphones were muted, only translators sworn to silence were present. When the play had concluded, they shook hands, issued a Joint US-Soviet Statement in which they agreed to disagree on most matters affecting the relationships of the countries they represent. Then they smiled for the cameras, said they would meet again, first in Washington then in Moscow, so they could continue to agree to disagree. But on one particular matter they were in complete agreement. The text of that Joint Statement of November 21 includes the following: "General Secretary Gorbachev and President Reagan reaffirmed the commitment of the USSR and the US to the Treaty on Nonproliferation of nuclear weapons . . . to pursue negotiations in good faith on matters of nuclear arms limitations." In this context, proliferation has to do with the buying, borrowing, stealing or manufacturing of nuclear weapons by countries which did not sign the Nonproliferation Treaty of 1968. Communist China is one of the countries which refused to sign the Treaty. The "limitation of proliferation" means not allowing any other nations, especially Third World Nations such as Iran, Pakistan, Israel, Libya, South Africa, and terrorist groups to rent, borrow or build nuclear weapons.

But even as President Reagan was agreeing to help halt the spread of such weapons to other countries, he was waiting to see if Congress would do anything to interfere with his Executive Order which allows unlimited sale of nuclear components and technology to Communist China. While promising to help prevent proliferation, he had agreed to give Red China anything it desired in nuclear know-how. An Executive Agreement needs no Congressional endorsement, but President Reagan was anxious to get approval of what he had done. Accordingly, The Washington Times of November 22 reported that "The Senate without debate and on a voice vote approved yesterday President Reagan's 30-year power agreement with the People's Republic of China, catching some of the pact's critics off guard." The House was expected to follow suit, also on a voice vote. Columnist Stephen Chapman saw the significance of the action. He wrote in his syndicated column of November 20:

"With all eyes on the Geneva meeting on arms control between Ronald Reagan and Mikhail Gorbachev, the administration has reached a nuclear agreement with a Communist power that may be a bigger danger to the United States than all the Soviet Union's missiles. The Agreement for Nuclear Cooperation between Washington and Peking allows American companies to build nuclear reactors in China. It lacks the usual restrictions on such exports - safeguards designed to keep nuclear weapons out of the hands of countries that don't have them, thus preventing every crazy dictator on Earth from getting the means to start a nuclear war. That omission might conceivably be tolerable if China were a stable, trusted, democratic ally. It is not. It is the biggest Communist nation on Earth, a nation whose interests are only coincidentally parallel to our own and whose reliability as a friend is at best, unproven. On matters of nuclear proliferation, however, China's unreliability is amply documented. The New Republic magazine calls it 'the most egregious proliferator in the history of the atomic age.' Until recently, it has actually endorsed proliferation as a blow against the United States and the Soviet Union. Worse, China reportedly has provided . . . Argentina with sensitive nuclear material. It has discussed nuclear exports with Iran. It has helped Pakistan in its quest for the Bomb - a program partly financed by Libyan dictator Muammar Quaddafi, who doubtless wants one of his own. Putting nuclear weapons into the hands of any of these governments would make the world a far more dangerous place than it is today." (Unquote).

It is becoming obvious to students of Asian affairs that Communist China hopes to become a third partner in the Trilateral Global Program as it was outlined in Orwell's 1984, hopes to become the leader of the Third World in opposition to the Soviet controlled leadership of the Eastern World and the Western World which is nominally dominated by the United States. By playing up to Iran, Pakistan, Libya, and other nuclear-hungry nations, China hopes to become an "equal" in the Global Triangle. Now, just why should the United States government assist in its own possible destruction in the business of giving away all the secrets we may have in the matter of nuclear weapons? One part of that answer is supplied by an article in The Washington Times of November 22: "Proponents (of the nuclear pact with China) say it will open up the largest untapped market of the US nuclear industry and increase meager trade relations with the world's most populous nation. The pact would allow US businessmen to bid some $6 billion in nuclear components that the Chinese need to build as many as 12 nuclear power plants by the year 2000. Competition already has begun for the trade, and France, Japan and Sweden are vying for the business. Proponents also say the United States has nothing to lose by agreeing to sell nuclear components and know-how to help China set up power plants. Since China already is a nuclear weapons state, administration officials say that the United States can only urge them not to share weapons with other nations. Congress has little chance of stopping an executive agreement which, unlike a treaty, does not require congressional approval. The pact would have gone automatically into effect in several weeks unless both houses pass resolutions to reject it. Any resolution to reject the pact with China likely would have been vetoed by the President, then a two-thirds vote of both chambers of Congress would have been needed to halt the agreement."

So that's the bottom line: Selling nuclear secrets to Communist China is good for business!! Never mind if China uses our technology to help dictators and terrorist organizations build nuclear weapons. A second reason for permitting the proliferation of nuclear technology comes to mind when we consider the current news about spies and secret agents that are causing concern to every Western Nation. A report datelined Washington reads: "Senior intelligence officials say the United States has been immensely damaged by the series of espionage cases disclosed in the past week. When added to the harm caused by other major spy cases in the past six months, one senior administration official said, 'This has been an extraordinarily bad year for us - it's going to cost us millions to recoup, if we can.' Another administration official said: 'There are more of these cases coming. Don't think it's over yet' . . . A former analyst with the CIA, Larry We-Tai Chin, arrested Saturday and accused of spying for China for more than three decades, was indicted on espionage charges. . . In addition associates interviewed yesterday said Jonathan Jay Pollard, a Navy counterintelligence analyst who was accused last week of spying for Israel, has boasted for 10 years about working for the Israelis. US intelligence officials said that of the four people arrested since Thursday (Nov. 21) on spy charges, Ronald W. Pelton, a former employee of the National Security Agency, appeared to have caused the most harm."

Every Nation has been experiencing spy trouble; Britain, France, West Germany, even the USSR. From an East European source we have a list of over 20 agents that have defected from the Soviet Union or its satellites. So intense have been the spy defections that every country has ordered a crack-down. Hence the number of arrests in the United States in the last few weeks. But, more importantly, note the length of time involved: Chin has been spying for Red China for more than a decade. Pollard has been spying for Israel for more than 10 years. The list can go on and on. Spies that have worked in high places in England, France, the United States, keep at their treasonable trade for years and years. If about to be exposed, they suddenly disappear and reappear in Russia or some other Communist country; or they start working for the UN Secretariat, get a bigger salary with little chance of being fired, join in with the KGB agents that infest the UN, and continue in their trade. From time to time along will come someone like Senator Joe McCarthy who will try to rid the government of its spies, and get persecuted and condemned by his own Senate colleagues because of his naming of names. There was Major Jordan who did his best to expose traitors and was ignored by those who might have done something about it. To make the people feel that all is well and national security is being maintained, a Rosenberg couple may be caught and executed, an Alger Hiss may be exposed and jailed, or a Harry Dexter White may so fear punishment that he will jump off a tall building to his death. But the Whittaker Chambers are scorned and rebuked, Senators like Pat McCarran and Robert Taft (Sr.) may have been murdered because they were too close to exposing such characters as Owen Lattimore, Lauchlin Currie, Mark Gains, etc. And the traitors kept on, ran to Russia, or went to work for the UN.

Our reference in all of this has to do with the Nuclear Weapons Scam. When we went into defeated Japan with General MacArthur, we managed to fly over Hiroshima and gaze down at the destruction, but were not allowed to enter the area because we didn't have the right kind of shoes. But at that time not another country in the world had any important know-how concerning nuclear fission. German scientists had been working at the development of the atom bomb, but they had been pursuing the "hard water" principle instead of outright fission, and we won the race. But, even though there were spies at the Manhattan Project, nuclear fission was still a monopoly with the US. When we were at Bikini in July, 1946 as a pool broadcaster for the four radio networks at the testing of one aerial and one under water atomic explosion, the know-how was still a secret. Scientists in the Soviet Union hadn't the slightest idea of how to build such a bomb. The Bolsheviks had murdered all the Russian scientists. Stalin had ordered the capture of German scientists who were taken to Russia and put to work. But slaves in a foreign country are not very efficient workmen. So Russia had to depend entirely upon stealing or obtaining through official sources, the components and technology required to build even a comparatively simple nuclear reactor. The United States government cooperated to a great extent, Soviet agents and American spies made up the difference. So that, the Soviets actually stole or were given enough information to be first in space. Deliberately planned that way? Very probably, because the CFR had taken charge of our State Department before we actually entered World War II, and it was (and is) the aim of the Power Elite to permit neither the USSR nor the US to get too far ahead of the other in the matter of military power. Hence the development of the Mutual Assured Destruction (MAD) Program which is still in effect. Consider the record of our federal government as it has operated under the control of the Eastern Establishment Power Elite:

The World Bankers and Multinational Tycoons, our government abetting, financed the conquest of Russia for three long-range purposes. First, to provide a new trading market for American manufactures and services; second, the Communist government cooperating, to develop natural resources, establish factories where cheap labor was plentiful and profits enormous; third, using the Hegelian Dialectical Formula familiar to both plutocrats and Communists, to develop a Socialist antithesis to combat the Private Enterprise thesis which had developed in America, this for the ultimate purpose of creating the synthesis, a Socialist One World Government. In addition, our government has turned its back on once friendly Taiwan, helped destroy the Philippine government and thus allow the potential turnover of Clark Field and Subic Bay to the Communists, even as it gave them Cam Rahn Bay and its installations. Our government, the media assisting, has allowed an enemy power to take over much of Central America and the Caribbean area. It is presently in the business of destroying private enterprise in the Republic of South Africa with the probable result that the Soviet will gain control of resources as well as vital shipping lanes. And now our government is opening the way for Communist China to become a great trading post for the sale of nuclear weapons to petty dictators and mad terrorists. This to create a new market for the multinational tycoons. Never mind the potential death and destruction and misery which may eventuate. "For the love of money. . ."

THE URGE TO MERGE

It happened in 1953. At that time little was known by the general public about such organizations as the Council on Foreign Relations, the Bilderberg Group, the Paris-based OECD, The Aspen Institute, and similar exclusive "insider's clubs" that were striving to establish a New World Order. Thirty-Two years ago a Congressional Committee was investigating the activities of the huge tax-exempt foundations which were suspected of working to alter the life of an entire people and create a Socialist State to replace the Constitutional, Representative Republican, Free Enterprise system known then as the American Way. Norman Dodd, then director of the Congressional Committee to Investigate Tax-Exempt Foundations, called upon Roman Gaither, then head of the Ford Foundation, and received some startling news. Mr. Dodd on September 26, 1978 told the following to an Illinois Joint Legislative Committee which was investigating the then new Regional Government program that had been initiated by President Nixon. We quote:

"On arrival (at the Ford Foundation offices) I was greeted by Mr. Roman Gaither, the President of the Ford Foundation with this statement: 'Mr. Dodd, we have invited you to come to New York and stop in to see us in the hope that off the record you would tell us why the Congress of the United States should be interested in operations such as ours.' Before I could think of just exactly how I would reply, Mr. Gaither volunteered the following information and these are practically his exact words. 'Mr. Dodd we operate here under directives which emanate from the White House. Would you like to know what the substance of these directives is?' I said, 'Indeed I would, Mr. Gaither.' Whereupon he then said the following. 'We here operate and control our grant making policies in harmony with directives the substance of which is as follows: We shall use our grant making power so as to alter life in the United States that it can be comfortably merged with the Soviet Union!'" (Underlining added. Quoted from "The Most Secret Science," by Archibald E. Roberts. Copyright 1984. Betsy Ross Press, P.O.Box 986, Fort Collins, CO 80522. $12.00).

This was perhaps the first time that any plan for "merging" nations that were supposedly hostile to each other, into a World Government was mentioned openly. It was, of course, a long-range plan, because a great deal of "merging" of other types would have to be accomplished before the Russian Bear and the American Eagle could be caged in a zoo managed by a Serpent. Before this time, however, the plan to merge Nations had been attempted through the League of Nations. With the creation of a Second World War, an attempt was made through the United Nations. Before that, as France fell to Nazi Germany, Winston Churchill suggested a merger of France into the United Kingdom, an idea soundly rejected. Then came "Union Now," a plan to merge Britain and the United States, also rejected. More successful was the creation of NATO and its political ally the Atlantic Alliance. Then came the merging of Nations within the European Community, now a veritable Regional World Government. Later came the Trilateral Commission, which would economically merge the United States, Canada, Japan, and the Nations of Western Europe into a Regional World Order.

Lately this "merging program" has become especially evident in banks and industry. Banks are closing down at such a rate that actual count seems impossible. As of November 22, 1985, 115 FDIC-insured banks had been closed, particularly banks that were serving agricultural communities, where farms were also in deep trouble. It should be noted, however, that most of these banks didn't actually close; they were being taken over, or "merged" into bigger banks. Likewise the farms, which were being "merged" into agri-business corporations operated by non-resident and often unknown owners. The acquisition, takeover, and merging of businesses and industries has

CHRISTMAS 1985 IN CHRISTIAN AMERICA

What if... "Twas the night before Christmas" and Mary and Joseph were to journey once again to be counted and taxed, but this time in Christian America. What would they observe?

They would see that the Christ Child is yet adored after nearly 20 centuries for one day each year. For the remaining days and nights the national preoccupations (as measured by three of the country's largest enterprises) are un-Christian pursuits. And a fourth and the largest is anti-Christian persecution.

- 1.) Sleaze: $40 Billion for print/film pornography, profanity/perversion rock, prostitution, dial-a-porn, XX novels, etc.
- 2.) Worship of Lady Luck: $75 Billion for illegal gambling and its promoted legalized gambling in 49 States with casinos in some, all of which undermine the work/reward ethic and faith in Divine order.
- 3.) Dope: $80 Billion and called "drugs".
- 4.) Babylonian Compound Usury: $200 Billion of which $120 Billion is "taxtorted" from the people for "servicing" the government's $2 Trillion debt; $80 Billion is unbiblical usury on corporate/consumer debt which is factored into the price of all goods and services as further tribute to those who hate Him and who promote 1, 2, and 3 above.

The other reason that 8 Bible citations, early canons, Ecclesiastical Law, Common Law and the Koran all forbid the crime of usury, is its built-in mechanism for swindling factories, farms and family homes from the people to the usurious parasites by foreclosures on unequal-risk contracts.

Mary and Joseph would see as pathetic that Christ's lesson emphasized with anger four days before crucifixion, overturning the tables of the money changers and whipping them from the temple, was not learned as they were invited back in 1913 to acquire the "Federal" Reserve and commercial banks. Verily, they now own the temple and hold a total mortgage against their host government, the people, and all their possessions, so help us God.

And yet a Merry Christmas to His Remnant whilst the "sheeple" slumber on.

become an epidemic. Syndicated columnist Anthony Harrigan observed that "Hostile takeovers of American companies are becoming a blight on the free enterprise system. More and more these days, one hears the heads of productive, responsible companies state that their time and energy are diverted from building up their businesses in order to deal with the new breed of corporate raiders. They are concerned that the free enterprise system will be turned into the frightened enterprise system". The raids by Japanese and West German Multinationals taking over in the United States is a form of "merging" which has developed in the past decade. Individuals such as Murdoch, the Australian takeover artist representing unknown financiers, goes abroad to buy up English and American papers, radio and television stations. The acquisition and takeover has produced scandals in the oil industry. Just to demonstrate how this "merger" scheme is operating at the business and industrial level, here are a few items that appeared in one issue (Dec. 3) of The Wall Street Journal:

* Jersey City - Commercial Bancshares Inc. said it completed the acquisition of Lenape State Bank and Edgewater National Bank.

* Boeing Co. agreed to buy de Havilland of Canada Ltd.

* Dunlop of Olympic Ltd., an Australian industrial company whose interests include tires, retailing and latex products, has acquired . . . Lamprecht (West Germany), Bloser (Paris), Kelga (Malaysia), and Pharmaseal (Arizona and Mexico).

* London - Imperial Group PLC agreed to acquire United Biscuits PLC and Argyll Group PLC launches a hostile takeover for Distillers Ltd.

* Chicago - Dean Foods Co. agreed to acquire Ryan Milk Co.

* Harrisburg - Harsco Corp. said it signed a letter of intent to sell its Broderick Division to Banjo Corp. of Louisville, Ky.

* Dallas - Mitsubishi Aircraft International Inc. will phase out its general aviation business outside Japan. Beech Aircraft of Wichita, a unit of Raytheon Co., will take over.

* St. Louis - Monsanto Co. said it completed the sale of its British Seal Sands chemical plant of BASF AG of West Germany.

* Butte, Montana - Montana Power Co. will sell its shares of Colstrip 4 Coal-fired power plant to a partnership: Shell Oil, General Electric, Drexel Burnham Lambert Co.

* Detroit - Evening News Association expects its acquisition by Gannett Co.

* A second wave of takeover speculation has been sweeping the shares of companies that make popular household remedies, such as Rolaides. The takeovers, acquisitions and mergings have become so prevalent that "The Federal Reserve Board is likely to act soon on a plan to restrict the use of 'junk bonds' to finance takeovers," Fed officials said.

* This from the Fort Lauderdale Sun-Sentinel: "The London Stock Market is in the grip of takeover fever and commentators say even the biggest companies no longer feel safe from business predators after a record-breaking year for corporate mergers."

Community banks are theoretically closing, farm mortgages are actually foreclosing, and untold thousands of people are thrown out of employment because of takeovers, acquisitions and mergings of corporations. Yet the Big Banks and the Agribusiness executives won't suffer. Despite the alleged claim of bank troubles, four of the Nation's biggest - First National of Chicago, Morgan Guaranty, Bankers Trust and Irving Trust - plus a London subsidiary of the Royal Bank of Canada have agreed to lend the Soviet Union $400 million at unusually low interest rates (8½%) so the multinationals dealing in grain can continue to sell American and Canadian grain, at American and Canadian citizens' expense.

Tying all of the foregoing in with the "global merging" plan admitted in 1953, we were reminded of a statement made by Alexander Solzhenitsyn: "But just as we (Russians) feel ourselves your allies here, there also exists another alliance - at first glance a strange one, a surprising one - between our Communist leaders and your Capitalists. This alliance is not new. The very famous Armand Hammer, who is flourishing here today, laid the basis for this when he made the first exploratory trip to Russia in Lenin's time, in the first years of the revolution. He was extremely successful in this intelligence mission, and since that time for all these fifty years we observe continuous and steady support by the businessmen of the West of the Soviet Communist leaders." All in the spirit of merging, of course. And, as Ivor Benson said in the October, 1985 issue of his Behind The News: "International finance capitalism and Marxist-Leninist socialism (Communism) are exhibited once again, not as antagonists but as only two aspects of one and the same phenomenon. . . But it is the great takeover operations in the West which now call for our close attention, and not mere endorsement of what a few intelligent observers have been saying ever since the Bolshevik Revolution. We had better know what these huge takeover operations mean if we are to understand the present undeclared war in the West, and find out how, collectively and individually, we can arm ourselves in mind and morale for our defence. . . A few guiding principles of action are clearly discernible. As the ownership and control of the world's riches and productive resources is concentrated in fewer and fewer hands (and more people correspondingly dispossessed), the need for anonymity becomes increasingly important. Those who today have at their disposal enormous quantities of money, plus the power to create more of it as credit almost at will, are now engaged in converting as much of it as possible, and as quickly as possible, into assets of real value, for they know that a precipitous fall in the purchasing power of all the currencies must come sooner or later; possibly quite soon. The bigger the conglomerate that emerges as a result of a series of corporate raids, the more it resembles some portion of a Soviet commissariat and the more securely is the identity of the owner or owners concealed. . . What we are seeing in the West is the total submergence of the creative and productive element in society; . . a transfer of all the rights of ownership and control from those who invent, originate, work and produce to those whose interest and activity are confined exclusively to buying and selling, owning and controlling. This ever-increasing separation of function is a phenomenon that seems to have passed wholly unnoticed by our professors of economics and sociology."

With such great wealth and power concentrated in so few hands, with those hands resolved to "so alter life in the United States that it can be comfortably merged with the Soviet Union," with those hands determined to bring about a New World Order with its concomitant Socialist World Government, those hands must be cuffed if liberty is to be regained. It can be done by restoring the hard money directives written into our Constitution, and by demanding that elected representatives of the people, not agents of the International Bankers, be returned the power "to coin (not print) money" and "regulate the value thereof." We must regain what we couldn't keep.

OUR WORST ENEMY IS THEIR BEST FRIEND

Important definition: "A watergate has come to signify a mission not meant to succeed but designed to destroy those ordered to carry it out and by its failure to destabilize the nation and ruin leaders who cannot be defeated at the polls." So writes Hilaire du Berrier from Paris. He adds, "Planners of such an operation have two arms for channeling public opinion: The press and the school." Then he illustrates how these two arms are used: "If an attack against an American Base or Embassy comes from Arabs or Palestinians, our professors (school) and Woodwards and Bernsteins (press) will outdo themselves in support of the President. If it comes from Soviet-supported ideological instead of territorial terrorists it will be reported as what is called well-balanced news." H du B then writes of how watergates have been used to destabilize Western governments, especially that of the United States. He begins his story in the 60s referring to Vietnam and leads up to 1985 and the Geneva Summit. He emphasizes the fact that conspiracy is involved in all of these watergates. His references are concerned primarily with the Trilateral Nations. We should like to add to his theme by referring to the Nations of Asia and Africa, while emphasizing the conspiratorial manner in which the governments of the USSR and the USA have pretended to be enemies while at the same time working together to bring chaos and death to so many millions on those continents. As with today, as they work together to destroy the Republic of South Africa. The professors, and most preachers, and the press continually blast South Africa but say nothing about the Soviets having killed more than a million Afghanistanis and driven another 4½ million inhabitants from their homes into foreign lands. Commenting on this, Rev. Curtis Dickinson adds that "At the end of WWII they (the Communists) took captive 5,009 Americans from German prison camps, and so far only 15 have returned to freedom." And yet, while Americans by and large look upon the Soviets as our worst enemy, the Megabankers who control our foreign policy look upon them as best friend. And our government talks of them as enemy but works with them as friend. Let the record speak:

Throughout the years of the Second World War, the Soviet Union was our ally. Our government neglected our own in the Pacific who were fighting the Japanese enemy while arms and supplies were rushed to the Russians. Toward the end of the war Stalin wanted the honor of having his troops capture Berlin. So General George Patton and his Third Army were ordered to stop their triumphal march through Germany so the Soviets could get into Berlin first. When General Patton, by far the best of them all at the Western Front, complained of this treatment of his troops, he was relieved of his command and soon afterward died from injuries suffered on December 9, forty years ago, in a truck-auto accident on the German autobahn near Mannheim. When the Soviet troops had entered Berlin they were given "occupation currency" supplied by the United States government, so they could run rampant through the city buying up all the goods and fineries they could find. Then when Stalin demanded that all the Russian prisoners of war and those nationals who had escaped from Russia during the war, be returned to the USSR, the United States government complied. They called it "Operation Keelhaul." Anti-Communist Soviet nationals were forcibly repatriated not only from Germany, but also from Italy, France, Denmark, Norway, Sweden, and the United States. They had escaped from the USSR because they feared and hated Communism. Some fought with the Allied Armies. Some fought with the German troops. Some merely found an opportunity to escape to another country. But all of them were rounded up and returned to the USSR. There were about two million of them who thus disappeared in concentration camps to be worked to death, or killed outright. About 200 of them were in the United States. They were gathered up and sent to Fort Dix from where they were repatriated. Julius Epstein wrote: "The two hundred were ready to fight for their lives. First, they refused to leave the barracks when ordered to do so. The military police then used tear gas, and half-dazed, the prisoners were driven under heavy guard to the harbor where they were forced to board a government vessel. Here the two hundred immediately started to fight. (They destroyed the ship's engines and had to be returned to the barracks. A second attempt also failed. Then) "A Sergeant hit upon the idea of doping the prisoners. Consequently, he mixed barbiturates into their coffee. Soon, all of the prisoners fell into a deep, coma-like sleep. It was in this condition that the prisoners were brought to another Soviet boat for a speedy return to Stalin's hangmen. The story of this crime is still secret today, known only to God and the persons involved, as well as to a handful of displaced persons now living in Germany, who were lucky enough to escape forced repatriation because some American officers and GIs on duty in Germany possessed a higher regard for Christian ethics than for any official and illegal orders from Washington." (From pages 103-4 of "Operation Keelhaul," by Julius Epstein, copyright 1973, Devin-Adair). Of those 200, three committed suicide rather than be returned to the Soviet Union.

Such was the cooperation between the USSR and the USA. But even greater and more secret was the manner in which they cooperated in the destruction of empires, excepting the empire that was being built by the Soviets. In Chalcedon Report #345, December 1985, Otto Scott wrote: "In the rush of post World War II idealism, it seemed impossible to deny that all peoples everywhere deserve freedom, have the right to rule their societies, and that an end should be brought to colonialism. France, Holland, Spain and Portugal objected. Britain was divided between Socialists who argued for a 'Little England' and traditionalists who did not agree that the loss of an empire was a fitting end to victory in war. But the two strongest powers in the postwar world - the USA and the USSR - were adamant against western colonialism. It was strange then, and stranger now, that the US did not label the nations occupied by the Soviets as colonials, though their relationship was openly that of vassals to overlords." Note the togetherness: With all the Western Nations protesting, the two great powers, USA and USSR, demanded that there should be an end of empires, save the Soviet's. Do you smell Conspiracy? We shall quote at length from Otto Scott's article, in which he shows something of what happened as a result of this US-USSR collaboration, the UN assisting.

When Britain left India in 1948, our liberals said the step was tardy and that India should never have been under British rule. Such critics were not chastened when Independence was attended first by riots, then massacres in which one million persons were slaughtered. . . What is never mentioned is that those murdered in the resurgence of Hindu-Muslim hatreds in independent India were far more numerous than all those murdered in two centuries of British rule. Furthermore, 11 million people fled from either new India or

New Pakistan. Later war erupted between Pakistan and India. Today riots and massacres have become endemic. And the end of British rule is still hailed as official wisdom. . . . The largest colonial area after India was Black Africa. Divided into artificial nations whose boundaries ignored traditional tribal territories, these released nations now constitute one-third of the votes in the UN. There are 2,000 black tribes in Africa - each with its own language, history, customs and culture. . . Africa is four times larger than the US, spans four time zones, has vast untapped resources and huge, empty farmlands capable of producing enough to feed both itself and Europe. Its population is nearly 500 million, half below the age of 15. Its black-ruled, independent nations south of the Sahara have now had nearly a generation to put their national homes in order. They have not done so, despite the receipt of $100 billion in aid from Europe, the UN and the US. A recent coup in Uganda marked the 72nd violent overthrow of a black-ruled government since Ghana became the first black state to achieve independence in 1957. In the intervening years, 13 heads of state have been assassinated, and at least 12 wars have been fought. Words cannot convey the misery that has reigned in black Africa since the west withdrew. Massacres, tyrannies, concentration camps, public thefts, starvation. In Burundi in 1972 the Watusi government set out to massacre every Hutu with an education, government job or money. In three months, over 200,000 were murdered. In Rwanda, independent since 1962, the situation was reversed. There the Hutu overthrew the Watusi and slaughtered an estimated 100,000 of them. The Organization of African Unity agrees only in denunciations of the West. A Ugandan Anglican bishop told Los Angeles Times reporter David Lamb that at the OAU meeting in Kampala in 1975 "at the very moment the heads of state were meeting in the conference hall, talking about the lack of human rights in southern Africa, three blocks away, in Amin's torture chambers, my countrymen's heads were being smashed with sledge hammers and their legs were being chopped off with axes." Since then, since Amin's ouster, Uganda has suffered worse tyranny under Obote. In Equatorial Guinea Life-President Macias Nguema Biyogo murdered one-eighth of his country's population. In Liberia the president was shot in his bed; cabinet ministers were paraded in their underpants. After their trial, in which no defense was allowed the ministers were taken to a beach, tied to stakes and shot. Sergeant Doe, who led the rebellion, promoted himself to general and moved into the palace. In Ethiopia Haile Selassie was carted off to death in prison by enlisted men headed by Mengistu Haile-Mariam. Mengistu is 5 foot 5 and a member of the Galla tribe once subservient to the Amhara tribe. Mengistu had thousands machinegunned in the streets. When one of his companions questioned him at a cabinet meeting, Mengistu pulled out a gun and shot him dead. That ended dissent. When rebels in Eritrea threatened to kidnap Mengistu's wife and children, he said, "Go ahead. Boil them in oil for all I care." Since then, Mengistu has starved the Eritreans; his troops have driven starving people away from foreign-aid food. In Guinea, under Toure, the State seized all property. Citizens are routinely tortured and murdered. Between 1958 and the late 70s, seventeen of Toure's cabinet ministers were shot or hanged; eighteen others condemned to prison for life at hard labor. As many as two million Guinans have fled the country.

These descriptions could be continued for pages, but tomes could not contain the horrors of Africa. What is most remarkable about this nightmare, however, is the silence of the west. It was argued that independence was due black Africans. Now they have it, and the horrors they have unleashed are never underlined by university demonstrations of protest, are rarely the subject of indignant editorials; are never featured by a CBS "documentary."

The USA and the USSR combined to usher this nightmare of sin and evil into existence in Black Africa." (End of quotations from article in "Chalcedon Report," P.O.Box 158, Vallecito, California 95251).

The first public knowledge of what was happening in Africa regarding decolonization probably came about as a result of the activities of Jomo Kenyatta, a British educated black who led the infamous Mau Mau uprising during which white farmers and their families were brutally murdered in the campaign for black control of Kenya. Kenyatta was finally captured by the British and imprisoned, but was released to become president of the newly independent nation. One of his first acts was to try to eliminate the Somali tribesmen and the 140,000 Indians in his domain. Rhodesia was scheduled to follow the same pattern of decolonization. But having seen what happened to the 100,000 whites in Kenya and the 75,000 whites in Northern Rhodesia (now Zambia), the white citizens of Southern Rhodesia seceded from Britain, asserted their independence, and tried to prevent the destruction of their country and its people. But, there were immediate uprisings. So much murder and mayhem occurred and so much economic pressure was applied that the government finally gave in; Rhodesia became Zimbabwe; and the original murder of whites now has become the murder of blacks of other tribes. Now, with all the rest of Africa in turmoil, the campaign to destroy the one remaining white-controlled nation is underway. This despite the fact that South Africa is one of the only two nations in the world which find people from other nations stealing across their borders to seek a better life. But the USA and the USSR which combined to usher in this nightmare continue to work together to destroy that one remaining nation.

In this collaboration between the USA and the USSR which is controlled and directed by an International Power Elite, it must always be made to appear that the USA and the USSR are adversaries and are working against each other. But secretly, the story is different. In this war against the Republic of South Africa, the USSR provides surrogate forces, military advisers and armaments, trains revolutionaries and terrorists, stirring up the people. At the same time, the government of the United States applies sanctions, denies transactions, and as H du B indicates, utilizes the press, the professors, and the preachers to destroy a country. We find President Reagan, in an Executive Order he issued last September 9th, declaring: "I Ronald Reagan, President of the United States of America, find that the policies and actions of the government of South Africa constitute an unusual and extraordinary threat to the foreign policy and economy of the United States and hereby declare a national emergency to deal with that threat." This was patently a false statement, a lie, but it followed the rules laid down by the powers that be. If even one black is killed in South Africa, by either the police or a fellow black, the item finds a favorable spot in the American newspapers and is heard via radio and TV. The National Council of Churches denounces the South African government and calls for "one man, one vote" in nations where most people don't even know how to vote. Our Tax Exempt Foundations have become Foundations for Destruction. We should thank the Lord that there is one Kingdom the Power Elite can never destroy.

THE "GRADUAL" CONVERGENCE

In the Communist march toward World Government Lenin laid down the principle of "two steps forward, one step backward." The Fabian Socialists, on the other hand, aim at gradualism. Harry Laidler, one of the leading socialist writers in America, explained that "Fabian socialism regarded the transition from capitalism to socialism as a gradual process: looked forward to the socialization of industry by the peaceful economic and political agencies already at hand . . . and felt that an important step in the attainment of socialism was the arousing of the social conscience of the community in favor of the socialist ideal." The Fabian Socialists, now generally known as "democratic socialists," believe in utilizing the existing government machinery for the gradual attainment of their New World Order. Michael Loyd Chadwick, former editor of the now defunct Freemen Digest noted that "One of the main differences between democratic socialists and communists is one of tactics. Democratic socialists shun the revolutionary activities of communists, but are more willing to work with the communists than the capitalists." G.D.H. Cole, former Chairman of the Fabian Society explained: "The distinction between socialism, as represented by the various socialist and labour parties of Europe and the New World, and communism, as represented by the Russians and the minority groups in other countries, is one of tactics and strategy rather than of objective. Communism is indeed only socialism pursued by revolutionary means and making its revolutionary method a canon of faith. Communists, like other socialists, (1) believe in the collective control and ownership of the vital means of production and (2) seek to achieve through state action the coordinated control of the economic forces of society. They (the Communists) differ from other socialists in believing that this control can be secured, and its use in the interests of the workers ensured, only by revolutionary action leading to the dictatorship of the proletariat and the creation of a new proletariat state as the instrument of change."

The Power Elite which directs and finances all the forms of socialism, in its aim to create and maintain its New World Order, promotes Fabianism, or Democratic Socialism in the United States, as it already has established democratic socialism in Western Europe. In the United States this has been a gradual process, and just as gradually, the Power Elite aims to eventually merge all into a world government. In a recent Report we wrote of "The Urge to Merge." However, the agents of the Power Elite no longer use the word "emerge." There has been too much publicity regarding that term. Instead in speaking of "merging," the newer word is "converge," which most dictionaries define as "to come together by gradual approach." As early as 1964 Zbigniew Brzezinski and Samuel P. Huntington adopted the new term. Both Huntington and Brzezinski were members of the Council on Foreign Relations, were to become charter members of the yet to be formed Trilateral Commission. In a book with a long title, "Political Power: USA/USSR - Similarities and Contrasts - Convergence or Evolution," published in 1964, they explained what was to become a principal purpose of the Trilateral Commission. They wrote:

"The Communists believe that the world will converge, but into an essentially communist form of government. In the West, on the other hand, the widespread theory of convergence assumes that the fundamentally important aspects of the democratic system will be retained after America and Russia 'converge' at some future, indeterminate historical juncture. Although probably there will be more economic planning and social ownership in the West, the theory sees the Communist Party and its monopoly of power as the real victims of the historical process; both will fade away. Thus on closer examination it is striking to discover that most theories of the so-called convergence in reality posit not convergence but submergence of the opposite system. Hence the Western and the communist theories of convergence are basically revolutionary: both predict a revolutionary change in the character of one of the present systems. The Communists openly state it. In the West it is implicit in the prevalent convergence argument. . . . The Soviet and the American political systems, each in its own way, have been highly successful. Because they have been successful, they are not likely to change drastically. Yet for the two systems to converge there would have to be a drastic alteration of course - in a historical sense, a revolutionary change of direction - in the path of development of one of them." (Unquote) In his later writings, Brzesinski made it clear that he believed Communism was to be the "wave of the future" and that the American system would have to be altered in order to achieve the desired convergence.

This alteration of the American system began in earnest with the coming of the New Deal. After the manner of the Communist plan, there were then two steps forward toward Democratic Socialism, and then one step backward at the end of World War Two when the Democrats were rejected and Dwight Eisenhower, who changed his politics to fit the plan, brought in a Republican program which was supposedly a step backward. Then a giant step toward "convergence" was made when President Jack Kennedy called for a policy of interdependence between the Nations of the West. Lyndon Johnson's "Great Society" plan completed the second step forward. Then the one step backward seemed to begin with the election of Richard Nixon as President. That, however, was a short step that became more of a shuffle as new relations were established between the United States, the Soviet Union, and Communist China, thanks to the work of Rockefeller agent Henry Kissinger. Then came the strange emergence of Jimmy Carter who was selected and trained for the post of president by agents of the Trilateral Commission. This step forward was much too alarming to the citizens of the United States and a man who was extolled as a great conservative, Ronald Reagan, was ushered by popular acclaim into the White House. To bolster his image as a conservative, he brought with him a group of conservative aides and assistants, and the people were pleased. But the real conservatives were concerned because he chose a liberal opponent as his running mate in the person of George Bush. The Moral Majority was shocked, as were other groups of fundamentalists and evangelicals. But they hailed Reagan anyway, and thought he would do as they wished because "they put him in the White House," or so they thought when they were given a chance to vote for him. But, what happened?

We are indebted to syndicated columnist John Lofton for this brief chronology: "The old Ronald Reagan, by which I mean the younger Ronald Reagan, used to say that we shouldn't trade with the Reds (that's what he called them then) until they tore down the Berlin Wall. In 1962, he spoke of the 'inescapable truth' that we are in a war with Soviet Communism. And in his 1964 speech for Barry Goldwater, he called communism 'the most dangerous enemy known to man.' In his syndicated national radio program in 1975, Mr. Reagan said, regarding the sale of US wheat to Russia that, 'maybe we simply [ought to] do what's morally right. Stop doing business with them. Let their system collapse.' In a 1975 radio commentary, he defended calling Communists liars by noting: 'How do you insult a pig by calling it a pig?', And also in 1979 he declared: 'To the Communists and those others who are hostile to our country, President Carter and his supporters in Congress seem like Santa Claus. They have given the Panama Canal away, abandoned Taiwan to the Red Chinese (Mr. Reagan now calls these folks 'the so-called Chinese Communists') and they're negotiating a SALT II Treaty that could very well make this Nation No. 2! Mr. Reagan is, of course, now abiding by this very treaty. But, it is now 1985. 'Tis the season to be jolly. And 'Santa Claus' Reagan has gone along with those in his administration who seem to believe that the Soviets and their puppet-states have some sort of right to borrow money from US banks. US loans in Eastern bloc nations have risen from $75 million last year to $1.3 billion so far this year. . . . Mr. Reagan has refused to support legislation which would have given him the authority to stop American bank loans to the Soviets and their client states without first declaring a national emergency.' (Unquote).

In this same context Lawrence Patterson in his December Monthly Lesson in Criminal Politics mentions the latest $400,000,000 loan to the USSR and commented: "All these things were arranged on the eve of the Summit." Then on the subject of "Convergence with the USSR," Patterson writes: "In one of the most asinine speeches I've heard, the President spoke to the Nation on Nov. 14th to claim (in effect) that the Beach Boys and the Bolshoi Ballet could solve the problem of Soviet aggression around the world!! How can we have confidence in a President who makes such claims? Are we to believe that by exchanging Soviet and US citizens we are going to solve the conflict? I ask: How are we to find people who are willing to work in the USSR? Are they to be conscripted (forced) to live in Russia? Would you want to force your high school or college son or daughter to spend a year in a Russian school? What kind of insanity is this man proposing? What President Reagan has proposed (in thinly disguised language) is that the two countries ultimately be merged. In addition to being shocked by such a proposal, you should be infuriated. After all, what would happen in a merger? We would lose our freedom and the Soviets would gain domination! If it could be worked out that we could dominate them, and thereby free their citizens, a merger might have some benefit. But that isn't the way it's going to work out! They will be the dominant force, with the Trilateral Party handling the merger details and acting as their 'Roman governor' over 'districts' of the merged land. . . . I hope you heard President Reagan's pre-Summit speech. It was a classic blueprint for the merger of the US into the USSR (not the other way around). Does he really believe what he said about the Beach Boys and the Bolshoi Ballet, when they are maiming thousands of Afghan children with toy bombs? Yes, I suppose you heard: In an attempt to disarm future generations of Afghans, they dropped bombs (disguised as toys) in the cities across Afghanistan and have maimed (by blowing off the hands and arms) of thousands of small children. . . This makes for wonderful warm-your-heart kind of reading for a Reagan-Gorbachev dinner table. . ." (Quoted from Lawrence Patterson's "Monthly Lesson in Criminal Politics," monthly, $149.95 yearly. P.O.Box 37812, Cincinnati, Ohio 45222).

It is well known that the Moral Majority, most Republicans and a majority of the Democrats voted for Ronald Reagan, hailing him as a kind of knight on a white horse wearing a white hat and expected to save the country from the state of democratic socialism into which it was headed. This in spite of George Bush, since the rest of his aides and assistants which Mr. Reagan brought to Washington with him were accepted as true conservatives. But through the months, those tried and true aides kept departing one by one, to be replaced by the same CFR and TLC lackeys that had surrounded Jimmy Carter. And, as the complexion of the administration changed, George Bush seemed to grow more acceptable to those who had at first opposed him. So that, in the fall of 1985 when people started talking about a successor to Reagan in the White House, the name of George Bush was mentioned more and more. Until Rev. Jerry Falwell, leader of the Moral Majority and one of the chief opponents of Bush, came to announce publicly that he was all for the election of George Bush to succeed Ronald Reagan come next election time. Then the name of Pat Robertson, leader of the "700 Club" began being mentioned as a possible candidate. Support for this idea came from Judie Brown of American Life Lobby, James Watt, Howard Philip of Conservative Caucus, Paul Weyrich of the Committee for a Free Congress, and Christian leaders such as Tim and Beverly LaHaye. The August-September issue of the Conservative Digest devoted 40 pages to Robertson, including what looked like a political platform. Pat Robertson apparently thought it over for a while. Then, on December 16th, USA TODAY announced that "Television evangelist Marian Gordon 'Pat' Robertson disclaimed any plans of running for president but said 'moral leadership' will be a key issue in the 1988 election campaign." Speaking on NBC's Meet The Press, he then added that George Bush was "an extraordinarily fine and decent man!" Thus did Robertson join Falwell in promoting George Bush as our next President.

In this Report we have attempted to show how both Fabian Gradualism and Communist tactics are used by the Power Elite to bring about a convergence of the countries of the world. How the public image of politicians is gradually changed is a part of the plan. Ronald Reagan came from out of the West bearing the very image of a blue-blooded conservative. But today he is distrusted by those who praised him most in 1980, and for good reason. George Bush was a direct opposite in political image. He was more like a Democratic Socialist than a Republican (though they're often the same). Bush was a member of the CFR and the TLC until he was nominated, when he retired temporarily for political reasons. Research specialist and revisionist historian Antony Sutton says George Bush was initiated into The Order in 1948. This is a secret society which Sutton says is the very core of the Conspiracy to control the world, the American branch of the original Illuminati, founded in Bavaria on May 1, 1776, as a Conspiracy to control the world. CFR, TLC, Bilderberger, etc. are a part of the outer circle of The Order, according to Sutton, who has been right in all his other claims. If he is correct, then one of the members of this super Conspiracy may become President of the United States in 1988!

There is a statement attributed to Winston Churchill: "The hottest place in hell must be reserved for those who in the face of great moral crisis, maintain their neutrality." Disdaining false images, it's time to "Put on the whole armour of God" described in the sixth chapter of St. Paul's Epistle to the Ephesians.

PEACE-KEEPERS VS. WAR-MAKERS

As these days wind down toward the end of an old year and the beginning of a new one, and a time when resolutions are made and hopes for better times are expressed, there is a universal cry which always seems to remain the same regardless of the year. People cry peace, peace, when there is no peace. Men, women and children in Afghanistan continue to die by the thousands in the defense of their native land. Thousands perish in Cambodia as mad leaders try to establish a Communist Utopia that can bring only further death. The war between Iraq and Iran continues to be fueled for no reason that makes sense to the average Westerner. Angola, Nicaragua, Ethiopia, Namibia, South Africa, and scores of other states in darkest Africa are beset with wars and revolutions. There is no peace between the Irish. The Arab-Israeli caldron is kept at boiling point, which brings up another sad instance of America's vain attempt to keep the peace in that area. There was a peace-keeping force in the Sinai desert between Egypt and Israel about which the world knew very little. American troops there, supposedly keeping the peace, were forgotten men to all but their relatives and friends; until 248 of them returning home for Christmas with their families, died in a fiery airplane crash at Gander, Newfoundland. As we write this, there is yet no answer as to how or why the crash occurred: sabotage, pilot error, poor maintenance, no official answer has been given. But we might recall that this is the second major disaster that has occurred as a result of American attempts to act as peacekeeper in the Middle East. In October, 1983, 241 Marines died in Lebanon when a car bomb leveled their headquarters. Those men were there as peacekeepers because President Reagan had said that "vital interests" of the United States were at stake. Those "vital interests" seemed to disappear when the 241 Marines were killed. President Reagan changed his mind and called the rest of them home; nothing accomplished, nothing gained, lives sacrificed unnecessarily.

But the disaster at Gander when 248 "peace-keepers" died was even less necessary and certainly no "vital interests" were involved. We got into this Sinai business back in 1981 because there was an uneasy truce between Egypt and Israel, and there was a call for a neutral force to keep the forces of Egypt and Israel from attacking each other. Israel had taken over a part of the area that belonged to Egypt, the Israeli government agreed to give back the land. But the Egyptian government feared that there would be trouble when Egypt reclaimed the area, unless there was someone on the spot to see to it that the peace treaty that was signed would be kept. There was supposed to be a multi-national peace-keeping force sent into the area, like the multi-national United Nations force that has supposedly been keeping the peace along the Israeli-Lebanese border. But when it came time to set up this international body for Sinai service, it became clear that the Soviet Union would block any UN action in the Sinai area. So, Israel, Egypt and the United States made separate arrangements, with the U. S. State Department masterminding the deal and setting up the peace-keeping force which apparently is to stay there in the desert perpetually. The force started operating in 1982, but from the very beginning U.S. troops have carried most

THE GOLD SOCIALISTS

We quote Al Owen, editor and publisher of Newsweek Digest who quotes Conrad Braun, editor of Gold Standard News who in turn quotes E.C. Reigel, author of the book The New Approach To Freedom which was originally published in 1949. Paragraphing has been omitted to conserve space.

* * * * *

There are three kinds of socialists: the left-wing or Marxist group, who believe that the government should own and control everything; the middle-of-the-road socialists, who believe the government should own and operate public utilities; and the right-wing socialists, who believe that the government should control only the monetary system. The right-wing socialists are by far the most dangerous, because they are not known as socialists and call themselves capitalists, individualists, private enterprisers, etc. They even believe themselves to be anti-socialist, and profess full faith in private enterprise. They are not only numerically the largest group of socialists but are also individually the most influential. Among them are the leading industrialists and mercantillists and bankers and statesmen. The right-wing socialists believe that with production and distribution facilities in the ownership and operation of private enterprise, and with monetary facilities in the hands of government, we can have free enterprise. They might as well believe that if a man owns an automobile, he need not worry about who or what controls the gas. Private enterprise means the right among men to come to voluntary agreement on the exchange of their goods and services. These agreements, some written, some oral, some implicit, some explicit, run into the millions, and upon their fidelity rests the entire social structure. In a money economy, all these contracts are expressed in terms of the monetary unit, which is itself based upon a contract - the basic contract which is the foundation of the entire pyramid of contracts. What is the money contract that makes possible the faithful performance of every contract? Ask any businessman, banker, lawyer, economist or statesman, and you will find that his idea is not only vague, but it involves legislation. In other words, he believes that money is a political product. In contrast with this universal belief, the truth is that the state is incompetent to legislate money and powerless to issue it. The substance of money is supplied entirely by private enterprise. The state's intervention in money is at best an impediment to private enterprise, and with the assertion of the issue power it becomes the active agent of socialization. Thus those who believe in or accent political money power - and their number is legion - are the most dangerous, though innocent, socialists. While the great mass of people have no ideology, those who think on the issue between private enterprise and socialism are virtually all socialists of the three classes named. This is a startling fact that we must recognize before the final battle lines are formed. The would-be friends of private enterprise must be made real friends, instead of innocent fellow travelers, with those who would destroy our liberties. Private enterprise, to survive, must control all three facilities, namely, the means of exchange, the means of production, and the means of distribution. To control the means of exchange, we must have separation of money and state.

DBR Comment: The Constitution grants Congress the power to coin (mint) money and regulate the value thereof. But this does not include the power to print, issue, emit, make, or create money. Congress may borrow money, and it may "lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts and excises" to pay its debts and finance its Constitutionally specified programs and duties. But to issue what purports to be money, such as federal reserve notes, is patently Unconstitutional and therefore illegal and a form of counterfeiting. But where is the court, or the congress, or the administration that dares to admit this or do anything to correct the unlawful situation?

of the burden. There have been 1,200 American troops, 1,800 other troops supplied by 10 other nations. But, surprisingly, those other troops were supplied mainly by Columbia and Fiji; 500 from each country. None of the other eight countries involved have supplied as many as 100 troops. There has been no trouble and the mission has been a thankless one. Those 1,200 Americans were forgotten, until 248 of them died at Gander.

The original peace treaty that started it all, a treaty between Egypt and Israel with the US State Department supervising, was signed in 1979. But no important action was taken in implementing it until 1981, and it was decided that a peace-keeping force should be sent to Sinai in 1982. The families of those 248 victims have every right to ask why their sons and husbands were sent to Sinai six years after the treaty was signed, when nothing had or has been done to make the stay necessary, and why should American men be directly involved in a dispute between two foreign Nations. How are America's "vital interests" involved in this dispute?

We are stressing this incident because American troops have been sent as peace-keepers into almost every important country in the world with the exception of those countries controlled by the Communists. Those servicemen in West Germany and the other countries of Western Europe are peace-keepers. But why? Aren't those Nations well able to keep the peace themselves so long as we supply them with weapons and equipment? It seems that the United States has been designated to send its young men and women to every part of the world, to police the world wherever the Communists aren't doing it instead. And we should comment on how clever the Power Elite has been in setting up two super powers, one to try to conquer the world, the other to resist the conquests. Because, in these power plays involving manpower, there is a significant difference between the way the two super powers operate. Whenever the Soviet Union involves itself in a conquest, unless the conflict happens to occur in one of its satellites or a bordering country such as Afghanistan, the USSR does not send Soviet troops to do the fighting. There are surrogate forces supplied by Cuba, West Germany, and other satellites. The surrogates do the fighting and the dying. But where the United States becomes involved in some conflict there are no surrogate forces to send. Young Americans must be sent to fight and perhaps die, in Korea, Vietnam, or wherever the next conflict may occur. But only Soviet "advisers" will ever be found in such places. If it were that our troops were peace-keeping and defending Nations that are opposing Communism, it would be bad enough. But our government, especially its State Department, doesn't stop at that. There must be aid for the Communist countries as well. So that, as we oppose the Communists with one hand, we lend them aid and give them the needed supplies so they can better oppose us on the other hand.

As an example, take this recent pilgrimage of Secretary of State George Shultz to Eastern Europe. One of his stops was in Belgrade, Yugoslavia. No sooner had he touched down than he was off to visit the tomb of Josip Broz Tito, the Communist hero and Yugoslav war criminal. According to the editor of The Washington Times, "He solemnly laid a red-and-white wreath on the great man's marble slab, scribbled an entry into the guest book, then hurried away for consultations with Tito's successors, who are eager for US help in grappling with their $19 billion foreign debt. Rather than paying homage to Marshal Tito, if we may inject a somber note in the festivities, Mr. Shultz more appropriately might have visited the prison cell of Dr. Mirko Sunic, the 70-year-old Yugoslav who drew a four-year prison sentence last month after his son, an American citizen, criticized Tito in a letter to The Washington Times. Dr. Sunic's daughter was also sentenced, but is free pending appeal. .

Here is the Belgrade regime panhandling US taxpayers while simultaneously jailing the father of an American critic, and Secretary Shultz's first impulse on landing among the jailors is to honor the father of Yugoslav oppression. Every American should be offended.

"Since the word of Dr. Sunic's imprisonment first leaked out," the editor continues, "we have appealed several times to the State Department. We do not find that it responds to human rights abuses with the same alacrity it exhibits when Yugoslavia asks for a handout. Or when Belgrade wants to ship Yugo-50 automobiles to the United States. Or when the White House asks whether the president should certify, yet again, in defiance of reason and common sense, that 'furnishing aid to Yugoslavia is vital to the security of the United States!'"

Shortly before Shultz's pilgrimage to Communist-dominated Eastern Europe, Secretary of Commerce Malcolm Baldrige was in Moscow with more than 400 American executives representing 192 corporations, banks, small businesses, trade associations and law firms. A three-day conference was held in which increased trade with the USSR was discussed, on the assumption that "peaceful trade benefits both countries." Addressing a US-USSR Trade and Economic Council meeting, Baldrige said that the Reagan Administration was interested in "non-strategic trade that is consistent with existing laws and policies." But there was a second reason for the visit. While most-favored-nation treatment has been accorded some of the satellites, it has not yet been re-installed for the USSR. This pilgrimage of the 400 was expected to stir up enough lobbying in Washington so that the most-favored trading privilege can be extended to the USSR.

At about the same time that Shultz was honoring a dead Communist dictator in Yugoslavia, and Baldrige was encouraging more and better trade relations with the USSR, President Reagan was signing an executive order which permits Red China to obtain nuclear fuel, equipment and blueprints from the United States. Even the General Accounting Office says the agreement is too loosely worded, allows purchase of some items refused other Nations. And there is the suspicion that Red China will be able to not only make better nuclear bombs, but sell them to Third World dictators who may be anxious to buy and have the US taxpayer-supplied money to pay for them. This favored-nation treatment to Red China is based on the assumption that if there is war between the US and the USSR, PRC will side with us. Washington biggies should understand that a Communist can always be trusted to be a Communist, and that in any serious showdown, China and the Soviet Union will be on the same side against what's left of the rest of the world.

And here we end the last of 32 years of Don Bell Reports. We pray that our 33rd year of reporting will be filled with news of a return of America to that path laid down by its Founding Fathers. But as that great Christian American, Senator Jeremiah Denton, has said: "If our nation is to survive, it must be as one nation under God." Our sincere wishes to you, dear reader, for a happy and prosperous New Year for you and our beloved country.

Year Thirty-Three Number One January 3, 1986

FORECAST FOR 1986

Columnists, psychics, clairvoyants, editors and some claiming to be charismatics like to make predictions and even prophesies concerning what is to be in the New Year. But as we turn time's corner into the second half of the fateful 80s, there are so many unsolved and unresolved issues hanging over from the past year that any attempt to predict what will happen in 1986 would not be a wild guess. For example, the news media are unanimous in agreeing that the number one story of 1986 had to do with terrorism. Associated Press said "The world's top stories in 1985 echoed hope and horror - each event, it seemed, so gripping as to erase what went before. The top story of the year, as voted by member editors and broadcasters of The Associated Press, was the wave of terrorism that swept the Middle East from the air hijackings to the commandeering of the Italian liner Achille Lauro." The terrorist attacks on the Rome and Vienna airports in the last week of December gave added emphasis to AP's story. Yet another release reported: "In a year of burgeoning terrorism against Americans traveling overseas, the FBI foiled 23 terrorist incidents in this country, Director William Webster said. "We stopped over 23 incidents in this country before they happened'." And on January 1st came the report that "The Joint Chiefs of Staff have sent President Reagan a list of possible military options to use against terrorists in the Mideast, government sources said Tuesday. The White House sought preparation for possible military action in the wake of last week's gunfire attacks at the Rome and Vienna airports. . . The list of options includes possible U.S. air strikes at Libya. . .The man charged as the lone surviving terrorist in the Rome airport attack claims Libya provided support to them for the mission, and 300 fellow terrorists are set to launch similar onslaughts." These terrorists are said to have been trained in Iran, used weapons supplied by the Soviets, and were financed by Moammar Khadafy (It would help all of us if the media could agree on just how the Libyan dictator's name is to be spelled). These hijackings and terrorist attacks are aimed primarily at Israel, secondarily at the United States because of our government' continued support of Israel at the expense of the Arabian countries and the displaced Palestinians. So, we can expect continued terrorist attacks to rank as the number one story for 1986, unless some way is found to make such attacks, as well as support unprofitable.

Story number two in 1985, which will continue to be a top story in 1986 is the dangerous and growing AIDS epidemic. Nearly 16,000 Americans have died since 1979 and more than that number are expected to die in 1986. We are told in Matthew 5:45 that God "maketh his sun to rise on the evil and the good, and sendeth rain on the just as on the unjust." Even so with the Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome. It may strike the just as well as the unjust, since there seems to be no cure and no preventive. Doctors say that those who have it will have it with them until they die. Although many origins for the syndrome have been suggested to create pity for the gays, the fact still stands: AIDS was first recognized in homosex 1 men. Next came the drug users; then the hemophiliacs and some who received blood from blood banks. Now there are reports that men, women and children have been infected innocently and without their knowledge of how it might have happened. 16,000 AIDS victims have died since 1979, the number of victims is expected to at least double with each passing year. Said an Associated Press release: "By the end of the year, doctors at the Center for Disease Control in Atlanta were using initial test results to estimate that one million or more Americans had already been exposed to AIDS. With the opening of school last September parents began to keep their children out of school because of fear of the disease. Since no one can answer the necessary questions of "Who, where, when, why, and how can it be cured," there is every reason to believe that the AIDS epidemic will remain a top story through 1986. Someone might go so far as to suggest to the Club of Rome elitists who fear overpopulation in the next century, that every now and then an epidemic strikes that cannot be stopped until it has run its course. Black Plague, Spanish Flu, Polio in the 50s, etc. The only difference this time: There seems to be no cure, and no way of stopping the spread of AIDS.

In addition to the terrorist and the AIDS problems that will remain with us, there are such important items as the unbalanced budget, the promised tax reforms, the worries about economic, financial and monetary problems. Then there is the unresolved situation of government schools continuing to turn out functional illiterates who will become an ever increasing proportion of the whole population, with the social problems that will create. We could go on and on. But a serious look at the foreign policy problems that are coming up in 1986 seem indicated.

Take the case of Nicaragua. President Reagan keeps trying to get Congress to extend some aid to the freedom fighters who are trying to reclaim their country and drive out the Communists. But Congress is reluctant to give aid to anyone except our enemies or the Israelis. Even more serious, the organized religious groups in America send money to the Sandinistas every time our government manages to send, reluctantly, aid to the freedom fighters. The Religious News Service reports that "As the Reagan administration geared up for an effort to renew aid to rightwing rebels in Nicaragua, a new national religious coalition announced plans to raise $27 million in aid to the civilian victims of those rebels. The campaign is intended to counter the $27 million in non-military aid approved by Congress for the 'contra' forces trying to overthrow the leftist Sandinista government of Nicaragua. . . Although the 22 groups have already sent aid to Nicaragua, Rev. William Callahan (spokesman for the 22 groups) said the new coalition is intended to give these efforts (of aiding the Marxists) a higher profile. "The Quest for Peace" will serve to counteract aid sent by private American conservative groups to the 'contras," said Father Callahan. The pattern is established and will remain throughout 1986: Organized religion in the United States is always eager to aid the Communists in their drives to take over the world. To rephrase a statement found in Scripture, A Christian's worst enemies are those who say they are Christians and are not but are of the synagogue of Satan.

While religious groups are aiding Marxist guerrillas and revolutionaries in Nicaragua, Salvador, and other countries of Central America and the Caribbean, as well as in Africa, a similar situation exists in Angola; except that the special interest groups, the multi-nationals, are doing the promoting of Communism. The freedom fighters who are trying to retake their country and drive out the Communists, receive no help from the United States government, while the Communists who are holding the country are helped by these special interest groups, especially the Gulf Oil Company. Jim Taylor, a foreign correspondent who reports to The American Sunbeam recently worked his way into Luanda, Angola by posing as the representative of an international oil corporation. He filed a report (after he left Angola, we expect) in which he said, among other things, that when Angola became an independent country, "The MPLA, (Popular Marxist Movement for the Liberation of Angola), backed by the U.S. and Cuba, defeated the forces of freedom fighters. And the Clark amendment, passed by Congress in 1975 to prohibit any aid of any kind to the non-Communists, turned the tide in favor of the Marxists, which is just exactly what Washington wanted in order to protect the mighty Gulf Oil Company here. So don't let any pious speeches by President Reagan fool you when he states that he is against Communism." (Unquote). While in Luanda, Taylor met a French diplomat who isn't to be named for obvious reasons, who told Taylor: "The U.S. is aiding Cuba and the Soviets here to gain victory after victory in their relentless campaign of conquest over Third World nations in Africa. I have watched the spectacle here first-hand of desperate men, women and children who once counted on the U.S. now dragging their meager household possessions into the Bushland to escape the Communist invaders in an unprecedented example of American failure and betrayal." Taylor then adds: "I thought this to be a rather severe condemnation of American policy. But I could not argue with it. I am certain it is true and that betrayal is the correct word to describe American action or inaction while our UN representatives make lofty speeches about protecting these unfortunate people. Then the U.S. turns right around and spends your tax dollars to make sure that the Gulf Oil Company here is fully protected by Communist soldiers, and thereby assists in the impending downfall of South Africa as well." With Ronald Reagan tamed and controlled by the Establishment forces surrounding him, with George Bush of CFR, TLC, and The Order, ready to take over, we can expect that American foreign policy toward Angola, South Africa, Taiwan, Nicaragua, and the Soviet Union will remain the same in 1986 and so long as the Power Elite remains in command.

Particularly important this New Year is the American policy toward the Philippines. We have a special interest in that Republic, having spent nearly ten years there with headquarters in Manila, a little more than three years of which time were spent in Santo Tomas Prisoner of War Camp, while the Japanese were occupying and finally destroying the city. After being liberated by General MacArthur's forces, we arranged a flight from recaptured Clark Field in a PB4Y2 Navy bomber patrol plane, and we were shot down along the China coast, but lived to talk about it. We later returned to the Philippines from Tokyo to testify at the war crime trials conducted there, and know how very important those American bases in the Philippines really are if we insist upon being international policemen. One of our finest overseas bases was an Cam Rahn Bay in Vietnam. Our government turned it over, fully equipped, to the Communists who now use it to patrol the Indian Ocean and the China Sea. Subic Bay is a finer base, is the strategic heart of American military surveillance of the Indian Ocean as well as the North and South Pacific. Clark Field is comparable as an air base.

If Clark Field and Subic Bay are lost to the United States and turned over to the Communists, it would require the expenditure of billions of dollars and take years to build equivalent bases at some other place in that part of the Pacific, probably on the Island of Guam. Meanwhile our sole remaining defense base of any importance would be Pearl Harbor; and that thought brings back bitter memories. Yet our government, with the exceptions of the Joint Chiefs of Staff and Defense Secretary Weinberger who may be overruled, seems determined to bring about the defeat of Carlos Marcos in the upcoming presidential election in the Philippines. His defeat would mean the sure loss of Clark and Subic, and the eventual takeover by the Soviet Union.

Reference to the Philippines reminds your reporter of the recent death of a friend, Carlos P. Romulo, whom we knew before and after our time in a prisoner of war camp. He was a Major General on the staff of General MacArthur, later served his country as an Ambassador, spending many years in the United States. When leaving this country for the last time he is reported to have said: "Goodbye America. I have been among you for many years. I want to say that I know, and I hope you know, that your greatness comes not from your great factories, not from your magnificent universities, not from . . ." and he went through all of the facets of greatness we have. Then he said: "America is great because America is good. When America ceases to be good, she will cease to be great."

Is America really good? When we think of the X-rated movies, the destruction of the Christian code of ethics, the growth of lawlessness, the acceptance of Secular Humanism as a replacement for the faith of our fathers, the drug traffic, the awful things our schools are doing to those who are to run this country in the future; when we think of these things we wonder, is America really good? And can America continue to be great unless we change course?

In this first month of 1986 there will come a day which might serve as a reflection on how our Nation has drifted to the left in this century, how we as a people have lost our past and accepted the Orwellian rewriting of our history. We refer to the date of January 20, which has been designated a legal holiday to honor one Martin Luther King. Once we celebrated the births of such men as George Washington and Abraham Lincoln. Now their dates have been combined and we observe Presidents' Day" on the third Monday of February. Columbus Day now is called "Discoverers' Day." So there remains January 20, unique in that it is the only day of the year to be observed in the alleged honor of one man alone: Martin Luther King. Communist, philanderer, rejecting the Christian doctrines of original sin, the virgin birth and the resurrection of Christ, a disciple of Mohandus Gandhi, we honor him as a hero equal to Washington and Lincoln.

There is much work in 1986 for those of us who understand that when America ceases to be good, America will cease to be. If Nineveh was spared . . .

Year Thirty-Three Number Two January 10, 1986

EDUCATION FOR THE NEW AGE

"Mastery Learning is to the 80s and beyond what Humanism was to the 70s. Humanism simply laid the groundwork. Mastery Learning will lock it all up." So warns Barbara Morris, who calls Mastery Learning "the perfect totalitarian tool." She is right. But there is this difficulty: The terms used by the social engineers, behavioral scientists, educationists, change agents, et al, have special meanings. Like Orwell's 1984, "Back to Basics" sounds like a return to traditional reading, writing and arithmetic teaching to the average parent. But to the change agent, it means a basic change in values, morals, and attitude toward society. "Excellence in Education" means perfect conditioning of the student to the social engineer. When the term "Mastery Learning" is used, the parent is supposed to think his child is being taught mastery in mathematics, spelling, reading, writing, etc. In fact, he is being mastered by the change agents, and taught to be a subject instead of a citizen in the New World Order, and to be a con-formist in the New Age Society.

Just a brief note about the development of Mastery Learning. About 20 years ago a couple of psychologists, B.F. Skinner and J.S. Bruner, introduced a course of study called MACOS. As The New American of December 9, 1985 noted: it "was supposed to explore human values by focusing on an obscure Eskimo tribe that practiced incest, cannibalism, infanticide and senilicide. Children not only read about the above sordid customs, but also viewed brutally graphic films and then in many cases, were forced to act out these aboriginal practices - such as putting grandmother out on the ice to die - in 'role playing' sessions. In April 1975, Arizona Congressman John Conlan observed: 'The MACOS course was designed . . . to mold children's social attitudes and beliefs along lines that set them apart and alienate them from the beliefs and moral values of their parents and local community.' MACOS was so generally exposed and condemned that it was generally discarded, but was replaced by new "values clarification" and mind-changing courses, one of the worst being Dungeons and Dragons which is a role-playing game in which players act out every form of evil and inhuman activity conceivable, including murder and suicide. The game became so popular that a supposedly Christian version of the game was created and sold in many Christian bookstores, in which the same old dragon was present, with "Light Raiders" (a term used by New Agers) armed with daggers, battleaxes, swords, etc., chasing the dragon. Dungeons and Dragons began to lose some of its popularity when it was learned that many of the thousands of teenage suicides could be traced to the influence of the game.

Meanwhile, psychologists Skinner and Bruner were hard at work designing something to replace MACOS. And Mastery Learning became the replacement. It is, in the simplest terms, a social engineering tool "for bringing about planned social, political and economic change." In the words of Charlotte Iserbyt, it is "designed to nationalize, then internationalize, education in preparation for U.S. participation in a Socialist one-world government scheduled for the early years of the twenty-first century." For a better understanding of what Mastery Learning is all about, we recommend the booklet "Back to Basics Reform or . . . Skinnerian International Curriculum?" by Charlotte T. Iserbyt. Published by the Barbara Morris Report, P.O.Box 756, Upland, CA 91785. $7.00. We should add that in your particular school district Mastery Learning may be camouflaged under some different name, such as Precision Teaching; Concept Attainment Strategy; Socratic Questioning; Critical Thinking Skills; Values Clarification; Management by Objective; Planning, Programming, Budgeting System (PPBS); New Basics; Excellence in Learning; Effective Schooling; Back to Basics Reform; and there may be other names that we have missed. Whatever the name, the social engineers utilize what they call "operant conditioning" to subtly to wipe out parental and religious influences and alter the child's values and beliefs, and to prepare and condition the child for acceptance of and entrance into the New World Order.

This New World Order, or New Age, calls for a socialist economic system, a new world religion, a global society, and a new set of social values. It is important to understand that in all of this, occult religions have a vital part. In this connection the Lucis Trust (Lucis for Lucifer) has a vital part and one of its chief authors, Alice Bailey, was known as the High Priestess of the New Age Movement until her death. In her "Education in the New Age," she wrote: "The values of modern education are still largely competitive, nationalistic and, therefore, separative. The child comes to believe that his particular nation is also of major importance and that every other nation is secondary. This has fed his pride and fostered belief that his group, his religion and his nation are superior to other people and peoples. He becomes consequently a one-sided person with his world values wrongly adjusted and his attitudes to life distinguished by bias and prejudice. Little by little this disastrous state of affairs has been changing, so that today in many countries, the welfare of the state itself is held before the child from its earliest years as the highest possible ideal. This is a definite step forward. Education has three major objects, from the angle of human development. First, it must

PRESIDENT SEEKS FOREIGN CANCER TREATMENT?

(Exclusive to "The Spotlight")

By Tom Valentine

While the government-supported suppression of freedom of choice in cancer therapy continues unabated, the president of the United States is apparently seeking one of the suppressed alternatives. According to reports from European newspapers and magazines, the White House has been quietly in touch with Dr. Hans Nieper, purveyor of "forbidden" cancer remedies. The German publication Neue Revue, in an article headed "A Call From the White House: Save Reagan!" said that Nieper, a world renowned physician who gained additional fame by treating such celebrities as Yul Brynner, has been in contact with the president and his physicians, Adding fuel to worldwide rumors that the outlook for the president's cancer condition is not so rosy as the U.S. media has reported, the German feature said, in translation: "Probably later this fall (1985) Dr. Nieper will fly to Washington - he is supposed to treat the American President Ronald Reagan, 74. Reagan will, after numerous phone calls between his physicians and the cancer expert from Hannover - be supplied with Anavit and Carnivora. Besides this, Dr. Nieper recommended to the president a diet of vegetables and fresh fruit. . . . Nieper products shipped to other American cancer patients was halted by the postal authorities last July. . . .

make man an intelligent citizen, a wise parent, and a controlled personality, able to play his part harmoniously and constructively in the work of the world....The coming education, therefore, should cover training for citizenship, for parenthood, and for WORLD UNDERSTANDING, and could be defined in a new and broader sense as the science of right human relations and of social organization." (Unquote).

Alice Bailey was a disciple of Helen Blavatsky, theosophist, perfect mistress in the Ancient and Primitive Order of Memphis, member of the Order of Mizraim, Grand Orient of France, Fabian Socialist, etc., etc. Bailey claimed to receive her instructions and revelations from a Christlike Mahatma in Thibet, and wrote many books which were published by the Lucis Trust. Her most active disciple in the educational field is Robert Muller, Assistant Secretary General of the United Nations. He is founder of a "World Core Curriculum." The Heritage Education and Review Organization, in an exposure of Muller's curriculum, explains:

"The underlying philosophy upon which the Robert Muller School is based will be found in the teachings set forth in the books of Alice A. Bailey by the Tibetan teacher, Djwhai Khul (published by the Lucis Publishing Company, 866 United Nations Plaza, Suite 566-7, New York and the teachings of M. Morya as given in the Agni Yoga Series books."

To illustrate how the New Age Movement ties in with the New World Order groups, we quote the following from Education Week of November 27, 1985, page 8:..."The director of a leading U.S. education association this month urged representatives of ten other Western nations and Japan (Trilateral Commission - Ed.) to press for the development of a 'world core curriculum' based on knowledge that will ensure 'peaceful and cooperative existence among the human species on this planet.' ... The meeting . . . was attended by educators from Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Great Britain, Iceland, Italy, Japan, Spain, Sweden, West Germany, and the United States." This "core curriculum" is based on New Ager Robert Muller's book, New Genesis: Shaping a Global Spirituality.

This also from the same issue of Education Week: "The Council of Chief State School Officers (heads of education in 50 States, D.C., and 6 territorial districts) adopted a sweeping set of recommendations to upgrade the international dimensions of school curricula. They also agreed to focus their attention next year on how to implement reforms and the relationship between education and the economy." Here we'll find Willie Brandt's UN-sponsored and Socialist International-backed New International Economic Order a part of the New Age's Educational Movement.

Perhaps even more important: As a result of the summit meeting between President Reagan and Communist Boss Gorbachev, The Washington Post of November 22, 1985, reported on its front page an article headed: "Text of Joint U.S.-Soviet Statement revealed the two leaders agreed on cooperation in the development of educational exchanges and software for elementary and secondary school instruction ... and mutual allocation of scholarships for the best students in the natural sciences and humanities..." among other things. Note the real significance of such an exchange. Soviet children are taught to believe in an atheistic, totalitarian, communist form of government and society. Should American children be brainwashed by such Soviet educational materials? As Malcolm Lawrence, coordinator of the Maryland Coalition of Concerned Parents, observed: "At the university level there are already thousands of Marxists and radical-left professors espousing their propaganda on our campuses. We do not need Soviet-trained agents to further indoctrinate our college students in communist-slanted courses in history, culture and economics....The way matters now stand in our schools, pupils are ripe for Marxist-Communist propaganda. I would hate to see this trend facilitated by an official joint program with the U.S.S.R."

This exchange plan with trilateral commission educators along with such a Soviet exchange becomes particularly destructive when it is remembered that computers are replacing textbooks in the schools. By using software propaganda prepared by experts, funneled into the child's mind without any possibility of rebuttal from parents or even teachers, brainwashing is assured. As Dustin Heuston of Utah's World Institute for Computer-Assisted Teaching (WICAT) said: "We've been absolutely staggered by realizing that the computer has the capability to act as if it were ten of the top psychologists working with one student...You've seen the tip of an iceberg. Won't it be wonderful when the child in the smallest country in the most distant area or in the most confused urban setting can have the equivalent of the finest school in the world on that terminal and no one can go between that child and that curriculum? We have great moments coming in the history of education." Charlotte Iserbyt (op cit) in her book informs us that WICAT has joined with the multinational corporation Control Data to form PLATO-WICAT Systems Company. According to its brochure: "The merger brings together the most advanced, far-reaching educational delivery system for the K-12 public and private markets. PLATO-WICAT Systems Co. approach is the systematic application of computers to furnish individualized instruction and to manage the learning process for each student in the classroom..." As a further aid Toward World Understanding (a trade mark for the New Age and World Government), a Control Data executive said: "Concepts of mastery learning and management by objectives are likely to be very attractive to educators in developing countries..." In other words, not just in America, but all over the world, children will be taught and trained by selected master change agents from pre-school through graduation and beyond, with no one able to interfere in any way, and all parental guidance prevented. Can you see how this mastery learning plus computer teaching provides the perfect social engineering tool for preparing people to serve as complacent slaves in the New Age, New World Order? Centralized control of education by Big Government can only bring about what Karl Marx predicted when he proposed it. Once again we ask, Is Public Education Necessary?

"Train up a child in the way he should go; and when he is old, he will not depart from it." (Proverbs 22:6).

THE YEAR OF THE TERRORIST

After months of condemning terrorism but doing little or nothing about it, President Reagan finally did something. He issued another sanction, this time against Libya. This Executive Order sounded very much like the one he had issued against the Republic of South Africa. After the usual citations permitting the issuance of such an order, the President wrote: "I Ronald Reagan, President of the United States of America, find that the policies and actions of the Government of Libya constitute an unusual and extraordinary threat to the national security and foreign policy of the United States and hereby declare a national emergency to deal with that threat." In the case of South Africa, he ordered the freezing of Krugerrands, while as for Libya he froze all of Kaddafi's funds which were held by banks and other institutions in the United States. Then came the big difference. Other Western Nations joined in and cooperated in the sanctions against South Africa, which is supposed to be a friendly nation. But with the exception of Canada, those Nations refused to go along with the United States in the matter of sanctions against Libya, an enemy nation. Nor should they, because they are dependent to a great extent on Libyan oil. Furthermore, the American sanctions will be useless, because there are five major oil companies operating in Libya, and if Brzezinski is right in declaring that multinationals are more powerful than any national government, those oil giants are not about to close down on their operations in Libya. They didn't in Angola, did they? They'll simply work through a middle-man country and continue to make money for themselves and for Muammar Kaddafi.

Most of those who are supposed to know about such things, agree that sanctions against Libya won't work, as they haven't worked to any advantage against South Africa. But the sanctions against Libya have had one dangerous effect. They have brought about the threat of war. Kaddafi warned that he would fight against any military action on the part of the United States or Israel. Bombs, anti-aircraft and other weapons were said to be pouring into Libya from the USSR. When a US spy plane came close, Libyan fighters went out to intercept, but retired quickly when US fighters appeared. Kaddafi stirred up his supporters by claiming that some 40 US Naval vessels were surrounding his country. There was an official denial, but a fleet in the Indian Ocean started toward the Mediterranean to act as reinforcement, just in case there was real trouble. Then Libya's friend Iran caused more confusion by committing what the ship's captain called an act of piracy, when an Iranian warship threatened to blow the American commercial vessel out of the sea if it didn't stop for a searching party. American reaction was one of indignation until someone reminded authorities that in cases of war, it is considered permissible for a combatant to halt and search any neutral vessel if there is a suspicion of arms for the enemy aboard. Precedent: The sinking of the Lusitania on May 7, 1913; an act helping to involve the US in World War I.

Conclusion: Economic sanctions will no longer work unless the Power Elite approves. If it does not approve, such sanctions lead to the threat of war. Hence the rush of armament to Libya from the USSR, and the sailing of the Carrier Saratoga and her naval complement from the Indian Ocean to the Mediterranean. This use of economic sanctions seems to have been understood by the third part of the Trilateral Commission Countries. An official release from Bonn, West Germany, stated: "At a press conference Thursday (Jan. 10), Chancellor Helmut Kohl referred to a series of indications that Libya was implicated in the recent terrorist attacks on the airports of Rome and Vienna. In this light, said the Chancellor, it is insufficient for the Libyan foreign minister to distance himself from the attacks. At the same time Kohl reaffirmed the Federal Government's decision not to join in economic sanctions against Libya called for by US President Ronald Reagan, and said he would outline the reasons for this position in a communication to Reagan...the welfare of the West Germans who remain in the North African nation must still be considered..." (Unquote). Further explanation came from Geneva: "Although they will not join President Reagan in sanctions against Libya, West European nations are quietly mobilizing a sophisticated anti-terrorist apparatus for what the Germans call a 'Krieg Ohne Ende' - war without end. Italy, France, Belgium, West Germany, Austria and Switzerland have been linked by an instant alert system initiated by France's veteran terrorist hunter, Police Commissioner Robert Broussard...Airports, railway stations, border crossings and some hotels have been put under tight surveillance by the European countries involved. Arab travelers are the main suspects in what has been called 'Operation Vigilance' and dozens have been arrested from Athens at the southern tip of Europe to Belgium in the north."

Although President Reagan is still trying to sell his economic sanctions plan to Europeans without success, security measures have been taken with better success in regard to defense from terrorism within the United States. But as for the protection of Americans in other parts of the world, failure has been the word. Only the Israelis have taken any really effective measures against terrorists. Last Oct. 1, Israeli planes flew nearly 1,500 miles to bomb PLO headquarters in Tunisia in retaliation for the murder of three Israelis aboard a yacht in Larnaca, Cyprus. Strong voices in the United States say that is the only way to deal with terrorists: hit them in their training camps, their headquarters, economic boycotts won't stop them. As one American general said, "We have got to decide that we are going to engage in the war against terrorism, because it is going to go on whether we engage or not. There's a war going on; we're just not participating in it, but we're getting hit by it." While our federal government was trying to decide what was to be done about it, last year saw the greatest outbreaks of terrorism in modern history. There were more than 100 major attacks worldwide; bombings, massacres at airports, a 747 jet blown up killing all who were aboard, the continuous hijacking of airliners and the murder of passengers, the assassination of numerous diplomats, the hijacking of an Italian luxury liner, the most recent wanton attacks at Rome and Vienna airports. Don McAlvany predicts that "Companies in West Europe doing business with South Africa will become targets in 1986." Whether or not the attacks can be prevented in the United States is a moot question. There is every indication that unless such characters as Abul Nidal can be found and destroyed, 1986 will really come to be known in history as "The Year of the Terrorist." Abul Nidal, as you know, is the leader of a breakaway faction of the PLO, who is accused of masterminding those Rome and Vienna massacres. Said a State Department official, "That guy doesn't sleep two nights in the same place. He moves as soon as he gets a twitch in his stomach, shifts all around the Mediterranean basin and stays in places where people don't ask questions." Such a place is Kaddafi's Libya, where asking questions is likely to find death as the answer. It is known that there is a kind of working agreement between the governments of Libya, Iran and Syria, and that there are terrorist training camps in all three of the countries, plus camps in Bulgaria, Cuba, Yemen, and the USSR. In referring to the growing terrorism, Don McAlvany noted in his Intelligence Advisor for January, that all of this terrorism "is a part of a well-financed, co-ordinated and orchestrated terrorist network, with the Soviet Union (via the KGB) as the puppeteer, and their goal to destabilize the West. It is the preliminary phase of World War III. The present era of terrorism started on September 13, 1970 when Soviet-backed Palestinian commandos blew up three airlines in the Jordanian desert. It has escalated 15 years to the point today where thousands of terrorists are trained in base camps ... and are being dispersed into Western Europe, Africa, South and Central America and into the United States (where they are being held in check for the moment)."

While Abu Nidal is said to be the leader of the most vicious of these terrorist groups, he is financed by Muammar Kaddafi who, according to West German intelligence reports, recently met with Nidal and promised to subsidize his terrorist group with $12.8 million a year, with a first payment of $4.8 million having been made just before Abu Nidal orchestrated the killings at the Rome and Vienna airports. Nidal's group (between 400 and 600 trained terrorists) was responsible for that hijacking of an Egyptian plane in Malta, in which 60 died. In an interview with a West German news magazine, Abu Nidal said that President Reagan, British Prime Minister Thatcher, King Hussein of Jordan and Egyptian President Mubarak were on his death list. He also said he was "cooperating with the Irish Republican Army, West Germany's Red Army Faction, Belgium's Communist Cells, France's Direct Action, Spain's Basque ETA, and other European underground organizations to fight the imperialists who support Zionism." He called the Soviet Union a true friend of the Arabs, said Syria was his mother country, and Libya was a "bastion against imperialism and Zionism." Such was the declaration of war, one which we are losing, voiced by a faction leader who had dedicated his life to the death of others. Now, let's look at the other side of the coin.

Have we enough of the faith of our fathers and the courage of the founders of this nation to admit that we, as a nation, are to blame for the foreign difficulties that have befallen us? That we brought it on ourselves, and on much of the world as well, by involving ourselves in foreign entanglements in which we had no business? We were created to be a Constitutional Republic, under God, where liberty and justice might prevail; one Republic composed of a group of federated Republics numbering thirteen and growing to fifty in the fulness of time. Four score and seven years after that founding, we were said to have a "government of the people, by the people, and for the people." But that government has failed to guard us "against the insidious wiles of foreign influence" against which "the jealousy of a free people ought to be constantly awake, since history and experience prove that foreign influence is one of the most baneful foes of republican government." Against such warning we became deeply involved in the affairs of other nations, especially in the Middle East and in Asia. When Lord Balfour of Britain made his declaration concerning a homeland for a group that would assist Britain instead of the Germans in World War I, and that group had assembled sufficient emigrants and driven out enough Palestinians to declare that homeland to be a nation, our President raced with Soviet dictator Joe Stalin to be first to give official recognition to that new nation. When the British had relinquished their mandate on the territory, our government took over and has pledged itself to the survival and growth of the political state of Israel, to the detriment and suffering of those Arabs that had been dispossessed. When France gave up its mandate over The Levant, our government began to pledge us as protectors of Lebanon; so much so that in 1958 our President sent US Marines into Lebanon to hold back Syria and the USSR from taking charge. This action was repeated when another President sent US Marines into Lebanon in 1983 where so many of them died because our government favored Israel to the detriment of the Arabs. And so we are hated and terrorists seek revenge. because we sought foreign influence in other peoples' lands. If there is to be another war, as was in Southeast Asia, then have we the courage to confess that our own government, now a democracy instead of a Republic, brought it on?

Because we as a nation have strayed so far from the course laid down by its founders, we seem rudderless. Our government can't control its spending or manage its affairs. It asks for financial aid from some countries while extending aid to other countries. It gives wrong answers regarding the control of terrorism, which is the beginning of World War III. Our people lose themselves in soap operas and superbows, but must feel deep within themselves a sense of collapse. As generations passed and prosperity came, the very foundations upon which this nation was built, were forgotten. As was written in a book called The American Covenant: "In this century politicians and others have tried to rally the American patriots under the banner of democracy, the Great Society, or the American Renewal (now it seems to be Rambo-Ed.). But all these attempts have failed or will fail to change our national direction...for they are all built on the shifting sands of secular humanism and lead only to defeat." Lately there have been indications of the coming of a revival. But it too will fail unless the people and their government return to the faith of their fathers and the covenant they made with their Father.

WRANGLE OVER WRANGELL - UPDATED

The controversy continues. In 1867 Secretary of State Seward purchased Alaska from Russia for $7.2 million and some people called it "Seward's Folly." In 1896 gold was discovered and the famed Gold Rush was on. In 1983 Secretary of State Shultz decided to give back a part of Alaska to Russia, free and clear. Some people called for Shultz's resignation and wondered why he and certain bureaucrats were being so very generous toward an enemy at the expense of a sovereign State of the Union. Opposing the giveaway, an editorial appearing in The Wall Street Journal of November 13, 1985, asked "What country was the first to lose territory to Soviet Aggression?" and answered the question: "Not Finland, not even the unfortunate Baltic States, but the United States of America." The article went on to explain and we quote pertinent parts thereof:

"That [giveaway] happened on Aug. 20, 1924, when the crew of the Soviet gunboat Krasny Oktober (Red October) landed on Wrangell Island off the northeast coast of Siberia and took as prisoners the 14 American fur trappers encamped there. Twelve survivors were eventually released. Two men died in captivity. The Soviets claimed Wrangell and now operate a political prison camp on the island. . . A U.S. irredentist claim to a chilly piece of Arctic real estate might sound like small potatoes. But the congressmen [Sen. Helms and Rep. Siljander and others] claim that it doesn't make much sense to complain to the Soviets about their expansionist tendencies [as President Reagan did at the summit] while at the same time politely forgetting that they once grabbed some land from the U.S. itself.

"The U.S. claim to Wrangell and four small islands nearby dates from 1881. A U.S. revenue Marine (Coast Guard) party that included John Muir the famed naturalist and founder of the Sierra Club, visited the area that year. Mr. Muir later wrote that they 'Landed on Wrangell Land and took possession of it the name of the United States.' A czarist explorer, Lt. Ferdinand Wrangell, admitted in his memoirs that he never actually discovered the island that bears his name. Until the Krasny Oktober showed up, there was no official Russian presence.

"...As recently as 1973, the State Department maintained that the U.S. had never relinquished its claim to Wrangell and the other islands, and that the 'convention lines' depicted on maps did not constitute an international boundary. But in December 1984, after some negotiations in Moscow, the department said it had not 'found any evidence that the Government of the United States has ever formally asserted a claim to any of the islands.' That seems to contradict the John Muir account. It also ignores a 1959 ruling of the Foreign Claims Settlement Board that the property of the fur trappers was illegally expropriated. Russian maps made early in this century show the islands as American.

"We've had our doubts about irredentist claims (claims for a territory historically related to one country but subject to another country-Ed.) The further back in history you go, the greater amount of disputed acreage there is. But the Soviets themselves are among history's most aggressive irredentists. Aside from their grab of the Baltic States and their expansion of the old czarist empire westward to the Elbe and southward to Kandahar, they have border disputes with Norway, Sweden, Japan and China. Whatever the prospects for satisfaction, the U.S. should hang tough over Wrangell Island just to demonstrate its resistance to Soviet imperialism." (End of quotes from WSJ).

In order to provide a complete update in this wrangle over Wrangell, a news report was issued on January 14, 1986, by State Department Watch, a foreign policy watchdog group, P.O.Box 46857, Washington, D.C. 20050. Some of the material may be repetitive, but we reprint the entire press release which is headed: "Campaign Intensifies to Stop the U.S. State Department from Giving Away Five Alaskan Islands and Vast Oil-Rich Seabeds to the Soviet Union." The news report follows.

* * * * *

The campaign to stop the U.S. State Department from giving away five strategic Alaskan islands and vast oil-rich seabeds to the Soviet Union has spread to both houses of the U.S. Congress and the State Legislature of Alaska, it was reported by Carl Olsen, Chairman of State Department Watch, a public interest foreign policy watchdog group.

Specifically naming the Alaskan islands of Wrangel, Herald, Bennett, Henrietta, and Jeannette, Sen. Jesse Helms (R-N.C.), would outlaw any surrender of American territory or ocean rights without a public treaty. Introduced just prior to the New Year's recess of the Senate, Helm's Senate Resolution 279 has already acquired co-sponsorship from Senators Chic Hecht (R-Nev.), John East (R-N.C.), and Jeremiah Denton (R-Ala.).

Addressing the Senate, Helms stated, "There is far more at stake here than the ownership of five small islands covered with ice and snow. What is at stake is how, under the rules of international law, the United States will define its Outer Continental Shelf. If we surrender these islands, we will be surrendering an area that amounts to almost half of our entire Continental Shelf.

"Moreover, these islands lie in the Arctic between the Soviet Union and the North Pole. If we surrender the islands to Soviet sovereignty, we may well be surrendering control of the Arctic Ocean to Soviet nuclear submarines."

Legislation to stop this impending giveaway is also contained in a bill introduced by Congressman Mark Siljander (R-Mich.) in November. In addition to requiring all transfers of territory to be disclosed in the form of public treaties, Siljander's bill (H.R.3766) would prohibit the establishment of land or ocean boundaries without a treaty. The bill has picked up thirteen co-sponsors from coast to coast: Representatives Robert K. Dornan (R-Cal.), William E. Dannemeyer (R-Cal.), G. William Whitehursts (R-Va.), Helen D. Bentley (R-Md.), Ron Marlenee (R-Mont.), William F. Goodling (R-Pa.), George C. Wortley (R-N.Y.), Dan Burton (R-Ind.), Robert C. Smith (R-N.H.), Thomas N. Kindness (R-Ohio), John P. Hiler (R-Ind.), Doug Bernard Jr. (D-Ga.), and Robert E. Badham (R-Cal.).

The two Senators from Alaska, Ted Stevens and Frank Murkowski, and the Congressman, Don Young, have so far not declared their support or opposition to these measures. Senator Murkowski, however, in a letter to the Wall Street Journal on Dec. 2, 1985, stated, "I am considering legislation to require our government to give the Senate Foreign Relations Committee a full report (on the claims over Wrangel, Henrietta, and the other islands)..." No such legislation has yet been introduced by Sen. Murkowski's office.

Promoting the fears of a unilateral abandonment of this immense stretch of American territory by the State Department to the Soviet Empire have been serious steps and pronouncements in that direction. Statements out of the State Department have intimated that the U.S. has no right to the five islands and their valuable seabeds, even though all historical evidence shows these islands to have been discovered and claimed for the U.S. The State Department has also been trying to elevate the old 1867 U.S.-Russia Convention Line (which was embodied in the 1867 treaty of sale of Alaska from Russia to the United States) from its rightful characterization as a "line of allocation" to the incorrect status of an "international boundary." If the U.S. were to recognize this 1867 Line as an international boundary, then it would be surrendering not only the five strategic islands, which lie to the east of the line, but the strategic petroleum resources contained in the outer continental shelf, which are estimated in the billions of barrels of oil and gas. In addition to the surrendering of these territories in the Arctic Ocean, the State Department has shown its lack of resolve over the past five years in negotiations over demands by the Soviet Union that the U.S. give up thousands of square miles of valuable oil-rich seabeds along the 1967 Line in the Bering Sea (especially in the Navarin Basin). This area drew bids of over $100 million in 1984 from major U.S. oil companies for oil and gas leases, but the leases have not yet been awarded to Shell, Amoco, Arco, or Unocal because of the State Department's inability to resist the Soviet's demands.

Feelings are running high in the State of Alaska over the prospect of turning over a sizeable part of the State to the Soviet Union. State Representative Roger Jenkins (R-Anchorage) introduced a resolution demanding "that the U.S. Department of State not yield to the demands of the Soviet Union" in taking over more seabeds in the Bering Sea. The Alaska Legislature reconvened on 13 January and will quickly consider Jenkin's House Joint Resolution 53, which is co-sponsored by 17 out of the 40 members of the State House of Representatives. A similar, but more sweeping resolution, is being drafted for introduction in the State Senate, focusing in on the five islands, Wrangel Island was discovered and claimed for America by Captain Calvin Leighton Hooper aboard the U.S. Revenue Marine (Coast Guard) ship Thomas Corwin on 12 August 1881. At 2,800 square miles in size, Wrangel is equal to Rhode Island and Delaware combined. Aboard the landing party at the discovery of Wrangel Island was the famed explorer John Muir. The three DeLong Islands of Bennett, Henrietta and Jeanette were discovered and claimed in 1881 by the expedition aboard the USS Jeannette commanded by U.S. Navy Commander George Washington DeLong. Herald Island was claimed in 1923 by the American Lewis Lane upon the abandonment of claims by Canada and Great Britain.

PUBLIC OPPOSITION TO THE GIVEAWAYS GROWS

The Wall Street Journal joined the opposition to giving away these five islands to the Soviets in a lengthy editorial on 13 November 1985, on the eve of the U.S.-Soviet summit meeting. The Daughters of the American Revolution passed a resolution at its 1985 national convention urging its members to ask for a Congressional investigation. The Young Americans for Freedom at its 1985 national convention passed a resolution demanding the U.S. reassert its rightful sovereignty and to fire those in the State Department who were working to give away the islands. The Military Order of the World Wars also passed a resolution at an executive committee meeting in 1985 to urge a Congressional investigation of the prospective giveaway.

"We find it highly significant that most of the critics of the State Department are Republicans in the U.S. Congress and the State of Alaska. We interpret this as a resounding vote of no confidence in the Secretary of State George Shultz by his own party members," commented Carl Olsen, Chairman of State Department Watch.

As Senator Helms told his colleagues, "There is far more at stake here than the ownership of five small islands covered with ice and snow. . . . If we surrender these islands, we will be surrendering an area that amounts to almost half of our entire Outer Continental Shelf." And thereby hangs the real story of wealth for the Soviets. Remember how vast amounts of oil were discovered under the Alaskan mainland? So much oil that an 800-mile Trans-Atlantic Pipeline was laid, for the purpose of getting that oil to sea-going tankers? At the same time it was discovered that tens of thousands of square miles of petroleum-rich seabed is contained in that area the State Department wants to give to the Soviet Union. Not just the five islands, but at dispute is an area in the Bering Sea known as the Navarin Basin, as well as the Barrow Arch, the Hope Basin, the Norton Basin and the Aleutian Basin; all of this said to be totalling over four billion barrels of oil reserves. There are reports that while the Soviets can pipe natural gas to Europe, its reserves of petroleum are running low; even Armand Hammer can't find more oil for them in the Soviet Socialist Republics. So the acquisition of 4 billion barrels of oil in the seabeds surrounding those five small islands would be a great boon to the USSR plan to rule the world.

Control of the Arctic and the North Pacific, vast new untapped oil reserves, and naval and air bases within miles of resources-rich Alaska. Also, remember that Lenin said: "First we shall take Eastern Europe; then the masses of Asia. Then we shall surround that last bastion of Capitalism, the United States. We shall not have to attack. It will fall like an overripe fruit into our hands."

First our State Department gave up Cuba to the Soviets. Then it gave away the Canal Zone. Next comes Nicaragua. At the same time Socialist leaders in America are preparing to rewrite the U.S. Constitution and carve America up into Socialist segments to be merged into World Government, to be controlled by either the International Communists or the would-be masters of the New World Order. Or are they both the same thing?

Can enough of our people be awakened in time to save America? It's up to those who have learned the Truth to work toward that end.

*Wherefore take unto you the whole armour of God, that ye may be able to withstand in the evil day,
and having done all, to stand. (Eph. 6:13).*

FAREWELL TO THE PHILIPPINES

And now comes the time for President Ferdinand Marcos and his Philippine government to suffer the wrath and revenge of those who specialize in the destruction of leaders and their governments that have been friendly toward the United States and anti-Communist in their foreign relations. First, following the end of World War II, came Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek and his nationalist government. He would not cooperate with Secretary of State George Marshall who insisted that he form a coalition government with Communist Chairman Mao Tse-tung's Party. Thus in the words of the Communist Fronter Owen Lattimore, it seemed proper that Chiang should "fall without it being apparent that he was pushed." But more courageous than most, Chiang defied them all, moved to and established a nationalist government on the Island of Taiwan. It took years to arrange for Red China to replace Nationalist China in the favor of the UN and the USA. Because of his heroic stand, even years after his death the controlled media seek every opportunity to smear his reputation and speak evil of him and his American educated Christian wife. Next came the turn of Syngman Rhee, President of South Korea, again a Christian and one of the greatest statesmen of this century. He invoked the displeasure of the CFR-controlled State Department and his political death was planned and carried out through carefully distributed loans and aid to his enemies; again without it being apparent that he was pushed. It was Henry Cabot Lodge of the CFR and the State Department that instigated the murder of Ngo Dinh Diem, president of South Vietnam; a meaningless crime that accomplished nothing militarily and merely prolonged the war while the impressive and expensive military installations at Cam Ranh Bay were being completed so they could be turned over intact to the Communists. Next in the order of favoritism to the Marxists, The New York Times spearheaded the fall of Fulgencio Batista and the conquest of Cuba by Fidel Castro, who was said to be merely another agrarian reformer, and a George Washington of the Caribbean Basin. Then the State Department, supposedly under the control of Jimmy Carter, provided for the ouster of Anastasio Somoza and the installation of the Marxist Sandinistas in Nicaragua, Meanwhile in the Far East arrangements were being made for the flight of the pro-American Shah of Iran and the takeover of that nation by Ayatollah Khomeini who tolerates the Communists but calls Americans devils. Here again vast military installations, aircraft, weapons and other armament were left to be taken over by an enemy. (This is being written on the 25th anniversary of a statement made by Dwight Eisenhower as he prepared to leave the White House, at which time he warned against the developing "military-industrial complex." The habit of spending billions in defense preparations and then leaving the bases and armament for the Communists to take over seems to be a major part of the plan. Which leads to the next step: The Philippines.)

When a Communist pilot shot down Korean Airlines Flight 007 on September 1, 1983, murdering 269 innocents including Congressman Larry MacDonald, it was revealed that the Soviets were building huge air and naval stations in and around the Kurile Islands. Presently there are said to be 520 Soviet naval vessels in the Soviet Far East, two of them being airplane carriers. A safe nest for 24 nuclear-missile-bearing submarines are in the nearly land-locked Sea of Okhotsk. With this massing of naval forces in the Pacific, it appears that the next Soviet move will be, not in Europe where most of the nations are already socialized, but in the South Pacific. New Zealand Prime Minister Lang's refusal to allow port facilities for nuclear-powered or armed American or British naval vessels is a great help to the Soviets, whether the Prime Minister realizes this or not. The next Soviet prize is to be the wealth of Indonesia and islands of the South Pacific, including New Zealand and Australia if their total socialization can be accomplished without resort to total world war.

This places increasing strategic importance on the only important U.S. defense bases in that area, Subic Bay and Clark Field on Luzon Island in the Philippines. If Marcos is defeated, or dies, they could be lost to America, as were the strategically important bases in Vietnam and Iran. Then the construction of new bases would be necessary, probably in Guam and on land leased from the Japanese on Okinawa. Our Defense Department is already investigating the possibilities in case moving becomes necessary. That would entail the expenditure of billions of dollars to equip such new defenses. Remember what Dwight Eisenhower said about the developing "military-industrial complex?" Think of the profit to the International Bankers and Multinational Construction Corporations if this move becomes necessary. Just an incidental thought: After the awful explosion of Challenger the Shuttle and the death of six astronauts and a school teacher, it will cost more than a billion dollars to replace the shuttle. With the hatred of America now in the minds of Arabs whose land is being encircled with U.S. Naval vessels, and the promises made by Kaddafi, we are merely suggesting the possibility of sabotage. It's too early to know, if we ever know.

As the Soviets began massing their military in the Pacific, the drive to oust Ferdinand Marcos began. Under pressure, he decided to call for an election on February 7. Opposing him is the pro-Communist widow, Corazon Aquino. Backing her are Butz Aquino, her brother-in-law, speech-writer, and one of the founders of the radical-left Banners (Flag) organization; Roland Olalia, leader of the Kilusang Mayo Uno (May 1 Movement); Jose Maria Sison, a founder of the Communist Party (Hukbalahups) in the Philippines, and Salvador Laurel, whose father worked with the Japanese and was known as their Quisling. Despite this backing, it seemed that Marcos was sure to win the election unless something was done to thoroughly discredit him in the eyes of his people. So it was bruited about that the Feb. 7 election was sure to be rigged. We might inject the thought that rigging elections is not peculiar to the Far East. Lyndon Johnson won an election by arranging for people who had been in their graves for years to resurrect at least their names and vote for him. When John Kennedy was elected to the presidency, his father Joe remarked that "I could have elected my chauffeur for what it cost me."

All else seemingly in vain, it became necessary to find some more deadly ammunition to fire against Ferdinand and Imelda Marcos, in order that those important strategic installations at Subic Bay and Clark Field could be turned over to the Communists, or at least neutralized. So, as with Cuba and Castro, it was The New York Times that came up with what seemed to be a knockout blow to Marcos. It involved the sudden discovery of some papers (like the Pentagon Papers), which were said to have been found in some place in or near St. Louis. They were army files, said to prove that Ferdinand Marcos was a fraud, was no war hero, did not form a guerrilla band, and actually helped the Japanese instead of the Filipinos and the Americans. The most vicious and generally untruthful of the attacks came in the form of a leading editorial which appeared in The New York Times of January 27, 1986. Under the heading "The Truth and Ferdinand Marcos" appeared the following, which we quote in part.

* * * * *

Politicians, being mortal, often concoct fictions about their past, but for creative audacity, Ferdinand Marcos of the Philippines is nonpareil. Out of military archives comes evidence that he fabricated his World War II heroism, invented a whole guerrilla army and may have collaborated with Japanese occupiers. And in the twilight of a charmed career, President Marcos is gearing for a final whopper - the claim that his people have embraced him in a 'free and fair' vote on Feb. 7.

That is how Mr. Marcos undoubtedly hopes to defeat the American pressure for a return to genuine democracy. But in calling a hurried election, he did not reckon on a united opposition party and the crowds now acclaiming its candidate, Corazon Aquino. Facing a real challenge, Mr. Marcos had kept her off state-run television and shunned public appearances that would expose his own failing health. To purchase favor, he is recklessly slashing consumer prices and raising wages. Shamelessly, he threatens to jail any foreign observers who come within 50 meters of the polls - this in a country where graveyards vote. . . the most startling disclosure about Mr. Marcos surfaced by chance and deals with events a generation ago. An American scholar has come upon files disproving the claims that Mr. Marcos led a guerrilla force against Japanese occupiers in World War II. . . As the Times reported Thursday, diligent research by the U.S. Army found the claims [concerning his guerrilla activities] "fraudulent" and "absurd." Documents cited by The Washington Post add a devastating twist: Mr. Marcos appears to have collaborated with the Filipino president installed by the Japanese, Jose P. Laurel . . . No one has explained why the crucial documents were protectively sealed for so long. The matter cries out for ventilation before the Feb. 7 vote. Americans cannot assure a fair and free election, but they can perhaps give the Philippine people the evidence they need to judge the character of Ferdinand Marcos. (End of quotes from New York Times editorial).

Permit us to disagree, strongly and vociferously. So would a former New York Times correspondent, Ford Wilkins, if he is still alive. So does U.S. Congressman Charles Bennett (D. Fl.), who was himself a guerrilla leader in the Philippines and knew of Marcos who also was a guerrilla leader. And so do the Filipino veterans who lived through the horrors of that war. A Miami Herald wire service from Manila, dated Jan. 25, reads: "Filipinos who fought in World War II joined President Ferdinand Marcos on Friday in counterattacking reports that his guerrilla unit never took part in heroic military action against the Japanese. . . The Philippine News Agency reported that Florencio Cabanos, a member of the unit that Marcos says he commanded, filed a 'multimillion peso libel suit' against two Manila newspapers that reprinted the (New York) Times story. . . Three other veterans claiming to be Marcos comrades-in-arms, Col. Frisco San Juan, Teodulo Natividad and Col. Agustin Marking, issued a joint statement angrily attacking The New York Times." Any survivors of the St. Tomas and Los Banos prison camps will also know that Ferdinand Marcos was a very active guerrilla leader during the Japanese occupation. And we know because we were there and had communication with Marcos.

We were instructed to remain in Manila as a civilian, continue broadcasting news and instructions until such time as the transmitters would be destroyed to keep them from falling into Japanese hands. Then Col. Hap Harries would come in, take us to Corregidor, where we would join General MacArthur's staff. But a bomb got Hap and the Japanese got us. While waiting, we were at KWHK on the 7th floor of the Heacock Building in downtown Manila. A news photographer (we can't remember her name) came up to take pictures of the carnage as the Old City was being bombed and burned. She told us about Marcos. He was organizing a guerrilla unit and she was one of his contacts. If we remained in Manila and lived, we'd hear more about Ferdinand Marcos. And we did. In Santo Tomas Prison Camp communication with the outside world seemed important. Important enough to risk our lives in receiving and sending news. Ford Wilkins, whom we mentioned previously, had a good hand, could write items on thin toilet paper, roll up the paper and put it into the barrel of a fountain pen which could be handed in and out when guards weren't looking. Prison camp news would go out to Marcos where he had ways of sending it on to MacArthur's headquarters. War news would come in from Marcos and we, as the "voice" of Santo Tomas, would do our best to relay information without the Japanese knowing it, via a public address system that Tom Poole of GE was permitted to install in order to "maintain order" in the camp. The news that General MacArthur had landed at Leyte and was preparing to make the next landing at Lingayan on Luzon Island, where we were imprisoned, came to us from Ferdinand Marcos. As a result we almost lost our life again (it was "one day at a time" for three years, three months, and eleven days at Santo Tomas). We were told by the Japanese Commandante that a long awaited truckload of rice (our only food) was coming into camp and volunteers that were still able would be needed to help unload the truck. That evening we broadcast the news about the much needed rice and added that it had been a long time in coming, but "better Leyte than never." The guards didn't understand the pandemonium, but we assured them we had just used an old phrase that was complimentary, and we got away with it. So it was this allegedly nonexistent fraud named Ferdinand Marcos who made it possible to instill some much needed hope in the hearts of the remaining, starving, sometimes hopeless prisoners of war. No Ferdinand Marcos who was a war hero in the Philippines? Tell it to Ripley. We know better. We were there. But, no matter who wins the election, America will be the loser. So, to the names of Chiang, Rhee, Batista, and Somoza, add that of Marcos. And as with Cuba, Southeast Asia, and Nicaragua, we must say, Farewell to the Philippines. And may God help us to save America.

THE CHALLENGER PRESENTS A CHALLENGE

Catastrophic was one of the words used by media hirelings to describe the destruction of space shuttle Challenger and the death of six astronauts and a schoolteacher; a tragedy so deeply felt that it was suggested by Donald Regan, and agreed upon by Ronald Reagan, that the Constitutionally-mandated State of the Union Address be delayed for a week. In contrast to the stark tragedy of this catastrophic event witnessed around the world via satellite, maudlin was a word used by one columnist to describe the manner in which children were used to add empathy to the event, and make a heart-felt tragedy seem like a well-directed Hollywood extravaganza, as well as making a government school-teacher the heroine of the drama at the expense of six dedicated astronauts, one of them also being a woman, who gave their full measure of devotion in the struggle to open new horizons.

Catastrophic, maudlin, and similar descriptive words were used to describe the event. But one word which we were seeking seemed to be missing in all the reports. Each day following that fateful Tuesday morning, some new description of how it happened was broadcast, each of them different and belying the previous account. Each expert or alleged expert seemed to have a special version of how it happened. So also with the people who sought material evidence from the sea and land. Pieces of bodies were said to have been found, the report later denied. The crew's cabin was discovered, almost intact; the statement then denied. And so on, day after day, almost hour after hour, as the tragedy was expanded to keep the story front-page material. Finally, it seemed desirable for the President to appoint a special committee to investigate and make a report. (We'll speak of this later). But, in all of these hours of mourning and reporting, that one word for which we were seeking remained missing.

Finally, we found the missing word in a letter sent us by a subscriber whom we shall not name. He wrote: "The conventional media have yet (to my knowledge) to suggest any possibility of the crash of the space shuttle on Tuesday was due to sabotage." That's the word we were seeking. Perhaps any such suggestion is unfounded, but at a time when so many terrorist leaders have sworn to make America pay for its friendship toward Israel, one must wonder. As did our correspondent, who went on to remark that "there is no direct evidence at this time, but we must consider this." Then he enumerated some of the reasons why Challenger might have been sabotaged and the astronauts murdered. He felt it more than suggestive that this was the second major "media event" involving President Reagan that had been cancelled within a year. You'll recall that his second inauguration was to have been a specially festive occasion. Grandiose preparations were made, and the event then cancelled because of bad weather. In contrast, when the Chicago Bears returned to the Windy City after their triumph at the Superbowl, people are said to have joyously flooded into the streets in weather forty degrees below zero fahrenheit (wind chill) to greet their gridiron gladiators. And yet, a Presidential Inauguration, supposedly far more important than a football celebration, was cancelled in far less severe weather. Said our correspondent: "This year, what was being touted as an 'upbeat' State of the Union Address was cancelled, and re-scheduled for the next Tuesday, in what will almost certainly not be an upbeat occasion." Our correspondent's prediction seemed accurate. The address was, as expected of Ronald Reagan, an elegant and inspiring oration, but with little real substance. Certainly not an "upbeat occasion" except for House Speaker Tip O'Neill, who was highlighted in the address. There is the feeling among political observers that the importance of Ronald Reagan is being constantly denigrated while the works and statements of George Bush are being expanded and even lauded, since one is a lame duck while the other is a dove expecting to become an eagle. Which reminds us of the statement of Armand Hammer, the multinationalist monopoly capitalist whom Lenin called a special friend. Being interviewed over BBC (we heard him on short wave radio), Hammer boasted that he was the first American to talk to Mikhail Gorbachev after the latter became Chairman of the world's most important Communist Party. He told the then new Soviet leader that a summit meeting with President Reagan should be arranged as soon as possible. Gorbachev objected, remarking that Reagan had said some very bad things about the USSR and such a meeting would hardly be a friendly one. But Hammer pointed out that Reagan has become a different man since this is his last term in office, will soon retire or be replaced, and that he is anxious to promote peace and friendship with all nations before he leaves the White House. Whereupon, Gorbachev agreed to follow Hammer's advice. Hammer explained to the BBC correspondent that he expected no arms deal but that the real purpose was a cultural agreement between the two, calling for an exchange of teachers, students, artists, etc. At the end of the interview Hammer was asked how he managed to remain so mentally alert and physically sound at his age. Hammer replied that he never smoked, never drank strong liquor, and swam at least twenty minutes every day. The English commentator mentioned someone whose name we couldn't understand, said that this person had practiced the same routine but had died at 56 years of age. How come the difference? Hammer said, "He didn't do it long enough."

But, getting back to our American correspondent's reference to the possibility of sabotage, He made reference to Soviet experiments in weather control, with considerable concern being focused on the unseasonable weather in the United States, the high winds and the 28° low weather at Cape Canaveral on the night before the shuttle crash; and there was the question, could the Challenger and its crew have been the victims of the alleged weather war?

On more positive ground, our correspondent mentioned that "the presence of Christa McAuliffe as a sort of 'model civilian' on board was guaranteed to bring widespread horror and sympathy in the event of a crash. That and the tie-in with children because of her being a teacher also brought in even more publicity than would normally have attended such a crash." Also, "McAuliffe's presence was at Reagan's instigation. Whether accurate or not, Reagan is perceived as a strong, 'take-charge' president. The crash (whether sabotaged or not) may give him the more subtle air of a man who is not completely in charge, and prone to bad decisions which jeopardize lives." Our correspondent then adds: "The nature of the explosion itself (involving huge amounts of highly-volatile gases) makes the possibility of finding the cause remote."

Because "finding the cause remote" as well as because so many mis-cues and false statements were made during the first week of NASA investigations, a special committee was formed, headed by William Rogers, former Attorney General, Secretary of State, an international lawyer, son of a banker, ranking member of the Council on Foreign Relations, etc. One thing that should be said to his credit: While Secretary of State in the Nixon Cabinet, he refused to play second fiddle to Concert Master Henry Kissinger, who was the orchestrator of America's foreign policy, and Rogers therefore resigned the government post in 1973, prior to the Watergate affair.

About these specially appointed committees: Such a committee was appointed to investigate the conspiracy that led to the assassination of President Abraham Lincoln. The findings of that committee are still a matter of controversy and are looked upon by many as merely a cover-up of the charges that John Wilkes Booth, the assassin, was a paid agent of the London Merchant Bankers. In our own time, a similar special committee was named to investigate the circumstances surrounding the assassination of President John Kennedy. That committee submitted a report that is still disputed and considered a cover-up of the real facts of the case. Will a similar special committee named to investigate the Challenger tragedy, no matter who heads the committee, be successful in making people believe its findings?

Since we've made considerable reference to a letter from a correspondent, quoting from parts of it, we'll just quote more of the pertinent parts of that letter.

* * * * *

Who might gain from such sabotage? Our recent confrontations with Libya bring this country to mind. However, the highly technical nature of a sabotage like this is probably out of the ordinary trained terrorist's range. An inside source or plant is a possibility, and that the US has a civilian space program makes security more difficult (especially when certain controversial labor unions are involved-Ed.).

Who is the more likely winner in this tragedy? The Soviet Union, whether the crash occurred by accident or sabotage, stands to gain by it.

1. The Soviet Union has had great difficulty perfecting a shuttle type program. This crash sets the US back (until at least next June-Ed.) and gives them time to catch up.

2. The crash will probably have subtle repercussions on the Space Defense Initiative ("Star Wars") program in making the US space program seem more dangerous, and (especially bad for the SDI) unreliable.

3. Reagan, again, looks less the leader, while Gorbachev gains stature as a good and kindly man with the world's best interests at heart.

4. A perception of Reagan weakness may make more likely the scenario Gary North has put forth - - of Reagan resigning after this fall's election to allow Bush to run in '88 as an incumbent. Bush was, after all, the more "presidential" looking in the tragedy, flying to Florida to console the families, while Reagan stayed in Washington, cancelling his speeches. We should also note that the cancellation of the State of the Union Address, originally rejected, was done at Donald Regan's suggestion. (At least 15 minutes of the original address was cut out when given on Tuesday, February 4-Ed.).

A critic would point out a lot of "maybe's" and "possible's" in this letter. He would be right. This is not my area of expertise, but I think we need to look at these areas I've mentioned as possible clues. The conventional media will probably not consider sabotage. I hope someone else reading this letter will.

Neither the correspondent whom we have quoted nor your reporter is charging that sabotage was actually involved in the Challenger disaster. But we do insist that sabotage might have been the cause of the explosion; and such a possibility deserves careful consideration and investigation. Since the very start of this "media event," there have been so many different and conflicting stories and denials, that the real truth may never be known by the public, as was the case in the Kennedy assassination, in the Bay of Pigs fiasco, in the conduct of the Vietnam War - we could go on and on. One observer of the Challenger event observed that "our sensitivity is determined by the proximity of the camera." The Challenger story has affected the public so deeply because they saw it through the eyes of a camera. The same can be said of certain airplane hijackings and ship piracies. There were cameras, people saw, and their sensitivities were aroused. Far worse are the horrors of wholesale genocide on the part of the Communists in Cambodia and Afghanistan. But there was no camera, or if there was, no picture was allowed to be shown to the public. Suppression of news is, in itself, a form of sabotage, in which our controlled media are well schooled. People saw the Challenger tragedy, so funds are being raised by the people to build a new shuttle, money is being collected to establish a "Shuttle Children's Defense Fund". In actuality, the government will take care of both at the people's expense.

However serious the Challenger event, however serious it may be to those directly involved, it has been staged as a major "media event" and has been overplayed and in many cases, badly played. This made possible because "our sensitivity is determined by the proximity of the camera." Aside from the drama of the affair, there is a very important reason for the event, and it has to do with our foreign policy in regard to the USSR, called "Mutual Assured Destruction" (MAD). It has been determined by the powers that be that in matters of military offense and defense, the US must not be allowed to become more powerful than the USSR, nor the USSR more powerful than the US. For years the Soviets have been trying to develop a defense shield similar to what is being called "Star Wars". We are "getting ahead of them, and must be slowed down. Also, the Soviets have been trying to develop their own space shuttle program and have run into many snags. We are far ahead of them. We must be slowed down. This was stated by a Black Marxist whose name we didn't get because of radio jamming. But he said, "The explosion of the shuttle was caused by our national defense effort." To say that in even plainer words, we were getting ahead of our competitor in the Hegelian dialectic programming, and the destruction of a shuttle would aid the Soviet defense effort.

And yet, to misquote a saying that has become very popular among patriots: "None Dare Call It Sabotage!"

THE SINS OF INTERVENTION

Sir Walter Scott might have been referring to the actions of an Invisible Government and its Media Monitors when he wrote, "Oh, what a tangled web we weave, When first we practice to deceive." A national newspaper gave a slight hint concerning the results of high-level deceptions when a five-column headline on the front page of its Feb. 10 issue announced that "World Political Tremors Rock USA Policy." The article noted: "The USA is poised for after-shocks today following a weekend of eruptions in the Philippines and around the globe." It listed some of the after-shocks, all of them the results of direct or indirect US intervention in the affairs of other nations. For example: "Chaos reigned as President Ferdinand Marcos and opponent Corazon Aquino claimed victory after Friday's presidential election....In Johannesburg, South Africa, Willie Mandella said her imprisoned husband might be released... In East Berlin preparations are under way for an East-West prisoner swap ...In Talloires, France, deposed president Jean-Claude Duvalier ate his breakfast...In Haiti the new government announces the reopening of schools ...In Libya, Kaddafi reiterated the threat to force down Israeli aircraft and warned USA not to interfere."

The "tangled web" they have weaved remained much in evidence when President Reagan conducted a very unsatisfactory press conference in prime time on Feb. 11. Example: For months now, ever since the Soviet Union started strengthening its control over sealanes in the Pacific to be precise, there has been a campaign to get rid of Ferdinand Marcos. The Invisible Government, its Controlled Media, the State Department, the Fabian Socialists that dominate the tax-exempt Foundations and thereby the nation's colleges and universities, the organized churches, all of these have tried to oust Marcos, even at the risk of losing the vital bases of Subic Bay and Clark Field. Interference in the affairs of another nation is what it's called, whether it be for good or bad reasons. At this same press conference President Reagan insisted that the USA had nothing to do with the flight of Duvalier from Haiti, except to provide an airplane for his flight. Nothing was said of the hold-up of funds that had been allocated for Haiti.

It's the same old story: Intervention in the affairs of other nations. It began in the Philippines when, on May 1, 1898, Commodore George Dewey sailed the U.S. Asiatic Fleet into Manila harbor and gave the command: "Fire when you are ready, Gridley." Ever since that time the Philippines have looked to the United States for guidance. We recall President Manuel Quezon, saying he'd rather see a Philippines run like hell by Filipinos than a Philippines run like heaven by foreigners. So the legal ties were cut in 1946 and the Philippines became an independent republic. But, because of the memories of Corregidor, and the necessities of Clark and Subic, American and Philippine interests remained entangled. We gave the islands their independence, but we continued to interfere, both economically and politically. The same, whether for good or evil, can be said of Cuba when Batista was ousted, of Nicaragua, South Vietnam, South Korea, Rhodesia, South Africa, Nicaragua, Haiti, Chili. Wherever there are financial, economic or industrial interests, there has been interference. That's the way the New World Order works. And that's the way it makes the government of the United States work.

We are reminded of this practice of intervention on the part of our government because of the time and the season. February 12 is the day when Abraham Lincoln was born in the year 1809. February 22 is the anniversary of the birth of George Washington, born in the year 1732. And a man known as Martin Luther King, Jr. was born January 15, 1929. There is a sad connection between these three dates. When our country was called a Republic the anniversaries of the birth of the man called the Father of our Country, and the man who gave his life to save the Republic, were observed as national holidays. But when our country came to be called a Democracy, the only individual so honored is Martin Luther King, Jr. There is a Presidents' Day, February 17, and there is a Martin Luther King Day, which fell on January 20 this year. Thus a man honored by the Communists takes precedence over two Presidents of the United States. There are certain things about these men that should be remembered.

The Communists were careful to have King's record sealed, not to be opened until the year 2027. But much was revealed about King before this sealing was accomplished. According to the late Congressman Larry McDonald, who did much to expose King's Communist connections, King's father, Michael King, was a Baptist preacher who named his son Michael, Jr. But when young Michael was six years old, his father announced to his congregation that he was changing the name of his son to Martin Luther King Jr. However, the new name was never legalized, so the federal holiday that outranks the holidays of presidents should really be called Michael King Day. This year the day was honored in 33 States. But next year all the public (government) schools are to be closed, thus making the holiday to be observed in all 50 States.

As for Abraham Lincoln, whose birthday is to be overlooked, we quote the following from an "Ambassador Tract" which was reprinted in the Feb. 6, 1986 issue of Straight Talk (weekly, Box 60, Pigeon Forge, TN 37836, $47 per year.):

"Chauncey Depew said, 'I was one of the committee in charge of the funeral train which was bearing his body to his home...As we sped over the rails at night the scene was the most pathetic ever witnessed. At every crossroad the glare of innumerable torches illuminated the whole population, from age to infancy, kneeling on the ground, and their clergymen leading in prayers and hymns.' So passed the body of Abraham Lincoln. The soil from which he came is our soil; the nation that he loved and served is our nation; the Book which guided him is our Book, the God Whose hand he held is our God. With all this as our heritage, and with the example, the inspiration, and the light of his life before us, we dare not fail. Let us look to God from whence came his strength, that no new Daniel shall arise to cry, Thou art weighed in the balance and art found wanting." But his name is to be erased from future calendars, his name mentioned in passing in tomorrow's history books. For the Republic which he saved has become a democracy.

When we speak of The Sins of Intervention we think of our first president. Although February 22 is no longer a federal holiday, it should remain in the minds of Christian Patriots as being almost as important as July 4th; for one brought us the Declaration of Independence, while the other told us how to keep that independence, lest the spirit of interdependence overtake our Nation and make slaves of us all. George Washington was born in Virginia in 1732. There is no record of any formal education. He was self-educated, became wise in geography, military history, agriculture, mathematics, knew in his heart that the fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom, and a good understanding have all they that do His commandments. Before the age of 21 he had become a successful surveyor, a major in the Virginia Militia, and a prosperous landowner. He was a delegate to the Continental Congress in 1774-75, and because of his previous military experience was considered to be the ablest soldier in the Colonies. He felt that total independence was inevitable, and at 43 readily assumed command of what there was of a Continental Army, on July 3, 1775. One of his outstanding achievements: On Christmas night, 1776, with less than 4,000 men, he crossed the icy Delaware, surprised and defeated a Hessian encampment at Trenton, went on to beat a British detachment at Princeton. But he began to lose because Congress gave him little money to pay the troops, sent too few supplies and no fresh troops. Total defeat seemed sure to most of his men that winter at Valley Forge. We have on our bedroom wall a plaque given us by a friend and subscriber, depicting Washington on his knees in prayer at Valley Forge. To us this illustrates the supreme dedication to God and Country which is essential if we are to remain free and retain any of those liberties gained by the blood of such men as George Washington.

General Cornwallis surrendered his British forces on Oct. 19, 1781. The military fighting had ended; but the fighting to establish and maintain a new and totally different kind of Representative Republic had just begun. It was inevitable that farmer-citizen-soldier-statesman George Washington should be selected as presiding officer of the Constitutional Convention of 1787. His influence in securing the adoption of the U.S. Constitution, which so many now want to alter or replace, was important. In 1789, after the Constitution had been adopted, he was the unanimous choice of the State electors for President of the United States. He said he didn't want the job, wanted to retire from public duty and go home to Mount Vernon. He likened his feelings to "those of a culprit who is going to the place of his execution." But there was the call to further duty which he couldn't refuse, so he was inaugurated at New York City's Federal Hall on April 30, 1789. This was something absolutely new. Never before in all history had there been such a Constitutional Republic composed of 13 individual and independent Republics, with its unusual separation of powers between federal and state governments, and the unusual balance of powers and duties between executive, legislative and judicial departments. Besides, there was an enormous debt, and immense pressure to honor "preferred nations" especially France, which was undergoing a very different kind of revolution but hoped for aid from the United States because France had given aid to the United States in its revolutionary war. It was George Washington who, in his Farewell Address to Congress, warned of the very dangers of intervention in the affairs of foreign governments. His warning, together with the clear and unmistakable wording of the Monroe Doctrine that was to follow, should have remained our standard and guide in our foreign policy for all of the years of our Republic. Ours was to be a standard that other Nations might emulate in their pursuit of happiness, and which some Nations have followed in their people's desire for liberty. But ours was not designed as a government to force other people to emulate, nor was it ever intended that we should intervene in the affairs of other governments, as we are obviously doing presently in the Philippines.

In this crucial and dangerous time in America, and therefore by projection in world history, and because February 12 has just passed and February 22 is about to come upon us, it seems appropriate that we include in this Report words first spoken by the man whom patriots still consider to be "First in war, first in peace, and first in the hearts of our countrymen." We quote important excerpts from George Washington's Farewell Address, delivered to Congress on September 17, 1796, a date given added importance by being the birth date of our beloved Constitution of the United States of America, which should be honored and obeyed, as written, as the Law of the Land, not to be misinterpreted, altered, or exchanged for some Socialist document.

* * * * *

Observe good faith and justice toward all nations. Cultivate peace and harmony with all. Religion and morality enjoin this conduct. And can it be that good policy does not equally enjoin it? It will be worthy of a free, enlightened, and at not too distant period a great nation to give to mankind the magnanimous and too novel example of a people always guided by an exalted justice and benevolence...

The nation which indulges toward another an habitual hatred or an habitual fondness is in some degree a slave. It is a slave to its animosity or to its affection, either of which is sufficient to lead it astray from its duty and its interest...

The great rule of conduct for us in regard to foreign nations is, in extending our commercial relations to have with them as little political connections as possible. Europe has a set of primary interests which to us have none or a very remote connection...If we remain one people, under an efficient government, the period is not far off when we may defy material injury from external annoyance, when we may take such an attitude as will cause the neutrality we may at any time resolve upon to be scrupulously respected; when belligerent nations, under the impossibility of making acquisitions upon us, will not lightly hazard the giving us provocation; when we may choose peace or war, as our interest, guided by justice, shall counsel.

Why forego the advantages of so peculiar a situation? Why quit our own to stand upon foreign ground? Why, by interweaving our destiny with that of any part of Europe, entangle our peace and prosperity in the toils of European ambition, rivalry, interest, humor, or caprice?

Of all the dispositions and habits which lead to political prosperity, religion and morality are indispensable supports. In vain would that man claim the tribute of patriotism who should labor to subvert these great pillars of human happiness...Let it simply be asked: Where is the security for property, for reputation, for life, if the sense of religious obligation desert the oaths which are the instruments of investigation in courts of justice? ... Whatever may be conceded to the influence of refined education on minds of peculiar structure, reason and experience both forbid us to expect that national morality can prevail in exclusion of religious principle.

THE OPEN CONSPIRACY

And they said, Go to, let us build us a city and a tower, whose top may reach unto heaven; and let us make us a name, lest we be scattered abroad upon the face of the whole earth....

And the Lord said, Behold, the people is one. and they have all one language; and this they begin to do: and now nothing will be restrained from them, which they have imagined to do....

So the Lord scattered them abroad from thence....Therefore is the name of it called Babel....(Gen. 11: 4,6,8,9).

* * * * *

Since the time of Babel, men have tried again and again to establish a One World Government. Each time the attempt has ended in disaster: Cyrus of Persia, the Pharaohs of Egypt, Alexander, the Caesars, Kublai Khan, Tamerlane, Napoleon, and all the lesser ones endued with the spirit of Babel; Weishaupt, Marx, Lenin, the founders of the Concert of Europe, the League of Nations, the United Nations, the Communist and Socialist Internationals, "The Order," the International Elite; all have failed or are doomed to failure, though it may not be during our time on earth.

Among the dreamers having visions of a One World Government, a utopian man-made kingdom of heaven on earth in which the only god would be the Global State, was H.G.Wells, science-fiction writer, early Fabian Socialist, friend of Bolshevism, promoter of a humanist world religion and a One World Directorate. He published his plans for his version of this heaven on earth in his book, "The Open Conspiracy," Waterloo & Sons Printers, London, 1933. He wrote (pages 74-75):

"At the utmost seven broad principles may be stated as defining the Open Conspiracy and holding it together.....

(1) The complete assertion, practical and theoretical, of the provisional nature of existing governments and of our acquiescence in them;

(2) The resolve to minimize by all available means the conflicts of these governments, their militant use of individuals and property, and their interference with the establishment of a world economic system.

(3) The determination to replace private, local or national ownership of at least credit, transport, and staple production by a responsible world directorate serving the common interests of the race;

(4) The practical recognition of the necessity for world biological controls, for example, of population and disease;

(5) The support of a minimum standard of individual freedom and welfare in the world; and

(6) The supreme duty of subordinating the personal career to the creation of a world directorate capable of these tasks and to the general advancement of human knowledge, capacity, and power;

(7) The admission therewith that our immorality is conditional and lies in the race and not in our individual selves." (Emphasis added).

"In such terms," Wells continued, "we may sketch the practicable and possible opening phase of the Open Conspiracy. We do not present it as a movement initiated by any individual or radiating from any particular centre...It arises naturally and necessarily...It is reasonable therefore to anticipate its appearance all over the world in sporadic mutually independent groupings and movements, and to recognize not only that they will be extremely various, but that many of them will trail with them racial and regional habits and characteristics which will only be shaken off as its cosmopolitan character becomes imperatively evident."

In H.G.Wells' description of The Open Conspiracy he has merely provided a Fabianized outline of Adam Weishaupt's Order of the Illuminati which was organized in 1776, the same year that Adam Smith wrote his "The Wealth of Nations" and the American Second Continental Congress published the Declaration of Independence. Weishaupt's Order might be called a Closed Conspiracy in that only accepted and initiated members were permitted to participate in the movement. However, Wells believed that with the spread of knowledge and the speedup of communications in this century, what once was a closed conspiracy might now become an open conspiracy. In this he was correct up to a point. Members of the Council on Foreign Relations who once concealed their membership, now openly boast of it. The Trilateral Commission publishes some of its reports. At the popular level, there are thousands of groupings and movements that are openly conspiring to bring about some phase of the New World Order. In her "The Hidden Dangers of the Rainbow," Constance Cummings says there are more than 10,000 "New Age" organizations networking together in what might be called an Open Conspiracy. Choose whatever facet of human activity you may, you'll find groupings and movements in Open Conspiracy against the once recognized and ordered Christian society with its Republican system of government and its free enterprise economy.

However, what Wells fails to mention and what is usually overlooked, is the fact that behind every variety of this Open Conspiracy there is the Closed Conspiracy whose members finance, encourage and usually direct the movements of the Open Conspirators.

Behind all of these segments that are called conspiracies, there remains the one Great Conspiracy: the Conspiracy of Satan against God. The outline of Satan's Conspiracy is identified when we read of the three temptations of Jesus after He had spent His days in the wilderness. The power to rule kingdoms, to own the world's wealth, stated simply as "the love of money" and the love of power and glory, lie at the root of the Conspiracy. In worldly terms this is epitomized in the story of the attempt to build the Tower of Babel. Generally, this Conspiracy is illustrated by the Pyramid, like the one seen on the federal reserve note purporting to be worth a dollar. One of the finest descriptions of this "Power Pyramid" will be found in "Futurewatch," a publication written by the editors of "Globescan" and published in 1982.

There is pictured a pyramid, "an edifice of ultimate world financial power." The base is open and clearly visible, but at the summit all is closed and almost invisible. Here at the very top are the men who hold the international money monopolies - the Power Apex. Eustace Mullins in his recent book, "The World Order," says that there are just four men who rule the world. These would be the men who form Globescan's Power Apex. Beneath this peak of the pyramid are the Power Associates - the collaborators, semi-secret organizations, the supra-national banks the multinational conglomerates, and the highest ranking agents of the Power Apex, such as David Rockefeller, Averell Harriman, Armand Hammer, and a few others. Beneath this level, as the pyramid widens, there are the Power Operators that we can usually identify - politicians, top-level bureaucrats, international lawyers, labor union leaders; all of them being influential leaders in one capacity or another, who are controlled by the Power Elite.

As the pyramid continues to widen, below the shadowed Power Apex, the Power Associates and the Power Operators, there is the level occupied by the Power Persuaders: the media manipulators, academic and research organizations, writers, actors, In the term used by H.G.Wells, these might be called a part of The Open Conspiracy. Their function is to influence public opinion, inform the rest of the blocks and levels in the pyramid of current policy and plans, to control education, seduce Christianity, prepare people for the acceptance of The New Age, or New World Order, etc.

Coming on down to the ground level of this power pyramid there are those thousands of groupings and movements which promote various plans and policies that are of benefit to the Power Apex. Here we find an abundance of what Wells would identify as The Open Conspirators: organizations like Planned Parenthood, League of Women Voters, NOW, NEA, the New Agers, the Communist-Front organizations, etc.

One of these Open Conspiracy groups is the World Constitution and Parliament Association which is holding its third global session of the World Parliament at the Fontainebleau Hilton in Miami Beach from June 27 to July 5, 1986. Using this as an example of how The Open Conspiracy operates, let us point out that this is a truly international organization. Its officers and directors represent more than 40 Nations. Its honorary president is Sri. A.B.Patel of India, who also is general secretary of the World Union. One of the co-presidents is Reinhart Ruge of Mexico. Vice presidents include Gordon Bryant of Australia, a former cabinet member; Ramsey Clark of the USA, a former Attorney General; Gerhard Havel, West Germany; Syed Hussain, Bangladesh; Ahmed Jeffer, Pakistan, Toshio Miyake, Japan; Adenirian Ogunsanya, Nigeria; Indira Ahrestha, Nepal; and Helen Tucker, Canada. The secretary general of the organization is Philip Isely of the USA, while his wife Margaret is treasurer (the two most coveted positions in any conspiratorial movement). International headquarters is at Lakewood, Colorado; but listed variously as officers and trustees of this World Constitution and Parliament Association are over one hundred persons who are said to be important leaders in the forty-odd countries in which they claim citizenship.

Among the officers and trustees are the following Americans (an incomplete list): Kenneth Almond of Earth Resuce Corps; Dr. Charles Mercieca of Educators for World Peace; Selma Brackman of the Freelance Photo Guild; Joe Felmet, Humanist Counsellor; Thane Read, an economist; and Mortimor Lipsky, an attorney. Other Americans who are listed as speakers at this World Parliament are Dr. Gerald Barney, coordinator of the Global 2000 Report; George Brown, Congressman from California; Ramsey Clark; Orville Freeman, now of Business International Corp.; Bishop Thomas Gumbleton, Auxiliary Bishop of Detroit; Jesse Jackson, leader of the Rainbow Coalition and former presidential candidate; Sidney Lens, editor of Progressive Magazine; George McGovern, Senator and former presidential candidate; Patricia Shroeder, U.S. Congresswoman from Colorado; Bishop Desmond Tutu of South Africa, Nobel Peace Laureate; and Mrs. Coretta King, president of the Martin Luther King Jr. Foundation. (List is incomplete).

In these generally well financed and ably directed Open Conspiracy groups and movements there are, as H.G.Wells predicted, "extremely various" organizations promoting particular goals or denouncing established practices and customs associated with Christian society. It will be noted, however, that each of these particular groups and movements form some facet of the overall Great Conspiracy, which is spiritual and anti-Christ in nature. There are groups which promote free sex, government-financed abortion, euthanasia, etc. There are groups dedicated to the legalization of marijuana and other drugs. Other groups promote unilateral disarmament, secular humanism, New Age education, a Black Republic, etc., etc. There seems to be some sort of movement promoting every tiniest action or idea that will contribute toward the New World Order for those who think in terms of politics and economics, or the New Age Movement for those who think in terms of occultism and religion. This World Parliament movement which we have been discussing has its particular goals: legislative and parliamentary in nature. World Legislation is its goal, beginning with the acceptance by the parliaments and congresses of the nations, of a World Constitution. Its agenda is very explicit:

"The main purpose of the Third Session of the Provisional World Parliament will be to work on implementation of World Legislation previously adopted by the Parliament in earlier sessions, as well as the ratification campaign for the Constitution for the Federation of Earth. In addition, a limited number of World Legislative Measures will be taken up and a Provisional World Cabinet is to be established."

To work toward the destruction of all existing governments, which would be replaced by a One World Government, the leaders of this World Parliament organization lists the following "ISSUES AND ACTIONS" that are to be taken up in its June meeting in Miami Beach:

* Campaign for ratification of the Constitution for the Federation of Earth.

* Legislation to establish a World Disarmament Agency.

* Creation of a World Economic Development Organization.

* Creation of a World Environmental Protection Agency.

* Creation of World Money and a new monopoly banking and credit system.

* Plans for replacing present Nations and States with a Federal World District System (Regional World Government).

Such are the goals of one segment of the Open Conspiracy; one of thousands, each having its particular aims. Alone, none would succeed. But when bound together like a Roman Fasces, financed and directed by a Central Conspiratorial source, then this Great Conspiracy can be overcome only if we reject what Satan offers, and look to the Source of our original strength. Once we were a Nation of God-fearing, self-governing citizens; not a Nation of followers of politicians, top-level bureaucrats, lawyers, preachers who pervert the Word and others who helped build and sustain this Power Pyramid. Remember its source: love of money. And remember our Source: love of God.

AND WHO WILL BE NEXT?

Senator Barry Goldwater, who was unable to make it himself, due in part to corruption in the election of Lyndon Johnson, was able to help in the election of Governor Ronald Reagan to the Presidency. The Senator was assuredly of sound and understanding mind when he wrote in 1979: "I believe the Council on Foreign Relations and its ancillary elitist groups are indifferent to communism. They have no ideological anchors. In their pursuit of a new world order they are prepared to deal without prejudice with a communist state, a socialist state, a democratic state, monarchy, oligarchy - it's all the same to them." Elitist David Rockefeller made that statement even more accurate when he declared that they, the elitists, would rather deal with socialist and communist governments. And Rear Admiral Chester Ward, who was a member of the CFR for 16 years before resigning and denouncing, was correct when he said: "The most powerful in these elitist groups have one objective in common - they want to bring about the surrender of the sovereignty and the national independence of the United States."

"Their goal," said Senator Goldwater, "is to impose a benign stability on the quarreling family of nations through merger and consolidation. They see the elimination of national boundaries, the suppression of racial and ethnic loyalties as the most expeditious avenue to world peace. Their rationale rests exclusively on materialism. They believe economic competition is the root cause of international tension. This approach dismissed as insignificant the form of government or the political ideology expressed by that form." Which does much to explain the reason for the fall of the Philippines. To these elitists it doesn't matter that an anti-communist, pro-American government has been replaced by a pro-communist government. And if the fall of the pro-American government of the Philippines means the eventual loss of Clark Field and Subic Bay, this merely means that more billions will be made with the building of new air and naval bases on Guam, Okinawa or elsewhere.

Stanton Evans, in 'The Politics of Surrender,' in discussing the fall of Cuba, noted that "The communization of Cuba was, in all essential respects, a re-enactment of China." He wrote this in 1966. Had he expressed the same thought in 1986 he might have said that the communization of Nicaragua was, in all essential respects, a re-enactment of Cuba. And if a future historian writes about today a decade later, he might say, "The communization of the Philippines was, in all respects, a re-enactment of Nicaragua." That historian might write of how the world became communized through the theory of what Secretary of State George Marshall referred to as "coalition". Senator Goldwater, in his book, "With No Apologies", asked his readers to "Keep in mind that the Soviet communists understand it is not essential to incorporate the subjugated lands into the Soviet Union in order to establish their communist hegemony. Count the countries - Poland, Czechoslovakia, Rumania, Hungary, Austria, Yugoslavia, Bulgaria, Albania, East Germany, China, most of Southeast Asia, half of Korea, Mozambique, Angola, Ethiopia, Somalia, West Pakistan, Afghanistan, South Yemen, and in the Western Hemisphere, Cuba." Now we can add to that list Nicaragua, and probably the Philippines. In almost every instance, when it was time for a country to fall to the Communists, coalition was suggested by the elitists, through the governments which they controlled. Stanton Evans recorded the use of coalition as a weapon:

"In 1944, the United States and Great Britain forced the establishment of a 'coalition' government in Yugoslavia, involving the anti-Communist Prime Minister Subasic and the Communist Tito. In a matter of months, all anti-Communist ministers were driven from office and Yugoslavia went Communist. In late 1945, a similar coalition was imposed on Rumania. The non-Communist leaders wanted no part of such an arrangement, but were chivvied into it by Averell Harriman, who performed there the role assigned to Marshall in China. At Harriman's urging, the Rumanian anti-Communists reluctantly entered the coalition, and not too long after that entered prison as well. Rumania went Communist. Another effort at coalescence took place in Czechoslovakia, where the Communists succeeded in getting control of the police - one of the offices they insist on whenever they enter a coalition. When Communist insurrection broke out in February, 1948, the police sided with the mob instead of with the Benet government. Czechoslovakia went Communist. The dreary story was again repeated in Poland, when the Allies withdrew their support from the Free Polish government of Stanislaw Micolajczyk, and forced a 'coalition' with the Soviet puppet regime in Lublin...Within two years the anti-Communists were driven out of the government and Micolajczyk fled to England."

When a government accepted, or was forced to accept, coalition with the Communists, it was just a matter of time until that government was totally Communist. When governments refused to accept coalition with the Communists, then that government was forced to fall, and the Communists took over by other, bloodier, means. The program would begin with the withdrawal of money, supplies, and weapons by the United States government, and U.S. State Department suggestions to other allied nations not to supply or trade with the nation whose government was doomed to fall. This procedure was most obvious in the case of the fall of the Nationalist government of China. George Marshall went to China, tried to get Chiang Kai-shek to agree to the formation of a coalition government with Mao Tse-tung and Chou En-lai. Chiang refused; and for that reason all aid and previously promised supplies were diverted to the Communists, and Chiang's fate was sealed by the Elitists. To give him his proper due, a young Congressman named John F. Kennedy protested, told an audience in Salem, Massachusetts, on January 30, 1949:

"Our policy in China has reaped the whirlwind. The continued insistence that aid would not be forthcoming unless a coalition government with the Communists was formed was a crippling blow to the national government. So concerned were our diplomats and their advisers, the Lattimores and the Fairbanks, with the imperfections of the diplomatic system in China after 20 years of war, and the tales of corruption in high places, that they lost sight of our tremendous stake in a non-Communist China...This is the tragic story of China whose freedom we once fought to preserve. What our young men had saved, our diplomats and our President have frittered away." Note the repeat performance. Young Americans fought to save the Philippines; and what they fought to save, the Elitists, their agent-diplomats, and the controlled media, have frittered away. The story repeats and repeats, and each time the price gets higher.

Then came Cuba. As Stanton Evans said, "The communization of Cuba was, in all essential respects, a re-enactment of China. Castro...was the obvious favorite of crucial elements in the American press and State Department, acclaimed as the George Washington of Cuba, vehemently defended against charges of Communism (as have been Aquino, Ramos, and the new government of the Philippines). And (as with Chiang and Somoza and Marcos) at a crucial stage in his (Castro's) battle with Batista, the United States government withdrew its aid to the Havana government, spiking the guns of the anti-Communists." Ambassador Earl E.T. Smith protested what was happening but, as a U.S. Ambassador, he had to carry out the orders given him by the State Department. In his book, "The Fourth Floor," he wrote:

"...upon instructions, I spent 2 hours and 35 minutes, on December 17, 1958, with Batista, and I told him that the United States or rather certain influential people in the United States believed that he could no longer maintain effective control in Cuba, and that they believed it would avoid a great deal of further bloodshed if he were to retire." In testimony before the Senate Internal Security subcommittee, he stated: that "our actions in the United States were responsible for the rise to power of Castro...Without the United States, Castro would not be in power today."

Came the time to Communize Nicaragua. We have referred to one of the methods used when a government is to fall: Coalition, or the merging of Communist leaders into strategic positions of a neutral or anti-Communist government. This plan worked to the death of freedom for the peoples of the countries of Eastern Europe. But when that method was suggested to Chiang Kai-shek by US Secretary of State George Marshall, Chiang rejected the plan. So Steps Two and Three were taken: Starvation and Vilification. All supplies that had been promised to Chiang's forces were either denied or diverted to Mao. And the CFR's Institute of Pacific Relations began a smear campaign against Chiang, his wife, his government and his armies. Chiang, who had been America's best friend and ally for the preceding twenty years, found it necessary to retreat to the Island of Taiwan.

Batista also was a staunch anti-Communist and friend of the US. But he also refused to merge with that alleged agrarian reformer, Fidel Castro. So, Steps Two and Three were taken. Supplies were denied and a smear campaign was launched by the media. Again, the plan worked.

So, the same program was adopted when it came time to Communize Nicaragua. Anastasio Somoza, as were Chiang and Batista and the Shah of Iran, was a staunch and trusted friend of the United States, and a firm anti-Communist. He also refused all offers to merge with the Sandinistas. Even when the Steps of Starvation and Vilification were employed, Somoza still held out. So, the Carter Administration took a more belligerent step. It took charge and promoted a civil war, hoping to replace Somoza's regime with a "democratic" government. And the Sandinistas took over, were financed, aided and abetted by the United States, but were working for the Soviet Union and Communist Cuba. Somoza was forced to flee, went to Miami but felt unsafe there and flew to Paraguay where he was assassinated. In the introduction to the book "Nicaragua Betrayed," co-author Jack Cox wrote:

"When his hour of peril came and his loyal Garde Nacional was being pressed on all sides by superior Communist-trained forces (and) the United States did not live up to her existing treaties with Nicaragua ...Somoza called it quits. There is evidence that the US actually contributed to his downfall." President Somoza declared: "...when the United States assumes leadership, in a conspiratorial fashion, to annihilate anti-Communist Nations, I believe it is my duty to speak out. When I have factual evidence that the United States of America has actually aided and abetted the evil forces of Communism, I believe the people of the United States should share in such facts and incontrovertible manifestations."

Then came the time to begin the Communization of the Philippines. It was as though it had been decided in some secret session that the Soviet Union was to assume control of the Pacific and China Sea. Forty-odd years earlier, Japan, in promoting its Co-Prosperity Sphere, had the same idea: American protection of the Philippines stood in the way. Once again the Philippines stood in the way, this time in the way of Communist expansion. For twenty years Ferdinand Marcos had successfully held off all Communist attempts to conquer the islands. So Marcos had to go. And as with the Nicaraguan planning, an alleged "democratic" (really Communist) force was created, with Corazon Aquino as the figurehead. As the crisis developed, State Department's Philip Habib went to Manila and, like Marshall and Harriman before him, suggest Coalition. Marcos refused, and the Steps of Starvation and Vilification were intensified. All promised aid and supplies would be withheld. And the vilification campaign launched by the media was the most vicious ever produced "out of whole cloth" against an anti-Communist leader and friend of the United States.

As the end neared, President Marcos made one last plea. He called Senator Paul Laxalt, whom he considered a friend. He asked, "Does the president want me to step down?" Laxalt replied, "The president is not in the position to make that kind of demand." Then came the question, "Senator, what do you think?" The answer: "As a Senator, I'm not bound by diplomatic restrictions. You should cut and cut cleanly. The time has come." There followed a long pause, then the Senator asked, "Are you still there?" And the response: "Yes. I'm so very disappointed." And so should be all of us who are anti-Communist, God-fearing and pro-American.

We spoke of Coalition, Starvation, and Vilification as the three steps taken to kill a friend. We should add that a standard excuse is always given when the victim is a friend. It is that weasel-word "democracy." We are told we must eliminate an anti-Communist government in order to bring "democracy" to the people. But that "democracy" always ends up being Communism. We brought democracy to Cuba and it became communism. We brought democracy to Nicaragua and it became Communism. We brought democracy to the Philippines, and it is Communism.

Then shall they deliver you up to be afflicted, and shall kill you; and ye shall be hated of all nations for my name's sake. For whosoever will save his life shall lose it; but whosoever will lose his life for my sake, the same shall save it. (Matthew 24:9, and Luke 9:24).

"NO! TO THE NEW WORLD ORDER"

"It was the best of times, it was the worst of times, it was the age of wisdom, it was the age of foolishness, it was the epoch of belief, it was the epoch of incredulity, it was the season of Light, it was the season of Darkness, it was the spring of hope, it was the winter of despair, we had everything before us, we had nothing before us, we were all going to Heaven, we were all going direct the other way -- in short, the period was so far like the present period, that some of its noisiest authorities insisted on being received, for good or evil, in the superlative degree of comparison only."

These words written by Charles Dickens are surprisingly descriptive of our own times. Just change the title to "A Tale of Two Worlds," and the words seem to fit. Recently we have seen the fall of Marcos of the Philippines and Duvalier of Haiti, still to come is the programmed fall of Pinochet of Chili. South Africa struggles to keep its government alive, there is civil revolt in Egypt, political genocide remains the order of the day in Afghanistan Cambodia and Ethiopia, civil war continues in Lebanon, along the West Bank, endless war continues between Iraq and Iran, flames of hate are burning up Ireland, the legislature of Moammar Khadafy's Libya has called for special suicide squads to attack US and Israeli interests with concentration on embassies -- and some 1200 peace marchers are on their way from Los Angeles to Washington, a march of 3,235 miles across the USA in the name of nuclear disarmament. Meanwhile, reminiscent of the Great Depression of a century ago, farms are being auctioned off to Big Bankers and Agribusiness executives as family farming faces its greatest crisis; the AIDS epidemic keeps growing, and a special committee spent over a hundred thousand dollars to determine that more homework and parental supervision would make children better students. Yes, it is again "the spring of hope, the winter of despair."

Our last two federal administrations, acting in behalf of the promoters of The New World Order, have destroyed four governments that were anti-Communist and pro-American. The Carter Administration brought down the right-wing governments of Iran and Nicaragua. This brought to power the dictatorial rule of the Ayatollah Khomeini in Iran, and the Communist government of the Ortega brothers in Nicaragua. Matching this, the Reagan Administration has now brought down another two anti-Communist governments, that of Duvalier in Haiti, and Marcos in the Philippines. As a result anarchy reigns in Haiti, leading to the potential invasion of that land by some other country in order to bring about a semblance of law and order; possibly by the United States, but more probably by the Communist government of Cuba.

In the Philippines, when the unelected president, Corazon Aquino, assumed nominal leadership in the islands, one of her first important acts was the freeing of the political prisoners. Among them were four leaders of the Communist Huks and the Communist-dominated National Democratic Front. Next, she proceeded to fire 22 army generals, thus making virtually impotent the one force that could keep the country from becoming totally Communist-controlled: the Philippine Constabulary which had been staunchly anti-Communist. When she was sworn in, she had to conduct the nation's business from a down-town office, because the presidential office and residence, Malacanang Palace, had been stripped of its furniture "in the name of freedom" by the undisciplined mobs. The Communist organizations that Marcos had kept in check for twenty years, now came out openly praising Aquino and promising to cooperate wholeheartedly with her administration.

Marcos has been labeled a plunderer and robber of billions belonging to the people. But the Establishment-controlled media have said nothing whatsoever about the fact that, in addition to being a communist sympathizer, if not a card-carrier, she also is a millionaire. Spotlight of March 10, 1986, in an exclusive article quotes Dr. Robert Mueller, one of the UN's three deputy secretary-generals, who directs a number of the world organization's Pacific projects, who said: "He (Marcos) has been president for 20 years, an unmatched record in his young nation's history. Even before that, he had a brilliant political career as the youngest congressman ever elected - he rose to the top like a rocket. But Marcos is aging and ailing. His old magic and astuteness are gone. And he grew accustomed to trusting his US allies and contacts - trusting them too unquestioningly. That's where his troubles began." Spotlight then quotes a CBS reporter who had just returned from the Philippines: "Mrs. Aquino, who became the symbolic figure of the movement against Marcos, and has now been recognized as the new president of the Philippines, is being described as a 'widow,' a 'housewife,' who became a spontaneous leader of a popular uprising. Not many Americans realize that Mrs. Aquino is a multimillionaire businesswoman, one of the largest landholders in her country, and a banker....With her brothers Pedro, 59, and Jose, Jr., 51, Mrs. Aquino is

Our favorite Senator, Jeremiah Denton, Alabama Republican, on Wednesday, February 26, cast the only vote against a resolution welcoming the "peaceful and expeditious transfer of power" in the Philippines. Following are excerpts from a statement made by him explaining why:

"I will never vote to urge the President of the United States to do a set of things, four pages long, with no more than 100 seconds to read the four pages. The entire period for debate was less than 20 minutes and I was not informed or aware of any debate whatsoever. As to specifics, I received no advance copy nor any foreknowledge of this vote until a staffer broke in my office and informed me that 'there will be a vote on the Philippines at five minutes to 1 P.M.' This notice was given to me 13 minutes to 1 P.M. and the roll-call vote had already begun at 12:45 P.M. I rushed to the Senate floor with no knowledge of the contents and could not digest the resolution's contents before the time to cast my vote.

"Advice and consent require deliberation, time for which was totally absent in this case. I wish to be deliberative, as a senator, in foreign policy matters because, in my respectful opinion, the main defects in the conduct of foreign affairs under Presidents Nixon, Ford, Carter and Reagan have not derived from the quality of the initiatives of the Presidents but from the tendency of Congress, led by liberal, all-too-powerful media, to seize the initiative in an untimely manner or to 'devise and dissent' rather than advise and consent.

I dream of more respect for the separation of powers, respect for Constitutionally mandated authority, and bipartisanship in foreign affairs and other matters of vital interest. After appropriate deliberation, I will address the merits of the resolution passed today."

co-proprietor - in fact, holder of the controlling interest - in two holding companies, the Tarlac Development Corp. (Tadeco), and JCS Management. Tadeco and JCS, in turn, own the Hacienda Luisita, a vast sugar spread of more than 12,000 acres, described by Spotlight as 'the biggest and richest spread of prime land on the vast, fertile plains of central Luzon.' Through these and other holding companies, Mrs. Aquino also owns the Tarlac Distillery, Luisita Marketing, United Fidelity Bank, and a score of other lucrative enterprises....Mrs. Aquino's sharpest dispute with the Marcos administration involved not politics at all, but the profits of her vast properties. Under the agrarian reform law promulgated in 1984 by Marcos as a measure to improve the lot of landless farmers, a portion of Mrs. Aquino's sprawling estates in Luzon and elsewhere were slated to be subdivided at cost to their impoverished tenants. Mrs. Aquino resisted the reform...." The Spotlight article continues:

"We are not sure what prompted the Reagan administration to engineer the overthrow of Marcos," says a former Defense Department intelligence analyst who now works for a Washington consulting firm with a number of Asian corporate clients, "But it seems certain that the real reasons were financial and economic, rather than political." Another source quoted by Spotlight states: "The decision of the US Establishment to 'get' Marcos hardened a year ago when the Philippine strongman initiated a series of monetary and debt measures that had, as Newsweek later reported it, 'the Pacific's 100 leading bankers, both inside and outside the Philippines, up in arms."

Meanwhile, in that fourth country whose government was destroyed, history may be repeated. The Miami Herald's Washington Bureau reported on March 5 that "Senior administration officials pressed their campaign to persuade Congress to approve President Reagan's controversial $100 million aid request for Nicaraguan rebels, warning that refusal to assist the contras could force the United States to dispatch American troops to Nicaragua." As an instance of media brainwashing, note how this article by Alfonso Chardy of the Herald refers to the Freedom Fighters as "rebels" and later calls them "contras," this latter being a name coined by the Sandinistas to label fighters to free their country from Communist control revolutionaries. The name was picked up by the media and now is used almost universally.

The gist of this Report concerns the manner in which federal administrations, acting in behalf of the New World Orderers, have destroyed anti-Communist and pro-American governments, allowed them to be replaced with anti-American and pro-Communist governments, and otherwise benefitted themselves and their Communist agents at the expense of the United States and her friends. We have referred to Iran, Nicaragua, Haiti, and the Philippines. There is yet another recent series of occurrences that have worked to the benefit of International Communism. We refer to the events following the destruction, accidental or otherwise, of the space shuttle Challenger and the death of its occupants. Whether accidental, caused by carelessness, faulty equipment, sabotage, or whatever, the tragedy has brought about the firings and/or transfers of personnel, claims against industries supplying the necessary parts, and a general criticism of the ability and character of American engineers, managers and workmen involved; all of this leading to greater goodwill internationally toward the Soviet space efforts. The tragedy also has caused the cessation of all progress in space for at least a year, this affecting not only the shuttle service but progress in what now seems to be very important Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI), development. The Soviets who were lagging now have been able to get in front again. As soon as news of the death of the Challenger and its occupants was seen, the Soviets were prepared to launch their luxurious new space station. Tass, the official Soviet news agency, boasted of it being a permanent home in space with elaborate living quarters and research laboratories, six docking ports, four habitable modules, a "new generation of Soviet space station technology." They named it Mir, the Russian word for Peace. Had our shuttle service continued, an American team of astronomers and scientists would have been in space in a shuttle studying Halley's Comet. Instead, the Soviets have made a big thing of the event and their spacecraft, "Vegal," was diverted from its trip to Venus in order to transmit to the world historic close-up (5,000 miles) pictures of the comet. Also, astronomers and scientists were invited from all over the world to visit and take advantage of Soviet installations that will be featured as a part of the study.

All of this a small and unimportant thing? In the matter of international affairs, public relations activities are just as important as are public relations for any private business or industry. To promote a good image of the USSR is important to the New World Orderers, and the development of "Mutual Assured Equality" in public relations, to match their "Mutual Assured Destruction" in martial relations, is a part of the steps toward "merging" the Nations of the world into the New World Order's New World Government.

Taking full advantage of the Challenger tragedy and the stoppage of US space progress, Communist leader Gorbachev called off the proposed summit visits between himself and President Reagan, thus boasting of his better public image in the matter of arms limitation.

In our last week's Report, we listed three steps that were taken to destroy friendly governments: Coalition, Starvation, and Vilification. Al Aaronson, who with Gary Allen is writing a book on the subject of saying "No! to the New World Order," has gone one step further and listed the "Four Steps of Subversion" that follow the takeover:

- (1) Vilification of the anti-Communist leader or country (Marcos).
- (2) Glorification of the Communist leader or forces (Aquino).
- (3) Beautification of what life will be like under the new Communist regime (a current media project).
- (4) Rationalization of the results (It's too late to do anything about it. Too risky to world peace. Might Cause war. So we have to accept it and deal with the Communist victors).

Gary Allen commented: "It may take Divine intervention to save America. Many of us believe that it was Divine intervention which, against incredible odds, founded this country. But Divine intervention will not come from just praying, and certainly not to people who are too apathetic to care. It will come the old-fashioned way - only if we earn it. So, we say to you: get on board or get out of the way. The Americans are coming!"

Year Thirty-Three.....Number Eleven.....March 14, 1986

THE FATAL ENCIRCLEMENT CONTINUES

Never have the chieftains of the New World Order moved so fast from one project to another. The efforts of the Nicaraguan freedom fighters to gain control of their country continues. But gone are Haiti and the Philippines. We headlined our Report of February 28, "And Who Will Be Next?" In no time at all the media made it very clear that the next move is to be against South Korea. The same old pretext is being employed: human rights violations. The leftists in South Korea began a clamor for a new constitution. South Korean President Chun Doo-Hwan interpreted this as meaning that a "transfer of power" was being demanded, a transfer that would make of free enterprise South Korea one more socialist state. Chun promised some reforms, but insisted that any major changes should await the end of his term in 1988. But the clamor for immediate action continued, and Chun's security forces found it necessary to place some 300 radicals under house arrest. And immediately came the cry of human rights violations. You'll remember that a "transfer of power" was the cry of those who wanted Marcos destroyed. The same term could be used to describe the takeover of Cuba, Iran, Nicaragua, the Philippines, and now South Korea. Marcos tried to appease the opposition by agreeing to hold a special election. That gave Mrs. Aquino her chance to take over. Don't be surprised if the media reports that a special election is being held in South Korea, before Chun's term ends in 1988. Recently South Korean authorities captured eleven North Korean agents involved in eight different spy rings. These agents were establishing Communist cells among the college and university students in South Korea. This is one of the first steps taken before revolution begins in a country. The bainwashed students lead the mobs, stir up troubles among the people, etc. We had an example of that in the United States during the Vietnam War. But it wasn't time for a total "transfer of power" in the United States - yet. And now South Korea is to be the target,

In order to understand what is happening, we must go back to Lenin's blueprint. Lenin was financed by the international bankers who transported him and his retinue in sealed cars from Switzerland, through Germany, into Russia. Those same international bankers had financed the trip of Leon Trotsky and his gang from New York City to St. Petersburg (now Leningrad), where he joined the Bolshevik invaders, led the revolts while Lenin did the planning. Once in power in Russia, Lenin said: "First we shall take Eastern Europe, and next the masses of Asia. Then we shall encircle that last bastion of capitalism, the United States. Through infiltration and subversion, it will fall like a ripe plum into our hands." As he predicted, World War One had made it possible for the Bolsheviks to conquer Russia. World War Two made it possible for Stalin to take Eastern Europe. The masses of Asia have been taken, or are being taken. And next, the encirclement of the United States. That encirclement began in 1958, with the Soviet conquest of Cuba, which was made possible by the same group of international bankers and One Worlders, who used their controlled media, especially Herbert Matthews of The New York Times. That conquest concluded, the Carter Administration paved the way for the Soviet conquest of Nicaragua by promoting and financing a so-called "democratic transfer of power" which paved the way for the takeover of that country by the Marxist Sandinistas. And as Washington is tied up with arguments about whether to support the freedom fighters, the Soviets are busy building more military bases, and training subversives and terrorists to do their part in taking over all of Central America from Colombia to Mexico; and then onward into the United States by means of illegal immigration. Already voices are being raised throughout Mexico calling for the retaking by Mexico of California, Arizona and New Mexico. "The Immigration Time Bomb" by Palmer Stacy and Wayne Lutton, begins with the words, "America is being invaded," then explains that "Every day thousands of foreigners illegally enter our country. Over two million illegal aliens will come this year, most of them penetrating our porous 2,000-mile border with Mexico. Additional hundreds of thousands will arrive through our superficially inspected harbors and international airports....Most illegal aliens come to the United States looking for work and end up displacing American citizens from what are often well-paying jobs. Others are lured by our burgeoning welfare state, and are assisted by 'religious' and 'welfare rights' groups to obtain benefits intended for needy Americans and paid for by over-burdened US taxpayers. Still other aliens are heavily involved in crime and welfare fraud, while some engage in terrorism and subversion." ("The Immigration Time Bomb," 148 pages, paperback. Order from The American Immigration Control Foundation, P.O.Box 11839, Alexandria, VA 22312. $2.50).

In addition to Cuba, Nicaragua and, to some extent, Mexico, the Soviet forces now control an air/sea triangle which links Cuba, Nicaragua, Guyana and Surinam. If and when they establish bases in Haiti, the Soviets will have command over all shipping that sails through the Windward Passage that lies between Haiti and Cuba; one of the most important and busiest shipping lanes in all the world. Hence the "encirclement" from the south, as Lenin predicted. In addition, comes word from Panama's Defense Minister, General Manuel Antonio Noriega, that his military intelligence has uncovered a terrorist plot which calls for the use of a suicide squad which will blow up the Panama Canal. According to Don McAlvany, "The report has shaken the 20,000 member US civilian and military community, which has begun to take new security measures around the 17 square miles of US military compounds, and around the Bridge of the Americas, the Pacific Ocean outlet to the canal, and the various canal locks. An oil tanker or ship carrying liquid gas, which exploded in or near one of the locks, could shut down the canal for many months or even years. Both CIA and DIA officials admit that the Panama Canal is extremely vulnerable to such terrorist attacks." Then McAlvany adds this editor's note: "Why have stories about terrorist infiltration into the US and potential terrorist attacks against the Panama Canal been almost totally 'spiked' by the US media?" (McAlvany Intelligence Advisor, P.O.Box 39810, Phoenix Arizona 85069).

Meanwhile to the West and Far West, as we have previously reported, the Soviets have begun to take absolute control of the Pacific. Hence the attack on Marcos of the Philippines, and the budding attack on Chun Doo-hwan of South Korea. 40% of the Soviet navy is now deployed in the Pacific and operates out of bases in and around Vladivostok in the Northeast to Cam Ranh Bay in the Southeast. These facts make virtually treasonable the State Department's proposed turnover of the islands in the Arctic Ocean: Wrangel, Herald, Bennett, Henrietta and Jeannette, along with vast mineral oil and territorial rights in the area north of the Bering Strait. This would complete Lenin's predicted encirclement of the United States from the West as well as the South.

Despite the remote possibility of total military encirclement of the United States, there is a far greater danger about which our media and our elected and appointed officials seldom speak. Lenin did not talk about military conquest of the United States. He spoke of infiltration and subversion as the weapons that would make our nation fall like a ripe plum. In our psychological defense against Communism, which amounts to the same thing as defense against the New World Order, psychological weapons are being used against us; weapons against which our federal government offers little if any defense. Nothing is ever said of the Communist experiments and successes in weather control, in the development of particle beam weapons. Or take the present case of the explosion of the shuttle Challenger and the resulting death of its seven honored and heroic occupants. By the manner in which this story was handled by the American media, we were made a virtual laughing stock by the Soviet press. And no wonder. In addition to all the charges and counter charges and the various ways in which the tragedy was explained by disagreeing "experts," there was the strange and belated finding of the remains of the crew. We were told that there had been a "melting down" of the shuttle, that its occupants would have been "evaporated." Funerals were held, honors were spoken and given, the pain and suffering of relatives and friends were now tolerable. Then, suddenly, six weeks later, came the surprise announcement that a part of the shuttle and the remains of its crew had been found 25, then 14, and finally about 16 miles northeast of Cape Canaveral.

Writing before the event of the findings, Lawrence Patterson mentioned what we had said about the possibility of sabotage. We hesitate to quote too much from his report because we think you should read the entire "Monthly Lesson in Criminal Politics." But, here are excerpts:

"I won't mention names because the charges are far too serious and the libel laws don't permit it, but at the very least, we have stunning evidence of East Bloc penetration of the NASA organization. It has been revealed from our Washington sources, that President Reagan had planned a dramatic telephone hookup with the shuttle Challenger's astronauts, as a part of his State of the Union Speech Feb. 4th, as a major boost to national morale and pride! Make no mistake, morale building exercises are critical to the security of the United States and damaging to the Politburo. The Soviets will stop at nothing to see that our national resolve and spirit are not enhanced...The Vietnam war was controlled by the Trilateral Party to force us to bow our heads. Now with the Star Wars program threatening the Soviets with technological superiority there is an attempt to break the back of our national will with regard to outer space warfare....The President's telephone hookup with shuttle Challenger during the State of the Union message was a key event in the process of building our confidence to outdistance the Soviets in space warfare. I believe we must admit that the seven shuttle astronauts will have to join the 269 passengers on flight 007 among Soviet atrocities for the purpose of breaking our will and national resolve!...On the day of the doomed Challenger flight the temperature on the shady side of the rocket booster was 9 degrees above zero according to published reports. On that day a NASA engineer...refused to hold up the flight, went over the head of Alan McDonald, and forced Thiokol headquarters in Utah to give the final OK. Here we have positive proof of sabotage of the shuttle flight...We already have an attempted coverup. The current acting administrator of NASA (at that time), a Dr. William Gramm, has lied to the Senate panel with oversight of NASA operations, according to Senator Fritz Hollings of South Carolina. The very fact that we have an attempted coverup of the circumstances surrounding the launch approval process is indicative of East Bloc penetration of NASA. Naturally, the Trilateral press will attempt to prevent this from becoming understood publicly...The fact remains that it is now patently clear to anyone with an eighth grade education, that they knew in advance of the grave danger of low temperatures, and that there was an opportunity to perpetrate a vicious crime and do grave damage to the United States in this particular shuttle launch. Only highly trained and dedicated agents of a foreign power could be expected to act so brutally - with total disdain for helpless human beings. The only logical conclusion is that we have East Bloc penetration (probably KGB) of the NASA organization. Once again, I am convinced that we must accept the reality that the seven Challenger astronauts must be classed as victims of Soviet aggression right along with the members of flight 007!" (Quoted from Patterson Strategy Letter, P.O.Box 37812, Cincinnati, Ohio 45222. Monthly, $149.95 per year.)

Mr. Patterson mentioned lies told during the investigation. For further proof of a coverup, consider the treatment of the "remains" of those astronauts. There is a Florida law which states that a Florida medical examiner must take charge of any such "remains." But NASA officials refused to let Dr. Laurie McHenry examine the remains. He threatened to sue, and NASA then supposedly relented, said the doctor could "see" the "remains" but that they would stay in NASA's custody. But it was merely "lip service." He was never permitted to see anything. So, when NASA reported finding more of the "remains," when ambulances were sent to transport them to Patrick Air Force Base, the ambulances were followed all the way and, according to an early morning radio report by an eye witness observer, those ambulances were empty. There were no "remains" delivered to the Air Base! That report was later "doctored," by orders of some higher authority, we presume. But people have a right to know: Have "remains" really been found, or is this just another coverup to humiliate and embarrass America, and bring more sadness to relatives and friends? Remembering the reports on the Bay of Pigs, the assassination of John Kennedy, the strange death of Marilyn Monroe, the way news was mangled during the Vietnam war, etc., etc., one had a right to wonder, and in this case to demand that someone other than a NASA-appointed official see and tell the public the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth!

Finally: Conquest by encirclement, infiltration and subversion, said a paid agent of the New World Order. The infuriating thing about this to real Americans is that there are among us traitors who believe they can live by bread alone!

PROMERGE

Have you ever noticed how the foreign policy goals of the U.S. government always seem to be mutually contradictory? On the one hand we spend $300 billion a year on defense against the Soviet Union. On the other hand we give the Soviet Union the things it needs in order to conquer us. We spend more billions encouraging other nations to stand against the Communist Empire and refuse to surrender and merge into the one world, socialist, totalitarian government which the Soviets are in the business of establishing. But at the same time the president of the Ford Foundation admitted in 1953 that "All of us here at the policy-making level have had experience in either OSS or the European Economic Administration and our directives are that we use our grant-making power so to alter life in the United States that we can be comfortably merged with the Soviet Union." We urge others not to merge, but at the same time our policy-makers urge us to merge.

An important incident in this pro-merge vs anti-merge syndrome has developed in the field of education. John F. McManus, in a column titled "Can't Have It Both Ways," noted that "Two current goals of the U.S. government appear mutually contradictory. The first is the call for another increase in the already huge defense budget...the second U.S. goal is the simultaneous introduction of various elements of Soviet life into our nation." McManus pointed out that two weeks before the Reagan-Gorbachev summit meeting, American and Soviet educationists met in Moscow and agreed to swap elementary and secondary computer education techniques. In effect, Soviet educational techniques would be introduced into the elementary and secondary schools of the United States. It seems that the Carnegie Corporation in New York and the Soviet Academy of Sciences got together to develop this scheme, with the prior approval of the U.S. State Department.

"In Geneva two weeks later," wrote Mr. McManus, "President Reagan and Chairman Gorbachev signed their agreements, one of which states: 'The two leaders agreed on the utility of broadening exchanges and contacts including some of their new forms in a number of scientific, educational, medical and sports fields, and among others, cooperation in the development of educational exchanges and software for elementary and secondary school instruction (and) the annual exchange of professors to conduct special courses in history, culture, and economics at the relevant departments of Soviet and American institutions of higher education...'"

"So, while the taxpayers of America are soaked for enormous amounts of money to guard against Soviet military threats, American students at all levels will increasingly become beneficiaries of Soviet propaganda disguised as education.

This foreign policy contradiction appears in another instance. A few years ago we were told by our President that the Soviet Union was an "evil empire," and that the leaders of the Kremlin could be counted on to "commit any crime, to lie, to cheat" in order to achieve their goal of "world domination and a one-world, Socialist-Communist state." Nothing has changed except that a Communist Chairman died and another Communist Chairman took over. But, as McManus pointed out, "even while Soviet troops continued their unspeakable crimes against Afghanistan and Poland and Soviet jails and prison camps remained bulging with 'enemies of the state,' the official United States rhetoric eased dramatically." And while that empire remained an evil empire, the President who had called it that, went to Geneva and signed agreements which would assist greatly in accomplishing the "merging" of our nation into the "evil empire."

Contradictory policies? Antony Sutton recently uncovered a situation of the same nature, which he says strongly suggests treason, and he does not "use the word lightly." We'll quote and explain later. First, some background information.

The elitists who are creating this New World Order began seriously with their program of merging nations with the creation of the European Common Market, which was to accomplish the merging of all the nations of western Europe into one economically controlled and politically dominated United States of Europe. H du B recalls that Robert Shaetzle, former American ambassador to the Common Market, wrote in the CFR's Foreign Affairs of April, 1966: "If the loss of sovereignty is good for Europe, why isn't it good for us?" As a matter of fact, at that time there was a suggestion that the United States and Canada

NEW MONEY AND THE CASHLESS SOCIETY

Treasury Secretary Baker has finally made an official announcement about the new Federal Reserve paper notes which we are forced to call money. The greenback is to remain green, but a polyester thread will be added, and the words "United States of America" in tiny letters will appear alongside the thread. Only visible under a magnifying glass. Supposedly impossible to reproduce by even the most sophisticated of the new copiers. This new currency is to appear in circulation in 15 to 18 months from now. There was no announcement of a recall of the old currency, but former Congressman Ron Paul who has been monitoring this change for some time, says a recall of all old currency is likely. This "new money" may be a transition step toward the new Cashless Society.

Since the advent of plastic credit cards and the technological development of computers, there has been much talk of the coming cashless society. It seems that Singapore has been selected as the first place for the total tryout of the system. According to Insight, weekly newsmagazine published by The Washington Times, no cash transactions are permitted in the large department stores, supermarkets, gas stations, hospitals and government offices. The scheme began weeks ago but, so far as we are informed, has not been reported by the establishment-controlled media. Shoppers and consumers must use their plastic automated teller machine cards to pay for whatever they may purchase. Singaporeans will pay their utility bills, taxes, etc. by direct deduction from their bank accounts. It follows that everyone must have a bank account, since cash and checks are no longer acceptable. The government has closed all cash payment offices, leaving citizens no choice but to join Singapore's drive toward a high-tech society. The system is titled the Electronic Fund Transfer Point of Sale. It was installed by the British-based CAP Information Systems Group. According to Insight, when the system was first put into effect there were frequent complaints about terminal breakdowns and slow transaction times. So about 65 of the British-made terminals were replaced with Japanese Omron machines. American-based companies were rejected in favor of the British and Japanese terminals. Says Insight, "About 1 million people of a total population of 2.5 million are expected to benefit from the scheme, with 200 terminals installed across the island." How the other 1.5 million people are to buy or sell is not explained. Perhaps the barter system will be used.

should become a part of the European Community, since all were members of the Atlantic Alliance. But the plan was abandoned, and the Trilateral Commission was created as a kind of transitional step. At about this same time Charles Dupuy, Grand Master of the Masonic Lodge of France is quoted as having said, "We are working towards a universal republic and that republic starts with Europe." H du B comments: "The first duty of a conspiracy is to deny its existence and those lulled by a deceiving media will scoff at the suggestion that America is being pushed into a packaged world in which no nation will have an army and no nation will be able to get out; that the most aggressive nation in the world would be at the top of the package and that nation would be Soviet Russia is self-evident."

Now, the elitists of the New World Order who are managing this eventual merging of the USA and the USSR must first condition the people to accept "comfortably" such a merger. The people of the USSR have already been so conditioned and might complain but would not resist. But in the United States this "conditioning" must be brought about through educational, cultural, religious and societal changes. This is what that agreement signed between President Reagan and Comrade Gorbachev is all about. We must be taught to accept socialism, humanism, collectivism, and accept it "comfortably."

Next step: Before there can be any political merging, there must be an economic merging, as was brought about in western Europe. And the subject of economic merging brings us to what historian and researcher Antony Sutton has uncovered. We quote with permission:

"A secret U.S.-Soviet operating group is acting in a manner strongly suggesting treason by its American members - and we do not use the word lightly...Before we spell out the details for you, how do we define treason? Treason is defined in the Constitution as 'aid and comfort' to any enemy of the United States. Following this, how do we define an enemy? We spend $300 billion a year on defense against the Soviet Union, so logically the Soviet Union is an enemy. We cannot SIMULTANEOUSLY have a $300 billion defense budget against the Soviet Union and give 'aid and comfort for the Soviet military structure without raising the question of treason."

Mr. Sutton refers to the US-USSR Trade And Economic Council, a secret and quasi-official organization which has official sanction and backing and links the Bush elements in the White House, the National Association of Manufacturers, the US Chamber of Commerce, and assorted Senators and Congressmen with more political ambition than common sense." Sutton calls this Council, which we shall refer to as TEC, a secret organization, because it will not release its membership list (about 300) to the media, will not even release its list to US firms unless the firm has passed and been approved in an interview by a Soviet national whom Sutton suspects "has KGB links." Furthermore, the Soviet government has a list of its members, the US government has a list of its members, but the US public is denied this information, even though TEC claims official backing."

While the membership is secret, it was learned that TEC is headed by Co-Chairmen Vladimir Shushkov (USSR) and Dwayne Andreus (USA), and there are 30 Soviet directors and 20 US directors. The operation is backed by Vice President Bush and Commerce Secretary Baldrige. The latter went to Moscow to confer with Soviet Foreign Trade Minister Nikolai Patolichev, returned to urge US business "to explore trading opportunities in the USSR" through TEC. TEC then issued a bulletin which we quote, and which seems self-explanatory:

A UNIQUE BINATIONAL ORGANIZATION OF AMERICAN BUSINESSMEN AND SOVIET OFFICIALS

The US-USSR Trade and Economic Council is a non-profit membership organization of American and Soviet business-related enterprises devoted to facilitating trade expansion between the two countries. It draws its authority from a government-to-government protocol and its effectiveness from the active support of the governments and businessmen in both nations. The Council concerns itself with the dual responsibility of general market development and individual trade facilitation for members. Through a binational Board of Directors and membership, it works to develop and implement new business projects to meet the special conditions of US-Soviet trade. It provides a full range of trade-assistance services for members through its New York and Moscow offices. The Council maintains in each of these offices a binational staff of trade and economic specialists uniquely qualified to promote business developments in the United States and the Soviet Union. Additionally, it offers members complete business support facilities to handle day-to-day dealings in both countries.

Those "trade and economic specialists" mentioned in the foregoing bulletin include eight full time Soviet engineers who live in New York and are paid by TEC members. "These Soviet engineers interview US businessmen and assess the UN technology offered. They select technology required for Soviet military end uses and facilitate the transfer." In a recent White House meeting the President's Science Adviser, Dr. George Keyworth, made the following statement: "...We know that the Soviets are robbing us blind." Furthermore, the White House has a list of more than 150 Soviet weapons systems using US technology. "Yet," says Dr. Sutton, "Vice President Bush and Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige, Jr. are backing this Soviet technical vacuum operation."

Dr. Sutton has much more information concerning TEC, which we haven't the space to reproduce, though his permission was granted to do so. If interested, write to him at P.O.Box 39850, Phoenix, AZ 85069, and ask for Phoenix Letter for January, 1986. His Phoenix Letter concludes with the following statement:

"...The Administration is conning the American public. The Administration is playing a double game. It creates highly publicized 'spy trials' and proclaims about stopping the flow of military technology to the Soviet Union. Why? Because the Administration knows that over 150 Soviet weapons are based on US technology...The Administration is checking the flow of 'secrets' for public consumption while secretly aiding the transfer of technology behind the scenes...."

CONCLUSION: The Elitists of the New World Order have created two diametrically opposed foreign policies, designed to bring about a Marxist synthesis: the merging of two diametrically opposed nations. We coined a word which might describe it: "Promerge."

Year Thirty-Three.....Number Thirteen.....March 28, 1986

THE DANGER OF STRATEGIC DIVERSIONS

When, over a period of fifteen years, pieces are formed, tooled and fashioned, then, at a specific time, all these pieces are assembled and found to fit into a perfect formation, as, President Abraham Lincoln would have agreed, a Conspiracy can be assumed. As the Prophet Isaiah wrote, "Come now, let us reason together."

The situation had been building ever since 1971. It could have happened at any time, but the climax came on March 24, 1986, just when President Reagan had lost his first great battle with the forces commanded by Tip O'Neill. A boost in morale for the President and for the People of America was sorely needed. Eight different times in those fifteen years United States naval units had crossed what Moammar Khadaffy called the "Line of Death." It was not until the ninth occasion that Khadaffy, who also needed a boost in morale, ordered his gunmen to fire upon US planes that had flown across that "Line of Death." Before the shots that brought on this "war that wasn't a war," maneuvers involving the entire Sixth Fleet had been ordered off the coast of Libya. Despite White House denials, it did seem like a challenge, a "we dare you to shoot" provocation; one which Khadaffy met as best he dared. If John Foster Dulles had still been Secretary of State, he would have called it "Brinkmanship." This first in prominence of the three Dulles offspring had been Secretary to Edward Mandel House's "The Inquiry," a group of Fabian types that had gone to Paris to write the League of Nations Covenant into the Paris Peace Treaty ending World War I. "The Inquiry" failed to win that battle, ended up by creating the Council on Foreign Relations, of which John Foster Dulles was a charter member. He also was the confessed inventor of "Brinkmanship," which means following a course of action to a point bordering on war. When the Chinese Communists had taken control of the Mainland, Mao Tsetung copied the Bolsheviks by initiating a First Five Year Plan. It was beginning to fail and the Communist hierarchy needed a boost if it were to keep the masses under control. So, to create a needed strategic diversion, Mao adopted a very aggressive attitude toward the Nationalist Chinese government that had been established on Taiwan (Formosa). An all-out campaign was prepared to capture the off-shore islands of Quemoy and Matsu, which were still being held by Chiang Kai-shek's forces. At that time Dwight Eisenhower was President and John Foster Dulles was his Secretary of State; and a new foreign policy had been adopted. Instead of helping the Communists at every turn, now they were to be "contained," in accordance with a plan proposed by CFR Bigwig George Kennan. If the Chinese Communists were to be contained, then they must not be allowed to capture Quemoy and Matsu. At that time the USSR was giving its fullest support to the Chinese Communists, and to threaten actual US military intervention to prevent such a happening, could certainly be construed as a policy which well might involve the United States in another World War. Hence the term Brinkmanship. General MacArthur had warned that it would be disastrous ever to fight against any enemy on the Asian Mainland (that was before Korea and Vietnam). But a US battle fleet was sent to Quemoy. Fortunately, Mao didn't meet the challenge and backed off, to try some other time.

Quemoy and Matsu. How well we remember them. Considering the time and the person, permit us our own strategic diversion. Liberated from a Manila prison camp on February 10, 1945, by March 22 of the same year we felt able and talked Captain Jones, then commanding the recaptured Clark Field, into allowing us to be an "observer" aboard a bomber plane going out to patrol the China Sea and prevent any Japanese shipping through those waters. It was off the island of Quemoy that we were shot down by Japanese anti-aircraft fire. Seven of us managed to survive the crash, were rescued by Chinese fishermen. Then we crept, walked, sometimes rode and finally flew to Chungking, courtesy of one of Colonel Clair Chennault's pilots of the Flying Tigers fame. We were protected, even by Chinese Communist troops, from Japanese troops who sought to kill us. How things have changed. Now the Japanese like us and the Chinese Communists hate us. Again we say, pardon the personal diversion. But this all happened forty-one years ago, to the very day. We were reportedly killed by the enemy for the second time, both times exaggerations, since we're still able to report and resist the enemy.

There was another act of Brinkmanship which, if successfully carried out, might have saved the lives of more than 55,000 young Americans. In 1953 the Communists were moving from China southward into Indochina. When the French strong point at Dien Bien Phu was invested by the Viet Minh forces in 1954, the French chief of staff, General Ely, flew to Washington and asked for help. The Kennan policy of Containment and the Dulles policy of Brinkmanship were still in effect, and Dulles was very anxious to help the French. Carroll Quigley, in his Tragedy and Hope, was correct when he wrote (page 1044) that Ely "found Dulles willing to risk an all-out war with Red China by authorizing direct American intervention in Indochina. As usual, Dulles thought that wonders could be achieved by an air strike against the besiegers of Dien Bein Phu, where the conflict increased in intensity daily. For a few days the United States, at Dulles's prodding, tottered 'on the brink of war.' Dulles proposed a 'united action policy' which he described in these terms: 'If Britain would join the US and France would agree to stand firm...the three Western states could combine with friendly Asian nations to oppose Communist forces on the ground just as the UN stepped in against the North Korean aggression in 1950...and if the Chinese Communists intervene openly, their staging bases in south China [will] be destroyed by US air power...' President Eisenhower agreed, but his calls to Churchill and Eden found the British government opposed to the adventure." If Dulles had been allowed to engage in his Brinkmanship in 1954, the Vietnamese War might never have lasted so long and grown in such intensity.

Which brings up another point. Because of Dulles's actions, the US did become more deeply involved in that war we should never have entered. But the US was not totally committed to actual fighting until after something very similar to the current Libyan crisis occurred, something that reads like a forerunner to the present action in the Bay of Sidra, inside Khadaffy's "Line of Death."

In August, 1954, there were US naval forces stationed in the Gulf of Tonkin. Whether true or not, President Johnson told the world that North Vietnamese gunboats had attacked the US warships. He asked Congress for a resolution permitting him, as commander-in-chief of the armed forces, to engage in what amounted to total war against the North Vietnamese. On August 7, 1954, Congress passed a resolution drafted by Johnson's Secretary of State, Dean Rusk (CFR), authorizing, quote, "all necessary measures to repel attacks against US forces and all steps necessary for the defense of US allies in Southeast Asia." There was considerable disagreement in Congress as to what this Tonkin Gulf Resolution really meant, but both Presidents Johnson and Nixon treated it as though it were an actual declaration of war.

It is interesting to recall that an alleged Spanish attack on the USS Battleship Maine led to America's entry into the Spanish-American War (eventually to save Cuba for the Communists and now the Philippines for the Communists). The sinking of the Lusitania by a German U-Boat led to US entry into World War I. The attack on the US fleet at Pearl Harbor signalled America's official entry into World War II. An attack on US warships in the Gulf of Tonkin brought 55,000 deaths and untold misery to tens of thousands of others who were forced to fight a war that never should have been lost; a war that succeeded in turning much of Southeast Asia over to the Communists. And now this so very similar attack, perhaps a provoked attack brought on through Brinkmanship and Strategic Diversion, on US naval forces in the Bay of Sidra could have started yet another war, perhaps another world war if the USSR had agreed to back up Libya in this controversy.

But don't get us wrong. It was Brinkmanship and it was Strategic Diversion to turn eyes away from what was happening in Central America. But it was also a justified, necessary action, and a morale booster for the President as well as the people of the United States. The American action, in which Uncle Sam became the International Policeman, came after Speaker O'Neill had maneuvered the House of Representatives into defeating President Reagan's request for $100 million, mostly for military equipment, for the Freedom Fighters who are trying to reclaim their homeland from the Soviet-assisted, Cuban-backed Sandinistas.

There are questions yet to be answered. Why did the American Ambassador to the Vatican suddenly, mysteriously, and supposedly unofficially fly to Tripoli just before the shooting began in the Gulf of Sidra? Why were there no anti-American demonstrations in Libya? Media correspondents continued to broadcast, live pictures on television screens in America showed that life was proceeding as usual in Tripoli. There were no blackouts, no military alerts, no wartime footing of any kind whatsoever. Is it possible that whoever fired those missiles at the American planes, could fire twelve of them without hitting anything or anybody? Was this, after all, a pre-planned strategic diversion to take people's minds off what was happening in Central America and in the Middle East where Israeli planes were again dropping bombs in southern Lebanon? And could Daniel Ortega, Sandinista President, have been as stupid as he seemed to have been in choosing such a time to make incursions deep into Honduran territory? And if the Gulf of Sidra confrontation was nothing more than a pre-planned diversionary action, then it was unnecessary. Ortega made it so.

This Report is being written before the Senate votes on that $100 million measure. But there's little doubt that it will pass the Senate, and the House when it is again presented to that body. For Speaker Tip O'Neill who was responsible for its first defeat "was particularly incensed by what he appeared to perceive as a double-cross by Ortega." Deleting the words that shouldn't be printed, O'Neill said "Ortega blew it." Then he calmed down a bit to tell the press that Ortega was "a bumbling, incompetent, Marxist-Leninist Communist" who had authorized "an aggression against Honduras."

So, between Libya and the US nothing has changed except that more intensive terrorist action can be expected; Khadaffy is a greater hero to the Arabs and a greater villain to Israel and the US; and as in the Grenada epic, President Reagan is being praised and those who voted against the $100 million measure have lost face and are seeking ways to justify their actions. O'Neill, for example, is heading a quickly organized inspection tour of some nations in South America. He'll return when the heat has died down.

In other matters: The Philippines, instead of becoming a "democracy" with the ousting of Marcos, has become a dictatorship under Corazon Aquino. Subic Bay and Clark Field are having serious labor problems. Communists are more active than ever, and so are the Moros of Mindanao, the Philippines' largest island. Instead of "democracy" in Haiti there is anarchy. And, as we have stated before, South Korea is chosen as the next to fall.

"...the devil...sheweth Him all the kingdoms of the world, and the glory of them; and saith unto Him, All these things will I give thee, if thou wilt fall down and worship me..." (Matthew 4:8.9).

THAT OTHER FATAL ENCIRCLEMENT

Nikita Khrushchev was a trusted confidante of Joseph Stalin. Had he been otherwise he would never have lived to become First Secretary of the Communist Party and Premier of the Soviet Union. However, at the Party's 20th Congress in 1956, Khrushchev soundly berated Joseph Stalin for having been unfaithful to the precepts prescribed by Vladimir Lenin. Similarly, Mikhail Gorbachev was a trusted confidante of Leonid Brezhnev and the musical-chair premiers who followed him into Hades; to wit, Premiers Andropov and Chernenko. Yet, Mikhail Gorbachev, in his address to the 27th Party Congress, derided the name of Leonid Brezhnev, didn't even mention the name of any other Premier, but extolled Vladimir Lenin and couched his every solution to the problems of the USSR in the terms laid down by Lenin. In the historical black-out he described, there were two persons: the one god Lenin, and his prophet Gorbachev. The new Politburo President Andrei Gromyko, summed up the unchanging reverence to the word according to Lenin, by pointing out while he was still Foreign Minister: "The foundations of our foreign policy built by Lenin remain fully and totally valid today, and detente in no way has changed our ultimate objectives." The high ranking defector, Arkady Schevchenko, said that a new religion has emerged in the USSR, that "It is a religion sustained by a profound faith in a beneficent Father, Vladimir Ilyich Lenin...Lenin to this society is a holy prophet and guide, not divine perhaps, but more than mortal. To believe otherwise, to dissent from Leninist orthodoxy, is the new heresy." Schevchenko the defector then added: "I remember how difficult it was for me to free myself from the veneration of Lenin, so deeply implanted in me from childhood on." Andrew J. Glass of the Cox News Service who visited Moscow to report on the 27th Party Congress, wrote: "Gorbachev (with occasional coffee and/or vodka breaks) spoke from 10 in the morning until well after 5 in the afternoon. It was a speech that, on paper, weighed 2 full pounds. And on nearly every one of those pages, Gorbachev paid homage to Vladimir Ilyich Lenin, who had enshrined atheism as Russia's official religion, with frequent chapter and verse parenthetically bracketed into his text. Gorbachev dogmatically treated the secular sayings of Lenin in much the same fashion as Pope John Paul II, in one of his Vatican homilies, normally would treat the Biblical Gospel of Jesus Christ." (Unquote). Some writers have gone so far as to say that there are but three great religions in the world today: Christianity, Mohammedanism, and Marxist-Leninism (of which other forms of atheism such as secular humanism form a part).

If this be true, it follows that whatever a Marxist-Leninist leader says or does, he is carrying out the program for world conquest laid down by Vladimir Lenin. From Lenin in 1917 to Gorbachev in 1986 there has been no change. Communism is Communism and Lenin is its enthroned prophet. What Lenin said is gospel to those who dictate to the proletariat, and this is approved by those monopoly capitalists (socialists at heart), who placed Lenin in power and continue to sustain and support those Communist leaders who have followed him. For that reason, patriots of all nations where Christian morality still holds some sway, must remember what Lenin said about the United States:

"We shall encircle that last bastion of Capitalism, the United States. Through infiltration and subversion, it will fall like a ripe plum into our hands."

In our Report of March 14, 1986, we wrote of this, noting how China, Southeast Asia, Cuba, Iran, and Nicaragua had fallen, and how Korea, Mexico and other nations of Central and South America were to follow. We called this The Fatal Encirclement. There is yet another fatal encirclement now in process of achievement, one that is vital to the United States as well as to what's left of the so-called Free World. We speak of the encirclement of the Republic of South Africa, one in which our own State Department is aiding and abetting the Leninists. It is accepted by most Christian patriots that news of what is actually happening in South Africa is not going to be given us by the commercial media. In order to learn and publish the truth about the situation, a group of newsletter editors, business and political leaders, 60 in all, went on an intelligence/fact finding mission to South Africa. There were Don McAlvany, Duncan Sellers, Howard Phillips, Larry Abraham, Harry Schultz, others who are far more trustworthy than The Times, the Post, the NCC, the networks, or the State Department, who went to see for themselves. The most extensive report that we have seen was published by Don McAlvany. It contains much new information which seemed so important to him that he requested others to publish his findings. His is a 14 page report and we can give you only the highlights. Those desiring his full report should write to The McAlvany Intelligence Adviser, P.O.Box 39810, Phoenix AZ 85069. 50¢ per copy. Ask for the April 1986 issue headed "The Accelerating Revolution in South Africa."

The encirclement of South Africa is a part of the encirclement of "that last bastion of capitalism" because, if South Africa falls to the Communists, the Soviets would control 94% of the world's manganese, 85% of the platinum metals group, 70% of the world's gold production, 65% of the vanadium, 58% of all chromium, and would command the sea route between East and West through which most of the West's oil supplies are carried. Controlled by the Soviets, this would in effect, shut down virtually all free enterprise industrial production in the west and create a nearly absolute monopoly on all economy for the Socialist-seeking multinational corporations, the international bankers and their associate, the Communist International which is said to be headquartered in Moscow.

McAlvany states that "In the same classic pattern of Soviet-backed revolution used so successfully in recent years in Iran, Nicaragua and the Philippines, the South African people...are the targets of a massive psychological warfare campaign from within and without...The pincer is also working from the top down as the US State Department, aided and abetted by the US media, the big US banks, (the World Council of Churches), and pro-Marxist individuals such as Stephen Solarz and Howard Wolpe in the US Congress, (and Chester Crocker of the State Department who Harry Schultz said "is at this time the most dangerous man in Africa. And that includes Khaddafi") moves to intimidate and blackmail the South African government..." So much for the American-initiated strategy which works from the top down. As for the Soviet strategy which works from the bottom up, McAlvany observes:

"...it is to surround (encircleEd.) and isolate South Africa with Soviet surrogate states (i.e., Angola, Zimbabwe, Mozambique, and eventually Namibia, Botswana, Zaire and Zambia...[to] precipitate global economic sanctions and disinvestment to weaken and destabilize the country internally, harrass South Africa along her four country 1700 mile border, initiate terrorism and intimidation...and finally to foment internal revolution to overthrow the existing power structure (white and/or black) and establish their surrogate, the African National Congress, as the new government of the Democratic Peoples Republic of Azania."

In his largely suppressed book The Shah's Story, the deposed Shah of Iran described the pattern of Soviet orchestrated revolution that was used against Iran, and later Nicaragua, and recently the Philippines and now against South Africa. First, the mass media is used to soften up world opinion and governments as to how "evil and repressive" the target regime is. Second, leftist religious leaders, because of their credibility, following, and general naivete, are drawn into the revolution to help lead the masses against the government. Third, the more the target government liberalizes conditions in the country, the more revolutionaries use those changes as a "sign of weakness" and escalate their demands. Fourth, the revolutionaries use bereavement tactics to create new mass demonstrations and violence at funerals each time a revolutionary or innocent victim is killed. Fifth, the gullible youth are drawn in, emotionally incited to violence, imbued with a feeling of power, and sent out in violent gangs to attack moderate, anti-revolutionary targets. Sixth, the trained revolutionaries begin to pull out prepositioned arms and explosives and attack police stations, government installations, power stations, murder moderate leaders, and move the country to the brink of chaos. Seventh, the revolutionaries incite school boycotts, strikes and strike violence, escalating these to a general strike to paralyze the country. Eighth, the U.S. government appears on the scene (usually the State Department) to withdraw all support from the beleaguered ally, to ease out the faltering regime (i.e., to intimidate it into capitulation), to usher in the revolutionary government and put the "best face" possible on it (usually calling it a "national democratic government"). The first seven steps in this pattern of Soviet backed revolution are fully operative in South Africa and today the eighth is progressively coming into play."

Overlapping this eight-stage pattern of revolution outlined by the late Shah of Iran, who was one of its victims, there are five revolutionary phases that are pure and unadulterated Leninism. Don McAlvany describes them as they apply to South Africa and we quote:

PHASE ONE: Mobilizing or Politicizing the Masses. This phase involves mobilizing the masses at the grassroots level into consumer boycotts, labor strikes, school stay-aways, community protests, civil disobedience, and passive resistance. Agitation over issues (real or fabricated) such as rents, bus fares, sanitation, work conditions, school rules, civil laws, etc., is used to stir up discontent among the masses.

PHASE TWO: Active Resistance. This phase involves orchestration of demonstrations, boycotts and strikes. Although these purport to be peaceful, they are designed to lead to violence and clashes with the law enforcement authorities. This has the effect of portraying the authorities as oppressive and alienating them from the masses. To further undermine the authorities, local government officials, tribal leaders, and police are killed while attempts are made to set up "liberated areas" (i.e., zones which are no longer controlled by the government and where insurgents have set up their own parallel government). This phase is designed to create a climate of collapse.

PHASE THREE: Guerrilla warfare. In this phase, terrorist activity is begun by guerrillas trained in warfare who return to the country to carry out attacks on strategic and economic targets, as well as on institutions regarded as representing the government authorities.

PHASE FOUR: Mobile Warfare. Large sections of the country fall under the control of the insurgents, providing them with secure rear bases needed to prepare regular soldiers. Their fighters are now divided into regular soldiers, guerrillas, and local militia. The regulars operate in sizeable formations armed with conventional weapons, especially artillery. This phase ends with the capitulation of the target government and the installation of a new revolutionary regime.

PHASE FIVE: Consolidation. During this phase, the new revolutionary government consolidates its position. This involves creating the temporary facade of democracy and freedom to encourage aid from the glib western powers, disarming the population, nationalizing and controlling the means of production, controlling the mass media, trade unions and churches, the elimination of all opposition and the imposition of a one party state.

All five of these revolutionary phases were implemented in the Cuban, Iranian and Nicaraguan revolutions. The South African revolution ...is well advanced in Phase Two and is now entering Phase Three. There is no mystery to a revolution. These tried and true phases and patterns have been used successfully by the communists for decades [ever since they were initiated by Lenin-Ed.] If South Africa, Central America and the West are to survive, we must all learn first to recognize them, and second, to take decisive steps to stop them." (Unquote).

Trustworthy eye-witness observers say the total takeover of South Africa will not be easy, despite the efforts of the Soviet, its trained terrorists, State Department moles and traitors, World Council propagandists, media newsmongers, and Establishmentarian exploiters. The vast majority of all South Africans are said to be Christians and literate. It took 15 years to communize Rhodesia. South Africa is bigger, tougher, militarily prepared, and the vast majority resent what outsiders are doing to their country. But our US State Department which worked so hard to overthrow the Shah, Somoza and Marcos, helped bring Khomeini, Ortega and Aquino to power, opposes virtually all anti-Communist governments, promotes trade and aid with the Soviet bloc, opposes arms to Freedom Fighters everywhere. Ever since the CFR gained control of State before World War II, it has promoted communist regimes and worked to create a Socialist New World Order. Remember that George Shultz is the only member of President Reagan's cabinet who refused to take a lie detector test.

Our first task: Pray for the besieged black, white and colored Christians of South Africa.

THAT DEADLY DRUMBEAT FOR DEMOCRACY

"The United States has moved away from quiet diplomacy with Chile and has become increasingly vocal in expressing its concern over the military government's lack of progress toward democracy." So wrote Mimi Whitefield, a staffer for the Miami Herald.

"As cherry buds begin to blossom in South Korea, heralding a new spring full of vitality, a popular movement for greater democratic freedoms is picking up momentous speed... 'The Philippines,' says Kim Young Sam, an opposition leader, 'has given us the courage to march for democracy.' Similar conditions and events that shaped the 20-year rule of ousted Philippine President Ferdinand Marcos can be found in South Korea." So reported Walter Miller of the Cox News Service.

"Democratic drumbeat is heard in Seoul," declared Walter Taylor in the new liberalized U.S. News & World Report.

Now that the demonaical drive for Democracy has paved the way for the Communist conquest of Cuba, Nicaragua, Haiti and the Philippines, the movement, combined with its corollary, human rights, has moved on to destroy free enterprise in Chile and South Korea.

Mark Falcoff is a Resident Fellow at the American Enterprise Institute. In the Spring Issue of the Council on Foreign Relations quarterly, Foreign Affairs, he enumerates the successes of Democracy, without ever completing a sentence by admitting that all these democratic successes were stepping stones toward Communism. He observes that "The recent collapse of personalist dictatorships in Haiti and the Philippines has served to remind Americans that... Though nothing is inevitable, and no two situations are exactly alike, it is difficult to ignore the intimate, indeed inextricable, relationship between the collapse of Chiang Kai-shek and the rise of Mao Zedong in China; of Fulgencio Batista and Fidel Castro in Cuba; of Anastasio Somoza and the Sandinistas in Nicaragua... Such is the challenge to U.S. policy in Chile today - to persuade a military dictatorship to return power to civilian, democratic forces before that government loses all control of the situation... At this point the principal obstacle to Chile's expeditious return to democracy is General Augusto Pinochet, who has ruled the country since 1973..."

It seems that our Nation which once was a Representative Republic has become a Democracy, and it is our policy to force all other governments to become democracies. Diametrically opposed was the policy of the Founding Fathers. They did everything within their power to prevent this government of ours from ever becoming a democracy, though they doubted that we could ever keep the Republic they had set up for their descendants. And their descendants did a fairly good job of keeping it a Republic until 1913, when Senators who represented the States became Senators who represented the people; when a Federal Income Tax made federal control over the citizens of the previously sovereign States mandatory; when control over money was turned over to a private banking corporation; and when the Ninth and Tenth Amendments to the Constitution were virtually erased from the Bill of Rights.

However, Americans still considered themselves citizens of one of the Republics which made up the Republic of the United States, until the coming of Franklin Roosevelt and the New Deal. For example, as late as November 30, 1928, the U.S. War Department issued a Training Manual prepared under the direction of the Chief of Staff, Major General C.P. Summerall, and officially approved for general distribution among the armed forces by the Adjutant General, Lutz Wahl. In this 156 page Training Manual there was a section devoted to an explanation of the difference between a Republic and a Democracy. We quote:

Democracy:

A government of the masses.

Authority derived through mass meeting or any other form of "direct" expression.

Results in mobocracy.

Attitude toward law is that the will of the majority shall regulate, whether it be based upon deliberation or governed by passion, prejudice, and impulse, without restraint or regard to consequences.

Results in demagogism, license, agitation, discontent, anarchy.

Republic:

Authority is derived through the election by the people of public officials best fitted to represent them.

Attitude toward property is respect for laws and individual rights, and a sensible economic procedure.

Attitude toward law is the administration of justice in accord with fixed principles and established evidence, with a strict regard to consequences.

A greater number of citizens and extent of territory may be brought within its compass.

Avoids the dangerous extreme of either tyranny or mobocracy.

Results in statesmanship, liberty, reason, justice, contentment, and progress.

A republic is a form of government under a constitution which provides for the election of (1) an executive and (2) a legislative body, who working together in a representative capacity, have all the powers of appointment, all powers of legislation, all powers to raise revenue and appropriate expenditures, and are required to create (3) a judiciary to pass upon the justice and legality of their governmental acts and to recognize (4) certain inherent individual rights.

Take away any one or more of these elements and you are drifting into autocracy. Add one or more to these four elements and you are drifting into democracy.- (Atwood).

Superior To All Others.--Autocracy declares the divine right of kings; its authority can not be questioned; its powers are arbitrary or unjustly administered.

Democracy is the "direct" rule of the people and has been repeatedly tried without success.

Our Constitutional fathers, familiar with the strength and weakness of both autocracy and democracy, with fixed principles definitely in mind, defined a representative republican form of government. They make a very marked distinction between a republic and a democracy....- and said repeatedly and emphatically that they had founded a republic. (End of quotations from War Department Training Manual No. 2000-25, issued November 30, 1928).

Shortly after the "bank holidays" in the thirties, hush-hush orders from the White House suddenly demanded that all copies of this Training Manual be withdrawn from the Government Printing Office and the Army posts, to be suppressed and destroyed without explanation. In the book, the name of Harry Atwood is mentioned. He was a nationally recognized Constitutional authority at that time, and was the author of many books on the subject of American government. In his Safeguarding American Ideals, he wrote:

"Hamilton and Madison, in their discussions in The Federalist and elsewhere, repeatedly make the distinction between a Republic and a democracy, and clearly show that the intent of the framers of the Constitution was to establish a strictly representative government, which is a Republic.

"No one has yet been able to point out within the Constitution of the United States the faintest hint of a suggestion that it provided for direct action in any way, which is the method of democracy; and public officials are still required to take a solemn oath to uphold the Constitution of the United States, and that is the only thing they are sworn to do.

"Notwithstanding all of this, and much more that might be said to fortify the sanity and correctness of this point of view, there has been much reckless talk during recent years of making the world "safe for democracy." This country and others have been drifting toward democracy, but Russia was the first full-fledged volunteer and her action was hailed by the newspapers and magazines and by socialist authors and demagogical agitators as the realization of an idealistic dream. As soon however, as Russia began to display exactly the results which have characterized every democracy of history, the enthusiasts became apologists and coined the word bolshevism, which in derivation means the same as democracy.

"Many of the difficulties which confront us today are due to the fact that for twenty years [eighty years if upated to 1986] we have been drifting from representative toward direct government, and the mob-mindedness that has ensued has begun to permeate the home, the school, the church and industry...."

Remember Westbrook Pegler, one of the last of the truly great columnists? In the January 25th, 1951, he wrote a column titled "Upholds Republic of U.S. against Phony Democracy." One statement was often quoted in the fifties: "Did I say 'Republic?' * * * yes, I said 'republic!' Long live the glorious republic of the United States of America. Damn democracy. It is a fraudulent term used often by ignorant persons but no less often by intellectual fakers, to describe an infamous mixture of socialism, miscegenation, graft, confiscation of property and denial of personal rights to individuals whose virtuous principles make them offensive."

Not only has our once glorious republic been converted into a democracy, so that the "merging" of the US with the USSR and other nations of the world is made possible. Our government is also forcing all of its friendly governments to become democracies. Two centuries ago Professor Alexander Fraser Tytler explained what would happen to a country like ours when it became a democracy. He said: "A Democracy cannot exist as a permanent form of government. It can only exist until the voters discover they can vote themselves largesse out of the public treasury. From that moment on the majority always votes for the candidate promising the most benefits from the public treasury with the result that Democracy always collapses over a loose fiscal policy, always to be followed by a Dictatorship" or in this century, by a Socialist One World Dictatorship.

As for those other countries which our government is promoting and "buying" democracy, when the people learn that things are even worse after their Batistas, Shahs, Somozas, Duvaliers, and Marcos are gone, anarchy becomes inevitable, and the selected strong Communist leader will be there to "merge" them into the friendly family of the Communist bloc.

Note how it's accomplished. Mimi Whitfield whom we quoted at the beginning of this Report, writes of the treatment of Chile: "...Secretary of State George Shultz has referred to Chile as a 'dictatorship' - a change in US terminology. Washington has introduced a United Nations resolution that criticizes Chile's human rights record. President Reagan has sent a letter to President Augusto Pinochet...urging him to act quickly to ease Chile's political crisis...There is growing dissension within Chile over the transition to democracy..." And this same kind of pressure is being extended toward South Korea, to say nothing of our government's treatment of South Africa.

The clear and present danger to the United States, and to the West, is this: We are a debtor nation. If the government's bookkeepers are correct, our debts are greater than those of most of the other nations of the world combined. On April 5th it was announced that the US debt is now over $2 trillion. It doubled in the past five years. And yet, our government still pays other governments to become communist. We'll give new loans to Haiti, the Philippines, and to Chili and South Korea after Pinochet and Chun are gone. No matter what it costs, the planners of the New World Order insist that we "make the world safe for democracy," which really means Communism.

Those with "eyes to see" insist that a crisis is inevitable. But P.J. Simpson in a remarkable book, "Avoid Bank Holidays," (Box 1214, Hendersonville, N.C. 28793; $8.95) sees a light at the end of the tunnel. He says:

"Do not fear or worry for our future. Have faith in God and prepare yourselves for a very rough ride. I view our future as a great adventure. Imagine the adventure our ancestors embarked upon when they left everything behind and journeyed to the New World., Imagine the adventure our forefathers experienced when they risked everything to secure their freedom from tyranny, and then set out west, into an untamed continent. It will be for us, like it was for them, a great challenge. Like it was for them, it will be for us, a contest for freedom.

"If you would seek to avoid this challenge; wish to live in an 'untroubled past,' or surrender to the exchange of your freedom for 'security,' I leave with you this statement from Samuel Adams, addressing his neighbors and friends 210 years ago:

"If ye love wealth better than liberty, the tranquility of servitude better than the animating contest of freedom, go home from us in peace. We ask not your council or your arms. Crouch down and lick the hands which feed you. May your chains set lightly on you, AND MAY POSTERITY FORGET THAT YE WERE OUR COUNTRYMEN."

WHY ONLY EL-QADDAFI?

Senator Jeremiah Denton is Chairman of the Senate Subcommittee on Security and Terrorism. As America's most celebrated and honored former prisoner of war, he would have a knowledge of terrorism in its most personal sense, and could be expected to know something about how to deal with what has become a new form of World War. In an interview given shortly before the latest Libyan bombings, published in Human Events of April 12, 1986, the Senator said:

"After more than 60 hearings on terrorism and related subjects which we have held, we have amassed persuasive evidence of a network, a global unity in the source of support, strategy, tactics and goals of international terrorists. What amounts to a form of low-intensity warfare is being waged by various nation-states to erode the influence and strategic position of the United States and Western democracies in general, and to enhance the power of the Soviet Union, its client states and allies, in particular. Since the early 1980s we have seen ...a 'Radical Entente' of nation-states - including Libya, Syria, Iran, Cuba, and North Korea - which is coordinating a worldwide strategy designed to expel US military, political and economic presence from key areas of the world. The hostile strategy of this Radical Entente is directed primarily against the US because of its leadership position in the Western world, the ideals and culture of which the Radical Entente considers to be inimical to Muslim and Communist values. The radical Arab states of the Entente also direct hostility toward the United States because of its long-standing support for the state of Israel.

"We have produced clear evidence that the Soviet Union supports the Entente's operations with military hardware, terrorist training and other assistance, and encourages the core radical countries to focus their hostility on the United States. We have identified a major terrorist training camp at Rostock in East Germany, for instance. There (what the Soviets call) 'Freedom Fighters' from South Africa, Namibia, Northern Ireland and Lebanon have been training in the use of small arms, poisons, explosives, infiltration and assassination techniques ... The Soviet Union's goal in supporting terrorist activities is clear. In 1973, Soviet Chairman Brezhnev said: 'Our aim is to gain control of the two great treasure houses on which the West depends ... the energy treasure house of the Persian Gulf and the mineral treasure house of central and southern Africa.'

"I believe that is as clear a statement of Moscow's real global intentions as is possible, but most liberal members of Congress and the media have refused to recognize those intentions or communicate them to the American people."

Senator Denton then made this important statement:

"Our (Subcommittee) hearings have demonstrated that the US has no real policy for confronting the international terrorist threat. Our government reacts on an ad hoc basis, to each terrorist attack as though it were an isolated incident, rather than part of a concerned, international strategy. We must learn to deal with terrorism on a continuum - not with fire engine diplomacy. We must develop an effective counter-terrorist policy based on a thorough understanding of the interrelated, global nature of the international terrorist network."

When US planes bombed installations said to be connected with terrorist activities in Tripoli and Benghazi on the night of April 14th, those attacks could certainly be described as fire engine diplomacy. They also might be classified as something of a personal attack on Muammar el-Qaddafi "in the only language he understands." (After research and resolution, we have decided to use, from now on, the spelling-in-English which seems most acceptable in international circles, which is "Muammar el-Qaddafi"). This was an attack on installations in the one nation of Libya, not an attack connected with a global network involving other nations. One might ask, why was Libya singled out over the past few weeks to the exclusion of Syria, Iran, East Germany, Bulgaria, North Korea, Cuba, and other Soviet client states? Is it possible that Qaddafi had been singled out deliberately to act as a scape-goat and patsy to be punished instead of others who may deserve the punishment, but must not be named and charged for economic, financial, political, or other reasons? Perhaps if we explored his background, we might learn something of how Qaddafi became, not necessarily a mad-dog, but certainly a potential scape-goat in this strange kind of world war that has become more economic than political.

It could be said that this modern phase of terrorist war began when England decided to turn Palestine over to the tender care of the UN and permit the creation of a "Jewish Homeland" in accordance with the Balfour Declaration. On May 14, 1948 Israel declared itself to be an independent state. Joseph Stalin and Harry Truman competed with each other for the honor of being the first Head of State to officially recognize Israel as a sovereign nation. Stalin didn't follow through after that because he was busy solidifying his hold on the countries of Eastern Europe that had been handed over to him at Yalta. So, the United States took upon itself the job of acting as protector and supporter of Israel, thereby earning the animosity of the Arab world. Egypt, Jordan, Syria, Lebanon, Iran and Saudi Arabia protested, both politically and militarily. But the Arab states were weak and nobody wanted their oil at that time, and Israel grew and grew, protected and supported by the United States.

At that time, in 1948, Muammar elQaddafi was a six-year-old boy living in a goatskin tent in the province of Fezzan in Libya, which was then ruled by Italy. As a Libyan loyalist Qaddafi learned to hate the Italians; as an Arab that hatred was turned over to the Zionists.

At the end of World War II control of Libya was transferred to England and France, but the era of decolonization had been decreed and, in 1952 Libya was granted independence, with King Idris as its monarch. Young Qaddafi immediately joined the Libyan army and soon rose to the rank of Lieutenant. In 1969, as King Idris lay dying, a kind of military coup took charge, and the new military council did a most unusual thing: It named Lieutenant Qaddafi, at the age of 27, to be the country's leader.

Meanwhile, oil had been discovered. Occidental Petroleum (Armand Hammer's company) made a deal with Libya to produce and export crude oil. This was followed by four other American-based firms, as well as by oil companies based in West Germany, France and Britain. Libya became the world's seventh largest producer of petroleum and, before the North Sea strike, a vital exporter of oil to the nations of Western Europe. When OPEC was formed, Libya became a member, of course.

So here was a young and ambitious semi-dictator with power and untold wealth, and a desire to become the head of a new Arab Empire. He tried to talk Egypt, Syria, Jordan and other Arab states into joining him. When they refused, he began terrorist groups and invasion forces in attempts to force the Arab states adjoining him to join him (phrase just came out that way). Because of his aggressive attitude he became a kind of pariah among the Arab states. But because of his hatred of Israel and of America's support and protection of same, he was tolerated among his own. He also received an invitation to purchase weapons, hire instructors, engineers, observers, etc., from the USSR and its client states. For example, the Libyan secret police, the dreaded Mukhabarat who also serve as Qaddafi's bodyguards, are headed by Marcus Wolfe, an official of the East German intelligence service which, of course, is controlled by the KGB.

However, even as with the USSR, these Communist connections do not mean that there is no assistance from or connection with Americans. In his very informative Report for February, 1986, Hilaire du Berrier writes:

"Who were the men pulling the strings was the question foreigners and Libyans asked when an obscure signal corps officer, 27 years old and without a distinguishing act in his career, was suddenly pushed into the position of Chief of State and Chairman of the Revolutionary Council. That somebody with immense power was behind him was certain for things like that do not happen by accident. Attempts to peer into Qaddafi's past did not divulge the answer. He spread the story that as a student in the secondary school at Fezzan he began enrolling his classmates in a plot to overthrow King Idris and the rest of the powerful royal-religious Senussi, but as a legend it does not stand up. He would have been denounced....More likely was the possibility that Irving Brown (an American agitator-Ed.) who had tried to make a leftist rabble-rouser President of a socialist Morocco and had succeeded in installing a labor union protege in Tunisia, was following up his success in Algeria by backing a find in Libya. America, with her huge Wheelus Air Force Base, had no lack of agents on the spot, and Brown's cooperation with Thomas Braden, one of the most dangerous leftists to gain power in CIA, was no secret. As far back as the late 40s Braden had given Brown money to organize a labor union as a political arm in France. All knew of the CIA-labor role in pushing Willy Brandt into a position where he could carry East German spies upward with him. In 1945 Major Archimedes Patti, of OSS, threw the support of America behind an Oriental named Ho Chi Minh because Ho's fake constitution was modeled after America's. (But no one has ever tried to uncover and publicize these pro-Communist and anti-American operations) anymore than any (attempt) will be made to find out if Americans discovered and backed Qaddafi." (H du B Reports, Feb. 1986. Extra copies $1.00. Subscription rate $75 per year. American address, P.O.Box 786 St. George, Utah 84770).

In the overall picture, this terrorist activity has involved far more than Qaddafi and the one state of Libya. Syria, Iran, North Korea, Cuba, East Germany, Bulgaria and the other Soviet Satellites; and at the very root of the problem there is the USSR which feeds and finances the terrorists. Yet, with so many nations involved, all the retaliatory action has been directed at Libya alone, and at Qaddafi. Does this not suggest that behind "Operation Libya" there lies a kind of Conspiracy; a plot carefully designed by principals in high places to divert world attention from some deeper and more ominous plan? There is an oil glut. The Big Bankers are in trouble. Those who should know speak of the possibility of a crash that would make the Great Depression of the 1930s seem tame in comparison. It took the death and destruction brought on by World War II to get the Money Barons out of that situation. Ever since International Banking began and especially since Central Banks were established, whenever financiers' houses of paper were about to be demolished, a war has come to their rescue, and people have paid for it in blood. That this present and widespread terrorist activity is a different kind of war doesn't alter the fact that it is war, sometimes referred to as World War III.

An article in The Spotlight of April 21 mentions a conspiracy which had much to do with America's entry into World War II: "The New York bureau of the British Secret Intelligence Service regularly intercepted all air mail flown by 'clipper' between the United States and continental Europe. It forged, altered, and fabricated key items of correspondence sent by the German government...The operation was simple ...as Sir William Stephenson...related it decades later...by planting forged evidence and fabricated clues into this correspondence, the British deceived the FBI and ultimately American public opinion." The Spotlight suggests that, by using "portable microwave transmitters," secret agents have fabricated evidence, "almost certainly without President Ronald Reagan's knowledge," which brought about "Operation Libya," with consequences that could precipitate far greater terrorist activity and 'retaliatory action on a "World War" scale. Activity that would cause untold death and destruction throughout the world, but activity that would save "those principals in high places" and help to bring about public acceptance of the New World Order.

On the other hand, even as did "Operation Grenada," this series of incidents has restored morale, created a spirit of unity, and has made all Americans at least a little better prepared to accept whatever comes next in this unusual kind of war. The manner in which the Armed Forces met the challenge is a real boost to flagging spirits. Whatever the "news behind the news" in what the late William Guy Carr called "The Red Fog Over America," we can be proud that we are Americans,

"For the eyes of the Lord are over the righteous, and His ears are open unto their prayers: but the face of the Lord is against them that do evil. And who is he that will harm you, if ye be followers of that which is good? But and if ye suffer for righteousness' sake, happy are ye: and be not afraid of their terror, neither be troubled;" (I Peter 3:12,13,14).

THE SEARCH FOR MORE COOPERATIVE PUPPETS

Comment from an alert and observant subscriber:

"I wondered what the 'Get Qaddafi' program was all about." His answer: "Uncle Sam, who is in debt to the world bankers and thus their slave (Proverbs 22:7) is simply doing their bidding. Qaddafi may well be on the hit list for having, a few years ago tossed the bankers out of his country! Based on the past, when this country has gotten into a real jam, what has happened?...WAR."

Agreeing, another astute subscriber gives her explanation:

"I'd like to quote from the April 1st monthly publication of Moneypower...It explains to me why President Reagan ordered the bombing of Libya.

"President Reagan was just handed a lesson from the Federal Reserve cartel (privately owned), that his appointees had better toe the line. Preston Martin, Reagan's appointee, was fired by the FED for leading the 4-3 vote against Volcker. (At that level, they're allowed to 'resign'.) Now, Reagan is suddenly all gushy toward Volcker. The world's megabankers are not going to let a mere president threaten their control. George Bush, a member of the Trilateralist/CFR cartel, is now traveling the OPEC countries in an effort to stabilize prices. You can bet he's not speaking for the US, but for his real bosses, the Rockefellers and Rothschilds who run the cartel. They also control the major oil companies, as well as the threatened banks, and they're taking a pounding in this oil decline. If the OPEC lords don't do as he says, the cartel will engineer a few mid-east revolutions which install more 'cooperative' puppets."

"So Libya was bombed; the reason given was to get at terrorism. Benjamin Disraeli, Prime Minister of Great Britain in the 1870s said, 'The world is governed by very different personages from what is imagined by those who are not behind the scenes'."

There can be no doubt that the Nations of the West, cartelist-controlled as they are, are out to "get Qaddafi." At America's prompting, Great Britain has deported Libyans who were called security risks. The European Community has condemned Libya. Nato Nations are cutting down on the number of people permitted to remain in embassies and legations. Even the Greek government, angered because of the loss in tourist trade, spoke out against Qaddafi. In retaliation, the Libyan government ordered all foreign correspondents out of the country. Step by step, the prospects of yet another in the succession of contained and limited wars develop.. As the man said, "When this country (meaning its elitist governors) has gotten into a real jam, war has happened. In line with this thought, the current US News cover story (4/28/86) is headlined: "America's New War. Can it be won? At what price?"

There is no question but that the Nations of the West, with the US leading the parade, has been out to "get Qaddafi". When so many other nations (and their leaders) have been directly involved in terrorist activities - Iran, Syria, North Korea, Yemen, Cuba, Nicaragua, East German, USSR, Bulgaria and the other Warsaw Pact affiliates - with so many bedfellows why should Libya be singled out for attack and potential war? And just how do the World Bankers fit into this picture. And does the drop in oil prices have anything to do with it? These are questions that need to be answered. Patrick Henry told the Virginia Convention in 1775: "I know of no way of judging the future but by the past." Since our future is directly involved, let's follow the example set by one of America's greatest Christian Patriots.

In Wealth For All, published in 1982, R.E. McMaster, Jr. asked, "What's Big Oil doing around the rest of the world? Let's take Libya for example...Despite all the recent furor over possible assassination teams in the United States, it is noteworthy that the United States purchased about two-thirds of Libya's oil production in 1981. Libya, in fact, was the US' third largest foreign supplier....US multinational oil interests in Angola provide another fascinating study of the conflict between national political and international economic interests. In early 1981, thanks primarily to Gulf Oil, the US taxpayer-funded Export-Import Bank, along with the old multinational reliable, Morgan Guaranty Trust, made communist Angola a major loan. The ultimate in hypocrisy and multinational oil company greed was realized when Cuban troops were ordered to protect these American oil interests in communist Angola. Big Bucks, Big Banks and Big Oil are all involved..."

In The Money Lenders Anthony Sampson noted that "The big American banks had long been interlocked with oil money...But neither the Chase nor the other big banks were prepared for what happened in 1973... The price of oil was first doubled in October 1973 and two months later doubled again." Something new and unexpected had happened and the Big Bankers had to learn to cope, or go bankrupt. But the Arabs had no love for the debt-money system that was employed by the Big Banks. Said Sampson: "They (the Arabs) were still inhibited, like European moneylenders in the middle ages, by the religious objections to usury...The Koran forbade the practice of riba, or usury." So does the Holy Bible, which Christians revere in most other respects, but long ago turned their minds away from the fact that taking or giving interest on money is sinful. Sampson explains that with the Moslems "the usury laws could be overcome by regarding interest as commission or service charges, but they held back the development of banking through the Arab world; less than four percent of Arabs made use of any kind of financial institution. And in Saudi Arabia much of the wealth resided (and still does-Ed.) in the personal fortunes of the royal family, which remained wrapped in secrecy."

And that's when a young Lieutenant, now a Colonel, came into international prominence. Muammar Qaddafi would have nothing to do with the fractional reserve bankers who charged and collected interest on loans. Usury is forbidden by the Muslim's bible, the Koran, even as it is forbidden in the Christian's Holy Bible. But with the Renaissance came the International Bankers who made loans to governments instead of individuals, and charged interest on their loans. However, to the world of Islam before the oil boom came, fractional reserve banking was unknown and a real shock. Qaddafi, a man with a dream similar to that of Khomeini of Iran, wanted to build an Empire, one in which usury and fractional reserve banking would be forbidden. So, Qaddafi would have nothing to do with Western Bankers, kicked them out, and started doing business with the USSR. Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, the other oil producing countries of the Middle East also had the problem of usury to deal with. But they managed to get around many of the religious restrictions by buying properties and industries in the United States and other Western countries. This conflict between Arab and Western money systems is a matter that deserves deep study. But suffice it to say that presently, Qaddafi's dream of Empire is in direct opposition to the Empire of The New World Order which the owners and controllers of the Federal Reserve Banks and other Central Banks, are intent on foisting upon us with the dawning of the 21st century.

This conflict in banking systems and control of loot is, at least in great part, the reason why all the fire and fury over terrorism is aimed at Qaddafi and Libya, while other countries involved in the spread of terrorism are tolerated, or even ignored.

Since the owners and controllers of the Federal Reserve System seem to be at the heart of the problem, and since we are using Patrick Henry's method of seeking truth, let's draw a picture of the FED. The editors of Globescan have a way of saying a lot in a little space. we quote:

* * * * *

1) The Federal Reserve is neither federal nor a reserve. Bank reserves are usually associated with security and protection in case of an emergency, but the FED's "reserves" are nothing but imaginary money - money that the FED creates by simply writing a check to itself. Neither is the FED federal. There is the Federal Open Market Committee, which is technically a government agency, but it is nothing more than a consortium of private banks. The FED includes 500 employees who are paid by the government - the other 23,000 employees are bankrolled by the private Federal Reserve Bank. How else is the FED not a government agency? US agencies receive their money by congressional appropriation, The FED collects its billions in interest on money it creates at whatever rate it pleases. And the government's accounting office can't audit the FED's monetary policy. The FED doesn't have postage-exempt mail, like congressmen do, but pays postage like all other private corporations. Government agencies don't pay property taxes. The FED does. The FED isn't even listed under US Governmental Agencies in the phone book. It is no secret that the FED is a private corporation that is benefiting a powerful group of people at everyone's expense.

2) There is a Federal Reserve Board that theoretically monitors the FED's actions. In reality, it's more like the wolfpack guarding the sheep. The Board consists of seven members from the banking community, who are anything but disinterested. The "regulated" are doing the "regulating."

3) The FED meets in secret and publishes a "summary" that comes to the general public six weeks later. By that time "insiders" have already capitalized on information regarding coming changes in monetary supply, interest rates, and reserve requirements.

4) The FED not only has the power to create money, it also collects interest on the money it issues. This is the "debt-money" system. This system inevitably leads to higher debt levels and higher interest - and higher profits for those in power. For the rest of us, it means slow bankruptcy.

5) The international banks have placed America in jeopardy. They have loaned billions of dollars to uncreditworthy countries - and at rates substantially below those available to the average US citizen.

These countries continually default on the loans and the FED rushes to the rescue. Rescue by increasing the US money supply to give the banks needed deposits. Rescue that raises prices and devaluates American citizens' money and assets. (Globescan, American Service Bureau, 2223 Wisconsin Ave., N.W., Washington, D.C. 20007. $95 per year.)

Since the owners of FED are engaged in a kind of Brinkmanship that could lead us into another limited war, we are reminded of an article received from a friend, containing excerpts from an address delivered in 1933 after his retirement, by former Marine Corps Commandant Smedley Butler. He said and we quote:

* * * * *

I believe in adequate defense at the coastline and in nothing else. If a nation comes over here to fight, then we'll fight. The trouble with America is that when the dollar only earns six percent over here, then it gets restless and goes overseas to get 100 percent. Then the flag follows the dollar and the soldiers follow the flag.

I wouldn't go to war again as I have done to defend some lousy investment of the bankers. There are only two things that we should fight for. One is the defense of our homes and the other is the Bill of Rights. War for any other reason is simply a racket.

There isn't a trick in the racketeering bag that the military gang is blind to. It has its "finger men" to point out enemies, its "muscle men" to destroy enemies, its "brain men" to plan war preparations, and a "Big Boss" - Supernationalistic Capitalism.

It may sound odd for me, a military man to adopt such a comparison. Truthfulness compels me to. I spent thirty-three years and four months in active military service as a member of our country's most agile military force - the Marine Corps. I served in all commissioned ranks from a Second Lieutenant to Major-General. And during that period, I spent most of my time being a high class muscleman for Big Business, for Wall Street and for the Bankers. In short, I was a racketeer, a gangster for capitalism.

I suspected I was just a part of a racket at the time. Now I am sure of it. Like all members of the military profession, I never had an original thought until I left the service. My mental facilities remained in suspended animation while I obeyed the orders of higher-ups. This is typical with everyone in the military service.

I helped make Mexico - especially Tampico - safe for American oil interests in 1914. I helped make Haiti and Cuba a decent place for the National City Bank boys to collect revenues in. I helped in the raping of half a dozen Central American republics for the benefit of Wall Street. The record of racketeering is long. I helped purify Nicaragua for the international banking house of Brown Brothers in 1909-1912. I brought light to the Dominican Republic for American sugar interests in 1916. In China I helped see to it that Standard Oil went its way unmolested. (Unquote).

Ergo: The man who said "Give me liberty or give me death" also said, "I know of no way of judging the future but by the past." Both statements remain relevant.

THE PLAY'S THE THING

"All the world's a stage, and all the men and women in it merely players. They have their exits and their entrances; and one man in his time plays many parts." So wrote The Bard some three centuries before the invention of satellites-in-space and television cameras. In today's world the center of the stage is occupied by three simultaneously running acts that seem to be parts of an unfinished drama in which we all play a part, since we all could become victims in the play. The acts might be labeled: The Nuclear Tragedies, The Terrorism War, and The Campaign to Gain Control of all the World's Economy. Let's consider them in that order and see if they fit to form a play.

"The first scene in the first act was witnessed by people around the world: the explosion of the Shuttle Challenger and the death of seven astronauts. When the news of that tragedy was fresh, we wrote of the possibility of sabotage and suggested that this should be considered seriously by whatever committee was to be appointed to investigate. But the Administration, the NASA officials, and the Media were silent, thought and spoke only of mechanical and structural faults. To this day a really satisfactory answer had not been given by the authorities.

We remembered that Tom Bearden, in his Star Wars Now, a report dated April 24, 1984 and published in booklet form by the Tesla Book Company (Millbrae, CA), had written of how the Soviets had perfected a Star Wars Shield which he called "giant hemispheric shells of glowing energy, quite useful in a strategic ABM defense of a large area. Such tests of such giant ABM shields have actually been observed by competent witnesses." He added that: "The Soviets have been engaged in weaponizing scalar electromagnetics for nearly three decades. (They) can destroy ICBMs, TBMs, cruise missiles, aircraft, ordnance, tanks, weapons carriers, personnel carriers, submarines, SLBMs, surface ships, communications equipment, fuel supplies, ammunition supplies, nuclear warheads, and personnel with ease and efficiency. They can be made large or small...With such weapons vast areas can be completely destroyed or neutralized within minutes, without permanent contamination. (They) can also be used to accomplish weather and climate control on a worldwide scale, as well as to cause earthquakes, and they have already been employed in both modes by the Soviet Union)." (Tesla Book Co., 1580 Magnolia Ave., Millbrae CA 94030. Write for price information for this and other books).

There is, of course, a much simpler manner in which sabotage could have been employed. Since the Carter Administration, the ban on employment of Communists in strategic areas has been lifted and, as with the State Department in the time of Senator McCarthy (before they transferred to the UN for protection), NASA and associated contracting firms may be riddled with people who have an interest in destroying American nuclear energy and weapons development. But, as we said, sabotage was disregarded officially when Challenger exploded.

If you happened to miss something last week, it might have been the weekly issue of Don Bell Reports. There was none. We needed a brief rest. Sorry. Don and Ginny.

On April 18 there was the mysterious and unexplained explosion of an Air Force Titan 34D in California. Still no official statement of possible sabotage. The January explosion of Challenger marked the suspension of shuttle flights or space development. The April explosion of Titan marked the end of that phase of space exploration. Then, on May 3 came the explosion of Delta No. 174 and the destruction by command of the GOES7 weather satellite which was being lifted to its designated spot in space. And that marked the end of the Delta trail. When it was announced that "Two abnormal surges of power occurred in the electrical system of a Delta rocket's main engine before the spacecraft lost post power after the launch Saturday," people, and some officials, began to think and speak seriously of the possibility of sabotage. A third time seemed sufficient to convince even liberals.

"Major Hiatus Is Predicted For NASA," said the LA Times. "Having its third disaster in less than five months...the nation's space program will be forced to grapple with a critical morale problem and public questioning, as well as a temporary but crippling loss of the ability to launch satellites, space agency officials and members of Congress said." So, with the US grounded and the USSR preparing to soar to greater and more powerful heights, all seemed exactly as the Soviets would have planned it...Until suddenly and most unexpectedly on April 25, Moscow time, a nuclear power reactor accident of worldwide concern occurred at Chernobyl, Ukraine, USSR.

Just how disastrous this meltdown is may not be known for years. But the Soviet officials failed to report it for four days, five days to its own people. As a result, Western reports were overstated while Soviet reports were greatly understated. Example: we were told of at least 2,000 deaths; the Soviets said there were only two deaths. This much is known: a continuing graphite fire of this kind creates clouds of radioactive dust and invisible materials that could drop anywhere the winds might blow the clouds; and fields and streams could be polluted, deaths from cancer could be widespread over many years, vast areas of land might have to be made off limits for years. This we also believe: For the Soviets to remain silent about a tragedy that could cause disaster to many countries in Europe and Asia is a criminal act. But with totalitarian governments, whatever their type, there is little regard for human life. A government that murders millions of its own people could hardly be expected to show much consideration for Swedes or Italians, or anyone else. And, even though the Chernobyl disaster causes the world to point the finger of shame toward Moscow, the disaster may work in favor of the Soviets. Almost immediately help was being offered the Soviets: Armand Hammer, as head of the President's Cancer Panel, contacted the Soviet Embassy in Washington and offered the use of our donor network, doctors and all, to assist Soviet citizens who may have received lethal doses of radiation. One wonders what would have happened if the shoe had been on the other foot.

If there has been contamination of food sources in the Ukraine, which once was the breadbasket of Europe, then food will be pouring in from the United States. To help the people is one thing; to help keep Communism alive and well is something else. Then, there already comes the cry that all nuclear power plants in the United States (not in the USSR) should be closed down immediately. William F. Buckley who now and then writes a good but difficult to decipher column, was first to note that "It took the Soviet Union four days to advise the world (five days to advise its own citizens) that there was a meltdown, and it took somewhere between four and five hours for the US (anti-nuclear) ideologues to seize on Chernobyl as an answer to their prayers." The anti-nuke network is headed by the Coalition of Environmental/Safe Energy Organizations, which includes the Union of Concerned Scientists. It has been trying to defeat the SDI (Star Wars) Program, and has done much good for the USSR in the past years. So all those in the anti-nuke network will ignore the fact that nuclear power reactors are working safely to produce electricity in any number of countries, and will concentrate their effort on trying to shut down the 100 nuclear power plants that have been working, without a single human fatality, in the United States.

By contrast, it should be noted that construction at the Chernobyl nuclear plant has been plagued for years by low morale, poor workmanship, persistent shortages of construction materials and deficiencies in quality control. This according to an article published recently on the front page of an official Ukrainian newspaper. There were problems long before the plant caught fire and exploded. The USSR is strong on weapons but weak on consumer products, food and clothing, and housing for both people and nuclear reactors. To predict the final cost of such an act of criminal carelessness would be impossible.

Act Two of our hypothetical play we labeled The Terrorism War. It continues apace; an indigent group of terrorists greeted the summit members with a burst of rockets that fell short of their mark; plastic bombs of minor intensity were placed on railroad tracks so travelers must have felt they were riding into the midst of a battle, one which produced no casualties. And the new "Group of Seven" issued a statement condemning Qaddafi and outlining certain economic and diplomatic steps that should be taken against any country promoting or financing terrorism. As this act continues with little effective resistance, let us turn to Act Three, where the leaders of the seven Western industrial nations occupied the stage in Tokyo.

* * * * *

This was the twelfth time. Each year since 1975 the Trilateral Commission, with the approval of The Council on Foreign Relations, The Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development, The Bilderberg Group, The Brookings Institution, the Foreign Policy Association, The World Affairs Council, The Aspen Institute for Humanistic Studies, The Atlantic Institute for International Affairs, The Club of Rome, and similar supranational organizations, has called an Economic Summit. The Trilateralist Plan calls for an annual meeting of the heads of state and government, with their finance ministers, economic advisers, etc., who are to discuss the plans given them by their supranational superiors, and then try to work out ways in which those plans can be used to contribute on a national basis to the international blueprint given them. Behind all of this, of course, is the plan for the creation of a New International Economic Order. Interdependence between the seven principal Trilateralist-directed Nations is the theme.

However, there's often a "slip twixt the cup and the lip" at these meetings. The Eleventh Summit, held at Bonn May 4th to 7th, 1985 was hardly a success. Helmut Kohl, then a comparatively new Chancellor of West Germany, had an idea that if he and President Reagan visited a cemetery at Bitberg, this would serve to cement relations between the two countries. But it was learned that this cemetery which was for the allied dead who were killed in World War II contained the remains of a few former Nazi soldiers. A storm of protest sponsored by the same Zionists who now protest the election of Herr Waldheim to the presidency of Austria, got the Summit off to a bad start. Too, President Mitterand of France, a confessing Socialist, had ideas differing from those of the supranational elitists. What was supposed to be a sedate and orderly Summit became something of a shouting match. The Prime Minister of Japan summed it up best by saying they were all acting like a bunch of children.

The Twelfth Annual Summit in Tokyo also got off the a bad start. There was the miscarried terrorist attack. Then the heads of four of the seven countries didn't want to condemn Qaddafi and stop buying oil from Libya. It took all the persuasive powers of Margaret Thatcher to get them to agree to the Anti-Terrorist Resolution. After that they all settled down to complete the agenda handed them by their supranational superiors. As directed, Presidents Reagan and Mitterand shook hands and made it up, forgetting their quarrels of a year ago and the refusal to allow US planes to fly from England to Libya. Then the leaders of Britain, Canada, France, Japan, Italy, West Germany and the United States agreed to attempt to abide by a host of economic initiatives and monetary policies. Treasurer James Baker was well pleased. President Reagan called it a Triumph At Tokyo and said the "Marriage" between the seven allied leaders was "happier that I have ever seen it." In this context Marriage is a synonym for Interdependence, or Regional World Government, or that other phrase they use: the Merging of Nations.

There is a semi-secret Trilateral Preparatory Committee that sets up the agendas for these summits, selects what is to be discussed, reports any deviances when a Nation fails to implement the adopted policies. But at this Twelfth Summit something new was added. A "Group of Seven" government officials were to be selected to "work together more closely and more frequently in the periods between regular summit meetings." This, then, is the first legal step toward the economic and financial merging of the seven Nations. Political merging could come later!

Regarding the real meaning and importance of these Trilateral Commission arranged annual summits, Jeremiah Novak gave the best summary when he wrote:

"Policy making in the age of Trilateralism has shifted from the Congress and even from the Administration of the United States to the supranational summits, where it is directly influenced by the members of the Trilateral Commission, the supranational preparatory groups and the OECD. President Reagan is not the president of the United States, but the general manager of a subsidiary of a supranational institution. Policy comes from the summits to the Administration, and is not the result of the desires of the American people or the people of the summit countries, who are unaware that the summits have been institutionalized into a semi-federal supranational directory."

GLOBALONEY

The United States as a Nation, and Americans as a people, have shown more compassion and extended more charity to other Nations and other peoples than any other Nation or people in the history of the world. Earthquakes, volcanoes, epidemics, starvations, recovery from the devastation of wars and revolutions, and now a nuclear reactor disaster; you name it and Uncle Sam has extended his helping hand. Among the pictures we were permitted to see of the Chernobyl reactor accident, this because the Soviet officials tried to minimize the horrors accompanying the tragedy, there was this one memorable shot: Armand Hammer standing in front of a mountain of medical supplies sent by the United States to the victims in Russia. But instead of a word of thanks, the Soviet short wave radio continued to blame the United States for its SDI programming, its battleship launching, its building and testing of nuclear weapons, and its refusal to discuss arms limitation. If one had heard only broadcasts from the USSR, one might be led to believe that the Chernobyl accident was the fault of the United States. It was three weeks after the accident before Moscow began to tell the world, and its own people, just how serious the accident really was. The Fort Lauderdale SunSentinel of May 14 reported: "Pravda's account Tuesday [5/13] of the nuclear plant disaster was a far cry from the paragraph tucked in the bottom corner of the Izvestia on April 29...Two weeks later, the first bits of information have grown into what for the Soviet Union is an unusual torrent of news. The 'accident' has turned to 'agony,' the 'damaged reactor' to a narrowly averted 'catastrophe.' Early films of Kievans basking in the spring sun have given way to tales of heroism and self-sacrificing feats by workers and helicopter pilots, accounts of the evacuation of 92,000 people, descriptions of exotic measures being contemplated to entomb the damaged reactor, aerial views of the power plant, warnings of health hazards and the early closing of Kiev schools."

But the reactor disaster has in no way slowed down the Soviet program to Communize the world, with the use of nuclear weapons and Soviet soldiers if the "search for peace" on Socialist terms becomes critical. The International Security Council is an organization made up of "active and retired statesmen, senior military leaders and scholars from the United States, Japan, Korea and Southeast Asia. Some sixty of its members met in Tokyo, April 13-15, 1986 "to consider the question of National Security in Northeast Asia." A declaration was issued, one that tells facts about the situation in that part of the world. We quote from that declaration as it appeared in The Washington Times of May 5, 1986:

"For the past decade the Soviet Union has engaged in an unprecedented and unrelenting military buildup in Northeast Asia...Moscow now maintains in the Eastern Soviet Union 53 Red Army divisions; the largest portion of the Soviet fleet, consisting of 295 surface vessels and 90 attack submarines; and some 2,200 combat aircraft, including over 300 modern bombers and fighter bombers capable of striking any target in Japan or South Korea with nuclear weapons. Additionally, Moscow has deployed some 150 SS-20 intermediate-range ballistic launchers with nuclear warheads east of the Urals and 25 ballistic missile submarines in Northern Asian waters. Just recently, the Soviet Union placed nuclear-capable systems on one of the islands north of Japan that has been occupied by the Soviet Union since the end of World War II. The Soviet navy treats the Sea of Okhotsk as a Soviet lake, and seeks to dominate the Sea of Japan and the straits around the Japanese islands. Soviet military aircraft penetrate Japanese air space almost daily.

"The Soviet Union employs its massive nuclear arsenal to apply psychological pressure to achieve its goals... The Soviet nuclear threat makes possible not only nuclear intimidation, but permits a dangerous latitude for the use of Soviet conventional forces. The Soviets are applying such force directly in Afghanistan. Their surrogate, Vietnam, is doing so in Cambodia." (Unquote).

The American concept of charity (the modern, not the biblical definition of the word) consists of aid, be it financial, military, defensive, commercial or whatever, to any country at most any time. So this International Security Council presents a set of recommendations on how to keep the Soviets from taking over what's left of free Asia. Most of the recommendations are commendable, until we get to number six, which reads:

"The People's Republic of China refuses to join in cooperative defense arrangements with other Northeast Asian states. Nevertheless, its military potential cannot be ignored by the USSR. US military sales to the People's Republic of China are intended to contribute to its military deterrent capability against the USSR. However, those sales must be evaluated cautiously in an overall Asian context, because they have the potential of destabilizing the security of other nations in the region."

This desire to have Communist China as an ally against the USSR has become something of an obsession with people who forget that a Communist is a Communist, no matter what his or her race, nationality, or condition of servitude. For example, immediately after the Tokyo Summit had ended, Treasury Secretary James Baker flew to Peking to tell the Chinese Communist leaders that the United States is anxious to help China modernize, but Peking must make it easier for Americans to invest in China. According to UPI, about 140 American firms are engaged in joint ventures in Communist China. Baker flew to Peking to join a 32-member delegation of senior US officials who were holding a three-day session with the Sino-US Joint Economic Committee.

Even more humiliating to any Christian American is the statement that, since we are no longer able to launch satellites, it has been decided that Red China will do it for us! How the mighty have fallen. We who placed men on the moon, launched shuttles, explored planets, can no longer launch even a weather satellite into space. And we must ask the Communists to do it for us! Said USA TODAY of May 13: "China will launch two USA-made satellites--its first entry into the USA space market, a Houston firm said Monday. Henry Schwartz, president of Houston's Teresat Inc., said he had wanted to use the shuttle - but NASA couldn't guarantee a launch date. The Chinese have launched 18 satellites since 1972 with only one failure, he said...The satellites will handle USA business and air traffic communications. The China launch underscores a move by foreign nations to grab part of the satellite-launch market now that USA rockets are grounded."

The best NASA can promise is sometime in the middle of next year before there can be a shuttle launching. Meanwhile, the market is open for China, Russia, France, Japan, and perhaps India and Israel. We who once led the world in space technology will be one of the crowd when we get back into the race, And nobody dares call it sabotage or treason!

And speaking of possible treason. Gaylord Shaw of the Los Angeles Times of May 4, reports that huge quantities of army munitions are missing, apparently stolen. "The array of munitions for which the Army cannot currently account - everything from plastic explosives and dynamite to rockets, grenades, land mines, artillery shells and small-arms ammunition - is more than enough to equip several armies of terrorists. The article states that plastic explosives and blasting caps are being stolen from army bases in West Germany and South Korea. Meanwhile, "Military explosives increasingly are involved in bombings within the United States. According to little-noticed federal statistics, there has been a 70% increase since 1983 in the use of destructive devices identified as military explosives. Motives vary from political protests and labor disagreements, to insurance fraud and marital disputes, and the statistics show that incidents involving military explosives now average one per week."

Chief prize in these alleged thefts is the C-4 (RDX) plastic explosive. It is a putty-like substance that is highly prized by terrorists. Peter Maas, author of the recently published book, Manhunt, says C-4 is the "most powerful explosive in the world next to the nuclear bomb," and terrorists have tons of it, most of it apparently stolen from Army munitions depots. We have not seen Peter Maas's latest book, but he wrote an article about Edwin P. Wilson, the exCIA agent who made millions working for Qaddafi. The article appeared in The New York Times Magazine of April 13, 1986. In it Maas mentions the C-4 explosive. We quote:

"What the Libyans most yearned for was the American-made composition C-4, a whitish, puttylike explosive of enormous power which was under the strictest export controls. Its main ingredient, called RDX, is unmatched in destructive potential save for nuclear weapons. Commercially, explosives made of RDX were in demand for demolition projects because of their malleability and the way their force could be directed. These same features made RDX a favorite for terrorists, who could use it to blow up a building (preferably in Israel), or a car, or to turn ordinary household items - an ashtray, a lamp, a radio - into instruments of death.

"The versatility of RDX didn't stop there. It could be manufactured in sheets, usually a foot wide and a quarter-inch thick. The sheets were pliable and could be cut to any desired size or shape. A classic terrorist tactic was to mail an explosive in an envelope wired to a miniature detonator. When the recipient opened the envelope flap, he or she was torn to pieces. If Wilson could supply C-4, Hajazzi (Libya's liaison with the infamous Palestinian terrorist Abu Nidal) told him the sky was the limit on other contracts. And on April 2, 1977, 500 pounds of C-4 hidden in cans of DAP glazing compound, left Los Angeles aboard a Lufthansa flight bound for Frankfurt, where it was transferred to another flight destined for Tripoli. Exactly six months later, on Oct. 2, a chartered DC-8 took off from Houston laden with a staggering 21 tons of C-4 hidden in cans labeled as oil drilling mud. It was the biggest shipment of the explosive in history and it was going to the center for world terrorism, Qaddafi's Libya, on orders from Edwin P. Wilson." (Unquote).

One thing which Peter Maas omitted in the article, but we are told does appear in his book is that this C-4 explosive is set off by a tiny detonator the size of the stem winder of a wristwatch; and it can be set to go off from one hour to three months. This makes it ideal for the terrorist who wants to, for example, have an airplane blown up while in flight, with the terrorist far from the scene.

It would be foolhardy to believe that this American-made C-4 is only in the hands of Libyan terrorists. It is well known that terrorist groups, regardless of their area of operation, are in close communication with each other, and supply weapons and explosives like the C-4 to each other whenever the request is made. As an example, Claude van England in The Christian Science Monitor of April 25, 1986, tells of the "marriage of convenience" between Iran, Libya and Syria, three of the countries where terrorist training camps are located. "A new wave of anti-American feeling has swept Iran," he wrote, "sparked by last week's American air strike against Libya. Before the traditional Friday public prayers last week, hundreds of thousands of worshippers - including many schoolchildren - marched through the streets of several Iranian cities. They chanted slogans in support of the Libyan people and condemned the 'barbaric US aggression' against Libyan civilians. On the official side, Iranian leaders have clearly voiced their support for Libya, which, along with Syria, has been Iran's staunchest ally since the Islamic revolution of 1979. For several years, Syrian President Hafez Assad and Libyan leader Muammar Qaddafi have sold Soviet-made weapons to Iran. The three countries' foreign ministers meet often to coordinate policies. Iran, Syria and Libya oppose any concessions to Israel on the Palestinian homeland issue and have vowed to combat US influence in the Middle East." Combatting with C-4 explosives is one form of that opposition.

That "marriage of convenience" between Libya, Syria and Iran is the opposite and opposing number to the "marriage of convenience" between Israel and the USA. With the USSR lending support to Libya and Syria, and those two lending support to Iran, the picture becomes really clouded when we learn that Israel arranges transshipment of arms to Iran while we are supplying arms to Iran's enemy Iraq! Further confusion: We have pinpointed Libya as the kingpin in terrorist activity in the Middle East while Syria is the real culprit. Why? Because "Syria is a genuine Soviet client state. If we were to start bombing Syria as we bombed Libya, we would risk Soviet military intervention." Before we bombed Libya, we had clearance from the USSR. Such clearance would not be likely in the case of Syria. However, George Shultz says the US "will do something about it" if clear evidence emerges that Syria has been involved in planning terrorist attacks against US citizens. But it was Syria, not Libya, that was involved in the killing of our Marines in Lebanon. Libya holds no American hostages. And Shultz says Syrian forces are being moved deeper into Lebanon, presaging another clash between USSR's client state Syria and USA's client state Israel. In times like these it's good to remember that there remains "the peace of God, which passeth all understanding."

THOSE WONDERFUL SHELL GAMES

"Have you ever seen," said the late Bernard Baruch, quoting someone else, "in some wood, on a sunny quiet day, a cloud of flying midges--thousands of them--hovering apparently motionless, in a sunbeam?... Yes?...Well, did you ever see the whole flight--each mite apparently preserving its distance from the others--suddenly move, say three feet, to one side or the other? Well, what made them do that? A breeze? I said a quiet day. But try to recall--did you ever see them move directly back again in the same unison? Well, what made them do that? Great human mass movements are slower of inception but much more effective." Then the financier and manager of presidents quoted the German poet von Schiller: "Anyone taken as an individual is tolerably sensible and reasonable--as a member of a crowd, he at once becomes a blockhead." To which Andrew Tobias of Harvard added: "There are lynch mobs and there are crusades; there are runs on banks and there are fires where, if only people hadn't panicked, they would all have escaped with their lives. There was 'the hustle,' not so long ago, where large groups of young people learned to dance in lemming-like unison...And there was the mass suicide at Jonestown."

And there is this Hands Across America movement of human midges, scheduled for high noon Hollywood time, Sunday, May 25. It may have already happened as you read this report. Writing before the event, we have no idea of how financially successful it was, or is. But somewhere between four million and six million people were expected to pay at least $10 each for a place to stand and hold hands in a continent-spanning human chain stretching 4,000 miles from Los Angeles to New York City. In a press release of May 20, David Zimmerman of USA TODAY observed: "Celebrities are picking their spots: Kathleen Turner will join her mother under St. Louis' Gateway Arch; Don Johnson is expected at a Native American powwow in Gallup, N.M.; Liza Minnelli will be in New York; Johnstown, PA, gets the Monkees...More than 4,000 ham radio operators are being recruited for roughly one-mile intervals along the chain to broadcast announcements." The promoters expect to raise somewhere between $50 million and $100 million in this Hands Across America project.

The promoters, by the way, are the same Hollywood and rock music types that produced the USA For Africa project. The USA doesn't stand for the United States of America for Africa, but the United Support of Artists for Africa. In a full-page ad in Newsweek, they claimed:

"While efforts to work toward alleviating the hunger of starving millions in Africa, the number of hungry Americans, particularly children and the elderly, continues to grow. It's hard to believe that it's happening here in America, but it's true. Millions of Americans go hungry every day. Millions are homeless. For them, too, there must be hope...and relief.

"'Hands Across America' was created to help the hungry and homeless in America, and is a project of the USA For Africa foundation, whose 'We Are The World' project last year raised millions of dollars for African famine victims.

'Hands Across America' is our opportunity to take a stand together to fight hunger and homelessness here at home in the United States--to help Americans help Americans." (Unquote).

This USA (United Support for Artists) refers to the actors and rock music artists who say they raised $17 million for the starving people of Africa last year. But the food and supplies were sent to the Communist government of Ethiopia and to other Communist governments in Africa--not to the starving people but to the Communist governments which distributed the food and supplies where it would do the most good to the Communist cause. And the people of Africa are still starving. However, in the United States it is ridiculous to think that millions of people are starving. We The People United sent a letter to its members, dated May 12, in which it stated: "The news media will give millions of dollars worth of favorable publicity to Hands Across America...But they won't tell one word about who are behind this strange event and what their purpose is as they attempt to raise upwards of $100 million. Their main purpose is to lead six million Americans in a left-wing cause, proving they can do it. We learned that these people are using church lists for their sucker lists. They call this "A vast celebration of national unity, compassion, and brotherly love" as they appeal to "our most basic religious principles."

Warren Brookes in Human Events of May 17, said to "have the gall to describe 'famine and hunger' in America as 'a scandal' is not only ludicrous, it's slanderous provocation." There are charities and welfare programs in America that take care of those who can't work or support themselves. Mostly, those who are hungry are those who won't work. Certainly there are people in America who go to bed hungry, but there are not enough of them to call for a crusade involving six million people standing in line and holding hands from the Pacific to the Atlantic. "What then is the motivation for the Hands Across America national promotion?" asks Warren Brookes (op cit). He answers: "We are left with only one plausible explanation: It is an election year...So they have skillfully conned large corporations and even the Republican Party and Billy Graham to join the likes of Jane Fonda in the hyping of hunger in the most over-fed land in human history."

That's part of the answer, but not the whole answer. Ronald Reagan should be the first to admit that most of the Hollywood crowd have always been Leftists, Fellow Travelers and Communist Fronters.. Jane Fonda is not unique; she just talks more and acts quicker than the rest. And there is littledoubt but that the rock musicians are at the top of the list in promoting anti-American policies - until recently, that is, when one or two of them have begun to espouse patriotism. In short, this USA (United Support For Artists) is a part of what the New Age Movement refers to as Networking. This includes all the various groups and movements that are engaged in what they term social transformation. This network includes more than 1500 different groups and organizations, all working in their own particular ways toward giving birth to The New Age, which is another name for World Government, or The New World Order. These groups have individual goals, but they work together as a network toward the final goal. Among the more prominent are Planned Parenthood, Zero Population Growth, National Organization for Women (NOW); Global Education Associates, World Federalists, World Future Society, Club of Rome, Common Cause, American Humanist Association, Aspen Institute for Humanistic Studies, New Age Music Network, Greenpeace Foundation, Women's International League for Peace and Freedom, Lucis Trust, Temple of Understanding, Theosophical Society, USA For Africa and its project, Hands Across America, etc., etc.

These various networking groups are generally well financed if they are effective, by foundations, individual endowments, membership dues, and profits from various publications. but when a project like Hands Across America comes along, where millions of gullible and/or uninformed citizens are willing to pay $10 for the privilege of holding hands and being part of a human midge-like chain, all the networkers are, of course, eager to assist, since the love of money...

A prime example of networking results will be evidenced when the World Constitution & Parliament Association holds its third session of the Provisional World Parliament at the Fontainebleau Hilton Resort on Collins Avenue in Miami Beach, Florida on the 18th to 28th of June, 1986. In this networking group's publication, Across Frontiers, we are told that "During the past 28 years, the World Constitution and Parliament Association, together with sessions of the World Constituent Assembly and Provisional World Parliament, have produced a complete package of specific measures for the establishment of a non-military, democratic world federation and world government - including the Constitution for the Federation of Earth, and a set of World Legislative Measures to deal with some of the most urgent global problems, which are threatening our survival and welfare..."

Last year's USA For Africa project netted the group an alleged $17 million, 60% of which was supposedly spent for food and the remaining 40% for administrative and operating costs. And the best selling rock song "We Are The World," written by Michael Jackson and Lionel Richie, continues to bring in a profit. The Hands Across America project, it was hoped would raise $100 million. But this other networking project, The Provisional World Parliament, has much greater plans. A "World Government Funding Corporation" is being set up, and is expected to raise one billion dollars. "Our plan," says the article in Across Frontiers "is to have the future World Government which will be established under a ratified Constitution for the Federation of the Earth, repay with interest and cash bonuses those individuals and national governments and others who put up the front money to get the world government established, and to begin implementation of the first emergency world legislation." This money, we are told, is to be used to lobby government officials in all the countries that are members of the UN, and to create a special "Association of Cities, Towns and Communities for World Federation." Members will be recruited to "appeal to the Mayors and City and Town Councils of all capital cities of all countries and States of the world, ...to ratify...the Constitution for the Federation of Earth" and finally, "To hold the first World Convention of the Association of Cities, Towns and Communities for World Federation," and "to take such other actions consistent with the above as may be decided at annual conventions" beginning with the "Third Session of the Provisional World Parliament, which will convene from June 18 to 28, 1987 at the Fontainebleau Hilton Hotel, at Miami Beach, Florida, USA." (Please note: This convention was originally scheduled to be held this year. This latest information tells us that the convention has been postponed until next year. So, things are not progressing as well as its promoters hoped, which gives hope to those who oppose world government in any form).

Regardless of the political efforts that are being made to communize America and "merge" our country with the USSR in a World Federation, the most serious efforts of these Planners, and the greatest progress, has been made in the organized churches of America and in its government (once public) schools. Currently in the news are the actions of the hierarchy that controls the Methodist Church. ABC Television News announced: "There has been a lot of controversy in recent years over efforts to revise religious writings to remove what some people consider to be sexist references from the Bible. Well, over the weekend a committee of the Methodist church recommended some other changes that are certainly going to catch attention. Music has become important in churches or cathedrals, or anywhere, and some songs have come to have more importance than others. So, the Methodist Committee says "Onward Christian Soldiers" is just too militaristic for a church committee to keep; just doesn't fit any more." The same goes for "The Battle Hymn of the Republic" and any other songs or hymns that suggest anything other than peace.

Also, there came the following report by the Religious News Service: "The bishops of the United Methodist Church approved a pastoral letter on nuclear disarmament that condemns the doctrine of nuclear deterrence more clearly than any other widely disseminated study by a major US church body. "We have said a clear and unconditional no to nuclear war and to any use of nuclear weapons," said the statement...The document was approved unanimously by the church's 58 active bishops from the United States and overseas...prolonged applause followed passage of the statement."

In the eyes of such church leaders, it is wrong and a violation of that concocted theory, the "separation of church and state" whenever any conservative churchman or congregation speaks out conservatively. But it's perfectly okay for leftist pastors to engage in politics; especially when the matter of South Africa is concerned on the one hand, or the USSR on the other.

Regarding the banning of "Onward Christian Soldiers," one feels the bishops have gone too far. And this World Government Group has signaled a delay. Also, things haven't gone too well with the Lefties these days. Too, we have a feeling that Hands Across America won't be the success they expected. As for the anti-nuclear campaign, we have just received a report from Allen Keyte of World Affairs Review which seems pertinent. He writes: "If the Soviets wanted to generate increased support for the anti-nuclear lobby in the West, they could hardly have had a better opportunity...Could it be that this was not a real accident but an engineered one arranged at a time and in such a way that the casualties would indeed be low and the risk from radiation at a very low level? Whether or not my suspicions are justified may be confirmed in due course. But, what can now be seen is a dramatic resurgence of interest in the anti-nuclear lobbies and a firming of oil prices (which will be of great benefit to the foreign exchange requirements of the Soviet Union)." Considering the way the US Media overplayed the event, one wonders.

Finally, this New Age Networking of so many groups covering every area reminds us of a cry that we have paraphrased: "Come, let us build us a World Community which will be a heaven on earth, lest we lose a name." Remember what happened at Babel?

THE CONSPIRACY BALANCE

If you believe in the "conspiracy theory" of history, as opposed to the theory that great events just happen accidentally, then you may agree with us when we say that the conspirators are having quite a time keeping the USSR and the USA balanced militarily and competitively until the "merging of nations" becomes practical and profitable. This can be seen most clearly in the nuclear controversy and the Space Race. We have been told on good authority that when an international group of scientists first convinced President FDR that they could create an atomic bomb if he provided the space, the materials and the money, the Soviet Union was an ally. President Roosevelt at that time told the Soviets all about it and gave them the plans and methods that had been developed up to that time. Having neither the time nor the ability to do anything about it then, not until after WWII was ended, and Hiroshima and Nagasaki had been bombed, and more bombs tested at Bikini, did the Soviets become seriously interested. Since the Conspiracy called for the creation of the USSR as a competitor (antithesis) to the USA (thesis), it was necessary that the USSR catch up. By gift, theft and a little sabotage, we were told that the Soviets had not only caught up with us, but had become superior, especially in space. So NASA was allowed to counter the threat by sending men to the moon. Meanwhile, the fear of a nuclear war had to be implanted in the minds of the people. Time passed and the fear of nuclear holocaust increased. But, so long as NASA was more or less left alone to do its thing, the USA began to outstrip the USSR in the development of space travel.

If a balance was to be maintained, then NASA had to be slowed down. There are those who will insist that what began to happen was just accidental and coincidental. But here are a few of the facts that were revealed: 1) On August 28, 1985, an unmanned Titan 34D launch vehicle carrying an $800 million KH-11 photo reconnaissance satellite exploded after launch. Five months later, on January 28, 1986, a space shuttle, the Challenger, which normally carried secret military payloads of the most sophisticated kind to be placed in orbit around the earth, exploded at take-off, killing its seven occupants. Then on April 18, another unmanned Titan 34D carrying a secret electronic satellite, exploded. As a result, our space program was grounded. On May 21, The New York Times reported that all launching activity from Vandenberg in the West would be delayed until at least 1991. And while there are two shuttles that are capable of service if and when they can be launched safely, they are temporarily in mothballs at Canaveral. No one seems to know when that vital service can begin again. We say vital because only a shuttle can put into orbit the KH-12 satellite which was intended to monitor the Soviet military and the war between Iran and Iraq. And there is only one KH-11 in orbit at the present time when two are considered necessary. As for the SDI program, commonly miscalled Star Wars, we heard the leftist McGeorge Bundy (CFR) boasting over C-Span that SDI now could never be developed until after President Reagan is out of the White House, and then he expects the whole effort can be stopped permanently.

So, that was the situation: the USA grounded and the USSR ready to catch up and take the lead. But then something occurred which may or may not have been accidental. There was the disaster at Chernobyl. And a very strange thing happened after that: The SALT II Treaty that isn't a treaty suddenly came into prominence. Possibly to restore balance between the USSR and the USA, President Reagan decided that we were no longer going to honor SALT II because the Soviets hadn't honored it. Which is an unusual situation: the treaty never became a treaty because the US Senate refused to ratify it. Yet the record shows that the Soviets have violated this treaty that isn't a treaty at least 18 times, and there's no reason to believe that the Soviets will not continue to violate it. Yet, in a very questionable decision, President Reagan decided to abide by the treaty that isn't a treaty by ordering the destruction of two Poseidon type, nuclear missile carrying submarines, because keeping them and having a new Trident submarine join the Navy would violate the treaty. But, while honoring the treaty with one hand, he declared the treaty to be dead on the other hand. One observer remarked that Ronald Reagan had become a part of the problem, when it had been hoped that he would have been a part of the solution. And with Jerry Falwell and Pat Robertson promoting George Bush (if Robertson declines) there's still no solution in sight.

On the subject of the Conspiracy Theory, a very interesting interview was conducted, and published, by Franklin Sanders, editor of The Moneychanger. His guest was Ralph Epperson who has written a book on that very subject. We haven't yet read the book, but we believe you'll find the interview both interesting and informative. We quote more extensively than usual from that published interview.

Epperson. Economically the very wealthy have discovered that the road to enormous wealth is not through the free enterprise system where they compete in the open marketplace for profit. I think they've discovered that the road to wealth is through the monopolistic-capitalistic system, where they are granted by some government agency the exclusive right to sell or manufacture a product or perform a service. ..The coercive monopoly is the one that's created by government. The natural monopoly is by definition one seller in a marketplace. I mentioned the example of the pet store in a small community someplace. By definition if he's the only one selling birds and dogs and dog food, he has a natural monopoly that is created in the marketplace, by the consumers in that community. If there was a need for a second pet store, then someone would open it. If that individual decides to raise prices too high to increase his profits, under the free enterprise system someone can come in and compete with him. When that happens, then that natural monopoly is destroyed.

The very wealthy discovered that the secret to vast wealth is to create a coercive monopoly, one that government grants. One where government says, You are the only supplier of this product or this service in that community.

Moneychanger. An example of which would be the Federal Reserve System.

Epperson. Yes, exactly.

Moneychanger. It's practically the only purveyor of credit in the country.

Epperson. The most obvious example of a system composed of coercive monopolies is communism. What we call communism today all around the world is a government created to create coercive monopolies. In Russia today the majority of the capital goods, the factors of production, are owned by capitalistic or what we call capitalistic, wealthy people. In Russia today the railroads are owned by private individuals, granted exclusive monopolies. The oil industry is owned by private individuals, primarily Europeans and Americans. They were granted that privilege by the government, and that's why they hired the communist Lenin to run the government, to make sure they got the exclusive monopolies to operate that country.

Moneychanger. That explains then a book like Antony Sutton's Wall St. & the Bolshevik Revolution which documents from State Department files the fact that the Soviet-communist revolution of Lenin, of October 1917 was actually financed by people like J.P.Morgan, John D. Rockefeller, and their ilk. The aim was to turn the entire Russian nation into one coercive monopoly.

Epperson. The purpose of that government is to make sure that no one is allowed to compete in Russia with the product that these conspirators wanted to sell.

Moneychanger. That also explains somebody like Armand Hammer.

Epperson. Yes, Armand Hammer is probably the classic example of this. Armand Hammer a few years ago, in 1973, signed a four billion dollar deal with the Russian government. Only Armand Hammer was able to sign this contract with them for a fertilizer plant/chemical combine. Only Armand Hammer got the exclusive right to do so. A four billion dollar deal, the largest ever signed between the so-called "communists" and the so-called "capitalists", and I can assure you that the profit that Mr. Armand Hammer is making is exorbitant, over and above what he would make anywhere else in the world if he was forced to compete.

Moneychanger. That's the reason David Rockefeller said not too long ago that he didn't have any trouble dealing with communist countries at all, in fact that he found them very easy to do business with.

Epperson. Because he's the only one dealing with them. I'll tell you this, too: as soon as that communist decides that he wants someone else to compete, the communist loses his job. In fact, when Nikita Khrushchev left his office, many people in America couldn't understand what had happened. I discovered in my research that about four months before Nikita Khrushchev resigned as the so-called dictator of Russia, he had about a four-hour conference with David Rockefeller...I believe personally that the chairman of the board fired the branch manager; told him to resign...

Moneychanger. There are people who say that there is one monolithic conspiracy and somewhere at the center of the earth is a headquarters from which they control the communists, they control the international financiers, they control all of the governments of the world...But then there are others who promote what I think is a more accurate view. They say there are competing power groups within what we would call the conspiracy. Even though they're all moving in the same general direction, they're all jostling with each other for supreme power. Now the question of the communists poses 3 cases; either 1) they are completely controlled, 2) they are free agents, or 3) they are partially controlled. For me the one sticking point in concluding that the Soviets are free agents is what the Bible says about borrowers: The borrower is the lender's servant, and we know that the Soviet Union borrows massive amounts of money from the international financiers. All that the international financiers have to do is pull the string, and the leaders in the Kremlin have to hop, because first, they cannot feed their own people and must have food imports, and secondly, they cannot finance or develop their own economy so they depend on credit and technology from the west. In your opinion, what is the condition of the Soviet leadership? How much are they controlled?

Epperson. I believe that there has not been an independent Soviet leader since the Soviet revolution in 1917 that brought Nicolai Lenin to power. There has never been an independent Soviet leader, period. That means that each of these dictators, from Stalin to Gorbachev, are all controlled by this power elite, and this conspiracy instructs them in the regulations and impositions they wish to make in the economy of Russia. I don't think they have any authority at all except that which comes from this conspiracy. I take the position that the whole Russian economy is controlled by this conspiracy.

Moneychanger. But not the economy of the rest of the world.

Epperson. Well, they're rapidly moving towards that.

Conspiracy began in the Garden of Eden as a conspiracy against the Son of God. In this world, in his conspiracy against the sons of God, this subtlest of beasts often appears as an angel of light. It is noteworthy that the chief advocates and leading disciples of this father of lies and all conspiracies, also often appear as angels of light and benefactors of mankind. Andrew Carnegie who sought to make the US a part of the British Empire, built libraries, created great endowments to seduce professors and scholars, did other great works. J.P.Morgan gave his London mansion to the US government for use as an embassy, endowed a great library and did other good works. John D. Rockefeller gave away dimes at a time when a dime would buy a hamburger. His sons restored Colonial Williamsburg, built and endowed universities, sponsored organizations that hoped to create a very kingdom of heaven on earth, and did other good works. Armand Hammer also endows colleges, finances museums and establishments of art, arranges exhibits where people may witness his treasures, does other good works. And he, like others who appear as angels of light, is adored by multitudes, even worshipped by some. On May 18 he was back from his good works in Russia to give himself an 88th birthday party among adorers in Los Angeles. May Lou Loper of the LA Times wrote: "Just back from attending the opening of his art collection at the Soviet State Art Museum, after assisting in the transportation of medical supplies for Chernobyl...and an unexpected meeting with Mikhail Gorbachev at the Kremlin, an hour-and-five-minute session...Hammer held hero status with his guests."

The promise is ever the same: "All these things will I give thee, if thou wilt fall down and worship me." And the answer to the father of lies and conspiracies remains the same" "Thou shalt worship the Lord God, and Him Only shalt thou serve."

THE IMMIGRATION TIME BOMB

There is a great international propaganda mill that is an awesome thing.

It grinds out misinformation which is used by the controlled communications media to construct stories that deceive all but those that are called "Insiders." Case in point: The present flap about the need to make nuclear and arms limitation deals with the Soviet Union; deals which will be violated before they are even signed. Specific example: the SALT II controversy. Since 1979, when Carter and Brezhnev signed that so-called treaty, it has been violated at least 18 times (official count) by the Soviets, and nobody said much about it, either way. However, when President Reagan threatened to follow suit and also violate this treaty that has never been ratified by the US Senate, the whole world seemed to be aghast. For the United States to violate that treaty that had been violated indiscriminately by the Communists, this was a terrible thing, said those who were fed by the propaganda mill. Most of the 15 NATO allies were shocked. Prime Minister Joe Clark, a professed conservative, said "This is a profoundly disturbing element which we had hoped would not occur." The anti-propaganda was so intense that President Reagan made himself look silly: While threatening to violate SALT II, he honored it by ordering the destruction of two efficient, important, nuclear missile carrying Poseidon class submarines. And the atmosphere really got blue when Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger gave it a date and said NATO II would probably be violated by the United States come next August. Which caused columnist David Broder of The Washington Post to say that "In the face of the budget deficit, the only way the President and Weinberger can blackjack Congress into raising the ante for new military hardware is to whip up a big war scare."

Speaking of war scares and disregarding what President Eisenhower said concerning the military-industrial complex, and ignoring the "Report From Iron Mountain" about the necessity of promoting wars to maintain the economy in a country, etc., let it be said that the sooner we quit trying to trade, aid, and make deals with the Communist Bloc, and the faster we get back to building the SDI, the better off we'll be.

Because of this international propaganda mill that affects governments and New Agers, we have given too much attention to the need for treaties that are made to be broken, too little attention to the needs of Freedom Fighters in Afghanistan, Nicaragua and Cambodia, have given the wrong kind of attention to South Africa, and have found it almost impossible to do anything constructive about the terror that can come upon us in our very homes because of what has been called "The Immigration Time Bomb."

As we write this millions of people are making plans to go to New York City or nearby where they can witness the relighting of the Statue of Liberty. We'll hold our tongue and merely remark that, in 1886 when the statue was erected, the population of the United States was just 57.9 million. Today, the population of the United States exceeds 238 million, with nearly 50 percent of that population growth due to legal and illegal immigration. Since Vietnam, the US has accepted more legal immigration and refugees than the rest of the world combined. We are told that the foreign student population exceeds the combined enrollment of Ohio State, Yale, Princeton, Harvard, Duke, Stanford, Texas A&M, Howard, Minnesota U., California U. at Los Angeles, Florida, and Chicago Universities, and Oberlin College. It seems there are almost as many foreign students as there are American students in American Universities. And we're talking about students that are legal immigrants. As for the illegals, last year the US Immigration and Naturalization Service, including the Border Patrol, apprehended illegal aliens from 93 different countries. This while the entire staff of INS and the Border Patrol is smaller than that of the Chicago or New York City police departments. So, how many illegal immigrants the INS never apprehended is anybody's guess. On an average day INS catches 4,000 illegal immigrants, sends them back across the border if they're coming in from Mexico or by way of Canada. Patrolmen say they've caught the same alien as many as five times; he probably got in without being caught the sixth time.

How many illegal aliens in the country? Ten years ago the INS Commissioner said there were six to eight million illegal aliens, and that the number was increasing by half a million to a million each year. In 1981 Attorney General Smith said the United States had "lost control of its borders," and that illegals were now coming in at the rate of one-and-a-half to two million a year. In 1983 President Reagan warned: "This country has lost control of its own border, and no country can sustain that kind of position." Now, three years later, the situation has become far worse. Here in Florida we we have the boat people from Cuba, Haiti, El Salvador, Nicaragua, and the other Caribbean and Central American states. There also are boat people from the Asian countries. Thousands come in by way of Canada. Mexicans can, of course, simply walk across the border or wade across the Rio Grande and melt into the large Mexican-American neighborhoods of US cities located near the border. There are professional smugglers that take trucks full of illegal aliens as far North as Chicago. The trucks dump their cargo at the Mexican border, go through legally, then pick up their passengers who have crossed and are waiting on the US side of the border.

Adding to the problem is the so-called "Sanctuary Movement." In the last two years nearly 200 churches and synagogues have joined this movement. Congregations are urged to violate US immigration laws and declare "solidarity" with "people's movements" in Central America. In this connection, it might be wise to understand the difference between legal immigrants, illegal aliens, refugees and asylees. Legal immigrants have a passport from their home country and a visa issued by the US government at an overseas consular office. Many of these legal immigrants overlook the fact that their visas have expired, and try to stay on illegally. Many get by with it. Illegal aliens have no visa; they just walk across the border or come by boat. A refugee is a person who fears personal persecution by the government of his or her home country because of race, religion or political beliefs. They apply for permission to enter and if permission is granted, they are given resettlement opportunities. This is true with most of the boat people from Asia. They, incidentally, usually are people displaced by war, famine or natural disasters, and are not legally called refugees. But in the United States they are treated as such. Then there are the asylees, as those are called who enter the US and then seek asylum.

Sometimes such asylees are denied permission to stay in the US and are sent to some third country, are never deported to their homeland where they would suffer persecution.

So much for definitions. Now let's get down to the nitty-gritty. Immigrants into the US have caused four principal problems: 1) Raids on social services because we are now a Welfare State; 2) The crime wave; 3) The health threat; and 4) Terrorism. Walter Williams of George Mason University wrote: "When yesterday's immigrants migrated here we did not have a welfare state, and therefore we knew people would work when they got here; the alternative was starvation. Today, because of the welfare state, we cannot be so sure. People can come, not work, and live off the rest of us. We have too many American citizens doing that now; we don't need more."

"The Federation for American Immigration Reform" issued a Fact Sheet which concentrated on what illegal immigration has done for Texas. We quote: "Estimates of illegal aliens in the US range up to 12 million. 80% are concentrated in five states: California, Texas, Florida, Illinois, and New York. During Fiscal Year 1985 over 56,000 illegal aliens were apprehended along the Texas border, a 17.8% increase over Fiscal Year 1984...For every illegal alien apprehended, the Border Patrol estimates that 2-3 get through. None of those entering had health, police or security checks. Under Texas' new indigent health care bill, qualifying indigent illegal aliens are now eligible for free medical services and the bill places the responsibility for the indigent care primarily on the counties of residence...The new bill provides out-patient services, family planning and prescription drugs. Counties must also provide rural clinic services and skilled nursing home care for 30 days or up to $30,000 annually...El Paso County Commissioners have sent President Reagan a bill for $10 million, the cost of treating illegal aliens at the R.E.Thomason General Hospital where 20% of the patients are estimated to be illegal aliens...The Child Welfare Department of Hidalgo County ran out of money last year due to medical costs involved with caring for illegal alien children...The latest Border Patrol statistics show a 43% increase in the number of family groups trying to cross the border, as opposed to single person apprehensions, which will only put additional cost pressure on public facilities such as hospitals and schools...."

From California came these statistics: "Nearly 80% of the infants born at the hospital nursery of the LA County-U of S.C. Medical Center are born to mothers who are illegal aliens...LA County's Health Services Dept., with six public hospitals serving seven million residents, estimates that the annual cost of caring for the county's large population of illegal immigrants is at least $150 million. The department reported in 1983 that illegal aliens represented 22.9% of the total patients and accounted for 64% of the births at county hospitals." In the DAR Magazine for April 1986, Palmer Stacey & Wayne Lutton reported that "Aliens are becoming so powerful in some parts of the US that they are successfully pressuring local and state government agencies not to enforce laws prohibiting the giving of welfare to illegal aliens, and are further demanding that such agencies not cooperate with the Federal government.. This problem is especially acute in the state of California, dubbed by Time magazine as our first 'Third World' state."

"One of the consequences of ceasing to enforce sensible immigration controls has been the wave of alien-related crime that has struck our nation from coast to coast." There are laws that prohibit the entry of criminals and ex-convicts, the mentally ill, persons likely to become welfare charges, prostitutes and procurers and other undesirable individuals. But when the laws are not enforced, the alien crime problem becomes an alien crime crisis, as happened in Florida in 1980 when the Mariel boat people swarmed into Florida. Castro seized the opportunity to rid his island of criminals and sex deviates, and "as many as 40,000 hard-core criminals were welcomed by Jimmy Carter with 'an open heart and open arms'," said the DAR article. Adding to the crisis: Illegal aliens form a part of the drug traffic problem. INS Commissioner Alan Nelson says "Narcotics trafficking remains a growing problem that must be confronted by the Border Patrol. (The Patrol) made 886 narcotic seizures at the borders the last fiscal year. This was a 28% increase from the previous year. The value of seized drugs nearly tripled in the same period." Illegal aliens on dope can't make enough money to buy the drugs, so they rob and burglarize, mug and even murder in order to supply their needs.

And there's the health problem. There's no way of screening aliens who get in illegally. How AIDS, a disease once native to parts of Africa, got into the United States has never been satisfactorily explained except through the entry of illegal sex deviants, especially from Haiti. Diseased aliens have ample opportunities to spread their illnesses to the general population. They are heavily employed in the food and beverage trade, are employed in canneries, food processing, meat packaging, hotels, restaurants, bakeries, grocery stores and bars; this according to David North, a former high official in the US Labor Dept. He adds that few states and municipalities require persons employed in food handling to be examined for parasites or other potentially infectious health problems before they begin working.

And next comes the problem with terrorists. The infiltration of terrorists from Mexico has already begun. Said Florida Senator Paula Hawkins: "It is just a hop and skip between terrorism and narcotics trafficking. Drugs are a ready source of hard cash. A drug network can be used to channel weapons into the hands of terrorists and troublemaking insurgent groups. The end result is corruption in high and low places, economic instability, and wrecked health from the drug traffic and social turbulence, personal horror and suffering from terrorism."

Wrote Stacy & Wayne (opcit): "The Statue of Liberty was erected on an island in New York Harbor in 1886. It had absolutely nothing to do with immigration...Only later, in 1903, was the poem welcoming tired, poor, 'wretched refuse' inscribed on a plaque on the statue's pedestal. ...As millions of immigrants pour in from nations where liberty and free government are largely unknown, we may come to see our liberty crushed by the immigration floodtide - bringing an ironic end to the life of the Lady in the Harbor."

THE REVERSE OF THE US SEAL BECOMES "THE NEW AGE" LOGO

We hadn't intended to mention this to you, thinking that it might be some vain imagining on our part. But one whom we shall not name sent us a strange manuscript. Its single-spaced text was almost crowded off the 30-odd pages by over 100 pictures and illustrations of logos - logotypes that have been adopted by businesses, organizations and government agencies. Each of these logos bears the pyramid/triangle/delta shape. Some of them also bear some representation of the detached, all-seeing eye that you'll find atop the pyramid printed on what we have been trained to call a $1 bill. In addition to the FRS token, you'll find the pyramid a prominent part of the logo of the General Services Administration, triangles dominate the logo of the Government Employees Benefit Association, it was displayed as a trylon and perisphere on a 3¢ US postage stamp issued as early as 1939. The triangle is prominent in the YMCA logo, the Campfire Girls, and so, on and on. We'll mention many more later, but in this manuscript we found reference to the fact that Paul Zamarian, president of the Great Seal Foundation (which is concerned with the Great Seal of the US), said the reverse side of the Great Seal (with the eye over pyramid) had never been made into a die. So he had petitioned Congress to order a cast of this reverse side made, because it "symbolized the unity of all mankind"! And that caused us to do some investigating to find the connection between this pyramid with its all-seeing eye, and the triangles that are now appearing as part of business and government logos.

When the 13 American Colonies declared themselves to be independent, a seal for the new United States of America was needed. The Continental Congress of 1776 named Benjamin Franklin (chairman), Thomas Jefferson, and John Adams, as a special committee to prepare such a shield. There was much controversy concerning just what this national "Coat of Arms" should contain, and it wasn't until 1782 that the Great Seal was tentatively approved as it is today. But there still was no agreement about that reverse side containing the pyramid with its all-seeing eye; so only the face of the seal was cast and used. The reverse side was never cast, or used in any way until 1935. Court historian Arthur M. Schlesinger Jr., in his book The Coming of the New Deal (published in 1958), tells the story on pages 31-33:

"The occult fascinated him (Vice President Henry Wallace). He saw special significance in the Great Seal of the United States, with the phrase E Pluribus Unum and its conception of unity out of diversity; even more in the reverse of the Seal - the incomplete pyramid, with its thirteen levels of stone and the apex suspended above in the form of an all-seeing eye, surrounded by the inscription Annuit Coeptis [and] Novus Ordo Seclorum...Wallace did induce the Secretary of the Treasury to put the Great Pyramid on the new dollar bill in 1935. He sold this to Secretary Morgenthau on the prosaic ground that Novus Ordo was Latin for New Deal...His susceptibility to the occult had drawn Wallace in the late twenties into the orbit of a White Russian mystic in the tradition of Blavatsky [Theosophical Society and Fabian Society] named Dr. Nicholas Roerich...He found solace in a strange and protracted correspondence with Roerich and certain of his disciples. The letters, some addressing Roerich as 'Dear Guru,' contained cabalistic references...and mystic allusions to...the descent of America into the depths of purifying fires."

In addition to Wallace's attachment to the occult, he had close association with Communists and espionage agents, especially Owen Lattimore, which culminated in his running for president on the Progressive Party ticket. It was nothing more nor less that the Communist Party under a false label. Anyway Wallace, the occultist and pro-Communist, persuaded Morgenthau (who wrote the program for making postwar Germany a "bread and potatoes" nation) to affix the occult symbol on the FRS $1 bill.

Robert Keith Spenser in The Cult of the All-Seeing Eye remarks that "The literature on the mystic meaning of the Seal is extensive and amazing. It appears that almost every secret fraternity, society and movement in the country has claimed the Seal's reverse side as its own. Celestia Root Lang wrote: "The reverse side must have been designed by a mystic, one versed in symbolism...All true Theosophists ought to be able to see ...the connecting link between true Theosophy and the reverse side of the Seal of the United States...the time will come...when the white stone will become the headstone...in proclaiming a new religion in which all spiritual currents flowing from every religion shall meet in the perfection of the white stone [capstone over the pyramid] teaching of...spiritual unfoldment...having neither dogma nor doctrine..." Miss Lang felt that the "Master" behind the designer of the reverse side of the Seal was Thomas Paine, the Deist and revolutionary.

So much for the reverse side of the seal with its pyramid and all-seeing eye. The pyramid, when stripped of detail, becomes a triangle; the all-seeing eye becomes a circle or sphere. Now, let's turn to James H. Billington's Fire in the Minds of Men, Origins of the Revolutionary Faith. Writing of the spread of socialism toward the end of the 18th century, he noted: "The architectural plans for Paris during the early months of the revolution reveal a special fascination with the three-dimensional forms of the triangle and circle: the pyramid and the sphere...Seeking some secure way to enlist those outside their inner circles, revolutionaries found inspiration in...the triangle. If the circle suggested the objective...the triangle suggested the way to get there. The triangle, a key symbol for all Masons, had particular meaning...as the simplest means of enclosing a surface with straight lines. The triangle expressed harmonic relationships and became a key symbol in revolutionary iconography. The revolutionary trilogy (Liberty, Equality, Fraternity)... adorned one side of the omnipresent triangle on seals and stamps."

The triangle also became a method of control over the body of revolutionaries. A cell of three persons would be formed, only the leader of the three knowing any superior. Each of these three would then form new cells of three persons, only the leader knowing a superior leader. Thus were triangular cells formed to make up the revolutionary body. Said Billington: "This triangular method of organization remained a basic means of enforcing conspiratorial security throughout the 1830s; and was translated back to Germany in the statutes of 1836 for the first revolutionary organization of German emigres in Paris: the League of Outlaws" (also called the League of Just Men, who commissioned Marx and Engels to write the Communist Manifesto-Ed.).

Now, if the triangle has been so popular as a symbol for revolutionary forces such as the Communists and those who promote the New Age Movement, is it not remarkable that during the past few years we have seen emerge in so many important places, the Triangle as a logo for businesses, organizations, and government agencies? In this manuscript which we mentioned, there is this statement:

"You are being conditioned to accept change - change in the social structure of the world at large and change in your own lifestyle. The triangle/pyramid shape, with or without its 'All-Seeing Eye,' is the most prevalent New Age symbol. Also known as 'delta,' traditionally designating 'change,' the triangle as a business logo and in other ways has been subtly used to brainwash you into accepting the hierarchical plan for the New International Economic Order, which is commonly known as the New World Order. The popularity of the design reflects a carefully orchestrated effort to implant the idea of change into your subconscious mind through the use of non-verbal visual images. This idea of change is part of a worldwide revolution that is now in progress..."

Since this triangle logo is often accompanied by a circle, representing the all-seeing eye, or the triangle is enclosed within a circle, our correspondent refers to them all as the "delta logo" and he then tells us and shows pictures or illustrations to prove his statement, that:

"The delta logo is now being used by such organizations as Alcoholics Anonymous, the Arthritic Foundation, the American Diabetes Association, the YMCA, the National Institutes for Health, the National Communications Center, the Government Employees Benefit Association, the Society of Federal Labor Relations Professionals, the Delaware Department of Transportation, and the General Services Administration of the federal government. The delta symbol is also used in the Senior Olympics, and by various hospitals and health care services. The National Education Association has long been training teachers to serve as 'change agents' to promote their United Nations-inspired humanistic, anti-Christian global education (and) an increasing number of educational organizations use a delta logo....

"A large number of corporations use delta logos. Some of them are: Allied Signal, Sandoz, American Cyanamid, RKO General, Trilog, Control Systems, Saudi Reserach and Development Corp., InnoVision, Avery, Dallas Gold and Silver, Leading Edge, Alcoa, Argonne National Laboratories, Trintex, Delta Air Lines, Alitalia, Citgo, Mesa Petroleum, ARMCO, Delta Books, and Smith Kline and French Laboratories. Among the banks using delta logos are: National Westminster Bank, Union Planters National Bank, Bankers Trust, Jyske Bank, and United Jersey Bank. There is even a Pyramid Safe Deposit Box Co. Full page color advertisements recently appearing in magazines by Waldenbooks and by Bell Atlantic Phone Co. use various combinations of triangles and pyramids with circles. OMNI magazine frequently uses similar designs on its covers..."

"...You will find delta designs and logos are used by several New Age organizations, including the Maitreya World Foundation, Tara Center (the major distributor of Benjamin Creme's 'Maitreya the Christ' material in the US), the Rosicrucians, and the Spiritual Unity of Nations (which is also pushing a 'Christ').

"Of course there are Establishment counterparts. The Trilateral Commission publishes its Triangle Papers in addition to its Dialogue."

The pyramid theme is carried out in the UN Meditation Room, but the author of The Cult of the All-Seeing Eye remarks that the pyramid and detached eye on the ceiling and the mural in the UN room are "highly abstract, unlike the one in the Prayer Room at the US Capitol, which is a copy of the pyramid and eye as found on the back of a $1 bill."

A chief publishing headquarters for the New Age movement is the Lucis Trust, with centers in New York City, London and Geneva. Originally founded as the Lucifer Trust, to publish Helen Blavatsky's publication of the same name, it now is a publishing center for Theosophists, Occultists, Cabalists, Humanists, and heathen Religionists. It also has its Triangle Program, in which hundreds of groups of three persons simultaneously imagine triangles of light as they recite the Great Invocation for the return of "Christ" (Maitreya, who is already here but has not yet revealed himself to the public, according to some of the New Age advocates).

Most important is the London based Tavistock Institute of Human Relations, which was founded in 1947. It is supported by the Rockefeller and similar foundations, as well as some of the corporations contributing to the Council on Foreign Relations. Also at the top level are Aspen, whose financial supporters include the Rockefeller Foundations as well as First National Bank of Chicago, Carnegie Corp., Ford Foundation, Russell Sage Foundation, etc. All support and promote the New Age Movement because all of them have the same goal: Establishment of the New International Economic Order, usually called The New World Order. In short, supporting the New Age Movement at the top level are the so-called Eastern Establishment, the large taxexempt foundations, certain multinational corporations, and the organized religionists and educationists. The fact that there are so many businesses, organizations, and industrialists who have adopted the triangle logo theme, can probably be explained by thinking of the Masonic handshake. The Triangle is an acknowledgement that "we are one of you and will not oppose your plans." While at the grass roots level of the conspiracy, there are all of those networking groups too numerous to mention in one brief report of this kind. A few names stand out: Jeremy Rifkin, Benjamin Creme, Robert Muller who is Assistant Secretary-General of the UN, Marilyn Ferguson who authored The Aquarian Conspiracy, etc.

But an important question arises: Who started this New Age Movement? Alice Bailey, disciple of Helen Blavatsky, says The Hierarchy is responsible for it. In her book, The Externalisation of the Hierarchy, she says the work began in the year 1775. Interestingly enough, it was just one year later, 1776, that Adam Weishaupt founded the Order of the Illuminati. So, while Bailey doesn't identify The Hierarchy, it seems most probable that she is referring to the international bankers who financed Weishaupt, Marx, the Fabian Society, Hitler, Lenin, Stalin, and who are presently financing almost every anti-American and anti-Christian movement you might name. And The Hierarchy's chief purpose: to create their New World Order!

May the Lord open eyes and ears to the Truth before it is too late.

BURGER AND THE BICENTENNIAL

There is an ancient adage about how the longest journey begins with a single step. Such a step was taken when Warren Burger stepped down as Chief Justice of the US Supreme Court. But there is a question as to where that hypothetical journey may take us; whether back to the re-establishment of the 200-year-old Constitution as the Supreme Law of the Land, or toward the re-writing of that historic document, or even the scrapping of it in favor of a Newstates Constitution that would make of our nation, at the end of the long journey, just a mere administrative region in a Socialist One World Government.

On the right hand there is the dream that during his term President Reagan will make, by appointments, a Supreme Court that will interpret laws in accordance with the dictates of the Constitution, rather than a court like the present one which, unconstitutionally, makes laws of its own and thereby makes null and void any and all opposing legislation of State, County, and City governments. The president's naming of William Rehnquist to replace Burger as Chief Justice, and Antonin Scalia to replace Rehnquist as Associate Justice, are steps in the right direction. Rehnquist is the only strict Constitutionalist on the present Court, and Scalia is reputed to be even stricter in regard to adherence to the letter and spirit of the Constitution. And due to the ages of those who are apt to retire: Marshall (77), Brennan (80), Powell (78), and Blackmun (77), it is possible that the rebirth of a Constitution-abiding Court can be accomplished on or about that Document's Bicentennial.

But on the left hand, there is fear that this hypothetical journey will lead to the disaster of sovereignty and liberty. Burger says he has been very happy as Chief Justice, is in good health, but is quitting that position for a lesser position as chairman of a committee that will be but temporary. To give up the post as highest judiciary in the land to devote full time as Chairman of the Commission of the United States Constitution, seems strange and somewhat suspect. A year ago President Reagan created this commission and named Warren Burger as its head. He has served as such for a year, now wants to chuck all his other jobs just to head a temporary commission. The President also named as members of this commission such opposing characters as Ted Kennedy and Phyllis Schlafly. A lady in a lion's den is a fit description. So maybe a man like Burger is needed to keep the conservatives such as Schlafly under control when decisions are being made. Incidentally, this commission has been holding meetings in secret, has been the target of a lawsuit because of it, has spent or intends to spend over a billion dollars preparing for and conducting the Bicentennial.

It might seem well and good, except that a whole string of other commissions and organizations intend to use this birthday celebration as a time to retire the old and install the new: the new being a specially prepared Newstates Constitution written by people like the old New Deal, Fabian Socialist Rexford Guy Tugwell. Then there is this Committee on the Constitutional System which is composed of some 200 very prominent and influential individuals. Among them are C. Douglas Dillon (CFR), Lloyd Cutler (CFR, TLC), Robert McNamara, former Senator

William Fulbright, Congressman Henry Reuss, and representatives from the Rockefeller Foundations, the Brookings Institution, the Woodrow Wilson Center, the Sloan Foundation, the Chicago University Law School, etc. Phyllis Schlafly, that lady in the lion's den, wrote: "The big names of individuals and foundations involved in this project reveal what enormous power in business, finance, the media, politics, and academia is behind their plan to rewrite our Constitution. This powerful elite group is developing a plan for a constitution similar to but slightly different from the one written by Rexford Tugwell."

This Committee on the Constitutional System has selected the Bicentennial as the proper time to call for a Constitutional Convention to ratify a new constitution which would contain some of the following objectives:

1. Increase the terms of House of Representatives members from two to four years, and hold their election in the Presidential election year.
2. Prevent voters from voting split tickets and force them to cast a single vote for a package slate consisting of the President, Vice-President, and the voter's own House and Senate candidates.
3. Change a large number of House seats from "election by district" to "election at large" in order to increase the possibility that the political party which wins the White House will also control both houses of congress, and that the "at large" members of the house would take a "nationwide" or "global" view of issues, rather than the so-called "provincial" view of members elected directly by congressional district.
4. To permit the President to dissolve Congress whenever he thinks it necessary, and call for new Congressional elections.
5. Make Senate ratification of treaties possibly by a simple majority vote, rather than by the present two-thirds vote.
6. Eliminate the 22nd Amendment which limits Presidents to two terms.
7. Eliminate the Electoral College.
8. Eliminate the requirement that all appropriations bills must originate in the House.
9. Give the federal government, instead of the state governments, the power to regulate and supervise cities.

There's much more in this Constitutional re-write which shows clearly that the intent of the Power Elite is to destroy all the checks and balances that exist in our present Constitution, and to create a European style parliamentary system which would allow the Establishment Elite to control and command, at less expense, our federal government.

We cannot know just how much influence that Committee on the Constitutional System and similar groups will have on the official Bicentennial Committee appointed by President Reagan and chaired by Warren Burger. In his letter of resignation delivered to the President on Tuesday, June 17th, Burger told the President that he had discovered that his leadership of the bicentennial celebration was "a full-time enterprise. I know we share the view that the story of our great constitutional system must be recalled to the American people - and indeed to people everywhere who seek freedom. To tell the story as it should be told is an enormous and challenging task." One would suspect that, if Warren Burger had so much regard and respect for the Constitution, he would have obeyed its checks and balances and restrictions while the Chief Justice of the Court that is supposed to interpret and see to it that not only the Court, but the Administration and the Congress as well, would remember the oath taken to defend it against all enemies. Article Six of the Constitution states: "This Constitution, and the laws of the United States which shall be made in the pursuance thereof...shall be the supreme law of the land; and the judges...shall be bound thereby." Alexander Hamilton in The Federalist defined the duties of the three departments of the federal government quite simply: The executive department carries the sword; the Legislative Department holds the power as the only lawmaker, and the Judiciary holds only the power of judgment. Instead, and especially since the Warren Court and extending through the Burger Court, the Appointed Nine have assumed the power to make laws,, and wield the sword in demanding obedience to laws, such as integration, abortion, busing, school districting, the makeup of city councils, and on and on. And this man Warren Burger, who resigns allegedly to honor the Constitution, has led in the violation of all of this!

And now we fear that he will be called upon to lead the movement to so alter the Constitution that it will have but faint resemblance to that honorable document which Constitutional authority Harry Atwood called "The greatest heritage that has fallen to any single people in history ...Its making was the greatest human achievement since Creation, and it marked the greatest event in the history of the world, save only the Birth of Christ." In that black night of chaos and darkness and despair, fifty-five men met in Philadelphia and wrote the Constitution; and almost immediately, for the first time in the history of the world, governmentally, light began to come out of darkness, order began to come out of chaos. Within ten years thoughtful men and women everywhere in the world were asking the question: What was it that those men did that for the first time in the history of the world made a place a land of liberty and opportunity for mankind? It held the world in an attitude of awe and reverence and respect for more than a century.

"So long as we adhered to the guidance of the wise provisions of the Constitution," said that respected authority, "we made great progress in this country and wielded a wholesome influence on the other countries of the world, but during the latter part of the nineteenth century we began to drift away from the Constitution and began taking up popular fallacies, such as the initiative, referendum, recall, boards, commissions, bureaus, excess legislation, class legislation, election of judges, the long ballot, etc. We are reaping the results of unwise departures from the Constitution in ever increasing expenses and ever more and more confusion in governmental procedure...Let us preserve and perpetuate that inspired American ideal, our Federal Constitution." So wrote Harry Atwood in 1921, sixty-five years ago. One wonders what he would write if he were on the scene today.

This Constitution of ours has been a thorn in the side of the One Worlders for over a century. President Franklin Roosevelt may have given the reason in the simplest terms when his Braintrusters convinced him that the United States ought to be divided into ten regions. He said, "The purpose of reorganization (of the United States into ten regions) is not economy. The purpose of reorganization is management." He never got around to that particular reorganization, nor did Richard Nixon complete the job when he attempted such a regionalization of the United States some thirty-odd years later.

Management by reorganization was in the minds of a Commission on Freedom of the Press when those planners wrote their Constitution for the World. Under the leadership of the late Robert M. Hutchins, who later established the Center for the Study of Democratic Institutions, a group of professors produced a plan where elitist "ideas can be imposed upon United States citizens and the rest of the world, if the United Nations idea fails." Frank Hughes, in Prejudice and the Press, wrote:

"The professor's master plan, which was dressed out in a galaxy of zodiac symbols, quotations from Hindu philosophy, purple and white ink, and other trappings not common to scholarship, was released to the world in March, 1948, by a private organization known as the 'Committee to Frame a World Constitution,' headed by Chancellor Hutchins, and including in its original membership Professor William Hocking, Professor Reinhold Niebuhr, Professor Robert Redfield, and former Professor Beardsley Ruml, Mortimer Adler, Giuseppe Borgese," etc. Also included but not mentioned by Hughes was Rexford Guy Tugwell, who later spent years "perfecting" this Newstates Constitution which is to be presented as a replacement for our present US Constitution. All of these and other plans are associated with this Bicentennial Celebration which Warren Burger resigned as Chief Justice to chair.

A century ago, on Sept. 17, 1887, there was observed in Philadelphia a Centennial Celebration of the Constitution. We could take a lesson from that experience. Foreign dignitaries from around the world were invited to attend. William Gladstone, British statesman and Prime Minister, cabled saying: "I regret that I cannot come. As far as I can see, the American Constitution is the most wonderful work ever struck off at one time by the brain and purpose of man." A resolution approved at the Centennial declared: "The adoption of the Constitution is the most important event in the history of the American people, and the instrument itself the sublimest achievement of mankind. It has taught the world that liberty can exist without license and authority without tyranny. How completely the principles upon which it is based have met every national need and every national peril!" And how true that was for the first hundred years, before men began tampering with it, nulling its words and numbing its spirit. The question before us next Sept. 17th: Should we restore it or scrap it? Daniel Webster, that great expounder of the Constitution may have answered the question best:

"The experience of all ages will bear me out in saying that alterations of political systems are always attended with a greater or less degree of danger...The politician that undertakes to improve a Constitution...is no master of his trade. If the Constitution be a systematic one, if it be a free one, its parts are so necessarily connected that an alteration in one will work an alteration in all and this cobbler, however pure and honest his intention, will in the end find that what came to his hands a fair, lovely fabric, goes from them a miserable piece of patchwork..."

Not to replace or repair, but to revive and restore; that should be our purpose when questions concerning the Constitution are considered. Let us be alert to those who would rob us of our remaining liberties, remembering always that "If God be for us..."

GOVERNMENT IS THE PROBLEM

"Senate OKs Tax Overhaul," screamed the big black headline on page one of most any newspaper you might have seen on June 27th. One could be led to believe that this was something wonderful that had just happened. But after careful reading of what followed, one could ask who was kidding whom? Last December the House passed a so-called "tax reform" bill. Last Tuesday, the Senate passed a so-called "tax reform" bill. But the two are so different in so many different ways that it will take weeks for a Congressional Conference Committee to iron out the differences and create a bill acceptable to both House and Senate members. And the conference committee won't even meet until sometime next month. It could be that the arguments will take so much time that a so-called "tax reform" bill won't even get under the wire at this session of Congress. Which would be a good thing if Don McAlvany is right, and we think he is. He said "The greatest potential tax deception in US history is about to be perpetrated on the unsuspecting American public. The Packwood tax bill, enthusiastically endorsed by the Reagan Administration, by the liberal Brookings Institution, the New York Times, the Washington Post, the Los Angeles Times and the liberal US media, is neither a tax reduction bill nor a tax simplification bill - nor is it truly 'revenue neutral'. [It would] increase federal taxes overall by as much as $22 billion during its first full year of operation...The package is currently being 'sold' to the public via a sophisticated media/government public relations blitz similar to the one which accompanied the Tefra Tax Act of 1982 (which, incidentally, raised taxes $225 billion over 5 years). That highly flawed 1982 tax increase was sold to the public by the congressional promise that for every $1 in increased taxes, the Congress would deliver $3 in spending cuts. They got their tax increase and instead increased spending by $1.14 for each $1 in tax increase. So much for the honest, integrity and discipline of our elected officials." Then Don McAlvany adds an editor's note:

"it is axiomatic that the politicians in Washington will not cut spending when taxes are raised; they will spend more, to buy even more votes to perpetuate themselves in power." (The McAlvany Intelligence Advisor, P.O.Box 38810, Phoenix, AZ 35089).

Gramm-Rudman was supposed to make it impossible for Congress to increase spending just because taxes might be increased. But notice what has happened. The minute Gramm-Rudman got passed and signed into law by the President, it was cited as being unconstitutional, and went to the Supreme Court. But when the time came for the Court to hand down its decision declaring it unconstitutional, there was one of those convenient leaks. Tim O'Brien of ABC announced that the Court was going to kill Gramm-Rudman, that Chief Justice Burger had asked Justice Sandra Day O'Connor to write a concurring opinion, and the act that would have forced Congress to cease spending and spending would no longer be in effect. As Gary North noted: "This will get Congress off the hook. Congress won't have enough oomph to push a new version through before the elections, unless I totally misread the scene. They can go home and say to the voters, 'Well, we did our best, but the Supreme Court has spoken'...In a year, there will be no more illusions about Congress's willingness to cut the deficit. It will be Katy bar the door." (Remnant Review, PO Box 8204, Fort Worth, Texas 76124).

Another honest money advocate wrote: "Public apathy is 'raging' in the streets. Unemployment is low, people are borrowing their heads off, the stock and bond markets are levitating without visible means of support, and most Americans feel great! Why worry that we're losing South Africa, that Mexico just fired Silva de Herzog, the Finance Minister who resisted the Mexican government's hard line on their bank debt, raising the odds that Mexico will default? Why worry that the money supply is exploding, that the US is the largest debtor nation in the world (three years ago the US was the world's largest creditor nation). And why worry that we're being stampeded into a tax plan that will further socialize this nation? Why worry if the Republicans lose control of the Senate, and such staunch defenders of free enterprise as Teddy Kennedy will be in control of those committees that parcel out your tax money?"

In this connection, and in regard to Mexico, Professor Hans Sennholz writes: "Dark clouds have gathered over the world's financial system. Some $500 billion of bad international debts are hanging over American and European banks. Mexico owes $98 billion and cannot even meet interest payments. Argentina owes more than $40 billion and hovers on the brink of bankruptcy. Brazil is in difficulties with $103 billion. The Iron Curtain countries are in the red more than $60 billion. Third-world countries are up to their ears in debts of more than $200 billion...[However] It would be naive to believe that the debtor countries will go bankrupt in the proper sense of the word. Only individuals and small businesses are permitted to fail. Large corporations, great banks, and important countries cannot founder because the US government, acting through its money monopoly, the Federal Reserve System, will come to their rescue...The big banks in New York, Chicago, Los Angeles and other money centers, which made the bad loans, are the pillars of the American financial system. If they should fail, all economic life could sink into depression and despair; therefore the Federal Reserve rushed to the rescue of Mexico with billions of dollars, so that it could pay the interest falling due to American banksThe loans are made good, the banks remain open, and the crisis is averted.(Money and Freedom, by Hans Sennholz. 88 pages. $5.95. Write to Coalition for Sound Money, PO Box 671, Berryville, VA 22611).

That Mexican crisis occurred in 1982. It's happening again with Mexico unable to pay the interest on the $98 billion loan. And the FED, thanks to counsel from the Bank for International Settlements (BIS), the Central Bankers' Bank, and with help from American taxpayers, will again bail out Mexico, and when the time comes, Brazil, and Argentina, the Iron Curtain countries, and the Third-world countries.

While this "crisis" is being averted, it is important to note that 7,500 banks in America - half of America's banks - are in trouble, and many, many of them are expected to close or be "merged" into one of the larger banks that has a special relationship with the Fed. There may be an important connection here which, to our knowledge, has never been mentioned publicly; and we may be wrong. But, back in the 1970s the Fed began looking for ways to force all banks to become a part of the Fed family, so that they could be called on to help out in cases like Mexico, etc. At that time many banks were state-chartered and had no direct connection with the Fed. Others began worrying about the Fed's monetary policies and began withdrawing. In 1978 William Miller, then Chairman of the Federal Reserve, warned that the flight of the member banks out of the system was "weakening the financial system of the United States."

A total of 450 member banks had left the Fed in an eight year span, including 15 major banks in 1977, with deposits of more than $100 billion. Another 50 banks left the Fed in 1978. As a result, 60% of all the banks in America were outside the system. In 1979, Federal Reserve Chairman Paul Volcker informed the House Banking Committee that "... Some 500 banks with deposits of $18.5 billion have quit the Fed," and another 575, with deposits of more than $70 billion "have given some indication of their intent to withdraw." Now, the power of the Fed rests in its absolute government-mandated monopoly over money. That monopoly was being threatened by these banks that were withdrawing from the system; and the exodus had to be halted.

Therefore, obediently, Congress passed the Monetary Control Act of 1980. In his Tax Revolt, the Battle for the Constitution, Martin A. Larson explains: "The Monetary Control Act of 1980 brings all US depository institutions under the authority of the Federal Reserve System...It also expands the definition of collateral for Federal Reserve credit and Federal Reserve notes in circulation. This means that any asset the Fed may purchase on the open market can be used as an asset against such borrowing. The cartel thus has a lien against all property in the United States, because all of the banking and lending institutions under the Federal Reserve today use their collateral as authority to create money out of thin air. This, then, is the means by which the internationalists have placed their control over all real estate in the United States, and, of course, all individuals who own property of any kind. For example... the Feds can now bail out the Chase Manhattan Bank...or any other bank with the acceptance of federally backed mortgages from such banks...placing the burden of repayment for these bad loans upon the backs of the American people." (In the foregoing, Martin Larson is quoting Col. Archibald Roberts, head of the Committee to Restore the Constitution.)

Now, remember those banks that operated outside the Fed's system or began withdrawing from the Fed in the 1970s. And remember that half of the banks in America today are threatened with closure or merging with some bigger Fed-related bank. Are these unfortunate banks being punished because they tried to remain independent and free of monopolistic control by the Fed? And are American depositors, especially farmers and small businessmen being punished indirectly by the all-powerful Fed?

As is generally known, one final aim of the Power Elite is to have and control a universal cashless society - one in which all financial transactions must be done through a Central, computerized banking or credit card system. But the Money Barons know this must be a slow and ticklish proposition so long as there are national governments with their own national currencies, computerized or otherwise. So, they're going slowly but surely toward their global goal. Some of the steps that have been taken include the following:

France introduced the "smart card" in 1982. This is a debit card which instantly withdraws funds from the cardholder's bank account. Important because it contains an ID computer chip. By 1984 the Japanese company, Toshiba, had developed a more complex "smart card" which contains a battery and a miniaturized computer. It serves as a debit card, an ID card, a medical or political history record, and even a passport. Also in 1984, the VISA card was first used in an international transaction. A Visa Electron card was inserted into an automatic teller machine in Sydney, Australia. The cardholder received a sum in local currency while an equivalent amount in US dollars was deducted from the cardholder's account in the US. Next year, 1985, MasterCard International introduced a "smart card" containing a microchip storing an image of the cardholder's signature and calculates information about his bank account. Subscribers to Blue Cross and Blue Shield medical insurance in the State of Maryland carry an identity card containing their complete medical history. These are readable by scanning devices and computers. Finally, this year, as we have previously reported, a completely cashless society is well underway in Singapore where cash transactions are prohibited in supermarkets, gas stations, major department stores, government offices, and hospitals. Residents will soon be required to pay their taxes, utility bills, hospital bills, and traffic fines with debit cards. The government has closed down all cash payment offices. This is a trial run for a universal system which the Power Elite expects to install throughout the world. But before that becomes practical, a global currency of some kind must be installed. And in this program, the European Community has taken the lead.

These elitist groups know that if they are to gain absolute control over the world and its peoples, they must control the currencies of the world. That's simpler if there is but one world currency. So, they created a Regional World Government composed of the 12 European Nations. Then they created a common currency called the ECU - one currency to be used by a completely Federated United States of Europe. Said World Affairs Review: "The greater use of the ECU could in effect lead to the unit becoming accepted as the third international unit after the $ and the Yen. It would then become easy to merge the three."

It is monopoly over money which they must have. It matters little whether a Central Bank as in the US, or a Central Government as in the USSR has the monopoly; but free enterprise must be destroyed! Listen to the words of Sen. Steve Symms (Idaho): "Americans have understood that freedom and competition can produce the best shoes and clothes; they now must extend that realization to money and banking. Such a free-enterprise system is entirely consistent with the Constitution, which reserves the right to extend credit, issue notes, and mint coins to the American people under the Ninth and Tenth Amendments. Congress is given the right to mint coins, not print paper money, and that power of the mint is not an exclusive or monopoly power. Competition in currency was the intention of the founding fathers...Government has caused the problem; only free men can solve it."

"And the Lord, He it is that doth go before thee; He will be with thee, He will not fail thee: fear not, neither be dismayed." (Deuteronomy 31:8).

COMMEMORATION

The Fourth of July in 1954 was particularly important to the Bells. They met four months earlier and a courtship began. Both being writers of patriotic mien, they decided to form a publishing team. Ginny illustrated and made the lay-outs, Don wrote and printed, and together they produced a red, white, and blue special Fourth of July issue of Don Bell Reports. Two days later, on July 6th, thirty-two years ago, they made it a permanent team through Holy Matrimony.

Since July 4th, 1986, is another publishing date for Don Bell Reports, they felt it fitting to recall some of the thoughts expressed in that special issue of July 4th, 1954, and add some new thoughts. So, the first part of this two-part report contains word-for-word excerpts from that issue of 1954. The remainder contains Ginny's latest PERZONAL.. We thought you might like to know that, for thirty-two years we've remained a team, doing what seemed right in our eyes for God, Country and Home.

When the rugged revolutionaries had concluded their criticisms and their praisings, their corrections and their re-copyings, John Hancock arose, strode to the table where the revolutionary document awaited signature. He bowed his head for a few seconds of silent prayer, then he picked up the quill, wrote his name in big, bold strokes so "George could read it without his glasses." The Declaration of Independence was accepted by nine Colonies on July 1, by three more the next day, and was formally adopted and proclaimed to the world on July 4, 1776.

+ + + + +

This was an age of revolutionary thought and action. The British policy of Mercantilism had brought distress, not just to the people of the American Colonies, but to the people of Europe as well. The old concept of the divine right of kings was waning; various Holy Alliances were to be formed in a final, desperate attempt to preserve the old theory of government. Colonialism faced crisis;...In the world there was doubt, unrest, worry - and these were to lead to war and revolution.

+ + + + +

In this age of doubt and uncertainty there arose two mighty, revolutionary concepts of government - one in the New World, one in the Old. These two concepts of government, both revolutionary yet diametrically opposed to each other, were to emerge supreme and dominant over all other forms of government in the 20th century.

The revolutionary form founded in the New World was Divinely Inspired and held that government must conform to limitations expressed in a set of definite, specific and self-evident truths:

1. That all men are created equal.
2. That men are endowed - not by their government, but by their Creator, with certain unalienable rights, among which are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.
3. That the chief function - and the only function of government except in times of emergency - is to preserve and protect those unalienable rights.

4. That any power which government may assume or exercise must derive from the consent of the governed.

5. That the people have a right to alter or abolish a government when it ceases to serve the ends for which it was created.

To protect itself from the contaminating influences of Old World squabbles and governmental philosophies, a stern policy of Patriotic Nationalism was adopted, a policy which called for friendly relations (never isolation) with all nations, but entangling alliances with none!

+ + + + +

The revolutionary form of government initially indited by Adam Weishaupt of the Old World, was a complete antithesis of the form inspired by the Declaration of Independence, formalized by the Constitution, and protected by a policy of Patriotic Nationalism. Weishaupt's Illuminati declared that:

1. All men must remain at a common level throughout life, receiving from the state only the things needed for survival, and giving to the state everything that ability and strength will create - except those men who were specially chosen as leader-members of a secret group who would become a part of the privileged hierarchy which would govern in an internationalist world.

2. Men are endowed with nothing save the ability to serve the state. The state may grant such privileges as life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness - but such privileges may be taken away when the state deems it advisable.

3. Religious freedom must be denied the people - the only kind of religion that can be tolerated is worship of the state.

+ + + + +

Thus were the two forms of government contrasted: The ideals expressed in Illuminism destroyed France; but the ideals expressed in Americanism were convincingly vindicated in the growth of a country from a weak and infant Republic to the most powerful Nation under the sun!

But Illuminism did not die. It changed its name to Communism, blue-printed its methods in a Manifesto, and emerged again to challenge the diametrically opposed Americanism...(Yet) Communism had no chance of success so long as it was forced to compete with Americanism. But when regard for American traditions began to weaken, then - and only then - did Communism begin to grow strong and menacing to the United States. Glimmerings of the change from sensible nationalism to emotional internationalism were seen when Commodore Perry, negotiating trade agreements with then isolationist Japan, made the internationalist gesture of requesting permission to seize Formosa in order that it might be used as a base in the further exploitation of the Far East! The shameful Spanish-American War (our first war that was manufactured)...and the damage was done. We had forgotten Washington's advice, had meddled in the affairs of nations outside our hemisphere, had begun to embroil ourselves in the wars and squabbles of the rest of the world.

And now, as we knowingly meddle in the affairs of every nation on the globe, as we knowingly place American Servicemen in over half a hundred nations, as we announce that we are destined to feed and police the world (even against the world's will), the majority of the American people seem to approve! It is significant that history shows how, the more we have enmeshed ourselves in the idiocies of internationalism, the more has International Communism grown. The Joe McCarthys of America can work until doomsday seeking out subversives, exposing traitors, recommending methods which will protect American interests; but their job will never be done until our Nation has returned to traditional Patriotic Nationalism! Said a patriot writing in 1925, before the New Deal:

"Patriotic Nationalism! This is the Tradition of American Citizenship as opposed to the aspirations of cosmopolites. It has survived many dangerous days. It is mile-stoned by Romance, illuminated by sturdy courage. It is the supreme National Inheritance. It is the bulwark of continued American eminence and authority. And it is our agency of greatest service to the world - because we best serve the world by preserving our identity. Nationalism, self-imposed and self-inspired, has never yet set beacon lights in the watch-towers of America without flashing signals of new hope all round the globe. Nationalism made us what we are. Fidelity to intelligent Nationalism is the gauge of our destiny. It is the rock from which we are hewn."

These are excerpts from the July 4, 1954, issue of Don Bell Reports. Our prayer, then and now: May every future "Fourth" be honored as the birth date of the Declaration of Independence; and may its letter and spirit ever remind us of the Spiritual Rock from which we are hewn.

PERZONAL

"AS FOR ME, I WAS SEVENTEEN AND I COULDN'T WAIT"

The front page of The New York Tribune is spread out before me. It is dated Monday, March 29, 1909. The headline on the extreme right reads:

WILL FIGHT INDIANS IN OKLAHOMA HILLS
TROOPS MARCH AGAINST CRAZY SNAKE'S BAND

Thus, the lead article on the day that Don Bell was born in a sod hut in the Oklahoma Panhandle. He was part Muskogee. He thinks he was taken to Kansas by his adoptive parents while an infant. There he spent seventeen grim, unhappy years, having had during that time only two objects to love - his dog Fanny and his white horse Clyde.

"What I really wanted was to be a foreign correspondent. Things were happening over in China. I wanted to be there and see them happen. I WAS SEVENTEEN AND I COULDN'T WAIT,: A Marine Corps Sergeant was my short cut. I took the oath with the promise that the Sergeant would send me to China. You won't believe me...but it actually happened. I was sent to China."

The American Revolution also produced young firebrands who "couldn't wait." Redheaded, rawboned Patrick Henry from hardscrabble rural Virginia, commanded any audience he faced with oratory so powerful that even his pauses sent chills up and down spines.

He was gentle in personal relationships, and often when he rose to speak, seemed shy and awkward. Then, the powerful body would straighten, the angular red head go back, and the deep-set blue eyes would begin to shoot fire:

"...Gentlemen may cry peace, peace, but there is no peace...Why stand we here idle? What is it that gentlemen wish? What would they have? Is life so dear, or peace so sweet, as to be purchased at the price of chains and slavery?"

Patrick Henry stood erect, defiant, radiant, his arms stretched far upward, his voice rattling the rafters:

"Forbid it, Almighty God! I know not what course others may take, but as for me, give me liberty or give me death!"

This most compelling of all patriotic speeches was given in March of 1775. Today, in July of 1986, we are fully persuaded that when Patrick Henry thundered: "Our Chains Are Forged!" it applied, THEN and NOW. He said, "...Give Me Death!"

What Will YOU say?

* * *

All true patriots have a fiery talent akin to genius and fierce dedication to the cause. A man's thoughts must be bigger than himself.

* * *

When Patrick Henry married Sarah Shelton, he was only 18. She was 16. They were married in Sarah's parlor and you can see it today. The home (for nine generations) has always been occupied by Sheltons. At the wedding, the original black fireplace with its striking white mantel is still the same. One can almost see these two historical children solemnly taking their vows before it.

The house was in the direct line of heavy fighting during the Civil War and this very same parlor was used to care for the wounded.

The present Mrs. Shelton exclaimed: "Years after the war, it took my husband's mother days of scrubbing to get the blood stains off the floor!"

It was 1927 in the area around the old North Station in Shanghai. The Japanese were on a determined rampage. The Chinese had run amok by the thousands, seeking salvation in the International Settlement.

"The faster the Japanese fired into the crowd, the faster did the crowd come on: Chinese rushing maddeningly over the bodies of their dead and dying compatriots; little children being stamped to death by thousands of softly-clad Chinese sandalled feet; women screaming for mercy for their little children which were carried in their arms; both the women and their babies to be dropped by Japanese bullets, or bounced like rubber duckpins onto a retaining wall of human bodies, which kept rushing, trampling, stumbling, on to certain death.

"I stood there watching it all, unable to move, or talk, think or feel. ...And I saw before me a field filled with dead and dying. Coming from the field, a continuous, unending moan. Nothing articulate, nothing specific; just the low, rolling fog of the moan of death. A fog which seeped through the wool clothing which covered the body, seeped through to chill the soul itself.

"How many thousands were dead and dying on that field of horror when I left, I'll never know. I know only that later, when the bodies had been bared (for clothing is scarce in China and the dead no longer re-

THE INIQUITOUS QUEST FOR PROFITABLE TORTS

The news may have seemed alarming to the editor of our local daily. It was featured in a five-column spread across the top of the front page of the Monday, July 7th issue. "Law schools wrestle with declining enrollment," cried the headline. The article by Edward B. Fiske of the New York Times News Service began: "After two decades of steady growth and prosperity, American law schools find themselves struggling with declining applications, sagging enrollment, and increasingly aggressive competition for students. The latest figures from the American Bar Association show that the number of applications to the country's 175 accredited law schools has dropped by one-quarter in the last four years, from a peak of 70,135 in 1982-83 to an estimated 52,658 next fall...with no sign that the end is in sight." The American Bar Association seems very unhappy about this and says students are turning to industrial, business and other professional fields. To this reporter this ranks as one of the happiest bits of news we've read in a long time. This nation is glutted with lawyers. Most of the country's Senators, Congressmen, top-level bureaucrats, state and local politicians are lawyers. Practically all of the judges have some kind of legal diploma. It is said by some that the American Bar Association really runs the country; not for itself or its members necessarily, but for certain clients in high positions.

All of which may or may not be true. But the fact remains that there are so many lawyers in the country that many of them find it impossible to make a living practicing law as most of us would understand the term. So they turn to the litigation field where some of them make millions defending unrighteous causes. Others can't find enough clients to keep their shingles hanging and turn to other kinds of activity to keep off the welfare roles.

This lawyer's glut has created a great army of tort law practitioners. Lest that word be misunderstood, Webster defines "tort" as "any civil wrong by act or omission for which a suit can be brought, exclusive of a breach of contract." Don't know how the name started, but we used to hear them called Philadelphia Lawyers, legal creatures who were looking for civil suits to handle; suits of the most trivial and ridiculous sort, but suits that could rob the rich and feed the "victims", with the lawyer making anything up to an estimated 63% of the settlement. They would chase police cars and ambulances, seeking to make a deal with whomever was able to make a deal, on the basis of "no pay unless we collect."

Nowadays such lawyers don't actually race against ambulances and police cars. Instead, they advertise on radio and TV and in the papers, offering to help anybody that's been hurt, or embarrassed, or had his character impugned. You read about such cases and enormous settlements made almost every day. Robert James Bidinotto, contributing editor to On Principle, a libertarian newsletter, recently compiled a list of some of the most bizarre cases. Here are a few of them:

In Redding, California a young burglar was committing a robbery in a school building when he fell through a skylight and was paralyzed. A litigation lawyer filed a suit against the school for negligence.

The school's insurance company feared the potential amount that might be awarded by a jury, settled out of court, granting the "victim" $260,000 outright, plus $1,500 per month.

A young woman stole a car. The police tried to arrest her and a high-speed chase began. The chase ended when she crashed the car, was injured. She successfully sued General Motors, on the grounds that the stolen car's anti-theft measures were inadequate.

A New York man decided to commit suicide. He jumped in front of a subway train. But the engineer saw what was about to happen, stopped as fast as he could, and the man was not killed, only badly hurt. But the would-be suicide was persuaded to sue, on the grounds that the engineer failed to stop the train in time. The transit authority settled for $650,000.

Then there was this man in California who was in a telephone booth, making a phone call. A drunken driver crashed his car into the phone booth. Case went to the California Supreme Court and Chief Justice Rose Bird (you've heard of her?) ruled that the liability rested, not with the drunken driver, but with the company that designed the phone booth.

Then there was this body builder who wanted to display his strength, speed and skill. So he strapped a refrigerator onto his back and ran a footrace with an opponent. But one of the straps broke, causing an injury. There didn't seem to be much chance of collecting damages from the refrigerator maker. After all, refrigerators are not supposed to be used as weights in races. So the body builder's tort lawyer sued the strap manufacturer instead. They allegedly collected and split one million dollars.

Two Maryland men tried to dry out a hot-air balloon in a commercial dryer. As might have been predicted, the dryer exploded, and the injured pair was awarded $885,000.

There was this overweight man with coronary problems. He suffered a heart attack while trying to start a lawn mower. He sued Sears, the mower supplier, not for any defect in the mower itself, but because he claimed it took too much effort to pull the rope which started the mower. Sears defended, but the jury awarded the man $1.2 million, plus $550,000 in interest for delays.

All of these tort law cases we have mentioned were supplied by the newsletter On Principle (601 Ewing St., Suite B-7, Princeton, N.J. $45 per year). Similar cases of legal lunacy can be seen or heard about almost every day. Hardest hit have been doctors and product makers. In 1984 (latest figures available) the average award in a case of medical malpractice was $950,000. The average product liability award was $1.07 million. Which meant that insurance companies had to raise their rates to make any profit (they say they actually lost $21 billion on underwriting that year; their biggest loss since the 1906 San Francisco earthquake). If the insurance companies had to raise their premium rates, the doctors had to increase their fees to compensate, and who pays in the long run?

Actually, insurance rates went up so drastically that two things began to happen. 1) Doctors began quitting their practices; and 2) Manufacturers stopped making the products that cost so much in liability insurance. A radio network economic advisor told a caller that if he wanted to avoid trouble, he'd better take out a million dollars worth of liability insurance on his new automobile! Other results:

34 California cities and 229 New York municipalities, and 585 Ohio schools couldn't pay the insurance rates, decided to risk liabilities on their own. Which caused any number of city and municipality officials to resign their posts, fearing they might be held personally responsible in case of suits for damages. We are told that nursing homes, day care centers, health clubs, ambulance services, truckers and many manufacturers have seen their premiums rise as much as 1000 percent in a single year.

As we noted, doctors have been the worst hit. And thereby hangs a tale. State control of the medical profession was largely promoted by Rockefeller funds. Medical schools were brought under state control, as was the medical profession itself through AMA, FHA, etc. One result: any medical researcher whose work fails to gain federal approval not only is classified as a quack but can be in serious legal trouble. in The Institutes of Bible Law by Rev. R.J.Rushdoony, we read that "Even as the state controls over medicine have increased, so, at the same time, charges of medical malpractice have increased, and doctors today are in constant danger of lawsuits...A federal agency approves a drug, but the doctor pays the penalty if there are bad reactions. It has become dangerous for a doctor to administer emergency roadside care in an accident because of this proneness to liability. The day may not be too far distant, if the present trend continues, when doctors may be tried for murder if their patient dies. There were hints of this in the Soviet Union in Stalin's closing days." There is, of course, the more probable result: Medical practice will become totally communized, as will be manufacturers of products that are subject to liability suits.

But, getting back to the actions of these "liability lawyers," this totally unChristian practice could never have developed unless there was a corresponding falling away from Biblical law. Jesus faced the same situation when He walked as man on the earth. The lawyers (scribes) taunted Him with questions as to whom tribute should be paid, why did He call Himself the Son of God, whence came His power to heal the sick, forgive sins and cast out devils. He told them that they were observing the oral traditions of men as opposed to the inscribed traditions of God. Yet the scribes had not always done this. In the times before those four hundred years of darkness between Malachi and John the Baptist there were scribes that did great things for the people of Israel. There was, for example, Ezra the scribe who, with Nehemiah, led that remnant back to Jerusalem to rebuild the temple and the walls of the city, who read to the people from the book of the law. Similarly, there were great and heroic lawyers who inscribed the words of the Charter that is the Declaration of Independence, and the book of law that is the Constitution. But after a century or so lawyers began substituting the traditions of men for the traditions of God as spelled out in our civil bible.

The judgments of the court in Biblical law were of two kinds. There were judgments concerning money, property, injury, carrying the demand to make restitution. And there was judgment upon the person, from corporal to capital punishment. Both were concerned with Justice. As it is written in Deuteronomy 1:17: "Ye shall not respect persons in judgment; but ye shall hear the small as well as the great; ye shall not be afraid of the face of man; for the judgment is God's..." But in today's liability cases juries have forgotten all of this and, seduced by seekers of profitable torts, render decisions which do respect persons and do involve the socialistic idea of the redistribution of wealth and the seizure of property. Restitution is one thing; legal robbery is something else, whether it be committed in a liability case or a tax case.

Larry Abraham, who assisted Gary Allen in the writing of None Dare Call It Conspiracy, brought that best seller among patriots up to date in his later book Call It Conspiracy. Last fall Larry wrote something which bears out our thesis. He wrote:

"The single greatest problem facing us as citizens of this country ... is an increasing loss of the concept of justice...Justice is much more than just a matter of laws. It lives in the hearts and minds of men...it serves as the very foundation of any formal political, legal, and economic system...and the group of people that must bear the single greatest responsibility for this condition [the loss of the concept of justice] are the lawyers.

"It doesn't matter which area of human activity you care to consider, the situation is exactly the same. Pragmatism rules the day, distorts the law, and everybody loses except the shysters themselves. Criminals are being turned loose, innocent law-abiding people are being harassed, insurance costs are skyrocketing, divorce courts are crammed, capital formation is screeching to a halt, 'compliance' is eating at the profits of every business, large and small. Government at every level is passing more and more laws, the effect of which is to remove, restrict, and regulate our freedom. In virtually every deliberative body in the land, the majority of lawmakers are lawyers. They approve law after law, every one of which provides more lawyers with increased opportunities to 'practice' their craft...something must be done, and soon. For if it is not, the last remnant of the concept of justice is going to be irretrievably lost. And once it is, the thin veneer of civilization will dissolve like an Alka-Seltzer and the beast within will cast us back into a dark age that will make the last one look like an era of enlightenment by comparison."

* * * * *

In this Report we have emphasized the actions of tort lawyers (Bailley, Kunstler, etc. might have been named). But let's not forget that most judges were first lawyers. It is such judges that tell juries how to vote in tort cases; sometimes even going so far as to reject and reverse jury decisions. And at the top level, the Supreme Court level, there have been decisions that have struck at the very heart of the concept of justice. Miranda for example. And in the Wade vs. Roe decision (abortion on demand), we have the most frightening example of how the loss of the concept of justice even denies the right to life.

Finally, we all have been led astray because we have forgotten, or were never told, of the roles of governments as the founding fathers conceived them when creating a Republic: Self-government being the most important of all, to be followed by family, community, county, state, and finally federal government which should be the least of all. We have allowed the modern scribes to reverse the order. Think it over.

quired it), and when the bodies had been piled four, five and six deep, they stretched in circular stack for - in my estimate - well over a mile.

"I left the scene to report to my Commanding Officer, what I had seen; returned later to watch the bodies prepared for 'burial.' Over this snakelike line of nude carcasses of men, women and children, they threw kerosene. It took some hours to get the bodies properly soaked in the inflammable fluid; then they applied torches to the snaking stream of still, fetid flesh."

* * *

The young Indian firebrand, who couldn't wait in 1926, learned to wait the hard way, in January of 1942. He couldn't do anything else. Again, let's let him tell it.

AS I REMEMBER IT

By Don Bell

The enemy entered our city on New Year's Eve. General MacArthur had moved all armed troops out of Manila; had declared it an open city. But that didn't stop the bombings. On Christmas morning, enemy bombers had struck Santo Domingo Cathedral. Over 200 people were in the church; turning, in their hour of need, to the Lord, their God...where the bombs sought them out. They died, kneeling in prayer, on Christmas morning.

"That last day of the year, 1941, had been a busy one. My orders were to stay in the city so long as a single radio station remained on the air. Our men were destroying them at the last minute, to prevent their being used by the enemy. The last transmitter in the city went out at about four in the afternoon. That last program had ended with the words of the Lord's Prayer. And then, simultaneously, came the blackout of radio - and freedom.

"I had been directed to wait for Col. Harries, of MacArthur's G2 staff, who would pick me up and take me to Corregidor. Col. Harries died on the way back to Manila...killed by a demolition bomb on the road to the city. So according to orders, I waited. Waited through three New Year's days before our army could get back into the city.

"Of the thousands of us left behind that New Year's day, only a comparative handful of us lived to observe a New Year in freedom...Most of us died before liberation came. Maybe that's why those of us who did live through the death of freedom, feel so keenly the heritage and tradition of freedom which was created for us by others, preserved for us by others...so nearly lost to us by our own present day carelessness and lack of regard to our duties and responsibilities as American citizens. we who were the dispensibles, who lived through it, have the ability to compare.

* * *

Samuel Adams lived through it and he too had the ability to compare. "The People shouted," he wrote of their reaction to the Stamp Act of 1765. He led the Colonies in complete resistance "to this total infringement of the rights of free subjects." Within months he was able to write that "There is not a man who dares to put this Act into execution!"

And lest some believe that Sam's palsied hands bespoke weakness to the cause, his dog Queue (tail) was carefully trained to bite only Tories - which he did - frequently.

If you should stand today on Penn's Hill in Quincy, Massachusetts, you will be standing where Abigail Adams, John Adams' wife, stood and watched the British burn Charlestown and heard the cannon roar at the Battle of Bunker Hill. You can walk the same granite rocks that knew Abigail's footsteps and climb the same long slope to the hilltop from the Adams' family farm called "Braintree." You might even imagine yourself beside Abby on that fiery day of burning, when she snatched up seven-year-old John Quincy Adams and ran toward the ominous rumbling that filled the heated air.

The little boy never forgot the horror of that rising smoke and flame, though he lived to be 80 and like his father, John Adams, became our Nation's president. (John, Abby's husband, was our second and John Quincy was our sixth).

It was June 17, 1775. Let us read Abigail's own words penned the following afternoon to her husband, then serving as a delegate to the Second Continental Congress in Philadelphia.

* * *

"The day; perhaps the decisive Day is come on which the fate of America depends," she wrote. "Charlestown is laid in ashes. The Battle began upon our entrenchments upon Bunkers Hill, a Saturday morning about 3 o'clock and has not ceased yet...May we be supported and sustained in the dreadful conflict..."

To Abigail, the meaning of the struggle she had witnessed was clear. Only two months before, the first hot blood of combat had seeped into the ground of Lexington and Concord. Now open war was burying all hope of reconciliation, and sensible women might well ponder the cost of challenging the might of the British Empire.

As for Abigail and John, their sacrifice had already begun in the first of many separations the Revolution would bring. How painful these were we know from the ardent words that fill their voluminous flow of letters preserved in the Adams Family Correspondence. Yet both willingly denied themselves for the cause that lawyer Adams had served with brilliant dedication since Massachusetts first resisted Parliament's hated Stamp and Tea Acts. Nor was Abigail merely reflecting the politics of her man.

"There is a Lady at the Foot of Penns Hill," Adams wrote proudly to a friend, "who obliges me...with clearer and fuller Intelligence, than I can get from a whole Committee of Gentlemen."

Abigail and John Adams were a great example of a patriotic team yoked together for their country's sake, not always harmoniously. While John served in the Continental Congress, his wife wrote "Letters From Home" which proved a potent weapon in the struggle for liberty. Thus she kept her husband abreast of events in and around British-held Boston. Sharp with details and outspoken on principles, she sent John news of every troop movement - otherwise hard to come by.

John twitted Abigail for being impatient with his legal tactics. He said she was "Fiery as a young grenadier!"

Her answer came swiftly, "While you are proclaiming peace and good will...you insist on proclaiming an absolute power over wives!"

"Even weamin had firelocks," wrote a British soldier ruefully of a sniping that took heavy toll of the Redcoats on the road back from Lexington and Concord. "One was seen to fire a blunderbus between her father and husband, from their windows."

"Handy Betty" the Blacksmith, born Elizabeth Hager in Boston, was noted for repairing rebel muskets, including captured British cannon.

"Mad Anne Bailey," white squaw of the Kanawha in Western Virginia, served as patriot scout and Indian fighter. A superb horsewoman. she scoured the frontier in buckskin breeches, recruiting Liberty Men as she rode headlong.

"These feminine firebrands were known as "Patriots in Petticoats."

And it is true that there were disloyal American women who consorted with the enemy, but even the honest loyalist women despised them and the act of consorting was called "Taking Scarlet Fever."

Elizabeth Hutchinson Jackson, Andy's mother, traveled 160 miles across South Carolina to nurse sick and wounded rebels confined to the hell-hold of a British prison ship anchored in Charleston Harbor. She caught the fever that took her life in 1781, leaving to her son an undying loyalty to her beloved country and its cause.

* * *

George Washington also was best described by Abigail Adams after she met him in July of 1775. He had just taken command of the army in Cambridge. "The one half was not told me," she wrote John, "of his dignity with ease...modesty marks every line and feture (sic) of his face."

Indeed, many felt the same way about the Father of our Country and chose to follow him to their deaths only 15 months later.

He and his troops of the bloody feet, starved and frozen, crossed the Delaware River on Christmas night of 1776, to surprise Britain's mercenaries, so confidently camped across the water in Trenton, N.J. The victory was a resounding one but the price - death - still lingers. There were 21 of General Washington's men killed, only one identified, the rest among the Nation's first Unknown Soldiers.

In price paid, let us not forget Martha, George's beloved wife, whose heart reached out to sick and wounded enlisted men whose bloody foot-prints stained the snow-packed roads.

"I never in my life knew a woman, so busy from early morning until late at night." Thus spake her lady companion, who accompanied her from one difficult task to another.

Mercy Otis Warren Abby's equal in revolutionary writing, wrote her in April of 1776: "If you want to hear more of this lady's character, I will tell you what I think...her affability, candor and gentleness ... qualify her ...to sweeten the cares of the hero and smooth the rugged scenes of war."

Only once, during the eight long years of fighting, were the Washingtons together in their own home. Ironically, Martha lost her son, John Paul Custis, at the last battle, the Battle of Yorktown.

She often remarked in after life, that it had been her fortune to "Hear the first cannon at the opening and the last at the closing" of all the revolution's campaigns.

Have you counted the cost - will you give whatever is required?

Let me tell you the price they paid.

At the Battle of Yorktown, Thomas Nelson, Jr., quietly gave General Washington permission to open fire upon his beautiful home. He urged this be done. He died homeless and bankrupt. You see, General Cornwallis had taken over the Nelson home for his headquarters.

Francis Lewis also had his home and properties destroyed. The enemy jailed his beloved wife and she died in a few months.

John Hart was driven from his wife's bedside as she lay dying. Their 13 children fled for their lives. For a year he lived in forests and caves, returning after the war, only to find his wife dead and his children vanished. He died shortly of exhaustion and a broken heart.

Morris and Livingston suffered similar fates.

What kind of men were they?

24 were lawyers and jurists. 11 were merchants. 9 were farmers and large plantation owners. Men of means and well educated; but they signed the Declaration of Independence, knowing full well that the penalty would be death if they were captured. They signed, standing tall, straight and unwavering. They pledged: "For the support of this Declaration, with a firm reliance on the protection of Divine Providence, we mutually pledge to each other, our lives, our fortunes, and our sacred honor."

"For the eyes of the Lord are over the righteous, and His ears are open unto their prayers; but the face of the Lord is against them that do evil. And who is he that will harm you, if ye be followers of that which is good? But and if ye suffer for righteousness' sake, happy are ye: and be not afraid of their terror, neither be troubled;" (I Peter 3: 12,13,14).

Grim and unrelenting, isn't it? Our history. Even so, I remind you that our ancestors were noted for their humor. So I leave you with a sip and a grin from Molly Pitcher. She was actually Margaret Corbin, who lost her parents to an Indian raid and married John Corbin when she was 21. She habitually followed her husband into battle, helping to prepare his cannon for firing - swabbing out the bore and ramming down the ammunition. One day, after working feverishly to keep their own cannon going, an enemy shot passed directly between her legs, carrying away all the lower parts of her petticoats. Looking down with apparent unconcern, she told John that it was...

"Lucky that it didn't pass a little higher!"

Thirty-five years ago, a tiny firebrand of four recognized the greatness that we have all come to know and trust, proved to be a surprising young Patriot in Petticoats:

Hutchinson, Kans.

January 16, 1951

Mr. Don Bell,

Station KWBW,

Dear Mr. Bell, the following will prove that we are faithful listeners to your broadcasts:

Today my daughter Vicki, age 4, came into the house complaining of the strong winds. I replied that there was nothing I could do about it. She said:

"Well, why don't you call up Don Bell...or else God...only He doesn't have a telephone."

With that she went out and slammed the door.

Sincerely, Mrs. G.A. Corcoran, 1334 Plaza Way.

As the Revolution took hold and led first to war and finally to independence, the personal importance of the firebrands faded. But the potent ring of their words, the ideals and yearnings to which they gave voice, remain a force to be reckoned with. As Adams declared in 1772, "Where there is a spark of patriotic fire, we will enkindle it."

The point is - will we?

Year Thirty-Three.....Number Twenty-Eight.....July 18, 1986

HOW OUR AMERICAN GESTAPO GETS ITS MAN

When we first heard the news we wondered why US District Judge Joyce Green had suddenly, unexpectedly, illegally and arbitrarily reversed her own ruling and ordered Congressman George Hansen to report within 48 hours at the Petersburg, Va., prison camp to serve a sentence that had been delayed for more than two years. We could find no satisfactory reason for this act. Who had pressured the judge to countermand her own ruling?

It was Lawrence Patterson, editor and publisher of A Monthly Lesson in Criminal Politics who gave the best answer. He reminded his readers that, during the week of June 23rd the US Senate was to hear testimony on IRS abuses and on the Ethics in Government Law under which Hansen had been sentenced. If seven times Congressman Hansen were free that week he would certainly be allowed to testify and, said Mr. Patterson, "It is obvious the banks that control our government did not (could not) allow George Hansen to testify. To prevent it, they pressured a federal judge to have him picked up and imprisoned on 48 hours notice in violation of his constitutional rights." There was yet another danger: Anything Hansen might say to the Senators could jeopardize and have a negative effect on the new tax bill which the Big Bankers favored, but which had not yet been approved by the Senate at that time. In addition, insisted Mr. Patterson, "Ronald Reagan's closest friend in government, Ed Meese, is clearly responsible for the pressure on US District Judge Joyce Green to abruptly lock up George Hansen with only 48 hours notice. (So) Judge Green suddenly reversed her own two day decision to allow Rep. Hansen freedom pending appeal. On June 18th she abruptly ordered Hansen to report Friday June 20th to federal prison in Petersburg, Virginia."

Despite probably more serious violations by any number of Senators and Congressmen, George Hansen is the only public figure ever to be prosecuted under the Ethics in Government Act of 1978. Example: Representative Geraldine Ferraro was obviously guilty of violations of this Ethics Act, but was never charged, was allowed instead to continue her campaign for the high position of Vice President of the United States.

Patterson's article from which we've quoted appears in the July 31st issue of A Monthly Lesson in Criminal Politics (P.O.Box 37812, Cincinnati, Ohio 45222). He concludes with this statement: "We join, then, the Soviet Union, Poland, East Germany, Czechoslovakia, and Red China with nationally-known political prisoners. Anatolle Sharanski is the most famous ex-political prisoner of the USSR, and George Hansen will now become the big bankers' leading prisoner!...Make sure the other newsletter publishers that you subsidize discuss this case. Should they fail to do so, you may wish to object to their silence!"

It isn't often in America these days that a public official will go to prison for defending his country against its own government. So, lest we forget, let's recall the real reason for Congressman George Hansen's incarceration as a political prisoner.

During his 14 years of service to his constituents in Idaho, he learned of what the Internal Revenue Service was doing to some of them. He investigated and became the one outstanding (indeed the only) ranking elected official who dared to publicly condemn the IRS, which he calls the American Gestapo. He wrote a book, To Harass Our People, which became a best seller among patriots. The book was first published in 1980, and that's when the IRS and the Big Bankers began their attempts to destroy him. In his book Hansen pointed out that "The people of the United States are afraid. They are frightened by this runaway arm of government which has powers that no business and no other government agency would dare to claim or use." He wrote:

"Only IRS can attack 100 percent of a taxpayer's wage, salary, and/or property. Only IRS can invade the privacy of a citizen without court process of any kind. Only IRS can seize property without a court order. Only IRS can force a citizen to try his case in a special court governed by the IRS. Only IRS can compel production of documents, records and other material without a court case being in existence. Only IRS can with impunity publish a citizen's debt to the IRS. Only IRS can legally without a court order subject citizens to electronic surveillance. Only IRS can force waiver of Statute of Limitations and other citizen rights through power of arbitrary assessment. Only IRS uses extra-legal coercion. Threats to witnesses to examine their taxes regularly produces whatever evidence the IRS dictates. Only IRS is free to violate a written agreement with a citizen. Only IRS uses reprisals against citizens and public officials alike. Only IRS can take property on the basis of conjecture. Only IRS is free to maintain lists of citizens guilty of no crime, for the purpose of harassing and monitoring them. Only IRS publicly admits that its purpose is to instill fear into the citizenry as a technique for performing its function. Only IRS personnel are immune to law suits no matter how illegal, criminal, or outrageous their conduct against taxpayers may be. The IRS is an extraordinary example of the age-old adage that 'the end justifies the means'."

Rep. Hansen backed up his charges with specific instances in which people had been harassed by the IRS. And the IRS immediately began harassing him. In his reelection campaign of 1976 the IRS had no valid charge against him, so they "leaked" the information to the media to the effect that he had been late in filing his tax return eight years earlier, in 1968. Actually he had filed his return in February of that year and had received a substantial refund. This ruse failing, the IRS then launched a whispering campaign throughout his district, and certain people began asking, "Does George Hansen pay his income tax?" Despite the efforts of the IRS, Hansen was reelected, but by a small majority. Never relenting, the IRS discovered that in 1984 Hansen had not reported certain financial dealings. This had nothing to do with tax matters and involved some financial dealings by his wife, which Hansen was assured did not need to be reported. Nevertheless, out came this Ethics in Government Act of 1978, an indictment, trial, and conviction. Hansen not only appealed, he fought back by organizing VOGUE (Victims of Government United Everywhere), and by creating The New Continental Congress, which represents "a nationwide resurgence of citizen commitment and action to protect the Constitution, stop tyranny, and restore sound fiscal policies." Its address: New Continental Congress, 400 First St., N.W., Suite 809, Washington, D.C. 20001. If you want to write to Congressman Hansen, his present address is: Petersburg Camp, George Hansen, P.O.Box 1000, Petersburg, VA 23804-1000.

If there were only Congressman Hansen enduring the hatred and vengeance of the IRS, we wouldn't bother to write an entire report on the subject. But there's the matter of a fellow newsletter publisher, Franklin Sanders who publishes under the name The Moneychanger. Sanders is similar to what we read of the members of that original Committee of Correspondence which kept patriots informed on what was going on before and during the Revolutionary War. Sanders has published information to aid individuals who have become victims of certain government agencies. Example:

Paul DeFosses had worked for the IRS for some 20 years. He resigned from the service in disgust (as have so many other former IRS agents). DeFosses deplored the way the IRS treated citizens, and even its own employees who were likewise harassed and "punished" if they refused to carry out what they considered to be illegal orders by the IRS. So he organized the National Coalition of IRS Whistleblowers, which is dedicated to exposing the outrageous and illegal conduct of the IRS. Out of the Whistleblowers organization came the suppressed news about the IRS strategic plan, Document No. 6941, which details the agency's plans to complete the establishment of a taxpayer profile for every citizen in America. Such a profile would consist mostly of non-tax information, which is said to help the service in determining the "income" of every citizen, and otherwise act as Big Brother, or the American Gestapo if you prefer Rep. Hansen's name for the IRS.

Among his other important reports, The Moneychanger got in touch with the head of the Whistleblowers, and a full report concerning Document 6941 was published by Franklin Sanders. (We quoted much of that information in a DBR). The disclosure was apparently so embarrassing to Roscoe Egger, the IRS commissioner, that he recently resigned. The name of the new commissioner evades our memory at the moment.

Anyway, this exposure by The Moneychanger must have caused more than embarrassment to the IRS chieftains. Because, on June 30, 1986 we received a note from Mr. Sanders, explaining something of what had happened to his family as a result of IRS action. We asked if we could publish his letter and he wrote back saying, and we quote:

"July 8, 1986 - Yes, you are welcome to publish it, with or without names. The reason these ROACHES can do what they do is because they work in the DARKNESS. They hate & fear the light upon their deeds. That light is really the only weapon we have, other than WORDS to throw at them, notwithstanding of course the power of God who has put all our tears in a bottle and will vindicate his own justice in his own time." Then there was a footnote which is relevant: "Can't remember if I mentioned it in any letter, but Susan, mother-of-six-already, is 2 months pregnant with #7. I am not a Catholic." The importance of this footnote will become apparent as we quote the original letter of June 30, sans certain personal and irrelevant sentences:

"Dear Mr. & Mrs. Bell:...

"I left town for about a month on May 23rd to write a book. I could not get anything done here: too many interruptions. So I took three of the six children with me and headed out to a secluded place, along with my computer. God was very good to me and I managed to finish the novel in about 4 weeks. It should print up to about 230 pages.

"But while I was gone our government friends were not absent. They came looking for me one day when only Susan and our 2 year old were here...She told them I was out of town and would be back the 1st of the month.

"The next night 3 carloads of IRS armed thugs followed her home. She had the presence of mind to leave and go to a friend's house. The next day 4 carloads of armed thugs staked out the office. I guess they thought that 115 pound woman and 3 children 11, 9, & 2, might take all 8 or 12 of them to wrestle to the ground. The next day they served her a grand jury summons. And of course they had one for me, too.

"Susan is much stronger than I am: she never told me about all this until I got home. She knew that I would not have been able to work if I had known about it. Funny, I keep praying for God to raise up MEN faithful and bold in this country. He answers me by raising up a WOMAN bolder and more faithful than 9/10 of the men in this land. Praise His Name! (signed) Franklin."

We have yet to learn what the outcome will be in this particular act of harassment by IRS. But we do know from personal experience that there comes strength - and a special blessing - when two stand together as man and wife, as family, as one against the enemy. We also know that there is an attempt on the part of government to silence or control all newsletters and other publications that form what's left of the free press in America. Just as there must be state control of education, and of religion, there must be state control of all forms of communication. And in all of this, IRS plays the part of the State Police.

But there has come a change. Much light has been spread in the 1980s. Two books have been written, each thoroughly documented, which prove that the Thirteenth, the Income Tax Amendment, was never ratified by a sufficient number of states, and therefore is not a law! Judges for the most part still refuse to accept the fact that the IRS is acting illegally, and tax courts continue to operate. But the word is getting around. Last year more people than ever refused to file their 1040s. With the news of the computerized profiles of every citizen that the IRS was creating, came more resistance. Then the computers acted up, masses of returns were delayed, others were "lost" by IRS employees. And as people continue to get the word, there comes the hope that our American Gestapo can be replaced by a legal, honest, and Constitutional tax-gathering agency that citizens can support.

In the Communist Manifesto of 1848, Marx and Engels proposed a "heavy progressive or graduated income tax" as an instrument to destroy the middle class (bourgeoisie). In his June 1986 issue of The Moneychanger Franklin Sanders took each of the ten points of the Communist Manifesto and showed how they had been incorporated into and become a part of our government. He ended the article by writing after the manner of Marx:

"Let the elitist classes tremble at a middle class revolution. It is we who produce in freedom and peace the wealth of the world. The bourgeoisie have nothing to lose but their chains....."

"Finally, my brethren, be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might. Put on the whole armour of God, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil." (Ephesians 6: 10, 11).

SOUTH AFRICA - REVOLUTION AND BETRAYAL

A similar situation could have occurred in the world before the fall of Babel. But in the world as we know it, only in this age of instantaneous telecommunication has it become possible for the whole world to gang up on one nation and tell it what it must do to destroy itself. All the nations of the world, regardless of their cultural, religious, economic and political differences, have combined and cooperated in the plan to Communize the Republic of South Africa. Be these coalescing nations Communist, Socialist, Monarchist, Oligarchic, Democratic, Corporate Socialist, Welfarist, Tribalist, or what have you, they all are determined to have a hand in the destruction of the last remaining stable government on the African Continent. First they did it to a Republic once called Rhodesia, the result being a Communist Dictatorship. Now comes the Republic of South Africa's turn.

The now faltering government of South Africa has been able to resist this worldwide onslaught so successfully that the leaders of the West have decided to create a crisis and force South Africa to do its bidding and collaborate with the Communists, or else. This regardless of the cost in life, liberty and property. Sanctions are demanded, and because Margaret Thatcher and Ronald Reagan have stood up against this worst possible action, they find their respective Parliament and Congress at war with them.

Those Congressmen who rave and rant against Apartheid should recall the treatment an all white government gave the native American Indians. Treaties were made only to be broken. As the Indians resisted, they were rounded up and herded at gunpoint on long treks to unfamiliar "homelands" called Reservations. Those Reservations still exist, even as Congress demands the end of similar reservations in South Africa. And they who demand an immediate end of second and third class citizenship for blacks in South Africa should recall how many long years it took in the United States from the Civil War till now, with some Blacks still demanding better than equal treatment as reparations for alleged wrongs committed decades ago. Let Congressmen and Senators first cast the beams out of their own eyes before they make war with a friendly nation that endures the same pains and sufferings which our nation once endured. And for those who speak of the awful treatment of Blacks in South Africa, let them first think of the inhuman treatment given the millions who died in Russia, Ukraine, Poland, Mainland China, Cambodia, Afghanistan, and in the mini-nations of South Africa where tribes murder tribes and there is no peace. Let critics recall how whites try to get out of the USSR while Blacks try to get into South Africa. Furthermore, let them consider what has been done in South Africa by its own government without the outside help and pressure of foreign governments. Don McAlvany is a keen observer of conditions in South Africa. He recently revisited the country and then issued the following report:

"The 'winds of change' are blowing rapidly throughout southern Africa. In South Africa, apartheid has been largely dismantled: 1) influx control has been abolished; 2) the pass laws are gone; 3) the mixed marriage laws have been repealed; 4) property rights have been granted to Blacks; 5) public accommodations have been integrated; 6) South African citizenship rights have been granted to Blacks; 7) equal pay for equal work has become a reality; 8) a tri-cameral government with chambers for Coloreds, Indians and Whites will soon give way to a quadra-cameral government with a chamber for Blacks; and the government has accepted political participation (not domination) and power sharing for Blacks.

"But still the governments, the media and the liberals throughout the West declare these changes to be 'cosmetic', or 'too little, too late', and demand a total capitulation of the government to the African National Congress and some nebulous concept called 'black majority rule.' This writer has long warned South African leaders that they could totally abolish apartheid tomorrow and the West would not believe it; they could make Zulu Chief Mangosuthu Buthelezi the state president the next day and the West would reject him as an 'Uncle Tom' or a 'white puppet,' just as they did the pro-western black Zimbabwean Prime Minister Able Muzorewa in 1979. The West has a 'death wish' - it will be satisfied with nothing less than a black, ANC, Marxist government in Pretoria, to complement the black Marxist dictatorships which the West supports in Mozambique, Zimbabwe, Angola, Zambia, Tanzania, Uganda, etc. As the saying goes, 'whom the gods will destroy, they first make mad.'

"Meanwhile, the Soviet buildup in southern Africa, preparatory to the final onslaught against South Africa is continuing to accelerate. With over 140,000 Soviet bloc troops in Angola, Zimbabwe and Mozambique (including Russian, Cuban, East German, North Korean, Libyan, Bulgarian PLO and Angolan MPLA), and massive arms deliveries to 21 sub-Saharan African states, the US Department of Defense believes [and admits-Ed.] that the military balance of power has shifted to the Soviets' favor... Billions in Soviet weapons and about 65,000 Soviet, Cuban and other east bloc troops are currently massing in southeastern Angola for an attack against the pro-Western guerrilla forces of Jonas Savimbi...If UNITA should fall, Soviet tanks could rumble through Namibia, Botswana, Zambia and Zaire within the next 18-24 months."

We have been quoting from an important issue of The McAlvany Intelligence Adviser (July, 1986), which can be obtained by writing to P.O.Box 39810, Phoenix, AZ 85069). Don has given permission for us to reprint his entire report, but we can only quote parts of it and advise that you write and obtain the complete 14-page report.

The writer analyzes the Soviet-backed revolution in South Africa and the efforts of the US government and the media to overthrow that beleaguered country, and we continue to quote.

"One of the elements of the Soviet grand strategy for world domination is to launch a globally orchestrated media campaign against a targeted government or its leader, portraying the target as a violator of human rights, corrupt, racist, perpetrator of election fraud, etc., and not worthy of US or Western support. Recent years have seen such global media campaigns against the Thieu government in Vietnam, the Shah in Iran, Somoza in Nicaragua, Marcos in the Philippines and today General Noriega in Panama, and South Africa...In this regard the media always makes the national liberation group, which is trying to overthrow the targeted government, appear to be benign, righteous liberators, fighting for the rights of the oppressed, the abused and the downtrodden. The media buzzword is to call these revolutionaries 'dissidents.' Khomeini, the Sandinistas, and the African National Congress

(ANC) were and are all portrayed in this light. Never (or seldom) are the Communist or Soviet connections of the liberation group cited by the press - these are played down or totally ignored. In the case of South Africa, the incredible necklacing atrocities of the ANC/UDF revolutionaries, where over 600 Blacks have been brutally tortured and burned to death with burning tires around their necks, are totally ignored. Soviet flags flying at funerals in black townships around South Africa are totally ignored. Legitimate moderate black leaders and their sentiments in favor of the ongoing reforms against disinvestment are totally ignored. The numerous and genuine racial reforms which are taking place are totally ignored....In the US the propaganda is more pervasive, more distorted, more intense than in any such campaign this writer has observed in over 20 years...The insanity which rules the United States and much of the West today in the stampede for sanctions is grim testimony to the success of the Soviets and the Soviet orchestrated western media in manipulating western public opinion and governments into an action which is destructive of their own national interests. The Soviets have slaughtered a million and a half men, women and children in Afghanistan in recent years and there is no uproar in the western press; no calls for sanctions, no thought of halting Soviet Aeroflot flights to the US. Black African dictators have slaughtered millions of Blacks in sub-Sahara Africa since 1970 and the western press and leaders ignore it. Are we so blind or decadent in the UN and the West that we can no longer tell the difference between good and evil? Are we so brainwashed by evil men that we believe evil is good and that good is evil? The current western betrayal of South African Blacks and Whites to a Communist revolution is in this writer's view simply more evidence of the accelerating suicide of the West... This writer has long pondered why wealthy liberal businessmen like David Rockefeller, Armand Hammer, Harry Oppenheimer, Tiny Roland and Gavin Relly seem to have no aversion to dealing with communist governments. Maybe they cut 'sweetheart deals' with those governments in return for a cooperative, progressive attitude (as Armand Hammer certainly has with Russia for decades). Or maybe there is a clue in the answer this writer received about eighteen months ago from the managing director of a large multibillion dollar South African conglomerate. This writer asked this business leader if his company's mining operations had not been hurt by the communist takeover in Zimbabwe. His answer was memorable. He replied, 'Oh, but you don't understand, we've never had it so good. The raw materials are still there; the world markets are still there; but the labor is much cheaper - and we've never made such good profits'."

In this last paragraph the writer, Don McAlvany gives a part of the answer. But he does not go so far as to say that the Monopoly Capitalists and the International Communists are partners in a conspiracy to establish a worldwide socialist economy under the New International Economic Order that was written by the head of the Socialist International, is promoted by the United Nations, the World and National Councils of Churches, and other liberal organizations, and is sponsored and financed by such organizations as the TLC, CFR, OECD, Bilderbergers, Club of Rome, et al.

We call it a Conspiracy, and it began long before Lenin and Trotsky were financed by the International Bankers in their conquest of Russia. In 1922 Lenin, while still trying to Bolshevize all of Russia, explained: "First of all, we have to stabilize the economy. Without equipment and machinery from the capitalist countries, we could not hope to finish this task in the short time available to us. The most significant circumstance in ensuring our continued existence...was the commencement of economic relations with the capitalist countries." Still later, when the US began giving aid to Western Europe, the USSR, and smaller nations, Stalin explained: "It is essential that the proletariat of the advanced countries should render real and prolonged aid to the backward nations of the world in their cultural and economic development. Unless such aid is forthcoming, it will be impossible to bring the various nations and peoples within a single world economic system that is so essential to the triumph of socialism."

There lies the key! The aim of the Monopoly Capitalists and the Communists is identical: a worldwide, socialist economic system. In accordance with Hegelian Dialectics, there had to be an antithesis (USSR), to challenge the thesis (USA) in order to create the synthesis (The Global Economic Order and World Government). So, an enemy had to be created and Dr. Antony Sutton wrote: "The United States and her NATO allies have constructed their own enemy: Communism." We again quote Dr. Sutton because he is the greatest and most reliable researcher on this subject: "The blunt truth is that trade with the Soviet Union from 1917 to the present has built the Free World an enemy of the first order...There has been a continuous, albeit concealed, alliance between international political capitalists and international revolutionary socialists - to their mutual benefit. (Emphasis added).

In defining a conspiracy we are reminded of the words of Abraham Lincoln: "When we see a lot of framed timbers, different portions of which we know have been gotten out at different times and places and by different workmen, and when we see these timbers joined together and see that they exactly make the frame of a house or a mill, all the lengths and proportions of the different pieces exactly adapted to their respective pieces, and not a piece too many or too few, not omitting even scaffolding, or if a single piece be lacking, we can see the place in the frame exactly fitted and prepared to yet bring such piece in; in such case, we find it impossible not to believe that they all understood one another from the beginning, and all worked upon a common plan or draft drawn up before the first lick was struck."

South Africa is being reshaped so it will fit exactly into the socialist mold prepared by that "alliance between international political capitalists and international revolutionary socialists - to their mutual benefit!" As Don McAlvany concluded, so shall we:

"In the final analysis the only thing which can save South Africa from a bloody communist hell is South Africans themselves (and the good Lord above). If they hang together they can survive - if they panic under the incredible, awesome pressure against them, they will perish. It does seem at this point, however, that they could use a bit of help from their friends in America. Think about it, pray about it, and then do something!"

WERE THESE THE ACTS OF GOD?

Government officials like to count things in terms of dollars. So they started at two billion plus. That was the initial estimate of the loss to farmers, stock and dairymen in the stricken parts of Virginia, Kentucky, the Carolinas, Alabama, Georgia, Mississippi and Florida. There were long weeks of killing heat, months of withering drought. Rivers and lakes were shrinking or disappearing. Towns were running out of water. Livestock perished from the heat, or the lack of water and food. People began to die. Even the land began to die as the once rich soil became dry dust. A wonderful way of life was withering away. More farmers had to give up. Farmers in other parts of the country rushed thousands of tons of hay to those in the Southeast who were trying to hang on. But it wouldn't be enough to carry them over until the next harvest. And the farmers who sent the hay were depleting their own needed feed to last through the winter months. Farmers' already suffering unbearably would suffer even more. And as a result so would everybody else, through higher prices or even lack of foodstuffs to buy.

And of course, people began to wonder. The heat and the drought and the withered land added to the burden of debt. Could these be Acts of God, or something that came about as a result of the works of Man? The wondering would increase if one thought of the unusual earthquakes that were happening in the Pacific States. A series of quakes here and there, and then suddenly on July 29, seven different quakes were recorded in seven different parts of California in one day. None of them very dangerous in themselves. But scientists warned that they could be part of "an increase in seismic activity leading to a super-quake." Drought, heat, quakes; could these be natural happenings? Or could it be the works of governments experimenting in the field of weather modification. Or could it be someone using weather as a weapon of war?

Back in 1970 Viking Press published a book written by Zbigniew Brzezinski called Between Two Ages: America's Role in the Technonetronic Era. This was before the man associates call Zbig, a protege of David Rockefeller, created and directed the Trilateral Commission, and before he became President Jimmy Carter's National Security Advisor. In that book Zbig wrote: "In addition to improved rocketry, multi-missiles, and more powerful and more accurate bombs, future developments may well include automated or manned space warships, deep-sea installations, chemical and biological weapons, death rays and still other forms of warfare - even the weather may be tampered with...Techniques of weather modification could be employed to produce prolonged periods of drought or storm, thereby weakening a nation's capacity and forcing it to accept the demands of the competitor (emphasis added)." Shortly after Zbig became a government official, the Trilateral Commission issued a report titled Collaboration With Communist Countries in Managing Global Problems." Nine areas of global concern were listed, two of which were areas of weather modification and earthquake control. And at this point in time the USA and the USSR did begin collaborating in matters of weather control. But let's go back in time.

It could be said that it all began with the works of a prodigal genius named Nikola Tesla who was born in a part of what is now Yugoslavia but came to America at an early age and, among other amazing things, invented alternating current as a means of transmitting electricity over great distances in order to bring it into the homes, farms and factories of the United States and much of the rest of the world. Among his hundreds of developments, Tesla experimented and developed plans in the area of weather modification and earthquake control. However, our Eastern Establishment and its commercialized media rejected Tesla, and most of his inventions and discoveries were never developed. But the Soviets took Tesla seriously, especially in matters of weather and earthquake control.

In the 1930s Tesla discovered that by the transmission of extremely low frequency radio waves (ELF) weather conditions could be altered; even objects such as buildings could be destroyed at great distances from the transmitter. He never completed these studies, but it seems that the Soviets found ways to aim and direct such waves. In August 1964 the CIA prepared a classified working paper entitled A Study of Climatological Research as it Pertains to Intelligence Problems. The study was later declassified, but all references to weather control had been deleted. Possibly as a result of this original report, the subject was discussed at a summit conference in Vladivostok; Gerald Ford and Henry Kissinger representing the United States, Leonid Brezhnev heading the Soviet delegation. There it was suggested that the two powers collaborate in matters pertaining to weather control. Accordingly, in a plant near Chicago, under a federal grant of $3.5 million, the world's largest and most powerful electromagnet was built, loaded onto a giant US Air Force C-5 Galaxy, and flown to Russia where, on June 19, 1977, it was put into operation in what was supposedly a joint US-USSR weather modification program. The Carter Administration then arranged for a $13 million computer, needed for weather research, to be flown to Moscow.

It was arranged that this "joint effort" be conducted entirely in the USSR, where four extremely powerful ELF, low frequency transmitters were set up in strategic parts of the Soviet Union. However, the Pentagon did show some concern over this arrangement, because on page 12064 of the Federal Register, Vol. 44, No. 44, of Monday, March 5, 1979, there was a significant statement from the Department of Defense concerning weather modification. It read in part: "The Air Force is amending its regulations by adding a new part entitled 'weather modification.' The new part establishes policy, procedure, and reporting requirements for weather modification acti-

This does happen; but rarely, thank the Lord. You see, our efforts to restore our Christian American Constitutional Republic are a kind of Mom and Pop Operation. Or, as our grandchildren would say, a Nanny and Pop-Pop Production. We take a clean white sheet of paper, fill it up with little black characters and call it a Report. Now, from the time that clean sheet goes through the press and is delivered to you, not another human hand has touched it until you take it out of the envelope. Except that our daughter or her daughter usually comes over to help with the stuffing. But that's more of a family chat than a chore. There's no other human backup, just Nanny and Pop-Pop, and electronic and mechanical things sometimes get out of kilter. So that's why you didn't receive a Don Bell Report last week. There wasn't one to receive. We hope you don't ask for a rebate, and we'll try to keep ourselves in better health and our equipment working as it should. Sorry, and thank you.

Meanwhile, on May 18, 1978, US Secretary of State Cyrus Vance signed a formal agreement with representatives of the USSR not to use weather modification activities against each other in case of war. This agreement was concluded under the auspices of the UN and was signed at Geneva. But, so much for formalities; let's talk about realities:

In October 1976 the entire world's short wave radio and radar systems were disrupted by an unusual kind of interference. After extensive investigation, it was found that the disturbance was pinpointed at an installation near Riga, Latvia. Official protests were made, there was admission that a low frequency experiment had been conducted, but now the experiments were concluded and it wouldn't happen again. But it did happen again, in December of the same year, and the effects were much worse. Meteorologists reported some kind of "blocking effect which extended down the West Coast of America, down the East Coast of America, and in Europe along the Russo-Polish border northward to Finland. These blocks, along with other strange disturbances such as sonic booms of enormous power heard along the East Coast of America, stopped the normal circulation of weather patterns (as has happened in the US in 1986). Snow fell in Miami, Florida; floods swept Europe, blizzards and huge snow storms paralyzed much of the US and Canada. Qualified observers reckoned that the Soviets were trying to push the cold, Arctic air mass that is over Siberia in the winter months, toward North America. Meteorologists pointed out that the weather should have moved from west to east. But by regulating the movement of electrical particles in the air (as Tesla explained), the direction of jet streams could be altered. As a result, one observer commented, "For the last three years we have suffered the worst winter weather in US history."

Of course, weather control is but one part of the program. In our Report of May 27, 1983, we wrote: "Headquartered at Ottawa and having some support from the Canadian government is an organization called Planetary Association for Clean Energy (PACE) headed by Dr. Andrew Michrowski. PACE has been observing the Soviet attempts to convert weather control into a war weapon for the past seven years. PACE explains that by creating 'an extremely low frequency magnetic field whose wavelengths are equivalent to that of the terrestrial diameter' there are developed what are called 'standing waves.' If these waves were visible, they would resemble gigantic oval bubbles lying on the earth's surface. Part of the bubble would penetrate deep into the earth, perhaps to the very center of the planet. The upper part of the bubble would extend upward into the ionosphere, perhaps even higher. The result: jet streams are diverted, radio signals in certain Hertzian cycles are interfered with (the hams call it woodpeckering), electrical equipment within the area affected would no longer work, transmitters might blow up, men's minds might be affected, and diseases such as leukemia could become epidemic. It seems that, since these electromagnetic emissions are transmitted and pulsed at frequencies very similar to the frequencies of human brain waves, there is this actual danger to humankind, as well as to plants and the lower animals. Just how serious this latter danger may be is not yet known. But certainly more than earthquakes, tornadoes and floods are created by these low frequency emissions. And, in a very real sense, this weather war becomes an attack against life itself, and it has come about because both the USSR and the USA are cooperating - and at the same time competing - in this race toward weather control. It is comparable to the manner in which the USSR and the USA have cooperated, and at the same time competed, in the space race." Unquote).

An example of this Hegelian cooperating-and-yet-competing syndrome is explained in a May 29, 1986 issue of R.E. McMaster's newsletter The Reaper (P.O.Box 39026, Phoenix, AZ 85069. Weekly, $195 per year). After explaining the Tesla electromagnetic antigravity process, he writes:

"There are four significant US military installations in New Zealand: Kauri Point where there are transmitters and electronic research is carried on, Blenheim Station where the USAF operates an electronic high altitude research station, Tangimoana where a high frequency receiver is located...and the Bakernun Space Camera Center located at Mt. John. It was the link up between Mt. John and the New Zealand Russian embassy where Cathie (an independent research specialist) smelled a rat." There was a "harmonic relationship" between Mt. John and the Russian embassy which meant that any electronic activity carried out at Mt. John could be monitored with extreme efficiency by the Russians. Which was unusual in that it was deliberately planned that way. The United States gave the land in New Zealand to the Soviet Union so that it could locate its embassy at the perfect harmonic location. Therefore, the Soviets and the Americans were working together and at the same time competing with each other!

On May 27, 1983 we wrote: "If you are 'conspiracy-minded' (as we are), then perhaps you can visualize a possibly hypothetical situation where there is a power greater than both the powers of the governments of the USSR and the USA. If this de facto power desired to equalize the powers of these two governments in order to further the aims of the New World Order, then Nikola Tesla would provide an ideal means to that end. Tesla could become a 'non-person' in the United States while at the same time becoming a very important person in the Soviet Union. So, while Scientific USA ignored Tesla, Scientific USSR would investigate, experiment, develop, and perfect the 'weather war weapon.' This plus the fact that the USA would cooperate by giving the USSR great generators, computers, technological equipment and know-how, then simply stand by until the USSR began actually testing its weather weapons. Then Scientific American would suddenly be allowed to learn what had happened, and would begin trying to catch up." Unquote.) Hypothetical or not, this is what happened in weather control as well as in space control. The great danger this great power apparently ignores: the Soviets don't play fair. They'll bite the hand that feeds them every time. Considering the droughts, floods, heat waves, cold spells, earthquakes and tornadoes we've been suffering these last six years, we ask again: Are These Things The Acts of God?

TREASON IS THE REASON

In the United States the definition has remained the same since 1789: "Treason against the United States shall consist only in levying war against them, or in adhering to their enemies, giving them aid and comfort (emphasis added)." The definition has never changed, but the punishment for the act has sometimes been ignored. Notice that it is not imperative that the United States be at war with the "enemy" in the formal sense at the time the treason is committed. Extreme example: in 1949 Julius and Ethel Rosenberg were executed for giving atomic secrets to the Soviet. But as early as 1943 the President of the United States had given atomic secrets to the Russians. One act was called treason; the other act was ignored and kept secret until FDR's son James revealed the details of the giveaway in his book A Family Matter. Also, Major George Racey Jordan discovered that uranium and plans for constructing atomic bomb were being shipped to Russia secretly, and by our own government. But the act was concealed and never officially revealed. In September, 1981, four Americans were indicted for selling microwave tuners and receivers used for electric surveillance, computer systems and components to Communist East Germany. That was considered to be treason. At the same time the US Department of Commerce was approving the sale of similar items and it was not considered treason. In The Reaper, April 24, 1986, R.E.McMaster noted that "Presently over 150 Soviet weapon systems are based on US technology, which has been begged, borrowed, stolen or bought. ...95% of Soviet technology has come from the West." These were all sold or given to "the enemy." But if there was a Dept. of Commerce permit involved, it was not called treason. McMaster also notes that "As of August 1984, the following US multinational corporations had offices in and did business with Moscow." Then he lists more than 30 such multinationals, including Bank of America, Chase Manhattan, American Express, ARMO, General Electric, Occidental Petroleum, etc. They're all giving aid and comfort to America's enemy. And the Constitution calls it treason.

If the treason is committed by a person or persons without government permission, it's labeled treason. If it's done by the government or with the government's permission, it's called trade. David Rockefeller explained it in these words:

"...just because a country is technically called communist doesn't mean that a capitalist institution such as the Chase Bank can't deal with them on a mutually beneficial basis, and indeed we do deal with most of the so-called communist countries of the world on a basis that has worked out very well. I think for both of us. I personally don't see anything immoral or improper with our dealing with people with very diverse views, even if they conduct their affairs in a way that we might even find repugnant."

Committing treason to promote trade and to develop a New World Order, this seems to have become the role of our federal government, especially since the end of World War II. R.E.McMaster, Jr. labels it:

The USSR: Made by USA, Inc.

And he explains why we built the Soviet Union in these words:

"At the end of WWII, the United States was the world's undisputed supreme military power. Every other challenging country on the face of the earth had been devastated economically, militarily and/or by loss of life during the carnage of WWII. The ally of the US at that time, the USSR, was exhausted, militarily and economically. The loss of Soviet life was also enormous. Thus, at that time, the US had every opportunity to put an end to communism once and for all, as Patton and other leading US generals recommended.

"The elimination of communism, however, would not have been in keeping with the international plan to move the world toward a One World Order, allowing the eventual merging of the atheistic Soviet Union's socialistic bureaucracy with the USA's bureaucratic socialism, in line with the thesis (monopolistic debt capitalism) versus anti-thesis (communism) equaling the synthesis of Hegel's dialectic. For this reason then, Patton's army was told to stop its advance. The Soviets were allowed to capture Berlin, with all the horror, rape and pillage that followed. Berlin ended up a divided city. Next, to buttress the Soviet economy, when the victors divided the spoils at Yalta, the US gave Eastern Europe to the Soviet Union. Meanwhile, trainloads of Soviet freedom fighters and refugees were sent back to Russia by allied troops in sealed boxcars for sure execution by the Soviet communists. Some of these poor souls tried to slit their throats on rusty nails, rather than face the brutality of the communists.

"...At the end of WWII, an enemy of the United States had to be created to sustain the master socialistic, CIA, banking, State Department, military-industrial complex game plan. The US ally, at that time, the USSR, became the natural candidate to be transformed from a friend (?) into an enemy. The Soviet Union, an army that possessed a country, doing the bidding of its own bureaucratic elite, increased its efforts to bring about bureaucratic socialism. Meanwhile in the US, the population was slowly but peacefully being conditioned through the public school system, universities, seminaries, churches and the mass media to accept bureaucratic socialism. Small wonder then that we do not have perimeter defenses, a militia or a civil defense system in this country. Such is against the interests of the international planners.

"Too often we forget (or were never taught) that Soviet communism is a product of monopolistic Western debt capitalism. Karl Marx wrote Das Kapital in London. The communist revolution in 1917 was financed by New York and German banking interests. Lenin was reportedly a red-headed washed up Hollywood actor. Since 1921, Armand Hammer, chairman of the board of Occidental Petroleum Company, has had free access to top communist leaders and has traded consistently with the Soviet Union. Recently, General Electric, Dresser Industries and Caterpillar provided nearly all the technology for the Trans-Siberian pipeline. American banks, which have branch offices in the Soviet Union, include Chase Manhattan and Bank of America. Loans are also regularly made to Eastern Bloc countries. ...The sad truth is that the Soviet Union would probably fall flat on its face economically and militarily if it were not for the support given it both militarily and economically by the United States." (Quoted from The Reaper, P.O.Box 39026, Phoenix AZ 85069).

Just how much treason is involved when the members of an elite group persuade a government to create, nurture and develop another enemy government which has become a threat to the national security and the very existence of the originating government? Often quoted is the epigram attributed to Sir Arthur Harrington (1561-1610): "Treason doth never prosper, what's the reason? For if it prosper, none dare call it Treason." And there is the famous declaration made by Patrick Henry: "Caesar had his Brutus, Charles the First his Cromwell, and George the Third may profit by their example. If this be treason, make the most of it." And the thought follows, that if Washington, Henry and the rest of the Founding Fathers had lost, they would have been hanged as traitors. If the builders of their One World Order totally succeed, then we, like they, may earn the title and its punishment.

Which brings up the development of a new kind of treason against America, being committed by those who are promoting "the eventual merging of the atheistic Soviet Union's socialistic bureaucracy with the USA's bureaucratic socialism." Mrs. Charlotte T. Iserbyt calls it Ideological Treason. Mrs. Insebyt is a former official in the US Department of Education, is author of the book Back to Basics Reform...Or Skinnerian International Curriculum. Recently she wrote the following, which appeared in The Barbara M. Morris Report for July/August, 1986. We quote:

* * * * *

In 1980 President Reagan promised the American people that if elected, he would abolish the unconstitutional US Dept. of Education. Instead of abolishing the Department, his administration has not only increased funding for the controversial experimental labs and centers which strongly influence everything that goes on in America's classrooms, it has also allowed a national curriculum to loom on the horizon, while an international curriculum and international testing follow only a few steps behind. In addition, and of even greater significance, the administration has apparently decided to cooperate with a nation that not only a short time ago President Reagan referred to publicly as "The Evil Empire" - the Soviet Union - in the development of educational exchanges and software for elementary and secondary instruction.

How many Americans, irrespective of race, creed, or political persuasion, would approve of what is going on if they had access to the above information and its extensive official documentation? If the three projects referred to above were put to a national referendum, they would go down at the polls.

Conservatives in the US Dept. of Education under Secretary Terrel Bell were frustrated indeed over the lack of support they received from the White House when they tried to carry out the promises made to the American people prior to the Presidential election of 1980. All of these people, staunch Reaganauts, are now gone, having resigned in disgust or been fired. In retrospect, their concerns seem insignificant when compared to the President's signing at the November, 1985 Geneva Summit Meeting of an agreement between the United States Government and the Soviet Government, the same government that is so insensitive to human rights that it has reportedly used lethal toys to kill innocent Afghan children. One part of this agreement calls for cooperation in the development of computer courseware (curriculum) for elementary and secondary education. The administration has put Charles T. Wick, of the US Information Agency (USIA) in charge of this incredible project. The administration rightfully knew that giving it to Secretary of Education Bennett would have created such a storm of protest that the whole country would have become aware of what was going on.

Six weeks prior to the Geneva Summit meeting the US Department of State gave its approval for the Carnegie Corporation of New York to carry out a parallel project. Carnegie will cooperate with the Soviet Union's Academy of Sciences in the investigation of computer-based methods to develop creative abilities of primary school pupils; creation and testing of software for use in primary school, and proposals for the restructuring of the curriculum and of teaching methods through the use of computers in the early grades. It was also agreed to exchange specialists involved in the improvement of elementary and secondary education. It comes as no surprise that only eight months later the media reports that the same Carnegie Corporation of New York plans to establish the country's first nationwide system of certifying elementary and high school teachers. One would have to be naive indeed not to see the connection between the USIA project, Carnegie's agreement with the Soviet Union and Carnegie's present role as the catalyst to revolutionize (internationalize) the system of certification of our nation's teachers.

None of the above treacherous schemes could be accomplished with taxpayers' money. Americans would bombard their Congressmen if they found out they were paying for such ideological treason. The administration therefore has evidently received assurances from private corporations and foundations that they will provide the seed money to get this incredible internationalization of American education off the ground.

What is going on may well be unconstitutional since elected officials accountable to the taxpayers have traditionally managed the public schools. As it now stands, there can be no accountability. To whom is the Carnegie Corporation or any other corporation or tax-exempt foundation accountable? Americans cannot register their discontent by voting them out of office. We have lost our voice in the education of our children and grandchildren, America's future leaders. And, in this instance, when we lose our voice, are we not on the road to an alien totalitarian ideology? When this happens will we not have lost America and all that she stands for?

It is strange indeed that not a word has been uttered by any person or group regarding these extraordinary un-American developments. Where are our leaders who have fought for principle in the past?

The silence is deafening.

Finally, President Ronald Reagan signed an agreement with the Soviet Union at the Geneva Summit Conference which gave the Green Light for the "Sovietizing" of American children!

MORE IDEOLOGICAL TREASON

"Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev on Monday [8/18/86] extended the Kremlin's twice-prolonged moratorium on nuclear testing until Jan. 1 and challenged President Reagan to sign a test-ban treaty at a summit this year." So read the opening paragraph of an article which the Reagan administration immediately branded as more propaganda. Except for one thing: Gorbachev did indicate that he wants a summit meeting this year, supposedly to be held in Washington, or perhaps at the UN in New York City. Which brings up the seldom stated fact that every time a summit meeting between the leaders of the USA and the USSR is held, the USSR takes another giant step toward communist world domination, and the USA takes a loss in trust and respect on the part of those nations that look to the United States as a world leader. Perhaps it's by previous arrangement, but the United States seems to be always on the defensive and ready to placate, never dominate, the Soviet Union. From the Yalta Summit in 1945 when FDR gave Eastern Europe to Stalin, to the Geneva Summit in 1985 when Reagan gave Gorbachev the green light for the Sovietization of American children, every meeting has been a disaster for freedom lovers and a success for communist enslavers. Whether it be done in the name of Cold War, Containment, Co-existence, Detente, Mutual Assured Destruction, or whatever name our State Department may give the policy, we always come out on the short end.

In last week's DBR we featured an article by Mrs. Charlotte T. Iserbyt, who explained what happened at the Geneva Summit last November. President Reagan signed a cultural and educational exchange agreement that provided, among other things, for the exchange of computer software in the education of American children. Mrs. Iserbyt pointed out that the American side of this program was to be handled by the Carnegie Corporation, and noted that "We have lost our voice in the education of our children and grandchildren, America's future leaders. And, in this instance, when we lose our voice, are we not on the road to an alien totalitarian ideology? When this happens will we not have lost America and all that she stands for?" And she called the action ideological treason.

On August 4th there were further developments. The United States and the Soviet Union signed 13 agreements for a variety of new exchange programs that will involve high school students, an exchange of teachers for a ten months period, the creation of new textbooks for the study of the Soviet system, an exchange of delegations to examine computer applications to elementary and secondary education, an exchange of teachers with Communist teachers coming to the United States to instruct American high school students, the assignment of a Soviet specialist to the United States to advise on the teaching of Russian, etc.

Thirteen exchange programs were agreed upon, and there are 19 more that are to be worked out later. According to an article in the Los Angeles Times, "Under the agreements, the U.S. participation in the projects must be fully funded by private American organizations." And heading those "private" organizations is the Carnegie Corporation. Whenever this "merging" of the United States and the Soviet Union is discussed, prominently mentioned are the Ford and Rockefeller foundations. But in such internationalist activities Carnegie outranks them all in time and effort. Shall we check the record?

Andrew Carnegie came to America with his parents in 1848. He was 13, made his first million during the War Between the States and, in 1901 sold his steel holdings alone for $250 million. J.P. Morgan called him "the richest man in the world" and, like the then rising John D. Rockefeller, he soon learned that gaining a reputation for humanitarian philanthropy was, to quote William P. Hoar, "the most effective means of overcoming public resistance to the use of vast personal power for looting the Treasury." Rockefeller gave away dimes, but Andrew Carnegie donated thousands of church organs, built buildings to house public libraries, and built three "Temples of Peace" as he called them: a Central American Court of Justice, a Pan American Union Hall, and the "Palace of Peace" at the Hague to quarter a World Court (which still exists). He created the Carnegie Endowment for World Peace, the Carnegie Commission on Higher Education, the Carnegie Hero Fund Commission, the Carnegie Council on Policy Studies, the Carnegie Corporation, the Carnegie Institution, and a few other projects, all designed to restore the United States to its proper place as a part of the British Empire, and then to create a World Government after the manner planned by Cecil Rhodes, Lord Rothschild, Lord Milner and the Round Table Groups out of which came, through the efforts of one Colonel House, the Council on Foreign Relations.

Norman Dodd, director of a Congressional Committee formed to Investigate Tax Exempt Foundations, studied the minutes of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, learned that in 1909 "The trustees of the Foundation brought up a single question. If it is desirable to alter the life of an entire people, is there any means more efficient than war,..They discussed this question...for a year and came up with an answer: There are no known means more efficient than war. assuming the objective is altering the life of an entire people. That leads them to a question: How do we involve the United States in a war." So WWI was arranged, the sinking of the ocean liner Lusitania being a part of the "methods" employed.

In his book Architects of Conspiracy, William P. Hoar states: "At the conclusion of war Colonel House, Dr. Brown Scott of the Carnegie Endowment, and other Carnegie-financed conspirators in England and the United States laid the groundwork for the peace conference that produced the Versailles Treaty - a vindictive pact that...made WWII inevitable." Carnegie financed the League of Nations whose Charter was made a part of that treaty. It was rejected by the US Senate, so "The conspirators responded by establishing the Foreign Policy Association in 1918 and the Council on Foreign Relations in 1919 - both of which have continued to receive Carnegie support to this day."

Since the end of WWII, the Carnegie Endowment has worked with the UN to "establish universal peace," through attacks on anti-Communist nations. There was the Carnegie financed "Project on Rhodesia" which became Marxist Zimbabwe. Then came the attacks on South Africa. In 1965 a project titled Apartheid and United Nations Collective Measures included a blueprint for UN invasion of South Africa, specifying the necessary troop strength, cost, and casualties it would take to conquer that anti-Communist country. It should become clear by this time that the Carnegie idea of world peace coincides almost exactly with the world peace planned by the Communist International, as well as with the plans for the New World Order. But our particular aim in this report is to point out the Carnegie Corporation's interest in "Sovietizing" America's children through this US-USSR exchange program. So let's go back in time.

In 1934 the Carnegie Corporation spent $340,000 on a Commission on Social Sciences of the American Historical Association. That's how civics, history, etc. became social science studies, and how the indoctrination of children to make them fit into the framework of the New World Order really began. Said the Carnegie report: "Cumulative evidence supports the conclusion that, in the United States as in other countries, the age of individualism and laissez faire in economy and government is closing and that a new age of collectivism is emerging." We haven't the time or space to enumerate the number of textbooks financed by the Carnegie Corporation's Project Read, but it is important to note that An American Dilemma by Swedish Marxist Gunnar Myrdal, published in 1944 was a Carnegie-funded project. That book by a foreign Marxist provided the basis for the Supreme Court's 1954 desegregation edict. In 1973 the Carnegie Corporation financed yet another Myrdal study on race to be prepared at the radical Center for the Study of Democratic Institutions (which also produced the Newstates Constitution that leftists hope to have replace the present United States Constitution when and if a Constitutional Convention can be called).

Let's get back to Norman Dodd's testimony. While studying the minutes of the Carnegie Corporation he discovered that the trustees of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace realized that "they must control education in this country. So they approached the Rockefeller Foundation with the suggestion that the task be divided between the two of them. The Carnegie Endowment takes on that aspect of education that has a tinge of international significance and the Rockefeller Foundation takes on that portion of education which is domestic in this relationship."

Of course this US-USSR educational exchange project has international significance. So, six weeks before the Geneva Summit meeting where these educational exchange documents were signed, the US State Department gave its approval to the Carnegie Corporation to cooperate with the Soviet Union's Academy of Sciences in the working out of the project!

Pressing its gains, In May 1986 the Carnegie Corporation came up with yet another project connected with "controlling education." We quote from The Barbara M. Morris Report for July/August 1986 (P.O.Box 756, Upland CA 91785. Sample copy $2.75. 10 issues $20).

"This time Carnegie came up with a detailed plan to establish the country's first nationwide system of certifying elementary and high school teachers. According to Education Week, May 21, 1986, 'From now on, the focus of schools must shift from teaching to learning, from the passive acquisition of facts and routines to the active application of ideas to problems.' In other words, forget about academics - the New World Order will require robots who can be programmed with the correct 'application of ideas to problems.' The Task Force also recommended a new category of 'lead teachers' with salaries as high as $72,000 a year - who would be in charge of 'the redesign of schools.' Also recommended was national certification of teachers with the expectation that nationally certified teachers would be given hiring preference over those simply passing state requirements. In order to have prospective teachers become nationally certified, colleges will have to begin teaching a 'national curriculum.' Thus, at the federal level, power would be centralized regarding standards...The list of members of this Carnegie Forum's Task Force on Teaching as a Profession includes Mary Futrell, president of the NEA; John W. Gardner; Fred M. Hechinger, president of the New York Times Company Foundation and a trustee of the Carnegie Corporation; Bill Honig, California's bogus 'back to basics' state supt. of public instruction; James B. Hunt, former governor of North Carolina and an effective change agent for education interests; Gov. Thomas Kean of New Jersey; Ruth E. Randall, globalist commissioner of education in Minnesota; Albert Shanker, president of the American Federation of Teachers. It happens every time - the same people who helped create the problems are called upon to solve them, every time." (Unquote).

In A Nutshell: The New World Order requires control of education. The Foundations were assigned their roles. Rockefeller's General Education Board boasted: "In our dreams we have limitless resources and the people yield with perfect docility to our molding hands. The present educational conventions fade from our minds and, unhampered by tradition, we work our good will upon a grateful and responsive folk." The Carnegie Corporation concentrated on the global aspects: "In the struggle to establish an adequate world government, the teacher has many parts to play. He must begin with his own attitude and knowledge and purpose. He can do much to prepare the hearts and minds of children for global understanding and cooperation. At the very top of all the agencies which will assure the coming of world government must stand the school, the teacher, and the organized profession." The Ford Foundation also got the message: "We shall use our grant-making power so as to alter our life in the United States that we can be comfortably merged with the Soviet Union."

"Train up a child in the way he should go and when he is old, he will not depart from it." This was God's word to parents. But when they forget their duty and responsibility, the State will take over. The Communists understood: "Give us one generation of small children to train to manhood and womanhood and we will set up the Bolshevik form of the Soviet Government." And the One Worlders might say: "Let us train the children, without parental interference, and we shall set up a Socialist One World Order."

"But whoso shall offend one of these little ones which believe in me, it were better that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and that he were drowned in the depth of the sea." (Matt. 18:6).

AIDING THE AIDS PLAGUE

Two years ago headlines were made when Ryan White, age 18, a hemophiliac, was found to be a victim of the fatal Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome (AIDS). He, at the request of parents and the demand of the local board, was sent home, never to come to school again so long as he had AIDS, for which there is no known cure. It was a public health problem involving all the children who might associate with the boy. But almost immediately, the public health problem became a civil rights problem: young Ryan had been deprived of his civil rights by not being permitted to go to school. The incident became internationally controversial and, at his very next press conference, President Reagan was asked if he would send a child of his to a school with an AIDS victim. In one of his "off the cuff evasions" he said:

"I'm glad I'm not faced with that problem today. I can well understand the plight of the parents, and how they feel about it. I also have compassion, and I think we all do, for the child that has this and doesn't know, and can't have it explained to him why somehow he is now an outcast and can no longer associate with his playmates and schoolmates. On the other hand, I can understand the problem of the parents. It is true that some medical sources have said that this can not be communicated in any way other than the ones we already know and which would not involve the child being in school. And yet medicine has not yet come forth unequivocally and said we know for a fact that it is safe. And until they do, I think we just have to do the best we can with this problem. I can understand both sides."

He didn't answer the question, but he certainly made this plain: it would not be safe to send a child to a school where there was an AIDS victim. And yet two years later, with medicine not having answered the question of safety unequivocally, Ryan White, now 14 and nearing the end of time allotted an AIDS victim, was pictured on almost every August 26 Monday morning front page carrying his books in a gym bag and going back to school. Not only that, but it is reported that children with AIDS are going to school in 10 other states.

The Kokomo, Indiana school board gave in to the civil rights propagandists, but with certain reservations. Ryan White would be served in special dishes at the school cafeteria, he would not be allowed to participate in gym classes, was assigned a special bath room, and all the teachers were given special instructions on how to deal with an AIDS victim. The Center for Disease Control, which has become notorious in certain circles for giving out questionable statistics, says Ryan White is one of 344 persons under 13 who have gotten AIDS since 1980 and schools in 10 states open their doors to children with AIDS." Then there is the situation in Los Angeles and some other cities where homosexuals are known to congregate in their bath houses, etc., where laws have been passed saying it is illegal to discriminate against anyone with AIDS in housing, employment, attending school, handling foodstuffs, or in any other way. But in places where it isn't illegal, dentists, doctors and nurses wear protective gear whenever they treat an AIDS patient. Paramedics have designed and use a special mouthpiece whenever artificial resuscitation is necessary, and they are careful to handle accident victims with gloves on if they even suspect that a homosexual or AIDS carrier is involved. Gary North wrote: "I recently spoke with a dentist who is leaving the profession. 'I can't protect my patients. I can't protect myself. This job isn't worth dying over.' He told me some possible things I can do to protect myself, but he can't go public with them without getting his license revoked."

There are oodles of stories, news releases, doctors' reports and rumors floating around concerning AIDS, where it came from, how serious it is, how many people are going to die, will a cure ever be found, etc. Some are true, some untrue. But, if the information is put out by the official Center for Disease Control, it has every chance of being understated or even untrue. For example, when one of its principals was being interviewed via radio, he stated flatly that AIDS cannot be transmitted by kissing, or by saliva. Yet when asked on the same interview what a person should do to protect himself, he said kissing should be avoided. Again, when asked how widespread is AIDS, he said that as of August 18 there were 24,011 AIDS patients in the United States, and 13,272 of those have died. Which is far less than other experts have said. He did admit that the number is doubling every year, and that the primary mode of transmission is by sexual contact, and it remains essentially a homosexual disease. The trouble with the CDC numbers is that it mentions only those being treated or dead, does not take into account those who are carriers. Other sources claim that there are three million people who are carriers, may or may not develop the symptoms associated with AIDS, but still can transmit the disease to others. This is one fact that is seldom mentioned or explained. Dr. James McKeever, in a book titled The Aids Plague, copyright in 1986, gives the clearest explanation we have seen. His book is available from Omega Publications, P.O.Box 4130, Medford, OR 97501. $16.95 for hardback edition. Dr. McKeever explains that there are two stages involved. Stage 1 is the period from the time a person is infected with the AIDS virus until the symptoms actually occur. Until symptoms are discovered, there is no way of knowing that the person really has AIDS, except by a special examination. And the disease hasn't been around long enough for anyone to learn just how long this incubation period will last. Some say that the Stage 1 victim may never come down with the symptoms, but will be a carrier for all of his life, and can infect others, perhaps without anyone even knowing it until too late. Stage 2 occurs when the expected symptoms develop and there is no immunity in the body to fight off the symptom, which may be cancer, or attacks on any of the organs, including the brain. You see, nobody ever dies from AIDS. In that respect it isn't a disease, it's a virus that kills the body's ability to fight off the effects of any disease that may come along.

It is estimated - and almost everything is just an estimate at the present time - that once the AIDS virus develops in a body, it may be as long as five years before any symptoms (Stage 2) appear. And the victim may die of some other disease without ever knowing that AIDS paved the way for the death. Another estimate: Once the symptoms appear and AIDS is diagnosed, 60% of the victims will die within the first year, 75 percent will die within the first two years, 85 percent will die within the first three years, and 100 percent will die within five years after the initial diagnosis. But here again, a warning: In all of Stage 1, the person is a carrier and can infect others; and in what's left of Stage 2, the victim remains a carrier and can infect others. For example: Rock Hudson may have been infecting others for years before he even knew he had the disease. And they won't know unless they submit to a special examination. physical examination, or until they develop a symptom.

There are so many different "experts" telling us so many different things about the origin of AIDS, its seriousness, et al, that it's difficult to know just what to believe. For example, we are told that there are 30 million people in Africa infected with AIDS, and the number is still growing. They say that in Rwanda one out of every five people has AIDS; in Zaire, one out of six. These same sources say AIDS spread to Haiti where it is said to be in epidemic proportions. When Haitian refugees began pouring into the United States, they brought AIDS with them. Then it spread rapidly in all the homosexual communities in this country, especially New York, Los Angeles and San Francisco. But it should be understood that AIDS is not confined to our part of the world. Cases have been reported in France, West Germany, United Kingdom, all of the other West European Nations, Japan, Mexico, Argentina, Canada, Brazil, but there are no reports from Communist countries, probably because of suppression of the news. So this is a worldwide problem. And it will become far more serious because of the several ways in which the AIDS virus can be spread. At first it was strictly a disease among homosexuals. But there are bisexual men who can pick up the virus and pass it on to their wives and/or paramours. Then the women may pass it on to their children at childbirth. Thus the spread of the disease through sexual contact is the primary method. But any body fluid exchange can become a transmitter. Here blood transfusions come into the picture. That's how Ryan White, the schoolboy, got the disease. For the past couple of years blood banks have carefully screened and discarded all the blood that tested "positive." However, remember that five year incubation period. There are perhaps millions of people who have had blood transfusions before the AIDS scare began. Many of such people could be spreading AIDS unknowingly. Moreover, it has been discovered that the AIDS virus will remain "alive" for as much as a week in dried blood. This is the reason that intravenous drug users can acquire AIDS through using a common needle. Also any scratch, wound, abrasion or open sore can be a gateway for the entrance of the AIDS virus into a body. And regardless of what the CDC in Atlanta may say, there are others, like Dr. Dean Echenverg of the San Francisco Health Department, who insist that the AIDS virus has been found in saliva. In his book Dr. McKeever comments: "One thing that would help us to know whether, in fact, kissing will transfer AIDS would be for Linda Evans, who performed passionate kissing scenes with Rock Hudson, to submit to a blood test for the AIDS antibody. However, up to now she has declined to take this test."

Also the AIDS virus has been found in the tears of its victims. So, if someone with AIDS was working in a restaurant and his eyes watered (perhaps from peeling onions?) and he wiped his tears away with his hands and then handled the food, AIDS could be passed on to the person eating that food. Saliva in the food would have the same effect. We are told that the Pasteur Institute in Paris performed an experiment. They took saliva which contained the AIDS virus and put it into a number of shallow dishes. Half were kept moist and the other half were allowed to dry. After seven days, the moist saliva had almost as many active AIDS viruses as at the beginning. And when the others were moistened after being dry for a week, 10 percent of the AIDS viruses in them became active again. This would tell you much about AIDS being transmitted through food.

In writing this Report it is not our intention to create a state of panic among our readers, for panic creates helplessness and wrong reactions. But we do believe that we face a crisis of unimaginable proportions and what little that can be done to mitigate the extent of a coming plague is not being done. It's as though public officials are so worried about offending Gays that they are treating a public health crisis as though it were merely a matter of civil rights. And this makes it virtually impossible for anyone to stop the spread of this fatal disease. A few facts that are seldom mentioned:

1. The AIDS virus can stay dormant within a person for 15 to 20 years.
2. AIDS can affect the brain as well as any organ, causing dementia (making one demented).
3. Sexual contact is not the only way AIDS is spread. The "straight" world is also threatened through blood transfusions, babies can get it from AIDS-carrying mothers, accidental needle pricks can transmit it, one man got it when an AIDS patient bit him. Other means of transmission are possible, many not yet identified.
4. There is no known cure for AIDS and none likely.
5. It has gone beyond the homosexuals and bisexuals and gotten into the heterosexual community.
6. AIDS patients are not even quarantined in hospitals. We could go on and on in this vein.

Dr. McKeever believes that 20 to 25 percent of the U.S. population could die of AIDS within the next 12 years. Don McAlvany agrees. R.E. McMaster agrees. Gary North agrees and says this is going to be the "greatest public health danger since the flu of 1918; far worse unless a miracle or totally unpredictable reversal appears...By the time enough people are dying from it, there will be so many carriers that it will be impossible to quarantine them." A FAC-Sheet published by the Plymouth Rock Foundation reminds its readers that: "AIDS was first called GRID - Gay Related Immune Deficiency, and that in the beginning God created them male and female, Adam and Eve, not Adam and Steve." A medical expert is quoted: "With each passing week I become more and more convinced that the most important news of the last half of the 1980's is not going to be world terrorism, not nuclear proliferation, not street crime. The most important story is going to be AIDS."

There is only one possible way to stop the spread of this coming plague: Isolate the carriers. It has been done before in the case of leprosy, chicken pox, scarlet fever, measles, small pox. Spanish Flu, tuberculosis, polio, even mumps. Quarantining has been used throughout history. Until now, when someone starts shouting "Civil Rights" instead of "Unclean, Unclean." And the innocents perish, their right to life denied them, even as in abortion.

Perhaps there's hope in this: When God destroyed Sodom and Gommorrah He would have saved more than Lot's family had there been even fifty righteous to save.

SURRENDER BY DESIGN

When the Editor of the Daily News Digest published a scenario that described the surrender of the United States to the Soviet Union, he admitted that "To say it 'rattled some cages' would be an understatement. Because this was a scenario that wasn't necessarily fictitious. It could be true. And in two succeeding weekly issues of the Digest, Editor Johnson gave proof of why it could be true. The gist of the first of the three articles:

President Reagan and Secretary Gorbachev are facing each other at the upcoming Washington Summit meeting. Gorbachev hands the president a document. "The message is stark and simple. It demands the gradual, secret surrender of the United States in foreign policy matters under Soviet directions. The alternative is clear: a surgical first strike by Soviet missiles against every US strategic missile and bomber, wiping out at least 95% of them within minutes of a launch...The message further states that if the United States should have the foolish desire to launch such a futile retaliatory strike against the USSR, they would destroy the five largest US cities, including Washington, D.C., and bomb shelters built for government officials...Gorbachev calmly says...Here's what we want:

"First, that 'Star Wars' foolishness must never be deployed...We also want all actions against our friends in Nicaragua stopped. You shall also stop all aid to reactionary forces around the world from Angola to Afghanistan. Finally, you shall join with us in correcting the situation in South Africa by helping our friends in the African National Congress. My last condition: this agreement between our two governments must be kept in the strictest secrecy. We don't want any trouble from your citizens. Any leakage of this agreement through your press will be considered an abrogation of the document and we will attack immediately. For that reason, it would be a good idea if you stayed around for another four years. Just to 'keep things on track.'

The quotations are from the lead story of the Daily News Digest, P.O.Box 39850, Phoenix, AZ 85069, on July 30, 1986. Stories to show how this kind of a surrender could happen were contained in the issues of August 13 and 20. And there is a clear indication that this kind of a surrender to the USSR may already be happening! Brigadier General Andrew Gatsis, USA (Ret.) is quoted:

"US foreign policy clearly enshrines the abandonment of anti-Communist countries friendly to the US, ostensibly on the grounds that they are 'regressive right-wing dictatorships.' Such terms were used against Batista of Cuba, Chiang Kai-shek of China, Nguyen Van Thieu of South Vietnam, the Shah of Iran, Marcos of the Philippines, and Ian Smith of Rhodesia. The few loyal allies that American has left - South Korea and Taiwan - are also being abandoned. The big mistake made by these unfortunate victims of US treachery was that they trusted us." Then came this important statement by General Gatsis:

"The average US citizen refuses to believe that the Soviet government is only a peripheral enemy and that the real threat comes from a Western power structure made up of governmental officials and their nongovernmental confederates who secretly espouse the same objectives as openly avowed Communists. These underhanded activists, whom we shall call the Insiders, promote one-world government through a gradual transition from freedom to International Socialism. Among their agenda items are the desire to destroy American nationalism, neutralize US intelligence agencies, promote a sense of guilt and shame among Americans, convince Americans that all allies who oppose socialism are violators of human rights and should be toppled in the name of 'democracy', and weaken the US national defenses. In the late 1940s, the stage was set to begin brainwashing American military officers to 'think liberal' and to promote international socialism...It is notable that America never lost a war so long as we had a Department of War and has never won one since it became the Department of Defense." (Unquote).

In referring to the late 1940s, General Gatsis makes an important point. While the International Bankers and those we now call Multinational Executives were aiding the Communists from the very beginning of the rise of Lenin and Trotsky, direct US governmental aid in the building of a Soviet military opponent did not begin until our entry into World War Two. And, on April 12, 1950, President Truman signed a document which forms the very blueprint for the allegedly fictitious demands of Gorbachev in regard to our foreign policy, which is designed to promote Communist aims while at the same time weakening the United States and destroying its will to resist.

It was the late Alice Widener who discovered this secret document which directed that ours would be a no-win foreign policy, and one favorable to the USSR in all respects. We quote from her article which was published on September 30, 1976:

"During an exclusive private interview, May 1951, General Douglas MacArthur said in response to my question about why he had written his famous letter to House Speaker Joe Martin protesting our no-win policy in Korea: (He replied) 'Always in war when I visited my wounded in the hospital, I could look them in the eye, no matter what their condition or how tragic their wounds, knowing that our country had backed them to the hilt. But when I went to see my Korean wounded, I just couldn't look them in the eye, knowing that they had been forced to fight with one hand tied behind their backs. I went home and walked the floor alone until four o'clock in the morning. I made up my mind what to do and I did it.'

"The General paused, his eyes full of tears. Then he looked at me straight in the eye. 'I am convinced,' he said, 'I was restrained in Korea by some secret Administration policy directive or strategy about which I was not informed.'

"General MacArthur was correct. He did not know about that top secret policy directive and strategy, and most Americans still do not know about it. Moreover, we did not know about it all during the Vietnam War, though that top secret policy directive and strategy still prevail. Both were set forth in National Security Council document number 68, known as 'NSC-68,' drafted under the direction of Secretary of State Dean Acheson and signed by President Truman on April 12, 1950, two months before the outbreak of the Korean War. Thereby hangs a tale which, to the best of my knowledge, is herewith told to the general public for the first time." (Unquote).

In signing NSC-68, President Truman ordered: "It is my desire that no publicity be given to this report or its contents without my approval." And every page of the 66-page document was stamped top secret. It was withheld from the American public and from most of its leaders for 25 years, from April 1950 to February 1975, during which time we fought and lost two wars costing the lives of more than 80,000 of our fighting men, billions upon billions of dollars, and tremendous loss in our national prestige. And, so far as we know., NSC-68 is still the foreign policy of the United States; and it is amazingly similar to the orders allegedly given President Reagan by Comrade Gorbachev in this assumed Washington Summit meeting; as you will note as we quote important parts of NSC-68.

The principal aims of this document are:

1. To avoid nuclear war but to accept a Soviet nuclear first strike against us if necessary, hoping to ward it off by building up our own and our allies' military, economic and social strength as a 'deterrent';
2. to confine US military action to strictly limited counteractions;
3. to seek 'coexistence' with the Soviet Union in the hope that democracy would win out eventually against dictatorship, that time would be on our side, and that the USSR would undergo changes eventually leading to abandonment of its goal of world domination;
4. to try to 'contain' the expansion of the Soviet Union beyond its own territory, but not to do anything "directly challenging Soviet prestige."

NSC-68 protects the Soviet Union from any kind of effective attack; military, ideological or psychological. The exact wording: "In 'containment' it is desirable to exert pressure in a fashion which will avoid so far as possible directly challenging Soviet prestige, to keep open the possibility for the USSR to retreat before pressure with a minimum loss of face and to secure political advantage from the failure of the Kremlin to yield or take advantage of the openings we leave it."

The US attitude toward the USSR and the reason for our no-win wars can be seen in this verbatim quote from NSC-68:

"The Kremlin is able to select whatever means are expedient in seeking to carry out its fundamental design. Thus it can make the best of several possible worlds, conducting the struggle on those levels where it considers it profitable and enjoying the benefits of a pseudo-peace on those levels where it is not ready for a contest...at the military level, the Kremlin has thus far been careful not to commit a technical breach of the peace, although using its vast forces to intimidate its neighbors, and to support an aggressive foreign policy, and not hesitating through its agents to resort to arms in favorable circumstances. The attempt to carry out its fundamental design is being pressed, therefore, with all the means which are believed expedient in the present situation, and the Kremlin has inextricably engaged us in the conflict between its design and our purpose.

"We have no such freedom of choice, and least of all in the use of force. Resort to war is not only a last resort for a free society, but it is also an act which cannot definitely end the fundamental conflict in the realm of ideas...Military victory alone would only partially and perhaps only temporarily affect the fundamental conflict, for although the ability of the Kremlin to threaten our security might be for a time destroyed, the resurgence of totalitarian forces and the re-establishment of the Soviet system or its equivalent would not long be delayed." (Unquote). Now let's translate this diplomatic double-talk into plain, everyday American that everybody can understand:

"The Kremlin is free to use whatever means it desires to gain its ends. Whatever seems more profitable, or easier, must be tolerated, even if that means murdering an estimated 30,000,000 people in the USSR and its satellites and another 14,000,000 through civil wars in other countries. Or if it means the use of booby-trapped toys to kill or wound Afghan children. Or first-strike nuclear bombs to destroy American cities. Or the shooting down of unarmed passenger planes. All of these things must be permitted the Communists.

But we cannot do such things; we shouldn't even use force except in extreme cases. And even then, if we must go to war, we must never think of winning. Nor can any such war defeat or deter the steady progress of International Socialism, which is the wave of the future. And, even if we did stop the advance of Communism in, say, Nicaragua, this would only be a temporary victory; the resurgence of Socialism would merely be delayed. So we must be nice to the USSR, trading with them and aiding them and doing our best to convert them to a less violent form of democracy (the carrot but never the stick; soft words but never the big stick).

This policy toward the USSR with its no-win wars strategy was supposed to be kept secret from the people of the United States. And it was for some 25 years. Even most government officials outside the top brass in the Security Council and the State and Defense Departments knew nothing about it. And after the top secret label was removed, only a few such as Alice Widener ever wrote about, and their writings were blacklisted and blue penciled by the media.

Likewise, with these supposed surrender orders from Secretary Gorbachev to President Reagan, "the agreement between our two governments must be kept in the strictest secrecy. We don't want any trouble from your citizens." In this same sense, in order to appease the citizens, token aid is given freedom fighters in Nicaragua, Afghanistan, and Angola. But this must not be allowed to interfere seriously with the progress of International Socialism. So, Savimba's UNITA can receive token support, so long as it doesn't interfere with those Cuban troops that are guarding American-operated oil wells in Communist Angola. We have two brief recent notes on that subject:

1. While the US is giving $15 million to the anti-Soviet freedom fighters in Angola, it is supplying about $40 million every year to do business with the Lusanda Reds. And 2. The US tax-supported Export-Import Bank, in cooperation with US oil and banking firms, is actively assisting the economy of Communist Angola's Soviet-trained oil engineer and strongman Jose Eduarda dos Santos. Meanwhile, when Howard Phillips of the Conservative Caucus got too bold in his attempts to get Chevron out of Angola, the Securities and Exchange Commission ordered him to cease and desist. We hear he ignored the warning. Perseverance can carry its own reward.

And let us not be weary in well doing:

for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not.

THE POLITICS OF SURRENDER

To those who are old enough to remember (as we are), it must come as a shock (as it did to us) when we compare the military and economic strength of the United States in 1945 with that of our present condition in 1986, 41 years later. At the end of WWII, the US was the supreme military power, lent aid to ex-friend and ex-foe alike. Europe was in shambles economically, militarily and emotionally through loss of life and the devastations of WWII. The USSR was particularly exhausted, despite the enormous amount of aid that had been poured into Russia during the war. Even then our former ally was recognized to be our present and future enemy and there were those who felt that Communism should be allowed to expire along with Germany's National Socialism, so that the right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness might remain the hope of the citizens of the free and independent nations of the world. But there was a group of internationalists that thought differently and who insisted that Communism continue to grow and strengthen itself. As one of our correspondents has noted, "David Rockefeller is an Internationalist who speaks English and expects the United States to safeguard his person and property; Willy Brandt is an Internationalist who speaks German; one Rothschild is an Internationalist who speaks French and has a brother Internationalist who speaks English; Mikhail Gorbachev is an Internationalist who speaks Russian. None of their ilk is loyal to his native land or believes in national sovereignty."

In 1945 there was this Internationalist's plan which called, not for the destruction of Communism, but for its military growth and strengthening so that it could be at first at equal to, and later greater than all other powers combined, so that a New World Order could emerge. The plan, in the words of R.E.McMaster, involved "the eventual merging of the atheistic Soviet Union's socialistic bureaucracy with the USA's bureaucratic socialism, in line with the thesis (monopolistic debt capitalism) versus the antithesis (communism) equaling the synthesis of Hegel's dialectic" (the New World Order).

Example: There is a very privately printed and circulated Journal of the US-USSR Trade and Economic Council. David Rockefeller, Internationalist, is a director of this US-USSR Council, and in the November, 1977, issue of its publication, in an article not intended for general publication, he writes of "his bank's activities in the Soviet Union from the early 1920s...and how despite non-trade related impediments, the relationship has not been interrupted." Here are a few brief quotes from this article by David Rockefeller;

"...it is of interest to recall that at The Chase Manhattan Bank we can look back to an unbroken relationship with Russian financial institutions that straddles well over 50 years...When, in the early 1920s, the Soviet Union set about to rebuild its textile industry, representatives of the All-Russian Textile Syndicate approached Chase, then known as Chase National Bank, and obtained the credits necessary to pay for their first imports of US cotton. And in 1924, when the Amtorg Trading Corp. was incorporated as the Soviet Union's sole export-import agency in New York, Chase National agreed to handle its promissory notes as the 'paying agent' for the Soviet Foreign Trade Bank...It was at the seventh session of the Dartmouth Conference in Hanover in 1972 that the idea of forming a joint high-level Trade and Economic Council was first proposed. This in turn led me to think that we ought to be doing something more at Chase and to establish a unit specifically to deal with the Soviet Union. The Chase representative office in Moscow, the first to be opened by a US banking institution after World War II, grew out of this as did our first major postwar credit to the Soviet Union. This credit opportunity developed out of the gigantic undertaking by the Soviet Union to build the world's largest truck plant on the Kama River at Naberzhnye Chelny, or KamAZ. The $86.5 million credit Chase agreed to extend for this project was matched by the US Export-Import Bank, which was finally allowed to open its doors to the Soviet Union under the 1972 Trade Agreement... Through participation in international banking consortia Chase has also participated in all three branches of the credits raised by the International Investment Bank in Moscow to finance purchases in the US and elsewhere of equipment for the joint CMEA project of a natural gas pipeline connecting the Orenburg fields with terminals in Eastern and Western Europe...

"Beyond my involvement in Chase's banking relations with the Soviet Union, I have continued to participate in the work of the Dartmouth Conference." (Unquote). In previous Reports we have made mention of the importance of the Kama River truck plant, which produced vehicles that transported Communist troops and supplies to our enemy during the Vietnam War; and are being used to transport along a jointly built US-USSR highway the Soviet troops that are now carrying out that horrible genocide operation in Afghanistan. The annual Dartmouth Conferences are meetings to promote US-USSR trade and cultural exchange programs, leading to the proposed eventual merger of the US and the USSR in a World Government.

In this same issue of the Journal of the US-USSR Trade and Economic Council, Reginald Jones boasts that "General Electric has a history of trading relationships in electrical equipment with the USSR dating back at least to 1922." And Alan Reich, then of the US Department of Commerce, "emphasizes the importance of developing trade with the USSR to create more American jobs and to improve US trade balance." Our thanks to Mr. Richard Landkamer of Houston who supplied us with the xerox copies from which we have quoted. How he obtained the original is quite a story.

Although we have cited certain Internationalists in this Report,

New Trilateral Commission Members

Who's made it into the Establishment's most important secretive club this year? Larry Abraham in his Insider Report tells us:

The next time the Trilateral Commission meets, there will be some new faces (and some surprises) joining David Rockefeller, Zbigniew Brzezinski, Felix G. Rohatyn, and Henry Kissinger around the table. Among the new members: 'conservative' columnist George F. Will; former ambassador Jeanne J. Kirkpatrick; and former budget director (now Salmon Bros. biggie) David Stockman. Among the politicians who can now put 'TC' after their names (but never will) are Atlanta's Mayor and Angolan apologist Andrew Young; Arizona's Governor Bruce Babbitt; Presidential hopeful Alexander Haig; Senators John Glenn and William Cohen; and Los Angeles Mayor Tom Bradley."

our chief interest is in how they managed to seduce our federal government into engaging in what we have referred to as treasonable activity. In our last Report we referred to NSC-68, a document that laid down the rule that we should never win a war, that we should never "challenge Soviet prestige" in its international activities, that we must permit the USSR to "select whatever means are expedient in seeking to carry out its fundamental design...(but) We have no such freedom of choice, and least of all in the use of force." NSC-68 explains why we were not allowed to win wars in Korea and Vietnam; and why any future war must be a no win war.

In addition to this accomplishment of traitors in our State Department, there also was developed the program to bring about unilateral disarmament of the US, so that we would be helpless against the Soviet Union in case of attack. As Phyllis Schlafly and Chester Ward stated in their invaluable Kissinger on the Couch: "The elitist clique calculates that such a posture would provide an irresistible incentive for us to join a global government before we were forced to surrender to the Soviets." So, there was produced in September 1961 State Department Document 7277 which is still officially in effect, and which declares the goal of our State Department (not necessarily our Defense Department) to be "the total elimination of all armed forces and armaments except those needed to maintain internal order within states and to furnish the United Nations with peace forces...by the time it (the UN global government) would be so strong no nation could challenge it." Primarily involved in this plan to disarm the United States unilaterally were three men: Robert Strange McNamara then Secretary of Defense who went on to become President of the World Bank; Paul Hilken Nitze, member of the original SALT delegation who is now a member of the US arms negotiation delegation; and Henry Kissinger, who became NSC Director then Secretary of State under Nixon, and presently serves as a foreign policy adviser to President Reagan. All are members of the CFR and are closely associated with David Rockefeller. They at first proposed universal disarmament, but knowing that the USSR would never go along with any such plan, they began promoting unilateral disarmament of the United States on the ridiculous assumption that the USSR would then follow suit (this was their public defense of their plan; of course they knew better). Said Schlafly and Ward: "Nitze was the architect of the master plan for the clandestine unilateral strategic disarmament of the United States, and the gut elements of his plan have been carried out to the letter...It is therefore established that McNamara, Nitze and Kissinger are all conspirators who secretly plotted to disarm the United States unilaterally, and who were so ruthless and dishonest that they brought the United States down from what Henry Kissinger admitted was 'overwhelming' strategic superiority in 1962, to a Kissinger-admitted Soviet advantage in missile throw-weight of four-to-one against us...When McNamara, Nitze and Kissinger planned to accomplish the unilateral disarmament of the United States...they clearly betrayed their oaths of office under which they pledged to 'support and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic.'" This was written in 1975, but the plan for slow and deliberate unilateral disarmament of the US continued through the Carter Administration. The plan was halted only when Ronald Reagan became President and had with him a team of conservative advisers, all of whom have resigned or been fired, to be replaced by CFR and TL members who intend to carry out the plan initiated by McNamara, Nitze and Kissinger. And these three who were so active in shaping US foreign policy in the 1960s and 70s are still active in the 80s. In fact, Eastern Establishment control of the US State Department has been the reason for the treason that has been committed against the Constitution of the United States, which all government officials, elected, appointed or otherwise, are sworn to uphold.

In 1942, Secretary of State Cordell Hull created an Advisory Committee on Postwar Foreign Policy. With Leo Pasvolksy as its executive officer, this committee was dominated by members of the CFR. As Dan Smoot wrote in The Invisible Government, "The crowning moment of achievement for the Council came at San Francisco in 1945 when over 40 members of the United States Delegation to the organizational meeting of the United Nations (where the UN Charter was written) were members of the Council... By 1945, the CFR, and various foundations and other organizations interlocked with it, had virtually taken over the US State Department." So there was developed in and after 1945 a new American foreign policy, one that was spelled out by M. Stanton Evans in his The Politics of Surrender (1966, Devin-Adair), as involving:

1. Increased trade, negotiation, and exchanges with the Soviet Union and other Communist Nations so that the Communists can learn more about us and we about them (in preparation for merger).
2. Herculean restraint by the United States issuing in various concessions to the Communists, demonstrating that our intentions are peaceful (like the giving away of the Panama Canal, five Alaskan islands, etc.)
3. Constant demonstration to the world that we want peace and global collectivism quite as much as do the Communists, thus outbidding Moscow and Peking in their appeal to the revolutionary temper of the times (including the loss of wars to the Communists in Korea, Vietnam, the Cuban takeover, etc.)
4. Strenuous efforts to achieve nuclear disarmament as quickly as possible even if it means a certain amount of risk (as would certainly happen if unilateral disarmament were carried out).
5. Less emphasis on military aid and alliances, greater emphasis on economic aid to achieve social justice and revolution (as in Iran, Nicaragua, the Philippines, et al).
6. All-out support of the United Nations even when it adversely affects our own interests and a constant effort to strengthen it at the expense of national sovereignties (witness the signing of the Genocide Treaty, the UNIDO Treaty, etc.)
7. Support for the 'democratic left' all over the world, encouragement of neutralism, and overthrow of anti-Communist, 'right-wing' regimes." (Unquote. Parenthetical comments were added to Mr. Evan's list which was written in 1966 to bring it more up-to-date in 1986).

"Is there not some chosen curse, some hidden thunder in the stores of heaven, red with uncommon wrath, to blast the man who owes this greatness to his country's ruin!" (Joseph Addison, 1672-1719).

A CONSTITUTION FOR THE NEW WORLD ORDER

When he rose to sign the Declaration of Independence, John Adams paused, turned to his colleagues, and spoke these words:

"If it be the pleasure of Heaven that my country shall require the poor offering of my life, the victim shall be ready. But while I do live, let me have a country, or at least the hope of a country--and that a free country. But whatever may be our fate, be assured...that this declaration will stand. It may cost treasure, and it may cost blood, but it will stand, and it will richly compensate for both...And live or die, survive or perish, I am for the declaration. It is my living sentiment, and by the blessing of God, it shall be my dying sentiment: independence now, and independence forever!"

Independence was the goal, the watchword and the battle cry. That was the legacy left us: life, liberty and property. But how we have despoiled that legacy. Think of President John F. Kennedy, calling not for continued independence, but for the need for interdependence with those nations which our first President, George Washington, said we should never become politically involved. And recall that scene on the 200th anniversary of the signing of the Declaration of Independence, when men listened to and signed a Declaration of Interdependence which was read in that same Independence Hall where John Adams had uttered such words of dedication.

At the end of World War One, when leaders tried to get us involved in a one world government via the League of Nations, there were still statesmen in the US Senate who refused to forfeit our independence for the sake of a temporary peace. But at the end of World War Two our leaders rallied behind General Secretary Alger Hiss of the newborn United Nations at San Francisco, then sent the document involving us with the rest of the world to a United States Senate who now was willing to sign away what Adams and others had fought to save for us.

It is true that the United Nations has not lived up to the expectations of its founders. The site given it by the Rockefellers in New York City has become little more than a debating society where mini-states can vent their spleen against the United States at the prodding of the USSR and the expense of US taxpayers. But there is another side to the UN which is very permanent, and very dangerous. It is made up of all those related agencies that produce treaties and conventions which have the force of law, and which our leaders are only too anxious to sign. Such private clubs such as the CFR and TC gave up the idea of working from the top and suddenly forcing an actual world government upon us. They found that this would not work. But, by piecemeal progress, by creating a world commission here and a world conference there, they could, piece by piece, bring about their New World Order without the people knowing anything about it until too late. So, the UN Headquarters in New York does little more than talk and resolve, but those agencies are becoming the executive cabinets of a new world government. There is UNESCO which we are about to rejoin. It controls education and culture. including what we think of as First Amendment rights. And it has its own headquarters in Paris. There is

NSC-68 -- UPDATE

In our Report #34 (9/5/68) we explained how the super-secret National Security Document 68 (NSC-68) came to be the foreign policy directive of the United States, and how, among other things, it dictated that there should be only "no win" wars, how we should always give in to the USSR in every controversy, etc. We also quoted Brigadier General Andrew Gatsis, USA (Ret.), who made this very important statement:

"It is notable that America never lost a war so long as we had a Department of War, and has never won one since it became the Department of Defense." Now, here is the rest of the story, as given us by Maureen Heaton, patriot and research specialist, P.O.Box 775, Eastsound, WA 98245: We quote from her Series On Survival with a few parenthetical remarks because her full story must be abridged:

"It isn't generally known, but a large part of the problems which have plagued Americans since WW2 have to do with the passage of the National Security (sic) Act of 1947 (NSA-47), and many of those problems have direct bearing of the system known for management and control once known as 'Planning, Programming and Budgeting System' (PPBS, now generally called Management By Objectives - MBO." If you didn't know that, don't feel bad about it - neither did we, until we did the research into the System...

"A high ranking general of the Army had brought the Senator (Joe McCarthy) information about a possible breach of security in the armed services. McCarthy (began to investigate and his) involvement in the pursuant investigation...triggered the vicious attacks which continue to this day, more than a quarter century after his death...The attacks on McCarthy emanated from every place in which anti-anti-communists could be installed - even in the highest echelons of government (President Eisenhower was a retired general).

"The logical answer had to be 'WHY'? McCarthy never learned the answer to that 'why' which he, himself, asked again and again. Part of the answer can be found in (then Secretary of State) Dean Acheson's autobiography, 'Present at the Creation,' in which he told of an amendment to NSA-47 - NSA-68, which he claimed as his own. Of it Acheson said, 'NSC-68, a formidable document, presents more than a clinic in political science's latest, most fashionable, and most boring study, the decision-making process, for it carries us beyond decisions to...action.' Acheson further stated that NSC-68 became the leading government policy (pages 373-4-5,, emphasis added). The importance of THAT only becomes clear when it is know that NSA-47 was the Act of Congress which amalgamated the army, navy and air force into one, integrated, unified command, and NSC-68 created within that command a super-secret agency with a super-secret mission. Part of that 'mission' involved construction of a control system. In the lexicon of 1947 it would have been assumed that 'weapons control' was meant (but absolute and dictatorial control over US foreign policy by a 'super-secret' agency was really meant.)"

So now we know why Joe McCarthy was hounded to his death, not simply because he was exposing communists in high places, but because he was on the threshold of exposing something far bigger and far more treasonable. And we can understand why we engage in "no win" wars, why the USSR seems to be the winner in every engagement, whatever the nature of the engagement. And we know what Gen. Gatsis really meant when he said America has never won a war since the passage of NSA-47 and NSA-68. It was Planned, Programmed and Budgeted that way!!

the World Health Organization which has its headquarters at Geneva, the International Atomic Energy Agency which resides at Vienna, GATT which controls world trade and has its offices in Geneva. The IMF and the World Bank don't have much to do with the New York headquarters, but they weave their spells out of offices in Washington, D.C. And to learn of the really important activities of the UN, one must go to Geneva, where the most important agencies have as their home the Palais des Nations, the original home of the League of Nations, which is headquarters for the UN Conference on Trade and Development, GATT, the World Health Organization, the International Labor Organization, and so on. A flier issued by the UN Office at Geneva calls it "A haven for the persecuted, a centre of religious and intellectual freedom, and a place of decision-making among nations...over 5,000 meetings a year make the Palais des Nations the busiest conference centre in the world...Apart from its regular 'population' of 3,500 international civil servants, the Palais des Nations witnesses the passage of about 25,000 delegates to its meetings each year." Unquote. This is the active part of the United Nations about which we hear little until some new treaty, convention, or constitution comes out of it to be signed and become piecemeal parts of a developing world government.

In Between Two Ages, the book that may have caused David Rockefeller to create the Trilateral Commission, Zbigniew Brzezinski states: "Movement toward a larger community of the developed nations will necessarily have to be piecemeal...Such a community cannot be achieved by fusing existing states into one larger entity...It makes more sense to attempt to associate existing states through a variety of indirect ties and already developing limitations on national sovereignty." In another book, Toward a Human World Order, Gerald and Patricia Mische are more explicit: "We need not begin from scratch, desperately searching for building blocks; strategic foundations already exist. Those foundations include the general global infra-structure spawned since World WarII by the...specialized agencies of the United Nations that have been developing a global fibre of cooperating institutions, organizations and experts..." In other words, while the UN Headquarters in New York is little more than a debating society, its specialized agencies are the building blocks from which a New World Order and a Socialist World Government can emerge.

One of the most dangerous of those "building blocks" and one which has been disregarded by the controlled media, is the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO). This agency took the new world economic order devised by Willy Brandt, head of the Socialist International, and began promoting it as its own New International Economic Order. To become a principal part in this New World Order plan, a Constitution was needed, one which would supersede the constitutions of the nations that would become members of it in areas in which it is the new law of the world. This Constitution weakens our own United States Constitution and virtually makes null and void our Declaration of Independence. On October 5, 1981, President Reagan signed this overriding Constitution and sent it to the Senate for ratification as another UN Treaty. The Senate duly approved, with only Senators East, Helms, Symms and Kasten voting against it; Senators Glenn and Hollings did not vote. We were shocked at some of the things President Reagan said of this UNIDO Constitution in his letter of transmittal to the Senate. Here are a few quotes, with emphasis added:

"UNIDO's principal purpose is to foster the industrialization of developing countries...In recent years, there has been growing recognition of the need to formulate more effective institutions within the United Nations system to deal with the problems of development in an increasingly interdependent world...The Constitution would give greater recognition to the special roles of major donors, including the United States, other industrial democracies, and the Soviet bloc... While the Constitution refers to the objectives of helping establish a new international economic order, the United States has made clear its view that this does not refer to any preconceived notion of such an order as outlined in some UN resolutions to which the United States has taken exception."

In a letter of submittal to the State Department, President Reagan is more explicit: "The Constitution consists of a preamble, twenty-nine articles and three annexes. The Preamble states that the States Parties, while bearing in mind the 'broad objectives'...pertaining to the establishment of a new international economic order, make certain declarations regarding economic development. The declarations include the necessity of establishing a just and equitable economic and social order;..." In the UNIDO Constitution we are told that "The primary objectives of the Organization shall be the promotion and acceleration of industrial development in the developing countries with a view to assisting in the establishment of a new international economic order. The Organization shall also promote industrial development and cooperation on global, regional and national, as well as sectoral levels." And here we see a frank statement that this Constitution can supersede our own national constitution in industrial and social matters.

While President Reagan and the Senate quietly approved this UNIDO Constitution in 1981, and in other unheralded ways adhered to and supported the UN, the publicly expressed attitude was one of distrust. As The New York Times of Sept. 14, 1986, observed: "Until recently, the Administration consistently criticized the UN...These criticisms were reflected in Congressional cuts that the US is required to pay the UN next month." But now comes a change in attitude. Said the same NYT article: "But the Administration has now focused on the UN as a key for American foreign policy interests and is asking Congress to restore at least some of the money...Some UN policy analysts believe that without the personal intervention of President Reagan, it may be too late this year to bail the UN out of what is clearly the worst financial crisis in its history."

So this drive to install the New World Order continues at the highest levels of our government, and the creation of "piecemeal" international agencies such as this UNIDO Constitution, which supersedes our own in some ways, seems to be the pattern.

"Shall we acquire the means of effective resistance by lying supinely on our backs and hugging the illusive phantom of hope, until our enemies have bound us hand and foot?" asked Patrick Henry in 1775.

A WIFE CAMPAIGNS TO FREE A PATRIOT

The letter is dated September 15, 1986. It's self-explanatory:

* * * * *

Yesterday was my husband George Hansen's 56th birthday - and his 86th day in jail as a political prisoner of the federal government. Since the day was Sunday and George could have visitors, I was there.

There was no birthday cake, no home cooked goodie from my kitchen - only a kiss and a few choice hours of quiet conversation. You are not even allowed to bring a stick of gum, just a roll of quarters for junk food from the vending machines where the proceeds go to the prison officer's association.

Congressman George Hansen was railroaded into prison by the US Department of Justice for supposedly breaking a "law" that the Congress never even intended to carry criminal penalties.

The court system, as it has done so many times and with the Justice Department guiding it this time, essentially rewrote the law Congress passed so that they could imprison my husband.

American leaders are quick to condemn other nations for holding political prisoners - people like Nelson Mandela in South Africa and Andrei Sakharov in the Soviet Union. And American jails hold scandals just as outrageous. There is no question in my mind that George Hansen is just as much a political prisoner as Mandela and Sakharov. You may wonder why the bureaucracy in Washington wanted my husband put away. Please let me tell you some of the reasons:

George has been so effective in bringing to light the outright breaking of federal laws and a virtual reign of terror against American citizens by the Internal Revenue Service and other agencies engaged in unapproved, wholesale wiretapping, illegal searches and seizures, and scandalous legal and judicial abuses, that they wanted him out of their way at any cost.

In 1981, George went to bat for a group of farmers in southern Idaho who had been charged by the US Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS) with "trafficking" illegal aliens. When it was all said and done, George had helped prove, to the embarrassment of the Department of Justice, that it was the INS - the government - that was breaking the law. The US Border Patrol, shockingly, went into Old Mexico, gathered up dozens of Mexican citizens, took them illegally across the border into the United States then "trafficked" them 1,000 miles into Idaho, unloaded them on several farmers, and then charged those same farmers with the trafficking done by the federal agents.

A federal judge in Boise, Idaho, said this was the worst case of legal entrapment he had seen and he threw the case out of court. Immediately arrogant INS officials declared to the press that they couldn't explain what went wrong in the Idaho case, but they planned to continue such illegal entrapment practices. Congressman Hansen used this and other abuse cases for years to deny reckless INS and Justice Department requests for broad new authority during immigration debate before Congress.

The following paragraph from a letter written by George in Petersburg Camp on July 15th, gives more reasons why the bureaucrats wanted

George out of commission. George writes:

"I went to Iran to help free American "political prisoners" during the hostage crisis. I went to Bolivia to free American "political prisoners" held because of political arrangements made by our country over drugs and foreign aid. I went to Nebraska to free American fathers held in a County jail as "political prisoners" over religious education policies, and I visited a religious leader in Danbury Federal prison in the fight to protect American church leaders everywhere from becoming "political prisoners" purely on the bureaucratic say-so of the IRS."

My husband's crusade, so to speak, has been to make our government abide by its own laws under the Constitution instead of trampling on the rights of our citizens, but by so doing, the bureaucrats have vented their wrath against George.

George and I want you to know that we appreciate all of the telephone calls, telegrams, mailgrams, petitions and letters requesting a Presidential pardon that have been directed to the White House on George's behalf. I can tell you that this effort has already had a tremendous impact. While the normal rules governing a pardon usually require a waiting period of several years, we have been encouraged by legal counsel to the President and the Vice President to submit the necessary paper to the US Pardon Attorney right away.

These papers have now been properly filed (on August 27, 1986) and the White House is fully aware of the filing since copies of these documents have been delivered to all key officials in the Department of Justice, and in the offices of the President and the Vice President, including Donald Regan and Pat Buchanan.

Now that we are on the threshold of success, it is vitally important for all of our friends to double their efforts and again contact the White House urging the President to take action now to end this injustice, which threatens all Americans, by granting an immediate and full pardon for my husband.

To accomplish this goal, please select one or more of the following suggestions:

1. Send a telegram by calling Western Union at 1-800-325-6000. Ask for Operator #49 and tell him/her that you want to send the telegram to President Reagan concerning George Hansen. It is already in their computer system. Just give your name, address and telephone number (you will be charged $4.00 on your telephone bill) and the following message will be sent: "President Ronald Reagan, c/o The Honorable Donald Regan, The White House, Washington, D.C. 20500. Mr. President: Please grant an immediate, full and unconditional pardon to the Honorable George Hansen, a great patriot who has served his country well."
2. Send the same message as above in a mailgram.
3. Write a personal letter to the President with a message similar to the message in #1 above.
4. Place two calls to the White House at (202) 456-1414. First, ask for Donald Regan's office and give your message, then call again and ask for Pat Buchanan's office and repeat your message to them.
5. Ask your family, friends and neighbors to also send a telegram or to make phone calls as you have done.

As I have said, this is George's birthday month. The best birthday present he could receive would be a pardon by the President in the next few weeks. You can help make that happen by contacting the White House as I have suggested as soon as possible...

I would enjoy knowing of your activities and being informed of the responses you receive. Remember, George is continuing his fight from prison, and no matter what happens, he will soon be back actively leading this battle so important to all Americans. Sincerely yours (signed) Connie. P.S. Letters and contributions can be sent to: New Continental Congress, 400 First Street, N.W., Suite 809, Washington, D.C. 20001.

We have published Connie Hansen's appeal for two reasons:

1. There but for the Grace of God could go many of the other patriots who are taking an active leadership in this fight to save our Nation and heal and restore our Constitutional Republic. At a time like this it's good to remember Benjamin Franklin's advice: If we don't hang together we may hang separately.
2. This is a good place to start on the long and wearisome journey that could lead to moral and spiritual recovery, if we don't faint along the way. More of this later.

Our Report of July 18, 1986, gave the details of George Hansen's arrest and imprisonment; the only elected representative to be prosecuted under the Ethics in Government Act of 1978. We pointed out that Representative Geraldine Ferraro was obviously guilty of violations of this same act, was never charged, and was allowed to continue her campaign for the high position of Vice President of the United States. We also quoted Lawrence Patterson who observed that "We join, then, the Soviet Union, Poland, East Germany, Czechoslovakia, and Red China with nationally known political prisoners..." Other newsletter publishers also published information concerning the railroading into prison of George Hansen. Many letters were written to public officials. One of our subscribers whom we shall not name sent us his Congressman's reply to a letter sent him. In reading this reply, we wondered just what kind of lies and distortions had been fed the Members of the House regarding Hansen's alleged guilt. The Congressman wrote:

"Thank you for your note about former Congressman George Hansen and the enclosed clippings. The House proceedings were based on a hearing which indicated to the Committee that made the study that Mr. Hansen did not just accidentally overlook something that needed technical correction. If they had come to that conclusion that it was purely an accident involving no adverse motive, the matter would never have been brought to the House Floor for a vote. Actually, very large sums of money were involved, and if my memory serves me correctly, it dealt with a financial arrangement that Mr. Hansen had with the Hunt brothers, who were deeply involved in silver and whose holdings were once in excess of a billion dollars. What I am saying to you is that although technical small matters dealt with in changes in forms are allowed, the Committee had to come to the conclusion that there was no accidental error involved in the case of Mr. Hansen, in order to have brought the matter to the Floor for a vote. That is the material which is left out of those articles you sent, which you have brought to my attention. With kindest regards I am, Sincerely _____."

This Congressman implies that what George Hansen did was no accident. Technically, that's true. What he did was reported to and ratified by the Ethics Committee of the House at the time that he did it. So, no crime was involved; the Committee twisted the law to make it appear a crime. As for the smearing reference to the Hunt brothers, this involved a property division so that Connie Hansen could legally raise some money to pay some legal bills in another totally unrelated case. Moreover, a ranking member of the Committee (former Rep. Charles Wiggins) attested in a deposition that Hansen's action in this matter was approved at the time by the Committee. As M. Stanton Evans wrote in Human Events: "It is plain as day, on the available record, that the staff of the Committee was out to get Hansen, and simply ignored the evidence in his favor...George Hansen has fought many battles for the taxpayers and little people of this country. In the course of doing so, he has made numerous enemies in the bureaucracy and elsewhere in the establishment. All too obviously, he is paying the price today for having done so. If there is any semblance of justice left in the United States he should be pardoned forthwith." (For further information, write to the organization which George Hansen founded to continue the fight against corruption in high places: New Continental Congress, 400 First Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20001.

Historians of the future may marvel at the many manufactured mass movements and created national crises that were employed by a group of mostly unidentified Conspirators in their attempts to destroy Christianity and individual enterprise. There was the created Slavery Crisis that almost destroyed the Republic. In the early years of the twentieth century there was the created and well financed drive of the International Workers of the World (IWW) and the Criminal Syndicalism now remembered mostly because of the executions of Sacco and Vanzetti. There was the craftily created Great Depression which led to the introduction of the New Deal. There was the surge toward Social Action Christianity (Socialism in sheep's clothing) which paved the way for the introduction of Humanism as a religion to replace Christianity. There was the well financed Communist attempt to take over our government at the top level, a drive that was thwarted through testimony of such men as Whittaker Chambers and actions of such men as Senator Joe McCarthy. We could name many such manufactured movements and created crises, all of which had their purpose in accordance with the Hegelian dialectics that is a principle tool of the Conspirators.

But greatly overlooked and kept hidden was the Fabian Movement which called for Gradualism, Legislation leading toward Bureaucratic Dictatorship, and Education to prepare people for life in a Socialist World Government. To supplement the Communist Manifesto there was written the Humanist Manifestos I and II. And the tactics of the agents of the Conspirators, those who were working at the peoples' level, began to change. A new kind of drive was initiated, one best expressed by a former KGB agent and defector:

"The highest art of war is not to fight at all, but to subvert your enemy by destroying his moral principles, his religion, his culture, and the traditional links between individuals and society. When a country is demoralized, you can take it over painlessly, without firing a shot,"

That's why men like George Hansen must be free to fight, and why millions of Americans must join him, lest freedom perish from the earth.

BUT WHICH CRISIS?

This is not the Report we had intended giving you this week. We laid the unfinished work aside to be completed another day, and we started all over again. Because some very unusual things have been happening these past few weeks. The speed at which one manufactured crisis follows another manufactured crisis seems to indicate that a real crisis is in the making.

In our last week's Report we wrote: "Historians of the future may marvel at the many manufactured movements and created national crises that were employed by a group of mostly unidentified Conspirators in their attempts to destroy Christianity and individual enterprise...and the Republic." We named a few of those created crisis and said they had their purpose "in accordance with the Hegelian dialectics that is a principal tool of the Conspirators." In this age of satellites and instant news coverage, the communications media have developed a special talent for taking a regular news item of little more than local importance and expanding it into an earth-shaking event. Without even considering apologies or excuses on the part of the principals, the Watergate crisis is an excellent example. Actually, it was nothing more than an attempted robbery that never happened. But it resulted in the jailing of a number of public officials, and the resignation and pardoning of a President. A mole hill had become a mountain, and a Rockefeller became a Vice-President of the United States as a result; thus serving the purpose of the Conspirators who were seeking the establishment of a New World Order.

More recently, some of the events that have been developed into international crises, make one wonder. There is a business merger and Dow threatens to collapse. There is another merger or rejected merger, and Dow shoots toward the stars. After a long series of arrests of spies who had been making money by selling alleged secrets to the USSR, a Russian employee at the UN was arrested as a spy, and the Zakharov story develops into an international crisis. Then comes the arrest of a reporter in Moscow and Daniloff becomes the second act of the international crisis. Every possible angle that could be worked without telling too much of the truth, was worked. Then came another crisis: those 25 Soviet spies that were working as clerks at the UN were ordered to leave the country forthwith. Suddenly Daniloff was released and Zakharov was to be released. President Reagan said "There was no connection between these two releases...but there were other arrangements with regard to Zakharov that resulted in his being freed." But he had to back off on his "blink" statements and admit he had not told the truth about it. And, regardless of what officials may say, the USSR won every point in the news surrounding the releases. It was Gorbachev who suggested that he and President Reagan meet in Reykjavik, Iceland on Oct. 11 and 12. And it was Armand Hammer who made it all possible.

In yet another series of developed crises, the House voted sanctions against South Africa and voted to override the President's veto. The Senate might also override the veto. So, hastily a black ambassador to Liberia, Edward Perkins, was named new ambassador to South Africa. Secretary of State George Shultz then told the Senate it would be a very bad thing if they overrode the President's veto, in view of the negotiations for a summit in Washington which were hanging by a thread.

To further accent the Soviet gains and the American humiliations, it was announced that those 25 KGB "diplomats" wouldn't have to hurry about leaving the US. So, as usual, we lost on every point in these "crises" and the USSR and the Establishment, whose aim is the same, took more small steps toward their "inevitable" Socialist World Government. And these crises, created or otherwise, are harbingers of a Great Crisis, which probably will involve the necessity of creating a universal currency in order to prevent Big Bankruptcies and economic disaster. Unless a way can be found to stop them and save the Republic.

There's yet another reason for taking news items and stretching them into global crises. This permits coverups and blackouts of more important news. People are thinking of Daniloff when they should be thinking of the Immigration Crisis which is making our own Nation a United Nations. Where have you read or heard about those five or more terrorist training camps that are located in Mexico, in places near the US border? The Sheriff of Midland County, Texas, went to visit one of them, found Libyans, Cubans, Columbians, among other "students" who were being taught the arts of terrorism and guerrilla warfare, pending an invasion to recover Texas, New Mexico and California for Mexico. Sheriff Painter prepared maps, along with other pertinent documentation, and went to Washington where he was permitted to meet with officials from the State Department, CIA, US Customs, and Boyden Gray, the chief counsel of George Bush, Vice-President and member of the National Security Council. He was told that his information was "in the vital interest of our national security" and that it was "most accurate and up to date." But Sheriff Painter says that is the extent of interest the federal agencies have shown! He also stated that "it's mind-boggling that this credible information is being ignored." It is also incredible that people must rely on newsletters to gain such information. According to a "Terrorist Intelligence Report" of May 15, 1986, the following list of targets is shown: Electric Transmission Towers, Non-Nuclear Power Stations, Oil Production Fields, Natural Gas Production Fields, Oil Storage Facilities, Nuclear Power Plants Telephone Communication Centers, Offshore Oil Platforms, Commercial Airports, Military Storage Depots, Railroads, Seaports, US Border Areas, Municipal Police Stations, Municipal Water Supplies, Trucking Terminals, Chemical Plants, Subways, Panama Canal, National Guard Armories, National Guard Airfields, Computer Centers, Nuclear Weapon Storage Sites, and Classified Defense Offices in Commerical Buildings.

To accomplish such destruction when the word is given, trained terrorists are among the thousands of Mexican immigrants that cross the border into the US and then "lose themselves" in the Hispanic communities until they receive their orders.

There also is the Sanctuary Movement which is conducted by certain religious groups, and which brings into the US specialized immigrants from Salvador, Guatemala, and other Latin countries, under the assumption that they are political refugees seeking asylum. This Sanctuary Movement is a nationwide, informally organized network of individuals, religious institutions and other organizations engaged in illegal immigration into the US from Latin America. They provide transportation, harboring and assistance to the refugees, in violation of federal law. One might be able to commend the operation as a matter of Christian charity if these immigrants were really refugees fleeing from Marxist persecution and possible death because of their Christian and/or political beliefs. But, according to The American Immigration Control Foundation, Sanctuary spokesmen go into Mexico, seek out potential illegal immigrants, screen them to be sure they are committed to Liberation Theology and Marxist ideals, determine whether they can stand the trip, the isolation, and the ability to speak before left-wing rallies as they are being transported across the US to their selected place of sanctuary, which may be a church, a synagogue, a college campus, or a family willing to hide and assist them until they are able to "disappear" in the crowds of legal and illegal Hispanic communities dotting the country.

We were surprised to find a long article explaining the Sanctuary Movement in the Sept. 25, 1986 issue of The Christian Science Monitor. The article starts on page 1, continues to pages 6 and 7. There is an illustration showing the "underground railway" that was used to transport an illegal family from Phoenix AZ through six States to Springfield, MA. There were stopovers in all of the States where the father of the family delivered a prepared talk on how terrible was their situation in Salvador before escaping to Mexico, where they were contacted by the Sanctuary spokesman. In their trip to Springfield, there was a detour made so the refugee could speak at a nuclear protest rally. Said a spokesman in the organization, "I know it has been inconvenient, but I think it is important that people here have faces to connect with all those letters they write to their congressmen." Said the CSM article: "It is sometimes unclear whether the safety of the refugees comes before the refugees' responsibility to tell their story to as many people as possible...It is a way to keep the refugees in the eyes of the public. This is important because our goals are twofold: One is to provide refuge for refugees; the second is to speak out against the policies of the US that continue to feed the wars in Central America."

The Sanctuary Movement is sponsored by 28 national organizations, most of them religious. But support also comes from the Communist National Lawyers Guild; the World Federation of Trade Unions, a Soviet-controlled front; the International Association of Democratic Lawyers which also is a Communist front; the National Union of Cuban Jurists; along with the Church World Service of the National Council of Churches; etc. Regardless of the religious affiliation, the actual religious ideology of the Sanctuary Movement is Liberation Theology. This is a "political and religious movement that interprets Christian doctrine as justifying or mandating radical or even revolutionary social and political change by the use of violence as well as other means." Ernesto Cardenal is a Trappist monk who is Minister of Culture in the Sandinista government of Nicaragua. According to David Nolan of the Miami University Institute of Interamerican Studies, Cardenal's "faith in God and in the revolution became intertwined to the point that he felt 'that not only can a Christian be a Marxist, but that in order for him to be authentically Christian, he must be a Marxist, with emphasis on must'."

Remembering that Liberation Theology is the ideology of the Sanctuary Movement, note this statement: "Sanctuary refugees are not randomly selected from those who appear at a church's door. First they are 'screened' to see if they're ready for the commitment, says Sister Darlene Nicgorski, who has done a large chunk of screening for the sanctuary movement." (Quoted from The Sanctuary Movement: Smuggling Revolution by the American Immigration Control Foundation, P.O.Box 525, Monterey, VA 24465). Columnist Ron Arnold wrote in the Bellevue (Wash.) Journal-American: ""Movement leaders do not seek out refugees from Communist Nicaragua, where real genocide has been wrought upon the Miskito Indians. Sanctuary leaders concentrate on refugees from El Salvador and Guatemala, where governments are supported by the United States. Movement leaders only work to discredit US support of anti-Communist freedom fighters in Central America and to embarrass the Reagan Administration. Their movement is not humanitarian, it is political." And their politics is Marxism.

Of course the Sanctuary Movement is but one part of what has been called "The Immigration Time Bomb," a real crisis about which little is being done. America is being invaded. Every day thousands of illegal aliens enter the United States; and this has been going on for more than a decade. Most of them come in seeking work and displacing American citizens. Others are lured into the country by "religious" and "welfare rights" groups who promise them benefits that a "welfare state" can offer them. And still others come in as trained terrorists. A Deputy Chief of the US Border Patrol, now retired, remarked:

"When concerned American citizens ask their leaders to halt this invasion, they are told that nothing can be done and that, after all, 'this is a nation of immigrants.' These sentimental imageries ('Give me your tired, your poor...') have been used to blind many Americans to the dangers presented by uncontrolled immigration. Current US immigration is a national disgrace. The beneficiaries of this policy remain politically powerful, unwilling to put aside narrow, special interests for the national good."

We spoke of "manufactured movements and created crises," and said one reason for them is to cover up and black out the real crises which face our Nation. Immigration and the Sanctuary Movement are such an ignored crisis. And there is AIDS; we hear much of cures being sought, but nothing about steps to control the disease. There's the national debt; congress has just made arrangements for another huge loan to keep the government "solvent" for another few months. If you want a real crisis, think of our government controlled school system and the kind of future citizens it is producing. We could go on and on.

Still, there is hope. Because when people finally understand that there is a real crisis, there comes a division of the good and the evil. As one editor wrote: "While certain sections of a city are awash with drugs, sexual perversity, and criminality of the lowest order, around the corner and up the block countless thousands are flocking to the City of God in renewed religious fervor."

"For whatsoever is born of God overcometh the world; and this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith." (I John 5:4).

THE STATE OF OUR INTERNAL INSECURITY

Our federal administration is playing a double game. It is secretly promoting the sending of military technology to the Soviet Union while at the same time it is creating highly publicized "spy trials" and punishing individuals for doing the very thing that the American multinational corporations are doing, and under government approval and encouragement. It has been thoroughly documented that a secret organization called The US-USSR Trade and Economic Council, Inc. sends advanced technology to the Soviet Union with the approval of Vice-President George Bush and Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige. The multinationals involved in these transactions make a profit. But when a "spy" does the same thing, he is punished. Does no one dare call them both treason?

But these spy trials reveal yet another way in which our federal administrations have been involved in promoting an enemy at the risk of destroying our national security. When the whole story of the highly publicized "spy trial" of Nicholas Daniloff was told, it was revealed that there was a Russian priest, probably a KGB operative, who gave Daniloff a sealed letter addressed to the US ambassador, Arthur Hartman. But when the letter was opened at the embassy, it contained another envelope addressed to William Casey, director of the CIA. Daniloff was called to the embassy for a secret conference and he had to be taken to what he called a "security room" which was "designed to thwart Soviet listening devices or other electronic surveillance." It has been known for some time that the US Embassy in Moscow is so "bugged" that anything that is said can be heard by the KGB. As a result of this situation it was decided some time ago that a new embassy building would be built in Moscow while a new Soviet Embassy would also be constructed in Washington.

On Sept. 28, 1986, UPI reported that "Work may have to be halted indefinitely on the new US Embassy in Moscow because 'sophisticated listening devices have been implanted in everything.'" Soviet workers are building the embassy under American supervision...Construction is five years behind schedule and $80 million over budget. Some experts in the intelligence community suggest the $167 million building may have to be demolished before it is completed. Sophisticated listening devices have been implanted in everything from precast floors and prefabricated concrete columns to steel beams."

But on the other hand: "Soviet families already have moved into a new embassy complex in Washington." About a year ago columnist William Safire wrote: "In the new Soviet Embassy compound atop the District of Columbia's Mount Alto, 350 feet above sea level, laser-beam listening devices are now being installed by Soviet technicians. They have a clear line of sight to the White House and the Capitol. Aimed at windowpanes, the superbugs will be able to pick up conversations in all the rooms with north-facing windows...In the U.S. Embassy in Moscow, more than 200 Russian nationals make the beds, serve the food and spy. (Not one American works for the Soviet Embassy in Washington)."

When the Soviets are given an almost free hand to spy as they wish, where they wish, and when they wish; when a Daniloff-Zakharov trade becomes a front-page sensation; when American firms are encouraged, secretly, to give the Soviets technology that is essential to the making of sophisticated weaponry; when all of these things are considered, one wonders if these highly publicized "spy trials" are deliberately created and rigged to keep Americans from knowing how we are giving in to this Military-Industrial Complex that makes its money selling weapons, promoting wars, knows no national loyalties, and cooperates with the Communists in promoting a Socialist World Government. We recall the words of General Andrew Gatsis (USA-Ret.):

"Though aware of the Communist goal of world domination, the average US citizen refuses to believe that the Reds are only a peripheral enemy and that the real threat comes from a Western power structure made up of governmental officials and their non-governmental confederates who secretly espouse the same objectives as the openly-avowed Communists. These underhanded activists, whom we shall call the Insiders, promote one-world government through a gradual transition from freedom to International Socialism." Then the General named one of the goals in their hidden agenda:

Neutralize United States Intelligence Agencies.

Let's check the record. On May 20, 1986, there was a meeting of the National Committee to Restore Internal Security, held at the House Office Building, Annex No. 1, Robert Morris, Chairman, presiding. In reading the report of this meeting we learn that we had "a very efficient functioning organization that was collecting domestic security." But in 1976, things began to change:

"In these hearings and surveys between 1980 and 1983, we agreed with the conclusion of the last Chairman of the United States Internal Security Subcommittee, James O. Eastland, that we were approaching 'zero' security. Security files had been massively destroyed. The State of Texas Public Safety Division had destroyed its files...The intelligence files of the police departments in Pittsburgh, Baltimore, Washington, D.C. and other cities were destroyed...The intelligence files of the Chicago Police Department and of the New York City Police have been impounded for almost four years. What security files survived were not distributed, lest they trigger a privacy or defamation suit. In the public sector, applicants for employment could not be asked if they were then or previously members of the Communist Party or other subversive organizations. Since files were generally unavailable after 1976, military officers were helpless to judge applicants or recruits...The Internal Security Division of the Department of Justice had been abolished as well as the House and Senate Internal Security Committees. The Subversive Activities Control Board was defunct because it received no cases. The files of the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee had been stored in such a remote locale that they were virtually inaccessible for working purposes. And this accumulation of security information over 30 years was not being used. The situation was so ridiculous that according to the Civil Service Manual, if an applicant was a member of a group claiming credit for a bombing, he could be asked about the bombing but not whether or not he was a member of the group claiming the bombing. Members of subversive organizations could not be denied employment on the basis of mere membership, They would have had to have been indicted or convicted or would have had to have been involved with terror, espionage or sabotage. The number of FBI agents was declining...Suits against individual agents were extensive. Two high officials of the FBI were prosecuted for pursuing known terrorists through the use of their mails... In 1983 the Attorney General's list of subversive organizations, which once numbered in the hundreds, had been reduced to six; and whereas there were 23,000 potential saboteurs or terrorists listed in the FBI files in event of emergency, that number had reduced to a little more than a hundred, with surveillance of non-Soviet-bloc suspects little more than one dozen. In one of our hearings, we heard from one witness that there were 30,000 Soviet-bloc individuals - diplomats, businessmen, exchange students, scientists and others in the country - stealing our technology without interference while FBI agents were so overburdened that they could not even record their names, much less monitor them. In one hearing we learned of an umbrella-type subversive organization with 31 offshoots operating in the New York metropolitan area with no supervision whatever. and one of our witnesses told of another such umbrella organization known as the Campaign for Political Rights, with 18 groups affiliated." (End of extended quotation).

As the Security Conference continued, Francis J. McNamara, former Executive Director of the now defunct Subversive Activities Control Board, explained how it all began. On Feb. 18, 1976, President Gerald Ford issued an executive order re-defining the activities of the entire intelligence community - the FBI, CIA, NSA, and so on down the line. In this order he directed the then Attorney General, Edward H. Levi, to set new limits on the conduct of intelligence operations. In fact, Levi's orders virtually eliminated the possibility of any federal agency to conduct meaningful intelligence activities. For example, the FBI could arrest terrorists after the crime had been committed, but they could not infiltrate the subversive groups and obtain information that might prevent a crime that was being planned. This order of Levi's "reversed the presidential directives that had been in effect for 40 years," said Mr. McNamara. "In effect, any terrorist had a free shot. Until you had committed a crime, and are preparing to commit another, you can't be investigated." This is why no effective security measures could be taken when the attempt to assassinate President Reagan was made. The Secret Service is supposed to protect presidents, but it gets its information from the FBI, and the FBI had no information to give because of existing orders. Chairman Morris commented: "In other words, Mr. McNamara, the roots of terror, the roots of espionage, the roots of sabotage is the gathering of information. And barring that root, if you expunge the root, you can no longer be able to detect a resulting crime." McNamara answered: "Consider how the guidelines affected the FBI's ability to prevent assassination, as directed in the Ford order and later in those of Carter and Reagan. The attempted assassination of President Reagan and the Pope, the assassination of President Kennedy, of Bobby Kennedy, the maiming of George Wallace, the assassination of Sadat, of Indira Gandhi, Lord Louis Mountbatten - all over the world, this is an age of assassination, in effect. All these developments pinpoint the importance of the FBI's role in preventing assassination."

The discussion concerning the FBI concluded, Chairman Morris asked about the other agencies that were supposedly intelligence agencies. What about the Subversive Activities Control Board. "That's been abolished," said McNamara. "It's (Senator) Sam Ervin who killed the SACB." Chairman Morris: "What's the status of the Internal Security Division of the Department of Justice?"

Mr. McNamara...that's been reduced to a section of the criminal division."

Chairman Morris: "How about the House Internal Security Committee?"

Mr. McNamara: "There is none."

Chairman Morris: "How about the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee?"

Mr. McNamara: "Well, you have the Senate Subcommittee on Security and Terrorism now...but it's very constrained in its appropriation and its personnel. very small staff, very little money. And so it has been limited in its ability to hold hearings. But it has held some very worthwhile hearings." (Senator Denton is Chairman of that Subcommittee).

Later the discussion turned to the presence of known terrorist organizations within the US. Nine countries were named as having supported and exported terrorists: Libya, Iran, Syria, East Germany, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Cuba, Nicaragua, and North Korea. These nine countries are involved in government-supported terrorism, acting as surrogates for the Soviet Union. Also named were supporters of the Irish Republican Army, the Tamils from Sri Lanka, the Sikhs from India, the brutal Shining Path people of Peru, the Croations, SWAPO from Namibia, and ANC from South Africa. "You could go right down the list and you would find support here for all of these organizations."

The National Committee's report noted that "There is an extremely large loophole in the internal security apparatus of the US - through the United Nations. The UN has given official sanction to a number of terrorist organizations...whose agents are so freely admitted into this country and to the UN." And finally came this statement:

"Terrorism is not going away. The most sanguine among us could not possibly hope that peaceful coexistence between the Western World and the Soviet Union could possibly lead to the policymakers of the Soviet Union proceeding on any course except the one they have, which is to aid subversion and terrorism around the world, and to keep these organizations that they have well in place, running, with all the money and weapons they need in order to carry on their dirty work." And we can understand the seriousness of the situation when we realize that "all the money and weapons" are supplied indirectly by that "Western power structure made up of governmental officials and their non-governmental confederates who secretly espouse the same objectives as the openly-avowed Communists." Add to this internal insecurity problem the uncontrolled drug and crime situations, and we'll know that it's time for a revival and a return to those Christian American principles that built our Nation. American citizens can enjoy liberty only when they know criminals will be punished and invaders repelled.

For the weapons of our warfare and not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strong holds: Casting down imaginations, and every high thing that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God... (II Corinthians 10:4,5).

"NO DEAL BEATS A BAD ONE"

The superstitious insist that Iceland is an island full of elves, mischeivous little creatures that specialize in tantalizing people and causing them to forget things and make mistakes. There also is a saying that Hofdi House, where President Reagan and Chairman Gorbachev were meeting, is haunted. So, say the superstitious, because of the elves and the ghosts, no matter how hard they tried, the leaders couldn't come to an agreement. But only the superstitious would believe any such tale. So let's suggest another reason for what the liberals call a defeat and the conservatives call a victory.

In less than a month there would be a national election in the US. For those who believe that votes really count, November 4th would be a very important day. This year, at the grass roots level, Christians have spent many hours and dollars on what might be called "political action." There are a number of important unGodly things that they want to see done away with, and they want to put representatives in the House who will honor the oath they will take and represent the people instead of some special interest group. In a Letter from Plymouth Rock this Christian foundation lists some of those evils. We quote: "Abortion on demand is still the law of the land; it remains a subsidized, horrendous national sin; blood is on the nation. The sin of government-sponsored gambling continues; indeed it increases. Caesar delights in the revenues gained through tempting those who can least afford the loss. And while government seeks to crack down on drugs, many States operate liquor stores and encourage their citizens to indulge in one of the most pervasive drugs of all. As a nation we continue (in fact, increase) our trade and covenants with the avowed enemies of God. The latest Geneva summit invited that 'evil empire' to introduce their computerized and atheistic propaganda into our schools. God is not so fortunate: His Word is barred. Money changers and manipulators raid our public treasury and continue their unholy influence on public affairs, foreign and domestic. Murderers and drug pushers are released to roam the streets...What an exciting time to be a Christian!...To your knees to pray! On your feet to work!" (Unquote). If the anti-Christians wanted to defeat even the possibility of the election of a House in which the majority was honest, oath-abiding Representatives, they would create diversions and seek sensations that the media, like an evil magician's assistants, could keep before the eyes of the voters so that, the hand being quicker than the eye, the same old crowd of hypocrites and liars could control the House and the Senate. So --

In the month preceding November 4th there was the sensational Daniloff affair. That occupied peoples' minds from coast to coast for days and days. People forgot about taxes, the exploding budget, the fear of economic disaster. And they probably forgot why and for whom they should vote. Then, as Daniloff came home, two unexpected summits began to be talked about. Both of them unexpected, held in strange places, but expected to make great media fodder. The first summit didn't go over as well as might have been expected because the two principals did such a job of fabricating to each other that even the media couldn't do much with it. This summit occurred at Jimmy Carter's new Presidential Center in Atlanta. First, President Reagan took a final dig at former President Carter, saying: "America used to wear a 'Kick me' sign around our neck, Well, we threw that sign away. Now it reads 'Don't tread on me'." Next day he boarded Air Force One and flew to Atlanta, where he made a speech and said: "I can pay you [Carter] no higher honor than to say simply this: You gave of yourself to your country, gracing the White House with your passion and intellect and commitment." Then Carter said to Reagan: "I don't think I've ever heard a speech that was more generous and more gracious...As I listened I understood more clearly than I ever have in my life why you won in November, 1980, and I lost." Well, as you can see, journalists couldn't do much with that. As US News observed, they wrote post-mortems pronouncing the session a success."

Then Communist Party Chairman Gorbachev came onto the scene by inviting President Reagan to a pre-summit meeting which would be held at, of all unexpected places, Reykjavik, Iceland. Daniloff was back at US News, Orlov and wife were free, another Soviet spy had been expelled, another 25 were on hold. So it seemed a good time to accept such an invitation. It would supply plenty of media fodder, help make people forget the real issues facing the Nation. Both Gorbachev and Reagan must have known that because of the SDI issue, nothing would be accomplished at such a meeting. Still, it seemed a good idea. "The world held high hopes," said one newsweekly, "that when Ronald Reagan and Mikhail Gorbachev met in the land of fire and ice, a miracle could occur. But when the leaders flew home from talks in the Icelandic capital of Reykjavik, they faced the same hard truths on the big issues that have long shadowed relations between the superpowers. In an era when doomsday missiles can traverse the globe in minutes, real headway reducing their numbers will be measured in months, if not years." And, as everyone must have known, the issue on which neither Reagan nor Gorbachev would agree was SDI, misnamed by the media and called "Star Wars,"

There was one dangerous moment as the leaders discussed and generally disagreed for hour upon hour. President Reagan began to relent and agreed to a part of Gorbachev's proposal: A ten year period in which all missiles would be destroyed and not replaced. Half of them would be gone at the end of five years; the rest at the end of ten. And that would rid the world of the fear of nuclear attack (except for China, Israel, Pakistan, France, and the other Nations that would still have nuclear bombs or missiles on hand). As for SDI, scientists and technicians would continue to develop and perfect the system, but it would not be deployed until it seemed necessary at the end of the ten year period. Fortunately, Gorbachev disagreed, said all SDI development should be confined to the laboratory. And on this, President Reagan disagreed. We say the such an arrangement might be dangerous because, knowing the Soviet's propensity for treating treaties like pie crusts, at the end of ten years the US might find itself the world's only disarmed Nation. This plus the fact that there's no assurance the SDI will be perfected and deployable in ten years. Those in the know are sure SDI will do its job, but they don't know when it'll be ready to do it. Having been saved from this ten year trap, the two leaders finally gave up disagreeing and flew back to their capitals.

And that's when politics came in strong. When the media learned that "Star Wars" was the stumbling block, they immediately called the meeting a defeat, said Reagan had failed, had missed a great opportunity to rid the world of a nuclear threat, etc. As per his promise to report to the people, the President had given a prime time and adequate description of what had happened at the meeting. But that merely caused the media and the National Democratic Party to cry defeat with louder voices. So the Administration decided that more had to be said positively by more people. The New York Times reported: "White House officials, expressing unhappiness over news accounts of President Reagan's stance in his meeting with Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev, have begun one of the most extensive public relations efforts of Reagan's presidency. Reagan aides said their goal was to reverse the emphasis of newspaper and television reports they said portrayed Reagan's adherence to the Strategic Defense Initiative as the major reason for the leaders' failure to agree on a major arms control accord last weekend in Iceland. Reagan and his advisers Tuesday began a series of interviews and speeches aimed at placing the blame for the occasion on the Soviet leader, White House aides said...The decision places such officials as Secretary of State George Shultz; Donald Regan, the White House chief of staff; Vice Admiral John Poindexter, head of the National Security Council, as well as Reagan, at the center of a television, newspaper and magazine push to challenge Soviet propaganda and increase support for the administration and the military plan known as Star Wars." So, every official that was involved in the Iceland Epic was seeking television time, giving out interviews, writing special articles, doing everything possible as though the fate of the Republican Party depended upon their efforts.

Meanwhile, in Moscow Mikhail Gorbachev was doing the same thing, seeking every way possible to convince the Politbureau that he was the winner and Reagan the loser, trying to win the approval of England, France, Germany, and the rest of the NATO members, of his efforts to "reduce missiles and promote peace."

As a matter of fact, Gorbachev was in a little trouble, and the Iceland Summit was a part of it. For example, while the American media have been busy telling people that "Star Wars" is a phony and simply won't work, Gorbachev is sure that it will work. There is a Soviet version of SDI already installed and ready to protect Moscow, if and when protection might become necessary. Now, the thermonuclear threat is one of the greatest weapons the USSR possesses. But if an SDI system is deployed by the US, there no longer is any thermonuclear threat. And here would be the USSR with billions tied up in nuclear missiles that are worthless if SDI can explode them in air before they ever reach a target. Gorbachev would lose his most powerful propaganda weapon if SDI were completed and deployed. That's why he's against "Star Wars," because he knows it would work.

Perhaps even more important to Gorbachev is the state of the Soviet economy under his leadership. US News cover story for Oct. 20 reports: "The Soviet leader must deal with entrenched resistance among Kremlin hard-liners while balancing an increasingly complex foreign policy against the conflicting needs and restraints of a troubled economy. For all his show of confidence and emphasis on glasnost, or openness, Mikhail Gorbachev today is a man on the high wire. And he is working without a net....Gorbachev says economic reform is his top priority, and there's good reason to believe it. The best evidence comes from Gorbachev himself. If the economy didn't desperately need fixing, he wouldn't have proposed the hurry-up summit in Iceland. An arms-race breather of any kind gives Gorbachev precious time to push ahead with the needed domestic reforms - without which he can't hope to pay for continued meddling abroad." As one Soviet-watcher declared, "The Russians can build a space ship and man it, but they can't make a washing machine that will work." Gorbachev had promised the Politbureau that he would improve farm and domestic problems without slowing down the military buildup. That's why the Iceland Summit was so important, and he failed. So did Reagan, for that matter; and it is our editorial opinion that we can be thankful.

A network and a newspaper cooperated to produce its usual poll. If you can believe a poll taken by the media, then you'll believe that 70% of the people of America think President Reagan did exactly the right things at this summit. And in Moscow the Politburo was also taking a poll. Gorbachev was on the spot because of "the failure of the meeting" at Reykjavik. But one Gorbachev booster said, "He's strong enough these days to deal with any criticism." He was right because Gorbachev is not to go the way of Khrushchev. Not yet, anyway. Instead, he's heading a propaganda offensive to try to force the countries of Western Europe to force Reagan to forget "Star Wars." And President Reagan is heading a propaganda campaign to convince people that SDI is real and "we're progressing."

Meanwhile, even as the leaders were agreeing to disagree at Reykjavik, delegates from the US and the USSR were meeting to complete more of those 16 cultural and educational exchanges agreed upon at the last Geneva summit. These call for "the development of additional exchanges and computer software for elementary and secondary school instruction, and to exchange professors." Computerized Communist propaganda for America's school children, and Communist professors to teach at higher levels! What could be an important part of this plan has to do with computer technology going to the USSR. On Oct. 13 the LA Times reported: "An estimated $11 million worth of specialized computers and related equipment have been diverted to the Soviet Union in one of the biggest unauthorized transfers of US high technology to the East," US officials said. The equipment was sent to Austria, then to East Germany, and finally to the Soviet Union. So, strengthening our enemies while weakening our friends continues to be our official foreign policy.

A footnote. Reykjavik's Mayor David Oddsson was responsible for organizing the housing and entertaining of all the foreign guests. He couldn't help reminding newsmen that "the last summit here was between President Georges Pompidou of France and Richard Nixon in 1974. Pompidou died a few months later, and we all know what happened to Nixon," he said.

"If the foundations be destroyed, what can the righteous do?"

"For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ." (Ps 11:3. I Cor 3:11).

ENEMY OR ALLY? AND WHICH WAR?

If it weren't potentially dangerous, the diplomatic war is like some children's game. A Soviet spy is arrested and is to be held for trial. Moscow retaliates by arresting an American journalist who was to be held for trial. An exchange is arranged; a Russian dissident is allowed to come to America; Armand Hammer brings another one to America. All seems quiet, except that those 25 Soviets accused of being KGB agents are deported. Moscow retaliates by deporting five Americans accused of being CIA agents. Then the US orders 55 Soviet diplomats to pack up and leave. Next move is Moscow's, and may have been made by the time you read this Report. But as this diplomatic mini-war goes on, other American and Soviet delegates are meeting regularly in Geneva, working out details of proposed arms reduction. And the top men, President Reagan and Comrade Gorbachev, keep telling the world that progress is being made. And, as the world looks upon the USSR and the USA as adversaries in an East-West conflict that could come to blows, the USSR and the USA continue to cooperate in the war against the Republic of South Africa. Specific example: This sanctions bill that was passed over a presidential veto, calls for the South African government to negotiate with the Communist controlled African National Congress, the Marxist Black Consciousness Movement, and the Pan African Congress. This is the same old ploy that was tried on Chiang Kai-shek: "Cooperate with the Communists, or else." Similar orders preceded the fall of Batista of Cuba, the Shah of Iran, Somoza of Nicaragua, and Marcos of the Philippines. The British applied the same rule to cause the fall of Rhodesia to the Marxists. That was after sanctions had failed. And speaking of sanctions:

South Africa is back in the headlines, thanks to GM and IBM, the two multinational giants who sold out to South African domestic interests, making their sellouts appear to be in line with the sanctions imposed by the defunct 99th Congress. The truth of the matter is, General Motors was losing money in its South African operations and found it convenient to turn the business over to a local corporation that will probably make money out of the transaction. IBM also was losing money, turned its business over to its South African employees, but will continue to supply equipment, parts and supplies to the new company. The truth of the matter seems to be that the South Africans have become so embittered by US actions against their government that any US based multinational now is losing business and is anxious to sell out, even at bargain prices. The sanctions bill had little to do with it. Coca-Cola, Procter & Gamble, Marriot, at least 35 other American companies have sold out or are trying to sell out; not because of any sanctions, just because of bad business. And the multinationals can afford to bide their time, waiting for the expected collapse of the present South African government, and the takeover by "friendly socialist" dictators who will be anxious to make deals in order to survive in the manner they hope to become accustomed.

Actually, the withdrawal of US multinationals isn't hurting the South African government, is probably strengthening its economy. As

The New York Times indicated in a special analysis by Alan Cowell, "the action of foreign corporations seems only to deepen the nation's chauvinism, prompting government leaders such as Foreign Minister Roelof Botha to welcome the sale to South Africans of the subsidiaries of American companies. One reason he can take such a stance is that there is not likely to be a negative economic effect since the businesses will continue." We were amused by Peter Jennings of ABC. In an attempt to show how sanctions were hurting South Africans, one South African was selected as an example. He sells flowers, one third of his crops is usually flown to the US. But direct flights between USA and RSA are now prohibited. So he may have to plow under that one third of his flower crop, commented the ABC reporter. He didn't mention that all such traffic will probably continue. Only inconvenience is that the shipment must go to some other country, and be transflown to the United States.

This, of course, will be the procedure for all future trade between the USA and the RSA, so long as the sanctions are in effect. There's already a precedent: Trade between the United States and Cuba generally goes via Canada, which country has normal diplomatic relations with Castroland. Likewise, illegal shipments from the USA to the USSR first are shipped or flown to some "neutral" country such as Austria, then are sent from there to some Soviet Satellite or to the USSR. What we are implying is that, with the exception of some of the smaller businesses (which are slated for eventual takeover or liquidation by the Biggies seeking monopoly status), the sanctions will have little effect on important trade. And South Africa will probably profit because of the sanctions. This isn't the intention of those who demanded the imposition of the sanctions, but they overlooked how this procedure worked in the case of Rhodesia. The record shows that during the first ten years of economic sanctions against Rhodesia, from 1965 to 1975, the country actually prospered. Employment figures rose, new industries were established, new crops were produced, and new mines were opened. The British government had to adopt an entirely different strategy in order to force Ian Smith's government to collaborate with the Marxist leaders that have taken it over. As for the importance of economic sanctions against South Africa, Allen Keyte in his World Affairs Review notes that South Africa also will prosper as a result of these sanctions. He says Africa produces its own high quality steel, has a prospering armament industry, a promising shipbuilding industry, is building and equipping its own submarines (nuclear powered and nuclear armed, we believe), and is producing fighter planes that are among the world's finest. Because of the threat of embargo, "South African manufacturers have also already started fabricating a great many parts and products formerly imported, and more developments in this field are underway...The list could be expanded to other fields too numerous to mention here. This indicates increased employment in the industries concerned...The West has only two sources open to it in respect of the most essential metals: South Africa or the Soviet Union...Already with Western countries vying with each other in suggesting various ways in which to totally isolate South Africa, one can sense an emerging spirit of patriotism and unity even among otherwise opposed political factions. Further senseless political and economic pressures against a government and a country trying to reform themselves, could strengthen these sentiments...So what is the West fighting for? Its own destruction?" (Unquote).

In an issue containing an excellent outline of just what is contained in this sanctions bill passed by Congress and awaiting signature by the President, Don McAlvany addresses an Open Letter to P.W. Botha, President of the Republic of South Africa. The letter begins: "By now you must have concluded, as many of your conservative friends in America have been warning your government for years, that the government of the United States (but not its people) is your deadly enemy. The intent of the recently passed sanctions bill, and indeed the efforts of the US State Department, is to overthrow your government and replace it with a pro-Soviet/African National Congress government. No amount of racial reform or movement toward a multi-racial government will satisfy your enemies in the US Congress, State Department, media, the academia, and America's liberal eastern establishment, any more than a black moderate government freely elected in Zimbabwe/Rhodesia in 1979 satisfied them." McAlvany goes on to point out that "America has been trying to overthrow the white South African power structure and establish a Black Marxist government in Pretoria for over 10 years. The South African Minister of Police and Justice pointed out to this writer in 1977 that the US government was its most dangerous enemy, the British Labor government its second most dangerous enemy, and the Soviet government its third most dangerous enemy." While agreeing, we might reword that statement by saying the Democratic United States government, the Fabian British government, and the Communist Soviet government have, for the past 30 years, collaborated in the attempt to destroy the Republican government of South Africa.

At the conclusion of World War II, the Power Elite began looking for new worlds to exploit. Generally undeveloped Black Africa was ideal for their expansionist purposes. The "Elitists" looked for resources to develop and cheap labor to exploit. Their allies, the Communist leaders, looked for new places to "liberate." Americans, being great humanitarians, wanted the people to have their own governments. And the UN was the instrument that could bring these three together. But there was one drawback: Most of Black Africa was under the control of the colonial powers; Belgium, Portugal, France and England. A newly emerging, supposedly independent government would be easier to exploit by the Elitists, to infiltrate and subvert by the Communists, and to raise the standards of living of the Blacks by the Americans. So, as Edward Griffin wrote in his The Fearful Master, "By mid-1960 the worldwide Communist drive of 'anti-colonialism' had reached an all-time high...All those who questioned the wisdom of this trend were branded 'imperialists' and their comments were buried in an avalanche of emotionalism. 'Exploitation, cruel and inhuman treatment of the natives, and humanitarian consideration were phrases shouted at everyone who doubted the wisdom of granting immediate independence to colonial areas.'"

The Belgian and Portuguese governments resisted the trend, as did the British and French people living in Africa. But finally, the Western governments were forced to give up. And immediate turmoil developed. Whites were murdered, tribes went to war against other tribes; Africa became a "Black Hell," though too little of this was ever told by the media. For lack of space, let's mention just one area: the Belgian Congo, which was granted independence On June 30, 1960. Out of the developing chaos came two leaders. There was Communist trained Patrice Lumumba who became president of the new country, and there was anti-Communist, Christian Moise Tshombe, who became president of the state of Katanga. The UN supported Lumumba, and the US supported the UN; while the Belgian government supported Tshombe. Lumumba promised the uneducated Africans that they could take all the property of the white settlers, and could have all the European women they wanted when he was elected president. Tshombe promised his people a republican form of government patterned after that of the US. So there was war between the two. To support Lumumba, a UN army was formed, and Belgian troops were rushed to Katanga to help Tshombe. In what is known as the "Christmas Massacre," UN troops stormed into Katanga, being flown there in American planes. Hospitals, churches, embassies and hotels were bombed and destroyed, the Belgian and native defenders in Elisabethville were murdered by the UN troops, under Communist leadership and with American support. Similar incidents occurred all over Black Africa, except in Rhodesia and South Africa, which had declared themselves to be independent, white controlled countries. What finally happened to Rhodesia we all know. So, let's turn to South Africa.

On August 7, 1963, the UN Security Council voted nine to nothing in favor of a resolution against South Africa for its policy of racial segregation. An arms embargo and other sanctions were imposed because South Africa was "seriously disturbing international peace and security." Disregarding the wars and revolutions in other parts of Africa, the Soviet delegate described the situation in South Africa as "a reign of terror and violence." Following through, the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, in March, 1965, published its report, Apartheid and the United Nations, in which it was recommended that the UN should go to war against South Africa. "We shall analyze three general categories of action," said the report, "a show of force, a naval and air blockade and direct military intervention. We shall also look briefly at what might be involved for any military forces being utilized by the United Nations in a period of direct UN rule." The blockade, we learn, would require 50 to 60 warships including destroyers, submarines and three to five aircraft carriers (support vessels not included); and 300 aircraft of fighter and reconnaissance capability. In 1965 dollars this would cost approximately $166 million for a six-month period. Direct military intervention and the conquest of South Africa would require another 200 frontline aircraft, 200 transport planes, 30,000 men for amphibious assault, 3,000 men for air assault, a reserve of 300 more aircraft, 60,000 more troops, and 117 additional warships and transport vessels. This would cost some $94 million for each 30-day period. Casualties would be between 19,000 and 38,000 killed and wounded. This does not include the South Africans killed or wounded.

So that's how and when it all began, more than 20 years ago; and the UN, the Communists, and our State Department, have been pursuing this plan to destroy the Republic of South South Africa ever since. Apartheid is the excuse, exploitation and socialization are the reasons.

THE NETWORK GROWS AND GROWS

The New Age Network is a worldwide movement composed of thousands upon thousands of organizations whose aim is to abolish all existing religions, create a New Age Religion and eventually establish a Department of Religion in the global government of the New World Order. At the present stage in its growth it is ecumenical in character, taking certain practices and precepts from each religion, especially from the Christian and the Hindu, then molding them together to present to the world a New Age Christ, who is neither Jesus nor the Christ Who is the Son of God. This worldwide coalition of organizations contains dissident and heretical groups from each of the established religions of the world; Christian, Judaist, Buddhist, Theosophist, Moslem, Zoroastrian, Bahai, et al. The movement is known by many names: The Aquarian Conspiracy, New Thought Religion, Humanism, New Consciousness, the Transcendental Movement, the Human Potential Movement, the New Spirituality, Biofeedback, and on and on.

While this New Age Network cooperates with the political, economic, monetary, and other sections of the New World Order, the primary goal is religious and it aims to establish an acceptable New Age religion which is based on the concept that Man is god. In this sense, "Man can be the New Age Christ whom they call Maitreya, the Fifth Buddha, the Imam Mahdi, or Krishna, depending upon the religion which is being infiltrated and taken over.

While these New Age religionists are supported by the same multinational corporations that support the Council on Foreign Relations, the Aspen Institute, and similar secret and semisecret groups, it is seldom mentioned that these same multinational corporations are beginning to reject or disregard all Christian precepts and to adopt the religious practices that are promoted by the New Age Network. So, it was unusual for The New York Times last Sept. 29, to report in a front-page story that, "Representatives of some of the nation's largest corporations, including IBM and General Motors, met in New Mexico in July to discuss how metaphysics, the occult, and Hindu mysticism might help executives compete in the world marketplace," The article goes on to note that "a politically conservative research center foresees an eventual alliance of conservatives leftists...and Americans with interests ranging from Eastern mysticism and the occult to holistic health...These are strands in a thread of alternative thought (sic) that scholars say is working its way increasingly into the nation's cultural, religious, social, economic, and political life." A commentator is quoted: "Wanting spiritual roots, rebelling against social systems that have ravaged the planet, New Agers want a future Utopia of 'human potential.' Getting these requires people to achieve an altered state of consciousness through the use of meditation, hypnosis, chanting, biofeedback, prolonged isolation and the intervention of spirit guides and ghosts."

An article appearing in On Principle, a libertarian publication, reports that "There is a huge and growing New Age subculture, penetrating the education, business, and publishing establishments...Ford, Westinghouse, and Calvin Klein are among scores of companies that have sent employees for training. Stanford's Graduate School of Business offers a seminar on Creativity in Business, including meditation, chanting, dream work, the use of tarot cards and discussion of the 'New Age capitalist.' The New Age doctrines are circulated in such popular books as Megatrends and The Aquarian Conspiracy, as well as in such magazines as New Age and Saturday Review." This article adds: "The Esalen Institute, regarded as the 'mother church of the New Age ideas,' regularly hosts Soviet 'social scientists'." And "most New Agers like such democrats as former California governor Jerry Brown and Sen. Gary Hart."

In this connection, an interesting and disturbing clipping came to us from a friend. It included quotations from an article appearing in the Weekend Australian of May 17-18, 1986. Under the heading "The Man Destined To Be King," was this paragraph: "Britain's Sunday Mirror caricatured Prince Charles as an emaciated figure dressed in sandals, walking along with the aid of a stick and dressed like a latter day Mohatma Gandhi. (In the centre of his forehead was the Third Eye in a Triangle, on his left shoulder the yin-yang symbol and in his right hand a bunch of herbs.) With his lectures on 'inner peace,' his earnest discussions of Zen with monks in Japan, his vegetarianism, is it any wonder many people are asking, 'is he a Buddhist?'" Then came this editorial observation: "Keep in mind that Zen Buddhism is a sect of Buddhism, which in turn is a sect of Hinduism, which in turn is the underlying doctrine of the New Age Movement. We see in this an inkling of Prince Charles' motivation: New Age, Hinduistic globalism. The British commonwealth certainly finds itself in a fine mess with this prospect of the man who will be king. Not only will he be king, but he will also become the figurehead of the Church of England...Pray that Prince Charles, and many others, might wake up and receive the Gospel of Jesus Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." (Romand 1:16). (Unquote).

Which leads us to mention yet another caricature, this one of Pope John Paul II. This from The Chicago Tribune: "In a leaflet distributed near the Vatican, allegedly by the group supportive of ultra-traditionalist Marcel Cardinal Lefebvre of France, the Pope was portrayed in a cartoon as facing the locked doors of Paradise while the gates of hell opened behind him. A grinning devil whistles for his attention, 'Over here, my friend. Ecumenists this way, please.'" This was one of the many protests from reactionary Catholic circles, because of his ecumenical "Day of Peace" commemoration held at Assisi, Italy, home of St. Francis, The idea of having witch doctors and representatives of heathen religions worshipping together at a Christian shrine was a sour note to most Christians, as was witnessed by the lack of support accorded similar "prayer for peace" services which were held in several cities in the United States. But in Assisi, it was quite a spectacle. We quote from an article in the Chicago Tribune as reprinted in the Ft. Lauderdale (FL) Sun-Sentinel of Oct. 27:

"Bearded Indian gurus, taciturn Moslem mullahs, bald Buddhists, skull-capped Jews, fire-worshipping Zoroastrians and turbaned Sikhs arrived at this sleepy hillside town Sunday where St. Francis taught man to love man. Together with the other 700 representatives of the world's main religions they will pray for world peace, a day for which Pope Paul II has asked that the guns of war be silenced....The Pope condemned what he called the 'culture of contempt' which regards other cultures as primitive, insignificant and unworthy...Libyan strongman

Col. Muammar Gadhafi sent a personal religious representative...and the patriarch of Moscow sent a delegate...One of the first to arrive was the Dalai Lama, the religious leader (and living god) of Tibet who lives in exile in India...The various religions must not fight each other but cooperate, he said...But while the spirit of ecumenism appeared to prevail at Assisi, there was also a sour note from reactionary Catholic circles." (Unquote).

The L.A. Times noted that "it was the more esoteric religions that drew the largest crowds of onlookers. Perhaps the most sought after was John Pretty-On-Top of Montana, whose Roman Catholic nephew, Burton Pretty-On-Top, described him as a medicine man and healer of the Crow Tribe...At the altar of one Zoroastrian, a Bombay Indian believer in the ancient fire-worshiping religion of Persia, a young Italian woman volunteer periodically fed modern charcoal igniter pellets to the sacred iron brazier that was the focus of his prayers for peace. An African animist snake worshiper, whom the pope met last year on a visit to Togo, appeared to be ill at ease as he delivered a staccato prayer to Almighty God, The Great Thumb." (Unquote).

After the representatives of the various religions had offered their individual prayers for peace, AP reported: "In a moving climax to the day's events, the participants, resplendent in attire of a dozen colors, gathered on the steps of the basilica of St. Francis and raised olive branches in a commitment 'to make peace a central aim of our prayers and action,.'" It was a "good show" but we fear the prayers that were offered didn't get much higher than the tips of the eagle's feathers in Pretty-On-Top's headdress. According to the State Department, there are about 40 wars between nations, civil wars, revolutions, and lesser conflicts in which people are dying. Reports indicate that the shooting was suspended for one day in a few of these conflicts. But the following day the spilling of blood continued. We doubt very much that the Prince of Peace was referring to the kind of peace for which these religious leaders were praying. His was to be a "peace that passeth all understanding." He told His disciples, "Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you, not as the world giveth, give I unto you." Again: "These things I have spoken unto you, that in me ye might have peace. (Emphasis added). As for the world, He spoke of wars and rumours of wars, and said, "Think not that I am come to send peace on earth; I came not to send peace but a sword."

But more importantly, we wonder what the one true God must think when those who never knew Him gather with the saints in ceremonial and public prayer. There was a commandment regarding "be ye separate." St. Paul told the Corinthians, "For though there be that are called gods, whether in heaven or in earth, (as there be gods many, and lords many,) But to us there is but one God, the Father, of whom are all things; and we in him; and one Lord Jesus Christ, by whom are all things, and we by him." St. Paul said to the Galatians: "when ye knew not God, ye did service unto them which by nature are no gods. But now, after that ye have known God, or rather are known of God, how turn ye again to the weak and beggarly elements, whereunto ye desire again to be in bondage?" And when we think of those who call themselves Christians praying alongside fire worshipers and men who look upon snakes as gods, we are reminded of the words of St. John: "Little Children, keep yourselves from idols."

Here is Satan's contrasting doctrine, as published by World Goodwill, a leading member of the New Age Network: "This is a time of preparation not only for a new civilisation and culture in a new world order, but also for the coming of a new spiritual dispensation. Humanity is not following an uncharted course. There is a divine plan in the cosmos of which we are a part. At the end of an age human resources and established institutions seem inadequate to meet world needs and problems. At such a time the advent of a Teacher, a spiritual leader of Avatar, is anticipated and invoked by the masses of humanity in all parts of the world. Today the reappearance of the world Teacher - the Christ - is expected by millions, not only by those of Christian faith but by those of every faith who expect the Avatar under other names - the Lord Maitrea, Krishna, Messiah, Imam Mahdi and the Bodhisattva...Preparation by men and women of goodwill is needed to introduce new values for living, new standards of behavior, new attitudes of non-separateness and cooperation, leading to right human relations and a world at peace. The coming world Teacher will be mainly concerned, not with the result of past error and inadequacy, but with the requirements of a new world order and with the reorganisation of the social structure." (Unquote).

Can you see how an ecumenical "day of prayer for world peace" fits exactly into this plan for the New World Order? And can you see how this appeal for "world goodwill" would be appealing to those who are not firmly grounded in the Word of God?

The Aquarian Conspiracy, a kind of bible to the New Age Network, tells of how multinational corporations are being monitored and sensitized to the aims of the New World Order, especially to its New International Economic Order (NIEO). The book says "members of the New Age movement are in corporations, universities and hospitals, on the faculties of public schools, in factories and doctors' offices, in state and federal agencies, on city councils and the White House staff, in state legislatures, in volunteer organizations, in virtually all arenas of policy-making in the country...They have coalesced into small groups in every town and institution. While many have limited knowledge of the Plan, some are aware of the international scope of the transformation." (page 24).

One of the most important organizations in the New Age Network is the Lucis Trust. In a manuscript, Secret Societies Take the Offense, Dr. John Coleman states that Lucis (originally called Lucifer) has over six thousand active members. Among them are Robert McNamara, Henry Kissinger, David Rockefeller, James Baker III, James Schlessinger, Donald Regan, and George Shultz. So the Network is imbedded in the Pyramid, from its detached "eye in the triangle" to the grass roots upon which it stands.

So you see, this is a spiritual war, and those who are unprepared and unsuspecting can fall. The New Age Network with its partner Secular Humanism has seeped into churches, schools, and homes. Wherefore:

"Let no man deceive you with vain words: for because of these things cometh the wrath of God upon the children of disobedience. Be not ye therefore partakers with them. And have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them." (Eph.5:6,7,11).

THE SIX-YEAR PRESIDENCY

The behind-the-scenes rulers of America decided it was time for a change. Their security seemed to demand it. Things were getting out of hand and people were beginning to react - and act. Farmers who were having their lands taken away from them were beginning to rebel. And Christians were on the move. They were deeply concerned about murder through abortion, the AIDS epidemic, secular humanism, pornography, homosexuality, educational standards in government schools, religious freedom, and so many other un-Christian activities. People were beginning to worry about the liquidation or swallowing up of smaller banks by the Big Banks. And the Big Banks themselves were about to drown in deep red ink because of their support of Communism and their loans to unfriendly nations and semi-states. Yes, the rulers felt it was time to change horses, even in a mid-stream national election. Control of the US Senate had to be taken away from the Republicans and handed over to the liberal Democrats. It didn't matter too much whether the Senate was Republican or Democrat as such. And George Bush was one of the men easily controlled. It was the chairmanship of certain committees that was important. The Senate as a body seldom found time to study proposed legislation, they depended on the report of the respective committee. And there was Strom Thurmond who chaired the Judiciary Committee. That committee had recommended the approval of two Supreme Court Justices who regarded the Constitution as the law of the land. One more such appointment would displease the rulers very much. So, the Senate had to be controlled by the Democrats, in which case either Ted Kennedy or Joseph Biden would chair that important Judiciary Committee. Also, it would be good to have Patrick Leahy chairing the Agriculture Committee, John Stennis handling the Appropriations Committee, Sam Nunn in charge of Armed Services measures, William Proxmire handling banking, Ernest Hollings controlling Commerce, Claiborne Pell supervising Foreign Relations, etc. There's that Biblical statement that the borrower becomes the servant of the lender, and it took millions of dollars to swing it. But it was done, regardless of the cost, or how much manipulation of votes were required. Some nine incumbent or prospective Republican Senators were pinpointed for defeat. Senators Steve Syms of Idaho and Don Nickles of Oklahoma were so popular in their respective States that they were allowed to be re-elected. It was a close thing with the highly respected Jeremiah Denton of Alabama, but he was defeated by a very small margin. Also Mack Mattingly of Georgia, Judy Koehler of Illinois, Linda Chavez of Maryland, Jim Santini of Nevada, James Broyhill of North Carolina, Thomas Kindness of Ohio, and Bob Kasten of Wisconsin. Defeat of these eight was sufficient to change all the chairmanships in the Senate from Republican to Democrat. Since the House was already in the hands of Democrats, not much pressure was applied and most of the incumbent representatives were re-elected. What this all means can only be surmised until this new 100th Congress actually convenes. But President Reagan did some surmising. He told audiences that if the Senate were lost his would be a six-year term. And former Speaker of the House Tip O'Neill said, "The Reagan Revolution is over." He is being called "a powerless lame duck." All of which is not quite true; because the President still has presidential powers topped by the veto, and he still remains Commander-in-Chief and is the leader in all foreign policy matters, which includes arms negotiations. However, the Democrats will be tight with money for SDI development, and for aid to freedom fighters in Nicaragua, Angola and Afghanistan. But presidents in the past have learned to get along with a Congress controlled by the other party - including Truman, Eisenhower, and Nixon. None of them were as popular as Reagan, even though his coattail didn't mean much in this particular election.

H du B in his October Report from Paris writes: "Behind all the threats to our society are men exulting in the emotions that filled Sidney Webb, the founder of the British Fabian Society, when he wrote in 1890, 'To play on those millions of minds, to watch them slowly respond to an unseen stimulus, to guide their aspirations without their knowledge - all of this whether in high capacities or humble - is a big and endless game of chess, of ever extraordinary excitement'." In this election, due to those minds without knowledge, we have been checkmated. But there are other games. So, let us consider another angle of the conspirators' game which has to do with the release of an American hostage.

* * * * *

There had been a series of skyjackings and bombings in places other than Lebanon, and American authorities didn't seem to be quite sure whom to blame when one American citizen had been shot and thrown into the sea, and another American Service Man shot and thrown onto a runway. Because there was surely some involvement, Colonel Khadafy of Libya was named the man responsible. So retaliatory measures were adopted, including naval maneuvers near Libya and air attacks on spots said to be terrorist training camps. Libya was called the leader in the terrorist attacks when it was known that the real supporter and supplier had been the USSR and the real culprit was Syria. But Libya could be charged without any serious international repercussions, and to charge Syria would have been unwise at the time. The reason: When it was arranged that the Shah of Iran was to be deposed, it was expected that one of two things would happen: Iran would welcome the Communists, or would remain friendly with the Western Bankers. Neither happened. Instead, Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini moved into the political vacuum and established an Islamic Republic which would defy both the Communists and the Monopoly Capitalists and try to establish an Islamic World Order which would include all other Moslem Nations if that were possible. So it happened that there were millions of dollars worth of airplanes and other armaments and munitions which would go to waste if spare parts and more technology were not obtained. Here was a vast market that could not be tapped. The only way to approach Iranian officials was through Syria, which was supported by the USSR, was an ally of Iran, was an enemy of Israel, but remained friendly with the American multinationals.. Because of its peculiar position economically as well as geopolitically, it was not considered wise to blame Syria for the bombings, training of terrorists, hijackings of airplanes, etc. So, Libya was a good second choice, since Libya was also involved.

But what the US government would not do, the British government dared to do. When it was learned that Syria was directly involved in an attempted bombing of a commercial plane which would have meant the death of over 200 innocent victims, London didn't hesitate to place the blame on Syria, but also ordered all Syrian diplomats out of the country, and broke off all diplomatic relations with Syria. We saw nothing about this in an American paper, but an official West German dispatch said Germany was taking similar action, and the European Community was considering also breaking off all relations with Syria. A trial was being held in West Berlin of "two Arabs accused of bombing a German-Arab center in the city with the alleged help of Syrian diplomats. One of the Berlin suspects is the brother of Nezar Hindawa, whose conviction in London for the attempted bombing of an Israel jetliner led Britain to sever diplomatic relations with Syria."

So, suddenly Syrian President Hafez Assad was being labeled the chief among terrorists. Newsweek of 11/3/86 carried a long story "Linking Syria To Terrorism," and declaring that "The US and Britain get tough with Assad." The article referred to a speech President Reagan had made last Feb. 6th in which he said, "Those countries that support and direct the terrorists should know that there is no refuge, there is no hiding place, there is no sanctuary that will keep them safe forever." But he was talking about Libya at the time. And, as Newsweek explained, "On the other hand were the realities of life in the Mideast: America may need Assad." US News of 11/10/86 made it a cover story, calling "Syria's President Assad Master of Terror." There was a picture on the cover of armed men in a secret terrorist training camp in Syria. The lead story said: "Even in the diplomatic world of studied indirection and strategic dissembling, the evidence has become impossible to ignore, and it points straight at Syrian strong man Hafez Assad. For years, Libya's Muammar Qadhafi has been the international outlaw, condemned for his wide-ranging support of terrorism. But now it is clear that Qadhafi is an erratic bumbler compared with Assad, a hard-eyed strategist who uses terror as an essential tool of statecraft."

Finally the media were telling the world what was known for years but never admitted by presidents and prime ministers, or the media. US News published a bill of particulars going back to 1982 and listing the bombings for which Syria was responsible, ending with the statement that "Syria directs or supports terrorist activity through its own organizations and, increasingly, with aid to radical Palestinian and Shiite groups - waging war by proxy for political ends. Experts have linked Syria to dozens of incidents."

But this wasn't the way things were supposed to be going. Syria was still needed to maintain a kind of balance between the Palestinians and the Israelis while the Big Bankers and the Multinationals traded with Iran through Syria. And Assad was in serious trouble because he had been publicly exposed at long last. What could he do to rectify the situation? Now here we must do a little reading between the lines, because the media only throw hints. But from time immemorial one way of doing business in the Middle East has been to capture and then trade hostages for money, for other hostages, or for better relations between the parties involved. Remember Richard the Lion Hearted? Now, the Shiites had hostages, the Iranian officials had considerable influence over the Shiite terrorists, and Assad had good relations with Khomeini (or his agent, since the latter had suffered a heart attack and was out of action at this time). Also, there was present in the area Terry Waite, the English churchman who had already negotiated for the freedom of American hostages.

So, Assad must have reasoned that if he could make it appear that he had worked with the Iranian officials and with the Shiite terrorist leaders, thus making it possible for Terry Waite to take public credit for freeing another American hostage, then some bridges could be repaired. Bridges that had almost been burned when a Syrian terrorist in London trusted his girl friend to carry a bomb aboard an Israeli jetliner. She got caught, and so was the terrorist, and so was President Assad. We must assume that the hostage, David Jacobsen, knew nothing of the way he had been used as a pawn in this international chess game involving the sale of military equipment and spare parts to Iran. As for Terry Waite, when he learned he was being accused of working with the governments in this deal, he seemed appalled. He immediately left Lebanon, said he wouldn't return for some time, that his efforts to free the other hostages had been jeopardized by such incredible reports, that his own life was at stake. So he was going to rest and remain inactive for a while.

Meanwhile, as a result of the British break with Syria, it must have seemed that Syria's use as an intermediary was at an end. So, if media reports are correct, former national security adviser Robert McFarlane tried to deal directly with Iran. According to AP, he and four associates flew into Tehran in a plane supposedly loaded with military aid, probably spare parts for those fighter planes that the US had left behind when the Shah was deposed. McFarlane or one of his associates carried a Bible in one hand and a cake as a peace offering in the other. The men were immediately taken to a hotel, placed under house arrest for five days and then made to leave the country. However, The Washington Post on Nov. 5 released a story to the effect that McFarlane had been acting for the US government in the transshipment of munitions to Iran, and that such shipments had been going on for the past 14 months. While the White House was insisting that it had not been negotiating with Iran, there had been secret negotiations involving arms - and hostages - for over a year! Furthermore, inferred the Washington Post, not only had David Jacobsen been a pawn in these negotiations, but so had two other American hostages: Rev. Benjamin Weir who was released more than a year ago; and Rev. Lawrence Jenco who was released last July.

Seems that the negotiations were made through Syria as the intermediary, and the military cargo was shipped to Israel, and then transshipped to Tehran, and American hostages were being used as pawns in this international chess game. There is a certain irony in that while George Shultz was in Geneva talking about arms reduction, Robert McFarlane was in Tehran selling arms to Iran. And there remain other hostages to serve as pawns in the game.

"Fret not thyself because of evildoers, neither be thou envious against the workers of iniquity. For they shall soon be cut down like the grass, and wither as the green herb. For evildoers shall be cut off; but those that wait upon the Lord, they shall inherit the earth. For yet a little while, and the wicked shall not be; yea, thou shalt consider his place, and it shall not be." (Psalm 37:1,2,8,9).

MORE PAWNS IN THE GAME

In this ongoing controversy over the use of hostages as pawns in the war games, more than one kind of coverup has been employed to protect the guilty. There seems to be a deliberate attempt to shield Syria, Israel and the Soviet Union, and make it appear that all the negotiations have been between our National Security Council and certain Iranian officials. It is true that the recently freed French hostages, Camille Sontag and Marcel Coudari, were released in Damascus, and French Prime Minister Jacques Chirac was lavish in his praise of Syrian President Assad for having engineered the freeing of the hostages. And it is true European papers are not covering up the Syrian involvement. The West German Stuttgarter Zeitung felt that Syria had a hand in the freeing of David Jacobsen. English translation as supplied by the German Information Center: "It will probably never be proved beyond a doubt that it was British toughness that led to the freeing of David Jacobsen from Shiite terrorists closely connected with Iran and Syria. Still, a number of things suggest that the notorious ties of his secret service to the unscrupulous Palestinian and Shiite organizations became too hot for Syrian ruler Assad, ever since a British court trying airplane assassin Hundawi uncovered precisely such a connection." In regard to Israel, it is also true that certain reports have mentioned Israel's offer to assist in the hostages-for-weapons game. But, generally, there is an attempt to make it appear that American officials dealt directly with Iranian officials. Which is hard to believe since Americans are devils in Khomeini's eyes and he'd rather shoot than trade directly with "the devil." Also very obvious is the fact that the Soviet Union is never even mentioned in deals involving the countries of the Middle East, even though its activities in Afghanistan and South Yemen are notorious. Furthermore, if it were not for the Soviet's habit of backing terrorists and kidnapers on a worldwide scale, there would never have been such a wave of global outlawry.

When it comes to its own treatment of American hostages, the Soviet Union seems to have decided that the carrot is better than the stick. This present hostage exchange began with the arrest and trade of Nicholas Daniloff. Writing in The New American Dr. Clarence B. Carson noted that "Strange tidings come from Nicholas Daniloff since his being freed from a Soviet prison after a 13-day incarceration. He was permitted to have visitors, including his wife. The commandant of the prison visited his cell twice each day and saw to it that he had clean sheets, top and bottom, for his bed. Instead of the usual thin blanket, he was issued a thicker and more comfortable one. When the authorities discovered that Daniloff suffered from hypertension, his blood pressure was checked three times daily, and he was attended from time to time by a doctor and a nurse. This is a far cry from the many other stories I have read of the treatment of political prisoners by the KGB...Is the Soviet leopard changing his spots?" After his return to the US Daniloff said, "It is very important for the Russian people and the American people to put their relations on a stable basis. We've got to know each other better." He also said on the CBS Morning News that he foresees the possibility that the Soviet Union will take up its place, however reluctantly, among the civilized nations of the world. In short, Daniloff hinted that the Soviet leopard will change his spots as soon as we get to know each other better.

A few weeks ago a group of American children of elementary school age returned to Florida after a monitored visit to the Soviet Union. They came back praising Russia, its schools and customs, and many of them thought life was much better in Russia than in the United States! This all follows a plan for the eventual "merging" of the US and the USSR, probably under a Global, Socialist Government. Back in 1966 the late Frank Capell wrote:

"A plan is now in operation which could be a major step in the sovietizing of America. The plan is to send American citizens to the USSR for a visit and bring a like number of Soviet citizens here. ...As any US Intelligence officer already knows, the Soviet Union does not allow its citizens to leave the USSR unless they are considered loyal communists. Since the communists are dedicated to world domination and the overthrow of our capitalist form of society,...there will be...enemies of our way of life, many of them actual trained enemy agents, mingling with untrained, uninformed, good hearted American families. (And) untrained, uninformed, good hearted American families will go over to the USSR to be brainwashed and given the visitors' treatment (as opposed to the residents')...The Americans who have gone to the USSR will come back thoroughly brainwashed to spread the word that the 'Russians' are just like we are. This is another step forward in the march toward world government, world law and a world police force." (Unquote).

This, of course, was in line with the plan voiced by H. Rowan Gaither, then president of the Ford Foundation, when he said: "All of us here at the policy-making level have had experience, either in the OSS or the European Economic Administration, with directives from the White House. We operate under those directives here. The substance of them is that we shall use our grant-making power so as to alter our life in the United States that we can be comfortably merged with the Soviet Union." This policy was carried out slowly and carefully by the tax-exempt foundations and other World Order advocates until Dec. 27, 1979, when President Jimmy Carter said he was suddenly alerted to the aims of the Communists when the invasion of Afghanistan began. Carter was so shocked that he cut off grain shipments to Russia, brought an end to most of the cultural, political, educational, and other exchange projects. However, when Ronald Reagan became President, grain shipments were resumed and new cultural and educational exchanges were arranged.

Tom Anderson, in his Straight Talk of Nov. 6, commented: "And so now a high percentage of the American people are for trade and aid to the Communists, who, they have been told again and again, have 'mellowed.' Indeed the Communists have mellowed; formerly they wanted to take the whole world. Now they want to take only half the world. They already have the other half...Spokesmen for the one-worlding Council on Foreign Relations are now confiding: 'The Soviets are crumbling from within. We must help her to keep her from doing something rash.'" And the way to keep the Soviets from crumbling is, not simply to pour in more aid and develop more trade, but also to make more treaties, create more exchange programs, "hurry the merging." But the people responsible for this "save communism" program are not the Communists, but the enemies within our own midst. As Tom Anderson truly said: "Some unthinking and deluded Americans still think of Big Businessmen and multinational tycoons as 'free enterprisers' and even as 'conservatives.' They are neither. Almost without exception they are corporate Socialists, cartelists, monopolists, fascists. They are not friend but enemy. They are not for the People but for Big Brother... Our enemies are, in order, Big Government, Big Business, and Big Unions.' (Straight Talk, POBox 60, Pigeon Forge, TN 37863. Weekly, $47 a year)."

Now, let's list a few of the things these enemies of ours, together with the Communist enemy, have done to effect this "merger" they desire.

We'll skip the economic and industrial aid that began with Nikolai Lenin and Armand Hammer, and speak of other togetherness schemes. When the Soviets were having some trouble developing their space program, a schedule was laid out for Soviet and American astronauts to fly in space together, to learn and coordinate the technical and engineering developments of the two. There was little wonder that, for a time, they took the lead in the space race. When the Soviets were having some trouble in developing Nikolai Tesla's plans for the control of the weather and for its use as a weapon of war, because of the need for something they couldn't build for themselves, the US came to their rescue. A program for the cooperative development of weather control was established by the US and the USSR governments. A 40 ton magnet, largest of its kind ever built, was completed at the Argonne National Laboratory near Chicago, and was flown to the Soviet Union. "It's a perfect example of scientific and political cooperation," said the American director of the project, who added: "We don't have the advanced test facilities they have. They don't have our magnets. So we're pooling our equipment and technology so both countries can move ahead that much faster." That was in 1977. We've had most unusual weather ever since.

Recently, in the spirit of "merging," the US and the USSR have developed a new joint weather exploration program. A Nov. 4th AP dispatch from Padua, Italy, reads: "The United States and the Soviet Union will join an international space research project aimed at improving long-range weather forecasts, government scientists from the two countries said Monday. A dozen satellites are to be launched during the 1980s as part of the Solar Terrestrial Physics Program to study wind and radiation, they said....Asked whether US-Soviet differences over the American Star Wars project for a space-based defense system could affect the collaboration, Roald Sagdeev (president of the Soviet Space Research Center) said: 'A peaceful space exploration like this should not be made hostage to differences over the defense initiative or any other military enterprises'." And here we see an example of the two-faced drive toward World Government: Merging at the scientific level must be encouraged, but it must not be allowed to interfere with the hostility that must continue to be maintained between the US and the USSR. The rather mysterious Report From Iron Mountain said it best: "The existence of an accepted external menace, then, is essential to social cohesiveness as well as to the acceptance of political authority. The menace must be believable, it must be of a magnitude consistent with the complexity of the society threatened, and it must appear, at least, to affect the entire society." (Emphasis added). In other words, until the merging of the nations is complete, the threat of war must be maintained.

Yet another example of the "merging" program has to do with the exchange of radio programs between the United States and the Soviet Union. The following is quoted from The New York Times: "The United States and the Soviet Union have been holding high-level talks in an attempt to negotiate an unusual exchange of radio programs. Charles Wick, director of the US Information Agency, said yesterday (10/28/86) that the tentative plan was to beam Voice of America broadcasts over Soviet domestic stations in return for the right of Moscow radio programs to be carried by stations in the United States. As a result of talks in Iceland during the meeting between President Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev, Wick said, he has undertaken to find a radio network willing to allocate time to Moscow radio programming." US News gave a full page to this project, headlined the story: "Radio Moscow On Your AM Dial? Stay Tuned." Can you think of any better way in which the brainwashing of the American public could be attempted, through the carrot method rather than the stick?

Well, there is one other way, and we have discussed it in previous reports because it involves the Children of America. At the Geneva Summit, President Reagan and Chairman Gorbachev signed a cultural exchange agreement which promotes the Sovietization of Americans in some 16 different categories. One of those ways has to do with an educational exchange in which Soviet teachers (propagandists?) will prepare computerized lessons that are to be taught in American schools. At the college level, Soviet professors will be provided to lecture in American colleges and universities. This program has been called "Ideological Treason" and is a sure way of promoting the "merger" idea that was spoken of by the president of Ford Foundation. Incidentally, the Carnegie Corporation of New York is the foundation that seems to be in charge of this educational treason. A Carnegie Report, titled "A Nation Prepared: Teachers in the 21st Century," outlines the manner in which global education must be taught by "lead teachers" who are trained to promote One Worldism. The "New Man" for the "New World Order" seems to be the goal.

This "cultural exchange" program is being promoted by all the Establishment organizations, and it seems that little can be done at the national level to defeat the program. But much can be done at the local level, by communities that take a stand in refusing to allow anti-Christian and anti-American projects to be taught in the local schools. If enough communities in America demand action, much can be accomplished. Too long we have launched our protests at the top levels of government, where the Establishment is in command. If we start at the lower, grass roots, community level, perhaps battles can become victories.

Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers: for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? and what communion hath light with darkness? And what concord hath Christ with Belial? or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel? (II Cor. 6:14,15).

THE CREDIBILITY GAP

"We have quite simply invested too much faith in political solutions and politicians. We have tried every device we could think of, spending billions of dollars and initiating hundreds of government programs in order to solve problems...the result is that we have solved nothing..." So wrote George Roche in his book A World Without Heroes. The statement provides a fitting commentary on the attempts of men, denying God, struggling to save a Nation from destruction. In contrast, there was a time when a group of God-fearing men who spoke of unalienable God-given rights and that to secure them "Governments were instituted" and "That whenever any Form of Government becomes destructive of these Ends, it is the Right of the People to alter or abolish it..." Those words, acted upon, caused a Revolution; but not a "Reagan Revolution" which was phony from the very beginning. Today we find few men with the character of a Washington or Adams, a Henry or Madison. And when they are found, they are silenced, their places being taken by interlopers and tyrants in whom we, the people of this century, seem to have placed our faith. The voting majority, in this past election, chose to place McGovernites in almost every important committee chairmanship in the Senate. That majority elected to increase the hold of the ultra-liberals on the House of Representatives. And lately we have witnessed the public display of a credibility gap in the Administration. Duplicity and deceit have characterized the handling of the "hostage problems." One wonders if it were not deliberately planned that way to discredit any form of conservative leadership.

It may have begun when, with little or no mention, an ultra-liberal journalist (we use the term advisedly), was permitted to join the Reagan Administration as a chief foreign policy spokesman for the State Department. Certainly there are any number of ultra-liberals in the Administration. But to place Bernard Kalb, with his political credentials showing, in such an important position was most unusual. Then came the "war against the terrorists" in which Muammar Khadafy and Libya were selected for retaliatory action. There was talk of the use of the press in a "disinformation" program aimed at Khadafy. Secretary of State George Shultz admitted that the charge was correct, but at the same time denied "any attempt to mislead our news media or our public." So the scene was set for the resignation of Bernard Kalb over his concern about "the credibility of the United States". Immediately, all across the nation left-leaning journalists made Kalb their hero. Mike Gartner, President of the American Society of Newspaper Editors, a group that makes a practice of lying to the public, cried, "In America, you don't expect your government to lie." He neglected to say that over the years the government and the media have cooperated in deceiving the American people on important issues; particularly in matters dealing with the Soviet Union, Nicaragua, South Africa, AIDS, money manipulation, etc. Try to learn the truth about any of these subjects from the government or the media, and you'll be deceived.

But we're discussing the credibility gap which really widened when stories began coming out about the "arms for hostages" negotiations. President Reagan had declared that he would make no deals with terrorists; and no deals with Iran. But the public was deceived on both counts. According to Stephen Engelberg of The New York Times, secret talks between Iran and the United States began more than a year ago. Gaylord Shaw of the L.A. Times wrote: "At the same time that the Reagan Administration was opening a secret arms pipeline to Iran, it was granting permission for a major defense contractor to supply helicopter parts to the Tehran government. When President Reagan made his televised denial of secret dealings with Iran in exchange for help in freeing American hostages, the "great communicator's" message was nothing more than a "carefully camouflaged and shocking public confession." One editor reckoned that "If what he told the American public was the same he told selected members of Congress the day before, it is small wonder that Congress remains unpersuaded and unhappy over the episode that has damaged the credibility of America's position on negotiating with terrorists."

Typical of media treatment was the news analysis by Owen Ullmann of the Miami Herald Washington Bureau: "One of the hallmarks of Ronald Reagan's presidency has been his ability to rally public support behind controversial policies and gain forgiveness for administration blunders - from selling Star Wars and aid to the contras to escaping blame for the bombing of the Marine Barracks in Lebanon. Despite his many successful campaigns, Reagan's secret decision to sell arms to Iran has plunged him into his worst public relations crisis...if Demo-

In our recent Report concerning the so-called 'exchanges' between the US and the USSR, we overlooked some exchanges which were brought to our attention by Michael Warder, executive vice president of the conservative Rockford Institute, 934 Main St., Rockford, IL 61103. These 'exchanges' are allegedly designed to promote peace. But Mr. Warder points out that any kind of 'exchanges' are of benefit only to the Soviet Union (and to the promoters of the New World Order, we might add). Last summer a group of 46 Soviets visited the United States on a so-called good will mission. But the 46 were selected, briefed and controlled by Soviet security organs. Each of the 'friendly visitors' had relatives being held hostage at home, lest any of them might consider defecting or deviating from the official Soviet propaganda line. Their trip was paid for by the Soviet government, and among them were KGB agents. Mr. Warder notes that "Soviet leaders know that if peace propaganda effectively reaches the US public, it will result in the Congress voting less money for our national defense. US groups going to the Soviet Union have no such 'equal' opportunity to reduce Soviet arms expenditures." Example: The American Society of Newspaper Editors signed an exchange agreement with the Union of Soviet Journalists, all of whom are paid government employees. When US editors go to the Soviet Union, they are not allowed to see and report actual conditions in the USSR. Also, the American Bar Association signed a cooperation agreement with the Union of Soviet Lawyers who are part of a system that tortured and killed from 30 to 60 million persons, and yet they are treated as 'equals' by the ABA. What we forget is that everyone in the USSR works for the government. There are no private employers or independent organizations. The difference between the Soviet and the American political systems makes any true exchange impossible. Such exchanges do nothing to the Soviets, but they certainly help to Sovietize the United States.

crats sense that Reagan has suffered a permanent loss of popularity over this controversy, they are more likely to challenge his foreign policy ventures for the rest of his term."

But this trading of hostages for weapons didn't begin in the Reagan Administration. It really began when Iran held some 52 American hostages, was at war with Iraq, and badly needed spare parts for the airplanes and helicopters that had been left behind when the Shah was forced to flee.

Alton Frye is the Washington director of the Council on Foreign Relations. He has suddenly spoken out about his part in an arms deal back in 1980. We wonder why Frye chose this time to tell the world about the CFR's "Arms for Hostages" deal after all these six years of silence. Perhaps the hierarchy in Rockefeller's CFR no longer fears public exposure, feels so strong and so much in control that it can boast of things formerly kept secret. In any case, his revelation of the CFR acting in behalf of our government appeared in the November 16th issue of the L.A. Times. "It was another time, and the victims bore other names. But the deal was the same: arms for hostages," wrote Frye. "Within weeks after the war erupted between Iran and Iraq in September, 1980, Tehran was growing desperate for military supplies.-..(this) injected a new element into the protracted negotiating to free the 52 Americans then held hostage in Tehran. Signals of a possible 'arms for hostages' trade came through on several channels."

It seems that an internationalist lawyer named Mitchell Rogovin (CFR), had been dealing with Iran. He approached Frye (CFR) on the possibility of negotiating an "arms for hostages" trade. Frye then met with Harold Saunders (CFR), the assistant secretary of state handling the hostage crisis for President Carter. At that time Frye became a bit concerned about handling such a deal almost single-handedly. So he "took out insurance." That is, he confided the facts of the deal with three other people: Senators Jacob Javits (CFR), Charles McC Mathias (CFR), and John Chancellor of NBC (also CFR). Says Frye, "We (he and Rogovin) trusted them to say nothing until the hostages were safely returned - or unless there were an attempt to make John Anderson (CFR and a presidential candidate for whom Rogovin was also working) a scapegoat by claiming that his associates' alleged interference had somehow frustrated delicate diplomacy aimed at freeing the hostages."

However, this particular "arms for hostages" scheme failed because, as Frye explains: "We now know that a number of factors were converging to produce a measured offer by the Carter Administration that ran in a broadly parallel direction to that suggested in the approach we conveyed." Actually, it seems that there was money, as well as arms, involved in the final deal, and all Frye and his CFR associates accomplished on their own was the release of Bruce Laingen, the American charge d'affaires, who was freed earlier than the other 52 hostages.

The January 10, 1981 deal which brought about the actual freeing of the 52 hostages is known as the "Algiers Accord." Nearly $8 billion in frozen Iranian assets was involved, mostly gold bullion then held by the Federal Reserve Bank of New York. The $8 billion was transferred to an escrow account at the Bank of England. According to Clyde Farnsworth of The New York Times, "Upon the release of the (52) hostages, $2.8 billion was released to Iran, $3.7 billion was transferred to the Federal Reserve Bank of New York...and $1.4 billion was retained in the account of the Bank of England." After all these gold and currency exchanges had been finished, it seems that there was still an overpayment due Iran in the amount of $250 million. Between January 1981 and October 1986, interest had increased the overpayment to $500 million. And, in the last week of October, 1986, American and Iranian financial officials met in The Hague to arrange for the transfer of that money to Iran. So, it was more than arms involved in the latest hostages trade. There was that little matter of $500 million also paid to Iran. But this latter part of the deal has received very little publicity. Seems it's okay to talk about a credibility gap involving the government, but don't let it involve the Federal Reserve or the CFR!

As the Washington Director of the Council on Foreign Relations said, "It was another time, and the victims bore other names. But the deal was the same." He might have added that money was involved in both deals; that the 1980 "arms for hostages" operation negotiations were carried out by members of the CFR; that in the 1986 operation the chief negotiator was CFR member Robert McFarlane. Both were secret deals in which only a few "insiders" did the planning and knew what was going on. The chief difference: In 1980 there were no information leaks that couldn't be handled. But in 1986 an Iranian official told a Syrian reporter, and the reporter published details in a Lebanese weekly magazine, Al Shiraa. That article led to the credibility gap that may destroy a President. In his prime time press conference on Nov. 19th (a conference he should never have held), President Reagan took the sole responsibility for the "calculated risk" that backfired, and merely made the affair more confusing than ever in his answers to barbed questions from unfriendly reporters. But, as Sen. Sam Nunn, upcoming chairman of the Armed Services Committee, said, the President "contradicted all the information put out by his aides in the past week. I counted at least seven contradictions from what I have been told by his top aides." As we watched that conference, we were reminded of the time when a previous Republican President found it expedient to resign. However, Congress is not now in session and the time gap may help to mitigate the credibility gap. As George Roche reckoned, "We have quite simply invested too much faith in political solutions and politicians." In national affairs, where our faith should rest is well expressed in the never heard and almost forgotten last verse of The Star-Spangled Banner:

*Oh thus be it ever when free men shall stand Between their loved homes and the war's desolation;
Blest with victory and peace, may the Heaven rescued land
Praise the power that hath made and preserved us a nation!
Then conquer we must when our cause it is just.
And this be our motto: "In God is our Trust!"*

THE CREDIBILITY GAP GETS BIGGER AND DEEPER

For those who love our country and are concerned about its future, it must have seemed like the worst of times for this series of crises to occur. Already there were enough troubles without adding to them the burden of what some editors have called "Irangate." Day after day, with some space allotted to a Philippine crisis, it was driving all other national problems out of peoples' minds. For example, there is a carefully concealed financial condition in this country that should be known and dealt with. Now and then we are told about a new form of what is called money which will replace the FRS greenback. But we are not told when and how it will affect us. To calm the more impatient, a limited number of gold and silver coins are being sold to selected dealers who can resell them for a profit. But money remains a mystery that, if continually abused, may destroy the material security of us all. A recent "underground" bulletin reminds us that the United States has the worst per capita debt in the entire world; worse even than Mexico, Argentina or Brazil, whom we are helping to support in spite of the fact that we are worse off than they. We should all be told that federal spending has increased more than tenfold since 1960, from $92 billion to $930 billion; that since 1960 federal deficits have soared from $2 billion to $930 billion per year; that our federal debt in 1976 was high at $600 billion, but that today it has soared to over $2.6 trillion. We should be concerned with the question of how much longer our government can spend twice as much as it takes in each year. Then, there's the problem of continual loans to communist governments; and the concern about these alleged bank failures. Actually, most of them are takeovers by bigger banks, but the depositors suffer. Then there's the carefully created farm problem, with family farms being gobbled up and swallowed by alien corporate agribusinesses. There is the AIDS problem, school problems, dope and crime, all of these which should be of concern. But all else seems to have been forgotten because someone found an unauthorized way to get some money to the freedom fighters in Nicaragua. Finally, there is the fact that the liberals and the welfare state proponents have taken command of both houses of our federal legislature. Now the Senate will block conservative appointments to the judiciary and other conservative appointments to the administration. Now tariffs will be voted while new expenditures will be made, as Senator Byrd has suggested. As Gary North wrote in his Remnant Review of Nov. 21: "If the press begins to go after the President, he will find himself boxed in. The voters have replaced the conservative Senate, the Democrats will be hounding him for not working with the team, and the historians will be getting ready to write the epitaph of 'a brief political anomaly that only temporarily deflected American democracy from its rendezvous with destiny in a New World Order, etc. etc'."

The President's insistence that he remains in favor of selling arms to Iran and "made no mistake" in his handling of the affair, has made him the perfect target for the media missiles. And, in looking for a way out without total loss of credence, the President's friends turned to that least understood National Security Council.

In addition, behind all of this "arms for hostages" controversy, there is a sub-plot; one involving George Shultz as Secretary of State. You'll recall, when the first hints of this continuing crisis came to light, George Shultz became angry. He knew nothing of any such deals. They were done behind his back, and he would never have agreed to any trading with Iran on any basis. He hinted that he might resign. From many, including your reporter, there was hope that he would resign. Later there was being voiced a demand that he resign or get fired. He had been disloyal to his President, supposedly his boss, and anyone disagreeing with the President ought to quit, said Attorney General Meese in a vague reference to both Shultz and Donald Regan. But then came the news that Lt. Col. North of the National Security Council was solely responsible and President Reagan insisted that he knew nothing about it. Whereupon Secretary Shultz rushed to the cameras and microphones to vow eternal fealty to the President, said he had never been in disagreement with the President, etc. So, again at this writing, all seems to have been forgiven, Shultz and Regan will remain, only Poindexter and North have departed. We say at this writing because the upcoming 100th Congress is not going to let the affair die. There will be congressional as well as administrative investigations; for this is a crisis that, like Watergate, may go on for months and months, with the possible resignation of many more officials, even the President himself if George Bush can be cleared of all complicity and thereby take Reagan's place in the White House. And with the appointment of Sen. John Tower, Brent Scowcroft and Edmund Muskie to conduct the administrative investigation, anything could happen. Muskie was appointed, obviously, to appease the liberal Democrats. But when we think of Muskie, we think of the three M's of the Fabian Conspiracy: George McGovern, Walter Mondale, and Edmund Muskie. All three were Senators, Mondale and Muskie were presidential candidates and were soundly rejected by the people. And for a Republican President to trust his political and historical fate to a man like Muskie is really taking a chance. We are inclined to give some credence to a statement made by House Democratic leader Jim Wright of Texas (with whom we have never consciously agreed in other matters). He said: "Mr. Reagan, of almost all the people I have met in high government positions, is uniquely capable of psyching himself up into a frame of mind in which he can believe whatever he wants to believe and just utterly reject factual information which does not fit comfortably with his preconceived predilections."

But we're digressing. Behind all this present series of crises there is a contest for power that began over a quarter of a century ago; a contest involving the Department of State and the National Security Council. Back in 1947 President Harry Truman was advised to do away with the wartime Office of Strategic Services (OSS) and create in its place the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA). There was a question as to what department would be in charge of this semi-secret agency. There also seemed to be a need for an administrative group of officials who could coordinate the policies of other administrative departments and make recommendations to the President. So it was suggested that a National Security Council be created, and that the CIA should be responsible to it. A National Security Act was passed by Congress, and the official explanation goes like this:

"In bringing the resources and skills of all these elements of the Government to bear in policy problems which affect the national security, the President is assisted by the National Security Council. The Council was established by Congress in 1947. It is composed of the President, the Vice President, the Secretaries of State and Defense and other Cabinet officers, agency heads, and senior officials who, by law or the President's invitation, attend meetings of the Council on matters which directly involve their responsibilities. The Council is advised at its meetings by the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, the Director of Central Intelligence, and the President's Special Assistants for Science and Technology and for National Security Affairs. It has a secretariat and staff located in the Office of the President under the direction of the Special Assistant for National Security Affairs..."

One of the first official and important acts of this NSC was the NSC Document number 68, drafted under the direction of Secretary of State Dean Acheson and signed by President Truman on April 12, 1950, two months before the outbreak of the Korean War. President Truman ordered: "It is my desire that no publicity be given to this Report or its contents without my approval" and every page of NSC-68 was stamped Top Secret. Its contents were withheld from the American public and most of its leaders for 25 years, during which time we fought and lost two wars costing the lives of more than 80,000 of our fighting men, billions upon billions of dollars, and tremendous loss in our national prestige. In effect, NSC-68 laid down the policy that we should never win a war, that U.S. military action must in all cases be confined to "strictly limited counteractions." NSC-68 also directed that we should "try to contain the expansion of the Soviet Union beyond its own territory, but not to do anything "directly challenging Soviet prestige." This NSC-68 has ruled our nation's foreign policy and military strategy since before the start of the Korean War.

Except for NSC-68, which was really the brainchild of Dean Acheson of the State Department, the National Security Council served its purposes adequately and efficiently until the coming of Henry Kissinger as National Security Adviser in 1969. He devised a way in which he could become the most powerful man in the government, except for President Richard Nixon, whom he had learned to control. He did this by issuing a series of National Security Decision Memorandums (NSDM) which had the power of Executive Orders. These memorandums bind, as if by law, executive agencies such as State, Defense, the Joint Chiefs of Staff, US Arms Control and Disarmament Agencies, and all others having to do with national security. These NSDMs tell the other agencies, including State and Defense, what they must do and how they must do it. Secretary of State William Rogers resented such orders and fought against Kissinger. So Kissinger, Nixon aiding and abetting, managed to get Rogers fired and himself became Secretary of State while at the same time remaining National Security Adviser. In this way Kissinger, an agent of David Rockefeller, managed all foreign policy, covert and national security matters so long as Richard Nixon and Gerald Ford occupied the White House. It was Kissinger who opened up Red China for trade, helped maneuver Communist China into and Nationalist China out of the UN Security Council with its veto power. He helped fashion the SALT I treaty and installed the Mutual Assured Destruction (MAD) policy which still governs our attitude toward the Soviet nuclear buildup of weapons. And he did this all by beginning his public career as National Security Advisor to the President.

When it came time for the Republican team to be replaced by the Democratic team headed by Jimmy Carter, David Rockefeller was ready with Zbigniew Brzezinski, who replaced Henry Kissinger as National Security Advisor. As head of the National Security Council, Brzezinski was in the same position to wield the same power as had been exerted by Henry Kissinger. But this was a time of comparative peace and it was time for the Hierarchy of the New World Order to proceed with the plan of creating an elementary Regional New World Order which was called the Trilateral Commission. In comparison with Kissinger, Brzezinski was more low-key and less inclined to seek the spotlight. But he was just as dangerous as was Kissinger. He was simply carrying out a further step in the march toward the New World Order.

When Carter proved something of a disappointment for the Eastern Establishment, a new team was selected to take over; a team headed by Ronald Reagan and supposedly a conservative as opposed to Carter's liberalism. The role of National Security Advisor assumed an even lower-key profile and George Shultz, as Secretary of State, took charge. Meanwhile, the selection of a National Security Advisor to head the Council became something of a problem. This was mainly because the conservative team that Reagan brought with him from California was slowly being replaced by members of the Council on Foreign Relations and the Trilateral Commission. So Richard Allen served for a while, but they said he had taken a $1,000 payment from a Japanese magazine, apparently payment for an interview with Nancy Reagan. So Allen departed and William Clark took over. But he couldn't get along with James Baker and Michael Deaver, so he was transferred to the Interior Department and Robert McFarlane took over as chief of the NSC. But he couldn't get along with Donald Regan, resigned and later came up as an arms negotiator with Iran. So Admiral John Poindexter became NSC director and stayed until his resignation. Now Alton Keen, who once served under David Stockman at OMB, has become temporary National Security Adviser.

The official questioning has begun. Since one man, even a Marine Colonel or a Navy Admiral could not have done these things alone, it is expected that more heads will roll. But it should be noted that with President Truman placing the CIA and covert operations under the exclusive control of NSC, with Dean Acheson's NSC Document Number 68, and with Henry Kissinger's NSDMs, the National Security Council became a government unto itself with fullest authority in covert and foreign policy matters, and responsible to the President only, or his immediate assistant, in this case Donald Regan. As with Kissinger and Brzezinski, Admiral Poindexter could have become a law unto himself insofar as the legal government of the United States is concerned. Insofar as the so-called Invisible Government is concerned, that's a different matter. Whether any commission or board can uncover and publish the real truth regarding "Irangate" is questionable. That credibility has been lost is unquestionable.

THE NEW AGE PATH TO PEACE

The Preacher said, "The thing which hath been, it is that which shall be; and that which is done is that which shall be done: and there is no new thing under the sun." (Ecclesiastes 1:9. Emphasis added).

In the tenth century A.D., a millenium ago and nearly a thousand years after the coming of the Son of God in the flesh, Christians were thinking in terms of milleniums, were awaiting the end of the world and the beginning of a new age on the earth. In his Memoirs of Extraordinary Popular Delusions and the Madness of Crowds, in a chapter dealing with "Modern Prophecies," Charles Mackay wrote:

"An epidemic terror of the end of the world has several times spread over the nations. The most remarkable was that which seized Christianity about the middle of the tenth century. Numbers of fanatics appeared in France, Germany and Italy at that time, preaching that the thousand years prophesied in the Apocalypse as the term of the world's duration were about to expire, and that the Son of Man would appear in the clouds to judge the godly and the ungodly...The scene of the last judgment was expected to be at Jerusalem. In the year 999, the number of pilgrims proceeding eastward, to await the coming of the Lord in that city, was so great that they were compared to a desolating army...Knights, citizens, and serfs, travelled eastward in company, taking with them their wives and children, singing hymns as they went...Most of them were smitten with terror as with a plague. Every phenomenon of nature filled them with alarm. A thunderstorm sent them all upon their knees in mid march. It was the opinion that thunder was the voice of God, announcing the day of judgment..."

"There is no new thing under the sun," said King Solomon. The year 2000 A.D. will mark the end of the second and the beginning of the third millenium, and once again the end of the old and the beginning of a New World Order is being preached. And one "like unto the Son of God" is being expected, or is already here on earth, to bring in a thousand years of peace. In preparation, the UN declared 1986 an "International Year of Peace." And a "Planetary Commission is calling for 500 million people around the world to consent to the healing and harmonizing of this Planet and all forms of life hereon." This Planetary Commission informs us that "In order to reach the critical mass of Spiritual Consciousness our objective is to have no less than 50 million people meditating at the same time on December 31st, 1986, 12:00 Noon Greewich Time. You may add to this Light in any way that is comfortable for you, with Love, Music, Prayer, Guided Visualization, Meditation, Positive Thought or any other constructive release of positive energy."

"No new thing;" but with progress through the centuries, something could be added. In that first millenial year only sincere but deluded Christians were involved; and they were looking for the reappearance of the "only begotten Son of God." In looking toward the year 2000, however, quite an assortment of pretenders has been added. John Babbs, one of the promoters of this New Age Path to Peace, explains: "In some of my writing and speaking, I have chosen to use the word/symbol 'God' to express myself, because this is the word that has meaning for me.

You need not accept my symbol. Please use a symbol that has meaning for you - e.g. Allah, The Tao, Yahwe Universal Consciousness, the Buddha, the Creator, Krishna, the Christ, the Father, the Great Mother, the Life Force, the Universal Principle, the Great Unknown, the Original Cause, etc. By being flexible with our language, we can find a common ground...Let us find the pathways that connect us, and not our language, our symbols, or our ears divide us."

Also, in the tenth century it took years to "spread the word" through fanatics, charlatans, and misguided preachers. But a thousand years later we have the media. So, on April 25, 1982, there appeared in metropolitan newspapers in America and around the world, a full page announcement that "The Christ is Now Here." And readers learned that the One they call Christ is really the Lord Maitreya. He is also known as the Messiah, the Fifth Buddha, the Imam Mahdi, Krishna, etc.

Along with the United Nations "Year of Peace" there was added the "Day of Peace" when representatives of most of the world's religions met with the Pope in Assisi, where they all prayed for peace. As we wrote at that time, quoting the Chicago Tribune: "Bearded Indian gurus, taciturn Moslem mullahs, bald Buddhists, skull-capped Jews, fire-worshipping Zoroastrians and turbaned Sikhs...700 representatives of the world's main religions (prayed for peace)...It was the most esoteric of religions that drew the largest crowd of onlookers. Perhaps the most sought after was John Pretty-On-Top of Montana, whose Roman Catholic nephew Burton Pretty-On-Top, described him as a medicine man...At the altar of one Zoroastrian...a young Italian woman volunteer periodically fed modern charcoal igniter pellets to the sacred iron brazier that was the focus of his prayers for peace. An African animist snake worshipper, whom the pope met last year on a visit to Togo, appeared to be ill at ease as he delivered a staccato prayer to Almighty God, The Great Thumb." (Unquote).

In further promotion of "Path to Peace," the Tara Center organized "The Million Minutes of Peace" which was to bring together millions of people from diverse nationalities and backgrounds through their positive thoughts, prayers or meditations for peace." This is a program that began last September 16 and is to continue through December 31st. It seems that "participation in the appeal is accomplished by commitment to whatever number of minutes per day one chooses to offer in this way." Also tied in was the "First Earth Run" which began on September 16 and is to conclude at the United Nations, after which a gigantic New Year's Eve party is to take place around the earth. "Linked by satellite, the participants will celebrate the New Year as it dawns in their locations throughout the twenty-four hours."

Highlighting and culminating this "International Year Of Peace 1986" is what the New Age religionists call the World Instant Of Cooperation. We quote: "On December 31, 1986, you will be presented with an extraordinary opportunity. At noon Greenwich Time (7 a.m. Eastern Standard Time) on this date, you are invited to participate in a planetary experience of peace and harmony, the World Instant Of Cooperation. At this moment, 50,000,000 people from around the world will be asked to suspend, for one hour, all thoughts of fear, conflict and separation as they pray, meditate and contemplate the oneness of all life on earth. Another 50,000,000 will be asked to endorse this time of harmonious resonance. A sufficient mass of people focusing for a sufficient period of time on an image of global peace and harmony can help change the consciousness of our planet for the benefit of all living things. The World Instant Of Cooperation will transcend religious, spiritual and political boundaries, uniting all of humanity for a single moment of peaceful cooperation. This gathering will mark the beginning of a twelve-hour celebration in which communities worldwide will commemorate the event with expressions of the heart in music, dance, play and ceremony. The event will culminate at midnight Greenwich Time (7 p.m. E.S.T.) with the conclusion of the First Earth Run, when a torch which has been passed from hand-to-hand around the world will ignite an eternal flame at the United Nations. At this moment, an estimated two billion people around the globe will be asked to light candles...."

Exaggerated and ridiculous? Of course. But, for 40 years New Age groups have been toiling and progressing slowly but steadily toward the fulfillment of their aims, which include the destruction of Christianity, the creation of a new world religion founded on the tenets of secular humanism, and the creation of a new world government. And they don't expect to attain their ends until that millennial year, 2000. Adopting the Hegelian dialectic they refer to it as The New Age Of Synthesis. An information sheet distributed by the Tara Press, 59 Dartmouth Park Road, London NW5, explains and we quote at length.

* * * * *

The Christ, The World Teacher, is now in the modern world, to inaugurate the New Age of Synthesis. We are moving into a period of climax, leading to events which will fundamentally alter life as we know it. Tremendous changes are taking place in all areas of life, preparatory to the establishment of entirely new modes of social living and relationship, based on co-operation and sharing. To some this means the Second Coming. To others it is the realization that only through a profound inner change and readiness for a new direction in our political, economic and social life can humanity survive....

Many are aware that a new spiritual age is dawning, under the guidance of the Spiritual Hierarchy of Masters. These are members of the human family who have made the evolutionary journey ahead of us, who have perfected themselves, and whose energies and ideas have been the stimulus behind our evolution,,They have come now, led by their Master Maitreya, the World Teacher, holder of the office of the Christ within the Spiritual Hierarchy. The Christ, from the esoteric point of view, is not the One and Only Son of God, but the Head of the Hierarchy of Masters. He is Divine in having revealed the Divinity innate in us all, and embodies the cosmic energy of Love. He is a man, too, and comes as a Brother, Teacher and Friend to inspire humanity to create for itself a new and better world...Awaited also by Buddhists as the Lord Maitreya, by Moslems as the Imam Mahdi, as the Bodhisattva by Hindus and as the Messiah by the Jews, the World Teacher made known in June 1945 His intention to return to the world at the earliest possible moment. In Palestine, 2000 years ago. he manifested through His Disciple Jesus (Who is now the Master Jesus) by a process of overshadowing. This time he comes himself, as World Teacher for the Aquarian Age. On July 19, 1977, the Christ entered the modern world. Since then, he has been living as a member of the Asian community of London; an ordinary man, not known as the Christ, nor using his name Maitreya.

* * * * *

Tara Center, publisher of the above, is Benjamin Creme's organization. He is the principal promoter of the Lord Maitreya who he says is greater than Jesus. Also supporting this new "Path To Peace" program is the Lucis Trust. It started out as the Lucifer Publishing Co. and was founded by Helen Blavatsky, occultist, Fabian Socialist, member of several high level Masonic orders, and founder of the religion called Theosophy. Blavatsky was followed by her chief disciple, Alice Bailey, who is the author of most of the doctrines and tenets of the New Age Movement. There also is the Tavistock Institute, the Aspen Institute, the Club of Rome, and many other organizations that are sponsoring and helping to finance the New Age movement, of which the World Instant of Cooperation with its Path To Peace is a part. In The Aquarian Conspiracy, Marilyn Ferguson said the movement was not dependent upon any one individual organization because of its networking composition. She also remarked that members of the New Age movement are "in corporations, universities, hospitals, on the faculties of public schools, in factories and doctor's offices, in state and federal agencies, on city councils and the White House staff, in volunteer organizations, in virtually all areas of policy-making in this country... They have coalesced into small groups in every town and institution."

If this be true, and it well may be, with its financial backing and its support from high level authorities, there is only one way to defeat this movement and prevent its destruction of the Nation and of Christian civilization itself. That one way is by a return to the faith of our fathers. General Douglas MacArthur, after accepting the surrender of Japan in 1945, said: "The problem is basically theological and involves a spiritual recrudescence and improvement of human character that will synchronize with our almost matchless advances in science, art, literature, and all material and cultural developments of the past 2,000 years. It must be of the Spirit if we are to save the flesh." (Emphasis added).

This is a spiritual warfare which began in the Garden, and the fate of our country and of Christian civilization as we have known it, rests upon how well we can fight the fight that is outlined so clearly in the Scriptures. But, for such a battle we have become so weak. The National Council of Churches has joined the enemy. Fundamentalist and Evangelical churches have allowed so much of humanism to take over pulpits that most churches are merely social clubs (if not socialist clubs). The word Christian is hyphenated and has become Judeo-Christian. In order to make the Holy Bible more humanistic and containing less of the Spirit, new and often heretical interpretations are beginning to replace the King James Version which our parents revered. And we are told that there is a "soon second coming" that depends upon a political state called Israel, and upon how we treat those who say they are Jews. Christians are so impressed with promises of a "soon second coming" that they forget that He is here now, and that His Kingdom is not of this world. God has destroyed nations before, and He can do it again if we forget from Whom our blessings flow.

If my people, which are called by my name, shall humble themselves, and pray, and seek my face, and turn from their wicked ways, then will I hear from heaven, and will forgive their sin, and will heal their land. (II Chronicles 7:14).

U.S. SOAP CONTINUES

Like a salivating dog gnawing on a bone to get at the marrow inside it, the media newshounds have found something to gnash their teeth on for weeks to come. Each bite of the new day presents a new perspective, and just whose bones will be crushed before the serialized media meal is ended, is still something of a guess. Dispensing with similes, it all began just after the Democrats captured the Senate, and Robert McFarlane was depicted as paying a picturesque visit to Tehran where he reportedly talked about arms deals with Iranian officials. Then came the shock of learning what certain insiders had known for over a year, that our government or agents thereof had been trading arms to Iran for hostages from Lebanon or Syria or both. Next came the added shocker that some of the money from the sale of arms had been deposited in a Swiss bank to be used by the Freedom Fighters in Nicaragua. Spice was added to the serial story when it was reported that just one man in the National Security Council had done it all, behind George Shultz's back, with Admiral Poindexter's permission, and without the details being furnished to President Reagan. As more details were provided in the serial, the "arms for hostages" trading seemed to lose its importance, the allegedly illegal sale of arms to terrorist-sponsoring Iran seemed of little importance. The great crime committed by the Reagan Administration or agents thereof, was the supplying of arms to the "Contras" when neither the Congress nor the State Department knew about it.

Three scapegoats were chosen: Marine Colonel Oliver North who made the deal, Navy Admiral John Poindexter who allowed North to do whatever he did, and Retired Air Force General Richard Secord who allegedly handled the transfer of the money. When the story first broke, conservatives hoped that the axe would fall on the political heads of George Shultz and Donald Regan. But as serial episode after serial episode developed, Shultz came out on top, Regan received presidential protection, and George Bush - who should have known all about it from the very beginning - received protection from the media. He must be in the wings, ready to step on the stage if and when Ronald Reagan walks off or is carried off. So, it began to appear that the only heads that would fall would be of those within the National Security Council, perhaps an ambassador, maybe a president, and any others connected with the Administration who are not card-carrying members of the Council on Foreign Relations or the Trilateral Commission.

It seems to this reporter that this carefully planned attack has three primary purposes: 1) to recapture CFR control of the National Security Council; 2) to halt all shipments of arms to those fighting communism in Nicaragua, Angola, Afghanistan, and Cambodia; and 3) to secure the resignation or firing of all who are not in agreement with the aims of the CFR. This could include President Reagan, particularly because George Bush could never win an honest election, and the only way he could ever become President would be by taking the same route made available to Gerald Ford for the benefit of the late Nelson Rockefeller.

First Purpose. As we wrote in our Report #46, under Dean Acheson,

Henry Kissinger and Zbigniew Brzezinski, the NSC had become a virtual power unto itself, its director representing all the foreign policy-making departments involved and responsible to the President only. Under Presidents Johnson and Carter, the NSC became comparatively dormant. But under President Reagan, it was revived and its power restored, but its directors were not CFR-men. And when the State Department under Shultz became virtually anti-American in its policies, the NSC became actively involved in aiding anti-Communist and pro-American groups. With the capture of the Senate by Democrats, the only important agency neither controlled nor influenced by the CFR was the NSC. Any opportunity to destroy the conservative control of the NSC would be welcomed by the CFR. Such an opportunity came with North's plan to help the "Contras" in spite of State and Congress. When Poindexter resigned and North was fired, a CFR member was in the wings waiting to take over the empty desk. At Shultz's insistence, Frank Carlucci was appointed to head the NSC. Said New Right leader Richard Viguerie, the President "really kicked us in the stomach with the Carlucci appointment." Howard Philips of the Conservative Caucus echoed the sentiment: "a major defeat for anyone on the conservative side." Carlucci

Regarding last week's Report titled The New Age Path To Peace, the following additional information has come to us from The Omega-Letter, P.O.Box 744, North Bay, Ontario, Canada P1B 8J8:

"On December 26th, Barbara Marx Hubbard and The Center For Soviet-American Dialogue will be leading a pilgrimage to the Soviet Union which will climax with the World Instant of Co-operation meditation in Arbotov Square (Moscow) on December 31st. Organizers hope to mobilize at least 10,000 Soviets to join in the Moscow meeting. They also hope to have a New York-Moscow radio hook-up with Vladimir Posner (US based Soviet Propagandist) as host. Likewise, plans are also accelerating in Sydney, Australia and John Randolph Price's Quartus Foundation believes they are close to securing Westminster Abbey for the December 31st event. According to organizers, the December 31st events have already drawn more support than the anticipated 50,000,000 meditators and 500,000,000 candle-bearers. However, the greatest numbers are still mainly to be found in India, Tibet and other Eastern countries. And, while organizers such as John Randolph Price's Quartus Foundation, the Human Unity Institute and The Center for Soviet-American Dialogue are pleased with the number of US cities holding meetings, they confess that the real need in the west is major media coverage. As of this writing, Pat Weeks of the Human Unity Institute, who is heading up media plans, claims that major media coverage is now being worked on. However, he will not elaborate. We will just have to wait and see. And the Tara Center, which ran ads in major US newspapers claiming that 'The Christ is Now Here' in 1982, are taking no chances that the media will not pick up on the event. In a November fund raising letter, they announced that they plan to add the notion of Maitreya's appearance to December's events. They explained that, 'As 1986 draws to a close and Maitreya's visibility in London increases, many in the Network agree that it is time to make another major push toward bringing His message of hope to as many people as possible. To this end, we have decided to run a full page advertisement in "USA Today," sometime close to Christmas. This publication was chosen because (a) it is a national paper, on every newstand in the country, (b) its daily circulation is 4.7 million, (c) it is read by the average person, and (d) there is less advertising than in most papers, allowing more visibility to an ad of this type.' When you combine an ad of this type with articles like the ones  from the New York Times, Los Angeles Times and Christian Science Monitor. it becomes really obvious that the major media is beginning to give credibility to New Age ideas and events." (Unquote, excerpted from The Omega-Letter, P.O.Box 744, North Bay, Ontario, Canada P1B 8J8).

has held the second highest posts in the CIA, Department of Defense, and OMB, supported SALT II, backed the policies that led to the Sandinista takeover of Nicaragua in 1979, and was, of course, an important member of the CFR. Said The Christian Science Monitor of Dec. 8: "Frank C. Carlucci is moving quickly to revamp the staff and operations of the National Security Council...Diplomatic observers and administration officials voice hope that when Mr. Carlucci officially takes over in January, the White House agency will have a more professional look, with new faces, a new operating style, and better working relations with the Congress and the press." Former NSC Director Brzezinski made the most ridiculous statement of his career when he said, "The problem over the last two years has not been that the NSC has been too strong, but that it's been too weak." He obviously means that under Carlucci the NSC will be more strongly in favor of CFR policies, the chiefest of which is to "merge the United States and the Soviet Union." With Reagan a wounded lame duck and the CFR in total control, Carlucci could go far toward the "merging" in a very short time.

Second Purpose: regarding the supplying of arms to Freedom Fighters. In 1914, during WW I. when Col. House was the foreign policy advisor to President Wilson, he outlined a grandiose plan for the creation of a Regional World Government consisting of all the countries of Central and South America. He called it the Pan American Pact, but it was never consummated because of America's entry into the world war. Shultz, Kissinger, and the CFR hierarchy have the same idea. They speak of a Regional Economic Order which is laid out in a "Report of the National Bipartisan Commission," usually referred to as the Kissinger Report, made at the request of Ronald Reagan. In developing this Regional Economic Order, Nicaragua stands in the way. In this respect, the "Contras" are to be encouraged but they must never be allowed to win! Shultz made an important address before the National Foreign Policy Conference for Young Political Leaders, in Washington, D.C. last June 13th. He said: "The United States has been able to lay the foundation for regional economic growth through the Caribbean Basin...But there is one major obstacle to progress in Central America...It is Nicaragua, a Marxist-Leninist, odd man out, a spoiler of the dream of democracy and of regional cooperation." But Shultz does not want to eliminate the Communists. He wants to induce the Sandinistas to cooperate with the "Contras" and other anti-communists. He said: "A stable solution to the threat of Nicaragua lies in a process of national reconciliation...If the inducements we offered Managua in the early 1980s failed to encourage domestic democracy and regional peace, how then is a comprehensive regional settlement to be achieved? We can only conclude that unrelenting pressure is required if the Nicaraguan communists are to make the fundamental changes required for such a settlement." In other words, don't kill the Communists, collaborate (merge) with them and form a democracy! So, to induce the Communists to become democrats, let the "Contras" keep applying pressure, but don't let them win the war!

This practice of "merging" or "collaborating" has been employed on numerous occasions by the State Department. At the end of World War II General George Marshall, soon to be Secretary of State, went to China and tried to talk Chiang Kai-shek into "merging" his government with the Communist command under Mao Tse-tung. Chiang refused and was forced to retreat to Taiwan. Toward the end of the Vietnamese horror, Secretary of State Henry Kissinger went to Paris to arrange for a "merging" of the Communist and anti-Communist forces. The result was the Communization of the entire area. That's when the "boat people" began trying to get to the United States. The idea of "merging" with Communist parties or organizations was presented to Batista of Cuba and Somoza of Nicaragua. In neither case was such an offer accepted. The "merging" is underway in the Philippines as this is being written. A compromise with the Communist forces in those islands will lead to the total Communization of the country, with the already expected loss of the vital bases of Subic Bay and Clark Field.

With regard to Nicaragua the "merging" now takes an opposite direction. The Communists are in control, and Secretary of State George Shultz is attempting to get the Sandinistas to allow the anti-Communists to merge with them and "create a domestic democracy." But it's the same old ploy that the CFR hierarchy has tried time after time in several countries. Another example exists in Angola where the "merging" has brought about the protection of debt capitalist oil interests by Communist troops. And the extreme example is the attempt to "merge" the South African government with the Communist ANC.

In this address made by Secretary Shultz on June 13, 1986, it seems significant that he speaks of a Regional Order for Central America, but he never mentions Cuba at any time. And he never uses the word "Sandinista." Instead, he calls them Commandantes. And the desire, not to destroy the Communists but force them to merge with the "democratic forces, is made very obvious in his last words to these "Young Political Leaders":

"The Administration will not diminish its commitment to support democracy, development, defense and dialogue in Central America. All four remain pillars of our policy. Nicaragua has excluded itself from our assistance to the region by the choices it has made. At the same time we will take whatever actions are necessary to protect our national security interests. We will not relent from our efforts to support the freedom fighters so long as the government in Nicaragua oppresses its citizens, so long as it serves as a base in our hemisphere for the Soviets and their surrogates, and so long as it subverts its neighbors. The choice is now up to Nicaragua. We count on the Congress to help the Nicaraguans make the right decision." (Unquote).

So that's the crux of the confrontation. George Shultz, representing the CFR more than the USA, wants to compromise, collaborate and merge what we might call the forces of good and evil. But Oliver North and those who believe as he does, wants no compromise or merging. To him, the forces of Communism must be destroyed before they destroy us.

Third Purpose: This prolonged media-made serial provides ample opportunity for the CFR to complete the liquidation of all conservatives in the Administration and the installation of persons whose political opinions and actions are in accord with those who really rule America. But, though Satan is called the prince of this world, there is a Higher Authority that casts him out. And if an elitist group controls America and even the world, there is that Higher Authority, One upon Whom we must call if we seek salvation, either personal or national.

THE DYNAMICS OF WASHINGTON SCANDALMANIA

Raymond Price, syndicated columnist, was looking at the entire forest while other mediacrats were exultantly examining little groups of trees. In The Washington Times of December 11, 1986, Price wrote:

"The great entertainment now being staged in the nation's capital has two distinctly separate elements. One is what went wrong with the handling of America's foreign policy and how it can be set right. The other is the obsessive pursuit of scandal by Congress and the media. When Washington Post executive editor Ben Bradlee was caught exulting that 'we haven't had so much fun since Watergate,' it was both embarrassing to him, and illuminating for others. For both Congress and the media, 'Irangate' is the sort of opportunity of which dreams of national stardom are made. But the media do like to keep some truths about themselves decently veiled. Washington scandalmania shares some of the dynamics of nuclear fission. Once a story develops a 'critical mass,' a chain reaction begins. That one story then crowds out all other news, and because it so dominates the news, the reader assumes that it must be transcendently important. This in turn escalates pressure for even more intense coverage. All sense of proportion evaporates, as Washington spins ever faster in a vicious circle. News bureaus come under intense competitive pressure to develop new angles every day. To meet this pressure, they search desperately for any scrap of real or apparent misdoing they can turn up - or, failing that, for suggestions of possible misdoing.

"In this game, suspicions are almost as good as the real thing. Reported in heavy-breathing tones, they tantalize, they tease, they provoke others to react, and the reactions then provide still more stories. Another favored technique is to reach for the most damaging conceivable explanation of an unexplained fact and then speculate about what this explanation, if true, might in turn mean. Within 24 hours, the 'if true' qualifier is forgotten, and the speculative explanation becomes part of the accumulating folklore. Within another 24 hours, the inflamed hypothesis about what, if true, the explanation would in turn mean, has also entered into the folklore as fact. The more mundane truth seldom has a chance to catch up. This is how the Washington scandal system works, once the chain reaction gets going." (Unquote).

Through the succeeding episodes of this political soap opera, the "arms for hostages" scandal became the "money for the Contras" scandal, then the "money for election campaign" scandal in the case of former Senator Paula Hawkins, then the "total corruption scandal" involving almost every non-liberal in Washington. Just when the chain reaction ends is anybody's guess, and most anybody's political demise.

The scandal had reached such intensity within the United States that the CFR and Trilateral biggies began to worry about how this was going to affect America's relations with other nations. So, just as soon as Secretary of State George Shultz had finished his first round of meaningless testimony before a Senate committee, he was off to Europe to smooth the supposedly turbulent waters.

Correction please. We said George Shultz's testimony was meaningless. Insofar as Irangate is concerned, it was. But it served a special purpose for Secretary Shultz. When the first act of the Iran drama was being played, Shultz threw barbs at President Reagan and all others who had allegedly kept him in the dark about the deal and/or deals, and went so far as to suggest that he might even resign. His assistant, John Whitehead added emphasis to his immediate boss's words, by intimating that somebody in the White House had lied about the whole affair. So, a few days later, when Shultz found himself on the carpet instead of his adversaries, he utilized his televised appearance to affirm his loyalty to his President and fealty to his position as the nation's most important appointed official.

Last week William Safire, who poses as the conservative voice of the far from conservative New York Times, wrote from London to tell his readers that "Reagan Cabinet members are in Europe this week ostensibly for arms and terrorism conferences. In reality, they are here to reassure our allies that the aftershocks of the Iran arms scandal will not shake the Reagan Administration out of office." But these Cabinet Secretaries who were so concerned about how the Iran scandal had shocked America, expected that the Trilateral Nations of Europe would be equally shocked because arms had been sold to Iran. But, as Safire observed: "Coming out of the single-issue maelstrom that is Washington After the Fall, Messrs. Shultz, Meese and Weinberger must be surprised to discover that President Reagan's popularity plunge is not at the center of European concerns."

European governments were having their own national problems when Shultz and Weinberger were in Europe to minimize whatever effects Irangate might have on Trilateral and NATO relationships. But Prime Minister Chirac of France was involved with a student rebellion that was taking much of his time, Margaret Thatcher was trying to deal with more spy stories that involved both Britain and Australia, the West German Bundestag was concerned with its own problems concerning terrorism and Syria's involvement in same. In short, the Iran drama was not a featured item in the European media as it has been in the United States. Washington is so tied up with the one drama that regular business is suffering. For example, Senator Lawton Chiles has been trying to get the President's ear concerning a certain "deficit reduction tax," which may or may not be important in itself. But important is the fact that a US Senator finds that "the Iran-Contra affair is paralyzing the administration. Said the senior senator from Florida, "While the president's under siege, you're not going to get a willing ear. It's paralyzing the president, it's paralyzing the administration and Congress is preoccupied with it."

It all seems to boil down to the proposition that any aid to any anti-Communist movement, such as the Contras, is a crime of national scope; while aid to Communists is applauded. A glaring example is the approval that is given Armand Hammer because he has made a big deal with the Communist government of Red China. The New York Times of Dec. 3 reported that "Thirty-four predominantly Japanese and European banks signed a syndicated loan in Beijing (Peking) today to provide $475 million for the biggest Chinese-American joint venture to date, and the world's largest coal mine. The Bank of America (supposedly bankrupt, you'll remember) is one of the five lead banks in the loan...The Antalbao open-pit mine, a joint venture between China and Armand Hammer's Occidental Petroleum Corporation, will produce more than 15 million tons of coal annually...Dr. Hammer, the 88-year-old chairman of Occidental was able to proceed with the project after overcoming years of frustrated negotiations..."

As the late and lamented Gary Allen would say, "none dare call it treason," since a few million dollars for Freedom Fighters can become a crime, while 475 million dollars to promote slave labor in a Communist country is called a good work. While every branch and department of our federal government is organizing to seek out and punish any American who has tried to give aid to the anti-Communists in violation of government orders, the Hammers and Rockefellers are called honorable and respected citizens of the world. What becomes particularly infuriating to American patriots are situations such as that which exists in the Marxist state of Angola. First duplicity: our government regards Angola as a Soviet client, doles out token assistance to those anti-Communist forces that are trying to regain control of their homeland; but at the same time is aiding and abetting the Marxist government that is supposed to be an enemy. There are an estimated 35,000 Cuban troops in Angola, They are supported by more than 30 large American corporations that do business in Angola while no longer doing business in a friendly nation, South Africa. Some of those Cuban surrogates are stationed around the Gulf Cabinda oil installation, the country's largest, and the one which was the scene of a failed sabotage attempt on the part of South Africa last year. Gulf Cabinda is 49 percent owned by Chevron, and 51 percent owned by Sonangoi, the Angolan government oil company. US employees operate the facility; Communist troops protect them. As those 30 other US corporations are protected while making money for a Marxist government as well as for themselves. But this is tolerated, just as are US government and multinational corporations and international banks that do business with the USSR and its satellites, and with Red China and its subject states. But the media say nothing against those who give aid to our enemies, while condemning those who try to give aid to our friends. Treason prospers while patriotism suffers.

Last fall the Daily Digest published a special report dealing with the possible surrender of the United States to the USSR. In its three part summation, which was published before the Iran drama was publicly revealed,, Johnny Johnson wrote:

"...we feel that an understanding of the 'Big Picture' is mandatory if we are to understand the many diversions (such as Iran-Ed.) that get our attention via the mass media. South Africa is in very deep trouble. Nicaragua is slipping even further into the Soviet orbit. Afghanistan is a bloody mess, at best a standoff between the 'Evil Empire' and the Freedom Fighters. Angola and Mozambique, under their Marxist and US/Soviet-sponsored leadership, continue in turmoil as Freedom Fighters try to regain their countries. Southeast Asia is at war, with the anti-Communists fighting more than a holding action against superior and better armed Soviet and Red Chinese backed government forces.

"These are side issues, 'created diversions,' as it were. The major players in all of the above are the US and the USSR. (Red China quietly backs the USSR while the US insanely goes about building their strength, just as it has done and continues to do with the Soviet Union.) How this conflict between the two superpowers is resolved will affect all of the above 'diversions.' The disturbing thing is the apparent swing toward a 'meshing of interests' between the protagonists. They give a little, we give a little, the result is a comfortable One World Government.

"That's one possibility. The other is that which we have outlined: progressive surrender as a result of Soviet nuclear blackmail."

These are the prospects as we near the end of a year which has not been good for America and Americans, and await the promise of an even more critical year to come.

This will be the last issue of the thirty-third year of Don Bell Reports. A short and needed rest is prescribed. Our next issue will be dated January 2, 1987. May we leave you with the following message which has been an inspiration and guiding light to us (Ginny and me) in our dedication to the work which the Lord has given us.

* * * * *

KEEP AT YOUR WORK

The Lord has given to every man his work. It is his business to do it, and the devil's business to hinder him if he can. So sure as God has given you a work to do, Satan will try to hinder you. He may present other things more pleasant. He may allure you by worldly prospects, he may assault you with slander, torment you with false accusations, set you to work defending your character, employ pious persons to lie about you, editors to assault you, and excellent men to slander you. You may have Pilate and Herod, Ananias and Caiphas all combined against you, and Judas standing by you to sell you for thirty pieces of silver; and you may wonder why all these things come upon you. Can you not see that the whole thing is brought about through the craft of the devil? To draw you off from your work and hinder your obedience to God?

Keep about your work. Do not flinch because the lion roars; do not stop to stone the devil's dogs; do not fool away your time chasing the devil's rabbits. Do your work. Let liars lie, let sectarians quarrel, let corporations resolve, let editors publish, let the devil do his worst; but see to it that nothing hinders you from fulfilling the work that God has given you.

He has not sent you to make money. He has not commanded you to get rich. He has never bidden you to defend your character. He has not set you at work to contradict falsehoods which Satan and his servants may start to peddle. If you do these things, you will do nothing else; you will be at work for yourself and not for the Lord.

Keep at your work. Let your aim be as steady as a star. Let the world brawl and bubble. You may be assaulted, wronged, insulted, slandered, wounded and rejected; you may be abused by foes, forsaken by friends and despised and rejected of men, but see to it with steadfast determination, and unflinching zeal, that you pursue the great purpose of your life and object of your being, until at last you can say "I have finished the work Thou gavest me to do."

COMPETITIVE INTERDEPENDENCE

Comparisons sometimes seem odious. But this one we couldn't resist. In January, 1933, FDR took over as President and proceeded to introduce a new form of government which the Insiders of that day called The New Deal. His first act was to declare a bank "holiday". Then he sent to an obedient rubber-stamp Congress fifteen different Acts that all became laws, though some were later declared unconstitutional. There was the NRA, FERA, AAA, TVA, CCC, the Emergency Banking Act, and more of the same type. All this happened in what came to be known as the One Hundred Days. No President after FDR ever proposed so many disastrous Acts in such a short time. But after that, every newly elected President considered his first One Hundred Days in office a time in which he would be expected to submit to Congress his proposed program, and start pushing for its enactment into law.

All except George Bush, that is. He, like FDR, was to introduce a new form of government called The New World Order. And like FDR, he did begin with a banking act, a proposal whereby taxpayers would pay up to fifty billion dollars as part of the amount that had been lost, strayed or stolen from so many S&Ls. And he did send to Congress a proposed budget, but lacking in detail. There he stopped, to conduct a city-by-city crusade in an attempt to get his Texas buddy, John Tower, approved by the Senate as his Defense Secretary. Having failed, he named Yale fellow alumnus Dick Cheney and the Senate approved. But otherwise, in so many of those One Hundred Days there remained executive silence. The most exciting thing to happen at the White House: Kind and Gentle George was banished from the bedroom so midwife Barbara could help springer spaniel Millie birth her six puppies.

While the President held many news conferences, talked much but said little of importance, other Insiders were doing their prescribed bit. Drug Czar William Bennett, confusing cause with effect, started things off by calling for a ban on assault weapons. This required executive action, so the President ordered the banning of some 113,000 automatic and semi-automatic weapons, such as the Russian AK-47 and the Japanese Uzi. He did this even as he was reaffirming his membership in the National Rifle Association, thus maintaining his public stance of all things to all people. Then a combination of evils was used to create a new crisis to replace the terminated Tower travail. The drug war, plus airplane and helicopter crashes and other terrorist attacks, plus the murderous rampages of drug crazed or hate-filled individuals, plus much media assistance, brought on a new ban-the-gun crisis. This would keep the people attentively alarmed and distracted while other things of importance that weren't supposed to be leaked to the public were occurring. Actually, these not-to-be-publicized events began immediately after the Insiders had finished the task of getting one of their own into the Oval Office.

Business Week says a particular think-tank, the Washington-based Institute for International Economics (IIE), is "Washington's most influential think-tank on the hot issue of world economics." Its membership seems to prove that statement. Members are Trilateral Commissioners or Councilors on Foreign Relations, or both, and include David Rockefeller, Alan Greenspan, Paul Volcker, Anthony Solomon, Richard Cooper, Kaneo Nakamura (Industrial Bank of Japan), and C. Fred Bergsten who heads the Institute. Now note this: The very next day after Bush was given the election, IIE released a book written by Bergsten and titled America in World Economy: a Strategy for the 1990s," for "those who will be managing and influencing the international economic policy of the United States from January 1989 until well into the next decade." The theme of this book outlines the policy of the Trilateral Commission: "The globalization of markets has outrun the ability of governments to cope." The answer: "Competitive Interdependence." Translation: World Government.

Fred Bergsten wrote a book. So did Zbig Brzezinski. Bergsten's book was for the Insiders. Brzezinski's book was for everybody who chose to read it. He titled it The Grand Failure, subtitled The Birth and Death of Communism in the Twentieth Century. This was in sharp contrast to the book, Between Two Ages, which he had written in 1970. By comparing the themes of the two books much is revealed of the Hegelian dialectic which is being used to bring about the "Grand Merging of Nations". If one compares the two books, published 19 years apart, the picture that emerges is clear and fateful; probably much clearer than Brzezinski expected; as is Carroll Quigley's Tragedy and Hope.

In reading between the lines, Between Two Ages, the old Marxian contest of Capitalism versus Communism is revealed in Hegelian terms. That is, Capitalism is pictured as the first Age (thesis), and Communism is the second Age (antithesis). These two are to compete until finally a compromise (or merging) is brought about which is neither Capitalism nor Communism but, as Brzezinski calls it, Democratization (synthesis). Of these Two Ages, in 1970 Brzezinski seemed to prefer Communism over Capitalism. But in The Grand Failure, published 19 years later, Brzezinski belies his own book title by presenting, not the actual failure of either Capitalism or Communism, but the merging of the two in what might best be described as Social Democracy.

Even as Bergsten's book awaited the proper moment, the election of Bush, before its release, so also was the release of Brzezinski's book carefully timed. The Grand Design was completed in August 1988; but it was not released until after two important Insiders (Brent Scowcroft and Lawrence Eagleberger) had been okayed by the Senate as, respectively, National Security Adviser and Deputy Secretary of State. But something else had to fit into this time schedule.

Back in 1952, the 82nd Congress set up a "Select Committee to Investigate Foundations and Comparable Organizations." The report never received much publicity and the committee chairman, Carrol Reece, died rather mysteriously before the committee's work was completed. But chief investigator Norman Dodd did report a conversation he had with Rowan Gaither, then President of the Ford Foundation. You'll probably remember that Gaither told Dodd: "All of us here at the policy-making level have had experience, either in the OSS [forerunner of the CIA], or the European Economic Administration, with directives from the White House. We operate under those directives here....the substance of them is that we shall use our grant-making power so as to alter our life in the United States that we can be comfortably merged with the Soviet Union." (Emphasis added).

Now, let us reason together. If American policy-makers were given such an order, would it not follow that a similar order would have to be given certain policy-makers in the Soviet Union? After all, such enormous alteration is not a one-way street. If America must be altered, certainly the Soviet Union would also require some altering (as we have noted in the past few years). It seems most likely that such altering in the USSR did not begin seriously until Mikhail Gorbachev came to power. And we have noted how preliminary merging has been witnessed in business mergers, educational mergers, legal mergers, exchange of students, artists, people and organizations of almost every description. And this merging began to be more obvious during and after the reign of Henry Kissinger as National Security Adviser and Secretary of State under Nixon and Ford. But, let's backtrack for a paragraph or two.

Brzezinski wrote Between Two Ages and it was published in 1970. The Insiders were so impressed with it that David Rockefeller asked Zbig to create and become executive director of the Trilateral Commission. He also spotted Jimmy Carter, trained him, helped get him elected and then served as his National Security Adviser. Since that time Zbig has "become a Republican" and now predicts The Grand Failure of Communism. Note the following contrasts:

In Between the Ages (1970), Brzezinski mentioned some of the ways in which America must be "altered" before a synthesis (merging) could evolve. "It may take such form as legislation for the number of children, perhaps even legislation determining the sex of children, and so forth." On Page 300 he wrote that there must be a new monetary system replacing the American dollar, and a reduced standard of living for Americans. He wrote: "In the economic-technological field some international cooperation has already been achieved, but further progress will require greater American sacrifices."

In contrast to the American system which must suffer "alterations," Brzezinski said, "Marxism represents a further vital and creative stage in the maturing of man's universal vision. Marxism is simultaneously a victory of the external man over the inner, passive man, and a victory of reason over belief" (page 72). Furthermore, "Marxism has served as a mechanism of human progress even if its practice has often fallen short of its ideals" (page 73). Also, "Marxism disseminated on the popular level in the form of communism, represented a major advance in man's ability to conceptualize his relationship to his world" (page 83). Moreover, according to the author, "Marxism provided a unique intellectual tool for understanding and harnessing the fundamental forces of our time. It supplied the best available insight into contemporary reality" (page 123).

However, in The Grand Failure (1988), Brzezinski has changed his tune. He writes, "Fermenting in the Soviet Union, repudiated in Eastern Europe, and more and more commercialized in China, communism has become a globally discredited ideology. Marxist-Leninist 'praxis'--the unity of theory and action--no longer commands respect even among party members as a universally valid guide to social reconstruction. As a result, the prospects for the international advance of communism have plummeted" (page 189).

Perhaps realizing some readers might see that his anti-American, pro-Communist views expressed in 1970, are not consistent with his views as expressed in 1989, Brzezinski offers what might be considered an explanation, even an apology: "The communist phenomenon represents a historical tragedy. Born out of an impatient idealism that rejected the injustice of the status quo, it sought a better and more humane society - but produced mass oppression. It optimistically reflected faith in the power of reason to construct a perfect community. It mobilized the most powerful emotions for love for humanity and of hatred for oppression on behalf of morally motivated social engineering. It thus captivated some of the brightest minds and some of the most idealistic hearts - yet it prompted some of the worst crimes of any century" (page 231).

The Grand Failure is an exciting and eye-catching title for a book that predicts the death of communism in the twentieth century. It could become a best seller, because The New York Times Book Review Section of March 12 gave it considerable publicity. But it's a misleading title in that nary a word is spoken of the death of Socialism. The USSR is a Soviet Socialist Union of slave states. Communism could die in the twentieth century, or it could change its name and carry on as it has since 1917. But neither the Communists nor the Insiders will allow Socialism to die. Socialism is the economic system that is the very heart of the New World Order. What Brzezinski implies without actually writing it, is that Gorbachev or whoever may follow him in power, must use that power "so as to alter life in the Soviet Union that it can be comfortably merged into the New World Order (after having been merged with the United States is also implied). Gorbachev said it this way: "The key question is whether the Soviet system can successfully evolve into a more pluralistic organism, one that generates greater social and economic creativity and thus make the Soviet Union more truly competitive on the world scene....The current turmoil could perhaps be a signal for such change" (page 95). Brzezinski seems to imply that in the process of necessary "alteration," Communism will evolve into what he calls "Post-Communist Democratization." And he ends his book with these words: "...democracy--and not communism--will dominate the twenty-first century." Democracy is the political name for economic socialism, and both are steps toward Socialist World Government.

WARNING. Brzezinski and his turncoat friends are not alone in predicting the Grand Failure of Communism. The British Intelligence Digest (3/1/89) reported: "Marxism-Leninism is proving to be a total disaster in economic, political and social terms....In Poland and Yugoslavia it's no longer heresy to talk about introducing elements of capitalism into communism." (Merger talk?) The London Economist had a Gorbameter (reference, barometer) to ask ten "experts," whether Gorbachev had a chance to survive. Brzezinski's answer was typical: "The real issue is not whether Gorbachev will last or even whether he will succeed or fail....The key question is whether the Soviet system can successfully evolve into a more pluralistic organism" (merge). All the heads of government of NATO Nations want Gorbachev to succeed hoping that the Soviet Union will be "altered" sufficiently to become a total partner in the western (socialist) economic and monetary systems.

And this could be the biggest scam of the twentieth century. because the Soviet arms buildup of post-nuclear weapons continues. Thanks to America's treatment of her, South Africa is making deals with the Communists. A peace settlement orchestrated by the US State Department, the Soviet Union and Cuba, will allow the communists to take full control of South West Africa, Angola, and all the rest of southern Africa. Thanks to the State Department and Congress, there is no longer any real resistance to the Marxist conquest of the rest of Central America; a conquest manned by the Sandinistas, directed and equipped by Cuba, and financed by USA via the USSR. As they infiltrate our borders we may wonder: Will it be Merger or Takeover? Or will enough Americans awaken in time? We need watchmen awake at the gates!

EXPLOSIONS

Coincidences on a global scale? First there was the revolt in Red Square and squabbles in the Kremlin as maverick Boris Yeltsin is seated in the new Supreme Soviet, apparently to the dismay of the supreme head of the Supreme Soviet. Then there was revolution in Tiananmen Square, ending with a Chinese version of the Statue of Liberty planted, facing the portrait of Mao Tse-tung, and a struggle for power at the top with Deng remaining top boss and more moderate Zhao ousted. And finally, upheaval in the Capitol in Washington as a figurative Hercules named Gingrich initiated a figurative cleaning out of the Augean Stable that is the House of Representatives. Meanwhile, as if all of this were mere passing fancy of little importance, President Bush and President Gorbachev spoke out on arms and troop reductions and promised peace as they battled for the favor of the soon-to-be United States of Europe, while promoting in their own fashion the New World Order. Of all these coincidences, for We the People the corruption in Washington should concern us most; because it is the most immediate.

Edward Everett Hale, who wrote "The Man Without a Country," served for a time as Chaplain of the United States Senate. Apparently in an attempt to define the Chaplain's duties, a reporter asked him, "Do you pray for the senators, Dr. Hale?" He replied, "No. I look at the senators and pray for the country." 100 years later, one could look at the Congress, the Administration, and the Court, and still feel the need to pray, not for them, but for the country they seem intent on destroying. As we write this, the Supreme Court has confirmed a lower court decree that high school football teams are forbidden to pray before the kick-off. Earlier, the Court also confirmed by silence, that teenage girls need not tell or consult their parents before going to an adultery clinic and submitting to the murder of an unborn child. As for the Administration, while accepting praise for the compromises he had made to please the 16 nations of NATO, George Bush said he didn't do it for the United States, he did it for the Atlantic Alliance; another way of saying he was working, not for America, but for the New World Order.

However, at this moment in history, it is the House of Representatives that deserves attention and renovation. There is Jim Wright, the nation's highest ranking elected Democrat, second in line after VP Quayle for the Presidency, and faced with 69 charges of various degrees of malfeasance from misconduct to felony, by the House Ethics Committee. Next there is Tony Coelho, third ranking Democrat in the House and expected to become House Majority Leader; suddenly resigning from Congress rather than "put his party and his colleagues through a protracted investigation of his personal finances." And next comes William Gray, fourth ranking House Democrat, charged but saying it isn't so. Newt Gingrich of Georgia who started it all by exposing a little of Jim Wright's record, says that at least eight or nine more Democrats will be cited, even more if House Ethics Committee Counsel Richard Phelan is given the signal to dig deeper. Seems that this private and exclusive millionaire's club of elected representatives of the people, is far more adept at representing personal and public special interests, while disregarding the interests of those who elected and re-elected and re-elected them. We call it a private club because 92% of the members of the 100th Congress remain members of the 101st Congress. (Slightly less than 92% now, because of the death of Claude Pepper and the resignation of Tony Coelho.) It must be granted that there are a few good and faithful servants of the people who elected them, but in a democracy, minorities don't count.

We believe it was Dr. Fred Schwarz who popularized the phrase, "You can always trust a Communist - to be a Communist." But people, and governments, forget. Internally, the Soviet Union is in a turmoil, and Western help is needed, as it was needed in Lenin's time and in Stalin's time. There are revolts in Latvia, Estonia, Lithuania, Georgia, Armenia, Hungary, and a possible revolt is expected in the Ukraine. And yet, all this is overlooked by governments on this side of the Iron Curtain. The Western course of action involves helping Gorbachev in whatever he does or says. Governments, banks, multinationals are pouring billions into the USSR; all trade restrictions have been lifted; the Russian ruble is to be internationalized, a Soviet bank has opened its doors (but not its vaults) in New York City. We are told that the cold war is ended, that we can expect peace, we can disarm. Washington was pleased when Gorbachev told Bush that "all Soviet deliveries to Marxist-controlled Nicaragua have been suspended." But have they been? Gorbachev's assurances did not foreclose delivery of other forms of military assistance, such as vehicles, supplies, and clothing." Furthermore, AP tells us, "The Soviets declined to suspend their military support of Cuba." In other words, war weapons will go to Cuba to be transhipped to Nicaragua; and the Sandinistas will continue their "war without borders" against the other states of Central America. The USSR doesn't need weapons to fight the US; they only need weapons to intimidate us, while their real purpose is to weaken us from within, especially through immigration. Don McAlvany, editor of "The McAlvany Intelligence Adviser," wrote of the alien terrorist threat. We quote:

* * *

As the Ortega/castro/Gorbachev revolution without borders accelerates northward (glasnost/perestroika notwithstanding), and the present stream of hundred of thousands of Central America refugees and illegals grows into millions and mingles with the millions of Mexican illegals coming to America for a better life, America's great Southwest (as well as Florida and many other cities to the north) is going to be inundated with incredible economic, social, and security problems. A tremendous strain will be put on the US welfare system, as well as the infrastructure and economics of the southwest cities and Florida (indeed, it is already happening!). Five hundred thousand Nicaraguan and Salvadorian refugees have already arrived - with 150,000 of the former in Miami - and the flood has just begun. Their presence and their claims upon services and jobs, are said to be behind the black resentment and rage manifested in the Overtown and Liberty City explosions the weekend of Superbowl Sunday in Miami. As the "revolution without borders" spreads to Honduras, El Salvador, Costa Rica, and Guatemala (only two days driving time to Harlington, El Paso, or San Diego), the refugee hord will swell from the present 2,000 per week at Harlington (104,000 expected this year) to 10,000 - 20,000 per week (i.e., 500,000 to a million per year) in South Texas alone. (Ed. Note: Perhaps a few will make their way to Fort Worth to "thank" Speaker Wright for his role in delivering Central America to communism.)

The potential for economic dislocation, social and racial conflict, and terrorism (and eventually guerrilla warfare) in the US Soutwest is horrendous. If out of the millions of refugees or illegals, only 1% (Or even 1/10%) are communists or international terrorists, or simply troublemakers, that is thousands of potential bomb throwers and revolutionaries who are being scattered across America. And the Bush Administration is admitting over 30,000 Soviet citizens to the US this year - the number could be 2 or 3 times higher. This writer wonders how many are KGB-trained or are Spetsnaz?....

At the time of America's greatest crime explosion, the greatest illegal alien explosion, a global terrorist explosion directed at America, and a revolutionary explosion to our south, the American political left (in and out of the government) is trying to disarm the American citizenry. Do we no longer need to protect ourselves and our families? Is the convergence of all these timebombs just a coincidence? Think about it!

* * *

In the above, the writer refers to "the American political left (in and out of government)." These are, for the most part, Fabian Socialists. They are of the "kinder and gentler" type, preferring persuasion, education, and legislation. Their organization in America is the Fabian Socialist "Americans for Democratic Action." They don't carry cards, seldom identify themselves as socialists, are content to call themselves Democrats. As a service to its members, the ADA publishes an annual rating, showing how they behaved themselves as Fabians during the preceding congressional year. The 1988 ratings name two senators who received "perfect scores." They are Patrick Leahy of Vermont and Claiborne Pell of Rhode Island. And 24 House members were recorded as perfect, 100% Fabian Socialists. they are: Chester Atkins (MA), Ronald Dellums (CA), Thomas Downey (NY), Don Edwards (CA), Lane Evans (IL), William Ford (MI), Barney Frank (MA), Henry Gonzalez (TX), Bob Kastenmeier (WI), William Lehman (FL), Mickey Leland (TX), Sander Levin (MI), John Lewis (GA), Mike Lowry (WA), Bruce Morrison (CT), Nancy Pelosi (CA), Martin Sabo (MN), Gus Savage (IL), Charles Schumer (NY), Gerry Studds (MA), Mike Synar (OK), Peter Visclosky (IN), Alan Wheat (MO), and Howard Wolpe (MI). This list is far from complete. It includes only those Fabians in Democrat clothing who scored a "perfect 100%".

Don McAlvany spoke of "the convergence of all these timebombs," and asked if these were coincidences. He may have missed one: the alleged weather war from which almost every section of America has suffered in one way or another; flood, drought, tornados, long periods of heat or cold weather. Let's consider the matter. In the December, 1988, issue of Newsletter Digest, there was the following item:

"WEATHER WAR"

"In 1974 a summit conference was held in Vladivostok with President Gerald Ford (Henry Kissinger-Ed.) and Leonid Brezhnev participating. It was suggested that the two superpowers 'collaborate' on weather modification. Russia supplied the location and the personnel, USA supplied the technology and equipment. Under a federal grant of $3.5 million, a giant electromagnet was built near Chicago, capable of generating a magnetic field 250,000 times greater than that of the earth itself. This equipment was installed near Moscow. The Carter Administration arranged for the Soviets to have a giant $13 million computer for 'weather research.' Now, the Soviets can reroute the jet stream over the United States, can control weather, and can stage volcanic eruptions and major earthquakes like the Mexico City quake. All, courtesy of the US taxpayer." (Unquote).

Correction, please. At that conference the USA and USSR signed a treaty not to use the control of weather as an instrument of war. The USA lived up to the treaty. And the USA supplied only the giant electromagnet. The technology came from Nikola Tesla's experiments in Scalar Waves and Extremely Low (radio) Frequency (ELF). Tesla wanted to supply the world with free electric energy. No money in that, so J.P.Morgan ruined Tesla, who died a pauper. But the Soviets utilized Tesla's theories and developed weather as a war weapon, against which the United States had no defense.

We are told that there's nothing very mysterious about Scalar Wave technology. Extremely low frequency waves (from 20 to 40 Hertz), are broadcast by very powerful transmitters. We understand there must be two of them if the waves are to be controlled. They should be located on opposite sides of the earth. There is this powerful electromagnet transmitter near Moscow, and it is reported that there is another at the Soviet base in Vostok, Antarctica (in a 7,000 foot hole in the ice pack). By using the two, according to Dr. Bernard Eastland (physicist and oil exploration expert), there can be the steering of jet streams, disruption of communications all over the world, control of the weather, cause volcanic eruptions, even destroy people.

When American scientists discovered how the Soviet scientists (probably Germans) had outdistanced them, we understand they began hastily trying to catch up. According to Peter Sawyer, Australian investigative reporter, there has been constructed a very mysterious installation at a secret place in Australia called Pine Gap. And a second installation, built at exactly the same time, is at Harrogate, 200 miles north of London, at a facility known as "Menwith Hill Station." Says Sawyer, "It was built by, and is operated by, the US National Security Agency. It is operated in exactly the same manner as Pine Gap (also an NSA operation in Australia-Ed.), and has the same kind of security measures, even looks like Pine Gap, with the same type of buildings, layout, antennae and 'Raydomes.' It has the same 'Woodpecker' type low frequency signals. Actually, there's nothing very mysterious about weather control once you understand Scalar Wave Technology. The use of Scalar Waves generates radio frequency patterns that are easily recognizable, are generally referred to as 'Woodpecker' signals. In the mid seventies, during unprecedented upheavals in the weather of Central North America, massive 'Woodpecker' signals could be detected in the affected areas, emanating from so-called 'radar' installations in the Soviet Union." (Unquote.)

But here's the catch. Peter Sawyer says "the use of Scalar Waves to affect weather patterns would require massive power input, far beyond what would be available from known Soviet capacities." But we wonder if Sawyer knows about that giant electromagnet that was built near Chicago and flown to a place near Moscow? They have it, we may not. And that may be why the Soviets can control the weather and we cannot.

"...stand fast in one spirit, with one mind striving together for the faith of the gospel. And in nothing be terrified by your adversaries: which is to them an evident token of perdition, but to you of salvation, and that of God."

"For God hath not given us the spirit of fear, but of power, and of love, and of a sound mind."

(Philippians 1:27 and II Timothy 1:7).

DEJA VU

The television screens showed elements of the 27th Peoples Liberation Army murdering hundreds of their own people. As we watched, we remembered that we had witnessed something like this years before. 62 years ago we were in China, probably the youngest member of the 4th United States Marines who had been sent to China to protect American lives, personnel and property, and to keep the peace within the International Settlements. But not like the Marines in Beirut, Lebanon. They, while still living, patrolled the streets and byways with empty arms. We carried Springfield rifles or Colt .45s or both, loaded and with extra ammunition. We were ordered to fire if fired upon or when Chinese troops tried to enter the British or French Concessions. A very ugly and bloody civil war was waging in the native sections of China's largest city. There was comparative peace within the Settlements. But outside, Chinese warlords, pledged to the support of Chiang Kai-shek's Kuomintang or to Mao Tse-tung's Communist-hordes, were battling each other to the death. All who stood in their way were murdered. The worst spot was the area surrounding the railway station. There were no modern conveyances in China in 1927 and the only quick way to get out of the city and to possible safety in the fields was by train. But the people didn't know that the trains had been stopped. As the people waited, thousands were murdered in and around the station. Bodies were piled four deep in some spots. When Pearl Harbor was attacked and our War Fleet destroyed, the 4th Marines were still in Shanghai or were being sent sent to Bataan in the Philippines. That's where we witnessed carnage the second time, this time as a war correspondent, when the Japanese bombed Clark and Nichols Fields and Manila, and took us prisoner of war. But let's put these massacres of innocents in proper context.

War and revolution, death and destruction have always been too frequent in the Orient. The United States were a very young Nation when wars between the white and yellow races began. At the turn of the 19th century the British citizenry developed a craze for China tea. Britain was the most powerful and far flung empire in the world, and China was the largest and most populous empire in the world. Britain, being a commercial empire and china being a closed and forbidden empire, that first great Drug War seemed inevitable. The British had gotten unlimited tons of opium by way of India, and sought a place to sell it for profit. As is the United States today, China in 1825 was the ideal customer for drugs. So, a brisk sale of opium and purchase of tea began. But the Emperor of the Ch'ing Dynasty learned of what was happening to his people because of the drugs and he ordered all users of opium executed. His troops commandeered and destroyed all the British-held opium, much as the Americans had destroyed the British-held tea in Boston Harbor. In both cases, war followed. But the Chinese lost their war. The (London) Times Concise Atlas of World History (1982) explains:

"The opium war had two major consequences. First, it resulted in the cession of Hong Kong to the British and the opening of the first five Treaty Ports....in which foreigners enjoyed extraterritorial rights. Secondly, it weakened imperial authority and led to the great Taiping rebellion (1850-64), the most serious but only one of many rebellions which shook Manchu power to its foundations. The Taiping and Nien revolutions alone left 25 million dead and vast areas (especially around Nanking-Ed.) were devastated." In 1900 came the Boxer uprising which was suppressed by the allied foreign forces. After that revolutionary groups led by warlords sprang up everywhere. In 1911 the Manchu government fell almost without fighting. The infant emperor was pensioned and allowed the run of the Imperial Palace. (A recent movie was based on the story of the last emperor. It may have been partially factual. We didn't bother to see it.)

In 1912, Yuan Shih-k'ai, most popular of the warlords at that time, was asked to take command and try to unite China. His efforts proved fruitless. Meanwhile, a Christian who had been educated in western schools, Sun Yat-sen, came forward with his constitutional type Three People's Principles (Nationalism, Democracy, and People's Livelihood) and took charge. He found that in a country such as China, as Mao had said after him, that "power comes from the barrel of a gun." So, one of his first accomplishments was the establishment of a top-rank military academy in Wuchang. He appointed a then unknown officer named Chiang Kai-shek to manage the officer's training school. Sun needed aid and he appealed to all the Western Nations, especially the United States where he had spent several months trying to raise funds. But they all turned him down. All except the Soviet Union. It poured in money, weapons, advisors. Consequently, Sun's Kuomintang Party became allied with the Chinese Communist Party. In 1925 Sun died suddenly and Chiang became head of the Kuomintang. All went well for a couple of years. Chiang advanced from the Canton area northward to Nanking, became president of China and named Nanking as the capitol. But meanwhile he had fallen in love. He met Mei-ling, one of the three Soong sisters, daughter of Charles Jones Soong who graduated from Vanderbilt University, returned to Shanghai as a Methodist missionary, later became a wealthy merchant. His three daughters were graduated from Wellesley, were Christians, although Ch'ing-ling who married Sun Yat-sen, later backslid and became a life-long Communist agitator. The second sister, Ai-ling, married H.H.Kung, China's leading banker. And Mei-ling married Chiang, promptly converted him, and advised him to get rid of the Communists in his party. Not only did he disassociate himself, he tried to drive the Communists out of China. Which occasioned the 6,000 mile "long March" of Mao and his followers from Kiangsi in the south of China to Yen-an in the north. Chiang began his war against the Communists by a total purge of Shanghai in 1927. We were there.

After Chiang became president, the Japanese began to fear for its developing "Co-Prosperty Sphere" if China became too powerful and too united. So Japan attacked, we saw yet another blood bath in Shanghai. Meanwhile the Soviets were extending every possible aid to Mao's Chinese Communist Party and that civil war resumed. Chiang seemed undecided as to which was his country's principal enemy. One of his own generals had him kidnapped in order to talk with him and convince him that Japan was the principal enemy. So the Kuomintang and the Communists declared a temporary truce and both fought against the Japanese. This continued until the end of WWII and the defeat of Japan, whereupon the civil war between Chiang's forces and Mao's forces began again and became a total war. All might have gone well except that our State Department had been taken over by the Council on Foreign Relations, which was strongly pro-Mao and anti-Chiang. The CFR sister organization, the Institute of Pacific Relations, did its job well - for Mao and the Communists, that is. Dan Smoot in his The Invisible Government (June, 1962) reported:

"The IPR played a more important role than any other American organization in shaping public opinion and influencing American policy with regard to Asia....In 1951 the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee, under the chairmanship of the late Pat McCarran began an investigation (which) was predicated on the assumption that United States diplomacy had never suffered a more disastrous defeat than in its failure to avert the Communist conquest of China (which) led to the Korean war and the tragic mishandling of this war on the part of Washington and United Nations officialdom, destroyed American prestige throughout Asia, and built Chinese Communist military power into a menacing colossus. The Senate Investigation revealed that the American policy decisions which produced these disastrous consequences were made by IPR officials who were traitors, or under the influence of traitors, whose allegiance lay in Moscow." Result: On October 1, 1949, the Communist "Peoples Republic" was proclaimed and the Nationalists under Chiang fled to Taiwan, where they were free and grew prosperous, while the mainland Chinese became hungry slaves.

Mao and his generals were able to end the "rule of the warlords." Land owners were murdered, and the peasants were given some three acres of land each on which they could raise "crops for the country." But this didn't work out too well, because there weren't enough tools or manure to go round. So the land was taken away from the peasants and some 750,000 collective farms were formed. Still, this didn't accomplish what was desired in agricultural growth. Mao & Co. then copied one of Stalin's ploys and announced the first "Five Year Plan" (1953). But socialism wasn't producing the results expected, so in 1958 came "The Great Leap Forward." Carroll Quigley in Tragedy and Hope gives a quite candid description. "The Great Leap Forward," he wrote, "merged the 750 thousand collective farms into about 26,000 communes of about 5,000 families each. This was a social rather than simply an agrarian revolution, since its aim included the destruction of the family household and the peasant village. All activities of the members, including child rearing, education, entertainment, social life, the militia, and all economic and intellectual life came under the control of the commune. In some areas the previous villages were destroyed and peasants were housed in dormitories, with communal kitchens and mess halls, nurseries for the children, and separation of these children under the communes' control in isolation from their parents at an early age. One purpose of this drastic change was to release large numbers of women from domestic activities so that they could work in fields or factories. In the first year of the Great Leap Forward, 90 million peasant women were relieved of their domestic duties and became available to work for the state."

This total commune-ization of the country was so drastic that even Khrushchev was shocked, spoke out against the policy. That has been cited as one of the reasons why China and the USSR severed relations completely and began massing troops on either side of the Sino-Soviet border. In 1966 came the "great proletarian cultural revolution" in which the youth of the country were mobilized into Red Guards units to "combat erosion of the revolution, and to attack the party and government bureaucracies." This was very similar to the recent peaceful uprising of the students in Beijing. The results in 1966: a purge of the people who protested, as well as a purge in the top party leadership. Much the same had developed when Mao announced his "Hundred Flowers Campaign." He said free criticism of the regime would be permitted, with immunity and without punishment. "Let a hundred flowers bloom and a hundred schools of thought contend." And after those who spoke out for democracy and a kinder and gentler kind of socialism, then came their purge. All the dissidents were declared traitors. Their reward: a bullet in the back of the head.

Meanwhile, the IPR, CFR, US State Department et al were anxious for Communist China to succeed and become a great market for American multinationals, as the USSR was already becoming. The Chinese Communist leadership was also anxious to promote industry and trade. But first, the Peoples Republic of Communist China had to become the holder of a permanent veto in the United Nations Security Council. Then, by secret arrangement, Henry Kissinger and Richard Nixon visited the Communist officials in Peking. That "opened the door" to trade and aid and travel, and to the growth of Communist China as a military power. More and more US officials and businessmen visited China, and multinational executives looked gleefully at the possibilities that awaited them. Modern hotels sprang up, soft drink and fast food dispensers appeared, as did various kinds of industries that Cathay had never known before.

So, as President Bush was wont to say, "a new wind was blowing" across the Communist countries. Gorbachev announced his glasnost and perestroika. In a sense China followed suit. And, as a touch of freedom and free enterprise was permitted, more freedom and free enterprise was demanded by the 'dissidents.' It was Socrates who said: "The young have exalted notions because they have not yet been humbled by life or learned from its necessary limitations. They would always rather do noble deeds than useful ones. Their lives are more regulated by moral feeling than by reasoning. They love too much, hate too much, and the same with everything else. They think they know everything, which is why they overdo everything."

When Brzezinski wrote about "The Grand Failure" of Communism, we sensed that the world was being prepared for One World Government through the merger of all nations and the New World Order. Demonstrations in Poland, Lithuania, Latvia, Estonia, Armenia, Georgia, even in Warsaw and Moscow, seemed to indicate that the USSR was being altered slightly so it might be comfortably merged with other nations. When USNews headlined its cover of June 19th with the words "Collapse of Communism," and its lead story dealt with the Beijing affair, we felt that Red China too, is being conditioned for the merger. We should remember that these revolts in the USSR and PRC are not demands for liberty and freedom, but merely for a kinder and gentler kind of Communism. And it all could be "planned that way." When Communism was about to collapse, Lenin did it, Stalin did it, and Mao did it. Mao created his Red Guards to make totalitarianism less painful. Then when the Guards began to be successful, he called out his armies to crush them. His "Hundred Flowers" followed the same course. This recent episode could be the same: loosening of the chains for a spell, then re-tightening and the purge. As the Insiders aim for the New World Order to be completely installed by the year 2000, quick work is required if the USSR and the PRC are ready for acceptance. Perhaps it was all planned. There is a Scripture that fits:

"Beloved, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they be of God: because many false prophets are gone out into the world."

WAR AGAINST CHRIST

It would be difficult to name the precise time when a Republic becomes an Empire. But in 27 B.C. Octavian, nephew of Julius Caesar, was honored by the Roman Senate by having his name changed to Augustus, meaning The Revered. Ethelbert Stauffer in "Christ and the Caesars" remarked that special coins (the communications media of the times) were issued to celebrate the occasion and holy incense was distributed to the people to be used for purification from sin. "The symbolic meaning is clear," said the author. "A new day is dawning in the world. The divine saviour-king, born in the historic hour ordained by the stars, has come to power on land and sea, and inaugurates the cosmic era of salvation. Salvation is to be found in none other than Augustus, and there is no other name given to man in which they can be saved. This is the climax of the Advent proclamation of the Roman empire."

It was because Augustus was "deified by government" that Christians were persecuted. Not because they were bad citizens, but because they refused to worship Caesar as god and saviour. Tertulian, an early Church leader, wrote to the Emperor, pointing out that Christians were Rome's best citizens, its most honored citizens, its best soldiers, its most law-abiding people, and its best tax-payers. But all this meant little to a Roman government whose state religion demanded that its emperor be recognized as saviour-king. This made Christians criminals in the eyes of Roman law. So they were tortured, fed to wild animals for the people's entertainment, burned, crucified, beheaded. For the war between Christ and the Caesars was a religious warfare, "a struggle between two claimants who represented rival religions and wanted to order society in terms of their faith," wrote Rev. R.J.Rushdoony in "Christianity and the State." The Roman government was a religious institution; its laws and morals were derived from its faith. Christianity presented an opposing set of laws and morals that had been established, not by man, but by the Word of God. This particular war did not subside until a truce was declared by the Emperor Constantine, who moved his capital from Rome to Byzantium, which he renamed Constantinople, later to be renamed Istanbul.

Two milliniums later, in this century, there have been and are being two repeat, but reversed, incidences involving the persecution of Christians; one in the past, one in the present time. The original Russian Empire and the countries behind the now totaled Iron Curtain and the Fallen Wall of Berlin had their own national governments whose laws and morals were based upon their provincial or national interpretation of the Word of God. Communism presented a diametrically opposed kind of religion; a religion based on Marx's interpretation of Hegel's pronouncement that "The State is God, and its prophets are Lenin, Stalin, Gorbachev and those ruling briefly in between. When the International Bankers financed the Communist conquest of Russia, millions of Christians were murdered, not because they were bad citizens or slaves, but because they worshipped a true God whose laws and moral code were in opposition to the Communist creed. Recently, because the time is ripe for the Merging of Nations, and because the enslaved Nations must present a better face to the world, there has been the granting of certain freedoms to some of the people; to the Poles, then the Hungarians, the East Germans, and soon the Czechoslovakians. But weapons manufacture continues, supplies to Nicaragua continue, people still need food and soap and the necessities of normal life. The persecution of Christians in the Roman Empire was ended by Constantine. Somehow, we can't see Gorbachev in the same light.

With the persecution of Christians and anti-Communists having slackened in Eastern Europe (for geopolitical purposes, geopolitics favorable to powers other than the powers of the established governments involved), the persecution of Christians has now shifted to the United States. There is a reason for this. It is a part of the program of the New Age Movement, the New World Order, and the One World Government goal. When the United States became a Nation, its laws, customs and morals were established on a Christian foundation. And any country whose government is based on a Christian law foundation must be changed. To make the "Merger" possible, "The state has progressively disestablished Christianity as its law foundation and, while professing neutrality, has in fact established humanism as the religion of the state," declared Rev. Rushdoony. "When the religion of a people changes, its laws inevitably reflect that change and conform themselves to the new faith and the new morality." Thus, for example, the murder of babies becomes legal, while anti-abortionist activity becomes criminal activity. "There has been deception on the part of the courts ... they have substituted one religion for another, humanism for Christianity ... as a result in most countries today, and no less the United States, humanism is the established religion of the state and is progressively the source of legal revisionism. Humanism is also the established religion of schools and most churches, and most of society." This is evidenced by the recent conflict concerning abortion. Given the power to at least restrict public payment for murder, four states have

THE FIRST THANKSGIVING PROCLAMATION

By President George Washington, October 3, 1789

WHEREAS it is the duty of all nations to acknowledge the providence of Almighty God, to obey His will, to be grateful for His benefits, and humbly implore His protection and favor, and

WHEREAS both Houses of Congress have by their joint committee requested me to recommend to the people of the United States a day of public thanksgiving and prayer, to be observed by acknowledging with grateful hearts the many signal favors of Almighty God, especially a form of government for their safety and happiness.

NOW, THEREFORE, I do recommend and assign Thursday, the 26th day of November next to be devoted by the people of these States to the service of that great and glorious Being Who is the beneficent Author of all the good that was, or that will be ... that we may then all unite in rendering unto Him our sincere and humble thanks for His kind care and protection of the people of this country previous to their becoming a nation ... And also that we may then unite in most humbly offering our prayers and supplications to the great Lord and Ruler of Nations, and beseech Him to pardon our national and other transgressions ... to render our National Government a blessing to all the people by constantly being a government of wise, just and constitutional laws, discreetly and faithfully executed and obeyed ... [and] to promote the knowledge and practice of true religion and virtue, and the increase of science among us ... Given under my hand at the City of New York the third day of October in the year of our Lord 1789.

moved to permit, and even promote, the murder of innocents, and at taxpayer expense. "Christian protesters against this carnage," writes Don McAlvany, "can now be jailed and fined more severely than drug dealers, murderers, rapists, extortionists, and burglars. That is our American liberal/left legal system in action. Thousands of anti-abortion protesters are being jailed and fined by liberal judges across America. Many are receiving very rough and abusive treatment by local law enforcement officials."

And it's all quite legal, because a Christian law foundation has been replaced by a humanist foundation built on a hill of sinking sand. One evidence of this was the action of the American Bar Association in what amounted to a declaration of war against Christianity. J. Shelby Sharpe practices law in Ft. Worth, TX. He wrote an article which was published by the Plymouth Rock Foundation, Marlborough, NH 03455. "Christianity in America is increasingly under attack by civil government regulation and litigation," he wrote. "Recently, private litigants have begun to bring suits against the church and Christian ministries. All signs point toward a rapid escalation of these attacks on both fronts in the very near future." He referred to a seminar conducted May 4 and 5, 1989, in San Francisco, sponsored by the American Bar Association. "At the top of the ABA brochure advertising the seminar was the very distressing statement that the seminar was for 'Attorneys who want to be on the leading edge of an explosive new area of law.' Christianity was placed on notice that there is a 'new area of law' coming against it, and it is 'explosive.' The new weapon is the tort suit, and it was described by several of the speakers as a nuclear weapon. Shockingly, it is not the American Civil Liberties Union that is taking the lead in training the trial lawyers of America to fire this new weapon at religious organizations and individuals within those organizations - it is the American Bar Association, the most prestigious legal organization in the United States."

Mr. Sharpe (op. cit.) attended this ABA seminar, wrote that "The opening subject area was entitled 'Expanding Use of Tort Law Against Religions.' This set the tone for the entire seminar. The first speaker under this topic was a trial lawyer who addressed 'Tort Law as an Ideological Weapon.' He was followed by another trial lawyer who spoke on 'Tort Law as Essential Restraint on Religious Abuses.' The whole thrust of these presentations was how tort law was and would be used against religious organizations and individuals. War has been declared, and Christianity is in a fight to the death."

By definition, tort is "a wrongful act, injury, or damage (not involving a breach of contract) for which a civil action can be brought." In this brief report, it is impossible to explain how liberal, communistic, atheistic and humanistic trial lawyers will use this "nuclear weapon" the ABA has taught them. If desiring complete details, we suggest you write to The Plymouth Rock Foundation, Fisk Mill, Water Street, Marlborough NH 03455, and ask for a copy of Mr. Sharpe's complete report. Say you read about it in Don Bell Reports, and a contribution would be helpful in spreading the Word while this is still possible.

Briefly, ABA's explanation of "Tort Liability for Brainwashing, Coercive Persuasion or Mind Control" is the most dangerous and sinister threat to God's people, because it goes to the heart of orthodox Christianity. Example: If a sinner hears, even voluntarily, a sermon or is counseled by a Christian and is converted, that can be treated as "brainwashing, coercive persuasion, or mind control." In fact, the California Supreme Court in such a case declared that "There is a compelling state interest in preventing its citizens from unknowingly being subjected by religious organizations to coercive persuasion, brainwashing, or mind control." The court defined what we might call soul-saving activity as "a forcible indoctrination to induce someone to give up basic political, society (sic) or religious beliefs and attitudes and to accept contrasting regimented ideas." In short, a person could be sued for preaching to or counseling a person, influencing that person to become a Christian. There's much more to this dangerous "nuclear bomb" adaptation of Tort Law, but this alone should show you why Mr. Sharpe says "War has been declared, and Christianity is in a fight to the death."

But there's more to come. On October 10, 1989, the US Supreme Court ruled that a federal anti-racketeering law (RICO - Racketeering Influenced and Corrupt Practices Act), originally passed to help the government fight against organized crime, can now be used against anti-abortion protestors. 26 Philadelphia anti-abortion protestors were arrested and convicted under RICO and fined $108,000. "So now," comments Don McAlvany (op. cit.) "an unholy alliance of abortion clinics and liberal judges have combined to label anti-abortion demonstrators as criminal racketeers, Similar RICO lawsuits have been filed against pro-life activists by abortionists in Pittsburgh, Chicago, and Brookline, MA. Molly Yard of the National Organization for Women (NOW), responding to the RICO rulings, said: 'Militant anti-abortion protestors are in the same league with gangsters and racketeers, so 'we' shall treat them that way'."

Shortly before ABA held its Tort Seminar, its officials had been meeting with their "opposite numbers" in the Soviet, government-controlled lawyers organization.. Scanty reports indicate that they "agreed to study law together." "Merging" of Nations is the goal of the Insiders, and in many ways the United States has been taking giant steps toward a Soviet-type legal system; one that is designed to stifle all religious and political opposition. In America at present tort law is supposed to be civil. But there is this trend (RICO) toward making civil violations the same as criminal violations, subject to the same punishment. So, the religious activities we still enjoy, and which we take for granted, could become illegal and subject to severe criminal penalties (as has already occurred in Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Chicago and Brookline). This could be the beginning of even more severe punishment of Christians and of driving the True Church underground, as in Rome when Christians worshipped in the Catacombs, or as in the USSR and Red China where True Christians still must meet secretly in private homes.

It should be noted that no new laws need be passed to implement this ABA "nuclear bomb" that is to be used against Christian individuals and organizations. There is an army of lawyers and judges waiting to go on the attack against Christianity via litigation and the ABA sponsored interpretation and rulings on laws that already exist. In other words, this War against Christianity is not something in the future. It already exists.

Hosea wrote (4:6): "My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge." David answered (Psalm 18:3): "I will call upon the Lord, who is worthy to be praised: so shall I be saved from mine enemies."

THE SECOND YALTA

We're not sure who said this first, but the remark is timely: "For those with eyes to see, coincidences are clad in shining light." The light was shining brightly in our mind's eye as we read what White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater told reporters when he was asked to explain the significance of the one-on-one summit that was to be held by Presidents Bush and Gorbachev in ships of their respective navies, offshore of Malta in the Mediterranean. Fitzwater said, "We do not intend to have this emerge as a second Yalta. And we do not intend to engage in the kind of decision-making that could lead you to that conclusion. There are a number of issues that relate to the future of Eastern Europe that can and will be discussed, but it's not Yalta." (Emphasis added). In view of his direct reference to Eastern Europe, We fear that Fitzwater contradicted himself in that statement; because Yalta dealt very much with Eastern Europe, and so does the present "Yalta." And those with eyes to see should certainly see the coincidence.

In February, 1945, President Franklin Delano Roosevelt was aboard a ship offshore of Malta in the Mediterranean. He was preparing himself, as best he could considering his poor health, to go to Yalta. There he and Josef Stalin, with Winston Churchill present and witnessing, would split Germany in two and arrange for other geopolitical divisions and unusual unions of peoples in Eastern Europe and Northwestern Asia. And now, coincidentally, in December, 1989, nearly 44 years later, Presidents Bush and Gorbachev are aboard ships of their respective navies, offshore of Malta in the Mediterranean. They are there to discuss the fate of millions of people; not necessarily the dividing or uniting peoples or nations, but rather to join them in what President George Bush might call "Global Democracy," and what Mikhail Gorbachev well might call a "Human Socialist Regional World Government," joining the Nations of Eastern Europe with those of Western Europe, all of them having surrendered their sovereignty and become administrative departments in a Socialist World Government. But let's recall what happened as a result of that first Yalta Summit 44 years ago.

On January 20, 1945, Franklin Delano Roosevelt was sworn in as President of the United States for the fourth time. He was ill, terminally ill with cancer according to some doctors. But his personal physician, Admiral Ross McIntyre, denied this, insisted that he was in the best of health, well able to conduct affairs of state. So the Insiders who were pleased with his administrations in the first three terms, had him propped up, got him re-elected for a fourth term. President Roosevelt was anxious to continue as president for personal reasons. Frazier Hunt, in his book The Untold Story of Douglas MacArthur stated that the reason his physician and Insider friends lied about his health was that Roosevelt wanted to be president when the war was ended; because he had been offered the presidency of the World Government that was to be created via the United Nations at the end of the war. His timing was wrong in all respects. But, wrote Frazier Hunt, "The sick and undependable Roosevelt, his already handicapped mind inflamed with grandiose ideas of a World State that he would head, obviously was in no shape to bargain with the calculating Stalin, who knew exactly what he wanted." Also, FDR had boasted to his associates that "Some of my best friends are Communists." And he was anxious to please Stalin. So, he arrived in Yalta on February 3, 1945, stayed over a couple of days after Churchill had gone home, for personal talks with Stalin. He left Yalta on February 12, was back in Warm Springs, Georgia where he died on April 12, 1945; just two months after he had left Yalta.

Ralph Epperson in his book The Unseen Hand quotes American Ambassador William Bullit, who was told by President Roosevelt, "I just have a hunch that Stalin ... doesn't want anything but security for his country, and I think that by giving him everything I possibly can, and ask nothing in return, he won't try to annex anything and will work for a world of democracy and peace." After reading the document signed by Stalin, Roosevelt and Churchill at Yalta, Bullit remarked: "No more unnecessary, disgraceful and potentially dangerous document has ever been signed by a president of the United States." Felix Wittmer in his The Yalta Betrayal pointed out that Roosevelt was surrounded by men who agreed with him in that Stalin should be given anything he asked for. Roosevelt's chief adviser, Harry Hopkins, was even more emphatic. He said, "It is ridiculous to think of Stalin as a Communist. He is a Russian nationalist." Besides Hopkins, Wittmer mentions other friends of the Kremlin who were referred to as traitors: Dean Acheson, Lauchlin Curry, Alger Hiss, Philip Jessup, General George Marshall, Vice President Henry Wallace, Harry Dexter White, Eleanor Roosevelt, and others who helped shape American foreign policy during and immediately after the end of World War Two. All of them thought Yalta was a great success. Indeed it was, for the Soviet Union. Here are some of the results of the Yalta Betrayal:

Germany was smashed, half of it given to the Soviets. Estonia, Latvia, Lithuania, Poland, Czechoslovakia, Bulgaria, Yugoslavia, and Albania all came under Communist rule. On the Pacific side Port Arthur, the port of Dairan, the Kurile Islands, Outer Mongolia and the lower half of Sakhalin Island were taken from their previous owners, China and Japan, and given to the Soviet Union. The USSR was given three votes in the United Nations General Assembly; one vote each for ByloRussia, the Ukraine, and Russia. All other countries, including the United States, have but one vote.

Call this a footnote. Prince Michel Sturdza, former foreign minister of Rumania, spent years (with his princess wife) as a prisoner of the Soviets. Finally released, he continued his battle against the Communists who made his country what it is today. When we dined with them, courtesy of the late Countess Guardabassi, he autographed and gave us a copy of his book The Suicide of Europe. In its introduction something is written which our present appeasers, forgivers, and helpers of the Communists should read and contemplate:

"The war ended ... with only Soviet Russia victorious. Those military or civilian leaders who had opposed Communism for so long were executed, imprisoned, or forced into exile. But these memoirs provide a stern lesson for those who today believe that they can reach an accomodation with the Communists ... For the 'liberals,' the appeasers, and the non-Communists who had opposed the war against the Soviet Union, had sabotaged the war effort, and had betrayed their own country into Communist hands, were among the first to be victimized by the beast. They too were executed, imprisoned, or forced into exile - not with the knowledge that they had fought to the end against their nation's implacable enemy, but with the indelible stain of having helped in the defeat of their own motherland." The word Communism is slowly fading out of the news, being replaced by the words Socialism, or Democracy. But those who think that Communism is ended, even when Gorbachev denies it, should remember that the first to go would be the appeasers and those without "eyes to see (when) coincidences are clad in shining light."

It was Gorbachev himself who explained in no uncertain terms just what this supposed "death of Communism" is all about. Under the heading "Gorbachev Backs 'Human' Socialism," the Associated Press sent the following dispatch, which appeared in most newspapers on Monday, November 27. We quote:

"Mikhail Gorbachev displayed solid support Sunday for reform in Eastern Europe by endorsing socialism with a 'human face' - the slogan used by the Czechoslovak progressives toppled by a Soviet-led invasion in 1968. With the East bloc in upheaval, the Soviet Communist Party daily Pravda published a 2½-page compilation of Gorbachev's thoughts on the future of socialism. 'The new face of socialism is its human face: this fully corresponds to the thought of (Karl) Marx,' Gorbachev said. 'Because its creation is the chief goal of restructuring, we can with full justification say we are building humanitarian socialism'."

Human Socialism is still Communism, but with a "kinder, gentler" face (remember those words)? But Gary North gave it the same name we have given it in previous Reports. In Remnant Review (11/17/89), he wrote: "Fascism is still alive and flourishing ... vocal elements in East Germany ... like the leaders of Solidarity, are socialists. The difference is they are not international socialists (Communists). They are national socialists. Fifty years ago they would have been regarded as fascists (emphasis added)." Gary might well have added that our own Welfare State Corporate Socialism is also Fascism, which is the Merger of Capitalism and Communism. Jane H. Ingraham, in the lead article in The New American (12/4/89), came very close to telling the whole truth: "... An unprecedented, in-depth assault to drastically alter the public's perception of the Soviet bloc and our relationship to it is in full swing. A new world view, profoundly fraudulent, is being advanced by powerful Insiders in order to set the stage for public acceptance of a one-world superpower with themselves as the ruling class.... Long in the making, the power grab is now moving rapidly under George Bush ... Bush and Mikhail Gorbachev are working together to present the illusion of a sea change in communism ... But it is Bush who is calling the shots. What we are witnessing is the final act to 'comfortably merge' East and West.... The wonder of it all is that we, the free people of this great nation, witnessing the horrifying actions of our own elected officials, can sit idly by, comforting ourselves with the thought that somehow, some way, we will be exempt."

That first Yalta Summit was one of the first acts in the Conspirators' plan "to so alter life in Eastern Europe that they can be comfortably merged with the West!!" Altering life in the United States was but one part of the overall plan. Life everywhere had to be altered if nation-states were to be comfortably merged into a One World Government. In these United States, a "kinder, gentler" kind of Socialism could be used: Fabianism and Secular Humanism in the schools, churches, legislatures, courts, and communications media. But it couldn't be done in one generation. The Illuminati and the French Jacobins found that out. People regarding The Decalogue as The Law, fulfilled by Christ and echoed by Declaration and Constitution, had to pass away. Children free of the "taint of Christian ideals" had to be trained and conditioned for service in the New World Order. It took three generations, say from 1917 to 1989, and two world wars, to condition Americans for the merging, and even now there is a moral minority who will reject. In the Eastern countries Fabianism would never have altered life sufficiently for the merging. Extreme brutality, mass murder, execution, forced labor unto death in Gulags (which still exist under kinder, gentler socialism), and the wiping out of Christianity had to be employed. So, there was Operation Keelhaul. Some six million Russians, 700,000 of them soldiers under the command of Lt. Gen. Andrei Vlasov, the rest civilian men, women and children, tried to surrender themselves as prisoners of war, many hoping to live to fight against the Communist beast that had taken over their homeland. But they were all rejected, by order of Dwight Eisenhower and his superiors, were returned to Russia where those who didn't commit suicide on the way, were executed or sent to gulag prisons. Just recently there was a belated Polish funeral ceremony at Katyn, where the Communists had murdered 15,000 Polish officers. They could not be altered to comfortably conform. So too were a reported ten millions who wouldn't fit in the Plan. Winston Churchill in his Memoirs wrote: "'Ten Millions,' he (Stalin) said, holding up his hands. 'It was fearful. Four years it lasted.'... 'These (I said) were what you call Kulaks?' 'Yes,' he said, but he did not repeat the word. 'Oh, well,' the "great bulk were very unpopular and were wiped out by their labourers.'... I record as they come back to me these memories, and the strong impression I sustained at the moment of millions of men and women being blotted out or displaced forever."

The murder of more millions, especially of Christians, is recorded. The murderers may not have known it, but their work was designed to so alter the lives of those still living in the Eastern Nations that they could comfortably be merged with the West when the time was come. At Yalta in 1945, Roosevelt went determined to give Stalin anything he asked for. Since then, with a few apparent refusals to hide the final plan, the Soviet Union has continued to take anything it wanted; until one-third of the world is under Communist control. Now the Conspirators have determined that the time has come for merging. Therefore, a second "Yalta" has been arranged so the two Principals can agree on details. Thus, the apparent death of Communism is arranged, "Human Socialism" replacing it, but still within the rules written by Marx and Lenin, and with a Soviet Army ready to spring into action if any satellite should dare to go too far too fast. Meanwhile, massive economic aid, loans, corporate deals are being accomplished, most favored nation in trade, membership in IMF, initial merging with the nations of Europe that are themselves being merged in 1992. "And the wonder of it all is that we ... witnessing the horrifying actions of our elected officials, can sit idly by, comforting ourselves with the thought that somehow, some way, we will be exempt."

We sought a Scripture which fitted the situation. We were reminded of the Third Temptation of our Lord and Saviour as recorded in Matthew, Chapter 4, verses 8,9 and 10:

"The devil taketh him up into an exceeding high mountain, and sheweth him all the kingdoms of the world, and the glory of them; And saith unto him, All these things will I give thee, if thou wilt fall down and worship me. Then saith Jesus unto him, Get thee hence, Satan: for it is written, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve."

THE PRECEDENT

"Super Partners" Newsweek called them, portrayed their smiling faces on its 12/11/89 cover under the sub-heading, "An Ambitious Game Plan for a New Era." "Game Plan for A New World Order" would have been more accurate wording. According to The New York Times of 12/4/89, Super Partner Gorbachev told the world he and his partner agreed that "The characteristics of the cold war should be abandoned. The arms race, mistrust, psychological and ideological struggle, all those should be a thing of the past." And Super Partner Bush responded: "With reform under way in the Soviet Union, we stand at the threshold of a brand-new era of US-Soviet relations. It is within our grasp to contribute each in our own way to overcoming the division of Europe and ending the military confrontation there." More detailed reports indicate that the United States will do all the contributing and the Soviet Union will do all the receiving. Newsweek indicated as much in its teaser paragraph: "Winds howled, waves crashed, decks swayed. But aboard the Maxim Gorky, George Bush and Mikhail Gorbachev laid out an ambitious game plan for the post-cold-war era: speedy progress on arms control, enhanced Soviet trade opportunities with the West - and a Washington Summit next June." A boxed-in item at the bottom of NYT's lead story added something of importance: "President Bush has moved to encourage the Soviet Union's Integration into the Global Economy....Soviet officials said Mikhail S. Gorbachev had achieved his major goal at the summit meeting: "A turn away from economic cold war." (Emphasis added).

Consider carefully those underlined phrases and you'll understand what this Malta Summit was really all about: More aid to the Soviet Union, acceptance of Russia as a most favored nation trading partner, and another step along the road to the completed, and merged New World Order. Note that even more emphasis is added when we consider a delayed article released by the New York Times News Service on 12/10/89, datelined Beijing: "National Security advisor Grant Scowcroft made a surprising visit to Beijing Saturday and said he had come as an emissary of President Bush "to bring new impetus and vigor" to US-Chinese relations." The Miami Herald added: "Scowcroft was accompanied by deputy secretary of state Lawrence Eagleberger....Scowcroft and Eagleberger are friends and former colleagues of Henry Kissinger, who, as President Nixon's national security advisor and secretary of state, led the way to normal relations with China and who is warmly regarded here." Restoring normal relations with Red China (with hopes it will soon become Pink) also forms an important part in completing the construction of The New World Order. Note, too, that Scowcroft also was with Bush at Malta, and was instrumental in providing US Air support for Corazon Aquino when her government was about to fall at the hands of rebelling Filipino soldiers. If the truth were told, thanks to buddies Scowcroft and Eagleberger, Henry Kissinger is once again directing American foreign policy in behalf of the Elitist Insiders.

About a month ago the Cox News Service sent seven editors, reporters and photographers to the Soviet empire. Taking advantage of glasnost, they visited Armenia, the Ukraine, the three Baltic Soviet Socialist Republics and Moldavia. Their report in a nutshell: "An Empire is fraying around the edges and all of the Soviet republics long for Independence Day." Their lead story, datelined Moscow, began: "Why has the Communist Bear taken his claws out of Eastern Europe? The answer is simple. The bear cannot feed its own cubs. Rocked by a crippled economy and bitter nationalistic conflicts in all 15 Soviet Republics, experts say Mikhail Gorbachev can ill afford the time and energy to keep East Europe from falling out of the Kremlin orbit." We beg to disagree. Gorbachev has found a way in which he can keep the bear cubs within the Kremlin's control while letting others feed and nourish them. In his book Perestroika, Gorbachev wrote:

"To put an end to all the rumours and speculation that abound in the West about this, I would like to point out once again that we are conducting our reforms in accordance with the socialist choice. We are looking within socialism, rather than outside it, for the answers to questions that arise. We assess our successes and errors alike by socialist standards. Those who hope that we shall move away from the socialist path will be greatly disappointed." (All underlining added for emphasis).

Referring to his book The Grand Failure (of communism) in light of what is now happening in Eastern Europe, Zbigniew Brzezinski perhaps inadvertently gave a solid clue as to what Gorbachev's Game Plan seems to be. He said: "The real issue is whether Soviet communism is evolving into a significantly more permissive and innovative system or whether it is decaying or even fragmenting... Perestroika depends on decentralizing the state-owned economy and, as Gorbachev has realized, to do that he has to decentralize the political system as well... To be successful economically, perestroika must involve the restructuring of the Soviet 'Union' into a genuine confederation, thereby ending Muscovite rule. That is tantamount to the dissolution of the empire." Save for his statement concerning Muscovite rule, Brzezinski is probably correct. Gorbachev is dissolving, or permitting the dissolution of the Soviet Empire, and "restructuring" in its place a Socialist Commonwealth of Nations, seemingly independent but yet under the control of the Kremlin's army and its KGB. This Socialist Commonwealth of Nations will, hopefully (in Gorby's eyes) merge with the now merging 12 nations of Europe; and with the hope of also merging the United States into this Socialist Democratic World Government! With Gorbachev or his successors in charge, of course.

This Game Plan of Gorbachev's, as we envision it, was not suggested by Karl Marx, or included in the writings of Vladimir Ilyich Lenin; but was the actual and successful (to a point) creation of those who founded the British Round Table, parent of the Royal Institute of International Affairs (Chatham House), and its American affiliate, the Council on Foreign Relations. A thumbnail sketch seems important if we are to understand our present peril.

Before the Elitists financed the Bolshevik destruction of the Russian Empire, there existed another and far greater British Empire; one so vast that the sun never set on its flag. Around the turn of the century, beginning in about 1887, a group of men inspired by Oxford professor John Ruskin, and financed by Cecil Rhodes, Abe Bailey, Lord Rothschild, Alfred Beit and other Financial Elitists, decided that rulership over the whole world was "the white man's burden." To gain untold wealth for their dream of conquering the world for the world's benefit, they began exploiting and monopolizing the gold fields and diamond mines of South Africa. In Carroll Quigley's Tragedy and Hope, page 144, we read: "As soon as South Africa was united in 1910, the Kindergarten returned to London to try to federate the whole empire... They were in a hurry to achieve this before the war with Germany [WWI]... They founded The Round Table, met in formal conclaves presided over by Milner to decide the fate of the empire... New recruits ... were sent around the world to organize Round Table Groups in the chief British dependencies [as well as in the United States-Ed.]. For several years (1910-1916) the Round Table groups worked desperately trying to find an acceptable formula for federating the empire... This involved changing the name 'British Empire' to 'Commonwealth of Nations, [and] working to bring the United States more closely into this same orientation, and seeking to solidify the intangible links of sentiment by propaganda among financial, educational, and political leaders in each country." (End of quotation).

The changing of the British Empire into a more economical and politically feasible Commonwealth of Nations was not an easy task. The struggle continued until, on 6/9/19 Lord Milner issued an official statement which said: "The United Kingdom and the Dominions are partner nations; not yet indeed of equal power, but for good and all of equal status....The only possibility of a continuance of the British Empire is on a basis of absolute out-and-out equal partnership between the United Kingdom and the Domin-

REPEAL THE FED

(Excerpts from a "letter to an editor")

In the middle of the Civil War (1863) the National Banking Act was passed which began control of the monetary system. Then the Elite took control of the government, the states and the people. Thus, the 14th Amendment. The greatest evil of the 14th Amendment was making the government a central government. The United States has not been under a Constitutional Government since 1868. Note Sec. 1 of the 14th Amendment and Article 6, Sec. 2 of the Constitution as applied today.

The Congress did not have at the time the power to tax income from whatever source derived. To overcome this problem the Elite planned the 16th Amendment to accomplish two things: 1. The 14th Amendment repealed a part of Article 1, Sec. 2, Par. 3 and the 16th Amendment repealed an additional part. 2. The 16th Amendment repealed Article 1, Sec. 9, Par. 4. This provided the basis for a blank check to tax and lay taxes on income from whatever source derived. It also provided the basis of a graduated income tax both by the government and the states. The real intent and purpose of the 16th Amendment and the Income Tax was to guarantee the payment of the principle and interest of the securities of the United States and further control the people.

Many exceptions have been made to the 16th Amendment and the Income Tax; however, the Government and the States are still collecting the tax voluntary or involuntary from whatever source derived (dead or alive).

The 17th Amendment really barred the door! The Elite at this time had a problem as to the Senate having to deal with the 48 States. To solve this problem the Senate had to be elected by popular vote. The crux of the Senate was not suffrage (as per the 5th Amendment) as the State Senators still have two votes in the Senate. Then the States lost control and representation of the Senate by popular election, instead of appointment or chosen by the legislatures. Note Article 1, Sec. 3, Par. 4.

The Federal Reserve Act of 1913 (illegal and unconstitutional) controls the government, the monetary system, the states, the economy and the people. The Elite has been rejoicing since 1913.

The people of America must realize the Only Way to get rid of a bad law or amendment is REPEAL: then direct their effort to accomplish same. We need new Faces in the Supreme Court, the Congress, and the State Legislatures, along with public officials. 1990?

Sincerely yours, American Challenge, Merritt Newby, Editor.

ions." Quigley tells us "this point of view was restated in the Balfour Declaration of 1916 and was enacted into law as the Statute of Westminster in 1931." And thus, for economic and political reasons, the British Empire became the British Commonwealth of Nations, It now is "a voluntary association of Great Britain and its dependencies, certain former British dependencies that are now sovereign states and their dependencies, and the associated states (states with full internal government but whose external relations are governed by Britain)."

So there is the precedent which must gladden Gorbachev: There was the reconstruction (perestroika) of the British Empire into a kinder and gentler sounding Commonwealth of Nations. That was more important than it may seem today. A great war was being planned "to make the world safe for democracy," and the connotations of the word Empire would sound a sour note. Now, three-quarters of a century later, the sons and successors of those original financial elitists are encouraging and financing Gorbachev's reconstruction of the Soviet Empire so it can be called a Commonwealth of Nations, however Socialistic those nations may be. So, we should expect the word Communism to slowly fade away to be replaced by Democratic Socialism or some similar kinder name. The satellite nations will have internal independence but external control by the massive Soviet and Warsaw Pact military establishments, plus the Secret Police. And while the world applauds and Bush and other Western leaders promote and assist, the gulags remain crowded, and the Soviets continue to increase their military strength. Dr. Robert Morris, a qualified intelligence expert. says the Soviets in the past four years under Gorbachev's great peace offensive, have increased their military strength 25 percent. Examples: "They produce a new nuclear submarine every seven weeks, and many missiles every year." Also, CIA Director William Webster has warned that "Although East-West tensions have eased remarkably with the revolution in the East Bloc, the Soviet Union has stepped up its spying activities against the United States and other Western Nations and is trying harder than ever to recruit US agents."

Though there is domestic turmoil with hundreds of thousands demanding release from Communism and welcoming Democratic Socialism, there is no sign that Soviet foreign policy has changed. And yet, we never learn. According to a New York Times/CBS Poll "American attitudes toward the Soviet Union are now as favorable as they were at the end of World War II, when the two countries were allies and Churchill had not yet declared the descent of the Iron Curtain." And columnist William Safire, commenting on the Malta surrender wrote: "The Bush strategy was to win world approbation by giving Mr. Gorbachev everything before he had to ask. The delighted Soviet leader thanked Mr. Bush for his support of perestroika and his press spokesman declared, 'The cold war is over'." As General John Galvin, commander of allied forces in Europe said, "Is it too much to ask the West to learn the lessons of the past and apply them to the policies of the present time and the future?"

"Wise men lay up knowledge: but the mouth of the foolish is near destruction." (Proverbs 10:14).

GREEN CROSS

"Pre-manufactured crisis and emergency are important building blocks of World Order. Those planning The New World Order speak continually of crisis - population crisis, environmental crisis, social crisis, constitutional crisis, etc. Crisis provides a splendid rationale for crisis management." So declares a group of independent research associates who published their findings in a booklet titled The Plan. Larry Abraham, editor of Insider Report, concurs and adds, "The Insiders have been creating, controlling and testing various crises for decades." President Mikhail Gorbachev added the final touch when he said, "In the past it was the nuclear threat. In the nineties it will be an environmental crisis." Despite the turmoil, revolution, death and violence that pervades in the captive nations and 15 republics of his evil empire, Gorbachev took time to address a "Global Forum of Spiritual and Parliamentary Leaders on Human Survival, a private organization trying to focus attention on environmental problems." There may have been turbulence, battles and bloodletting in other parts of the multinational Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, but in Moscow's Red Square, all was orderly as somewhere between 700 and a thousand scientists, educationists, religious leaders and environmentalists from an estimated 83 nations met to launch Gorby's Environmental Crisis of the Nineties. As we watched and listened to the public television presentation of the event, Journalist Olen Smith told us that "In the Stone Flower of Red Square in this beautiful city of nearly several million people, where a thousand people have come from all over the world to hear the heartbeat of the earth....This is an earth alert."

Gorbachev told the visiting delegates that "We are a world, and as a world we have an ecological imperative. We are approaching a point of no return in the environment. We are a human society and we are rational, and we will not let an ecological disaster happen. There is an environmental consciousness that now pervades Europe. In the past it was the nuclear threat. In the nineties it will be an environmental crisis." At the end of his talk, Gorby said it seemed necessary to have "an international disaster key." He suggested a Green Cross, to be worn as a symbol by all who are in the fight to save Mother Earth.

One of the first scheduled speakers at the conference which began on January 14th was Carl Sagan, professor of astronomy, who said the environmentalist crusade should be considered a religious crusade. Obviously a pantheist, he told the delegates, "Efforts to cherish and safeguard the environment need to be infused with a vision of the sacred....Problems of such magnitude, and solutions demanding so broad a perspective, must be recognized from the outset as having a religious as well as a scientific dimension." The Rev. James Parks Morton, Dean of the Episcopal Cathedral of St. John in New York, an organizer of the Moscow conference, agreed and said that scientist and religious leaders (of a variety of religions) would meet to discuss "practical next steps."

We do not mean to imply that Gorbachev founded or initiated the environmental crisis at this particular parliamentary conference in Moscow. The Insiders and the Communist hierarchy began developing this crisis more than two years ago. On January 14th Gorbachev merely gave the crisis his blessing, made it an official Communist crusade, and proposed a symbol, a Green Cross; suggesting, we presume, the "Crucifixion of Mother Earth." As we wrote in our DBR of 9/8/89, titled Triple Threat, and we quote: "...Regardless of all other attempts and plans, including military conquest, if The New World Order and its World Government are to succeed with the necessary approval of the people of the world, there had to be created a great cause of global dimensions; a cause great enough to overshadow all racial, cultural, ethnic, religious, economic and monetary differences. There had to be created what Dr. Maduro has called 'A religious revival to protect Mother Earth.' There had to be problems that could be expanded to crisis proportions, problems that Nations as Nations supposedly couldn't resolve; problems that involved the protection, not of the United States or of Mother Russia, but of Mother Earth. Therefore, the architects found or created three major dangers, not to any Nation or Nations in particular, but to Mother Earth, which is 'the Planet that is the homeland of us all, regardless of race, creed, or national origin'. We identified these three threats upon which the Global Environmental Crisis is based as The Greenhouse Effect, the Ozone Hole, and Toxic Pollution."

We haven't seen the book but we are informed that David Horowitz and Peter Collier co-authored The Destructive Generation. In it is the statement: "The message has now gone out to all leftists: 'Substitute green for red. That is, push environmentalism rather than socialism as the new priority.'" The media obeyed. Time Magazine in December, 1988, nominated Earth as the Planet of the year. Fortune magazine declared 1988 as "The year the earth spoke back." Then Gorbachev made a speech before the UN in which he said, "Let us also think about setting up within the framework of the United Nations a center for emergency environmental assistance." Then in March, 1988, a summit at the Hague (World Court) featured 24 Nations calling for a new "supranational agency within the framework of the United Nations" that would be able to act on majority vote (no veto power by the five great Nations as in the Security Council) that would have the power to "impose mandatory economic sanctions recommended by the International Court of Justice on goods produced under conditions with negative impact on the atmosphere." Such a verdict would be final. Soon after that, the USSR agreed to accept the binding jurisdiction of the World Court in disputes over international agreements. This was followed by the US State Department which also agreed to accept World Court jurisdiction under "a large number of international treaties." (Quoted from the New York Times, 8/5/89).

While all this was going on at the World Court level, the "Greenies" were organizing and gaining political influence in Europe. In 1989 the Ecologists Party (Greens) won over 1,800 city council seats across France. Similar Green Parties virtually dominated the domestic political scene in West Germany and Sweden. More than two million voters opted for the Green Party in one of the '89 elections in Great Britain. Many of the voters admitted that they didn't know what the Green Party stood for. According to the London Daily Telegraph of 7/12/89, the Green (Environmental) Party endorsed the dissolution of NATO, the support for immediate and unconditional nuclear disarmament, the abolishment of private banking, the establishment of government control over the amount of goods people can buy, the imposition of heavy expense for air and road travel, the revamping of educational curriculum for replacement with 'education for life', the promotion of homosexual rights, the support of feminist issues." According to The Christian World Report of 12/89, a letter to the editor by Leslie Garner in the London Daily Telegraph of 7/12/89 said: "When people read the small print of what it means to be Green, it is clear that the greening of the planet makes the same high demands on personal behavior as any other religion. New Age thinking demands that we transform ourselves before we can transform the planet." (We quote this because it explains what Carl Sagan meant when he said environmentalism must be "infused with the sacred," and why Gorbachev would suggest a Green Cross as a fitting symbol for the environmentalist crusade. In the New World Order there are to be a One World Government, One World Currency issued by a One World Bank, and a One World Religion).

Lest we lose our perspective, let us remember that this ecological crisis of the nineties is but one part of the overall PLAN. Zbig Brzezinski, in the winter issue of the CFR quarterly, Foreign Affairs, indicated that this crisis is designed as a cover for the grand merger of East and West, of the Warsaw Pact Nations and the Nations of Europe. He writes: "The Council of Europe and the European Community could also make an important contribution by offering to assist in the creation of a central European program for ecological salvation." This is where the Greens of West Europe (often called the Watermelon Gang because its members are green outside but red inside) would serve as "useful idiots" as did the Peaceniks of Europe when the nuclear crisis was paramount. Important to remember; The environment crisis is a cover for the grand merger.

For the past five months headlines have been telling us of the collapse of the Soviet Empire. And people have justifiably thrilled at the apparent overthrow of dictatorial governments and the end of Communist control in the captive nations and the 15 republics that make up the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics. But if we read on beneath the headlines into the finer print, we discover that all these changes are merely cosmetic, planned for a purpose. Or rather, two purposes: To gain money for survival, and to accomplish the grand merger. Communism is not dead, it is merely changing its name where such a change seems necessary. Lech Walesa of Poland who thrilled our Congress, said Solidarity is not an anti-socialist force. He also said, "Let power remain in the hands of the Communists." And there they remain. He appealed to a cheering Congress for a Marshall Plan for East Europe and called for economic unification of all Europe. Hungary's Communist Party became Hungary's Socialist Workers Party, and Gorbachev sent congratulations. East Germany's new government is headed by Hans Modrow, a Communist turned Socialist. When Latvia suggested secession Gorbachev said no, and it seems that was the end of it. When Muslim Azerbaijanis got out of hand and started murdering Christian armenians, Gorbachev gave the traditional answer: he sent tanks and told the troops to shoot to kill. We repeat, the changes are cosmetic, necessary to gain money from the West for survival, and to merge Europe "from the Urals to the Atlantic." We should remember that in his book Perestroika, Gorbachev wrote: We are not going to change Soviet power, of course, or abandon its fundamental principles, but we acknowledge the need for changes that will strengthen socialism and make it more dynamic and politically meaningful."

But a more apparent proof that there is no change of Soviet power can be seen in the Soviet's relations with other Nations, and in our relations with the Soviet. Example: While US scientists, educationists, religionists, ecologists, environmentalists and astrologists were communing (communitizing?) in Moscow with their thousand counterparts from 83 countries, Gen. Colin Powell, Chairman of the US Joint Chief of Staff and his associated Staffmen were meeting in Vienna with Gen. Mikhail Moiseyev, chief of the Soviet military. The New York Times reported: "It had neither the drama of the crumbling of the Berlin Wall nor the setting of the maritime summit meeting in Malta. But the cloakroom of the Hofburg Palace this week may well merit a place among images that chart the waning of the Cold War. While the generals, admirals, and air marshalls who run NATO and the Warsaw Pact discussed military affairs in a nearby hall, their hats, heavy in gold braid and authority, were piled on top of each other in what only months ago would have seemed indecent intimacy...If negotiations under way here ... are completed on schedule. the Hofburg Palace may be the site of a still more important meeting this year. Washington is thinking of a summit meeting of the 16 NATO and the seven Warsaw Pact nations."

Item. "Paris, (1/13/90). Senior officials from leading industrial nations and Eastern Europe are to meet here on Monday (1/15/90) to plan the establishment of an Eastern European development bank. Representatives from 34 nations are expected to put at least $10 billion into the bank." Item. "American foundations and research groups are playing an active role in shaping Eastern Europe's transition to free markets." Item. "A team of American and Soviet officials today (1/9/90) recommended the creation of an international park along the Bering Strait ... Visa restrictions would be eased ... to make it easier for people of two countries to travel in both directions." Item. "Three rubles will buy a cab ride in Nome as part of a fledgling Chamber of Commerce project to let the Soviets spend their money here ... a way to give the non-convertible ruble some value in the United States...It's good will, it's friendship, it's solidarity, said Stimpfle (a CofC official)." Item. "The Soviet Army is maintaining large stockpiles of ammunition and fuel in Eastern European nations.... Supplies remain at 1989 levels." Item. "USSR ominously continues to build the mightiest military establishment ever assembled, is conducting an explosion of Soviet espionage against America according to CIA Director Webster, and Soviets have dramatically increased terrorist attack on Americans in last 2 years according to a State Department official."

In his January issue Franklin Sanders (The Moneychanger, POBox 34175, Memphis, TN 38184. F$65 for 12 issues) concludes and we quote: "[These events] are designed to further a one world government under the same Insiders who for generations have worked toward one goal: the creation of a world fascist state, corporate socialism. The plan is more pernicious, more dangerous because it masquerades as an angel of light. It is no new thing, only the same old counterfeit to the City of God - the City of Babylon on the Plain of Shinar; men building a tower up to heaven to exalt themselves against God. Its day and hour are already fixed. In the meantime, should we despair at plans so vast we cannot hope to counter them? ... Despair? No, we continue the faithful work given us, building the Kingdom of God, looking to the Sovereign who in fact rules. 'Trust in the Lord and do good: so shalt thou dwell in the land, and verily thou shalt be fed...Fret not thyself because of him who prospereth in his way, because of the man who bringeth wicked devices to pass...For evildoers shall be cut off: but those that wait upon the Lord, they shall inherit the earth." (Psalm 37:3,7,9)."

Year Thirty-Seven.....Number Five.....March 9, 1990

HOLY MOTHER EARTH

On Monday, March 5, there was no lack of late, important, headline news. The Soviets were swarming to the polls to elect human socialists who would replace the hardline Communists that had ruled them for the past seven decades. That was headline news. And the freedom seeking Nicaraguans were celebrating their victory over the Sandinistas who had turned their country into a mammoth communist ghetto. That was headline news. Also, 16 GIs had been hurt in a blast in Panama. Anything about Panama was headline news; as was the layoff of employes in the automobile, defense, and other industries. But, disregarding the late news of the day, our local Post chose to give greater prominence to a meeting of scientists held in New Orleans. At the top of the front page of the news section of the Palm Beach Post of March 5 was the five column headline: "S. Florida future lies in level of the seas." The lead article began: "Droughts and freezes fell on Florida like a curse through the last decade and into the 1990s. Are they the heralds of global warming? Is this a preview of the future under the greenhouse effect? The odds are even that it is, say scientists who gathered in New Orleans in February to consider the most puzzling and catastrophic phenomenon facing the planet." (Underlining added for emphasis).

We cite this as an example of how the controversial and unproved "Greenhouse Effect" theory is being promoted and propagandized by the controlled media. The Greenies, Communists, Environmental Extremists, New Agers and One World Enthusiasts have decided that 1990 is "Environment Crisis" Year. Last year Time magazine named Earth the "Planet of the Year," replacing Time's traditional "Man of the Year" (who had been Gorbachev the previous year). Said Time's editors: "Now, more than ever, the world needs leaders who can inspire their fellow citizens with a fiery sense of mission, not a nationalistic or military campaign but a universal crusade the save the planet." Shortly after Time's announcement, Britain's Manchester Guardian Weekly added its voice, declaring, "A new ideology is waiting in the wings to provide both a common system of thought and, in a sense, a common enemy. Call it environmentalism, greenism, planetism. It has been growing for years, but in the last few months it has begun to acquire the status of an official world religion." Then Senator Gore (D-TN) introduced a bill, the "World Environmental Policy Act" which would promote "US participation in international initiatives and global environmental problems such as those initiated under the auspices of the United Nations.," Following through, James Baker made his first speech as Secretary of State in which he described "global warming" as a "transitional issue" that places us "all in the same boat." "Political ecology is now ripe for action. We can probably not afford to wait until all of the (scientific) uncertainties have been resolved." Then came a 24-nation "environmental summit" meeting at The Hague where a global appeal for "developing within the framework of the United Nations, a new institutional authority (which) shall be responsible for combating any further global warming." And so the crusade gathered steam nationally and internationally until President Bush presented his "Clean Air Act" which has been passed by the required committees and is probably being debated in the Senate even as you read this. Warren Brookes, a syndicated columnist and economist who has been trying to "expose the hot air that's being spread about the Greenhouse Effect," warns that the "Clean Air Act" could "Turn cars into ignitable torches, while requiring one million cars to burn methanol (one of the most toxic substances ever considered for general public distribution). It could also add 100 to 300 poisoning deaths a year, while doing almost nothing for emissions on 1983 or later model cars." Brooks said the Clean Air Act would "force all Americans to pay $20 billion more a year for driving - primarily because of smog in the Los Angeles Basin that serves as a model for the rest of the nation."

"Blueprint for the Environment" is the project of 18 of the nation's leading environmental organizations. New Options, a New Age newsletter edited by Mark Satin, informs us that the Blueprint recommendations are put together by over thirty Task Forces of Environmentalists who are taking advantage of the New Age network of organizations to spread the word. "The Greens" are especially powerful in this project. As we reported in a previous DBR, the Greens began in West Germany where they have become an important political party. They have won seats in the parliaments of at least eight of the European countries, and are now firmly established in the United States, claiming 200 chapters and a National Clearing House in Kansas City MO. Recently we received a batch of Greens literature. It tells us they believe in these "ten key values" which are listed as Ecological Wisdom, Grassroots Democracy, Personal and Social Responsibility, Nonviolence, Decentralization, Community Based Economics, Post-Patriarchal Values, Respect for Diversity, Global Responsibility and Future Focus. We are told that "Greens throughout the world believe that the present social economic order is out of sync with the earth and its inhabitants. These ten interconnected issues convey our commitment to a value-based politics, a new politics that seeks to create a shared sense of the common good rather than the old politics that promotes one sectional interest at the expense of others. We are reaching out to activists who are working for ecological and social justice. We are neither left nor right, we are ahead!"

We have reprinted the above so you'll be able to compare the Greens political program with that of the "Human Socialists that use to call themselves Communists." As Larry Abraham has pointed out, "The Reds have become Green." Tied in intimately with the Greens is the International Environmentalist organization known as Greenpeace. It promotes the same program as that of the Greens, but concentrates more directly on environmental issues. It campaigns to end nuclear weapons production and stop the use of nuclear energy, while at the same time condemning the use of coal and oil in industrial usage, and gasoline in motor cars. One of the scariest of its projects has to do with the alleged disappearance of an ozone layer which is said to save us all from ultraviolet light from the sun, which could cause cancer to us all if that ozone layer is lost. The story goes like this:

This Ozone layer is a kind of mantle in the upper atmosphere which filters the sunrays and protects us from skin cancer. This "mantle" has developed holes because of the use of chlorofluorocarbons (CFCs, commonly known as freon), used in refrigeration, as a propellant for aerosol cans, etc. This campaign to eliminate the use of CFCs could develop into a very expensive hoax. Daily News Digest cited several reasons for this being a hoax and added: "Clear-cut evidence of ozone depletion is lacking! The entire theory is based on the supposition that the heavy CFC molecules rise into the stratosphere unimpeded. There is strong evidence that heavy gases do not migrate upward in the atmosphere easily, and CFC gases are so heavy they can actually be poured from one container to another. In no way can destruction of the ozone layer by CFCs be accepted as fact, as proponents claim. Eventually, a scientific debate may take place, and this ozone depletion scare may be laid finally to rest." As a matter of fact, the theory can be laid to rest without debate if the following Reuters dispatch of 3/3/90 is true:

"Huge Ozone Hole over Arctic Vanishes, Experts Say"

"Toronto - A hole in the ozone layer over the Canadian arctic has disappeared but scientists said on Friday they were unsure whether it had been closed or been shifted by high-level winds.... In 1986 and last year, Canadian scientists detected a large hole, about the size of Greenland, in the ozone layer above the northern tip of Ellesmere Island. 'There was some evidence of chemical depletion going on last year, but we have no clear evidence of that happening in our data this time,' said David Wardle, a research scientist at Environmental Canada..." So much for the ozone hole theory.

As for evidence regarding the Greenhouse Effect, we quote the following from a newsletter published by Christian Awareness Ministries of Leesburg, Florida;

"Tell Us the Truth"

"Regardless of the widespread panic which has been created over the environment, scientists should be honest with us and not skirt around the issue. They must admit there is not now enough evidence to prove that there does, indeed, exist a crisis. T.A. Heppenheimer, science writer and contributing editor of Reason magazine (January, 1990, p. 23), had this to say regarding the threat by certain scientists that industrial pollution was the major cause of a dreaded greenhouse effect: 'Industrial activities account for only a small fraction of the world's total flow of carbon dioxide. Every year, some 759 billion metric tons of the gas enter the atmosphere, mainly from decay of vegetables, gases from volcanoes, and exchanges between atmosphere and sea ... As a minor additional source, some 18 billion tons come from fossil fuels....' Drastic cutbacks recommended to curb industrial pollution (as recommended in Bush's "Clean Air Act"-Ed) would be so costly according to Heppenheimer, that a 'worldwide economic collapse' would be in the offing that would make the Great Depression 'look like a statistical blip'." (Quoted from Christian Awareness Newsletter, 12185 Virginia Drive, Leesburg, FL 34788).

"Environmental Misinformation Abounds" headlined a column by Alston Chase of the Universal Press Syndicate, which was published in the L.A. Daily News of 2/13/90. He wrote: "'Doomsday is near" makes headlines. but 'Doomsday is canceled' appears only in the fine print of an academic journal. The media reports an environmental scare story until everyone believes it; then later scientists quietly report the scenario is mistaken. In the meantime, responding to hype, governments create costly and inefficient regulations that affect entire industries and sometimes put thousands out of work. Remember the SST and nuclear winter? The supersonic transport was scrapped in 1970 because exhaust from this plane was said to deplete the ozone layer. Later studies found these emissions actually increased ozone concentrations. According to the nuclear-winter hypothesis, fallout from thermonuclear war would darken the skies, prevent photosynthesis and bring on global famine. First floated in 1983, prestigious foundations were soon holding gloom-and-doom conferences on the subject almost weekly. Press and TV wallowed in the issue. The New York Times and The Washington Post ran 234 stories. Yet subsequent research found the hypothesis to be grossly exaggerated. By 1988, Nature had asked,

'What happened to nuclear winter?'...."

As we wrote in DBR of 8/8/89, "Crisis creation is a specialty with the One Worlders. And now the Insiders are working overtime to establish three permanent crises: The Greenhouse Effect, Toxic Pollution and The Ozone Hole. Whether these are true or false isn't the point. The Media can present them as permanent crises, and the people will believe that these three are a threat to the 'global village' and can be remedied only by 'global cooperation.' Therefore, a 'global authority' with power to over-rule national governments must be established. How very convenient that these three 'crises' have come along at a time when the One Worlders are at the very brink of the culmination of their plans. The people will believe and accent their schemes "in our own best interests."

It is significant that the leaders in this environmental crusade refer to it as a religion. The Manchester Guardian said: "Call it environmentalism, greenism, planetism. It has been growing for years, but in the last few months it has begun to acquire the status of an official world religion." And we must add, it is the religion preached by the author and prophet of dialectics: Professor Georg Wilhelm Friedrich Hegel. Frank Hughes in Prejudice and the Press wrote: "Engels [Marx's co-author] explicitly stated that 'without the philosophy of Hegel, scientific socialism would never have come into existence.'" Include John Dewey's Progressive Education. And much of the evolution theory is based on Hegel's writings. The New Columbia Encyclopedia says "He [Hegel] also wrote books on ethics, aesthetics, history and religion. His interests were wide, and all were incorporated into his united philosophy. His absolute idealism envisaged a world soul that develops out of, and is known through, the dialectic logic ... Hegel taught that religion moved from worship of nature through a series of stages of Christianity, where Christ represents the union of God and man, of spirit and matter." James H. Billington in Fire in the Minds of Men explained: "He [Hegel] had begun as a student of theology, in search of a theodicy, a justification of the ways of God to man; instead he ended up creating a new God: the World Spirit." David L. Hoggan in The Myth of the New History wrote that "Marx derived his system, both thought and method, by reversing Hegel, by placing his sole emphasis on materialism in the same way that Hegel insisted on emphasizing idealism." And William Shirer said: "To Hegel the State is all, or almost all. Among other things, he says it is the highest revelation of the world spirit; it is the 'moral universe'; the 'actuality of the ethical idea';...The State has the supreme right against the individual, whose supreme duty is to be a member of the State...for the right of the world spirit is above all special privileges." (In all the foregoing, emphasis was added).

Finally, if Environmentalism has become a world religion, if the World Spirit has replaced the Holy Spirit and State is to be worshipped as God; then "Take heed to yourselves, that your heart be not deceived, and ye turn aside, and serve other gods, and worship them." "Beloved, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they are of God: because many false prophets are gone out into the world." "Deut. 11:16 and I John 4:1).

Year Thirty-Seven.....Number Seven.....April 6, 1990

HER NAME IS "GAIA"

In this year of our Lord, Easter is to be celebrated on Sunday, April 15. By Presidential Proclamation, Earth Day is to be observed one week later, on Sunday, April 22. If the controlled communications media give us a correct reading, the worship of Mother Earth by the people of America will greatly surpass the observance of the resurrection from the dead of our Lord and Saviour. The Creation has become more important than the Creator in the minds and hearts of the multitudes. Smithsonian magazine, publication of the institution by the same name, traces this particular violation of the Second Amendment back to the year the magazine was born. The editorial in its April 1990 edition begins:

"They closed down Fifth Avenue in New York, attended eco-fairs in Chicago and staged 'teach-ins' and 'trash-ins' all across the country. More than 20 million Americans showed up for what turned out to be the launching of the modern environmental movement. It was Earth Day, an extraordinary 'happening' that occurred 20 years ago, on April 20, 1970. For the first time, the nation woke up to the fact that degradation of the natural world threatened not only the quality of life but its very foundations." So, say the editors, "To commemorate Earth Day's anniversary and the magazine's [20th] birthday, we're devoting this special issue entirely to the subject of the environment." That meant some 220 pages including pictures and ads. Pictorial perfection. And, give them credit, these editors who are in the business of recording environmental events and occurrences, tried to avoid the pitfalls laid by authors of New Age propaganda, New World Order programming, and the pantheistic religion and worship of the Goddess Gaia, known as Mother Earth by the ancient Greeks and by so many modern scientists who have "changed the truth of God into a lie, and worshipped and served the creature more than the Creator." The editors of Smithsonian offered a compromise: "As envisioned by environmentalists, a sustainable society is one whose demands upon the earth in no way diminish the lives of future generations. Can we do what has to be done to create one? ... We're not talking, after all, about Utopia; we're talking common sense."

But most national publications that deal with current affairs and conditions were talking very plainly about the New Age version of Utopia, not about common sense. There was the January 26 edition of USA Today. It featured a pullout section called "Earth 1990," and declared, "There's a Green Revolution Sweeping America." A child with face upturned and hands outstretched toward the globe highlighted the 8-page special section. It also gave tribute to Ted Turner's broadcasting system whose stations he uses to promote Globalism, scorn Christianity, deride the Decalogue, and provide "at least one resonant environmental voice" heard by millions. The TV networks have followed suit, but in a more subtle and less paganish manner. The weekly newsmagazines have echoed the New World Order theme on environmentalism. The March 26 edition of Newsweek heralded "The Selling of Earth Day," and featured what it labeled "Hoopla Highlights," which involved ABC's "The Earth Day Special," on April 22; CBS's "The Hard Rock Cafe - Save the Planet" special on April 20; the Mount Everest Cleanup when climbers from the USA, USSR and Red China are to convene, commune, and hope to climb to the summit of the mount on Earth Day to "remove garbage left by earlier expeditions" and perhaps figuratively view "all the kingdoms of the world, and the glory of them," and dream of how all of them will become one great kingdom in the eyes of those whom the tempter has beguiled.

The Christian Science Monitor chose the Global Community theme. Its March 23 edition devoted a full page to a "Global Cleanup" as the "World Opens Eyes to Environment." We are told that "From South America to South Asia, and from the Soviet Union to the economic union forming in Europe, global political changes are bringing new and old environmental problems to the surface." And in what claims to be the Christian religious field there was Plain Truth, monthly publication of the Worldwide Church of God, sent free to all who might ask. Its editors asked, "Our Environment. Will it Survive?" Their answer: "If our policies remain unchanged, warned environmentalist Edward Goldsmith speaking before a Living Earth conference in New Zealand, 'There is no question about it. There is no

The Bear is no Pussycat

If Communism is dead, then why do the Soviets keep building better ships, asks UN intelligence sources. Admiral Brooks, the US Navy's Director of Naval Intelligence complains that "Soviet proposals to limit US naval activity provides the Soviets with a potential avenue for circumscribing US ability to provide support for its allies." Turning to the crucial Pacific Ocean naval power strategy (and recalling that there is a possibility of losing Subic Naval Base and Clark Airfield in the Phillipines), Admiral Brook says that "Close examination reveals that while there's been a small reduction in [Soviet] naval combatants in the Soviet Pacific Fleet, the introduction of new units, technological upgrades and systems improvements have markedly enhanced the capability of the Soviet fleet to carry out the full range of its wartime naval missions." The Admiral made the following assessments of future developments:

- * It's likely the Soviet navy that NATO will face in the near future will be somewhat smaller but more sophisticated and over all more capable of obtaining its global objectives.
- * The Soviet navy may intensify the emphasis it's placing on strategic anti-submarine warfare and extend its strategic air defense perimeter out from the homeland.
- * It may increase its focus on attack submarines for open sea as well as defense of nuclear-powered ballistic missile submarine bases.
- * It's likely to continue qualitative improvements in most if not all aspects of naval capability.

The US Director of Naval Intelligence concluded his report as follows:

"If perestroika proves successful, we will face a Soviet Union in the next century that is an even more formidable competitor with the West - militarily, economically, technologically and politically. To make it work, Gorbachev needs peredyshka - breathing space - to relieve both internal and external pressures, so that assets required for his country's reconstruction can be made available and effectively utilized. Gorbachev's domestic and foreign policy initiatives have all been undertaken with this goal in mind.... The point here is that we must be careful not to be lulled into complacency by a Soviet politician of some cunning who spends as much time posturing for Western audiences as he does for his own at home." The bear has not become a pussycat - he remains a bear. (Information supplied by Intelligence Digest, 17 Rodney Road, Cheltenham, Glos. GL50 IHX, United Kingdom. 3/23/90).

way that man can survive another 40 years." Which reminds us of former Senator Nelson Gaylord of Wisconsin, the man who was partly responsible for that Earth Day observance in 1970. He predicted that America's city dwellers would be forced to don breathing masks by 1980; that the human race would be extinct by the year 2020, that at the turn of the century, the population of the United States would be reduced to 22.6 million. In 1970 the great dangers were starvation and overpopulation. Today they are Global Warming, Holes in the Ozone, and Toxic Waste.

If you put them all together - New Age metaphysical utopianism, New World Order material monopolism, World Government corporative socialism, and Marxian millennialism - a name could be given to cover them all. Because such stress is being laid on Environmentalism, there is a name that would camouflage the melange and beguile the easy believer. The term Eco-Movement has been coined for such a purpose. And, as The Christian Science Monitor attests, since this Eco-Movement has become a worldwide crusade, then a worldwide religion seems required to give the movement (or movements) the necessary reverence and awe. You'll recall that World Government advocates always mention three essential ingredients in their prescription for what they consider global healing: World Law, World Currency, and World Religion. Gaia, Mother Earth, may be their answer to the third ingredient. In our DBR of 1/26/90 we referred to a "Global Forum of Spiritual and Parliamentary Leaders on Human Survival" that had been held in Moscow, Gorbachev attending, along with an estimated thousand scientists, educationists, and religious leaders from 83 countries. Christian World Report, a fundamentalist publication, gave the following additional information in its March edition.

EARTH WORSHIP URGED

Although he is a self-avowed atheist rejecting all notions that there exists a personal God who has revealed Himself to mankind, astronomer Carl Sagan has no problem endorsing the old pagan concepts of the newly discovered scientists' religion of 'Gaia,' which holds that the sacred earth should be regarded with a holy 'awe.' On the opening day of the Global Forum of Spiritual and Parliamentary Leaders on Human Survival, Jan. 15th, Sagan told the Moscow gathering that efforts to 'safeguard and cherish' the earth need to be 'infused with a vision of the sacred.' Sagan further said that although he doesn't believe in God, 'I am sure of the awe and reverence that the meticulously balanced nature of the globe elicits in me.'

The New Age movement's concept of 'Gaia' is that 'Mother Earth' is alive and acts with its own sense of purpose in maintaining conditions for life. The theory, which further holds that the earth and its inhabitants make up a living organism of 'interconnectedness' (God is in all; all is in God), is a pantheistic concept that is increasingly being embraced by the scientific community.

After hearing Sagan's address about 100 religious leaders participating in the Global Forum signed a statement welcoming Sagan's appeal as a 'unique moment and opportunity in the relationship of science and religion.' Shortly following the conclusion of the Global Forum in Moscow, USA Today ran a full pull-out section on the 'Earth 1990' which featured clear endorsement of New Age 'Gaia'/earth religion concepts."

As Smithsonian observed, the eco-movement was born on Earth Day 1970. Immediate result was the creation of the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA), conceived illegitimately and unconstitutionally through an Executive Order signed by President Nixon. At the time Congress was not consulted. However, it sounded like a good idea (dialectic syntheses always do). But it was a good idea immediately used for bad purposes. According to John F. McManus, writing in The New American (4/9/90), this was "one of the greatest power grabs in our nation's history" because "EPA possesses the power to meddle in any activity affecting the nation's environment. That means everything! If it is not the threat of acid rain (unproved), or the greenhouse effect (unsubstantiated), or ozone depletion (only a theory), the environmental lobby can be counted on to point to an oil spill, smog, trash, or virtually anything to justify increasing federal power. They have long advocated regional and world government controls." And on March 28 the House passed a bill raising EPA to Cabinet level. The Senate may have signed it even as you read this, and President Bush has agreed to sign the bill.

One of the truly alarming and dangerous side issues that has recently been exposed to the public is the "Natural Landmark" scam. Agencies of the federal government are taking land from private owners without even telling them about it beforehand, under the guise of adding the land to a national park, establishing a "national landmark," controlling waterways, or whatever else is proposed. Said a private report, "The environmental lobbyists have struck at local areas and in a gradual way so as not to arouse the general population. They have used scams such as preservation of scenic areas, parks for recreation ... The reason for all these land grabs is to eliminate private property and it is being done illegally as far as the Constitution is concerned.... The Bankers are planning on getting ownership of all this land as collateral on the National Debt.... Remember, all these ploys to take over private property and put it in the hands of government are used by various governments to gradually eliminate private ownership and put it in the hands of government and lease it back to the people to enable government to become a dictator. Private property is the key to freedom." (Emphasis added. Quoted from Frontiers of Freedom, 10235 SE 13th Place, Belleview WA 98004.)

Recently President Gorbachev "relented" and broke a Communist command that all property is the possession of the state. People are now allowed to rent, but not buy, property under certain conditions. And simultaneously, the US government is taking private property from citizens. Conditioning for Merging?

The Moneychanger (still publishing despite government persecution but needing aid for court costs) quotes another source: ... "This program, working in tandem with the Environmental Consortium, is out to stick it to you.... Theft of rights by bureaucratic means is a well oiled process and the Environmental Mafia owns the system like lynch mobs own the court house ... If you are disturbed ... contact Allied Owners, Inc., HCR, Box 337, Cutler, ME 04262."

"Cursed be he that removeth his neighbor's landmark. And all the people shall say, Amen." (Deuteronomy 27:17).

Year Thirty-Seven.....Number Nine.....May 4, 1990

U.S.A. - R.I.P.

The conditioning of the peoples by the brainwashers has been beyond comparison. The Socialist Nations of Western Europe and the Communist Nations of Eastern Europe are merging, as planned, into one great Regional World Government. The comparatively free and wealthy United States of America and the basket-case Union of Soviet Socialist Republics are converging economically and otherwise through most favored trade, aid, educational, social and financial alliances. And while the captive peoples of the Communist countries are given the semblance of freedom and conditional independence, the people of the United States are losing their freedom and independence, their standard of living, their republican form of governments and their right to worship as their fathers worshipped. Most recent example of the latter is less than a month old. But the moguls that manage the media have kept the news off their satellites and out of their daily and weekly columns to such an extent that few have heard of the Judicial Tyranny committed by five unelected rulers we call Supreme Court Justices.

On Wednesday, April 18, 1990, the Supreme Court killed our United States Constitution. The coup de grace was a simple but fatal action whose reaction is yet to be felt. The Court decreed that federal judges have the authority to order state and municipal elected officials to raise taxes, and to issue injunctions preventing laws and State Constitutions from being used to do anything about it. A Constitutional expert tells us that by this decree the Supreme Court has abolished representative government at the state and local level and along with it nullified the US and State Constitutions, "California's Proposition 13, supply-side economics, federalism, the separation of powers and the national tax-limitation and balanced-budget amendment movement." Quoted remark was by Paul Craig Roberts, professor of political economy at the Center for Strategic & International Studies in Washington. He explains: "Elected legislators and the people to whom they are accountable no longer have control over the power of the purse, or the quantity and quality of public expenditures. The Court's ruling... transfers all meaningful governmental power to the federal judiciary. It will take some time for judicial tyranny to become fully manifest, but the process for establishing judicial rule is now in place. Unless we revolt, we have lost our freedom." (Emphasis was added).

In common Americanese, this is what happened. A federal judge believed that racial desegregation in the Kansas City, Mo. public school system was not up to the standard set by federal judges. On that pretext he gave orders for an extravagant school improvement plan that would cost an estimated $260 million, to include high schools with air-conditioned classrooms, an alarm system and 15 microcomputers, a 2,000-square-foot planetarium, greenhouses and vivariums, a 25-acre farm with an air-conditioned meeting room accomodating 104 persons, a model United Nations wired for language translations, broadcast-capable radio and television studios with an editing and animation lab, a temperature-controlled art galley, movie editing and screening rooms, dust free diesel mechanics rooms, 1,875-square-foot elementary animal rooms for a zoo project, and swimming pools. Not only that, but the federal judge ordered that magnet schools be built throughout the school district at the additional estimated price of $200 million. This nearly half a billion dollars was not to be spent to better educate students, just to make them more comfortable while enjoying extra-curricular activities.

The school board, the State Legislature and the people who would have to pay for the improvements, were shocked. They didn't have that kind of money for such a purpose, and the federal judge had no right or authority to issue such an order. They pointed out that the power of taxation is a power that the federal judiciary does not possess. Only elected legislative bodies have such power. So affirms the US Constitution, State Constitutions, and common sense derived from "taxation without representation" cries that helped start a revolutionary war. So, the federal judge demanding and the state and local elected authorities refusing, the case went to the US Supreme Court.

By a vote of 5-to-4 the Supreme Court ruled that federal judges do have the power of the public purse; Constitutions, state laws, county and municipal ordinances to the contrary notwithstanding. The five traitors, mark them well, were Byron R. White, William J. Brennan, Thurgood Marshall, Harry A. Blackmun and John Paul Stevens. The other four Justices were powerfully and vocally opposed to the decree, but they were a minority. Justice Anthony M. Kennedy was supported by Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist, Sandra Day O'Connor and Antonin Scalia, in warning that "Today's casual embrace of taxation imposed by the unelected, life-tenured federal judiciary disregards fundamental precepts for the democratic control of public institutions....(The Court's) assertion of judicial power in one of the most sensitive of policy areas, that of involving taxation, begins a process that over time could threaten fundamental alterations of the form of government our Constitution embodies... The power of taxation is one that the federal judiciary does not possess." Quoting Judge Robert Bork (remember him?) to back up his sentiments, Professor Roberts (op. cit.) warned: "As a result of the court's ruling, anyone who continues to hold municipal bonds or real property - including their homes - would be foolish, because federal judges can now wreck the tax base of any state or municipality and destroy real estate values by running up property taxes... It is possible that the American people won't accept the usurpation of power by the judiciary, which in effect turns our legislative bodies into a cloak for judicial tyranny. However, so far they have accepted everything else - routine release of dangerous criminals, destruction of neighborhood schools, busing of their children, racial quotas in university admissions and workplaces. We have become an effete people since the time our ancestors condemned King George III 'for imposing taxes on us without consent' and 'for taking away our Charters, abolishing our most valuable Laws, and altering fundamentally the forms of our Government."

There is one hope of defeating this judicial tyranny. The April 28th issue of Human Events which we have just received as we write this Report, contains the following information:

"In the wake of the Supreme Court's astonishing 5-to-4 decision that says federal judges may order local governments to increase taxes... Sen. Gordon Humphrey (R-NH) thinks he can make headway with S-34, the Judicial Taxation Prohibition Act. The measure which had 10 co-sponsors before the decision, would flatly prevent judges from compelling state or local authorities to impose new taxes or raise old ones.... Humphrey's bill is now the only vehicle available to block further judicial tax tyranny."

As serious as was this granting to unelected federal judges the power to tax, an equally important decision had previously been handed down by the Court in regard to the Fourth Amendment's protection against search and seizure. The Amendment states "The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated..." But the present treasonous Supreme Court disagreed. The excuse for making it easier for police to search and seize people's private property and papers was probably the so-called drug war. But the intent also made it easier to seize and confiscate guns. Anti-gun legislation is not popular; so why not just stage a raid, seize and confiscate whatever weapons citizens might have with which to defend themselves? Weakening the Fourth also could nullify the Second Amendment. So, in a case possibly designed for just such purpose, the Court "gave police broad new (and unconstitutional) authority to conduct sweeping searches in private homes," said an article appearing in the Amarillo Daily News of March 2, 1990. The article said, "The Court decreed that police may search throughout a house when they have a reasonable suspicion there is a hidden danger to the arresting officers, even if the arresting authorities lack...probable cause to believe there is a danger." If you are interested in knowing how this violation of the Fourth Amendment works in actual practice, then consider the Franklin Sanders case. A small army of various types of officers, all supposedly raiding in behalf of the IRS, invaded the Sanders home, arrested and jailed Franklin and his wife, isolated, tried unsuccessfully to intimidate and harrass their children for hours. Being Christian children they were made of sterner' stuff. They confiscated all of Franklin's papers and computer ware. The officers also arrested the Pastor and Elders of the Presbyterian Church where the Sanders family worships. Undaunted and praising God for his ability to continue in his calling, he's out on bail ($100,000) and by the Grace of God and the help of friends, he's still publishing one of the most important of the newsletters which make up the alternate press (The Moneychanger, P.O.Box 34173, Memphis, TN 38184). This one-out-of-scores of examples of how totalitarian tactics are being employed in the United States should awaken everyone to the dangers facing Christian American families in this "era of merging."

This Supreme Court's decision amending the Fourth's protection against search and seizure is doubly dangerous because it tends to "legalize" a law passed by the Oklahoma Legislature and signed by Governor Bellman. An Oklahoma patriot, Margie M. Martin, of Texhoma, OK, has been fighting this law, almost single handedly because the media, even the supposedly conservative media, fail to give her the support she deserves. This is a law (House Bill 1750) that makes every item owned by every Oklahoma citizen taxable. It also provides that officers may enter a home and check and record every item (including guns, of course) in the house. We haven't a copy of this 96 page bill, but The Christian World Report of May 16, 1989, gave an excellent report which we copy:

"The citizens must provide a list of all their possessions to the government. This list must include everything from watches to farm tractors. Citizens who fail to give the list are paid a visit by a government agent. If denied entry to the citizen's residence, the government agent later returns with a warrant, enters the home and compiles the list. Is this country the Soviet Union, or the Peoples Republic of China? No, it is Oklahoma in 1991. In the last legislative session, House Bill 1750 was passed by the state legislature and signed into law by the governor... The measure goes into effect January 1, 1991. The law reads:

"On or before January 1st of each year, the Oklahoma Tax Commission shall prescribe for the use of tax assessors, suitable bank forms for the listing and assessment of all property, both real and personal. These forms will then be furnished to the taxpayer for listing all personal property. From January 1 through the end of February, the county assessor must set up a temporary office in each town in the county for a minimum of one day each to allow the taxpayer to submit the list. The assessor must then be present at the county seat from March 1 through March 15 to receive lists not turned in at the temporary offices. Personal property, for the purposes of ad valorem taxation, includes: All goods, chattels and effects: - All horses, cattle, mules, asses, sheep, swine, goats and other livestock; - All household furniture, including gold and silver plate, musical instruments, watches, and jewelry; - All wagons, vehicles, or carriages and all farm tractors, implements or machinery; - Personal, private, or professional libraries; - All other property having an actual, constructive, or taxable status. Taxpayers failing to provide the list will be visited by the assessor. Prior to entering the premises of any taxpayer for purposes of discovering household personal property located within a commercial place of business, the county assessor or deputy shall request permission to enter the premises and shall state the reason for the inspection. If access to the premises is denied, the county assessor or deputy shall be required to obtain a search warrant in order to conduct an inspection of the interior of the premises. A search warrant may be obtained upon a showing of probable cause.... Property not previously listed, or undervalued, will result in a penalty of up to 20% of the value of the property. At least once every four years, the assessor must physically inspect all real property in the county'."

"H.B.1750 is a cleverly contrived piece of legislation that I believe was put together by other than Oklahoma Legislators," said Margie Martin. We agree. Who needs the registration of weapons if the authorities, under the guise of property evaluation, can enter your home, inspect all of your personal possessions, having a "reasonable suspicion" that you did not declare certain items, like firearms? This is the case in Oklahoma, and similar legislation is being introduced in other state legislatures. A respected subscriber and correspondent, Dr. Harry Walkup of Worton, MD, wrote: "We are living in troubled times in which the Keynesian/Fabian Socialist Power-Centralizing Revolutionary Strategy is being imposed on us, with its financial policies designed to progressively destroy individual economic, political and cultural independence. This can only be accomplished if our firearms are confiscated..." Under firearms registration the complete confiscation of weapons would be difficult and costly. But with the death of the Constitution and its Bill of Rights, plus Judicial Tyranny and Totalitarian Legislation, weapons could be confiscated from law-abiding citizens, making slaves of us all. When situations change, plans may also change:

"And He said unto them (His disciples), When I sent you without purse, scrip and shoes, lacked ye anything? And they said, Nothing. Then He said unto them, But now, he that hath a purse, let him take it, and likewise his scrip: and he that hath no sword, let him sell his garment, and buy one." (Luke 22: 35, 36).

THE CHOOSING

"...Have you ever seen, in some wood, on a sunny day, a cloud of flying midges - thousands of them - hovering, apparently motionless, in a sun-beam?...Yes?...Well, did you ever see the whole flight - each mite apparently preserving its distance from all others - suddenly move, say three feet, to one side or the other? Well, what made them do that? A breeze? I said a quiet day. But try to recall - did you ever see them move directly back again in the same unison? Well, what made them do that? Great human mass movements are slower of inception but much more effective."

We don't know who wrote that. But you'll find it in the preface of the 1980 edition of Charles Mackay's book, originally published in 1841, dealing with "Extraordinary Popular Delusions and the Madness of Crowds." In the 1852 second edition there was a second preface which began: "In reading the history of nations, we find that, like individuals, they have their whims and their peculiarities; their seasons of excitement and recklessness, when they care not what they do. We find that whole communities suddenly fix their minds upon one object, and go mad in its pursuit; that millions of people become simultaneously impressed with one delusion, and run after it, till their attention is caught by some new folly more captivating than the first." In Mackay's work, written 150 years ago and the text unchanged in later editions, the author discusses such manias as John Law's "Mississippi Scheme" in which unlimited quantities of fiat paper money with no intrinsic value was put into circulation (so very similar to our own situation in 1990). It wrecked the French economy and set the stage for the horrible enactment of the French Revolution. Among other manias and madneses of crowds discussed by the author were Holland's "Tulipmania," the Crusades, the Witch mania when people even suspected with witchcraft were burned, drowned, or otherwise destroyed. And if Mackay were writing in the future as he did in the past, he would undoubtedly highlight the present Environmental Mania, one in which whole governments have fixed their attention, with "millions of people simultaneously impressed with one delusion." Not like Chicken Little's cry of "The Sky is Falling," but more like Mother Earth crying "My people are murdering me."

A few readers have expressed some confusion, as could be expected. How to distinguish the "good from the bad" in this current environmentalist crusade, is a real problem. It should be understood by every sincere and dedicated Christian that the preservation and improvement of God's gift to man in the matter of the earth and its inhabitants, creatures and plants is a kind of commandment which began with Adam's instructions in the Garden, and simply became more difficult to keep after the Fall. The Scriptures are filled with instructions dealing with the care and treatment of the earth and all that's in it. There are rules for the care and treatment of animals, instructions to let the land rest every seventh year so it may renew itself and the poor be fed, how some parts of every crop are to be left standing for the benefit of the poor. The Old Testament might well be considered an environmentalist's bible. However, when environmentalism becomes a religion, placing Mother Earth where the Lord ought to be, then it's time for Christians to choose whom they will serve.

The British Intelligence Digest on May 4 published an article in which it was pointed out that the environmentalist movement "has been hijacked by those very people who have found it no longer intellectually respectable to be socialists." That may be true. At the end of World War Two, socialist parties spread throughout Europe. There was a Socialist Democratic Party or a Christian Socialist Party in almost every country. The socialists of this type were generally respected, often ran governments without much complaint. True, the Soviet Union was composed of Socialist Republics, but people believed that the socialists in Russia were communists, while the socialists in the rest of Europe were liberals. However, when Gorbachev started talking about and promoting the kinder and gentler social democracy as a better name than Stalinist type communism, the socialists of the West naturally became uncomfortable. There was no longer that imagined distinction between socialism and communism. So, says the editor of Intelligence Digest, the environmental cause is a perfect home for the socialists. Speaking of the Environmentalist threat, ID then reports, and we quote:

"Again as with socialism, so with the new international movement, extremists advocating violence are happily accommodated. We'll see more and more violence in the name of the environment, and its associated cause of animal rights, according to Intelligence Digest terrorist experts.

"Despite a wealth of evidence that much of the current scare over the environment is just that, a scare, there's an increasing intolerance of anyone expressing such a view. Even such a hard headed politician as Mrs. Thatcher has given up any attempt to argue with the environmentalists. In fact, so much of what is now peddled as indisputable fact is far from that and is based on doubtful science. As just one example, take the case of CO2 the main 'greenhouse' gas. The human race pumps up some five billion tonnes of CO2 every year. (A tonne is a metric ton, 1000 kilograms, or 2,204.62 pounds.-Ed.) This we are told is planet threatening. Yet the size of the atmosphere is 5,000,000,000,000,000 tonnes. The extra CO2 attributed to man accounts for just one millionth of the total atmosphere. Furthermore, to really put man's 'destructive' efforts into scale, termites alone contribute 14 billion tonnes of CO2 to the atmosphere each year, as a result of the activities of their gastric systems. This is just one example of where the facts belie the scaremongering, but you won't get far against the new orthodoxy even with this kind of evidence, Whilst communism is atheistic, the new movement is quite simply pagan. It's a return to the old Nordic paganism of earth worship. Those who are looking for the new international threat to freedom (and there will always

IT'S TIME TO PULL THE PLUG

Dear Doctor Gorbachev:

They say that you are trying to save the Soviet Union. Perhaps you should check its medical history. What began as the Czarist Russian Empire suffered a major trauma in 1917. Although Lenin and his Bolsheviks tried to patch it all together into a new entity called the Soviet Union, the moment Marxism, Leninism and Stalinism were forcibly injected into the body, it went into an irreversible coma. This dying, braindead empire of mismatched republics and over one hundred incompatible nationalities has been kept alive - if you can call it that - for over 70 years by an artificial life support system called Communism. It should be clear by now that the operation was a mistake, the system has failed and the patient is dying a cruel and lingering death. There is only one humane thing to do: pull the plug. The Union will die, and that is the only way its various parts will ever have a chance to live. (Chicago Latvian Newsletter, 4146 N Elston Ave., Chicago, IL 60618. be one, because some humans will always want to extinguish other people's freedom of thought and action) need look no further than the environmentalist movement. It has all the worst attributes of socialism, and some that even the socialists hadn't thought of. Make no mistake, this is a dangerous movement." Revolution by Legislation is a prime rule of the Fabians. It has been adopted by the Greenies. The Green movement began as a political party in Europe, has now become an Internationalist power. Among its successes in the United States was passage of the Clean Water Act. A good idea, but one that could be, and has been, used for evil purposes by the environmentalists. In The Freeman monthly for May 1990 there is a lead article by Paul D. Kamener, executive director of the Washington Legal Foundation. "Last July," he writes, "John Pozsgai, a 58-year-old self-employed truck mechanic, was sentenced to three years in jail by a Federal judge and fined $202,000 for violating the Clean Water Act. This is the longest prison sentence ever meted out in the United States for an environmental crime. No, Mr. Pozsgai wasn't the captain of the Exxon Valdez that ran aground in Alaska spilling millions of gallons of oil, nor did he dump toxic or hazardous wastes into any river or stream. His crime? Pozsgai was sentenced for placing topsoil and clean fill on his own property without permission of the Federal authorities from the Environmental Protection Agency and the US Army Corps of Engineers. Sparing no expense to nab this 'criminal,' the EPA even staked out the property with secret surveillance cameras and took several aerial photographs to capture the 'crime' on film....Already another Florida man and his son have been sent to prison for two years for putting a few truckloads of clean sand on their property without EPA approval. In another case in New Jersey, a retired couple was prevented from developing a lot they purchased years ago for retirement because environmental officials recorded the sound of an owl on their property....The message the government wants to send in these cases is that private property and economic development are rapidly succumbing to bureaucratic regulation at the Federal, State and local level, all in the name of environment - regardless of the actual environmental impact. The clash between environmentalists and private property owners promises to be one of the major issues of the 1990s....

Why was Pozsgai targeted for the most serious penalty the law has to offer for simply putting clean fill on his own property? To quote the prosecutor, 'a message must be sent to all land owners, the corporations, the developers of this country' that fines, probation, and short prison terms are a thing of the past for environmental offenses."

It used to be that private property rights were the rights of a person to use his property in whatever way he chose providing that he didn't use force or fraud on any other person. But that was before the "save Mother Earth" frenzy caused politicians to write another new commandment overriding the Constitution. Because of this environmental stampede private property is no longer really private, and private property rights are an endangered species.

As noted above, the Clean Water Act, which was sold to the people as an environmental necessity, came to be used as a means for annulling private property rights. So also with the proposed Clean Air Act. Even as President Bush understands this, it can be used for purposes of destroying private industry if environment besotted bureaucrats decide to use it for evil purpose. But, the more restrictions at the federal level, the more people clamor for more federal restrictions and more freedom is lost. But the people celebrated Earth Day as eagerly as our forefathers celebrated the Fourth of July. And with the Environmental Protection Agency receiving greater power by being made a department in the President's Cabinet, the midges continue to move in unison. The Interparliamentary Conference on Global Environment met in Washington on May 2nd (they met first in Moscow where Gorbachev blessed their efforts), where they approved the establishment of EcoNet. That's a communications organization networking by modem and connecting all the earth's environmental community through telecommunication. It's described as "The Environmental Computer Network for the Planet" and is expected to feed the eager controlled media with wild stories made believable about actions designed to save or harm Mother Earth. Says a brochure, "We have made international access more affordable....These connections also allow our users to be in constant communication with a wide range of internationally active environmental organizations and individuals. EcoNet users can also exchange electronic mail with users in the Soviet Union." The brochure lists a "small sample" of over 60 environmental organizations. Among them are the California State Department of Education, the Green Action Network, the Global Action Network, Greenpeace, Izzak Walton League, National Audobon Society, National Wildlife Federation, Sierra Club, Turner Broadcasting System, UNESCO, Wilderness Society - some of them formerly worthy and respected organizations now being seduced by the environmental mania.

Of course, money is needed to support the crusade. So, according to AP, "An international group of legislators called for immediate action to curb 'greenhouse' pollutants and recommended a 'global Marshall plan' to help emerging countries cope with environmental problems. At the end of the three day conference on the environment, the delegates from 42 countries urged that nations commit themselves without delay to reducing pollutants that they said could cause climatic temperatures to rise 50% in the next 20 years....The proposed 'Global Marshall Plan' for sustaining development and the environment' would be patterned after the US economic assistance effort that helped Europe recover from World War II, conference officials said." And who financed the Marshall Plan?

Remember how an astrologist arranged meeting times between Reagan and Gorbachev? And Bush's references to "a thousand points of light." Then consider: Occultist Alice Bailey's Great Invocation, a pantheistic World Prayer, begins: "From the point of light within the Mind of God Let light stream forth into the minds of men. Let light descend on Earth." The New Group of World Servers call themselves "points of light" and "each co-worker....is a point of light shining in the environment....It is well to remember that we are all Points of Light stationed in our own place in order to cover the planet with a web of responsible service....Co-workers are....part of a great 'constellation' of serving intelligences, moving forward together in greater light, understanding and wisdom." Also remembering the Skull and Bones connection, is all this worthy of consideration when Mother Earth claims the place where God should be? "No man can serve two masters....Ye cannot serve God and mammon." (Matthew 6:24).

WITHOUT REPRESENTATION

We are pleased to report that our DBR of May 4 titled "USA - RIP" in which we said "the Supreme Court killed our United States Constitution" has, with the help of many of you who purchased and circulated, copied or reprinted the Report, created quite a stir. The Report, as you will recall, had to do, among other things, with the Supreme Court approving a federal judge's order forcing a Kansas City school district to increase property taxes to support a quarter-of-a-million dollar expansion program which allegedly would improve segregation (if not education). The Court in so decreeing, unconstitutionally took over the Legislature's prerogative to raise taxes. The order also nullified State Constitutions, county and municipal laws which might not agree with the Court's ruling. The federal judge ordered a tax increase of from $2.5 for each assessed valuation to $4.00, almost doubling property taxes for all citizens involved. Conservative columnist Joseph Sobran was one of the few who commented. His comments are similar to ours. He wrote:

The Supreme Court's ruling in the vexed Kansas City public school case illustrates the profound problem raised in judicial activism. As the present system has evolved, the judicial branch of government can simply award itself new powers....The details of the case are complicated, but they don't affect the constitutional issue: Our highest court has ruled that unelected courts may order elected officials to raise taxes. Taxation without representation is back in the name of equality. In principle, this means that the Supreme Court could order Congress to raise taxes, if the court decided, say, that our society isn't desegregated enough (which could be fatal to the white majority of Americans, considering the influx of Hispanics, Orientals and migrating Soviet Jews-Ed.)...The Supreme Court tends to view its own interests as the one that should by right prevail. It often confuses its own will with constitutional necessity, no matter how arbitrary its rulings may seem to others. William Brennan in particular has a bad habit of thinking that when he parts his lips the Constitution is speaking....The Constitution has accumulated so much extraneous matter that it's easy to mistake what the court has said about the Constitution for the Constitution itself. You can hardly see the old masterpiece until you remove the layers of opinion added by men who were far inferior to the document's authors. It is time Americans learned to distinguish sharply between the authentic Constitution and the encrustations superimposed on it by its power-seeking interpreters. If the court won't preserve the original, it's up to the rest of us to do it."

Some elected officials did act (or react). Senator Gordon Humphrey (R.-NH) has introduced S-34, the Judicial Taxation Prohibition Act. This measure would prevent judges from compelling state or local authorities to impose new taxes or raise old ones to rectify some supposed constitutional wrong. The measure, last time we heard, had 10 co-sponsors. If passed it cut down some of the power the court has taken over Congress and the people. On the other hand, since this was a Kansas City case, the two Missouri Senators, John Danforth and Christopher Bond, both Republicans, proposed a Constitutional amendment to overturn the court's ruling. Representatives Mel Hancock and Bill Emerson of Missouri, introduced a similar measure in the House. This, like President Bush's call for an amendment to prevent flag desecration, would be like using another wrong to try to make a right. As Sobran noted, the Constitution is already so polluted with amendments and proposals for amendments, that the document is losing its intended intent and meaning. The Constitution provides that the Legislature has power over the Judiciary in such cases. Two wrongs don't make a right. However, to expect Congress to do anything about this judicial tyranny is about as useless as to expect it to do something constructive about balancing the budget. As S.A. Freeman observed in The Citizen's Claw, "The three branches of government are so completely corrupted that they operate more as a criminal conspiracy rather than as a government." (P.O.Box 441, Morongo Valley, CA 92257). What to do about it? The Declaration of Independence contains the answer. But that answer requires "a firm reliance on the protection of Divine Providence" and the mutual pledge of "our Lives, our Fortunes, and our sacred Honor."

In our lifetime we have seen this growth of Judicial Tyranny as the Court has officially nullified the Ten Commandments and looked instead to the tenets of Secular Humanism for its answers. It forbade the singing of the National Anthem at school athletic contests. It inspired the desegregation syndrome which it seems to conduct almost on its own. It has ordered elected officials to build more jails and treat criminals as victims. It told a school district how much it must raise in taxes and itemized what the money is to be spent for. The latest endeavor of the court will be to control life as well as death. An article in the May 1990 issue of AARP (American Association of Retired Persons) reports: "The Supreme Court is on the brink of determining who gets to decide how you die and when. A landmark decision asks whether a hopelessly ill person's life should be sustained at all costs or if that person should be allowed to die. And if there is a choice, should you or your loved ones make that choice, or should the government?"

How did it happen that a judiciary that is supposed to judge simply on the constitutionality of a law, now makes laws at its will and in defiance of the Constitution? Politicians and lawyers are trained to find loopholes, especially in contracts, covenants and constitutions. What we now say may be distasteful to some, but it must be told. Some of our Founding Fathers were displeased with the Constitution because of those loopholes in it. They didn't attend, weren't invited to attend, or refused to attend the Constitutional Convention and later found that, even as Benjamin Franklin admitted, it wasn't perfect but the best ever done by man. There was, for example, one item that bothered many Christian leaders. It's found in the last phrase of Article VI: ".....no religious Test shall ever be required as a Qualification to any Office or public Trust under the United States." From the Charter of Virginia in 1606, through the Mayflower Compact of 1620, almost every State Constitution, the Declaration of Independence and the Northwest Ordinance which affirms that "Religion, morality and knowledge being necessary to good government and the happiness of mankind, schools and the means of education shall forever be encouraged;" in all of these pre-Constitution documents there is a direct reference to "The Grace of God," "Divine Providence" or other acknowledgement that "this is a Christian Colony, State or Nation." In many States only professing and confessing Christians were called citizens and allowed to vote. But the Constitution says: "no religious test shall ever be required as a qualification to any office or public trust under the United States." As Gary North observes in his remarkable "Political Polytheism," "This was the first public experiment in secular humanism....We must understand what this means. It means that civil officers are not under an oath to the God of the Bible."

It means that in the exercise of their various offices, civil magistrates are bound by an oath to a different god. That god is the American People, considered as an autonomous sovereign who possesses original and final jurisdiction....The people were no longer acting as God's delegated judicial agents but as their own agent." (ICE, Tyler, TX 75711 $42.50).

A few of the Founding Fathers worried about another phrase found in the same Article VI of the Constitution: "...all Treaties made, or which shall be made, under the authority of the United States, shall be supreme Law of the Land." With adherence to the United Nations Charter and its many treaties, conventions, commissions, authorities and alliances made under its authority, and with Presidents Bush and Gorbachev discussing new treaties, possibly as you are reading this, that treaty clause over which there is great argument among professing constitutional authorities, could become a fatal loophole as a New Age and a New World Order are being promoted.

There was a war with Mexico, several attempts to centralize control over money and the economy, the growth of socialism and the emergency of Marx. Yet the United States continued to prosper. However, throughout some seventy years of comparative tranquility, there was a developing force nurtured by alien conspirators, under the guise of slavery (dialectics already at work). The storm finally struck, sundered the Nation as well as families, and brought an aftermath that may have been planned and certainly was taken advantage of by the Conspirators. The American system of government was completely altered in the years following the War Between the States. We are intrigued by the manner in which the eminent constitutional authority, Thomas James Norton, explained the political metamorphosis:

"It has been pointed out that the first ten Amendments sprang from the fear of National power which many of the States feared. Those Amendments were designed to stay the National hand. But the Civil War taught that the Nation may be in even greater peril from the States than they ever were from the Nation. And so, after more than seventy years, the people by this (13th) Amendment and the two Amendments following, laid upon the States restrictions which a few years before would have been impossible."

Things might have been far different if Lincoln had lived through the restoration of the Republic. He said, "With malice toward none; with charity for all; with firmness in the right, as God gives us to see the light, let us strive to finish the work we are in...to do all which may achieve and cherish a just, and a lasting peace, among ourselves, and with all Nations." But the conspirators of that day determined that Lincoln would not carry out any such program. The radical Republicans that controlled Congress thought only of malice and no charity, and the Copperheads, the Scalawags, and the Congress backed up by what was left of the Northern Army, were intent upon punishment, and the establishment of a strong Central Government in which the States, both North and South, virtually lost their Statehood and their sovereignty as Republics, and again became like Colonies subservient to a National Government in which all important power resided; the words of the Constitution and the Bill of Rights to the contrary notwithstanding.

How does the Judiciary make laws when laws should be made only by the Legislature? Simple but expensive and time consuming: A "landmark" case is spotted or created by some organization such as the ACLU, NOW, etc. The case is made to travel, through appeals or otherwise, through all the courts of the land and is finally accepted for decision by the Supreme Court. Then that decision is considered a precedent and all similar cases must be accepted by County, State and Federal judges as "the Law of the Land." Hence, a judge forcing a school to buy athletic equipment so this "poorer school" can provide the same advantages as richer schools (an actual case), can be traced all the way back to Brown vs Board of Education of Topeka.

As an aftermath of the Civil War, the radicals in Washington caused the creation and supposed ratification of three Amendments, the 13th, 14th, and 15th. The 14th created an entirely new kind of government. It was never ratified but that is meaningless now because, just like the 16th which also was unratified, through practice it has become accepted as a "Law of the Land." Fifteen years ago the Reader's Digest Association produced the second printing of its popular Family Encyclopedia of American History. We quote the following from page 284: "The 14th Amendment was written to meet specific political requirements: To punish former officials of the defeated Confederate States of America by denying their citizenship rights; to punish Confederate creditors by repudiating the South's debt; to give citizenship to former Negro slaves. However, the Amendment was worded as to have implications far beyond the limited intentions of the authors." (Underlining added). All previous Amendments applied only to the federal government. But the 14th changed all that by making all Amendments applicable to the States and people as well, thereby virtually nullifying the 9th and 10th Amendments which were designed as protection of the States and the people in all areas not specifically enumerated in the Constitution. Section One of the 14th reads: "No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States." Also, the "due process of law" phrase which appears in the 5th as applying only to the federal government, was now specifically applied to the States and the people as well.. Again we quote: "Numerous Supreme Court decisions have since interpreted this linkage as enforcing upon the States many of the guarantees stipulated in the Federal Bill of Rights....Similarly, the phrase 'equal protection of the laws has,, within the past few decades, been employed by the Supreme Court as a weapon with which to strike down State racial ordinances, such as school segregation."

Meritt Newby of American Challenge wrote: "If you will diligently research the history of the 14th Amendment from 1868 as to jurisdiction of the federal government over the States and the people, I know you will find facts that will amaze you. Also, check the Civil Rights Acts from 1957, all enforced under the 14th Amendment....The only way to get illegal Amendments, illegal Laws and Treaties off the Law Books is Outright Repeal! About the only right that We, the People and the States have left is Repeal!"

Thus saith the Lord, Stand ye in the ways, and see, and ask for the old paths, where is the good ways, and walk therein, and ye shall find rest for your souls. But they said, We will not walk therein. Also I set watchmen over you, saying, Hearken to the sound of the trumpet. But they said, we will not hearken." (Jeremiah 6:16-17).

A NECESSARY WAR?

"I think the Communist conspiracy is merely a branch of a much bigger conspiracy," Dr. Bella Dodd, former member of the National Committee of the US Communist Party told W. Cleon Skousen, author of The Naked Capitalist. Dr. Dodd "first became aware of some mysterious superleadership right after World War II when the US Communist Party had difficulty getting instructions from Moscow on several vital matters requiring immediate attention. The American Communist Hierarchy was told that any time they had an emergency of this kind they should contact any one of three designated persons at the Waldorf Towers. Not one of these three was a Russian. Nor were any of them Communists. In fact, all three were extremely wealthy American capitalists." Dr. Dodd said, "I would certainly like to find out who is really running things."

Bear this in mind when you consider how quickly and unexpectedly and without formal Congressional approval, George Bush ordered 250,000 American servicemen and women to be sent to a war zone in the Persian Gulf; and likewise how quickly and unexpectedly Mikhail Gorbachev approved sanctions against and condemned the actions of Saddam Hussein of Iraq, whose million man army is supplied by, advised by, and probably managed by Soviet military officers.

Regarding Bush, columnist Charley Reese wrote: "'Lyndon Baines' Bush ought to be impeached. He has made his Gulf of Tonkin speech and, like the original, it's a big fat fib....Let me put this matter of the Persian Gulf in perspective: 1). Up to the time of Bush's speech, Iraq neither interrupted nor threatened to interrupt our oil supply - nor anyone else's. Iraq is in the business of selling oil. Unsold oil is about as valueless as sand. 2). We do not have any mutual defense treaties with Kuwait, Saudi Arabia or any other Persian Gulf state. 3). Who sits on the thrones in those countries has nothing to do with us. 4). The Constitution does not give the president the power to put this nation into a war. After two unconstitutional major wars, it is time for the American people to demand their elected officials obey their oaths of office. Without a declaration of war from Congress, and in the absence of attack against us, there is no authority to shoot anybody....Bush said we can't tolerate aggression, but he's in bed with the same Chinese dictators who invaded Tibet and continue to enjoy the fruits of that aggression. It was he, Bush, who failed to support the Lithuanians and other Baltic states, and they are the fruits of Soviet aggression. After we just invaded Panama, it's silly to claim we oppose aggression in principle."

So much for the case against Bush. Gorbachev and his dialectic strategy is more clever. Publicly he has gone right along with Bush in signing sanctions, in condemning Hussein, and in asking other nations to do the same. Yet Moscow and Baghdad were allies for eight long years as Iraq fought Iran. Peter Schweizer, a research analyst with the American Foreign Policy Council says, "As longtime allies, Moscow and Baghdad cooperate closely in military and intelligence-gathering operations. Including technical support personnel, the Soviet Union has between 3,000 and 4,000 military advisers in Iraq....While Tass has announced that 'civilians' in Kuwait and Iraq are being evacuated, no mention has been made of the military advisers and technicians who are so critical to Iraq's continued military prowess. Among these personnel are several senior officers who are reported to be members of the closest circle of military advisers to the Iraqi strongman, Saddam Hussein. KGB activities in Baghdad are so extensive, says one US intelligence official who studies the Soviet agency, 'they have penetrated every aspect of Iraqi government life to the highest levels....It would have been virtually impossible for Mr. Hussein to have launched his invasion of Kuwait without the technical and operational knowledge of Soviet military advisers in Baghdad....There is also the curious case of the Soviet arms 'embargo' announced by the Kremlin shortly after the August 2 takeover of Kuwait. Analysts in both the CIA and DIA claim that photo-reconnaissance and other intelligence sources show critical Soviet military shipments reaching Baghdad as late as August 7 - a full five days after the invasion was launched and the embargo was announced. Soviet arms sales to Iraq in the six months before the invasion were running at double the levels typical of the 1980's."

Bella Dodd said, "I would certainly like to know who is really running things." Carroll Quigley, in Tragedy and Hope, gives a partial answer: The International Bankers are running things. He wrote: "They remained different from ordinary bankers in distinctive ways: (1) they were cosmopolitan and international; (2) they were close to governments and were particularly concerned with government debts...(3) their interests were almost exclusively in bonds and very rarely in goods...(4) they were, accordingly, fanatical devotees of deflation...(5) they were almost equally devoted to secrecy and the secret use of financial influence in political life. These bankers came to be called 'international bankers' and more particularly were known as 'merchant bankers' in England, 'private bankers' in France, and 'investment bankers' in the United States." Quigley agreed with Bella Dodd in that the Communist Conspiracy is merely a branch of a much bigger conspiracy, which Quigley calls "the network;" and this network has continually financed and used the Communist Conspiracy to attain their common goal: Socialist World Government. Harold Pease, a history professor, in his The Communist-Capitalist Alliance, said: "One cannot escape the conclusion that both of these powerful agencies of world influence seem to share the strong mutual conviction that the human race must be molded into a single monolithic system of world-wide economic and political control." And now, these two agencies, supposedly opponents, have come together as friends and allies as a result of the Persian Gulf Crisis. Both George Bush of the Eastern Establishment network and Mikhail Gorbachev of the Socialist Establishment Network have jointly signed the UN Security Council Resolution which endorsed the Iraqi embargo. Then Bush invited Gorbachev to meet him in a special summit just held at Helsinki. But, even as the US and the USSR condemn Iraq, Colonel-General Albert Mikhaylovich Makashov, top Soviet expert on tactical warfare, is in Baghdad. He reportedly advised Hussein's army on how to capture Kuwait, and is still in Baghdad at this writing, supposedly advising Saddam Hussein in all future military matters.

So here is the seeming contradiction: the USSR is allied with the US against Iraq, but at the same time is supplying and advising the Iraqi million-man army. How this can be is explained in an important but little known Report From Iron Mountain which tells us that until a new system is established (World Government), "War has provided...society with a debatable system for stabilizing and controlling national economies. No alternative shown is remotely comparable in scope or effectiveness." In short, until The New World Order is firmly established and secured, wars must be fought to control national economies. In turn, the control of national economies is a principal task of the National Central Banks (FED is ours), and these Central Banks are owned and operated, with government permission, by the International Bankers. Want this more bluntly? The heads of the International Bankers (Mullins says there are four) created, financed and maintained International Communism for the purpose of making wars, which, according to the International Bankers and some Multinational CEOs, are essential to the stabilization of national economies, which in turn are essential to their survival until the New World Order and World Government are firmly established. So, here is the USSR promoting a war in the Persian Gulf and at the same time criticizing the man who started the war!!

Now, let's rationalize. In July recession had begun to be felt and talked about in the United States. The S&L scandals were still unraveling, but it was already known that they would cost taxpayers billions of dollars. Congress still had no definite plan on what to do with an unbalanced budget. To tax or not to tax and on what or how was an unanswered question. Commercial and community banks were beginning to follow the course set by the failing S&Ls. Corporations were laying off workers in the thousands, many cutting down on production. In Washington federal employes were warned that they might be working fewer days of the week and receiving smaller paychecks; or there might be 'temporary' layoffs in some departments and agencies. And national election of all congressmen and a third of the senators was due in November. Now, in case of a headline-grabbing war crisis, congressmen would be off the hook as regards all of these serious domestic problems. A national crisis sending young men and women to foreign lands would act as a smoke screen before the eyes of constituents. To the congressmen, promoting a war scare might be a seat-saving asset. As for the men who want to rule the world, conditions seemed to suggest that war was needed to stabilize the national economy and stabilize their own control. A contradiction in reason? It will cost an estimated billion dollars a month to keep our forces in a faraway war zone. But when a government is forced to spend money for some special thing, like a war, central computers and government presses seem to turn money out of nothing at a very fast pace, and the only seeming results are higher prices and a national debt reaching faster toward the stars. Considering all things, to the International Bankers and some Multinational CEOs, a war scare, even a war, would seem desirable, perhaps even necessary (to them).

In the USSR things were really bad. Unstable new governments magnified unstable economies, and aid wasn't pouring in as fast as expected. Until those new "confederated socialist democracies" that are to make up the new USSR could themselves become stabilized, foreign banks and multi-nationals were hesitant about investing as was hoped. Gorbachev & Co. needed hard cash. Rubles were not yet acceptable outside the USSR and its satellites, and internationally acceptable currency could come only from trade with foreign countries. Petroleum was as gold, something of intrinsic value that could be traded for goods and help maintain that massive military establishment that Gorbachev is not about to reduce in power. So, a crisis in the Persian Gulf would inevitably cause an increase in the price of oil, would also give the Soviet Union a firmer footing in the "treasure house of the Persian Gulf" and might even save perestroika and glasnost and peredyshka (breathing space).

Of course, to the architects of the New World Order, perhaps most important would be the breakdown of the Islamic monetary cartel and the Arab unity which threatened world currency control as well as world government. Larry Abraham referred to this in his August Insider Report: "With the fracturing of the Arab world, what heretofore has been a solid phalanx known as 'Pan-Arabism' is dead. We now have a delineation of what could be described as 'good Arabs' and 'bad Arabs.' Now that the 'white hats' and the 'black hats' are established, the 'wise men' of the New World Order will be able to punish with impunity those who don't go along with the game plan. It's called divide and conquer."

However, two dangerous possibilities remain. First, all the Arabs are agreed with Saddam Hussein in hatred of a Nation called Israel in their midst and on their land. Saddam has threatened to attack Israel if anyone attacks Iraq or Kuwait. That could reunite all of Islam and the talk of "Holy War" against all foreign devils could result. Secondly, Saddam has threatened to use terrorism as a weapon. This has already been demonstrated in his treatment of hostages. Newsweek of 9/3/90 notes: "Now that George Bush is the Great Satan, the welcome mat is out again for international hit men in Baghdad....'Saddam Hussein's tactic of choice the next month or so will be terrorism,' says Robert Kupperman of Georgetown University. 'He can use surrogates and wait us out'."

Finally a warning. This Persian Gulf crisis has become a UN operation, as was the Korean War of 1950. Only difference, then the Soviet delegate was conveniently absent when the UN Security Council voted for "police action" against North Korea. 40 years later, the Soviet delegate was conveniently present when the Council voted unanimously for sanctions against Iraq. Bush, after ordering US forces to the Gulf area, and being sure that Gorbachev would go along, despite the USSR's military alliance with Iraq, then turned the whole affair over to the UN. Since that time Bush has done nothing regarding sanctions, enforcing embargoes, or searching ships, unless first ordered or permitted to do so by UN Security Council vote. In a CNN interview with Brent Scowcroft, the national security advisor called it "the emergence of a new order (emphasis added)". "That's a strong term, said Kissinger's deputy, "but what we're seeing is the United Nations beginning to operate as it was foreseen to operate when it was established in 1945-46." The New York Times added: "But it is important to remember that the new order suits the Soviets. For the past two years, the Kremlin has become the most forceful advocate for a dynamic United Nations." Profs Weiss of Brown and Kessler of Harvard agreed that "For the Soviets today the UN is emerging not as a vehicle of retreat but as a less costly and more legitimate way to influence events." So, as a result of the Persian Gulf crisis, probably planned by a Soviet agent and activated by Bush's unilateral order, we see the diplomatic "merging" of the US and the USSR, and a revival of the original program: That the UN become a World Government which will "provide for the common defense" of the New World Order.

"For the eyes of the Lord are over the righteous, and His ears are open unto their prayers; but the face of the Lord is against them that do evil. And who is he that will harm you, if ye be followers of that which is good? But and if ye suffer for righteousness' sake, happy are ye: and be not afraid of their terror, neither be troubled." (I Peter 3:12,13,14).

ISAIAH'S JOB

Albert J. Nock

One evening last autumn, I sat long hours with a European acquaintance while he expounded a politico-economic doctrine which seemed sound as a nut and in which I could find no defect. At the end, he said with great earnestness: "I have a mission to the masses. I feel that I am called to get the ear of the people. I shall devote the rest of my life to spreading my doctrine far and wide among the populace. What do you think?:

An embarrassing question in any case, and doubly so under the circumstances, because my acquaintance is a very learned man, one of the three or four really first-class minds that Europe produced in his generation, and naturally I, as one of the unlearned, was inclined to regard his lightest word with reverence amounting to awe.

I referred him to the story of the prophet Isaiah....I shall paraphrase the story in our common speech since it has to be pieced out from various sources....

The prophet's career began at the end of King Uzziah's reign, say about 740 B.C. This reign was uncommonly long, almost half a century, and apparently prosperous. It was one of those prosperous reigns, however--like the reign of Marcus Aurelius at Rome, or the administration of Eubulus at Athens, or of Mr. Coolidge at Washington--where at the end the prosperity suddenly peters out and things go by the board with a resounding crash.

In the year of Uzziah's death, the Lord commissioned the prophet to go out and warn the people of the wrath to come. "Tell them what a worthless lot they are," he said. "Tell them what is wrong, and why, and what is going to happen unless they have a change of heart and straighten up. Don't mince matters. Make it clear that they are positively down to their last chance. Give it to them good and strong and keep on giving it to them. I suppose perhaps I ought to tell you," He added, "that it won't do any good. The official class and their intelligentsia will turn up their noses at you, and the masses will not even listen. They will all keep on their own ways until they carry everything down to destruction, and you will probably be lucky if you get out with your life."

Pardon Our Delay. Congress has adjourned but many of its last minute law-making efforts await approval or veto by President Bush. Character and composition of the new Congress await election results. A stalemate allows attempts at settlement short of war by the Soviet Union and the UN, and makes the Persian Gulf Crisis outcome unpredictable. At home, recession is admitted, but its effects, as well as the cost of the S&L Scandal, the deployment of 250,000 Americans in the Middle East, and the cancellation of foreign government debts make our economic future questionable. For these and similar reasons, we prefer to wait until we can separate supposition from fact before reporting in detail. Instead, we present an essay that has guided the nature of much of our reporting for the past years. Albert Jay Nock (1870-1945) edited magazines, authored articles, wrote books dealing with freedom and government. Isaiah's Job was republished as an essay in July 1962 by The Foundation for Economic Education, Inc., 30 Broadway, Irvington-on-Hudson, NY 10533. This is a reprint of that essay.

Isaiah had been very willing to take on the job--in fact, he had asked for it--but the prospect put a new face on the situation. It raised the obvious question: "Why if all that were so--if the enterprise were to be a failure from the start--was there any sense in starting it?"

"Ah," the Lord said, "you do not get the point. There is a Remnant there that you know nothing about. They are obscure, unorganized, inarticulate, each one rubbing along as best he can. They need to be encouraged and braced up because when everything has gone to the dogs, they are the ones who will come back and build up a new society; and meanwhile, your preaching will reassure them and keep them hanging on. Your job is to take care of the Remnant, so be off now and set about it...."

What do we mean by the masses, and what by the Remnant? As the word masses is commonly used, it suggests agglomerations of poor and underprivileged people, laboring people, proletarians. But it means nothing like that; it means simply the majority. The mass-man is one who has neither the force of intellect to apprehend the principles issuing in what we know as the humane life, nor the force of character to adhere to those principles steadily and strictly as laws of conduct; and because such people make up the great, the overwhelming majority of mankind, they are called collectively the masses. The line of differentiation between the masses and the Remnant is set invariably by quality, not by circumstance. The Remnant are those who by force of intellect are able to apprehend these principles, and by force of character are able, at least measurably, to cleave to them. The masses are those who are unable to do either.

The picture which Isaiah presents of the Judean masses is most unfavorable. In his view, the mass-man--be he high or be he lowly, rich or poor, prince or pauper--gets off very badly. He appears as not only weak-minded and weak-willed, but as by consequence knavish, arrogant, grasping, dissipated, unprincipled, unscrupulous....

As things now stand, Isaiah's job seems rather to go begging. Everyone with a message nowadays is, like my venerable European friend, eager to take it to the masses. His first, and only thought is of mass-acceptance and mass-approval. His great care is to put his doctrine in such shape as will capture the masses' attention and interest....

The main trouble with this [mass-man approach] is its reaction upon the mission itself. It necessitates an opportunist sophistication of one's doctrine, which profoundly alters its character and reduces it to a mere placebo. If, say, you are a preacher, you wish to attract as large a congregation as you can, which means an appeal to the masses; and this, in turn, means adapting the terms of your message to the order of intellect and character that the masses exhibit. If you are an educator, say with a college on your hands, you wish to get as many students as possible, and you whittle down your requirements accordingly. If a writer, you aim at getting many readers; if a publisher, many purchases; if a philosopher, many converts; if a musician, many auditors; and so on. But as we see on all sides, in the realization of these several desires, the prophetic message is so heavily adulterated with trivialities, in every instance, that its effect on the masses is merely to burden them in their sins. Meanwhile, the Remnant, aware of this adulteration and of the desires that prompt it, turn their backs on the prophet and will have nothing to do with him or his message. Isaiah, on the other hand, worked under no such disabilities. He preached to the masses only in the sense that he preached publicly. Anyone who liked might listen; anyone who liked might pass by. He knew that the Remnant would listen....

The Remnant want only the best you have, whatever that may be. Give them that, and they are satisfied; you have nothing more to worry about....

In a sense, nevertheless, as I have said, it is not a rewarding job....A prophet of the Remnant will not grow purse-proud on the financial returns from his work, nor is it likely that he will get any great renown out of it. Isaiah's case was exceptional to this second rule, and there are others--but not many.

It may be thought, then, that while taking care of the Remnant is no doubt a good job, it is not an especially interesting job because it is as a rule so poorly paid. I have my doubts about this. There are other compensations to be got out of a job besides money and notoriety; and some of them seem substantial enough to be attractive. Many jobs which do not pay well are yet profoundly interesting, as, for instance, the job of the research student in the sciences is said to be; and the job of looking after the Remnant seems to me, as I have surveyed it for many years from my seat in the grandstand, to be as interesting as any that can be found in the world.

What chiefly makes it so, I think, is that in any given society, the Remnant are always so largely an unknown quantity. You do not know, and will never know, more than two things about them. You can be sure of those--dead sure, as our phrase is--but you will never be able to make even a respectable guess of anything else. You do not know, and will never know, who the Remnant are, nor where they are, nor how many of them there are, nor what they are doing or will do. Two things you know, and no more: first, that they exist; second, that they will find you. Except for these two certainties, working for the Remnant means working in impenetrable darkness; and this, I should say, is just the condition calculated most effectively to pique the interest of any prophet who is properly gifted with the imagination, insight, and intellectual curiosity necessary to a successful pursuit of his trade.

The other certainty which the prophet of the Remnant may always have is that the Remnant will find him. He may rely on that with absolute assurance. They will find him without his doing anything about it; in fact, if he tried to do anything about it, he is pretty sure to put them off. He does not need to advertise for them nor resort to any schemes of publicity to get their attention. If he is a preacher or a public speaker, for example, he may be quite indifferent to going on show at receptions, getting his picture printed in the newspapers, or furnishing autobiographical material for publication on the side of "human interest." If a writer, he need not make a point of attending any pink teas, autographing books at wholesale, nor entering into any specious freemasonry with reviewers....

The certainty that the Remnant will find him, however, leaves the prophet as much in the dark as ever, as helpless as ever in the matter of putting any estimate of any kind upon the Remnant; for, as appears in the case of Elijah, he remains ignorant of who they are that have found him or where they are or how many. They do not write in and tell him about it, after the manner of those who admire the vedettes of Hollywood, nor yet do they seek him out and attack themselves to his person. They are not that kind. They take his message much as drivers take the directions on a roadside signboard--that is, with very little thought about the signboard, beyond being gratefully glad that it happened to be there, but with serious thought about the directions.

This impersonal attitude of the Remnant wonderfully enhances the interest of the imaginative prophet's job. Once in a while, just about often enough to keep his intellectual curiosity in good working order, he will quite accidentally come upon some distant reflection of his own message in an unsuspecting quarter. This enables him to entertain himself in his leisure moments with agreeable speculations about the course his message may have taken in reaching that particular quarter, and about what came of it after it got there. Most interesting of all are those instances, if one could only run them down (but one may always speculate about them), where the recipient himself no longer knows where nor when nor from whom he got the message--or even where, as sometimes happens, he has forgotten that he got it anywhere and imagines that it is all a self-sprung idea of his own.....

THE BEHEADED BILL OF RIGHTS

On the inside cover of the Oct. 22, 1990 issue of The New American there appears an excellent reproduction of The Bill of Rights, the first Ten Amendments to the United States Constitution. Unfortunately, but with no blame on the part of the publishers, something very important was missing. Like the Constitution of which it is a part, the Bill of Rights also contains a Preamble. But sometime in the 1930s, in the New Deal drive to make of this Representative Republic a Fascist Welfare State Democracy, the Preamble disappeared. In all future publications the Preamble did not appear. If the Constitution itself were suddenly presented without its preamble, the very meaning and intent of the document would be lost. The Preamble gives the reason why the Constitution exists: "...to form a more perfect union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, provide for the common defense, promote the general Welfare, and secure the Blessings of liberty to ourselves and our Posterity..."

In the same sense the Bill of Rights restricted the powers of the federal government, and limited the people in no way. Why was there a conspiracy to decapitate the Preamble from the Bill of Rights? Without it, it became possible to alter the intent of the lawmakers of 1791 and make of their work a limitation on the people and their State governments, making the federal government the fearful master against which President George Washington, Patrick Henry and most all of the Founding Fathers warned when they demanded the addition of the first Ten Amendments to the United States Constitution.

Following is the decapitated Preamble to the Bill of Rights. Read it carefully and you'll understand why conspirators sought to delete what may be the most important part of the United States Constitution.

PREAMBLE

"The conventions of a number of the States having at the time of their adoption of the Constitution, expressed a desire, in order to prevent mis-construction or abuse of its powers, that further declaratory and restrictive clauses should be added: And as extending the ground of public confidence in the Government, will best insure the beneficent ends of its institution."

Then followed the Ten Amendments which the lawmakers of 1791 intended to be restrictions on the powers of the federal government, and all rights not enumerated in the Constitution, reserved to the States and the people. Can you wonder why this Preamble is never included in official documents or in school textbooks?

"TO THE BRINK"

It may have been our last chance to save the representative republican form of government which our Founding Fathers gave us. In the November 6th election not enough Americans voted, and not enough of those who did go to the polls voted to throw out those in office. 96% of the incumbents won or bought their re-election. Those who call themselves Democrats won nine more seats in the House, plus one newcomer who had the decency to call himself a Socialist but who will vote with the Democrats. Plus one more seat in the Senate. At State and local levels there were some important victories for the common sense section of the citizenry. But at the federal level the drive into recession, higher taxes, toward corporate socialism and on into the New World Order will continue. One news analyst summarized: "The people ratified a divided government in which neither President Bush nor the Democratic-controlled Congress has the upper hand. Despite widely held feelings that the country is on the wrong track, the election's outcome can only mean more of the same." One thing should have become obvious. The only way a new and really representative Congress can be elected is to limit the time a congressman can stay in office. Mandatory retirement, as with the presidency, is essential if the perennial politicians are to be put out to pasture.

Also obvious as a result of the election is the fact that George Bush as a domestic leader is at the bottom of the poll. The Republican who was in charge of this year's congressional campaign wrote a memo advising all Republican candidates that it might be wise to disassociate themselves from President Bush and go it alone. "Coattails? This President doesn't even have a coat," observed columnist Cal Thomas. "Right now the only thing keeping Democrats out of the White House is their failure to create a strong national leader. With their growing majority in Congress and given the reluctance of the current President to fight, they may not need one. They can get Mr. Bush to do most of their dirty work for them and, when things go bad, they can blame the Republicans. It's the ideal cover."

It's becoming more and more apparent that the Insiders have their weaknesses. Carter in the White House might be called a Rockefeller error. But with Bush there was every indication that he, along with Mikhail Gorbachev, would complete the creation of the New World Order in the 90s. Bush was trained in every facet of foreign affairs: Ambassador to China, special representative to the UN, head of the CIO, Drug Czar, etc., etc. But his trainers neglected one thing: they forgot to teach him how to handle domestic affairs. There were nice catch phrases: "Read my lips", "A million points of light", "No new taxes", Education President, Clean Air President....but no capable National President. Only a foreign affairs expert with too much love of China.

So, his domestic defeat showing, President Bush went back to the thing he knew best: presiding over a Crisis in the Gulf. He let it be known that if he decided to go to war he wouldn't ask Congress for permission. But he also made it plain that a UN Mandate would replace any US Declaration of War. Then he decided to send another 200,000 servicemen, and women, to the Gulf Area. He told them there would be no replacements; they'd just stay there for the duration, whether it be months or years. When time was dragging out and the allies were getting restive, he sent

Secretary of State Baker to the various capitols to see whether these nations were still with him. Baker came home with a qualified report. The consensus seemed to read: They all would defend in their various ways, but none would support an attack on Iraqi. There's a word for this sort of situation, one popularized by John Foster Dulles when he was President Eisenhower's Secretary of State. It's called Brinkmanship, which Webster's New World Dictionary defines as "the policy of pursuing a hazardous course of action to the brink of catastrophe."

The mention of Dulles and Brinkmanship calls for some background material. President George Bush was not the first American leader to promote a New World Order. John Foster Dulles beat him to it by about 38 years. John and his brother were charter members of and helped found the Council on Foreign Relations, were with Colonel House's The Inquiry group in Paris where the idea of the CFR was conceived. In 1952 John Dulles was chairman of an inter-church Commission to study the Bases of a Just and Durable Peace, a project of the Federal Council of Churches that was later reorganized and renamed the National Council of Churches. Dulles and his group of 375 delegates representing five denominations, seven seminary heads, eight college and university presidents, and practically all of the ranking officials of the Federal Council and several laymen who were also members of the CFR. President Bush could probably adopt this program as it was written and published 38 years ago. The program, as it appeared in Time Magazine, March 16, 1942:

Ultimately "a world government of delegated powers;" complete abandonment of US isolationism; strong immediate limitations on national sovereignty; international control of all armies & navies; a universal system of money; worldwide freedom of immigration; progressive elimination of all tariff and quota restrictions on world trade; autonomy for all subject and colonial peoples; no punitive reparations, no humiliating degrees of war guilt, no arbitrary dismemberment of nations; and a democratically controlled international bank to make development capital available in all parts of the world. The program was adopted by the representatives of 30-odd denominations. Said the sponsors: "We must seek to translate our beliefs into practical realities and to create a public opinion which will insure that the United States shall play its full part in the creation of a moral way of international living." They also "urged taxation designed to the end that our wealth may be more equitably distributed. It urged experimentation with government and cooperative ownership" (meaning fascism-Ed.).

In 1945 Dulles served as an adviser at the San Francisco Conference which approved the United Nations Charter. In 1951 he was chief American negotiator of the peace treaty which ended war with Japan. And by 1953 he had become Secretary of State under President Eisenhower. By that time the "UN Police Action" in Korea was becoming stalemated and the scene had shifted to Southeast Asia. The French had given up and the US government began to take on the burden of "halting the march of Communism" in that part of the world. There had been no US Declaration of War against Korea, it was strictly a UN action. Dulles knew that there was inevitable military involvement coming up in Vietnam, and, as a promoter of World Government, he wanted to be sure that the Vietnam War would also be a UN War. So he almost singlehandedly created the Southeast Asia Treaty Organization (SEATO), which was an agency of the United Nations (Article 52, United Nations Charter). Thus, there was no US Declaration of War in regard to Vietnam. President Johnson did ask Congress for permission to defend American personnel and interests after the alleged and never confirmed sinking of two American destroyers. But officially, the Vietnam War was a SEATO operation, and SEATO was an agency of the UN. Note that President Bush has been just as careful to make of this "Gulf Crisis" a UN operation. He has made not a single move in Saudi Arabia without first obtaining a UN mandate. So, once again as in Korea and Vietnam, our servicemen and women are, in effect, part of a multi-national United Nations force. Hence, Bush says he needs no Congressional approval for his action; although the leaders of the new Congress are at last beginning to disagree.

We mentioned Dulles in connection with Brinkmanship, which we termed Bush's present policy. A short quote from Carroll Quigley's Tragedy and Hope should suffice. Regarding the period 1953 to 1960, he wrote: "This period, associated with the influence of Secretary of State John Foster Dulles, sought to deal with foreign crises by the use of slogans and quite unrealistic policies which could never have been used. Our allies, the neutrals, and even the Russians were ignored and often despised, while the State Department engaged in what Dulles himself called, in January 1956, 'going to the brink' of war."

More Background. A little over ten years ago, on 10/10/80 to be precise, we wrote: "A quarter of a century ago the builders of the New World Order were engaged in a two-part program: To dismember the Empires of the West and to weaken the Nations of the West - especially the United States of America - in order to create a 'balance of power' between the NATO Nations and the Warsaw Pact slave states. These two Regional World Sectors were to be equal in all things including military power, diplomatic influence, economic strength, etc. This 'balance of power' concept is best understood if we consider the import of our official defense policy which is known by the acronym MAD (Mutual Assured Destruction)...The first part of the Planners' Program, the dismemberment of the Empires of the West, would rob Britain, France, the Netherlands, Portugal, Spain, et al of their colonies in Africa, Asia, and Central America, so that scores of mini-states could be created for exploitation and development. Most of the selected leaders of these mini-states would have neither the character nor the ability to govern their people and resist economic exploitation. Where competent and able leaders did exist - Tshombe of the Congo, Batista of Cuba, Somoza of Nicaragua, etc. - they would be disposed of so there would be no interference with exploitation (by either the Communists or the Monopoly Capitalists, who seemed to be in league with each other)."

In that summary we did not know that within little more than a decade NATO and the Warsaw Pact States would be merged as the Nations of the West would become the Provinces of Europe, to be merged with Gorbachev's Social Democracies of the East.

Also in our report of 10/10/80 we neglected to give details concerning the Middle East. At the end of World War One all of that part of the world came under the mandate, protection, suzerainty or whatever you might call it, of France and Britain. There were no longer any independent Nations or States in that area. Independence would be granted and Nations named later, as it seemed best to the Planners of the New World Order. Ivor Benson, editor of the newsletter Behind the News, explained the situation in a supplement published in October, 1990 by The Canadian Intelligence Service monthly. Reporting on a summit meeting that was held in Cairo by 12 of the 20 Arab states who met to decide how to prevent Saddam Hussein from doing to all of the Gulf oil states what he has done to Kuwait. Benson wrote:

"What the Cairo summit demonstrated once again is that the circumstances of history have produced a number of Muslim states, in Arabia as elsewhere, which are incapable of achieving any effective unity....The Dispensation now prevailing in the Middle East, all the way around from Palestine and Lebanon to Yemen, is highly artificial. States like Kuwait, the United Arab Emirates, Bahrein, Saudi Arabia, etc. have no natural right to exist; all of them were the creations of Western economic and political imperialism and colonialism. Their territorial boundaries, like those of innumerable other new states in Africa and elsewhere in the so-called Third World, were drawn by external powers and are unrelated to the identity and distribution of the populations they enclose. Saddam Hussein knows that by harping that theme he has a means of reaching the millions of Arabs over the heads of the present rulers. He stated in a message broadcast over Iraq radio: 'Through its partitioning of the lands, Western imperialism founded weak statelets and installed the families which rendered to it services....imperialism attended to its interest in oil and secured geographic positions on the coasts of seas, oceans and gulfs when it established these dwarf states.' All the Arab leaders are aware of the urgent need for unity with which to confront the threat of an expansionist Isreal now firmly planted on Arab soil, but the ruling families in those many statelets are understandably disinclined to surrender the enormous wealth and power conferred on them by the imperialist powers. A situation has been created in which there is a widening separation of interest between the rulers and the bulk of those ruled....And so the leaders of the many statelets find themselves in a highly invidious situation: they want to save themselves by stopping Saddam in his tracks; they know they cannot do that by themselves; and they know that by allowing the foreign powers to come back and do it for them they will be further alienating themselves from their own people....So the great peril which now threatens the populations of the Western countries, just as much as it threatens the Arab populations, is another great war in which the only possible winner would be that great financial power which has already given the world an age of conflict and suffering unprecedented in recorded history." Once in December a war fleet was assembled awaiting annihilation. Now in December a third of a million of our Nation's finest will be concentrated in a desert area where a thermo-nuclear strike or a chemical attack could destroy them all, as well as the ability of the living to defend their homeland. Mr. Bush, what is the "principle" involved?

"This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, Without natural affection, truce-breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, Traitors, heady, highminded, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God; having a form of godliness but denying the power thereof: from such turn away." (II Timothy 3:1-5).

CONSTITUTION OR CHARTER?

"President Bush lost an irreplaceable pin supporting his mission in the Persian Gulf on Thanksgiving Day," said Peter Stothard, Washington based US editor of the Times of London. "He heard the news of Margaret Thatcher's resignation as he celebrated the holiday in the Saudi desert - and it clearly came as a shock. Americans who had come to take Mrs. Thatcher for granted during her 11 years of power were not prepared for her passing." As a foe of Fabian Socialism and a defender of British sovereignty, of the British passport and the British pound, she was the one important stumbling block holding back the political birth of Europe and the creation of a single currency in the the about-to-be-established Regional World Government which may include the Soviet Union with its 15 republics, and the Warsaw Pact Nations.

Francis Loenheim, who served in the historical division of Eisenhower's State Department, said of Mrs. Thatcher: "Perhaps the American political leader that Thatcher resembled most clearly was the late Sen. Robert Taft. Like the Ohio Republican, she stood inflexibly for removing what she regarded as the intolerable abuses of powerful labor unions, for free-market economics and strict fiscal conservatism, and last but far from least, for the preservation of her country's national sovereignty. Thatcher was and remained the unflagging enemy of the full-blown 'welfare state' and the mind-set that produced it. As she put it forcefully at her first party conference after becoming Conservative leader in February 1975: 'Britain and socialism are not the same thing, and as long as I have health and strength they never will be....Let me give you my vision: a man's right to work as he will, to spend what he earns, to own property, to have the state as servant and not as master; these are the British inheritance. They are the essence of a free society, and on that freedom all our other freedoms depend'....Whether that political philosophy will long survive her departure may be like asking if Reaganomics can survive without its original progenitor in the White House."

No matter how history will judge her, she was the last Western head of government to defend the conservative philosophy (George Bush please note) and her passing makes the way so much easier for the establishment of the Socialist New World Order. Of course her resignation will have no immediate effect on the preplanned Gulf Crisis. On the day Thatcher submitted her resignation, her Defense Secretary announced the sending of more British troops to the Persian Gulf. But Bush has created for himself what may become an impossible mission. In the first place, he acted unconstitutionally, illegally and dictatorially in the ordering of American Servicemen and women to Saudi Arabia without first consulting Congress. The Constitution is very specific: "The Congress shall have power:....To declare war....and make rules concerning captures on land and water." Only Congress has such power. But the Constitution was violated in this respect by President Johnson in the Vietnam War. So Congress decided that a War Powers Resolution should be passed in order to prevent any such further action on the part of any future President. The Constitution was violated again in the case of the invasions of Grenada and Panama. President Bush did the same in the case of the Persian Gulf, but for a different purpose. He wanted to promote his dream of the New World Order, by making of the Persian Gulf Crisis a totally international affair, with the United Nations Charter superseding the United States Constitution, by Mandate rather than Declaration. So, four months later he also ignored the War Powers Act. In case the WPA is unfamiliar, let us explain.

The War Powers Resolution was ratified in 1973 by Congress over a presidential veto. Its purpose was "to fulfill the intent of the framers of the Constitution, and to insure that the activation of our Armed Forces is promulgated only through the collective judgment of both the Congress and the President." It provided that the President could take unilateral military action provided that (1) there is a declaration of war (which only Congress can make), (2) there is specific statutory authority (which only Congress can do), and there is a national emergency created by an attack on the United States. This War Powers Resolution was enacted "to prevent another situation in which the President could gradually build up American involvement in foreign war without congressional approval (as in Vietnam), eventually presenting Congress with a full-blown undeclared war which on a practical basis it was powerless to stop." The Act specifies that the President "shall consult Congress before introducing U.S. Armed Forces into hostilities... or imminent involvement in hostilities" and "shall consult regularly with the Congress." The President may not introduce the military into hostilities "from any provision of law" unless said law states that it is the "specific statutory authorization" required by the War Powers Resolution; also, he may not do so by "any treaty" unless that treaty conforms as well to the WPA. The US is not under any required treaty agreement with Saudi Arabia that would necessitate such action. WPA requires that the President must certify in writing to Congress any use of US Armed Forces within 90 days. President Bush unilaterally activated our Armed Forces in the Middle East on August 9, 1990. This 90-day period ended on November 10, 1990. The President, as Commander-in-Chief of our Armed Forces and the head of our Executive branch, has consulted only with the leaders of the House and Senate but not with the required "collective judgment of the Congress." As of this writing Congress has not declared war, has not enacted specific statutory authorization, and the United States of America has not been attacked. The War Powers Resolution has not been invoked by the President or Congress; therefore Bush is acting entirely outside the U.S. Constitution.

But Bush is being very careful not to act outside the United Nations Charter or the Security Council. He did not want a US Declaration of War, and he ignored the War Powers Act. He did want a United Nations Mandate for what has previously been called "Police Action." This would be in the nature of Orwell's doublespeak: a Declaration for Peace, or as the historian Harry Elmer Barnes would have phrased it, "Perpetual War for Perpetual Peace." Operation Desert Shield has been called an action to save Saudi Arabia and the world's oil supply. But more importantly, Desert Shield was planned to accomplish a fifth Objective, which Bush told Congress and the world was an operation to build a New World Order. Since such a New World Order requires some type of World Government, the United Nations has been so designated by the architects of this New World Order. Such a government requires a police force, and the United States troops provide such a force. Bush hopes that the Soviet military will also act as a world security force; but Gorbachev has been careful to play both sides against the middle in Operation Desert Shield. As for American troops acting under the UN banner instead of Old Glory, as happened in Korea and Vietnam, a similar situation might have occurred at the time of the French Revolution. France had been helpful in our American revolution; and there were many Americans who thought America should go to the aid of the French revolutionaries. John Quincy Adams wrote:

"America goes not abroad in search of monsters to destroy. She is the well-wisher to the freedom and independence of all. She is the champion and vindicator only of her own. She will recommend the general cause by the countenance of her voice, and the benignant sympathy of her example. She well knows that by once enlisting under other banners than her own, were they even the banners of foreign independence, she would involve herself beyond the power of extrication in all the wars of interest and intrigue, of individual avarice, envy and ambition, which assumes the colors and usurps the standards of freedom. The fundamental maxims of her policy would insensibly change from liberty to force." (How right he was).

As we said, Bush wanted a UN Mandate calling for military action against Saddam's forces. And this has been the one thing that has prevented Bush from ordering an attack. He hasn't been able to get the kind of mandate that he desired. As presently set up, there are fifteen members of the UN Security Council, five permanent members (US, UK, USSR, France and Red China), and ten rotating members chosen for shorter terms by the General Assembly (presently Canada, Finland, Ethiopia, Ivory Coast, Zaire, Romania, Malaysia, Colombia, Yemen and Cuba). As the media have reported, both President Bush and Secretary of State Baker have been traveling from country to country, trying to get these members to agree to the mandate calling for immediate aggression. But neither Bush nor Baker has been successful. Gorbachev suggested negotiated settlement. Much the same from France. China agreed to refrain from voting. Of the other ten, four were still undecided at the time this was written. But after extensive travel and talk with heads of state in the crucial countries, Bush was forced to compromise. The new mandate would not call for immediate action, but would set a January deadline for Iraq to withdraw from Kuwait or face potential attack. Our report is written before the expected Security Council vote on 11/29/90, but there was considerable doubt as to its passage. Regardless of the rest of the members, those five permanent members must approve the mandate if it is to pass. Regardless of what the media have been reporting, if the USSR, China or France say no, then Bush & Co. would have to start all over again. But this much is certain: whether there is to be a war does not depend on Bush. It depends on the UN. And that enhances the UN's hope of becoming an actual world government.

When the UN was created and its Charter ratified by treaty, its creators propagandized it as "man's last hope." But their attempts to make of it a "government of a global society," resulted in failure. In the 1970s one of the chief planners of the New World Order, Harlan Cleveland, CFR, TLC, Aspen Institute director, former assistant secretary of state, once Ambassador to NATO, wrote that "Today the UN reflects quite accurately the political turmoil and tensions of a world in deep transition. But as presently organized and used by its members, it is ill-adapted to arrange the new bargains that are urgently needed, or for getting decisions made on a lengthening list of new global issues." So he suggested a different approach, which was adopted by the Insiders. Instead of starting at the top of the pyramid and trying to make the UN an actual world government, they would start at the bottom and work, piece by piece, toward the building of the global structure. Cleveland called it "piecemeal functionalism," proceeding "institution by institution", "treaty by treaty", piece by piece. Treaties and agreements dealing with separate issues would be created, promoted, and ratified by member governments of the UN. If these treaties and agreements could then be managed and executed by agencies of the UN, then such agencies would become similar to our own federal executive departments, agencies and organizations. Thus, with the Security Council as executive department, with the World Court serving as Judiciary, and if a police force could be added and made permanent, then you'd have a functioning World Government. The multinational military force in the Middle East, acting under mandate from the UN, gives you a part of George Bush's vision concerning the New World Order.

One of the accomplished examples of creating world government by treaty is Treaty #97-19, "Constitution of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization" (UNIDO). Note that this is not an ordinary treaty, it is a Constitution. There is a difference. A treaty is "a formal agreement between two or more nations;" while while a Constitution is "The system of fundamental laws and principles of a government, state, society, corporation, etc., written or unwritten." In other words, UNIDO is not simply a treaty agreement, it comprises a body of laws that are to be observed and obeyed by the citizens of every government ratifying UNIDO. In 1983 the US Senate ratified UNIDO and President Reagan signed it into law. In its own field this UN Constitution outranks and supersedes the United States Constitution.

UNIDO's piece in the piecemeal functionalism plan is to share the wealth of all on a global scale, "to be achieved through the elimination of economic inequalities, the establishment of rational and equitable economic relations, implementation of dynamic social and economic changes and the encouragement of necessary structural changes in the development of the world economy." And the United States is committed by treaty to help carry out this socialistic program dictated by the UN, since our Constitution has been voided in this respect.

Likewise, George Bush knows that our Constitution gives Congress the power "to declare war, to raise and support armies, to provide and maintain a navy, to make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces..." But under the UN Charter, a treaty, Congress no longer has any such power; and George Bush knows it and takes advantage of the situation to make his dream come true. He acts in accordance with Article 39 of the UN Charter which reads: "The Security Council shall determine the existence of any threat to the peace, breach of the peace, or act of aggression and shall make recommendations, or decide what measures shall be taken..." Meanwhile, Gorbachev plays both ends against the middle, and we accomodate him as he waits.

"Am I therefore become your enemy, because I tell you the truth?"

"Except the Lord build the house, they labour in vain that build it: except the Lord keep the city, the watchman waketh, but in vain."

(Galations 4:16 and Psalm 127:1).

NACOM REVISITED

And it came to pass that the United Nations, acting as the World Government, decreed that its massive mercenary military force, composed mostly of Americans, would not be permitted to move belligerently against the outlaw state of Iraq until after January 15, if ever. Thus came a lull like the eye of a hurricane becalming the sands of time for a spell. President Bush thereupon gave his Secretary of State, James Baker, full power to fly to Baghdad, confront, negotiate, and perhaps make some deal with Saddam Hussein concerning the state of besieged Kuwait, and other matters. This should have given President Bush at least a month to doff his hat as Commander-in-Chief and assume the role and duties of Chief Executive of the federal government of the United States of America. Indeed, there were and are great and important problems. Reports concerning them must have been piled high on the desk in the Oval Office awaiting executive action. Had he looked, he might have noticed a Treasury Department report which stated that the government rang up a $31.5 billion budget deficit in the very first month of the 1991 fiscal year, this reflecting the rising costs of keeping troops in the Middle East while bailing out bankrupt savings and loans at home. Don McAlvany, trustworthy intelligence advisor, noted that "America's giant paper/debt pyramid is coming apart or imploding. The great debt/speculative binge of the '80s is turning into the great hangover of the '90s. S&Ls, banks, LBOs, junk bonds, real estate, insurance companies, and money market funds are all getting caught on the downward spiraling whirlpool of delinquencies, defaults, debt implosions and bankruptcies....The newest land mine or ticking bomb is the insurance industry." Latest released figures show that over 100,000 jobs have been lost in the construction industry alone since Bush drew that line in the Saudi sands. In the past year 485,000 people have become newly unemployed, most of them managers, professionals, technicians, engineers, and even lawyers. Since ours has become virtually a welfare state, seems there should be an elected official in the White House at least worrying about the collapse of the nations' economy. When Bush and Baker wheedled eleven members of the Security Council into voting for, and China to refrain from, voting "no" on the postponement of a potential world war for at least a month, there should have been a little time for Bush to stay in Washington and do some home work at the job for which he was elected, that of being Chief Executive. But instead, the moment he put Baker in charge of our end of the war negotiations, he put on his blue nylon Air Force One jacket and flew away to Mexico, and then to the countries in South America where he promoted one remaining segment of the New World Order establishment; the one that he and his friend Gorby dream about. This, incidentally, while both the United States and what's left of the USSR are going to wrack and ruin under their leadership. Commenting on the peregrinations of our president, columnist Richard Reeves wrote that "For George Bush....Washington is an interlude. He and Boeing, manufacturer of the new 747 Air Force One, have raised presidential junketing to new heights....I guess we will have to accept the fact that only buzzing Kennebunkport with his cigarette boat is going to keep Mr. Bush from buzzing the planet in his new plane....Boeing has provided an even bigger and better magic carpet, and President Bush is sultan of all he surveys. Have a good trip, Mr. President. Don't worry about us back here or in Saudi Arabia."

There's something that bothers us about this seeming presidential lack of interest in the Nation's domestic problems. We were in China with the 4th Marines in 1929 when a stock market crash signalled the beginning of The Great Depression. So our narration would be hearsay. But honest journalists of that era told the story factually. John T. Flynn in Decline of the American Republic wrote: "Despite all the endless care exercised by the framers of the Constitution, and the judgments of the Courts for over 148 years, these revolutionary elements in the United States [Fabians, Fascists, Socialists and Megabankers-Ed.] found a way in which to complete their perversion and subversion of the Constitution without submitting these radical changes to the states - the only authority empowered to make changes in the Constitution. The stock market crash came in 1929. Thus was ushered in what came to be known as the Great Depression....The crash was followed in the next four years by a widespread flight from investment, a growing army of unemployed, the gradual undermining of our banking system, a rising tide of radical opinion in our labor unions, academic circles and certain political spheres. President Hoover struggled painfully against this current of angry agitation, but as his term neared its end, his power to do anything passed from his hands. His defeat in 1932 was clearly foreshadowed and, with the election and inauguration of President Roosevelt, the whole banking and economic system was swept into collapse. This was in 1933 and it was as of this date and amid these scenes that President Roosevelt inaugurated an incredible series of adventures that defied almost every sentence in the Constitution. In general, the President brought into existence a collection of commissions and bureaus empowered to take over the direction, supervision and in some cases the management of vast areas of American industry and finance, utterly outside the limits of his constitutional powers."

Garet Garrett in The Revolution Was wrote: "The test came in the first one hundred days. No matter how carefully a revolution may have been planned there is bound to be a crucial time. That comes when the actual seizure of power is taking place. In this case certain steps were necessary. They were difficult and daring steps. But more than that, they had to be taken in a certain sequence, with forethought and precision of timing. One out of place might have been fatal. What happened was that one followed another in exactly the right order, not one out of time or out of place. Having passed this crisis, the New Deal went on from one problem to another, taking them in proper order, according to revolutionary technique....The effect was to keep people excited about one thing at a time, and divided, while steadily through all the uproar of outrage and confusion a certain end, held constantly in view, was pursued by main intention. The end held constantly in view was power."

If you compare the events of the '30s when a New Deal in government was installed, with the events of the '90s when a New World Government is being installed, you'll understand why we who lived through those years are bothered. History does repeat, and the repetition is always far more disastrous than the previous era.

Certain steps taken in certain sequence; people kept excited about one thing at a time, and divided; with one certain end kept constantly in view. That end being power. That, said Garrett, was the New Deal blueprint. It is also the New World Order blueprint, the certain end being World Government. To attain that certain end there had to be the merging of the nations of the world. In no other way could all power and wealth of the world be centralized and controlled by one ruling elite. Following World War Two the first necessary step was the creation of the United Nations. Slowly but surely, step by step, it could be used to wipe out national sovereignty and make nations subservient to a central authority.

A second step would involve the destruction of all empires save the Soviet Union and the creation of scores of mini-states, mostly unstable, poverty stricken, dependent upon a central world authority (IMF, World Bank and similar financial institutions, and/or the Soviet Union.) And there was need for a necessary interim step: the development of a dialectical competition to be termed Capitalism (thesis) and Communism (antithesis), their competition made manifest by a Cold War between the United States and its subsidized allies, and the Soviet Union and its subject satellites. The synthesis comes with merging the two as they both compromise by becoming social democracies.

But before this ultimate merging could be completed, there first had to be various regional mergings of nations. The most successful of these (in the eyes of the planners) involved the merging of the Nations of Western Europe and Britain in a Regional World Government known commonly as Europe. Later will come the merging of 34 Nations of Eastern and Western Europe through meetings and agreements within the specially created Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe (CSCE).

Meanwhile mergers in other parts of the world were and are being developed. One is the painful process of merging all the nations of Southern Africa into a Common Market, later to become another Regional World Government. Angola and Mozambique, Zimbabwe and Namibia, all under Communist control, surround the Republic of South Africa. The creation of the South African Common Market awaits the termination of the Republic of South Africa, then Pretoria is to be named as the Capital of this Common Market. With the thorough approval of the Trilateral Commission, Japan is working toward the fulfillment of a plan halted by events following Pearl Harbor, an East Asian Co-Prosperity Sphere. This to be created in conjunction with Red China if its autocrats become amenable.

There remains the Middle East. And here are problems that a war will not solve. First, there is the Soviet desire for control of the "House of Oil." Those Soviet military councilors still remain in Iraq. The world is told differently, but the Soviets still are in charge of all important facilities in Afghanistan. Soviet air bases overlooking Iran are still in place, and none of its military bases in the Middle East have been dismantled. "Let us not forget that Iraq has had long standing privileged relations with the Soviet Union and that the USSR has in the past proved a more trustworthy ally than the USA. The Iraqi intervention in Kuwait can very well be understood as a part of a classical Soviet plan for the destabilization of the region." So wrote Jean-Marc Berthoud in "The Gulf Crisis and the Temptation of World Government," published in the December 1990 issue of Chalcedon Report, P.O.Box 158, Vallecito, CA 95251.

With the Iraq crisis on the brink; with Gorby acting as a double agent; with the Arab vs Israel controversy manifest; Bush leaves Baker in charge and proceeds with the next step toward fulfillment of his vision: the established New World Order. Greater Europe is abuilding; South African Common Market but awaits Communist takeover of RSA; reshaping of the Middle East is underway; Asian Regional Economic Spheres are progressing. All is to be accomplished by the millennial date of 2000. So now NACOM must be completed and expanded into a Two Hemisphere Common Market. Dory Owens, Miami Herald business writer reported (12/9/90): "When President Bush unveiled his plan to drop trade barriers from Alaska to Tierra Del Fuego last June, it was the strongest hemispheric initiative a US leader had proposed in almost three decades. News of the Enterprise for the Americas, which centers on trade, investment and debt forgiveness, swept over Latin America and the Caribbean like a warm, tropical breeze. Leaders throughout the region hailed it....In recent weeks several countries, including Venezuela and Chile, have asked Mexico for free-trade arrangements. Other South American countries have signed treaties among themselves to create a common market." From Monterrey, Mexico (11/28/90) came this report: "President Bush began a strong push Tuesday for a free-trade agreement that promises to fundamentally alter economic relations between Mexico and the United States....The United States already has a comprehensive trade agreement with Canada. A similar pact with Mexico could establish something akin to a North American Trade Zone." From Montevideo, Uruguay (12/5/90) this item: "President Bush called for a permanent partnership among all nations of the Americas." In Brasilia, Brazil "President Bush called for an end to the division between the Third World and the superpower nations, declaring, 'Let us instead speak of the New World.'" Similar statement calling for a Two Hemisphere Common Market and its place in the New World Order were made by Bush in Buenos Aires, Argentina; Santiago, Chile; and Caracas, Venezuela.

Get the picture? Regional Common Markets throughout the world; these economic communities then changed into political unions after the manner of EUROPE. Then, through treaties and agreements by way of UN agencies, suddenly emerges the uniting of all these Regional World Governments into a World Government.

Jean-Marc Bethroud (op cit) observes: "For our almighty financiers, whatever might be their shape, size or color, who pretend to direct the destinies of the world towards utopian world unity, imagine through their wealth to be able to control the immense war machine of the Soviet Union." We add: Even if that utopian unity is possible, there remains the answer made by the Ruler of Nations concerning the building of the first Babel; and the recorded hilarity of God when other Babels are attempted: "He that sitteth in the Heavens shall laugh: the Lord shall have them in derision. Then shall he speak unto them in his wrath, and vex them in his sore displeasure" (Psalm 2:2-4). And in this troubled holy season we are reminded of a promise and a warning recorded in 1 Peter 2:6-10:

"Wherefore also it is contained in the scripture: Behold, I lay in Sion a chief corner stone, elect, precious: and he that believeth on him shall not be confounded. Unto you therefore which believe he is precious: but unto them which is disobedient, the stone which the builders disallowed, the same is made the head of the corner. And a stone of stumbling, and a rock of offence, even to them which stumble at the word, being disobedient: wherefore also they were appointed. But ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people: that ye shew forth the praises of him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvellous light: Which in time past were not a people, but now are the people of God:..."

REALPOLITIK

Graph of our federal government at the end of the year:

Domestically, pandemonium in the waters of the Potomac;

Internationally, unplanned crisis in the shifting sands of Araby.

"Major League disarray within the Bush White House" admitted one of those unnamed administration officials so often quoted by members of the media. But in the Major Leagues there is this difference. Mostly the teams like to play at home. They don't do as well on the road. But in the case of George Bush, he prefers to play on the road. He stays away from Washington whenever he can find a plausible excuse. In the last week of November he went to Europe to see his friend Gorby and helped celebrate what was hailed as "the end of the Cold War". Then he flew to the Persian Gulf to celebrate Thanksgiving with the troops he sent there "to defend Saudi Arabia and destroy Saddam". He had to come home for three days. Then he was off to Mexico and a week in South America talking to other heads of government about their nations' part in the New World Order he and Gorby are supposedly building. When he got back to Washington, instead of dealing with a pile of important domestic problems, he spent as much time as possible playing host to foreign leaders. Like Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir who wants Bush to go to war against Iraq before Iraq goes to war against Israel. Then to, at that time, Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze who may have shattered the Bush-Gorbachev vision of their global utopia, by suddenly resigning.

Meanwhile, the domestic turmoil was beginning to threaten the President's very job, even as "Shevvy's" quitting threatened Gorby's job. The media was turning against him, called him a Democrat in disguise. Which led Don McAlvany to remark that America has only two political parties: "Socialist Party A (the Republicans) and Socialist Party B (the Democrats). Both parties are run by liberal secular humanists who are soft on abortion, homosexuality, pornography, taxes and communism; who advocate global government over American sovereignty and the Constitution; and who advocate greater and greater controls over every aspect of Americans' lives." Like rats leaving a sinking ship, people began deserting the ship of State as captained by Bush. There was Elizabeth Dole who probably has visions of a bigger job. Then William Bennett resigned as Drug Czar, accepted Bush's offer that he become chairman of the Republican National Committee, then suddenly changed his mind and refused the post "because senior White House aides (Sununu?) had misinformed him about possible restrictions on his ability to earn outside income in the party job" (Paul West in the L.A. Times.) Next came trouble from the bankers when chief of staff Sununu tried to block the reappointment of Robert Clarke as Comptroller of the Currency. Seems the Sununu move "raised serious questions that added increasing worry over a national bank crisis". so Sununu retreated on that one. But then he caused the undignified firing of Education Secretary Lauro Cavazos. Immediately thereafter that same department decided to cancel out "affirmative action" in regard to the preferential financing of minority students over others wanting to go to college. So came another compromise. Minority students would receive preferential treatment so long as somebody besides Uncle Sam paid their tuition. Meanwhile the S&L mess remains critical. Big Banks are in deep trouble. Insurance companies expect the same kind of trouble. Real estate market is in the doldrums. People are fixing up their old cars instead of buying new ones. Christmas sales were down. The hypocritical congressmen, after secretly voting themselves another raise, began worrying about what could be done to finance Bush's war, which might expand into a third world war. And during all the pandemonium occasioned by indecision and lack of leadership, another of those unidentified officials was quoted by the media as saying, "George Bush is so absorbed in the Gulf right now that he has really almost abdicated in other areas. I think this administration is in critical trouble. There's a definite lack of credibility from a standpoint of does he really have a grip on things."

The same might have been said of Bush's friend Gorbachev, especially after his right hand man Shevardnadze deserted him. This double trouble with the world leaders might cause them to become dictators in order to promote their utopian New World. More of this later, but let's put some facts together. George Bush as much as admitted that he was hoping to find a way to bring all nations together under the governorship of the United Nations, and Iraq could provide a way to do it. So the Bush administration encouraged Hussein's invasion of Kuwait, and Gorbachev's Kremlin made it possible by its military aid and aides to Iraq.

During the Cold War period the theory of Mutual Assured Destruction (MAD) was the policy. In regard to the Middle East, it could be called Mutual Assured Destabization. Back in 1979 the American embassy in Tehran was invaded and hostages taken. The story was spread that Iran was responsible and could be punished by encouraging Saddam Hussein of Iraq to move militarily against Iran. In 1980 there was no cry that Saddam's assault was a violation of international law or that Saddam was a "Hitler" because of the action. Instead, both Iran and Iraq were supplied with arms. When the war was at its height and it appeared that Iraq might lose, The New Republic (4/27/87) published an article by Daniel Pipes and Laurie Mylroie calling for aid to Iraq and explaining: "The fall of the existing regime in Iraq would enormously enhance Iranian influence, endanger the supply of oil, threaten pro-American regimes throughout the area, and upset the Arab-Israeli balance." This was the Administration policy in 1980. And we witness exactly the opposite administrative policy in 1990! This turn-about in relations between Nations is a common occurrence in history. In the 40s our enemies were Germany, Italy and Japan, and the Soviet Union was an honored ally. In the 50's we were helping to rebuild our friends, the West Germans, Italians and Japanese, and the Soviet Union had become our enemy. Now in the 90s that enemy has become our friend and we are openly aiding and hoping Gorbachev will remain as head of the Soviet Union. Some years ago the Germans coined a name for this kind of action. They called it Realpolitik. Webster defines it as "foreign policy determined by expediency rather than ethics or world opinion, power politics." But Christopher Hitchens, Washington editor of Harper's Magazine has a better definition: "Maxims of cynicism and realism - to the effect that great states have no permanent friends, but only permanent interests....there isn't a soul today in Washington who doesn't pride himself on the purity of his realpolitik. And an organization supposedly devoted to the study and promulgation of such nineteenth-century realism - the firm of Henry Kissinger Associates - has furnished the Bush administration with several of its high officers, including Brent Scowcroft and Deputy Secretary of State Lawrence Eagleberger, along with much of its expertize." (Quoted from "Why We are Stuck in the Sand. Realpolitik in the Gulf: A Game Gone Tilt" by Christopher Hitchens in Harper's Magazine, January 1991).

More realpolitik in the Gulf: As late as July 28, 1990, just five months ago, Syria was considered a top terrorist nation and therefore an enemy. Syria was instrumental in the 1983 attack on the US Marine barracks in Beirut in which 241 Marines were killed. Syria is known to be a major sponsor of such terrorist leaders as Abu Abbas, Abu Nidal, Carlos the Jackal, and others. It also has been confirmed that Syria played a part in the bombing of Pan Am 103 over Lockerbie, Scotland two years ago. And thanks to our realpolitik ally the Soviet Union, Syria has been supplied with a known $21 billion in arms plus Soviet advisors, to be used to take over Lebanon and, if and when convenient, join Iraq in attacks on Israel. Yet President Bush, in his zeal to make this the world against Iraq, made a deal with the President of Syria. If President Hafez would send 6,000 troops to guard Syria's border with Iraq and enforce the UN mandated sanctions against Iraq, then nobody would protest officially if Syria continued his conquest and takeover of Lebanon. So, on October 6th some 40,000 Syrian troops attacked East Beirut where the Christian Maronite forces under General Aoun were quartered. And the only pro-American force in all of Lebanon was destroyed, thanks to President Bush. Syria is now free to move to the south and invade Israel if and when Saddam of Iraq gives the word. This is our new ally, thanks to realpolitik, whose troops may be shooting our troops in the back if war begins.

Remember that George Bush, thanks to Gorbachev's conditional agreement, proclaimed that this was "the world against Iraq," and UN sanctions would make it so. And how much of the world is involved if war should come? Secretary of Defense admits that "the ones that have the biggest forces and that have the most at stake and the strongest commitments are the Saudis, the Brits, and the Egyptians, alongside the U.S." He added that "other members of the coalition are committed only to deterring further aggression" and not to pushing the huge and well-entrenched Iraqi army out of Kuwait. Cheney might have added that if Saddam keeps his promise and attacks Israel, no Arab forces are going to fight against Iraq. Instead, they'd join the forces that are attempting to destroy their mutual enemy, Israel; and since we are pledged to protect Israel, 400,000 of America's finest would be ambushed, surrounded and forced to fight for their very survival in what the ambushers would call a religious war.

Yet another bit of realpolitik. Soviet Russia is supposed to be an ally. But the only soviet troops in the area are in Iraq or Kuwait. Gorbachev has indicated that he will not send any Soviet troops to fight against Iraq, whether offensively or defensively. So this is Bush's "world against Iraq," American and Brits and Saudis if in defense. And with Margaret Thatcher's retirement, there's a question as to how much more help could be expected from Britain. There's a lot of oil in the North Sea.

There is this hopeful note. January 15 is no longer a target date. General Walker, second in command of US forces in Saudi Arabia, said some heavy and necessary equipment won't arrive by that date. And Senate majority leader George Mitchell adds: "If we must use force ultimately, I will favor that. But I don't think Jan. 15 is the time for that." As of this writing, the way almost everyone but President Bush and Prime Minister Shamir are seeking ways to keep those "world forces" ready to attack, it begins to appear that, barring some unexpected and unauthorized shot being fired, something short of war will eventuate.

As we write this the Congress of Peoples Deputies meets in Moscow, has refused to drop the word socialism and the name remains the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics. The right to own property is revoked, "a betrayal of socialism." A treaty is to be signed by leaders of the 15 republics, preserving the union. If any refuse to sign, Gorby has the military and the KGB to back him up, as did Lenin and Stalin. But now it's important that the people ask him to become their dictator. As bad as was the economic situation before perestroika, it's far worse today. This might have been planned. The Dictatorship of the Proletariat demanded the liquidation of the bourgeoisie, or middle class. The USSR has no middle class and a country without a middle class can exist only as a slave state. Perestroika's failure may be just what the Palnners planned; so people would not be forced into a New World Order, but would ask, even demand it. So, Gorbachev or whosoever follows him will have dictatorial powers by the people's demand.

As for the United States, the President already has such powers whenever he chooses to use them. Don McAlvany in his December Advisory brought up-to-date something we have written many times in past years. He wrote: "As America descends rapidly into socialism and toward George Bush's and Mikhail Gorbachev's New World Order, government controls of virtually all aspects of our lives are proliferating at an incredible pace. In some future economic, political or military crisis, dictatorial powers have already been granted to the president, whereby, via Executive Orders, total dictatorial control over America can be exerted instantaneously....The government's total control over your life becomes effective, according to the language of the Executive Orders 'in times of increased international tension, or economic or financial crisis'." Then McAlvany lists the original Executive Orders. EO 10995 takes over all communications media. EO 10997 takes over all electric power, petroleum, gas, fuel and minerals. EO 10998 takes over all food resources. EO 10999 takes over all means of transportation, controls highways and seaports. EO 11000 drafts all citizens into work forces under governmental supervision. EO 110901 takes over all health, welfare and educational functions. EO 11002 empowers the Postmaster General to register all citizens nationwide. EO 11003 takes over all airports and aircraft. EO 11004 takes over housing and finance authorities as 'unsafe,' establishes new locations of populations, relocates communities, builds new housing with public funds. EO takes over all railroads, inland waterways and public storage facilities. EO 11051 designates responsibilities of the Office of Emergency Planning, giving authorization to put the above orders into effect in times of increased international tension or financial crisis." In 1979 President Jimmy Carter signed EO 11490 which combined all of the previous orders and added the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA), which is an active organization, awaiting orders. We wrote, 11/3/89: "The San Francisco Earthquake was an area emergency. It became a training ground where FEMA could test and perfect its ability to operate as a dictatorship if and when any national emergency....might be called." Dictators Bush and Gorbachev? In line with the dream of the Trilats and the vision of Orwell, would the third be living in Japan? "Woe unto them! for they have gone in the way of Cain, and ran greedily after the error of Balaam for reward, and perished in the gainsaying of Core." (Jude 11).

COMPARISONS

When we heard Bernard Shaw say, "I've never been there but it feels like we're in the center of hell," memories flooded in and we missed some of the words that followed in that memorable broadcast from the ninth floor of a hotel in Baghdad. Fifty years and a few days ago we were in a similar situation. We were standing on the roof of a seven story building describing to American listeners the bombing of Manila by Japanese airmen. That was a few hours after the attack on Pearl Harbor. Despite the differences in time, technology and enemy, there are comparisons that should be mentioned as, once again, American service men and women and their allies from other nations are beginning to die in the sands of Babylon, some to suffer the tortures and inhuman treatment received as prisoners of war. Once again our leaders have brought us into a United Nations War, with no justifiable reason for America being in it. But as it was in World War Two, Korea, Vietnam, even Grenada and Panama, and now in Persia, more than half a million Americans and the families they left behind deserve our every support and prayer. Yet there are comparisons between World War Two and what could become World War Three that deserve attention.

What patriot Peggy Poor calls the Elitist Syndicate was, in the 1940s even as in the 1990s, carrying out plans for the completion of what President Bush and his counterpart President Gorbachev like to call the New World Order. The attack on Pearl Harbor was made inevitable. The Elitist Syndicate's assistants did the planning. In None Dare Call It Conspiracy, by Gary Allen, we read: "A second world war would greatly enhance the opportunity for establishing a World Government....With the Round Table doing its work in Europe, the CFR (Council on Foreign Relations) carried the ball in the United States. The Council's first task was to infiltrate and develop effective control of the US State Department--to make certain that after World War II there would be no slip-ups as there had been following World War I." Allen then quoted from State Department Publication 2349, a "Report to the President on the Results of the San Francisco (United Nations) Conference." On page 20 of that document we find (comments in parenthesis):

"With the outbreak of war in Europe it was clear that the United States would be confronted, after the war, with new and exceptional problems.... Accordingly, a Committee of Post-War Problems was set up before the end of 1939 [two years before the US entered the war], at the suggestion of the CFR. The Committee consisted of high officials of the Department of State [all but one of whom were CFR members]. It was assisted by a research staff [provided by, financed by, and directed by the CFR], which in February, 1941, was organized into a Division of Special Research [and went off the CFR payroll and onto that of the State Department.] [After Pearl Harbor] the research facilities were rapidly expanded, and the Departmental Committee on Post-War Problems was reorganized into an Advisory Committee on Post-War Foreign Policies [completely staffed by the CFR]." An article in the Christian Science Monitor of 9/1/61 notes: "Because of the Council's single-minded dedication to studying and deliberating American foreign policy, there is a constant flow of its members from private to public service. Almost half of the Council members have been invited to assume official governmental positions or to act as consultants at one time or another."

Note and compare the economic situation in 1930 with that of 1990. Paul Johnson in his notable book Modern Times, observed that "Economic disorder precedes the military disorder of war. The economic collapse in the 1930s undoubtedly made possible the Second World War. Western statesmen....sought guidance....The result was the Keynesian Age. He had defined the essence of his philosophy in his famous letter to the New York Times in 1933: 'I lay overwhelming emphasis on the increase of national purchasing power resulting from governmental expenditures, which is financed by loans'. Keynesianism was adopted at the international level. On July 1944 at Bretton Woods in New Hampshire, he [a Fabian Socialist] and the American Treasury official Harry Dexter White [a Communist] created the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund....The new system came into existence in May 1946....and American policy-makers [CFR] were prepared to run the world on Keynesian lines."

Further comparison. Between the 1930s and the 1990s there existed on the part of Elitist Syndicate a plan to do away with America's Constitutionally mandated "Balance of Power" system by increasing the power of the Presidency and the non-elected members of the Supreme Court (who are appointed by the President). This while reducing the power of Congress. As early as 1939 Congressman Thorkelson told his colleagues: "As an observer for the past 5 months, it occurs to me that Congress has done very little to help the people, but it has outdone itself to give more power to the president. He....calls for more power and immediately the rubber stamps go into action to grant his wish. In this concession Congress, instead of preserving and protecting the Republic, is establishing a totalitarian state....History is again repeating itself. Civilization has been destroyed in the past, and it is due for destruction again if we fail to protect it." In the 1930s rubber stamps were required. In the 1990s the President began to do things on his own, without rubber stamps, later telling Congress that he had assumed the power. The United Nations and the New World Order made him do it.

Recently we were reminded by a long-time subscriber of something we wrote and published in our now defunct Closer Up of September 18, 1971. We wrote: "It is 'good business' to be able to control a Government and at the same time convince the people who are living under that Government's control that they are living in a 'democracy' and are enjoying all the freedoms that are said to be consonant with 'democracy'....And how gain absolute control of a Nation while yet convincing the people that they are in control? One answer is to gradually consolidate all power in one office which is theoretically responsive to the wishes of the people, but which actually can be controlled by a group of 'studiously concealed and masked' managers. The office of the Presidency of the United States answers all the requirements for such a power center."

Granted that Watergate was a step backward in this drive for centralized presidential power. But that was justified by the Elite because it was part of an attempt to make Nelson Rockefeller President of the United States. With Nelson gone, David assumed full control and the drive for power continued, aided by creation of the Trilateral Commission, which named and trained presidents, the holding of annual Economic Summits between leaders of the Trilateral Nations, etc. Until now, we find a President on his own and with neither Congressional nor Constitutional authority, calling up and sending hundreds of thousands of American men and women to a far away desert. One of the objectives being the creation of the New World Order, he called upon the United Nations to sanction his actions, which was done reluctantly. But in October the people at home began to grow restive and to question his actions and his power. So in November he displayed more power by calling upon more hundreds of thousands of men and women to leave their families and jobs and go for some indefinite period of time to Saudi Arabia. And again he called upon the UN to set a time when he could start the war. But January 15 seemed a long time and the people again grew restive and questioning. So he did what was probably the last thing he wanted to do. He called upon Congress to sanction his power. Things had gone so far beyond their control (if they had desired control) and the Congress approved. And approved again after the bombs began dropping.

Let's face the fact that this is an unpopular war. Since the Vietnam experience, any war fought by Americans in which there is no direct American interest, no danger to American soil or citizens, is going to be an unpopular war. Twice bitten (Korea and Vietnam) certainly shy. People are growing tired of seeing members of their family rushed off to some foreign shore to become global policemen under the aegis of the United Nations. It is true that the media have made this war seem essential and in the American interest. Television has been able to present it as the greatest show on earth. The print media have explained, attempted to justify, glorified, promoted, popularized and propagandized the war so well that present domestic evils such as the S&H scandals, bank busts, airline and industrial bankruptcies, deficit financing dangers, recession, drug war and such are almost forgotten. But if an honest consensus involving all tax-paying citizens were possible, it would undoubtedly reveal that in this Desert Storm drama, economic sanctions would be approved, but military action would be strongly disapproved. Deep within the public mind must dwell the realization that this is an economic war being fought militarily to determine who shall control and monopolize the Mideast Oil Treasure Chest. Twin hawkers of the New World Order, Bush and Gorbachev, virtually admitted this when at the Helsinki meeting in September, Bush said, "If the nations of the world, acting together, continue as they have been, we will set in place the cornerstone of an international order more peaceful than any that we have known." Gorby agreed and they shook hands. The symbolism: presented was a picture offered to Bush by Gorby depicting two victorious boxers, arms held up by a referee representing the World, with the dead dragon of the Cold War at their feet. The Twins continued to agree when American troops were sent to draw that "line in the sand" supposedly to prevent Saddam's troops from going through Kuwait into Saudi Arabia, perhaps the Emirates, and certainly destroying Israel on the way, thereby winning complete approval of the Muslim and Arabian populaces. But bear this in mind, Soviet troops were not sent to Saudi Arabia. Some of them were already there in Iraq, possibly ready to supervise the launching of those Scud missiles supplied by the Soviets.

Let's skip the trees and look at the forest. There are several groves representing their particular dream of a New World Order. To name the more important of them: Monopoly Capitalist, Communist, Zionist, Islamic, etc. Sometimes they cooperate, sometimes they compete. The present dominant goal involves the regionalization of various areas of the world. These are generally called Economic or Common Markets, later to become Regional World Governments, and finally Administrative Departments of a World Government. Ultimate goals: Power and Profit.

In this regionalization, or merging program, most of the world can be divided into economic spheres.. Western Europe is now one socialized sphere, about to become a Regional World Government. Eastern Europe is being prepared to merge. The "new" Republic of South Africa will head-quarter a South African Common Market, A North American Common Market (NACOM) will develop comfortably into a Regional World Government. Japan has its developing Co-Prosperity Sphere and the rest of South and Central Asia will yield to Communist Chinese domination, etc.

But in all of this regionalization, there is one area that is as a Gordian Knot which seems to require severing by sword. In the first place, Israel is out of step. A so-called democracy in the midst of an area where only totalitarian, Religion governed states exist, makes regional control almost

There have been thoughts about "neutralizing" Israeli so the Mideast can become a peaceful regional community. But there is a Zionist Lobby that controls Congress whenever Israel matters come up. And there is the fundamentalist Christian teaching that Israel is a fulfillment of prophecy. Conclusion: When this war is ended a permanent UN security force (US troops?) must remain to keep the peace. In the second place, there is Islam. In The temptation of World Government Jean-Marc Berthoud writes: "One obstacle seems to remain to the utopia of world unity: the Moslem world. The Moslems would have three elements which could create a serious obstacle to the ambitions of those working toward a World State: a) an absolute religious faith...b) a strong territorial base defended by modern armament; c) finally, financial independence and resources on which the rest of the world is dependent. In the perspective of the world unification movement, of which President Bush seems to be the spokesman, this irreducible obstacle of Islamic independence must at all cost be destroyed." (Chaldean Report, P.O.Box 158, Vallecito, CA 95251). Bush says that when Saddam is defeated "We will have invigorated a UN that contributes as its founders dreamed. We will have established principles for acceptable international conduct and the means to enforce them." The means to enforce them will require a permanent UN security force (US troops?), in the Middle East to keep the peace and prevent the outbreak of jihad, a holy war that could become World War Three.

Last but not least, there remains the fate of the friendship of the two huksters for the New World Order. Bush has placed the bulk of the US armed forces, land, sea and air, in a concentrated, religiously unfriendly and logistically vulnerable part of the world, thousands of miles from America. His World Order partner, Gorby, has refused military aid to Desert Storm; the Soviet armed forces are well armed, ready for any contingency or order, ready to be sent to the Middle East if that would aid the cause of Leninism. Yet Bush continues to depend on Gorby for moral support at least, while Gorby continues to delude the world in his pursuit of a Leninist One World Order. To trust "the bear that walks like a man" in a scheme to establish a New World Order sounds like replacing Saddam is not enough.

"So the people of Ninevah believed God...And God saw their works, that they had turned from their way; and God repented of the evil, that he had said he would do unto them; and he did it not." (Jonah 3:5-10).

BUSH'S STATE OF THE UNION ??

As Commander-in-Chief he might have been awarded the Congressional Medal of Honor. But as Chief Executive, he would be considered AWOL; Absent Without Leave whenever any domestic crisis required personal presidential attention. Too often when he should have been behind the desk in the Oval Office, he would be relaxing at Camp David, or flying hither and yon on party business or visiting various heads of state. But on at least one thing the supposedly Democratic Congress and the practicing Republican President agree. Both obey the Constitution of the United States in at least one respect. They observe the Constitutional mandate that: "He (the President) shall, from time to time, give to the Congress information of the state of the Union, and recommend to their consideration such measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient....)" We remarked that Congress and the President observed the Constitution in this respect. But carrying out its provisions is something else. On the night of January 29, 1991 the President, instead of giving Congress information on the state of the Union, gave information on the state of the War, and remarked on the progress of the New World Order. He left open a very wide "window of opportunity" for rebuttal by Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell of Maine, who said among other things: "...as critical as the gulf conflict is, the other business of the nation won't wait. The President says he seeks a new world order. We ask him to join us in putting our own house in order. We have a crisis abroad, but we also have a crisis here at home."

There is evidence concerning the condition of our state of the Union when a Harvard professor is able to say it as it is. Almost. Professor Robert Reish, who majors in political economy, commented: "The (state of the Union) speech was sort of a salami sandwich. That is, you had it beginning with a discussion of the war, a lot of patriotic themes, America standing tall once again; and ending with those same very fervent patriotic themes with Bush obviously feeling very happy. There was tremendous applause. But in the middle of this sandwich was baloney. The defense picture discussion was pure pabulum; the same platitudes we've been hearing. In fact it seemed that it was put together by a committee. You had all the obligatory vows, you had the capital gains reduction, you had the plea to the Federal Reserve Board to lower interest rates. You had a little bit of the passing out of money to help education and a little investment in roads. No discussion at all of where this (money) is going to come from. No discussion of how to get out of the recession. In fact a little upbeat notion that the recession was a temporary interruption in an otherwise continuous expansion....The speech was primarily a foreign policy speech in which he wrapped himself up in the flag and talked about the future and greatness of America. It was very clear that George Bush was talking much more about the 21st century and about America as a military power. As if there had not been a fundamental change in what we can afford, and where we were going."

We feel uncomfortable in agreeing with a liberal Harvard professor. But in much of what he said, he's right. What was supposed to be a state of the Union address became a state of the War message and that war's importance in the New World Order. He said: "We are Americans - a part of something larger than ourselves....What is at stake is more than one small country, it is a big idea - a new world order, where diverse nations are drawn together in common cause to achieve the universal aspirations of mankind." But he found it necessary to mention the flaw in the pattern. This New World Order was proclaimed by President Bush as a partnership merger. Presidents Bush and Gorbachev were going to work together to bring it about. But Gorby seems to have his own ideas and has led Bush into a trap of his own baiting. The Baltic situation must have revealed to all that Gorby is still a dictator after the manner of Lenin, and in some respects quite similar to his arms and military client Saddam Hussein.

Things had become so desperate in the Bush-Gorby New World Order Partnership that it seemed necessary for President Bush to admit, and confess, in his State of the Union address, that: "Our relationship with the Soviet Union is important, not only to us but to the world. That relationship has helped to shape these and other historic changes. But, like many other nations, we have been deeply concerned by the violence in the Baltics, and we have communicated that concern to the Soviet leadership....If it is possible, I want to continue to build a lasting basis for US-Soviet cooperation...." A summit meeting was cancelled, and the nature of the Soviet's connection with Desert Storm began to be questioned. One liberal columnist who had been promoting the New World Order for weeks, suddenly changed his tune and wrote: "The cancelled summit is a sad reminder that President Bush may be losing his 'new world order' even as Desert Storm has barely begun....he envisioned a world in which the two greatest powers in history could act together against tyrants everywhere, could together underwrite global freedom and democracy. Now, events in the Soviet Union suggest his vision was premature....Mr. Gorbachev has become his country's most powerful dictator since Josef Stalin. So confusion has given way to chaos and chaos to anarchy. Now Mr. Gorbachev has reverted to repression, answering dissenters in the Baltics with guns and tanks. He is silencing criticism in press and television. He won't abandon Marxist principles for a free market economy....Europe and the rest of the Western world cannot react confidently to all this without leadership from President Bush, but for several important reasons President Bush is poorly prepared to cope with the new Mikhail Gorbachev....President Bush must decide whether to keep apologizing for Gorby's repression or warn him publicly that tanks are unacceptable. Nor can we hope that Gorby's next move will put things straight. If he knew what to do, he would have done it. On top of everything else, Gorby is in Chapter 11, and George is out of money. But money alone won't help. The IMF, the World Bank, and the new European Bank for Reconstruction and Development all concluded there's no use pouring money into his bungled state economy."

Stated in dialectical terms, Gorby has taken two steps forward (Glasnost and Perestroika). Now he must take one step backward and revert to the strategy employed by Lenin when that first dictator used the first principles of glasnost and perestroika in building the USSR. Gorby has milked the Western Nations for all he thinks he can get, Western businessmen are investing less and less in Soviet trade agreements. But let us never forget there's still the KGB and the military establishment that are ready to try to bring Communist style freedom to more nations, including ours, at a moment's call. And, as the columnist we quoted says, "for several important reasons President Bush is poorly prepared to cope with Mikhail Gorbachev."

In his state of the Union talk President Bush said: "The triumph of democratic ideas in Eastern Europe and Latin America, and the continuing struggle for freedom elsewhere around the world all confirm the wisdom of our nation's founders. Tonight, we work to achieve another victory, a victory over tyranny and savage aggression." Yet this same president who sent half a million Americans to the Middle East to fight against tyranny and aggression by Hussein of Iraq is the same president who extended favored nation status to Red China whose Communist leaders killed sixty million of their own people and recently slaughtered hundreds of their young people in Tiananmen Square. Closed trials are being conducted even now against those who spoke out for freedom and escaped the Tiananmen massacre. As a scare tactic, notices of their execution are posted on a wall for all to read. President Bush says our young are to die to win a victory over tyranny and savage aggression on the part of Saddam while he finds excuses for his NWO Partner Gorby, the man who waged a war against Afghanistan and whose troops dropped tempting little delayed action bombs that caused children to lose their hands, eyes, and lives. A clipping from a California paper adds: "Stop beating the drums of war until we learn just whose interests will be served by killing thousands of American boys and girls in a bloody Middle East conflict. Above all, let us inquire how our leaders justify subordinating our nation and our Constitution - which they are sworn to preserve and protect - to the establishment of what they call a new world order. Make them define that term. There is reason to suspect that the real enemies of freedom are within our own borders."

But back to that state of the Union speech. Bush used the occasion to refer once again to occultist Alice Bailey's catch-phrase. He said "We have within our reach the promise of a renewed America. We can find meaning and reward by serving some purpose higher than ourselves--a shining purpose, the illumination of a thousand points of light." And once again he brought up the Mexican Trade Agreement and Enterprise for the Americas initiative and the "move toward a free trade zone throughout the entire hemisphere." This all has to do with NACOM, the North American Common Market which we have mentioned in previous DBRs, and which is designed to create a Regional World Government in the American continents similar to that being developed in EUROPE.

As for the national economy, it is important to know that Bush has selected Alan Greenspan of the Federal Reserve System to "sort out our technical difficulties so that we can avoid a return to unproductive partisan bickering." If that doesn't foretell the birth of Corporate Capitalism, sometimes called Corporative Socialism, and rightly defined as Fascism, we miss our guess. Bush also told Congress and the world that "The strength of a democracy is not in bureaucracy, it is in the people and their communities." Then he about-faced and spoke of what the American bureaucracy was going to do for the people and their communities. "A budget that promotes investment in America's future - in children, education, infrastructure, space and high technology....Legislation to achieve excellence in education....A blueprint for a new national highway system....A research and development agenda that includes record levels of Federal investment....A comprehensive national energy strategy....A banking reform plan." And here's a clue as to whom Bush is really working for: "In addition to the proposals, we must recognize that our economic strength depends upon being competitive in the world markets."

Finally, in all that President Bush said in his speech of 12/29/90, there was the underlying thought that we, the people, along with the citizens of the USSR, are to supply the policemen in a New World Order. Not as American police, but as United Nations Police, World Police. "We must step forward and accept our responsibility to lead the world away from the dark chaos of dictators, toward the brighter promise of a better day....Let future generations understand...that together, we affirmed America, and the world, as a community of conscience. (Underlining added)."

On War Day Twenty Bush presented his budget proposal to Congress: a $1.45 trillion spending plan that forecasts deficits of $318 billion for 1991 and $281 billion for 1992. All of which is fiction for two reasons: the Congress has the final say and it will up those deficits, and the cost of Desert Storm is not included in the budget. Nobody knows how much this war will cost us because nobody knows how much Japan, Germany, France and other nations will contribute. It is estimated that the war is now costing a billion dollars a day, will go up if and when ground action begins. We haven't the space nor desire to say what ought to be said, but one thing stands out as very strange indeed. In the midst of this costly war Bush and Defense Secretary Cheney tell Congress they will push ahead with the plan to slash military manpower, cancelling major weapons programs, and closing military bases. the uniformed ranks will be cut by 350,000 men and women. This while reservists are being taken from their jobs and homes to fill the ranks in the Persian Gulf! Bush's defense budget assumes that his partner Gorbachev will continue to be friendly and peaceful and pose no threat to the United States or Western Europe. A comment by Secretary Cheney seems significant. We have a special regard for Big Mo, because it was on the Missouri that we watched General MacArthur accept the surrender of Japan at the end of World War Two. Now the Missouri has again made its mark by shelling Iraq. Nevertheless, it's scheduled to be decommissioned as soon as its tour in the gulf is completed. Said Cheney, "I'd like to keep the battleships, but I can't afford it." He can't afford it. He can't afford SDI. Let's pray he'll let General Schwarzkopf run Desert Storm his way without political influence from politicians or the Communist chief of the UN Military Staff, as happened with MacArthur in Korea and with the entire military establishment in Vietnam.

But geopolitics will prevail. Because in our every war since the Spanish-American the only winner has been that great financial power which creates them. As Gary North observed: "Mr. Bush sought a quick, decisive military victory in the name of the New World Order, as represented judicially by the United Nations. He chose a technologically weak opponent to demonstrate the military power of this political force. He wanted this victory to look good on evening TV news broadcasts. Our troops were therefore not in the Baltics; they are in the Middle East. They ought to be in the United States."

Finally a word for our troops in the Middle East. When David was embattled, the Lord spoke to him: "Thou shalt not be afraid of the terror by night; nor of the arrow that flieth by day: Nor for the pestilence that walketh in darkness; nor for the destruction that wasteth at noonday. A thousand shall fall at thy side, and ten thousand at thy right hand; but it shall not come nigh thee." (Psalm 91:5-7).

NOW, "TWO STEPS FORWARD"

If he were alive today, Nikolai Lenin would be heaping praises upon his disciple Mikhail Gorbachev because of the successful way in which he has advanced the cause of Socialism throughout the world. Marx wrote the philosophy, Lenin drew the battle plans, and Gorbachev is carrying out the plans like no one since Lenin himself. In so doing Gorby may have duped his New World Order partner, George Bush, as well as the oil magnates of the West and the Trilateral Commissioners. Chief among Lenin's plans was the strategy called "Two Steps Forward, One Step Backwards." A simple explanation of how this strategy works is contained in an article appearing in the January 1991 issue of Candour, The British Views-Letter. We quote.

"Consider two common tools, the screwdriver and the hammer. A screwdriver keeps pushing and turning the screw into the wood until it is completely driven in, but a hammer does not. It is necessary to swing the hammer forward to strike the nail, and then backwards for the next blow. Most people expect the Communists to act like a screwdriver, continually twisting and thrusting forward until they have reached their objective. But the Communist strategy is not like the screwdriver. It is like the hammer - a constant forward and backward motion - a seemingly endless series of advances and retreats. As the backward swing moves the hammer away from the nail, so too the Communists often approach their objective by moving away from it - by seemingly going in the opposite direction. But it is obvious that the backward motion of the hammer is as essential to the advancing of the nail as is the forward thrust. This vital strategy, of which the average Western man has no concept, is the principle of 'Two steps forward, one step backwards.' Lenin himself wrote the textbook: 'Two Steps Forward, One Step Back.' Chinese schoolchildren are taught to do the dialectic march of three steps forward and two steps backwards. The point is that the Communist goal is fixed and changeless - it never alters one iota from their objective of world domination. But if we judge them only by the direction in which they seem to be going, we shall be deceived." (Quoted from "Candour. Candour Publishing Co., Forest House, Liss Forest, Hampshire GY33 7DD, England. Monthly, US$20 per year).

Lenin first used this strategy in 1918. Used it against the advice of Leon Trotsky, his foreign minister at the time; against the advice of Joseph Stalin, Peoples Commissar for Nationalities at the time; against almost all of the members of his Central Committee. It happened during World War One. Czarist Russia was an ally, was fighting Germany and causing the inconvenient massing of German troops on its northern border. The bankers of Germany had an idea. They would finance the transporting, in sealed railway cars, of Lenin and his Bolshevik company from Switzerland through Germany to St. Petersburg in Russia. At the same time Trotsky and his associates were shipped from New York City to St. Petersburg; and Stalin was given amnesty and called in from a lifetime sentence of exile in northern Siberia. It was hoped they and their followers could start a revolution, thus tie up the Russian troops and end the battles on the north German border. The plan worked, up to a point. An armistice was signed on 12/5/17 and the shooting ended. But then long and bitter peace treaty negotiations began between Trotsky representing Russia, and von Kuhlman representing the Axis powers. Kuhlman's demands were considered excessive and Trotsky rejected them, called off the negotiations, and the battling began again. Then Lenin made his first backward step. He overruled Trotsky and accepted the Axis demands. At the time Russia was a great empire, geographically. But by the terms of the Brest-Litovsk Treaty (3/3/18), Russia had to recognize the independence of the Ukraine and Georgia, give up Poland and the Baltic States, relinquish all control over Finland, and cede considerable territory to Germany and her axis partners, Austria Hungary and Turkey. This meant that Lenin's backward step meant the loss of 56 million people, a third of Russian railway mileage, 79% of its iron, and 89% of its coal. Trotsky was aghast and resigned his post in protest. This was a backward step that would seem to ruin the Soviet Union before it ever got started. But this was a necessary step backward, as Lenin explained to his Central Committee.

"We must become strongly entrenched in power, and for that we need time. It is necessary that our hands be untied." Needed was "the systematic, serious, steady work of preparing a revolutionary war, the creation of discipline and an army, the putting into order of the railways and food affair." This backward step "involved the competing aims of world revolution and the need for peace. Lenin's solution was the compromise (backward step) of the Treaty of Brest-Litovsk which gained a breathing space in which the power of communism could be secured over the Russian Empire, thus consolidating a base for the further pursuit of world revolution. In other words, the road to world revolution was to begin with a major step backwards for the communists....Once their hands were freed by the conclusion of the Brest-Litovsk Treaty, the Bolsheviks turned with a vengeance to the problem of consolidating their rule in Russia." (Dr. John Whitehall in an article appearing in the 8/15/90 issue of Christian Anti-Communist Crusade newsletter. P.O.Box 890, Long Beach, CA 90801).

Lenin's second One step backwards came in March 1921. People were starving. There was general unrest which erupted in an insurrection at the Kronstadt Naval Base. Lenin had to do something fast if he was to save this first Communist State. Economics was the problem. So Lenin replaced the economic policies of what he called "War Communism" and introduced the New Economic Policy, which was Lenin's name for what Gorbachev was later to term perestroika and glasnost. Communism was forced to give way to limited capitalism. Peasants were permitted to sell their produce for a profit. Small businesses were allowed to operate as private enterprises. Compulsory labor was abolished. Foreign industry and investment were sought openly. Lenin conceded that "Socialism is inconceivable without large scale capitalist engineering based on the latest discovery of modern science." Seventy years later Gorbachev was to say essentially the same thing when he introduced his "new economic policies."

Lenin did not live to see that what he had given up in his step backwards in World War One would be returned with interest in World War Two and the Cold War that followed. Nor did Lenin live to learn that his NEP was reversed in 1928 by Stalin's first Five Year Plan. However, though it took time, Lenin's strategy of "Two steps forward, one step backwards" did work effectively and allowed the Soviet Union to survive. As a devout follower of Lenin and his policies, Gorbachev expects the same results from his own "One step backwards" as he now prepares to take "Two steps forward." In this same context we should remember the works of another Marxist-Leninist, Dimitri Manuela. Speaking to his students at the Lenin School of Political Warfare in Moscow in 1930, he said:

"War to the hilt between communism and capitalism is inevitable. Today, of course, we are not strong enough to attack. Our time will come in 20 to 30 years. To win, we shall need the element of surprise. The bourgeoisie will have to be put to sleep. So we shall begin by launching the most spectacular peace movement on record. There will be electrifying overtures and unheard of concessions. The capitalist countries, stupid and decadent, will rejoice to cooperate in their own destruction. They will leap at another chance to be friends. As soon as their guard is down, we will smash them with our clenched fist." It is interesting to note that this Maunilski, after teaching at the Lenin School in Moscow, later became Russia's Ambassador to the United Nations. In the introduction to his book None Dare Call It Treason, revised and published 25 years later in 1990, John Stormer quoted Manuilsky's prediction and said: "Were Gorbachev and his fellow Reds implementing Manuilsky's 1930 blueprint as decade of the 1980s ended? America's future and Western freedom could depend on getting the correct answer to that crucial question. The Soviets were making 'electrifying overtures and unheard of concessions.' The United States and other Western leaders were rushing to grasp 'at another chance to be friends'....Gorbachev's own words give cause for caution and concern."

We quoted this from an article in Candour: "The point is that the Communist goal is fixed and changeless - it never alters one iota from their objective of world domination, but if we judge them only by the direction in which they seem to be going, we shall be deceived." Elenia Bonner, widow of Sakharov, noted the deception: "For Americans, Gorbachev is the author of perestroika, a democrat, the liberator of Eastern Europe, the Man of the Decade....On a Moscow street an American tourist was arguing with a young Russian, who ended the conversation with an offer, 'If you like Gorbachev so much, who don't you take him?'" But what that young Russian thinks doesn't matter in the long run. Because the first of the "Two steps forward" has been taken. Like Lenin in 1918 and Stalin in 1928, Gorbachev took the first step by becoming a domestic dictator. And like Lenin and Stalin, but more humanely because the world is watching, he has eliminated any dangerous opponents and replaced them with his "gray men." Martin Sieff, in The Washington Times wrote: "Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev has appointed a team of colorless communist apparatchiks - the so-called 'gray men' - to replace his former circle of bold reformers. Mr. Gorbachev's new men have taken control of key areas of government; law enforcement, the economy and media during the past two months. They have swiftly imposed their new style, which promises to roll back more than five years of change. They apparently are not neo-Stalinists or ferocious, anti-Western supernationalists, but cautious bureaucrats who put on reform colors in recent years but are happier with the old system." Mentioned are Leonid Kravchenko, media manager and propaganda chieftain; Yuri Golik, who runs a new commission on law enforcement that works with the KGB to control law enforcement agencies in the 15 Soviet republics; Gennadi Yanayev, who is called Gorbachev's Molotov; and Vladimir Ivashko, No. 2 official in the Communist Party behind Gorbachev. The article concludes: "Now Mr. Gorbachev has reverted to his old colors, arguing that the Communist Party alone can solve the Soviet Union's problems, and all other parties are, at best, irrelevant if not inevitably subversive." So goes the first step forward in the USSR itself.

Internationally, Gorbachev stepped forward rapidly. He became a partner in the framing of Bush's New World Order. He assisted Bush in getting the UN Security Council to back the UN War Against Iraq. But while condemning Iraq on the one hand, on the other he extended friendship and aid to Saddam Hussein. Bush may not know it, but Gorby is a friend of Saddam and an enemy of George. And there lies the deception (if it really is a deception). Gorby has worked relentlessly since August 2 to gain the friendship and trust of the Arabs and Muslims in the USSR and the Middle East. And he has set himself up as the official mediator between Saddam and Bush, and has promised (if he can keep it) to protect Saddam and what's left of the Iraqi military establishment.

As you read this you will know more than we as to the outcome or the progress of the War in the Gulf. But one thing is sure. Whether the "coalition" compromises, halts the war, and again makes a liar of Bush, or whether our American troops acting as UN policemen destroy Iraq, the only victors will be Gorbachev, Hussein, and the United Nations. Whether dead or alive, Saddam will be a hero to the Arabs and the Muslims; Gorbachev will be their friend; and the UN will determine that American troops must remain as a UN Peace Force in the Middle East.

British Intelligence Digest warns: "However grave, this crisis is still only a dress rehearsal for a far greater Middle East showdown yet to come....Once Saddam is defeated, the Arab world will then expect the US to force Israel into a compromise on the Palestinian issue (land for peace). Israel will not compromise. Israel knows the Arabs' ultimate objective is not as simply to regain the West Bank, but to destroy Israel. Neither America nor anyone else will be able to force Israel to compromise and so Arab anger will be further fueled by what it will undoubtedly see as double standards from the West."

Hilaire du Berrier thinks "The big trouble may come from Algiers." On 1/31/91 60,000 marched in the rain through Algiers' streets shouting 'Victory to Islam and the Moslems.' Earlier 400,000 Algerians demanded military training to fight for Iraq. "When the explosion comes its sparks will cross the Mediterranean," said H du B. Rami Khouri, Jordan Times columnist estimated that three-quarters of the Arab people will stand for Iraq "not in support of its occupation of Kuwait but in its confrontation with the United States." On 2/10/91 300,000 demonstrated in Morocco. Similar demonstrations were held in other Arab and Muslim countries. Jordan's King Hussein said, "This is a war against all Arabs and Muslims." Many governments may fall as the holy jihad becomes a religious war in defense of Saddam, alive or martyr. Permanent war for permanent peace was not in the King of Kings' mind when He spoke:

"Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you; not as the world giveth, give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid." —John 14:27.

MANIFEST DESTINY RERUN

The March 3rd headline told the story in a nutshell: "U.N. gets tough with truce terms." Expanded: The United Nations, acting in the capacity of World Government, with troops supplied by the United States and allies, won a war against Iraq and will dictate the peace terms. Sideline incidentals: Saddam Hussein was defeated in his attempt to become oil tsar and ruler of an Islamic New World Order; and George Bush was defeated in his dream of teaming up with Mikhail Gorbachev to create his version of the New World Order under the authorization of the United Nations Security Council which would be acting as a World Government. This does not mean that the goal of an Islamic New World Order is dead. It merely means that someone other than Saddam Hussein will lead the Arab-Muslim crusade and continue to cause continuous chaos in the Middle East. Nor does it mean that the program to create the New World Order is halted. It's just that it won't work under a Bush-Gorbachev partnership and Plan Two must be emphasized and carried out. More about Plan Two later.

The first intimation of the "Bush-Gorbachev under the UN" failure probably came to Bush and Baker with the resignation of Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze. The B-boys were depending greatly on the ability of Shevardnadze to keep Gorby in line. And Shevardnadze's resignation was the signal that the "one step backward" had been completed, that glasnost and perestroika were ended, and now Gorby was taking a step forward by bringing into his government hard-liners who would back up his role as dictator. In our last DBR we mentioned the "gray men" that Gorby had appointed to leading positions. Don McAlvany in his February Advisory added more names: Makashov, Ogarkov, Moiseyev, Yazov, Pugo, Gromov, Kryuchkov and Akhromeyev, then he added that "The honeymoon is over. America may be about to come face-to-face with the Russian Bear." Even Bush began to express doubts as to his trust in Gorbachev when the latter refused to aid in any way in the war against Iraq. When the 100-day ground war was about to begin, he appealed to Bush not to order the attack. His appeal fell on deaf ears and he then asked the UN Security Council to call the war off, asked Communist China (also a permanent member of the Security Council) to join in his appeal to stop the war before Hussein's massive military establishment was totally obliterated. By that time it was obvious to the world that "the honeymoon was over." Incidentally, it's important to note that Bush's references to the New World Order ceased when Gorby revealed himself publicly as a friend of Saddam; this despite Gorby's approval of the UN resolutions. But in Communist circles resolutions, like treaties, are made to be broken when the time is opportune.

So the idea of leaders Bush and Gorbachev policing the world under the authority of the UN began to fade. Instead, the One Worlders started suggesting that the US should go it alone and act as leader in all future wars waged to win peace. There began talk of how the United States should declare itself to be the predestined Nation that would make the world safe for democracy by waging war to enforce peace whenever some nation or resurgent force might get out of line and receive the condemnation of the UN. In his rush to bring "justice" to the Middle East, President Bush had placed the United States in an uncomfortable and unAmerican role, that of being world policeman. We were impressed by a statement made by Joseph de Courcy, editor of the British Intelligence Digest. He wrote:

"American world leadership is essential and irreplaceable (as the current conflict in the Gulf is so ably demonstrating), and yet the world is doing its best to drive America into isolationism. For instance, there is a shaming lack of support for America in Europe (apart from Britain), despite the fact that three times this century America has saved Europe from itself (World Wars I and II, and the Cold War).....One only has to imagine for a moment a world without US leadership to realize the horrors that would befall the world community: Europe would be either reduced to warring chaos or forever blackmailed by the military might of the USSR; the Middle East would be torn apart by dictators and Islamic fanatics, with only Israel's nuclear armoury capable of restoring order; the Far East would be torn between China, the USSR, and/or a militarily resurgent Japan; and the African continent would be at the mercy of an ANC-ruled South Africa." (Intelligence Digest, 17 Rodney Road, Cheltenham, Glos. GL50 1HX, United Kingdom).

JdeC's point is well taken. Thanks to Bush's use of war as a foundation stone for the building of his New World Order, we are in a position where we are expected to accept the UN rule of "Permanent War to ensure Permanent Peace." It's ironic. Our first President warned our nation to have with other nations "as little political connection as possible." He asked, "Why quit our own to stand upon foreign ground?" He said "'Tis our true policy to steer clear of permanent alliances with any portion of the foreign world." But our present President differs absolutely. He thinks it is our duty to protect and provide peace and security for all nations. And his Defense Secretary Dick Cheney agrees. Cheney is thinking of a new American role as World Policeman. He told a reporter that the war has "given an enormous boost to the credibility of the United States Government for a long time to come. When we say we are interested in guaranteeing the security of a friend or an ally, it will--by golly--mean something. There won't be any doubt in anybody's mind about the United States's willingness and ability to keep those commitments." Not everyone agrees. James Webb who was Navy Secretary under President Reagan said, before the 100-hour ground war had begun: "The Bush Administration, aided by editorial onslaughts from many sides, has relentlessly maneuvered our nation into a war. One must reach back to William Randolph Hearst urging us into the Spanish-American War to find a parallel to the editorial pressure that preceded our present conflict. One must go even further, perhaps to the Mexican War, to find a president so avidly desirous of putting the nation at risk when it has not been attacked." (Wall Street Journal 1/30/91).

And that leads us to Plan Two, since the Bush-Gorbachev alliance has failed. Plan Two takes us back to "Piecemeal Functionalism" which CFR member and sometime US Diplomat Richard Gardner described as "The Hard Road to World Order." He said the UN wouldn't work and that "We are likely to do better by building our 'house of world order' from the bottom up rather than from the top down." Plan Two also involves the creation of Regional World Governments such as EUROPE and the proposed world's largest North American Common Market which begins with a free trade zone between Canada, Mexico, and the United States. Incidentally, Henry Kissinger, who really establishes most American foreign policy, agreed that Bush's plan to build through the UN won't work, and he says "...the most creative - if least well known - foreign policy initiative of the Bush administration is its effort to create a Western Hemispheric Free Trade Area, beginning with Mexico, Canada and the United States." (Los Angeles Times Syndicate 2/24/91). Plan Two also includes the concept of America being a World Policeman, while the Planners continue with their program of "piecemeal functionalism". And this brings up the political reincarnation of an old American policy that became popular at the time of the Mexican War spoken of by James Webb. We call it the Manifest Destiny Rerun.

After the fall of the Alamo (3/6/1836) Sam Houston raised an army and defeated Mexico's General Santa Anna six weeks later. Texas became an independent republic (Lone Star State) for nine years. During that time there arose a movement calling for the annexation of Texas by the United States. Also involved was the desire to make New Mexico and California (claimed by Mexico) and Oregon (claimed by England) as parts of the United States. John L. O'Sullivan, editor of the Democratic Review, coined a phrase that became popular throughout the nation. He wrote: "No nation on earth should be allowed to interfere with America's manifest destiny to overspread the continent allotted by Providence for the free development of our yearly multiplying millions." The phrase, Manifest Destiny, began as a Democratic slogan but was used later by the Republicans to justify the purchase of Alaska and the annexation of Hawaii. In all this time of Winning the West and carving States out of Territories, Manifest Destiny was used as a slogan justifying the annexation or purchase of land. But about 100 years ago, the slogan took on a new meaning and was used to justify the entry of the United States into the political affairs of other nations. It began with the Spanish-American War (1898). As James Webb said, the Hearst newspaper chain was largely responsible for that war. But the person making it possible was Theodore Roosevelt, then Assistant Secretary of the Navy. He sent Admiral Dewey and an American fleet to Manila Bay. When the word was given (the sinking of the Battleship Maine), Dewey attacked in Philippine waters while Theodore Roosevelt led his Rough Riders up a hill in Cuba. "When, in 1900, (President) McKinley had been compelled to accept Theodore Roosevelt as Vice-Presidential candidate, McKinley saw that the traditional American policy of George Washington would be wrecked, he gave expression to his now immortal statement: 'I regret to see my country forced into the untried paths of Empire'." On 9/6/01 McKinley was removed by assassination and with him George Washington's policy as set forth in his famous Farewell Address. McKinley was succeeded by Theodore Roosevelt who would cooperate with the Internationalists." (American Manifest Destiny, Examiner Books, New York, NY 1979). The Internationalists had started America on its path of Manifest Destiny, the Dollar Imperialism of the world. In 1912 Roosevelt performed his final duty for the One Worlders of that day. He quit the Republican Party, organized the Bull Moose Party so the conservative Robert Taft would be defeated by the chosen Woodrow Wilson. Conrad Grieb, collating documentarian and author of American Manifest Destiny concluded: "Theodore Roosevelt guiding the United States MANIFEST DESTINY had set in motion the forty year period of International Imperialism that has resulted in two world wars, genocide of immense proportions, four depressions and a dozen panics and financial loss beyond computation." The statement is far from complete since it was published in 1979.

With the successful election of Wilson the Internationalists decided that it was America's Manifest Destiny to be drawn into and pay for a war that was being planned against Germany. In 1913 the Federal Reserve System was adopted, and the 16th Income Tax Amendment was ratified.

In 1916 Wilson ran for re-election on the theme, "He kept us out of war." At the same time his "alter-ego," Colonel Edward M. House was making arrangements with England for America's entry into the war. At the end of that war an attempt to establish a New World Order was written into the peace treaty. But the treaty and the League of Nations Covenant which it contained were rejected by the US Senate. Commenting on that treaty, Lord Curzon said, "It is not a peace treaty; it is simply a break in hostilities." The break in hostilities ended with the planned outbreak of World War Two. During the intervening years the Council on Foreign Relations became sufficiently powerful to take control over the US State Department, FDR had given official diplomatic recognition to the USSR, and huge loans were underwritten to help Hitler prepare for World War Two. At the end of that war another attempt to create a New World Government was written and the United Nations Organizations was adopted as a treaty by the US Senate. Prior to America's official entry into that war "United States dollar imperialism was to be substituted for British imperialism. Secretary of Treasury Henry Morgenthau stated the objective was to move the financial center of the world from London to the US Treasury. Cordell Hull who had basic responsibility for American political and economic planning for peace, had urged Congress as far back as 1932 that America 'gird itself, yield to the law of manifest destiny, and go forward as the supreme world factor economically and morally'." (Emphasis added. Quotation is from "American Manifest Destiny," page 225).

So the law of manifest destiny decreed that we should go forward as the supreme world factor economically and morally in the United Nations War against North Korea, the United Nations War in Southeast Asia, and the United Nations War in the Middle East. And if the Bush-Gorbachev-United Nations plan for a New World Order is defeated, then under another plan we are expected to uphold the law of manifest destiny. This because The "Report From Iron Mountain" concluded that: "War has provided...society with a debatable system for stabilizing and controlling national economies. No alternate method of control has yet been tested in a complex modern economy that has shown it is remotely comparable in scope or effectiveness." And because John Foster Dulles, Secretary of State, wrote in the 10/45 issue of CFR's Foreign Affairs: "...external perils create coalitions....those coalitions disintegrate when the common enemy is vanquished. That is why the present unity of the United Nations will vanish unless we find new enemies to fight together."

As the world cries peace, Jean-Marc Berthold (Chalcedon Report) warns: "...our almighty financiers, whatever might be their shape, size or colour, who pretend to direct the destinies of the world toward utopian world unity, imagine through their wealth to be able to control the immense war machine of the Soviet Union. For our part, we know that if we remain at the heart of God's purpose we shall forever rest under the shadow, the protection, of the Almighty. In such a place of trust and obedience we shall find ourselves standing in the very flow of history to which only the Master of Time Himself can give a true purpose and lasting meaning."

Year Thirty-Eight.....Number Six.....March 22, 1991

POST-WAR AGENDA

When he reported to Congress concerning the Gulf War victory President Bush touched briefly on the many muchly neglected domestic problems facing the nation. "Now that the war is over," he said, "Americans can move forward to lend, spend, and invest in this, the strongest economy on earth. We must also enact legislation that is the key to building a better America....This year we're sending to Congress our comprehensive crime package....We've sent forward our civil rights bill....We've sent up our new highway bill. And these are just a few of our pending proposals for reform and renewal. So tonight I call on Congress to move forward aggressively on our domestic front. Let's begin with two initiatives we should be able to agree on quickly: transportation and crime. Then let's build on success with those and with the rest of our agenda. If our forces could win the ground war in a hundred hours, then surely Congress can pass this legislation in a hundred days." Following deserved applause for the best address of his presidential term, he later invited to the White House all the Attorney Generals of the States for a special ceremony in which he unveiled to them his crime bill. He told them: "Our veterans deserve to come home to an America where it is safe to walk in the streets." Senate Judiciary Chairman Biden who would be responsible for the passage of such a bill responded: "Bush could get a crime bill within one hundred days if the president dropped his opposition to gun control."

Still on the domestic problem agenda: increasing unemployment, the homeless, bank failures, business and industrial bankruptcies, education, health and welfare matters, the alleged drug war, and the general state of the economy which even the bankers agree is bad. However, the president left all such incidentals to his appointed cabinet and our elected congress, took off on a tour of three key areas, key to the progress of the New World Order, that is. He flew to Ottawa to meet with Canadian Prime Minister Brian Mulroney. Then he was off to Martinique where he conferred with French President Francois Mitterand. From there he flew to Bermuda for a week-end visit with British Prime Minister John Major. Meanwhile, he sent Baker to the Middle East to explore the possibilities of creating an Arabian Economic Community without injuring Israel. And Bush, pausing in Sumter, SC to praise some troops returning from the Gulf and tell them it's time to remember the Vietnam veterans as well, he returned to the White House to make plans for a visit to the Mideast, apparently to back up Baker's proposals for an economic community that can later be turned into a Regional Arabian World Government--without injuring Israel.

Why these unusual visits to see Mitterand in French Martinique, and Major in British Bermuda? That gives us a clue as to how the New World Orderers are weaving their web to entrap the world now that Gorbachev has shown his deceptiveness, his possible defeat, and his plans to build a New World Order of his own kind if he isn't defeated. Let's go back to the time when the Trilateral Commission was formed to take charge of this building of the New World Order. Jimmy Carter was the first US President specifically chosen by the TLC. He proved something of a failure but he did reveal the true intent of the architects of the New World Order. On the day of his inauguration he made what he called a "Statement to the World." We quote the opening paragraphs of that statement as it was published on page E3528 of the Congressional Record for June 6, 1977:

"I have chosen the occasion of my inauguration as President to speak not only to my own contrymen--which is traditional--but also to you, citizens of the world who do not participate in our election but who will nevertheless be affected by my decisions. I also believe that as friends you are entitled to know how the powers and influence of the United States will be exercised by its new government. I want to assure you that the relations of the United States with the other countries and peoples of the world will be guided during our administration by our desire to shape a world order that is more responsive to human aspirations. The United States will meet its obligations to help create a stable, just and peaceful world order...." (Emphasis added).

The Carter Administration featured the humiliation and suffering of US diplomatic personnel held as hostages, the death of Marines posing as unarmed peacekeepers, the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, troubles throughout Africa, rise of the Sandinistas in Nicaragua, payaway of the Panama Canal, and unobserved moves toward the merging of nations. Then, with Gorbachev commanding in the USSR and Reagan presiding in the USA, the Leninist authored "One Step Backwards" began. Slowly, the Evil Empire became a friendly member of the family of nations. Communism supposedly gave way to Democratic Socialism. Western nations, bankers, industrialists, educationists, churchmen, and socialists of various hues began donating to, investing in, or otherwise aiding in the presumed taming of "the bear that walks like a man." At the UN (12/88) Gorbachev laid out his vision of the New World Order. Bush approved and in a graduation speech at Texas A&M five months later (5/12/89) said: "The United States now has as its goal much more than simply containing Soviet expansion. We seek the integration of the Soviet Union into the community of nations....Ultimately, our objective is to welcome the Soviet Union back into the world order." Communism was dead, declared the headlines. A New Age of peace and prosperity was to be born in the nineties. And when the previously planned and encouraged invasion of Kuwait by Iraq occurred, George Bush told the US Congress and the world via satellite (9/11/90) that "This crisis in the Persian Gulf, as grave as it is, also offers us a rare opportunity to move toward an historic period of cooperation. Out of these troubled times, our objective--a New World Order--can emerge."

But when the fighting began Gorbachev revealed to the world that the time of the "One Step Backwards" had ended and the first of the "Two Steps Forward" had begun. He openly attempted to shield client Saddam against the US-manned, UN-coalition. The return of totalitarian dictatorship was evidenced in his treatment of the Balkans. When President Bush reported the Gulf Victory to Congress, he said not a word about his former political partnership with Gorbachev. It was obvious that the vision of a UN governed New World Order under Bush-Gorbachev leadership was but a dream. So the plan endorsed by Henry Kissinger, promoted by Eugene Rostow of the CFR and backed by the Multibankers was the program to be carried out. This involves the creation of economic communities throughout the world, later to become political realities as Regional World Governments. Then, through the strategy of "Piecemeal Functionalism" the weaving of a Socialist One World Government would be possible. First economics, then politics. In an article titled "European Economic Community: 1992," by Dr. Hans F. Sennholz of the Department of Economics at Grove City College, Pennsylvania, the author spoke of the creation of a common currency for Europe:

"Many champions of the Economic Community view the common currency as merely another step toward complete European integration and unification. They favor a gradual surrender of national Sovereignty to the European Parliament, followed by an early inclusion of all non-member countries. Intent on gradually transforming the European continent, they would welcome the former Communist countries, including the Soviet Union, to an even broader union, a 'Urals to the Atlantic' federation which Mr. Gorbachev likes to call 'our common European home.' The initial framework is already in place, the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe (CSCE) which consists of both the Warsaw Pact nations and NATO nations. If we are to believe these thinkers, EC'92 may be followed by CSCE 2002, and a new world order soon thereafter."

This "European integration and unification program" is the most publicized but just one of many such regional projects being developed by the architects of the NWO. No Region is ignored if it produces anything of any value, including cheap manpower. The following from World Press Review (3/91) mentions two such projects. "The 23-year-old Association of South-east Asian Nations (ASEAN) is finally entering its prime, according to a new United Nations study....ASEAN is, in fact, emerging as a dynamic regional bloc, despite the plodding, collaborative programs that the six member countries (Brunei, Indonesia, Malaysia, the Philippines, Singapore and Thailand) cobbled together....ASEAN's achievements stand in stark contrast to the sterile record of the South Asian Association for Regional Cooperation (SAARC). Composed of Bangladesh, India, Nepal, Sri Lanka, Pakistan, the Maldives, and Bhutan, SAARC is riven by bitter political wrangling...."

When George Bush spoke of war in the Persian Gulf as a stepping stone toward the New World Order he was, of course, thinking of the creation of an Arab integration and unification program similar to EUROPE. The vast oil resources of the Middle East require a centralized, controlling authority that will end the bickering and warring that has characterized the region ever since England and France, at the end of World War One, cut up the whole region into countries given to various imams, sheiks, and important Muslim families best equipped to serve the interests of England and France. The rivalry and bitterness increased when in 1938 a geologist from Stanford University (Max Steineke) is reported to have discovered the wealth in black gold hidden beneath the sands of Saudi Arabia. But the real trouble in the Middle East developed after Lord Balfour signed a declaration promising a homeland for Jews in Palestine. Rami Khouri, influential political columnist for the Jordan Times, noted in a leading article in The Link (1-3/91) that the dispute between Kuwait and Iraq "should be seen as symptoms and consequences of a deeper malaise that has afflicted the Arab order ever since the emergence of the modern Arab political order in the postcolonial period after World War One." Khouri is all for the creation of an Arabian New World Order. But he also knows that "The challenge of Zionism and the state of Israel is central to many of the problems which have given rise to Arab sentiments of Islamic fundamentalism and demands for democracy....The fact that a few million Israelis can conquer all of Palestine, occupy neighboring Arab lands and check the collective power of 200 million Arabs has been a source of deep humiliation, even shame, throughout the Arab world. The challenge and threat of Israel is not confined to the front-line Arab states bordering Palestine; it also reaches deep into the rest of the Arab world, for example with Israel's strike at the Iraqi nuclear facility in 1981, or the ability of the pro-Israel lobby in the United States virtually to dictate the terms of American arms sales to Arab countries in the Gulf." (From a leading article in The Link, published by Americans for Middle East Understanding, Inc. Room 241, 375 Riverside Drive, New York, NY 10115).

The careful way in which Israel was protected by Americans and prevented from protecting themselves in the Gulf War is indicative of the troubles the builders of the New World Order are going to have in trying to shape the Middle East into a regional world government. The Arabs can't get along with themselves but they all hate the Zionists. And there is this dispensational and fundamentalist interpretation of prophecy which thinks of the Israelis as God's chosen and must be honored as such. With Islamic fundamentalists seeking to destroy Israel, and with Christian fundamentalists seeking to save Israel, here is a problem that could lead to more and bloodier war in the Middle East before its countries could be merged into a regional administrative department of a socialist world government. Bush may have misspoken when he visioned a New World Order emerging out of the crisis in the Persian Gulf.

Another building block, economic first, political later, is the proposed North American Common Market (NACOM). This is why Bush saw Mitterand in Martinique and Major in Bermuda. These two have responsibilities for lands within the American Hemispheres that are held by European powers. With Britain and France becoming provinces in EUROPE, what is to be their attitude toward their sub-provinces in NACOM? The plan is to merge Canada, Mexico and the United States first, then the smaller countries are to surrender their sovereignty and be merged.

But Bush is running into some difficulty in this second New World Order task. Mexican leaders fear any such surrender of sovereignty because Canada and the US are so much more powerful, and Mexicans might find themselves becoming economic slaves to foreign masters. For that reason, reads a headline in the Baltimore Sun: "Bush Wants Canada included in Mexico trade talks." From Mexico City, John McIntock of The Sun wrote "President Bush notified Congress yesterday (2/5/91) that he wants to include Canada in the trade talks with Mexico. If approved by all three governments, a trilateral pact would create the world's largest free-trade zone, with more than 360 million people and an annual production of 86 trillion....A successful conclusion of the free-trade agreement will expand market opportunities, increase prosperity and help our three countries meet the economic challenges of the future, President Bush said after telephoning Mexican President Carlos Salinas de Gortari and Canadian Prime Minister Brian Mulroney." Note the progression: Economics first, politics later, world government finally.

Scripture has much to say about the merging of nations and peoples into coalitions or regional governments. The Bible seems to confirm that George Washington was right and George Bush is wrong. The eighth chapter of Isaiah, verses nine and ten read:

"Associate yourselves, O ye people, and ye shall be broken in pieces; and give ear, all ye of far countries; gird yourselves, and ye shall be broken in pieces. Take counsel together, and it shall come to nought; speak the word, and it shall not stand: for God is with us."

BUT WHOSE NEW WORLD ORDER?

The General was wrong because he was right. That's our opinion. General Schwarzkopf was wrong because he publicly disagreed with an order given him by his Commander-in-Chief. But subsequent events prove that the General was right and the President was wrong. However protocol called for an apology which was quickly accepted. In the TV interview conducted by David Frost, the General said allied forces could have wiped out Iraq's retreating army. "Frankly, my recommendation had been....continue the march. I mean, we had them in a rout and we could have continued to reap great destruction on them. We could have made it a battle of annihilation." But Bush said "Stop the war." And because of that premature order, what's left of Saddam's Republican Guard, hundreds of tanks, much armament and the helicopters which Saddam had suckered Schwarzkopf into keeping were left, with Saddam strong enough to retain his dictatorship. His forces are busy carrying out genocide on Kurds, Shiites and freedom lovers called rebels. As one editor noted: "The US declared war on a nation it defeated, but on a people it could not: Moslems. Saddam is a super villain to Christians and Jews, and an exalted hero to Moslems." It was as if Bush had opened Pandora's box when he lifted the lid to release Kuwait. And Bush is determined to do nothing about the pandemonium because "UN sanctions don't permit it."

Four months ago Iraq was said to have the fourth biggest armed force in the world, following the USA, the USSR and the PRC in that order. Iraq no longer qualifies as a great power. But there remain most of the Republican Guard, tanks and armaments, and those planes he sent to Iran for storage. If and when the Kurds, Shiites, rebels and dissidents are destroyed, Saddam will still have an armed force and will be a tiger: a terror to other Mideast governments and a hero to the people. And, the Mideast being what it has been ever since its nations were created by political decrees following the first world war, is composed of other tigers that could spring. It is reported that Syria could field about 800,000 men, 4,000 tanks, and 550 combat aircraft. If Egypt called up its reserves, it would have more than a million men under arms, 4,000 tanks and 600 combat aircraft. Israel is armed to match any one of its Arab enemies. As World Press Review (4/91) observed: "The whole Middle East....has been grossly over-armed. Why? The region is in the grip of not one but several overlapping arms races. One is Iran versus Iraq. These two neighbors are historical enemies who will never trust each other. A second race is between Saudi Arabia and both Iran and Iraq, which alternate in their attempts to dominate the Gulf. A third arms race, between Israel and the Arabs is especially complicated. Israel takes the view that it must be strong enough to defeat any coalition of its Arab neighbors, which means being much stronger than any one of them. Each Arab neighbor, however, fears having to fight Israel on its own....The result is a lucrative market for arms merchants. Syria and Israel spend 10-15 percent of their gross domestic product on defense, Saudi Arabia about 20 percent. Even tiny Jordan spends about 12 percent. (Most NATO countries allocate only 3-4 percent to defense.) These bloated arsenals are both a drain on local economies and a nuisance to big powers doing the occasional bout of regional planning." And when President Bush spoke of the Iraqi war being an objective in the creation of his New World Order, he was thinking of regional planning. At first, Bush and Gorbachev were to create their New World Order via the UN, with USA and USSR acting as its police department. But Gorby did a double cross on Bush and the Coalition, and as the war progressed the UN also seemed forgotten. But now the UN has been brought back into the picture, with special thanks to Willy Brandt. Brandt hasn't been in the headlines much since 1974. That's when he was Mayor of West Berlin and one of his close aides was exposed as an East German (and therefore Communist) spy. Brandt resigned as Mayor of West Berlin, but accepted a post as head of the Socialist International. His most important work in this post was the promotion of the New International Economic Organization, whose One World plan was adopted by the UN and forms the basis of the New World Order's Socialist Economic Plan. REPEALS REQUIRED

Dear.....

Thank you very much for your packet of literature...I would like to make comment regarding several issues.

The 14th, 16th and 17th Amendments were illegally ratified. The enactment of the National Banking Act of 1863 was the first time that the Congress abdicated the Monetary System to the Elite Bankers; then [came] the 14th Amendment in 1868. The States have not been under Constitutional Government since 1868. The greatest evil of the 14th Amendment was making the federal government a central government.

As to the rights of the people the 14th Amendment was not necessary as all of the rights were guaranteed under the 1st, 5th, 9th and 10th Amendments. The intent and purpose of the 14th was to control the States and the people under a central government.

You mentioned Administrative Law but did not clarify the extent of such law. Administrative Law is under color of law and violates the Constitution in quite a few instances. If you will refer to the Administrative Procedure Act of 1946 and check to date you will find law that will amaze you.

Then in 1913 the Federal Reserve Act, the 16th and 17th Amendments. 1913 really barred the door. The Elite Bankers have had control of the Monetary System since 1863, control of the Congress since 1913 and control of the States and the people since 1968.

As to the United Nations of 1945, upon ratification of the United Nations Charter and the Statute of the International Court of Justice, the President and Senate abdicated the government of the United States to the United Nations Organization under so-called treaty law. Then the UN Participation Act of December 20, 1945 as amended October 19, 1949, barred the door and also all other laws and treaties since that time.

If you will obtain a copy of the Constitution of UNESCO and the Constitution of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization you will well understand the United Nations Organization and all other laws and treaties or Specialized Agencies (governmental and non-governmental) of the United Nations Organization. I might add here that the States sanctioned and approved the United Nations Organization before ratification in 1945.

To STOP the New World Order and restore this Nation to Constitutional Government the Federal Reserve Act of 1913, United Nations Organization, 14th, 16th and 17th Amendments must be Repealed !!

I look forward to your reply. Sincerely yours, Merritt Newby, Editor "American Challenge." Route 15, Box 197, Athens AL 35611.

following is from The Week In Germany, official publication of the Federal Republic of Germany (3/15/91).

"Speaking on Saturday (3/9/91) at the opening of a two-day conference of the Socialist International (SI), a union of 91 socialist, social democratic and labor parties, in Sydney, Australia, SI president and former West German chancellor Willy Brandt appealed for reforms in the United Nations. 'A sober examination of the Gulf crisis should lead to institutional reforms within the UN,' Brandt said. He called for greater powers for the UN General Secretary, saying that although the action in the Gulf had taken place on the basis of UN resolutions, military strategy had been determined by the US and its allies." Whether this statement from the Socialist leader prompted the action is uncertain, but the UN Security Council immediately went into session and started writing more sanctions having to do with post-war developments in Iraq. Meanwhile Bush, disregarding the rebuffs given him by Gorbachev during Gulf Storm, sent messengers to Moscow to request Gorby to join him in discussing plans for the settlement of all the troubles remaining in the Middle East. This is what Gorby was aiming for from the beginning: control of oil in the Middle East.

So much for the idea of forming the New World Order with the UN as its seat of government. Trilateral Commission leaders in Europe were thinking of a different kind of New World Order: one which would be composed of control by the Trilateral Nations; North America,, EUROPE, Japan; plus a fourth: the USSR. Thus Trilateral Control would be expanded to establish Quadrilateral Control over all regions of the world. The British Intelligence Digest (3/15/91) explains why any such plan would never work, with Israel being the main reason. "What is intended by [this] concept of a new world order is the replacement of an American-led trans-global alliance at the cornerstone of world security by a quadrilateral alliance of equal partners consisting of the USSR, a Franco-German-controlled European Community (EC), Japan and the United States, all policing world peace in harmonious agreement. The whole concept of an equal partnership in world affairs between the United States and the Soviet Union is deeply repugnant. There are also grave difficulties with the idea of the EC becoming a superpower, not least because before that can happen it will mean the end of the United Kingdom as an independent nation state. But there is a greater, and fatal flaw in this concept of a new world order. The concept assumes that the four equal partners will have sufficiently close relationships to act in harmony when faced by a threat to world peace. Yet the most serious threat in the 1990s will continue to come from the Middle East with a final nuclear-armed Islamic assault on Israel likely to be launched sometime in the middle of this decade. And on the issue of Israel, the new world order is split three-to-one against the United States. It is therefore doomed to fail its most important test. The USSR, a Franco-German controlled EC, and Japan will all, at the crunch, be pro-Islamic and anti-Israel. America may take a very tough line with Israel from time to time, but ultimately the US will always defend Israel's existence. Only Britain, if it still exists as an independent country within EUROPE, will side with America in any showdown over Israel." (Intelligence Digest, 17 Rodney Road, Cheltenham, Glos. G150 IHX, United Kingdom.)

In short, the United States and the "Coalition of Nations" acting under the authority of the United Nations won a great military victory, but suffered a far greater political defeat. To justify the war, Bush told the world that we were fighting against aggression, against brutality, against a dictator that was compared with Hitler. But with Desert Storm ended, Saddam Hussein is still the same dictator. The war that was fought to restore the sovereignty of Kuwait has returned the same dictator to rule over that devastated land. And the Arabs and Moslems who have always hated Israel now will hate America as well. So the great United Nations military victory won by the Americans was only a dress rehearsal for a far greater Middle East showdown still to come.

The Elitist Syndicate which intends to rule the world and control its resources (oil being most important) is determined that we shall have the New World Order and inevitable World Government whether we like it or not. The members of this Syndicate brought about the Persian Gulf War for two principal purposes. First, to further solidify their control while making a profit over an induced global recession. "War fills certain functions essential to the stability of our society; until other ways of filling them are developed, the war system must be maintained, and improved in effectiveness." So declares the Eastern Establishment's Report From Iron Mountain." Second purpose of the war: to prepare the Middle East region for "merging" economically and politically with the other regions of the world. Well trained in International Affairs by the Elitists, George Bush, along with Mikhail Gorbachev, was chosen to lead the way. As The Fact Finder (3/1/91) reported: "Among Americans, President Bush and his leaders now stand over nine feet tall, Bush's popular rating at this time is 91%. Out of this, Bush can easily win a second term of four years. But Bush will probably want more. He may now fancy himself as the first President of The New World Order, which is his next goal. Bush seems to favor foreign policy and neglect domestic policy. He ignores the fact that one out of every 16 families in America are on welfare....supported by the other 15. Our national debt is at an all-time high, higher than the debts of all other nations combined. Our country is actually on the verge of bankruptcy. Yet Congress votes itself another huge pay raise."

As we have inferred, the Elitists have considered and acted upon several ways of developing and securing (for a thousand years?) their New World Order. But in one thing they may have made a serious mistake. They have assumed that their economic power can keep Marxism-Leninism under control and working for their benefit. But the "bear that walks like a man," presently governed by those who govern Gorbachev, seems to have other ideas. Gorbachev chose or was chosen to become a partner with Bush in the building of a New World Order. Since the countries they represented were permanent members of the UN Security Council, they chose to fight against Iraq. But Gorbachev walked to the beat of his own drum, broke promises, aided the enemy, criticized the ground war attack that ended the fighting. Does it not seem strange, then, that after all the deceptions, Gorbachev was asked to assist Bush in the reshaping of the post-war Middle East?

"For there shall arise false Christs, and false prophets, and shall shew great signs and wonders; insomuch that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect. Behold, I have told you before." (Matt. 24:24,25).

ANOTHER UNFINISHED WAR

Item. Christian Science Monitor (4/10/91): "The White House denied a report that President Bush had offered Gen. Norman Schwarzkopf the job of Army Chief of Staff as reported by Newsweek magazine."

Item. CNN World News reports that Gen. Schwarzkopf is retiring from the Army, will write and lecture.

Item. Open letter from "We the People" (4/1/91): "The children in our schools are being prepared to welcome the New World Order as it unfolds through our service to the government of the United Nations. It was under UN orders that we stopped firing on Saddam Hussein's troops--and that we stand by as he slaughters all who rebel, including entire villages of Kurds, men, women and children. This is genocide, but those who control the UN have double standards....The Communists control the United Nations."

Report. Under the heading "The Battle That Never Was" USNews reports (4/15/91): "At 2:30 on the morning of Thursday, February 28, the 24th Infantry Division (Mechanized), the 3rd Armored Cavalry Regiment and the 101st Airborne Division (Air Assault) were ready to launch an attack that would have trapped the last elements of Saddam Hussein's Republican Guard in a pocket around the southern Iraqi city of Basra. Instead, 90 minutes before the attack was scheduled to begin came word of a cease-fire. The failure to close the American fist permitted the escape of 14 brigades of Iraqi troops, including five brigades of Republican Guards, plus 500 tanks, 1,400 armored personnel carriers and 400 artillery pieces. The surviving brigades....spearheaded Saddam Hussein's counteroffensive against Shiite insurgents....'We stopped too damn soon,' says one senior military source. 'They can argue about that all they want, but that is the truth. If the attack had continued, it would have bottled up the Republican Guard inside Basra and they would have surrendered.'....The task should not have been too time-consuming or too costly....Battle plans called for achieving all of the key objectives--liberating Kuwait and trapping the surviving Iraqi soldiers inside Basra--in 144 hours. Discussions of a cease-fire began at the 76th hour, and the cease-fire itself went into effect at 100 hours. The Americans were about 36 hours ahead of their schedule at that point and could have achieved all their objectives in six more....the surviving Iraqis would have been trapped, and with no hope of resupply, and no communications with Baghdad, they would have had little choice but to surrender en masse. Instead, they turned their guns on their own people." (Report by Joseph L. Galloway, senior writer for USNews).

Personal comment. In our DBR of 2/8/91, referring to a statement made by Defense Secretary Cheney, we wrote: "Let's pray he'll let General Schwarzkopf run Desert Storm his way without political influence from politicians or the Communist chief of the UN Military Staff, as happened with MacArthur in Korea and with the entire military establishment in Vietnam. But geopolitics will prevail. Because in every war since the Spanish-American the only winner has been that great financial power which creates them."

The French have a name for it: deja vu, something that has happened before. When the Chinese Communist leaders were crushing the pro-freedom movement in Tiananmen Square, George Bush went fishing. When the Lithuanians were struggling to free themselves from Soviet dictatorship enslavement, George Bush went fishing. It is said he was fishing when someone advised him that an invasion of the sovereign State of Panama would boost his popularity. Noreiga captured, George Bush went fishing. After yet another not so little but still safe war in the Persian Gulf, he turned over the task of finishing the job of reshaping the Middle East to his Secretary of State. When the Shiites and Kurds he had advised to destroy Saddam were being themselves destroyed by Saddam's remaining forces, George Bush went fishing. Newsweek did a special report asking "Where Was George This Time?" A full page story (4/15/91) carried a picture of George fishing in the Florida Keys. The report began:

"Where was George? The old refrain from the 1988 presidential campaign is back. As Kurds were being slaughtered in Iraq, Bush was gone fishing. The columnists who extolled the president for rescuing Kuwait from Saddam were now accusing him of moral perfidy. What happened to the president who sent a half-million troops into the desert to 'stand up for what's right and condemn what's wrong'?" Well, he went fishing. Then, refreshed and ready, he launched the second phase in the building of his New World Order. He neglected domestic affairs and began ballyhooing a North American Common Market (NACOM) patterned after the one in Europe which began as a Common Market and will become a Regional World Government next year.

In the Americas it is proposed that the same program is to be carried out and the first step is a free-trade agreement merging the economies of Canada, Mexico and the United States. Part of this first step was consummated three years ago when Canada and the US concluded a free-trade pact. It should be noted that this hasn't worked out as smoothly as the Elitists had hoped. Many industrialists with plants in Canada closed them down and moved to the southern part of the United States where there is more freedom from labor union control and cheaper labor. The Christian Science Monitor (4/9/91) noted that "Canada, the world's second leading wheat exporter, faces the imminent and unwelcome prospect of wheat imports from the United States. This is the latest complication arising from the free-trade agreement between the US and Canada, which began to take effect at the start of 1989." Because of US farm subsidies, US wheat exporters have an advantage. "This would allow low-cost imports of US wheat, flour and baked goods to engage Canada's own production in a costly battle for market share, adding another burden to the country's already struggling agriculture sector. 'Maybe we should look for a way to get out of the free-trade agreement,'" says Charles Swanson, president of the Manitoba Pool Elevators, a grain-elevator cooperative." This is a small example of the trouble that will occur if Mexico and the UN are merged in a trade-agreement which is expected to govern the economies of Canada, Mexico and the US. The history of the development of EUROPE should provide a glimpse of what can be expected in any similar North American economic merger.

However, this is the second step in the march toward George Bush's New World Order, and he and the controlled media are promoting the plan as if it were a crusade. An AP dispatch from Houston (4/15/91) says "A free-trade agreement between the United States and Mexico 'will create jobs and provide opportunities for citizens in both countries,' President Bush said Sunday. He promised to work tirelessly to fight for congressional approval for so-called fast-track authority that would allow the administration to negotiate with Mexico on free-trade with a guarantee that Congress would not amend whatever agreement was reached."

Just how did the idea for this North American Common Market begin? Well, we might go all the way back to the Woodrow Wilson administration when his 'alter ego', Colonel House conceived and promoted a "Pan-American Pact" which became a model for the global League of Nations Covenant. Fortunately, both failed. The Rockefellers and fellow elitists continued to dominate the economic policies of most South American countries. Then in the early 70s the idea of NACOM came up with the creation of Rockefeller's Trilateral Commission. In 1980, Loyd Chadwick, director of the Center for Global Studies wrote: "For the last ten years a number of highly influential people in the western world have been attempting to reshape the global economy of the advanced industrial nations. Known as 'trilateralists,' this self-perpetuating group of elites is seeking to create a 'community of nations' comprised initially of the advanced Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD) countries. Their plan calls for the communist countries, perhaps even the Soviet Union, to join their new concert of power later on. The ultimate goal of trilateralism is to create the first global political and economic system." The commentator then notes: "The rising tide of protectionism and nationalism, along with other political forces, is beginning to engulf the nations of Europe, Japan and the US and is threatening to split the world into three major blocks."

The above was published in 1980 and, as predicted, ten years later the world had been split into three major blocks, much as Orwell had pictured in his 1984. With the end of Comecon and the Warsaw Pact and their proposed inclusion in EUROPE, the world's largest economic and political block will have been formed, probably with the reunited Germany at its head. In competition there would be Japanese block, the world's greatest financial power. In third place would be North America, whose NACOM is yet to be developed and with Bush working toward it tirelessly. This all means the end of national sovereignty and independent countries, to be replaced by Regional World Governments with the UN as a kind of Global Government exercising its political power through "Treaty Laws." "Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD) is the aim; and these trilateral major blocks are working in their own way toward the development of smaller regional economic and political communities which they will control.

This is what George Bush had in mind when he spoke of the Gulf Crisis as being a step toward the New World Order. Important currently is the universal control and distribution of oil, which was being threatened by Saddam. Another region currently being developed by the elite conspirators and their Communist cooperators is South Africa. Together they are called the treasure houses of oil and minerals. How the "economic cooperation and development of resources" is brought about in Africa is explained in the following words of a resident of Durban, South Africa, as published in the South African Observer (4/91): "...A black majority government would, as experience has shown, rapidly impoverish the country and increase its dependence on overseas loans and aid. Such a situation would then enable the international bankers and cartels to attach our vast mineral resources as collateral, as they have done elsewhere in Africa in their quest to build the New World economic Order. Thus, while playing lip service to ideals like justice and fairness for all, the proponents of the New World Order are intent on thrusting South Africa into a situation in which the only equality that will prevail will be that of poverty and oppression...." And yet to come is the organization of "Economic Cooperation and Development" in the Americas. This is the job undertaken by George Bush while James Baker and presidential aids are busy completing the plotting of Middle Eastern Regional Common Market.

At the Virginia Convention in 1775 Patrick Henry said, "I know of no way of judging the future but by the past." A look at America's past seems important. In the later half of the 1700s a new political, economic, religious and social system was being developed in a new country. Based strictly on Christian principles, there was created a form of government which allowed for the free exercise of the inalienable rights of man, as enunciated in the Declaration of Independence. In a paper titled "The Republicanism of James Madison," Professor Neal Reimer of Pennsylvania State University, defined this new revolutionary system: "For Madison a republic was a government which derived 'all its powers directly or indirectly from the great body of the people' and which rested 'on the capacity of mankind for self government.'....A republican government was one which was administered by persons holding their offices during pleasure, for a limited period, or during good behavior.' Even during this 'short duration of their appointments' to government 'the trust should be placed not in a few but in a number of hands." All this is an echo of the Declaration of Independence and the Virginia Bill of Rights, and democracy was mentioned in neither of them. Of the original system of US government, James Madison stated, "The free system of government we have established is so congenial with reason, with common sense, and with a universal feeling that it must produce approbation and a desire for imitation, as avenues may be found for truth to the knowledge of nations. Our Country, if it does justice to itself, will be the workshop of liberty to the Civilized World, and do more than any other for the uncivilized."

"A Republic if you can keep it," said Franklin. But succeeding generations couldn't keep it and our generation hasn't even tried. Nevertheless, from 1879 to the 1900s the US developed into the most free and prosperous nation in the world. But in the 1900s came another political, economic, religious and social revolution. Democracy began to replace Republicanism. The US began adopting the policies of democracy, rejecting the free market system and accepting the principles of collectivism and democratic socialism. The US began discarding the principles of Christianity and morality, took upon itself the precepts and tenets of secular humanism. State became the god of the people. All of which has made the United States well prepared to sacrifice its sovereignty and independence and join the other dying nations of the world as they welcome the birth of the New World Order.

Frank Gaydosh is a well known and respected Christian patriot. He says it like it is: "The future of America will be Christian or there will be no future....I do not want to be guilty of being silent when I should be shouting about the judgment that is coming to America....Unless we are blind and deaf the judgment of God is already being manifested in every area of our lives and is now getting worse with each passing day. May God honor the faithful remnant that have put their trust in Him and who are doing what they can, with what they have, where they are, to bring America to its senses. May God have mercy on us.

"The fear of man bringeth a snare: but whoso putteth his trust in the Lord shall be safe." (Proverbs 29:25).

In a dance band an erratic drumbeat could confuse the players, wreck the rhythm and end the dance. In a 66-year-old jogging president, an erratic heartbeat could interrupt the jogging, affect his future itinerary and might even change the course of history. Newsweek called it arrhythmia. NYTimes called it atrial fibrillation. The estimated million or so who are burdened with it generally call it irregular heartbeat. Normally no big problem. But when the doctors added Graves' disease to the fibrillation diagnosis they advised President Bush to slow down. USAToday said, "Bush has directed Vice President Quayle to take his place Monday at a Chicago health-care center to talk about infant mortality. The president will conduct regular office hours in the White House, spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said." Meaning fewer trips to foreign places in Air Force One, longer and quieter hours in the Oval Office. The sudden and unexpected diagnoses could, hopefully for most of us, interfere with our International President's race to establish his and Gorbachev's version of the New World Order. It also could affect the president's plan to run for re-election.

And a fibrillating heart puts VP Quayle on the spot, once again the victim of jeers and smears because it's said he's inexperienced, tends to say the wrong things at the wrong times, and isn't qualified to take George Bush's place if it should become necessary. Said neo-conservative columnist James Kirkpatrick: "Let us pray for the good health of George Bush, but let us be fair to Dan Quayle. No vice president is expected to be brilliant, and Mr. Quayle has lived up to that expectation. But he has grown on the job, and he's doing well. Suppose we knock off the Quayle jokes. Somehow they're not so funny any more."

Recently there have been other names in the news that are familiar even to those who don't read. The Kennedy Klansmen are back in the news. William Kennedy Smith, nephew of Sen. Ted Kennedy of Chappaquiddick infamy, has been charged with rape, has been fingerprinted, photographed, released on bond to await trial. And Uncle Ted may be in trouble with the Palm Beach police because he said that he "was unaware police were investigating a rape allegation against his nephew at his family's estate in Palm Beach when two officers asked to speak with him Easter Sunday....Palm Beach police said they are trying to determine whether Kennedy and his nephew deliberately evaded questioning before leaving Palm Beach." Alleged justice being what it seems to be these days - in federal, state and local courts, one wonders if the Kennedys will get out of this one as easily as did Ted's earlier involvement in Massachusetts."

Still more names in the news. John Sununu, White House chief of staff has been grounded, can no longer use military aircraft for political or personal travel without first obtaining special permission from Boydon Gray who is White House Counsel. Then there's CIA Director William Webster who is going to resign because Bush asked him to. And gunshot victim Jim Brady is back in the news. The seven day gun control bill bearing his name has been approved by the House, awaits possible passage by the Senate, and promised veto by the president. Next is a new headliner, Paul Tsongas, former Massachusetts Senator who has tossed his Democratic hat in the ring and says he'll try to defeat Bush in 1996. More importantly, here comes another Rockefeller. Sen. Jay Rockefeller IV, West Virginia, said:

"The door is open and I am looking." Seems we need another Rockefeller in a top spot. David is slowly fading away and letting the Kissinger gang handle political affairs for him.

Finally, James Baker is still trying. A Washington Times editorial (4/30/91) observed that "In the past nine months the United States has liberated one Arab country, saved another from imminent invasion, allied itself militarily with several more, pulverized the No. 1 threat to Middle East peace, pledged military protection and millions of dollars in aid to the Kurdish people, forgiven Egypt's massive debt and committed itself to providing new forms of financial aid to Israel. All this might lead one to conclude that US influence in the Middle East is at an all-time high. And it probably is. So why is it, then, that Secretary of State James Baker can travel to the Middle East three times (seven times at this writing-Ed,) in the past seven weeks to peddle a US plan for a regional peace conference and come back with only one solid commitment to participate - and that coming, apparently grudgingly, from the Soviet Union, which is not even a Middle East country?"

An editor wrote, "The US, coercing the UN, induced or bought the cooperation of certain nations and then used a sledgehammer to crack a walnut in the Middle East. But winning the peace with diplomacy is not the same as winning a war with bombs." The nations we allegedly helped now hate us for the very reasons we had for helping them. Among the nations not members of the "Industrial Seven," those who wanted no part of a Soviet dominated World Order also want no part of a UN dominated New World Order with the US as its administrator.

Much of the world's attitude toward the elitist controlled federal government is brought out in an article which appeared in March-April issue of The Aida Parker Newsletter (APN, POBox 91059, Auckland Park 2006, South Africa. US$60 per year, airmailed). Aida Parker is a South African patriot who understands that a goal of the New World Order is the destruction of the Republics of South Africa and the United States, and her newsletter pulls no punches. An article titled "And They Dare to Moralise to Us!" begins:

"As President Bush has made clear, the introduction of an American-dominated New World Order is now official US Government policy. But how well qualified are the Americans, morally and ethically, either as a nation or a government, to act as the world's navigator? At the end of World War 2 that may have been the case. Americans then indeed stood tall, the richest and most powerful nation the world has ever known, the giant of self-reliant nations. Today, the so-called 'American Century' is over. Kaput and finis. They threw it away, destroyed - as South Africa is today being destroyed - by a misguided and malevolent 'liberalism.' So great has been the erosion of the American spirit that for all practical purposes, and despite Mr. Bush's ultra-optimism, the US - flabby, overweight and wheezing - must now prepare to take its place beside the USSR and other has-been nations. Even to suggest that the US should become the leader of a 'kinder, gentler' NWO strikes one as a monstrous aberration.

"Citing pornography, crime, drugs, public indecency, the political culture, the relentless war against Christianity, the decaying cities, the massive collapse of the US education system, Malcolm Muggeridge apostrophised the American system as suffering a 'diabolical degeneracy.' He was right. By any civilised standards the US today is a decadent and declining nation, showing many signs of an all-embracing atrophy. This, of course, does not apply to many Americans, perhaps not even a majority of Americans, but the rot is there, deep inside the national psyche. Let's examine the tattered reality, a few of the symptoms bedeviling a sad, sick nation."

The author then cites specifics, beginning with drugs. "The US remains the most drug abusing nation in the world, according to the National Institute on Drug Abuse. Americans now consume more than half of the entire world's supply of drugs....A particularly disturbing aspect to all this is the involvement of major US banks with the laundering...of the vast drug profits. US banks which have come under investigation for such laundering include Manufacturers Hanover, Bank of America, Security Pacific, Wells Fargo and Chase Manhattan, the Rockefeller dynasty's financial flagship." Regarding abortion, "Since the 1973 Roe vs Ward US Supreme Court decision....an average of 1.5 million legal abortions have been performed each year in the US, a total now of more than 25 million lives snuffed out with legislative approval....Abortion is the leading cause of death in the US....And not surprisingly, since abortion was legalised in 1973, child abuse reports have increased 500%.

Regarding crime. "Millions of Americans today see their cities and communities awash in violence, drugs, pornography, murder, rape, armed robbery and attacks of unprecedented cruelty on children, women and old folks....the government apparatus seems to have lost sight of the very first principle of a civilised society, salus populi, the safety of the people. Cities like New York appear on the verge of anarchy; Washington is one of the rape and murder capitals of the world. Paralysed with guilt, equating evil with illness, the US legal system is a monument to the liberal principle: 'be kind to criminals.' The criminal himself is seen as 'a victim of society,' and so the battle against crime and violence is lost, the politicians lacking the guts and moral authority to treat the enemies of society as the menace they really are."

Much emphasis is laid on what the author calls Christian bashing. "Thanks to the 1963 decision by the US Supreme Court banning all prayer in the public schools, these schools are now officially atheistic. Result? You have the incredible situation where the reading of the Bible has been declared illegal, yet it is not illegal to peddle degenerate filth on those same school grounds....Christian bashing is a conspicuously popular sport with the film industry, on TV, radio and on video. Knocking Christ himself is regarded as particularly avant-garde. That bastion of culture, tolerance, good taste and enlightenment, Hollywood, proved that adequately enough with Martin Scorsese's overwrought 'epic,' The Last Temptation of Christ (Universal)....In France, former Defence Minister Jean-Pierre Chevenement, expressing distaste for America's Rambo culture, said that it appeared that 'no subject was off limits, nothing too outrageous, revolting or disgusting.' But it doesn't just affect the US. This flood of violence, pornography, perversion and downright infantilism is seeping into every country on earth....What we in France are seeing is the organized cretinisation of our people.' What Chevenement said applies 1000 times and more to US pop/rock/heavy metal. The overpowering vulgarity of most of this is beyond credence. Although given an exceptionally soft ride by the general 'liberal' media, this major US industry has managed to degrade every civilised human value: love, family, morality, human decency, pity, patriotism, discipline, respect for life and limb. Most guilty is heavy metal, much of which promotes rebellion, incest, adultery, fornication, sado-masochism, criminal mutilation, voodooism, bondage, sexual assault, drug abuse, violence, immorality, death, deviance, perverse sadism, brutal aggression, abnormality, suicide and adulation of criminals....No doubt many Americans are equally offended by this degenerate slop; but when the police and churches protest such arrogant and calculated display of outrageous offensiveness, the 'liberal' media immediately caterwaul 'censorship' and demand that these artists be given 'the right to work.'

"Earlier this year Dr. William Bennett, Mr. Reagan's Secretary of Education, made some comments that are a searing reproach to America's entire 'liberal' community. 'Never before,' he said, 'has a generation of American adolescents been less healthy, less prepared for life than their parents were at the same age.' He cites statistics to support his accusation. More than a million teenage pregnancies each year....More than 400,000 teenagers undergoing an abortion each year. A US teenage suicide which is the second ranking cause of death in this group. The number of youths aged 14/17 arrested each year pro rata 30 times higher than it was in 1950...."

The article concludes: "Despite US victory in the Iraqi War....the fact remains that the days when the US could play Atlas and hold up the world are over. The parade has passed them by. The great creaking dream machine is today just that; a badly cracked dream. And who brought that about? Who but the very people who now seek to impose an American-dominated New World Order upon us! The bitter truth is this: When it is too late, America may be said to have ordained its own fall as the world's major power."

There are three monotheistic faiths in the world: Christian, Muslim and Judaism. In the Middle East they are at loggerheads and, partially due to the Iraqi War, the Shi-ite denomination of Islam is preaching jihad (holy war) and influencing all others of Islam and Araby to join them in a war against the West. This is a type of history repeating itself. Some three centuries ago, in 1683, a millenium-long fight between Muslims and Christians came to a halt. Muslim General Mustafa commanded an army of more than 2,000 troops and was laying siege to Vienna, hoping to go on and conquer all of Europe in behalf of Islam. The Viennese withstood the siege for two months, then relief forces from Austria, Germany and Poland arrived, swept down from the heights overlooking the city, and routed the Muslim army. Christian civilization survived and grew.

Now, three centuries later, Islam is again at the gates of the West. In France Islam ranks second to Catholicism in the number of adherents. In England where there was one minaret in 1945, now there are over 1,000, 500 of which once were churches. In the Soviet Union one third of the Red Army is Muslim. And in the US a Muslim leader has called for a crusade to gain 75,000 new Muslim converts, and has hopes of succeeding. "Fueled by one of the world's highest birth rates, oil profits, and a decline of morals and will in the West, Islam is contending for the hearts and swords of men as never before," wrote Robert A. Peterson of Chalcedon Report, a Christian publication whose editors are concerned and say: "How can the West deal with the Muslim threat? The same way after 1683, with the results of a spiritual rebirth, a modern-day Reformation. The West's salvation is not in a New World Order, or military power, but in Christianity and its spread throughout the world - including the Muslim world."

"(For the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strong holds;)" (II Corinthians, 10: 4).

THE TRIPLE PLAY

In this final decade before the coming of the millennium, three programs are being sold the American people. And the majority of the American people will accept them resignedly, complacently, or even willingly. These three are President Bush's "New Generation of American Schools," the North American Economic Merger, and Federal Gun Control. Each of these is the subject of an intensive propaganda campaign that aims for quick acceptance.

"America 2000." Coincidence? When Republican President Bush presented his "New Generation" education program to Congress for approval, he asked Democratic Senator Edward Kennedy to introduce the bill. So it was no surprise when it was announced that without the usual delay in such matters, committee hearings are to begin this first week of June. With Bush and Kennedy both backing the bill (with a few amendments by Kennedy), it's almost certain of its passage from bill to Act in record time.

NACOM. On May 24th Congress gave the President special "fast track" authority to negotiate a trade pact with Mexico. When completed it will be presented to Congress for a "yes or No" vote, with no amendments permitted.

Brady Bill. As though it were done by signals, President Bush waited until ex-President Reagan changed his mind about the Brady Bill. Then, in a sudden shift of lip, Bush said he had changed his mind because Reagan had changed his mind, and both were in favor of the bill. Like "America 2000," the Brady Bill means little in itself. But it is a necessary step in the march toward total prohibition of guns in the hands of the law-abiding citizenry. Also, the US-Mexican trade deal is a step toward the creation of a North American Regional World Government which will compete with the European Regional World Government and the developing Japanese Co-Prosperity Sphere. Let's examine these, each in order, space permitting.

But there was one event that gave hope to millions of adults and perhaps life to millions of babies on the part of the US Supreme Court. Justice Souter joined four other Jurists in a ruling that "indicated they either want Roe vs Wade scuttled or at least narrowed sharply," said a Baltimore Sun reporter. Like the other matters, it wasn't a greatly important decision in itself, but it pointed the way for possible future decisions that may at least slow down the murder of babies at taxpayer expense. Of course, the liberals, feminists, homos and humanists are already moving to overcome the Court's ruling. Senator Metzenbaum of Ohio gave the expected response; "Congress must act swiftly since the Supreme Court can not be counted on to protect a woman's right to choose." So with the ACLU probably leading, we can expect a long fight over the question "does a woman (or teenager) have a right to be an accessory to murder if she so chooses, and should the taxpayers be forced to pay for the cost of the murder." But about those three immediate programs:

President Bush went to St. Paul to a much-touted experimental magnet school and told the people about his "America 2000" project. He said, "I ask all Americans to be points of light in the crusade....to prepare our children and ourselves for the exciting future that looms ahead." (Underlining added). Of course, what "looms ahead" in George Bush's mind is the preparation of a citizenry that will fit without protest into his New World Order. And the title "America 2000" identifies the program as a part of the Millennium and the New Age movement.. As for the president's "points of light," D.L. Cuddy who was a Senior Associate with the US Department of Education from 1982 to 1988, said, "I have quite frankly not been able to find service to the community or humanity linked to 'points of light' anywhere other than in repeated references to these in the writings of occultist Alice Bailey some years ago."

The author of "America 2000" is Lamar Alexander, new US Secretary of Education, formerly governor of Tennessee. There he called for "a brand new American school....to be open year round for children from birth all the way through undergraduate education." Bettina Dobbs, RN, MS, former consultant for the US Department of Health and Human Services, now president of Guardians of Education for Maine, explains how the system will work: "These year long schools (centers) are to be open for children from birth. A team of teachers will be assigned to a child from the day that child arrives at the center all the way through college. This will require a 'very professional core of teachers, who must also supervise 'Hard to handle Volunteers.' In this role the teachers become 'parent teachers' who help the actual parents feel more comfortable about leaving their child(ren) at the center. The next step is to change the parent-child relationship, replacing it with a change-agent or 'certified educator' who will supply free medical care, free nutritional counseling, free food, free mental health services, etc. [at taxpayers' expense, of course]. The process begins when the 'Parent Educator,' who through home visits and school visits bonds herself to a family....Once that bond between 'Parent Educator' and the biological parent is established, the children and parents are eased into school programs which deliver a battery of services....Under the guise of education screening, parents and children are evaluated and a computer record is initiated which will track each human unit for the rest of its life....What we are into is a total restructuring of the society. What is happening in America today....is not simply a chance situation and the usual winds of change. What it amounts to is a total transformation of our society. We are moving into a new era." It's called the New Age or the New World Order. And "America 2000" is designed to accomplish this movement by the millennial date 2000. Hence "America 2000." Mrs. Dobbs warns: "Families entangled in any state program must be on guard. They will be prime targets....Beward of any parenting program or those for children 'at risk'. You have been warned. Please warn others. This dangerous program must not be allowed to destroy our Christian families." (For copies of Bettina Dobbs' complete report, send a SASE to Plymouth Rock Foundation, POBox 577, Marlborough, NH 03455).

NACOM. The media and federal officials treat it as though it were nothing more than the establishment of free trade between Canada, the United States and Mexico. But if one will examine EUROPE which is to become a Regional World Government next year, what is expected for North America can be seen. But the trade pact in itself should be rejected because of what it will do to American agriculture and industry. "Years ago," wrote Patrick Buchanan, "Americans watched, with cool indifference, as thousands of jobs in the textile mills of New England moved to the low-wage South. Those jobs, however, remained in the United States. Should we be equally indifferent to see them move to Hong Kong, communist China, which uses slave labor, or India? Why? While that surely means lower costs to US consumers, are not we Americans something more than mere customers? What is wrong with protecting American manufacturers from cutting throat foreign competition, asks the protectionist. Upon them, government imposes wage-and-hour laws, tough environmental standards, safety-and-health measures, land-use rules. They are taxed at federal and state levels, and admonished to be good corporate citizens and give generously to local charities. Almost all do so - and all these social costs are factored into prices. What do we tell that manufacturer when his competitor moves to Mexico, employs cheaper labor, avoids US taxes and inspections from the Environmental Protection Agency and the Occupational Safety and Health Administration, as well as visits from the Little Sisters of the Poor; then undercuts him by selling cheaper in the US market?"

Imagine a Florida without farms," writes Lisa Shuchman of the local Palm Beach Post, "with fruits and vegetables drenched with toxic pesticides and supermarkets where the only produce for sale is expensive and imported. This is the nightmare that could result from a proposed trade pact with Mexico, Florida farmers warn." President Bush says trade agreements with Canada and Mexico would "create the largest, richest trade zone on Earth" and lead to "unprecedented economic growth and regional harmony." If he's talking for the Elite that's promoting a New Economic World Order, he's right. And so is Pat Buchanan when he says "There is a one-man, one-vote,,, majority-rule, popular-will kind of democracy championed by some that is the antithesis of what the Founding Fathers wanted for their new country. So, too, there is a form of free-booting, bottom-line-uber-alles kind of capitalism from which conservative men will recoil. Quoting from the economic William Ropke (there is a) kind of capitalism in which many of us believe: 'Self-discipline, a sense of justice, honesty, fairness, chivalry, moderation, public spirit, respect for human dignity, firm ethical norms - all of these are things which people must possess before they go to market and compete with each other. These are the indispensable supports which preserve both market and competition from degeneration....Family, church, genuine communities....tradition are their sources.' A foreign policy that looks out for America First should be married to an economic policy that considers first the well-being of our own business and our workers. This does not mean automatic opposition to free trade with Canada, Mexico or any other nation; it means that any agreement should be accepted or rejected upon how it affects Americans, not just as consumers but as a people." If this US-Mexican trade agreement is rejected, it could mean an end to all this talk about a New World Order. For this NWO is based upon economic monopoly and control of the world's resources.

Gun Control. By the time you read this the Brady Bill may have become the Brady Handgun Violence Prevention Act. All it really does is make a purchaser wait seven days and gain official approval before he can buy a handgun. The bill passed the House on May 8th by a vote of 239 to 186. At this writing there seems to have been a delay in a Senate vote because there is much stronger opposition to the bill in the upper house. In times like that the promoters of the bill try to find a time when much of the opposition is elsewhere and passage can be assured. As for the bill itself, we agree with Spotlight, which calls it a "useless" bill. Rep. Bill Alexander (D-AR) seems to agree: "Passing the Brady Bill will just be a statement by this Congress that we are opposed to violent crime. What is needed is a crime bill, more prosecutors, more judges, more prisons for the criminals who should be kept there."

In the beginning of our nation when it was still a Republic, the idea of gun control wouldn't even have been considered by the citizens. It was believed that every law-abiding citizen was supposed to have a gun for purposes of protection, against the government itself as well as against criminals. When the Constitution was being considered by the States, George Mason and Patrick Henry, Virginia patriots, believed there was something wrong with the Constitution; something missing. They apparently talked it over with another Virginia patriot, James Madison, who agreed, put it in writing, and it became the Second Amendment to the Bill of Rights. Larry Pratt, executive director of Gun Owners of America, observed: "When he (Madison) wrote the Second Amendment, he looked at the rest of the world and he said that the reason the other countries of the world are despotisms is because they do not trust their own people with firearms. The view of our founders was that the government must never have a monopoly of force. Our Founding Fathers had plenty of reason to be sensitive about this issue because the British had tried to disarm them before the Revolution. The same Congress that passed the Second Amendment - that package of individual protection against the government - passed the Militia Act of 1790. And that Militia Act defines the militia as 'every able bodied man of military age,' and then goes on to describe the organized militia as one called up and organized by the Governor."

Don McAlvany confirms: "The idea of an armed citizenry is as relevant today as it was 200 years ago. The British tried to keep firearms out of the hands of the colonists before the War for Independence. They said that the colonists did not need their guns because they had the British Army to protect them from the French and the Indians. Hostilities erupted near Boston on the road from Concord to Lexington when the Red Coats tried to confiscate a magazine of colonial muskets. Today's Red Coats, the Kennedys' and those from Handgun Control, Inc. tell us the same thing the British tried to tell our forefathers - that private people do not need their guns. Well, we need our guns as much as the American colonists needed theirs. While we enjoy peace with the French and the Indians today, America is a battleground in a drug war. Americans are being held hostage in their homes because they do not dare go out on the streets. There are not enough police to protect the citizens. After all, there are only 150,000 police on duty at any one time in the whole country trying to protect a quarter of a billion Americans."

America 2000, US-Mexican Trade Pact, Brady Bill; all are phonies in that they were designed for purposes other than those written into the measures. America 2000 could give every child a personal computer code number by which he could be tracked the rest of his life, Big Brother style. The proposed Trade Pact could create a North American Regional World Government. And the Gun Registration measure could create a personal computer code number which could label one a suspected criminal to be watched simply because he has a gun. And all three of these measures are steps in the march to a New World Order.

When the Word was no longer to be with His disciples in the flesh, "Then he said unto them, But now, he that hath a purse, let him take it, and likewise his scrip; and he that hath no sword, let him sell his garment and buy one." (Luke 22:36).

PARADE OVERKILL

Have we witnessed another colossal cover-up? In this reporter's life span there have been five military confrontations big enough to be called wars. This fifth one, nicknamed Desert Storm, was, by presidential pronouncement, the shortest, least costly in American lives, and by far the most glamorous of them all. Certainly, none of the other wars produced such a plethora of parades and public celebrations. Honest displays of patriotism are like shots of adrenalin, instilling new life in the fluttering heartbeat of a Nation. But displays of patriotism designed to prevent the facts or truth, as of an embarrassing or illegal activity from becoming known, are the worst kind of political hypocrisy. We are reminded of the words of Samuel Johnson (1709-1784), English lexicographer who said "Patriotism is the last refuge of a scoundrel." This statement seemed reflected in the lead editorial in The Miami Herald (6/8/91). Headlined "Parades Reach Overkill," it admitted that "The veterans of the Persian Gulf War have been deservedly feted in dozens of American cities and towns. One of America's briefest wars, one of its most stunning military triumphs, has inspired parades without end. But today's Victory Day Parade in Washington (6/8/91) is an exercise in calculated excess. Good winners know when to lay down the ticker tape and the dress uniforms. The warranted exultation of victory should not degenerate into an immoderate arrogance. Bush cannot justify spending $7 million in public funds for a parade that promised more grandiosity than grandness....At a time of austere Federal budgets, at a time of overwhelming domestic needs, the Pentagon should not be treating itself to this Caesarean excess. Instead, the President should be endeavoring to unite the Americans people behind efforts to address economic ills, deteriorating cities and infrastructure, Federal budget deficits, the failure of public education, the growing poverty of children, drugs, crime...It is time to end the celebrations and to put America's domestic will on sober display."

But it wasn't an end to parades. Washington's Saturday Parade was followed by an even greater Monday Parade in New York City. The latter was called "the mother of all parades" and the parade in Washington was, said The New York Times, "Just a little town staging a befuddled mess." New York won the Battle of the Parades, partly because Washington had originally planned its parade to be held on July 4. But New York decided it would hold its ticker-tape parade on June 10. Washington then tried to steal the thunder by moving its parade from July 4 to June 8. Both were well Financed, well attended, and successful in doing what parades are supposed to do. But there was grumbling, because there was a second purpose behind those parades. The parades were not merely to give honor to veterans. They were intended as a coverup. Sydney Schanberg of Newsday said, "I appreciate why people feel in need of a lift. What I don't appreciate is the orchestration by a White House using the parades as a way to disguise both the failures at home and the failure of the battlefield victory to achieve any of the larger war aims of the Middle East, stability and a 'new world order' that had been so glibly broadcast by the Bush administration."

President Bush certainly needs a cover-up to disguise or conceal the many problems and failures of his administration. To name a few: human rights in China, civil rights in the US, peace in the Middle East, free-trade with Mexico, starvation in Ethiopia, Kurdistan and elsewhere, chaos in the 15 so-called republics that make up the Soviet Union; and at home; recession, education, drug war, crime, etc. The Gulf War is far from over. 65,000 US troops are still in the Gulf area, are likely to remain there indefinitely. Secretary of State James Baker has made trip after trip to the capitals of the various countries in the Middle East, with little real success. Israel Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir sent a letter to President Bush, saying very plainly that there will be no "land for peace" deals between Israel and its Arab neighbors. And there will be no peace conference if any UN representative is to be present.

Bush has given Baker yet another job; to make arrangements for a Bush-Gorbachev summit at which time an anti-nuclear treaty will be signed and the two leaders re-united in their plans to create their version of the New World Order and UN-managed World Government. Baker went to Geneva to meet with Soviet Foreign Minister Alexander Bessmertnykh. They exchanged messages sent by their leaders, talked and agreed on nothing. Bush insists there must be a treaty ready for signature, otherwise there's little reason for a summit. Gorby is anxious for a summit so he can get back to the job of begging for Western aid to his Perestroika; but he won't agree to the terms of the proposed treaty; so there's a stalemate.

Meanwhile, Gorby was in Oslo to accept a Nobel Peace Prize for "ending the Cold War." There he received criticism as well as the prize. He countered by declaring that any hopes of a peaceful New World Order depends upon massive assistance to underwrite the Soviet Union's political and economic reforms. At the same time in Paris there was a gathering of representatives of the world's wealthiest nations. They warned Gorby that he "must produce a concrete program to turn his crumbling economy from central planning to free-market principles before they could even discuss the massive aid package he's trying to sell to the Western Nations." By the time Gorby received that message he was in Stockholm, Sweden. There he was again berated for his treatment of Lithuania, Latvia, Estonia, Afghanistan, Armenia, and other countries. Gorby told Swedish Prime Minister Ingvar Carlsson that "Compassion by a neighboring country must not take the form of meddling in the affairs of the Soviet Union, especially when it is in the process of reform." Carlsson responded by telling Gorby that the Baltic people had the right to self-determination, and that political dialogue, not force, was the way to proceed. So Gorby proceeded back to Moscow where he is fighting for his political life. If plans go as expected, there's to be an economic summit of the heads of state of the Trilateral countries in London July 14, and Gorby has been invited to attend. But - and this is important - preparing for that economic summit there was held a super-secret meeting of the Bilderberg Group, near Baden-Baden, Germany, June 7-9. The controlled communications media never, never, mention the Bilderbergers. But The Spotlight weekly has for years made it a top priority to keep tabs as much as is possible on this super-secret group. Its weekly issue of 6/10/91 said there would be "approximately 120 luminaries" including "David Rockefeller, Henry Kissinger, the Rothschilds of Britain and Europe, many recent heads of state and high officials of the United States, Canada and Europe. House Speaker Tom Foley and Senate Finance Committee Chairman Lloyd Benson are among scheduled congressional leaders to attend. The Bilderberg has, as usual, an ambitious agenda, already set in motion by its junior partner, the Trilateral Commission, which met in Tokyo in April."

The Spotlight doesn't say this outright, but we suspect that the Bilder-berg meeting was called for the purpose of preparing the agenda that is to be handed to the government leaders who will attend the July 14th Economic Summit. The Bilderberg Group is composed of world leaders and their assistants; while the Economic Summit is attended by government leaders and their aides. And, since these economic summits first began, world leaders meet in secret session to prepare the programs that are supposed to be carried out by the government leaders. Since the world leaders are hoping to have their New World Order installed and fully operational by the millennial year 2000, the present agenda will probably include the following:

1) Provision for the UN to lay and collect taxes on shipments between countries, beginning with a 10-cent tax per barrel on oil. The "Tax Treaty" has already been prepared, but has not yet been presented for approval by the UN member nations.

2) GATT (General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade), in its upcoming "Uruguay Round" is to be pressured into eliminating all country-declared tariffs.

3) Passage of the US-Mexico free-trade pact, for which President Bush is so strenuously campaigning at present, and is to be recognized by all nations. This US-Canada-Mexico North American Common Market (NACOM) is intended to be developed into an all-Hemisphere Common Market, a trading bloc similar to that of the European Common Market which is to become a political regional world government next year.

4) in Europe all still-existing trade barriers are to be eliminated and a single currency installed, controlled by a Regional World Bank.

5) The many economic problems of the Soviet Union must be solved, and the 15 nations that make up the Union must stay within the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, with Moscow at its head.

6) Japan must be encouraged to create a third "Regional World Government" to match the other two: EUROPE and AMERICA.

Some time ago the World Leaders gave up the idea of creating a World Government "from the top down." They agreed that it had to be done piece-by-piece. A part of this program involved the creation of three huge trading blocs: Europe, North America, and the Far East. That's why the Trilateral Commission membership is divided into three sections: North America (US, Canada and Mexico to be added); the industrial nations of Europe; and Japan. First, these are to become economic, that is, trading blocs. Later they are to become political, as EUROPE is becoming now. And finally, the three will become Regional World Governments (George Orwell guessed it right in his 1984.) Finally, to regulate and control any differences between these three Regional Governments, the reconstituted and strengthened United Nations will assume the role of World Government with all legal, judicial and military powers to maintain control over the three regional world governments (Orwell didn't write about this part of the plot).

That is why the Trilateral Commission was created. And it has generally been assumed that Zbigniew Brzezinski was the actual author of the plan, because David Rockefeller called upon Zbig to form the Trilateral Commission. But lately we remembered a very important book which we had received years ago; a book that we glanced through, not giving it much thought at the time. Suddenly we remembered, and we dug through our badly kept bookpile, found it and began to read it seriously. Here we found the entire plan for the creation of the New World Order, spelled out in black and white as early as 1921, and presented to the Insiders in book form in 1941. "Plan For Permanent Peace" is its title; written by a former German PhD., Hans Heyman, and published by Harper & Brothers Publishers in 1941. In a foreword by Richard T. Ely, then of Columbian University, we are told: "Dr. Heyman presents a plan for a Bank of Nations. We already have, and in the near future can expect to see many more plans for an international world hegemony. Dr. Heyman's approach differs from those we already have in that he treats of economics rather than politics....Dr. Ely had a distinguished career in Germany which he was ultimately forced to give up on leaving that country. He is now becoming an American citizen....He is a democrat who brings us many valuable lessons from the Old World to help us build a new world." 30 years earlier Heyman's acquaintance, Paul Warburg, also came from the Old World to help build and manage the Federal Reserve System.

While in Europe Heyman received much encouragement from Keynes, Lloyd George, the Rothschilds; but Walter Rathenau was his chief promoter. Rathenau said, "300 men, all of whom know one another, direct the economic destinies of Europe and choose their successors from among themselves." He knew; he was one of them. Heyman wrote that in July 1922 "Rathenau invited me to his home to discuss further action." Two days before the meeting Rathenau was assassinated. So "In 1923 I visited England and the United States." He held conferences with Warburg and Benjamin Strong of the Federal Reserve Board. By 1941, thanks to J.P.Morgan and his successors, Wall Street began to outrank "The City" in London as an international bankers center, and Hans Heyman and his "Bank of the World" plan was drawing attention. The Rockefeller Foundations, Carnegie Endowment, the CFR, members of the Fed and other financial luminaries praised his plan and he wrote the book "Plan For Permanent Peace." Only trouble, the end of the second world war was spawning the IMF, World Bank and regional financial institutions, and Heyman's original plan lost prestige with the founding of the UN.

But in the 1970s came the Trilateral Commission and its plan for the creation of three huge trading regions, and Heyman's plan was given new life. Trying to condense 315 pages plus numerous drafts and diagrams is difficult.. Suffice it to say that Heyman's Plan For Permanent Peace is a blueprint for world government to be created through financial and economic control with the establishment of a world Bank of Nations and three subordinate regional banks: Europa Bank, Inter-American or Hemisphere Bank, and Oriental Bank. "This all embracing super-organization of banks would be the highest economic world authority, the Federal World Board for the entire world economy," Heyman wrote. Of course a world police force, one world currency with all control of currency and credit worldwide lodged in the files of the Bank of Nations would follow. And the economic system would be neither Capitalist nor Communist, but the synthesis which Heyman called Social Capitalism. Compare this with the Trilateral Commission plan and you must agree with Solomon who said "There is no new thing under the sun." Styles and customs change, new techniques and strategies develop. But it's the same old conspiracy.

"Beware lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit, after the tradition of men, after the rudiments of the world, and not after Christ." (Col. 2:8).

REVIVAL OR REQUIEM?

By order of the Commander-in-Chief, the 215th celebration of the birthday of the United States of America is to be the grandest, most impressive, most all-inclusive party of them all. The veterans of all the wars in which US troops have been engaged are to be honored. World Wars One and Two, Korea, Vietnam, Grenada, Persian Gulf, and by inference and historical notation, wars of other generations; Revolutionary, 1812, Civil, Spanish-American, Mexican, and lesser incursions into Haiti, Nicaragua, Guatemala and other Caribbean countries - veterans of them all, living or dead, are to be remembered and honored. But what is not to be remembered as it should be, is the Birth Certificate of our Republic: The Declaration of Independence. Without it there would have been no Constitution, nor a Republic. Some years ago a subscriber, on a previous birthday observance, wrote us, incidentally explaining why the Fourth of July has become a Veterans Day Observance instead of a Birthday Celebration. He wrote:

"Remember that the Constitution does not govern the people; it governs the government, and it strictly limits government's powers. And the Bill of Rights does not grant us rights; it states very clearly that government cannot take from us those rights that are ours because God gave them to us. Because we are 'endowed by our Creator with certain unalienable rights,' the Bill of Rights proclaims that 'Congress shall make no law' regarding God's gifts to us. We do not possess 'Constitutional rights,' or 'First Amendments rights.' It should be self-evident that we possess God-given rights, and that our Nation's founders who signed the Declaration of Independence wanted nothing more from government than that our God-given rights remain protected from any enemy - or from any government - foreign or domestic. This is the essential understanding of the Declaration of Independence. No American worthy of the name should ever forget it. For, if the Declaration's thunderous truths are cast aside, the vacuum created will be filled by the falsehood that rights proceed from government. Once that notion becomes widespread - as it has already - the people will acquiesce in allowing the government, that supposedly has granted rights, to limit them or cancel them completely."

Upon signing the Declaration of Independence 215 years ago on July 4, 1776, Samuel Adams said, "We have this day restored the Sovereign to Whom all men ought to be obedient, and from the rising to the setting of the sun, let His Kingdom come." Later this organizer of the Boston Tea Party, who was called "the father of the American War for Independence," had written: "The rights of the colonists may be best understood by reading and carefully studying the institutes of the great Law Giver and Head of the Christian Church, which are to be found clearly written and promulgated in the New Testament."

Here we find some of the reasons why this 215th celebration has become a Veterans Day Observance rather than a Birthday Celebration. The New World Order is founded upon the supposition that all rights are given to men by government; and God has nothing to do with it. And the once Americanist United States Supreme Court was wrong. we are told, in February 29, 1892 when it declared: "If we pass...to a view of American life as expressed by its laws, its business, its customs. and its society, we find everywhere a clear recognition of the...truth...that this is a Christian nation." But in this humanistic New Age, the 215th observance has been decreed to be a military observance, a war based celebration. So, let's look at the occasion as it regards arms and men.

Government authorities sought to disarm the colonists. Officials pointed out that the French-and-Indian Wars were ended, Indian raids were seldom and easily quelled by the Redcoats, and protection of the people was the duty of the British forces. However the colonists, especially those around Boston, thought differently. They 'sold their coats and bought weapons,' joined the Minutemen who were training on the village greens against the inevitable day of bloodshed. They also stored extra weapons and munitions. On April 18, 1775 General Gage assembled 800 British grenadiers for the purpose of arresting Samuel Adams and John Hancock, and then proceeding through Lexington to Concord where there was an arsenal which the grenadiers were to destroy. But Gage's plan was a poorly kept secret and when the grenadiers moved, so did Paul Revere and William Dawes who are credited with arousing the countryside to arms. The grenadiers marched to Lexington where they met resistance. British Major Pitcairn approached the Minutemen and shouted, "Lay down your arms, you damned rebels." A pistol "shot heard round the world" was fired, and the war began. On July 2, 1775, George Washington took command of the newly named Continental Army. If the colonists had obeyed the government and given up their arms, there might never have been a Declaration of Independence, or the 215th birthday of a free and independent Republic (not a Democracy) to celebrate.

When that long and bloody war was over the Colonists, now citizens, had learned to fear any kind of central government that could evolve into a dictatorship. So, when the Founding Fathers demanded that a Bill of Rights be added to the Constitution, the Second Amendment read: "A well regulated militia, being necessary to the security of a free state, the right of the people to keep and bear arms shall not be infringed." Said Patrick Henry: "The great object is that every man be armed...everyone who is able may have a gun." Thomas Jefferson wrote into the Virginia Constitution of 1776: "No free man shall be debarred the use of arms within his own land." George Washington, Commander of the Continental Army and now President of the new Republic (not a Democracy) was emphatic: "Firearms stand next to the Constitution itself. They are the American people's liberty teeth and keystone under independence...From the hour the Pilgrims landed to the present day events, occurrences, and tendencies prove that to ensure peace, security and happiness, the rifle and pistol are equally indispensable...The very atmosphere of firearms everywhere restrains evil interference--they deserve a place with all that's good." When the Massachusetts convention was called to ratify the Constitution, Samuel Adams submitted a resolution that the "Constitution never be construed to authorize Congress to prevent the people of the United States who are peaceable citizens from keeping their own arms." James Madison added in The Federalist that "Americans have the right and advantage of being armed...unlike the citizens of other countries whose governments are afraid to trust the people with arms, the right of the people to bear arms shall not be infringed." Dan Smoot brought the affirmation up to date when he wrote: "A free man must have unrestricted right to own and use personal weapons, in the defense of his family, his home, and his own person, against any kind of marauder--whether the marauder be a soldier of an invading army, an agent of an internal political conspiracy or a common criminal. If a man loses his right to free, lawful use of personal firearms, he becomes totally dependent--and, therefore, a slave--dependent upon centralized police authority for protection of his life, liberty and property."

About the word "militia" which is found in the 2nd Amendment; much controversy has been created as to its exact meaning. George Mason explained its meaning when ratification of the Constitution was being debated in the Virginia Assembly, June 16, 1788. He said, "I ask who are the militia? They consist now of the whole people, except a few public officials." Patrick Henry agreed. In 1811 Thomas Jefferson, writing to a friend, said, "The true barriers of our liberty in this country are our state governments..." He maintained that a potential federal dictatorship could always be opposed by state militias, made up of "every man able to bear arms." To bring the meaning up-to-date, Webster's New World Dictionary, Third College Edition, copyright 1988, defines "militia": "In the U.S., all able-bodied male citizens between 18 and 45 years of age who are not already members of the regular armed forces." It also explains that "members of the National Guard and of the reserves (of the Army, Air Force, Coast Guard, Navy and Marine Corps) constitute the organized militia; all others, the unorganized militia." Interestingly, when Congress was drafting the Militia Act of 1792, enacted shortly after the adoption of the Constitution, the drafters studied the Swiss model which had (and still has) such a citizen militia; and they sent to Switzerland for documents on its operation.

Which brings up the fact that all Red tyrannies of the 20th century started with gun confiscation, leaving the people defenseless. Lenin gave the order: "Make mass searches and hold executions for found arms...unless this is done, the victory of Socialism is impossible." Trotsky added: "To insure quick Communist victory in civil warfare, there arises the necessity of disarming the bourgeoisie (middle class) and arming the workers, of creating a communist army." Later Stalin ordered: "If the opposition disarms, well and good. If it refuses to disarm, we shall disarm it ourselves." And Hiter wrote: "History shows that all conquerors who have allowed their subject races to bear arms have prepared their own downfalls." As a result of carrying out such orders, Hitler was able to change Germany from a Republic to a dictatorship. In Hungary, all firearms were taken into police custody just before the Soviets sent in their Red tanks and seized the country. The Hungarians fought the Red tanks with clubs and stones and Molotov cocktails whenever the ingredients could be found. Another interesting fact; because of restrictive gun control regulations in Britain. In World War Two the English people had few firearms to defend themselves, their families and their homes, if the Nazis should cross the Channel. Churchill appealed to the United States for small arms, and our government sent them 200,000 rifles.

Much of the above information has been condensed from an excellent report issued by the National Association of Pro America, prepared by its National Legislative Chairman, Marion M. Hurley (P.O.Box 80575, San Marino, CA 91118). Following are direct quotes from that Report.

Today an hysterical and deceptive campaign to ban guns has been launched.. At both State and National levels Bills...are being promoted to ban or limit guns and/or ammunition or access to them. Waiting periods, registration of guns and/or ammunition, requirements of dealer reporting of purchasers' names, or checks on purchasers' backgrounds (thinly disguised registration) are being promoted singly or collectively by liberal leftist lawmakers and media--all under the guise of halting crime. Never before has the law-abiding citizen's right to defend his life, family, home, property and freedom been more in jeopardy. With crime, drugs, and gangs out of control and our national borders virtually unprotected, permitting a virtual invasion of illegal aliens, criminals, terrorists & drug smugglers, it is insanity or worse to disarm law-abiding Americans...Guns don't cause crime. Criminals cause crime...Gun controls don't stop crime but do disarm the law-abiding citizens and embolden the criminals...

The Plan to merge the United States with the Soviet Union in a new world order socialist/communist United Nations Government has been promoted for nearly 70 years by the Council on Foreign Relations, mainly with Rockefeller, Carnegie and Ford Foundation money, and is now joined by the Trilateral Commission. Its plan is far advanced with CFR members in key positions in both parties, the government and media. The latest CFR report lists 313 members who formed the core of the Reagan team. Pres. George Bush is himself a past CFR Board member and Trilateral member. Some of the Bush CFR appointments include Brent Scowcroft, National Security Advisor; Lawrence Eagleberger, Deputy Secretary of State; William Webster, past director of the CIA; Robert Gates, Bush announced replacement as Director of the CIA; & Thomas Pickering, Envoy to the UN. It is estimated that there will be some 300-400 members running the Bush Administration. Both Scowcroft and Eagleberger are proteges of Henry Kissinger, past CFR Director, who directed foreign policy for Nelson Rockefeller and ran the Nixon foreign policy.

Individual and national disarmament under UN World Government is planned. Official State Department Publication 7277 published after Congress set up the US Arms Control and Disarmament Agency (still official US policy), lists three steps in a planned disarmament program. In its 3rd and final step "State would retain only those forces, non-nuclear armaments, required for maintaining internal order...Manufacture of armaments would be prohibited except for those...to be used by the United Nations Peace Forces and those required to maintain internal order. All other armaments would be destroyed or converted to peaceful purposes."... The final goal of Soviet and CFR/US planners is a socialist/communist world government in which the United States sovereignty and freedom is lost and every nation and individual is disarmed, with a UN Peace Force equipped with sufficient armaments (including nuclear) to maintain the "peace."

Every American who treasures liberty must exert every effort to halt this step-by-step unconstitutional disarmament of first our citizens and then our Nation, betraying our independence, sovereignty and precious heritage of freedom, bought so dearly and entrusted to us, into a communist/socialist United Nations Tyranny.

On our Nation's 215th birthday the troops will parade and the onlookers will cheer, the soothsayers will speak and the hearers will applaud, but will none of them realize that they are celebrating the death of a Nation and the birth of a New World Order?

"Shall I not visit for these things? saith the Lord: shall not my soul be avenged on such a nation as this?" (Jeremiah 5:29).

Year Thirty-Eight.....Number Fourteen.....July 12, 1991

THE ROAD TO WAR

Write it this way: Another no-win war without a proper ending. That extravaganza, the New World Order War labeled Desert Storm was lavishly produced, expertly directed, faultlessly played, and provided oceans of cheers for the supposed winners and rivers of tears for the victims. It also provided a hefty boost for George Bush who must be re-elected if he is to become, with his partner Mikhail Gorbachev, co-chairman of their version of the New World Order. There were great changes because of the war, but nothing really new under the sun. Kuwait was "liberated" and restored to its original dictatorship where freedom had been promised. Its oil fires may be sufficient to prevent a global oil-gush that might bring down the price of gasoline. Saddam Hussein lost his bid for control of the liquid gold of the Middle East, but he remains absolute master of a country still possessed of a sizeable standing army, with chemical warfare capabilities, and the means of producing nuclear weapons. The sequence of power creation is interesting. First there was Iran that grew strong and was filled with hatred for the Great Satan. It stood in the way of the New World Order Planners who sought to create a regionalized economic area in the Middle East. So the Planners built up a massive military behemoth that would reduce the former Persia to appropriate size. But the former Mesopotamia, now Iraq, with Saddam Hussein in charge simply replaced an original menace, and had to be demoted and deprived of oil control. But Operation Desert Storm merely gave an opportunity for perhaps the most vicious dictator of them all, Halez al-Assad of Syria to step in, complete the military occupation of Lebanon (save for a southern area occupied by Israel), and an opportunity to renew economic and military relations with the Soviet Union. So, this latest attempt on the part of the Insiders to form an economic common market in the Middle East was no better than previous attempts.

And the losses in lives other than American, other participating UN member nations and Israel, were horrible. It is estimated that 100,000 Iraqi military personnel were killed, plus another 200,000 civilians; this latter in the continuing air attacks on the country. To this must be added the genocide of the Kurds and Shi-ites. President Bush had urged them to revolt against Saddam, then betrayed them when Iraqi forces began to annihilate them. The betrayal became so obvious that finally President Bush asked permission from the UN to interfere, build refugee camps for the Kurds so they might live to negotiate with Saddam, who will also betray them if history repeats. When actual beret wearing UN "peace officers" arrived to act as guardians of the people, the Iraqi military refused to allow them to see the alleged nuclear facilities which were being transferred to a safer place. So the UN issued another order and their commander George Bush told the Iraqi government that American troops might be sent in to resolve the dilemma. Saddam reportedly relented and said the blue berets might inspect.

Here's an interesting sidelight. The UN gave an order regarding Iraq's refusal to honor the blue berets, and Bush was quick to demand the order be obeyed. But Israel has been ignoring UN orders concerning its occupied areas for years, and Bush has condoned such refusals. Note the contrast: Bush condemns Iraq but condones Isreal when UN commands are given. And this is the Bush who, when he sent American troops to the Middle East, told Congress: "We are now in sight of a United Nations that performs as envisioned by its founders." (Underlining added). And just what was the vision of the founders of the UN? John McManus of the John Birch Society gave the answer when he wrote: "Those founders included 16 communists led by Alger Hiss and 43 members of the Council on Foreign Relations - all in the US delegation. Each of these individuals, by virtue of membership, wanted socialist world government....Along with those representing our nation, there were communists from the USSR, and assorted socialists from elsewhere. And there were some idealistic dreamers who ignored the clear lesson of history about the accumulation of power. The lesson is that it will be used not for peace as the dreamers would have it employed, but for tyranny. Latin America, Africa, Europe, and most of Asia are already socialist. Western Europe is about to follow. And America, already far down the socialist road, is in the process of reinvigorating the United Nations that is to be the seat of the one-world government of the future. This is what the 'new world order' is all about."

Before we leave the Mideast, one very important thing must be remembered. "Foreign" occupation and warfare in Arabia has encouraged the rise of Islam. To them we remain the "Great Satan" and they are the "Chosen of Allah whose prophet is Mohammed." One observer noted: "Already, Soviet Islamic peoples are making common cause with their brethren in Iran, Afghanistan and other Moslem nations....Just as communism welded together the parts of the Soviet Empire and turned them into a powerful and dangerous force, Islam might do the same thing, potentially unifying a region as large as the Soviet Union with millions of people. It wouldn't be the first time in history that Islam has gone to war with the West. But it might be the last."

After weeks of trying to put Humpty-Dumpty's pieces back together again in the Middle East, all the world's leaders, even James Baker of State, gave up and decided it would be best to let the Arabs and Muslims work out their own problems. But the problems in the Soviet Union and Western Europe were bothering all of them. The Warsaw Pact had quietly ceased to exist. And a special dispatch from Paris dated June 28 reported: "The nine member nations of Comecon, the Soviet-led trading bloc, signed an agreement today to put the organization out of business." While Western Europe was busy with its own 12 nation trading bloc which is to become a Regional World Government next year, the Soviet trading bloc was ended. It was composed of the Soviet Union, Bulgaria, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, Romania and Vietnam. Meanwhile, EUROPE was having its troubles. Margaret Thatcher was forced out of office because she opposed the idea of giving up British sovereignty and creating a single currency for all of the 12 nations. But there's still trouble. Germany has joined Britain in concern over a single currency. There's a fight over a 15% value-added tax applicable to all member states. France is also concerned about ceding all sovereignty to the new world federation. NATO is also wondering just what its future is going to be, now that defense against the Soviets is supposedly no longer required. Anyway, there were so many little problems facing the New World Order Planners that it seemed a good idea to look for some problem that would grab the headlines and keep the people occupied with things not too close to home. And a country called Yugoslavia seemed an ideal solution. It would keep the people thinking about Yugoslavia while the Planners discussed more serious problems among themselves. So, as we said in our opening paragraph, "the spotlights are moving from the Persian Gulf to the Adriatic Coast."

It is not our intention to belittle or underplay the seriousness of the situation in Yugoslavia. But we do wish to point out that far more serious events with far more deaths and destruction have occurred in many of the 15 republics that make up the USSR, and in the Satellite countries. None of these has received the intensive heavy coverage by the media and the officials of other governments. Once it was announced that Slovenia and Croatia had declared themselves to be sovereign and independent republics, it was as if a special signal had been given. Secretary James Baker was quick to warn that any breakup of Yugoslavia would not be tolerated by the US. German Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher rushed to Belgrade to preach peace to the people and courage to the beleaguered Yugoslavian Army that had broken away and assumed its own command and was defending itself rather poorly from an attacking group of Slovenian citizens. The European Community, feted to become the United States of Europe in 1992, sent its top officials to Belgrade to preach peace. The Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe sent envoys to beg the Yugoslav government to take charge and put the rebellious Croatian and Slovenian governments, and their own army in their place. Why all this concentration on one out of many nations that were being broken up by Gorbachev's perestroika and the seeming weakening of Communist control?

One fact seems to predominate. For centuries the Dalmatian coastline with its lush islands and the countries that are like Yugoslavia, despite foreign occupation and Communist control, have been the favorite tourist, resort and vacation spots of the fat cats and insiders of Western Europe. The London Economist (6/15-21/91) speaks of one of the resort spots: "Split, the ancient Dalmation port whose potential was first recognized by the Roman emperor Dalmatian in 305AD. Tired of trying to hold a fractious empire together, he retired there to grow cabbages....Just next door [to Split] is the Yugoslav naval headquarters, where a Macedonian conscript was shot dead during a recent Croat nationalist riot."

One other fact. Yugoslavia isn't really a country as we normally think of countries. Back at the end of the shooting phase of the first world war, the peacemakers also became mapmakers. For example, Britain created most of the countries in the Middle East.. With the breakup of the Austrian-Hungarian Empire there remained a number of little ethnic, nationalist and cultural communities big enough to be called countries. It was decided that five of them should be merged and made a part of Yugoslavia. The reason given: it was easier to control one large country than a number of small countries. So they took Serbia whose capital city is Belgrade, added Croatia who like the city of Zagred for its government, Macedonia with its capital in Skopje, Slovenia with Lubjana as its capital, Montenegro whose present capital is Titograd, and Bosnia and Hercegovina who are so old and familiarly established that the ancient city of Sarajevo governs them. All of them were grouped together and called Yugoslavia. But the trouble has always been the fact there here there are five ethnic nationalities whose historical, religious and cultural backgrounds have kept them apart. For example, the Croatians and the Slovenes use the Roman alphabet, while the Serbs use the Cyrillic alphabet. Despite Tito's cruel atheistic Communist rule, the Yugoslavians still call themselves religious. 30% are Roman Cathoic, 40% Eastern Orthodox, Islam 10%. This keeps them apart and feuding with each other.

One more cause for trouble. These ethnically, religiously, historically, culturally, nationally differing peoples have lived together for so long that there is a great population admixture.

These peoples have lived in that part of the world for centuries, and many of them now living in the artificially created Yugoslavla have become interspersed, but never integrated. That is, there are whole communities of Slovenes living in Croatia, whole communities of Croatians living in Serbia, etc. These communities are called enclaves, "territories surrounded by the territory of another country." The "foreigners" residing in such enclaves feel they are at home, are ready to fight for their property, their families, and their traditions; while the host country wants to kick them out. This creates much bickering and fighting at local levels in each of the five countries, and adds to the bickering and fighting between the countries themselves. So, especially since the end of the second world war, there has never been any unity except that forced upon them by Tito and the Communist police. During the second world war some Yugoslavians sided with and fought for the Nazis, others sided with and fought for the Communists, and the rest fought for Yugoslavia, whose exile government was then in London. Many American airmen if still living will remember the Yugoslav patriot Draza Mikhailovich. When an allied plane was shot down or forced down in or near the Balkans, Mikhailovich's delivery service would go into action. His followers would find and rescue the Allied airmen, care for them if wounded, and get them back to their bases. Unfortunately Tito the Communist gained Allied approval over Mikhailovich the patriot. Mikhailovich the patriot was executed as a traitor by Josip Broz Tito the Communist. And until recently the Yugoslavians have suffered the Communist style peace and security established by Tito. Then Gorbachev published his perestroika, people believed and hope of freedom was renewed. The old traditions; ethnic, religious, and patriotic qualities were revived. So that the peoples of the five nations within Yugoslavia, like the peoples of the three Baltic Nations and the other Republics within the Soviet Union are demanding and declaring their independence and the return of their sovereignty.

As you read this the Yugoslav crisis may have become a dead issue, replaced by some new and earth-shaking event to bemuse the people. But the way the media have overplayed it and the way governments sent envoys to Belgrade to preach peace leads to the conclusion that if the powers that be are planning a new limited, no-win war, they have chosen well. For, one well-placed bullet fired in Sarejevo on June 28, 1914 ignited the fire that swept through Europe in WWI. This is speculation, of course.

Observation: The Yugoslav crisis shows how futile is any attempt to set up and maintain a Global Government without the use of raw dictatorial power. Insiders speak of mergings of nations, But Yugoslavia and events in the USSR have shown that when dictatorial force is lessened, captive nations demand separation and independence, not merging and interdependence. God himself declared some rules at Babel. Those rules have never been violated successfully. So there is hope:

"Fear thou not; for I am with thee: be not dismayed; for I am thy God: I will strengthen thee; yea, I will help thee; yea, I will uphold thee with the right hand of my righteousness." (Jeremiah 41:10).

THE NEW WORLD DIS-ORDER

Eduard Shevardnadze, who had resigned because he knew the junta was coming and didn't want to be involved in it, was asked if he would now return to his old office as Soviet foreign minister. He said, "When there is no USSR, what do you need a minister for?" And this poses the problem that is bothering the heads of state and government of the G7 nations, the nations of Eastern Europe, and the 15 republics of the shattered Soviet Union. If there's no USSR, then who is boss of what's left? During the three days when Gorbachev was "detained" and his former friends tried to take charge, Boris Yeltsin, as president of the Russian Republic and the only legally elected official on the scene, took charge and acted as the ruler of the USSR as well as the Russian Republic. When Gorbachev returned to Moscow, Yeltsin treated him as a virtual outcast. But the very next day Gorbachev reasserted himself and chastized Yeltsin. Then the following day they seemed to be friends and officials working together to save what was left of an empire.

And what was left of an empire that somebody was supposed to govern was the second question waiting for an answer. David Remnick, in Moscow to report for the Paris edited, English written, and New York printed International Herald Tribune, wrote, "Anticipating a realignment that promises to redraw the map of Europe and Asia no less dramatic than did the fall of the Ottoman Empire in 1918, politicians are suddenly faced with critical questions and potential disasters: border conflicts, mass migration, the predominance of Russia, the future of an already collapsed economic system, the control of nuclear weapons, and the Soviet military machine." Ironically, the greatest danger of them all may have been caused by the liquidation of the Communist Party as a political organism.

When Russian President Yeltsin announced that the political power of the Communist Party was officially ended in the Republic of Russia, USSR president Gorbachev looked up, seemed startled, and cried, "Oh. No!" Yet the very next day Gorbachev himself announced that the party he had previously headed was now dead in all the USSR, with its buildings and assets to be confiscated. Gorbachev knew what this would do to the infrastructure of what was left of a Soviet government, especially at the community and industrial level. Cord Meyer of The Washington Times explained: "A dangerous threat to the power of the nomenclature was Mr. Yeltsin's enactment of a law to prohibit the maintenance of Communist Party cells and organizing activity in offices and work places throughout Russia. This prohibition was seen to poise a direct challenge to the whole interlocking machinery of control that enables party apparatchiks and government bureaucrats to assure the smooth running of local factories and the predictable outcome of provincial elections." Stated more clearly, the outlawing of the Communist Party practically destroyed the structure of government at the provincial level throughout the USSR. One thing that perestroika and glasnost did not change was the bureaucratic control of all industrial, agricultural, economic and business activity in the Soviet Union. All was under the control and in the hands of bureaucrats. And most of the bureaucrats were members of the Communist Party. They couldn't have been elected if they were not. And the people, for seventy years, had been forced to look to someone in authority, to some bureaucrat or bureaucrats to tell them what to do and what they must not do. So, with the end of Communism, there was the virtual end of bureaucratic rule. No one to run the factories, manage the collective farming, to run things in general. Don't misunderstand us, the liquidation of Communist control and the end of bureaucratic dictatorship in the USSR was essential. But this poses yet another problem: How to provide for the people of the USSR until they can establish their own political and economic security, else they revert to Communism as their only means of survival, and the whole thing must be done over again?

The world leaders always think in terms of money and aid; our money and aid, not theirs. And Gorbachev has been begging for more money and aid ever since he wrote a book titled Perestroika. Which brings up a thought that shouldn't be ignored. When Gorbachev went to the G7 Summit, he was told that he must first work toward free market economy and democratic government, then he would get much financial aid, but not before. The nations were a little tired of shelling out finances with little result. So later, there was a poorly planned coup. Gorbachev was held incommunicado for three days while Yeltsin was allowed all the freedom he needed to organize successful resistance to the coup. The minute Gorbachev returned to Moscow, there was a public display: Yeltsin berated Gorbachev and humiliated him in front of everyone who remained at their government posts. But the very next day Gorbachev acted as a President of the USSR was supposed to act, warned Yeltsin not to go too far in his taking over of command. And the very next day Gorbachev and Yeltsin were in a huddle plotting how to save the Union while Yeltsin's vice president was busy making deals with the Ukraine and Kazakhstan and ignoring the Union government while doing so. Remember, Gorbachev was told certain things had to happen before more aid could be given. But, immediately after the return of Gorbachev to Moscow, the G7 leaders and Bush were all seeking ways to help the USSR immediately. Nobody was sure there still existed any USSR, but if there was no central government to accept gifts, then they would be distributed among the republics that had declared themselves to be independent. The fact that this coup opened the purses of the western nations for the benefit of the Soviet Union, causes questions that need to be answered. John Lenczowski, who was director of European and Soviet affairs at the National Security Council from 1983-87, observed that if this was a serious coup then "why did they back down so quickly, without a fight? Why didn't they arrest all of the guilty parties? Why didn't they cut off all communications to the outside world? Why did they allow Boris Yeltsin's appeal for resistance to be broadcast over media they controlled?...It strains credibility to assert that stupidity and incompetence explain the plotters' failure to take direct action...We can conclude with certainty only that we do not know all there is to know. And given such uncertainty, we must rely on one maxim of Soviet-watching: Don't always take events in the Soviet Union at face value. The history of Soviet secrecy, deception and intrigues is so extensive that we must not categorically dismiss even some of the wild speculations that informed citizens have tossed out for consideration. For example, figures like Eduard Shevardnadze, Georgian President Zviad Gamsakhurdia, democratic leader and chess player Gary Kasparov and KGB defector Victor Sheymov have suggested that this may have been a 'Potemkin Coup' orchestrated by Gorbachev himself for the purpose of enhancing his prestige, securing more aid from the West and ultimately saving the socialist system. This writer finds that scenario unlikely, given the price that had to be paid: the further incitement of civil society against the old Communist order. But since information supporting any theory is still so utterly incomplete, prudence dictates that the US policy - on whether to send more aid, transfer sensitive technology or ratify the START Treaty - should await more conclusive evidence."

The writer's reference to Potempkin is pertinent. Potempkin (1739-91) was a Russian field marshal who helped engineer a coup d'etat that made Catherine the Great Czarina of all Russia. She rewarded him by making him her lover and court advisor. But perhaps even more relevant than the "Potempkin Coup" was the Treaty of Brest-Litovsk. Constantly Gorbachev has declared himself to be a disciple of Lenin. His perestroika was a modernized copy of Lenin's NEP. He has granted independence to the Baltic States and relative independence to the other republics demanding same. This in order to save the Union. Now let's compare:

During WWI German bankers financed the sealed car transport of Lenin & Co. from Switzerland to St. Petersburg (Leningrad) so he might create a revolution that would get Russia out of the war against the Central Powers. Soon as the Bolsheviks gained sufficient control Lenin signed an armistice agreement with Germany (12/5/1917). But a treaty was yet to be signed and Trotsky negotiated, but refused to meet the German terms. Then Lenin stepped in and signed the treaty. By its terms Russia was forced to recognize the independence of Ukraine and Georgia, confirm the independence of Finland, give up Poland and the Baltic States, as well as part of Belorussia. In effect, the vast Russian Empire became the Bolshevik State of Russia only. Trotsky stormed, quit, and practically the whole body of Bolsheviks surrounding Lenin demanded his resignation. He threatened to do so, but never did. He explained that the Socialist cause was in deep trouble, about to fail, and the only way out was to concentrate on the Communizing of the one country, Russia. Then he would get back later all that had been lost. Lenin didn't live to see that happen but Stalin recovered all Lenin had ceded to the Central Powers, and more following the Yalta Conference. Note that the actions of Gorbachev, Lenin's disciple, have been very similar in granting independence to the Republics. And if the comparison is credible, then Bush and the G7 leaders have been just as gullible as were President Wilson and the Allied leaders after World Wars One and Two and the Cold War. We mean the leaders of government, not the elitists who think they rule the world.

As this great drama being played on the world stage continued, 35 countries recognized the independence of Latvia, Estonia and Lithuania. We should have been the first. But Gorbachev asked Bush to delay. He did. However, as the yet legal Congress of People's Deputies met in Moscow (9/2/91) Gorbachev gave in and Bush made the recognition of the Baltic states official. Interviewed at the time by CNN, Gorbachev stated: "I think that at this very difficult stage, when we are approaching very important decisions that will define the future of the country in the course that we began in 1985, I will not permit myself as a citizen, I cannot permit myself to just leave. So, I will not resign." Then, as the deputy's meeting began, Col. Viktor Alksnis, who represented the hard-liners, tried to introduce a resolution demanding the resignation of Gorbachev. But he was outmaneuvered by Kazakh President Nursultan Nazarbayev who presented Gorbachev's plan where the five republics demanding complete independence would be permitted to do so, and the other ten republics would write finis to the USSR and form a temporary loose federation of sovereign, equal states. An appointed council would draft a new constitution, while a legislative council apparently headed by Gorbachev would handle what remained of central authority until the new union was formed. That's the way things stood at our printing deadline. And it all sounds very much like the early beginnings of the European Economic Council which is set to become a Regional World Government in 1992.

A small paragraph in the NYT report (9/3/91) read: "Bush made clear once again his personal regard and support for the Soviet president, and he said he would make certain he was 'treated with respect' by the United States." Columnist A.M. Rosenthal of the same paper had been more outspoken and to the point. He asked, "have we not been praying and paying trillions for arms and intelligence to bring about the end of the Soviet Empire and its despotism? Wasn't it for that day that millions of our spiritual and political allies, the Soviet...dissidents, suffered in gulag prisons for decade after decade - or died in them? So, as the day approached, this is what happened: 1) George Bush placed his personal prestige and his presidential power not behind the forces trying to destroy communism and the empire, but behind one man trying to save as much of both as possible. Mr. Bush told us what great pals he had become with Mikhail Gorbachev...2) Instead of encouraging the disintegration of the empire...Mr. Bush and his Secretary of State James Baker acted as if the idea frightened them both. They told the Baltic states that Washington would fulfill its promise for support for their independence - yes, indeed, just as soon as Mr. Gorbachev gave his approval...Now Washington's favorite dictators are Syrian and Chinese. The killers of Damascus and Beijing will be helped by US policy..."

Despite the history of Soviet secrecy, deception and intrigues that our central government chooses to overlook, and in the midst of the Bush-Baker trust and electioneering for Mikhail Gorbachev, there is one official voice raised in warning. Defense Secretary Cheney cries out for caution. Talking to an audience of political scientists in Washington (8/29/91) Cheney said "It's essentially important that we not let the euphoria of the moment blind us." He pointed out that given the uncertain future of the Soviet Union and other unstable parts of the world "US military cuts would be a serious mistake. We simply do not know what the future has in store for the Soviet Union." He spoke of "violent conflicts between the Soviet Republics and ethnic minorities, a continued collapse of the Soviet economy, labor strife, famine, and massive refugee flows as people flee the disorder that may accompany the breakup of the old order." He then posed a series of rhetorical questions: "Five years from now who will control the Soviet nuclear arsenal? Will there still be a central government in charge? Or will the Russian Republic have taken over that responsibility? And if the center gives way and the Soviet Union as we know it ceases to exist, what happens to existing treaties and arms control agreements? We're faced with the responsibility...that we'll have to deal not with one Soviet nuclear arsenal, but with an arsenal that's controlled by different republics." As for SDI, which is about to be killed by Bush or Congress, the defense secretary warns that "The lessons of the Soviet crisis include a stronger case for the Strategic Defense Initiative."

"Except the Lord build the house, they labour in vain that build it; except the Lord keep the city, the watchman waketh but in vain." (Psalm 127:1).

AND AFTER COMMUNISM?

"Communism Is Dead!" glare the headlines and blare the boob tubes, and the great majority of the people agree. But you'd get a different story from the ten million-plus who still suffer under Castro's dictatorship, or from the billion-plus who still remember the massacre in Tiananmen Square. Or you might poll the party members in the Western States and they'll probably agree with Georges Marchais who heads the French Communist Party (PCF). This month there was held the Communist annual cultural and political celebration in France, and Marchais told the media, "Our party has no intention of ceasing from being itself." Similar words were spoken by Gus Hall who chairs the USCP. And as a few Communist-watchers have warned, it's just possible that there are holdout hard-liners who are still in a position to push the button that could release some of those nuclear missiles that are said to be still aimed at strategic targets in the United States. Or, worse yet, they could sell the missiles to terrorists. The holdouts might try to show that while Communism may be terminally ill, it's still not dead.

But let's take it for granted that Communism is dead; that it has joined the IWW, Syndicalism, Nazism and the other forms of Socialism that have been tried and found wanting. Then we must remember that there are some other types of Socialism that are very much alive, and that one form of it is about to conquer the world in behalf of the architects of the New World Order. We're not speaking of Bush's concept of the NWO which partnered Gorbachev under the UN. We mean the ages-long plan of the Conspirators that birthed and nurtured all those Socialist schemes that were liquidated because they had already served their purpose and were no longer needed.

As a starter, we tend to forget that those fifteen "republics" that made up the USSR were named Soviet Socialist Republics, not Soviet Communist Republics, and though Communism dies, Socialism remains. Despite attempts at attempted free-marketing twelve of those "republics" remain Socialist Republics, mostly with newly elected leaders who shed their hammer-and-sickle cloaks and became Social Democrats or adopted similar political mantles.

Something else to remember. Though it's seldom even mentioned in whispered tones, Hitler's Nazism was just one form of Socialism that was financed and promoted by the International Elitist Syndicate (read Antony Sutton's Wall Street and the Rise of Hitler), and was allowed to die (along with millions of innocents) when Nazism had served its purpose. More generally known and must be remembered: Communism was kept alive and active by the Elitist Syndicate, and now is allowed to die (along with millions of its victims) because it no longer serves the purpose of the builders of the New World Order.

Simple definitions sometimes help. Webster's New World Dictionary (1988) defines Communism as "a hypothetical stage of socialism" while Socialism is "any of various theories or systems of the ownership and operation of the means of production...coming between the capitalist and the communist stage." Doesn't that phrase we have underlined reveal the real intent of the merging or convergence of nations? It's that old favorite of theirs, the Hegelian Dialectic at its best: Capitalism, the thesis, versus Communism, the antithesis, culminating in Socialism as the synthesis. Which leads us to the question, which variety of Socialism is the synthesis that has been adopted by the NWOers? The answer leads us to the Socialist system known formerly as Fascism. However, that word has been nastied and propagandized and made to appear as the diametric opposite of Communism, while they are both the children of Mother Socialism. So the Insiders, when they find it necessary to mention it, generally refer to it as Corporate Socialism. More on this later.

Let's not overlook another form of Socialism that has been far more destructive to our way of life socially, economically, educationally, and spiritually than all the other forms of Socialism combined, including Communism. We're talking about Fabianism, an import from Britain (as was Corporate Socialism), but it is almost never mentioned by its proper name in the United States. Webster (op cit) avoids a direct definition, but it does identify the Fabian Society: "an organization of English socialists, established in 1884, aiming to bring about socialism by gradual reforms rather than revolutionary action." Webster does refer to fabian as an adjective: "using a cautious strategy of delay and avoidance of battle."

The Fabians, like the Communists and all other members of the Socialist family, had a final goal: Socialist World Government. But their methods were different. The oft-told story of the farmer and his stubborn mule illustrates the difference. The mule balked, wouldn't move to pull his load. So the farmer got a stick and whipped the mule. If that didn't work, the farmer would dangle a carrot in front of the mule's nose and, hopefully, the mule would move forward to get at the delicacy. Communists prefer the stick method; Fabians found the carrot method to be more effective, especially in Britain and the United States.

In 1902 Eugene V. Debs and Morris Hillquist formed the Socialist Party (which later quit because the Democratic Party was doing the work for it). In 1904 the Socialist Party did receive 400,000 votes in the presidential election. But the wiser of the socialist leaders decided politics wouldn't work here as well as it had in Britain. They decided that the educational method was best. So, on the afternoon of September 12th, 1904, about 100 socialists met in Manhattan in a loft over Peck's Restaurant at 140 Fulton Street. Some of the names are still familiar to readers: Upton Sinclair, Jack London, Clarence Darrow, Owen Lovejoy, William Z. Foster who later headed the Communist Party USA, etc. They formed the Intercollegiate Socialist Society. About that same time other socialists had organized the Rand School of Social Science, and that became Fabian headquarters in the United States. However, the word "Fabian" was never used. Direct connection with the British Fabian Society was undesirable. In 1921 the ISS changed its name to The League for Industrial Democracy and according to Rose Martin, "It is today the oldest continuing Socialist society in the country--the deceptively mild and beneficent mother society from which a whole swarm of destructive activities and organizations have sprung." ("Fabian Freeway," by Rose Martin, published in 1966 by Western Islands, Belmont MA 02178.) Garet Garrett described the socialist swarm best:

"This revolutionary elite was nothing you could define as a party. It had no name, no habitat, no rigid line. The only party was the Communist Party, and it was included, but its attack was too obvious and its proletarianism too crude, and moreover, it was under the stigma of not belonging. Nobody could say that about the elite above. It did belong, it was eminently respectable, and it knew the American scene. What it represented was a quantity of bitter intellectual radicalism infiltrated from the top downward as a doctorhood of professors, writers, critics, analysts, advisers, administrators, directors of research, and so on--a prepared revolutionery intelligence in spectacles. There was no plan to begin with. But there was a shibboleth that united them all: 'Capitalism is finished'." (Garet Garrett in "The People's Pottage," Caxton Press, Caldwell, Id).

As the American Fabian Society was first named the Intercollegiate Socialist Society, its first duty was "To prepare the ground for an internationalist socialist policy in internationalist affairs." This called for the training of students so there would be young socialist theoreticians to enter the pulpit, the classrooms, the field of textbook writing and revision, the labor movement and the ranks of both major political parties, With money flowing in from a new source, the tax-exempt foundations whose promotion of merging was mandatory, there were ample resources and "In 1933 the advent of the New Deal found them fully prepared...Socially speaking the (Peck's Restaurant) loft was forgotten; the milieu was now the fashionable drawing room, the faculty club, and the political caucus... The entirety was known as 'progressive education.' As a movement it was self-defined." (John Howland Snow in "The Turning of the Tides," now out of print). By 1915 Fabian Socialist John Dewey had organized the Progressive Education Association, the American Association of University Professors, and was creating special teacher's colleges where young teachers might be taught how to teach Socialism and "prepare the ground" for what we now experience to our shame in our government schools. But people are waking up. We were pleased to see a Letter to the Editor in our local daily which read:

"Virtually every day headlines declare another major failure in the socialist world. Eastern Europe, Russia, Cuba - everywhere state socialism has been tried it has failed and has taken a toll in human life and misery. Today's headline was no exception: 'SAT verbal scores hit low record.' Our schools are pure socialism. The state owns the schools, dictates the curriculum, and sets standards, qualifications and pay for teachers. The state forces taxpayers to pay for it all, giving them very little say in the process. Socialism abhors competition. And it never accomplishes its stated goals. The answer is to let people buy their education in a free market. Let teachers become professionals again instead of unionists who just have to show up to get paid regardless of what product they turn out. We have adequate proof that in education, and in every other human endeavor, free enterprise works, and socialism doesn't work. All you have to do is compare results at private schools, using any yardstick you choose." Communist Socialism may be dead, but Fabian Socialism lives on and it will hardly notice the passing of its sister as the drive for Socialist World Government continues.

And this takes us back to Corporate Socialism. Eustace Mullins in his "The World Order" notes that "Five men rule the world. None of them hold public office, but they choose who shall hold office in the nations." Under these rulers is their army of "professors, writers, critics, analysts, advisers, administrators, directors of research, and so on" who tell us that we shall have world government whether we like it or not. And they intimate but seldom admit their reason for world government: to provide security and protection for the New World Order. Antony Sutton in his "Wall Street and FDR" wrote: "Old John D. Rockefeller and his 19th century fellow-capitalists were convinced of one absolute truth, that no great monetary wealth could be accumulated under the impartial rules of a competitive society. The only sure road to acquisition of massive wealth was monopoly: drive out your competitors, reduce competition, eliminate laissez-faire [the free enterprise system], and above all get state protection for your industry through compliant politicians and government regulation. This last avenue yields to a legal monopoly and a legal monopoly always always leads to wealth." So long as there are independent nations, legal monopolies are possible within a nation. But with Eastern Europe and the USSR opened up for exploitation and development, and with China on the way, there is need for world monopolies. Creating monopolies nation-by-nation is extremely difficult. Therefore independent governments must be eliminated and world law under world government must be established.

This modern plan for world government began in Europe, more specifically, in Britain. In 1888 Cecil Rhodes wrote a final will which provided for Rhodes Scholarships, and also set up a Rhodes Trust for further promotion of world government. In 1987 Hilaire du Berrier, writing his newsletter from Paris, outlined the story from the European viewpoint. Brief quotes follow.

"Between 1909 and 1913 a series of semi-secret round table groups was formed by the main trustee of the Rhodes Trust. Here men...discussed how they would run the world...In 1919, at the end of WWI, they decided to extend and formalize the round table system under a London-based parent body, the Royal Institute of International Affairs (RIIA)...But Americans have a built in defense mechanism against anything controlled by the British. The solution was to set up the Council on Foreign Relations, which was incorporated in 1921 with every assurance that it was a purely American body...The idea of an American foothold, to all appearances independent of the RIIA, originated at a meeting in the Majestic Hotel in Paris on May 19, 1919, sponsored by Colonel Edward Mandell House. Walter Lippman, John Foster Dulles, Allen Dulles and Christian Herter were among the Americans present, plotting the establishment of a world government... Events overlapped as events have a habit of doing, and as the Vietnam debacle neared its end a propitious moment for launching the Trilateral Commission approached. Not one of the succeeding stages, from League of Nations to Council on Foreign Relations to United Nations to [European Common Market] to Trilateral Commission deviated from its single-minded conspiratorial aims."

HduB wrote the foregoing in 1987. As events overlap through the passing years, we can now add that in September 1991 neither the dissolution of the Soviet Empire nor the death of communism deviate from the single-minded aims of the architects of the New World Order and its accompanying Socialist World Government. In pondering the evils of the two, we were led to a particular Scripture:

"Again the devil taketh him up into an exceedingly mountain, and sheweth him all the kingdoms of the world, and the glory of them; And saith unto him, All these things will I give thee, if thou wilt fall down and worship me. Then saith Jesus unto him, Get thee hence, Satan; for it is written, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve." (Matthew 4: 8,9,10).

REFURBISHING THE UN

One year ago George Bush went before the UN General Assembly to talk about his vision of The New World Order and, in effect, asked the UN to take the lead in making his vision come true. One year later, on Sept. 23, 1991, he again spoke to the UN General Assembly. This time he talked of universal peace, "Pax Universalis," and pledged that he would do all in his part to help the UN achieve such a goal. But while he talked of peace, the "Son of Desert Storm" was awaiting anticipated orders from the UN Security Council to fly into Iraq and mop up what had been left of a war that Desert Storm, Sr. was not permitted to finish. But again Saddam Hussein backed down and released the UN war weapons inspectors that had been held by his military, and allowed them to go on about their business of inventorying Iraq's nuclear and chemical weaponry.

Before Bush spoke, the UN Board of Directors had been hard at work, with routine matters. It had to elect a new Assembly president. Saudi Arabia's UN representative, Samir S. Shihabi was named, to the chagrin of the Israeli representative. And there was the formality of welcoming seven new members: the three newly independent Baltic States, North and South Korea, the Marshall Islands, and Micronesia. That means the UN now has 166 member nation-states, all of whom will lose their nationalities and sovereignty if the New World Order vision becomes reality. The UN Board of Directors has been making important plans to strengthen the UN and make it truly a world government. We'll get back to that later. But first, there was George Bush addressing the UN General Assembly.

With a Saudi Arabian presiding, Bush tried to conciliate Yitzak Shamir of Israel by condemning UNGA Resolution 3379, which declared that Zionism is racism. 16 years ago the UN General Assembly expressed its dislike of Israel by passing the resolution 72-35. Said the NYTimes, "The General Assembly's 1975 action transformed Israel's edgy questioning in the international body into complete mistrust that the United Nations could play any role in Middle East peacemaking, a sentiment that continues strong today." It's well known that the UN dislikes Israel and Israel returns the compliment. So Bush as mediator must induce them to bury the hatchet and pow-wow if any mideast peace conference is possible. More about this later. But let's get back to Bush and his call for a Pax Universalis, a phrase seemingly intended to take the heat off the too often headlined New World Order.

Less than two years ago the United Nations was virtually written off as an important international organization.. Its various agencies had become important through the writing of conventions and treaties that have been accepted as international law in each respective field. But the UN Security Council and the General Assembly were considered quite ineffective. Then came the Persian Gulf Crisis and suddenly the UN Security Council became seemingly all powerful and capable of threatening and ordering war, thanks primarily to its promotion and delegation by George Bush and Mikhail Gorbachev, who had a dream. Quickly those "coalition forces" were gathered and, when the word was given by the UN, Saddam Hussein's forces were squashed. It remains to be seen just how squashed Saddam's forces really were. But it was a UN War; the UN gave the orders and Bush did nothing without first receiving approval from the UN Security Council. Again, in this recent squabble over Iraq's refusal to cooperate with UN war weapon inspectors, Bush did a lot of condemning of Saddam Hussein, but he did nothing but talk, waiting for UN orders, which never came because Saddam relented, thus giving the UN more honor as a worthy world government. In his speech of 9/23/91 George Bush further displayed his subservience to the UN by saying: "I look forward to working with Secretary General Perez de Cueller and his successor as we pursue peace in such diverse and troubled lands as Afghanistan, Cyprus, El Salvador, and the Western Sahara." Then he gave an entirely new definition to his version of The New World Order. Read his lips on the following which we quote:

"Together we should insist that nations seeking our acceptance meet standards of human decency. Wherein institutions of freedom have laid dormant, the United Nations can offer them new life. These institutions play a crucial role in our quest for a new world order, an order in which no nation must surrender one iota of its own sovereignty, an order characterized by the rule of law rather than the resort to force, the cooperative settlement of disputes rather than anarchy and bloodshed, and an unstinting belief in human rights...Let me assure you, the United States has no intention of striving for a Pax Americana...we seek a Pax Universalis, built upon shared responsibilities and aspirations."

This statement by Bush must rank as the biggest of all the official lies he has made since becoming President of the United States and assuming the role of Secretary of War for the United Nations. One wonders just who he expected to deceive when he told the UN member states that this new world order which he is promoting with Gorbachev in behalf of the UN is "an order in which no nation must surrender one iota of its own sovereignty"? By contrast, David Rockefeller, Bush's admitted mentor and role model, in his opening address to the Bilderbergers assembled in Sand, Germany last June told the Insiders: "The supra-national sovereignty of an intellectual elite and world bankers is surely preferable to the national autodetermination practiced in the past centuries." In simple English, this means sovereignty is to be denied nation states, and assumed by the Elite and World Bankers. So, who is right, pupil Bush or teacher Rockefeller? We should add that there is a difference between independence and sovereignty. For example, the three Baltic States which are now independent, joined the UN on Sept. 23rd, but there remains the question as to their sovereignty. This subject came up when Thomas R. Eddlan of The New American interviewed Charles Via, chairman of The Center for Intelligence Studies which is "dedicated to educating the American people and their elected representatives about intelligence, counterintelligence and related matters." Asked about the actual status of the Baltics, Via replied: "...I believe the Baltics will in fact achieve independence, but I do not believe they will achieve sovereignty. The historical parallel is Finland, which was also allowed to leave the Russian empire after the Bolshevik Revolution. Finland has been and remains independent, but it simply is not sovereign.

"The Soviets have historically exercised a veto over the personalities and politics of Finnish government. The Soviets do not control Finnish society, but they have successfully insisted upon the right to define its political parameters. I think you will find precisely the same situation arise in the Baltics." (The New American, 10/8/91. Biweekly, $39 per year. POBox 8040, Appleton WI 54913). This matter of independence but no sovereignty also seems to apply to Russia and other republics that have declared their independence from the Soviet Union.

It is interesting to note that Bush is a Rockefeller disciple in all foreign policy matters. In the past Republican presidential terms, Henry Kissinger has been the chief Rockefeller agent, as Brzezinski served in the same capacity when a Democrat was president. Kissinger now has distinguished himself as consultant to Nations, World Banks and Multinational Corporations, and it would be inappropriate for him to accept a post in a national government, even as Secretary of State. Consequently, the Rockefeller interests are now represented by Kissinger's former business partner, National Security Adviser Brent Scowcroft. When Bush's recent speech to the UN was being prepared, Scowcroft was present to supervise the writers and approve the final draft of the speech. Also, according to the NYTimes (9/29/91), Scowcroft was responsible for the more recent arms reduction proposal made by Bush from the Oval Office (9/27/91). Said Andrew Rosenthal of the NYTimes: "The round-robin of diplomatic cables and Bush's appearance on national television from the Oval Office on Friday night were the climax of three weeks of intensive planning. It started with a discussion between the president and national security adviser Brent Scowcroft on the back veranda of the president's vacation home in Maine in the last week of August, days after the failed coup in Moscow. Both men agreed that the time had come to stop watching world events and instead reach for the broader, long-range vision that had eluded the president."

The "broader, long-range" vision also seems to concern the revitalized UN, which is presently a bit too old-fashioned, that is, it is nationalist rather than internationalist, and must be remodeled, especially at the Security Council level. A new secretary general must be selected by the Council, then elected by the General Assembly, this hopefully before the end of October. The London Economist thinks that in the past the secretary general's "job was often thankless so long as superpower rivalry stymied the UN's work. But the cold war's end is turning the UN into a serious place, with real tasks, where the top spot matters." In other words, the administrative department of the UN isn't capable of being a complete world government until some changes are made. First thing, "a world heavyweight" who has the charisma, the know-how and the internationalist, citizen of the world attitude, one who can lay aside his or her patriotic, provincial and nationalistic tendencies and become a real President of the World. A 22-nation delegation is said to be seeking such a person who will replace Javier de Cuellar who is finishing his second five-year term. Suggested for the post has been Mikhail Gorbachev; but he's needed to keep the necessary convergence going until the Soviet Union is part of EUROPE, or EUROPE is part of the Soviet Union. Also suggested for the post as secretary general was Margaret Thatcher; but she'd never be able to shed her pro-British, nationalistic leanings. Also suggested was Jimmy Carter; but there are three strikes against any American in this particular post. So the leading candidate is Eduard Shevardnadze. He resigned as Soviet foreign minister because he knew a coup was being planned and he didn't want to get caught in it. He's been out of an official job for some time now, and would probably be happy to serve if selected by the Security Council and elected by the General Assembly.

The real problem, of course, is the nationalistic tendencies of the representatives of the countries having permanent membership and veto power. The Soviet Union is pro-Soviet and is in charge of military action. France, China, Britain and the United States have representatives that act like Frenchmen, Chinese, Britons and Americans when they are supposed to be acting as thoroughgoing internationalists. A special report mentioned in the NYTimes (9/17/91) refers to a draft plan which "condemns the organization's present unwieldy hierarchy, under which 30 to 40 top officials report directly to the secretary general. It says this structure grew up over the years in a series of 'ad hoc responses to specific problems, and as a result of the 'distorting' effect of the cold war. Instead, it proposed four new major departments." The plan, of course, is obviously a way to strengthen and reshape the Executive Branch of the UN so that it can serve as an administrative arm in a world government. The NYTimes says it this way: "The new administrative plan, now being circulated to General Assembly members, speaks of 'a widespread consensus' that the United Nations must be restructured if it is to provide support for the expanded range of activities which member states expect and the increasingly important role of the Secretary General. The plan proposes a pyramid-like administrative structure with the work of the organization divided into four major departments - political and security affairs, humanitarian and human rights issues, development and environmental questions, and management and finance. Each is to be headed by a deputy secretary general chosen by the Secretary General and reporting to him." Despite its claim to being an international body, "the practice of major countries reserving key posts for their nationals runs contrary to the UN Charter's call for an international civil service responsible only to the organization (accent 'added')." So this new plan "asks the United States and the other permanent Council members not to seek any of the four deputy secretary general posts for their nationals for five years."

We have devoted considerable space on this matter because here we have the makings of a world dictatorship run by one individual who would be responsible only to "the supra-national sovereignty of an intellectual elite and world bankers," according to David Rockefeller.

In view of Bush's desire to downscale our defenses and Gorbachev's vocal approval, let us never forget that World Government involves the surrender to a UN police force all international arms and personal weapons. Years ago there were published drawings of the positioning of such a police force. They showed Chinese and Mongolians policing most of America. The British patriot A.K.Chesterton wrote at that time (1955): "Some allowance should surely be made for the likelihood that the international police would look like Mongols rather than Cockneys, and that the standards of decency and fair play which they imposed might well be Russian and Chinese rather than British...There is a hidden power, which only those to close students of international politics is a revealed power, wielded by a known group of international financial interests, which brought into existence the United Nations and the International Bank [and Communism] as instruments to secure its further advance to world domination." That hidden power's current drive: Kill Communism and put in its place Corporate Socialism under a new name: Social Democracy. Let us pray that, as with Ninevah, a Jonah will come with a warning that the people will believe and act upon in time.

"I will put you in remembrance...how that the Lord, having saved the people out of the land of Egypt, afterward destroyed them that believed not." (Jude 1:5).

Year Thirty-Eight.....Number Twenty-One.....October 18, 1991

KING OF THE WORLD?

Mark this date. On Saturday, September 28, 1991, The United States began to disarm unilaterally. On that date, at the stroke of a pen, Defense Secretary Dick Cheney ended the 24-hour alert status of 40 planes carrying nuclear bombs and 450 nuclear missiles aimed at the Soviet Union. The bombers had been on the alert for 34 years, guarding against potential attack by the Soviet Union. This stand-down at eleven Air Force bases and scores of missile silos is part of the first stage of a sweeping unilateral disarmament announced publicly by President Bush on September 26. Further steps in this first stage of the unilateral disarmament program:

- * All nuclear weapons will be removed from all Navy ships.
- * All nuclear artillery shells and US-based short range missile warheads will be destroyed.
- * Development of rail-mounted Minutemen missiles will be cancelled.
- * Removal of missiles slated for deactivation under START will be accelerated.
- * The Strategic Air Command will be deactivated and control of all remaining strategic forces will be consolidated under a new command to be based at Offutt Air Base, near Omaha.
- * The planned closing down of selected military bases in the US will continue as previously planned.

As Commander-in-Chief, President Bush did this all on his own without consulting Congress. As he ended the 34-year-old nuclear air patrol, Defense Secretary Cheney said, "What we need from Congress is support for the direction we're going in. We need their advice and their wisdom. We need their active cooperation. But what we don't need are precipitous cuts in the defense budget that will effect, break the force and destroy the kind of capability that we think will continue to be essential."

"President Bush's bold nuclear retirement plan is the latest venture in a global leadership role like no other president has ever dared," wrote Frank J. Murray of The Washington Times. "His Friday announcement - made without the usual nicety of consulting the congressional leadership - showed that the leader of the world's no. 1 superpower is able to wield unbridled presidential power without apology. It remains to be seen whether his 12-month list of arms treaties, peacemaking initiatives, wars won and other pronouncements will leave him king of the world, Nobel peace laureate or perhaps both...Since November, in addition to taking out of play more than 5,000 nuclear warheads, Mr. Bush provided leadership or became a spokesman for:

- * The Strategic Arms Reduction Treaty with the Soviet Union.
- * The Conventional Forces in Europe reduction treaty.
- * The organization of the anti-Iraq coalition for operations Desert Shield and Desert Storm.
- * The holding of a Middle East peace conference.
- * Settlement of the conflicts in Angola and Namibia.
- * The relocation of Ethiopian Jews.
- * Pushing Turkey and Greece to hold a Cyprus peace conference....

"The United Nations influence has flourished with Mr. Bush's help. An official in the office of UN Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar said US policy toward the international body has been transformed since the Reagan administration...Administration officials didn't even pretend they took seriously questions about overlooking Congress...'As Commander-in-Chief, he's got authority to send forces wherever he feels necessary or not send them,' a White House official said. 'Nobody thinks Congress is going to rise up and order him to put these planes and missiles back on alert status.'

"Instead of a presidential briefing, leaders and relevant committee officials got phone calls Thursday afternoon from National Security Adviser Brent Scowcroft, Deputy Secretary of State Lawrence Eagleburger and Defense Secretary Dick Cheney....During the televised speech he [Bush] ignored Congress, except to dismiss calls to use defense money on domestic issues." (End of extended quotes from The Washington Times, 9/29/91).

Bush's call for unilateral disarmament, even as his call for a New World Order was not new. It was only slightly different in unimportant details. As early as 1961 the CFR-controlled US State Department published Document #7277, "The United States Program for General and Complete Disarmament in a Peaceful World." Under the title "Freedom From War," the document called for the gradual surrender of all American forces to a world police force in a three-stage program. Ralph Epperson in his "The Unseen Hand" outlined the program: "The first stage would significantly reduce the capabilities of nations to wage war by reducing the armed forces of the nations; the nuclear capabilities would be reduced by treaties, and UN 'peace-keeping' forces would be strengthened. The second stage would provide further substantial reductions in the armed forces, and the establishment of a permanent international peace force within the United Nations. The third stage would have the nations retaining only those forces required for maintaining internal order, but the United States would provide manpower for the United Nations Peace Force (as happened in Desert Shield and Desert Storm-Ed.)" We have neither the space nor need to deal fully with Document 7277, but here are brief items which we quote from the document:

"The program provides for progressive disarmament steps to take place in three stages and for the simultaneous strengthening of international institutions...The disbanding of all national armed forces and the prohibition of their reestablishment in any form whatsoever other than those required to preserve internal order and for contributions to a United Nations Peace Force;...Inspection and verification must establish both that nations carry out scheduled limitations or reductions and that they do not retain armed forces and armaments in excess of those permitted at any stage of the disarmament process; and...As States relinquish their arms, the United Nations must be progressively strengthened in order to improve its capacity to assure international security and the peaceful settlement of disputes;...Disarmament must proceed as rapidly as possible until it is completed, in stages containing balanced, phased, and safeguarded measure;...Each measure and stage should be carried out in an agreed period of time, with transition from one stage to the next to take place as soon as all measures in the preceding stage have been carried out and verified and as soon as necessary arrangement for verification of the next stage have been made;...Measures would be taken to develop and strengthen United Nations arrangements for arbitration, for the development of international law, and for the establishment in Stage II of a permanent UN Peace Force...States would retain only those forces, non-nuclear armaments, and establishments required for the purpose of maintaining internal order; they would also support and provide agreed manpower for a UN Peace Force.... The manufacture of armaments would be prohibited except for those of agreed types and quantities to be used by the UN Peace Force and those required to maintain internal order. All other armaments would be destroyed or converted to peaceful purposes."

When "Freedom From War" was published, there was immediate protest and denunciation of the program. John A. Stormer in his "None Dare Call It Treason...25 Years Later," quotes John Tower, then a Senator from Texas, who made a speech on the Senate floor on January 29, 1962, in which he quoted from a Dallas newspaper which "labeled the disarmament document one of the most incredible proposals ever to emerge from the 'foggy corridors of the State Department.' The editorial concluded: 'As skeptical as I have always been of the measure of good sense and loyalty within the State Department I never would have believed that these people we call our diplomats could so completely and unabashedly advocate the surrender of American rights and sovereignty until this bulletin appeared... If more of the American people knew about this scheme there would be a nationwide uproar that would make the reaction to the Alger Hiss scandal look like another era of good feeling by comparison.'"

Former Senator Joseph Clark (D-PA) and a member of the Philadelphia World Affairs Council challenged the statement made by Senator Tower, who was later pilloried politically when nominated to become US Secretary of Defense. One-Worlder Clark insisted that State Department Document 7277 was "...the fixed, determined, and approved policy of the Government of the United States. It was laid down by the President of the United States, John Fitzgerald Kennedy, in a speech he made before the United Nations on September 25 of last year." Not only was it the policy of the Kennedy-Johnson Administration, but it "...is also the kind of program which Congress envisioned when, last summer, it passed the statute creating the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency." This latter, Public Law 87-297, was passed by Congress the very day after Kennedy had made the speech to the UN in which he called for the interdependence of nations. PL 87-297 was "charged with managing disarmament negotiations, conducting technical research in the disarmament field, and instituting a public relations campaign to condition the American people to accept disarmament," wrote John Stormer. Following orders, the agency reported to Congress in its 1962 Annual Report, that "Agency officials did participate in over 100 meetings, panel discussions and study groups in 1962. In addition, such informational material as articles for commercial journals, scripts for educational television programs, network and local TV and radio programs were prepared and briefings were arranged with agency officials for correspondents of public information media."

In spite of this intense government drive to 'condition' the American people to accept unilateral disarmament, the public didn't buy it. And "Since the American people were not completely ready to surrender to the United Nations, this report (7277) was pulled out of circulation and declared to be out of print," wrote Ralph Epperson. "However, those in charge of the promotion of unilateral disarmament and having the United States become part of a one-world government have not rested." But it took some 13 years of 'conditioning the American people' before, on January 30, 1976, the Philadelphia World Affairs Council introduced to the world its Declaration of INTERdependence. This obnoxious parody of the original Declaration of Independence was written by historian Henry Steel Commager, was announced as the 200th anniversary of the original Declaration of Independence was being observed, and 126 US Senators and Representatives signed the Commager parody. We quote a few sentences:

"Two centuries ago, our forefathers brought forth a new nation; now we must join with others to bring forth a new world order. To establish a new world order...it is essential that mankind free itself from limitations of national prejudice...We affirm that the economy of all nations is a seamless web, and that no one nation can any longer effectively maintain its processes of production and monetary systems without recognizing the necessity of collaborative regulation by international authorities. We call upon all nations to strengthen the United Nations...and all other institutions of world order..." (Underlining added).

The term New World Order was known and fought for centuries before President Bush re-popularized the term and fought for it in Desert Storm. Historian William P. Hoar wrote concerning the 1976 effort: "The Declaration of INTERdependence was a part of the continuing drive to dilute, to dissolve, the sovereignty of the United States of America. The goal, we are told, is a New World Order, a new international economic order...It would mean the end of the US as we know it, and her submission first to a regional and then world government. The proponents claim that achievement of their goal is inevitable; Americans can acquiesce and take their medicine, or have it shoved down their throats." And, of course, to attain this goal total disarmament of all nations, and all peoples, is essential. And the federal government of the United States, under the Kennedy-Johnson Administrations and now under the Bush Administration, has chosen to renew the drive toward total surrender by initiating the unilateral disarmament program. The closing of 25% of the military bases in the US is a part of the program. The scourge of war is said to be almost ended and a new era of peace and universal brotherhood is developing under the leadership of the UN.

But eliminating the scourge of war is but the beginning. Next major move of the UN: We must all work together as world citizens to save Mother Earth. Next June, the UN Conference on Environment and Development (UNCED) is holding an Earth Summit in Brazil. We understand that at the suggestion of Gorbachev and approval of Bush, some 6,000 government officials and dignitaries, including at least 100 heads of state, will attend this biggest of all summits. Seems that "The world community now faces greater risks to our common security through our impact on the environment than from traditional conflicts with one another." In a tract explaining 'Earth Summit '92' we are told that "We must now forge a new 'Earth Ethic' which will inspire all peoples and nations to join in a new global partnership of North, South, East and West. Strengthening the role the United Nations can play on behalf of its members will require serious examination of the need to extend into the international arena the rule of law and the principle of taxation."

Maurice Strong, secretary general of UNCED, writes: "It is clear that current lifestyles and consumption patterns of the affluent middle class... are not sustainable." Think about this as the world celebrates UN DAY on Thursday, October 24, 1991.

"For when they shall say, Peace and safety; then sudden destruction cometh upon them, as travail upon a woman with child; and they shall not escape." (I Thessalonians 5:3).

RESTRUCTURING EDUCATION

Every now and then, when TV cameras are made available, our Education President may be seen in some school classroom talking pleasantly to young students. Or perhaps he'll be discussing his America 2000 education strategy with teachers or principals. This staged scene is a part of his need to be considered a Domestic Affairs President as well as a Foreign Affairs President, and incidentally as a candidate for reelection next presidential election time. This does not mean that he's neglecting his New World Order dream. In fact, these incidental exposures are part of the same program. Because the development of a New World Citizenry is an essential ingredient of the final goal. That's why his National Education goals provide that "All children in America will start school ready to learn," and "Every adult American will be literate and will possess the knowledge and skills necessary to compete in a global economy and exercise the rights and responsibilities of citizenship." In other words, while the architects of the NWO are busy restructuring Eastern Europe and the Middle East, academics and educationists will be working with the tax-exempt foundations to develop a citizenry worthy of the NWO. What kind of a citizen would this be? We think John D. Rockefeller's General Education Board chairman, Frederick T. Gates, described the "new citizen" quite clearly when he wrote in 1904: "In our dreams, we have limitless resources and the people yield themselves with perfect docility to our molding hands. The present education conventions fade from our minds and, unhampered by tradition, we work our good will upon a grateful ND and responsive rural folk."

Lately in education circles the words "restructuring" and "re-learning" are often heard. And the people, knowing only what the Insiders desire to tell them, and distrusting them, ask for a better answer. Mrs. Cris Shardelman of Poulsbo, Washington, has spent considerable time and effort studying this so called educational reform movement, and what these catch-words restructuring and re-learning really mean. She has sent her conclusions, with permission to reprint. Her study deals specifically with the situation in her own State of Washington. But this same program in one form or another is being presented - or has been presented - in all 50 States. So, and particularly if you have children of school age, please read the following carefully:

EDUCATION REFORM OR RESTRUCTURING, THE ILLUSION

State by State parents, teachers, and taxpayers are being deceived by the education reform movement. They are led to believe schools will be freed from paper work to teach academics and have local control restored. True results will be five-fold: 1. It is dumbing down education. 2. It replaces responsibility for education from elected representative government to control by an unelected commission (commissar government). 3. The Governor appointed commission will alter the entire purpose of education from teachers transmitting academic information to students to the function of restructuring and controlling society. The elitist commission will have power to determine all the knowledge, skills and attitudes of students and teachers (public, private and homeschool). A total management system will guarantee no one can escape being "politically, spiritually and socially correct". 4. Existing State and Federal laws which inhibit this management system may be waived (broken) without legislative action or citizen input. 5. The education reform movement will change local and state control of education to national and international control. This has been orchestrated for years by those whose influence in education contributed to U.S. illiteracy and moral decay. The orchestrators will control education.

In 1991 [the State of] Washington's House of Representatives passed two radical education bills that were defeated by the Senate. Since Governor Gardner threatened to convene a special session to force passage, HB1023 and HB2240 are certain to be revived in January, and should be studied by citizens. Citizens should recognize, particularly through HB2240, the reenactment of the so called "Children's Initiative" that was rejected by voters in every county. The "at risk" category is so broadly defined any child may be included in clientele to provide full employment for "the services of mental health professionals, child psychiatrists, health care providers, social service caseworkers or social workers, school counselors, school psychologists, school nurses, and school social workers".

Academic excellence cannot be the goal, since both specific time for academics and solid subject matter are to be repealed, i.e. teaching English and the requirement for U.S. and Washington State Government and History. Perhaps one does not need to learn English or understand U.S. Government if the orientation is World Citizenship.

Both bills give the unelected commission power to determine what will comprise "essential learnings" stated to be all the knowledge, skill and more importantly attitudes needed by the student for a certification of mastery. The National Education Association defined attitudes in Issues In Training as, "how an organization can influence the beliefs, attitudes and values (hereafter simply called attitudes) of an individual for the purpose of "developing him," i.e. changing in a direction which the organization regards to be in his own and the organization's best interests." The process was to unfreeze old attitudes, change and internalize new ones, and refreeze new attitudes. Developing student's attitudes, beliefs and values borders on State Religion.

PARADISE POSTPONED

If anyone looks upon the end of a recession as the start of a new chapter in financial paradise, they had better be prepared for a rather long wait. ...Those who have suggested that the United States economy was about to roar ahead have also been proved wrong. The events of the last year or so, in both the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe, have had a very dramatic effect on the ability of economic planners to chart a viable course... Effectively the massive changes taking place have started a totally new game - and most commentators are totally lost in comprehending this. They simply choose to ignore what is going on and make their projections as if nothing had happened. Make no mistake, the world is now being dominated by new forces that have not had this grasp of power for several generations. The new world order, as many choose to call it, is in fact the old world order in new clothes. The old order was a socialised form of society controlled by the wealth of the world, controlled by the large banks. The so-called new world order is little different. Instead of the extremes of communism (as we know it) we shall have an apparently watered-down socialist society which is still controlled by the same people. It is all a question of new packaging which is more readily accepted by the populace. (Allen Keyte in his World Affairs Review, 1/15/91. Vernon Court, 48-54 High Street, Cheltenham, Glos. 50 1EE, England. Subscription rates on application).

Society will be restructured through a management system: 1. The individual student is tracked through a statewide assessment (evaluation, not testing). He must master the "essential learning" components, including attitudes, or be recycled until he is "developed". This includes public, private and homeschools. 2. Schools and teachers are subject to a statewide accountability system wherein locally identified outcomes must be linked to the commission's essential learning outcomes. Failure brings state intervention assistance. 3. College entrance may be adapted to essential learnings, which controls higher education. 4. Laws, rules and regulations that hinder this management will be waived without legislative hearings.

This management system will require record keeping of students and teacher attitudes as well as knowledge and skills. Federal and State legislation that prohibits privacy invasion of student and parent beliefs will have to be waived in order to keep the files and use psychological and behavior modifying techniques to bring about the "essential learnings". These records pose a threat for everyone, but are especially dangerous for the "at risk" category. Federal legislation was needed to prohibit use of secret files on students categorized as potential criminals, although they had never committed a criminal act. These could be used by the justice system, and employment references, and could stop secret clearances. (1989 statistics state 1/3 of state students at risk.)

Further control of society can be accomplished through a national and international assessment system. President Bush has stated he wants the national assessment to be used by employers for hiring and for higher education entrance requirement. His Choice in Education is meaningless if all schools will have the same "essential learning and accountability." Bush's Secretary of Education, Alexander Lamar, stated tax dollars bring Federal Control.

Schools are being reformed and restructured, but not for academics or freedom to teach. Laws and statutes that "hinder" are being removed. but they are laws that prevented abuse of parental rights, children's privacy and freedom from psychological indoctrination. The National Education Association declared schools would become "clinics" for "psycho-social treatment of students". That defines education reform! The most fundamental argument is whether "developing the child" should begin in the womb or after he is out of diapers! (Prepared by Mrs. Cris Shardelman, 17198 Viking Way NW, Poulsbo WA 98370).

* * * * *

"Where government goes, corruption follows," declared Hillsdale College President George Roche. And government tells the people that money is the cure-all for all ills, including education. This lie has been told so often that most people believe it. Brainwashing is a most effective weapon. Consequently, as the man-made recession refused to go away and became more and more painful to industries and individuals, governments at State and District levels began to cut down on education costs. Here in Palm Beach County, near panic followed. This has been true in almost every case where education cuts have been announced. This report from Annapolis, the capital of the State of Maryland is more or less typical: "About 5,000 angry teachers, parents and students marched on the State House last night (10/16/91), demanding that Gov. William Donald Schaefer veto legislation that could cut education aid across Maryland....Police were forced to cordon off streets surrounding the capitol to accomodate the throngs chanting "Save our Schools," and "Send down Schaefer." They carried posters saying 'No cuts to education' and banners reading 'ignorance is more expensive.'" But Dr. Roche, who presides over a highly respected conservative college which refuses federal funds of any kind, insists that "It is not lack of money spent on education--we spend billions. It is not some sweeping social injustice--we live in an age that offers unprecedented freedom, diversity and opportunity, it is not even that we have forgotten the best ways of teaching knowledge or inculcating virtue, although we have indeed forgotten and are paying a heavy price. So what is the root cause? It is the dead hand of political influence (Education President Bush, please note)...As early as 1952, a national academic commission warned: 'We are convinced that it would be fatal were federal support to be substantially extended....the freedom of higher education would be lost'." This commission was prescient. Not only was freedom of education lost; all our freedoms are endangered because of what government has done to education. Dr. Medford Evans commented: "Government schools make it a matter of policy to spend as much money as possible, and impart as little knowledge as possible since spending demonstrates power while keeping the scholars ignorant monopolizes power in the hands of the government insiders." However, Bush's America 2000 professes to be different. It doesn't keep scholars ignorant, it intends to "unfreeze old attitudes, change and internalize new ones, and refreeze new attitudes." Teaching is not the purpose, training and brainwashing is the goal, the making of "docile, contented" new subjects prepared for happy existence in the Socialist World Government which will secure the New World Order for at least a thousand years.

Restructuring education is but a part of the program of restructuring the world. So, don't expect to see our Education President presiding over students in a schoolhouse in the upcoming months. There's other restructuring of emergency proportions. So our Peregrinating President is off again. Madrid and the Middle East peace conference. Then Rome and NATO. A pause for Thanksgiving and then he's off to the Far East: Japan, Korea, Australia, Singapore. He should be home for Christmas. James McCartney, often unusually outspoken head of the Miami Herald Washington bureau, commented: "It's as though the President is trying to escape what voters are now saying emphatically is the nation's No. 1 problem area - the economy....Bush has been in a free fall in the polls since last March, right after the Persian Gulf war....George Bush may be shooting himself in the foot" by ignoring domestic problems and spending his time restructuring the world.

"Finally, while the builders of the New Babylon strive to meet their designated millennial dateline, those who should oppose them are silent. Scripture says: "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old, he will not depart from it." That Scripture is known and observed by Christ's enemies, but is generally ignored by those who say they love Him. Many willingly permit their children to be trained in government schools when homeschooling is possible. Let there be this warning: So long as there are government schools which children are forced to attend, there will be world government, whether we like it or not.

"Beware lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit, after the tradition of men, after the rudiments of the world, and not after Christ." (Colossians 2:8).

BEYOND INTERDEPENDENCE

Progress Report: From Liberty to Slavery.

On July 4, 1962, President John Kennedy made a speech in Philadelphia. It was the 186th anniversary of the signing of the American Declaration of Independence. He spoke at Independence Hall, scene of thrilling events in 1776 when the Founding Fathers of America formally declared that the colonies of America "are and of right ought to be, free and independent states." So began the Dan Smoot Report of September 3, 1962. The Report continued:

"After a perfunctory tribute to the Declaration of Independence, President Kennedy said: 'But I will say here and now on this day of independence that the United States will be ready for a Declaration of Interdependence--that we will be prepared to discuss with a United Europe the ways and means of forming a concrete Atlantic Partnership--a mutually beneficial partnership between the new union now emerging in Europe and the old American Union founded here 175 years ago....Today America must learn to think intercontinentally.'

"On July 11, James Reston (a member of the Council on Foreign Relations and an admirer of President Kennedy) commented in a New York Times article on the President's speech: 'Maybe it is just the drowsy indolence of the summer, but American opinion seems remarkably receptive, or at least acquiescent, to President Kennedy's proposal for a partnership of the Atlantic Nations....in Washington, there was not a whisper of protest from a single national leader'."

Reston was wrong in this, because at least one national leader, Congressman James B. Utt, California Republican, said in a report to his constituents: "Stabbed in the back on the Fourth of July! I was enjoying on TV what I thought was a great, powerful and patriotic speech by the President, being delivered in the birthplace of American liberty, when, without warning, he turned his back on independence and turned the American clock back 176 years. Interdependence is one step away from abject slavery, both in the rise and fall of every civilization. Is that what America wants? Political ties with Europe? We fought the Revolutionary War to break those bonds asunder. Is President Kennedy saying that America must be interdependent to survive? Is he saying that our economic structure has become so weakened since he took office that we must depend upon England, Germany and Japan to bail us out? Forbid it, Almighty God! The chains of slavery, though cast in solid gold, are not the heritage that I want to leave to my children and my children's children. As I listened to our President turn his back on American independence, my heart saddened, and I recalled the words of Sir Walter Scott, penned over a century ago:

"Breathes there a man, with soul so dead,
Who never to himself hath said,
This is my own, my native land!"

President Kennedy's call for surrender of American sovereignty to an interdependent world alliance may have been prompted by the fact that, a few months earlier, his State Department had issued its Document 7277 entitled "Freedom From War: The United States Program For General and Complete Disarmament In A Peaceful World." In our DBR (10/18/91) we reported that President Bush had in effect re-instated this program by ordering its first stage of a new unilateral disarmament program. In this regard it is interesting to note that in the Dallas Times Herald (4/17/91) there was an article entitled "World Must Move Toward Federation," in which the writer, Thomas Hudson McKee said: "President Bush 20 years ago, was a member of Congress representing Houston. In the third year of his two terms, he introduced a resolution that urged Congress to approve his proposal to transform NATO's military alliance into a federal union much like the United States. No action was taken on it but President Bush has not retracted one word of it to this day." In his recent speech before the NATO meeting in Rome (11/7/91), President Bush urged a somewhat similar alliance of the 16 NATO Nations, with the United States participating in the union.

In 1962 the State Department's Document 7277 was not well received; nor was President Kennedy's call for Interdependence, But the Insiders in charge of having the United Nations become part of a one-world government did not give up. Some 15 years later (1/30/76) the World Affairs Council announced its Declaration of Interdependence, in Philadelphia, at Independence Hall. This obscene parody of the Declaration of Independence read, in part: "Two centuries ago, our forefathers brought forth a new nation; now we must join with others to bring forth a new world order. To establish a new world order...it is essential that mankind free itself from limitations of national prejudice...We affirm that the economy of all nations is a seamless web, and that no one nation can no longer effectively maintain its processes of production and monetary systems without recognizing the necessity of collaborative regulation by international authorities...We call upon all nations to strengthen the United Nations...and other institutions of world order..." This call for the surrender of our national sovereignty to the United Nations was signed by 126 United States Senators and Representatives. After a storm of protest, eight of them later renounced their participation or said their names had been used without their knowledge. So, a second failure at promoting interdependence and subservience to the UN failed.

But when Saddam Hussein of Iraq was induced to invade Kuwait, President Bush was quick to use the occasion to promote his New World Order and elevate the United Nations to a place of prominence as potential World Government. And the Trilateral Commission was quick to follow through.

We borrowed the title of this report from the Trilateral Commission. Its most recent publication is a paperback entitled "Beyond Interdependence - The Meshing of the World's Economy And the Earth's Ecology". And in this publication we find the slightly altered blueprint for the completion of the building of the New World Order. First, a brief background.

After two failures, the CFR and Trilateral Commission adopted "The Third Try At World Order," written by Harlan Cleveland of the Aspen Institute for International Humanism, former assistant Secretary of State, and US Ambassador to NATO. Cleveland called his plan Piecemeal Functionalism. It is an adaptation of the Hegelian Dialectic process, using "Management by Crisis" as the system. You'll know the process: First, find or create a world crisis. Second, publicize the crisis until the masses are convinced that it really is a world crisis, one beyond the ability of individual nations to repair. Third, a pre-prepared solution is offered, one that requires world cooperation. And finally, a new international agency is established to handle the crisis. This done, then find or create a new world crisis which demands a world authority to solve. At the end of each crisis, a new set of international laws have been drafted to handle any similar crisis. Piecemeal Functionalism, creation of World Government a piece at a time. But the target date is 2000, and a lot of pieces must be installed before that date. And that's what the Trilat's "Meshing of the World's Economy and the Earth's Ecology" is all about.

As North American Chairman of the Trilateral Commission, David Rockefeller provides the introduction to "Beyond Interdependence". He explains that since 1974 "growing Interdependence" and "inadequate cooperation" have been features of the "international order." In this, history proves him to be correct. Interdependence was the aim of the Elitists, the economic merging of nations and states into regional economic spheres, later to become political spheres as Regional World Governments were developed. But this hasn't worked as expected. The 12 nations of Western Europe were slowly merged into an economic sphere, but now it's future is doubtful, partially because of the now allegedly independent Eastern European Nations that want to join the EC since the Warsaw Pact is ended. The breakup of the Communist Empire brought about a surge of nationalism and ethnic and religious differences that were held in check by the Communist Party and the KGB. Now free to choose, they want to become individual sovereign nations as they once were. This runs against any thoughts of interdependence. So the One Worlders are spending billions trying to keep Gorbachev the president of a Soviet Union that no longer exists. Immediate evidence against interdependence is Yugoslavia which, like the poetic Humpty Dumpty, has fallen and the pieces cannot be put back together again. Despite Secretary Baker's near miracle in getting Palestinians and Israelis to sit down and throw words at each other instead of bullets and stones, there is no interdependence between Arabs and Israelis in the near future. So, David Rockefeller and his Trilateral Commissioners say they must go "Beyond Interdependence" and bring about the "meshing of the world's economy and the earth's ecology." He says they "need a new synthesis." Their originally selected thesis and antithesis didn't develop into an acceptable synthesis. So the new program goes "Beyond Interdependence." The book suggests that "the meshing of the world's economy" can be accomplished by bringing economic and monetary pressure to bear against the reluctant or developing nations that insist upon economic independence. Sir David explains: "not that they (reluctant nations) can prevent an agreement being reached, but they can refuse to sign it, ratify or implement an agreement unless and until their economic and other concerns have been addressed." (Underlining added for emphasis). Which means that the Elitists can force nations to behave through economic sanctions (as with South Africa and now Yugoslavia) or monetary control.

But "meshing the earth's ecology" is a more difficult matter. A definition seems required. Ecology is defined as 1) The branch of biology that deals with the relations between living organisms and their environment (to the New Agers, people are just living organisms). 2) In sociology, (ecology is) the study of the relationship and adjustment of human groups to their geographical and social environments." Ergo, "meshing the earth's ecology" involves all those discovered or created environmental problems: greening gases, global warming, ozone layer, acid rain, use of fossil fuels, water, deforestation, food for the increasing masses, population control, climate control, etc., etc. You name it, asbestos or spotted owls or whatever, the Insiders in charge of ecology meshing will make it a crisis, create an international agency and world laws to control it. Thus, through Hegelian Piecemeal Functionalism, one more plank is added to support the Socialist One World Government that supports the Socialist New World Order will have been laid.

The World Planners' use of ecology as a weapon to win ownership or control of all the world's resources is already destroying industry at the national level. "Pittsburgh now has clean air - but no steel mills...The Northwest has 3,000 more spotted owls, and 60,000 fewer lumbering jobs... The gold mining industry is getting clobbered...Real estate values are beginning to undergo wild fluctuations as government, environmentalists and industry clash over who gets what land," wrote Franklin Sanders in The Eco-Profiteer (Box 84903, Phoenix, AZ 85071). That's ecology as a weapon at the national level. "The meshing of the earth's ecology" can be disastrous when used as a weapon in the hands of the builders of World Government. Just how is this weapon to be used? David Rockefeller says, "One particularly prominent event on the horizon is the 'Earth Summit' - the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development - which will take place in Rio de Janeiro in June 1992..." We are told that Gorbachev suggested to Bush that the UN conference be held at summit level. So, Maurice Strong, secretary-general of the UN Conference on Environment and Development (UNCED) has been directed to invite more than 100 of the world's heads of state, 6,000 other government officials and dignitaries, and an additional 3,500 globalists to attend this first Earth Summit, where plans will be announced, orders issued and rules given that all governments and their peoples may cooperate in "The Meshing of the World's Economy and the Earth's Ecology." In Rio in June, say the Trilateral Commission authors of Beyond Interdependence, the promoters "face an enormous challenge. They must initiate significant reform of the policies and institutions that are behind...the growing threats to essential life-support systems. They must commence a process of basic change in the way we conduct domestic and international economic relations and the way we make decisions in government, industry and the home. They must begin to reshape our international institutions for an age of total interdependence." Readers are told that 20 years from now "2012 should see a new global partnership in a revitalized international system in which an Earth Council, perhaps the Security Council with a broader mandate, maintains the interlocked environmental and economic security of the planet." The goal: World Government via Piecemeal Functionalism through "The Meshing of the World's Economy and the Earth's Ecology."

P.S. We planned to discuss how weather control by man can be used to frighten men into accepting world government as protection against so-called Acts of God. Will do so next issue. Meanwhile, the Lord's words to Job (38:1-5) seem appropriate:

"Then the Lord answered Job out of the whirlwind and said, Who is this that darkeneth counsel by words without knowledge? Gird up thy loins like a man; for I will demand of thee, and answer thou me. Where wast thou when I laid the foundations of the earth? declare, if thou hast understanding. Who hath laid the measures thereof, if thou knowest? or who hath stretched the line upon it? Whereupon are the foundations thereof fastened? or who laid the corner stone thereof; When the morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for Joy?....."

THE NEW WORLD (DIS)ORDER

George Bush, who has been presuming to be the President of the World, has been forced to face reality and act like the President of the United States. His global political aspirations have so obsessed him that his domestic policies have gone to pot. As an Education President, his failures are becoming known to the people. USNews (12/9/91) features on its cover the words "The Flight From Public Schools," and in a pro-and-con discussion asks, "Can Public Schools Survive?" Insight newsweekly promotes home schooling as being superior to teaching in public (government) schools, and summarizes: "In the late 1970s, only 10,000 students were being taught exclusively by their parents at home. Today that figure has grown to 250,000. Home schooling has gained in popularity among parents who believe traditional classrooms fail to teach values..." But Bush continues to promote his America 2000 educational program; just another administrative failure.

As an Environmental President Bush has shown his true colors by requesting Congress to accept the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) as of Cabinet rank. President Reagan promised to kill both EPA and the Education Department; but failed to do so. Bush has enlarged them both as means for promoting his version of The New World Order. Clean Air, Wetlands, Spotted Owls, and other exaggerated or phony issues have cost American industry billions of dollars and hundreds of thousands of jobs. In November alone, 240,000 more jobs were eliminated by nationwide employers who were trying to keep from going bankrupt. It had become so bad that, according to the Miami Herald Washington Bureau: "The Federal Reserve cut short-term interest rates again Friday (12/6/91) to encourage people to spend and get the economy growing. But the Fed has cut rates 13 times since the recession that began in July 1990. So far it hasn't worked....banks are afraid to lend and Americans are afraid to borrow."

Since July 1990 Bush has been saying that things are not as bad as they seem, and economic stability is just around the corner. So he did nothing about the growing crisis, instead spent much time trying to keep his NWO partner, Gorbachev, alive and presiding over a kind of reborn Soviet Union. He's also been busy pushing Baker in the latter's impossible dream of making the Middle East a place of peace and prosperity. In that connection, Bush's former Chief of Staff was causing him to lose additional points on the political scale. Despite all the political sins attributed to John Sununu, the principal difficulty was Sununu's ancestry. He is of Arabian stock and therefore anti-Zionist and supposedly anti-semitic. When Bush got tough about that proposed $10 billion loan to Israel, he was said to be getting and acting upon the advice of Sununu. This troubled many members of both House and Senate who were getting sizeable donations from the Israeli-Zionist lobbies that dominate Congress whenever a Middle East problem comes up. For this reason if for no other, Sununu had to go. And that's part of the reason that the NYTimes (12/5/91) was able to report that "President Bush tried to halt his political slide on Thursday by appointing Samuel Skinner and Robert Teeter...to run his staff and re-election campaign...Bush also made a new attempt to demonstrate his concern for what he called the 'extraordinarily sluggish' economy." He had at his disposal some $9.7 billion that he could spend to create jobs for some of the nation's jobless. But he'd have to wait until his State of the Union address in late January before he could make "any substantive economic proposals." However, he could make some immediate proposals to get his re-election campaign going.

If George Bush continues to pretend to be the world leader, then he must first win re-election as President of the United States. And, disregarding any challenges from the Democratic Party at the moment, there were serious challenges within his own Party. Pat Buchanan had become the most prominent of the challengers and he was backed by the conservatives, while David Duke's announcement that he was running as a Republican candidate meant that another big slice of the constituency would renounce Bush as political leader. And there was one important issue that the people at the grass roots level could understand. That had to do with taxes. The NYTimes, which usually backs Bush in all that he does, was especially critical of his handling of the tax problem. It editorialized (11/29/91): "The President's Inept Tax Plan. Desperate, Inept, Unpresidential. Pick your own adjective for Mr. Bush's 24-hour turnabout on tax cuts. Last week he said he would wait until next year's State of the Union address to outline a tax cut plan that would spur the sagging economy. Monday night he gave lukewarm endorsement to tax cuts proposed by Newt Gingrich, the House Republican whip. By Tuesday night, lukewarm had become wholehearted. Mr. Bush called on Congress to pass, hours before it was scheduled to adjourn, a tax cut bill not even written yet. Mr. Bush's leap to legislative madness invited suspicion that his calculations were driven by politics, not economics."

If the NYT wanted to print all the news that fits, it could have added that all of his calculations will be driven by politics until next November. Because the president's re-election campaign has begun. At the same time that he accepted John Sununu's resignation and Skinner's appointment, he also named his campaign team. Commerce Secretary Robert Mosbacher will give up that post to become Bush's overall campaign manager. Robert Teeter was named as his campaign chairman, Frederick Malek also a campaign manager, and Charles Black his senior campaign adviser. State campaign managers were also selected. Hence, the Bush campaign to remain President of the United States so he can continue to presume to be President of the World, is well underway. Every indication is that as US President, his running mate will continue to be Dan Quayle, and his running mate as President of the World will continue to be George Gorbachev, provided always that the latter will still have some kind of a union to head.

That Bush will continue to stress interdependence and his New World Order was evidenced as he spoke to the survivors of the Pearl Harbor attack. Said our local daily: "President Bush used the 50th anniversary of Japan's surprise attack on Pearl Harbor Saturday to warn Americans of the dangers of turning inward at a time of sweeping global change and interdependency. The attack was 'a tragedy spawned by isolationism,' Bush said, because Washington had too long ignored mounting conflicts abroad." (Underlining added). He said, and this is a direct quote: "We stand here today on the site of a tragedy spawned by isolationism. And it is here we must learn - and this time avoid - the dangers of today's isolationism and its economic accomplice, protectionism." One must wonder if he thought America's entry into World War One was spawned by isolationism. Was our pre-war aid to Britain in WWII an isolationist policy? And was America's efforts to keep Japan from getting oil from the South Pacific and similar actions that brought on the "surprise attack" at Pearl Harbor brought on by isolationism? If Bush wants to promote interdependence and world community at a national commemorative service such as occurred at Pearl Harbor, he'd better get better writers; writers that won't make him look ridiculous in the eyes of history.

Meanwhile, Bush's drive to promote his New World Order by bringing peace to the troubled Middle East isn't going well. And in regarding Syria as the key to the solution may have been one of his worst mistakes. Joseph de Courcy, Intelligence Digest editor, reported in his review (11/29/91) and we quote.

* * * * *

Bush and Baker: Supping with the Syrian Devil.

The Bush administration has put all the blame for the Lockerbie bombing on Libya. In the following report, Intelligence Digest Middle Eastern sources explain why the administration has not also accused Syria, whose involvement in the outrage is suspected by most knowledgeable experts. It is to be hoped Bush and Baker know what they are doing. They are supping with the devil, and they will need a long spoon. JdeC.

"American accusations that Libya bears the sole responsibility for the destruction of the Pan Am plane over Lockerbie, Scotland, two years ago, are viewed by sources knowledgeable in Middle Eastern terrorism with suspicion. These sources believe that Achmed Jibril's Damascus-based organization was involved in the Lockerbie atrocity and that America's effective exoneration of Syria is connected with the Middle East peace process. The US does not want to alienate Syria at this stage.

"But the evidence that Bush and Baker are deliberately bolstering Syria's President Assad, and attempting to whitewash him in the eyes of world opinion, goes beyond the absence of blame for Lockerbie.

"For instance, it was the Bush administration that encouraged Syria to launch a decisive attack on General Aoun's Christian Maronite forces in Lebanon, leading to the complete domination of Lebanon by Syria. Now Syria is trying to destroy the remaining vestiges of Christian political and economic influences in Lebanon. Washington even remained silent when the Maronite leader Danny Chamoun was assassinated with his wife and children. Some 700 other Christians have shared his fate since the Syrian takeover.

"Further evidence of the Bush administration's softness towards Syria is in the drug trade. Syria is a centre for the international trade in Heroin and other drugs. Whereas the South American country of Colombia (where cocaine is the main product) is a drug cartel which the government has been trying to suppress, in Syria the government is the drug cartel. Lebanon is of particular interest to Syria because the plants from which drugs are extracted are grown extensively in the Bekas valley.

"No effective action has been taken to prevent Syrian drug trafficking, and the whole subject is being kept out of the Western press. On the other hand, Heider Yusef, one of the controllers of this traffic, has reportedly met with high US officials on several occasions as President Assad's emissary.

"Furthermore, an American company, Baxter International Inc, allegedly offered to supply Syria with laboratories suitable for the filtration of heroin. The offer was withdrawn when the matter came to the attention of the US Senate." (End of report from Intelligence Digest, 17 Rodney Rd., Cheltenham, Glos. GL50 IHX, United Kingdom. Subscription rates on request).

While President Bush was losing political points, President Gorbachev was losing an empire. When the Bush-Gorbachev version of The New World Order was announced and initiated via Desert Storm, Bush was at his height in popularity and Gorbachev was firmly in control of fifteen Soviet Socialist Republics. But as time marched on, three Baltic Republics declared themselves independent and regained lost sovereignty. Then there were twelve Soviet Socialist Republics. There came a feigned coup and Russia seceded. Then there were eleven Soviet Socialist Republics. Seweryn Bialer, of Columbia U and the CFR, gave an apt description of the political situation at that time: "Russia was the Soviet Union. The Russian Republic was first among the fifteen; Russian authority and Soviet power were synonymous...Now there were two Moscows: Moscow of the Kremlin, the capital of the Soviet Union, where foreign dignitaries paid their respects to Gorbachev; and the Moscow that was capital of the Russian Republic, its leaders housed in a white building a mile from the Kremlin's walls. The Kremlin represented the past, but its contact with the people had been terminated, or at least suspended. As a capital, Moscow now represented the Russian people and no one else. The Kremlin still had all the accoutrements and instruments of power, and it was still feared. But when it lost the Russian homeland, it lost its only base of legitimacy and support."

Then Ukraine and Byelorussia proclaimed their sovereignty and there were but nine Soviet Socialist Republics, headed by the mostly Moslem Kazakhstan, undecided whether to pay allegiance to Moscow or Mintz. Headlines said "Soviet Union no longer exists." But those were Boris Yeltsin's words, not Michael Gorbachev's. For there remained the KGB, now but a spy organization but still an instrument of the Soviet Union; and there remained the Army, still commanded by the Kremlin. And there were nine Soviet Socialist Republics yet clinging to the central government for economic survival. There also remained those nuclear weapons, scattered within the three Slavic States and Kazakhstan. Both Yeltsin and Gorbachev assured Bush they were under safe control, but...Eleven of the adherent or autocratic republics, Kazakhstan declining, planned to create their own national armies, thus undermining the power of the centrally controlled Soviet Army. And Yeltsin, now presuming total control, promised to "meet all Kremlin commitments to the United Nations" (but not necessarily to the Western Nations that had treaties with and had supported the USSR.)

With nine republics looking to the Kremlin for economic survival which it no longer has the power to provide, it seems that the search for "democracy" will end in anarchy, or control by Boris Yeltsin. Also, has come an end to the Bush-Gorbachev concept of The New World Order. So Hegelian "Management by Crisis" remains the rule of the rulers of the world; until they too meet the real Ruler of the kingdom of men.

"...He changeth the times and the seasons: he removeth kings and setteth up kings...the most High ruleth in the kingdom of men, and giveth it to whomsoever he will, and setteth up over it the basest of men...he appointeth over it whomsoever he will." (Selected from Daniel 2:21, 4:17 and 5:21).

THE SEVEN NOAHIDE LAWS

First, facts without comment. On March 5, 1991 the US House of Representatives considered and passed, by voice vote, "A Joint Resolution to Designate March 26, 1991 as Education Day, U.S.A." On March 7, 1991 the US Senate considered and passed, by voice vote, this Joint Resolution. On March 20, 1991, the President of the United States approved this Joint Resolution and it became Public Law 102-14. Following is the complete text of that Joint Resolution.

PUBLIC LAW 102-12 [H.J.Res. 104]; March 20, 1991

EDUCATION DAY, U.S.A.—PROCLAMATION

Joint Resolution designating March 26, 1991, as "Education Day, U.S.A."

Whereas Congress recognizes the historical tradition of ethical values and principles which are the basis of civilized society and upon which our great Nation was founded;

Whereas these ethical values and principles have been the bedrock of society from the dawn of civilization, when they were known as the Seven Noahide Laws;

Whereas without these ethical values and principles the edifice of civilization stands in serious peril of returning to chaos;

Whereas society is profoundly concerned with the recent weakening of these principles that has resulted in crises that beleaguer and threaten the fabric of civilized society;

Whereas the justified preoccupation with these crises must not let the citizens of this Nation lose sight of their responsibility to transmit these historical ethical values from our distinguished past to the generations of the future;

Whereas the Lubavitch movement has fostered and promoted these ethical values and principles throughout the world;

Whereas Rabbi Menachem Scheerson, leader of the Lubavitch movement, is universally respected and revered and his eighty-ninth birthday falls on March 26, 1991;

Whereas in tribute to this great spiritual leader, "the rebbe", this, his ninetyeth year will be seen as one of "education and giving", the year in which we turn to education and charity to return the world to the moral and ethical values contained in the Seven Noahide Laws; and

Whereas this will be reflected in an international scroll of honor signed by the President of the United States and other heads of state; Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, that March 26, 1991, the start of the ninetyeth year of Rabbi Menachem Scheerson, leader of the worldwide Lubavitch movement, is designated as "Education Day, U.S.A". The President is requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe such day with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

Approved March 20, 1991.

The Seven Noahide Laws are mentioned twice in Public Law 102-14, but are not spelled out. They seem difficult to find in English translation. We were not able to find them. A Christian pastor and subscriber informs us that they appear in a book written by one Rabbi Marvin Antelman, but we haven't been able to find the book. However, we are told that they can be seen in the Institute of Judaic-Christian Researcher, January 1990, in the following form:

(1) Thou shalt not engage in idol worship. (2) Thou shalt not blaspheme God. (3) Thou shalt not shed innocent blood of an human nor fetus nor ailing person who has a limited time to live. (4) Thou shalt not engage in bestial, incestuous, adulterous or homosexual relations nor commit the act of rape. (5) Thou shalt not steal. (6) Thou shalt establish laws and courts of law to administer these laws, including the death penalty for those who kill, administered only if there is one testifying eyewitness. (7) Thou shalt not be cruel to animals."

Further information concerning the Noahide Laws are found on page 737 of Encyclopedia Americana. We have a copy from which we quote: "A Jewish Talmudic designation for seven biblical laws given to Adam and to Noah before the revelation to Moses on Mt. Sinai and consequently binding on all mankind. Beginning with Genesis 2:16, the Babylonian Talmud listed the first six commandments...After the flood a seventh commandment, given to Noah, forbade the eating of flesh from a living animal (Gen. 9:4)...Throughout the ages scholars have viewed the Noahide Laws as a link between Judaism and Christianity, as universal norms of ethical conduct, as a basic concept of international law, or as a guarantee of fundamental human rights for all." (Underlining added for emphasis).

* * * * *

Now facts with comment. In the Bible there is reference to the Noahic Covenant and the rainbow as its symbol and promise; but there is no mention of any Seven Noahide Laws. These come not from the Bible, but from the Babylonian Talmud. The laws are said to apply to all mankind, but those persons who honor and live by the Torah are exempt. (Torah is defined by Webster as "the whole body of Jewish religious literature including the Scriptures, the Talmud, etc.). Since these "laws" apply to "all mankind" it is said in Noahidic literature that "The Seven Noahide Laws now may receive a recognition as a source of international law...By stating that the 'ethical values and principles' which have been 'the bedrock of society from the dawn of civilization' are the 'Seven Noahide Laws,' Public Law 102-14 provides national recognition to both a theoretical foundation and the justification for general principles of law as sources of international law rules...This theoretical foundation anticipates further international recognition by its incorporation in an 'international scroll of honor signed by the president of the United States and other heads of state' and essaying to 'return the world to...the Seven Noahide Laws for international law'..." Here, then, we see the real reason for the passage of Public Law 102-14. It is a step toward the establishment of a law code for a One World Government!!

In Noah's time there was corruption and God cleansed the earth with water, saving only Noah, his family and selected animals. There then existed a new world order. There were no nations, no communities, no society, just a family. "And the three sons of Noah were to "Be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth." But in this new world order there existed sin, in the form of Noah's temptation (drunkenness) and Ham's dishonoring of his parent. The first son of Ham was Cush, "And Cush begat Nimrod...and the beginning of his kingdom was Babel...Therefore is the name of it called Babel; because the Lord did there confound the language of all the earth: and from thence did the Lord scatter them abroad upon the face of the earth." So it might be said that the Lord created a new world order of nations to prevent the leaders of that time from creating their own man-made new world order. This should serve as a warning to those who, in our time, strive to "make us a name" and create a One World Government.

Referring to The Seven Noahide Laws, the editor of Smyrna, a Christian newsletter, comments: "A superficial reading of these 'Laws' may elicit a favorable response from those who have not done their homework. But the crux of the matter is how they are interpreted. For example, if orthodox Jews interpret them every Christian would be guilty of violating number one ("Thou shalt not engage in idol worship") because no cross, crucifix, image, photograph, or any thing that could be construed as an icon would be allowed. Christians would be guilty of violating number two ("Thou shalt not blaspheme God"); because they believe that Jesus Christ was God in the flesh, and that's blasphemy to the Jews. Technically, every Christian on the face of the earth could be executed under these laws....Whoever is behind the 'Seven Noahide Laws' is not losing any time in nailing down their dastardly plans. On the day (March 20th) that President Bush signed the resolution into law, the Wall Street Journal carried a front page story about the Noahides...And now that we are saddled with this law the Noahides are exploring the feasibility of taking it world wide through the United Nations. It seems to me this fits right in with Bush's New World Order." (Quoted from the July/August 1991 issue of Smyrna, P.O.Box 541, Fortuna, CA 95440).

Public Law 102-14 says "the Lubachev movement has fostered and promoted these ethical values and principles throughout the world" and that one Rabbi Menachem Mendel Schneersohn is leader of the Lubachev movement. His eighty-ninth birthday fell on March 26, 1991; and contrary to the popular but false interpretation regarding the "separation of church and state," a Rabbi and an occult Judaic movement is being honored through the establishment of Education Day, U.S.A." At the same time the Mosaic Law which Christians honor, is prohibited from even being displayed in public (government) schools. One of our subscriber/correspondents headed a research paper on the subject entitling it "A Government Gone Mad".

In that research paper this was quoted from the Judaica Encyclopedia: "Rabbi Dov Baer (1773-1827) settled in the Russian town of Lubavich, hence the name by which the group is now known." A fourth generation descendant, Rabbi Joseph Schneersohn (1880-1950) emigrated to the U.S., established his 'court' in Brooklyn. The present Lubavicher Rebbe [is] Rabbi Menahem Mendel Schneersohn (1902--)...At the Lubavich headquarters at 700 Parkway in Brooklyn regular gatherings are held...at which the Rebbe speaks in Yiddish for hours on end...These talks are later circulated in pamphlet form, translated into Hebrew, English and other languages.

The Lubavitchers love to proselytize; to convert those professing to be Christians to become Judaists. Or, if the Universal Jewish Encyclopedia (1943) and Rabbi Louis Finkelstein who has headed the Jewish Theological Seminary of America are correct, the conversion is to Pharisaism. "Pharisaism became Talmudism," said the rabbi. "...the spirit of the ancient Pharisee survives unaltered. When the Jew...studies the Talmud, he is actually repeating arguments used in the Palestinian academies. From Palestine to Babylonia; from Babylonia to North Africa, Italy, Spain, France and Germany; from these to Poland, Russia and eastern Europe generally, ancient Pharisaism has wandered." This is the missing link in Fundamentalist Christian understanding. For Jesus said of the Pharisees: "Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye compass sea and land to make one proselyte, and when he is made, ye make him twofold more the child of hell than yourselves." (Mt. 23:15). Example: The following appeared in The Wall Street Journal (3/20/91). "Tennessee Baptists Turn to Judaism for New Inspiration." "Athens, TN - One sunny day in 1989, the Rev. J. David Davis and about 15 of his flock took down the steeple of the Emmanuel Baptist Church...scraped the words 'Baptist' and 'Church' off the sign out front...quit celebrating Christmas and scrapped the Wednesday evening prayer service. In its stead, they had an Orthodox rabbi in to instruct them in Jewish thought. And so, right smack in the middle of the Bible belt, a group of Christian fundamentalists eager to explore the roots of their faith turned for spiritual guidance to Judaism." In The Gap, a newsletter published by ex-Baptist, Noahider Davis, Dr. Ernest Easterly III, adjunct professor at LSU, wrote: "The first rays of dawn evidence the rising of a still unseen sun. So, too, the 'Seven Noahide Laws' provisions of Public Law 102-14...establishing March 26, 1991 as 'Education Day, U.S.A.' suggests a greater significance emerging in the realms of international law and comparative jurisprudence. The 'Seven Noahide Laws' now may receive a recognition as a source of international law, heretofore unexpected by secular legal authorities." (Underlining added).

It seems obvious that Public Law 102-14 is the most flagrant violation of the First Amendment ever passed by Congress. A corresponding Pastor sent in the suggestion that every Christian should sit down, write and mail three letters as follows:

"Dear Representative (or Senator) _____: I have learned that H.J. Res. 102-14 was signed into law by President Bush on March 20, 1991. This law recognizes and promotes the Lubavitch movement and the Seven Noahide Laws, both of which are unquestionably part of the religion of Judaism. Since the First Amendment absolutely forbids Congress to enact such a law, I respectfully insist that you introduce and/or support a bill to repeal this law, or to enact a law that declares this a non-law from its inception because it is automatically in violation of the Bill of Rights. I will do everything I can to support you in such an endeavor, or I will do everything I can to defeat you at the next election if you fail to act on this. Please reply at your earliest convenience. Sincerely. (Your name and address).

As we look back on 38 years of publishing Don Bell Reports and begin the 39th, we are reminded of the plea of Patrick Henry: "Tell me the worst so I can prepare for it." But there is also good news. Having just celebrated the birth of the Christ Child, regardless of worldly circumstances, let us know that "The government shall be on his shoulder: and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The Mighty God, The Everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace." And "Neither is there salvation in any other; for there is no other name under heaven by which we must be saved." (Emphasis added).

THE JOB QUEST

Three months ago America's peregrinating president announced to the world that he was preparing to make a trip to Asia to visit some of the heads of state in the Pacific area. But his advisers and managers told him he must postpone the trip, stay in Washington, and take care of the serious domestic problems that had been piling up for months. The red light proved to be the defeat of Dick Thornburgh who was running for the senator's seat from Pennsylvania. He had the full backing of Bush & Co., and his rejection by the voters was a distinct shock to the White House crowd. And it was hinted that George Bush might suffer the same fate next November if he didn't start doing his job as Chief Executive of the Federal Government of the United States. After several denials, the "King of the World" finally admitted that there was a recession. But he still wouldn't admit that the recession "was sliding toward the edge of an economic disaster that could rival - or surpass - the Great Depression of the 1930s." A conservative group, American Coalition for Competitive Trade, inc., observed that "It is slowly dawning on the dunderheads in the White House and on Capital Hill that the United States is swiftly slidingtoward economic disaster....Thousands of jobs are disappearing every day. IBM announced a 'reorganization' that will eliminate 20,000 jobs in 1992. This on top of another 20,000 jobs axed by IBM this year. Defense cutbacks have already caused the loss of an estimated 70,000 jobs in one state - California....With millions of Americans out of work, and millions more facing an uncertain future, our spendthrift Congress voted another $500 million in aid to the Soviet Union before it adjourned near the end of November....Uncle Sam seems to have big bags of gifts for everyone except his own nieces and nephews....Nearly a hundred countries are the recipients of Uncle's largesse. But the time is fast approaching when the American voters will at last decide they have had enough of foreign aid."

With such sentiment being bruited about, it became obvious to President Bush and his stable of advisers, that a better than holiday visit to Asia had to be devised if Bush insisted on traveling outside the country once again. Stressing the loss of jobs by Americans could provide the excuse. So, our "King of the World" found a way to make his delayed trip acceptable to the people who gave him his job and might let him keep his job come next election time. He would tell everyone that he was going to the Pacific to find jobs for Americans. As he left for Asia (12/30/91) USA Today headlined its cover story: "Trip's Purpose: 'Jobs.'" Bush was then quoted: "We're going to be talking about breaking open markets that shut out American products, American business, and in the process deny us the opportunity to create more good American jobs." The national newspaper echoed the words in its cover story: "Jobs, Jobs, Jobs." The national newsmagazine U.S.News (1/13/92) was more explicit as it repeated the "jobs" slogan. The commentary began: "How does a president under fire for his globetrotting ways and alleged indifference to homespun problems pull off an overseas junket in a suddenly worrisome election year? Answer: call it a domestic initiative. As President Bush has put it, this week's summit in Tokyo--the focal point of a four-nation, two-week Pacific tour--is about three things: 'jobs and jobs and jobs'." And says Robert Moshbacher, the president's re-election chairman, 'By going to Japan, we can create more jobs than by sitting here in the Oval Office'." Our local daily, a Cox paper, wrote (12/30/91): "President Bush takes off today for a trip that will be an important test of whether he can use his diplomatic skills abroad to boost the economy back home. The president postponed the four-nation, 12-day journey last fall after critics pounded him for paying too much attention to foreign affairs and travels. And as he now heads for Australia, Singapore, South Korea and Japan, his delayed mission has undergone a transformation. No longer is it a goodwill tour chiefly to reassure Asian allies that the United States has not forgotten them in the post-Cold War era. Facing plunging opinion poll ratings as he enters a presidential election year, Bush has turned the focus on prying open Asian markets, primarily in Japan, for US products."

The conservative Washington Times confirmed, adding that the president pledged "relentlessly to pursue jobs for Americans in meeting with Japanese officials." (Underlining added). To accent the job quest the President took along with him 21 US business leaders. Let's grant that this junket may help those 21 men and their businesses. But taking them along with him as the president visited the Toys R Us plant in Nara, Japan and the Kodak plant in Tokyo was an excellent way of demonstrating how American multi-nationals were providing jobs for Japanese workers, but it's strange way to accent the need for American jobs in America. Yet Bush keeps insisting that "jobs are the top priority" and "One way to get this economy going again is to open up markets abroad for American goods and services. More exports mean more jobs." But, writes Mark Memmott of USA Today, "There is no way the president will come home with trade concessions that create jobs in 1992 and give the economy a quick boost....Another reason Bush's trip probably won't be much help for the economy right now is that it does little to shore up shattered consumer confidence. This is a consumer-led recession." So, let's face the facts. George Bush doesn't have the slightest idea how to solve a domestic problem without hurting his Establishmentarian bosses, so he invents a "job quest" as an excuse for running away from his official job while promoting his still envisioned New World Order. We've written this before: "Having been trained by his elitist masters in the art and science of foreign policy, he seemingly thought that winning wars in Panama and Iraq,...trying to bring peace between Israel and the Palestinians, and other foreign escapades would be sufficient to insure his re-election." As matter of fact, talking to reporters while in Australia, Bush said he can win the presidency even if the US economy fails to rebound. He told David Frost in a TV interview, "I think I'm going to be re-elected." "With or without a recovery?" Frost asked. "Sure," Bush replied, but admitted that the campaign will be a "dog-eat-dog fight."

It was a farmer-eat-farmer fight when Bush & Co. arrived in Australia. Bush, possibly fearing the political strength of Pat Buchanan, has been preaching free trade and condemning protectionism. But he received a dose of his own medicine from Australian farmers and government leaders. There's that Export Enhancement Program which aids the American Agribusiness exporters. Subsidies are granted those who sell wheat, barley, sugar, beef etc. to other countries, especially to those "republics" that once made up the Soviet Union. This federal (taxpayer) subsidy makes it possible to undersell Australian farmers to the tune of an estimated billion dollars a year. So, when Bush arrived he was met by hundreds of farmers who protested the kind of protectionism that was impoverishing them. The new Prime Minister, Paul Keating, greeted Bush and handed him a one page note outlining Australian grievances. Bush read the note, put it in his pocket without comment, and talked of other things. Reporters say that Bush had previously embarrassed himself by using the wrong "street gesture" when facing the opposing Aussie farmers. He used the two-finger "V for Victory" gesture that Winston Churchill had made famous during WWII. But that gesture in Australia is interpreted as an obscene gesture similar to the one-finger salute often used as an insult in America. Bush was also said to be perturbed because of the news his appointed pollster had been giving him. Bush commented on his loss of popularity at the polls and then he said in front of the reporters what may have been intended as a prayer. He said, "Keep it strong, Lord; because we're going into a hell of a year over here. It's politics from tomorrow on. And it isn't very pleasant." (Reported from Canberra by Jessica Lee of USA Today.) In her report, Lee also found a way to quote the "slogan." She wrote: "Last week, in the face of criticism he should be staying home more to deal with domestic affairs, Bush recast the trip as a mission about 'jobs, jobs, jobs'." And so, with nothing of importance accomplished, Bush may have been happy to head for Singapore where he could talk of other things.

The visit to Singapore may be important. Since the Filipinos are taking back Subic Bay, there's a Seventh Fleet that's looking for a new base and port in the Asian Pacific area. Singapore is a suggested spot. Said the Washington Post which seems to be accurate in this particular report: "Administration officials said they hope the accord to move the US Navy logistical command task force for the Seventh Fleet to this island city-state from Subic Bay Naval Base in the Philippines will be a model for maintaining American influence in the Pacific without spending more than it's worth....Talks are under way for similar expansion of base-access agreements in Malaysia and Thailand, to offset the loss of Subic Bay, officials told reporters aboard Air Force One en route from Australia [to Singapore]." At this time of writing (our deadline is Wednesday) we have received no accurate news of what actually transpired in talks with officials in Singapore. And so, to the next stop: Korea.

There are 39,000 American troops in South Korea. They or their predecessors have been there for nearly four decades, ever since the end of the Korean Conflict which remains a war that has never ended officially. Communist North Korea has promised to sign a non-proliferation nuclear arms treaty; promised but hasn't yet signed it. So, to encourage the North Korean Communist leader, Bush and South Korean President Roh Taewoo decided to call off the annual military exercise known as "Team Spirit". There was hope this also might lead to a reunification of North and South Korea, similar to the reunification of East and West Germany. There's automobile trouble between South Korea and the United States, causing losses to the American Big Three (GM, Ford and Chrysler). We've no word of how Lee Iacocco of Chrysler, who is one of the 21 selected businessmen accompanying Bush, may have acted or reacted regarding auto sales. At the end of talks, Bush promised that American troops would remain in South Korea "as long as they seem needed." Then on to the most important country of them all: Japan.

As this report is being written, Bush is still in Japan, trying to make his 12-day junket look like a victory for Americans seeking jobs. As he left Washington he indicated that he would enter Tokyo like a roaring lion demanding concessions. But as he left Seoul bound for Tokyo he began to sound more like a mouse looking for cheese. He talked to reporters in track field phraseology, said: "Politicians are already kind of raising the bar on the high jump. I can guarantee you, political opponents....will be saying 'Hey, you didn't jump quite high enough. You need to get over the bar. We've just raised it another foot.' But that's politics. That's what's to be expected. I have no set list that must be achieved to declare this [Japan] visit a success." There may be success for some of those selected businessmen; but this trip won't create jobs for out-of-work Americans. Ann Lewis had the answer. She's a high ranking Democrat, and we don't like to quote her as such. But what she said might have been said by Pat Buchanan or David Duke. She commented: "George Bush's trip to Japan is a transoceanic photo opportunity pretending to be an economic policy. His claim that he was going in search of 'jobs, jobs, jobs' was contradicted by his decision to take along 21 of America's corporate elite....If the president were seriously concerned with our national economic distress, he would find more answers in Washington than in Tokyo. Start with our current budget: $6 billion for US forces in Japan and $14.7 billion to defend the Pacific sea lanes, essential for Japanese trade. Those troops are a legacy of World War II. What is their mission today? Protected by a US security umbrella, the Japanese have built a prosperous economy, exporting highly profitable products around the world while tightly controlling their own market. The USA is their biggest customer, which means we pay both for Japan's security and its mercantile expansion. 1991 cost to US taxpayers: a $41 billion trade deficit with Japan; a $291 billion defense budget and a $326 billion federal budget deficit. It's not Japan-bashing to point out that this arrangement doesn't make sense and to suggest that a change is in order. But President Bush's trip is not about change but more of the same; more rhetoric about opening up Japanese markets to US goods, in a photogenic setting. Goodwill speeches won't close the trade deficit or restore our manufacturing base [or give more jobs to out-of-work Americans-Ed.)"

The Japanese answer to all of this can be found on page 59 of the Winter 1991/92 edition of the Council on Foreign Relations' quarterly, Foreign Affairs. Yoichi Funabashi, diplomatic correspondent and columnist for the Tokyo daily Asahi Shimbun, wrote: "In the postwar era Japan's image of itself as a small, strategically naked and economically fragile island nation gradually changed as it became a respected member of the world community. Japan's inclusion in 1975 as a founding member of the Group of Seven (G-7) leading industrialized nations helped transform the Japanese public's perception of its own country. A decade later Japan's self-image as an economic power was supplanted by the image of Japan as an economic superpower, as Japan suddenly found itself the world's largest creditor nation. And now with the end of the Cold War and the advent of a more polycentric world, the perception of Japan as a global power should become even more widespread."

This report ends with Bush still in Tokyo; the head of the world's largest debtor nation seeking concessions from the world's largest creditor nation. A total turnabout in less than 50 years. Expect few gifts or concessions of importance, and no new jobs for Americans. Possibly no future job for the one seeking favors. Even so, there is the promise:

"If my people, which are called by my name, shall humble themselves, and pray, and seek my face,..." (II Chronicles, 7:14).

PRESIDENTIAL PRAGMATISM

Maybe he was fearing the future loss of his two jobs: President of the United States through election and President of the World through assumption. And he seemed to be feeling the chill as he stood before his normally faithful followers at the closed-down Pease Air Force Base in New Hampshire, to begin his re-election campaign. He wasn't holding his audience well until after he had lost his patience and shouted: "I'm sick and tired of every single night hearing one of these carping little liberal Democrats jumping all over my you-know-what. Then the people roared and began to listen as he became contrite and confessional. He said, "I was wrong about the recession....I don't want to assign blame. I'll take my share of it....I know I've got big problems, but we're going to take care of those....I don't know what to do to convince people that I care about this....I need your help." He didn't offer any solutions but told his listeners to "stay tuned" for his State of the Union address on the 28th, when he would outline his recovery program. But even the faithful wondered if he was the man who could do the job that had to be done. Robert Maynard, editor of the Oakland Tribune, opined that "Just a year ago, George Bush was riding a wave of adulation 89 points high in the popularity polls. Desert Storm displayed the president's talents in the very best light. The question for the Republicans then was whether to run him or just crown him. [But now] the fickle finger of fate has turned cold for George Bush. If his closest friends were to tell him the truth, they would prepare him for a large disappointment on Nov. 3. The first disappointment is likely to occur in New Hampshire on Feb. 18. As things now stand, the president would gain 46 percent of the New Hampshire Republican votes to 30 percent for Pat Buchanan. If those numbers change, they will almost certainly grow worse for Mr. Bush." Columnist A.M. Rosenthal also remarked that a year ago "No leader stood higher in the esteem of the world and his countrymen than George Bush. Then, at the moment of victory, began the slide - that sad series of errors, misjudgments, switches, and distancing from friendship and principle around the world." The columnist enumerated some of the highlights of the fall from glory: He permitted Saddam to remain in power. He permitted Saddam to use the air and ground forces left him to "drive hundreds of thousands of Kurds and other Iraqis who had trusted America into the cold and death of mountain refuge." Bush hedged on the US pledge of support to Baltic independence. In Kiev he delivered a lecture on the danger of independence, when that was all Ukraine and the other republics lusted for. He made the US the main supporter of the Syrian dictator "discernible from the Iraq variety only by the difference in mustaches." Bush clings to his peculiar taste for Chinese Communist leaders...and leads a sales pitch to Japan, "surely one of the most embarrassing expeditions in the history of either country."

Then there was that obsessive desire to protect and save his New World Order partner, Michael Gorbachev. Before Desert Storm they seemed to be kindred spirits. Thomas Sowell calls them "kindred spirits of political pragmatism". Sowell is a senior fellow at the Hoover Institution and in an article appearing in the commentary section of The Washington Times (1/5/92) he observed that "The resemblances between the two men are remarkable. Both are very experienced and very savvy pragmatic politicians. Neither could be considered stupid by any stretch of the imagination. Flexibility and working things out with their political opponents have been their hallmarks. A shrewd sense of the moment has been evident in the actions of both men. With all that, Mikhail Gorbachev now finds himself on the outside looking in (and George Bush could suffer the same fate-Ed.) "What went wrong with one president and could go wrong with the other? Sowell puts the blame on that "political pragmatism" which besets them both.

"Political Pragmatism" is defined in the new college edition of The American Heritage Dictionary as "A method or tendency in the conduct of political affairs characterized by the rejection of theory and precedent, and by the use of practical means and expedients." The political pragmatist wouldn't ask "Is this the right or traditional or even legal thing to do?" Instead, he might ask, "Is this the expedient and useful thing to do?" In the case of Bush and Gorbachev, both political pragmatists, the question may have been, "Is this program (Desert Storm?) to be tested by standards of truth and tradition, or by the interests of the community, or nation, or world, as envisaged by the elite?" Henry van Riesen in his remarkable The Society of the Future (translated from the Dutch), explains that "The crucial point is whether the propaganda [or program] is to be regarded as truth or simply as useful in a pragmatic sense." As an example, FDR said, in effect, "Damn the Constitution and rig the Supreme Court, but see to it that the National Recovery Act is enacted." More recently, Gorbachev's perestroika and the Bush-Gorbachev vision of The New World Order would be classified as Political Pragmatism. And Sowell (op. cit.) says that Gorbachev failed and Bush may fail as a result of their pragmatic actions. Because "Pragmatism, like everything else, has its limits." He explains: "When people no longer know what you believe in, they no longer believe in you. Uncertainty is even more deadly in its effects on the economy than on its political effects. But President Bush and Mr. Gorbachev have created intolerable levels of uncertainty, with their willingness to play everything by ear [or lips or hip?-Ed.] Bad as government-planned economy is, an economy where private individuals are afraid to plan (because they are afraid of unpredictable changes in government policies) is not a lot better....Mr. Bush, like Mr. Gorbachev, has frittered away a once-impressive popular support. Whether Mr. Bush follows Mr. Gorbachev into oblivion in 1992 will depend not only on his own actions, but also on whom the Democrats nominate to run against him. If it is in the tradition of McGovern and Dukakis candidacies, there may yet be a second Bush administration. But it is a sad situation when a president's job depends on his political opponents making stupid mistakes."

Thomas Sowell, in the above well rounded thesis is, we think, wrong in one respect. He looks upon the next presidential election as a contest between a Republican candidate and a Democratic opponent. But with the National Republican headquarters trying to bar both Buchanan and Duke from running as Republicans, and their determination to re-elect Bush regardless of voters' opinions or desires; plus the fact that the National Democratic Party can't find a candidate that could give Bush a good race, nullifies the former power and prestige of the two major political parties. The upcoming Populist Party could give either a good race if its leaders had selected a better name for its party. The name doesn't fit the present platform. Exactly a hundred years ago there did exist an important third party called the Populist Party. It was powerful enough to entice William Jennings Bryan because of their mutual effort to have silver replace gold as the nation's currency base. The Populist Party also campaigned for the national ownership of railroads, telegraphs (no radio or television then) and steamships, a graduated income tax, and direct election of US senators. We're sure the present Populist Party endorses none of these, so the name doesn't fit well with the excellent platform of the new Populist Party. It's like the use of the word 'democracy' in that respect. Back in the days of Washington and Henry, Madison and the Adams, democracy was generally defined as mobocracy and denounced as the worst possible form of government. We still agree. But now 'democracy' is accepted and hailed as the best possible form of government and is being promoted all over the world. Likewise but in a diametrically opposite manner, Populism has a new and accepted definition. One might call it another victim of the power of political pragmatic propaganda; which tends to forget the past, disregard the future, and concentrate solely on the present. So, the political pundits have decided that Populism means anti-establishmentarianism, which promotes one world government, the new world order, radical environmentalism and so on. The opposition was once called conservatism, but that word no longer seems to mean anything. So, we dislike the name but we agree with what it stands for politically. And that seems to be the final test for the year 1992, since the two major political parties have sunk about as low as George Bush in the popularity polls. "To peer into the coming year of turmoil, it serves to lay aside the concept of two-party combat that normally guides our political thinking" suggests Robert W. Merry, executive editor of the Congressional Quarterly. He believes we should forget about whether a politician calls himself a Republican or a Democrat and "think instead of the two fundamental political forces - the establishment party and the anti-establishment populism." His analysis seems to make sense. We quote:

"The establishment party includes most members of the government elite, Democrat and Republican alike. President Bush is in it; so is Michael Dukakis. House Speaker Thomas Foley, Washington Democrat, practically personifies the establishment party, but then so does Republican House leader Robert Michel of Illinois....The establishment party will be vulnerable in 1992, as anti-establishment populism emerges as the year's political counterweight. It will come from both the left and the right. The process has already begun, spurred by the November elections just past. From the right came Mississippi Republican Kirk Fordice, who billed himself as the 'anti-politician' gubernatorial candidate and unseated a Democrat incumbent. From the left came Democrat Sen. Harris Wofford of Pennsylvania who came from obscurity to get his seat by appointment and then retained it with anti-establishment blitz featuring focused political distinctions. Other manifestations of the political war between the establishment and the anti-establishment populism included David Duke's showing in Louisiana's gubernatorial race....and the strong sentiment of a radical term-limit proposal in Washington state....Already Mr. Bush is buffeted by populism of the right, from Mr. Duke and commentator Patrick J. Buchanan. The Democratic presidential nominees will struggle to hone rhetoric that separates them from the establishment party and nurtures their populist standing." (Unquote).

What Mr. Merry seems to imply without actually saying it is that we shall witness the usual race between an establishment-selected Republican and an establishment-chosen Democrat; and it won't mean a thing. Because, as has been said before, there's not a dime's worth of difference between the two parties. However, Trilateral Commissioners spent long hours training George Bush in the art and science of foreign policy (but neglected lessons in domestic policy) and it seems the establishment Inner Circle is determined that George Bush shall be re-elected. (Within the Establishment we think of the hierarchy within the Trilateral Commission as being the governing "Inner Circle." Then there is the "Circle of Initiates" (CFR, Bilderbergers, etc. who make plans and outline programs. And there is an Outer Circle, the "Association of Helpers," such as the National Council of Churches, Foreign Policy Associations and such, and the managed media.)

The campaign has already begun. First, Bush insists on having Dan Quayle as his running mate. Therefore, the media-tarnished and scoffed-at Vice President must be cleansed and accorded the stature which he deserves. To make Quayle suddenly popular would give Bush a push upward in the popularity polls. So the acclaimed "investigative reporter" who ruined Nixon via Watergate, Bob Woodward; and the "political reporter" David Broder were commissioned to go to their computers and weave a cloak and produce a halo for Dan Quayle. Human Events (1/10/92) reported: "Supporters of Vice President Dan Quayle could hardly believe their eyes last week as the Washington Post...began publication of a seven-part series of articles on Quayle that could not have been written much more favorably if it had been written by his own staff." Meanwhile, the establishment-owned-or-operated controlled media did their best to minimize the failures of Bush. After his visit to New Hampshire "The Nation's Newspaper" had on its front page (1/17-19/92) the four-column headline: "Poll: Voter Unease Overrated." Richard Beneditto of USA TODAY wrote: "The anger many predicted would drive voters to oust incumbents this year may not be as great as thought, a USA TODAY/CNN/Gallup poll finds....Nearly half (49%) say President Bush deserves to be re-elected..." Allegedly conservative columnist James Kirkpatrick advised all to quit sinking their vulturelike talons in President Bush. "Fly off, you carrion birds! George Bush is the only president we have, and he's doing the best in a difficult period at home and abroad."

If all else fails, there's the sure way: Have another war. Look what Desert Storm did for Bush. In preparation, if it seems necessary, there's Cuba, and/or completing the cleanup of Hussein's Iraq. Media snoopers suddenly discovered that JFK's pledge never to attack Cuba was never signed. And Castro has helped by permitting the execution of a Miami Cuban. To make any such attack feasible, George Wills reports on how a Toronto University professor wrote a book in which he "reminds readers how close Bush came to unilaterally amending the Constitution by stripping from Congress all right to involvement in the making of war. Bush only grudgingly sought constitutional approval for launching one of the largest military operations in US history, an attack on a nation with which we were not at war." Bush might do it again, and without congressional approval, if it meant winning an election. However, we doubt any such need. The establishmentarians will select a Democrat who will just barely lose. And the three eligibles; David Duke, Pat Buchanan and Bo Gritz, won't be given a chance. Unless the voters really rebel. But they never have, not even in 1776.

"Shouldest thou help the ungodly, and love them that hate the Lord? therefore is wrath upon thee before the Lord." (II Chronicles, 19:2).

EARTH SUMMIT

As this extended but officially denied recession became a depression, many people began to wonder and ask, "Was this crisis planned this way from the very beginning?" They knew that for months Bush and his appointed financial and economic bureaucrats, along with Alan Greenspan and his megabanker associates, had insisted that all was well and this was just a temporary disorder, and normalcy was just around the corner. But a little before Thanksgiving Day, Bush was forced to admit that some of the people were having a little trouble getting along, and he assured us all that he cared. But he asked everyone to wait until he gave his State of the Union address, at which time he would unveil his Plan, which would resolve all the problems if Congress would do his bidding. Meanwhile, the Big Three auto makers admitted to losing $7 billion, had been forced to lay off thousands of employees and close down many plants. Major airlines had grounded their planes and their crews, permanently. Businesses and banks were closing their doors at an alarming rate. Thousands of unemployed became tens of thousands, then hundreds of thousands, and finally millions. On the very day Bush was to reveal his Plan, Macy's went broke and asked for help. So, there were millions who waited anxiously for Bush to reveal his Plan which was supposed to halt America's slide downward toward economic destruction. As the Congressmen and the Appointed Bureaucrats assembled in the House to listen to the Nation's General Manager, they did the right thing; they roared their approval, 17 times. Bush spent 22 minutes talking of how the Cold War had been won, how Kuwait had been freed from Hussein and returned to its proper dictators; and he promised to stop this recession, because it was "the right thing to do." And the assembled elected Congressmen and appointed Bureaucrats stood and applauded. It was the right thing to do. The president enumerated many of the Nation's problems, gave few answers, but he commanded Congress to do what it must do by March 20 at the latest, just as he had commanded Hussein to do what he should do before January 15, 1991, or else the war would begin. And again the Congressmen, with little thought of carrying out Bush's program, stood and applauded.

Next morning, one headline said: "Bush promised a mountain, delivered a molehill." The usual polls seemed to agree. A majority of those asked agreed that Bush's Plan wouldn't do what it was supposed to do. And there were those who asked once again, "Was this crisis planned this way from the very beginning?" Others wondered if it was just a gimmick used to mollify the masses and prepare them to accept the New World Order, which was the Master Plan?" We were reminded of a statement made by Texe Marrs in his book Millenium: "The Lords of Money have decided their dream of ruling the world can be achieved through a cataclysmic financial crisis. ...The answer is crystal clear: give America, and indeed the entire world the worst depression ever in history. Destroy the savings and loans, the banks, and cause a stock market bust that will make 1929's Wall Street crash look like a picnic. America is to be slaughtered financially, and the Lords of Money will then rise like a phoenix from the ashes, debris, and carnage left behind on this continent. Their plan is to make sure that the wealth of America falls into their hands to use for the glory of the new world they are to create. In addition, a depression and economic chaos will result in the country totally surrendering to the world megabankers, thus creating the economic and financial opportunities inherent in a One World Order whose leadership will be doled out to the few at the top of the conspiratorial chain." (From Millenium, copyright 1990 by Texe Marrs. Living Trust publishers, 8103 Shiloh Court, Austin TX 78745). The author admitted that this might look like too fantastic a secret. But he followed with names and quotes to prove his statement. Equally fantastic seemed a statement made by Benjamin Creme, an esoteric "prophet" of the New Age movement. When the Soviet Union was at the peak of its power and the Cold War was at its height, Creme said the Soviet Union and the United States both must be liquidated before the New Age could really begin. Well, the Soviet Union has been destroyed, and the United States seems to be on its way toward destruction.

Mr. Bush may say "I care" about America's domestic problems, but his actions seem to indicate that his real interest has to do, not with America but with the world. He had a Plan drawn up to be presented to Congress and the world, and he called upon an opposing Congress to do the rest. Any administrative questions could be handled by the Bureaucrats who major in finance and economics. So, delivering his Constitution mandated State of the Union address on Jan. 28, he sent his proposals to the Legislative branches and prepared to fly to New York City where a very important UN Security Council meeting was scheduled for Jan. 31. This was not another routine meeting of the Council. All previous meetings had been held by diplomats representing the five States with veto privileges and ten others with rotative memberships. But attending this very special meeting were the heads of state of Russia (formerly the USSR), China, France, Britain, the US and the ten current members. They were to acknowledge the new role of the UN and prepare it to become a World Government. They all made their speeches, then signed what should be called a Declaration of Interdependence and which stated that "The absence of war and military conflicts amongst states does not in itself insure international peace and security. The non-military sources of instability in the economic, social, humanitarian and ecological fields have become threats to peace and security. The members of the Council pledge their commitment to international law and...invite the Secretary General to prepare, for circulation to the members...by July 1, 1992, his analysis and recommendations on ways of strengthening and making more efficient within the framework of the Charter the capacity of the United Nations for preventative diplomacy for peacekeeping and peacemaking..."

Not mentioned directly is the most important problem these One Worlders face: How the world and its peoples are to survive if war is to be done away with entirely and permanent peace maintained. The question is not new. Insiders have been seeking an answer to that question for decades. About 30 years ago a special study group was formed to study "the possibility and desirability of peace." After nearly three years of study this group prepared what is called the "Report from Iron Mountain." Its conclusion: "War has provided both ancient and modern societies with a dependable system for stabilizing and controlling national economies. No alternate method of control has yet been tested in a complex modern economy that has shown itself remotely comparable in scope or effectiveness. The permanent possibility of war is the foundation for stable government....The war system has provided the machinery through which the motivational forces governing human behavior have been translated into binding social allegiance. No other institution...has successfully served these functions. War has been the principal evolutionary device for maintaining

"PIECE BY PIECE"

Such a hodge-podge of headlines dealing with really important world and national events is unusual. Recent press headlines seem to sketch the pattern of a patchwork quilt that is being stitched to cover the whole earth, smothering all the remaining independent Nations of the Globe. One headline tells us that "Iraq refused to destroy missile plants" as ordered by the UN, and the UN threatens dire penalties if Iraq continued to defy the World Authority. Another nearby column is headlined "Bush not a big winner." The two headlines taken together could suggest that if Bush is going to defeat both Pat Buchanan and an as-yet-undisclosed Democrat, then he may be forced to light another fire to inflame voter support when he ordered US troops under UN control to finish the job he refused to allow the troops to do by ordering a premature cease-fire in Iraq. Of course, this could backfire because Buchanan didn't approve of the first phase of Desert Storm, said so and will say a lot more if another war on foreign soil is declared by the President and not by Congress. Other headlines indicate that the UN is very busy in other parts of the globe. "UN body okays ambitious force for Cambodia," says one headline while another adds that "Blue Helmets face most perilous peacekeeping challenge in Croatia." Beneath these headlines we are reminded that nearly 16,000 Blue Helmet troops and 3,600 UN civilian peace monitors will take over internally in Cambodia, that 13,000 Blue Helmets will invade the area once called Yugoslavia "to disarm whole communities that are convinced that true power travels through the barrel of a gun." Reading deeper down the page we are told that "more than 500,000 soldiers of various nationalities have served under the UN flag over the last four-plus decades." Of course, that doesn't include the US troops that fought and suffered and sometimes died while serving under the UN in Korea in a war that was never won. All of this headlined news prompts the call for a permanent UN "Peace Force" ready to invade and take control of any country that fails in the future to obey World Law (UN commands). Connected to all of this peacekeeping talk is the headline, "Canada's budget brings home NATO troops." The reason is indicated by another headline: "Lloyds of London probed as losses anger investors." Then, as the war to keep the world from warming replaces the Cold War and "The meshing of the world's economy and the earth's ecology" is promoted to maintain a world economy that was once sustained by wars and rumors of wars, the headlines take on an ominous tone, even if untrue. "Top scientists warn of earth catastrophe"; "Ozone layer depletion speeds death from HIV, UN reports"; "Will ozone devour the earth?" asks another headline.

These patchwork quilt headlines suggest two things to this reporter. First, George Bush is staying so busy trying to remain President of the United States so he can become actual President of the World, that he is beginning to neglect, not only domestic affairs but foreign affairs as well. "President looks south and sees support eroding," says one headline. Another tells us "Bush's tax plan finds little support." Yet another seeks "Leadership for a New Environmental Order," because "As the world awakes to the threat of global warming and other looming risks, the United States fails to take charge;" meaning, of course, that Bush fails to take charge because he's presently busy elsewhere. And the important (to the UN) Earth Charter that is supposed to be approved in the June Earth Summit in Rio, seems to be having some trouble promoting its "Politics of Junk Science." "Ozone report is full of holes," says a headline. The call for a ban on ozone-threatening chemicals was rebuked as "toxic terrorism" by some scientists in the debate on depletion of the Earth's protective layer. Newsweek (2/3/92) under the heading Environment reported that "Pollution may negate the greenhouse effect. Even scientists get tired of playing Cassandra. Having declared marbled steak, sunshine, sex and other nice things dangerous, they have lately been doing an about-face: discovering that purported scourges may be useful after all. Air pollution, for instance. Pollutants that cause acid rain got nothing but bad press in the 1980s. Now, in the current issue of the journal Science, atmospheric researchers from seven universities and federal agencies report that these same particles may help ward off a much more serious environmental threat: global warming." Reminds us of how these political scientists predicted global freezing as a result of atomic explosions and then about-faced to predict global warming. A more honest set of scientists are predicting that global warming also is a phony utilized for purposes of promoting Environmentalism as a chief weapon in the war to attain total control of the globe and all it contains. For instance, that Clean Air Act is now being condemned for being used as a means to eliminate small industries while large industries pay the estimated bill of $40 billion by raising their prices to customers.

We said the patchwork quilt headlines suggested two things. The second: Radical Environmentalism itself is becoming suspect. The promoters of the Earth Summit are worried. World Press Review (3/92) reports that "Disagreements between industrialized and developing nations that have emerged during negotiation sessions, as well as a refusal by the United States to commit itself on a number of central issues, could cause UNCED (United Nations Conference on Environment and Development) to fall short of its lofty goals. The Earth Charter "which is expected to declare the responsibility of all nations to protect the Earth's ecosystem, call for efforts to eliminate global poverty, and proclaim the principles of sustainable development" is in jeopardy because the producing nations can't agree with the terms suggested by the developing nations. "Faced with proposing solutions to a formidable array of environmental problems, and torn by profound disagreements enough among the participating nations, the historic meeting in Rio in June could easily fail to achieve all of its goals," said the newsmagazine Maclean's of Toronto. And Bharat Bhushan of the New Delhi Indian Express remarked: "It seems strange that anyone should object to additional international funds being made available for environmental protection. Yet, the one-year-old World Bank sponsored Global Environment Facility is fast becoming a center of controversy....the organization may forestall the setting up of multi-lateral funds linked to specific environmental conventions administered within the United Nations system."

That comment concerning the UN governing environmental problems on a worldwide basis should be explained, because that is the very heart of the piecemeal functionalism approach now being used by the World Government advocates. "Create new global institutions, and processes, and arrangements, and mechanisms, etc." such as the Earth Charter which is to become a basis for world government in its sphere of activity. A simple explanation of how this works is important.

"Let any sequence of actions in which government is involved be examined," advised Isabel Paterson in a remarkable book first published in

While the revolution within the form occurred in the 1930s, preparatory steps had to be taken, steps which involved years. Came the promotion of the spirit of Manifest Destiny which led to our entry into the Spanish-American War. Then came Theodore Roosevelt's mediation of the Russo-Japanese War, his sending the US "White Fleet" on a world cruise to demonstrate America's naval power. Facing international problems, he warned the world that "Wrongdoing may force the US...to the exercise of an international police power." (Desert Storm was not original. Teddy used the US Marines to force Colombia to give "land for peace" and set up the independent Republic of Panama so a US Panama Canal could be completed. Then came the fateful year of 1913 when the 16th and 17th Amendments were added to the Constitution (the 16th unconstitutionally) and Woodrow Wilson signed into law a privately owned Central Bank (Federal Reserve System). Promising never to go to war, he broke his word (as have other presidents) and decided it was necessary to enter a World War in order "to make the world safe for democracy.") Interestingly, those early steps toward establishing a democracy ended with America's entry into a World War; FDR's establishment of a democracy ended with America's entry into a World War. And Lyndon Johnson's attempt to change the US Democracy into a Socialist Great Society also ended with America's entry into a foreign War (Viet Nam). In between was America's entry into the Korean War, an attempt to establish the UN as an organization strong enough "To maintain international peace and security" by waging war. However, as preparations were being made to merge all nations in a Global Democracy, LBJ's Great Society (Welfare State) continued to grow in America. Garet Garrett predicted the trend in 1952 when he wrote:

"The first article of our inherited tradition, implicit in American thought from the beginning until a few years ago was this: 'Government is the responsibility of a self-governing people.' That doctrine has been swept away: only the elders remember it. Now, in the name of democracy, it is accepted as a political fact that people are the responsibility of government.' The forms of republican government survive; the character of the state has changed. Formerly the people supported the government and set limits to it and minded their own lives. Now they pay for unlimited government, whether they want it or not, and the government minds their lives--looking to how they are fed and clothed and housed; how they provide for their old age; how the national income, which is the product of their own labor, shall be divided among them; how they shall buy and sell; how long and how hard and under what conditions they shall work; and how equity shall be maintained between the buyers of food who dwell in the cities and the producers of food who live on the soil. For the last named purpose it resorts to a system of subsidies, penalties, and compulsions and assumes with the medieval wisdom to fix the just price. This is the Welfare State. It rose suddenly within the form. It is legal because the Supreme Court says it is. The Supreme Court once said no and then changed its mind and said yes, because meanwhile the President who was the architect of the Welfare State had appointed to the Supreme Court bench men who believed in it. The founders who wrote the Constitution could no more have imagined a Welfare State rising by sanction of its words than they could have imagined a monarchy; and yet the Constitution did not have to be changed. It had only to be reinterpreted in one clause--the clause that reads: 'The Congress shall have the power to lay and collect taxes, imposts, and excises to pay its debts and to provide for the common defense and welfare of the United States.' 'We are under a Constitution,' said Chief Justice Hughes, 'but the Constitution is what the judges say it is'."

At a critical time in American history, Patrick Henry said, "I know of no way of judging the future but by the past. So, we have turned the pages of history back to a time 60 years ago when a political revolution within the form changed a Republic into a Democracy. We felt this might provide a basis for judging our Nation's immediate future, because of the many similarities existing between then and now. But the Global Government which we are to have "whether we like it or not" is only part of the danger we face. Those who think they rule the world have created a demographic danger which may be the worst of all.

Demography is "the statistical science dealing with the distribution, density, vital statistics, etc. of human population," according to Webster. The influx of Orientals and Hispanics into the US is a factor. Seems the situation is even worse in Europe. "There are 13 million Moslems. counting illegals, in the five Benelux countries of EUROPE (France, Germany, Belgium, Holland and Luxemburg). They practice polygamy, with four or five wives to a male and a birthrate of 5 to 7 per wife," writes Hilaire du Berrier, the most reliable American correspondent reporting from Europe. He also reports: "What the West once exported is being made less expensively and sometimes better in Japan, Korea, Hong Kong and Singapore." Again: "For years EUROPE, UN, and every civilized nation of the West has called for majority rule in South Africa. Majority rule means black rule and is now staring us in the face." He quotes the words of a prominent and respected editor, Raymond Bourguine, who lay in his death bed last November 29th and wrote: "Every event of the day advises that we regard the future with humility. The only predictions that are valid are those of demography. The decline of the white world, the expansion of Asia, the explosion of Islam."

While communism was supposedly collapsing, the threat of religious fanaticism was rising to take its place. Saddam defied, was defeated, but lives, a hero to millions. The Iranians believe that white men are devils. Radical Islam agrees. And Red China is an ally with and supplier of weapons to the fanatical Moslems. Lately the Japanese have grown bolder. Comes word that "a phase of intensive cooperation" has been established between Germany and Japan. An Intelligence report from Britain claims that "In Europe, France and Germany share one overriding design with Russia: the reduction of American influence and power. Now Japan has joined them in this design. Otherwhere, the militant Arabs hate us because we favor Israel, will form an alliance with radical Islam to challenge 'the Great Satan.'" In this pending election we can hope for some help if true Americanists can defeat servants of the Establishment. But as others talk of creating a New World Order and of saving the earth while destroying the world, think of that warning: "The decline of the white world, the expansion of Asia, the explosion of Islam;" and pray:

"O my God. incline thine ear, and hear; open thine eyes and behold our desolations...for we do not present our supplications before thee for our righteousness, but for thy great mercy." (Daniel 9:18).

REVOLUTION WITHIN THE FORM

Now it's official. There's been a New Hampshire Primary, and George Bush has said he wants to be re-elected President of the United States. The showing made by Patrick Buchanan means that Bush may have to declare another isolated war in the name of the UN to be sure. But it's to be expected that Bush will win again unless the leaders of the Eastern Establishment change their collective minds. Which brings up the often asked question, "We can read his lips, but what's in his heart?" One media analyst noted that in 1988 Bush made 166 promises and kept very few of them. Best remembered were the promises "No new taxes" and "I want to be education president." But what pressed our memory button was the name given him by a columnist: "George Herbert Hoover Bush." Because it was in the election of 1932 that our Republic was becoming a Democracy. And now in the election of 1992 our Republic is becoming an interdependent member of a New World Order to be managed by a United Nations that is to be a Socialist World Government. A revolution within the form wrote Garet Garrett in his "Rise of Empire." He compared our change from Republic to Democracy by comparing the Roman government, which changed from Republic to Empire when almost no one at the time realized what was happening.

"That a republic may vanish is an elementary school book fact," Said Garrett. "The Roman Republic passed into the Roman Empire, and yet never could a Roman citizen have said, 'That was yesterday.' Nor is the historian, with all the advantages of perspective, able to place that momentous event at an exact point on the dial of time. The Republic had a long, unhappy twilight. It is agreed that the Empire began with Augustus Caesar....He reigned for forty years and when he died the bones of the Republic were buried with him. 'The personality of a monarch,' says Stobart, 'had been thrust almost surreptitiously into the frame of a republican constitution....The establishment of the Empire was such a delicate and equivocal act that it has been open to various interpretations ever since.' What Augustus did was to demonstrate a proposition found in Aristotle's Politics...namely this: 'People do not easily change, but love their own ancient customs; and it is by small degrees only that one thing takes the place of another; so that the ancient laws will remain, while the power will be in the hands of those who have brought about a revolution within the state'."

The elitists who control our government knew this. But they also discovered that a Republic can be changed into a Democracy by depriving a people of food, jobs, homes and enterprises; by bringing on a Great Depression so that the people will cry out for change within the form. It is this fact that marks the similarity between the election of 1930 and that of 1992.

"The plight of the American Colonists in 1776, when the American Declaration of Independence was drafted and adopted, cannot be exaggerated," wrote George Sullivan, an attorney who became best known as Chairman of the celebrated Special Committee of the Federation of Citizen's Associations of the District of Columbia which exposed in 1935 and 1936 the use of pro-communistic propaganda in the curriculum of the public schools. One might call him an early Joe McCarthy. "For more than 150 years,' he wrote, 'freedom loving men had labored in the New World to build a nation of free men. The Declaration of Independence went to fundamentals, and concluded with a frank statement of 'a firm reliance on the protection of Divine Providence....Our Founding Fathers rejected that illusory thing called democracy. They insisted instead upon a Republic, with every State guaranteed a republican form of government to prevent the Republic from becoming one in name only by constituent parts not enjoying true representative government."

The above was written in 1944 and the author, after having seen the Great Depression dissolve into World War and the creation of the new tower of babel (the UN), he pointed out that the depression of the 30s was planned that way (as was the present depression). He wrote: "The plight of the American people in 1933, and which had been acute since 1929, was the strange one of being a famine in the midst of plenty--a plainly inexcusable and intolerable condition requiring practical and effective remedies. Unemployment and business stagnation were destroying prosperity and general happiness due to curtailment of credit and currency needed to make the existing plenty available to the rank and file of the people." Dr. Sullivan had a name for the perpetrators. He called them "egomaniacs" a vicious circle that was "destroying established business and life-savings, producing a real depression from an inexcusable beginning. Chaos and ruin were being substituted for American free enterprise." And thus was executed the revolution within the form that changed our Republic into a Democracy. In Truman's maxim that "the buck stops here," the way was prepared by Hoover and the journey was taken by Roosevelt. The Great Deceit involved the Democratic Party Platform of 1932. It guaranteed "a sound currency to be preserved at all hazards." It condemned "the indefensible expansion and contraction of credit for private profit." It promised "the removal of government from all fields of private enterprise except where necessary to develop public works and natural resources in the common interest." And it promises "an immediate and drastic reduction of governmental expenditures" and "maintenance of the National credit by a federal budget annually balanced." Said Dr. Sullivan: "The Platform sounded like a return to the sound statesmanship of Andrew Jackson who not only routed the British Empire's forces seeking to retake our country in the War of 1812, but also routed the manipulators of credit and currency constantly preying upon the American people, and put an end to the public debt of the Republic. Assuming that Franklin D. Roosevelt would fulfill the pledges of that Platform, upon which he ran as a candidate for President, the American people elected him." But as was planned by the egomaniacs of the 1930s, Roosevelt substituted a batch of so-called New Deal remedies "wholly incompatible either with such pledges or with Constitutional American Liberty....Instead of removing government from private enterprise, the New Deal Administration proceeded to set up a bureaucratic control of private enterprise wholly incompatible with free enterprise or anything American." When the Supreme Court ruled much of the New Deal program unconstitutional, FDR promoted and a submissive Congress approved "other legislation subject to question as to constitutionality, and actually urged a Congressional Subcommittee on July 5, 1935 as follows: 'I hope your Committee will not permit doubts as to constitutionality, however reasonable, to block the legislation.' (Cong. Rec, 79, p. 14363)." Later FDR was able to repack the Supreme Court so that Constitutional limitations would not apply. Said Chief Justice Hughes: "We are under a Constitution, but the Constitution is what the judges say it is."

a satisfactory ecological balance between gross human population and supplies available for its survival. War-orientation has determined the basic standards of value in the creative arts, and has provided the fundamental motivational source of scientific and technological progress....The foregoing functions of war are essential to the survival of the social systems we know today. With two possible exceptions they are also essential to any kind of stable social organization that might survive in a warless world." (End of extended quote. Emphasis added).

"Two possible exceptions" could be used as "substitutes for the functions of war" says this Report which is the blueprint for the development of a world-wide environmental war to replace the present war system. The first exception suggests "uniting mankind against the danger of destruction by 'creatures' from other planets or from outer space." But "to include features unfortunately associated with science fiction would obviously be a more dubious undertaking. Nevertheless, an effective political substitute for war would require 'alternate enemies,' some of which might seem equally farfetched in the context of the current war system." In short, to unite all the people of the world against an enemy from outer space would require proof that there really is an enemy from outer space. So, the other "substitute for the functions of war" has been adopted by the Trilateral Commission and similar semi-secret organizations, by the UN, the New Agers, and the One Worlders in general. We quote:

"It may be, for instance, that gross pollution of the environment can eventually replace the possibility of mass destruction by nuclear weapons as the principal apparent threat to the survival of the species. Poisoning of the air, and of the principal sources of water supply, is already well advanced, would seem promising in this respect; it constitutes a threat that can be dealt with only through social organization and political power." So, an Environmental war, a war to save Mother Earth from destruction is the Plan. This Report from Iron Mountain, published in 1965, warned that it would take as long as a generation and a half of promotion, publication and propaganda before it could become operable on a world-wide scale. So, in the proper time frame, the UN has called for a massive Earth Summit to be held next June in Rio de Janeiro. A United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (UNCED) has been created with a Canadian, Maurice Strong, acting as Secretary General. He says "The 1992 Earth Summit will move the environment issue in the center of economic policy and decision-making in virtually every sector of our economic life....The Earth Summit must succeed. There is no plausible alternative."

But before we leave the Report from Iron Mountain, there was one other suggestion made, that an alternative to the war system must be found, one "of credible quality and magnitude, if a transition is ever to come about without social disintegration. It is more probable in our judgment, that such a threat will have to be invented, rather than developed from unknown conditions." And that's why the "inventions" have been so important to the cartel that claims to rule the world. The "inventions" include the greenhouse effect, the ozone hole fear, and toxic pollution. In our DBR (6/28/89) we reported on the Economic Summit that was held in Paris that year. We wrote: "But the big surprise came when all economic discussion at the summit became secondary to Environmentalism. Before the seven heads of state and government had even met, the London Economist hailed the summit as 'the first Green Summit.' And here was revealed the strategy which is to lead to factual, total, and absolute World Government. Said the Economist: 'What defense has been to the world's leaders for the past 40 years the environment will be for the next 40'...The Hegelian dialectic calls for the discovery or creation of a problem, publicity and propaganda to increase the problem to the proportions of a crisis, then the presentation of a prepared solution to the problem. Environmentalism is indeed a problem. But now it is to become a crisis demanding action at the international level."

So, the "substitute for war" which will also provide the substitute for national independence and sovereignty, is planned as follows: 1) There was created a UN Conference on Environment and Development (UNCED). 2) The heads of state of 15 countries met as the UN Security Council on Jan. 31, 1992, to plan for the conversion of the UN into a total World Government. 3) The Secretary General of the UN was directed to prepare plans for a "World Charter" by March 1, 1992. 4) In the first twelve days in June, 1992, Rio de Janiero will be the site of the largest and most important summit conference ever held. The Trilateral Commission says the nations of the world will go "Beyond Interdependence" and "The Meshing of the World's Economy and the Earth's Ecology" will be the central theme of the Earth Summit.

Lest we forget: If men could construct a permanent peace, a world in which perpetual war for perpetual peace were no longer necessary, then in addition to essential world law and world courts, a world constabulary and a world currency, there would still be needed a world religion. Alexander the Great knew and tried and failed. The Caesars knew and tried and failed. They made it a rule to accept, honor, and even worship the gods of the people they had conquered. The current leaders of the Environmental Movement which is their way to World Government, understand this also, and they have instructed their eco-cultist lackeys to work overtime trying to ecumenize the pantheist, pagan, even the Christian and Hebraic cults. They resurrected from Greek mythology the goddess Gaia, Mother Earth, "the divinity on which we live." Protecting Mother Earth has become their slogan and battle cry. They have borrowed from Eastern theosophies, European and African secret societies, even dug up the Talmudic Seven Laws of Noah as a step toward neutralizing Christianity and aiming toward world law with a religious background. But, however hard they try, it would work but for a short time. Because the True God Who is above all, can be wrathful.

"For the wrath of God is revealed from heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men, who hold the truth in unrighteousness. Because that which may be known of God is manifest in them; for God hath shewn it unto them. For the invisible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and Godhead; so that they are without excuse; Because that, when they knew God, they glorified him not as God, neither were they thankful; but became vain in their imaginations, and their foolish heart was darkened. Professing themselves to be wise, they became fools, And changed the glory of the uncorruptible God into an image made like to corruptible man, and to birds, and fourfooted beasts, and creeping things....and worshipped and served the creature more than the Creator, who is blessed for ever. Amen." (Romans 1:18-23,25).

1943. She wrote: "The first thing government does and must do is issue an edict or pass a law. No edict or law can impart to an individual a faculty denied him by nature. A government order cannot mend a broken leg, but it can command the mutilation of a sound body. It cannot bestow intelligence, but it can forbid the use of intelligence. What is the prime provision to put a law into effect? There must be an 'enabling clause,' and an enabling clause is one which appropriates money or materials from taxes laid upon private reserves, in cash or kind or labor. A private person who seizes the goods of another is a criminal; this action is reserved to government. Likewise, government by its judiciary branch may try persons accused of capital crimes and put them to death. It is in the physical power of individuals to kill each other; but it is never to be their right to do so unless in self-defense....That a man may not be the judge of his own cause, it is thought proper to depute authority (to government) and so far as possible to supply aid in self-defense. That is the power of death. The power of life cannot be deputed or delegated. Government then is solely an instrument or mechanism of appropriation, compulsion, and extinction; in the nature of things it can be nothing else, and can operate to no other end. Its exact definition in action shows how accurate was the phrase 'a necessary evil'."

So was the nature and purpose of government as defined by Isabel Paterson in 1943, at a time when the United States was at war with Germany, Italy and Japan; the Soviet Union was a most favored ally; and the composition of the United Nations Charter was not yet approved. She was writing about the government of Nations, not of World Government. So, as simply as possible, let's examine the nature of World Government in the light of what the author said of governments of supposedly independent Nations. First, the "necessary evil" would at least theoretically be checked by a Constitution or a Charter. So the UN Charter, as written, is a contract or agreement between Nations and States. But the purpose of World Government is not to govern Nations, but to convert them to Administrative Regions. The first step in this development can be seen in the creation of the Ten Federal Regions in the United States.

In normal government procedure, as previously explained, first there is the edict or law, which must be followed by an enabling clause. But in the building of a Global Government something new is added. First there must be a Treaty, to be followed by a law, and then the enabling clause. Richard Gardner (CFR, TLC) explained: "An end run around national sovereignty, eroding it piece by piece, will accomplish much more than the old-fashioned frontal attack." And Zbigniew Brzezinski (CFR, TLC), fellow-creator of the Rockefeller-headed Trilateral Commission, emphasized that it should be piece-by-piece, and that in the developing stages there should be created Regional Governments, very similar to the three governments described in George Orwell's 1984. There would be the US, Canada and Mexico forming one Region; Europe forming another; and Asia, headed by Japan, completing the Trilateral arrangement. Then, as time and circumstance permit, the three would become interdependently connected through a Central World Government (the UN), with one currency, one set of world laws, and one religion (based on the Seven Noahide Laws ?).

First, however, must come these Treaties: called Charters, Declarations, Conventions, Covenants, Constitutions, or whatever. The Treaties, each an end run around national sovereignty, are produced by an established agency or specially created agency of the UN, and then presented to the members, now 175 Nations and/or Nation-States, for ratification. Once ratified, the Treaty becomes World Law in its respective area (piece by piece). And that's where "The Supremacy Clause" of the US Constitution becomes vital to the survival of national sovereignty. We've explained in previous DBRs how a treaty between the US and Canada, about birds, became the means of perverting and misinterpreting this Clause. As a result, the federal government, via Supreme Court ruling, has accepted as fact that any Treaty ratified by Congress and signed by the President "shall be the supreme law of the Land; and the judges in every State shall be bound thereby, any thing in the constitution or laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding." (Article VII, Clause 2). Once a Treaty is ratified then the State Department may compose, the Senate will pass, and the President will sign a law that is consonant with the terms of the Treaty. Thus, any National or State laws regarding the subject or subjects dealt with in the Treaty are nullified. Another end run around national sovereignty, eroding it piece by piece.

Incidentally and speaking personally, in 1954 this "Treaty Law" subject became a national issue. An attempt was made to forbid the President to enter into any treaty that would supersede the Constitution. In treaty-making the President signs, then Congress ratifies. So this effort, called the Bricker Amendment would have prevented the ratification of eroding treaties. We recall the great event. Broadcasting from Tulsa at the time, we were commissioned by a group of patriots to go to Washington and present to Senators the group's demand for Senate approval of the Bricker Amendment. It was defeated by one vote, one vote having been cast against it by then Vice President Richard Nixon. Our record in Senate action is zero. We also represented a patriotic group at the McCarthy Hearings in Washington. Also a defeat.

In the case of Treaty Law, there is one restriction, the Connally Reservation, whereby the United States reserves to itself the power to decide what matters are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of the United States, and "May not be brought under the jurisdiction of the United Nations World Court (the International Court of Justice)". But on occasion it has been ignored and, pending a correct reading of "The Supremacy Clause", something similar to the Bricker Amendment is still needed.

Latest of the World Laws that have become domestic law is the Genocide Convention, ratified in 1990. And again presented for ratification is the dangerous UN International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights. President Jimmy Carter signed this Treaty, but it has never been ratified. However, President Bush has again presented it to the Senate with a request for ratification. If it is ratified it will place all US rights -- civil, economic, social, cultural, homosexual (lifestyles), woman's, child's even animal rights under international jurisdiction, or World Law.

The United Nations Charter was ratified as a Treaty. In case of any conflict between our domestic law and the UN Charter, our Constitution is a meaningless document. If there are enough who think and feel and love our Country, this election year is a proper time to speak out for America First. But - "If the trumpet give an uncertain sound, who shall prepare himself for the battle?" (I Corinthians 14:8).

NEW WORLD EMPIRE

Sometimes a political cartoon can be worth a thousand words. Ed Gamble in The Florida Times-Union portrays a grandmotherly type sitting in her rocking chair on the front porch of her house with a newspaper in her hands. Standing on the walkway near her with ballpoint poised for action is a media pollster. He asks, "Now that you have had a chance to look over all the candidates, what is your reaction?" She replies, "God help us all." If the cartoon was intended as a joke, the joke is on We the People. We who take the trouble to vote have our chances to change things. Not very good chances to be sure because there are so few of us who really care. But there are some candidates with character, conviction, courage and the honest desire to stop the Nation's drive toward destruction and the death of freedom. However, the wealth of the Establishmentarians, the strength of the media, and the lethargy of the majority will make political martyrs of those who really care for the country. One must give due credit to the lackeys of the governing Elite. They were directed and paid to secure at any cost the re-election of the promise-breaker who hopes to become President of the World and must remain President of the United States in order to get the promotion. However, if it began to appear that the record of his first term in office could bring about his defeat, then another man with the same loyalty to the aims of the Elite must be nominated as a Democrat and, if necessary, elected to become the Voice of the Inner Circle and the manager of us Pawns in the Game.

And so it happens that We the Pawns shall be governed and supervised for another four years by a prevaricator named Bush or an adulterer named Clinton. Morality and integrity are no longer criteria when choosing a leader. Only loyalty to and approval by the Establishment Hierarchy have value and the ability to rule in behalf of the Rulers. Looking back, we have always felt that with the controversial term of the Trilateral-Commission-trained Carter about to end, an actor named Reagan was chosen to run and win on the condition that he name George Bush as his Vice President. Bush was their man from the beginning. He was well trained as a former member of the House of Representatives, former chairman of the Republican National Committee, former envoy to Communist China, former CIA Director, then Vice President and finally President. But as with Jimmy Carter, will his record as President permit a second term? Just in case, a former Republican named Clinton now calling himself a Democrat, a member of both the Council on Foreign Relations and the Trilateral Commission, has been promoted and financed that he may replace Bush in case it seems necessary to keep the Pawns in the Game in their proper places in the New World Order.

But this is inevitable: No matter who wins, the building of the Global Government will continue. And already the Bureaucrats are drawing their plans to establish a World Empire governed by the United Nations Security Council and policed by the armed forces of the United States serving as a Standing Army of Global Peace-Keepers. The Miami Herald, on 3/8/92 published a report from the New York Times News Service, which began: "In a broad new policy statement that is in its final drafting stage, the Defense Department asserts that America's political and military mission in the post-Cold War era will be to insure that no rival superpower is allowed to emerge in Western Europe, Asia or the territory of the former Soviet Union. A 46-page document, which Defense Secretary Dick Cheney expects to release later this month, declares that part of the American mission will be 'convincing potential competitors that they need not aspire to a greater role or pursue a more aggressive posture to protect their legitimate interests.' Implicitly, the document foresees building a world security arrangement that pre-empts Germany and Japan from pursuing a course of substantial rearmament, especially nuclear armament, in the future.

"The classified document makes the case for a world dominated by one superpower whose position can be maintained by constructive behavior and sufficient military might to deter any nation or group of nations from challenging American primacy. To perpetuate this role, the United States 'must sufficiently account for the interests of the advanced industrial nations to discourage them from challenging our leadership or seeking to overturn the established political and economic order,' the document says. ...Although the document is internal to the Pentagon and is not provided to Congress, its policy statements are developed in conjunction with the National Security Council and in consultation with the president or his senior national security advisers. Its drafting has been supervised by Paul Wolfowitz, the Pentagon's undersecretary for policy. The document was provided to The New York Times by an official who believes that this post-Cold War strategy debate should be carried out in the public domain." (End of article).

This is a document declaring for World Dictatorship. It is clearly in violation of International Law. But if it is done under the authority of the United Nations, then it becomes a new Law of the Globe. It is, incidentally, precisely what the Communist leaders sought to do when they tried to establish Communist world domination. They proposed to do it in the name of Communism, now it's being done in the name of Democracy. It's real name is Corporate Socialist, or Fascist World Government.

"A world superpower whose position can be maintained by...sufficient military might to deter any nation or group of nations from challenging American primacy." So declares this classified document to be issued by the Pentagon with the approval of Brent Scowcroft (CFR, TLC, former deputy chairman of Kissinger & Associates, now National Security Advisor to President George Bush (Skull & Bones, formerly of CFR & TLC). Where the authority of the UN and that of the US merge and become one is unclear. But it is very clear that this Pentagon Paper proposes that the United States become an uncontested Global Empire. Forty years ago Garet Garrett wrote of this Rise of Empire. "The first requisite of Empire is: The executive power of government shall be dominant," he wrote. Examples: In 1950 Harry Truman sent American troops into the Korean War, disregarding a Congressional Declaration of War, citing the UN as his authority. Forty years later George Bush sent American troops into the Persian Gulf War, defying Congress openly and citing the UN as his authority. In domestic affairs, the Executive power became dominant through The Federal Register by which any of the host of Administrative Agencies can make laws, execute and judge their obedience through the establishment of Ten Federal Regions. If there be any serious objection by States or citizens, a National Emergency can be declared by the Chief Executive and FEMA is authorized to establish a Bureaucratic Dictatorship, not unlike the bureaucratic dictatorship in the former Soviet Union.

Garrett further defined Empire as when "Domestic policy becomes subordinate to foreign policy." Yet another mark of Empire: "Ascendancy of the military mind," and finally "A system of satellite nations." A satellite nation is "A nation that is dominated politically by another." Both political and military domination of other nations is called for in this Pentagon Paper.

The lady in the cartoon said, "God help us." That plea should be the prayer of every Christian in the Land. Rubbergate has revealed the inability of elected Representatives to govern even themselves. We can expect little responsible leadership from Senate or White House unless God intervenes. The Judiciary is itself on trial. And our present leaders propose to adopt the program of the Communists before their evil empire collapsed. Must we learn too late that His Authority is final and cannot be annulled by any earthly decree? Let us all pray, "God help us."

AS WE REMEMBER IT

The Freeman is "A monthly study journal of free market, private property, limited government ideas and Ideals"; is published by The Foundation for Economic Education, Irvington-on-Hudson NY 10533. The leading article in its March 1992 issue bears the title "The Shoemaker of Los Banos" and tells "How Bill Detzer made the most of a tiny corner of freedom in a Japanese prison camp." Nearly 50 years have passed and we can no longer remember Bill Detzer personally. He was one of the thousands of us who lived, or died, during more than three years of Japanese occupation of The Philippines. Besides, in 1943 Bill was transferred to Los Banos while we remained imprisoned in Santo Tomas. But with a few variations Bill's story could be our story. And, in 1992, with Americans tightening their belts, being concerned about the cost of living, worrying about the future of their children, their families and their country, we thought a brief retelling of Bill's story might provide a spark of hope and assurance for many of our readers. This story is told by John Stull, retired Commander US Navy, and the following consists of excerpts plus occasional personal parenthetical remarks.

* * * * *

The long fight for survival began for Bill Detzer at the Santo Tomas Internment Camp. Although he went through hell, he was one of the lucky ones. The "In Memorial" list compiled after the war is long for those who entered the camp. It isn't even complete because the Japanese buried bodies in vacant lots, backyards, even the sea, with no record. The situation was appalling from the start....At 6 feet 1 inch, Bill weighed 190 pounds when he went to Santo Tomas and 123 pounds when he was freed in February 1945. (At 6 feet we weighed 185 pounds when captured, 116 pounds when liberated on February 10, 1945)....On May 14, 1943, the Japanese moved 786 single men and 12 Navy nurses 70 kilometers away to the Agricultural College at Los Banos. Santo Tomas was liberated early in February, 1945, but Los Banos was behind enemy lines. There was a strong rumor that before giving up this camp the Japanese planned to massacre the Los Banos prisoners....Acting on the rumor General MacArthur authorized a daring raid. On February 23, 1945....the attack from land, water and sky was a complete surprise and 250 Japanese were eliminated within minutes. (This was a repeat performance of the equally miraculous rescue of us at Santo Tomas 13 days earlier).

"From talking with Bill, it seems clear that many prisoners survived the camps because of the use they made of the marginal amount of freedom permitted by the Japanese. (Bill repaired shoes. We had a microphone and strategically placed loudspeakers which we were permitted to install and use, but very carefully, on the pretext that orders could be given quickly to all the prisoners in buildings and on the compound. Fortunately, the Japanese didn't clearly understand how those orders were worded when given in English. They didn't clearly understand us when we announced a shipment of foodstuffs had arrived and volunteers with strength enough to unload the trucks were needed. We remarked that this shipment was long overdue, but "better Leyte than never." Nor could the guards understand the sudden pandemonium, attributed it to the joy of getting another meal. Otherwise, you wouldn't be reading this DBR).

Every prisoner had an assigned or chosen job of some kind. (This helped maintain sanity, morality, and determination to survive until the promise of "I shall return" became a fact). Even when so appallingly diluted, this measure of freedom was strong enough to make a life-or-death difference in the whole conduct of the camps. By applying their freedom, the prisoners rose above the order imposed by Japanese bayonets and were able in large measure to avoid chaos and its resulting despair. Through a group-appointed prisoner committee, the internees were allowed to govern themselves within Japanese rules. Although the rules were often outrageous, grim, and encompassed every facet of life, this mere trace of self-determination maintained self-respect and the hope and dignity engendered by self-respect.

The prisoners were ill-used, ill-housed, ill-clothed, ill-washed, plain ill, and so ill-fed that before their rescue they came to look like scarecrows. Nevertheless, their own self-government kept the majority of them from falling into complete helplessness, total despair, or unthinking barbarity, preying on each other. Bill says there is no way to describe the titanic efforts made by the Internee Committee, nor is it possible to count their accomplishments, fabricated almost solely by determination and zeal. Several of the leaders had been top executives in prestigious companies before they met their ultimate test of their management skills by using every small niche left open by their captors. The freedom of the small clefts grew to a maintained and definite identity. and with this identity thousands of internees found the will to survive as human beings (but most of those group leaders paid the price of death in their efforts to make survival possible for others). Bill saw men wrapped in barbed wire and shot. In spite of this knowledge of what the Japanese were capable of he, maneuvering from a tiny pocket of freedom, taking what he considered a justifiable risk to achieve a worthwhile goal. It was a long time ago, but Bill Detzer still has those things with which he left Los Banos -- a sense of accomplishment and appreciation. For almost 50 years he has taken nothing for granted....He knows not only the words but the meaning of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. In his darkest hour, he learned freedom is not static. It is what you make of what you have.

"But whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work, this man shall be blessed in his deed." (James 1:25).

ANOTHER LITTLE WAR?

"The American public is not in a very forgiving mood. I have never seen an electorate like this in 30 years." So said Ed Rollins who is labeled "a top Republican strategist." Showing equal frustration was Keith Frederick, Rollins' Democratic counterpart. Frederick remarked that the eroding economy and the spreading stain of scandal in Washington have put voters in an "ugly, ugly" mood. Staff writer John Dillon of the financially troubled Christian Science Monitor, echoed the concern: "The angry mood of American voters, shaken by the loss of jobs, now poses a serious threat to President Bush's efforts to win a second term." Correspondent Cal Thomas reminded his readers that "last year, Mr. Bush's ratings were in the stratosphere. Now they are in the toilet because the president squandered an opportunity following the Persian Gulf war to seize the moment and reshape Congress and the political landscape." Columnist Max Lerner remembered that it was Margaret Thatcher, then a Prime Minister, who advised Bush to send troops into Saudi Arabia and liberate Kuwait. Lerner quoted: "'Remember, George, this is no time to go wobbly.' Thus ran Margaret Thatcher's historic prod to President Bush's wavering at a critical point in the Gulf crisis. In his second crisis - political, not military - there is no one comparable to stiffen his resolve." They all give different reasons for the political dilemma, but they all seem to agree that if Bush tries to debate economic or financial issues with his principal opponents: Republican Buchanan or Democrats Clinton or Brown, or Independent Perot; his nomination is risky and his election in jeopardy. Somehow, he must get voters to thinking about foreign, not domestic, issues.

Now, if there were another convenient little war, his approval rating might again be high enough to ensure his re-election. There's Iraq which could again be an opponent. Or Libya, which harbors terrorists and has been bombed before. Or Japan, which has been receiving considerable press bashing just in case. We don't remember the source of the quote, but it is said that Bush told his closest cronies that he'd do almost anything to get re-elected. The Ruling Elite must have taken him at his word and told him he'd be backed all the way if he'd "do it their way." Their way seems to be the strengthening of the power and authority of the UN, along with the re-election of George Bush. So, when the chiefs of 20 countries met at the UN last February 2nd, Bush led them in declaring that "the world community can no longer allow advancement of fundamental rights to stop at national borders." And heads of state all agreed that the UN should "abandon its tradition of non-interference in internal affairs of member countries," and "the UN should play a more active role in combating abuses even if that means involving itself in issues that would once have been regarded as off limits to the world body because they involved a country's internal affairs. Nations are too independent, national frontiers are too porous, and transnational realitiestoo dangerous to permit egocentric isolationism." Then George Bush added that "It is the sacred principles enshrined in the UN Charter to which we will henceforth pledge our allegiance." (This latter quoted from The McAlvany Intelligence Adviser for March, 1992.)

To establish this "right" of the UN to interfere in any country and arrest and punish any person or persons, has long been the dream of the UN supporters. However, before the "rebirth and revitalization" of the UN as a result of the Gulf War and President Bush's accompanying New World Order statement, the UN was too weak to interfere too often in the internal affairs of a nation. Since then the UN has sent forces into Cambodia, Yugoslavia, the Western Sahara, and has started campaigning for a standing army of its own.

Evidence seems to indicate that the next step in the Ruling Elite's program involves the strengthening of the UN and making it the supreme authority over all intranational as well as international affairs, while at the same time assuring the re-election of a US Commander-in-Chief who already has served adequately and well as Commander-in-Chief of United Nations forces in the Persian Gulf. To promote both Bush and the UN simultaneously, the "little war" plan has been tried, tested, proven successful and approved publicly. To lay the groundwork, in 1983 US and allied troops invaded and conquered the independent State of Grenada, occupied the island for two years. The action was cited as a little war to halt Communist aggression in the Caribbean (although similar action against Communist controlled Nicaragua was declared to be illegal, and any action against Communist Cuba was prohibited). Then in 1989 US troops invaded and occupied the independent State of Panama. This was called "Operation Just Cause," the "cause" being an alleged war against drugs. Then came the most important action. In 1990-91, without Congressional approval and unconstitutionally, a US-led, Un-commanded coalition launched land, sea and air missile attacks on the independent Republic of Iraq. This was said to be a war against aggression, and it is said to have won 85% approval from America and the world. So, when tried, tested, proven successful and approved three times, any similar action in 1992 waged in the name of the UN for the purpose of demonstrating the power of the UN, and the place of the US in the post-cold-war world would be publicly approved through the re-election of George Bush as President of the United States (and Chief of Police of the United Nations).

To further this potential program in behalf of both Bush and the UN, a group of operatives within the secret sanctuary that is the Pentagon, drafted a 45-page document declaring that the United States should become a One World Dictatorship, and 'preparations should be made "to prevent the emergence of a new rival." This deliberately leaked, classified document was published on March 7, 1992 by the internationalist-minded New York Times and spread worldwide through its news service. Quoting from what we have called The Pentagon Paper as published by the NYT, we learn that the United States "must show the leadership necessary to establish and protect a new order." There is admission that "while the United States cannot become the world's 'policeman' by assuming the responsibility for righting every wrong, we will retain the pre-eminent responsibility for addressing selectively those wrongs which threaten not only our interests, but those of our allies or friends, or which could seriously unsettle international relations." Regarding that long-standing plan for the "merging" of nations, we are told in this document that "A democratic partnership with Russia and the other republics would be the best possible outcome for the United States. At the same time, we must also hedge against the possibility that democracy will fail, with the potential than an authoritative regime bent on regenerating aggressive military power could emerge in Russia, or that similar regimes in other successor republics could lead to spreading conflict within the former USSR or Eastern Europe."

But The Pentagon Paper was rejected by the State Department, which seems to be totally controlled by the Ruling Elite. The Insiders prefer the Fabian approach; gradualism, not radicalism. A little war now and then, but not an open declaration of World Dictatorship. That would upset the "masses" and cause possible revolt and revolution.

Now, let's back up and consider. It is obvious that this American Super-power dream is impractical. We are presently in hock to foreigners for more than half a trillion dollars. In order to fight the Gulf War for the Elites contributions from other countries in the amount of $54 billion had to be donated (or at least promised). The projected deficit for 1992 is about $400 billion. As James Chace of Bard College notes, "For a country that in a decade has gone from being a creditor nation to being the largest debtor nation, we should be especially wary about pursuing high-flown notions calculated to make the world safe for democracy." So, even the creators of this Pentagon Paper would have known that they were drafting a dream that was intended as a smoke screen. Where the document reads US substitute UN and you'll get the true picture. But the smoke screen was important to the Ruling Elite. It let the world know that there is going to be a world government, and that the United States has been appointed to provide the bulk of the "standing army" needed to secure and maintain it. And second, the leak of a classified document of this kind would help to distract American voters from their worries about taxes, unemployment, financial and economic problems, and perhaps make them think of how George Bush had been "a great leader in a time of crisis", and if any wars or rumors of wars are in the offing, then perhaps Bush should remain at the helm of the Ship of State, even in its portward progress. It could be expected that the State Department would reject this Pentagon Paper policy statement "that asserts that America's mission in the post-cold-war era will be to prevent any collection of friendly or unfriendly nations from competing with the United States for superpower status." But a smoke screen is a smoke screen and implied in both publication and rejection of the document is the fact that there is going to be a "standing army" to ensure and maintain a global government. Also implied is that the United States is going to supply that standing army.

This was all said in a nutshell by Arch Roberts in the April Bulletin of the Committee to Restore the Constitution: "Authority to commit Americans to battle anywhere in the world has been surreptitiously transferred from the Congress of the United States to the United Nations Organization. Real but concealed objective is to place military power of the United States at the disposal of the United Nations Security Council (war-waging arm of the UN), to force all nations into line and deliver them up to 'The New World Order'." (CRC, POBox 986, Ft Collins CO 80522. Monthly. Membership/subscription $25).

In a relative statement Joseph de Courcy, publisher of the highly respected Intelligence Digest, refers to a three-way foreign-policy debate in the United States. He wrote: "The three sets of protagonists can be categorized as follows: 1) State Department, new-world-globalists who wish to see a UN-centred global regime imposed through close alliance with Japan, the European Community (EC) and Russia. [This is the Trilateral Commission's version of George Orwell's three regional world governments depicted in his 1984-Ed.] 2) The Pat Buchanan-led, America-First isolationists. This group is deeply opposed to a UN-centred new world order, however much dominated by America. They believe, above all, in reducing the economic burden of US foreign policy. 3) The final group, headed by the Defence Department, can best be called the supremacists. They believe that America must retain its position as the world's superpower at all costs, particularly by opposing the rise of any new superpower such as the EC or Japan, or the resurgence of the USSR." [Intelligence Digest subscription office in the US: 1815 W 213th St., Suite 210, Torrance, Ca 90501. 45 issues per year, US197.00].

George Bush is trying desperately to win back the American territory he ceded to the liberals and socialists while building a name for himself on foreign soil during four years of aiding Gorbachev and the multi-national CEOs who build plants and create jobs overseas while closing plants and laying off workers at home. On March 23rd in Washington he addressed a group of wholesale grocers (not tillers of the soil, but agribusinessmen who made fortunes selling grain, at American subsidy expense, to the former Soviets). Bush described himself to them as "an agent of change who would undertake reforms of education, health care, government and the legal system. And he pledged to serve as an agent of prosperity able to open new markets and create more American jobs." That is, if he's re-elected. But he was talking to a business audience, not to the voters at large. And there was a slogan: "If he can change the world, he can change America." He did, in four years of deepening despair, soaring expenditures and lowering of the standard of living often to the food stamp or bread line level. It must be apparent to Bushbackers that the change agent tactic has been tried and found wanting. If he wants to win, chances are he'll have to "change the world and hope that'll also change America." Which means, as we said previously, some little war may be necessary to divert American minds from thoughts of domestic defeats to overseas victories. As we write this Report, Libya seems like the proposed victim. Gadhafi has been playing his role just right. He's protecting two alleged terrorists supposedly responsible for the Lockerbie tragedy. When hard pressed for their release, he appealed to the Arab League. So America went to the UN Security Council and Gadhafi retaliated by going to the World Court. This would be exactly what the Ruling Elite desired. If the UN is to be a world government it must have more than a permanent police force, which we apparently are to supply. It also must have a supreme judiciary that is recognized as the world authority in the matter of jurisprudence. So the International Court of Justice must have a "rebirth" as did the parent UN. America has surreptitiously agreed that America will supply the UN with a standing army. Now America must accept the unchallenged authority of the World Court, just as it has agreed to abide by the authority of the United Nations Security Council. The outcome of the Libyan affair is undecided as we write this. But chalk up another victory for the promoters of The New World Authority. Our Supreme Court will now follow the decrees laid down by the World Court whenever the occasion arises, just as the US military will fly into action whenever and wherever the Security Council commands. Said a friend: "American liberty and independence cannot survive unless the Lord's Sovereign Jurisdiction over this government is restored."

"THINK GLOBALLY - ACT LOCALLY"

When she turned in to the new gas station on the corner to get some gas she noticed something new. Accordion-like covers were over the gas nozzles. They were meant to contain the fumes that escape from the nozzle while the tank is being filled. She complained. "You have to lean on the darned things to squeeze the container enough to get the nozzle into the tank to operate it." Just one of the things that complicate life now that we're on an environmental binge. Owners of small businesses may notice it most. There are so many new environmental and safety regulations these days that they threaten to drive folks out of business, and often do. It's all part of people preparing for June's Earth Summit. A columnist explained that "Setting aside the potentates who'll mastermind the show, Earth Summit participants will be representing individual communities. It's what participants agree to do and then carry back to their communities and put into practice that makes the summit important. Come next summer, there'll likely be more cities where pumping gas gets a little less convenient." And more expensive. Like this CO2 myth. CO2 has been used for years to make refrigerators refrigerate and air conditioners condition the air. But it's supposed to blow holes in the ozone layer that protects us from skin cancer, so they say. At first American industrialists objected to its ban. But then chemists came up with a substitute that costs more. Now the manufacturers of air conditioners and have induced President Bush to support the idea. Only trouble to people in general; if your refrigerator or air conditioner needs repair in the near future, you'll have to buy a new unit. The old conditioner won't take the new refrigerant.

Perhaps you've seen that new slogan being promoted by the media: "Think Globally - Act Locally." We wondered who invented that slogan and we did some investigating. We found that a well financed subversive organization called The Club of Rome is the principal culprit. The Club, among its other activities, sponsors books dealing with such subjects as the Great Population Explosion which must be prevented, the New World Government which must be created, etc. This new book was appropriately titled: The First Global Revolution. We haven't seen the book, but Mr. Robert Henry Goldsborough has. He served on the old House Committee on Un-American Activities, studied the subject of Communism under Louis Budenz, former Communist who became a Christian, studied about Foundations with his friend Norman Dodd, and now publishes the newsletter Washington Dateline. He has read The First Global Revolution and says that on page 115 there is this declaration, "The Common Enemy of Humanity is Man." That seems to set the tone of the book which contains this revealing statement: "In searching for a new enemy to unite us, we came upon the idea that pollution, the threat of global warming, water shortages, famine and the like would fill the bill. In their totality and in their interactions these phenomena do constitute a common threat which demands the solidity of all peoples....The real enemy is humanity itself....The need is to think globally and act locally. The Club of Rome has, from its beginning, realized the need for such an approach."

The Club of Rome's beginning was in 1968. Giovanni Agnelli, head of the Italian based multinational Fiat Motor Car Company, was a prominent member of the Bilderberg Group. Along with his chief executive officer Aurillo Peccai, also a Bilderberger as well as the head of the Atlantic Institute's Economic Council, founded the Club of Rome as a sort of "intellectual" organization. It is said to contain "the most subversive 'future planners' drawn from the United States, France, Sweden, Britain, Switzerland and Japan....The Club of Rome became a cohesive entity of new-science scientists, globalists, future planners, and internationalists of every stripe. As one delegate put it, 'We became Joseph's Coat of Many Colors.'" (Quoted from the recently released book Conspirators' Hierarchy by Dr. John Coleman. Copyright 1992. America West Publishers, POBox 2208, Carson City, NV 89702. $16.95). Dr. Coleman writes: "Broadly, the anticipated counter-program of the Club of Rome would cover inventing and disseminating 'post industrialization' ideas in the United States, coupled with the spread of counter-cultural movements such as drugs, rock, sex, hedonism, satanism, witchcraft, and environmentalism. Tavistock Institute, Stanford Research Institute and the Institute for Social Relations, in fact the entire spectrum of research organizations in applied social psychiatry either had delegates on the board of the Club of Rome, or acted as advisors and played a guiding role in NATO's attempt to adopt the 'Aquarian Conspiracy'."

The Club of Rome is seldom mentioned in the Media, except when its controlling Council of 100 decides to approve the publication of some book dealing with overpopulation, food scarcity, global warming, environmentalism, etc. And the Tavistock Institute is virtually unknown. But the two European born subversive organizations form the most powerful part of the Total Conspiracy and are dedicated to the "Changing of the Image of Man.." As change agents (Bush says he's a change agent) the Club and Tavistock have virtually wiped out any vestiges of traditional Christian culture and have substituted a Satanic counter-culture in less than a generation. Their goals: To "purify" the Earth and prepare it for profitable exploitation by the monopolistic elites who will own the earth; and to "change the image of man" in such a way that the two billion people who are permitted to live in this "purified" earth will have been trained for their selected and assigned positions in the New World Order. They will be willing workers, or they won't be (from each according to his ability, to each according to his need). George Bernard Shaw, playwright and founding member of the Fabian Society, explained the expected role of those who will be permitted to live in a Socialist World government in his Intelligent Woman's Guide to Socialiam. "...You will be forcibly fed, clothed, lodged, taught and employed whether you like it or not. If it were discovered that you had not the character and industry enough to be worth all this trouble, you might possibly be executed in a kindly manner; but while you were permitted to live, you would have to live well."

It would take volumes to describe the activities of the little Known Tavistock Institute. Dr. John Coleman, who claims to be the first to expose Tavistock to American readers. In his recently published Conspirators' Hierarchy, he notes that "The Club of Rome, after playing a key role in the Cuban Missile Crisis, attempted to sell its 'crisis management' (forerunner of FEMA) program to President Kennedy. Several Tavistock scientists went to see the President to explain what it meant, but the President Rejected the advice they gave. The same year that Kennedy was murdered, Tavistock was back in Washington to talk with NASA. This time the talks were successful. Tavistock was given a contract by NASA to evaluate the effect of its coming space program on American public opinion.

That was the beginning of Tavistock working in conjunction with an agency of the US federal government. And if Dr. Coleman is correct, and he almost always is, it was The Club of Rome and Tavistock that gave us the Planning, Programming, Budgeting System (PPBS), now generally called "Management by Crisis," which among other things caused the creation (by the Federal Register method) of the existing plan whereby the President has the power to Declare a National Emergency at which time a Bureaucratic Dictatorship can be set up under the governorship of the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA).

A brief background on Tavistock. In 1922 the British Royal Institute for International Affairs (Chatham House) which is the parent of the Council on Foreign Relations and similar organizations in Canada, Australia, New Zealand and other countries; decided that there should be created a British Psychological Warfare Bureau. It was to become the world's largest brainwashing facility, and British troops were its first guinea pigs. "It was Tavistock-designed methods that got the United States into the Second World War," writes Dr. Coleman, "and which under the guidance of Dr. Kurt Lewin established the OSS, the forerunner of the CIA..." After the war was over, Tavistock began to direct its research toward civilian rather than military establishments. The destruction of the public (government) education system in America is but one example of the work of Tavistock and associated subversive organizations. The drug epidemic is another.

In his book The Technetronic Era Zbigniew Brzezinski predicted the kind of government we may expect after the "merging of the nations" has been completed. He wrote: "Our existing institutions will be supplanted by pre-crisis management institutions, the task of which will be to identify in advance likely social crises and to develop programs to cope with them." (Underlining added). He confirms in different words that Crisis Management is the name of the Conspirators' game. And it always seems to work for them. For example, a crisis is discovered [ADES epidemic?], or is created and developed into a crisis [Environmentalism?], and through the various communications media the crisis is sold to the people as an Emergency Crisis that can be handled only on a global scale. The pre-planned remedy is then published and promoted, and the people are programmed to demand that the pre-planned remedy be adopted and carried out. The "remedy" of course, is global control by a central authority. In other words, World Government. Of course, while the goal is World Government, the real aim is power and profit for the members of the Ruling Elite. Dr. Coleman says they form a Committee of 300, and he names them in his Conspirators' Hierarchy. This doesn't necessarily mean an immediate end to the Crisis. There are crises where it is more profitable to treat symptoms rather than cure the crisis outright. This seems true of the medical and chemical fields where treating the symptoms of AID and cancer offer more profit to the Conspirators than the cure. If you doubt this, read the well documented "Murder by Injection, The Story of the Medical Conspiracy Against America" by Eustace Mullins. However, in the case of Environmentalism, world control of the earth is the goal, and it is to be attained as soon as possible. Hence the promotion of the June Earth Summit in Rio where the Conspirators hope to have a Control Contract signed and approved by all the Nations of the world.

Crisis Management demands Financial Management; and this is where the Merchant Bankers and the Multinational Corporations come into the picture. They finance the crisis while their trained and well paid accomplices manage the crisis. In a book recently published in Australia we came across a statement that serves to explain depressions such as we are going through at present. In The Fine Print by Brian Wilshire, an Australian journalist, we read: "If there is a single statement which does more than any other to explain why productive countries and individuals have been encouraged to become hopelessly mired in debt, it is the extraordinary admission made in the United States Bankers' Association magazine of August 1924:

"Capital must protect itself in every possible way, both by combination and legislation. Debts must be collected, mortgages foreclosed as rapidly as possible. When, through process of law, the common people lose their homes, they will become docile and more easily managed through the strong arm of government applied by a central power of wealth under leading financiers. These truths are well known among our principal men, who are now engaged in forming an imperialism to govern the world. By dividing the voter through the political party system we can get them to expend their energies in fighting for questions of no importance. It is thus, by discreet action, we can secure for ourselves that which has been so well planned and so successfully accomplished.' This statement was reprinted in the Idaho Leader, USA, on August 26th, 1924, and has been read into the Australian Hansard (equivalent to the US Congressional Record) twice." The author also noted: "Liberal MP, William C. Wentworth, wrote in The Australian newspaper of February 7th, 1989 that, during a voyage from New York to London in July 1929, the governor of the Bank of England, Montague Norman, had confided in him that, in a few months, there would be an economic 'shake-out.' Norman had been on a secret visit to the US Central Bank [FED], travelling incognito. Wentworth wrote that, ever since the Great Depression [which followed as predicted] he had ceased to place unquestioning trust in the wisdom of the central bankers, who had conspired on a sanitized, cool, centralized world economy'...something he felt was inappropriate to a world of separate, sovereign nations."

These central bankers aren't backing Earth Summit to save the earth; they're doing it to save themselves while making a profit. On 9/11/87 in Denver a World Conservation Bank was created. James Baker keynoted, David Rockefeller spoke, Edmund de Rothschild supervised. The bank "would finance...the preparation, development & implementation of national conservation strategies..." Governments would set aside important areas for "World Heritage Listing." Then the bankers would "trade for equity." That is, the nation's foreign or national debt or portions thereof would be offered in trade for the title deeds to the Heritage Listed Lands. We understand that Brazil, Costa Rica, Bolivia and Equador have already signed for such transactions. Conspirators predict they will own at least 30% of all the earth by the year 2000. As for we, the people, Brian Wilshire wrote, "Our only purpose will be to provide them with entertainment and organic spare parts. When the credit runs out no one will feed us unless they need us."

After writing this background report we began to understand how Daniel must have felt when, in a vision, the Lord told him of a coming king of the world who "shall also stand up against the Prince of princes; but he shall be broken without hand....And I Daniel, fainted, and was sick certain days: afterward I rose up, and did the king's business; and I was astonished at the vision, but none understood it." (Daniel 8:25,26. Emphasis added).

"CHANGING IMAGES OF MANKIND"

H.G.Wells, novelist, historian, and futurist was a member of the Fabian Society. But in time he grew to dislike the strategy employed by the Fabian Socialists in their task of building a New World Order. So he resigned from the Society, but he remained a Socialist. The Fabians stress gradualism in their efforts. Slowly and secretly, through legislation, infiltration and permeation they would gain control over the government bureaucracy, over churches, universities, labor unions and all segments of the communications media. Wells approved of the Fabian purposes and programs, but he objected to their secretiveness. He believed they should work openly, not clandestinely and surreptitiously. So he proposed that the New World Order be created through what he called an Open Conspiracy. You'll remember that Socialist Carroll Quigley, in his most revealing book Tragedy and Hope, voiced the same objection to the strategy employed by the Anglo-American Establishment. He approved of the Capitalist-Communist Conspiracy, but he objected to the secrecy employed. He had been permitted for two years to examine the records and papers of the Elite and wrote, "I have no aversion to it or most of its aims and have, for much of my life, been close to it and to many of its instruments. I have objected, both in the past and recently, to a few of its policies....but in general any chief difference of opinion is that it wished to remain unknown, and I believe its role in history is significant enough to be known." (From "Tragedy and Hope," page 950. Published in 1966). So socialist Quigley's chief objection to the Conspiracy was that of H.G.Wells, expressed almost half a century earlier. He disliked the secrecy, called for an Open Conspiracy and wrote as a futurist words which seem as if they might have been written today: "The character of the Open Conspiracy will now be plainly displayed. It will become a great world movement as widespread and evident as socialism or communism. It largely will take the place of these movements. It will be more, it will be a world religion." (Underlining added for emphasis). Since the active merging of East and West has begun, the Conspirators are striving to make their efforts an Open Conspiracy. The merging of governments and nations seems capable of accomplishment, now must come the crusade to merge peoples and religions. In this respect, we recall the words of Aldous Huxley, Socialist and author of The Brave New World, who wrote: "A really efficient totalitarian state would be one in which the all-powerful executive of political bosses and their army of managers control a population of slaves who do not have to be coerced, because they love their servitude. To make them love it is the task assigned in present-day totalitarian states, to ministers of propaganda, newspaper editors and schoolteachers." He wrote that before radio and television had been developed. Now, in these eight years before the 'millennium,' while politics and economics are being merged, there remains the important task of merging the peoples, their cultures, ethnics and religions. One time honored way is through migration. The so-called lost tribes of Israel were lost because the people were forcibly moved from their homes to new countries with different cultures and religions. The Soviet Union survived for as long as it did by the movement and admixture of peoples throughout the empire and, secondly, by the murder of the millions who did not fit into their scheme of things.

In this connection, population control has been one of the programs promoted by the Conspirators, especially by the Club of Rome and its subsidiaries. Secretly, there is the plan to reduce the population of the United States for the false reasons of insufficient space, food, etc. But we were surprised, in opening the March 1992 edition of World Press Review to find a full page devoted to the manner in which this population reduction is to be accomplished. To publish this in a magazine that can be purchased at any well stocked newsstand, struck us as evidence of how the merging of peoples and population reduction is to be sold to the people.

The following appeared on page 35 of the March 1992 issue of World Press Review. A few unimportant sentences have been omitted, along with address and request for membership in Negative Population Growth, Inc.

Why We Need a Smaller U.S. Population and How We Can Achieve It

We need a smaller population in order to halt the destruction of our environment, and to create an economy that will be sustainable over the very long term. We are trying to address our steadily worsening environmental problems without coming to grips with our root cause - overpopulation... All efforts to save our environment will ultimately be futile unless we not only halt U.S. population growth, but reverse it, so that our population can eventually be stabilized at a sustainable level - far lower than it is today. ...We believe these goals can best be achieved with a U.S. population in the range of 125 to 150 million, or about its size in the 1940s. This optimum size could be reached in about three to four generations if we do two things now that are well within our grasp....

1. Reduce annual immigration to about 200,000 so that it is in rough balance with emigration (out-migration). Then, immigration will no longer contribute significantly to our population growth, as it does now.

2. Lower our fertility rate (the average number of children per woman) from the present 2.1 to around 1.5 and maintain it at that level for several decades. We believe that non-coercive financial incentives will be necessary in order to reach that goal. If almost all women had no more than two children, our fertility rate would drop to around 1.5 because many women remain childless by choice, or choose to have no more than one child. We promote the ideal of the two-child maximum family as the special norm because that is the key to lowering our fertility. NPG (Negative Population Growth, Inc.) Proposes These Incentives to Motivate Parents to Have Not More Than Two Children:

- * Eliminate the present Federal income tax exemption for dependent children born after a specific date.
- * Give a Federal income tax credit only to those parents who have not more than two children. Those with three or more would lose the credit entirely.
- * Give a refundable tax credit (cash payment) to low income parents who are eligible for the tax credit, to the extent that the credit exceeds their tax liability.
- * Give a cash bonus for voluntary sterilization to both men and women under age 35, who have already had at least one child.

With the reductions in immigration and fertility we advocate, our nation could start now on the path toward a sustainable population of 125 to 150 million. Without such a program, we are almost certain to continue our mindless headlong rush toward catastrophic population levels.

It should be noted that this advertisement presents the non-coercive (love of money via tax credits) carrot method of creating the desired "population of slaves who do not have to be coerced, because they love their servitude." However, for those who resent and reject the carrot, George Bernard Shaw described the stick method: "...You might possibly be executed in a kindly manner." Due to human nature the managers of the Environmental Movement admit that their worst problem is getting the masses to conform to their commands. And this problem seemed unsolvable until the Globalists hit upon the Environmental Movement. "In searching for a new enemy to unite us," they said, "we came upon the idea that pollution, the threat of global warming, water shortages, famine and the like would fit the bill." So they called upon their Global Government, the UN (some call it Babel-on-the-Hudson), to create the necessary Global Crisis. Maurice Strong of UNCED went to work in organizing the greatest summit ever to be held on earth, with all the heads of state of all the states to attend and make plans to "clean up the planet" in Rio. As a rebuttal, the following appeared in Champs Elysees, Paris 12/91; was translated into English and published by Access to Energy (1/92); again reprinted by Franklin Sanders, Jr, of The Eco-Profiteer (4/92); is now being reprinted in DBR (May Day 1992):

"Haroun Tazlieff, a 77-year-old Polish-born Frenchman, is a world-famous volcanologist who has taught at many universities, headed many expeditions and research institutes, worked for UNESCO, and most recently was France's secretary of state for the prevention of major natural and technological disasters. Asked in a recent interview about global warming, he replied:

"'Global warming is an outright invention. It is absolutely unproven and in my view it is a lie. A lie that will cost billions of dollars annually. It's just like it was about 20 years ago, when a ban was proclaimed on pyralenes, dioxin, etc., which were accused of all evils and which are practically harmless substances. It's the same thing with the CFCs, the chlorofluorocarbins. There is no danger from the CFCs to the ozone layer, nor is there any danger from CO₂, no greenhouse effect, nor any risk of any kind of global warming. It is, to me, a pure falsehood'."

This falsehood is being exposed by any number of honest scientists and, while the lie may be influencing some of the people at the local level and some of the governments at the global level, Earth Summit is in trouble. At this writing President Bush has refused to go to Rio to head the Earth Summit, though we're reading his lips.

There seems to be a pattern. Whenever the Elite managers decide to announce a Summit involving heads of state, a preliminary meeting is held by the Bilderbergers, or the Trilateral Commissioners, or whatever internationalist club or organization is directly concerned. The purpose is to prepare a blueprint, to draw up instructions or recommendations which are to be approved by and carried out by the governments involved. This pattern was carried out by the Globalists who called for the Earth Summit to be held next month. The preparatory conference was held on April 3rd and 4th. There it was intended that the blueprint for a World Charter for environmental control was to be prepared for presentation to the 150-odd heads of state or government expected to attend the Earth Summit. But the preliminary conference ended in a fuzzy stalemate, due to arguments about how the multibillions were to be raised and by whom, to finance the cleanup of the earth. America's share was said to be $70 billion for the first year and, in the midst of national elections and disapproval of the federal government's spending habits, the amount was not pledged. So Earth Summit suffered and its success seemed doubtful. Then came Earth Day which should have given a boost to global cleaning. But Earth Day also fizzled. If the print media was correct, and occasionally it is, Earth Day was celebrated principally by cultists, occultists and ultra-radical environmentalists. It contributed little toward its purpose of making people eager to demand World Government to save the earth. So, now, if Earth Summit is to be a success for the Rulers of the World, George Bush must be forced to attend the Rio Summit and act in the assumed capacity of president of the world. But, at this writing Bush is very busy assuring that his re-election of the presidency of the United States is in the bag. Syndicated columnist Ben Wattenberg, a senior fellow of the American Enterprise Institute, wrote about Earth Summit, noted that in earlier times the ideas were the same but the names were different: "The New International Economic Order", "The Law of the Sea", "The Brundtland Report". "But the theme is always the same, he said. "The United Nations gets the power, the Third World gets the money. The generic argument has gone this way: Poor nations are poor because rich nations are rich, and rich nations should pay poor nations reparations. The transfer should proceed under a cloak of crisis ("the sea", "the environment"). The terms of transfer should be centrally regulated by UN bureaucrats. The more definite Earth Summit idea, still mostly hidden behind mountains of platitudinous and weasel-worded documents, goes this way: We need general environmental cleanup and, particularly, emission control to deal with 'global warming'. Poor nations are too poor to do it. Rich nations must pay them to do it. Rich nations will raise the money by taxing their citizens for energy use....The ultimate costs are about $70 billion per year in new foreign aid. And the biggest donors would be nations where energy is used for such ignoble pollutions as single-family houses, two cars per household, and air-conditioning. Like - surprise - America".

Should we read Senator Albert Gore's lips? In USA TODAY (4/28/92) he is quoted as saying: "President Bush has now come to the private political judgment that he wants to go to the summit because if it takes place with every other major world leader and he is the only one who refuses to go his isolation would not only be embarrassing to him and our country, but would have grave political consequences for him as well." So, if pragmatism is to override principal, Bush will go to the Summit in Rio in June. This would seem to confirm the Globalist belief that this Earth Summit is the one sure way by which all the nations of all the earth can be, to paraphrase Don McAlvany, slam dunked into their UN-backed world government. The "old red" has turned "green" at the prospects. If Bush makes the Earth Summit a success, then we may as well say farewell to our sovereignty. Let us pray and cling to the Words of our Master:

"Thou shalt not be afraid for the terror by night; nor for the arrow that flieth by day; Nor for the pestilence that walketh in darkness; nor for the destruction that wasteth at noonday....Because thou hast made the Lord, which is my refuge, even the most High, thy habitation; There shall be no evil befall thee; neither shall any plague come nigh thy dwelling. For he shall give his angels charge over thee, to keep thee in all thy ways." (91st Psalm; verses 5,6,9,10,11).

MULTICULTURAL MADNESS

Watching the fire and the smoke, the looting and the killing, buildings turning to ashes, people must have remembered that "This has happened before." And when history repeats, the second time is always more costly, more painful, more awful than the first. The first time, on August 11, 1965 a white police officer arrested a black man he suspected of driving under the influence of alcohol or drugs. It was a signal. A riot erupted, and before the fires were quenched 34 people were dead. It was obvious to only a few, but the results of the riot helped set the scene for another of President Lyndon Johnson's Great Society measures. 53 days after Watts began, on October 3, 1965 in a ceremony staged at the foot of the Statue of Liberty, LBJ signed into law the Immigration Reform Act of 1965. It was one of the most far-reaching legislative enactments in our Nation's history. As the Paris Peace Treaty ending the shooting phase of the First World War outlined the blueprint for the Second World War, so did this Immigration Reform Act prepare the way for further civil riots by eliminating the National Origins Quota that had governed our immigration policy since the 1920s. We'll explain the connection later.

On April 29, 1992 in Simi Valley, not far from Watts, a jury of twelve (10 Whites, one Hispanic, one Asian) rendered one of the most universally criticized verdicts ever delivered by an American jury from a supposed Hall of Justice in modern times. And, as the arrest of a Black in Watts became the signal for an outbreak of civil violence, the verdict of this jury was considered the signal to armed gangs, illegal aliens, "downtrodden" criminals among the minorities, Whites, Blacks, Hispanics, Asians and otherwise to become automatic robbers, arsonists, vandals, and murderers. When there was comparative peace, though the fires still burned, President Bush came, saw the devastation through the windows of his armor-plated limousine, and promised that "Justice will be done."

An incidental aftermath. Much condemned Police Chief Daryl Gates admitted that he should have left his fund-raising seat at the banquet table and gone immediately to his duties as police officer. He also admitted that he and his fellow officers had been too slow in reacting to the crisis, and that perhaps deadly force should have been used at the beginning of the tragedy. Ironically, the day after Gates had spoken of using deadly force, the police had an opportunity to threaten its use. There was a small group of demonstrators who began to rally, hoping "to talk to the State of California and address the needs of the people with AIDS and the jobless." All 24 of them gathered to demonstrate in front of City Hall, when 175 police and 25 National Guard troops moved in, surrounded them, dispersed 16 of them and arrested the other eight and took them to jail. The group had a permit to hold the rally, but Bob Erlinger who represented the LA Coalition for the Homeless said, "They (the police) didn't care if we had a permit. They said, 'We own the city'." So the police were wrong twice; first for not moving quickly to try to prevent the violent riot, and secondly for moving too quickly to prevent a peaceful demonstration. Perhaps no one told them that "The right of the people to peaceably assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances," is a part of the First Amendment to the Constitution of the US.

The two riots that were not Constitutional - Watts and LA - were 27 years apart yet similar, repeat performances featuring death, destruction and governmental mishandling. But there the difference ends. The Watts riot involved only Whites and Blacks. But this most recent horror involved at least four racial and ethnic groups; Whites, Blacks, Hispanics, Asians and legal and illegal aliens who are not citizens, have no interest in the Nation or its affairs beyond handouts from Health and Human Services, other Great Society hangovers, and charitable organizations. And that's where the Immigration Reform Act of 1965 comes into the picture.

Beginning in the late 19th century a great tide of immigrants came into the United States. Many of them were so different in appearance and habits from the earlier Americans that they aroused fears of a changed America' racially, ethnically and religiously. So the National Origins Act was passed, limiting the percentage of immigrants from any country to that nationality's existing proportion of the US population. It was intended to preserve America's ethnic composition. Renewed under the McCarran-Walter Act of 1952, the immigration quota was altered somewhat, limited entries from countries outside the Western Hemisphere to 158,361, 70% of which were earmarked for Britain, Ireland and Germany. Asian countries were limited to 100 immigrants per year (although thousands more were admitted as refugees).

Then in the 1960s changes began. The "Interdependence" slogan was voiced by President Kennedy, the crusade for World Government was well under way, nations without borders was being proposed, along with the idea that there should be no ban on immigration, and there should no longer be any discrimination against anyone on the basis of color, national origin, ethnical background or cultural habits. Kennedy proposed an immigration bill that failed to get through Congress. But then came Lyndon Johnson who "knew how to handle Congress" and with support from Senator Ted Kennedy the new Immigration Act of 1965 was passed and signed into law. That bill "can best be understood as a civil rights bill applied to the world at large," commented Lawrence Auster in his book The Path to National Suicide, an Essay on Immigration and Multiculturalism. (Copies available from The American Immigration Control Foundaton, Monterey, VA 24465).

Ted Kennedy was chairman of the Senate subcommittee hearing the new immigration bill, as well as its floor manager. In introducing the bill everything he said would not happen seemed to happen when it became law. He told his fellow Senators: "Onr cities will not be flooded with a million immigrants annually....Secondly, the ethnic mix of this country will not be upset....Contrary to the charges in some quarters, S. 500 will not inundate America with immigrants from any one country or area, or the most populated and economically deprived of Africa and Asia....In the final analysis, the ethnic pattern of immigration under the proposed measure is not expected to change as sharply as the critics seem to think." One of those critics was Myra C. Hacker of the New Jersey Coalition, who said the bill if enacted would spread to an actual increase of 125,000 over the then current 270,000, making a total of 400,000 a year. "However," she added, "The bill offers such broad discretionary powers to the Attorney General that the overall yearly number could well rise to a half million or more." She was wrong. She underestimated the number of immigrants that would be pouring into the United States a quarter of a century later.

In 1988 Joel Kotkin and Yoriko Kishimoto wrote a book, The Third Century in which they said, "In the quest to become a true world nation. ...the United States must break away from its European roots and begin treating Asian history and culture equally with those of the West." And that seemed to form the pattern for the One Worlders: To change the ethnic, cultural, political and economic make-up of the United States. The door had been opened for Third World immigration and, noted Lawrence Auster, "Almost overnight, without debate or public awareness of what was happening, mainstream opinion adopted a new credo: 'We must respect all cultures equally.' 'All cultures are equally enriching.' 'America's strength lies in its diversity.'" These slogans have become articles of our national faith, without thinking too clearly about what they really mean. The myth of unlimited diversity tells us that the mass influx from Latin American and Asia represents, not a departure from our history, but its fulfillment." Father Florencio M. Rigoni may have said it more clearly when he spoke at a Mexican Bishop's Conference in 1988: "The march of Latin America to the United States shouldn't be understood as a wave of anger of revolutionary passion, but more as a peaceful conquest." (Underlining added).

Is this peaceful conquest succeeding? The April 10, 1992 issue of the reliable British Intelligence Digest calls it a crisis and says that "Both the US and Western Europe will sooner or later have to take drastic action to cope with the problem of immigration and ethnic pluralism. The crisis in the United States is the greatest, but Europe, too, will have its moment of truth....In the 1990s one million alien immigrants a year are expected (in the US)....Because more than 80% of immigration to the US is from Latin America and Asia, racial and ethnic diversity is on the rise....Illegal immigration is growing. Six years after the passage of a law intended to halt the flow of illegal aliens from Mexico, immigration officials expect that the number of people apprehended at the border this year may reach or exceed the peak levels recorded before the law was signed....Daniel James, president of the Mexico-United States Institute, and a specialist in Latin American affairs, laments that there is a conspiracy of silence with little real serious discussion and debate about the ramifications of such immigration. He believes that the illegal aliens already constitute 'a threat to our very sovereignty'." This was written before the recent Los Angeles trouble. Alan E. Eliason, former chief of the Border Patrol's San Diego Sector says that: "We see building up in the US a population who lives outside the norm, outside the law. They are a subclass which is not participating in the democratic process. What attachment do they have in this country?" We might answer that question by saying this population that lives "outside the law" is poised and waiting for any opportunity to start riots and civil disturbance. They are performing the peaceful conquest and are in the United States demanding welfare and assisting the Ruling Elite's promotion of multiculturalism on behalf of the Club of Rome and its subsidiaries, one of which is the Bilderberg Group. Latest on illegal immigration: The April 1992 issue of Border Watch reports that "Illegal aliens are using the nation's international airports to enter the United States. More than 10,000 are expected to come through New York's Kennedy Airport this year." Editor John Vinson explains: "We do not suggest that people lawfully entitled to benefits should not have them. Our point is that if we keep passing laws to benefit aliens, i.e., new amnesties, then future claims will rise higher and higher.....Multiculturalism is the name of the current movement to undercut the core of Western values....Carried to its logical conclusion, multiculturalism will lead to national breakup - maybe something like Lebanon."

Lawrence Auster says there is a question that needs to be asked. "Is America's entire three hundred and fifty year history up to 1965, during which it drew its people and its civilizational roots predominantly from England and Europe, totally irrelevant to a definition of our national character? The multiculturalists say yes, In the words of former California Supreme Court Justice Cruz Reynoso: 'America is a political union--not a cultural, linguistic, religious or racial union.'... Mr. Reynoso seems to be saying that the United States is nothing but a blank slate--a sort of political abstraction lacking any cultural identity that has a right to be preserved. Since, for example, we are not a 'linguistic' union, the English language has no special status; we could turn into a Japanese or Spanish-speaking society tomorrow and, according to Mr. Reynoso, this would in no way change America's essential character, since, in his view, America has no character."

Correction, please. Mr. Auster's statement is true up to a point. But America's character did not derive from the fact that for 350 years its civilizational roots were drawn from England and Europe, nor from its people. America's character was based on the belief that our experiment in government, as proclaimed in the Declaration of Independence and enumerated in the Constitution, is part of God's plan. For 300 years every American and every immigrant who became an American, Christian or otherwise, accepted this belief and abided by what was a Christian Order. Later, especially since 1913, Americans in droves have strayed and betrayed the Faith of our Fathers; and what California Supreme Court Justice says could become true, and our Nation could be lost in the Multicultural Madness that is part of the New World Order. Samuel Adams expressed the glory of the American Revolution by crying: "We have today restored the Sovereign!" Today, we believe that American liberty and independence cannot survive unless the Lord's Sovereign Jurisdiction over this government is restored. Otherwise we remain on The Path to National Suicide.

Finally, a warning. Two centuries ago Professor Alexander Fraser Tytler penned some words that should be familiar: "A Democracy cannot exist as a permanent form of Government. It can only exist until the voters discover they can vote themselves largess out of the public treasury. From that moment on the majority always votes for the candidate promising the most benefits from the public treasury with the result that Democracy always collapses over a loose financial policy, always to be followed by a Dictatorship." Sadly, we have become a Democracy and the time may have come when a Dictatorship and a Dictator may be awaiting the call of the people. We are informed that H. Ross Perot favors gun control, tolerates the killing of babies, promotes the income tax for Texas and as far as we have been able to learn (he's very silent on his political beliefs), he seems to be a Corporate Socialist, or Fascist. Unfortunately, neither Bush nor Clinton offer a preferable alternative. So, we intend to vote for an Independent or Third Party candidate, or Buchanan if available. Such a vote should register a protest. A similar vote against any incumbent Congressman could make a difference, come November 3, 1992.

"Beloved, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they are of God: because many false prophets have gone out into the world."

A NEW "EARTH ETHIC" ?

They're all flying down to Rio. All the heads of state and government will be there with George Bush leading them. Attending will be all the ranking subordinates and lackeys who serve the elitists who rule the world. Chairing the summit will be Maurice Strong, Secretary General of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (UNCED). And lending support to the delegates within the halls will be the leaders and members of the foundation-supported Non-Governmental Organizations (NGOs) such as the Sierra Club, the National Resources Defense Council, the Environmental Defense League, the National Audubon Society, the Native Wildlife Federation, Friends of the Earth, the Rockefeller created Environmental Task Force, and other NGOs of lesser funds and influence. All of these NGOs, so they won't get in each other's way promoting special interests, have been formed into a network called the Consortium for Action to Protect the Earth '92 (CAPE '92). And while the official delegates meet within the circle, surrounded by the NGOs, all the religious groups will be meeting around the edges of the political encampment from June 3 to 14, 1992. We hear the Dalai Lama (god in person to the Buddhists of Tibet and Mongolia) will serve as spokesman for the religionist group of thousands, composed of heads of many Christian denominations, thousands of Muslims, Hindus, Baha'is, those who say they are Jews, and worshippers of the goddess Gaia, Mother Earth. The World Council of Churches will sponsor a week-long meeting titled "Searching for the New Heaven and the New Earth." The Franciscans will head the Catholic group, that will hold an "Eco-Theological" seminar while also conducting an ongoing vigil at the Mahatma Gandhi Plaza. The Brazilian Government, as host, will sponsor a forum of religious leaders, scientists, parliamentarians, artists and women (sic.). It is expected to be the largest event of the summit, apart from the conference itself. And the conference will be concerned with writing a World Constitution which will deal with ways and means of eliminating "natural pollutants," cooling down the predicted "global warming," cutting down on the emission of carbon dioxide, stalling the rate of ozone depletion, adopting plans to prevent over-population, acid rain, nuclear fallout, clean air and water, and depriving land owners of the right to use their land in any manner other than that permitted by UNCED or its local or regional representative.

The culmination of this environmental global scam provides an excellent example of how the elitist's lackeys utilize the Hegelian Dialectic to attain an objective:

- 1) A crisis is discovered or created. In this case industrial pollution, global warming, ozone depletion, overpopulation, food shortages, deforestation, acid rain, nuclear fallout, clean air and clean water needs; these are all packaged together to create a Global Crisis.
- 2) The masses are made aware of the crisis through the media, public meetings and speeches, sermons, conferences, etc., and are used to incite and excite the public into demanding a solution which will save and protect our common home, Mother Earth.
- 3) The pre-planned solution is presented to and accepted by world leaders at a specially called conference (Earth Summit). The people cheer as their leaders approve and sign into world law via UN Treaties the applicable measures for controlling the crisis, and incidentally giving greater power to a growing One World Government. Here in the United States the Dialectic developed as follows:

We have no way of proving this, but from our intense though limited research, it seems that The Club of Rome was assigned the leadership in this environmental "Management by Crisis" project, with the Foundations, CFR, TC, Bilderberger and other internationalist clubs, and the New Ager Network, all joining in to "complete the job" in the promillennial decade of the 1990s. Accordingly the Club of Rome which previously headquartered in England, held its first conference in the United States in 1969. In order to hasten the work, the "Scissors Strategy" was decided upon; that is, pressure to be applied from above and below simultaneously. At the top of the pressure pyramid, in July 1970 President Nixon submitted to Congress his plan to create an "Environmental Protection Agency." Congress immediately concurred and the EPA began operating in December 1970. According to Robert E. Lee, writing in The New American, 5/1/92: "In 1990 according to the EPA's own figures, the agency's environmental regulations cost each American family around $1,000, or a total of about $115 billion. The tab will exceed $130 billion this year." While EPA began its pressure at the top of the pyramid, below at the grass roots level there was organized the 1970 Earth Day observance. Also at about this same time Laurance Rockefeller, David's brother, using Rockefeller Brothers funds, organized the Environmental Task Force, whose task was primarily propaganda, publicity and promotion of the Environmental Crisis scam. In 1972 the program "went global" with the UN Stockholm Conference on the Environment. Concurrently CFR member Lester Brown, president of Worldwatch Institute, wrote World Without Borders in which he stated: "Arresting the deterioration of the environment does not seem possible within the existing framework of independent nation-states....The list of national problems which can be solved only at the global level is lengthening." (From Lawrence Cuddy's important "Now is the Dawning of the New Age World Order." Second printing scheduled for June, 1992. Hearthstone Publishing, PO Box 815, Oklahoma City, OK 73101). In 1974 CFR and TC member, former Ambassador to Italy Richard Gardner, got into the act. You'll remember his plan for building the "House of World Order" through "an end run around National sovereignty, eroding it piece by piece." He also wrote: "The next few years should see a continued strengthening of the new global and regional agencies charged with protecting the world's environment." (Foreign Affairs, 4/74.) Then to strengthen the pressure below, Laurance Rockefeller wrote an article that appeared in the 1976 issue of Reader's Digest in which he stated that "Either through voluntary discipline or through state compulsion, human society would have to be reconstructed. He predicted that "authoritarian controls" could be necessary to "save the earth." The following year, 1977, the Rockefeller Task Force published The Unfinished Agenda, a "consensus document" intended as a blueprint for global environmental policies. It proposed all the things that are to be discussed and supposedly approved by an estimated 160 heads of state and/or government at the Rio Earth Summit: population control (using abortion and sterilization), redistribution of the world's food supplies through a transnational food cartel, the adoption of water distributional policies, severe taxes on gasoline and other disincentives for automobile ownership, recycling surcharges on consumer items, etc. The report also recommended the appointment of a three-person "Economic Planning Board" that would preside over America's economy; the board would be appointed, not elected." (From "Pressure from Above and Below" by William Norman Grigg in The New American 5/1/92).

It was in 1976 that the Environmental scheme received a temporary set-back. You may recall that, in the '70s, prior to the Global Warming scare, the liberal, glory-seeking, foundation-supported scientists predicted that an "Ice Age" was going to freeze the world. John F. McManus wrote: "On April 21, 1968, London's Sunday Telegraph carried an unsettling article headlined 'Strange Case of Climate Shift,' which detailed the view of several prestigious authorities who saw signs that the earth was steadily getting colder. Climate expert Gordon Manley of Lancaster University told the Telegraph that it appeared as if '1950 was a peak [in warmth]' and declared that 'there are signs that the glaciers may be advancing again.' By 1977 the US Academy of Sciences declared outright that a new ice age 'is upon us,' pointing to 'evidence as diverse as the duration of the arctic snow cover, animal migration, sea surface temperatures, and microfossils on the ocean floor.'" This must have come as a real shock to the builders of the New World Order. Because scientists couldn't suggest any way to stop Mother Nature if she decided to put Mother Earth in cold storage. So this "ice age" scare had to be replaced with propaganda that would convince people that they could do something about "saving the earth." Earth warming instead of earth cooling ought to fill the bill. So wrote Mr. McManus, "The ridiculous 'ice age' scare of 15 years ago has now been replaced by headlines insisting that mankind's wasteful and dangerous habits are forcing the earth's temperature upward with potentially cataclysmic consequences. This trendy theory [is] known as 'global warming'."

Now, let's go beyond global warming, ozone holes, acid rain and all the other items the Insiders have bound together like a fascis (symbol of Fascism, equally applicable to its twin, Corporate Socialism), to fabricate a global crisis that would stir the people of the world into requesting, even demanding, world government in order to save the earth. Or, we might substitute the terminology used by the Trilateral Commission in promoting UNCED and its upcoming Earth Summit: Beyond Interdependence to The Meshing of the World's Economy and the Earth's Ecology.

In World War Two scientists created a crisis for the world's megabankers and the earth's industrial developers. The atom bomb and the rapid advancements in the new technological era convinced the Conspirators that they must never promote another world war. Prior to 1945 the megabankers who are said to rule the world, made their big money through wars they sometimes initiated. The bankers would finance the nations that went to war. But the atom bomb made this impractical. If the so-called rulers of the world were to have anything or anyone to rule over, something had to be found to replace wars, such as the one that might develop between the US and the USSR. The fear of nuclear war must be proclaimed but the act of war must never be permitted. Ergo, a substitute for war must be found. In the meanwhile, the Cold War provided a temporary solution. By scaring people into fearing a nuclear war, preparations for war could continue. And limited, controlled wars were permitted; wars like the one that occurred on a peninsula known as Korea, or a similar water bound land mass like the one in Southeast Asia. A war between Iran and Iraq could be kept within bounds, and it would help the earth's alleged overpopulation control. But the Insiders were careful that no such wars should ever be won by either contestant. All of America's later wars were no win affairs, including Desert Storm which was ordered ended before it was finished.

Also, when it was commanded that no more great wars be fought or won, it was also commanded that the nations be merged. And with that latter command began the serious search for "Substitutes for the Functions of War." Accordingly, CFR Insiders in the Kennedy Administration in the summer of 1963, convened a Special Study Group of 15 men who met secretly and regularly at Iron Mountain, New York. Their task: To come up with a substitute for war, and at the same time promote the goals of World Government and the New World Order. It took this Special Study Group more than two years before their mission was completed. But their report was secret, classified, not to be published, and read only by the members of the Inner Circle of the Conspiracy. However, after nearly three years of silence, one of the 15, alleged to be John Kenneth Galbraith, felt the report was so important that it ought to be published. You'll remember Carroll Quigley had the same feeling, that the Conspiracy was so important that it should not be kept a secret. So he wrote the revealing Tragedy and Hope. Likewise, Galbraith had his way and in 1967 the Report From Iron Mountain on the Possibility and Desirability of Peace was published. A rather limited edition, but we were able to obtain a copy. On page 66 of the Report are these words:

"It may be, for instance, that gross pollution of the environment can eventually replace the possibility of mass destruction by nuclear weapons as the apparent threat to the survival of the species....It constitutes a threat that can be dealt with only through social organization and political power. But from present indications it will be a generation to a generation and a half before environmental pollution, however severe, will be sufficiently menacing on a global scale, to offer a possible basis for solution." But in 1963 the 15 Wise Men didn't know that global warming, ozone holes and such would be added to the threat of environmental pollution to shorten the years. Two years ago UNCED published a booklet, In Our Hands: Earth Summit '92 which asserts: "The world community now faces together greater risks to our common security through our impacts on the environment than from traditional military conflicts with one another....We must now force a new 'Earth Ethic' which will inspire all peoples and nations to join in a new global partnership of North, South, East and West." And two years ago the UNCED Preparatory Committee formed working groups to write treaties, agreements and programs dealing with 'sustainable development', 'biodiversity', oceans, fresh waters, air, land-use laws, sewage, hazardous waste, population growth, forests, deserts, transportation, energy, health care, housing, taxation, and so on. As Mr. William Jasper in The New American declared: "There is virtually no area of human activity or environmental concern that they have not arrogated as their own to plan, supervise, regulate and control." "An end run around national sovereignty, eroding it piece by piece," said Richard Gardner. Now you should understand why this Earth Summit is so very important. Concluded Mr. Jasper: "It's the UN Constitution versus the UN Charter, inalienable God-given rights and freedom versus New World Order slavery, private property versus socialism, and pantheism versus biblical morality." Get ready for the fight when the Greenies return from Rio.

"...and having done all, to stand." (Eph. 6:13).

Year Thirty-Nine.....Number Twelve.....June 12, 1992

CRISIS MANAGEMENT

ITEM. On September 22, 1792, the Illuminati and the Jacobin leaders announced the establishment of their New World Order, to begin in France and then expand to include all of Europe and, finally, the rest of the world. But seven years later, in 1799, the government's Directory was in deep trouble, economically collapsed, politically in turmoil, and the rabble that survived the revolution was in revolt against the revolutionaries. A leader was needed who could control the mobs and restore law and order. There was at the time a little Corsican Corporal who had achieved great popularity because of his achievements in battle and had risen in the ranks to become a general. So the members of the Directory asked Napoleon Bonaparte to take charge, and the people agreed and rallied to his leadership. From corporal to general to First Consul to King to Emperor and finally to Master of Europe, rose Napoleon as he set all the continent aflame. But 20 years after he began, came the flight from Moscow in 1812, and the defeat at Waterloo three years later. And the attempt to establish and maintain a New World Order by military means was ended. George Bush, two centuries later, with his Desert Storm declared to be the first step in establishing a New World Order, might think upon the exploits of the little corporal from Corsica. But the point we wish to stress; When a government was in chaos, a dictator arose and was chosen by the people to lead them....to eventual disaster.

ITEM. 70 years ago, in 1922, economic chaos, wounded nationalism, trouble with the Church, near anarchy and civil instability engulfed Italy. The people sought a leader who could restore order. So a socialist editor named Benito Mussolini led a "March on Rome", and Corporate Socialism, then called Fascism, was installed as a form of government. This former journalist to win the support of the people, announced that he would create a New World Order in the Mediterranean area, began by launching a war against Ethiopia. Our point: When the country was in chaos a dictator arose who was backed by the people. Later the people left him hanging by his heels.

ITEM, 63 years ago a country suffering from impossible reparations demands by its victors in a previous war, found its Weimar Republic in seemingly unsolvable economic and political troubles. To make matters worse, their beloved leader, Gustav Stresemann, had died and there seemed no one to replace him. So a former Austrian housepainter, and like Napoleon a former corporal, arose, marched into Berlin, gained the plaudits of the people. He was acclaimed dictator, pledged to cleanse the land and secure "living space" for the people of Germany. You know the rest of the story. Our point: When the Republic was collapsing a dictator arose to lead the people, and the people applauded and followed his leadership. Until later, when he reportedly committed suicide, leaving the country and all of Europe in far greater trouble than when the corporal first began to command armies.

ITEM. In 1992 the government of the United States, no longer a Republic but a Welfare State Democracy about to become a Corporate Socialist State in a World Government, finds itself in a near state of chaos. Astro-nomical debt, massive unemployment, factories and plants moving to Mexico, China or East Europe, government school system hopeless, crime rampant, anarchy in densely populated areas...all to be expected if the people repudiate the faith of the builders of this land and become dependent upon the good will of other Nations if they are to survive. The two major political parties, as if they were separate and distinctly different, have offered to the people their choice between two Eastern Establishment selections. But both of them are being rejected by the people. They want a leader who will take charge, restore order, heal the land, revive the economy and provide jobs for the millions of unemployed. But the people, instead of seeking out such a leader, are happy when there appears almost out of nowhere a man who will pay his own way and do all the things the people want done, if they will only place his name in nomination in all the fifty States. Stating what he is against but refraining to say what he is for, the people rally to his unknown leadership. Our point: As once in France, Italy and Germany, will the people continue to praise and honor and vote for him without knowing?

Being a conspiracy buff, we keep wondering if this unique three-way contest may have been planned that way from the very beginning. And if it's true, the sure loser would be, strangely, George Bush. He was trained by the conspirators from his very childhood. His father, Prescott Bush, senator, financier, Skull & Bones member, an elite among elites, saw to this. Son George was given time to be considered an oil man and a Texas transplant, a war veteran, UN Delegate, Ambassador to China, CIA Director, Vice President under Reagan, then President in person and initiator and commander of Desert Storm, one of those "splendid little wars" the megabankers and oil magnates thrive upon. Then, most unusual, came the manner in which the controlled media began to downplay George Bush, while promoting Dan Quayle and even Mikhail Gorbachev when the latter was conducting his money-hunting tour of certain cities. Here was the chosen of the elite suddenly being criticized for the education president's misuse of language, for his failure as environmental president, and his lack of domestic programming, even being denied prime time by three TV networks to broadcast a message he thought important. The sudden shift may have come because of Bush's disagreement with the Zionists over that $10 billion loan to Israel. Or it may have been his failure with Japan. "Ever since the president returned from his ill-starred trip to Asia in January, he has done little that was not either inept or strictly by-the-book," commented The Economist, adding a strange statement: "In today's circumstances does a 67-year-old man with Graves disease really want to fight a bitter six-month campaign? Is he so sure in his own mind that he knows what he would want to do with a second term that he will put up with the ignominy of such a campaign?" So, maybe the elite is retiring Bush for fear of his health. Which leads to a striking statement by Lawrence Patterson of Criminal Politics: "The conspiracy is planning a last minute ticket switch at the Republican convention....You will have a choice between Dan Quayle, Ross Perot and, of course, 'Slick Willie'." Clinton was carefully chosen as Democratic candidate, just in case something didn't work out with Bush. A Rhodes Scholar, Governor of a Bible Belt State as was Jimmy Carter, CFR member, and he has all the other necessary credentials. Then, with Bush and Clinton assured of their majorities of delegates, CNN's Larry King, while interviewing Ross Perot, asked him: "Are there any circumstances under which you would run," Then came the "historic moment" when "Perot said that if he could get on the ballot in all 50 states, he'd give it some thought." Apparently he had given it plenty of thought when he hired Hamilton Jordan who masterminded Jimmy Carter's 1976 bid for the White House; and Ed Rollins, the force behind Ronald Reagan's 1984 landslide election. So, supposedly we have a three-way race that well could end in the House of Representatives. And that's a part of what worries your reporter. Please follow us as we strive to emulate Patrick Henry by resorting to history. First, we quote from the 10/31/66 issue of the Dan Smoot Report.

On August 25, 1965, President Johnson announced: "I have just concluded a breakfast meeting with the Cabinet and with the heads of Federal agencies, and I am asking each of them to immediately begin to introduce a very new and very revolutionary system of planning and programming and budgeting throughout the vast Federal Government....Under this new system each Cabinet and agency head will set up a very special staff of experts who...will define the goals of their department for the coming year. And once these goals are established this system will permit us to find the most effective and the least costly alternative to achieving American goals...So this new system will identify our national goals with precision and...enable us to fulfill the needs of all the American people with a minimum amount of waste." The President was talking about government by computers. Computers operated by a "very special staff of experts" will decide what is the "finer life" for all Americans; will postulate the decisions as "national goals"; will determine what action is needed by Congress and executive agencies to achieve these goals; and will designate how much tax money is required...The system is a management method [which] had marked success by Secretary McNamara in the Defense Department...Though decisions made by computers will be presented as deriving from infallible machines - beyond challenge by mere humans - the decisions will actually be predetermined by the "very special staff of experts" who feed weighted data into the machines. This is government by computers: the people are ruled by machines which are manipulated by an elite of bureaucrats.

PPBS was incorporated into the Executive Branch of Government on 10/12/65. Now generally called Crisis Management, it was developed by Tavistock of Britain, contracted by and adapted for American usage by Rand Corporation, principal think tank of our Defense Department at the time. Agents tried to sell the system to President Kennedy, who rejected it. But after his assassination, President Johnson accepted and installed PPBS. It's first tryout was the Vietnam War, under the direction of Robert Strange McNamara, then Secretary of Defense. In 1972 PPBS was being introduced into the public school system. At that time we published a series of DBRs (8/8/72 to 12/29/72) titled Proofs of a Conspiracy to Build a Total Socialist Global Society, now out of print. In the final, 17th report of that series, we wrote:

"The Computerized Socialist Control System (PPBS) was to have been a closely guarded secret. It was not to be mentioned to the people-at-large until after having been made a permanent fixture....Inherent in the overall plan was the necessity of changing the American form of government....The scheme called for the centralization of all political, economic and social control at one point, in Washington, D.C.; then the so-called decentralization of such controls into ten regional control points, to be designated as "Capitols of Ten Federal Regional Districts"...The fifty States have been divided between the Ten Federal Regions. The Ten Regional Councils take their orders from a group that has its offices in the White House Executive Offices Building....The Group is, of course, composed of appointed rather than elected officials...The Washington Group will give [computerized] orders to the Ten Regional Councils, which will in turn give orders to the fifty States, and the States will then execute these orders - or their operational funds will be cut off." As Dan Smoot observed: "This is government by computers: the people are ruled by machines which are manipulated by an elite of bureaucrats."

Along with computerized bureaucratic control was the necessity of designating and defining the particular duties and responsibilities of the various departments and agencies. On 6/22/73 we wrote: "Stated simply, the dictatorial power of the Executive rests primarily on three bases: EO 11490, EO 11647, and the Planning, Programming and Budgeting System.... EO 11490 is a compilation of some 23 previous Executive Orders, signed by Nixon on 10/28/69, and outlining emergency functions which are to be performed by some 28 Executive Departments and Agencies whenever the President of the United States declares a national emergency....[Then] the Executive branch can: Take over all communications media; Seize all sources of power; Take charge of all food resources; Seize all forms of transportation; Control all highways and seaports; Seize all railroads, inland waterways, airports, storage facilities; Commandeer all civilians to work under federal supervision; control all activities relating to health, education, and welfare; Shift any segment of the population from one locality to another; take over farms, ranches, timberized properties; regulate the amount of your own money you may withdraw from your bank, or savings and loan institution. All of these and many more items are listed in 32 pages incorporating nearly 200,000 words, providing an absolute bureaucratic dictatorship whenever the President gives the word."

But one thing more was needed: A permanent managerial agency prepared to provide Crisis Management if a President should give the word. So, there was created the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA), ready to take total command at any declared time. FEMA was created to take command over all federal agencies and operate a bureaucratic dictatorship, had its trial run in Crisis Management in the alleged Three Mile Island "accident." It also Crisis Managed the cleanups after Hurricane Hugo and the San Francisco earthquake of 1989. So people know about FEMA, but few know of its real purpose. In this regard Rand Corporation said, "The first point is that the operation must be the personal responsibility of the executive head of the organization. No one at a lower level has the authority, or the right, or the ability to acquire the knowledge required to perform the necessary tasks of coordination."

Now you should know why we are concerned about this November election. Think of the awful power that has been delegated to one man. If he feels the job is too big for him to handle and he calls upon an entrenched bureaucrat for help, an unelected elite could enslave us all. Maybe the Lord felt we'd need a rude awakening before the lights go out when Daniel wrote: "This matter is by the decree of the watchers, and the word by the demand of the holy ones: to the intent that the living may know that the most High ruleth in the kingdom of men, and giveth it to whomsoever he will, and setteth up over it the basest of men."

(Daniel 4:17).

Year Thirty-Nine.....Number Thirteen.....June 26, 1992

THE LEAST OF THREE EVILS?

"I see a grave situation taking place in our country, which is designed to eliminate all choices in the coming election, except those candidates who would support the New World Order, a form of government which will rob the United States of Constitutional freedom, religious protections, close down our military, and force us under a world dictatorship." So began a letter from Dr. Shirley Correll, editor of The Florida Forum. She adds: "Most of the pieces of this mechanism are now in place. The news media will not warn you of the coming destruction of freedoms as they also support the New World Order of government."

Voicing the same warning, K.M.Heaton, author of The Impossible Dream and other patriotic literature, chose to cite an historical parallel in an attempt to awaken her readers concerning the impending danger. Under the title "Novy Mir" equals "New World", she quotes: "The disorganized, disintegrated government at the top, the army shaken to its depths, the discontent, uncertainty and fear among the ruling classes, deep bitterness in the popular masses, the numerically developed proletariat tempered in the fire of events - all this gives us the right to say that we are witnessing the beginning of the second Russian revolution. Let us hope that many of us will be participants in it." Then she explains:

"The above quote is from an article written by Leon Trotsky three weeks before he embarked for his homeland to rejoin his comrades in the second Russian revolution. It appeared in a New York daily newspaper called Novy Mir (a Russian language sheet published by the American section of the Communist movement for 'the Russian workers in America') on February 27, 1917. 'Novy Mir' translates to 'New World.' This quote is offered here in the hope of engendering more understanding of just what is being witnessed in America today - the fast approaching moment of truth in the second American revolution. All of the massive elements described by Trotsky in his report on The History of the Russian Revolution - and more - are present and accounted for in America today. The above quote is part of that report. It is like reliving the last forty years in America to read the details of the overthrow of the Czarist regime as offered by the most reliable witness of those events in Russia....All these elements of the final coups in Russia are present and accounted for here and now in these days before the final coup in America. All that was needed was a strong man to emerge in time to direct the progress of the new world order. Bush has proven himself incapable of leading that final coup. In a previous column I asked the question 'Could Ross Perot be the man?'. The answer to that is 'Could be'."

The design is simple: eliminate the possibility of any candidate except those approved by the leaders of the New World Order becoming president of the United States. Three have been selected. There is George Bush, CFR member before resigning to become President Reagan's running mate, member of the secret and occult Skull & Bones Fraternity, and the man who led America and other nations into a Middle East War which he admitted would promote the New World Order. Then there is "Slick Willie" Clinton, CFR member, Rhodes Scholar, chosen because in a major two-party system such as ours there must be two contenders. But Clinton wasn't expected to win. He's just a reliable Insider in case Bush should stumble and lose the race. Then, since neither Bush nor Clinton is shaping up as expected by the Power Elite, Ross Perot, hailed as a populist outsider, a man-on-a-white-horse from Texas, a billionaire who promises to pay his own way if the people insist, a man supposedly having no Establishment strings to tie him down. This is the lyric of the third man theme, and the public is going mad about him because the people want a change, any change. And because they don't know the truth about Perot. Let's look at the record, almost revealed by the media who are supposed to conceal his true identity.

The Wall Street Journal of May 29, 1992 stated: "Perot's candidacy for the prestigious Council on Foreign Relations several years ago was seconded by...George Bush. A Perot aide says Bush's seconding letter was 'lovely' but that there aren't any plans to release the text."

We have received from a correspondent in Texas an authentic copy of an editorial which appeared in the (Texas) Midland Reporter-Telegram on Sunday, May 24, 1992. The headline reads "Perot is not a political novice." Some of the material is repetitious but we will reprint the entire article. Any underlining is added by us for emphasis: "Ross Perot, the surefire bet for an independent run for the presidency this year, is being billed by some as a political 'insider' during the Nixon Administration. Arkansas Gov. Bill Clinton, the only apparent Democrat in the race, has been rapidly promoted to 'insider' status. and President George Bush, who has been in the political sweepstakes since shortly after arriving in Texas in the late 1940's, can properly be labeled the 'ultimate insider.' Of course, Bush is at home in the Oval Office now. The other two are merely trying to take his place there. The point is whichever lever a voter pulls in November, he isn't likely to cast his vote for someone who isn't part of the political establishment in this nation even though this is the year millions of voters might want to do exactly that. According to results of a Texas Poll released in April, many Texas voters - whether Democrats or Republicans - will vote for Perot because they 'feel like the system in Washington is in gridlock, and they see Ross as a man who has been able to be effective in the public arena and the private arena.' There's no question that Perot has been effective, but there are particular issues on which he has not opened up to let Texans and others know where he stands. He needs to because otherwise voters might not get the result they're hoping for if Perot were to be elected.

"Perot's camp includes Dallas attorney Tom Luce, who sought the Republican nomination for governor last time around. Among Luce's political supporters was Peter O'Donnell, a wealthy Dallas investor who is said to represent David Rockefeller's interests in the state. Rockefeller's interests, of course, are decidedly liberal and far different from those of many Texas voters. That makes Perot as much a political 'insider' as Bush or Clinton ever will be and gives those who thought they saw in the Dallas billionaire a quality choice away from the Washington political mainstream a reason to ponder the presidential candidates once again. In politics, as in other matters, you need to have as much information about the candidates as possible to know what you'll get for your vote." (Unquote).

In reference to Luce, who lost the election and then went back to serve as one of Perot's top-of-the-line lawyers, Steve McElroy is in partnership with Perot in a special promotion. In an article he wrote, "Ross and Me", there is this comment: "Today at the Perot Group offices, I overheard Perot, standing outside the conference room where I was waiting, conversing impatiently with Tom Luce, his longtime friend, adviser, and lawyer....who had a fiduciary relationship with Perot" even as Peter O'Donnell, Rockefeller's representative, had a similar relationship with Luce.

As for Perot's regard for traditional American institutions, on 11/2/91 Perot spoke to the Coalition for Better Government in Tampa, florida. He is quoted as saying: "In all fairness to our elected officials - they are generally good people - they are not the problem. Our system of government is the problem....Keep in mind that our Constitution predates the Industrial Revolution. Our founders did not know about electricity, the train, telephones, radio, nuclear weapons, satellites or space exploration. There's a lot they didn't know about. It would be interesting to see what kind of a document they'd draft today. Just keeping it frozen in time won't hack it." That should let you know just what kind of a president Ross Perot would make. As a businessman, he's tops. But as a statesman, God help us. As Harry Everingham wrote in his The Fact Finder (6/1/92): "Ross Perot should know that Americans led the world in all that progress because our Constitution protected our God-given freedom to create, to invent, and to work to make our dreams come true; also to invest and expand, to share our dreams with others. What made our America great was our freedom under Constitutional government." And we might add, what is destroying America is the departure from God-given and Constitutional principles which Ross Perot seems to deplore. Howard Phillips, who heads the US Taxpayers Party, said it simply: "What Ross Perot lacks is a coherent world view based on the Biblical and Constitutional principals which enabled America to become a great nation."

The Preacher wrote (Ecl. 7:25): "I applied mine heart to know, and to search, and to seek out wisdom, and the reason of things...." We would do well if we take Solomon's advice when seeking the reason for the "disgust, disaffection and disarray" of the state of American politics in the year of our Lord 1992, because we are faced with a Crisis Management program on the part of the Ruling Establishment which has rendered futile the power of anyone to alter their well laid scheme of things. Thomas Jefferson foresaw the problem that faces us today, and he wrote to his friend C. Hammond in 1821, advising that "When all government, domestic and foreign, in little as well as great things, shall be drawn to Washington as the center of all power, it will render powerless the checks provided of one government or another, and will become as venal and oppressive as the government from which we are separated." Now consider K.M.Heaton's statement: "...Perot's 'solution' to the problem of today continues to focus on the election of someone to sit in the White House, which is the central theme of the Ruling Establishment scheme for control." Of course, it isn't just Perot, or Bush, or Clinton who looks upon the White House as the center of all power. The voters have been so propagandized and conditioned that they, too, believe that the Oval Office is the Center of Power in the United States. So the voters are induced to spend their time and effort in an attempt to get a particular person in the White House. But, since the three principal candidates are all agents of the Ruling Establishment through the CFR, TC, or other Insiders' Club. So to promote any one of them is more than futile. It's self-defeating.

At the turn of this century, the New World Order has been struggling to gain total control of our central government. Its first big success came with ratification of the 17th Amendment to the Constitution, which declares that US Senators shall be elected by the people, not by their respective State governments. Thus was the balance between State governments and the federal government nullified, and the first big step in the march from Republic to Democracy accomplished. Through the years there followed, not necessarily in chronological order, numerous steps toward the Ruling Establishment's control over Federal, State and Local governments: 1. Control of all administrative departments having to do with foreign policy; 2) Control of State and non-federal governments and agencies through 1313, later known as ACIR; 3) Creation of River Basin Commissions and establishment of central control over them through the National Environmental Act of 1969; 4) Creation of 10 Federal Regions to supervise the activities of State governments and agencies; 5) Installation of PPBS which might be called the Computerized Version of the Hegel Dialectic; and finally, Ratification of the United Nations with power (by treaty) over all federal, State and Local Governments.

The Ruling Establishment, seemingly well in control of all governments within the United States, concluded that, if the rest of the world were ready, the millennial year 2000 would become the first birthday of the Global Government with its accompanying New World Order. But then came an unexpected shock. Word got out about the moral corruption and the check-kiting scandals of Congressmen. People reacted at first as they should be expected to react. One editorial said: "The dawn of election year 1992 saw public disgust with Congress rise to new heights. In the wake of the infamous 35% pay hike scandal, American voters have now discovered that 62% of the entire body of the House of Representatives have been implicated in the check-kiting scandal." Incumbent Representatives got the message, began announcing their retirement in droves. For the first time in American history voters had an opportunity to replace dishonest politicians with honest Representatives of the people instead of special interests of the Cabal. Now, Control of Congress is essential if any president is able to do what the Cabal wants him to do, even Perot. Like providing funds, or replacing the Constitution with a new Corporate Socialist document. So, the Ruling Establishment determined that something had to be done before irate voters had the time and ability to install a new Congress controlled by constituents. Therefore, the voters had to be diverted, sidetracked. A Crisis Management program was needed. And out of the air and the TV tube came Ross Perot, acting as a white knight on a white horse ready to kill dragons. He must make his entry so spectacular that people would think of Perot instead of some corrupt Congressman. And almost immediately, as though commanded, the voters were out in the hustings scrambling for signatures to place Perot in State Ballots.

When people had their greatest chance in a lifetime to march for victory, they chose instead to hear the Pied Piper and follow him into the New World Order.

In Old Testament times Solomon spoke of seeking wisdom. In New Testament times James tells how and where to look:

"If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God that giveth to all men freely, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him." (James 1:5).

Year Thirty-Nine.....Number Fourteen.....July 10, 1992

THE NEW WORLD DIS-ORDER

"Seventy-three years after 'the war to end all wars' five full-fledged wars and at least 13 lesser conflicts boil and simmer across Europe. What is going on? Why are these people unfurling the soiled banners of nationalism and killing each other in a continent that was supposed to offer the pre-eminent model for supra-national integration?" The statement and the question are posed by a journalist stationed in Berlin. European newspapers seem to be answering by reporting that President George Bush's New World Order had been turned into a "New World Dis-Order." But the disorder was not confined to Europe. South Africa is in far worse turmoil and killing than occurred before the end of apartheid. And in the United States, sections of cities were being destroyed by terrorists, crime was at its highest peak, civil and social disorder seemed uncontrollable. Aside from these evidences of near anarchy, conditions were beginning to become critical at the economic level. July 4th was originally named as a day of celebration and thanks to the God of our fathers Who had blessed this Nation which was "conceived in liberty and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal," and that the unalienable rights of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness were endowed by our Creator, not by a man-pleasing Supreme Court acting unConstitutionally. But on July 4th, 1992, the actual state of our nation was expressed in the headlines appearing in our local daily. "Bush signs extension of job benefits." This was one day after the government had announced that unemployment had soared to an eight-year high. A NYTimes article announced that "Bush camp regroupes as economic news sours," and "White House strategists said Friday that they were reassessing the assumption that an improving economy would revive Bush's political standing before the November election. Instead, they must focus their campaign more on social problems and character issues." Referring to the well managed circus now a three-way race for the presidency, the NYTimes seemed pleased to announce that "The Bush campaign at last temporarily checked Perot's rising popularity among voters by raising questions about his personal stability and his respect for law. Clinton has struggled since last winter to overcome voters' doubts about his personal integrity" and "Polls indicate that voters believe that Bush has the ability to address economic problems as he has foreign crises, but that he is somewhat unwilling to do so."

The Insiders still hang onto the claim about Bush's ability to handle foreign crises. This in spite of the facts that Iraq's Saddam is politically stronger in Middle East affairs than before Desert Storm; that Panama still launders money and acts as middle-man in drug trafficking, and the people are in far worse condition than before the conquest of that independent Nation; and that it was Bush's handling of crises that helped bring on the wars and political crises that now infest Europe. Miami Herald staff writer Juan Tamayo, based in Berlin, called it "The death of Europe as we know it" and gave the situation historical perspective when he wrote: "What is going on is the death of Europe Europe as we know it, the Europe carved up in the Versailles Treaty of June 28, 1919, and Yalta in 1945 by the winners of the two world wars." Then without actually writing it, he shows how the end of the Cold War and the dismemberment of the USSR brought on a similar situation:

"As if buried beneath a sheet of ice....ethnic conflicts were in a state of suspended animation under communist rule. Now that this sheet has been cracked, these conflicts are surfacing violently....And the economic mayhem resulting from the shift toward capitalism, the absence of democratic traditions and the presence of minorities that can be used as scapegoats, and the conflicts are pushed to the point of explosion....Substantial wars now lash the former Yugoslavia, the former Soviet Republics of Moldova and Georgia, the Nagorno-Karabakh enclave in Azerbaijan, and Turkey, where government troops are fighting kurdish guerillas. Ten other less intense nationalist conflicts simmer in the former Soviet Union alone. Basques in Spain and nationalists on the French island of Corsica are fighting. Northern Ireland remains mired in decades-old bloodshed. Ethnic tensions simmer just below the surface in a dozen other places: ethnic Albanians in Serbia's Kosovo region want independence; Hungary is worried about Hungarian minorities in Serbia, Romania and Slovakia; and Poland is concerned about Polish minorities in Lithuania. Welsh and Scottish nationalists want increased autonomy from the United Kingdom. Flems and Waloons eye each other with increasing suspicion in Belgium. And nationalism is rising in Germany, France and Italy; partly in reaction to the growing number of immigrants from Eastern Europe and northern Africa." Even more important is the action of Denmark in refusing to go along with the Maastricht Treaty which would have completed the union of the 12 Nations of Western Europe, creating the proposed Regional World Government called "Europe." Under Maastricht all trade barriers and border controls would have been eliminated and a single European currency was to replace the national currencies of the Nations involved in "Europe." But when Denmark rejected the Treaty, other European Nations began to worry about surrendering their national sovereignty to a United Europe, and the creation of a single bank, and the grand plan of a United States of Europe has been delayed for at least ten years, say the nationalists opposing the plan. So, with the showplace of the New World Order incompleted, the plans of Bush, Gorbachev and the UN devotees are ended and it truly has become a New World Dis-Order.

Further complicating the dream of the One Worlders is the fiction that Communism is dead. Reporting from Moscow, Juan Tamayo of the Scripps-Howard staff wrote: "Communists varnished with thin coatings of reformism still govern nine of the former Soviet Union's twelve successor republics. They also rule Romania and the Serbian-dominated rump of Yugoslavia. Communist Party veterans remain a muscular force in the Russia of President Boris Yeltsin, controlling 40 percent of the Parliament, most of the bureaucracy and all of the huge military-industrial complex. Communist parties, reinvented as 'Socialists' have done strikingly well in the free elections, coming in second in the Czechoslovak and Polish parliamenary votes and making creditable showings in eastern Germany. Communist diehards, espousing almost undiluted versions of Soviet-style Marxist-Leninism still rule one-third of the world's people in China, Cuba, North Korea and Vietnam." Ukraine President Leonid Kravchek was the Communist Party's chief ideologue before the breakup of the Soviet Union. Serbian President Slobodan Milosevic, former Communist, now heads a slightly reformed Socialist Party. Romanian President Ion Illescu was a close associate of executed dictator Ceausescu. Kazakhstan President Nursultan Nazarbayev was former Communist Partry Chief....and the leaders of Moldova, Belarus, and Uzbekistan are also former Communist leaders, but now have become socialists. And with the Communist leaders changing their red banners to the yellow of Socialism or the brown of Fascism, there remains the danger of all Eastern Europe becoming militantly Socialist. And that brings up the Scramble for Central Asia, which has become a global contest for hearts, minds and money. World Press Review as its cover story for its July issue reprinted an article which originally appeared in the independent Toronto Star. We reprint parts of it as written by Haroon Siddiqui who is a specialist in Central Asian affairs.

"Iran, Turkey, Saudi Arabia, and Pakistan are wooing the six former Soviet Republics of Central Asia, while the United States and the rest of the West flounder, lacking expertise in the area. The newly independent states of Central Asia were part of the legendary Silk Road between China and Ottoman Turkey, until the Portuguese discovered the sea route to India in 1498, effectively foreclosing the area's economic and intellectual development. Czarist Russia and then the Soviet Union crushed its ethnic and Islamic identity. Joseph Stalin moved huge populations around and created artificial republics - Kazakhstan, Uzbekistan, Tajistan, Azerbaijan, and Kyrgyzstan. Now full fledged members of the United Nations they have a total population of more than 55 million. Kazakhstan alone is larger than Western Europe. With Turkmenistan it controls 1,500 nuclear warheads, including 100 inter-continental ballistic missiles....Central Asians are inheritors of a glorious Islamic past. Mosques are springing up everywhere, as are religious schools. Most (of these new nations) are headed by former Communists." (Unquote). With the alleged death of Communist control, the Islamic and ethnic backgrounds of these people make of them a wealth of cannon fodder for the Islamic movement which may replace Communism as the world's second great power.

In France a spirit of nationalism has been brought about because of the immigration of millions of Muslims from northern Africa. Mosques and Koranic schools are being built throughout France and this "invasion" is causing Frenchmen who yesterday seemed concerned about a possible Communist takeover are today concerned about a possible Islamic takeover. In "L'Express", a Paris newsmagazine, in an article headed by "Communism Confronts Islam", Bernard Lecomte wrote of the rapid growth of the Muslim faiths in Central Asia. He said: "The sea of faces stretched as far as the eye could see, thousands of bearded men with craggy features, all wearing the same square covering on their heads, and all with the same hard look when addressed by a woman who had dared to linger near the mosque. At Kokand it is difficult to believe you are in the heart of the former USSR, in Uzbekistan, a country of 20 million citizens who have scarcely begun to emerge from 70 years of Russian communism. In Central Asia, 55 million former Soviet citizens are adrift. This huge territory....stretches from the Caspian Sea to Xinjiang in China and includes the Pamirs and Kazakh Desert. It is a strange revolution that has begun in these newly independent states-- 'Islamic' but no one can predict what direction it will take.

"An earthquake has struck the whole of Central Asia....It is the return to Islam, and it is both a religious resurgence and a compelling political factor. Friday has become a holiday. Mosques are being opened or rebuilt, and Koranic schools are being erected, usually with Arab money, by the thousands, according to the Muslim leadership in Central Asia....Central Asia faces the danger of being torn in two, not between admirers of former Turkish leader Kemal Ataturk and those nostalgic for Iranian leader Ayatollah Rubollah Khomeini but, more simply, between the heirs of Lenin and the disciples of Allah." (Unquote).

We have given considerable space toward discussing the situation in Central Asia, because we fear that the next major threat to what's left of the Christian world will come from that area as the disciples of Allah try once again to dominate the world, since they now will have the wealth and power to try. And because of our interests and commitments in almost every country not dominated by Islam, the US is going to be involved, since the world looks upon the US as the one superpower and protector of the UN in the latter's drive to become a socialist world government. Already headlines shout "US Force Likely in Sarajevo." In Munich, key adviser of Bush and partner of Kissinger, Brent Scowcroft says, "US aircraft will probably be needed" since "My guess is that it (sending supplies to Sarajevo) will have to be supplemented by ground convoys." Thus, as it was in Vietnam, preliminary aid would mark the beginning of another US entry into a potential European (World) War. This is especially dangerous since Europe, instead of merging, has split and Germany and France are in the act of creating the "balance of power" act which has characterized Europe since tribes became states, states became nations, nations became empires, and empires expired while seeking a world empire.

The UK based Intelligence Digest has been generally right in its more than 50 years of analyzing and prognosticating world events. And we generally agree with Joseph de Courcy's latest when he writes that Europe is splitting into two balanced parts. One is a "supranational government as exemplified by the European Community. This kind of government is "authoritarian, socialist and dangerous," while "the other equal and opposite force is the resurgence of national self-determination." He says, "If we are right....national self-determination will overcome the drive for pan-European government as espoused by the EC and its corporatist backers - such as trade unions, environmentalists, socialists, and big business." This will be a real jolt but not death to the New World Order program, but it will require someone other than George Bush as leader. This divided Europe will have Germany and France vying for the balance of power. The German-led alliance would probably include Ukraine, Austria, Hungary, Croatia, Albania, Azerbaijan, and Turkey. Balancing that power bloc would be the Franco-Russian alliance including Romania, Poland, Serbia, Georgia, Armenia, and the Central Asian States. After suggesting this division of powers, JdeC asks, "So where does all this leave the American interest?" He thinks the US should favor neither, be non-European, and create a counterbalancing alliance based around a trans-global network of constitutionally-governed, free-trade-oriented states such as the Scandinavian countries, the Baltic states, Denmark, Britain, Holland, etc. But "The major problem is that most Anglo-American politicians believe their own propaganda - that the post-Cold War world is one in which a dwindling band of bad guys will slowly dissolve leaving a world of permanent peace and prosperity, and in which there is no need for old-fashioned concepts like the balance of power. They will be proved wrong."

In dealing with Nations, or people, one concept still stands:
"....be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you, and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty." (II Cor. 4:17,18).

THE PLANNED SOCIETY

"You can fool some of the people all of the time, and all of the people some of the time, but you cannot fool all the people all the time," said the then new Republican Party's first presidential candidate, Abraham Lincoln. But he spoke before the discovery and development of telecommunications media. Nowadays, with enough money at his or her disposal, with an acceptable TV image, and a matching gift of gab, almost anyone can fool most of the people all of the time it takes to get nominated, if he or she is backed by the cartel that controls national elections. Ross Perot thought he could do it by going directly to you people without any party backing. The money was available and like Bush and Clinton, he was also an Insider. But he was an autocrat, a good leader but a poor follower, a chief executive who insisted on being the chief, or he wouldn't play. As Jim Nesbitt of the Newhouse News Service wrote: "In the end, Ross Perot did what he has always done when confronted with a game he couldn't play by his own rules - he took his ball, his bat and his billion dollars and went home." So, we're back to the same old two-team race which is run by the rules of the Eastern Establishment.

In The Naked Capitalist, a review and commentary on Dr. Carroll Quigley's book Tragedy and Hope, W. Cleon Skousen explained those rules. He said "Dr. Quigley may be entirely correct in his charge that the CFR and the Global Establishment have gained such a hold on the elective process in the United States that no matter which political party goes into power, the winner is beholden to those powers to a significant degree.... The tragedy in all of this is the simple fact that the average tax-paying American was not given an honest and genuine choice. The voter finds himself enduring one party long enough to witness a whole series of travesties and then switches to the other party thinking he will get a substantial reversal of policy. But he doesn't. At best all he gets is a slowing down in the collectivization process and in some areas it's even worse than it was before. The situation is likely to continue until a sufficient number of Americans become angrily aroused and rise from the grass roots to seize control of one or both of the major political parties. Then the people can have a choice. Meanwhile, as the known facts now dramatically illustrate, the American electoral process is being manipulated by the Global Establishment precisely the way Dr. Quigley boasts that it is." Dr. Quigley gave that opinion in 1966, Dr. Skousen quoted him in 1970, and in 1992 it has become so bad that a presidential election is little more than a national lottery in which the only winners are members or servants of the Global Establishment. As of this date it would seem that the Global Establishment has decided that voters have endured the Republican Party without rebelling long enough, and that it's wise to shift to the other party, with voters being told they are getting a change. The tragedy: They really will be getting a change, regardless of who wins. But it will be a kind of change that is not spelled out in the party platforms or reflected in Perot's negative remarks. If Perot had decided to stay in the race and won, we would be governed by a benevolent dictator who would run the country according to his own rules. And his rules, among other things, would include getting rid of that "bothersome old horse-and-buggy Constitution" that the Founding Fathers wrote. It would be replaced by a constitution providing for the creation of a Planned Capitalist State, once called Fascism. If Bush were re-elected we would continue to endure the march of our interdependent socialist state into the UN-governed New World Order. And if Clinton were elected, we can experience not really a change, but a retreat; back to the type of New Deal programming initiated by Franklin Delano Roosevelt six decades ago, but never completed; the "interdependent" phase of which was reborn in John Fitzgerald Kennedy's New Frontier, its Welfare State programming brought to maturity with Lyndon Baines Johnson's Great Society, and now aglow in the dreams of Bill Clinton as his New Covenant. FDR had four terms in power to build and install his New Deal. But two things stopped him: a Supreme Court that still had regard and respect for the United States Constitution which declared his wildest plans unconstitutional; and the planned World War which made foreign affairs supersede domestic affairs in the eyes of the Global Establishment. Kennedy's New Frontier terminated with his assassination. and LBJ's Great Society program was interrupted by his desire to involve the United States in an Asian war. But now, under Clinton's New Covenant the unfinished dreams of FDR, JFK and LBJ could come true if an eager and anxious Democratic Congress were asked to aid and abet in the change-agent fulfillment of that New Covenant.

*When the Clinton-Gore post-convention bus tour got underway, headlines shouted: "Clinton retraces words, footsteps of his hero JFK." At each stop along the way "The 45-year-old Arkansas governor....described his 'New Covenant' platform to jubilant, blue-collar crowds as the legitimate heir to Kennedy's 'New Frontier'."

*On page 41 of Newsweek (7/20/92) there is an illustration that depicts Clinton, right hand raised, smilingly taking the presidential oath of office. What caught our eye was the bold face line of type under the illustration, asking, "Will Clinton's fist 100 days be as bold as he promises." You'll recall that it was FDR's bold "100 days" of his first term when he sent to Congress reams of proposed legislation that defied the Constitution, but would be approved by the rubber stamp Congress. The numerous bills would have converted our Republic into a Fascist State had not the Supreme Court intervened and declared most of the new laws unconstitutional.

*In The Miami Herald (7/14/92) there appeared a column written by Tony Proscio, associate editor, which was headed: "Is Clinton another FDR?" The editor wrote: "He may fail. But the attempt - the brash, blind lunge toward greatness - cries out to be made. The country, as it was in 1932, is frightened, weary, and mistrustful; it will follow its heart, not its head. It will go wherever the passion is, wherever it senses life, pulse, confidence, and fire....Is Bill Clinton another FDR?....Roosevelt's First Hundred Days rolled like ball lightning across the bleak horizon of the Depression....There's always room for another gilt frame on the bedroom wall. And in six decades, the need has rarely been greater."

With less than four months to go it's still too early to be sure. But there is every indication by the Global Establishment (Skousen's title of the Conspiracy), that Bush is being bushed in favor of Clinton, and the owned or controlled media have been given their instructions. This has been done before, Rockefeller's Inner Circle spent much time and energy training Governor Carter for the job of the US presidency. But Carter failed to meet the Money Cartelist's expectations. So he was dumped and Reagan was allowed to run, but only after he had agreed to accept his chief Republican opponent, George Bush, as his running mate. The plan: give more training to their man Bush, and let him follow Reagan to the Oval Office. Bush was to have been the Establishment's Voice of America in the crucial nineties. But Bush began to lose his creditability because of his New World Order advocacy which came crashing when Russia's Gorby, like America's Carter, had to be replaced, and Nations instead of uniting in regional units began to declare for national independence rather than international interdependence. Bush also mishandled the Saddam situation, his "read my lips, no new taxes" became a broken promise. And the US economy kept getting worse while Bush kept saying it was getting better. So, the Establishment apparently switched from Bush to Clinton. And to popularize Clinton with the populace, he's being hailed as "another FDR." Which means that FDR's New Deal is being resurrected. This also means that the "merger" plan that tax-exempt foundations were told to promote, is back on schedule. Only this time it isn't the "merger of Nations" that is being promoted, but the "merger of the economies of Nations" under the originally designed Corporate Socialist Capitalist program, that was the real goal of the New Deal planners. Since this program replaces the New World Order promotion (two strategies with the same goal), it seems important that we review that FDR program of the 1930s and 1940s. The truth has been suppressed by the court historians, and FDR has been glorified as one of the Nation's greatest presidents. Two nationally respected writers dared to tell the truth: Garet Garrett in The people's Pottage (1953), and John T. Flynn in The Roosevelt Myth (1948). In explaining the internationalist situation in conjunction with the national situation in the United States, Flynn tells truths that have been forgotten, or never heard about by most people living today. We quote from his revised edition (1956), beginning on page 151:

* * * * *

The Russian revolution (1917) was essentially a Socialist revolution....Lenin preferred to call his government a Communist government though the term meant very much the same....This dictatorship, so complete, so cruel, so savage in fact, produced a sense of defeat or at least frustration in the minds of great numbers who had nursed the old Socialist dream....On the other hand, semi-Socialism rose all over Europe - social democracies they were called. They were part socialist, part capitalist, part parliamentary, but with all the defects of the European parliamentary system critically exaggerated....However, the most important thing that rose out of this was a new approach that made a tremendous appeal to many of the same intellectuals who had dallied with socialism....The idea was that it would be sufficient to nationalize the banks, the railroads, all means of transport, the mines and a few great basic industries....This would leave all the factories, stores, amusements, farms. etc. in the hands of private owners. Actually such a society would be about one-fourth socialist and three-fourths privately owned or capitalist. However, in this society the State would assume the responsibility for making the whole work: it would hold itself responsible for the well-being of all the citizens, their protection from the hazards of life - poverty, sickness, age, etc. And to make the whole work continuously without occasional breakdowns, the State would set up certain great planning agencies or boards which would continuously study and observe the functioning of the economic system and make plans covering production, prices, distribution, financing, profits, wages, hours, etc. Thus we would know what was in fact a Planned Capitalism - with the State responsible for the planning and for ensuring the carrying out of its plans through great government bureaus armed with the necessary powers to enforce compliance. This was the perfect haven for great masses of intellectuals - students, teachers, lawyers, politicians, writers, journalists, and others - who had flirted timidly with Socialism and Communism, but who did not dare to admit they were Communists or Socialists....There was a good deal of tolerance for the idea of planning our capitalist system even in the most conservative circles. And a man could support publicly and with vehemence this system of the Planned Economy without incurring the odium of being too much of a radical for polite and practical society.

There was only one trouble with it. This is what Mussolini had adopted - the Planned Capitalist State. And he gave it a name - Fascism. Then came Hitler and adopted the same idea....Actually the system had spread over Europe. For nearly 70 years all the countries in Europe....had been experimenting with the baleful idea of the security State, the State which attempts to provide its people with jobs and protection from all the hazards of life. After World War I, the dominance of this idea over the populations of every European State became complete and every State in Europe was riding, before World War II, hell-bent for bankruptcy under the impossible burden of meetings these obligations....Yet this curiously un-American doctrine was being peddled in America as the bright flower of the liberals (and was adopted by the New Deal Brain Trust-Ed.). Of course, they did not dare call it Fascism, because that had a bad name. They did not dare to admit that it impelled the restoration to the State of a numerous collection of those very powers which we had stripped from the State as the means of giving freedom to men. They called it the Planned Economy. But it was and is Fascism by whatever name it is known, And though it may be launched under a free republic, it will wither and die because of the feebleness of the government which tries to enforce it by helpless appeals to the people. Little by little the government must be made stronger, the rights of the citizens before the government must be reduced. Little by little if the Planned Economy is to be made to work, the free republic must wither. These two ideas - the idea of a free republic and the idea of a Planned Society - cannot live together....These (New Deal) planners mean that inside the State a great aggregation of bureaus must be set up with some totalitarian over-all bureau to decide what will be produced and how much and who will be allowed to produce and where and at what price he will get his materials and at what price he will pay for labor and the conditions under which labor will work and so on. In foreign trade....huge State cartels will unite with similar cartels from other countries in great international cartels which will regulate the international flow of goods....Planned Society is just a soft, misleading name for a society part capitalist and part socialist run by a dictatorship of the experts. (End of extended quotes from John T. Flynn's The Roosevelt Myth).

Is Bill Clinton another FDR? If elected will his First 100 Days be as bold and evil as were FDR's? Or do we deserve the other evil: the UN-governed New Word Order? It is proper to vote, but for neither of them.

"Woe unto them that call evil good, and good evil; that put darkness for light, and light for darkness; that put bitter for sweet, and sweet for bitter!" (Isaiah 5:20).

AFTER AFTERMATH?

When a newsman finds he cannot write, report, comment, commend, criticize or otherwise communicate with his readers, frustration is a mild word to describe his mental condition, brought about by a physical condition that made him bedridden with a fractured hip. Heaps of letters and queries from friends indicate that frustration may also have been occasioned when they waited for issues of Don Bell Reports that were never written and their absence unexplained. This particularly frustrating at a time when an evil storm named Andrew brought the greatest natural tragedy ever to visit Southern Florida. We listened to local radio reporters, watched as local TV reporters explained the pictures being shown, and read the details supplied by local reporters in the local printed media. We emphasize the word 'local' because these were honest reports given by men and women free to write of the havoc as they wished, unhampered by the usual restrictions that normally prevent journalists from reporting the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth as they saw and reported it. While thousands upon thousands of Americans lost their homes, their possessions, some their lives and all of them their normal way of living, we learned that freedom of the press is a virtue when allowed to be free. And we also saw and read how when a crisis such as Hurricane Andrew devastates homes, properties and people, there is an immediate and spontaneous rush of volunteers and needed supplies, people of their own free will, ready to do whatever they could do or give for the relief of the survivors of the storm. And we also learned that in such a critical situation, in the matter of immediate relief, the greatest enemy is the federal bureaucracy. For that's why the gridlock developed. Volunteers were almost as helpless as the survivors. Much of the reason is explained by Jeff Leen and Sydney Freedburg, local reporters for The Miami Herald, who wrote of the confusion that lasted four days before relief was under control:

"It was as if the emergency disaster planners wrote a superb Act I - the evacuation - then forgot to script Act II - the recovery. What went wrong? Mobile hospitals and bulldozers arrived late. Vital phones and radios jammed. Food deliveries and National Guard units got snarled in traffic. Roadblocks turned away volunteers. Police didn't control intersections. City managers pleaded for help. Nobody actuated the Army. To be sure, thousands of good people labored heroically, monumentally, to establish order from that type of chaos no one had ever seen before. But for 100 critical hours after Andrew struck, government reeled, and no one was in command. Government officials are trying to play down those first chaotic four days, describing the initial confusion as 'history'....

"President Bush's entourage arrived at Opa-locka at 5:56 p.m. [second day]. Bush could have taken a chopper over the damaged area, but his aides decided instead on a ground survey. He climbed into a bullet-proof Jeep Cherokee, followed by a bus full of photographers and members of the White House Staff press corps....Bush never saw the hardest-hit areas and local Florida reporters who had already seen the damage were excluded from his entourage....He read a speech from note cards. He pledged to declare Florida a disaster area, making it eligible for federal aid. 'There will be 27 agencies of the government then ready to help in any way the federal government can help,' he said....At 7:26 Tuesday the first mobile FEMA hospital arrived...the second medical team arrived at 11:35, half a day late because the feds couldn't find a transport plane. Less than 12 hours after the federal hospitals arrived, they were out of surgical supplies....FEMA reported 30,000 US Army MREs (Meals Ready to Eat) sat 'awaiting instructions' on tracks in Tamiami Trail because of 'distribution site identification'. Thursday morning people showed up at some South Dade feeding sites, and there was no food...A week later 16,000 Army troops and Marines were on the ground, with 10,000 more on the way. 'It starts with a trickle that turns into a torrent, and finally becomes a flood,' said FEMA spokesman Jan Eaker." (End of excerpts from article by local reporters).

When President Bush said, "There will be 27 agencies ready to help," that was the signal that FEMA (Federal Emergency Management Agency) would be in charge. And then began the real confusion in what has been called "The Aftermath." Its local command of the Andrew Aftermath seems to confirm what Senator Tim Worth of Colorado called "a bastion of lousy politics that moves with enormous incompetence." It has been called the most corrupt agency in the federal government, but at the same time it can be the most dangerous agency in the federal government. In case of a national emergency (Andrew was a regional emergency) FEMA is empowered to take command over the 27 most important federal bureaucracies and establish a literal bureaucratic dictatorship over the people of the United States. We've written about this several times since the Nixon Administration. But with the sinking dollar, the precarious economic conditions on a worldwide basis, with a New Age under Bill and Hilary Clinton and or a New World Order under George Bush (both being the same with different platforms) about to be established, and with the people so disgusted that they don't seem to care which candidate wins; it seems time to remember how FEMA came into existence and why it is so dangerous.

Back in the days when the Nixon-Kissinger team was making sudden and sometimes secret visits to Peking and Moscow to establish preemptory negotiations for future commercial and industrial exploitation of the two communist empires, there was an ongoing Cold War while at the same time both the government and the media were publicizing the possibility of nuclear war. It was said that a sudden nuclear attack might knock out the central government headquarters, and some arrangement should be made to provide for an emergency government ready to take charge. Together with the Ten Regional Governments being established, the existing bureaus, departments and agencies could provide such a bureaucratic dictatorship, to govern until normalcy had been restored. So, supposedly in the interest of national defense, there was prepared and placed in the Federal Register a series of Executive Orders headed by EO 11490 and followed by orders directing each of the 25 (now 27) departments and agencies on what they should do if and when the president should declare a National Emergency. It is significant that Congress was not involved in this. It was an act of the Administration and use of the Federal Register instead of normal legislation being used. In such cases, Executive Orders become law if not challenged or voided by Congress within 60 days. So, EO #11490 headed a list of orders "Assigning Preparedness Functions to Federal Departments and Agencies." Since the Nixon-Kissinger regime, these orders have been slightly amended, sometimes retitled and renumbered, but EO #11490 remains essentially the same today, with one important addition. The original National Emergency order was inactive until such time as the President or his office should declare a National Emergency, at which time the departments and agencies would to take over. Also, there was considerable concern regarding which agencies should take command and direct the overall operation. And it was thought that this should be a standing agency, always active and ready to assume command whenever a regional or national emergency should be declared. That's why FEMA (Federal Emergency Management Agency) was established.

An interesting story concerning the origin of FEMA is contained in an important book by Dr. John Coleman, a professional British intelligence officer who has become one of the leading authorities concerning the conspiratorial movement. In his Conspirators' Hierarchy, the story of the Committee of 300, he wrote: "It was Tavistock-designed methods that got the United States into the Second World War and which, under the guidance of Dr. Kurt Lewin [a Club of Rome agent], established the OSS, the forerunner of the CIA. Lewin became the director of the Strategic Bombing Survey, which was a plan for the Royal Air Force to concentrate on bombing German worker housing while leaving military targets, such as munitions plants, alone. The munitions plants on both sides belonged to the international bankers who had no wish to see their assets destroyed....FEMA is a natural successor to the Strategic Bombing Survey of WWII, with only a few adjustments proving necessary."

It is noteworthy that, as the Nixon-Kissinger team installed the original EO #11490, the Carter-Brzezinski team established FEMA as the overall director, becoming an active agency ready to meet any and all kinds of disasters or emergencies that might be declared by Carter, Reagan, Bush, or any succeeding president. Again referring to Dr. Coleman, "The trial run of the Federal Emergency Management Agency - a Club of Rome creation - came in a test run against the nuclear power station at Three Mile Island....It was considered a success by FEMA." It also gained some prominence as the managing agency at the San Francisco Earthquake of 1989, Hurricane Hugo, and now Hurricane Andrew.

These regional crises such as Hurricane Andrew which become the responsibility of FEMA also can serve as test runs for FEMA to prepare for any national crisis which would be so declared by the President of the United States, and which would put FEMA and its 27 federal departments and agencies in total command of the Nation and all of its people and resources. This would include the power to:

- * Register all men, women and children in the United States for federal service.
- * Seize all airports and aircraft.
- * Seize all housing and finance authorities.
- * Grant power to establish forced relocation of whole communities, designate areas to be abandoned as "unsafe," establish new locations for population, relocate communities, build new housing with public funds.
- * Seize all railroads, inland waterways and storage facilities, both public and private.
- * Seize all communications media.
- * Seize all electric power, fuels and minerals, both public and private.
- * Seize all food supplies and resources, all farms and farm equipment.
- * Seize all means of transportation, including personal cars, trucks or vehicles of any kind, and assume control over all highways, seaports and waterways.
- * Seize people for work forces under federal supervision, including the splitting up of families if FEMA finds it necessary.
- * Seize all health, education and welfare facilities, both public and private.

* Grant authorization to put all the above orders into effect in times of increased international tension or economic or financial crisis, when so ordered by the President of the United States.

If the President should ever declare such a National Emergency the Director of FEMA (presently Wallace Stickney, an unelected official) would assume full dictatorial control and all prior or existing laws, functions and systems of civil government would be suspended. This would include the courts, mail, sanitation, aviation, firefighting, police, agricultural services, health, education and welfare. The American people and all their belongings would become chattel of FEMA, and the United States Peace Keeping Forces would be in absolute control of our country.

Bill Clinton promises a "change" if he is elected. George Bush says we are in a period of "transition." The statements could mean the same, for both support a new type of government. And with the world in a state of recession bordering on economic chaos, in America with jobs and industries migrating to Mexico, Eastern Europe, China; with the dollar continuing to fall; and with no trusted leadership in prospect, "change" and "transition" of the type Americans fear could be possible. Hilare du Berrier, writing from Europe, says, "The best one can say is that, given to the vagaries of public opinion, the conflict of racial and ethnic groups and a biased press working against the country's interests, the chances of the world are not bright. Not for over a half century have nations faced the external and internal dangers they confront today, with the world's sole super-power crying for leadership." Presidential candidate Bo Gritz says, "There are individuals in this world, within this country, and in our own government who would like to rule the world, and they do believe that this is possible. They are and have been working towards this goal for decades." Let us pray that any "change" or "transition" will be toward a return to the Constitutional Republican form of government which we have deserted.

Personal to our readers and supporters. Your letters are still pouring in. Precious letters of condolence, prayers for quick recovery, assurance that you will wait until we can resume publication. We are deeply grateful for your support and will do our utmost to deserve it. It would be impossible to answer all your letters personally and individually. But please rest assured that your letters may have made all the difference. One can be very despondent when suddenly cut off from the work he loves and the inability to do anything about it. That's why your letters made the difference. They gave us hope and determination to be about our job.

We promised to resume publication as soon as possible. And we pray that we will now be able to send DBR to you on a regular and uninterrupted basis. However if, in the first few weeks we cannot keep to a regular schedule and may be late now and then, please understand. Incidentally, there must be a change in that schedule. Formerly we published every other Friday. Now, for reasons that do with the mechanics of printing and mailing, we will publish every other Monday. But our pledge remains: We shall do our very best to deliver the most important DBR every other Monday. As our friends Susan and Franklin Sanders wrote us:

"Rejoice in the Lord - again I will say, rejoice."

THE GREATER CHOICE

"I see a grave situation taking place in our country, which is designed to eliminate all choices in the coming election, except those candidates who would support the New World Order, a form of government which will rob the United States of Constitutional freedom, religious protection, close down our military, and force us under a world dictatorship. Most of the pieces of this mechanism are now in place. The news media will not warn you of the coming destruction of freedoms as they also support the New World Order government." So wrote Dr. Shirley Correll, Editor of Florida Forum. To supply the pieces of this mechanism that are not now in place will be the work of those whom we the people elect on November 3rd. It makes little difference whether we collectively choose Bush or Clinton - or even Perot; for all have been weighed in the balance by the Establishmentarians and found wanting to aid in putting in place those pieces of the mechanism that are not yet in place. It wasn't always that way. There was a time when voters had a choice. But that was before the Establishment bought or gained control over the national news media, before radio and television, when newspapers just reported news and confined propaganda to the editorial page. Dennis Cuddy, author of Now is the Dawning of the New Age World Order wrote: "In 1928 William Paley was beginning CBS and hired Sigmund Freud's nephew, Edward Bernays, to be his adviser. In that same year Bernay's book Propaganda was published, showing how the American public could be manipulated. This 'father of public relations' wrote: 'Those who manipulate the organized habits and opinions of the masses constitute an invisible government which is the true ruling power of our country'." Of course, Adam Weishaupt understood this principle of manipulation of the public in 1776. Before that, in 1513 Machiavelli wrote in his book The Prince: "It happens then as it does to physicians in the treatment of Consumption [tuberculosis], which in the commencement is easy to cure and difficult to understand; but when it has neither been discovered in due time nor treated upon a proper principle, it becomes easy to understand and difficult to cure. The same thing happens in state affairs; by foreseeing them at a distance...the evils which might arise from them are soon cured; but when, from want of foresight, they are suffered to increase to such a height that they are perceptible to everyone, there is no longer any remedy." And so it happens that, as we face another national election, we are not just facing a crisis, but we are at a cross-roads in history. A group of banking and government elitists want to dissect and eventually discard our Constitution," wrote R.P.Pearce, Jr., in The Trojan Horse. He added: "This is predictable, though! When America allowed a Centralized Federal Government, it was just a matter of time before the powers that be, would try to bring about its demise. Centralized bureaucracy, once implemented will never cease growing until an ultimate collapse stops it." It is, of course, a global crisis. It's most critical to Americans because we are the remaining super-power and the world is expecting to look to us for leadership. But, let's look at those who have been chosen by the Establishment, to lead us into the New Age World Order.

George Bush was initiated into The Order, commonly known as the Skull and Bones Fraternity, in 1947. In his latest book on the subject of Conspiracy, Dark Mystery, Texe Marrs wrote: "The history of George Bush's life is proof positive of the almost unbelievable influence and ability of a rich and powerful co-conspiracy to create a pliant company man perfectly fit and trained for their sinister purposes, and to actually propel that man to the very seat of world authority as head of the United States of America, the mighty military arm of the Secret Brotherhood's New World Order." The training:

Upon graduation from Yale Bush and his wife set out for Midland, Texas, where he would in a comparatively short time make millions in oil. Then he was led to politics, in 1966 was elected to the House of Representatives. But he was twice defeated in campaigns for the US Senate. So he was transferred to the foreign policy field, was named US Ambassador to the United Nations in 1971. Then back to political management by being named Chairman of the Republican National Committee in 1973. Then back to another foreign policy post by being named Special Envoy to Red China in 1975. A year later he was recalled and made Director of the CIA, in 1976. He then retired for a period of study and was elected Vice President of the United States in 1980, and followed Ronald Reagan into that post in 1988. The NY Times (6/11/92) in a special article revealed that: "In the early 1970s, even as President Richard Nixon became enveloped in the Watergate scandal, he helped elevate George Bush, then an obscure Texas Congressman, to national prominence. Nixon did that at the insistence of Henry Kissinger and David Rockefeller." Then after a brief year as Envoy to China, Kissinger assigned Bush to the top position that a conspirator must always hold - Director of the CIA. Next, Bush left the CIA post to study for the Presidency. "For the leaders of the Secret Brotherhood, it was time. Their man had just the right resume. He was primed and ready," wrote Marrs. To the chagrin of the financial wizards, he lost to Ronald Reagan. But a deal was made. Reagan should become President if he agreed to take his chief political rival, George Bush, as his running mate. So Bush became Vice President, spent eight years waiting, and in 1988, the Secret Brotherhood placed their specially trained leader in the most important government post in the world. This was especially true since Gorbachev was to be demoted and the USSR dissected. In the Fall 1992 issue of the CFR Quarterly, Foreign Affairs, Ted Sorenson (CFR) wrote that if Bush wins re-election, as expected, then he will no longer have to concern himself with conservative opinion or domestic affairs (which would be left to appointed bureaucrats), and could then "aggressively pursue his internationalist sentiments." His drive to create the New Age World Order under the UN could then become his full time job, for which he had been trained from the very beginning by the Establishmentarian Brass. The Secret Brtherhood hadn't done so well with Jimmy Carter, but George Bush was better trained and ran as a Republican.

Running with Bush is Dan Quayle. Not much is publicized concerning the works of Quayle. But it is conceded that he is a firm believer in Bush policies and hopes to succeed his leader in 1996. As to his standing with the Conspirators, here is a clue. In June, 1991, there was held a secret annual meeting of the Bilderbergers in the Black Forest town of Baden Baden. Although a secret conclave, Spotlight was successful in learning much of what occurred at the meeting. David Rockefeller gave the opening address, told the specially invited guests: "It would have been impossible for us to develop our plan for the world if we had been subject to the bright lights of publicity during these years....We are grateful to The Washington Post, The New York Times, Time Magazine, and other publications whose directors have attended our meetings, and respected their promises of discretion for almost 40 years." Again quoting Texe Marrs: "Invited secretly to Baden Baden was key democratic contender Governor Bill Clayton of Arkansas....He passed with flying colors....Vice President Dan Quayle is another fair-haired boy of the wealthy Bilderberger supermen. Quayle was there in person last year at the gathering. Reportedly, David Rockefeller and fellow big-wigs were duly impressed at what they saw. 'He's our man - for '96 or sooner!' one Bilderberger exclaimed." (Texe Marrs' quotes are from "Dark Majesty," Living Truth Publishers, 8104 Caisson Circle, Austin TX 78745).

To dwell on the character and qualifications for the Presidency of Bill Clinton would seem unnecessary for the readers of DBR. Rhodes Scholar, Bilderberger, CFR member, suspected of unpatriotic activities during Vietnam war, womanizer, Hilary handicap, and with radical and religious environmentalist Al Gore as a running mate should be sufficient. If more is to be said, George Bush will probably say it. The Secret Brotherhood claims both Bush and Clinton (and Perot), and will allow voters to choose either man. But there is an important difference between the two that should not be overlooked. Clinton favors Environmentalism; Bush favors War. To explain the difference, we refer to The Report From Iron Mountain, a book published in 1967. It referred to the need for war to maintain an economic balance. It said: "If war is discarded (Panama, Persian Gulf, Drug War, etc.-Ed.), new political machinery is needed to serve this vital function. Without war, no government is able to obtain acquiescence to its legitimacy or maintain its right to rule its society. Poisoning of the air and of the principle sources of food and water supplies (environmentalism) is already well advanced and at first glance would seem promising in this respect; it constitutes a threat that can be dealt with only through social organization and political power."

There you have it: Bush favors War; Clinton favors Environmentalism. The Secret Brotherhood favors both in this transition period. Most important in this respect is the naming of Al Gore to serve with Clinton if elected. In The Trojan Horse (op cit) there is this comment: "There has been found a cause of global dimension and it has successfully spanned the racial, cultural, ethnic, religious, economic and monetary differences. (It has been said that 87% of Americans are environmentalists). There is now a problem which can continue to be expanded to crisis proportions which individual nations can't resolve. This cause, as we have seen, has become environmentalism, a religious revival to protect Mother Earth." Now note the following which we quote from the September issue of American Information Newsletter.

"According to a new book, vice presidential candidate Al Gore went through a New Age conversion during a medical crisis for his son. 'The New Covenant of Bill Clinton and Al Gore' says that after Gore lost his bid for the 1988 presidential campaign, his six year old son was hit by a car and hovered near death for 30 days. This experience caused Gore to change 'in a fundamental way.' Gore says his son's accident was not solely responsible for his change but 'was the catalyst.' This change was spiritual in nature, leading Gore to the current fashionable religion for the left, a blend of feminism and pagan pantheism. Gore kept vigil with his injured son for many days in an office provided for him in the hospital. During this wait, he began the book 'Earth in the Balance and the Human Spirit.' In this book, which defines the religion Gore was converted to during the crisis, he began to identify left-wing environmentalism as a spiritual journey. What is the content of this religion? It is the worship of the earth with a new twist. The earth becomes a goddess to return us to a woman dominated rather than the male dominated religion. The new left religion which Gore meditated upon as his son lay near death, is a paganism invented to serve environmentalism and feminism. Gore began writing his thoughts during his son's crisis...'We feel increasingly distant from our roots in the earth...we seem to share a restlessness of spirit that rises out of the lost connection...' By page 260 Gore has discovered this 'lost connection.' 'The spiritual sense of our place in nature predates Native American cultures...much of the world was based on the worship of a single earth goddess who was assured to be the fount of all life and who radiated harmony among all living things...until (replaced by) the antecedents of today's religions...most of which still have a distinctly masculine orientation.' For Gore, the rediscovery of the 'lost connection' with nature is to totally accept the goddess mythology invented by modern feminists. Without the slightest bit of solid historical evidence, feminists are telling people that the first religion was universally 'goddess worship.' A return to this mythical religion, in the modern form of worshipping the alleged 'earth goddess, Gia' is Gore's spiritual journey. (From The New Covenant of Bill Clinton & Al Gore: Neo-Paganism and the new Politic' by John Barela. Mark 4 Marketing, 10977 E 22nd St., Tulsa OK 74129).

* * * * *

It has been said that the average age of the world's great civilizations before they decline has been 200 years, and that nations have progressed in this sequence: From bondage to spiritual faith, from spiritual faith to great courage, from great courage to liberty, from liberty to abundance, from abundance to selfishness, from selfishness to complacency, from complacency to apathy, from apathy to dependence, from dependence back again to bondage. We seem to be in the period of dependence. With welfare, health costs, unemployment compensation, various subsidies and grants, we as a people have become almost totally dependent upon government. In turn, our government has become dependent upon Multibankers and other governments for financial survival. A major step in going back is our next National Election. We have passed the point of apathy, for millions of Americans may bother to vote, but for "the lesser evil." The parties have been called The Right Wing Socialist Party A, and The Left Wing Socialist Party B. Their candidates have been called Tweedle Dum and Tweedle Dee, both doing the bidding of the Eastern Establishment. In this "transition period" leading to the New Age, we find ourselves in a state of financial, social, political, religious and moral deterioration. As a remedy, the voter is given a choice: Bush and Quayle who would establish a man-made order of the earth, or Clinton and Gore who would have us worship Gia, forgetting that His Son alone rules the earth. Which means there is yet a greater and free choice:

"In God I have put my trust: I will not be afraid what man can do unto me...For thou hast delivered my soul from death: wilt not thou deliver my feet from falling, that I may walk before God in the light of the living?" Psalm 56: 11,13.

THE NAFTA TRAP

This Report was written before and published on the eve of the recent national election. If we assume that Benjamin Disraeli was right when he had a character in one of his novels say, "Governments do not govern, but merely control the machinery of government, being themselves controlled by the hidden hand," then regardless of who is to be our next president, the leftward course of our Ship of State will continue. This is true since the three principal candidates for the highest office in the land were controlled by the hidden hand of our day. George Roche in his book America by the Throat in which he exposed "The Strangeboid of Federal Bureaucracy" made this clear when he wrote: "How do we get back on the right track? I have no full or satisfying answers...Historical experience offers little advice about how to escape our dilemma. What I do know is that one election will change little, however much it is a step in the right direction. The problem can be fought on the election process, but it cannot be solved there. It is a problem of our hearts and minds, of our values and choices. It is a moral problem. Each of us must in his own way find and restore and burnish the values that animated the American Republic at its beginning. With the wisdom of our fathers we must respect in full the rights of life and liberty and property, for these are the cornerstone of all civilization. More than this, we must abandon the false religion of the State, and renew our faith in the sovereignty of our Creator and His Law. Without this we will not succeed. So it is ordained." (Underlining added).

If disappointed in the election, remember that one election will change little. This is because our government is controlled by that same "hidden hand," and it has proclaimed in its media that its own changes, not the changes we might desire, will be made. Such changes will be designed to mollify the masses while at the same time continuing the drive toward the establishment of the New World Order with its New Age Socialist Government. And high on the agenda is the establishment of three so-called Free Trade Areas: Europe, Asia, and North America. This we must understand: Economics comes before politics. So, the European Community was created, the North American Free Trade Area (NAFTA) is being created, and the Asian Economic Area will follow. Later, according to The Plan, these three economic areas are to become political regions, or Regional World Governments. This is supposed to be accomplished by the target date 2000, the third millennium since the birth of Christ.

A big step in this direction came when "In the midst of a recession with ten million Americans out of work, George Bush announced on August 12th, 1991, the signing of the North American Trade Agreement (NAFTA) by the United States, Canada and Mexico." The treaty is yet to be ratified by Congress, but already the migration has begun. Industries are moving from the United States to Mexico where cheaper labor, fewer taxes and less trade restrictions exist. NAFTA is being supported by columnists, analysts, politicians, multinational leaders, all the commercial media, conservatives and business men who have not been told the truth about NAFTA. Said John F. McManus in The New American: "Nowhere, sad to say, do any of the mass media's experts even hint that NAFTA amounts to another step toward George Bush's 'New World Order.' The chief principle being ignored is that economic union precedes political union."

Alfred Lord Tennyson the poet observed "That a lie, which is half a truth, is ever the blackest of lies. That a lie, which is all a lie, may be met and fought outright. But a lie, which is part of a truth, is a harder matter to fight." NAFTA is an example. It is being sold under the banner of "free trade." which is a lie. NAFTA promotes managed trade, not free trade. And it follows the pattern of the European Community which is presently in a log jam in Europe. Joseph de Courcy, editor of the British Intelligence Digest, explains and we quote:

"The North American Free Trade Area (NAFTA) and the European Community (EC) have two important characteristics in common: first, they are all about managed trade not free trade; and, secondly, they are both (or will be in the case of NAFTA) contributing to the demise of the nation state as the basic organizational structure for human affairs. There is little doubt that for some involved in this process, the latter objective (the demise of the nation state) is the very purpose of the exercise. First create the trade blocs, then progressively transfer power from the national level to the supra-national level. The goal of supra-national government is now hardly hidden by its supporters. As EC Commission Vice-President Martin Bangemann put it early in September, the Maastricht Treaty on European Union 'means economic and monetary union - and not just common currency - but also a common economic policy. The logical consequence of a common currency is a common macroeconomic position. There is no longer any national sovereignty in economic affairs. The EC is a preparation for a global economic structure.' He might have added that the logical, indeed inevitable consequence of a common economic policy is common government. Therefore, if the EC is a 'preparation for a global economic structure' then it must also be a preparation for a global government. NAFTA will no doubt play its part in this.

"An important element in this is to transfer loyalties from national governments to the new supra-national authorities. It is happening rapidly in Western Europe, particularly in Britain, Belgium and Italy...

England throws out Progressive Education

The following is sensational information, but the US media have ignored it. We quote from the London Daily Telegraph of September 10, 1992.

"After 30 years English lessons go back to the traditional methods. The long battle over how English should be taught ended yesterday with a decisive victory for the traditionalists. Mr. Patten, Education Secretary, accepted proposals from the National Curriculum Council to abandon the progressive approach which has dominated the subject for nearly 30 years and introduce greater rigour into the teaching of the basic skills of reading, writing and speaking. He agreed the law should be changed to be sure that children are taught:

- * To write correct English by learning the rules of grammar.
- * To speak grammatically-current Standard English in both the classroom and the play ground.
- * To learn to read by a method that includes a significant element of phonics which involves sounding out words instead of trying to remember them by shape.
- * To spell by methods that include learning lists of words off by heart.
- * To appreciate the great works of English literature by being introduced to the standard literary canon."

"The easiest way to discover who is behind any policy is to identify who benefits, and the answer in this case is that there is a coalition of beneficiaries who all have an interest in establishing supra-national government on a global scale. The coalition includes internationalists such as big business, trade unions (in Europe but not in the United States-Ed.), human-rights activists, and environmentalists. They must have their own priorities, but they all have an interest in imposing their policy on a global rather than a national scale. The power of these groups is colossal, which explains why so much headway has been made at the expense of the ordinary citizen, who still understands that the nation state remains the best safeguard of individual freedoms....

"America is sharply divided over the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA), which must be approved by the US Congress, writes an ID Washington observer. Supporters of NAFTA insist that it will mean increased employment and prosperity for all in the US, Canada and Mexico....Representative Richard Gephardt (D-MO), the House majority leader, has emerged a leading critic of NAFTA. He charges that NAFTA would kill 150,000 US jobs which would move to Mexico...But for all the pros and cons, the most potent argument against NAFTA comes not from the protectionists, but from the true free-traders. As economist and Nobel laureate Milton Friedman puts it, regional trade agreements are inevitably destructive. 'The NAFTA pact is managed trade,' says Friedman, Those who have watched the development of the EC are correct to urge extreme caution. Managed trade is a very different, and more dangerous animal than multi-lateral tariff reduction." (Extended quotations from Intelligence Digest, 17 Rodney Road, Cheltenham, Glos, GL50 IHX, United Kingdom).

We repeat: NAFTA does provide for the exploitation of cheap labor and the movement of US based industries to Mexico, but it does not promote free trade. It promotes managed trade, which is an essential part of any socialist government. The same is true of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT), a treaty which was ratified 40 years ago, and which is now being revised and amended to better control the overall management of world trade. Expected to come out of an extended trade conference now being conducted in Geneva, will be a new UN Treaty which will lay down a code for international trade; the Multinational Trade Organization (MTO). MTO, GATT, NAFTA, and other international treaties work like this: The European Community already manages trade among its member States (no longer to be sovereign Nation States but merely administrative departments of a Regional World Government, if the Conspirators are victorious). NAFTA will manage all trade within its area. And Japan will lead in the creation of an Asian managed trade area. To create this three-way management of trade was the purpose behind the Rockefeller-Rothschild sponsorship of Brzezinski's plan for the creation of the Trilateral Commission, in which North America, Western Europe and Japan play equal parts. Of course, to control and coordinate the activities of the three regional areas, there must be a central authority to "harmonize" all regional activities. In the early stages of this development, there was GATT, a treaty signed 40 years ago. Now GATT is being rewritten so that it will serve as the agency that will "harmonize" trade between the three regions. A conference (Uruguay Round) was held but didn't quite succeed as expected. Now an extended conference is being held in Geneva, out of which is expected to be announced the creation of a new UN agency, the Multinational Trade Organization. It is said to be the most powerful new international agency since the establishment of the World Bank and IMF. According to NewsScan, the result will be "a historic shift in the constitutional system of checks and balances among the three branches of the federal government and between the federal government and the fifty States, involving thousands of pages in US law," and establishing a system wherein "international trade agreements" [would be] negotiated in secret by the executive branch [and would] take precedence over previously existing law. These international trade agreements would be binding and Congress would not be able to debate or amend them.

Thus it can be seen that NAFTA involves far more than the moving of US industries to Mexico where the exploitation of cheap labor is available. NAFTA is but one large but essential piece in the global jigsaw puzzle that is being designed by the "hidden hand" - it hopes to complete the job by the target year 2000. NAFTA also ties in with the plan to establish a Regional World Government. No sooner had President Bush signed NAFTA (still awaiting Congressional approval) than did the Planners begin the promotion of a "North American Parliament" to govern the NAFTA governments. On October 5, 1992, began the distribution on university campuses of a paper "obviously preparing the minds of the unsuspecting soon to be declared 'educated' young people, to whom no doubt, this all makes good sense," commented our correspondent who sent us a copy of the article. It is headed "Why we need a North American Parliament," by Andrew Reding of the Pacific News Service. We quote:

"Regardless of whether the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA) eventually conforms to Republican or Democratic prescriptions, it will signal the formation, however tentatively, of a new political unit - North America. To prepare for that new political reality, it is time to begin thinking about the formation of a North American parliament [similar to the parliament that governs EUROPE-Ed.). The internationalization of business already requires that increasingly important decisions be made at the international level. One of the purposes of the NAFTA and other international trade agreements is to set the principles by which such decisions are to be made, including the question of how to 'harmonize' different labor, consumer, environmental and other standards....Following the lead of the Europeans, we should begin considering formation of a continental parliament to restore a measure of popular influence in the design of common policies." In other words, it's time to begin the formation of a Regional World Government similar to that of EUROPE, which already controls the trade and economy, and hopes to create a common currency for all of the "former" Nations involved.

Summation. With Conspirators controlling the candidates, the election will change little. To win "We must abandon the false religion of the State and renew our faith in the sovereignty of our Creator and His Love. Without this, we will not succeed. It is ordained." Let us resolve:

"That we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive; But speaking the truth in love, may grow up in Him in all things, which is the Head, even Christ."

(Ephesians 4:14,15).

ANOTHER FDR?

Out of the frying pan into the fire is an apt description of the results that will follow the national election of November 3rd. It was granted that there wasn't much choice between Clinton and Bush. All the really qualified candidates were buried by the media and unheard of by the great majority. But that the people should elect a man with the character and reputation of Bill Clinton forms a sad commentary on just how low a once Christ-honoring and law respecting people can sink. Reed Karaim of the Miami Herald Washington Bureau began his pre-election comment with the words: "For much of this year the political pros didn't give Bill Clinton a chance to win the presidency. He was embarrassed by Gennifer Flowers in January, wounded by his draft history in February, stung by conflict-of-interests in March and shoved out of the limelight by Ross Perot in June. He was supposedly too slick. Talk-show hosts joked that he was the only known college student in the 1960s who tried marijuana but 'didn't inhale.' Conventional wisdom was emphatic and harsh. Bill Clinton couldn't win. He was history." Part of what this columnist neglected to mention was added in a lead story in the Seattle Post-Intelligencer: "In the fall and winter of 1969, several important things happened in the life of a bright, ambitious young man named Bill Clinton. He became, in a small way, a figure within the anti-war movement, helping to organize one of the largest marches on Washington and serving as a chief organizer of two small demonstrations in London. He took a trip through the Scandanavian countries, Russia and Czechoslovakia." Neither of these articles mentioned that Bill Clinton was a Rhodes Scholar, a member of the Council on Foreign Relations and a Bilderberger. Writing before the election occurred, Larry Abraham in his Insider Report commented: "Let me be specific and clear as possible about what I am saying. What Bill and Hilary Clinton represent to all self-avowed liberals is the personification of their most cherished beliefs--their religion, in fact, It is most often described as 'secular humanism.' It could be more accurately called pragmatic amorality. If Bill Clinton wins the election, it will mark the end of what Alexander de Toqueville described two centuries ago as America's 'goodness.' Under a Clinton co-regency, the old order will die and a new order will ascend. It will be the totally amoral order envisioned six decades ago by the Italian Marxist Antonio Gramsci. And it will hold sway in the most powerful position in Western civilization--the office of President of the United States....No matter what act of human degradation someone may seek to legitimize, with the Clintons it is not only tolerated, it is elevated to the status of 'moral.' Their view of the value of morality or 'values' has nothing to do with the Ten Commandments or anything remotely close. Their value system, and consequently the one they seek to make respectable internationally, has only one standard: Does it satisfy the wants and desires of the moment?....If the Clintons win, it will mean that everything is up for grabs: homosexuality, illicit sexual relations, drug use, draft evasion, whatever. Following the Clintons' example, any pragmatic approach to satisfying the desires of the moment will be considered valid....That is why the liberals have jumped four-square behind Bill and Hilary Clinton." Not just the liberals, however. The majority of the people who voted on November 3rd approved, knowingly, unconsciously or ignorantly the amoral, unGodly beliefs of the Clintons.

The Change Syndrome. When the megabankers and those who are building the Socialist New World Order decide that national or global economic or political change from the old order are necessary, they first create a great depression or a long-lasting recession. Then they present a plan (the change) which will solve the problem of the crisis. Interestingly, in the United States the depression or recession is generally brought about when the President is a Republican. Republican Herbert Hoover in the 1920s, George Bush in the 1990s. Then a Democrat is selected to bring about the pre-planned change. FDRoosevelt in the 1930s; Bill Clinton in the 1990s. Roosevelt called his change the New Deal; Clinton speaks of the New Beginning. FDR's first term featured the Hundred Days in which he closed all the banks, allowed the bigger ones to reopen. He called on Congress to repeal the Volstead Act, called for the passage of the Agricultural Adjustment Act (AAA), created the Civilian Conservation Corps (CCC). Then came the Federal Emergency Relief Administration (FERA), the Works Progress Administration (WPA), the Tennessee Valley Authority (TVA), the National Recovery Act (NRA) and scores of other bureaucratic agencies that changed entirely the complexion of the federal government. FDR's Hundred Days were phenomenal, mostly fascistic, and there was a rubber stamp congress eager to approve FDR's every demand.

Presently the media are speculating on Clinton's Hundred Days and how much change will be involved. NYTimes says "Clinton plans intense domestic agenda in 1st 100 days." First, he would use the Executive Order method in "issuing a whirlwind of executive orders on abortion rights, White House perquisites and government ethics, ending the ban on homosexuals in the military, establishing a family-leave policy for federal employees who want time to care for children or sick relatives," and in approving scores of measures that were vetoed by Bush. The Baltimore Sun drew up a list of the things Clinton promised to do, telling readers that "Here - from A to Z - are some policies Clinton has said he plans to implement in his administration after he becomes the nation's 42nd chief executive on Jan. 20." The list includes abortion, agriculture, AIDS, arms control, arts, children, China, civil rights, drugs, education, foreign aid, immigration, etc., etc. After listing 45 different commitments Clinton made to voters, the Sun concludes with these words: "Even if Clinton does everything he says he will, after four years there will still be nine zeros in a $141,000,000,000 deficit." But bear in mind that Clinton will do not what he promised to do, but what the Conspirator's Hierarchy allows him to do or commands him to do. It was the same with FDR. He made great promises and backed a platform so conservative that even Republicans applauded him. But once in office, he ignored the Democratic platform and adopted instead the New Deal program. So, don't expect Clinton to do what he promised to do. He'll do what he's allowed to do.

But we were comparing the change in government structure that follows when a depression is created in a Republican Administration and then remedied in a Democratic Administration. And we noted the similarities between Roosevelt and Clinton. The similarities are striking when we compare the wives of the two; Eleanor and Hilary. Historians have been kind to Eleanor, even as the media have been kind to Hilary. It is almost never mentioned that Eleanor "fraternized with the Reds and the pinks, with the Red-fascists and the technocrats and the crackpot fringe generally, gave them a sense of association with the White House, invited their leaders and their pets to the White House and to her apartment in New York, went to their meetings, endorsed their numerous front organizations and generally made herself a thorn in the side of the Democratic organization when it confronted its orthodox members," wrote John T. Flynn in his The Roosevelt Myth). First Lady Eleanor promoted Communism; First Lady-elect Hilary promotes "radical feminism,, homosexuality, illicit sexual relations, drug use, whatever seems to satisfy the desires of the moment."

The Planned Economy. In the Cold War years there was the mandate to foundations to strive to merge the USA and the USSR. The merging was to be economic, not necessarily political. It had to do with the merging of capitalism and socialism, called fascism. In the second Roosevelt era the New Deal was an attempt to merge the two and call it Planned Economy. The plan did not succeed at that time. But now, with Communism submerged because no longer needed, the aim of merging remains. When considering the future of America under a Clinton regime, it is important to observe how the Clinton regime may compare with the earlier Roosevelt regime. An excellent description of the New Deal program is contained in The Roosevelt Myth, by John T. Flynn, published by Devin-Adair in 1948, revised edition in 1956. We quote at length from the revised edition.

"As I write, of course, Mussolini is an evil memory. But in 1933 he was a towering figure who was supposed to have discovered something worth study and imitation by all world artificers everywhere. What they [the Roosevelt Brain Trusters] liked particularly was his corporative system. He organized each trade or industrial group into a state-supervised trade association. He called it a corporative. These corporatives operated under state supervision and could plan production, quality, price, distribution, labor standards, etc. The National Recovery Act [NRA] provided that each industry should be organized into a federally supervised trade association. It was not called a corporative. It was called a Code Authority. But it was essentially the same thing. These Code Authorities could regulate production, quantities, qualities, prices, distribution, methods, etc., under the supervision of the NRA. This was fascism...They called it the Planned Economy...The idea was that it would be sufficient to nationalize the banks, the railroads, all means of transport, and a few great basic industries. This would leave all the factories, stores, amusements, farms, etc., in the hands of private owners. Actually such a society would be about one-fourth socialist and three-fourths privately owned or capitalist [the merging-Ed.]. However in this society the State would assume the responsibility for making the whole work; it would hold itself responsible for the well-being of all citizens, their protection from the hazards of life - poverty, sickness, age, etc. And to make the whole continuously without occasional breakdowns, the State would set up certain great planning agencies or boards which would continuously study and observe the functioning of the economic system and make plans covering production, prices, distribution, wages, hours, etc. Thus we would have what was in fact a Planned Capitalism, with the State responsible for the planning and for ensuring the carrying out of its plans through great government bureaus armed with the necessary powers to enforce compliance.

"This was the perfect haven for great masses of intellectuals - students, teachers, lawyers, politicians, writers, journalists and others - who had flirted timidly with Socialism and Communism, but who did not dare to admit they were Communists or Socialists...A man could support publicly and with vehemence this system of the Planned Economy without incurring the odium of being too much of a radical for polite and practical society. There was only one trouble with it. This was what Mussolini had adopted

- the Planned Capitalist State. And he gave it a name - Fascism. (In America)) they called it the Planned Economy. But it was and is fascism by whatever name it is known. And though it may be launched under a free republic, it will wither and die because of the feebleness of the government which tries to enforce it by helpless appeals to the people. Little by little the government must be made stronger, the rights of the citizens before the government must be reduced. Little by little, if the Planned Economy is to be made to work, the free republic must wither. These two ideas - the idea of a free republic and the idea of a Planned Economy - cannot live together." (Underlining added for emphasis).

As Flynn wrote, little by little, after eight years of trying to make the New Deal's Planned Economy work, the Conspirator's Hierarchy resorted to the plan that had worked so well at other times - War.

"The blow would come at Pearl Harbor." What followed was three years of America at War. All other issues of taxation, of debt, of the struggle between the federal and state powers, the powers of Congress and the President, the bureaucracy - all became merely subsidiary questions to the question of War. "The great theatrical success, the New Deal, was to be taken from the boards. The President himself would say he was slaying his popular hero. 'It will no longer be Dr. New Deal,' he said. 'It will be Dr. Win-the-war'."

"The key word is Change. The New Deal attempt to change the Republic into a Socialist Corporative State withered and gave way to war, creating a Socialist Power (Communism) to be played against a Capitalist Power (USA) until such time as the two economic systems should be merged, creating a Global Corporative System (Fascism). The pattern has been the same: The Elephant creates the Crisis, the Jackass supervises the change. FDR called it The New Deal. Clinton ever changeable and indecisive called it The Covenant, then changed it to The New Beginning. The Miami Herald noted the similarities, said: "The country, is as it was in 1933, is frightened, weary and mistrustful; it will follow its heart, not its head. It will go wherever the passion is....Is Bill Clinton another FDR? Roosevelt's First Hundred Days rolled like ball lightning across the bleak horizon of the Depression....And in six decades the need has never been greater." Clinton's First Hundred Days could include numerous drastic changes. He will have the power to declare a National Economic Emergency, changing the Nation into a Totalitarian Bureaucratic State. Or he could declare a national bank holiday, as did FDR. Gold confiscation is probable. A great Domestic Peace Corps (like the CCC) will be established. Giant works progress can be expected, along with more government and regional bureaus and agencies, and a deluge of new socialist legislation. Behind it all, the establishment of a Corporative Socialist Economic System can be expected.

"But the Lord shall endure forever: He hath prepared his throne for judgment. And He shall judge the world in righteousness. He shall minister judgment to the people in uprightness....The wicked shall be turned into hell, and all the nations that forget God....Put them in fear, O Lord, that the nations may know themselves to be men. Selah." (Psalm 9:7,8,17,20.)

USSA?

Now that the hard-left socialists have gained complete control of the US Administration, effective control of the Legislative branch, and partial control of the Judiciary, the global money monopolists are well on the way toward realizing their goal: the establishment of their Corporative Socialist New World Order. The Plan involves the end of the Constitutional Republic and the establishment of a United Socialist States of America. America is to become the third zone in a Trilateral Economic and Political sphere under a Global Authority. America, with its administrative capital in Washington, Europe with headquarters in Brussels, and Asia with Tokyo its economic and political center, will form the Trilateral Order commanded from the United Nations headquarters in New York City. Patrick Buchanan, during the summer election campaign, said: "The damage a Clinton-Gore Administration could do to the US economy, to business, to the social fabric, to family values and freedom of association, would be irreversible." The conspirator's hierarchy, with their agents in command at every post and outpost, expect to complete their goal by the year 2000. Unless there is divine intervention, there is every prospect of their succeeding, because the results of the November 3rd election seems to prove that the people who have deserted their God are not able to keep their Republic. Following is a part of the story, the story of how hard-left Socialism moved into the White House to stay, ousted Constitutional government, planned the destruction of free enterprise capitalism, and establish Secular humanism as the state religion. This part of the story of the anticipated decline and fall of the American Republic seems to have gained its inspiration from the near deification of sex on the part of one Sigmund Freud. When his "Doctrine of Man" began to be hailed and accepted by leading neurologists and psychologists, he moved from Vienna to London where he could command a greater international audience. Earlier, Karl Marx had moved to London where he gained a worldwide audience. Freud was equally successful in that the rising acceptance of the Freudian Ethic prompted the British Royal Institute of International Affairs, parent of the US based Council on Foreign Relations, to induce the British government to set up a Psychological Warfare Bureau for the purpose of studying the effects of shellshock and stress among British troops who had survived the first world war. With a Major John Rawlings Reese, a British army technician in charge, an estimated 80,000 British army guinea pigs underwent various forms of testing including what later came to be called brainwashing. The globalists, satisfied that psychological warfare should be a principle weapon in their war to win the world, took charge of the process. In 1921 the Duke of Bedford, Marquess of Tavistock, gave this psychological bureau a building and financial grant and the Tavistock Institute took over the task of establishing the "breaking point" of men under stress, and creating the necessary stress among masses of people in order to "change mankind." In 1932 Kurt Lewin, a German refugee, became director of Tavistock, and he was assigned to the task of getting America into the second world war. He came to the United States in 1933, is credited with causing the creation of the OSS, the forerunner of the CIA. He set up the Harvard Psychological Clinic which "originated the propaganda campaign to turn the American public against Germany and involve us in World War II," according to Eustace Mullins who, in his book The World Order wrote: "Tavistock's pioner work in behavioral science along Freudian lines of 'controlling' humans established it [Tavistock] as the world Center of foundation ideology. The network extends from the University of Sussex to the US through the Stanford Research Institute, Esalin, MIT, Hudson Institute, Heritage Foundation, and Center of Strategic and International Studies at Georgetown where State Dept. personnel are trained, US Air Force Intelligence, and the Rand and Mitre corporations. The personnel of the foundations are required to undergo indoctrination at one or more of these Tavistock controlled institutions. A network of secret groups, the Mount Pelerin Society, Trilateral Commission, Ditchley Foundation and Club of Rome is conduit for instructions to the Tavistock network." As for that Tavistock network, Dr. John Coleman in his important Conspirator's Hierarchy lists more than 40 institutions in the network, one of which is the Institute for Policy Study, "One of the Big Three" which has "shaped and reshaped United States policies, foreign and domestic, since it was founded by James P. Warburg and the Rothschild entities in the United States, bolstered by Bertrand Russell and the British Socialists through its [Fabian] network."

In April 1961 there was held a White House-State Dept. disarmament conference. Among those in attendance were Marcus Raskin, staff member of the National Security Council, and Richard Barnet, deputy director for political research at the US Arms Control and Disarmament Agency. "Across a crowded room their eyes met...They recognized in each other the same hostility toward the whole military-industrial establishment...Within two years Barnet and Raskin had put together (Warburg assisting) the necessary funding, personnel and program. The Institute began work in 1963." (From The Coercive Utopians). Raskin and Barnet had left government service to set up their socialistic institute, but they kept their government contacts intact. The first IPS annual report stated: "The Institute has been gratified by the enthusiastic cooperation it has received from government agencies, including the White House, the Department of State, the Department of Defense, the Office of Education, the Civil Rights Commission, the Department of Justice and members of Congress...Government officials have shown great willingness to make documents available whenever possible and to meet with Fellows of the Institute to discuss policy problems."

Perhaps as a result of that cooperation IPS found a way in which grounds could be found to file a civil suit against FBI Director Clarence Kelly, Attorney General John Mitchell and a number of other administration officials and FBI agents. "The out-of-court settlement agreed to by the Carter Administration five years later was unbelievably broad...Stephen Powell in his authoritative book on the IPS, Covert Cadre, said: 'In effect, IPS was given carte blanche to support domestic and foreign parties, movements and governments hostile to the United States. The Institution's activities to socialize American society, divide and weaken American alliances and generally frustrate US foreign policy efforts to contain communism would not be disturbed.'" (From The Coercive Utopians). In this out-of-court settlement agreed to by the Carter Administration, the order was given that "The Federal Bureau of Investigation shall not collect, gather, index, file, maintain, store or disseminate any information regarding the plaintiffs (IPS), their associations, speech or activities."

In the International Currency Review in an article entitled "Bill Clinton's Hard-Left Entourage" observed that "IPS specializes in promoting policy prescriptions which diverge radically from America's heritage, seeking to 'transform' the country by stealth. Politically it seeks, in the words of several of its luminaries, including Derek Shearer, a leading economic adviser to Clinton to 'move the Democratic Party's debate internally to the left by creating an invisible presence in the party'." Human Events (11/21/92) added: "Left-wing economist Derek Shearer, the former Institute for Policy Studies fellow, who advised Tom Hayden and Jane Fonda, may turn out to be a prize economic plum in the Clinton Administration after all. Shearer's sister, Brooke, according to a recent article in Peoples magazine, introduced Shearer to Clinton 23 years ago, when Clinton was at Oxford. 'The two families,' reports People, 'have been close ever since, When the Clintons visited California, they often stayed with Shearer's parents. During a California campaign stop, Clinton and Shearer played two-on-two with Shearer's son, Casey, 14, and stepson Anthony, 20, and the old guys won,' says People. Clinton may make Shearer chairman of the Council on Economic Advisers...."

"In economic policy," wrote International Currency, "the IPS has launched a complex, many-tiered campaign to foster socialism in the United States. Since socialism is of course anathema to Americans, the campaign promotes the devious agenda of economic democracy instead. In October 1981 Ralph Nader organized a conference called "Taking Charge: The Next Ten Years." Derek Shearer was a speaker and he explained what he meant by economic democracy. In Barron's of 10/12/81, Shearer's statement was published: "I particularly like the phrase economic democracy...It has been referred to by some of my friends as the 'great euphemism.' And while we can't use the 'S-word' (socialism) too effectively in American politics, we have found that in the greatest tradition of American advertising, the phrase economic democracy sells. You can take it door to door like Fuller brushes, and the doors will not be slammed in our face. So I commend it to you, for those who are willing to compromise on the 'S-word.'"

Shearer is the leading member of informal economic advisers, all of whom met Clinton at Oxford in 1969. The team includes Harvard Professor Robert Reich, the New York investment banker Robert Altman, and a prominent business man from Rhode Island, Ira Magaziner. Reporter Louis Uchitelle of the NY Times names Reich as "chief of the team preparing a menu of economic action for the president to choose from...the only economic adviser with daily access to Clinton." But Reich expects to return to Harvard when Clinton moves to the White House, in which case Shearer is expected to replace him as Clinton's economic adviser. And if the perverse influence of these IPS fellows he met while denouncing the UN and organizing protest rallies in London seem insufficient, there remains his long-time political partner, Mrs. Hillary Rodham Clinton, often referred to as the "Willie Mandela" of American politics. When Clinton became Governor of Arkansas in 1978, Hillary Clinton's political career had already taken off. She began by specializing in promoting "children's rights" which include "the legal independence of children after infancy and early childhood." She worked with a left-wing pressure group known as the Children's Defense Fund. Then in 1978 she was named by President Carter to chair the Legal Services Corporation. Out of that job when Ronald Reagan was elected, she spent the next few years organizing campaigns against his administration. In 1987 she became Director and Chairwoman of the Board of Directors of the New World Federation whose name properly identifies it. NWF made grants to the IPS and many of its spinoff organizations, to the pro-communist National Lawyers Guild, to William Kunstler's Center for Constitutional Studies which seeks controversial cases through courts to promote 'progressive' causes. A British reporter notes that "For half a century or more, 'progressive' has been the American 'politically correct' code-word for 'leftist' or 'pro-communist'." The previously cited article, "Bill Clinton's Hard-Left Entourage," concludes with this statement: "Apologists for Hillary Clinton say that she embraced these subversive and loony ideas when she was 'just a kid,' implying, without verification, that she has since outgrown them. But the reality is different. She was a woman of 40 when Chairwoman of the New World Federation. If there were substance to such excuses, one would have expected Mrs. Clinton to have publicly renounced her batty ideas. But she hasn't done so. And nor, for that matter, has Mr. Clinton done anything to distance himself from the Hard-Left views of his wife (which might be problematical) or of Derek Shearer and the other dedicated revolutionary cadres and alumni of the Marxist-Leninist-Gramscist Institute for Policy Studies with whom he associates...What this election has shown is the ease with which the US presidency can be hi-jacked."

But all of the foregoing should not indicate that Clinton is unfriendly with the global money monopolists who promoted his election and who expect to complete their control of the globe and all it contains by the year 2000. In fact, it appears that a very prominent member of the Conspiracy's Inner Circle has been selected to join the Clinton team for the purpose of seeing to it that nothing is done that might be contrary to the wishes of the global money monopolists. Robert S. Strauss is an Inner Circle power broker who has been described as "one who is above ideology, above party, and above country. Like a chameleon, he changes to suit the needs of the moment." For years Strauss (CFR and TLC) was a money raiser for the National Democratic Party and a former Democrat Party Chairman. But he proved he could work for either party. When the USSR was about to disintegrate, Republican Bush named Democrat Strauss to the then most powerful of all diplomatic posts: US Ambassador to Russia. As liaison between Yeltsin and the power brokers he'd be an ideal choice, since this international lawyer is really a Corporate Socialist leader in disguise. His Wall Street clients have been Goldman Sachs, Morgan Stanley and Drexel Burnham Lambert. Multinational clients include Xerox, American Airlines, Northrop, Westinghouse and Pepsico. When his job is finished in Moscow, it's expected he'll return to the Democratic fold as foreign policy adviser to Clinton. As George Wallace is credited with saying, "There's not a dime's worth of difference."

The Clinton Era will find a network of New Agers and Radical Environmentalists, Hard-Left and Corporate Socialists, Power Brokers and Money Monopolists, Occultists and Religionists, intent on ending the Christian Era. So be prepared. "Wherefore take unto you the whole armour of God, that ye may be able to withstand in the evil day, and having done all, to stand." (Ephesians 6:13).

HIDDEN MOTIVES

When a lame duck president stalls for months while an estimated 300,000 Somalis die from starvation or murder by bandits, then suddenly promises the Secretary General of the United Nations that he will provide up to 28,000 US troops to serve under the UN if the UN Security Council will order the invasion of Somali, one wonders about the timing, the place, and the real reason for the promise. Columnist Samuel Francis said "The lunatic adventure in Somalia...is the last legacy of a rejected president and his ill-conceived 'New World Order'." Then, when the president-elect gave his approval of the idea of ordering US troops to serve as mercenaries to the UN in the building of the New World Order, the thought of Conspiracy comes to mind. Bush was a front man for the Conspirators who are in the process of completing a New World Order and a One World Government to assure its maintenance. And Clinton is a Rhodes Scholar who studied the art and science of Fabianism at Oxford, he is a member of the Council on Foreign Relations, of the Trilateral Commission, and the Bilderberg group. So, the leadership may change, but the goal remains the same.

In his term as president, George Bush has shown a flair for dramatics in his conduct of foreign policy. His embracing of Gorbachev as potential partner in his version of the New World Order displayed showmanship of a rare breed. And the timing of his use of the US military forces seemed significant. Back in 1989, on December 20, five days before Christmas, he ordered the military invasion and conquest of the sovereign state of Panama in order to capture its leader and bring him to the United States for trial. This action established a precedent. Now sovereignty and national borders can be ignored when convenient. This invasion of Panama happened at Christmas time. Then, during the Christmas holiday season in 1990, nearly half a million UN servicemen and women were in the Middle East, away from home in Islam, preparing for the so-called liberation of Kuwait and the punishment of Iraq's Saddam Hussein for daring to try to establish a monopoly of oil production in the Gulf area. As with Panama, this could have happened earlier, but the Christmas season was the time chosen. And now for the third time President Bush or someone higher than he chose to give the order to invade Somalia so that US troops will be guarding supply lines in a Moslem land on Christmas Day. Maybe we're overly suspicious, and this timing was coincidental. But we're a Conspiracy buff, and we wonder.

Certainly, for purely humanitarian reasons, the invasion of Somalia on behalf of the UN is comendable. But similar action could have been justified in Angola, Armenia, Bosnia, Liberia, to name just a few places where there is wholesale starvation, or attempted genocide, or inhuman action that should require police action. So, why was Somali chosen? Why should it receive internationally spotlighted attention by the media? Until a few weeks before the word for invasion was given, there was virtually no public attention given to Somalia. It wasn't even mentioned by Bush or Clinton in their election campaigns. Most Americans didn't have the foggiest idea of where Somalia is, who lives there, what its political, religious or cultural institutions are, what language Somalis speak. So far as we know, there was no business interest in Somalia, even on the part of the multinationals who seek to establish monopolies everywhere. So why was Somalia chosen for takeover?

There are several reasons for the invasion of Somalia. One has to do with the bolstering of the UN itself. Lucia Monat of The Christian Science Monitor (12/9/92) explains: "The Bush Administration's offer to the United Nations to send Marines to Somalia to ensure delivery of relief supplies helps not only Somalia but the UN itself. The US pitch on Somalia was quickly accepted last week by the UN Security Council, giving the UN a new vitality and confidence just when the organization most needs them. Key personnel are stretched thin as the UN tries to ride herd on a growing number of ethnic conflicts. UN Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali has had to prod nations to pay their bills and contribute troops. Any proposal for UN action requires strong political leadership and a broad consensus. And as the only superpower, the US must be aboard if not in the lead....there is a palpable sense of relief here that something at last is being done on a scale, and at a speed, that could make a difference. About 500 UN peacekeeping troops from Pakistan were stuck in their Somali barracks for most of the fall because clan leaders could not agree where they should be stationed. Other long-authorized UN troops have not yet arrived in the capital of Mogadishu. The new enforcement action, taken under Chapter 7 of the UN Charter, opens a new chapter for UN intervention in a country on humanitarian grounds....Yet the US is sure to remain a major UN player. As President Bush explained his Somalia offer: 'Some crises in the world can't be resolved without American involvement'. Once again the UN has a renewed sense of what it is capable of when the need is great..."

James P. Tucker of The Spotlight gives yet another reason for the Somali intervention. We should mention that Tucker and The Spotlight have been the principal investigators of a secret organization known as the Bilderberg group. Front page article in the paper's issue of 12/14/92 begins: "...intervention in Somalia by American forces under a UN banner follow the precise script written by the Bilderberg group in Evian, France last spring. It is establishing precedents important to the internationalist shadow government eager to make UN forces a world army serving under a global government. For the first time UN forces are intervening, uninvited, in the domestic affairs of a sovereign government. For the first time the United Nations will establish and impose a government on a sovereign nation." In its issue of 5/8/92 Spotlight reported that "Bilderberg participants at Evian called for 'conditioning the public'...to accept the idea of a UN army that could by force impose its will on the internal affairs of any nation." And at that meeting Henry Kissinger is reported to have said, "Today, Americans would be outraged if UN forces entered Los Angeles to restore order. Tomorrow, they will be grateful." And "A speech by UN Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali to the American Association of Newspaper Publishers, in which he called for a permanent force that could 'intervene at local and community levels' was also reported at the meeting."

"Empowering the United Nations" is the title of a report appearing in the 92/93 winter issue of the Council on Foreign Relations quarterly, Foreign Affairs. It was written by UN Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali. He says "A new chapter in the history of the United Nations has begun. With newfound appeal the world organization is being utilized with greater frequency and growing urgency," and "The new era [meaning the post Cold War era] has brought new credibility to the United Nations. Along with it have come rising expectations that the United Nations will take on larger responsibilities and a greater role in overcoming pervasive and interrelated obstacles to peace and development." The word "development" will be easily understood by the megabankers and multinationalists. As for peace, he observes that "Peacekeeping is a UN invention." Back in 1953 Harry Elmer Barnes wrote a book about "Perpetual War for Perpetual Peace." In his statement Boutros-Ghali told half the truth. In perpetuating peace he insists that UN troops should be "authorized to use force" and "they would be trained, armed and equipped accordingly." Accordingly, UN troops are being trained in the United States at the present time. They would become the officers commanding a permanent UN army. On the subject of sovereignty the Secretary-General temporizes: "While respect for the fundamental sovereignty and integrity of the state remains central, it is undeniable that the centuries-old doctrine of absolute and exclusive sovereignty no longer stands...A major intellectual requirement of our times is to rethink the question of sovereignty." Finally, "renewing the promise of an effective and cooperative United Nations means, in the first instance, reform of the organization and the broader system of specialized agencies from within...Centuries were required before the struggle among monarchical and baronial forces was transformed into states capable of carrying out responsibilities in the fields of security, economy and justice. There is no doubt that the institutions of the UN system must travel such a path if chaos is to be avoided." Of course, in this era of speed and almost instant communication of ideas, the rethinking of the "question of sovereignty" can take but an invasion and conquest of one state to establish a precedent. Somalia can provide the "rethinking" of sovereignty, integrity and borders; and although the era of colonization is supposedly ended, Somalia can become the first state governed and controlled absolutely by the UN. Other states can follow and American troops assigned as mercenaries to the UN, can make it possible.

There remains yet another reason for the intervention and takeover of Somalia. It's geographical location on the Horn of Africa is important in the building of a New World Order. While the Western Establishment is anxious to complete the building of its New Order, there is another world power which is intent upon creating its own New World Order.

"A well-placed diplomatic observer has told Intelligence Digest that there may be more to George Bush's offer to send up to 30,000 troops to Somalia than is admitted. According to this observer, the offer of troops is unlikely to be a last-minute conversion to grand humanitarian actions but rather a response to the increasing challenge posed by Iran in the Red Sea and to Egypt. The fact that the UN Secretary-General Boutros-Ghali is himself an Egyptian will not have been a hindrance, it is said." This statement from the British-based and highly creditable Intelligence Digest suggests a hidden motive in the invasion of Somali. Reporting from Mogadishu on 12/13/92, Carl Rosenberg of the Miami Herald said that Gen. Ahmed Jamah Musa who holds the title of chief of police, agrees with UN Secretary-General Boutros-Ghali in insisting that the Marines do more than simply feed the starving Somalis. "UN officials, Somalis, even some aid workers are clamoring for the US-led multinational forces to also systematically disarm the gangs, a potentially risky proposition given the clan divisions that bedevil this Horn of Africa nation. 'They shouldn't have come in the first place if they came just for food,' said [police chief] Musa as he sat in his home, locked behind a gate in downtown Mogadishu." That this is far more than a humanitarian gesture is evident, and dangerous.

While Iraq was being reduced in military power via Desert Storm, neighboring Iran was building up its own military strength. It purchased three Russian submarines, annexed Abu Musa, a strategic island in the Persian Gulf, reportedly bought from 100 to 300 scud missiles from North Korea, a large amount of Silkworms from China along with 38 warplanes plus the 115 combat planes flown from Iraq for safety during the Gulf War. There is a report of a massive arms deal about to be signed between China and Iran. But the real threat from Iran concerns what is happening in the Red Sea. When the Sudanese government renounced "democracy" and became totally Muslim in character, there was rebellion from certain parts of Sudan. Coming to Sudan's aid were Iran, Ethiopia and Libya. This became a threat to Egypt, which is also facing increasing internal pressure from its own Islamists. It will be remembered that Egypt was the first of the states in that area to acknowledge that Israel has a right to exist as a nation. And there is said to be an old Mideast dictum that "You can't make peace without Syria, and you can't make war without Egypt." So the Iran/Ethiopia/Libya Islamic trilateral of nations is urging Egypt to join them. If that happens, here lies the basis for an Islamic New World Order goal that would threaten the Western trilateral Nations and the New York/London/Tokyo based New World Order. Joseph de Courcy of Intelligence Digest notes: "That Iran has submarines, that it has access to Port Sudan, and that it is politically close to Yemen which controls the entrance to the Red Sea have all contributed to the Pentagon's unease. 20,000 ships a year pass through the Red Sea, whilst 20% of the world's oil flows through the Iranian-dominated Strait of Hormuz at the entrance to the Persian Gulf...Other contributing factors....Eritrea is almost certainly going to gain independence from Ethiopia, a new uncertainty to the Red Sea equation, and the fact that Djibouti....is suffering considerable internal unrest. These are the geopolitical facts behind George Bush's offer of up to 30,000 troops for Somalia...It would be hard to disagree with the UN assessment of the threat posed by Iran to Egypt and the Red Sea region. ..For Bill Clinton it will invoke untold fears of the US being sucked once again into confrontation with Iran. He will not want to suffer at the hands of Tehran the same fate as his Democratic predecessor at the White House, Jimmy Carter."

Yet another motive. Once the Communists controlled the UN. But Bush's military success and Gorbachev's geopolitical failure has changed that. Now the builders of the New World Order can openly claim control and are building the UN for global governorship. But the UN still lacks its own army, must look to the US for principal power to work its way toward control of all nations. However, there is unrest in Eastern Europe, the Middle East is a powder keg awaiting explosion, and a sea and air facility on the Horn of Africa could do much toward maintaining "Perpetual War for Perpetual Peace." Humanitarianism aside, a long stay of US troops in Somalia is probable.

"They search out iniquities; they accomplish a diligent search; both the inward thought of every one of them,...But God shall shoot at them with an arrow; suddenly they shall be wounded." (Psalm 64:6,7).

TRANSFORMING CULTURE

Changes. That was the name of the game according to the campaign promises of the Clintons-Gore trio. "It was the pivotal force of 1992, the fulcrum of Bill Clinton's victory and the reality intruding on many American's lives. Shackled by a stagnant economy, fearful for their children's future, voters sought a fresh start with youthful energy and optimism. That's why when Clinton declared in July, 'Now that we have changed the world, let's change America,' it sounded more convincing than when Bush first uttered the line in January." So editorialized Steven Roberts in USNews. But at the end of his article titled "State of the Union," Roberts was careful to add: "Not all change is good...that is why managing the conflict demands of change and continuity will be Clinton's toughest first-year challenge." Irving Weiss, famous veteran from the market crashes of 1929 and 1987, was more explicit, He wrote, "On Jan. 30, 1933, Bill Clinton will walk into the White House...and throw out all his campaign promises." Two Miami Herald Washington Bureau staffers voiced the same opinion. They said, "With his Cabinet complete President-elect Bill Clinton has given a preview of how he will govern. The early signs are that he will pursue moderate policies, execute them cautiously and seek a consensus whenever he can. Bold initiatives, creative ideas, sharp idealogues. fresh facts - these are not hallmarks of the team selected by the man who promised to be an agent of change. Instead, Clinton is playing it safe. He has selected pragmatic advisers who represent the Democratic Party's diverse special interests, who fit in with the Washington establishment and who have the government expective to get it done."

Of course we can't be sure until after the inauguration and the "100 days" and Clinton has taken charge just what may be in store for the Nation under Clinton's regime. This change agent is very changeable. But this seems certain. The power brokers who chose Clinton to replace Bush have taken charge of their agent. Clinton was allowed to be Clinton so long as he didn't shout Institute for Policy Studies slogans and kept Hillary suppressed. It was necessary that he shout change and promise diversity in order to be sure to win the popular election. But now that he is to take charge, his policies will not be his policies, but those of the ruling elite. There was a similar situation when Franklin Delano Roosevelt campaigned and won his first term. The people were conditioned to demand change, and FDR promised to change things. He certainly did. But he campaigned on the most conservative program imaginable, and once in office he "threw out all his campaign promises" and installed the Conspirators Hierarchy program known as The New Deal. Clinton, it seems, is about to do the same but in reverse. He'll throw out his ultra-liberal program and proceed according to the dictates of his real bosses. That his Cabinet and Administrative team are flooded with members of the Council on Foreign Policy, Trilateral Commissioners, and Fellows of the Institute for Policy Studies, etc., indicates that there will be changes, but they will be dictated by the power elite. Further, everything that Bush has said or done since losing the election, has been approved by Clinton. That includes obeying the manufactured UN order to send UN troops into Somalia, approving the the NAFTA Treaty, of his deals with Russia, all indicate that Clinton will not create a new foreign policy, but will further the policies begun by Bush, including promotion of the New World Order. And when we consider the former Jimmy Carter aides that have been resurrected and selected by Clinton as Cabinet Secretaries and assistants, we can suspect two things: That Clinton's domestic policies will follow those that Carter sponsored but couldn't complete, and that Clinton's foreign policies will be the continuation of George Bush's foreign policies.

In the transition period when Clinton was selecting his Cabinet members for Congressional approval, one of his guideposts was diversity. He attained what he desired except that he said he would have liked to have chosen one Republican to complete the diversity. But while this government of men was being formed to provide this diversity, there was another form of diversity that is being ignored or has never been heard of by the great majority. The controlled communications media continue to tell us that Communism is dead. Western society has been blinded to a deadlier variety of Communism which is very much alive, is being promoted in Russia, and "lurks half hidden within political and official organizations and bureaucracies," this according to a responsible authority which we shall not name, and "Only a small minority of informed observers is alert to the dangers presented by cadres."

"More than any other movement within the revolutionary tradition, communism was born with its name," wrote James H. Billington, author of Fire in the Minds of Men. "When the word first appeared publicly in 1840, it spread throughout the continent with a speed altogether unprecedented in the history of such verbal epidemics. Unlike other revolutionary labels, communism was a new word, associated from the beginning with a new concept.

"The idea was refined and finally made manifest by Marx on the eve of revolution in 1848." Up to that time, revolutionaries had been struggling to find a name for their movement. They toyed with the word Democracy, then with Liberalism, finally accepted Socialism as a general term. It too was a new word, Robert Owen, who unsuccessfully planted communist centers in the United States, was said to have been the first to accept the word Socialism in his writings. But before the words Socialism and Communism there was the work of such men as Saint Simon, Fourier, Fichte, and so many others who laid their own foundations upon which the various types of Socialism was created. And before Socialism or Communism came the Order of the Illuminati, created on May 1, 1776 by Adam Weishaupt. But neither was this a new idea. Nesta Webster in her Secret Societies and Subversive Movements wrote "That Weishaupt was not the originator of the system he named Illuminism...It has needed in fact all the foregoing chapters [in her book] to trace the source of Weishaupt's doctrines throughout the history of the world. From these it will be evident that men aiming at the overthrow of the existing social order and of all accepted religions had existed from the earliest times, and that by the Cainites, the Carpocratians, the Manicheans, the Batinis, and the Katmathites many of Weishaupt's ideas had already been foreshadowed.. Thus de Sacy has described in the following words the manner of enlisting proselytes by the Ismailis: 'They proceeded to the admission and initiation of new proselytes only by degrees and with great reserve; for, as the sect had at the same time a political objective and ambitions, its interest was above all places and all classes of society. It was necessary therefore to suit themselves to the character, the temperament, and the prejudices of the greater number; what one revealed to some would have revolted others and alienated forever spirits less bold and consciences more easily alarmed.' This passage exactly described the methods laid down by Weishaupt for his 'Insinuating Brothers' of speaking sometimes in one way, sometimes in another, so that one's real purpose should remain impenetrable to members of the inferior grades."

There is the theory that Illuminism died in about 1800, as has Communism supposedly died in the 1890s. But Billington wrote that "Illuminist ideas influenced revolutionaries not just through left-wing proponents, but also through right-wing opponents. As the fears of the right became the fascination of the Left, Illuminism gained a paradoxical influence far greater than it had exercised as a living movement."

"Jean Jacques Rousseau (1712-1778) said by Frederick Bastiat (1801-1850) to be "the supreme authority of the democrats," wrote what might be considered the final word of advice to change agents who, at any time or place, desire to create a New World Order. Rousseau wrote:

"He who would undertake the political creation of a people ought to believe that he can, in a manner of speaking, transform human nature, transform each individual - who by himself is a solitary and perfect whole
- into a mere part of a greater whole from which the individual will henceforth receive his life and being. Thus the person who would undertake the political creation of a people should believe in his ability to alter man's constitution, to strengthen it, to substitute for the physical and independent existence received from nature, an existence which is partial and moral. In short, the would-be creator of political man must remove man's own forces and endow him with others that are naturally alien to him."

The French revolutionaries of the 1790s couldn't agree on how their New World should be Ordered. The leaders began assassinating each other and their followers began decimating the populace with accent on Christians.
Napoleon was asked to restore order. He did but he also dreamed of creating his own New World Order. The retreat from Moscow in 1812 and the defeat at Waterloo in 1815 ended the dream. Revolutionary discord resumed and brought about a new revolution in the 1840s and the bloody Paris Commune which ended with the establishment of the Third Republic in 1875. The Communist leaders in the early 20th century were still in disagreement. The Communist Party became two parties: Radical Bolshevism under Lenin and more moderate Menshivism under Kerevsky. Lenin won, was commissioned by the international bankers to invade Russia, destroy the Czarist government and create a Union of Soviet Socialist Republics in its stead. But again came dissention. Trotsky wanted to promote international communism, Lenin and Stalin wanted to solidify control of Russia first and then add other countries step by step through political action or military pressure. Lenin gave up half an empire to gain his point, then died. Stalin succeeded, Trotsky fled to Mexico and was murdered. Tito refused to join the USSR as did Albania. China and Russia separated never to be reunited.
Much the same kind of disorder existed in Communist Parties in various countries. Mussolini adopted a mutant form of Communism and called it Fascism. Hitler did likewise and called it Nazism. Finally, in the latter 1980s, Communism was said to die and the Cold War to end. Communist theoreticians, steeped in totalitarian bureaucracy and unfamiliar with individualism and private enterprise, sought a new way to bring Communism back to life. And they found what they sought in the recorded history of the Italian Communist Party,

Mussolini had been a Communist. "His journalistic activity as head of an official party organ bore striking resemblance to that of Lenin," wrote

Billington. But he broke with Stalin on matters relating to intervention in World War One. He was expelled from the Italian Socialist Party in 1914, started his own journal and began developing his own form of corporative socialism which is called Fascism. Meanwhile, a young Communist intellectual named Antonio Gramsci became with Togliatti co-leader of the newly created Italian Communist Party. There was a political struggle between Mussolini's Fascism and Gramsci's Communism; Mussolini won and Gramsci was jailed, but continued to write. He argued that "the cultural superstructure determines the political and economic base, not the other way around." He emphasized the importance of Lenin's "long march through the institutions - that is to say, the penetration of the media, the universities, public interest groups, churches and cultural institutions - stressing that by working through such institutions, cultural values can be altered and morals softened irreversibly, setting the stage for political and economic power to drop into the hands of the Left," according to the International Currency Review, 108 Horse Ferry Road, Westminster, London SW1P 2EF. Gramsci said man must be transformed, along with culture itself, and there must be the absolute elimination of Christianity.

Now let us compare. Weishaupt (1776) called for abolition of all national governments, of private property, of the traditional family, of all accepted religions. Rousseau (about 1778) said: "He who would undertake the political creation of a people ought to believe that he can transform human nature, transform each individual...into a mere part of a greater whole from which the individual will henceforth receive his life and his being...he must remove man's own forces and endow him with others that are naturally alien to him." Rockefeller in 1904 created the General Education Board whose Occasional Letter No.1 stated: "In our dreams we have limitless resources and the people yield themselves with perfect docility to our molding hands. The present educational convention fades from our minds and, unhampered by tradition, we work our good will upon a grateful and responsive rural folk." Communist Antonio Gramsci in the 1920s wrote that "The cultural superstructure determines the political and economic base, not the other way around...It is necessary to transform culture itself...The revolution will triumph only after first conquering civil society." Today's Education (1970) said: "The change-agent teacher does more than dream, he builds, too. He is part of an association of colleagues in his local school system, in his state, and across the country that makes up an interlocking system of change-agent organizations. This kind of system is necessary because changing our society through the evolutionary educational processes requires simultaneous action on three power levels."

Compare the sources of the above quotes and it becomes obvious that a powerful force seeks to destroy Christianity and the culture it spawned. And what confirmed Communists now learn from the writings of Gramsci has been the doctrine of change agents in the West for years. TV, stage, cinema, drugs, crime and moral corruption so attest.

For "If the foundations be destroyed, what can the righteous do?" (Psalm 11:3). "For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ." (I Corinthians 3:11).

Year Forty.....Number Two.....January 18, 1993

IN THE NAME OF DIVERSITY

On Tuesday January 5th in the year of our Lord 1993 the 103rd Congress of the United States of America was born. The media accented the diversity: 40 blacks, 19 Hispanics, 54 women, 110 new Congressmen, 13 new Senators. After taking the oath which every one of them will break on numerous occasions, they went to work in haste, anxious to pass all the measures that will be proposed by President William Jefferson Clinton in his "First One Hundred Days." The respective committees of the Senate immediately began hearings leading to approvals of the proposed Secretaries of the "Diversity Cabinet." The House began with wranglings over whether representatives from Puerto Rico, DC, Guam and other Territories should be allowed to vote on measures. The "House of Diversity" also saw the introduction of the first bill of the new Congress: the "Family and Medical Leave Act" which would guarantee 12 weeks of unpaid leave for people who need to stay home and take care of new babies or sick relatives. On January 6th representatives and senators assembled to hear Vice President Dan Quayle tell them that the Electoral College had elected Bill Clinton and Al Gore respectively, to be President and Vice President of the United States for the next four years. Important to remember: they did not receive a majority of the popular vote. Therefore there is no "mandate" from the people for the proposed Clinton program. Next step, following parades, parties and pompous merry-making, came the January 20th turnover date, when Bush and Quayle greet Clinton and Gore as the new executives. Again came the taking of the solemn oath to defend the Constitution, an oath that is sure to be broken whenever that Document gets in the way of change and progress toward the New World Order.

True, the new Congress has promised to rush bills through fast as possible for the new Chief Executive. But the passage of any new measure invariably takes time. So Clinton won't wait when he can bypass Congress and resort to the Federal Register. In his various campaign speeches he promised that he will, without Congressional approval, issue a batch of Executive Orders that will become the law of the land when published in the Federal Register. It is expected that he will issue executive orders to 1) lift the ban on sodomites (homosexuals and lesbians) in the armed services; 2) end the ban on abortion counselling at federally-funded baby murder clinics; 3) revise policies regarding the repatriation of Haitian refugees; 4) clarify measures concerning the federal funding of research on aborted babies; 5) assign women to combat duty; 6) increase and tighten environmental standards; 7) eliminate regulations requiring record-keeping of labor union spending. There are other executive orders to be expected. But one thing seems certain. Any new taxes must await Congressional action, since only the House has the right to initiate any such legislation. And Clinton can approve treaties, but they are not in effect until after the Senate ratifies them. So, the making of legislation by way of executive orders is a trifle limited and, in the opinion of many Constitutional authorities, their use for any purpose is unconstitutional, except in case of a national emergency. This because the use of executive orders gives the executive branch of the federal government the power given exclusively to the legislative branch. However, in this 20th century most presidents have issued executive orders regardless of what the Constitution.

may imply. And Congress has failed to do anything about it. According to a "Mini-Fact" published by the Christian Committee of Correspondence, "The first executive order was 'signed into law' by Woodrow Wilson in 1916. There are now more than 13,000 executive orders. An ever-increasing horde of federal bureaucrats act to enforce executive orders once they are issued. Like the man who came to dinner, the bureaucrats stay and stay and stay (Sam 8-9-18). It requires a two-thirds vote of Congress to repeal an executive order; few have been rescinded." (ComCors, Plymouth Foundation, POBox 577, Marlborough, NH 03455). This Mini-Fact publication goes on to say, "Centralism, collectivism, unrepresentative tyranny - all are in direct conflict with the Christian idea of man and the Christian methodology of self and civil government."

During the transition period while waiting to become Chief Executives, the Clintons and their staff prepared various socialistic, Clintonomic, environmental and welfare programs that are supposed to be presented to Congress and passed for signature into law in the First One Hundred Days of the new administration. "The primary focus will be the economy and specifically jobs, jobs, jobs," according to Scott Shepard of the Palm Beach Post Washington Bureau. "That is what the voters want, and that is what Congress and the incoming administration intend to give them," said Senate Budget Committee Chairman James Sasser (D-TN). "The American people view the economy as the number one priority of business for the new administration and the 103rd Congress." Sasser continued, "We will have an obligation to move." Those same words might have been heard from any New Deal Senator when FDR took charge. It was called a rubber-stamp Congress.

But whether Clinton could keep his promises to the various diversity groups immediately became questionable when on January 7th President Bush presented his final official and gloomy budget report. He predicted "unrelenting huge federal deficits and underscored how difficult it may be for...Bill Clinton to fulfill his economic promises. Clinton, who will submit the budget that Congress will actually work on, called the figures projected by Bush 'unsettling.' But he signalled that he was not abandoning his campaign commitments to cut the deficit in half by 1996 while at the same time embarking on an ambitious program to 'rebuild America' through stepped-up government investment." According to AP, "Clinton spokesman George Stephanopolos said Clinton 'stands by his campaign commitments' including his deficit reduction pledge. The new deficit estimates will make achieving that pledge more difficult but just as necessary," Stephanopolis said. However, the very next day appeared the headline "Clinton Backtracks on Deficit." This was a NYTimes report which said, "...Bill Clinton appeared...to back off his campaign pledge to cut the federal budget deficit in half in four years. Clinton and his aides seemed to be using the new estimate of the deficit from the Bush White House for two purposes: to begin revising Clinton's campaign promises, and to lay the political groundwork for unpopular measures to cut the growth of government spending or even to raise some taxes." Here are some unhappy but official figures, released by AP:

Interest payments on the federal debt will rise 55 percent, to $308 billion in 1998 from $199 billion last year. The debt itself, the accumulated total of all federal borrowing, will rise more rapidly, to $4.8 trillion in 1988 from $3 trillion last year. Outlays for Social Security will rise 39 percent, to $396 billion in 1998 from $285 billion in 1992. The cost of Medicare will double in six years, to $236 billion in 1998 from $116 billion in 1992. All of the foregoing is predicted to occur in six years, provided that the Nation can continue for that long without a total economic crash.

Of course, there's another way of looking at the picture. Flashpoint, a newsletter published by Texe Marrs of Austin, Texas, in a special edition reported: "It was the wealthy elitists of the Bilderberger Group who, in 1991, at a secret meeting in Baden Baden, Germany, put the final stamp of approval on Bill Clinton's try for the oval office. Now that he has won the election - thanks to their behind the scenes financial and media manipulation - Clinton is obligated to do their bidding. They own him. The Bilderbergers continue their sordid, secret conferences, most recently meeting May 21-24, 1992 in the secluded resort town of Evian-les-Baines, France. Though the conclave was closed to the public, Flashpoint has been able to verify the names of participants. They comprise a virtual 'who's who' of international money, power, and influence. Among those present at the recent Bilderbergers' conference: Britain's Lord Carington, former secretary-general of NATO who served as chairman of the Bilderbergers' meeting; Giovanni Agnelli, Italian billionaire and chairman of the Fiat automobile corporation; Paul Allaire, chairman of Xerox Corporation; Henry Kissinger, the former US Secretary of State (and a Rockefeller puppet); Alexandre Lamfalussy, general manager of the Bank for International Settlements; Hilmer Kopper of Germany's Deutschebank; and Etienne Davignon, a mover-and-shaker in the European Economic Community (EEC). Also present was Bilderberger loyalist Lloyd Bentsen, the liberal US Senator from Texas who was Michael Dukakis' vice presidential running mate in 1988."

In a current vernacular, this is the bottom line: They own him! Walter Scott in his Sunday Personality Parade (1/10/93) identified Clinton as "a genuinely gregarious individual who knows his way around the corridors of power in Washington," As a Rhodes Scholar and a Bilderberger he also knows his way around the corridors leading to the power brokers who aim to establish their New World Order in seven years. Like Bush before him, Clinton will be used by them because they own him. In all matters pertinent to their goals they will tell him what to do, how it is to be done, and when it is to be done. Mark Matthews of The Baltimore Sun noted that "President Bush's dramatic final moves on the world stage, intended primarily to help Bill Clinton, will nevertheless force his successor to make vital military and foreign policy decisions in the administration's first weeks...Most US forces are not supposed to be out of Somalia until four weeks after Clinton's inaugural. A smooth withdrawal will depend on cooperation from a determined and outspoken UN Secretary-General...The Bush administration's late push for a UN Security Council resolution to enforce a no-fly zone over Bosnia-Herzegovina may require Clinton to join with NATO allies in early but important issues...Whether Serbian bases should be attacked, in addition to the shooting down of Serbian aircraft... Clinton was consulted about and has applauded each of the key foreign initiatives taken by Bush in recent weeks... Clinton met Friday (1/8/93) with President Salinas de Gortari of Mexico. Hours later, Vice President-elect Al Gore met with Bosnian President Alija Izetbegovic." Clinton also backed the UN-US crackdown on the no-fly zone of Iraq. Clinton's campaign pledges where domestic infrastructure problems are concerned can be forgotten. Clinton's domestic promises, like those of Bush, must take second place to foreign policy. George Will, who claims to be a conservative columnist on the Washington Post remarked that "The only things crumbling are Clintonomics myths...One of candidate Bill Clinton's constant themes was alarm about America's 'crumbling infrastructure.' Today (1/10/93) his rationale for a large surge of infrastructure spending is itself crumbling under the weight of analysis...With Mr. Clinton already running up the white flag regarding his pledge to cut the deficit in half, it is odd to advocate a deficit-increasing stimulus package, and to seek stimulus from infrastructure spending." In short, like Bush before him, campaign promises were made to be broken, because they own them.

But there is a problem that must worry the power brokers, and Clinton's ability to handle it. Instead of the carefully planned merging of nations and states that our federal government has been involved in promoting, there is much of what they call "fracturing" in vogue. That is, the spirits of nationalism, ethnics, culture, and religion are creating demands for separation, independence and sovereignty among nations. The splitup of Czechoslovakia into Slovakia and the Czech Republic, the horrible deeds of the Serbs who seek a homeland of their own alone, these do not fit into the power brokers' New World Map. The new United States of Europe is not yet really united because of currency, immigration, and trade problems. And as NAFTA becomes better known for what it is, the dream for a North American Regional World Government, there are dangers that Clinton can't complete what Bush started in this part of his New World Order.

In his November-December 1992 Intelligence Newsletter, Pastor Earl F. Jones observed that "The great (and intentional) dialectics of the two superpowers in mortal combat since World War II is now well into the phase called the synthesis. Neither the United States nor the Soviet Union, representing the thesis and the antithesis, are the same as they were forty years ago. The world could see in the next ten years the greatest threat that western civilization has ever confronted." In this extended transition period as the synthesis is being established, it is important that there is not a single important, qualified and accepted leader in all the west. The power brokers choose their leaders as puppets, and the people accept and applaud. The "Letter from Plymouth Rock" observes that "Only a Godly people beget Godly leaders. No Washingtons, or Adams, no Madisons or Henrys or Jays come forth today because the nation does not merit them. If men of such character and integrity were to stand for public office at this time, they would be pilloried and rejected by the media, the academy, and, yes, by many 'mainline churches'." So we have a Clinton in command of the government of the most powerful nation in the world. And they own him.

When Alexander Solzhenitsyn fled his native land and came to the United States, he voiced a warning: "If I were asked today to formulate as concisely as possible the main cause of the ruinous revolution that swallowed up some 60 million of our people, I could not put it more accurately than to repeat: Men have forgotten God. That's why it all happened." And we, too, as a people have forgotten God. Must our children suffer the same fate that befell Europe before those who remain return to God?

"The Lord is my light and my salvation; whom shall I fear? The Lord is the strength of my life; of whom shall I be afraid? Though a host should encamp against me, my heart shall not fear; though war should rise against me, in this will I be confident." (Psalm 27:1,3.).

Year Forty.....Number Three.....February 1, 1993

ANOTHER WAR PRESIDENT?

Change-agent Clinton is, hopefully for the people, finding some of his promised changes more difficult than he imagined. But no Joint Chief of Staff or Democratic Congress could prevent a name changing, an act that may provide a clue as to what is in store for the United States and perhaps the world during the next four years. It's a trivial matter, but indicative. Because the man named Clinton who was Governor of Arkansas was not the man who campaigned for the presidency; and the man who so campaigned was not the same man who now sits in the Oval Office of the White House signing Executive Agreements that may affect us all. Immediately after his winning the right to represent the Democratic Party in the national election, the Clinton Team refashioned him, changed him from a radical internationalist who boasted of being a student of Carroll Quigley who wrote Tragedy and Hope and coached Clinton at Georgetown University, and made him a middle-of-the-road man who would heal the nation and care for its poor and ill. He would rebuild the nation's infrastructure, find jobs for the jobless, cut the deficit in half, give tax relief to the middle class and end the recession. But when he had won the election, Clinton ceased posing as an Outsider ready to combat the Insiders, and himself became an Insider. Just as presidents before him had done, he chose for top positions in his administration members of the Council on Foreign Relations, Trilateral Commission, then added some Rhodes Scholars, Fellows of the Institute for Policy Studies, and a smattering of less known liberals like the rejected Zoe Baird. Two days after his inauguration, he said, "Today I am proud to present to you and to the American people a Cabinet of talented, diverse and seasoned leaders. I am deeply gratified to the United States Senate for a quick confirmation (sans Baird) only two days after the inauguration."

Perhaps the thing which revealed this change-agent to be what he is to be as president was the way he and Hillary changed their names as the road to the White House was traveled. During the campaign he was just plain Bill Clinton; but when he signed his first document as president he became William J. Clinton. The same was evident in the case of Hillary. The ultimate socialist was changed into a comparatively quiet and obedient Hillary Clinton during the campaign. But upon becoming the First Lady, she added her maiden name to become Hillary Rodham Clinton. Gary Blonston of The Miami Herald Washington Bureau commented: "Bill and Hillary Clinton officially became larger than life - pop stars, cultural icons, would-be proprietors of a casual new Cabinet. They even changed their names... The same two people who just a few days ago were returning their daughter's pet frog to the Arkansas River suddenly are the most watched and most celebrated personalities in the land - youthful, attractive, commanding and self-assured." And, suddenly the man who promised to heal the nation's domestic problems became the prototype of retiring George Bush. Wrote columnist A.M. Rosenthal (1/19/93): "And so from the moment he takes the oath Bill Clinton becomes a wartime President - exactly as he had known all along. The reality that Mr. Clinton knew before he was elected that he would preside over a country at war has escaped the public and battalions of politicians and commentators...It was that during the campaign all three Presidential candidates acted out a charade cruel to the truth and the American people. They tried to convince Americans that foreign problems could wait until America in its own sweet time paid a little attention to them. Most Americans apparently believed that, sucking on the pacifier of Wishfulness."

Debra Saunders, editorial page columnist for the San Francisco Chronicle, noted the change in Clinton's program, wrote: "Even before his inauguration, Bill Clinton retreated from a number of campaign pledges, Team Clinton's great exodus included promises to cut middle-class taxes, to halve the deficit by term's end, to require employees to set aside 1.5 percent of payroll for job training, to mandate that trade with China be based on humanitarian concessions, to cut the White House staff by 25 percent, to reduce influence peddling and to open up immigration policy with Haitian refugees. In addition, Team Clinton danced around its commitment to issue an executive order to end the ban on gays in the military... And for all his talk about ending 'welfare as we know it,' Clinton' pick for Health and Human Services, Donna Shalala, only reluctantly and vaguely addressed welfare questions at her confirming hearing. Her hedging prompted Sen. Daniel Patrick Mounihan, D-NY, to dub last week as one resonating 'the clatter of campaign promises being tossed out the window.' ...Gov. Clinton's well-designed image portrayed a man who wouldn't forget where he came from, a man who would stand up for the forgotten middle-class, an innovator yet a policy wonk who wasn't afraid to bridle government growth. Where is that man now?...Oh, no, it could be George Bush all over again!"

If Clinton had other plans than being George Bush all over again, Saddam Hussein changed all that in his toying with UN mandates and teasing the US-led coalition team that has become the UN's police force. That Clinton would follow Bush's lead in regard to Iraq was inevitable. They work for the same boss, and it isn't We the People. There's a reason that hasn't been mentioned. Two years ago if Saddam had been allowed to take over Kuwait and its oil fields, he would have then moved on to take control of 40 percent of the world's oil supply; and the builders of the New World Order would have none of that. So, Bush, to promote the NWO and the UN, and to protect oil supplies, expressed his dream of the NWO and sent troops to stop Saddam, but not to destroy him. It so happens that the militant and fundamentalist Shi'a Muslims are also dreaming of their own New World Order. Iran is leading such a drive and is backed by Syria and to some extent by Libya. Iraq is the one country in that area which could stop Iran. Knowing this, the NWO builders had a double problem: to stop Iran from developing a power that could start another world war when it isn't desired or needed by the NWO, and to stop Saddam from taking control of Middle East oil. Intelligence Digest forecasts that "The breakup of communist rule in Eastern Europe will fuel the expansion of Islamic extremism throughout the world. The Ayatollahs are preaching that now that communism has failed, there is only one way forward for Muslims: the Islamic Way! Islamic extremism is set to sweep aside all that gets in its way, whether it's the revolutionary communists in Algeria and Libya, the conservative Sheiks of Saudi Arabia, or the modernizing politicians of Turkey and Pakistan. Worse, it will spread into the hearts of the Western World, to the Muslims of Bradford and other cities in Britain, to the Algerians in every city in France, to Germany, Canada and to America. No corner of the world will escape the wave of Islamic nihilism hell-bent on destroying every last vestige of Western civilization. And...radical Islam is now being armed with nuclear technology by China and is now negotiating to buy ex-Soviet weapons and scientists. There are 1.7 million skilled ex-Soviet weapons technologists for hire. The top Russian atomic specialists earn just $9.00 a month. Gaddafi is offering them $10,000 a month to make nuclear bombs for Libya." (Intelligence Digest, 17 Rodney Road, Cheltenham, Glas GL50 IHX, United Kingdom. US $197 per year). It so happens that in the Middle East only Iraq stands in the way of the Islamic fundamentalist plans led by Iran. Because Saddam Hussein is defying the UN and teasing the US forces into attacking facilities that aren't very important (life is cheap in Iraq), means that Saddam is drawing great sympathy from other Sunni Muslims and Arab countries that might otherwise be on Iran's side if conflict occurred. Another plus for Saddam: the Arabian coalition powers that were against him two years ago are now expressing sympathy for him. That original coalition is now reduced to the Western Nations: the US, UK, France and Canada. On 1/18/93 the 21-nation Arab League said in a statement from Cairo that it "regrets the policy of military escalation against Iraq...which led to the killing and wounding of civilians among Iraqi people." So Saddam the loser now is Saddam the winner. If he were eliminated, Iraq probably would break up into three smaller states: One ruled by the Iran favoring Shi'a, one by the Kurds who want only independence and sovereignty, the third made up of the Sunni Muslims. And this would eliminate entirely the one power in the Middle East that could stop the Islamic extremists.

If Iraqgate, with oil at its core, is not enough to make Clinton a war president rather than a peace president, as well as New Age president, the Somali situation will contribute. Here again, oil, not food, seems to be the bottom line. Mark Fineman, LA Times writer, reported on 1/18/93 from Mogadishu and we quote: "Far beneath the surface of the tragic drama of Somalia, four major oil companies are quietly sitting on a prospective fortune in exclusive concessions to explore and exploit millions of acres of Somali countryside....Nearly two-thirds of Somali was allocated to the American oil giants Conoco, Amoco, Chevron and Phillips in the final years before Somali's pro-US President Mohamed Siad Barre was overthrown and the nation plunged into chaos in January, 1991. Industry sources said the companies holding the rights to the most promising concessions are hoping that the Bush Administration's decision to send US troops to safeguard aid shipments to Somalia will also help protect their multimillion-dollar investments there...Corporate and scientific documents disclosed that the American companies are well positioned to pursue Somalia's most promising potential oil reserve the moment the nation is pacified. And the State Department and US military officials acknowledge that one of these oil companies [Conoco Inc] has done more than simply sit back and hope for peace...The close relationship between Conoco and the US intervention forces has left many Somalis and foreign development experts deeply troubled by the blurry line between the US government and the large oil company [which amounts to Fascism-Ed.] leading many to liken the Somali operation to a miniature version of Operation Desert Storm, the US-led military effort in January, 1991, to drive Iraq from Kuwait and, more broadly, safeguard the world's largest oil reserves. 'It's left everyone thinking the big question here isn't famine relief but oil,' said one (oil) expert. 'It's worth billions of dollars and believe me, that's what the whole game is starting to look like'...Mahamed Jirdeh, a prominent Somali businessman in Mogadishu who is familiar with the oil-concession agreements, said, 'Our country is now very weak, and, of course, the American oil companies are very strong. This has to be handled very diplomatically, and I think the American government must move out of the oil business, or at least make clear that there is a definite line separating the two, if they want to maintain a long-term relationship here'." But there's no chance that the American government will "move out of the oil business." Because, under corporate socialism (Fascism), multinational corporations and the government "move together." Which means that the Somali operation is an excellent example of how builders of the New World Order intend to operate once they are in full command.

While Clinton is supposedly deciding to operate in the Iraqi stalemate and the Somali situation, he then must move to make some small adjustments in NAFTA, the free trade agreement that links Mexico, Canada and the United States in a Regional Economic Zone to match the Regional World Government that is now being developed in Europe. Then he must sell a reluctant, even though Democratic, Congress on the benefits of NAFTA. Ronald A. Taylor of The Washington Times reported that "In his maiden venture into diplomacy...Bill Clinton promised Mexican President Carlos Salinas de Gortari he will endorse the existing language of a hemispheric free-trade agreement...'I reaffirm my support for the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA),' said Clinton. Here, however, Clinton must convince Congress to agree and pass legislation implementing the agreement signed by Bush and approved by Clinton." Calling it "a power grab by the executive branch," Jonathon Tasini, who is writing a book on the global economy and free-trade, gave added importance to NAFTA when he said it "is just the first step. If successfully concluded, the more sweeping reach of the 108-member GATT talks will further empower the executive branch and weaken Congress's role in regulating commerce. GATT imposes even stronger requirements than NAFTA on member nations to subordinate their individual laws to the trade pact...The decision facing Congress is straightforward. A vote for NAFTA means abdicating power and changing, perhaps forever, the role of Congress in representing the voice of the American people on the critical issue of commerce and the global economy. A vote against it protects added importance not only American's hard-won consumer safety, environmental and labor laws, but our power to hold accountable those who make them." At present, viewing the shrinking of such giants as IMB and Sears, and observing the movement of much of American industry south to Mexico in order to survive, and firing thousands of American workers and replacing them with cheaper Mexican laborers, even the Democrat-controlled Congress is very hesitant about approving NAFTA. Here the Clinton Team may have a job far harder than selecting an Attorney General.

George Washington warned: "Tis our true policy to steer clear of permanent alliances with any portion of the foreign world." But we're involved in every part of the foreign world, our troops are the world police. Here all three branches of our federal government have turned away from the biblical principles of our Founders. As Abraham Lincoln warned: "Only those nations are blessed whose God is the Lord." And Scripture warns:

"When the righteous are in authority, the people rejoice; but when the wicked beareth rule, the people mourn." (Proverbs 29:2).

Year Forty.....Number Four.....February 15, 1993

THREE TO MAKE READY

When a new captain and his selected staff take over the management and direction of our Ship of State, many political analysts and historians will consider what occurs in new captain's First 100 Days a definite indication of what course the Ship will be sailing and what its passengers can expect to experience during the four year cruise. For example, The Christian Science Monitor publishes a regular column titled "The First 100 Days, Jan. 20 - April 29," which chronicles the day-by-day progress of the Clinton Clique as we all speed, whether we like it or not, toward the New Age-New World Order port where our Ship is supposed to dock at the break of the year 2000. There have been a few incidents which tended to slow down preparations for the journey to the man-made utopia. Congress, which Constitutionally handles the logistics of any such trip, has shown that the promised honeymoon between Clinton and Congress is not as heavenly as predicted. The new captain promised and then reneged on his scheduled tax program, so that no one knows for sure just who and what will be taxed to finance the socialist agenda. Then a hitch occurred when it was found that a designated Attorney General broke a law that she was supposed to force others to obey, and a second selectee had to be rejected for a similar reason. Clinton reneged on his pledge concerning immigrants from Haiti. Then the promised decision to force the military to accept avowed sodomites ran up against opposition by both Congress and the military. There were about a thousand offices still to be filled, including a new FBI director. But aside from such annoyances, things seemed to be going as 43 percent of the voters desired. Some confidence was restored when Congress quickly passed and Clinton immediately signed into law that unpaid child-birth and sick leave law that Bush had twice vetoed. VP Al Gore happily announced that the gridlock between his captain and the Senate over which he presided was ended. So, with about one-fourth of the First 100 Days completed, the new staff and permanent civil service crew were ready to hoist anchor and sail into the sea of foreign affairs. Fascist Captain Clinton has turned over foreign policy decisions to Warren Christopher (internationalist lawyer) and his NA-NWO groupees. A New Economic Council (NEC) has been created and staffed with Robert Rubin (Wall Street personified) in charge. Destruction of the Defense Department has been relegated to Les Aspin (Institute for Policy Studies fellow) and his pro-UN chums. Co-President Hillary Clinton has been given health and child care programming ("Give me a generation of your youth and I will give you a communist world," said Lenin). Tony Lake (IPS) was named National Security Adviser. James Woolsey (Rhodes scholar) was named to head the CIA. Commented Larry Abraham in his Insider Report, "Every single one of the key Clinton appointments in the defense and foreign policy 'cluster' is a member of the Council on Foreign Relations, the Trilateral Commission, or both. Black and white, male and female, relatively young and more mature in years, is irrelevant. What is important is that each of them shares the Clinton/Insider vision of a New World Order."

Thus, with the staff installed and serving (but not the USA), Clinton will now have more time and energy to spend in behalf of the three presently important programs of the New Age-New World Order elitists: EPA, FEMA and NAFTA. Of these three FEMA (Federal Emergency Management Agency) requires immediate renovation and reputation-renewal. The elitists haven't treated FEMA kindly and a quick restoration of its power and influence is necessary. When Nixon was president, he signed a series of executive orders which would activate a totalitarian bureaucratic group of federal departments and agencies that would assume dictatorial control over the nation and its people whenever the president might declare a national emergency. Also there were created Ten Regional Governments, each with a capitol. The fifty States and Territories were to be governed by these Ten Regional Governments which would take orders from the Federal Departments and Agencies in Washington.

When Carter became president these executive orders were reviewed and it was felt that there should be one permanent agency which would be prepared to manage the overall operations of such a bureaucratic dictatorship, and, again by executive order, the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) was established. It would be in charge of any federally declared emergency, whether national or regional. FEMA had its first important test with the San Francisco earthquake of 1989. FEMA was found to be inefficient and not prepared to deal with such emergencies, and there were numerous complaints regarding the way it functioned at the time. Slight changes in management personnel were made, but little was done to improve its management methods. Other matters of greater importance existed at the time: the Panama Invasion, Persian Gulf War, the depression and growing economic problems, etc. So FEMA became a kind of halfway house for federal employees who had been tried and found wanting in other agencies, and were shifted to positions in FEMA because they couldn't be fired outright. Then came Hurricane Andrew, and FEMA became exposed for what it really had become. "Lawmakers say they want to know why FEMA repeats its mistakes, disaster after disaster. FEMA is in chaos. It's a place where top-ranking officials squabble over parking spots and office renovations," wrote Scott Higham of The Miami Herald. "It's a place where bosses have used public money for personal perks, sought out gay staffers in the agency and punished those who refused to name names. It's where employees try to figure out how to survive a nuclear attack and print up self-help pamphlets to protect the nation. One helpful hint: Unplug TV sets because nuclear explosions 'affect electrical devices.' FEMA is a time bomb and it's going to go off again." So, the appropriate Congressional committee started hearings on 1/27/93, intent on making FEMA what it's supposed to be: A permanent agency with power to supervise all other agencies if and when a national emergency should be declared and a bureaucratic dictatorship is installed.

Why is FEMA so important to the elitists? In discussing the Los Angeles riots, Rich Pearson wrote: "At first, the New World Order will use these class upheavals and economic turmoil to their benefit by implementing an almost dictatorial type of government...This structure already exists through the Federal Emergency Management Administration (FEMA). (From The Pearce Report, an in-depth economic and market letter. Monthly, $144 per year. One Crosstown Plaza, Kalamazoo, MI 49008). In a very important issue of his McAlvany Intelligence Advisor headed "The Fourth Reich: Toward an American Police State," under the subhead "Toward a State of National Emergency," Don McAlvany wrote: "Over the past few years, a number of references to a State of National Emergency (or martial law) have been hinted at or suggested by government officials, congressmen, etc. - usually to fight the drug war, crime, etc. Indeed martial law was imposed in Los Angeles (and was begged for by the public) to quell the massive riots in the spring of '92, and could have been declared nationally had the riots continued to spread during the summer of '92. [Ed note: They did spread to 166 other cities - but not as severe as Los Angeles]...The potential for a State of National Emergency or martial law in America over the next three to five to seven years (perhaps to deal with riots, the war on crime or drugs, a financial banking crisis or some manufactured crisis) is a very real possibility, as the Establishment moves to install a socialist America and the New World Order. Indeed aspects of a state of emergency - and the suspension of constitutional rights already exist in America today! Over a dozen Executive Orders have been passed by Congress over the past few decades...giving the President total dictatorial control over every aspect of American life if the president (or his Establishment bosses) decide to trigger and implement same. FEMA would then go into action, firearms would be confiscated and many (if not all) constitutional rights and guarantees would be suspended. Under a full state of emergency tens or hundreds of thousands of Americans (guilty of hate, environmental, financial, or gun control 'crimes'; or 'criminal' violations of any of tens of thousands of new government regulations; or resistance to the New World Order or a socialist America) are likely to be imprisoned. Perhaps this is why George Bush moved in recent years to double US prison capacity, and why under a national security directive called 'Rex 94,' signed in 1984 by President Reagan, eleven huge federal detention centers were activated in California, Arizona, Wisconsin, New York, Pennsylvania, Virginia, Georgia and Florida." (From The McAlvany Intelligence Advisor, January, 1993. Monthly, $95 per year. PO Box 84904, Phoenix, AZ 85071).

NAFTA is the second of the three developments (FEMA, NAFTA, EPA) vital to the creation and maintenance of The New World Order, and it has fallen into the lap of Clinton to complete what Bush began. Behind NAFTA there is a second stage of the global conspiracy that is probably unknown to all but the Insiders. Basically, Bush promoted the idea of a North American free trade zone. Mulroney of Canada went along with the idea, perhaps thinking that a free trade agreement would do no particular damage to Canadian manufacturers, industrialists and laborers. Salinas de Gortari of Mexico was delighted. It would go far toward making the Mexican standard of living equal to that of Canada and the United States. But few understood the elitist plan: such an agreement would cause the loss of sovereignty to all three nations, and that an international commission of trade bureaucrats would dictate to all three, who would be forced to obey the orders of the New World Order commission (or should we say commissars?). It would mean goodbye to independence and sovereignty in matters of trade. And, as is already happening, manufacturers would be forced to move to lower wage areas (Mexico), and people (Mexicans) would be moving to areas with higher free benefits and wages. "They won't find either," says Jonathan Tasini who is writing a book about global economy and free trade. He points out that "the living standards of all except the elite and their few chosen agents will fall to subsistence, survival levels."

Now, here's the rest of the story. For years the nations and states belonging to the UN have been trying to establish a global free trade policy through GATT, the global General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, and GATT has never been accepted by all of the 108 countries that belong to GATT and the UN. The latest attempt, known as the Uruguay Round, has been stalemated for years. So, with Clinton now in charge of the biggest trading partner of them all, it seems that the builders of NWO may have decided to give up trying to start from the top in building a global free trade policy and build from the bottom a series of regional free trade areas, such as the European Community (EC) and NACOM, or NAFTA as it is presently called.

Before Bush left the White House he prompted an argument between EC and US regarding the price of white wine. Previously, the farmers of France had been induced to start an argument about EC's agricultural agreements. Then, no sooner had Clinton taken over than did he announce tough measures on trade issues with the EC. A report from Joseph de Courcy of the British Intelligence Digest (5/2/93) observed that "Diplomatic sources are warning that there is danger of the European Community (EC) using the new US administration's early toughness on trade issues to bring about a genuine trade war." Then he added this important statement: "There are some within the EC Commission in Brussels who would view a trade war as a means of giving purpose and cohesiveness to an organization that has lost its way since the Danish voted No to the Maastricht treaty on European union." This was followed by an article by Amy Kaslow of The Christian Science Monitor (5/2/93) in which she reported: "The Clinton administration's new trade team is entering an area marked by the breakdown of global talks and the rise of regional trading blocs." And Enrique Iglesias, who was chairman of GATT's Uruguay Round when it began in 1986, said, "It was too ambitious." Therefore regionalism instead of globalism is on the rise. Said Kaslow of CSM: "Bush continued his commitment to multinationalism through the GATT, but began talks with Mexico and Canada for the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA);" and "Though concerned about a possible inward, exclusionary approach by some Asian and European regionalists, Iglesias is enthusiastic about the evolution of sub-regional trade blocs within Latin America, such as the new pact between Argentina, Mexico and Venezuela; or the accord between Central American countries...He is confident that these Latin arrangements are steps toward broader ties with the UN, NAFTA, and multinationalism."

The builders of the New World Order call it piecemeal functionalism, the eating away, bit by bit, of national independence and sovereignty, and the resultant loss of individual freedom and liberty. George Bush left three parts of The Plan for the Clinton team to complete in promoting The New World Order: FEMA, NAFTA and EPA. We overwrote and left no space for discussing the radical environmentalism which Al Gore was elected to promote. The Clintons and Gore talk about the healing and the feeding of people, of creating jobs for the jobless and homes for the homeless. But, as campaign promises are discarded and unexpected changes are made, it becomes evident that true Christians must be prepared to suffer for His sake and for their country. Fear is the weapon that the enemies of God will use. Therefore:

"Be strong and of a good courage, fear not, nor be afraid of them; for the Lord thy God, he it is that doth go with thee; he will not fail thee, nor forsake thee." (Deuteronomy 31:6).

THREE-TIERED GLOBAL GOVERNANCE

He promised changes. So he changed his campaign promises. And he also changed his plans. He left Hillary to handle the White House and Al to handle the Senate, and became a traveling salesman to sell to the people his plan to "re-invent government" by raising taxes and lowering the payroll, providing health care for all, jobs for all, and an economic plan that couldn't work. In our last Report we wrote, "With the staff installed, ..Clinton now will have more time and energy to spend in behalf of the three presently important programs of the New Age-New World Order elitists: EPA, FEMA and NAFTA." We were wrong. Because his speech to Congress didn't sell his economic program to Congress, even a Democrat-dominated Congress, he found it necessary to go on the road and try to sell the package to the people. Said columnist James McCartney, "The Clinton case right now is worth serious examination because the success or failure of his controversial new economic package may hang in the balance...Clinton could be in the kind of trouble that helped destroy George Bush when he broke his famous 'read my lips: no new taxes' pledge." It didn't help Clinton when his own advisers, headed by Hillary, told him "It is virtually impossible to provide health care to all Americans any time soon if he [Clinton] wants to finance it by savings from overhauling the system as he promised in his campaign." So it seems that his unpopular economic package will make or break him and, like Jimmy Carter and George Bush, a one-term presidency would result. But again, like Carter and Bush, his failure won't slow down the power brokers' drive toward their New Age Government in a New World Order setting.

In this connection, an old strategy has been revived by the Planners. It has to do with "regionalism" which is an essential ingredient of global government. In our DBR of 4/14/72, published more than two decades ago, we titled the Report: "The Formation of the Federal Fasces," and we referred to "The manner in which domestic methods of 'work and welfare' and the dispensation of grants are being turned over to a new type of governmental organization which is called the 'Under Secretaries Group for Regional Organization'." On May 1969 President Nixon announced the establishment of Ten Federal Regions; and on February 10, 1972, he signed Executive Order 11674 which "laid down the precise framework under which the new regional government plan would work. Years later, Jimmy Carter added FEMA as a permanent agency that would direct and coordinate the activities of the Ten Federal Regional Governments if and when an Emergency, national or regional, would be declared by the president. It was intended that, eventually, these ten regional governments would replace the fifty States and their governments, so that a Central Government would be in absolute control of the entire country. But that part of the program had to be delayed because the Constitution of the United States promises each State a republican form of government. Therefore, before the States could be abolished, the Constitution itself must be abolished and a new form of Central Government installed.

As we indicated, there's nothing new about this plan. It's just been delayed. As far back as April 21, 1935, before Alaska and Hawaii had

OPEN LETTER

President William Clinton
White House
Washington, D.C. 20500

Dear Mr. President:

Your first concern is the deficit? It is the usury,* now called interest, on the accumulated deficits that is hemorrhaging the economic life blood from the nation. There could be no such usury under Article 1, Sec. 8, Para. 5 of the Constitution if instead of the Federal Reserve, the country had a constitutional (usury-free) money system.

Your second concern is the "national debt" -- in quotes because the $4 trillion is mostly fraud from pyramiding usury upon compounded usury. The actual deficits total but a fraction of that.

Both of your concerns are caused by the secret class A stockholders of the untaxed, unaudited Fed who numbers now with heirs 300; and some are American! They are the most avariciously predatory parasites upon a body politic in world history. The national bonded indebtedness is heavily held by the Fed. The process by which it acquires our bonds is not beyond understanding, but it is beyond belief. And why should the Treasury pay usury on bonds held by the Fed that our government has paid for -- like a family squandering mortgage payments on a paid-up mortga that should have been burned?

Mr. President, you have the power to buy back the private central bank for one half billion dollars. You can issue the funds by Executive Order as did President Kennedy issue constitutional U.S. Notes and without congressional advice and consent. The class A stockholders capitalized their Fed with but $147 million, and after 80 years of racketeering now own America because they hold the mortgage!

There is the President Lincoln precedent -- exactly 100 years prior to the Kennedy constitutional money: $364 million were issued usury-free at a time when the money mafia charged usury at the juice-loan rate of from 24% to 36%. Lincoln has saved us one half trillion dollars from being added to the "national debt". Only coinage is legal usury-free constitutional money. The "cashless society" is the bankers' coup de grace.

Sec. 30 of the Fed charter offers you the option of buying back the Fed - as confirmed in 1927, 1966 and now. The nation's life blood hemorrhaging out to usury would reverse back into the Treasury -- the new Fed owner. Class B and C stock could remain unchanged. The income tax wasted on usury is now 84%, in '94 92%, and in '95 103%, if the bankruptcy can be delayed.. It is too late to jump-start the economy. Only the buy-back of the Fed will rocket-blast the economy off the recession pad -- while cutting taxes. Mr. President, you have the means and the match.

Respectfully,

George Edward Hiscott IV

Life Member, Association of Former Intelligence Officers.

become States, an article, with illustration, appeared in The New York Times Magazine, explaining how nine new departments [regions] would make a "drastic change in our form of government...and abolish our states." But there was a public outcry led by the outgoing governor of Colorado which caused the idea to be tabled at that time. With President Nixon the time had come to revive the plan. But it could be only partially fulfilled because the US Constitution still stood in the way. Now, however, with Target Date 2000 less than seven years away, there has been a revival of the plan, both domestically and globally.

With the Clintons at the helm, the time for regionalism has returned. In the Arizona Republic of December 27, 1992, there is an article reprinted from the LA Times which is headlined: "Vast Changes, Explosions of New Nations Foreseen." There is a drawing labeled "Re-Mapping North America." It indicates "zones" that will replace former nations and states. Under the title "United States and Canada," there is this prediction: "The western United States and Canadian provinces [will] integrate their economies with Asia's Pacific Rim. Alaska, British Columbia, Washington and Oregon also may be emboldened to create their own 'zone,' either autonomous or independent. Geographers tentatively dub the new state, stretching from the Arctic's Beaufort Sea to the sunny climes of northern California 'Pacifica.'" As for the United States and Mexico: "On the other US border, the increasingly fuzzy demarcation line between the United States and Mexico could evolve into another new zone, tentatively called 'Angelica'...the rest of Mexico may then fragment into three or more parts." As for what's left of Canada: "Over time, Canada's Maritime could join the United States, while Alberta and Saskatchewan merge and go on their way, and the Indian and Eskimo-dominated north joins a polar confederation. As for the rest of the United States: "Even after losing 'Pacifica' and 'Angelica,' the United States may be vulnerable to further splits...nine other independent or autonomous zones, not necessarily coinciding with current state boundaries. They include Gulf Coast Zone, pulling together Florida with the southern parts of Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana; and an industry state grouping of all of Michigan and Wisconsin, northern chunks of Illinois and Ohio, and western Pennsylvania." In the accompanying article, written by Robin Wright of the LA Times, all of these "zones" could be merged into a greater zone, presently known as NAFTA. But, in any case, according to these predictions, Canada, the United States and Mexico would disappear as nations, and become 'regions' or 'zones' in one of the three proposed Regional World Governments, which in turn would become administrative departments of a Global Government (the UN).

Now, let's consider Regionalism, or Zonism, on the international scale. At first, the situation may seem incongruous and the facts contradictory. Because the Power Brokers of Europe, North America and Japan had agreed on a plan outlined by Brzezinski and approved and financed by the Rockefeller and Rothschild Klans. The Trilateral Commission was formed to bring about the creation of three great economic spheres, later to become Regional World Governments, and eventually to be merged politically as parts of the Global Government (UN). So the plan involved the merging of nations into three great zones. But there would remain more than 100 nations semi-nations and states seemingly still sovereign and independent outside the Trilateral groupings. What of them? The answer seemed to become apparent to keen observers when the Soviet Union came unglued and instead of nations merged into an empire, there now were 15 separate and independent "republics," with still more to come due to ethnic, language, cultural, racial or religious differences. This pattern followed when Czechoslovakia was permitted to divide and become two countries. And now the Trilateral Hierarchy proposes the solution of the Yugoslavian bloodbath through the creation of seven countries where but one existed before the Serbians began their "ethnic cleansing" of Muslims.

That article by Robin Wright, previously quoted, begins: "Imagine a world in which Scotland gains independence from the United Kingdom, and Italy divides in half, Russia and China both fragment a dizzying array of new states, and Canada disappears altogether. Along the way, a host of new states...are born. 'What we are dealing with is the re-creation of countries," said William Wood, the State Department's chief geographer. He should have said "the creation of new zones" because, as George Demko of Dartmouth remarked, "As we're challenging the traditional role idea of state sovereignty, globalizing economies and communication, and breaking up the last empires, the geography of the world is unlocking old connections and locking up new ones." Some direct quotes from this important article:

"Many states won't have armies, only police....A stratified system of government is likely to replace states. At the top will be a stronger United Nations, such regional groupings as the European Community on the second tier, while the tiny ethnically based states will be the lowest tier. Already at least 17 regional blocs - from Latin America's Southern Cone Common Market to Central Asia's Economic Cooperation Organization - are reshaping the globe. The latest is the new continental pact forming the North American Free Trade Agreement, completed earlier this month among the United States, Canada and Mexico.... It's a bit radical, the idea that today's large countries will break up to become tomorrow's tiny states. But it's what we're evolving toward....The importance of borders will actually wane, as economic and technological interdependence span not only states, but continents....In the meantime, however, the number of states will grow. For the next decade we cannot stop the trend. Afterward, the wish for cooperation will prevail." So, picture the Planners' World of Tomorrow: First Tier, Global Government (UN); Second Tier, Regional World Governments; Third Tier, smaller "ethnically based states" (Kissinger calls them World Communities). Goodbye sovereignty and independence.

Meanwhile, here at home the economic and political battles have been overshadowed by a spiritual war. "The next four years are pivotal for America," rightly predicts Don McAlvany. Either we awaken, turn back to God in a massive nationwide revival, turn back to our traditional values, or in our apathy and complacency watch Bill, Hillary, Al and Company continue to sodomize, socialize, and abort America. In that case we shall all be slaves, unless "by a supreme recovery of moral health and martial vigor, we arise again and take our stand as in olden times." Otherwise:

"...I sought for a man among them, that should make up the hedge, and stand in the gap before me for the land, that I should not destroy it. But I found none. Therefore have I poured out my indignation upon them: I have consumed them with the fire of my wrath: their own way have I recompensed upon their heads, saith the Lord God." (Ezekiel 22:30,31).

CARROTS OR STICKS?

"The plot to transform our western Christian civilization and our independent sovereign nation into but a province of a godless United Nations 'New World Order' global socialist/marxist tyranny is far advanced." So began the Pro American newsletter. Substantiating that statement was the following, which we quote: "It's apparent in the constant promotion of a 'New World Order' under the UN by Council on Foreign Relations elitists who dominated the Bush Administration and now likewise the Clinton Administration. It's apparent in the present drive for a UN Standing Army (disregarding the cost to our economy and sovereignty) using our military and tax dollars under UN control around the world (Somalia, Iraq etc.) and it's apparent in the environmental movement's sinister drive for 'New World Order' treaties enacting destructive and unscientific regulatory proposals. It's very apparent in the elitist controlled media's attack on Christianity, and now also apparent in their promotion of the Mexican/American Free Trade Treaty [NAFTA] which would not only erode our sovereignty by allowing an international body to regulate our commerce (a major step toward the CFR's, Trilateral Commission's regional and world government goals) but would also open flood gates to drugs and illegal aliens and disastrously deindustrialize our nation. The urgency cannot be overstated. Americans must be awakened, shaken from their apathy and ignorance, pulled from their diversions and convinced to work, pray, vote, speak up, struggle and fight against the powers arrayed against them -- if we are to save our country, our freedoms, our families and all we hold dear." (Unquote).

It's also apparent that this drive to convert the United Nations into a global government has been promoted by our own federal government. President George Bush personally induced (or seduced) the UN Security Council into backing the war against Iraq and the intervention in Somalia. As Joseph de Courcy of Intelligence Digest observed: "The main feature of the post-Cold War era is that the UN seal of approval has been available for all the major international actions the US and its allies have sought to take." In international military action, our US military forces have become UN military forces. R.W.Apple in The NY Times of February 14, 1993, wrote: "Cautiously and with little fanfare, the United States is edging away from one of the guiding principles of its foreign policy for the past half-century....When the withdrawal of most of the US forces from Somalia is completed in March or April, 3,000 to 5,000 American troops will be left behind as part of a multinational force that will probably be commanded by a top Turkish army officer, Gen. Cevik Bir....When the switchover is completed, it will be the first time US troops have operated directly under the flag of the United Nations...'The creation of a post-Cold War era means creating new international organizations,' Defense Secretary Les Aspin said at his confirmation hearing Jan. 7. 'And high in the list is the question of how do you create international peacekeeping and peace-making organizations.'...In announcing the new US policy on Bosnia... Secretary of State Warren Christopher said that if a peace accord could be negotiated the United States would be willing to contribute troops to help enforce it. He told officials on Capitol Hill that 10,000 to 15,000 American troops might be involved in a multinational force of 40,000 - hardly the kind of ratio that has made it possible for Americans to demand control in the past." (Unquote). Since the Korean "police action" all UN wars have had a UN selectee in command. Because American troops formed the majority in the greater wars, an American officer was in command. But in case American troops form a minority, they will be commanded by a foreign officer, in the case of Somalia, a Turk. This is the "guiding principle" in our foreign policy which is being revoked.

Another trap for America has to do with who will control the UN when it has assumed complete command as a Global Government? In the so-called Cold War period, the UN General Assembly was controlled by the Third-World countries. Most of them were influenced or controlled by the Communist International, which was controlled by Moscow. With the collapse of the Soviet Union, control shifted to the remaining "greatest nation". But despite assertions that Communism is dead, there is much evidence that Russia - still with the veto power - is moving toward "a more assertive phase" in its foreign policy. This became apparent when American planes dropped bombs on military emplacements in Iraq last January. Russia criticized the action and Russia's ambassador to Turkey went so far as to say that Moscow would not hesitate to take up arms if America made moves contrary to Russian interests. Intelligence Digest reports that "In essence, Moscow wants to recruit Third-World support to restrict American dominance and to exercise this restriction through institutional changes at the UN. The main indicator as to how Russia would like the UN to develop is to be found in President Gorbachev's May 1992 speech at Fulton, Missouri. The important part of this speech was not the most widely reported section which dealt with the ending of the Cold War, but the section that outlined Moscow's view on how the New World Order should be run. The relevant passage of that speech (and subscribers can be sure that this remains official Russian policy despite the change of leadership) reads as follows: 'And while...recognizing the role of the United States of America,...we must not limit our appeal to the elect but call upon the whole world community. In a qualitative new and different world situation, the overwhelming majority of the United Nations will, I hope, be capable of organizing themselves and acting in concert on the principles of democracy. The important pointer here was the phrase "acting in concert on the principle of democracy." This is not a call for the world's nations to practice democracy internally but a proposal for the UN to be run by majority voting with the poor nations, led by Russia, exercising restraint over the United States and its allies. This is what Gorbachev meant by moving democracy from the national to the international arena (emphasis added)."

Steven Miner is an Ohio U history professor who recently returned from Moscow and wrote an article which appeared in the LATimes. It began: "In the 1930s, Crane Brinton, a political scientist, observed that revolutions, like illnesses, tend to follow a certain course:...The old regime is discredited, its replacement is ruled by moderates, who, in turn, are replaced by a more violent vein of radicals, and in the end the old regime is partly restored." Professor Miner says this may be happening in Russia. As we write this there is a Reuters New Service report from Moscow stating: "Russia's parliament overwhelmingly rejected President Boris Yeltsin's power-sharing plan Friday (3/5/93), setting the stage for a major clash at a session of the legislature next week...Yeltsin had proposed a deal that would freeze changes to the constitution so Russia can press ahead with reforms. But the Supreme Soviet, the standing parliament, flatly rejected the Yeltsin plan." Directly under this Reuters report was an AP article reading, "President Clinton praised Russian President Boris Yeltsin as a 'man of courage' Friday and pledged to offer more aggressive help to his struggling country during a two-day summit next month in Canada...Clinton said..."I'm going there to this meeting with the intention of trying to more aggressively engage the United States in the economic and political revitalization of Russia." Professor Miner ended his article with the statement: "The collapse of Mr. Yeltsin's government would once again confirm Mr. Brinton's analysis of revolutions. It might also lead to immeasurable disaster that could make the killing in Bosnia look minuscule by comparison." It must be remembered that Russia is still under the control of former Communists, and there is a popular feeling that democracy is failing and Russia should return to socialism (read that communism) in order to survive. But the global powers want Yeltsin to remain in control because he is under their control, and to take a more active part in UN affairs.

The power brokers also want the Clinton Clique to succeed in its work of completing the task of creating a welfare state where an independent sovereign Republic once existed, and make it a province in part of the Global Government. The Masters of the New World Order, we believe, would prefer that the Clintons do their assigned tasks by using Fabian methods; a system of kinder, gentler legislative action. Following through, Clinton told Congress of his plans for economic recovery and budget reduction, and the controlled media went right along with praise for the program. Newsweek assured readers that "The dark clouds of a decade of economic restructuring are finally clearing and leaving behind an unaccustomed sunshine....Clinton seems set to preside over the healthiest economy of any president since Lyndon Johnson....Better times will allow the president to push changes his predecessors lacked the courage to make - reducing the federal budget, slowing the escalation of health care costs, shifting the nation's spending habits away from consumption and toward savings and productive investment....with a minimum of short-term pain." (Unquote). But despite such press and TV praise and despite Clinton's trips to communities and schools to promote his program, in spite of his daily appearances on the boob tube, cable or otherwise, a majority of voters who had feared what the Clintons might do to them, their families and their country, began to realize how right they had been. Columnist Donald Lambo wrote: "The flour-and-paste that holds Bill Clinton's budget plan together is slowly coming undone....as even congressional Democrats are finding out that it avoids serious deficit-cutting. Consumer confidence fell last month as taxpayers began to realize that the Clinton plan would squeeze them even harder that they're being squeezed now, taking more of their earnings through higher individual income taxes, fuel taxes, Medicaid taxes, Social Security taxes and increased prices as a result of higher corporation taxes. Many moderate, young Democrats....threatened to revolt if party leaders did not abandon the blue smoke and mirrors that make up Mr. Clinton's budget and replace it with some stiff spending cuts that will stick....Bill Clinton may call all of this 'reinventing government' but it sounds like the same old tax and spend, big government proposals.... And in the end, as always, the American taxpayer will get stuck with the bill."

Even the NYTimes (2/17/93) found it necessary to report that "The White House said today that it would cost $30 billion to $90 billion a year to carry out President Clinton's campaign promise of guaranteeing health care for all Americans, and Administration officials said they were considering two dozen new taxes as possible sources of revenue....The White House made the disclosure as Hillary Rodham Clinton, chairwoman of the President's Task Force on National, Health Care Reform, visited the House of Representatives to lobby lawmakers of both parties on the issue....Confidential work papers from Mrs. Clinton's task force papers show that the Administration is considering taxes on insurance premiums, corporate health benefits, alcoholic beverages, tobacco products and guns, among other sources....the work papers show that the new social program that Mrs. Clinton and her aides are contemplating would be bigger than any created in more than 50 years." The massive increases in taxes in order to carry out the Clinton's programs would leave Al Gore's environmental programs with little money for expansion. So the Doctors for Disaster Preparedness Newsletter reports that "Congress has discovered a way to satisfy the 'environmental protection' machine without political cost: the unfunded mandate. Congress can pass a law requiring a new, cleaner standard and mandate that cities comply with the law. Cities must then use local property taxes that would otherwise pay for police, firefighting, schools, and public health measures to pay for compliance costs. Local officials face the storm of protest for raising taxes; Congress takes the credit for a cleaner environment."

As we said, the power brokers would prefer the Clinton Clique to complete their assigned tasks by using Fabian methods. But there is every chance that taxpayer protests will force them to change carrots for sticks and promises for commands. A National Emergency could be declared, with concentration camps for protesters (especially Christians). Before Martial Law, three programs would be important: ConCon, Guns, and FEMA. As for ConCon, The New American (3/8/93) reports, "Tycoon-turned-political activist H. Ross Perot may soon be using the power of his organization, United We Stand, to push for a constitutional convention....Perot exclaimed to Larry King (1/11/93), "We're within three states of being able to call a constitutional convention to get a balanced budget amendment." A constitutional convention would take all of the sovereign powers from the government and place them into the hands of the convention and put our Constitution up for grabs. As for Gun Control, Congressman Torricelli (D-NJ) recently introduced HR 544, a bill "to prohibit the transfer of 2 or more handguns to an individual in any 30-day period." The real purpose of the bill is to establish a national gun registration program. How can the government tell if you have purchased more than one gun unless it has a national gun registration program to keep count? And FEMA, which would be in charge of a Bureaucratic Dictatorship if a national emergency were declared. But FEMA is corrupt, incapable, as the survivors of Hurricane Andrew will tell you. So "Unless FEMA is dramatically changed, it should be abolished and its functions parceled out to other agencies, a congressional panel was told Tuesday (3/2/93)." So this warning: Martial Law if Fabian methods fail.

In a somewhat similar situation Daniel was told of a king who would stand up "and he shall prosper, and practice, and destroy the mighty and the holy people. And through his policy also he shall cause craft to prosper in his hand; and he shall magnify himself in his heart, and by peace shall destroy many; he shall also stand up against the Prince of princes; but he shall be broken without hand." (Daniel 8:24,25).

THE FORFEITURE SQUADS

The standoff in Waco, Texas; the bombing at the World Trade Center; these events seemed to form a pattern. They provided propaganda for promotion of the drive to abolish firearms in the hands of civilians, they initiated a plan to create a national police force which would replace our military establishment, one of them brought to the United States evidence of the death and destruction that can be caused by the use of terrorist tactics in a new kind of war, another sought to justify the use of terrorist tactics by the government against its own citizens. The bombing may have been the first step in an undeclared war against the United States because of its continued support of the political state of Israel. First, let us note that part of the story of the armed assault on the Branch Davidian religious group in Waco on February 27th. A Baptist preacher wrote: "As bizarre, unorthodox, and unacceptable as are some of this group's alleged beliefs and practices, I am deeply grieved and alarmed by the raid by the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms against the Branch Davidian compound that has resulted in such senseless carnage. The raid was obviously ill advised, poorly planned and executed, irresponsible, in violation of the First Amendment, morally unconscionable, and reprehensible, and therefore, without justification...It should be of great concern to the American people in general and the Christian community in particular that neither the leader of the group nor the group collectively had been charged with a crime prior to the raid (unquote)."

But the preacher was wrong in one respect. There was a reason for the raid. And it was conducted by what has come to be called a government approved forfeiture squad. Waco, Texas is the trade center of a rich agricultural region. The city is a leading cotton market, and there is said to be undrilled oil in the area. It is a rich prize for a government that can't survive on what it presently takes in. A NYTimes News Service item notes that the Branch Davidian "cult's 77-acre compound may be confiscated and sold by the federal government to help recoup its losses from the siege." In a folder signed by Mark Westmann and mailed to his subscribers by Gary North, editor and publisher of Remnant Review (whom we wish to thank publicly for his distribution of two of our recent DBRs which resulted in a number of new subscribers) there is this answer: "...the real reason [for the raid] I believe is that a government facing national bankruptcy can't continue to finance the massive welfare state or expand federal property ownership by employing 'business as usual.' In addition, the government has guaranteed nearly every special interest group in America, access to federal dollars. But there's one problem. According to the National Taxpayer's Union these future obligations - to Medicaid, Social Security, etc. - will cost at least $15 trillion to pay off. These obligations make the $1 trillion S&L bailout (not to mention the $4 trillion national debt) look like pocket change. How does the government plan to pay off these gargantuan guarantees? Its only choice is to develop 'new sources of revenue.' And your assets [like the 77-acre Mount Carmel religious compound near Waco] are the most obvious target."

We have received a notice from an unidentified source which confirms the above. We quote: "The McAlvany Intelligence Advisor of January 1993 says

'Any government agent or agency in America today can confiscate or seize almost any property from an American and there is very little the citizen can do to protect himself. We are witnessing the death of property rights in America. Human rights and all other freedoms will follow.' In 1984 government seizures of so-called illegal assets totaled $30 million. In 1991 these seizures totalled $644 million (not including IRS levies) for a net total of 2047%. (Seizures in 1992 probably exceeded $750 million.) Eighty percent of these seizures never resulted in an arrest or conviction, indicating that most are being taken from innocent people. According to USAToday, there are now 1,000 forfeitures per week in the US, or 52,000 a year. Assets seized in order of frequency are: 1) cash or other monetary instruments; 2) vehicles, boats, planes; 3) banks and brokerage accounts; 4) real estate (including your home); and 5) pension and profit sharing plans. Police or government seizures now pose a seemingly random but still very real and terrifying threat to everyone who has worked so hard to earn and save over the years. It is frightening to realize that if your teenage daughter or son hosts a party at your house, and one of their guests brings a few joints of marijuana, that you can lose your entire house and everything in it under many local or state forfeiture laws.

"Asset forfeiture is an unconstitutional process (though considered legal according to new socialist laws and regulations) which allows the government or police agency to simply 'accuse' or 'suspect' you of a crime (but not formally charge you), and then seize your property. In most instances there is no arrest or trial, no conviction. You are presumed guilty until you can prove yourself innocent. Forfeiture laws were expanded in 1984 to allow the government to take possession without first charging the owner. The proceeds finance more investigations and are helping to finance the shortfall of local, state and federal governments. Eliminating the need to prove a crime has moved most action to civil court, where the government accuses the item, not the owner, of being tainted by crime. As a result jury trials can be refused; illegal searches condoned; and rules of evidence ignored.

"reread this carefully and let it sink in. We are entering an unconstitutional socialist quagmire of seizures, forfeitures and lawsuits of incredible dimensions....a branch of the New World Order (unquote)."

An item from the LATimes of 3/9/93: "Survivors of a reclusive Malibu millionaire shot to death in a drug raid last fall filed a federal civil rights lawsuit Monday, alleging that drug agents murdered Donald P. Scott after faking a marijuana sighting so they could seize his 200 acre ranch....The deputy who shot Scott, Gary Spencer, was cleared of wrongdoing and returned to duty....Scott...was killed when Spencer shot him twice after forcibly entering the main house at the Trail's End Ranch. No drugs were found on the property." Such raids, seizures, forfeitures of property, and sometimes death happening in America 52,000 times a year? Said the Baptist preacher, "If civil government is not bound by the chains of the Word of God and the Constitution, and if God-fearing, freedom-loving people of America do not wake up and pray and act immediately - the America envisioned by our founding fathers and enjoyed by millions of Americans will soon be only a memory. Wake up preachers! Wake up, Christians! Wake up, America!"

The Waco, Trade Center events also ignited what one columnist called "The Great American Gun War - the ongoing battle over gun control." The supporters of gun control like to pretend that the Second Amendment to the Bill of Rights doesn't exist, or is being misinterpreted and no longer means anything. They say that the right to gun ownership referred only to state militias, now known as the National Guard. But the Amendment says "the right of the people to bear arms," not the right of members of the militia to bear arms." Our forefathers believed that an armed populace was the best protection against government despotism. Noah Webster, supporting the Bill of Rights, wrote: "Before a standing army can rule, the people must be disarmed, as they are in almost every kingdom in Europe." Samuel Adams hoped that "the Constitution never be construed...to prevent the people of the United States who are peaceable citizens from keeping their own arms."

Along with gun control comes the plan advocated by the New World Order promoters: The elimination of all national military forces with reliance on the UN to maintain peace between provinces, and a provincial police force to keep peace between people. Or, as Jack McLamb said, "The ultimate goal of the government bureaucrats is creation of a World Government, the laws or rules of which would be enforced in a National Police Force. McLamb is a retired police officer who publishes the newsletter Aid & Abet. He observed that the idea of a national police force originated with LEAA, the Federal Law Enforcement Assistance Administration. In 1969 Charles Rogovin of LEAA warned police chiefs that a national police force might be needed. And Patrick Murphy, president of the Police Foundation, created by the Ford Foundation in 1970, noted: "I have no fear of a national police force. I don't want one, but crime control is not working, and our 40,000 police departments are not sacred. The danger is insignificant. The greater danger is that crime may worsen, that the states will refuse to coordinate and the federal government will not require them to. In fact, the government is now loosening the strings, and the states are doing next to nothing. Policing is not effective. We worship local government and home rule in this country - I like it too - but the problem must be solved by a higher level of government, like welfare. We must move it up to the state level. The state must say, 'These are the standards. We would save money and get better efficiency if we consolidate the little police departments in a county.'" And here we see the Hegelian Dialectic at work. First step: create a problem (thesis). And the problem has certainly been created by unconstitutional laws, the drug war, war against Christianity, etc. The second step (antithesis): generate opposition to the problem (fear, panic, hysteria). Then the third step (synthesis): offer the solution to the problem (world government and a national police force). McLamb gives an example of how this works: "Imagine that you are trying to dominate America. You realize that you must centralize the police, so that you can control them. But you are also perfectly aware that in the face of America's long tradition of local police, controlled by the people through local government, you can't just come out and say so. You'd be identified for what you are. So you have to figure out a way to change the police - from local to federal - claiming all the while that you are doing something else; claiming, in fact, that you are defending the traditional, local police system. In other words, you need a superficially plausible reason to destroy the 'power structure' and replace it with your own. So what do you do? You know that your first job is what Lenin called 'tasks of destruction,' which in this case means that you must get the police out of the hands of local government. So you send your agents into the streets to incite people into 'confrontations' with the police. You tell them to begin saying that the police - the local police - are guilty of 'brutality.' You tell them to demand 'community control' of the police, by way of civilian review boards as the solution. You know that if you simply get the police out of the hands of local government and into the hands of the mob, you are almost home, because you control the mob....Suppose, however, that the plan fails. Suppose you can't convince the American people that the local police are brutal. Suppose, in short, that you can't seize control of the police by using the masses, on the bottom. Then you decide to seize control from the top, claiming as usual that you are doing just the opposite, that all you are doing is helping the police. So you do everything you can to create a crime wave. And at the same time you do everything you can to prevent the local police from stopping it. Then you announce that the local police need your help - to fight crime - and you begin by handing them federal aid, knowing that whatever the government finances, it controls. Of course, you tell the police chiefs that there are no strings attached. That is what the dope pusher tells the kids on the playground. But gradually, like the pusher, you begin to impose rules. You know that, before the chiefs and the people realize it, you will be in control. Once corrupt politicians 'control' law enforcement officers, the rights of common citizens will be meaningless." (Quoted from Jack McLamb's Aid & Abet, published to alert our nation's internal protectors; police officers and National Guardsmen. But it is also available to private citizens: six issues for $20.00. Write Aid & Abet newsletter, POBox 8787, Phoenix, AZ 85066).

Global Crises. Clinton seems successful in changing our Nation into a welfare state province of a corporative socialist world government. But a Congressional revolt against NAFTA and a growing revolt against the other regional world government called EUROPE have the Globalists worried. And while Clintonians were Socializing the United States, Frenchman threw out their Socialist government. Firefighter William Severen said the Socialists "promised us the moon in 1981 and haven't delivered...Bill Clinton promised the same thing, but at least he told the public that he wouldn't be able to carry it out." Meanwhile the Globalists and Clinton were pulling every string to keep Yeltsen in power. But the Globalists and Bush also pulled for Gorbachev and they lost. If the former Communists, now called Hardliners, gain control of Russia, the neighboring nations will hang onto their nuclear weapons, or sell them to the Islamic fundamentalists who are seeking to form a power base with Russia. Analysts think China will be the largest economic power within a decade. So, with China supreme in Asia, with Islam seeking its own World Order, with EUROPE in jeopardy, the Globalist Hierarchy may utilize the plan that has saved it in the past: War. Possibly World War.

How did we get into such a mess? John Adams had an answer: "Our Constitution was made only for a religious and moral people. It is wholly inadequate for the government of any other." For another answer, look at our public schools. They took out Christ and put in condoms. They took out the Mediator and put in metal detectors. They took out the Saviour Emancipator and put in sex education. Unless we get back to basics, our Nation is deservedly lost. "For other foundation can no man lay than is laid, which is Jesus Christ." (I Corinthians 3:11).

THE TRIAL RUN

He had to prove himself. He had done quite well as a campaigner. He had fooled a percentage of 43 percent of the people into believing he was the man for the job. But Congress was beginning to oppose him in his big spending and small cutting program. There was no Kissinger or Brzezinski on his staff to help him. Hillary was away tending to an ill father. His rocky relations with the military had taken a serious turn when Lt. Gen. Barry McCaffrey, the most decorated man in the armed services, had been insulted while at the White House. It may not have helped when he requested the general to be his guest in Vancouver and run with him on Sunday morning. The Wall Street Journal had reported on how multinationalist Dwayne Andreas talked Clinton into exempting his company's ethanol from the "comprehensive" energy tax. Then on his way to Vancouver he stopped over in Portland where a forest conference had been planned to appease miners, farmers and foresters who were being hit heavily both by the Environmental Protection Agency and the new tax plan. In Portland he broke some more promises by "caving in to miners and ranchers," as The Palm Beach Post editorialized. "It's beginning to look like gridlock...Call it compromise, call it 'process.' but Mr. Clinton just lost his shirt." Then on to Vancouver where Clinton started off by apologizing to Yeltsin because a US submarine bumped into a Russian submarine in the Barents Sea off the Russian coast. "It was a regrettable thing," said the President of the United States to the President of Russia, "and I don't want it to ever happen again."

In a monetary sense, the summit was unnecessary. Long ago it had been decided that Russia was going to get help. In fact Russia has been getting help from the United States ever since the Bolsheviks first took over in 1917. But then it was secret help, mostly by way of the Conspiratorial Invisible Government. But since the time of Gorbachev and his short-lived "Perestroika," the giving has been made public, and the people are told that they must help Russia because in doing so they will help themselves, according to the sales pitch adopted by Clinton. But the Vancouver Summit needs must happen because Clinton had to prove himself, especially to Six of the Big Seven government leaders who are meeting in Tokyo to set up an international aid package for Russia, expected to be as much as $30 billion, to be added to the $70 billion already given Russia since the breakup of the Soviet Union. This Big Seven package is to be organized through the World Bank, the IMF and other international lending agencies. There at this Big Seven Economic Summit in Tokyo Clinton will be on display before the political and economic leaders of the rest of the Group of Seven (Germany, Japan, Britain, Canada, Italy and France). To make this a rather awkward meeting, Clinton previously had been rude to John Major, Prime Minister of the United Kingdom, because Clinton favored the Fabians, liberals and Communists. While gaining his Rhodes Scholarship he had organized a couple of rallies in London that didn't sit well with the so-called conservative British government. Also, the socialist government of France has fallen, and that tends to make Clinton an odd man out in any future Big Seven Summit. These leaders of other governments are concerned with Clinton's ability to lead them in international affairs because he is President of the biggest and most powerful nation of them all and must lead them all.

"The Clinton administration is attaching the utmost importance to establishing a close personal relationship between Bill Clinton and Boris Yeltsin," wrote Marshall Ingwerson of The Christian Science Monitor (4/2/93). "The stakes are high at the summit in Vancouver, British Columbia, which represents President Clinton's first major appearance on the world stage," The writer then explained: "Early in his term, the president has occupied himself with domestic affairs and has not established a strong image as a world leader. So far, Clinton's approach to world affairs has been to the course charted by George Bush [which was charted by the power elite-Ed.] Like former President Bush, who was accused of staking too much for too long on Mikhail Gorbachev as the leader of the reform, Clinton has been criticized for staking too much on Yeltsin. And much of the package that Clinton will offer will be reassembled from programs passed by the Bush administration [and approved by the power elite.]" Then on Monday, the day after the summit ended, the CSM carried a front page story by this same Marshall Ingwerson which began: "Starting today, Clinton administration officials plan to begin negotiating with other Western industrial countries over far more significant support to the Russian economy than the United States offered here this past weekend....In economic terms, this summit has been surrounded by other key events. The day before the summit began, the so-called Paris Club, a group of Russia's creditor governments, agreed to reschedule $15 billion of Russia's $80 billion in foreign debts. Ten days from now (4/15/93) finance ministers from the 'group of seven' industrialized countries (G-7) will meet in Tokyo to discuss further steps. But President Clinton is clearly in the role of the catalyst. (Unquote)."

There are, however, those of the pro-Russia crowd that disagree with the idea of giving more good money to help bad rubles under present circumstances. William Buckley of CFR and National Review wrote a column mentioning James Sherr, who recently returned from Russia. He explained that "When the Soviet Union collapsed, tens of thousands of politically dominated unions [headed by Communists] that were supervising the whole of Russian agro-business suddenly found that there was no central administrative apparatus to tell them what to do. We had then the extraordinary phenomenon of the privatization of socialist [communist] units. The appearance, in effect, of tens of thousands of satrapies." A satrap in this sense means a local bureaucrat who is dictator within his satrapy (province or commune) but who must obey orders given by a central bureaucratic authority; and with the fall of the Soviet Union that "central authority" was gone and the local Communist boss was on his own. Said Sherr, "The regional autonomy is merely the logical completion of a sequence that began under Gorbachev; the erosion of the Communist Party as a mechanism of control and the consequent unraveling of the 'command-administrative system' in the economy. When market mechanism failed to fill the vacuum, regional authorities [local Communist bosses, now calling themselves socialists or democrats] were obliged to do so, providing perquisites, privileges, and the bare necessities of life. Over time, the obligations became a prerogative. It also provided a new lease on life for former Communists who found that they were doing very well out of the Soviet collapse. Under the new dispensation the local satraps exercised their own authority...For these elites, the transformation of bureaucratic into financial power is the essence of 'economic reform', and they believed it should go no further. (unquote)."

What we have in Russia, therefore, are tens of thousands of former Communist bosses operating without central authority under what has been called "socialist capitalism," which is better known as Fascism, and which the power elite peddles as Democracy. There seems to be a general opinion that before Big Business can do much profit-making in Russia, those "tens of thousands of satrapies" must be controlled by some central authority; and the fight for that position is between Yeltsin who wants to be a benevolent dictator, and the legislature which is run by the hard-liners and seem to favor a return to Communist control of the country.

In the midst of all the controversy, Alexandr Solzhenitsyn, author of The Gulag Archipelago, wrote a letter to the Russian Ambassador to the United States. He permitted the letter to be published and following are parts of that letter as translated into English.

"What is happening in Russia is heartbreaking. Not everyone wants to remember that the current destruction of the country began in 1930. This destructive process...has led the country into an economic blind alley...When the necessary process of reform was launched it was conducted thoughtlessly. In 14 months the people have been thrust into destitution and despair....To pull ourselves out of the abyss, we need a stable form of government. This does not mean just President Yeltsin, or just the current body of the Supreme Soviet; rather it means establishing an agreement reaching far into the future so that Russia will not be shaken by every breath of wind....The crazy idea of returning communism has been in the air, that same communism that destroyed 50 million to 60 million of our fellow countrymen through internal terror, and that, without consideration, without reason and without compassion killed 50 million people in the war with the Germans. But the dead cannot speak for themselves, and the living sometimes lose their reason, and see the future 'saviors of Russia' in the higher ranks of that most unrepentant party, both in those who did and in those who did not conceal their party membership....At the same time, another ruinous temptation comes to other minds to re-establish the USSR, that is, to begin a bloody way in a dozen republics. Conversely, we see that the current Commonwealth of Independent States is an ephemeral formation that does not aid in our salvation. Central Asia and the lands beyond the Caucasus have their own paths to follow, which are far from ours....."

The question of "who runs Russia?" may receive a partial answer on the 25th of this month when the people vote for or against Yel'tin's policies. However, regardless of the outcome of the vote, Clinton is pledged to go all the way in his backing of Boris. That is, until the power elite may decide that a new "voice of the people" must be heard in promoting the aims of The New World Order. But there are some difficulties with this "merging" of the two countries whose political philosophies don't quite jibe. Russia is said to be a reformed Communist country seeking democracy, while the United States is a "democratic" country developing "socialist capitalism" and The New World Order. One of these differences has to do with Iran and the Islamic fundamentalist movement. The US government looks upon Iran as the new enemy, replacing Iraq in that respect; while the Russian government looks with favor upon Iran, sells weapons and makes deals that have to do with Iran's expansion into new territory in Asia. The British Intelligence Digest of April 2, said: "During all the turmoil in Moscow over the relative powers of President Yeltsin and the Congress of People's Deputies, Russian foreign policy has quietly continued along a path which is unlikely to change regardless of the outcome of Moscow's power struggle. Foreign Minister Kozyrev has been in Tehran where he has been hammering out a modus vivendi between Russia and Iran's Islamic revolution. Intelligence Digest sources in the Gulf believe Kozyrev got what he came for....The West's problem is how to balance the growing power of a Russian-backed Iran in order to protect its access to the oil resources of the Arab Gulf states. Rebuilding Iraq is not a sensible option. It did not work before and would not do so this time round. Syria is an Iranian ally and still a terrorist state (at least 13 international terrorist organizations are given refuge and support by Damascus). Egypt is in dire internal difficulties from which no amount of Western economic assistance can rescue it (unquote)." It may be important that, as soon as Clinton returned from Vancouver, he welcomed President Mubarek of Egypt and they talked; both agreeing that the Iranians "are trying to find a way to destabilized the security" of Egypt and the Middle East; and they spoke of the terrorism that is being spread by certain groups within the Islamic fundamentalist political-religious revolution. Don't dismiss the possibility of yet another oil war in the Middle East.

Even more serious is another problem: Bosnia. Sarajevo, the city where the First World War was ignited, could ignite another. Latest official report from that trouble spot: "Sarajevo marked its first anniversary of war April 6 with peace in Bosnia seeming as remote as ever. Bosnia's commander pulled out of talks with Serb and Croat military counterparts because of reported fighting by Serbs encircling Srebrenica. Meanwhile, President Clinton dismissed as 'pure politics' the comment of Serbian President Slobodan Milosevic, who predicted that Washington would avoid measures to resolve the fighting in the former Yugoslavia. Mr. Clinton reiterated his intention to press for tougher sanctions against Serbia, which has refused to join Croatia and Bosnian Muslims in signing the UN peace plan." In this connection, beware of NATO. It has joined the UN in enforcing the "No-Fly" zone over Bosnia and this means that US airmen now serving under NATO will be directly involved. NATO also announced its willingness to commit 50,000 troops to enforcing any UN-sponsored peace plan in Bosnia-Herzegovina. NATO diplomats have also let it be known that it will be prepared to guarantee the security of Eastern Europe in the event of a hardline takeover in Moscow and the removal of Yeltsin as President of Russia. Making the US Military an official UN police force by way of NATO seems to be in the plans. NATO Secretary-General Manfred Woerner, a former German defense minister, is now in California on speaking engagements, says "The US must retain its leadership in world affairs to ensure global stability. The United States can't take a holiday from history."

Secretary-General Woerner's concept of taking "a holiday from history" differs quite radically from the warning addressed to all the secretary-generals, judges, presidents and heads of state of all the world when the Psalmist said:

"Kiss the Son, lest He be angry, and ye perish from the way, when His wrath is kindled but a little." (Psalm 2:12).

COUNTDOWN TO DISASTER

Bill Clinton and Al Gore wrote a new book: "Putting People First: How We Can All Change America." On page 72 of the book they presented their plan to fight crime and make America safe again. They'd do it by putting 100,000 new police officers on the streets; create a National Police Corps and offer veterans and active military personnel a chance to become law enforcement officers. Need we comment that a national police force is a major step toward a New World Order Dictatorship? The KGB was (and still is under another name) the prime force that kept the people of the Soviet Union under subjection. In Nazi Germany it was the Gestapo. J. Edgar Hoover said, "The dangers of a national police force is that it centralizes into one place and into the hands of one man too much authority." The Fact Finder of April 1 commented: "There is a concerted effort in America by the political left to create a national police force. Local police officers are being programmed for it, older officers are being forcibly retired. Street crime, money laundering, and drugs will be the excuse. Freedom loving Americans, cash and guns will be the target."

A current manner in which this National Police Corps is being built involves the practice of a federal agency, such as the Federal Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms enlisting state and local officers in situations such as the Waco attack on the Branch Davidian Complex. Columnist Joe Sobran commented: "Let's set aside the thorny theological issue of whether David Koresh is Jesus Christ, though there are reports that he thinks he is. A more serious problem is that the federal government thinks it's God." In a previous Report we offered our own comments regarding the Waco situation. But Samuel Cunningham of the American Heritage Institute of 5424 16th St. Lubbock, Texas gave an analysis that should alarm every freedom-loving American. With permission, we'd like to reprint parts of that analysis.

* * * * *

What occurred in Waco, Texas on Feb. 28th should concern every American who treasures the individual rights guaranteed by the United States Constitution. The blatant assault by federal agents on the Branch Davidian complex, which left four agents for the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms dead, along with at least two people [later said to be more] from the complex and sparked a month-long siege by federal agents, has left many Americans wondering whether their constitutional rights are still valid in 1993. Today the target of the federal agents is the Branch Davidians, a religious sect whose beliefs are lifestyle many Americans will question, but is that justifiable cause for the federal government to lay siege to their facilities? One hundred heavily-armed officers of the Bureau - including three attack helicopters - stormed the Mount Carmel complex of the Branch Davidians after, they say, attempting to serve a search warrant because of concerns about the safety of children inside the compound. Shooting erupted, leaving at least four of the agents dead...and sparking the infamous standoff.

Do the feds not realize that religious liberty is guaranteed by the Bill of Rights? Or that having a lifestyle strikingly different from others may be the way some people find happiness? Or that keeping firearms in a private residence - in this instance the Mount Carmel complex - is guaranteed by the 2nd Amendment to the United States Constitution? What happens when the target is no longer the Branch Davidians, but another "strange" religious group - the Mormons, perhaps, or Methodists or even the Christian Scientists? When the feds start waging war against religious sects, where will the line of demarcation be drawn?

The assault in Waco was far from the first. In fact, over the past decade there have been numerous similar incidents throughout the nation, and the target is not limited to religious groups.

* Smithville, Ark June 1983. Gordon Kahl, a 63-year-old North Dakota grain farmer who had been sought by the FBI and US marshalls as a tax protester, was shot to death during a blood battle with more than 40 FBI agents, US marshalls and Arkansas sheriff's deputies. Kahl had been convicted in 1977 for failing to pay his 1973 and 1974 income taxes. At that time he said he was a member of a group called United Tax Action Patriots which claimed income taxes were a subversion of American principles. Since when is it a capital offense to disagree with a representative of the IRS?

Louisville, Neb April 1984. The Rev. Everett Sileven, a Nebraska fundamentalist Christian minister, was found guilty of contempt of court and sentenced to eight months in jail for defying a state law compelling state certification of teachers for a private school operated by his church. The case became known as 'the Nebraska seven' when the judge jailed seven fathers of students attending the school because of their refusal to appear in court and testify against the pastor. The Rev., Mr. Sileven contended the government had no right to interfere with a church-operated school. Supporters of the Rev. Mr. Sileven's stance in the case flocked to Nebraska to lend their voices to his cause. As one minister from Maryland explained: "Maryland does not require that our church school teachers be accredited with the state. If we did, we'd go to jail too, because we don't want the government telling us how to teach our children." Do we have in this nation today what amounts to a mandated government educational system? [On April 9 came word that Rev. Sileven has been in the federal prison camp in Marion, Il. Had been convicted on conspiracy charges but was guilty of no wrongdoing. His health is broken and the unrelenting kitchen work to which he was assigned is killing him. He succumbed to the flu. Weak with vomiting and diarrhea, day after day he lay on the cold concrete floor in the kitchen. He has not refused to work, but the government is killing him. The Marion Federal Prison Camp has him listed as Dr. Everett Sileven, No. 19842-077. Call your congressmen and senators and ask them to call Mrs. Kathleen Hawk, Director, Bureau of Prisons (202) 307-3250, and plead with her to stop this torture of Brother Sileven.]

* Washington DC June 1984. US Rep. George Hansen, R-Idaho, was assessed a prison term of up to 15 months and fined $40,000 for failing to report $333,978 in loans and other transactions on four consecutive financial disclosure statements. Hansen was charged under the 1978 Ethics in Government Act, which requires virtually all major government officials to make annual disclosures of their financial holdings, liabilities and transactions, including gifts, loans and profits for themselves and members of their immediate family. He was the victim of an IRS scheme to silence his accusations that the service had been acting in collusion with the Justice Department to criminally target citizens. Was Rep. Hansen's sentence intended to punish a crime or to silence an effective critic?

* Northern Idaho, August 1992. The wife and teenage son of Randy Weaver, a US Army Forces veteran who had been indicted on a charge of selling an allegedly "sawed-off" shotgun to an undercover agent of the federal government, were killed at Weaver's primitive mountaintop cabin in an assault launched by federal, state and local law enforcement officers. According to a report in The Spotlight, Weaver confided to at least two persons that "he had been set up on federal firearms violations to get him to act as an informant for FBI and Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms agents investigating the activities of right-wing groups in the area." Capt. Jack McLamb, the decorated Phoenix Police Department officer, wrote in a report on the incident: "We put everything on hold, and by Wednesday, August 26, we were there in Idaho. We went straight to the roadblock and announced ourselves to the 300 or so supporters of the family who were there. As a police officer, I've been in riots, and this situation was very tense. The people were in a very bad mood. And on the other side of the roadblock were about 100 Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms (BATF) officers, FBI officers and Idaho State Police officers. The officers were on edge and ready to go to war against these people. These people were friends and neighbors of the Weavers. They knew that the Weavers were no bother to anyone. There were witnesses who told us that they had seen a helicopter hovering around the mountain top carrying a fuel bladder, to drop on the cabin and set it ablaze. We didn't see it, but this is what they told us and shows that the crowd had good reason to be concerned about the family's safety." Good reason, indeed, judging from the results of other federal assaults!

* Ashland, Oregon, Oct 16, 1992. US marshalls and local police lay siege to a house in an attempt to serve a no-bail warrant for the arrest of Maynard Campbell, who was wanted for allegedly illegally cutting timber at the Klamath National Forest in California. Campbell contended the mining claim he holds on that site permits him to cut timber. Interestingly, Campbell had been spearheading a movement to bring criminal indictments against the US Marshalls Service, the FBI and Idaho Gov. Cecil Andrus for their orchestration of the murders of Vicki Weaver and Samuel Weaver, wife and son of Randy Weaver, who the federal agents had killed in a shootout in Idaho. Campbell had authored a 77-page report detailing his investigation into the federal assault on the Weaver family in Idaho. According to Campbell, the indictment against him "only came down...after he went public with his intentions to bring the authorities to justice for their misdeeds in the Weaver case. After a three-hour siege on the home of Campbell's fiancée, Eileen Kunkel, during which Radio Free America (RFA) host Tom Valentine remained in constant telephone communications with Campbell, the writer surrendered. Are these incidents unrelated or are they part of a carefully orchestrated theme? Why is the federal government waging war against its own people?

James "Bo" Gritz, the most decorated Special Forces Commander in the US Army and a presidential candidate in 1992, issued a news release on March 9 concerning the Mount Carmel incident, noting that "the United States Government is a foreign corporation with respect to a state" and calling on McLennan County Jack Harwell "to arrest all federal officers at the scene and to restore the peace and domestic tranquillity of McLennan County." Gritz also asserted that there is a legal question as to whether the federal agents in Waco have allegiance to the United States Constitution. The Gritz news release also asserted "This Federal action fits into a pattern of Federal activity which, according to the foregoing official 'cites', has all the appearances of being part of a New World Order scheme under the United Nations, a foreign jurisdiction."

Will the federal assault on Mount Carmel be the final attack against freedom-loving Americans? The ATF agents had been in training for 11 months at Fort Hood in Texas prior to the Feb. 28th assault at Waco, according to Cable News Network (CNN). That fact alone hints at more assaults to come if Americans do not Speak Out against this assault on their constitutional rights. Don't allow this affront to pass unprotested. (This report was prepared by Samuel Cunningham for the American Heritage Institute, 5424 16th Street, Lubbock, Texas 79416).

This extended analysis of the Waco assault and similar offenses on the part of ATF was delivered to us prior to the 51st day of the death and destruction of nearly 90 people, perhaps 25 of them children, and of the Mount Carmel compound. The length of the report required some deletion, but not a word of what we printed was changed. We chose to reprint this press report, not merely because of its analysis of the Waco siege, but also because it lists other similar assaults, upon farms, homes and persons, and shows how there is behind these actions a plan to destroy religious freedom in the United States, this in preparation for the promotion of a New Age religion which is in sympathy with the plans of the New World Order. Remember, what the government does to one religious group, it can do to any religious group. And what it does to one individual, family or home, it can do to any individual, family or home. As Robert McCurry of Heritage Baptist Church, Sharpsburg, GA declared: "Religious freedom is now under unprecedented assault across America. Although no other cases are of the magnitude and intensity of the Waco incident, there are literally thousands of religious freedom cases being litigated throughout the United States. If civil aggression against religion is not halted, if civil government is not bounded by the chains of the Word of God and the Constitution, and if God-fearing, freedom-loving people of America do not wake up and pray, speak out, and act immediately, the America envisioned by our founding fathers and enjoyed by millions of Americans will soon be a memory." In this connection, a World Parliament of Religions is to be held beginning on August 28 in Chicago. It is sponsored by the Council for a Parliament of the world's Religions. Among its co-sponsors are pro-New Age groups, major Jewish movements, the World Council of Churches, and a conglomeration of Hindus, Muslims, Native American Witch Doctors, African shamans (sorcerers), etc. Mother Theresa of Calcutta is scheduled to lead a closed session on future cooperative efforts among the world's religions. The Dalai Lama is to give the closing address. Its plan is to raise the "New Age" consciousness of people throughout the world, and initiate a full scale campaign to amalgamate the world's religions, create a worldwide religion, and denounce true Biblical Christianity as the root of religious "intolerance and violence" throughout the world and the principal threat to universal peace and harmony.

"For the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strong holds." (11 Corinthians, 10:4).

Year Forty.....Number Ten.....May 10, 1993

100 DAYS PLUS

Franklin Delano Roosevelt was the first "great changes" president of the United States, most of his "great changes" were made in the first 100 days of his reign. After that, to grade every new president's ability to serve as Chief Executive according to his performance in his first 100 days became a tradition with the media. So, on his 100th day in office President Clinton held a short session with a small group of his favorite reporters, and told them how successful he had been despite congressional opposition. During the question-and-answer period that followed, he was asked about the Hillary Health Care Program that got stalled and missed the 100-day-deadline. According to AP "he hinted strongly that his health care reform timetable was slipping and that Congress may not take it up before next year....He said that time may run out as Congress remains tied up with his budget plan and other high-priority legislation." Donald Lambo, The Washington Times news analyst, reported that "President Clinton has more than his economic stimulus bill to GOP opposition in the Senate; he lost the political offensive he needs to move the rest of his domestic agenda, say some of his advisers. Now his economic and social welfare proposals are in deep trouble....and his political and governing skills are being questioned by members of his own party....The emerging political picture suggests that the Clinton agenda is hemorrhaging badly. Among the administrations' biggest problems: *The investment tax credit for new plant equipment and capital gains sought by Mr. Clinton are opposed by two Democratic chairmen of the House and Senate tax-writing committees. *The president's $113.6 billion in new infrastructure spending is said to be too costly by fiscally conservative Democrats such as Rep. Tim Penny of Minnesota, *The North American Free Trade Agreement...is dead for now Mr. Panetta said....Some veteran party aides on Capitol Hill were comparing the Clinton White House to the Carter administration."

So much for Bill and Hillary Clinton's first 100 days. In addition to the problems raised by the Clinton agenda, there were the hangover problems that were a heritage from the Bush administration. There is the $4 trillion federal debt, with approximately $210 billion in annual interest; applications for unemployment compensation are at an all-time high; layoffs and plant closings continue, while the homeless crowd city streets; increasing gang warfare; increasing crime; and the drug war; and, as one economist noted: "The chasm between the upper and lower classes has ripped apart, with the middle class standing in the abyss."

At that brief 100-day press conference, the president did have something to say about the drug problem. The New York Times (4/22/93) had said that "President Clinton has yet to develop a national drug policy. Administration officials say the Federal budget had to be prepared before they could develop a comprehensive drug policy....The silence from Mr. Clinton who declared during the Presidential campaign that he favored drug treatment on demand, broadcasts a message potentially more damaging than Mr. Bush's inadequate policies did. At least the former President rallied against drug abuse and surrounded his war on drugs with urgent-sounding rhetoric." So, Clinton gave an answer: "Beginning next year, US narcotic policies will no longer be made in Washington but at the UN." There is a little known agency called the UN Drug Control Program (UNDCP) which, according to Warren Hough of The Spotlight will set the "Regional targets" for the operations of US law enforcement agencies in "close cooperation" with international intelligence networks such as Interpol and the narcotics divisions of other agencies." In short, the US Drug War will be handed over to the UN. This amounts to surrendering US sovereignty and playing directly into the hands of the internationalists who are building their new Global Government which is to use its "peacekeepers" and give orders to the formerly sovereign nations as to how to solve the drug war. "The first hint of the radical shift toward world government,; said Hough, "came during recent testimony of Secretary of State Warren Christopher before the international operations subcommittee of the House Foreign Affairs Committee. Responding to repeated questions about 'Why we haven't heard anything out of the new administration with regard to the war on drugs,' Christopher told the congressmen narcotics problems would soon be brought under a newly created post - under secretary for global affairs - in his [State] department. 'We're planning to treat that (drug control) on a global basis,' Christopher revealed. 'It is an issue that has international dimensions. It's not based on a single country. I think it's wise to treat that globally from now on'."

And here is revealed the trend toward world government and the sacrifice of national sovereignty on the part of the United States. This trend is not new. It became evident when President Bush insisted on doing nothing in the Gulf War until after having orders from the UN Security Council. Bush insisted that the UN mandate the action before he gave the orders. Then the Somalia invasion went a step further.. When US troops completed their tour of duty in Somalia, the UN took full charge of the country. And there remained an estimated 5,000 US troops who were assigned to the UN Peace-Keeping Force and would serve under foreign command. Then came the Bosnian genocide. It was decided that NATO troops would take charge of potential air strikes against the Serbian "ethnic cleansers." And here again American pilots would be serving in an international operation under foreign command. And when Cyrus Vance (CFR, TC, etc.) and Lord Owen of Britain managed to get questionable approval of a peace plan, Vance said, "I certainly hope there will be UN peacekeepers in blue (United Nations) helmets as well as troops from Russia." Owen said if countries that have troops serving in the UN force in Bosnia - including Britain, France and Canada - agree to commit those soldiers to the new force, we will be making a good and fast beginning." (Underlining added). Certainly it will be a good and fast beginning of the creation of a UN army over which no individual nation will have any control; a global peacekeeping force in the full an monopolistic meaning of the term.

In his comment concerning the US assault and consequent death and destruction of the Branch Davilians and their compound, Dan McAlvany wrote: "Operation Waco was a giant publicity/propaganda operation by the government which did immeasurable harm to the gun control cause, and which put millions of American gun owners on alert as to future government gun control tactics and techniques." Of course. these tactics and techniques have as their goal the total disarmament of all citizens and of the Nation itself, and the "disbanding of all national forces and the prohibition of their reestablishment in any form whatsoever other than those required to preserve internal order and for contributions to a United Nations Peace Force." This is a direct quotation from a US State Department publication titled "Freedom From War; The United States Program for General and Complete Disarmament in a Peaceful World." This was published in conjunction with Public Law 87-297, dated September 26, 1961 and signed by President John F. Kennedy. Since that time eighteen additions have been added, but Public Law 87-297 remains the basis for the Clinton-Christopher Plan to disarm the United States nationally and its citizens individually. The plan was to be carried out in three stages. In the first stage, among other provisions, "An International Disarmament Organization would be established for effective verification of the disarmament program," similar to the UN program being carried out against Iraq. The second stage would provide for "The dismantling or the conversion to peaceful uses of certain military bases and facilities wherever located," which is presently being accomplished in the United States. And the third stage would assure that "The peace-keeping capabilities of the United Nations would be sufficiently strong and the obligations of all states under such arrangements sufficiently far-reaching as to assure peace and the just settlement of differences in a disarmed world."

Here is something that deserves careful watching. There is talk of expanding the power and reach of NATO, of allowing it to accept volunteers as would a nation, and of putting the 16-nation internationalist organization in charge of the Bosnian civil war. The Christian Science Monitor (5/3/93) reported that "The Balkans civil war now seems poised between a promise of peace and the threat of United States military intervention." But instead of "the threat of United States military intervention," the report should have read, "threat of United Nations intervention via NATO with US troops as surrogate forces." Headline in another daily reads: "25,000 US peacekeepers may be called to Bosnia." Notice the wording of this announcement: "No final decision was expected until NATO received a formal request from the United Nations...." You'll remember that when US troops were in Saudi Arabia preparing for Desert Storm, such an announcement would have read: "No final decision was expected until the President of the United States received a formal order from the United Nations." Then it was a coalition of nations led by the United States. Now it is a Multinational Organization led by an Internationalist Command. So far has the New World Order advanced since the oil war in the Persian Gulf. The power and importance of NATO is seldom mentioned by the media. It headquarters in Brussels, Belgium, where it guards a "giant computer designated '666' (that) can store data of every type....plus possessing an expanded capacity to take in data for several billions more people than presently exist," so wrote Dr. John Coleman in his Conspirators' Hierarchy, who also said (page 36): "As a member of the Committee of 300 and NATO, Sir Peter Vickers (British Intelligence Officer) was around when NATO directed The Club of Rome to develop a social program which would utterly change the direction in which America wanted to go. The Club of Rome, under Tavistock direction, ordered Stanford Research Institute to develop such a program not only for America, but for every nation in the Atlantic Alliance and the OECD nations." If this be true, NATO is a key organization in the New World Order and its Global Government. It is to seek and obtain mandates from the United Nations, mandates which previously were sought by and given to President Bush. Remember that NATO is an Internationalist Organization, of which the US is but one of 16 members; and NATO is an approved arm of the United Nations Organization.

Now here is a dangerous contrast. The US is in the process of reducing its armed forces, while its real enemies are building up their military strength. The following was reported in the May 1993 issue of World Press Review: "More than 300 arms makers from about 30 nations went in February to the major weapons exhibition in Abu Dhabi, the capital of the United Arab Emirates (UAE). Among the visitors were many ministers of defense - including those of France, Russia, and Iran - who went not only to inspect new material but also to show their own wares. Many arms companies are in a lot of trouble because of the end of the cold war. That has provided an additional stimulus for arms sales to states in the Middle East, where conflicts seem to be unresolvable and the hunger for weapons unquenchable....Since the end of the war with Iraq in 1980, Teheran has been buying weapons at a rapid clip....There are reports of a nuclear program, a chemical weapons program, a ballistic missiles program, purchases of relatively advanced aircraft from Russia and China, and the arrival of the first of three submarines ordered from Russia, along with general military cooperation with China and North Korea, which have somewhat sinister reputations in this field...With these hazards in the background, the nations of the Persian Gulf are now reinforcing their own defenses....It is not only the rich Gulf states that are buying arms. Everyone has a potentially aggressive neighbor. For many countries in this region, Israel plays this role, and given that Israel itself is heavily armed, its neighbors feel compelled to buy as many weapons as they can. Former Communist countries, as well as China and North Korea, will gladly sell to anybody with money on the table." (Unquote).

Although other nations (except for occasional UN sanctions such as those imposed on Iraq and the Bosnian Muslims) continue to buy all the weapons they desire and can afford, this will have no effect on US government plans to reduce armaments, troop strength, and military bases in the United States. The possible 'loan' of 25,000 American troops to NATO operations in Bosnia simply means that American troops already stationed in Germany will be transferred from national to international control. As for gun control at home, Congressional legislation is on the way and Clinton will quickly sign into law a bill (HR 1025) that will, in effect, provide for the federal registration of all handguns that are sold at shows, in stores, or by public advertising. Hillary Clinton has planned a special firearms tax to help finance her now delayed national health care program. This also would call for federal registration of all gun sales to individuals. Attorney General Janet Reno, in a 1991 speech, said the first step to control crime and criminals is the registration of firearms, and then their confiscation. And as such gun control legislation is in process, expect more, but less publicized, of the Waco type siege, where BATF agents, FBI, State and County officers will assault, destroy and possibly kill, probably without warrant, on the basis of "guilty unless proved innocent." Ten years ago the Director of the Law Enforcement Assistance Agency (LEAA) said, "There can be no right of privacy in regard to armament. We seek a disarmed populace." That remains the goal of the Clinton Administration. But in the final analysis, this remains a spiritual war. Therefore:

"Be careful for nothing; but in every thing by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let your requests be made known unto God. And the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, shall keep your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus." (Philippians 4:6,7).

Year Forty.....Number Eleven.....May 24, 1993

A HOLY WAR BEGINS?

"Dear Mr, Bell," the correspondent wrote, "In the April 26, 1993 issue of Don Bell Reports you mention the World Parliament of Religions, which is meeting in Chicago starting August 28. I wonder why you did not list the churches which are sponsoring this event?" Our answer: At the time we did not have an authentic list of the co-sponsors of the meeting. In this issue, however, you'll find a partial list of the more than one hundred co-sponsors in the next page. The World Parliament of Religions is commemorating its 100th birthday by scheduling the meeting this year. According to its promotional brochure, "the 1893 Parliament was the first formal public meeting of representatives of the major religions in the history of the world. It has been called a watershed event in American history. It saw the assertion of Catholicism and Judaism as mainstream American religions. It marks the beginning of interfaith dialogue in the modern world. Non-western religions also have recognized its importance. Several, such as Hinduism and Buddhism, trace their beginnings in the West to their participation in the 1893 World's Parliament of Religions. As one contemporary described the event, 'It was, perhaps, the most important religious gathering which ever assembled.' According to another, the Parliament marked 'a new era in the evolution of religious life in the world.'" Their literature continues: "The centenary of the World's Parliament of Religions offers a unique opportunity for the community of religions to come together in a spirit of harmony and friendship. While commemorating the original Parliament of 1893, we strive to build on its foundation an atmosphere of peace and unity, truth and clarity. We work to establish interfaith understanding and cooperation at the local level, and we are committed to address issues of global significance as the world moves into the twenty-first century."

This World Parliament of Religions is one of many such organizations striving to create a New World Religion for the Global Government that is being built by the lackeys of the New World Order Elite. The key: "We work to establish interfaith and understanding at the local level." So while the World Council of Churches and its American affiliate, the National Council, and similar organizations work at the top level, this Parliament works at the community level. Hence so many Chicago based groups at this Chicago meeting. And it's part of the program. It may be difficult for anyone to believe, but there is a deliberate program designed to destroy true Christianity. The mainline Christian churches are in apostasy, are compromising the Scriptures, and most Christians don't seem to know it. It's similar to the "falling away" spoken of by St. Paul. As our correspondent who wrote of the churches who are sponsoring this World Parliament of Religions wrote: "The problems of our country are spiritual - a turning away from God and His Word, Many so-called churches no longer preach the message of sin and salvation, law and gospel and that we are sinners before a holy and righteous God Who has provided salvation through Jesus Christ our Saviour and Redeemer. We are seeing the results - the influx of false religions, paganism, Eastern mysticism, occultism, New Ageism as well as all kinds of wickedness and immorality legalized and condoned. If our churches had remained true to the Word of God, we wouldn't have what we have today in our country....Chickens come home to roost. Or in Biblical words: 'Sow the wind; reap the whirlwind'."

It may be difficult to believe, but it's a two-way program. At the community level, agents work to destroy the faith and condition people to tolerate, even promote, homosexuality, abortion, drug traffic, disregard of law and order. While at the top level our very government seems to have declared war against true Christianity. It may be difficult to believe, but there is a deliberate program to destroy Christianity. Prayers forbidden in schools, abortion on demand, padlocking of Christian churches for refusing to take a license from the state, the jailing of Christian home-schoolers, making it a hate crime to speak out about homosexuals, and jailtime for anyone refusing to hire or house lesbians and sodomites. There is the effort by the NEA to destroy the family relationship and turn children against their parents and to charge child abuse if scolded or punished for misbehavior. And the passing out of condoms in schools to encourage all forms of perverted sex and to destroy the Christian ethic of abstinence before marriage. Anyone with eyes to see should see the Christian ethic is being deliberately targeted for extinction, and the Waco burn-out may be the beginning of open Christian persecution in this country.

Referring to the action of churches that sponsor the Parliament of World Religions, Pastor David Earnhart in the spring issue of his Prayer Newsletter of Abiding Word Ministries (Evangelical Lutheran Church in America) wrote: "This abyss of paganism involves more of the Christian community than the ELCA. Other participants include the Methodists, Baptists, United Church of Christ and the Presbyterians. Christians in every one of these church bodies should be outraged! Today's churches need an Elijah to stand up in the face of this parliament and cry out to those who are violating the first and second commandments: 'How long will you waver between two opinions? If the Lord is God, follow him; but if Baal is God follow him.'"

WORLD PARLIAMENT OF RELIGIONS

Chicago, Aug. 28 to Sept. 5, 1993

Sponsors: The Council for a Parliament of the World's Religions, and the Virginia-based Institute for 21st Century Studies. David Ramage, president of McCormack Theological Seminary in Hyde Park is the council chairman.

Cosponsors include: American Buddhist Congress, Los Angeles; American Islamic Congress, Chicago; The Archdiocese of Chicago (Roman Catholic); Spiritual Assembly of Baha'is of Chicago; First Baptist Church, Evanston, IL; Brahma Kumaris World Spiritual Organization, Mt. Aby, India; Buddhist Council of the Midwest, Chicago; Catholic Theological Union, Chicago; Center for Religion and Science at Lutheran School of Theology, Chicago; The Dalai Lama Office of Religious and Cultural Affairs, Dharansala, India; Evangelical Lutheran Church in America, Chicago Metropolitan Synod; Guru Gobind Singh Foundation, Rockville, MD; Hindu School of Greater Chicago, Lemont, IL; Institute for World Spirituality, Chicago; Institute for Twenty-First Century Studies, Arlington, VA; United Methodist Church, Northern IL Conference, Chicago; Muslim Community, Center, Chicago; The Organization for Universal Communal Harmony, Chicago; Presbyterian Church (USA) Louisville Spertus College of Judaca, Chicago; The Church of the New Jerusalem, Swedenborgian Bryn Athyn, PA; The Temple of Understanding, NY; Unitarian Universalist Association, Central Midwest District, Oak Park, IL; United Church of Christ, Board of Ecumenical Affairs, Chicago, Chicago Metropolitan Association; Wat Dhamaran (Thai Buddhist Temple), Chicago; Women of Faith Resource Center, Chicago; Federation of Zoroastrian Association of North America, Hinsdale, IL.

The church needs a Joshua to boldly declare, 'Choose this day whom you will serve, whether the gods your forefathers served beyond the River, or the gods of the Amorites...But as for me and my house, we will serve the Lord'. The participants of Christian churches in the Parliament of World Religions is one of the greatest violations of God's Word that I have ever witnessed in my lifetime....Those church bodies which are part of the Parliament of World Religions are prostituting Christianity at the altars of the New Age, one-world religion."

And referring to the destruction of Christians and Christian ethics, the editor of The Citizen's Claw (Citizens for Constitutional Law) wrote: "When it becomes the 'policy' of a government to target or to destroy a long-established religion (genocide), those who practice that religion have the moral and legal right to declare a Holy War in progress so as to save themselves. Will Christians rise to this danger or will they turn the other cheek and whimper out? "

Dr. N. Burnett Magruder of the Christian Heritage Center in Louisville, Kentucky, who edits Awake And Alert, a special intelligence bulletin, called it a war between "The Outsider vs. The Insider." We quote:

"This title is a mirror of a war which will decide America's future. On the one hand, we have the 'Insiders', which make up a power bloc that run the country. The 'Outsider' is the Sovereign Son of God Who has been excluded from the American government. He also is the Lord of this earth, with Whom the Founding Fathers made a covenant which has guided and blessed this nation in its history. There is a war because the Insiders have exercised the power and authority of substitute gods and have thereby exiled the Lord and the King Who rules by Divine Decree. This anti-God rebellion has put the entire country at risk, and the danger is imminent.

"Thomas Jefferson made this great prophesy: 'When all government shall be drawn to Washington as the center of all power, it will become as oppressive as the government from which we separated.' That prophesy has been fulfilled. Former Senator Barry Goldwater of Arizona made this observation: 'In my view, the Trilateral Commission represents a skillful, coordinated effort to seize control and consolidate the four centers of power - political, monetary, intellectual and ecclesiastical.' A well informed intelligence advisor, Donand S. McAlvany, has documented many cases of oppressive tactics against American citizens, especially from the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, which has been oppression in action.

"The Elijah hour is the time when the Insiders must deal with the Sovereignty of the Lord of Heaven. This means that the Lord requires a national faith as well as a personal faith, such as occurred in the days of the Prophet Elijah when the leaders and the people entered into a national covenant, saying 'The Lord Is God.' (I Kings 18:37-39).

"Putting it very simply, there must be an acknowledgement of this faith by the national leadership, both in the Church and in government, if we are to have the benefit and protection of the Covenant which the Lord made with the early Founders of this nation. George Washington, Samuel Adams, Patrick Henry and Abraham Lincoln are outstanding examples of this faith. This shows us that the honor and glory of the Lord's Name will determine the survival of the American Republic and all of the attendant blessings. Here is the key word: 'Blessed is the nation whose God is the Lord.' (Psalms 33:12)."

Today's liberal and modernized churches are enjoying a promiscuous and unGodly affair with pagans, heathens, occultists, New Age humanists, earth worshipping environmentalists, and other false religionists. Bible based Christianity is out of step with the times, they say. Sexual perversion is practiced. Sodomites and lesbians are accorded special privileges and Bible believing Christians are punished for refusing to honor them. And nowhere is this merging of Christianity with false religions more evident than in such gatherings as this Parliament of World Religions which meets in Chicago beginning August 28th where Buddhists, Muslims, Hindus, Unitarians, New Agers, Witch Doctors, Shamans, Jews and offbeat Christians are brought together to worship together.

And yet, there is hope. On May 18, 1993, media wire services reported that "A resurgence in religious faith within the former communist blocs and the return to religion of baby boomers in the United States are signs of an international religious revival. A study released Monday (5/17/93) says 'The International Social Survey Program, which polled people in 13 countries, found that a growing number of the young in Eastern Europe believe in life after death. It also said devotion in countries such as the United States, Ireland and Poland may be bigger than ever'. 'Everybody thought secularism would keep on undermining religion and nothing could prevent it,' said David Barrett, editor of the World Christian Encyclopedia. 'We've all been proved wrong'." Jack Kelly in USA Today said, "The study was conducted in countries with a history of Judeo-Christian tradition and did not include Islam....In Russia, religious resurgence is so strong that Russia's 65,000 principals, teachers and administrators are now required...to attend a course on Bible-based ethics. Officials say up to 55% of Russian teachers, many of whom were atheists, have made personal commitments to Christ. Many are using the New Testament in schools...The teacher-training seminars are being taught by US educators, missionaries and business people who volunteer their time and pay their expenses." "For ages, Russia was a country of believers and morality was very close to the people," says assistant principal Olga Meinkova of School No. 788. "For a short period - 74 years - we lost it all. All Russian teachers should teach this course; Americans too. The Bible is part of normal education." It should be noted that this resurgence in religious faith has to do with the younger people, not with the government leaders.

For America here lies hope. For 74 years true Christianity was outlawed in Russia, and yet it lived, and the Bible is now being used in schools, and teachers take courses in Christian ethics. Something similar to what happened to Russia in the 1920s may be happening to America in the 1990s. Comes this dire warning from Don McAlvaney (op cit): "If the Clintonian tax/spend economic program is passed...this will set the stage for a massive electoral backlash and the election of America's first dictator in 1996. His name? Ross Perot! This is the five year script written for America by the Liberal Eastern Establishment for the elimination of the US Constitution and the installation of a Socialist America under the New World Order." For a "short period" we too could "lose it all." But the final victory is sure. And "...if we hope for that we see not, then do we with patience wait for it...And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them that are called according to His purpose." (Romans 8:25,28). And the bottom line remains:

"Blessed is the nation whose God is the Lord." (Psalm 33:12).

THE OPEN CONSPIRACY

With a $200 haircut, a $76,000 hairport tie-up, a pre-emptive purging and rehiring of the seven-member White House travel staff, mishandling of the Bosnian trouble, near defeat in the House and expected defeat in the Senate of his budget basket, things were getting out of hand. Paul Greenberg of the Arkansas Democrat Gazette in Little Rock commented, "This was supposed to be a presidential honeymoon. It's turning into a wake.... During the presidential campaign, Bill Clinton seemed protected by some lucky star that worked off all his good-ol'-boy carelessness about details like character and principle. Suddenly it's gone. Surely even his hardest critics have to feel a little sorry for the guy just now. Neither his success nor his failure nor his remarkable ability to turn failure around, or at least hide it, has prepared this president for such a run of bad luck." To top it off, Walter Scott's Personality Parade of May 30 almost told the whole truth about why all this is happening. Scott published a question which is said to have come from W. Lassiter of Los Angeles who asked, "When he was running for President, Bill Clinton sounded eager to have the chance to appoint liberal judges to the Supreme Court and the federal bench. Yet after Associate Justice Byron White announced his resignation from the High Court, the new President delayed choosing a replacement. Who or what is responsible for his hesitation?" Scott answered: "The 'who' is Hilary Rodham Clinton. The 'what' are the two things that have distracted Mrs. Clinton for months - first the illness and death of her father, then the gargantuan task of putting together a new national health-care plan. Because the President values his wife's opinions, some decisions are not made at the White House until the First Lady has had the chance to review the available evidence and weigh in with her recommendations. The appointment of a new Supreme Court justice is such a case." Walter Scott seems to have answered another question that was not asked by the questioner: "Who is really in charge at the White House?"

One thing was sure. The power brokers of the Council on Foreign Relations and the American section of the Trilateral Commission decided something had to be done about the situation. Seems that the CFR and TC hierarchy will overlook snafus of their agents if only domestic affairs are involved. In the case of Jimmy Carter they ignored his strange story of seeing white rabbits in the middle of a lake. And he did give away the Panama Canal and help to set up the truce between Israel and Egypt. But it was a different matter when he ordered that ridiculous attempt to rescue by helicopter the American diplomatic staff incarcerated in Lebanon. Added to his staff were Democratic foreign affairs veteran Lloyd Cutler and Time magazine editor Hedley Donovan. Now the same treatment must be applied to save the Clinton administration. And the Republican moderate David Gergen was called on to protect CFR and TC programs involving US Presidential action. Gergen, also CFR and TC, was called on to do the same for Ronald Reagan's First 100 Days as President. Gergen also had assisted Nixon and Ford. So, dependable and his ability proven, David Gergen gave up his job as editor-at-large of US News and prominent commentator for CNN, to become "director of communications with the difficult task of reshaping the [Clinton] administration's message," according to the Cox News Service. Gergen is, of course a ranking member of both the CFR and the TC. And with Clinton also a member but presently ranking very low in the estimate of other western leaders and heads of state, Gergen can be expected to function for Clinton in much the same manner that Kissinger functioned for Nixon and Ford, and as Brzezinski functioned for Carter.

But the man to watch is the former Secretary General of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and Chairman of the Communist Party: Mikhail Gorbachev. There is a historical parallel that, to us, seems significant. In July, 1945, the wartime Prime Minister of Britain, Winston Churchill, was defeated. As a final act, he appeared eleven months later in Fulton, Missouri. There he spoke of the Iron Curtain descending across Europe. That speech was accepted as the signal announcing that the "hot war" era occasioned by World War Two was ended, and the new era, the Cold War, was to follow. Forty-six years later, the General Secretary of the Soviet Union was defeated in a political contest with Boris Yeltsin. Gorbachev also resigned as leader of the Communist Party. Approximately one year later, he, too, as had Churchill in 1946, appeared in Fulton, Missouri. There he, in effect, signaled an ending of the Cold War era, and the beginning of a new era, one that H.G.Wells, sixty years earlier, had predicted and called it the Open Conspiracy which would create a Socialist New World Order. Wells had written: "Fundamentally important issues upon which unanimity must be achieved from the outset are: Firstly, the entirely provisional nature of all existing governments, and the provisional nature therefore of all loyalties associated therewith [the surrender of sovereignty and independence of all nations and the creation of a global government]; Secondly, the supreme importance of population control in human biology [legalized abortion and euthanasia] and the possibility it affords us of a release from the pressure of the struggle for existence on ourselves; and

HE REMEMBERS HOW IT BEGAN

Dear Don: I have been taking your fine letter for twenty-five years but now, at the age of ninety-five, I have run out of time and money.... Probably you are not old enough to remember when President Woodhead Wilson, the puppet of the communist, Mandel Huise ("Colonel Edward Mandel House" from the Round Table in England, Wilson's "alter ego"), sent a shipload of 140 anarchists and six million dollars in gold from the Zionist bankers in New York to ensure the success of Lenin's revolution....But for the action of Huise's stooge Wilson, our President, communism would have collapsed, countless millions of lives would have been saved and this once-great nation would not be sinking into the morass of the New World Order.....

Once or twice a week I see a "friend" of sixty-five years. Two years ago he remarked that I seemed so disturbed about the world situation. I said, "At my age, what happens to me doesn't make much difference. My concern is for my ten grandchildren." "Aw, why don't you just live your life and let your grandchildren look out for themselves!" That from a former teacher at the Virginia Military Institute! Is it any wonder that we are headed for another Dark Age?

P.S. I see that I owe you seventy-five dollars so enclose small check. Perhaps some day, if and when my ship comes in, I'll be able to send you the rest. Cordially....(P.P.S. Parts of this letter deleted, too personal for publication without permission, including identification of writer-Ed.).

Thirdly, the urgent necessity of protective resistance against the present traditional drift towards war (check the Report from Iron Mountain on the Possibility of Peace, through a global environmental drive and creation of an international movement known as The Greening)." Said Wells, "People who do not grasp the significance of these issues do not really begin to understand the Open Conspiracy."

Before George Bush, in behalf of the oil industry, induced the Security Council of the United Nations to mandate a war against Iraq, and when Bush spoke openly of that war's importance in promoting The New World Order, the previously secret and concealed conspiracy became an Open Conspiracy. The people at large, the outsiders, were to join with the insiders in developing this New Age. Only then did it become The Open Conspiracy that Wells had predicted some sixty years earlier. So, between Bush's announcement of a New World Order and Gorbachev's speech at Fulton in May 1992, did the previously secret conspiracy become an Open Conspiracy which all the people were to assist and promote. In addition, thanks to Bush and Gorbachev, the previously feeble and ineffective United Nations was awakened, rejuvenated and spoken of as the One World Government. Joseph de Courcy, editor of the important Intelligence Digest, issue of May 21, 1993, noted:

"Gorbachev's May 1992 speech was billed in advance as the official declaration that the Cold War was over, and that was how it was reported. But there was much more to his speech than a declaration that the Cold War was over. The critical element was about the UN and how the new world order should be based on international democracy. 'In a qualitatively new and different situation, the overwhelming majority of the United Nations, will, I hope, be capable of organizing themselves and acting in concert on the principles of democracy,' Gorbachev said. This was not a call for all the nations of the world to practice democracy internally but a proposal for the UN to be run by majority voting with the poor nations, led by Russia, using their numerical superiority to outvote the UN and its industrially-developed allies. Of course there was little chance of the US falling for this, but from a Russian point of view it made good propaganda in the Third World."

When Gorbachev was allegedly surprised and incarcerated for a time in that strange and still unexplained coup that allowed Boris Yeltsin to capture the crowd with his physical stand against a tank and thereby gain control of the Russian government, it seemed for a time that this would end Gorbachev's career. He seemed as politically dead as was his New World Order partner, George Bush, when their version of The New World Order was tabled and other strategies adopted by the Power Brokers' Elite. However, Gorby wasn't that easily retired from the world stage. In a little time the author of Perestroika was found heading a think tank. Yeltsin tried to stop Gorby by ordering the shutdown of the Moscow-based think tank. But Gorby simply left the East and went to the West, still looking for a way to create a New World Order with Russia and a different brand of Socialism running the global government. His international headquarters was transferred to the United States. But that didn't put him out of touch with Russia. He gave a talk via Russian TV in which he said, "Everything that started in 1985 has to be continued. You think the Gorbachev era has ended. I only gave the dawn. It is still not midday. I think there is more ahead of us." (This according to Washington Report, 10309, St. Petersburg, FL 33733. Monthly, $25 per year.)

Apparently to hasten the coming of his predicted midday, Gorby then announced that he had formed a new environmental organization, one which is likely to develop into an international political party replacing the now seemingly supine Communist International. Gorby calls his new organization The International Green Cross and Green Crescent. "On 4/17/93 Gorbachev presided over the founding [in] Kyoto, Japan. Before the big event, Gorby had been in Washington, where he told the House of Representatives, 'The Green Cross aspires to be for environment crises what the Red Cross and Red Crescent already is for disaster relief...Mr. Gorbachev spoke fervently and at length about it, saying the group would seek to standardize anti-pollution laws worldwide. (Translation: promote one-world government through the Greening)." (Quoted from Franklin Sanders' Moneychanger, 6/93. Monthly, $95.00. P.O.Box 341753, Memphis TN 38184).

Gorby's next move was not widely publicized in the United States. But an article he wrote, which appeared in the May 13th issue of the London Daily Telegraph, proved to be sensational in Europe. We haven't been able to obtain a copy of the article, but the British based Intelligence Digest (5/21/93) gave a review of it. We quote: "Gorbachev expanded his ideas for the UN's role in the new world order (and you can be sure that his views coincide very closely with the Kremlin's objectives). The most important part of his article was his proposal for regional UN security councils. The purpose of this proposal, openly stated, was to exclude America from European matters. After reiterating his views on the need to make critical reforms through the UN 'to change how we handle international security', Gorbachev argued that Europe 'can't go begging to Washington' every time a problem arises in Europe. What is needed, he wrote, is 'a European Security Council, a secretary-general for Europe, structures that have authority and a collective mandate, plus military forces for prevention of future crises and for rapid deployment when necessary...Obviously, the United States and Canada need to be associated with these structures, but these new organizations would take on 'regional' functions directly'."

At Fulton Gorby called for international democracy among the nations as well as national democracy within each nation. A year later he is saying that the world should be divided, much as the Socialist George Orwell's 1984 divided the world into regional governments. "left unsaid is the corollary that without an American presence the European Community would be overshadowed by Russia's military might," said the Intelligence Digest report.

No, dear reader, Communism is not dead. It merely changed its name. And its leaders, now calling themselves promoters of democracy, have chosen another set of socialist tactics and strategies to deceive the world. And the Conspirators, once secret like the sodomites, now come out of their closets, take high places in society and government, and invite the people of America and the Western World to join them in an Open Conspiracy to create their New World Order.

"And for this cause God shall send them strong delusion, that they should believe a lie: That they all might be damned who believed not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness...Therefore, brethren, stand fast and hold the traditions which ye have been taught." (II Thessalonians 2:11,15).

MORATORIUM

"If President Clinton wonders why he hasn't a friend in the world," said a sympathetic editorial writer, "here's one reason: Because he keeps trying not to have any enemies. Like playground bullies who saw the new kid flinch, everyone is picking on him. Members of Congress from both parties, generals, talking heads and foreign politicians pound him." At an Air Force base in the Netherlands, two-star Air Force General Harold Campbell gave a speech to 250 people and called it as he saw it, said that President Clinton is a "gay-loving," "pot-smoking," "draft-dodging," and "womanizing" commander in chief. The president of an American oil company wrote to a friend in England saying, "It is inconceivable that anybody outside the United States could have the slightest inkling of the current news media's vicious attacking on their own candidate - and especially this early in the presidency." The New York Times, a Clinton supporter, reporting on the manner in which Clinton threw his friend, Hillary's friend and former schoolmate, Lani Guinier, to the wolves after having first nominated her as an assistant to Janet Reno (who was his third choice for Attorney General) commented: "As President drops Justice Nominee, many wonder what he stands for." On a recent cover of Time magazine Clinton was dubbed "the Incredible Shrinking President." A political cartoonist drew three characters walking together toward the mythical Land of Oz. One of them said, "If I only had a heart." The second one said, "If I only had a brain," and the third one, obviously Clinton, cried, "If I only had a spine." And a friend of Clinton, offering advice, thought everything might work out only if Clinton would decide to fight instead of dodging issues or reversing his stand. He cited Scripture, "If the trumpet gives an uncertain sound, who shall prepare himself for the battle?" and adds: "Like a Rorschach blot, he has turned into other people's version of himself - draft-dodger, secret liberal, Hillary's hen-pecked Trojan horse, absent minded professor or the return of Jimmy Carter."

The speed in which his natural supporters have turned against him is remarkable. The media were largely responsible for his having been elected, but now find fault, apologize for him, or criticize him. The gay crowd has turned against him because of his treatment of Lani Guinier whom he welcomed with open arms and then discarded her, this and his compromising of the gays in the military question. This latter also turned the military against their commander in chief. It must be a new record in American politics. The media, the socialist organizations, the sodomites and the "New Democrats," all against him in less than one-eighth of his term. And there is every reason to think that things will get worse because, as Pat Buchanan recently remarked, "Clinton is headed for a major foreign policy crisis." With four thousand American troops serving in blue helmets under a Turkish commander in Somalia, with American pilots dropping bombs on Somalian rebels, with NATO protecting apartheid or Indian Reservation type safety havens in Bosnia, with 300 US troops being sent to Macedonia as UN Peacekeepers, more warlike trouble seems inevitable. Our local paper, once pro-Clinton in all things, called this Macedonian venture "unexplained symbolism that's part of an undefined mission with an unattainable goal." But in addition to Somalia, Bosnia and now Macedonia, a crisis could come with another Iraqi attack on the Kurds, with the sudden discovery that Tehran has acquired atomic bombs and the Islamic Jihad has moved to create Iran's own New World Order. Buchanan notes that the Bosnian Serbs were the first to call America's bluff. "In the teeth of Mr. Clinton's threats of air strikes, they voted no on the Vance-Owen peace plan. When the air strikes never came, the Serbs won their gamble. They knew it; the world knew it. Rejoicing, the Serbs shelled Sarajevo, just for the hell of it. Nothing happened. In the hills above, a Serb fighter told Told John Burns of the New York Times of his contempt for the United States, even as a NATO plane roared overhead. "You see," [Zoran] said, "they dare not risk getting anywhere close to us. They fly to frighten us with their noise, but that's all it is, noise. That's all America has ever been good for here, noise....You Americans couldn't even win in Vietnam."

"In a few brief weeks," Buchanan said, "Mr. Clinton has squandered all the capital put into America's bank by Desert Storm. The myth of America as invincible super power suffered a blow in Bosnia that will lead to new challenges from enemies who would relish nothing more than humiliating the United States....The United States has four new commitments: to defend Kuwait, to protect the Kurds, to shelter Iraqi Shi'ites from air strikes, and to bloc Iran's drive for hegemony over the Persian Gulf. But even as we added these commitments, US military power was being cut by 25 percent, or 500,000 men, a reduction in force equal to Gen. Norman Schwarzkopt's entire army of Desert Storm. Now Mr. Clinton is making deeper cuts, in Army troops, Air Force wings, and Navy ships, even as we are making new commitments to fight if necessary in Kosovo and Macedonia. This is a formula for disaster....With but 4 percent of the world's population, we cannot impose a Pax Americana. With our own borders open and cities in chaos, we are not about to launch any global Crusade for Democracy. With ethnic tribalism and nationalism raging on three continents, we are not going to impose any NEW World Order any time soon."

As we noted earlier, the speed in which the supporters of the Clintons have turned against them has been remarkable. In his 6/11/93 Intelligence Digest Joseph de Courcy notes that the same situation is occurring in Britain. And this, of course, contributes toward the building of the New World Order. He writes that in America it is not the president, but the presidency that is being attacked. "It is the institution which is under attack: the symbol of the American nation, the national icon, not the president or his policies." Gary North, in his 5/21/93 Remnant Review expresses a similar view. He writes: "Because of my own sense of danger, I have decided to do my best not to ridicule the woman [Hillary Clinton] any more, not out of respect for her (there is none) but because of my growing fear of what ridicule of her can do to the country at this stage. It's one thing to undermine the Clintons politically; it's another to use ridicule and undermine the moral foundations of the presidency. Somebody has to start using self-restraint. The buck stops here....By defining homosexuality as a legitimate sexual option, the liberals have unleashed the dogs of rumor. By ridiculing the boundaries of good taste from public discourse, they have destroyed the barriers of decency that civil authorities once enforced. And so Clinton stands there, smiling, silent, and impotent to call a halt to the steady erosion of his authority as a husband, and therefore of his authority as a president....The economy is the trigger. It is cocked. The bullet is the loss of moral legitimacy. The gun is pointed at the heart of Clinton's presidency. My concern is that the US political order is now at risk. I may be exaggerating, but I see no one in high places who seems to hear the cracking of thin ice." (Underlining added for emphasis).

And says JdeC of Britain: "An exactly parallel process is underway in Britain, although here it is easier to spot because the head of state and the head of the executive are two different people....Nobody outside Britain can realize the speed and viciousness with which the British press has turned on the crown. In 1987, the writer of Fodor's Royalty Watching introduced his book with the comment: 'The most interesting fact about the royal family today is its popularity that is so deep-rooted, so complete, and so unquestioned that it's hard to think that it might ever have been otherwise.' Just five years later the very same author, Andrew Morton, is at the forefront of a concerted media attack on the crown. This attack is dressed up in respectable talk about the need for the monarchy to modernize itself and for a great constitutional debate on issues such as a written constitution, a bill of rights, and the role (if any) of the hereditary principle in a modern society. But this is mostly humbug. As in America (which after all has a written constitution and an elected head of state) what is really afoot is a nihilistic assault on the symbols of nationhood. In our judgment, this nihilism, so evident now on both sides of the Atlantic, is reaching the stage where it is becoming more than just unpleasant. It is becoming dangerous."

"A nihilistic assault on the symbols of nationhood." This would, naturally, provide one more step toward the total destruction of national sovereignty and the establishment of a global Socialist One World Government. It could be said that in Britain the Prince of Wales, heir to the traditional position of head of state, seems to be a leader in a nihilistic assault on the symbols of nationhood. And in America, the same role is filled by the elected head of state, Bill and/or Hillary Clinton. Comes the question: Were the Clintons selected and elected to play the part of nihilists by the Power Elite that builds its New World Order and requires a Global Government with ultimate authority to protect and preserve its legitimacy?

As Pat Buchanan said, with our borders open and our cities in chaos, we are not about to launch any global Crusade for Democracy. With ethnic tribalism raging on three continents, we are not going to impose any New World Order any time soon. But these conditions haven't stopped the Insiders from going right ahead with their plan to convert the United Nations into an accepted Global Government. As we write this, there is another of those very important UN Conferences going on in Vienna. Representatives of 183 nations are attending a World Human Rights Conference. When the UN General Assembly adjourned last December 23rd, Assembly President Stoyan Ganev said, "The General Assembly is facing an historic challenge to truly become a functional world parliament on the basis of the United Nations Charter." At the same time the UN General Assembly approved a provisional agenda for this World Human Rights Conference. Their reason: there are fifteen different UN organizations devoted to human rights. But their activities need to be "unified and harmonized." And the best way to accomplish this would be to select a Human Rights Dictator, a High Commissioner for Human Rights who would oversee and coordinate the activities of the fifteen UN organizations. The provisional agenda for this Vienna Conference asserts the "indivisibility of economic, social, cultural, civil and political rights." This would mean that a High Commissioner for Human Rights would have absolute dominance over every aspect of the life of every human being in the world. The conference began on Monday, June 14. and it was announced as the most important UN Conference since the "Earth Summit" In Rio last year. But it has become obvious that the really important part of this gathering has to do with the acceptance by member nations of the creation of a High Commissioner for Human rights. The Clinton Administration favors the nomination of Ibrahim Fall for this post. Presently he is assistant secretary-general for human rights, previously served as foreign minister for the socialist government of Senegal. After the appointment of this High Commissioner, then would come the creation of a special world court to deal with human rights cases, and a special UN army to enforce the orders of the High Commissioner and a UN Court. At this Vienna Conference 8,000 official delegates from 183 countries, and thousands of political activists from all countries and no country are debating the proposition that human rights are indivisible from economic, social, cultural, civil and political rights. This involves the loss of sovereignty for all nations and the loss of freedom for all individuals, along with the creation of a dictatorial One World Government. America and the Western Nations, having ignored the laws of God in favor of the laws of Man, will deserve the result. It must be obvious that there exists a conspiracy to undermine the American form of government, and its Christian and Constitutional foundation. This involves the Presidency, the Congress, and the Supreme Court. In a special intelligence bulletin Dr. N. Burnett Magruder, in a message to the White House said in part: "The lesson for the President is clear. The time for corrections is fast running out..." Regarding Congress: "This same Congress which for two straight years gave approval to Jewish Heritage Week without a single objection, raised a storm about Christian Heritage Week." And in rejecting Burk, attempting to destroy the credibility of Thomas, teasing two prospective Justices and then suddenly and surprisingly nominating after three months delay a woman because she favors abortion and is a Jewess, causes one to wonder just who is our Chief Executive?

Regarding the Supreme Court, Dr. Magruder noted that "During most of the last 50 years, the Supreme Court has moved away from our spiritual heritage, as reflected in the early documents....In 1892 the Supreme Court faced a similar situation in a case called The Church of the Holy Trinity v. United States. In this decision the Court answered the question once and for all, whether the United States was founded as a Christian nation: 'Our laws and our institutions must necessarily be based upon and embody the teachings of the Redeemer of mankind. It is impossible that it should be otherwise; and in this sense and to this extent our civilization and our institutions are emphatically Christian.' This is a religious people. This is historically true. From the discovery of this continent to the present hour, there is a single voice making this affirmation...We find everywhere a clear recognition of the same truth....This is a Christian nation. Should the Court give official sanction to the exclusion of our Lord and God from the counsels of government and from all government institutions, it will most certainly lead to national calamity, as Lincoln prophesied in his great Proclamation of 1863."

"For the Lord is our judge [Supreme Court].
The Lord is our lawgiver [Congress],
the Lord is our king [President];
He will save us." (Isaiah 33:22).

Year Forty.....Number Fifteen.....August 2, 1993

A JUDGMENT?

About 80 years ago a program was begun to condition American "peasants" for entry into the planned New World Order. That program is now being fulfilled with the installation of the Clinton Co-Presidency reign. According to Emmanuel Josephson, author of "Rockefeller Internationalist, the Man Who Misrules the World," (Chedney Press, 1952), it all began when John D. Rockefeller invited to dinner a special group of international bankers, multinationalist businessmen, university presidents and some ranking religionists, where they talked of controlling American education. John D. Sr. offered a million dollars over a period of ten years for the "noble" purpose of influencing "all education as desired, without regard to sex, race or creed." The assembled worthies leaped to the bait and the General Education Board was born. They announced its true purpose in Occasional Letter No. 1. Josephson wrote:

"The letter is a frank and open statement of the basic totalitarian conspiracy that underlies all of the Rockefeller 'philanthropies.' Their avowed scheme was to gain the confidence of the people by a show of sham 'benevolence' and then, when they 'yield themselves with perfect docility to our molding hands, to work our own good will upon them through a Rockefeller dictatorship. In this conspiracy they are largely succeeding." The basic statement in this Ocassional Letter reads: "In our dreams we have limitless resources and the people yield themselves with perfect docility to our molding hands. The present educational conventions fade from our minds and, unhampered by tradition, we work our good will upon a grateful rural folk...."

Now let's notice how "their dreams" are becoming reality eighty years later. The Christian conservative newsletter author, Donald McAlvany writes and we quote with his permission:

"There is a black cloud rolling across America. The great majority of Americans cannot even see it as they live on in a contented, complacent comfort zone that sees no evil, hears no evil, and feels no evil. There are powerful forces at work in America today which have a well-strategized design to move America into a socialist police state and a globalist New World Order. These forces have accelerated tremendously over the past five years and especially over the past six months. They believe that there is virtually no resistance to their plan to control and subjugate the American people into their globalist vision of 'a world that will be as one' by the year 2000. Certainly there is no resistance from a Congress or judiciary which is going along with 98% of the agenda which the Establishment has for America. There is no resistance from the media, which is a not-so-silent partner and servant to the Establishment in keeping the American people asleep, and psychologically preparing them for Global 2000 and the dawning of the Age of Aquarius. There is no resistance from the churches of America which are also in a very complacent comfort zone - the mainliners supporting the Establishment's goals; the fundamentalist evangelicals are too busy 'loving the brethren' and striving 'to feel good about themselves' to notice the evil sweeping across America (or lift a finger to oppose it); and most Christians (real, nominal or pseudo) in a complacent comfort zone that is presently very difficult to disturb. It is as if a spirit of blindness or delusion has settled over Americans in general and the Christian Church in America in particular, and as the affronts, the insults and attacks against our traditional, Constitutional, and Biblical values in America grow every day, almost geometrically, the average Christian in America goes even more deeply asleep. And there is no resistance from the general American population which continues in its comfort zone of prosperity and affluence as the government and media hypnotize, mesmerize, and pacify them, even as America descends into an economic, social, political, moral and spiritual free fall. America is much like Nazi Germany in the late 1920s and early '30s - in moral, spiritual and political decline, and psychologically ripe to accept the New World Order.

"But there is some resistance from a small handful of Americans (probably no more than a million or two) who do see the handwriting on the wall, who do see the moral, spiritual, social, political free fall which America is in today, who do recognize the evil emanating from Washington, from our courts, our media and our educational system...Whatever the religious or political persuasion of this remnant, they have discernment about the dangers America faces, they have a love for our traditional way of life, and they have a loathing (or hatred) for evil. It is this remnant, this potential resistance to the socialization and globalization of America, which the Establishment fears and hates at this point. If this remnant were to suddenly grow from a few million to 25 to 50 to 75 or even 100 million Americans, the Establishment's New World Order/New Age blueprint for Americans would go up in smoke - and the Establishment knows it. This remnant, and the intervening hand of God, are (in the opinion of this writer) the only things which can reverse America's present free fall and plunge into slavery. So, they must move to stamp out the remnant, the dissidents, the potential resistance - as swiftly, totally and ruthlessly as Lenin, Stalin, Hitler and Mao did as they were rising to power in the '20s, '30s, '40s and '50s. The government (Establishment) attacks on the remnant have begun, Groups to be targeted include the tax resisters, the gun owners (especially the hard core ones), the pro-lifers, believers in financial privacy and cash, and 'hard core' fundamental, evangelical Christians - especially those who believe strongly in (and defend) traditional family values and in Bible prophecy and the so-called 'end times security' (and timetable). Government attacks against these groups are now accelerating rapidly and can be expected to grow five to 10-fold over the next few years. Many will have their assets seized; many will be jailed; some will be killed. Just as Lenin, Stalin, Hitler and Mao knew that they must stamp out the resistance to their tyranny if their revolutions were to succeed, so the Liberal Eastern Establishment knows they must do the same in America today. These potential resisters could ignite a counter-revolution which could completely expose and derail the Establishment. They must be silenced or neutralized...The seige at Ruby Creek against the Weaver family and Operation Waco will be seen in retrospect as watershed events in the government's escalating attacks against the remnant." (End of extended quotation from The McAlvany Intelligence Advisor, July, 1993. PO Box 84904, Phoenix AZ 85071).

To prepare the people to become obedient, passive serfs in a Socialist America and in the New World Order, and to control, jail or kill those who refuse to go along contentedly and happily, police state methods must be used. The Waco incident was a forerunner of what may be expected in the future. The book, Putting People First, said to have been written by Bill Clinton and Al Gore proposes the creation of a national police force of 100,000 members, this apparently to be drawn from the National Guard. General Colin Powell, head of the Joint Chiefs of Staff has said that "the government plans to unify all the various states' National Guard under one command to deal with national emergencies and disasters." In addition to the unified National Guard there will also be the various federal agencies: BATF, FBI, DEA, EPA and about a dozen other agencies that will have the power to exercise the "forfeiture scam" and similar means that were strictly unconstitutional so long as that document was honored as "The Law of the Land." In state, county and local police departments, officers are said to be in training to cooperate, as some did at Waco. Officers who resist this training are allegedly being reported to resign or get fired.

It should be understood that this national police force in no way interferes with the creation of a UN global police force. The two merely complement each other, with the UN in command of both. In this connection, the following item is important:

"In mid-June the Army formally abandoned its fighting doctrine and quietly marched into the New World Order. A new guide, dubbed FM-105 Operations focuses on 'power projection,' the ability to move troops quickly around the world to conduct operations other than war; on such things as peacekeeping missions (Macedonia), humanitarian assistance (Somalia), disaster relief (Hurricane Andrew), counter-narcotics actions (South and Central America), relations with nations in need of democratic assistance (Persian Gulf), and riot control. 'No longer focusing on battling Warsaw Pact nations in central Europe, the Army will mix and match its forces and will not operate alone.' Gen. Federal Franks is the publication's architect. Army Chief of Staff Gen. George Sullivan said, 'It guides our approach to the future'." (Quoted from NewsScam 7/93), PO Box 582, Canton, TX 75103-0582. Twelve issues, $25.00).

With the Army no longer designed to defend the United States but instead to become a UN peacemaking and peacekeeping force, the following notice portends danger for American citizens: "The UN World Conference on Human Rights was held in Vienna, with US Undersecretary of State Tim Wirth (Council on Foreign Relations member) recommending that UN peacekeeping activities include soldiers monitoring human rights violations. This would include 'racial discrimination' and allow for UN intervention in American domestic affairs."...With the alleged 'collapse' of the Soviet Union, pressure mounted for drastic reduction in our military capabilities, thereby forcing us to rely more on the UN for global peacekeeping missions. With the fragmented USSR now controlling about 13 votes rather than the earlier three votes in the UN, one can see the Soviet's 'winning by losing' strategy, and remember regarding the Russian 'Bear' the 1898 words of yard Kipling: 'When he shows at seeking quarter, with paws like hands in prayer, that is the time of peril the time of the Truce of the Bear.'

"World socialist government and economy is the goal, and World Trade (March 1993) quoted crypto-Marxist Will Swaim opining that the new homogenized global economy 'may become just the kind of grim, unthinkable place that Marx hoped it might: The launching pad for the worldwide socialist revolution.' And if Americans begin to object to the New World Order, foreign troops here might be used to handle those situations, as newspapers in early May 1991 reported: 'German lawmakers and UN

Please note. There was no issue of Don Bell Reports on July 19, 1993. Due to circumstances beyond our control it was impossible to publish. Sorry.

officials reacted favorably to the idea of a permanent German military presence in the US." (Dennis L. Cuddy, Ph. D. in the 5/29/93 issue of the Manchester New Hampshire's Union Leader.)

While our federal government was busily planning ways to complete the socialization of and establish totalitarian rule over the people of the US, planners at the global level were just as busy. The two principal groups promoting the economic and political new world order, the Bilderbergers and the Trilateral Commissioners, had their annual spring meetings. Little is ever published concerning what actually transpires at these secret meetings. But it is known that two new policies were adopted and sent to the G-7 governments to be approved. So, a G-7 Summit was called, held in Tokyo July 7-9. Supposedly called to iron out long-standing difficulties that were holding up the Uruguay Round of GATT, unreported by the media were two other very important decisions to be agreed upon by the G-7 governments (US, Britain, France, Germany, Italy, Japan and Canada). First was the decision that the UN would have its own army for global peace-keeping, peacemaking and other purposes. Some time ago Secretary General Boutros Ghali of the UN wrote his "Agenda for Peace," which calls for a UN standing army accountable only to the UN Security Council. This called for the approval by the nations who have their own standing armies and would lose much sovereignty if a superseding military force were to be established. So the G-7 governments dutifully approved. The text of the G-7's joint communique supports "preventive diplomacy, peacemaking, peace-keeping, and post-conflict building in the context of the secretary-general's Agenda for Peace." This UN army would accept volunteers from various countries and eventually would replace all national armies. These UN soldiers would be authorized to operate within the borders of countries, arrest any individuals or groups that violate any international law (which is the supreme law of the world). Of course, there's nothing new about such action. George Bush undertook the invasion of the sovereign state of Somalia, and that supposedly established a precedent for such action in the future in that Bill Clinton left American soldiers there under the command of a UN general from Turkey. More recently Clinton sent US troops to Macedonia where they are under the command of a Danish general,

The second important decision of G-7 had to do with the now official recognition of a third regional world government. So now it is official: The world is to be divided into three principal regions: The European Community (called EUROPE), the American Community (NAFTA), and the Pacific Community, headquartering in Tokyo.

Conclusion. It been called "a black cloud rollong across the land." By our own federal government and with the permission or indifference of the great majority of our people we are being moved irresistibly toward a socialist police state. Strong pressure is being brought against Constitutionalists, Christians, pro-lifers, gun owners and other resistors against slavery. We have forgotten that this is a land where Christ is our King. And we are paying the price. Ours has become a spiritual battle and we must remember that "We wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places." (Ephesians 6:12).

NAFTA REVISITED

"Certainly not a mandate, two votes in the House and one in the Senate," commented Senate Republican leader Bob Dole as he prepared to vote against President Clinton's so-called deficit-reduction bill. Republican Senator Connie Mack of Florida said before he voted, "The people of this country feel that they have been lied to, that they have been betrayed, that they have been deceived." And holdout Democrat Senator Bob Kerry didn't like the bill, didn't want to vote for it, but did so because, "I cannot and should not cast a vote that would bring down your presidency." Still, the budget bill is not as bad as it might have been. All things considered, Tom Raum of Associated Press gave a comparatively objective analysis when he wrote: "The six-month path leading to Friday's final vote on President Clinton's deficit reduction bill was strewn with promises made and promises broken. Gone is the broad-based energy tax that Clinton once called crucial. Long gone is a 'stimulus' component filled with public works jobs. Out is an investment tax credit. Trimmed back are many of the 'investments' the president initially proposed to 'grow the economy.'...In his address Tuesday night, Clinton said he hoped to 'put business-as-usual out of business.' But at least in terms of the way the final compromise was pieced together, it was pretty much business as usual on Capitol Hill."

If Clinton's narrow victory on what was left of his original budget bill is any indication, the next major projects on which he must have congressional approval are going to be very difficult to pass as presently written. That means Hillary Clinton's health care program, the remade welfare plan and, most of all in the eyes of the builders of The New World Order: the North American Free Trade Agreement. In an unusual statement Henry Kissinger wrote a special article for the Los Angeles Times Syndicate: "Before the end of the summer, President Clinton will ask the Congress to approve the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA), linking the United States with Canada and Mexico in a free trade area comprising a population of 370-million and a gross national product of $6 trillion. It will represent the most creative step toward a new world order taken by any group of countries since the end of the Cold War, and the first step toward the even larger vision of a free trade zone for the entire Western Hemisphere." Kissinger in this same article gave Clinton his orders: "President Clinton has understandably preferred not to deflect the Congress from concentrating on his economic package. But the stakes are too high to wait much longer. He must take the lead in defining the issues. But he should not be asked to fight this battle alone. It should be possible to enlist former presidents, secretaries of state and other leaders in one of the broad-based coalitions by which previous new departures in foreign policy - like the Marshall Plan - have been put before the American people. If that happens, Clinton's will be perceived as a seminal presidency whatever else transpires while he is in office."

In other words, it's okay for Clinton to promote what Kissinger calls his "economic package", but as president his first priority must be to get Congress to ratify NAFTA. He explains: "What the Congress will soon have before it is not a conventional trade agreement, but the hopeful archi-ecture of a new international system." Therefore, "Strong presidential leadership in the ratification battle is urgently required," and "A regional Western Hemisphere Organization dedicated to democracy and free trade would be a first step toward the new world order that is so frequently cited but so rarely implemented." (Underlining added for emphasis).

Kissinger explained that NAFTA is in trouble and for that reason so is the New World Order. The builders of NWO have decided that there must be three Regional World Governments: EUROPE (the European Community), NAFTA, and the still to be developed Asian Sphere, yet to be named. All three are essential and all are in trouble. On Monday, August 2 came news from Berlin that "The French franc fell to an all-time low against the German mark despite maneuvers aimed at rescuing Europe's currency system. From Brussels, capitol city of the European Community, AP wrote: "In managing to salvage their battered money system, European Community officials may have doomed their ultimate goal of an economic and monetary union. By deciding to give their currencies more room to fluctuate (which saved France's franc at least momentarily) finance chiefs postponed indefinitely the efforts to create a joint central bank and a single money. 'It's a huge step backward from what we wantd in the Maastricht Treaty,' acknowledged Dutch Finance Minister Wim Wok, although he later said officials had no other choice to avoid the collapse of the European Monetary System. The unity treaty, negotiated by EC leaders in 1991 in the Dutch town of Maastricht, sets out a strict timetable for the monetary merger. It can be formed no later than 1991, but even that deadline now appears out of reach....Ironically, Britain ratified the Maastricht treaty on Monday. It was the last member of the 12-nation EC to do so."

Joseph de Courcy of the British Intelligence Digest (7/30/93) called it "A thousand years of independence surrendered." His comments may give Americans some idea of what would be lost if and when NAFTA is ratified so we quote:

"Last week the Maastricht Treaty on European Union went through its final stages in the British House of Commons and passed into law. Now only a forlorn legal challenge is holding up ratification. It is important for subscribers to understand that the British government forced the treaty through parliament under a false prospectus. Maastricht is a blueprint for a federal Europe, and no amount of contrary pleading by the British government can change that. The basis on which the government persuaded the Conservative Party to back the treaty has been its contention that Maastricht is, contrary to demonology, a decentralizing measure, handing back power to the member states. But it is not. There is one section of the treaty (on subsidiarity) which does purport to hand back certain powers to the member states. But the subsidiarity provisions are a diversion. In return for handing back control over trivial matters (such as, maybe, the size of domestic boilers) the EC is taking control over the economic and foreign policy of member states. Domestic boilers for foreign policy: quite a bargain!

"Britain has signed up for a variety of reasons, and these have been reported and analysed many times by this service over the course of the Maastricht debate. However, it is worth saying a word about the final parliamentary battle for ratification, in which 25 or so Tory rebel MPs took the government to the brink. In the end it took the threat of a general election, which the Conservative Party would lose in an anti-government landslide, to persuade the rebels into the government lobby,

"As to the future, the most commonly heard refrain today is that it does not really matter about ratifying Maastricht because events in the foreign exchange markets will make European monetary union (the centre-piece of the treaty) an impossible dream. We do not take such a sanguine view. So much has now been invested in the project of European Unity that every possible influence will be brought to bear to ensure that the aims of Maastricht are fulfilled. The fact that eventually the whole edifice of European Union will collapse does not mean that the attempt to build it will be abolished - and untold damage will be done in the meantime. Furthermore, as the following briefing on EC-US [EC-NAFTA] ties explains, the Maastricht Treaty needs to be seen not just in isolation but in the context of a worldwide move towards interlocking supranational institutions. It is a malign process that needs resisting, but the big guns are on the wrong side." (Intelligence Digest, 17 Rodney Road, Cheltenham, Glos. GL50.IHX, United Kingdom).

NAFTA also needs to be treated not just in isolation but in the context of "a worldwide move towards interlocking supranational institutions (Regional World Governments). As Henry Kissinger declared, NAFTA is considered to be "the most important creative step toward a new world order taken by any group of countries since the end of the Cold War," and "What the Congress will soon have before it is not a conventional trade agreement but the hopeful architect of a new international system." (Underlining added). In the establishment of this New World Order, it must be understood that economics comes before politics." For that reason active creation of the Economic Community began immediately after the end of World War Two; and after the end of the Cold War, NAFTA was begun. What it will take to start the creation of the Asiatic Community is not known by any except the builders of the New World Order, but it is to follow, as the Big Seven leaders predicted at their last Tokyo Conference. It is true that the present European Economic Community has not become a complete Political Regional World Government, but that is because the leaders haven't yet found a way to "equalize" all the monies of the nations and create a single currency. But the target date is the year 2000, and we can expect that the date will be met. Since Britain is the last nation to ratify the Maastricht Treaty, complete political union can be expected soon. Then, once NAFTA has become an economic union, binding Canada, Mexico and the United States economically, then will come its establishment as a Political Union (Regional World Government). The Asian Economic Area will be followed and finally will become the third Regional World Government.

There is considerable opposition to NAFTA because of the loss of businesses that have been moved to Mexico and jobs that have been lost by Americans. Also coming to be understood is the fact that NAFTA is not a free trade agreement but a managed trade arrangement. But little has been publicized concerning the change in government that will be occasioned when NAFTA becomes law. A bureaucratic central government will have to be created; one that will supersede all trade laws and nullify any control by the "former" national governments involved. There is a dangerous sub plot to this NAFTA plot that is seldom mentioned by the media. As soon as President Bush signed the NAFTA Treaty (not effective until Congressional ratification) the Planners began a drive for the creation of a "North American Parliament" which would govern the governments of Canada, Mexico and the United States. Nearly a year ago (10/5/92) there began the distribution on university campuses of a paper "obviously preparing the minds of the unsuspecting soon to be declared 'educated' young people, to whom, no doubt, this all makes good sense," commented a correspondent who obtained copies of the article. it is headed "Why We Need a North American Parliament," by Andrew Reding of the Pacific News Service. We quote:

"Regardless of whether the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA) eventually conforms to Republican or Democratic prescriptions, it will signal the formation, however tentatively, of a new political unit - North America. To prepare for that new political reality, it is time to begin thinking about the formation of a North American parliament (similar to the parliament that governs EUROPE and is based in Brussels, Belgium.) The Internationalization of business already requires that increasingly important decisions be made at the international level. One of the purposes of NAFTA and other international trade agreements is to set the principles by which such decisions are to be made, including the question of how to 'harmonize' different labor, consumer, environmental and other standards. Following the lead of the Europeans, we should begin considering formation of continental parliaments to restore a measure of popular influence in the design of common policies." In other words, it's time to begin the formation of a Regional World Government similar to that which already controls the trade and economy, and hopes to create a common currency for all of the 'former' Nations involved.

In a special 24-page issue concerning NAFTA, Spotlight (5/17/92) concluded and most who understand the purpose of NAFTA will agree: "Today, the operating plan is a step-by-step progression to the final goal of ownership or control of all natural resources and every square inch of land and everything on it by a consortium of international supercapitalists. ...One essential step is through the Maastricht Treaty. This would involve a single currency, and subordination of all farms and small businesses to the monopolists, the destruction of all economic and political boundaries in Europe and direction of the foreign policy and armed forces of every country ...Concurrently NAFTA is programmed to tie together Canada, the USA and Mexico, and later all Central and South America, as one 'nation.' ...With Maastricht and NAFTA in place the supercapitalists will have effective control of the entire globe with the exception of China (which is expected to become part of the developing Asiatic Regional World Government-Ed.). The middle class will be wiped out; all that will remain will be the very rich and the very poor on the global plantation."

The Conspirators' Target Date is the millennial year 2000 and there's much to be done, this with growing resentment of the leadership they chose to "remake" America. So there is growing pressure against their opposition: Constitutionalists, Christians and other resisters to their vision of the New World Order. Marion Hurley of PRO AMERICA began her latest letter with the statement, "God's Word challenges us today." We end this Report with the words she chose to begin her letter.

He orders, "Occupy till I come" (Luke 19:13), and He asks, "Who will stand up for me against the workers of iniquity" (Psalm 94:16), and then He promises, "They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles; they shall run, and not be weary; and they shall walk and not faint." (Isaiah 40:31).

THE SUPREMACY CLAUSE

There is a strange and saddening similarity between the stories of the rise, the decline and the fall of the Republics of the United States and South Africa. Both began as pilgrims seeking a place where they might worship God in their own way. Both had their troubles with native populations, America with Redmen, South Africa with Blackmen. Separate nations called reservations were created in the United States. Separate nations called apartheid were created in South Africa. Both had their troubles with the controlling British Empire before become sovereign Republics. And now both, which began as Christian Nations, suffer their decline and fall at the hands of a Satan-inspired Conspiracy which from its very beginning in The Garden, seeks the decline and fall of God Himself. In its present form the Conspiracy has been generally designated as The New World Order. Likewise, in its present form it began in South Africa, is ending in North America. For explanation of this Conspiracy in its present form, we bow to the South African editor and publisher of a Newsletter bearing her name: The Aida Parker Newsletter, APN, POBox 91059, Auckland Park 2006, South Africa. (sent airmail, US$80 per year and worth more). The lead article in her July, 1993 issue began and we quote:

"Biggest, certainly least understood, story in the world today is the economic, spiritual and security smash-up of what was once so proudly termed 'Fortress America' - and with it, presumably, the collapse of US elitist plans for a socialist, American-dominated New World Order. Americans, like South Africans themselves, have been totally taken to the cleaners; their lives, prosperity, national security all sacrificed in the cause of a dream that has gripped mankind for 2000 years or more: ultimate political power through global government. Starting in the socialist Roosevelt era, picking up speed in America's catastrophic 'no-win' Vietnam War, US selfdestruct as a global superpower is now accelerating apace under Clinton.

"Allied with the collapse and fragmentation of the USSR, this presents fundamental new economic and political problems for every state on earth. Until we understand the reality of what has been done to us, what is yet planned for us, we can take neither defensive or redemptive action. For any real recovery, new economic structures must now be found; and it can be accepted that these will be based on ruthlessly pragmatic market forces, on maximum productivity and development of markets, plus maximum exploitation of capital....South Africa's overwhelming tragedy is that, right now, we are training Blacks to be talkers, not workers or producers.

"If that doesn't finish, we are kaput. In the new age opening up, an economic era likely to be dominated by China, Japan, the Pacific Rim 'tigers' and their cubs, there will be no free lunches, no begging bowls. But that is in the future. Below we deal with what is happening right now, the fast approaching death of the American Empire, in its day the wealthiest, most technologically advanced and most powerful nation the world has ever known; and one deliberately destroyed from inside. It is an odd coincidence. It was in SA at the turn of the century that Rhodes and Milner laid their plans for a British-dominated NWO. According to Rhodes biographer, Sarah Millin, 'The government of the world was Rhodes' simple desire."

"It was the profit from SA gold and diamonds that made possible the structures Rhodes set upon pursuit of his dream. Nowhere was the concept of a NWO more enthusiastically received than in the US, by the Wall Street Hitlers and Big Oil, though of course there was the 'made in America' version. Billions have been spent on this obsession, with America --and SA and many more--now ruined in the process. Though things now seem not to be going their way, the globalists continue on their blunder-stricken course, continue with unremitting wickedness to sow disorder, death, decay, disaster, and destruction wherever their political and global ambitions take them. Please read on." (End of lead story).

Reading on, we find the story of "The death of Uncle Sam," an extended story which ends with the statement that "A nation which can vote in a mountebank, so indifferent to economic truth and normal moral standards, is clearly not walking the path of common sense. All these are matters which desperately need study by every South African and by every American. And remember, liking Americans is one thing. Trusting their leaders is another. Final word: Whichever way things go, America will not prove a latter-day Lazarus. It will not rise from the dead."

How could it happen that the terminal death of "Fortress America" would be forecast and that most of the world leaders would believe and understand and fear for the future? Perhaps if we go back in time to our beginnings as a Nation, we might gain a glimmer of what would happen if Americans forget that eternal vigilance is the price of liberty. Less than three months after the inauguration of George Washington, the Bastille was stormed. Lafayette sent to Washington the key to the Bastille as "a tribute which I owe as a son to my adoptive father, as an aide-de-camp to my general, and as a missionary of liberty to its patriarch." Our first president did hang the key to the Bastille "in the Presidential Mansion, but added, so as not to prejudice the foreign policy of the United States, an engraved portrait of Louis XVI." (Washington; The Indispensable Man, by James T. Flexner, Boston, Little, Brown, 1969). There was a split among our Founders as to what America should do in regard to the French Revolution, Jefferson and Franklin suggesting aid to the revolutionaries. But Washington ended the controversy by issuing a Proclamation of Neutrality. Shortly thereafter there was a coup in France with Bonaparte becoming first Consul. There were treaties signed by France and other countries in 1779. But they were completely abandoned as Europe continued its bloody marches in the Napoleonic wars. The young and independent Republic of the United States had survived subversion by a European conspiracy and now had breathing space in which to recuperate. This disease, however, had not been conquered and would appear again." (William P. Hoar in Architects of Conspiracy. Western Island Publishers. 1984). And of France's revolutionary conduct Patrick Henry made the statement that it "has made it the interest of the great family of mankind to wish the downfall of her present government, for she destroys the great pillars of all government and social life, -- I mean virtue, morality, and religion. This is the armor, my friend, and this alone, that renders us invincible." (Clarence B. Carson in The Rebirth of Liberty." Arlington House, 1973). Those are the very words that could be spoken of the present Federal Government of the United States.

As William Hoar noted, The young United States had "survived subversion" by refusing to sign treaties with other Nations. And for over 100 years American Presidents and diplomats faithfully followed the advice President Washington left with them when he said: "The great rule of conduct for us, in regard to foreign relations, is in extending our commercial relations, to have as little political connections as possible. -'Tis our true policy to steer clear of permanent alliances, with any nation of the world." But with our entering World War One and especially after World War Two and with the writing of the United Nations Charter and the signing of the UN Participation Act of 1945 by President Harry Truman and ratification by the US Senate, America became so legally entangled in a web of treaties, executive agreements and secret pacts that we have "lost control of our political decisions, monetary system, and military forces." (John A. Stormer in None Dare Call It Treason...25 Years Later. Liberty Bell Press, POBox 32, Florissant, MO 63032).

We have been told that there are over 2,000 treaties and resolutions written by various UN Agencies, all of them designed to establish world law, with the intent that if any national, state or local law fails to conform to the intent of the treaty law, then it must be rewritten to conform or be nullified. Some of those treaties, especially those concerning human rights, have been ratified by the member states, some are waiting for approval, some may even be rejected. But the importance of treaties and the speed with which they are being presented since the US ratification of the UN Participating Act has caused considerable questioning as to the actual power of treaties in regard to the US Constitution. Article VI of the Constitution contains what is generally called The Supremacy Clause. It provides that:

"This Constitution and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof; and all Treaties made, or which shall be made under the Authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land; and the Judges in every State shall be bound thereby, anything in the Constitution or Laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding." This Supremacy Clause has caused considerable question as to whether this means that a Treaty overrides the Constitution and becomes the law of the land. In a Treaty Law Manual prepared by the Foundation for the Study of Treaty Law, there is this statement: "For more than 125 years there seemed little doubt but that the Constitution was supreme and that a treaty could not override its provisions. In 1920, however, the Supreme Court appears to have altered the status of treaties as respects their constitutional limitations." This change in attitude was brought on by a Federal Government which sought to pass a law that had been declared unconstitutional, known as the Missouri vs Holland case. We didn't look up the specific details, but as we remember it while fighting for the Bricker Amendment (which lost by one vote), there were flocks of Canadian geese that flew south in the winter and took up residence in the United States. Congress passed a law regulatinbg the killing of these migrant birds. But the Attorney General of the State of Missouri challenged the action on the grounds that the Federal Government has no constitutional authority to regulate the killing of birds in Missouri. This challenge was based on the very important Doctrine of States Rights, but which was almost terminated by the War Between the States. This Doctrine, which should be used now by the State Governments to control the unconstitutional actions of their parent government, maintains that the Federal Government has no right to interfere in matters that involve a State and a State only. Two Federal District Courts upheld the Attorney General of Missouri. So the Federal Government, forbidden by the Constitution and the Courts, sought some new way to have their way in the matter. Doing it by treaty seemed the way to do it. So the Feds went to the British government and a treaty with the United Kingdom, acting on behalf of the Dominion of Canada, regulating the killing of migrant birds was written and approved. And this time the Supreme Court "permitted the Federal Government to accomplish, under the auspices of a treaty with Canada, which the Constitution did not permit it to do in the absence of a treaty." The precedent thus established, in 1942 there was the Roosevelt-Litvinoff agreement regarding some money belonging to a Russian insurance company, which was being held by the State of New York. This time the Supreme Court ruled that not only Treaties but Federal Agreements also superseded the Constitution. The Court said that "A treaty is a 'law of the land' under the supremacy clause of the Constitution." To make it all very official, in 1952 John Foster Dulles voiced the Establishment policy regarding the ability of a treaty to override the Constitution by telling the American Bar Association: "The treaty making power is an extraordinary power, and liable to abuse. Treaties make international law and also they make domestic law. Under our Constitution treaties become the supreme law of the land. They are, indeed, more supreme than ordinary laws, for congressional laws are invalid if they do not conform to the Constitution, whereas treaty law can override the Constitution. Treaties, for example, can take powers away from the Congress and give them to the President; they can take powers from the States and give them to the Federal Government or some international body, and they can cut across the rights given to the people by their Constitutional Bill of Rights." President Harry Truman said it all by suggesting that "There is no longer any real difference between domestic and foreign affairs."

In his Behold A Pale Horse, William Cooper observed that the original UN Charter conferred no real power on the General Assembly. All the power was in the Security Council where the US has the right to veto. But "the veto was a hindrance to World Government." So in 1950 The General Assembly met and adopted a resolution permitting the General Assembly to exercise the powers of the Security Council where the veto power did not apply. "The Government of the United States recognizes the illegally amended Charter as the 'law of the world,' overriding our Constitution. And the General Assembly has for years been making the law of the world by ratifying resolutions. And the governments concerned must ignore, abolish, revise, and/or laws in their territories which conflict with the resolutions of the General Assembly, and then must pass other laws which will put these resolutions into force. So Truman might have said, "There is no longer any difference between world law and domestic law." We have already joined a one-world government and the only thing protecting any remaining sovereignty is not our Constitution, but the lack of UN taxing power and no UN army to enforce its resolutions.

"Therefore my people have gone into captivity, because they have no knowledge: and their honourable men are famished, and their multitude dried up with thirst. Therefore hell hath enlarged herself, and opened her mouth without measure: and their glory, and their multitude, and their pomp, and he that rejoiceth shall descend into it...But the Lord of hosts shall be exalted in judgment...For all this his anger is not turned away, but his hand is stretched out still." (Isaiah 5:13,14,25).

PPBS - PHASE TWO

Whenever President Clinton finds himself facing a sympathetic audience or an inviting microphone, he is apt to mention the need for "reinventing government." He never defines or explains what the term means, except that it's supposed to "restructure" government so as to make it "more efficient and compassionate." Being such a catchy phrase, we wondered if something special was hidden behind the word "reinventing." It brought to mind stories of the various stops and studies of existing governments which Clinton had made while on the way to the White House. Under the tutorship of Carroll Quigley he would have learned much of the conspiracy and the conspirators connected with the creation of their New World Order. In the preface to his remarkable book Tragedy and Hope Quigley wrote: "Much of my adult life has been devoted to training undergraduates in techniques of historical analysis which will help them to free their understanding of history from the accepted categories and cognitive classifications in which we live....The present work is the result of such an attempt to look at the real situations which lie between conceptual and verbal symbols." So young Clinton had been given the story of the inner workings of the conspiracy first hand. Then at Oxford, birthplace of Fabian Socialism, he learned of the system that was then controlling Britain and had come so close to controlling the United States as well under FDR's Brain Trust and their New Deal. Still in England, while promoting anti-US demonstrations because of America's involvement in the Vietnam War, Clinton received with other "scholars of government" an invitation to visit Moscow where he could study the type of government initiated by Lenin and side-tracked by Stalin. Then, lucky scholar, he was able to visit Rome where he could learn of the techniques and methods of Fascism under Mussolini. Returning home, he must have felt the effect that David Rockefeller's brother Laurence made while he was trying to take over Arkansas as a private preserve for the study and development of environmentalism as a tool of government. Laurence would have made an interesting study. While trying to run Clinton's home state of Arkansas, he also managed to hold the Rockefeller family seat on the New York Stock Exchange, approved a plan for the takeover of South American industry and agriculture, and represented the family in the CFR-promoted and Communist cited Institute of Pacific Relations; all this at the same time heading the parade of politically inspired environmentalists, a post now occupied by VP Al Gore.

In all of his first hand observation and study of government systems, Clinton may have learned that governments are often invented (Lenin, Mussolini, FDR), but few are reinvented. And when the reinventing time came, Clinton was presented with the plan and he was told how to carry it out. We say this because when it came time for the president to take a vacation, he did a very unusual thing, he went to Martha's Vineyard for an eleven day period of virtual isolation from the world. He stayed at the estate of Robert Strange McNamara, where he was probably told about the reinventing was to be made, and how he would conduct the operation. You'll probably remember McNamara. He was the man who had to do with the Edsel, probably the worst failure in all of American automobile building history. He was the "Whiz Kid" in the Defense Department who designed the system that was used in fighting the Vietnam War, where untold numbers of people were killed because of the failure of his plan. That plan is known as the "Planning-Programming-Budgeting System (PPBS), sometimes known as "Management by Objective" or "Accountability." McNamara went on to become president of the World Bank, and he is said to be known by others of the Conspiracy as the real expert whenever PPBS is mentioned. So it is very likely that Clinton's vacation was planned that he might "sit at the feet" of McNamara and learn of the government reinventing he was to manage as President of the United States.

Recently we received a letter and considerable important information from a long-time subscriber of our Don Bell Reports. "I am a great admirer of your work and read all your reports faithfully over the years. I know you will keep it up as long as you can....I don't think you have forgotten your special report in 1972 on 'Proofs of a Conspiracy to Build a Total Managed Global Society.' Well that was just Phase One and now we have entered Phase Two. Twenty-one years have passed since that day and now we are all a lot older, and I hope as wise. May God Bless Us All.' True, we had forgotten much of what we had written twenty-one years ago. So we went to our files, and found our report consisted of a seventeen part series having to do with PPBS, begun on September 8, 1972. It's now out of print and no longer available. In the first of the seventeen letters, we concluded with this statement: "This revolutionary plan [PPBS] for the reshaping of the world is complex, difficult to understand because of its semantics. Even the name of the plan is disarming, seemingly innocent and innocuous. It is called Planning-Programming-Budgeting System and few people other than its operators even know of its existence." Our recent correspondent said: "That was just Phase One and now we have entered Phase Two." So Clinton was sent to the Vineyard to learn that while Phase One was a failure except in its destruction of the public education system, Phase Two must succeed if Clinton is to succeed.

At this point we quote our correspondent who told us about Phase Two: "Back in the 60s under President Johnson our government destroyed the only logical and accepted method of budgeting, that of the line-item budget, and shifted into Program Budgeting. This began the problem of the uncontrolled and the massive and also uncontrolled federal deficit. All functions of the government were grouped into programs that were locked into place with multi-year fundings (5-year plans, same as in the Soviet Union). This deprived Congress of the ability to make changes to the federal budget unless they eliminated the whole program or changed the budget process. Since no one in government, especially those in congress, really knew how to Program Budget, unwanted programs continued until they were finally phased out, and the deficit grew and grew. Every president since Johnson has gone along with this concept until they got into trouble with the deficit and started mouthing words about a 'line-item veto.' That was Program Budgeting (a part of PPBS). Moving into Performance Budgeting will just take the process to another level, that of measuring the individual performer. On Tuesday, August 3, President Clinton signed into law the "Government Performance and Results Act (Phase Two). The Act says that Federal agencies will have to say what they will do with the money they get and will be measured against those promises. This major step will move the government out of Phase One, Program Budgeting, into the long awaited Phase two, Performance Budgeting. This action was pre-planned by those who originally designed the PPB System.

Once Program Budgeting was declared a failure, as it was with the 1993 Budget process, our government was programmed to proceed to Performance Budgeting, and of course President Clinton is making sure that will happen." That's why he went to the Vineyard. "However," we are told, "the federal bureaucracy could not take this step until it was established that the federal computers had the capability of measuring the performance of every government employee [of which there are 3,033,215 according to Standard & Poor], not to mention every private citizen. These measurements will not be limited to the job performance, but will be done in the taxonomic domains (cognitive, affective and psychomotor), how the individual thinks, feels and acts."

The computers are now ready to record how every individual thinks, feels and acts, so President Clinton was directed to get down to the business of what he calls "reinventing government."

While we were writing this report, the Clintons came to Miami to visit with and again promise the people whose homes and businesses were destroyed more than a year ago by Hurricane Andrew will receive help, but are still waiting for the very inefficient FEMA to fulfill its promises. Clinton then explained that he would be engaged for some time with the promoting of NAFTA, a vital part of the NWO Economic Program. Also, he would be very busy touring the country with Hillary, selling her new health program. So, Al Gore had been assigned to job of "reinventing" the legislative branch of government. Accordingly, as soon as Congress was back from its summer vacation, Gore was on the spot telling legislators about how Performance Budgeting would work. In an apparently exclusive article written for USA TODAY, Gore asked, "Can't we create a government that works better and costs less?" and answers himself, "Yes. President Clinton created the National Performance Review to do just that and today we present to the president the results of our work [Performance Budgeting]. Gore explains that "the president can make some changes right away. But others require new laws. Accomplishing the whole job requires a partnership between all branches of government - as well as between the private and public sectors." This is where "How the individual (in the private sectors) is monitored and recorded as to "how he thinks, feels and acts". Finally, Gore refers to The National Performance Review (his assignment) and says it "is about change - historic change in the way government works."

As Clinton and Gore describe it, one would think that something really new and original had been "reinvented". Actually, back in February, 1968, twenty-five years ago, Robert McNamara, the PPBS expert, published a book titled The Essence of Security, Reflections in Office. We have a quote from page 94 of his book: "One of the first things we did in 1961 was to design a new mechanism which would provide this information and integrate into a single, coherent management system. The product of this effort was the Planning-Programming-Budgeting System, which is now being applied throughout the US Government..." He was, of course, talking about Program Budgeting because the computers had not yet been created to accommodate Performance Budgeting. However, on page 100 he touches on Performance Budgeting when he mentions of "how to motivate them [the thousands of managers in the field] to do their job more efficiently. And how to determine whether or not they have done so, have always been the most difficult and elusive problems facing the top management." Moving into Performance Budgeting is now supposed to solve that problem.

We should also mention that McNamara did not invent (or reinvent) his management system. He stole it from the United Nations Department of Economic and Social Affairs which in 1965 published a manual titled A Manual for Programme and Performance Budgeting. This UN Manual also described the difference between Program Budgeting and Performance Budgeting as follows: "In the adoption of programme and performance budgeting, it is best to introduce the various elements of this approach in evolutionary and orderly fashion. For this purpose a useful distinction might be made between programme budgeting and performance budgeting. In programme budgeting, the principal emphasis is on a budget classification in which functions, programmes, and their subdivisions are established for each agency and these are related to accurate and meaningful financial data. Performance budgeting involves the development of more refined management tools, such as unit costs, work measurement, and performance standards....In this sense, performance budgeting is an all-inclusive concept embodying programme formulation as well as measurement of the performance of work in the accomplishment of programme objectives." This is where "how the individual thinks, feels and acts" becomes a part of performance budgeting. The "Big Brother" sequence will have been completed when the personalized ID Card which can be read by computer, plus the computerized cashless society are added.

It is obvious that a cautious approach has been made to this dangerous system as it has taken 44 years and the election of President Clinton to introduce this new phase. The system was developed by the United Nations in the early 1950s and was forced on all developing countries. The Soviet Union had been toying with it since the 1920s with their five-year plans and setting top-down targets which proved to be unworkable.

Our correspondent, who had studied the system ever since we first published our series on PPBS in 1972, concludes: "So here we are now with President Clinton [acting on orders from his superiors] locking us into a system that will take us into a 'Total Managed Global Society' and pave the way for the 'New World Order' under United Nations control. Performance Budgeting following the Crisis created by Program Budgeting will only lead us to Chaos. This system has been forced on every school district and has caused the downfall of our educational system. We are programming students instead of teaching them. Its introduction into the Soviet Union was the cause of its economic collapse. Private industries that have tried it have all gone into an economic crisis unless, like Sears Roebuck they tried it and dumped it in hopes of regaining the public's support."

In 1972 we concluded a series with these words: "And finally, let it be understood that this Revolution means far more than the creation of a new kind of government, it also means the creation of a new society with a new religion and a new god, and a new man with a new conscience and a new set of values. It is to be a computerized society in which the finished products will all think, feel and act the same."

"The beginning of the defense of Freedom is to know the Truth. We hope and pray that we have helped in this defense by presenting these Proofs of a Conspiracy to Build a Total Managed Global Society."

TO DESTROY THE FAMILY

As soon as Congress had returned from its Labor Day vacation, President Clinton gathered together the Congressmen and explained the importance of the need for quick passage of the Bush-initiated, Clinton-sponsored, Conspirators-demanded American Free Trade Agreement with Canada and Mexico and the need for passage of Hillary's National Health Care Plan. Clinton felt and admitted that there was considerable opposition to both projects, and he is counting on Republicans to pass NAFTA, and on time and much politicking to get Hillary's project made law. While the Clintons and the Gores are traveling from town to town seeking support of their projects, many of the Senators and Representatives are busy promoting their own personal or assigned projects for strengthening the UN in its campaign to become the absolute and total (or totalitarian) capitol of the Government of the Globe. Following are a few examples of what some Congressmen are doing to lose their jobs by making the UN and its agencies the lawmakers of the world.

S.J.RES.32. Senator Dodd introduced this one which calls for the United States to support efforts of the UN to conclude an international agreement to establish an international criminal court. The resolution notes that "the prosecution of individuals guilty of unlawful acts such as war crimes, genocide, terrorism, aggression, drug trafficking, money laundering, and other crimes of an international character...is often impeded by political and legal obstacles." The resolution says "The war crimes trials held in the aftermath of World War I at Nuremberg, Germany and Tokyo, Japan demonstrated that fair and effective prosecution of war criminals could be carried out in an international forum." Therefore, "Not later than October 1, 1993, the President shall submit to Congress a detailed report on developments relating to, and United States in support of, the establishment of an international criminal court with jurisdiction over crimes of an international character."

S.J.RES.33. "Mr. Penny submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs." This is a resolution "Expressing the sense of the House of Representatives that the President should call for a vote in the General Assembly and Security Council of the United Nations to convene a United Nations Conference on Reforms, and should initiate proposals to expand the membership of the Security Council and strengthen the United Nations peacekeeping role." H.RES.33 notes that "The end of the Cold War has resulted in a new international balance of power, as well as in new global problems and threats, which create the need for a more representative United Nations Security Council and a more effective and efficient United Nations peacekeeping role;...In the last 4 years the United Nations has established 13 peacekeeping operations involving a total of 47,000 troops and an annual budget of more than $2,000,000,000." Therefore, "be it resolved that it is the sense of the House of Representatives that the President....should initiate a proposal to expand the United Nations Security Council by creating a new group of permanent members without the veto power and by increasing the number of nonpermanent members; and should initiate a proposal to create a United Nations Endowment Fund for Peacekeeping Operations and a United Nations Peacekeeping Reserve Force." (Underlining added).

S.J.RES.69. A resolution introduced by Senator Pell "Providing for the United States to assume a strong leadership role in implementing the decisions made at the Earth Summit by developing a national strategy to implement Agenda 21 and other Earth Summit agreements through domestic policy and foreign policy, by cooperating with global environment, and by supporting and participating in the high-level United Nations Sustainable Development Commission." It seems that "many opportunities for agreements concerning more extensive actions on critical issues remain unresolved at UNCED [United Nations Conference on Environment and Development] and will require further attention by the nations of the world; and...the ultimate success of achieving sustainable development and a healthy environment at the national and international levels depend upon actions taken at the State and local community levels, and on actions by schools, public offices, businesses, and citizens." Therefore, among other things, "The United States should support rules of procedure which ensure the active participation of nongovernmental organizations...and representatives of the international financial institutions, GATT, regional and subregional development banks and financial institutions and regional economic integration organizations." [NAFTA would be a regional economic institution, destined to become a a regional political organization, or Regional World Government-Ed.] Underlining in the above was added.

H.R.1598. "Mr. Penny introduced the following bill; which was referred to the Committee on Government Operations. It is a bill to reclassify the cost of international peacekeeping activities from the international affairs budget function and to express the sense of Congress that there should be included in the Department of Defense budget for each fiscal year a minimum level of funding for international humanitarian assistance and peacekeeping activities....It is the sense of Congress that, of the total amount requested in the President's budget for any fiscal year for military functions of the Department of Defense a total of 1 percent should be for international humanitarian assistance activities of the Department of Defense and for appropriations to the 'Contributions to International Peacekeeping activities' account." (Unquote).

S.J.RES.65. "Mr. Boren introduced the following joint resolution; which was read twice and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations." It is a bill "Establishing a commission to study the creation of a standing international military force under the United Nations Charter." The resolution declares that "Under Article 43 of the United Nations Charter, the Secretary General is authorized to negotiate agreements for the creation of a multinational standing military force, to be used for peacekeeping and peace enforcement;...Whereas the President, the Secretary of State, the Ambassador to the United Nations, and the Director of Central Intelligence have already articulated support for the creation of a United Nations Rapid Deployment Force similar to the forces contemplated under Article 43; and Whereas there remain many unresolved questions about how the United States would implement an agreement to participate in an Article 43 force; Now therefore, be it Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, There is established the 'Commission on United States Participation in a Permanent United Nations Peacekeeping Force'." (Unquote). In view of the fact that US troops are already serving in UN Peacekeeping Forces, such as Somalia, and those troops are serving under foreign commanders, there's really nothing new about this resolution except that, in effect, the US military forces would become the United Nations military forces under international command.

The Resolutions we have cited in the foregoing are but samplings of the manner in which certain elected officials use their positions as representatives of the people of the United States to promote internationalist programs that would destroy the very government which they are elected to defend. The overall plan involves piece by piece, resolution by resolution, law by law transfer of the power assigned to them to agencies of the UN. This is the Fabian Socialist method. But there is an easier way, involving involving the Treaty by Treaty method. If conspirators can say any Treaty ratified by Congress and signed by the President has become a law of the world, superseding all National, State and Community laws in a particular area, then world government is assured. Step by step, Treaty by Treaty being the plan, the present Treaty that is being promoted has to do with Children's Rights. and the question of alleged "Children's Rights" is getting headlines and child abuse stories are publicized. But there's an ironic twist in many of the stories. What the UN supporters intended to be headlined as "child abuse" often turns out to be "adult abuse" amounting to murder of parents, and tourists. The State of Florida is currently featured. On 9/8/93 a German tourist was shot to death; three teenagers were arrested. Earlier, on 3/11/93 another German tourist was shot to death; three teenagers were arrested and charged. On 9/14/93 an English tourist was shot to death; arrested and charged were three teenagers, One of them is 13 years of age and has had 56 prior arrests. A report from Denver, Colorado adds to the murder syndrome. First, the baby in the stroller was shot, hit between the eyes by a stray bullet... He lives. Then a woman standing in her kitchen was sprayed with drive-by gunfire...She died. But it was yet another shooting that convinced people that enough was enough. A girl gang member, veiled in a blue bandana, hanging from a cruising car, squeezed off rounds as part of an initiation. A 6-year-old boy was shot...He lived, but "A coalition of legislators and lobbyists from both sides of the gun-control aisle teamed up to put through a law banning handguns for kids. "Colorado Governor Roy Romer signed the law in the hopes of curbing youth violence. The legislation is being viewed as a model for other states." Florida is especially interested. Juvenile crime, including suicide, is at an all-time high in the United States. But at the same time, UN advocates are crying for more civil rights for children. And instead of punishing children who commit crimes, authorities are punishing adults on charges of child abuse. Crying in the Wilderness, a Catholic quarterly newsletter, published the following:

"There is a serious, deadly movement afoot that claims average parents are incompetent fools and cannot be trusted to raise their own children. It is a movement that says children should have their own rights independent of their parents. It is a movement that says parents should have no say over their children, and that the only authority the children should answer to is the State, no matter what the parents think or will for their sons and daughters. It is a movement that has been operating with quiet, unswerving determination with secrecy being the key to its ultimate success. On the international level it is fueled by the United Nations under a new charter entitled The UN Convention on the Rights of the Child. On the national level it is fueled by the Children's Defense Fund and by First Lady Hillary Clinton who has been tenaciously working toward this evil for over 20 years. Organized pedophiles are also working for its success, as they want the 'age of consent' to be as low as possible so as to claim the legal right to perform homosexual acts with your 'consenting' seven-year-old son. Traces of it will be found in education, social services, and precedent-setting legal decisions. It is what is truly behind the rash of Child Abuse publicity all over the media, the emphasis being the average unsupervised adult will abuse children. It is a movement working for the day when the parents will wake up and suddenly discover, to their horror, that their children no longer belong to them. Though it may sound fantastic, the threat is real, the danger is imminent and the consequences will be disastrous for the family and society." (End of extended quotation).

This Treaty, officially called The United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child has been ratified by 134 countries at this writing. It has not been ratified by the United States. However, with Hillary Clinton one of its chief sponsors, and with a compliant congress ready to do the Clinton's wishes in most cases, potential ratification of the treaty by Congress and its signing by Present Clinton is a real danger. The Treaty was adopted unanimously by the UN General Assembly on November 20, 1989. On September 29-30, 1992, UNICEF hosted the "World Summit on the Children" in New York City. It was said to be "the largest gathering ever of world leaders." More than 70 Heads of State attended the gathering, one of them being President George Bush. At that time there were requests from members of both the House and the Senate that President Bush sign the Treaty. Seems that he agreed with the terms of the Treaty and intended to sign, but left office without doing so. But with Hillary Clinton being one of its sponsors, and with a compliant congress ready to follow the lead of the Clintons in most respects, the danger of it becoming a law of the world, is imminent and the consequences could become disastrous to families and to society. There are 54 Articles in this Treaty, but they are hardly specific in definitions and could be interpreted almost as a UN Commission or the US Supreme Court might decide. Article 12 assures the "right to express views freely in all matters affecting the child - the views of the child being given due weight in accordance with age and maturity." This would permit children to tell parents how they should be treated, and tell teachers what they should be taught. Article 14 guarantees children "Freedom of thought, conscience and religion." Article 15 recognizes the right of the child to "freedom of association and freedom of peaceful assembly." Article 16 includes "protection of the child's rights from arbitrary or unlawful interference with his or her privacy." Article 17 charges the State with the responsibility "to promote the child's social, spiritual and moral well-being and physical and mental health." Article 20 says children can be removed from their families "for their own best interests when necessary." Article 24 requires governments to develop "family planning education services." This is the type of thing for which Hillary Clinton has been preparing herself for over 20 years. This particular article becomes doubly dangerous because the word "family" has never been defined in the legal sense. A "family" once was defined as a husband and a wife living together with children. But now it seems that a couple living together without wedlock, two lesbians living together (with a canary), or two "gays" living together make a family.

"Honour thy father and thy mother: that thy days may be long upon the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee." (Exodus 20:12).

REINVENTING CHAOS

Behold the results and status of the New World Order, the latest of the many attempts to create a world government. It is generally conceded that the two principal spokesmen for this NWO were the two leaders of the two super powers of the time: George Bush, President of the United States; and Mikhail Gorbachev, General Secretary of the now defunct Union of Soviet Socialist Republics. Which of them first said it publicly and made it an "Open Conspiracy" in the terms applied by H.G.Wells, is questionable. But it was on December 7, 1988 that Gorbachev told the members of the United Nations General Assembly: "The world is becoming a single entity out of which no state can develop," and he called for "creating an altogether new mechanism for the furtherance of the world economy ... a new structure of the international division of labor ... a new type of industrial progress in accordance with the interests of all peoples and states ... Further progress is now possible only through a quest for universal consensus in a movement toward a new world order." (Underlining added). Later, in announcing the transition of Desert Shield to Desert Storm, President Bush said: "We have an opportunity for a New World Order where world law, basic human rights, and fundamental freedom will prevail." Again, when addressing the UN on February 1, 1992, Bush said: "It is the sacred principles enshrined in the UN Charter to which we henceforth pledge our allegiance." When the USSR was divided into separate republics and Gorbachev was succeeded by Boris Yeltsin, and when Bush was succeeded by Clinton, the latter took upon himself the duty of acting as American spokesman for the United Nations. He led, though rather reluctantly, the campaign to get the US Congress to approve the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA), and has continued to support what became the Russian Federation under Yeltsin, in keeping American troops under United Nations command in Somalia, in promising American troops when it was decided that UN military action was necessary in Bosnia, and in other ways that are aimed at the fulfillment of all goals of the New World Order agenda by the year 2000.

Latest results in the march toward the New World Order include suggested plans for bringing peace to Bosnia, plans which are never carried out, a slow and somewhat frustrated attempt to reinvent Europe and make it into a Regional World Government, similar frustrations as Clintonistas try to sell NAFTA to the US Congress, etc., etc. In order to keep Yeltsin in charge of what goes for a government in Russia, it was necessary to call out the loyal Russian troops who shelled the Russian White House where a duly elected Parliament was opposing Yeltsin's proposals for new elections and a new constitution. And a new UN war involving US Servicemen in Somalia, where at least 12 were killed and hundreds injured or captured by troops under the command of Mohammed Farrah Aidid. Prospects of another Vietnam type war are looming, thanks to our support of the UN. More of this later, space permitting. Meanwhile here at home: "America is plunging toward the greatest period of financial, political, and social instability and upheaval in its history as the Clintonistas and the Liberal Eastern Establishment plunge us toward a socialist state and the New World Order. The US economy is faltering. Crime is turning our major cities into war zones. Drugs, liberal education, sexual permissiveness, and rebellion to paternity authority are destroying our families and especially our children. And an all-powerful government is moving to control every aspect of our lives from the cradle to the grave with tens of thousands of new laws, rules, and regulations promulgated each year which are making it almost impossible for individuals, families or businesses to function and prosper. Freedom is under attack as never before in America in every way imaginable, and the very foundations of our culture, our traditional way of life, our Constitution and our families are crumbling." (Quoted from the September, 1993 issue of The McAlvany Intelligence Advisor, PO Box 84904, Phoenix AZ 85071. 24 months, $165).

There is, of course, strong opposition to the activities of the Liberal Eastern Establishment on the part of Constitutionalists, conservatives in general, Christians and States Righters. The trouble is: Big Money and the Controlled Media are on the side of the Socialists and Internationalists. As an example of Constitutional opposition, there was held a meeting on September 17 and 18, 1993 in Kansas City, MO, where Key Constitutionalists met to evolve "a plan for expediting the Federal governments return to the authority it was granted by the States when the Constitution was ratified." They agreed that the problem facing Americans is that our nation now operates under a systematically created, largely socialistic government that is detrimental to Americans and designed to benefit the financial/industrial cartel seeking to control the world." At the meeting were J. Bracken Lee, former Governor of Utah; and Evan Mecham, former Governor of Arizona. We have a copy of an open letter that was written by former Governor Lee, addressed to Governor Romer of Colorado. We quote from that letter:

"It has become painfully and unquestionably clear that the three branches of our federal government have worked in unison to dismantle and destroy our nation's lawful government as set forth within the spirit and intent of our Declaration of Independence and Constitution; a document each of us are under oath to uphold ... I believe that if left unchallenged, those in our federal government will continue to pursue their agenda of bankrupting the United States and merging our nation into a new world order defined as 'a world that has a supranational authority to regulate world commerce and industry; an international organization that would control the production and consumption of oil; an international currency that would replace the dollar; a world development fund that would make funds available to free and communist countries alike; and an international police force to enforce the edicts of the new world order'. ... As principles to the Constitution, our States hold the ultimate authority and responsibility for correcting the errant actions and policies of our agent; the federal government. And we, as governors and former governors, should be at the forefront of a responsible effort to insure that our federal government again pursues the principles and procedures with which it has been entrusted. I pray that you agree with my assessment of need and that you will support a review of the historical procedures for responsible action by the States and help develop and initiate state level action designed to correct the course of our ship of state by re-establishing our national sovereignty and independence, regaining control of our destiny, and re-examining our monetary, fiscal and trade policies to insure that we not only have the will but the way to repay our legitimate debts and lay the foundation for a viable economy. Will you support such an effort? ... Please give this your timely attention as I believe time is of the essence.

Sincerely, (signed) J. Bracken Lee, Governor of Utah 1949-1957. 4808 Quailbrook Circle, Salt Lake City, Utah 85118.)"

They Lied about WACO

While Bill and Hillary were canvassing the country seeking aid for their Health Care System, their Treasury Secretary found it necessary to admit that federal agents "bungled the raid on Waco and then lied to cover their mistakes." On 9/30/93 Benson either fired ATF leader Stephen Higgins, or Stephen Higgins resigned before he was fired. Five other agents were suspended with pay. Admittedly, the report was a whitewash job, but there was the admission that ATF agents mishandled every aspect of the raid. And the case is not over yet. It must still go to the Justice Department to investigate the FBI agents who were involved. This admission of bungling, as we said, is a whitewash of the raid, but connected with the court decree in the Weaver case, there is every indication that the ATF agency may be broken up and its activities transferred to other agencies with better reputations. But there is the hope that this will have some effect on the Forfeiture Rules that have brought death to honest civilians in some cases. The Racketeering and Corrupt Organization Act (RICO) requires that anyone caught in its net must forfeit to the government "assets derived from the 'illegal activity' of which he was convicted. In the 1992-1993 term of the Supreme Court four forfeiture cases were tried, and the government lost every one of them.

As we mentioned, the Waco Raid exposure caught the Clintons busy with attempts to get Hillary's Health Plan approved by the people. "In an impassioned speech before a joint session of Congress and a nation-wide television audience September 22," reported the weekly Human Events, "Bill Clinton said his health care proposal not only would assure that every American had health coverage but it would cut costs, cut bureaucracy, increase choice, and improve the overall quality of American health care." But Clinton's speech was a pep talk and little more. No details of the plan were discussed. Much the same applied to Hillary's appearances before the necessary Senate and House Committees. The media made her Queen for the Day because of her brilliant testimony, which again gave few details. And, from what has been revealed of the Plan, it would seem sure that the Clinton's Health Plan will, if passed, raise the cost of health care, increase the red tape, decrease the variety and choice of doctors, and reduce the quality of American health care by, as Human Events reported, "relying on direct government control of prices and the availability of services, rather than true free-market forces, to contain costs and allocate resources."

Even more important, what the proposed Health Care Plan would do would be to bring under direct government control an industry that comprises an alleged one-seventh of the US economy. And, even more dangerous, it provides a Big Brother type of federal control of every individual through the health care card that would be forced upon every man, woman, child. Human Events concludes: "By any traditional American or non-Marxist standard, the Clinton health plan - with its proliferating bureaucracies, top-down control, job-killing costs, and universal abortion funding - is unthinkable. At stake in this unprecedented attempt to Sovietize an industry comprising one-seventh of the US economy. as Robert Moffit of the Heritage Foundation pointed out last week, is not only our economy and our livelihood but, because it threatens to destroy the nation's health care system, our very lives." We question one word in the above statement. Instead of Sovietize, the word should be Fascistize. For the plan for having industry pay 70% of the cost and the patient the other 20% is the Fascist, or Corporate Socialist system. Industry does all the work but government directs, controls and supervises.

Another No-Win War?

30 years ago we sent to Asia more troops to defend troops already there. Now we are sending to Africa more troops to defend troops already there, with no clean mission, no definable objective, no definition for victory. Nearly 11 months ago we sent troops at the UN's request to save starving Somalis. But we were not told why Somali was chosen over several other places that required equal aid. It involved oil and geopolitics, we learned. Radical Islamists threatened Egypt, Sudan was moving closer to Iran, Ethiopia had lost its Red Sea coastline to Eritrea, and Somalian Warlord Mohammed Aidid was joining with Sudan and Iran in a pact that could block the passage of oil from the Middle East to Europe, while also threatening the life of Israel as a nation. So the oil barons decreed that we can't bring the troops home until after Aidid is captured or killed. So, at dusk on Sunday October 3, 1993, a UN-directed attack force composed mainly of Americans was launched against one of the strongholds of one of Aidid's lieutenants. The UN-directed force was overwhelmed. At least 12 American servicemen were killed, another 78 were wounded, several captured. Two US Black Hawk helicopters were shot down. The battle raged through Sunday and Monday. Clinton at that time agreed to send 200 more servicemen to Somalia. But as the results of the battle became known, Clinton upped the number to 600, along with four tanks, two AC-30 aircraft, seven helicopters, two recovery vehicles, 14 Bradley fighting vehicles, two armored personnel carriers and seven heavy trucks. Doesn't this sound like the beginning of a buildup to war?

Clinton insisted that the US must not waver from its commitment to help erase "brutality and anarchy" in Somalia. But he is coming under heavy pressure to change his mind. According to The Baltimore Sun, he originally "supported the same goals that the Bush administration had. Later, his administration allowed US combat troops to play a key role in Somalia, even after the overall control had shifted to the United Nations. A month ago, Clinton's policy was to keep combat troops there until south Mogadishu had been brought under control. Then last week, the president indicated he wanted a definite answer for withdrawal. And Monday (10/4/93) he authorized reinforcements." Now Clinton's job seems to be to reinvent government for the Somalis who don't want reinvention. He has little option but to stick with the no-win policy, at least until his superiors change his mind for him. Let us thank God that there is a Kingdom that is not of this world.

"The kings of the earth set themselves, and the rulers take counsel together, against the Lord, and against his anointed, saying, Let us break their bands asunder, and cast away their cords from us. He that sitteth in the heavens shall laugh, and have them in derision." (Psalm Two).

THE GREATER CHOICE

"I see a grave situation taking place in our country, which is designed to eliminate all choices in the coming election, except those candidates who would support the New World Order, a form of government which will rob the United States of Constitutional freedom, religious protection, close down our military, and force us under a world dictatorship. Most of the pieces of this mechanism are now in place. The news media will not warn you of the coming destruction of freedoms as they also support the New World Order government." So wrote Dr. Shirley Correll, Editor of Florida Forum. To supply the pieces of this mechanism that are not now in place will be the work of those whom we the people elect on November 3rd. It makes little difference whether we collectively choose Bush or Clinton - or even Perot; for all have been weighed in the balance by the Establishmentarians and found wanting to aid in putting in place those pieces of the mechanism that are not yet in place. It wasn't always that way. There was a time when voters had a choice. But that was before the Establishment bought or gained control over the national news media, before radio and television, when newspapers just reported news and confined propaganda to the editorial page. Dennis Cuddy, author of Now is the Dawning of the New Age World Order wrote: "In 1928 William Paley was beginning CBS and hired Sigmund Freud's nephew, Edward Bernays, to be his adviser. In that same year Bernay's book Propaganda was published, showing how the American public could be manipulated. This 'father of public relations' wrote: 'Those who manipulate the organized habits and opinions of the masses constitute an invisible government which is the true ruling power of our country'." Of course, Adam Weishaupt understood this principle of manipulation of the public in 1776. Before that, in 1513 Machiavelli wrote in his book The Prince: "It happens then as it does to physicians in the treatment of Consumption [tuberculosis], which in the commencement is easy to cure and difficult to understand; but when it has neither been discovered in due time nor treated upon a proper principle, it becomes easy to understand and difficult to cure. The same thing happens in state affairs; by foreseeing them at a distance...the evils which might arise from them are soon cured; but when, from want of foresight, they are suffered to increase to such a height that they are perceptible to everyone, there is no longer any remedy." And so it happens that, as we face another national election, we are not just facing a crisis, but we are at a cross-roads in history. A group of banking and government elitists want to dissect and eventually discard our Constitution," wrote R.P.Pearce, Jr., in The Trojan Horse. He added: "This is predictable, though! When America allowed a Centralized Federal Government, it was just a matter of time before the powers that be, would try to bring about its demise. Centralized bureaucracy, once implemented will never cease growing until an ultimate collapse stops it." It is, of course, a global crisis. It's most critical to Americans because we are the remaining super-power and the world is expecting to look to us for leadership. But, let's look at those who have been chosen by the Establishment, to lead us into the New Age World Order.

George Bush was initiated into The Order, commonly known as the Skull and Bones Fraternity, in 1947. In his latest book on the subject of Conspiracy, Dark Mystery, Texe Marrs wrote: "The history of George Bush's life is proof positive of the almost unbelievable influence and ability of a rich and powerful co-conspiracy to create a pliant company man perfectly fit and trained for their sinister purposes, and to actually propel that man to the very seat of world authority as head of the United States of America, the mighty military arm of the Secret Brotherhood's New World Order." The training:

Upon graduation from Yale Bush and his wife set out for Midland, Texas, where he would in a comparatively short time make millions in oil. Then he was led to politics, in 1966 was elected to the House of Representatives. But he was twice defeated in campaigns for the US Senate. So he was transferred to the foreign policy field, was named US Ambassador to the United Nations in 1971. Then back to political management by being named Chairman of the Republican National Committee in 1973. Then back to another foreign policy post by being named Special Envoy to Red China in 1975. A year later he was recalled and made Director of the CIA, in 1976. He then retired for a period of study and was elected Vice President of the United States in 1980, and followed Ronald Reagan into that post in 1988. The NY Times (6/11/92) in a special article revealed that: "In the early 1970s, even as President Richard Nixon became enveloped in the Watergate scandal, he helped elevate George Bush, then an obscure Texas Congressman, to national prominence. Nixon did that at the insistence of Henry Kissinger and David Rockefeller." Then after a brief year as Envoy to China, Kissinger assigned Bush to the top position that a conspirator must always hold - Director of the CIA. Next, Bush left the CIA post to study for the Presidency. "For the leaders of the Secret Brotherhood, it was time. Their man had just the right resume. He was primed and ready," wrote Marrs. To the chagrin of the financial wizards, he lost to Ronald Reagan. But a deal was made. Reagan should become President if he agreed to take his chief political rival, George Bush, as his running mate. So Bush became Vice President, spent eight years waiting, and in 1988, the Secret Brotherhood placed their specially trained leader in the most important government post in the world. This was especially true since Gorbachev was to be demoted and the USSR dissected. In the Fall 1992 issue of the CFR Quarterly, Foreign Affairs, Ted Sorenson (CFR) wrote that if Bush wins re-election, as expected, then he will no longer have to concern himself with conservative opinion or domestic affairs (which would be left to appointed bureaucrats), and could then "aggressively pursue his internationalist sentiments." His drive to create the New Age World Order under the UN could then become his full time job, for which he had been trained from the very beginning by the Establishmentarian Brass. The Secret Brtherhood hadn't done so well with Jimmy Carter, but George Bush was better trained and ran as a Republican.

Running with Bush is Dan Quayle. Not much is publicized concerning the works of Quayle. But it is conceded that he is a firm believer in Bush policies and hopes to succeed his leader in 1996. As to his standing with the Conspirators, here is a clue. In June, 1991, there was held a secret annual meeting of the Bilderbergers in the Black Forest town of Baden Baden. Although a secret conclave, Spotlight was successful in learning much of what occurred at the meeting. David Rockefeller gave the opening address, told the specially invited guests: "It would have been impossible for us to develop our plan for the world if we had been subject to the bright lights of publicity during these years....We are grateful to The Washington Post, The New York Times, Time Magazine, and other publications whose directors have attended our meetings, and respected their promises of discretion for almost 40 years." Again quoting Texe Marrs: "Invited secretly to Baden Baden was key democratic contender Governor Bill Clayton of Arkansas....He passed with flying colors....Vice President Dan Quayle is another fair-haired boy of the wealthy Bilderberger supermen. Quayle was there in person last year at the gathering. Reportedly, David Rockefeller and fellow big-wigs were duly impressed at what they saw. 'He's our man - for '96 or sooner!' one Bilderberger exclaimed." (Texe Marrs' quotes are from "Dark Majesty," Living Truth Publishers, 8104 Caisson Circle, Austin TX 78745).

To dwell on the character and qualifications for the Presidency of Bill Clinton would seem unnecessary for the readers of DBR. Rhodes Scholar, Bilderberger, CFR member, suspected of unpatriotic activities during Vietnam war, womanizer, Hilary handicap, and with radical and religious environmentalist Al Gore as a running mate should be sufficient. If more is to be said, George Bush will probably say it. The Secret Brotherhood claims both Bush and Clinton (and Perot), and will allow voters to choose either man. But there is an important difference between the two that should not be overlooked. Clinton favors Environmentalism; Bush favors War. To explain the difference, we refer to The Report From Iron Mountain, a book published in 1967. It referred to the need for war to maintain an economic balance. It said: "If war is discarded (Panama, Persian Gulf, Drug War, etc.-Ed.), new political machinery is needed to serve this vital function. Without war, no government is able to obtain acquiescence to its legitimacy or maintain its right to rule its society. Poisoning of the air and of the principle sources of food and water supplies (environmentalism) is already well advanced and at first glance would seem promising in this respect; it constitutes a threat that can be dealt with only through social organization and political power."

There you have it: Bush favors War; Clinton favors Environmentalism. The Secret Brotherhood favors both in this transition period. Most important in this respect is the naming of Al Gore to serve with Clinton if elected. In The Trojan Horse (op cit) there is this comment: "There has been found a cause of global dimension and it has successfully spanned the racial, cultural, ethnic, religious, economic and monetary differences. (It has been said that 87% of Americans are environmentalists). There is now a problem which can continue to be expanded to crisis proportions which individual nations can't resolve. This cause, as we have seen, has become environmentalism, a religious revival to protect Mother Earth." Now note the following which we quote from the September issue of American Information Newsletter.

"According to a new book, vice presidential candidate Al Gore went through a New Age conversion during a medical crisis for his son. 'The New Covenant of Bill Clinton and Al Gore' says that after Gore lost his bid for the 1988 presidential campaign, his six year old son was hit by a car and hovered near death for 30 days. This experience caused Gore to change 'in a fundamental way.' Gore says his son's accident was not solely responsible for his change but 'was the catalyst.' This change was spiritual in nature, leading Gore to the current fashionable religion for the left, a blend of feminism and pagan pantheism. Gore kept vigil with his injured son for many days in an office provided for him in the hospital. During this wait, he began the book 'Earth in the Balance and the Human Spirit.' In this book, which defines the religion Gore was converted to during the crisis, he began to identify left-wing environmentalism as a spiritual journey. What is the content of this religion? It is the worship of the earth with a new twist. The earth becomes a goddess to return us to a woman dominated rather than the male dominated religion. The new left religion which Gore meditated upon as his son lay near death, is a paganism invented to serve environmentalism and feminism. Gore began writing his thoughts during his son's crisis...'We feel increasingly distant from our roots in the earth...we seem to share a restlessness of spirit that rises out of the lost connection...' By page 260 Gore has discovered this 'lost connection.' 'The spiritual sense of our place in nature predates Native American cultures...much of the world was based on the worship of a single earth goddess who was assured to be the fount of all life and who radiated harmony among all living things...until (replaced by) the antecedents of today's religions...most of which still have a distinctly masculine orientation.' For Gore, the rediscovery of the 'lost connection' with nature is to totally accept the goddess mythology invented by modern feminists. Without the slightest bit of solid historical evidence, feminists are telling people that the first religion was universally 'goddess worship.' A return to this mythical religion, in the modern form of worshipping the alleged 'earth goddess, Gia' is Gore's spiritual journey. It has been said that the average age of the world's great civilizations before they decline has been 200 years, and that nations have progressed in this sequence: From bondage to spiritual faith, from spiritual faith to great courage, from great courage to liberty, from liberty to abundance, from abundance to selfishness, from selfishness to complacency, from complacency to apathy, from apathy to dependence, from dependence back again to bondage. We seem to be in the period of dependence. With welfare, health costs, unemployment compensation, various subsidies and grants, we as a people have become almost totally dependent upon government. In turn, our government has become dependent upon Multibankers and other governments for financial survival. A major step in going back is our next National Election. We have passed the point of apathy, for millions of Americans may bother to vote, but for "the lesser evil." The parties have been called The Right Wing Socialist Party A, and The Left Wing Socialist Party B. Their candidates have been called Tweedle Dum and Tweedle Dee, both doing the bidding of the Eastern Establishment. In this "transition period" leading to the New Age, we find ourselves in a state of financial, social, political, religious and moral deterioration. As a remedy, the voter is given a choice: Bush and Quayle who would establish a man-made order of the earth, or Clinton and Gore who would have us worship Gia, forgetting that His Son alone rules the earth. Which means there is yet a greater and free choice:

"In God I have put my trust: I will not be afraid what man can do unto me...For thou hast delivered my soul from death: wilt not thou deliver my feet from falling, that I may walk before God in the light of the living?" Psalm 56: 11,13.

REBIRTH OF FASCISM

It was exactly eight decades ago when President Woodrow Wilson planned a New American Order, one that would change our Republic into a Democracy. Coached by his alter ego, Colonel Edward Mandell House, agent of the Power Elite then headquartering in The City in London, Wilson became in many respects the public voice of the Elite. He helped in the surrender of the control of American money to the international bankers through the creation of the Federal Reserve System. He promoted and a sufficient number of States allegedly ratified the 16th Amendment to the Constitution, the Internal Revenue Service which gave entrance into and partial control over the financial situation of corporations, businesses, professions and individuals. And he approved and promoted the 17th Amendment which changed the national election procedure in that United States Senators would be elected directly by the people rather than by governors or legislatures of State governments (democracy), thus destroying the power of the States to control their Federal Government which they had created, empowered to a limited extent and carefully limited those powers by the Constitution and its Bill of Rights. When first elected Wilson spoke of great domestic reforms he would initiate and said it would be "the irony of my fate" if he had to spend most of his time dealing with foreign affairs. So the irony of his fate brought America deeply into foreign affairs; got us into a World War, helped in the settlement of boundaries between both old and newly created countries in Europe, saw the conquest of the Russian Empire by the Bolsheviks, and creation of the League of Nations that was supposed to bring democracy to all Nations through the creation of a World Government. The League failed to become effective principally because Wilson insisted that the 14 points of the Covenant be a part of the Paris Peace Treaty which ended the war, and the United States Senate refused to ratify the Treaty, or the Covenant itself. So Wilson's expressed desire to make the world safe for democracy was smothered by the smoke, fire and blood of the costliest war the world had ever witnessed up to that time. In a sense, the Power Elite was also defeated and a new plan had to be adopted. That's when the Hegelian doctrine was brought into play. Communism would be increased in power and effectiveness and it would serve as as the antithesis to capitalistic private enterprise. Another World War could result in the creation of two super powers whose competing economic systems would eventually merge to create corporate socialism and a New World Order. But Socialism, the parent of Communism, had other children. There was the semi-Socialism which had developed throughout Europe following the end of the first World War. There was the Communist Empire composed of Soviet Socialist Republics. And there was Corporate Socialism which was called Fascism in Italy and Nazism in Germany. The Power Elite had to choose between them as to which would be chosen as the antithesis to Capitalistic Free Enterprise. And in the upcoming second World War, Russian Communism was chosen and financed to fill the role of adversary in a play in which all the world would be the stage. To complete the casting, Fascist Italy joined Nazi Germany and Japan was forced into entering the war at least partially because Pearl Harbor was necessary to cause America to enter the war willingly; willing to fight and willing to finance its allies, especially the Communist USSR which had become a militant ally of its economic adversaries. And the United Nations was created to replace the League of Nations.

Now lets backtrack and take note of the various governmental systems that were developing in the time between the two world wars. Communism was exploding in Russia and Eastern Europe. Social Democracies were growing rapidly in Western Europe. Fabian Socialism had taken over in Britain. Corporate Socialism or Planned Economy, called Fascism in Italy and Nazism in Germany, had brought totalitarian rule to the two countries. "Semi-Socialist States rose all over Europe - social democracies they were called," wrote John T. Flynn in The Roosevelt Myth. "They were part socialist, part capitalist, part parliamentary but with all the defects of the European parliamentary system critically exaggerated....However, the most important thing that rose out of all of this was a new approach that made a tremendous appeal to many of the same intellectuals who had dallied with Socialism. ... Men had been flirting with the idea in Germany since the days of Fichte, who might be said to be the father of the theory of planned capitalism. The idea was that ... all the factories, stores, amusements, farms, etc. (would be left) in the hands of private owners. Actually such a society would be about one-fourth socialist and three-fourths privately owned or capitalist, However, in this society the State would assume the responsibility for making the whole work. It would hold itself responsible for the well-being of all the citizens, their protection from the hazards of life - poverty, sickness, age, etc. And to make the whole work continuously without occasional breakdowns, the State would set up certain great planning agencies or boards which would continuously study and observe the functioning of the economic system and make plans covering production, prices, distribution, profits, wages, hours, etc. Thus we would have what was in fact Planned Capitalism - with the State responsible for the planning and for ensuring the carrying out of its plans through great government bureaus armed with the necessary powers to enforce compliance. This was the perfect haven for great masses of intellectuals - students, teachers, lawyers, politicians, writers, journalists, and others - who had flirted with Socialism and Communism but who did not dare say they were Communists or Socialists."

What Flynn wrote in 1956 is an almost precise definition of the reinvented government that Bill and Hillary, Gore and Associates are proposing and promoting for the United States in 1993. In polite political circles it's called Planned Economy. But it is Fascism, by whatever name it may be known. Flynn's conclusion: "Little by little, if the Planned Economy is to be made to work, the free republic must wither. The idea of a free republic and the idea of a Planned Economy cannot live together."

Fascism is said to have been conceived by the Fabians, but it was born in Italy as was its leader, Benito Mussolini, a Socialist with a desire to become a dictator. However, he realized that Socialism, especially the Leninist brand of Socialism, would never succeed and endure in Italy. The Roman Catholic Church would never approve of the destruction of free enterprise and capitalism. At the turn of the century there was a saying that Italy survived as a Nation because many of its citizens went to America, prospered as free enterprisers, and sent money home to keep their families and even the Nation alive. So Mussolini sought for some political system that would successfully merge Capitalism and Socialism. He found such a group, joined it, became its leader, and gave it its name: Fascism.

"When Mussolini began his march to power he had no program. He dropped one after another of his original principles as he found it expedient to make his policies conform to the great streams of public opinion and demand as soon as he recognized them. His position was wholly different from that of Lenin and Stalin," said Flynn. One is reminded of Clinton who also has dropped or changed one policy after another as he found it expedient to make his policies conform to the great streams of public opinion and demand as soon as he recognizes them.

Mussolini was elected Premier in 1922. And he soon became admired by the international power elite. In the first years of FDR's reign, Mussolini's economic policies became the very blueprint of the New Deal's economic policies. Dr. Nicholas Butler (Carnegie Institute) and Sol Blum (House Foreign Affairs Chairman) praised Mussolini, said he was a great man and "had something he might well look into for imitation." In 1927 Winston Churchill wrote to Mussolini, saying, "If I had been an Italian I am sure I would have been with you from the beginning to the end of your victorious struggle against the bestial appetite and passions of Leninists, and were he an Italian he would "Don the Fascist black shirt." What FDR's Braintrusters liked especially was his corporative system, He organized each trade or industrial group into a state-supervised association which he called a cooperative. (Check the Clintons' Health Care Plan for comparison). These cooperatives operated under state supervision and could plan production, quality, prices, distribution, labor standards, etc. In the United States this same policy was adopted under the New Deal National Recovery Administration. At that time a still Constitution-observing Supreme Court nullified the totally Fascistic plan. That was six decades ago. The Clintons are adopting similar programs, but do you think today's Supreme Court will declare them unconstitutional?

Mussolini called his industrial, business, professional, labor and social groups cooperatives. The New Deal chose to call them Code Authorities, but they were essentially the same thing. In 1987 Bill Clinton used the original word, Cooperative. There are reports that Clinton visited the co-ops in Legga, Italy to study the cooperatives there. "I went to Italy to study," Governor Clinton told Italian journalist Antonio Socci, "I came five years ago to the province of Florence to find out how the cooperatives ... and the micro enterprises function. Then I went back to Arkansas and I helped put together about seventy youth cooperatives." Incredulous, Socci asked, "Don't tell me this (cooperative) is your economic prescription for the United States?" "Absolutely," said Governor Clinton. The first great change in the Clinton program has to do with the health care plan, which seems to bear out Clinton's assertion to the Italian journalist.

When did Mussolini lose the respect of the power elite and become generally unpopular, even hated, by the people? Best clue: When Mussolini was elected Premier, Churchill praised him, wrote him saying if he were an Italian he would have donned the Fascist black shirt. But in December, 1940, Churchill spoke in the House saying, "I do not deny that he (Mussolini) is a very great man. But he became a criminal when he attacked England." It should be noted that both Mussolini and Hitler lost their standings with the elite because of their foreign policies, not their domestic affairs. Mussolini attacked Ethiopia, finally England. He was assassinated and Fascism was discarded in favor of Communism. Hitler double-crossed a partner and attacked Russia; Fascism was discarded by the elite in favor of Communism. As a third promoter of a reborn Fascism, foreign policy may mark the end of Clinton's dream (Bosnia, Somalia, and now Haiti; decisions that his own Democratic Party criticize.)

In much talk concerning Hillary Clinton, she has been referred to as the "second Eleanor Roosevelt," having even talked to Eleanor and asking her advice. And in his fascistic programming, both domestic and foreign, it might be said that Bill Clinton seems to be following in the footsteps of Eleanor's husband Franklin. Other than court historians will agree that the New Deal's "Blue Eagle" programming was a near duplicate of the Fasces planning of Il Duce. One of our greatest Constitutional experts, Thomas James Norton, member of the Bar of the United States Supreme Court and of many of the State Supreme Courts, wrote a book, Undermining the Constitution, in which he condemned the New Deal program as being thoroughly fascistic. He wrote: "Beginning with 1933 Socialism (control by government of production, distribution and exchange), Fascism (Socialism by corporations), and Communism (confiscation by government of private property through graduated taxes and by abolition of inheritance) all forbidden by the Constitution because in no way authorized, and in many ways condemned by implication, spread with the rapidity of a fire on the prairie." He emphasized that "Fascism is Socialism carried out by private corporations." He noted that on 11/9/1949 AP reported that Sen. William Fulbright "said he did not think it proper to hand out public money to private industry. He named three companies which had borrowed of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and now are being run by the government." "That," said Norton, "is what the corporation of Fascism is for - to take over private business... The meaning of Fascism, a word much used in our country with evidently little understanding may best be made clear by showing the corporations of government set up by Mussolini in Italy to take over all the activities of men. The first was the Corporation for Cereals, made up of designated numbers of employes and workers, and embracing growers, threshers, millers, commission and co-operative organizations. All the corporations (22 of them) were similarly divided." In the United States in 1993, the first seems to be the Corporation for Health Care, made up of designated numbers of doctors, nurses, health care workers and embracing co-operative organizations, and drafting into its fold every resident of the United States - and perhaps every resident of Canada and Mexico as well if NAFTA is incorporated into the Plan for World Government with its three Regional Administrative Bureaucracies: EUROPE, NAFTA, and the Asiatic Co-Prosperty Sphere.

Afterthought. "The power figures in the Clinton administration have in mind a Reconstruction period for America....The basic idea is that the Washington government has first claim on your income and your resources. ... Already there is discussion of a national emergency and the application of martial law." (Awake & Alert Bulletin, 194 Bishop Lane, Louisville KY 40208.)

Therefore the Lord God spoke to His Prophet: "But thou shalt say unto them, this is a nation that obeyeth not the voice of the Lord their God; nor receiveth correction: truth is perished, and is cut off from their mouth....Take up a lamentation on high places; for the Lord hath rejected and forsaken the generation of His wrath." (Jer. 7:28,29).

THE NAFTA TRAP

This Report was written before and published on the eve of the recent national election. If we assume that Benjamin Disraeli was right when he had a character in one of his novels say, "Governments do not govern, but merely control the machinery of government, being themselves controlled by the hidden hand," then regardless of who is to be our next president, the leftward course of our Ship of State will continue. This is true since the three principal candidates for the highest office in the land were controlled by the hidden hand of our day. George Roche in his book America by the Throat in which he exposed "The Stranglehold of Federal Bureaucracy" made this clear when he wrote: "How do we get back on the right track? I have no full or satisfying answers...Historical experience offers little advice about how to escape our dilemma. What I do know is that one election will change little, however much it is a step in the right direction. The problem can be fought on the election process, but it cannot be solved there. It is a problem of our hearts and minds, of our values and choices. It is a moral problem. Each of us must in his own way find and restore and burnish the values that animated the American Republic at its beginning. With the wisdom of our fathers we must respect in full the rights of life and liberty and property, for these are the cornerstone of all civilization. More than this, we must abandon the false religion of the State, and renew our faith in the sovereignty of our Creator and His Law. Without this we will not succeed. So it is ordained." (Underlining added).

If disappointed in the election, remember that one election will change little. This is because our government is controlled by that same "hidden hand," and it has proclaimed in its media that its own changes, not the changes we might desire, will be made. Such changes will be designed to mollify the masses while at the same time continuing the drive toward the establishment of the New World Order with its New Age Socialist Government. And high on the agenda is the establishment of three so-called Free Trade Areas: Europe, Asia, and North America. This we must understand: Economics comes before politics. So, the European Community was created, the North American Free Trade Area (NAFTA) is being created, and the Asian Economic Area will follow. Later, according to The Plan, these three economic areas are to become political regions, or Regional World Governments. This is supposed to be accomplished by the target date 2000, the third millennium since the birth of Christ.

A big step in this direction came when "In the midst of a recession with ten million Americans out of work, George Bush announced on August 12th, 1991, the signing of the North American Trade Agreement (NAFTA) by the United States, Canada and Mexico." The treaty is yet to be ratified by Congress, but already the migration has begun. Industries are moving from the United States to Mexico where cheaper labor, fewer taxes and less trade restrictions exist. NAFTA is being supported by columnists, analysts, politicians, multinational leaders, all the commercial media, conservatives and business men who have not been told the truth about NAFTA. Said John F. McManus in The New American: "Nowhere, sad to say, do any of the mass media's experts even hint that NAFTA amounts to another step toward George Bush's 'New World Order.' The chief principle being ignored is that economic union precedes political union."

Alfred Lord Tennyson the poet observed "That a lie, which is half a truth, is ever the blackest of lies. That a lie, which is all a lie, may be met and fought outright. But a lie, which is part of a truth, is a harder matter to fight." NAFTA is an example. It is being sold under the banner of "free trade." which is a lie. NAFTA promotes managed trade, not free trade. And it follows the pattern of the European Community which is presently in a log jam in Europe. Joseph de Courcy, editor of the British Intelligence Digest, explains and we quote:

"The North American Free Trade Area (NAFTA) and the European Community (EC) have two important characteristics in common: first, they are all about managed trade not free trade; and, secondly, they are both (or will be in the case of NAFTA) contributing to the demise of the nation state as the basic organizational structure for human affairs. There is little doubt that for some involved in this process, the latter objective (the demise of the nation state) is the very purpose of the exercise. First create the trade blocs, then progressively transfer power from the national level to the supra-national level. The goal of supra-national government is now hardly hidden by its supporters. As EC Commission Vice-President Martin Bangemann put it early in September, the Maastricht Treaty on European Union 'means economic and monetary union - and not just common currency - but also a common economic policy. The logical consequence of a common currency is a common macroeconomic position. There is no longer any national sovereignty in economic affairs. The EC is a preparation for a global economic structure.' He might have added that the logical, indeed inevitable consequence of a common economic policy is common government. Therefore, if the EC is a 'preparation for a global economic structure' then it must also be a preparation for a global government. NAFTA will no doubt play its part in this.

"An important element in this is to transfer loyalties from national governments to the new supra-national authorities. It is happening rapidly in Western Europe, particularly in Britain, Belgium and Italy..."

England throws out Progressive Education

The following is sensational information, but the US media have ignored it. We quote from the London Daily Telegraph of September 10, 1992.

"After 30 years English lessons go back to the traditional methods. The long battle over how English should be taught ended yesterday with a decisive victory for the traditionalists. Mr. Patten, Education Secretary, accepted proposals from the National Curriculum Council to abandon the progressive approach which has dominated the subject for nearly 30 years and introduce greater rigour into the teaching of the basic skills of reading, writing and speaking. He agreed the law should be changed to be sure that children are taught:

- * To write correct English by learning the rules of grammar.
- * To speak grammatically-current Standard English in both the classroom and the play ground.
- * To learn to read by a method that includes a significant element of phonics which involves sounding out words instead of trying to remember them by shape.
- * To spell by methods that include learning lists of words off by heart.
- * To appreciate the great works of English literature by being introduced to the standard literary canon."

"The easiest way to discover who is behind any policy is to identify who benefits, and the answer in this case is that there is a coalition of beneficiaries who all have an interest in establishing supra-national government on a global scale. The coalition includes internationalists such as big business, trade unions (in Europe but not in the United States-Ed.), human-rights activists, and environmentalists. They must have their own priorities, but they all have an interest in imposing their policy on a global rather than a national scale. The power of these groups is colossal, which explains why so much headway has been made at the expense of the ordinary citizen, who still understands that the nation state remains the best safeguard of individual freedoms....

"America is sharply divided over the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA), which must be approved by the US Congress, writes an ID Washington observer. Supporters of NAFTA insist that it will mean increased employment and prosperity for all in the US, Canada and Mexico....Representative Richard Gephardt (D-MO), the House majority leader, has emerged a leading critic of NAFTA. He charges that NAFTA would kill 150,000 US jobs which would move to Mexico...But for all the pros and cons, the most potent argument against NAFTA comes not from the protectionists, but from the true free-traders. As economist and Nobel laureate Milton Friedman puts it, regional trade agreements are inevitably destructive. 'The NAFTA pact is managed trade,' says Friedman, Those who have watched the development of the EC are correct to urge extreme caution. Managed trade is a very different, and more dangerous animal than multi-lateral tariff reduction." (Extended quotations from Intelligence Digest, 17 Rodney Road, Cheltenham, Glos, GL50 IHX, United Kingdom).

We repeat: NAFTA does provide for the exploitation of cheap labor and the movement of US based industries to Mexico, but it does not promote free trade. It promotes managed trade, which is an essential part of any socialist government. The same is true of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT), a treaty which was ratified 40 years ago, and which is now being revised and amended to better control the overall management of world trade. Expected to come out of an extended trade conference now being conducted in Geneva, will be a new UN Treaty which will lay down a code for international trade; the Multinational Trade Organization (MTO). MTO, GATT, NAFTA, and other international treaties work like this: The European Community already manages trade among its member States (no longer to be sovereign Nation States but merely administrative departments of a Regional World Government, if the Conspirators are victorious). NAFTA will manage all trade within its area. And Japan will lead in the creation of an Asian managed trade area. To create this three-way management of trade was the purpose behind the Rockefeller-Rothschild sponsorship of Brzezinski's plan for the creation of the Trilateral Commission, in which North America, Western Europe and Japan play equal parts. Of course, to control and coordinate the activities of the three regional areas, there must be a central authority to "harmonize" all regional activities. In the early stages of this development, there was GATT, a treaty signed 40 years ago. Now GATT is being rewritten so that it will serve as the agency that will "harmonize" trade between the three regions. A conference (Uruguay Round) was held but didn't quite succeed as expected. Now an extended conference is being held in Geneva, out of which is expected to be announced the creation of a new UN agency, the Multinational Trade Organization. It is said to be the most powerful new international agency since the establishment of the World Bank and IMF. According to NewsScan, the result will be "a historic shift in the constitutional system of checks and balances among the three branches of the federal government and between the federal government and the fifty States, involving thousands of pages in US law," and establishing a system wherein "international trade agreements" [would be] negotiated in secret by the executive branch [and would] take precedence over previously existing law. These international trade agreements would be binding and Congress would not be able to debate or amend them.

Thus it can be seen that NAFTA involves far more than the moving of US industries to Mexico where the exploitation of cheap labor is available. NAFTA is but one large but essential piece in the global jigsaw puzzle that is being designed by the "hidden hand" - it hopes to complete the job by the target year 2000. NAFTA also ties in with the plan to establish a Regional World Government. No sooner had President Bush signed NAFTA (still awaiting Congressional approval) than did the Planners begin the promotion of a "North American Parliament" to govern the NAFTA governments. On October 5, 1992, began the distribution on university campuses of a paper "obviously preparing the minds of the unsuspecting soon to be declared 'educated' young people, to whom no doubt, this all makes good sense," commented our correspondent who sent us a copy of the article. It is headed "Why we need a North American Parliament," by Andrew Reding of the Pacific News Service. We quote:

"Regardless of whether the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA) eventually conforms to Republican or Democratic prescriptions, it will signal the formation, however tentatively, of a new political unit - North America. To prepare for that new political reality, it is time to begin thinking about the formation of a North American parliament [similar to the parliament that governs EUROPE-Ed.]. The internationalization of business already requires that increasingly important decisions be made at the international level. One of the purposes of the NAFTA and other international trade agreements is to set the principles by which such decisions are to be made, including the question of how to 'harmonize' different labor, consumer, environmental and other standards....Following the lead of the Europeans, we should begin considering formation of a continental parliament to restore a measure of popular influence in the design of common policies." In other words, it's time to begin the formation of a Regional World Government similar to that of EUROPE, which already controls the trade and economy, and hopes to create a common currency for all of the "former" Nations involved.

Summation. With Conspirators controlling the candidates, the election will change little. To win "We must abandon the false religion of the State and renew our faith in the sovereignty of our Creator and His Love. Without this, we will not succeed. It is ordained." Let us resolve:

"That we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive; But speaking the truth in love, may grow up in Him in all things, which is the Head, even Christ."

(Ephesians 4:14,15).

ADDLED AGENDA

"The End of Politics," said Martin Jacques of the traditionally conservative The Sunday Times of London. He was referring to the gathering of the twelve political leaders of Europe who were meeting together in Brussels to celebrate the final ratification of the Maastricht Treaty. This would mark the end of twelve sovereign and independent nations of Europe, and their binding together in a bureaucratic union that would become the first of three Regional World Governments in the New World Order. Jacques observed that this gathering of political shepherds was a sign that the twelve nations of Europe had lost confidence in their own leaders and were seeking something bigger than each of them to bring peace, security and well being to the people of Europe. The British government hated the treaty but signed it anyway; thus surrendering the sovereignty and independence of the United Kingdom to the questionable security of the United Europe. Helmut Kohl of Germany feared the union with France, but signed the treaty regardless. France feared any union with Germany, but signed the treaty anyway. "Britain has lost confidence in its politicians," said The Sunday Times, adding that "the same applies with every western democracy. It is difficult to think of a single political leader in the democratic world [including the United States and Canada] that is riding high. Governments everywhere are confronted with a crisis of credibility." Before the recent Canadian shocker, and after the US election when 43% of the voters sent Bill and Hillary Clinton to the White House, the French election "saw the biggest defeat for a sitting government this century." The leading politician of them all in Europe would be Germany's Herman Kohl who "is but a pale shadow of the figure that strutted across the German scene in the heady days of the reunification," said The Times. And in Italy the whole political class, including the Communists, is discredited, the political system is disintegrating, the former welfare states of Holland and Scandinavia have failed, and all the old governing parties of Europe and America are facing possible oblivion. Indicative of change: In Russia Yeltsin had to call upon tanks and use totalitarian methods to maintain a semblance of what is now called democracy.

If this "end of politics" were confined to just one country it wouldn't mean much in the overall picture of the world. But if this has become a universal condition of the western world, then what has happened? May we suggest that this is exactly the condition wanted by the Power Elite that engineers the building of their New World Order. Political leaders were selected by the power brokers, and the people were conditioned to accept such leaders, not only in the United States. And the total disintegration of all the old political systems provides an open field for the introduction and acceptance of a Corporate Socialist system which was chosen as the synthesis in this worldwide Hegelian drama. There must be a destruction of the old before the new can take over, control and endure.

It is quite possible that the Clintonistas and their ilk didn't see the whole picture. Columnist Donald Lambro calls Clinton a domestic policy wonk. He may have believed that he could gain the presidency and put the rest of the world on a back burner while he reinvented domestic government: health care, the economy, and all the rest that goes with national socialism. He would have his lieutenants handle the "foreign policy stuff" while he was crusading from town to town and microphone to camera selling the program that FDR started with his New Deal and LBJ expanded with his Great Society program. But the Clintons may have overlooked the fact that both the domestic and fascistic programs of FDR and LBJ were phased out because of the "foreign policy stuff" that led to wars. And if Clinton and his foreign policy lieutenant Warren Christopher continue in the future as they have in the past, the campaign to socialize the United States may also be phased out by another no-win type Vietnam War, or even another World War. As an example, a brief news item noted that "As US troops tried to disembark in Haiti the Associated Press reported, 'Their warship was blocked from docking and embassy personnel were chased away from the port by an angry mob.' Clinton officials claimed the mob did not represent the true opinion of most Haitians. But given the administration's bungling of the Somalian venture, it's questionable how much President Clinton knows about any area of the world beyond Hope, Ark. The major aim of US policy in Haiti is to restore to power deposed and exiled President Jean-Bertrand Aristide, the defrocked Catholic priest and practitioner of liberation theology. Why is Mr. Clinton supporting a man who couldn't hold a job in his church or his country?"

But Clinton's forte is said to be domestic affairs. And when, after considerable delay, it came time to give Congress more details about Hillary's health care plan (which lies at the heart of the attempt to introduce fascist control over individuals) Bill and Hillary met an estimated 70 supporters of the measure. He spoke eloquently and convincingly of the plan which is still in a tentative stage. As he spoke he added that his crime bill was almost ready to be delivered to Congress. Then he bowed, turned the podium over the Hillary and departed to give another speech to another group promoting NAFTA. Here is a deadline that can be overlooked with fear. It has been announced that Congress will vote on NAFTA on November 17th, and the pro-NAFTA crusade is at fever pitch. An article by Scott Shepherd of the Washington bureau of our local daily, illustrates the race for votes. Headlined "President ready to go one-on-one with lawmakers over NAFTA passage," the article begins: "Rep. Buddy Darden, D-Ga, was visiting a town in his district early last week when he received an urgent message to call Navy Secretary John Dalton. Darden, a member of the House Appropriations Defense Subcommittee, assumed the call was about the Navy's budget or, perhaps, the Tailhook scandal that has embroiled the service. 'I want to talk to you about NAFTA,' Dalton told the Georgia congressman, once Darden got him on the phone. 'NAFTA,' replied an incredulous Darden. 'You've got to be kidding.' Dalton wasn't. Everyone in the Clinton administration has been called on to lobby for congressional approval of the pact. And they have used the entire political box - the news media, grass roots organizing, education sessions for community opinion leaders, even old fashioned horse trading - in their uphill battle on Capital Hill....White House strategists calculate that Clinton must win at least two House votes a day if NAFTA is to survive the crucial House vote. Even then, they believe it could come down to a one-vote majority of victory, reminiscent of the dramatic razor--thin passage of the president's budget measure earlier this year."

This being a do-or-die vote on the life or death of American sovereignty, permit us to do our voting by adding a few facts that may not have been previously mentioned concerning this alleged free trade agreement. We have a dear friend who supplies us with clippings and often does important research on items which, with our limited staff, we cannot do adequately. And we are reminded that "Mexico is on our border, not 90 miles off shore, and old articles as well as current releases point out that in Mexico City Soviets have one of its biggest centers for KGB spies. In the 2,000 pages of the Agreement (plus 65 pages of 'side deals') it is stated that trucks entering the United States from Mexico can no longer be custom inspected. The trucks must remain sealed while crossing the border. Which means these trucks could contain guns, drugs, spies, or whatever. We have no control. Recently Jay Rockefeller withdrew his support for NAFTA' said his State's economy was so bad that they cannot afford to lose any more jobs. Here is one Rockefeller we should support in his wise decision.

It has been said that President Bush was the originator of the NAFTA plan. Not true. President Kennedy initiated the scheme when he introduced to Congress the Trade Expansion Act of 1962. Some background material seems necessary. Shortly after the end of WWII and the creation of the United Nations, the idea of World Government was being seriously proposed as a means of preventing another world conflict and of insuring perpetual peace. Promoting the idea were many influential and well-financed organizations such as the United World Federalists, Union Now, Campaign for World Government, World Republic, Students for World Government, Atlantic Union Committee, World Citizenship Movement, Committee to Frame the World Constitution, etc. So extensive was this Crusade for World Government that President Harry Truman wrote on White House stationery a letter to Cord Meyer of UWF: "I am happy to extend greetings to the members of United World Federalists, Inc....From time to time, the increasing activities of your organization have come to my attention, and I must congratulate you on the patriotism and high sense of historical destiny that inspires your work....Very sincerely yours, Harry S. Truman." It may have been Divine intervention, but conservative Americans were awakened and able to halt at that time, the Crusade for World Government in the late 1940s.

Then the One Worlders sensed that any such direct crusade would not succeed. Another plan was adopted and the Interdependence of Nations was chosen as the better approach. So, in his Independence Day speech on July 4, 1962, President Kennedy said among other things: "We must move on from the ideal of national independence to interdependence upon other nations." Dan Smoot, author of The Invisible Government which exposed the activities of the Council on Foreign Relations, was one of the first to sense and publicly denounce the Interdependence scheme. In his newsletter, Dan Smoot Reports, of 8/6/62, he explained the new One Worlder scheme: "The drive toward integrating the United States into an international socialist system is being pushed on three broad fronts: political, military, and economic....In the economic field, the technique is to make America dependent on foreign sources of supply for critical materials and to make us so subject to foreign political-economic decisions that we will be forced to surrender control over our trade and commerce to an international authority which can regulate the trade of the world. The economic part of this three-pronged scheme is wrapped up in the Trade Expansion Act of 1962, because it is the most difficult to combat. President Kennedy has repeatedly called the Trade Expansion Act 'the most important piece of legislation before the country this year'." It was, and it was passed that year.

Smoot explained: "Although the Constitution gives Congress the power 'to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States,' the Trade Expansion Act of 1962 gives the President almost limitless authority to abolish or raise tariffs ... authorizes the President to subsidize business firms ... and to provide unemployment compensation for workers thus thrown out of jobs ... grants retroactive power to give subsidies to workers and businessmen who have been hurt by any tariff reductions made since 1934; and it sets no limit on amount ... In other words, the Trade Expansion Act of 1962 could establish, immediately, a communist-fascist type of governmental control over major American industries and millions of workers and could, within a few years, lead to the total communist-fascist state in the United States."

The Kennedy Trade Expansion Act of 1962 and the Bush-Clinton North American Free Trade Agreement are the same in purpose and goal. But they differ in detail and programming because of the adoption of new tactics by the International Planners after the creation of the Trilateral Commission in 1973. Under the Kennedy Plan there would be an international authority (GATT) which would regulate the trade of the world. GATT still exists and struggles to get all the nations to agree with its terms. So the Trilateral Commissioners and their New World Order elitists decided that it would be easier if instead of having only a central authority in a one world government, the world should be divided into three economic spheres; EUROPE, NAFTA, and EASTASIA. So with GATT acting as the Trade and Economic Cabinet in the Executive branch of One World Government, NAFTA would be a Regional branch of World Government. It is estimated that NAFTA would have some 200 costly three-nation councils, commissions, secretariats, tribunals, review boards, evaluation committees, dispute settlement panels, working groups, and administrative officers. "How many bureaucrats will staff these agencies, and who will pay them?" asks John Stormer, author of None Dare Call It Treason...25 years later," and editor of the newsletter Understanding the Times (Liberty Bell Press, POBox 32, Florissant, MO 63023. $29.95 for ten reports issued periodically).

The Kennedy Trade Expansion Act was never fully expanded, probably for two reasons: the assassination of its promoter, and his successor LBJ being too busy promoting his Great Society legislation and keeping an eye on the progress of the war in Vietnam and the social turmoil it occasioned domestically because of its unpopularity. But with the new programming of the One Worlders, NAFTA will become something of an addition to the still existing Kennedy Trade Expansion Act of 1962. Henry Kissinger said it best when, promoting NAFTA and suggesting that Clinton become more active in its promotion, explained: "NAFTA is not a conventional trade agreement but the architect of a new international system...the most creative step toward a new world order taken by any group of countries since the end of the Cold War."

To call NAFTA a free trade agreement is perpetrating a massive fraud on the millions of Americans and most of the Congressmen who support free trade but have never learned NAFTA provides managed trade, since few of them have read the 2000 pages of the agreement.

"It is natural for man to indulge in the illusions of hope. We are apt to shut our eyes against a painful truth...Is this the part of wise men, engaged in a great and arduous struggle for liberty? Are we disposed to be of the number of those who, having eyes, see not, and having ears, hear not, the things which so nearly concern their temporal salvation? For my part, what ever anguish of spirit it may cost, I am willing to know the whole truth; to know the worst and to provide for it." Patrick Henry.

A MORE PERFECT UNION?

The month of November, 1993, was meant to mark a most important time for the firming of the foundations upon which the New World Order is being constructed. On the first day of November the ratification of the Maastricht Treaty by twelve European governments was intended to signify the birth of the first of three regional economic spheres which were destined to become three Regional World Governments, serving the international power brokers as administrative departments of a One World Government. Next event: on the 17th day of November an affirmative vote by the United States House of Representatives would indicate the approval of the second of these three trilateral economic and political spheres. And finally, to complete the trilateral arrangement, on November 18th would begin a secret meeting in Seattle of the heads of state or finance ministers of 14 governments. Clandestinely, they would blueprint the creation of the third of these trilateral regional governments. Temporarily titled the Asia-Pacific Economic Cooperation council (APEC), President Bill Clinton would chair the weekend summit. The reason for the trilateral arrangement: As George Orwell surmised in his 1984, and as Zbig Brzezinski reckoned in his proposal for the creation of the Trilateral Commission, central control of a global totalitarian government would be difficult to manage efficiently. Better the creation of three regional governments that would create their systems to coordinate with the super global system, dictated in this particular case by the UN's General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. So, it was intended that by the end of the month of November, 1993, the full growth or the budding of three proposed Regional World Governments would be established or at least initiated. EUROPE, NAFTA, APEC, these three would be formed to serve as the administrative departments of UNO.

As for EUROPE, its creation wasn't easy. After years of planning and negotiating following the end of the first world war, heads of state or representatives of the twelve European nations finally met December 1991 in Maastricht, a Dutch city, where a treaty was drawn up. It was to be ratified by November 1st, 1993. Last to ratify the treaty was Helmut Kohl of Germany, who held out for the establishment of the European Central Bank in Frankfurt, Germany. The Information Center of the German Government reported on November 5th: "After a long and difficult process of ratifications, the Maastricht treaty outlining the path toward European unity went into effect on Monday (11/1/93). The main points of the treaty...are economic and currency union, a joint foreign security policy, as well as a concerted effort to combat organized crime. The treaty also grants expanded power to the European parliament...The most important decision to be reached concerned the location of the European Monetary Institute, predecessor of the future EC central bank. The EC heads of state agreed to locate it in Frankfurt...The long and painful process of ratification over the past two years made clear the doubts and fears many Europeans bring to the process of European unity...Two member states, Denmark and France, chose popular referendums. In Denmark the treaty was first rejected by the voters, and then approved in a second vote after exceptions for Denmark were made. It was only narrowly approved in France." (Unquote). Confirming the German opinion was that of the Brussels correspondent of the British The Economist: "No champagne, no grand speeches. Will its birth on November 1st - All Saints Day - condemn the European Union to a life of woe? Jacques Delors, president of the European Commission and intellectual father of the new union, last week echoed Franklin Roosevelt by saying that Europe 'needs a New Deal so that it can be both powerful and more united'." Then came the shocker: "This week Edmund Stoiber, the Premier of Bavaria and supposedly an ally of Mr. Kohl declared, 'We are no longer striving for a European federal state. Europe is more than the European Community. I want a simple confederation. That means that the nation states maintain their dominant role, at least as far as internal matters are concerned.' The dreamers of Maastricht was being told to wake up." As of this writing EUROPE may not become the Regional World Government the power brokers intended it to be. A confederation of governments would mean that the government would still exist and maintain a semblance of sovereignty and independence and, as The Economist commented, this is "not the union they (the elitists) intended."

Meanwhile, in our part of the world the New World Order moved a giant step toward completion as Clinton and staff bought, traded, dealt, threatened boycott, and promised protection against free trade, (as with tomatoes) in order to gain more than enough votes to ensure passage in the House of the North American Free Trade Agreement. Passed by the House, now NAFTA must be approved by the Senate, probably already has been done. Then Canada and Mexico must legally approve of NAFTA before it can take effect on Jan. 1. One question remains. NAFTA, which is already in effect between Canada and the USA, is in trouble. The new government of Canada, headed by Prime Minister Jean Chretien, is dissatisfied with NAFTA as is, will probably demand some adjustments before "proclaiming" NAFTA as their law of the land. According to a survey made by Windsor University (Ontario) merchants in Windsor (population just under 200,000) are losing nearly $7.6 million a month in sales due to Canadians shopping across the border in the cheaper USA. USA retailers are increasing the pressure by building new superstores and outlet malls near border crossings and advertising in Canadian newspapers. The effect is evident in a drive through downtown Windsor, where 40% of retail space is empty. That's how NAFTA is working with Canada. Expect much the same in reverse in Mexico.

Regardless of weeks of debate and discussion, print media propaganda and TV and radio talk shows, while listening to the final arguments via C-Span, we are convinced that the majority of the Congressmen, both Democrat and Republican, didn't really know what NAFTA is all about. Talk was of free trade when it isn't. Talk was of more jobs when the reverse is true. Little was said of the loss of national sovereignty and personal independence. There was talk of great economic growth, but nothing was said of this being for the benefit of the power brokers at the expense of workers and the middle class. Henry Kissinger said it best, but nobody listened. He said, "NAFTA is not a conventional trade agreement but the architecture of a new international system ... the most creative step toward a new world order taken by any group of countries since the end of the Cold War." (Emphasis added).

With NAFTA ready to be put in place in the New World Order, now comes the need to improve and strengthen its global superior: GATT (General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade). Gatt intends to take all these regional economic spheres and harmonize the whole world. GATT's new Director General is Ireland's Peter Sutherland, who played a big role in creating the European Community single market (now a part of EUROPE). Power to International Bureaucracies under NATO is the goal in both NAFTA and GATT.

When Clinton knew the outcome of the House vote on NAFTA, he went to Seattle where yet another foreign policy matter demanded attention. APEC was holding its fifth annual meeting and he, as President of the United States, was called upon to chair the clandestine gathering of some 14 heads of state or finance ministers of the Asian Pacific countries. It was reported that the Pacific Asian governments became worried when the European Community and NAFTA were formed for the so-called purpose of establishing free trade zones. So they started a free trade zone of their own, which was reportedly taken over by the Insiders. APEC is composed of the US, Canada, China, Japan, Australia, South Korea, Hong Kong, Taiwan, Singapore, Thailand, Indonesia, Malaysia, the Philippines, New Zealand and Brunei. Said Amy Kaslow of The Christian Science Monitor, if NAFTA is rejected then "APEC will likely induct Mexico next week, Treasury Secretary Lloyd Bentsen told The Monitor." This brings up a point that may not be clear. EUROPE presently has twelve members. But it is free to accept others, including the countries of Eastern Europe, North Africa, and other countries. The same is true of NAFTA. There are only three nations presently involved, the US, Canada and Mexico. But all the other nations of Central and South America are expected to join if NAFTA survives. Likewise the 14 nations of APEC which has invited Mexico to join. Eventually all the nations of the world are expected to sacrifice their sovereignty, do away with borders, and their people to become citizens of the world. Managed world control of trade and commerce is the first step. Economics before politics is the marching order.

We have no news concerning what actually transpired as the 14 heads of state or trade and commerce ministers met in Seattle over the weekend beginning November 19. But, according to Australian Trade and Commerce Minister of Australia, "I'm not so worried about an APEC free-trade agreement before the end of the century." And, he added, "If we're worried about losing a few jobs to Mexico, has anybody been to China lately?"

His foreign policy tasks completed or tabled, President Clinton is now doing what he seems to like best; promoting the Clinton's Health Care Plan. Syndicated columnist Cal Thomas warned, "Before we begin discerning the proposed health care reforms of the Clinton administration, it should be noted there is one element not included in the voluminous document; trust. Do we trust Bill and Hillary Clinton enough to allow them to completely renovate America's health care system? We put our safety and lives in the hands of other people every day. We either trust them because of our personal experience with them, or we trust them explicitly because of their training and the standards enforced in their profession. The former group would include doctors. A lot of us know our doctors well. The latter would include airline pilots, whom we probably never even see, much less meet. If I have demonstrated no reason to trust in the ability of President Clinton and his administration to 'fix' the economy or a workable foreign policy, I certainly won't trust them to design a health care system. Why? Because a flawed philosophy about humanity and government - that it is and should be our redeemer - permeates all of their policies, and rules their proposed health care reform package. It is clear that if the central portions of the Clinton health care plan are approved, the quality of a person's life, as demonstrated by a huge government bureaucracy, will replace the intrinsic value, or sanctity, of life. When that trade is made, there will be no stopping government from self-deification, especially in matters involving life and death - such as whether to grant healing potions and costly surgery to people who are, according to a government formula, no longer judged fit to live." (Unquote).

In past reports we have mentioned Bill Clinton's fondness for Fascist programs and principles. This is especially true in the case of health reform. Thomas J. Dilorenzo of the Cato Institute and professor of economics at Loyola College in Baltimore wrote an article which appeared in the 10/26/93 issue of the Western Edition of The Wall Street Journal. The article was headlined "Clinton Health Plan Salutes Italy's Past." First paragraph: "President Clinton has stated that his health care reform plan is based primarily on Germany's system. But the proposal also has roots in the industrial policies of another European country, Italy." Dilorenzo might have explained that Fascism and Nazism were of the same breed of National Socialism and that Clinton may have said Germany instead of Italy because Fascism still carries a peculiar odor to most Americans. After reading Professor Dilorenzo's article we can suggest that the Clinton health care plan might have been written by Benito Mussolini himself. The Clinton plan provides for a National Health Board of seven presidential appointees. This Board would have the power to set health care budgets. Companies with more than 5,000 employes could form their own "corporate alliances" (Mussolini called them "confederations"), but they would be strictly regulated by the National Health Board. And no room is provided for consumers, doctors, insurers or employers in the plan. Fausto Pitgiani, an apologist for Mussolini is quoted: "These corporations (or corporate alliances) were to 'ensure government control over the relations that employers, employees and consumers had with one another'." Dilorenzo explains: "Italy's government planners believed that regional industry alliances overseen by a national planning board would reinvent government in a way that would render it 'vigorous, careful and efficient.'...Most people equate fascism only with racism and anti-Semitism, but there was also an economic philosophy, known as corporatism, that was part of its ideology. The Clintons have adopted 1930s-era corporatism as the organizing principle of their health reform."

It is rumored that the Clintons also are promoting a government ID card with a computer chip capable of storing 50 to 60 pages of data; enough to include one's medical, tax, employment, affiliations, legal and other records. According to The Lyke Report (11/93), "Ira Magaziner, the meddlesome aide who has Hillary Clinton's ear, wants to issue every American one of these cards at birth. This would allow the feds to keep careful watch of us throughout our lives." For the government, knowledge is power, and the more it knows about us, the easier it is to control us. The American people have a history of demanding a certain degree of privacy and independence. Our Nation's birth certificate, the Declaration of Independence, spoke of swarms of British bureaucrats harassing us. Are swarms of American bureaucrats less tolerable?

"He that justifieth the wicked, and he that condemneth the just, even they both are abomination to the Lord." (Proverbs 17:15).

ADMINISTRATIVE AFTERMATH

Future historians will probably report that the Clinton Administration and the 103rd US Congress combined to create a period that was the most destructive of America and the American Way of Life in the Nations' history. It may be recorded by some future historian that the legislative year of 1993 was climaxed by the passage of the Brady bill. Not that the bill was so important in itself, but that it became the first step in the fabian legislative progression that would end with the confiscation and abolition of all firearms in the hands of civilians. The Brady bill was a cliffhanger that got pushed over the cliff. A fillibuster had halted its passage. But the Senators were anxious to get away. Time was running out. The holiday season was upon them. Besides, there wasn't much more they could do to aid the Clintonistas in what remained of 1993. So Senator Doyle talked other Republican Senators into ending the fillibuster and letting the vote be taken. A few days before that the Republicans had outvoted the Democrats in the passage of NAFTA, so the American workers and the middle class were disgusted and distrustful of both political parties and a Socialist Party might take charge and rule the Nation as well as its government which would then become a part of a Socialized World Government. However, there was nothing to be done for the rest of the Clinton program before Congress reassembled next January 25th. Hillary's Health Security Program and Bill's Anti-Crime Security Program must await further crusading and the passage of time.

In its expected tribute to Clinton and his administration The Washington Post reported that "Clinton's rocky start - including the controversy over homosexuals in the military, his difficulty in finding an attorney general and defeat of his economic stimulus program - gradually gave way to big victories on bigger issues like deficit reduction and NAFTA... Some of the victories were achieved at substantial cost, including real dollars for porkbarrel deals and the less tangible currency of political capital and public image. Most costly of all may be the notion that the administration is a soft touch for political favors... He will need a coalition of both [Republicans and Democrats] for next year's battles over new welfare and job training legislation, as well as health care."

In tabulating the most important (and most devastating?) accomplishments of Clinton and Congress in 1993, Associated Press listed the following:

- * The Family Leave bill, requiring companies employing 50 or more people to provide up to 12 weeks of unpaid leave for workers with new children or sick family members.
- * A bill providing for $18.8 billion to bail out the recession-battered savings and loan industry. This brings the total taxpayer cost of S&L failures to more than $150 billion.
- * National Service programs, which give students up to $9,450 in education aid for performing community service.
- * The "motor voter" bill allowing people to register to vote when they get their driver's license, or sign up by mail.

There are a string of other bills, mostly bills that Bush had vetoed, but very little has been said about how the government is going to get the money to pay for them. Whenever it is possible, costs will be paid by businesses, by states, with money saved by reducing federal services in other ways. Still to come when Congress reassembles next January are Hillary's Health Care Plan, and Bill's Anti-Crime program. The Health Care plan has been submitted to both the House and Senate and is being studied very carefully. Much revision is to be expected before a bill is actually presented for full discussion and vote. As for anti-crime legislation, both the House and Senate have passed separate versions of crime legislation before adjourning, but the differences must be ironed out and approved. Clinton says he wants a bill that would put up to 100,000 new policemen on the streets, authorize the building of more prisons, ban assault weapons, and set up boot camps to keep youthful offenders from becoming hardened criminals.

Something new about the health care legislation. The "Smart Card" idea has been abandoned. Originally, the Government Health Security Card was to contain a chip which would contain a complete dossier of a person's activities, property, financial assets, health record, crime record if any, and anything else that seemed important to Big Brother or Big Sister. But the authorities became worried because "the information Clinton's crew is planning to gather on all Americans may be so sensitive that the administration doesn't want it on Smart Cards. They don't want enterprising young computer hacks taking their National Health Security Cards apart to see how they work and what data is being listed in them. So, the Health Security Card will contain only a magnetic strip with personal account information and a personal identification for personal security purposes."

Of course, this doesn't mean that the Smart Card is not to be used in other ways. Spotlight (11/29/93) reports that "High-powered Smart Cards are already in use in several federal programs, and they are being issued by many more federal agencies as personal IDs, bank payroll cards and passports (complete with a computerized palm-print)... But now, instead of the frightful computerized Smart Cards we've been exploring and explaining here, it looks like the National Health Security cards may turn out to be downright dumb. Does the new Health Security 'Dumb' Card represent a victory in the war on Americans' personal privacy? Not likely. ... Instead of relying on highly sophisticated, computerized Smart Cards to hold Americans hostage, it appears that the health plan's declared intention PS. Previously we wrote that the Brady bill was important because it was "the first step in the fabian legislative progression that would end with the confiscation and abolition of all firearms in the hands of all civilians. We have just learned how the Brady bill was passed, thanks to a report by Clifford Krass of the NYTimes. "After days of personal animus and backroom dealing," he wrote, "Republicans backed down [and] the bill passed without debate with only three Senators sitting in a chamber emptied by the Thanksgiving holiday. As Vice President Al Gore and Mark Hatfield ... watched ... the two Senate leaders, Bob Dole of Kansas and George Mitchell of Maine, pronounced the measure adopted by unanimous consent." The Boston Globe added: "Vice President Al Gore slipped into his chair as presiding officer of the Senate to call quickly for a voice vote on the bill. He gavelled it through without objection after Dole agreed not to call for a quorum." You may recall, the bill that created the Federal Reserve System was passed similarly. Principal difference: Federal Reserve bill was passed with only a handful of Senators sitting, due to the Christmas holiday.

is to create a large, powerful database which is capable of accomplishing the same thing.... The technologies are different, but the effect will be identical."

A Shrinking Superpower was the title given the United States in the lead article in the December issue of The World Press Review. It reported that much was made of the humiliation suffered by America in regard to Somalia and Haiti. The cover story began: "As the world's last superpower, the United States took for granted that it would rule the roost in what George Bush labeled the New World Order. But in two days in October, with its troops gunned down in Somalia and kept out of Port-au-Prince by a raggedy goon squad, the Clinton administration was compelled to rethink its role... Around the world, editorial opinion overwhelmingly saw the two incidents - for better or worse - as a US defeat and, perhaps, the end of an era... Middle America is thinking that its sons, whose bodies it watched being dragged around Mogadishu on television, died to no avail. Americans are having trouble grasping how Bill Clinton is trying to disengage from the Somali quagmire, or why pulling out scheduled for March 31, 1994, had to be preceded by a buildup of the US contingent.... Hence the question is being asked of Clinton by the amateurishness of the president's decision: Does the US still have a foreign policy? And the Independent of London questioned the use of American troops as mercenaries of the UN, said, "The fact that US forces must operate with the UN is the best reason that Americans should be kept at home." And here in America there again is developing a growing distrust of the UN and our intimate association with its policies. Senator Robert Byrd, a Democrat from West Virginia, told his fellow senators: "I do not see in the front of this chamber the UN flag. I have never saluted the UN flag. I salute Old Glory, the American flag."

Last January President Clinton indicated to the people that he was going to concentrate on domestic issues, such as reforming the health care program, reinventing government, and such, while letting Warren Christopher and his foreign policy team handle foreign affairs. But if C. L. Cuddy is right, this was in one sense, a ruse on Clinton's part from the very beginning. He wanted to have the people believe that he was the peoples' man, not an instrument of the Socialist World Order. Professor Cuddy is a widely published national commentator, author of the book "Now is the Dawning of the New Age New World Order." In his most recent article titled "Regional Trading Blocs: Toward The New World Order," he wrote:

"Many have wondered why the globalists would have allowed one of their strongest supporters of the New World Order, President Bush, to be defeated. The answer lies in the importance of NAFTA to them, because without NAFTA there couldn't be expected trade agreements with Asia-Pacific, without which there couldn't be a managed one-world economy, without which there wouldn't be a one-world government. If George Bush had been re-elected president, Democrat support for NAFTA in the US House would not have been even the 40% that it was, and the trade agreement would have been defeated. ... NAFTA (along with the European Community and other regional economic alliances) is a necessary intermediate step in the globalists' plan for a one-world government. If 'Big Brother' had come forward requesting that nations give up their sovereignty, he would have been forcefully resisted. But if a one-world economy could be first created and accepted by the people of the world, then some regulatory body (world government) would become a necessity." So, according to Professor Cuddy, Clinton had to be president if NAFTA were to be approved. If Bush, a Republican, had been president, the Democrats in the House would have voted against NAFTA. Even with Clinton, claiming himself to be a Democrat, as president, 60% of the Democrats voted against NAFTA and the victory had to be bought. The creation of a one-world economy, which the globalists misnamed free trade, was essential to their plans. It follows, then, that on the very day that had been appointed for the vote on NAFTA, and upon hearing the result of the vote, President Clinton flew to Seattle where he would address leaders of the Asian Pacific Economic Conference. NAFTA was only the beginning in the Asian Pacific part of the world, and a one-world economy had to be created first and accepted by the people before a world-government could be demanded by the people. So now, along with NAFTA and APEC, we find Clinton toadying to Communist China which must join the interconnected, virtually borderless world. And we have the Clinton Administration being very kind and helpful to Boris Yeltsin of Russia, and being very gentle with the nations of Eastern Europe that once were part of or were dominated by the USSR.

Clinton did deliver NAFTA to the globalists, but in other affairs of New World Order import, there was considerable confusion and chaos. Clinton will go to Moscow in January to confer with Yeltsin. At this writing Christopher was in Rome conferring with the foreign ministers of the 53 countries that are members of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe (CSCE), probably trying to explain that America really does have a foreign policy. From Rome he was to go to the Middle East where the conflict between Arabs and Jews became more serious after their leaders agreed to seek peace. US Trade Representative Mickey Kantor and Agriculture Secretary Mike Espy were in Brussels trying to get disputes regarding GATT settled before a 12/15/93 deadline. Al Gore was in Mexico City explaining how the selected bureaucrats from 3 countries would work together as dictatorial managers of trade. Clinton had met with Salman Rushdie "to underscore the importance of free speech" and the Iranian chief justice called Clinton "the most detested man in the Muslim world" who had shown disregard for the feelings of 7 million American Muslims. Meanwhile American diplomats began worrying about a civil war between Macedonian Orthodox Christians and Albanian Muslims which threatens to spill over and involve Greece or Serbia or Bulgaria or Turkey or all of them. Said J de Courcy of Intelligence Digest, "The spread of fighting would almost certainly bring American troops into the conflict. The presence of 315 American soldiers serving under the UN flag would not be a sufficient deterrent (and) a European problem would have become an American problem." So, internationally all seemed confusion and chaos, while at home our Nation is dying under socialism, confiscation and collapse. Said the Preacher:

"Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter: Fear God and keep his commandments: for this is the duty of man. For God shall bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evil." (Ec. 12:13,14).

Year Forty.....Number Twenty-Five.....December 20, 1993

BIRTH OF REGIONALISM

Fifty years ago - November 28, 1943, to be precise - three men sat in the plush comfort of a Persian villa, toasting and testing each other. These three were men of great prestige, men with commanding authority, men in control of military and political power such as had never been known up to that time. They had come together for the first time, and their meeting marked the first in a long and frequent series of superpower summits at which heads of state or government get together to receive and formulate plans for the conduct of nations. At this original summit fifty years ago these three heads of government met to solidify plans for the defeat of Hitler, to discuss postwar collective security, to redraw the boundary lines of many nations of Europe, to cut in half some nations, to cut chunks off others, to build new ones, and eventually to reshape the world and establish what would come to be known as a New World Order.

These three men, as you've guessed, were Franklin Delano Roosevelt, President of the United States, Winston Churchill, Prime Minister of the United Kingdom, and Joseph Stalin, Dictator of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, or "Uncle Joe," as Roosevelt called him. They spent four days in discussion, planning, and reshaping the map of Europe. The meetings were supposed to be secret and about all that was said of them at the time was said in a statement: "What was promised at Teheran was confirmed at Yalta." In The Yalta Betrayal, by Felix Witmer, there is a chapter titled "The Failure of Teheran." We quote, beginning on page 49: "The Teheran Conference occurred long before Americans were told that the nation's survival depended on a fourth term of the one and only who could 'handle' Kremlin Joe. Yet, even at Teheran, Roosevelt was not always master over his mind. An extremely high authority 'who may not be identified' described Roosevelt's condition as follow, '...At Teheran there were signs of loss of memory. At Yalta he could neither think consecutively nor express himself coherently.' This was the man who in the course of a decade, had made it sufficiently clear that advisers of a strong contrary opinion were not welcome. This was the man upon whom the fate of the West mostly depended. Naturally, the American delegates at Teheran ... did everything possible to please the boss of the world revolution [Stalin]. Germany was, of course, to be dismembered... Secretly it was agreed to let Russia have not only eastern Poland but also part of Finland, the Baltic States, and chunks of Roumania. It was secretly agreed to support the Yugoslav Communist Joseph Broz Tito and desert our pro-Western, antitotalitarian friend, General Mihailovich. Secretly it was also agreed to encourage 'people's democracies' which were 'friendly to Russia' all along the Soviet boundaries. As everyone knows, upon his return to the United States, Roosevelt told a practically captivated joint session of Congress that no secret arrangements had been made." ("The Yalta Betrayal," by Felix Witmer. The Caxton Printers, Ltd., Caldwell, Idaho, 1953.)

Forty years later, an entirely different description of the mental condition of FDR, written by Charles Hanley of the Associated Press, was printed. In an article published on 11/28/93 Hanley wrote, and we quote for purpose of comparison, a part of that article: "For a crippled US president, the old city of mosques and bazaars was a long haul from the White House. But Roosevelt wanted face-to-face talks with Stalin to try out the celebrated FDR charm on a difficult ally, and the Kremlin chief would venture no farther [than Teheran] from home. Topic No. 1 was military strategy, finishing off Hitler. Then Roosevelt quickly turned to his plan for keeping a hard-won peace. Once the war ended, he knew, Americans would instinctively withdraw from the outside world as they did after World War I. 'To keep the US from reverting to isolationism,' historian Arthur M Schleginger Jr. wrote recently, 'President Roosevelt arranged for the establishment of a permanent international structure while the war was still on.' In head-to-head sessions, with only their interpreters at their sides, Stalin accepted Roosevelt's vision of a United Nations that would maintain world peace through power. The United States, the Soviet Union, Britain and China, 'The Four Policemen,' Roosevelt dubbed them, would be the peacemakers. But this police work became paralyzed by US-Soviet hostility in the decades to come."

We might suggest that in his research regarding the Teheran summit, someone or something got his characters reversed. He would have been more accurate had he written, "Roosevelt accepted Stalin's vision of a United Nations that would maintain world peace through power." In the final analysis, who said it first makes little difference. Both Roosevelt and Stalin were Globalists. Stalin wanted control over people; Roosevelt wanted to be President of the World; and both were agents of the Elite Cabal which intends that its members shall control the world. In his historically important book, Architects of Conspiracy, William P. Hoar wrote, "At Teheran, Roosevelt had totally agreed to Stalin's demands, later formulated at Yalta and other conferences. In the meantime there was that Fourth term to be won ... Roosevelt, of course, won that race. Prime Minister Churchill, on the other hand, was soon turned out of office... A month before the 'Big Three' were to meet for yet another summit conference in the Crimea [Yalta 2/3/45] Churchill candidly wrote to Roosevelt, 'I think the end of this war may well prove to be more disappointing than was the last.' Roosevelt was ill, but against the advice of all his advisers he traveled to Soviet soil to avoid disappointing Stalin. Some two months later, FDR was dead."

Regarding the Teheran summit, John T. Flynn noted in his The Roosevelt Myth, "The conference of the Big Three lasted from November 28 to December 1. When it ended the world learned what the communique told it. Once again 'they had met, they had talked, they had resolved.' Resolved what? They would work together. They had concerted plans that would guarantee victory. They would forge a peace after the war that would command the good will of the world and banish the scourge of war for generations. They had surveyed the future. They would seek the cooperation of all nations opposed to slavery and intolerance in the Family of Nations." As Hanley of AP wrote: "The Four Policemen [USSR, USA, UK, China] Roosevelt dubbed them, would be the peacemakers. But this police work became paralyzed by US-Soviet hostility in the decades to come." The Cold War hostility was, of course, an essential part of the plan of the Globalists. The historical dialectic involved the development of the USSR to become the antithesis to America's thesis, the two of them to oppose each other until it was time for them to become 'merged' in the synthesis that would be the New World Order in which both the USA and the USSR would be merged and become provinces in the new thesis that would be Socialist World Government.

In Charles Hanley's recent analysis of the Teheran summit which occurred 50 years ago, he wrote: "Maybe 'Uncle Joe' Stalin had a point.... In fact, it was the Soviet dictator Stalin who hit on a peacekeeping scheme that might help today's leaders find their way. That idea, for regional rather than global peacekeeping, is gaining new support in Washington and elsewhere. The planned inclusion of ex-communist nations in NATO, for example, will make that alliance more clearly responsive for Europe's peace. The current push for African governments to help Somalia, following an all-African peacekeeping effort in Liberia, could lead to other future 'African solutions.'...But the give-and-take of Teheran may offer clues to a solution.... Stalin at first argued for establishing regional, not global peacekeeping responsibilities. Europeans should be responsible for Europe, he said, Asians for Asia. A half century later, the world seems to be coming around to the old tyrant's view. The Clinton administration is preparing a new peacekeeping policy that reportedly will call for regional groups to play a bigger role. The world has the advantage of hindsight, of 50 years' experience since Teheran, a secretive summit where a US president cheerily toasted the still-unborn United Nations as 'a rainbow in the sky'."

Could this be coincidence? Fifty years ago while FDR and "Uncle Joe" were talking of a "United Nations that would maintain peace through power," other lackeys of the Conspiracy were busily inditing the draft of the Charter of the United Nations. When completed and approved by the United States Senate, Chapter Eight of the Charter dealt with "Regional Arrangements." Article 52 states, "Nothing in the present Charter precludes the existence of regional arrangements or agencies for dealing with such matters relating to the maintenance of international peace and security as are appropriate for regional action," and Article 53 adds: "The Security Council shall, where appropriate, utilize such regional arrangements or agencies for enforcement action under its authority." (Underlining added).

And would the following also have been coincidental? "About 50 years ago there was a debate among the globalists as to whether they could achieve a one-world government and economy all at once, or whether a better strategy would be first to create regional economic alliances (e.g. NAFTA) that could then be joined together more easily. In America and the New World Order (1940) Graeme Howard argued regarding 'the framework for support of the new world order' that 'promising both a more ethical and a more realistic solution is the formation of regional economic entities....Cooperative regionalism (will) bring about a better world order through internationally balanced economic and political regional blocs.' Similarly M.J. Bonn proclaimed in 'The New World Order,' which was published in the July 1941 edition of The Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science that 'national planning means deliberate international anarchy...But we are not yet going to have a world state... The formation of regional federations by hitherto autonomous groups is much easier...With every move a step toward a new world order is taken.'

And the next year in Post-War Worlds, P.E. Corbett wrote: 'A world association binding together and coordinating regional groupings of states may evolve toward one universal federal government, as in the past loose confederations have grown into federal unions...World Government is the ultimate aim, but there is more chance of attaining it by gradual development.'...Today, NAFTA is the latest step in the fulfillment of the globalists plans." (D.L. Cuddy, Ph.D. in "Regional Trading Blocs: Key Steps Toward the New World Order." Underlining added for emphasis).

In the United States, the first step toward global regionalism was taken at the national level. On 3/7/69 President Nixon, through the Government Reorganization Act divided the United States into ten Federal Regions. To further implement and empower these Regions, he signed Executive Order 11649 and entered it into the Federal Register 2/12/72. He thereby established a Federal Regional Council, or Capitol, for each of the ten Regions. The second step was the creation of NAFTA, "not a conventional trade agreement but the architecture of a new international system," declared CFR and Trilateralist member Henry Kissinger. Final step in this scheme will be the merging of Regional Governments such as NAFTA into a Corporative Socialist (Fascist) World Government (UNO). But if people know the truth, and act, there is yet time, the Lord permitting. We are a covenanted nation, and we did violate the covenant.

On Sunday, December 12, our County received an early and completely unexpected Christmas message. 'God Says Take a Stand' proclaimed a big, black, seven-column headline on the front page of our local daily The Palm Beach Post. It was a message describing "A Battle for America's Soul." It said "Reveille has sounded in America, and conservative Christians are rising from the pews and heading for the precincts, striving to build an alliance between God and government. They're fed up with crime, sick of what they see on television, appalled by what's happening in the schools. And they're angry that secular America wants God confined to the churches." In nearly three full pages, beginning with page 1, testimony and comment included statements such as these: "Our founding fathers never intended to keep God out of government. Let's put Him back." ... "Nearly all point to one watershed event that planted the seeds for the movement: the US Supreme Court's 1962 decision banning prayer in public schools. That marked the beginning of the decline of America. SAT scores fell, crime, divorce and teenage pregnancy rates rose." ... "Why the call to arms now? Start with President Clinton. He announced he would lift the ban in the military; pledged support for the Freedom of Choice Act; announced his support for the abortion pill RU-486; ordered US military hospitals to provide abortions to American servicewomen; legalized the use of fetal tissue for medical research; and appointed homosexuals to his administration." ... "Our president declared war on God," said a Baptist minister. Another gave this message to his congregation: "God's Word has answers to the problems of our personal lives and the problems of our nation," ... "And God Says Take a Stand!" Understand the significance of this: A message such as this in a commercial daily newspaper in America, just a fortnight before we celebrate the birth of our King and Redeemer. Let the message be heard throughout the land.

Year Forty-One.....Number One.....January 3, 1994

STATE OF THE UNION, 1994

The advent of A.D. 1994 made it one down and three to go for Americans living under the reign of Bill, Hillary, Al and their Socialist Associates. And it may be one year down and seven years to go for the Clintons and the New Agers if the legislative successes in their first year are indicative. That would take America to Global 2000 and all the world to the dawning of the Age of Aquarius and the formal inauguration of the New World Order. By that time the total destruction of what was once a Sovereign Republic under God will have been completed, along with the end of Christian civilization. During this past year there were two giant political steps taken by the Clintonistas, with the US Congress aiding and abetting. These two steps were the passage of the North American Free Trade Agreement, and the Brady Gun Bill. Worst of all, the Republicans did it for the Clintonistas. When the history of the era is written, the shame and the blame will be placed on the Party that once called itself conservative and opposed to the liberal policies of the Democrats. For NAFTA, 27 Democratic Senators voted yes, but 28 voted no; while 34 Republican Senators voted yes, and only 10 voted no. As for the Brady Bill, the leading Republican Senator made its passage possible. The Senate vote was taken just before the Congressional break at Thanksgiving, and there were only three Senators on the floor at the time. So the Brady Bill was passed by a vote of 3 to 0, this due to a deal made by one of the three, Senator Bob Dole of Kansas, who just might be the Republican candidate to oppose Bill Clinton in the next presidential election. The CFR likes to plan things that way.

Both NAFTA and the Brady Gun Bill were required intermediate steps in the march toward the New World Order; NAFTA to destroy sovereignty and independence, the Brady Bill to break the ice so that total disarmament of the people through later legislation would prevent effective resistance to the plans of the globalists. So, immediately after NAFTA was approved by Congress, Clinton was on his way to Seattle where the Asia-Pacific Economic Cooperation (APEC) summit was being held. "It was no secret that Mr. Clinton intended to use both NAFTA and APEC to advance the stalled General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) summit before his 'fast track' authority expired on December 15," wrote William F. Jasper in The New American (12/27/93). Last March 27-28 the Trilateral Commission held a meeting in Washington, D.C. In the Chairmen's Report of that meeting, the three Trilateral Commission Chairmen; Paul Volcker representing North America, Otto Lamsdorff representing Europe, and Akio Morita representing Japan reported: "Increased interdependence is driving our countries toward convergence in areas once considered fully within the domestic purview. Some of these areas involve government regulatory policy, such as environmental standards, the fair treatment of workers, and taxation." While the Trilateralists welcome "the economic unification of the European Community and creating the North American Free Trade Area, those arrangements are in no way a substitute for a stronger and more comprehensive GATT (General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade)." So, as planned by the Trilateralists, on 11/18/93 NAFTA was approved by Congress. The same day Clinton was on his way to Seattle to address the member states and stress the importance of APEC. Then on 12/15/93, the Uruguayan Round of GATT was approved. "What has been kept secret from the American people is the fact that the whole NAFTA-APEC-GATT trade waltz has been expertly planned and choreographed by the same globalist insiders of the Council on Foreign Relations (CFR) and the Trilateral Commissioners (TC) who are also using concern over supposed 'crises' involving the environment, security, population, poverty, refugees, debt, and nuclear proliferation to empower the United Nations," wrote William Jasper in The New American.

The passage of the Brady Bill was, of course, a milestone, a turning point in the battle over the Second Amendment in the Bill of Rights. For more than two decades the political left has been pushing for federal registration of all guns, and the abolition of guns in the hands of the people. But there was that Second Amendment that had to be ignored and the political left was never strong enough to make the ownership of guns a federal offense. However, with the Clinton Administration, an unholy alliance of Socialists, liberal Congressmen and Senators, and the Establishment-controlled media, was mobilized and the anti-gun campaign that is unlike anything ever seen before in America's history is under way. Passage of the Brady Bill is just the beginning of an avalanche of gun control legislation. Next probably will come heavy taxes on all firearm and ammunition purchases, then the mandatory licensing of all American gun owners, the shutting down of firearms dealers, and finally the outlawing and confiscation of all firearms other than the military and those with police power. When confiscation of all firearms occurs, then will come not just the criminals who will have unlicensed firearms to rob and murder unarmed citizens, but also government agents such as the BATF, and the FBI of recent Waco and Weaver infamy, as well as the 100,000 members of the new National Police that Bill and Hillary are going to establish.

We mentioned the WACO horror created at the order of Attorney General Janet Reno and at the hands of the BATF, FBI, etc. Some later information has come to us from The American Heritage Institute, 5425 Lubbock, Texas, 69415. Following are excerpts:

"The emerging police state in this nation was boldly in evidence the week of December 9, 1993, in Texas. There in widely separated events, the following developments occurred in the sad case of the Branch Davidians: On Thursday, Dec. 9, agents for the Internal Revenue Service (IRS), bolstered by deputies from the McLennan County Sheriff's Department, raided a seller's auction at the Brittney Hotel in Waco. They shut down the auction, escorted residents of the hotel upstairs at gunpoint to get their clothes, changed locks on doors to the hotel and put the owner, Mark Domingue, his family and the other three families that reside there out on the streets of Waco. Domingue, a Christian man, had allowed some of the family members of the Branch Davidian children burned in the April 19th fire at the Mount Carmel complex to stay at the Brittney....After the raid, Domangue was told that it was not a criminal matter but was civil in nature....Following the incident, an attorney told Domangue the raid on the auction was retribution for his public comments and stance on the Branch Davidians. It was carried out, the attorney told him, essentially to quieten him and to 'give him something else to think about.'" (Unquote). An AP report confirmed the raid and said, "The federal government has seized the hotel where a number of surviving followers of David Koresh had been staying since an April 19th fire destroyed their home and killed many of their families."

In a general roundup of the Clintonista's legislative accomplishments for 1993 The Christian Science Monitor reported: "Judged by the numbers, Clinton off to good start. But he has abandoned some promises because of cost or consequences." There had been 191 roll-call votes in Congress and he prevailed on 86.4 percent according to vote studies published in the Congressional Quarterly. He promised to raise taxes on the wealthy and did so. But he also promised tax cuts on the middle class, and did not do so. That was, of course, in line with the New World Order plan which intends to do away with the middle class and leave only the very wealthy insiders who know how to avoid big taxes, and the poor who will be cared for by the One World Government from cradle to grave, in line with the ruling "from according to ability, to according to need." One of Clinton's major promises, which helped get him elected, was to cut the federal budget in half by the end of his four year term. The Congressional Budget Office says that by 1997 the cut would be about 25 percent, not 50 percent. He promised to invest $50 billion a year every year to create "millions of high-wage jobs," in what he called "the most dramatic economic-growth program since the Second World War." But up to the end of the year 1993, those high-wage jobs consisted of highway construction and similar jobs. The C.S.Monitor commented: "One of his greatest frustrations in office has been the inability to shift spending over what he sees as productive investments. The political climate, instead, keeps demanding more spending cuts." Which seems to imply that the middle class can expect more taxes on everything that can be taxed. And there remain the two priority programs that he had to hold over until 1994 or perhaps 1995. Those are Hillary's health care plan, and the revised welfare program. Exactly how the money is to be provided within the promised budget cuts is yet to be explained. They were promised for last year, but had to be held over. And it seems that these two programs are competing with each other in matters of promotion and popular acceptance. So it seems that Hillary's Health Care Plan will be given priority, and the Welfare Reform Program will be delayed until 1995. As for what it called "The Patient's-eye View," The Economist reported from Washington, DC, "It is time to question the conviction that Congress will pass some serious health-care reform next year. Bill Clinton's drive to pass such a reform in only the second year of his presidency is commendable. Less praiseworthy, though, is the fruit of his efforts, produced under Hillary Clinton's guidance. It would erect a rickety apparatus of new bureaucracies, obligations on employers and cross-subsidies. The question is how much of this can be converted into a plan that wins bipartisan support in Congress. The answer depends on how much the administration is willing to jettison to get a health-care bill through."

Regarding the delayed Welfare Reform, the NYTimes observed that "History suggests that Clinton's bold hopes will bow to reality. There are approximately 60,000 words in the administration's plan to overhaul the welfare system, but three of them have the potential to mock the rest and expose President Clinton's bold promises as empty slogans. Those words are 'Deficit neutral funds.' That means Mr. Clinton plans to finance an ambitious set of child care, education and work programs for people on welfare by cutting other programs for the poor." We are told that five million adults and nine million children receive Aid to Families with Dependent Children (AFDC). This program costs $27 billion a year. Medicaid and food stamps add about $40 billion to the bill. Then there's a $140 billion health insurance program for the elderly. Add a mere $6 billion for child care and training. Presently there are more than eight million Americans out of work. We have no estimate on that cost. But Clinton talks about raising the money for some of the programs by cutting other programs that are considered not as essential, and using that money to help finance his reformed welfare program. "The plan would be taking money from people who work, to give more to people who don't work," said Rep. Rick Santorum, Republican from Pennsylvania. Seems like Don McAlvany summed it up when he wrote: "The goal of the Clintonistas is to control people and confiscate their wealth."

After we had detailed in this Report the estimated cost of Hillary's Health Plan, the Commerce Department published a complete and comprehensive estimate of health care in 1994. It said that for the first time health care would exceed $1 trillion. That would be $118 million more than last year. It will account for a record of 15 percent of the nation's total output of goods and services in health care. The NYTimes noted that "Despite the government's efforts to control health costs, it (the Commerce Department) said doctors, hospitals and other providers will find alternative means to increase health care prices, hoard inventories and incur capital costs to be passed on to consumers." Which means that '15 percent' is just a guess. Health Care and Welfare are two of the five major items on the Clinton agenda. Others include the implementation of NAFTA, the distribution of a National Identification Card which all citizens must carry, and Total Gun Control. Other things to be accomplished during the Clinton administration include the implementation of the Crime Control Act of 1993 which has been passed by both Houses but must await a few changes before Clinton signs it. Then comes the installation of a National Police Force, enforcement of concocted environment rules and regulations, and socialization of the entire US economy which involves government control of housing, energy, insurance, the banks, government confiscation of wealth and private property, and a sharp increase in progressive taxation plus new forms of taxation still being discussed and yet to be written into law. And finally, a new currency.

The domestic matters taken care of, then there are the foreign affairs which will continue to humiliate, humble, and harass us in the eyes of the nations of the world, if nations still exist with the dawn of Global 2000. When VP Al Gore was in Moscow imploring Russians to "fight in behalf of Russia's future and linking US support for Boris Yeltsin to Yeltsin's commitment to reform," Yeltsin was losing an election to an ultranationalist upstart named Vladimir Zhirinovsky who had suddenly risen to challenge Yeltsin's reform policies. Gore's visit to Russia had been to congratulate Yeltsin on the approval of a new constitution and the election of a reform-minded Parliament. Instead, Gore found himself attacking Zhirinovsky and chiding Yeltsin for conducting an inept campaign, said the LATimes. And Clinton was "walking a tightrope on North Korea". There remained Haiti, Bosnia, Somalia, and the PLO-Israeli stalemate. All in all, this new year seems to be a bad one for both America and Americans.

But with the Lord in command of all things, we know there is hope.

"For we are saved by hope: but hope that is seen is not hope: for what a man seeth, why doth he yet hope for?" (Romans 8:24).

Year Forty-One.....Number Two.....January 17, 1994

CLINTONGATE

It must have seemed a difficult time for Bill Clinton, Bilderberger, Trilateralist, Council on Foreign Relations member, Rhodes Scholar, and President of the United States. His mother had just died, the possibly criminal ramifications of the Whitewater scandal were still being learned and published, the attacks on wife Hillary's health care plan were growing and some compromise was conceded. These and so many other unfinished domestic problems like welfare reform, trade adjustments following the passage of NAFTA and the agreement on GATT, plus charges concerning his alleged use of Arkansas State troopers to accommodate him in his sexual exploits; all these problems, programs, promises and denials had to be superseded by foreign policy decisions that must be made because he is the legal voice of America in international affairs. So he flew to Europe to seek approval as the world leader by the leaders of the six other countries comprising the Big Seven. First, he must attend a NATO summit in Brussels where the future role of this international defense unit must be determined, with the fear of Russia still hanging over the heads of the heads of NATO. Then Clinton would be forced to go to Moscow, to reassure and calm Boris Yeltsin, still smarting after the whipping he received in Russia's first free election. And on his ninth day, Clinton must go to Geneva where he will meet and talk with that ogre of the East, Hafez al-Assad of Syria, who has delighted in pitting Iran against Iraq, Muslims against Christians, and Arabs against Jews in order to maintain a military and political "balance of power in the Middle East.

When Clinton headed for Brussels and the NATO summit, a White House senior official who refused to be named said, "We're at a moment of extraordinary strategic importance." To indicate he knew what he was talking about, this senior advisor (CFR?) listed the questions of strategic importance for which Clinton should find the answers in Europe. He said that Clinton would learn (1) Whether market and democratic reform will continue in the former East bloc, or will Fascism (corporate state socialism) prevail; (2) Whether the border states will be able to trust Russia as a good neighbor or as an exploiter; (3) Whether Ukraine will give up the nuclear weapons it still possesses; (4) Whether Central Europe must look to the East in fear or to the West in confidence; (5) Whether NATO will be expanded to take in former Soviet Union captive states; and finally (6) What will the world trade agenda be like now that the Uruguay Round of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) is concluded? It is expected that Clinton will know the answers to these six key questions when he returns to the White House; and it is certain that the Establishment will know the answers before the questions were even asked.

Nevertheless, that final question is a worrisome one to the Elite because it is known that Mexico was the first "Third World" country that was to be turned into a "One World" country to be exploited by the Multinationals of Europe who have been held back previously by North American interests. What may have been a shock to the no-nation industrialists and the Central Bankers occurred on the first day that NAFTA became effective. On that day an supposedly unknown and comparatively well armed and commanded military force, the Zapatista Army of National Liberation seized six towns in the State of Chiapas, where poverty, disregard and disgust on the part of a totalitarian type of Mexican government exists. NAFTA was the fuse that ignited the explosion. In its report of 1/4/94 The Washington Times said the rebellion "was born from problems that NAFTA will solve slowly - or might make even worse: rural poverty, violent disputes for scarce land, threats to native Indian cultures and a sense of political powerlessness... NAFTA's goal of making Mexico's countryside more productive implies that many small, inefficient producers will have to leave the land and move elsewhere to take advantage of better jobs [in the United States?]" This latter applies also to the United States. Lawrence Patterson's Criminal Politics for December 1993 noted that both NAFTA and GATT will "have a devastating effect on hundreds of thousands of American families across the United States and should be the subject of a national drive to impeach the Clintons. It is treasonous to destroy the livelihoods and economic security of loyal Americans who have paid their taxes and served their country in war and peace in many ways. Yet, it is unlikely that Americans will take up a political sword to impeach the Clintons. Strange what lapdogs we are as a nation."

Pat Buchanan thinks Jim Tucker is overly optimistic about the chances of defeating GATT. He points out that "With New World Order Republicans again falling in line behind Mr. Clinton [as they did with NAFTA] perhaps not. But the fight must be made. For once again Americans are surrendering a slice of their national sovereignty." But Buchanan and Tucker seem agreed in that "The worst features of the GATT deal is the new MTO, or WTO (World Trade Organization). This new supranational authority is

New Secretary of State?

On Sunday Afternoon (1/9/94) we were listening to CNN's telecast from Brussels where Warren Christopher was holding a press conference, warming up the reporters while awaiting the arrival of President Bill Clinton. We noted that Christopher seemed uncomfortable, acted like no other Secretary of State we have ever seen or heard. He was hesitant, kept repeating words, being very careful about answering questions pertaining to NATO and Bosnia. We wondered how long Christopher would hold down his job. On Monday we received a clipping dated 1/6/94 from Dr. Cuddy. The Daily Record of Dunn, NC, had published his article under the heading "Beware World Government Agenda." Dr. Cuddy wrote and we quote:

"President Clinton has just announced that he is making Strobe Talbott number 2 man at the State Department behind Warren Christopher. There have been rumors for some time that Christopher was about to go as Secretary of State, and the promotion of Talbott is seen as preparing him for taking over the top job in the near future. To see where this country would be headed with Talbott as Secretary of State, one needs only read his article, 'The Birth of the Global Nation,' in Time (7/20/1992) in which he wrote: "All countries are basically social arrangements... No matter how permanent and even sacred they may seem at any one time, in fact they are all artificial and temporary... Perhaps national sovereignty wasn't such a great idea after all... But it has taken the events in our own wondrous and terrible century to clinch the case for world government." Talbott was a Council on Foreign Relations director and Trilateral Commission member who was Bill Clinton's roommate at Oxford University where both of them were Rhodes Scholars." (Dr. Cuddy is author of "President Clinton Will Continue The New World Order," by Hearthstone Publishing. 1-800-652-1144).

shaping up as an all-powerful Court of World Trade from whose decisions US manufacturers will have no appeal. And alongside Buchanan and Tucker, Mr. Cuddy's opinion (previously quoted) makes it a consensus when Buchanan writes: "The WTO is no accident, it conforms to the vision of the Clintonites - and their new domestic partners in the GOP. In a 1992 Time essay, 'The Birth of the Global Nation,' Strobe Talbott painted that vision, calling GATT and the International Monetary Fund the 'protoministries of trade, finance and development for a united world.' A self-described 'optimist' about the inevitability of world government, Mr. Talbott writes, 'I'll bet that within the next hundred years nationhood as we know it will be obsolete; all states will recognize a single global authority. A phrase briefly fashionable in the mid-20th century - citizen of the world - will have assumed real meaning by the end of the 21st.'" "We are likely to do better by building our 'house of world order' from the bottom up rather than the top down," counseled like-minded Richard Gardner (CFR, TC, US Ambassador to Spain) two decades ago. "An end run around national sovereignty, eroding it piece by piece, it's likely to get us to world order faster than the old-fashioned frontal attack." Mr. Gardner's words were prophetic."

Strobe Talbott (CFR, TC, Rhodes Scholar) of the State Department spoke of GATT and IMF as "protoministries" (first or chief) managers of world trade, finance and development for a united world. Regarding GATT he said that in the years ahead, after all nations have completed the ratification and legislative actions, the WTO (World Trade Organization) will be "associated with the United Nations.... But to avoid problems of nationalism, the plan to transform the WTO into an administrative department of the UN, "must not become public yet. You can't achieve everything in your first agreement." We repeat, WTO is scheduled to become the manager of world trade, while the IMF will become the Treasury Department of the World Government, the United Nations.

We propose that NATO, under a name-change and a new constitution, and after the ratification and legislative actions, will become the Police Department of the World Government. That's the principal reason why Bill Clinton was sent on this just ended mission to Europe. "You can't achieve everything in your first agreement," said Micky Kantor about GATT.

At the beginning of the so-called Cold War, the United States had been firmly established as the thesis in a worldwide Hegelian dialectic, and the USSR was established as the antithesis, which would lead to a synthesis, a New World Order. As a part of the plan, NATO (North Atlantic Treaty Organization) was created as a defense agency to prevent aggression by its antithesis, the Warsaw Pact. But with the planned "merging" of capitalism and communism into Corporative Socialism, and the end of the USSR and the Warsaw Pact, NATO was left dangling without proper aim or reason for existence. There was a question as to its survival. And when the nations that comprised the USSR were set free and incidents such as Bosnia developed, there was need for action to contain peace, no nation or group of nations knew exactly what to do. In the case of Bosnia, Manfred Woerner, the German Secretary General of NATO, couldn't decide what to do, nor could the sixteen nations comprising NATO. So Clinton was sent to Europe with a plan. Woerner "had his qualms about Clinton," said the NYTimes. But the Big Seven group of nations accepted Clinton and his proposals with some reservations, and Woerner then said, "I think everyone was impressed by the strong leadership, resolve and personal conviction of the American president." The NYTimes admitted that "nagging doubts clung to his (Clinton's) accomplishments." We might translate: "Clinton's proposals were those of the architects of the New World Order, so he and his proposals had to be accepted, though reluctantly." And having done all that could be done in two days, including his "Partnership for Peace" plan, he went on to Prague, Kiev, Minsk and Moscow, not necessarily in that order. His purpose in this journey to the capitals of the former Warsaw Pact nations: to reassure them without promising them military help if they might need it, and to tell Boris Yeltsin that he was still being backed 100% by the Clinton Administration, and not to worry about that upstart Vladimir Zhirinovsky who defeated him in an election and was stirring up trouble among the Russians who were wanting a new leader.

The feeling was mutual. In America there was much distrust of Russia, and in Russia there was much distrust of America. On Page one of USA TODAY (1/12/94) there was a story which began: "Economist-turned-taxi--driver Andrei Gorshuk has a message for President Clinton: 'Get out of Russia now... We made our country ourselves and America has come and broken us... Our people may be old but we are not stupid. We see what America has done...'" "The Russian people, riding a wave of nationalism and reeling from the catastrophic effects of those US-backed reforms, are losing their post-Soviet romance with the West and retreating into traditional isolationism." On page two, same paper, same date, there was a different story: "President Clinton arrives in Moscow today, seeking to demonstrate his administration's strong support for Russian President Boris Yeltsin and his free-market reforms. But a USA TODAY/CNN/Gallup Poll finds many Americans wary of an old enemy... The poll shows most oppose increased economic aid to Russia, and nearly half still see Russia as a serious military threat... 'They have a lot of nuclear weapons and it's still an unstable country. New leaders could turn them against us again,' says Kathy Lathrop, 30, Overland Park, Kan., homemaker'."

The Russian people's dislike of Yeltsin and their support of nationalist Vladimir Zhirinovsky should be a warning even to a Rhodes Scholar. We recall that both Hitler and Lenin received financial support from the Establishment leaders of their day. And Zhirinovsky was able to spend an estimated $80,000 in his recent election victory. Wonder where the money came from? And Kathy Lathrop's fears could be justified.

Unstable political conditions in Russia and former Warsaw Pact Nations is the real reason for denying them membership in NATO at this time. Once they are politically stable, with no internal revolt or threat of war against a neighbor, they will be welcomed with full membership in NATO.

There are many professing Christians who believe that what is happening to the United States under the Clinton administration is inevitable, and nothing can be done about it. That is only partly correct. Many of us have forgotten that the Lord is still in command, as He always has been. History proves that if we do it His way we are blessed. If we don't we are cursed. Deuteronomy clearly states in Chapter 28, Verse 63:

"And it shall come to pass, that as the Lord rejoiced over you to do you good, and to multiply you; so the Lord will rejoice over you to destroy you, and to bring you to nought; do you good, and ye shall be plucked from off the land whither thou goest to possess it."

SOCIALIST AGENDA

In our youth they were called Acts of God but in this New Age New World Order era, they're generally called natural disasters. In the past two weeks the United States has witnessed two of them. There was the earthquake and the continuing tremors in the West, record low temperatures that continued for days and nights in the East and Midwest, and then came the blasts of hot air emanating from the Nation's Capitol as the peoples' chosen returned to Washington to hear President Clinton deliver his mandated State of the Union Address. Then they settled down to the business of discussing Hillary Rodham's Health Care Reform plan and other programs designed to complete the socialization of America.

The deadly and devastating earthquake in the Los Angeles area cost at least 57 lives with more than 7,500 injured, over 11,000 homes condemned, left an estimated 30,000 people sleeping in parks when the rains came. It is estimated that the cost will amount to more than $30 billion in taxpayer money - more interest to be paid on the $4 trillion and constantly increasing public debt. We haven't seen any estimate on the arctic freeze that brought unheard of low temperatures to most of the States, with over 100 deaths reported.

An interesting observation was written by George Marotta, a research fellow at the Hoover Institute. He noted that natural disasters occur with regular frequency in the West, floods in the Midwest, hurricanes in the Southeast; and governments do not have the resources to provide their people with "security" against all events. He didn't mention government payments to people in other ways that are socialist in nature, but he did observe that the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics collapsed in trying to do so. And he indicated without actually saying so, that things should be as they were when this Nation was still growing and prospering. Like the pioneering days of the West, as an example. "People of their own volition choose to live in certain parts of our Nation. They, not government, should accept the advantages or disadvantages of their decision. Private insurance is always possible. Private charities should help people. Local and State should repair the infrastructures. If California, the richest State in the Union, cannot meet its own needs, then we as a Nation are doomed to decline." He adds that "Liberal government uses every opportunity, even catastrophes, to extend its reach into our lives... We should also remember that when the federal government gives us $1 billion, it is probably the same $1.5 billion that we sent to Washington - minus the usual overhead costs for our high-living congresspeople and bureaucrats."

When Bill Clinton returned to Washington and prepared to deliver the annual State of the Union message, he was reminded by his CFR, Rhodes, and like-minded one worlder team mates that he had been pushing too many projects at the same time. He'd better slow down or he might not be able to finish his re-inventing of government. So, we're informed that he would concentrate on promoting Hillary's Health Insurance program and the crime project (100,000 national policemen, no guns for civilians, etc.), and let the Welfare Reform Program wait until 1995 if necessary. In regard to the Health Security plan, Lawrence Patterson's Criminal Politics magazine (11/21/93) carried an important article written by contributing editor

Eustace Mullins, who said a Washington Insider called the Health Care plan "The Federal Reserve System of Health Care." Using that label as the starter, Mullins wrote:

"The Federal Reserve plan developed after the Nation had gone through a devastating money panic. It was sold to the American people by Senator Nelson Aldrich as an answer to the Money Trust, whereas, in reality, it was sponsored by the Money Trust. In 1910, Senator Aldrich met secretly with Paul Warburg and other international bankers at a hideaway on Jekyll Island, Georgia. It was there that the plan for the Central Bank was written, which soon gained control of the money system of the United States. The result of the Central Bank Plan in the United States has produced a $4 trillion debt... In the middle 1980's, men who represented the Money Trust began meeting secretly in Jackson Hole, Wyoming to draft a plan which would enable the combine to take over our entire health care system. Among the leaders in this organization are members of the Rockefeller family, and powerful figures in the banking and financial world. They began organizing meetings of the five big health insurance companies on an annual basis in Jackson Hole as long ago as 1985. Delegates from the insurance companies included Metropolitan, Prudential, Aetna, New York Life and Signa. The last three years, this plan came into final form and was submitted to the first lady, Hillary Clinton to sell to the American people and the medical profession, as well as the Congress. In spearheading this operation, one of the leaders was reported to have used the same language that was used by Paul Warburg in 1913 to sell the Federal Reserve Act. 'It doesn't have everything we want but adjustments can be made after the act is passed'." (Criminal Politics, POBox 37813, Cincinnati, OH 45222. Weekly edition, $240.00 per year).

It might be expected that, with his draft-dodging admission, his leadership of anti-American rallies in London, his visit to the Soviet Union during the Viet no-win war, and his attempt to inject gays and lesbians into the military lineup, there would be some trouble when Clinton tried to re-invent the Pentagon and its command. There was early trouble with Defense Secretary Les Aspin, who was asked to resign partly because of his failure to permit proper arms and equipment to be sent to American troops working for the UN in Somalia, and the result of the death of American troops and the gruesome picture of the body of an American soldier being dragged through the streets of Mogadishu. As ordered, Aspin tendered his resignation but promised to remain on the job until a successor had been nominated by Clinton and approved by the Senate. At this writing, he's still there, but mostly as a sinecure. Meanwhile, in line with his re-inventing the military, Clinton had nominated Morton Halperin to become assistant Defense Secretary for peacekeeping and democracy. But the nomination of Halperin (CFR) created such a protest among conservatives that Halperin decided to refuse to take the newly created position. He asked Clinton not to submit his nomination to the Senate because "my old friend" Mr. Aspin had resigned. So the new department of peacekeeping and democracy was never created. Meanwhile, Clinton was still looking for someone to replace Aspin. He finally settled on retired Admiral Bobby Ray Inman, and the entire retinue of Clintonistas was said to be overjoyed and certain that this was one nomination that the Senate would surely approve in record time. Then suddenly came the unexpected. After having accepted the nomination and Inman was boasting of what he'd do as Defense Secretary if and when confirmed, he called a news conference in Austin, Texas, where he told the world, "I'm simply not prepared to pay the current cost of public service in distortion of my record." Said The Washington Times (1/19/94), "The Inman performance left mouths agape in Washington and there came prompt comparisons to Richard Nixon's 1962 speech after losing the California governor's race - 'You won't have Nixon to kick around anymore' - and Ross Perot's withdrawal from the presidential race last year, when he cited a conspiracy to disrupt his daughter's wedding." Inman blamed columnist William Safire and Senator Bob Dole who he said conspired to sully his reputation in what he termed 'a new McCarthyism'." But we have a hunch that a secret meeting of the Big Brass of the Pentagon had more to do with Inman's sudden refusal to run the political gauntlet than did what Safire had written or Dole had said. A NY Times reporter named Eric Schmitt, on 1/11/94 wrote: "Call it case of a New Age management meeting [of the] Defense Department. Five dozen senior and middle-level Pentagon officials quietly repaired to a former Roman Catholic convent in suburban Maryland last weekend.... For the officials, led by Deputy Defense Secretary William J. Perry, the conference was an unusual chance to quit the harried daily routine of the Pentagon and steal away for a weekend of what one participant called 'hours of uninterrupted quality time'... The retreat did not produce any solutions to problems that in some cases have dogged the Pentagon for decades. But it did yield detailed briefings that Les Aspin, the outgoing Defense Secretary, Gen. George Shalikashvili, the new Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and the civilian secretaries and military chiefs will receive in the coming weeks. In that sense, the retreat also gave the official a leg up on some of the Pentagon's knottiest problems in advance of the expected arrival of Mr. Aspin's successor, Bobby Ray Inman, whose Senate confirmation hearing will be held later this month."

But that Senate hearing was never held. Inman refused to accept the Senate invitation to the grueling inquisition. And after another search for a prospective Secretary of Defense (Treasury Secretary Lloyd Bentsen; Rep. Dave McCurdy, D-OK; former Rep. Jim Courier, R-NJ; Sen. John Glenn, D-OH - all of whom it was known beforehand would say 'No, thank you'), then Deputy Defense Secretary, William J. Perry, who headed that secret meeting of Pentagon officials in the former Roman Catholic convent in Maryland, got permission from his family and said he'd accept the position. And it is said that all of the Clintonistas applauded. And it is also said that the US Military is being reduced and changed into smaller, efficient and well equipped cadres ready to go any time anywhere the UN commands to bring peacekeeping and democracy to areas and/or countries such as future Somalias and Bosnias.

In his State of the Union address, most of what Clinton said had been said before. He only added emphasis. And the elected representatives who are expected to rubber stamp his programs interrupted him 64 times with wild applause and agreement with his plans. He had been to Europe for the first time since becoming president, so he spent some time trying to define his foreign policy. "There are still dangers in the world," he said. "Arms proliferation, bitter regional conflicts, ethnic and nationalist tendencies in many new democracies, severe environmental degradation, and fanatics who seek to cripple the world's cities with terror." For that reason the United States must spend the billions necessary for us to remain a military superpower. Mind you, those billions won't be spent on our military. He made it plain that the Pentagon won't get those billions; they will be used to buy friends in overseas countries. Countries like Russia, whose present government is growing weaker and weaker. Clinton's shock when Inman refused to become our Defense Secretary was as nothing compared to the shock when Yeltsin received a letter of resignation from his chief economist, Yegor Gaidar. As Yeltsin's first Deputy Prime Minister, Gaidar was "plucked from security" two years ago to oversee the economic "shock therapy" that was supposed to wake up Russians to the merits of economic democracy and market economy. But, even if Yeltsin wouldn't admit it, the campaign to make Russian economy similar to Western economy had failed. Mark Trevelyan of Reuters News Service, observed that "In the space of just two years he (Gaidar) has twice entered and left the government, where his presence and influence has been watched by the West as a litmus test of reform." But when he left for the last time he said, "I cannot be, at one and the same time, in the government and in opposition to it. I cannot answer for reforms without having appropriate levers to carry out the economic policy in which I believe." It seems that the crisis came when Yeltsin's and other pro-reform groups found themselves outnumbered in parliament by Vladimir Zhirinovskiy's Party and the Communist Party. Part of Clinton's reason for going to Europe was to back up Yeltsin and help him keep control over his government. In this Clinton failed. Zhirinovskiy seems very likely to replace Yeltsin, even as Yeltsin replaced Gorbachev.

In the January issue of McAlvany Intelligence Advisor, the editor spent almost 28 pages warning of the danger of "Russian Deception and the 'New' Communist Threat." McAlvany wrote, we quote, and the underlining is his: Mr. Zhirinovskiy is not a madman or a fool as the Western media portrays him. He is a very clever politician who is playing to the grandstand - which is occupied by a very frustrated Russian military, the KGB, and public. Always mistrust the obvious! Beware of new people who suddenly spring onto the scene out of nowhere as Gorbachev did in the early '80s, as Yeltsin did in the late '80s, and as Zhirinovskiy did in 1990. Rapidly emerging superstars usually have powerful sponsors, and in Russia those sponsors are usually the KGB and the Communist Party of the Soviet Union. Zhirinovskiy is no accident of history." We might add that rapidly emerging superstars usually have financial angels. Lenin and Trotsky were financed by International Bankers; Hitler was financed by the International Money Trust, and Zhirinovskiy may be financed by that same Global Money Trust, as were (and still are to a great extent) Gorbachev and Yeltsin. The Conspiracy always plays both sides against us who are in the middle.

After the State of the Union speech Senator Moynihan and others forced Clinton to compromise. He would not confine his crusades this year to Health and Crime, but would "make this a year of social issues." He hoped the economy would stay on track and foreign affairs would stay off his back while he and Congress dealt with Health, Welfare, Crime, and Education. Let us remember: This is a year when elections occur. We need new Parties and trustworthy leaders, and there's much work to be done. As St. Paul told the Ephesians:

"That we henceforth be no more children tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive; But speaking the truth in love, may grow up into Him in all things, which is the head, even Christ."

VIETNAM TO BOSNIA?

The architects of The New World Order are internationalists, having no loyalty or allegiance to any one country except for purpose of protection. They seek to establish a country of their own, a country encompassing the entire earth, with a global government that they control. But they're still seeking their universal utopia because we are in the antithetical stage of a Hegelian dialectic development. The synthesis the internationalists seek is still to come, if it ever comes. In the meantime, this internationalist cabal must control or be controlled by the still existing national governments, UN resolutions and mandates to the contrary notwithstanding. As an example: Boutros-Ghali, Secretary General of the United Nations Security Council, still must ask permission of national governments before he can command NATO forces to drop bombs in Bosnia. Also, these power brokers who would control the world must tolerate, change or destroy the existing cultures, customs, ethics and religions of the people with whom they must deal or be themselves destroyed. So, to come to the point, the American third of the Trilateral Commission had a problem: How to set up shops and exploit the riches of Communist Vietnam without first getting the United States government to void a 19-year-old embargo that had been imposed against Vietnam. There were said to be 2,238 American MIAs and/or POWs still unaccounted for, and the US government had promised its people that diplomatic relations with Vietnam would not be resumed until those missing Americans were accounted for. So it was agreed that the new President, Bill Clinton, would ignore past promises and restore relations regardless of circumstances. There's a somewhat occultish story within the story in this respect.

Just as President Clinton was finishing off his first year in office the communications media began to tell the world that "Clinton May Expand Ties With Vietnam." The Elitists who command the Clintonistas sometimes display a bit of occultism in their dealings with peoples and countries, and the word "Tet" came popping up in stories about our dealings with a country that was our bitterest enemy three decades ago. That word "Tet" became a kind of symbol. Veterans who fought and survived the Vietnamese nightmare will know what Tet stands for. It's the name given a three-day festival when the Viets celebrate the lunar new year. It happened that on January 30, 1968, Tet Day, the Tet Offensive was launched in the Vietnamese no-win police action. Five years later, on January 27, 1973, another Tet Day, a cease-fire was signed in Paris, with Secretary of State Henry Kissinger signing for the United States. The cease-fire was never implemented but Kissinger received a Nobel Peace Prize nevertheless. Now, another 20 years later, on Tet Day, February 10, 1994, the embargo against Vietnam had been lifted and 34 American-based multinationals began operating in Hanoi or Ho Chi Min City, and an estimated 300 other American-based businesses, great and small, of various types, were busily negotiating contracts with the Communist Vietnamese government, so they could take advantage of lesser or no taxes, less pay per employee, and other inducements. "Business groups, anxious to move into fast-growing Vietnamese markets, were happy," said the media. "But the National Alliance of Families said lifting the embargo was 'tragic.'" And with the

2,238 Americans still missing in action, the Vietnamese Veterans of America could only say, "A historic chapter has closed."

Of course, this wasn't a new thing in American history. We have a copy of a well documented hard cover book titled "Soldiers of Misfortune," and subtitled "Washington's Secret Betrayal of American POWs in the Soviet Union." There are three authors and between them they trace the fate of American POWs from the Korean, Vietnam and Cold War. They say the Soviet Union kidnapped 23,500 Americans from German prisoner of war camps in Eastern Europe in the closing days of World War II. Those Americans were never heard from again, but there are reports that they probably died while working in Soviet gulags. This book documents the fact that every US President since World War II has lied to the American people about the fate of its fighting men, Foreword is by General William Westmoreland who served during World War II, in Korea, Vietnam, and was Army Chief of Staff from 1968 to his retirement in 1972. The book leaves one unanswered question: How many Americans are still alive in Russia, China and North Vietnam? Copyright by the authors, National Press Books, 7200 Wisconsin Avenue, Bethesda, Maryland 20814. 352 pages, hard cover, $23.95.

To this reporter it seemed ironic that Bill Clinton, the draft-dodger, should be in a position where he could tell the world the Vietnam War is finally ended legally and that the 19-year-old economic sanction is revoked. It seems even more ironic that Bill Clinton should be the spokesman for the United States Veterans when he goes to Paris in June to attend the 50th annual D-Day celebration. And it also seems ironic that this president who was going to concentrate on re-inventing government in the United States should find himself spending so much of his time dealing with foreign affairs about which he seems unprepared. He's still trying to bring democracy to Haiti, and the nations of Europe must look upon him as their leader when multinational problems arise. There was the news that 68 civilians, mostly women and children, had been killed and more than 200 wounded in the attack on that open air market in Bosnia. UN Secretary Boutris-Ghali wanted to order retaliation, but he had to ask permission from NATO member nations before he could order NATO to bomb. And those member nations look upon NATO as an American agency, even though it really exists by permission of the United Nations Charter. The question of what to do about bombing was asked of Clinton. The United Nations had to ask the United States of Europe for permission, then the United States of Europe asked the United States of America what should be done and, speaking for the United States, Bill Clinton answered: "The attack was outrageous." But again he weasled out of giving any direct answer, and went back to the task of trying to sell to Congress his wife's Health Care Plan. But the medical profession turned it down, the US Chamber of Commerce turned thumbs down on it. Came the problem of whether health care premiums should be included in the budget, and numerous other problems that really aren't very important because it is generally conceded that Hillary's plan is dead. Some some other plan must be adopted, a plan that Clinton won't promise to veto. Whitewater is in the hands of a special investigator, WACO is in the hands of a federal judge, so little news will be coming from either source for some time. So we can expect the government to be digging up some new crisis to keep the media busy and the public fed their customary ration of propaganda. Congress, meanwhile, will be occupied with arguments concerning the new $1.5 trillion budget, a budget so satisfactory to Constitutional Amendment promoters that they feel a convention won't be necessary this year.

In the attempt to restore the Christian foundation upon which this Republic was built, pro-American newsletter writers often quote other pro-American newsletter writers, and are quoted by other newsletter writers. Tom Anderson in his Straight Talk issue of 2/10/94 began his front page article with a quotation from Theodore Roosevelt. In this year when a president is very much in the news for other than statesmanlike reasons, this quotation should be quoted and requoted time after time. So, we requote: "Patriotism means to stand by the country. It does not mean to stand by the President or any other public official save exactly to the degree in which he himself stands by the country... Every man who parrots the cry of 'stand by the President' without adding the proviso 'so far as he serves the Republic' takes an attitude as essentially unmanly as that of a Stuart royalist who championed the doctrine that the King can do no wrong. No self-respecting and intelligent man could take such an attitude." ("Straight Talk," weekly, Box 60, Pigeon Fork, TN 37868. $87 per year).

A similar sentiment was expressed by Rich Pearce in his winter quarterly Kingdom Insights, "a Biblical Perspective On Economics and Finance." Following are quotes in which he deals with Centralism and Fascism in our federal government:

"The political process in America is engrossed with socialism and fascism. Big business is in bed with government to the point of allegiance. Their decisions are controlled by government bureaucrats in return for favors or threats! Attorney General Reno recently threatened lending institutions to not discriminate in who they lend to. It's another tax income in disguise. You and I are paying and will continue to pay for the bad loans.

"Centralization of power will never cease growing once allowed to exist. (NAFTA is the latest contribution). Bribes become commonplace and corruption is rampant. All this under the guise of economic benefits to the people! And the people are economically derelict enough to believe all the propaganda. These wonderful benefits are always showcased in a democracy. Democracy is always the predecessor to anarchy, and ultimately, dictatorship. FEMA (Federal Emergency Management Agency) is in place and has been tested on several occasions. FEMA, along with executive orders, will hand ultimate control of just about everything to the president. Presto. dictatorship! This is probably not an issue until some type of financial collapse or international political upheaval occurs.... To subsidize evil is to partake in it. Our government condones and even promotes abortion and perverse life-styles. It operates an unfair economic system of unjust weights and measures. (Proverbs 20:10 'Divers weights [and] measures, both of whom [are] alike abominations to the Lord.') It calls evil good and good evil. It has established an occultic money and economic system... The majority of the leadership in D.C. is corrupt and dishonest. They are self-serving and promote their own gain. Yet, society says to pay your fair share to the IRS terrorists! Should we, as citizens, continue to subsidize this evil? Are we partaking in this by continuing to offer up nearly 50% of our income? Is it right to be forced into giving more to the corrupt system than to God and His Church? These are questions to be addressed in the coming years." (End of quotes from "Kingdom Insights." The first Clinton While preparing this DBR we received a letter in which was written, "I am one of your French subscribers and I read carefully your Bulletin. Some time ago (40/18, p. 1) you were talking about Fascism, Mussolini and the coming Socialism in America. We know some little things over here about this subject. It is true President Clinton went to Italy to study Cooperative Organization but the idea he got was an American one: the Fascist Organization was set up by Clinton Roosevelt who wrote a book on this subject around 1837... I appreciate very much your Bulletin and remain Sincerely Yours (Name withheld for security reasons)." Accompanying this letter was this information:

"The family tree of the Roosevelts records among others, one Clinton number 404 in the line, whose plans for reform are so similar to those of Franklin D. Roosevelt that they merit comparison. It was in 1837 and 1838 that Clinton Roosevelt published his book, 'Science of Government Founded upon Natural Law'. The book was a collection of lectures previously delivered in the New York City Hall. Over a hundred years ago Clinton Roosevelt attempted to launch a New Era. He built his hierarchy upon a chart. His Dictator was to be called 'The Marshall of Manufacturers'. Clinton Blithely scrapped the flag and ignored the constitution, saying 'We started all wrong.' A study of this chart reveals more than was perhaps intended. Look at the huge EYE placed above the title of 'Marshal of Manufacturers'. From this EYE radiated multitudinous lines connecting it with the lesser bureau heads, all of which are represented in smaller EYES... Under these several Eyes all of the Nation's industry and other activities were to be administered." (Unquote).

Confirming all of this, we have a book written by Emanuel M Josephson and published in 1955 by Chedney Press. It contains a reprint of "Science of Government Founded on Natural Law," by Clinton Roosevelt. The dust jacket contains the following information:

"Reprint of original edition, dated 1841, of the illuminist tract containing the first American publication of the plagiarized Communist teachings of Adam Weishaupt, a renegade Jesuit, and the substance of the Communist Manifesto. The Roosevelt version appeared seven years before it also was plagiarized by another member of the Order of the Illuminati... Heinrich Karl Marx... It embodies a blueprint of the New Deal, its NRA and other devices, that became the tradition of the Roosevelt Dynasty. It is the pattern of an American Dictatorship which they seek to impose. Their progress in imposing this dictatorship was slow until the present century. Now thanks to the support of the Rockefeller dominated 'Philanthropic' Foundation Trust it is moving to ultra-rapid culmination." (End of quote).

Thomas James Norton in his classic Undermining the Constitution (1950) said: "As big a thing as the great American Republic could not have been put on the skids without years of steady work. Beginning with 1933, Socialism (control by government of production, distribution and exchange), Fascism (Socialism by Corporations) and Communism (confiscation of private property through graduated taxes and by abolition of inheritance), all forbidden by the Constitution because in no way authorized and in many ways condemned by implication, spread with the rapidity of a fire on the prairie. But the seizure by them of the liberty and property of Americans began before 1933."

"And ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

BRINKMANSHIP

The secretary-general of the Security Council of the United Nations was, apparently in the opinion of The New World Order Conspirators, scheduled to become their acting chief executive of their budding New World Government. But Boutras-Ghali wasn't acting as the Number One Citizen of the World should be acting. A ranking diplomat at the UN observed that "He's been lost in the fog and he needs to recapture the high ground." Over the past year, US policymakers have privately expressed frustrations over the difficulties of working with Boutras-Ghali and the UN in the Somalia peace-keeping operations. And there was comment that there was a need for him to "reassert his authority as a central diplomatic figure in seeking to end the Bosnian conflict. So, said this unnamed diplomat, "He put the ball in NATO's court." The opportunity to do this came when Serb artillerymen fired a mortar shell into Sarajevo's central market killing 70 civilians, mostly women and children. Said a columnist, "The United States was as close to being on the brink of war as has been the case since the Gulf War." The British Economist was careful not to mention either NATO or the UN in its report on the tragedy but did say, "It was by no means the worst atrocity in more than two years of fighting between Serbs, Croats and Muslims. Yet world-wide revulsion thanks to the carnage done presents an opportunity for Americans and Europeans to join forces to alleviate the suffering caused by this war and to restore some of the credibility the West has lost in months of bickering and indecision." And it also gave the secretary-general of the UN an opportunity to regain some of the lost ground in his struggle to gain a military force that is his very own under absolute UN command. And "he put the ball in NATO's court."

For more than two years Serbs, Croats and Muslims have battled fiercely for control of a part of former Yugoslavia identified as Bosnia-Herzegovina. As war waged towns and communities were razed, genocide and wholesale massacre of civilians became commonplace, and the nations of Europe could only look on and offer suggestions on ways that might stop the warring before it endangered the European Union. And as they discussed the situation they waited for the United States to tell them what to do and join them in doing it. With this much publicized atrocity in the Sarajevo open market, any solution to the Bosnian problem could also bring a solution to just what to do with NATO. Its original reason for being was to offer a protective shield over Western Europe and protect it from possible Communist attack. But NATO was no longer needed for this purpose. It was a military force without a job, and the UN was a political force without a standing army of its very own. As the Economist observed, here was an opportunity! Martin Sieff of The Washington Times (2/8/94) reported: "UN secretary-general Boutras-Ghali has taken on a dramatic role in the latest push to bomb Serbian forces in Bosnia ... has asked the North Atlantic Council - NATO's political leadership - to approve air strikes against Bosnian artillery shelling Sarajevo. The unprecedented request, if granted [and it was granted-Ed.] would give the UN secretary-general the power to decide when US air power - operating under a NATO umbrella - would first be employed in the Bosnian conflict - it would thus give him the power to direct US forces, which no previous UN secretary-general has previously enjoyed." (Underlining added). While it is true that US forces have waged two major wars under UN authority (Korea and the Gulf War) the UN gave the authorization but the President of the United States gave the command. This time would be different. The UN secretary would supersede the power of the UN Congress to declare war and the duty of the president to act as Commander-in-chief would be overridden by the power of the secretary-general to personally command national forces! This would be a New World Order victory in no uncertain terms. Since the NATO military force is composed of troops from 13 different nations, the sovereign authority of those nations would be wiped out under the supreme authority of the Security Council of the United Nations.

Brinkmanship is defined by Webster's New World Dictionary as "The policy of pursuing a hazardous course of action to the brink of catastrophe." This most recent NATO bombing threat was pushed to the brink of catastrophe until three days before the promised deadline when the airstrikes would begin. The catastrophe was dramatically averted by the sudden action of the Russian government. Russia and the Serbs were closely allied and Yeltsin and his aides had made it known that they would not tolerate any bombing of the Serb artillery. So NATO, acting under UN orders, employed brinkmanship by threatening to risk airstrikes that could bring the United States into another Vietnam. Said Sen. Bob Dole on NBC's "Meet the Press." "This isn't a peace treaty, it's partitioning for the Bosnians. I can't believe that the Muslims are going to be very pleased with it." A columnist with the LA Times observed: "If Dole is right, we would have 25,000 American troops in the middle of a civil war as the Muslims try to retake all of their republic. There's no quick exit from that. Britain has been in Northern Ireland for 300 years and still can't stop guerrilla attacks - in a country where its troops know the terrain and speak the same language." But the catastrophe was averted, for this time at least. 400 Russian "peacekeepers" were rushed into Sarajevo to reassure the Serbs and tell them all was well if they would pretend to obey the UN-NATO order. The Serbs trust no other government. They and the Russians are friends of long standing. Religion may have a part in the alliance. The Serbs are of the Greek Orthodox faith. So were the Russians (and many still are) Orthodox Christians. And it was proved that if Russian government officials asked the Serbs to concede, they would do so, and did.

One thing may be important. During all this period of brinkmanship Boris Yeltsin seems to have disappeared from the scene. Some reports said he was ill. Other reports said he was drinking heavily because of worry induced by so much opposition to his reform program. Whatever the case, Russian Defense Minister Pavel Grachev talked with US Defense Secretary William Perry, and Perry is reported to have assured Grachev that there would be no bombs dropped on Serbian positions. And Russian Deputy Foreign Minister Vitaly Churkin was on the spot arranging the accord between all parties. He said, "The point here is not air strikes. It is peace," Said Alexander Koznov, one of the 400 "peacemakers," "The compromise was worked out so that if we Russians are here, there will be no need for airstrikes," and "We are here because we are the only people the Serbians trust." Speaking personally, it seems that this entire syndrome was a carefully planned and well executed operation directed by the Elite to accomplish three principal purposes: 1) To give NATO a reason to continue to exist as a military force, as an agent under direct command of the UN Security Council; 2) To maintain America's continued aid via NATO in financing or guaranteeing security for Western Europe while the Big Seven Nations are slowly merged as provinces within the European Union; 3) To provide a Big Brother shield as the Eastern European military forces are slowly merged into the expanding NATO, now a military force owned and operated by the United Nations. Also, if a Soviet/Russian threat still exists (and it is difficult to doubt that Russia poses dangers after seeing Zhirinovskiy's quick climb to stardom), and if the radical element of Islam remains allied with Russia and threatens war against the West, then the need for NATO as a defensive shield still exists.

We believe in the Conspiracy theory, and we believe that this bit of Bosnian Brinkmanship was a small but important part of the overall Conspiracy which aims to create its own concept of heaven on earth. And we often think of the part the United States has played, willingly or otherwise, in this global drama. As Garet Garret, in his essay "Ex America," remarked some 40 years ago: "The first World War and American intervention therein marked an ominous turning point in the history of the United States and the world... The Americans of today have known a world ravaged by war, depressions, international intrigue and meddling, the encroachments of the police state, vast debts and crushing taxation and the control of public opinion by ruthless propaganda... Americans are now of three kinds, namely: those who are very unhappy about what has happened in one lifetime in their world--to its morals, principles and ways of thinking--and have intuitions of a dire sequel; those who only now begin to read the signs and are seized with premonitions of disaster, and three; those who like it."

As our first president warned, involvement with international intrigue would lead to dire consequences. NATO and the UN are two involvements that we should have avoided. As Garret remarked, concerning the first World War and how our intervention therein changed America, her intervention in the second World War made even greater changes. Germany surrendered on May 2, 1945. Japan surrendered on September 2, 1945. In the eyes of the public, the war against Fascism ended but the war against Communism began. It was called the Cold War. Ironically, the United States had financed the Soviet Union's part of the war against Fascism in Germany. Now the United States would finance the economic recovery of Europe through the Marshall Plan, NATO and otherwise, and the Soviet Union while it took advantage of the promises made by Roosevelt to Stalin at the Teheran and Yalta conferences. Stalin created a belt of Communist satellite states in Eastern Europe to ensure USSR invulnerability and influence. The Communist coup in Czechoslovakia in February, 1948, was followed by the Soviet blockade of West Berlin, caused the nations of Western Europe to induce the United States and Canada to sign a treaty which resulted in the establishment of NATO in April, 1949. There was much controversy about this. Senator Bob Taft, one of the few true statesmen in the Senate at the time, violently opposed signing the treaty, as did Senator Wherry, the Republican floor leader at the time. But the treaty was approved when it was announced that General Dwight Eisenhower would be made Supreme Commander of NATO. Carroll Quigley in his Tragedy and Hope, wrote: "Every effort was made to reduce the defense of the United States to a simple matter of control of the air and the oceans without need for overseas forces or overseas allies. All this, of course, was simply a refusal to face twentieth-century conditions with nineteenth-century ideas, and gave great support to [Douglas] MacArthur's insubordination."

In 1949, while the Senate was holding hearings regarding NATO, Secretary of State Dean Acheson was being questioned by Sen. Bourke Hickenlooper of Iowa, who asked that if the treaty were ratified did that mean US troops would be sent to Europe in substantial numbers as a more or less permanent contribution to the development of [Western Europe's] capacity to resist? Acheson replied, "The answer to that question is a clear and absolute NO." He lied, of course. American troops have been pouring in and out of NATO affiliated countries for nearly half a century. The New American (2/21/94) quotes columnist Doug Brandow: "Americans are a generous people. We spent more than $3.5 trillion and sacrificed more than 100,000 lives during the Cold War to contain the Soviet Union. Europe is now playing us for suckers. 'Get the Yankees to risk life and limb' so other nations can reduce their military budgets."

As we indicated at the start of this Report Boutras-Ghali was "lost in the fog and he needs to recapture the high ground." Specifically, he wants a New World Army that he could command for peace-making and peace-keeping purposes. But due to the UN's questionable performances in Somalia, Bosnia and elsewhere, he hasn't been getting much support. At the moment the idea of a UN New World army is not popular. So proponents of NATO came up with the suggestion that NATO could be expanded and given authority to become the UN's standing army. As President Clinton was preparing for his first visit to Europe since becoming president, the idea of a Partnership for Peace program was presented as a way of giving the UN what it wants without risking too much protest from the people. Clinton liked the idea, told reporters, "What I hope we can do is to develop a policy toward Europe as a whole ... a policy which supports political and economic and strategic integration, not one which draws different dividing lines in Europe... We want to reach out to Central and Eastern Europe through partnership, and emphasize that this concept is a way of inviting people into what could well lead to membership in NATO." And expand NATO to make the world its beat, we suggest. Pat Buchanan said this way of expanding NATO is a way of "locking ourselves forever into every future European War by extending NATO commitments to the 17 European nations... If the US extends NATO guarantees to Eastern Europe the United States will be committed to go to war in perpetuity to freeze in place a balance of power everyone knows cannot long endure." Even Buchanan, with whom we generally agree politically, overlooks one point: This idea wouldn't be confined to Europe; it's a plan to police the world. We would be providing finances and personnel to fight perpetual war to ensure perpetual peace as an agent of the UN under rules laid down by the bosses of the New World Order.

There's one way out of this mess, but perhaps it's too late. We should listen to and act upon the advice given us by our first President, and tell our present President to revoke all those entangling alliances such as NATO and UNO. Cities other than Sarajevo in Bosnia are still being shelled by Serbs or Croats. The trap is still baited and another Vietnam is possible.

"Fret not thyself because of evildoers, neither be thou envious against the workers of iniquity. For they shall soon be cut down like the grass, and wither as the green herb. Trust in the Lord..." (Psalm 37:1,2,3.

GROWING TYRANNY

When America was yet a vigorous young Republic, before she was changed into a decadent and dying Democracy, President John Quincy Adams defined her foreign policy in these words: "America goes not abroad in search of monsters to destroy. She is the well-wisher to the freedom and independence of all. She is the champion and vindicator only of her own. She will recommend the general cause by the countenance of her voice, and the benignant sympathy of her example. She well knows that by once enlisting under other banners than her own, were they even the banners of foreign independence, she would involve herself beyond the power of extrication in all the wars of interest and intrigue, envy and ambition, which assume the colors and usurp the standards of freedom. The fundamental maxims of her policy would insensibly change from liberty to force."

Approximately 125 years after those words were written and observed, American historian Charles Austin Beard was talking to fellow historian Harry Elmer Barnes, who wrote: "With characteristic cogency and incisiveness, Beard held that the foreign policy of Presidents Roosevelt and Truman, and of their ideological supporters, whether Democrats, Republicans, Socialists, or Communists, could most accurately be described by the phrase perpetual war for perpetual peace. Events since that time (1947) have further reinforced Beard's sagacity and insight in this respect. George Orwell's brilliant and profound novel, Nineteen Eighty-Four, has since shown how a new political order throughout the world may be erected on the premises and implications of this goal of perpetual war, presented in the guise of a global struggle of free peoples for perpetual peace." (Quoted from the preface of Barnes' revisionist history of events concerned with World War Two, which he titled, "perpetual War for Perpetual Peace." (Copyright 1953 by the Caxton Printers, Ltd., Caldwell, Idaho). Now, as we near the end of a century, we should add that the foreign policy of Presidents Bush and Clinton, and of their ideological supporters, whether Democrats, Republicans, Socialists, Communists, Fascists, or New Agers, have further reinforced the sagacity and insight of historians Beard and Barnes in this respect. We fought a non-win war in Korea supposedly to contain the scourge of Communism and bring perpetual peace to the people of Korea. There was never a peace treaty and the threat of war still exists as alleged peacemakers try to determine the nuclear potential of North Korea and whether war may again be necessary supposedly to contain Communism and bring peace to the people of South Korea. A way was found for us to enter the Vietnam War, ostensibly to bring permanent peace to the people of Southeastern Asia. We left what was left of them with the kind of peace that Communism proclaims. We fought a war to bring peace to the people of Kuwait and to the CEOs of the petroleum industry. Now we are threatened with potential war to bring permanent peace to the peoples of former Yugoslavia who, because of their ethnic, cultural, language and religious differences have never known real peace since the fourth century A.D. But perpetual war for perpetual peace remains the tacit goal of the United Nations.

In America, as the freezes of February became the ices and snows of March, there remains the threats of war to bring peace to the Balkans,

Somalia, Haiti, most of Africa, much of Eastern Europe, and the Middle East. In our DBR of 1/17/94 we wrote: "So Clinton was sent to Europe with a plan. The Big Seven group of nations accepted his proposals with some reservations. Having done all that could be done in two days, including his 'Partnership for Peace' plan, he went on to Prague, Kiev, Minsk and Moscow - the capitals of the former Warsaw Pact nations - to reassure them without promising them military help if they might need it, and to tell Boris Yeltsin that he was still backed 100 per cent by the Clinton Administration. Unstable political conditions in Russia and former Warsaw Pact nations is the real reason for denying them membership in NATO at this time. Once they are politically stable, with no internal revolt or threat of war against a neighbor, they will be welcomed with full membership in NATO." Before the UN gave its ten-day ultimatum to the Serb military, Russia had been against any partnership with NATO or the European Union, warned its neighboring nations to have nothing to do with either of them. But when the Russian government felt that the UN was serious about Bosnia this time, things changed almost immediately. Russian troops were sent into Sarajevo to act as peacekeepers, and the Bosnian Serbs, Russian allies to the core, were counseled to at least pretend to obey the UN ultimatum that was to be carried out by NATO planes, acting on orders from the UN. The Christian Science Monitor of 3/3/94 reported: "Russia has told NATO it will join the 'partnership for peace' plan for military links with the alliance, helping to calm concerns it may be on a course of confrontation with the West, alliance sources said yesterday. NATO sent a mission to Moscow this week to convince the alliance's main cold-war foe it should sign on to the partnership, which offers joint military training, exercises, and cooperation in defense planning." Note that the CSM used the word 'alliance' rather than 'elite' or 'power brokers' or even 'United Nations.' An item appearing on page 2 of Human Events (3/4/94) explains:

"New World Order Arrives"

"NATO's threat against the Bosnian Serbs had minimal impact. True, the Serbs withdrew most - but not all - of their heavy weapons surrounding Sarajevo, but fighting is hot and heavy where CNN reporters have failed to go. And the Serbs, with the Russians now involved as 'peacekeepers,' aren't likely to yield much in their negotiations. Do most Americans know, however, who would have had the authority to start the bombing against the Serbs? Not NATO, as many may have surmised. The person who possessed the legal power to launch the first air strike was United Nations Secretary General Boutros-Ghali, and he had delegated his authority to Yasushi Akashi, a 63-year-old United Nations employee. 'Never in UN history,' reported the Washington Post, 'has a military operation been conducted under the guidance of the Security Council with the secretary general authorized to initiate it, according to Akashi, who has written four books on the world body.' 'I think we're on the margin of untested waters,' said Akashi. 'There's no textbook to go by'."

As we implied, the UN ultimatum, delivered by NATO, was obeyed to a degree. However, war continued in other parts of Bosnia. To accent their demand that the UN order be obeyed, NATO pilots happened to discover some Bosnian air jets on a bombing mission, and four of the Serbian planes were shot down. But the Serbs kept right on attacking in other parts of Bosnia. On 3/7/94 came a report from Sarajevo that Serbian warplanes had bombed and destroyed an important bridge. AP reported, "With Serbian troops barring the access to Maglai, there was no way for NATO or UN officials to visit the site to check the claim that planes attacked the Muslim held town about 40 miles north of Sarajevo." As fighting continued, Gen. Jhn Reith of Britain, representing the UN, told reporters that "effectively, the war between Muslims and Croatsians has ceased." However, the war between the Muslims and the Serbians had not ceased. It should be noted that there are American servicemen and women in Bosnia, in addition to those Americans who are acting as UN mercenaries. The LA Times of 3/8/94 said, "Officials at the Pentagon and at US European Command headquarters in Stuttgart, Germany, acknowledged that 23 US officers are assigned to posts in Bosnia, and the number of soldiers working elsewhere on operations directed at the former Yugoslavia has soared to more than 2,000 over the past year. The official figures seem to be grossly understated in comparison to the forces visible on the ground. On a recent afternoon an American reporter counted 40 US troops in the coffee shop at Split airport, a transfer point for UN operations in Bosnia and a relief staging area where European Command officials claim that only 11 American cargo handlers are at work.... Cmdr. Ron Morse, public affairs officer at the US European Command headquarters said ... "The United States has a little over 2,000 military men and women assigned to missions in former Yugoslavia republics." You may remember, that's the same situation in which the US was involved in Vietnam before US troops became actively engaged in the war. Deja Vu?

Meanwhile, as American troops, in addition to those assigned to NATO or the UN, were stationed in countries where little wars could erup into big wars at almost any moment, the Brady Bill became the Brady Law. Congressman Henry Hyde of Illinois told a House of Representatives Committee, "We all know the Brady Bill will not do a thing to stop crime. It is just a symbolic gesture, a feel-good piece of legislation." Nevertheless, on 11/4/93 the House Judiciary Committee went along with this oppressive piece of legislation. Larry Pratt, executive director of Gun Owners of America, wrote, "With Sarah and James Brady sitting in the front row and senior Republicans following the lead of the Democrats, the committee approved the bill 23 to 12." Then, on the day before Thanksgiving, with thanks to the surrender of Republican leader Bob Dole, the bill was passed and awaited the signature of Bill Clinton to become law. Said Pratt, "I think the American people are justifiably frightened about violent crimes, drug-related crimes, youth and gang-related crimes. And they will support anything they believe will put an end to escalating crime in America. Unfortunately, the only thing our elected officials offer is gun control, Our politicians don't really care that it doesn't work. Nor do they seem to care that they are trimming the Constitutional gun rights of the American people. So why do they support bills like the Brady Bill? ... Because it allows them to tell their constituents they are doing something to stop crime in America... In short, our elected officials are sacrificing our gun rights so they can hold onto their jobs."

At the time the Brady Bill was approved by Congress, there were more than 30 other gun-control bills proposed in the House or Senate or both. And it is interesting to note that the Brady Bill was probably the weakest of them all. A really effective gun-control bill would not have been passed last year. As Rep. Hyde remarked, "We all know that the Brady Bill will not do anything to stop crime. It is just a symbolic gesture." It was more than that, however. It was an icebreaker. It opened the channels for the overflow of federal legislation that is designed to follow the Brady Law. Most dangerous of them we are told, is S.1607, introduced by Biden of Delaware, which includes the Feinstein Amendment. We haven't read a copy of this proposed bill, but we are told by those who are fighting it, that like the Brady Bill, it paves the way for even more vicious legislation. We are told that it bans a whole list of weapons loosely identified as "assault weapons" and provides a formula for banning more firearms (including shotguns). It bans any weapon that holds more than ten rounds of ammunition, has pistol grips, flash suppressors, detachable magazines, folding stocks, vented barrels, or is a "semi-automatic version of an automatic firearm." We have a 4-page brochure that depicts Uncle Sam pointing a pistol at the reader and saying, "I want your guns." And on page 2 it tells of "The Growing Tyranny," and begins with the charge that "The Federal Government of the United States is presently merging our beloved country into the long conspired for New World Government. ... The horrible fate which the ruling elite has in store for us has already been demonstrated by the cold-blooded slaughter of innocent men, women and children at the sieges of Ruby Ridge and Waco. A once free and prosperous nation is being systematically turned into a police state. ... A brief perusal of the federal gun control initiatives which were introduced in the US Congress in 1993 alone, should convince any skeptic that the Neo-Bolsheviks who have seized control of our nation are deadly serious about disarming the American people." Then listed are 35 bills that "would regulate or ban handguns and/or ammunition." The bottom line reads: "Never surrender your firearms!" and words spoken by Patrick Henry, "Give me liberty or give me death." This brochure came to us without address. but its message is clear. While US troops are ordered to use weapons in defense of people in other countries, US civilians in America are denied the right to defend their own.

Afterthought. For the past weeks newspapers, magazines and airwaves have been crammed with stories concerning scandal in high places. Such words as investigation, grand jury, subpoena, and resignation have echoed so loudly that important news is relegated to back pages. Even David Broder of the Washington Post, who leans leftward and needs the support of the Post to keep from falling, asks, "How many times do we have to read about erasing tapes, shredding documents, bugging phones, setting up back-channel communications, getting outside the loop, and other manifestations of hunkering down or covering up before someone gets the message?" Answering reporters questions, President Clinton starts pounding the table and shouting in defense of Hillary, and then remains relaxed and smiling when he is charged with indiscretions. Appearing in the White House briefing room with his new council David Cutler. We are told. "Clinton was jocular as he fielded questions almost until reporters ran out of questions." Clinton's performance would indicate that Hillary is going to be blamed for everything and Bill exonerated and praised. As Dan Rather said, "Being president is a job for just one person. And the next four years that person is Hillary." But Hillary can't be impeached, so Bill can say, "I did not do anything wrong," and probably get away with it.

"For all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world. And the world passeth away, and the lust thereof: but he that doeth the will of God abideth forever." (John 1, 3:16,17).

SMOKE SCREEN

While official Washington probed and all the world listened and watched as the latest and long-running media extravaganza known as Whitewater exploded into newer and potentially criminal realms, many more important things were happening behind that smokescreen provided by the moral and financial dealings of the Co-Presidents of the United States and their cooperating devotees. Newsweek (4/14/94) called it the "Whitewater Torture" with subtitle "The Mess" and remarked that "It all finally raises the question: is Whitewater a chronic case of political ineptitude and inattention to appearances, or the biggest legal mess to emmesh the White House since Iran-contra? Or is it both?" Newsweek did not ask: is it a smokescreen to hide steps being taken to march America into its appointed place in The New World Order? One thing seems certain. So long as the controlled communications media are spotlighting the Whitewater scandal there's little room in the press or time on the air to tell people about the pending Crime Control Act, the National Competitive Act which is regarded as the cornerstone of Bill Clinton's (and the Elite's) national technology policy, and other facets of legislative action necessary to become law before The New World Order and the New Age Movement will be in place by the year 2000, the appointed time for the dawning of the Age of Aquarius.

A fundamental tenet of that system of government known as Fascism calls for "private economic enterprise under centralized government control." That's what the National Competitive Act is all about. It is mentioned by The Christian Science Monitor of 4/17/94. Its front page and leading headline reads "Business Comes Around to Idea of Guidance from Washington." Readers are told that "After years of running from any suggestion of a government-led 'industrial policy,' many American corporate CEOs and small intreprenuers not only accept Washington's help, but are eager for more. They welcome a policy that 'picks winners' with federal financing, that takes aggressive measures to beef up American exports, and that recasts the relationship between business and government." We are told that "Paul Allaire (CFR), chairman and CEO of Xerox Corporation, fought hard for the legislation, which promotes advanced technology through government financing, provides cutting-edge-industries with Commerce Department guidance on long-term strategic planning, and aims to boost productivity in small and medium-sized firms by helping them pay for costly manufacturing technologies." Senator Daniel Coats, Indiana Republican, protested, said, "It is incredibly pretentious to think that politicians on Capitol Hill can better decide what industries offer promise for job creation and technological innovation. We should let the free market determine which businesses should succeed, not a group of bureaucratic tinkerers in Washington."

But the Clinton administration, on orders from the Elite, will continue to tinker. "We make choices all the time about what our commercial policy is going to be," said David Rothkopf (CFR), deputy undersecretary for international trade and policy development. "We must recognize the real economic levers at our disposal and understand our real economic interests." All this to be decided by an appointed bureaucrat. This is private enterprise and free trade, New World Order style. And it seems the US is far behind the the other Big Seven Nations in this respect. Said Commerce Deputy Secretary for International Trade Jeffrey Garten (CFR): "Almost every other government is pushing on behalf of their firms." Just returned from a tour of Asia where he "pressed regional leaders to award US firms a total of $12 billion in projects now open for bidding, he said the only way US firms will secure a fraction of the business is if US officials travel to these markets and lobby on its behalf. This is commerce and trade, Fascist style. The government acts as salesman for selected multinationals. Murray Weidenbaum (CFR), director of Washington University's Center for the Study of American business explains: "Business executives may want government to offer strategic help at strategic times, but inevitably the political process will decide which high-risk long-term strategic projects will be selected." And, of course, the international bankers will be in on the business of building monopolies and killing smaller businesses for their own profit. The Christian Science Monitor article explains: "The White House wants to better position American firms by providing credits. The US Export Import Bank, which helped to fund $17 billion worth of US exports last year, is more assertive than ever in pushing US goods and services abroad. Ex-Im's Chairman Kenneth Brody says he spots 'real opportunity' in high-risk markets. Last week, for example, Ex-Im announced its readiness to approve $245 million for a Russian oil project. (Mr. Brody) is blunt about the bank's objectives: Ex-Im is needed to level the playing field for US companies facing foreign competition backed with financing from other governments.' The bank just deposited $150 million - a small but symbolic sum - in its so-called 'war chest' for this purpose."

Question still to be answered: Will this Fascist style economic policy work for Clinton and his Socialist Elite? It didn't do so well for Mussolini or Hitler. But then war intervened, just as war intervened when FDR's Fascist style New Deal was postponed until someone like the Clintons came along to try again.

In the above, reference was made to Export Import Bank's grant of $245 million for a Russian oil project. This is a mere pittance compared with the vast amount that has been granted Russia by the US and the six other Big Seven governments in what is now called the European Union, since the end of the Cold War. Quite recently the UN issued an ultimatum demanding that the Serb forces which were shelling Sarajevo withdraw their weapons from the area. There was no Serbian response until the eleventh hour when Russian troops were suddenly flown into Sarajevo to act as UN peacekeepers. Responding to a Russian request, some of the weapons were removed; certainly not all of them because an AP dispatch from Sarajevo (4/22/94) said there was a "worst reported violation of the UN-ordered weapons pullback from around the capital since it took effect Feb. 20.... At one point, Serb forces were surrounding two groups of Canadian troops (UN peacekeepers)... The trouble began over the weekend when the Canadians were checking on six howitzers discovered weeks ago and found four tanks, three anti-aircraft cannons and 18 mortars nearby.... Simon McDowell, a spokesman for the UN peacekeepers refused to rule out the possibility of NATO airstrikes." Previously it had been a trilateral war between Serbian, Croatian and Muslim forces who were fighting each other in attempts to preserve their respective parts of Bosnia-Herzegovina. But the Croats and the Muslims declared a truce between themselves and began defending jointly against the Serbs who were being backed by Russia. The Indian Express, a liberal newspaper published in Delhi remarked, "The US-led Western powers may well be tempted to take the entire credit for the improved prospects of both peace and a political settlement in Bosnia. .. But that is, at best, a partial truth. It will not do to disregard the vital role played by Russia... Russia has never asserted itself in a major international conflict in the post-Soviet era as decisively as it now has." The World Press Review published by the Stanley Foundation (Muscatine IA 52761) in its 4/94 issue observed that "In December 1992, Russian Foreign Minister Andrei Kozyrev petrified a conference of European statesmen in Stockholm by threatening that Russia would use 'all available means' including force, to defend its interests in its former empire. Then he explained that it was all a dead-serious joke to show what might happen if the wrong people took power in Moscow. These days, it's no joke, as the Russian intervention in Bosnia amply provides. What is more, the West shows no sign of stopping Russia from playing its great-power role."

It should be remembered that President George Bush was soft toward Russia, invited Gorbachev to join him in promoting his version of the New World Order. European industrial nations were concerned about the manner in which Bush was catering to Gorbachev and later to Yeltsin. A British correspondent noted how Kipling's "Bear that walks like a man" had been replaced by a Russian poodle that walked behind Bush in the march toward their concept of the New World Order. It is obvious that Bill Clinton is leading that same march and is expecting that Yeltsin is following closely, but not too closely, behind him. Recently in the London The Guardian, Martin Walker began a report with the statement: "George Bush's poodle has died, and the most urgent foreign policy question for President Bill Clinton and the other Western leaders is what kind of a beast is replacing it?" In republishing this article World Press Review (Stanley Foundation, Muscatine IA 52761) prefaced Walker's article with words of its own:

In December, 1992, Russia Foreign Minister Andrei Kozyrev petrified a conference of European statesmen in Stockholm by threatening that Russia would use 'all available means' including force, to defend its interests in its former empire. Then he explained that it was all a dead-serious joke to show what might happen if the wrong people took power in Moscow. These days, it's no joke, as the Russian intervention in Bosnia amply proves. What is more, the West shows no sign of stopping Russia from playing its great-power role."

Under the title "Return of the Soviet Empire" Martin Walker of the The Guardian, of London notes that "a funny thing happened after the funeral" and points out that "Russia is again acting as an international player with its own interests and spheres of influence," that "Russian troops are still in place in most of the ex-Soviet republics," and "The US security establishment is sounding the alarm." However, "The Clinton administration's policy toward Russia has been set by Strobe Talbott. Clinton's old Oxford roommate, who has more regular access to the president's ear than anyone except the president's wife." In this connection, Human Events (4/4/94) reported that "When Sen. Robert Dole was attending a recent gathering of notables in Florida, ex-Reagan defense aide Frank Gaffney had a chance to quickly give him some examples of the prolific pro-Soviet writings of Strobe Talbott, Clinton's now confirmed nominee for deputy secretary of state. Talbott is now No. 2 man at the State Department and is expected soon to replace Warren Christopher as head of the State Department. Dennis Cuddy, author of "President Clinton Will Continue the New World Order" and other books and articles of the same nature, wrote:

"To see where this country would be headed with Talbott as secretary of state, one needs only read his article, 'The Birth of the Global Nation,' in Time (July 20, 1992) in which he wrote: 'All countries are basically social arrangements... No matter how permanent and even sacred they may seem at any one time, in fact they are all artificial and temporary... Perhaps national sovereignty wasn't such a good deal after all... But it has taken the events in our own wondrous and terrible century to clinch the case for world government'."

Talbott, CFR, TC, Rhodes Scholar, is a One-Worlder who also holds "an unwavering pro-Soviet View," according to Human Events, and "it is virtually impossible to discover a Talbott article that backs a tough stance against the Soviets." In the January issue of The McAlvany Intelligence Advisor, it is declared that "Communism is not dead in Russia, nor is it dead in the former Soviet Republics, nor in South Africa, nor elsewhere around the world including America and in the upper echelons of the American government," as the confirmation of Strobe Talbott as under-secretary of state proves. Communism has simply changed its name, its face, its strategy, its tactics to deceive the West into lowering its guard, into disarming, into pumping into Russia and the former Soviet Republics massive amounts of agricultural and financial aid, and into moving into an unholy alliance (political, financial and military) with the Russian Bear. Example: Russia has become a 'partner' in NATO. A Polish historian, Bronislaw Geremek, recently said: "At the moment Russia is weak. But we know this is a transitional period. The Soviet Empire could be succeeded by the Russian Empire. In some years, Russia will become a superpower again -- and the memory of this period of weakness will have an important psychological impact on a new generation of Russian leaders." Don McAlvany believes "The plan is to go from the Soviet Empire backwards to no empire; and then on to an even larger socialist federation. In this writer's view, the chaos and disintegration have been well planned and orchestrated for a much larger vision and purpose than most Western minds can comprehend or conceive."

And in this writer's view, the chaos and disintegration that have been visited upon the former Soviet Socialist Republics are, in a different manner, also being visited upon the former Republics of the United States of America. The strategies and techniques are different but both are well planned and orchestrated by the same Inner Circle of Conspirators who would rule the world. We live at a time when evil is called good and good is called evil and the great majority cannot tell the difference. We are told that world peace is dawning, but there are 60 armed conflicts reported. Our "new friend and ally," Russia commands the largest conventional and nuclear weapons arsenal in the world.

"We are troubled on every side, but not distressed; perplexed but not in despair; Persecuted but not forsaken; cast down but not destroyed; For which cause we faint not; but though our outward man perish, yet the inward man is renewed day by day. For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding weight of glory; While we look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen; for the things which are seen are temporary; but the things which are not seen are eternal." (II Corinthians 4:8.9.16.17.18.).

THE GOALS 2000 ACT

"I like to keep up with the scandals of the month," wrote Murry Frymer of the San Jose CA Mercury News. "It takes my mind off my cholesterol," he explained to his readers as he began another column about the ranking scandal of the month: Whitewater. We suspect that most of us have some similar fixation, that some headlined scandal tends to keep us from thinking about something that may be far more serious. Or at least so suspect the media managers. When some scandal worth front page or prime time TV news attention, they try to explore, expand, exaggerate, explain or seek some sideline scandal that keeps the original scandal alive so long as it plays to the audience and aids the Insiders who often find or create such scandals to use as smokescreens to keep the public from seeing what they might see and interfere with the building of the New World Order. In our last DBR (3/28/94), we wrote that "so long as the controlled communications media are spotlighting the Whitewater scandal, there's little room in the press or time on the air to tell people about the pending Crime Control Act, the National Competitive Act which is regarded as the cornerstone of Bill Clinton's national technological policy, and other facets of legislative action necessary to become law before The New World Order and The New Age Movement will be in place by the year 2000, the appointed time for the dawning of the Age of Aquarius."

Among those recently enacted or proposed laws that have been hiding behind the Whitewater smokescreen provided by the also serious Whitewater scandal, are S. 1150 Goals 2000: Educate America Act; S.J.Res.65, which establishes a commission "to study the creation of a standing international military force under the United Nations Charter; the Senate approval (2/2/94) of a State Department appropriations measure that contains a "sense of congress" resolution supporting "the establishment of an International Court with jurisdiction over crimes of an international character;" which would be a UN court with power to order extradition of those identified as suspects by the 'international community'." These three are but samplings of acts and actions which the Whitewater scandal has served to hide from the public. Please understand, we are not minimizing the importance of the Whitewater scandal in itself. We mean to emphasize that it is serving two purposes. If it also results in the loss of the services of the Clintons, it merely shows that it sometimes becomes necessary to sacrifice the "lesser brethren" for the good of the goals of the Conspiracy.

Let's analyze one of these hidden acts and note how it became law. The Insiders knew that it was necessary to have absolute and monopolistic control over education in the United States. So there had to be a law so stating. The first step was to have selected US Senators and Representatives present bills for discussion and study by the respective congressional committees concerned with education. We are grateful to Kathy Finnegan of Free World Research, POBox 4633, Des Moines IA 50306, for a list of "Educational Restructuring Bills" that were presented to the 103rd Congress, First Session. We counted those bills that were contained in a Special Report dated January 1994. There were 35 Senate bills and 58 House bills. As Samuel Blumenfeld noted in his Education Letter for March 1994, "While many of these bills will wind up in the trash heap. the accumulative impact of this avalanche of education legislation amounts to a cultural revolution being imposed on the American people by the Congress of the United States. To put it in even simpler terms: The Congress is legislating cultural revolution! Every last vestige of traditional education will be swept away by the sheer volume of this legislative flood. Every school, every child, every family will be affected by the sweeping changes. The Congress is preparing Americans for a new totalitarian system of control through the government's education apparatus." (Blumenfeld Education Letter, POBox 45161, Boise ID 83711. Monthly, $35 per year.) With congressmen so flooded with education measures, there was little time to study them all. So the Insiders selected the one bill which would best serve their purposes. It was S. 1150, Goals 2000: Educate America Act, presented by Edward Kennedy. There was a companion bill: H.R. 1804. They were rushed through committees, approved by both House and Senate and rushed to the White House for signature on Saturday, March 26. Five days later President Clinton made a trip to San Diego where he made one of his accustomed speeches, and just before signing Goals 2000 into law on the outdoor basketball court of a San Diego elementary school, said: "This is the beginning of the foundation. Today we can say America is serious about education." Note the timing. On Saturday the bill was signed by the Senate and rushed to the White House. On Monday the media were advised, in effect, that the smokescreen regarding Goals 2000 no longer applied and the general public could be told of the bill that was to become a law on Thursday. USA TODAY (3/28/94) in an expanded report said:

"The Goals 2000: Educate America Act ... details what 40 million school children ought to be taught and tested on in certain subjects. States will get federal money to develop performance and content standards, along with local governments and school districts.... Thousands of experts already are working to decide the basic knowledge and skills every US student should have. These will be considered voluntary national standards, which states have the option to copy. [However] Whatever the states decide must be approved by the National Education Standards and Improvement Council, NESIC." This is a sort of national school board composed of 20 appointed members, a bureaucratic group that will set nationalization standards and approve standards set by states. "No standards, no money." The Act authorizes $647 million this year, to be divided among states whose standards are approved by the bureaucratic council. Bill Clinton said, "This is the beginning. It is the foundation. Today, we can say America is serious about education." We prefer Samuel Blumenthal's answer: "The Congress is preparing Amricans for a new totalitarian system of control through the government's education apparatus." Dennis Cuddy, a former teacher and official of the US Department of Education, author of a "200-year Chronology of Education," also gave an opposing view, said "The Clinton administration's 'Goals 2000' legislation is a major power move by the federal government toward nationalizing education. It's based largely upon eight national education goals, the first of which states that by 2000 'all children in America will start school ready to learn.' Proponents declared that participation is voluntary, but how 'voluntary' can words like 'all' and 'will' be when the legislation has actually codified the goals? [No standards, no money.] And how can such a first goal be accomplished without massive government intervention in preschool home life? Goals 2000 also says 'all' students 'will be involved in activities that demonstrate community service.' That's involuntary servitude.... NESIC will certify 'what all students should know and be able to do' -- the widely objectionable 'outcome-based education.'... Paraphrasing Thomas Jefferson's warning: Were we directed from Washington when to educationally sow and reap, we should soon want for bread for the mind... Goals 2000 is a bad idea." But it is a bad idea that was hidden from parents by a smokescreen until signed into federal law.

We haven't seen a copy of this Act as passed by Congress and signed by President Clinton. But we have a summary of this "Omnibus Educational Restructuring Act" as prepared by Kathy Finnegan (op cit), which we quote.

"Goals 2000: Educate America Act. 1) Codifies the six National Education Goals into federal law. 2) Authorizes $400 million in grant monies to the States to encourage 'voluntary' education reforms. 3) Changes the present private National Education Goals Panel (NEGP) into a federal bureaucracy. The NEGP is to be composed of two Presidential appointees, eight Governors, four Congressmen, and four members of State Legislatures. The Panel would get $3 million in 1994, with a possible extension of $3 million for 1995-98. 4) Establishes a 20-member (appointed) National Education Standards and Improvement Council (NESIC). NESIC will function as a sort of national school board, setting 'opportunity-to-learn standards (special help for some groups with females included under 'gender equity') and 'voluntary' national curriculum content and performance standards and certifying national assessments. Authorizes $3 million for NESIC for 1994 with unspecified amounts through 1998, if necessary. 5) Creates a 28-member National Skill Standards Board to identify broad clusters of occupations covering one or more industries that have skill requirements and to facilitate the formation of 'industry partnerships.' These partnerships would develop and then act as approving body for 'recommended' standards, assessments and procedures for certification of achievement of skills for each of these occupations. Authorizes $15 million in 1994 and 'such sums as may be necessary' for 1995-1998."

"There are many other education restructuring bills before Congress... which no individual can possibly keep up with," comments Mr. Blumenfeld. "Indeed, we wonder how many Congressmen have actually read any of these bills, or even a good portion of the more important bills. Each one of these bills ... mandates government spending of millions or billions of taxpayers' dollars. We wonder if any consideration at all is given our representatives to the cost of these bills when they vote on them. But when it comes to legislating revolution, cost is no object. No wonder taxes must be increased. How else can the government pay for all these programs? But how many of them do we really need? Considering the fact that there is no mention of education in the US Constitution, why is the Congress voting for all of these federal programs? Have any of the previous programs improved education? We've had Title One compensatory education for the socially disadvantaged, or Chapter One as it is now called, since 1965, and reading scores have gone down, not up. That, after an expenditure of about 70 billion dollars! When is Congress going to investigate the scandalous failure of Title One?"

Bipartisan duplicity. Once upon a time in these United States there were two principal political parties with two distinctly differing platforms and policies. But with the ascendancy of special interest cabals such as the CFR and the TC, the spirit of bipartisanship began to predominate; to such an extent that when the Democratic leaders, the Clintons and Gore, promised to "re-invent government," they were forced to call upon the Republican minority to aid them. In many ways, their "re-invented government" bears a striking resemblance to the departing Republican government. Example: Clinton claims credit for the passage of NAFTA. But that treaty was presented and promoted by Republican George Bush. When the Clintons moved into the White House NAFTA lay dormant for a few weeks until Henry Kissinger publicly warned Clinton to start pushing for its ratification. And suddenly a Republican policy became a bipartisan policy. Likewise the foreign policies of Republican Bush became the bipartisan policies of Democrat Clinton: Somalia, Bosnia, Haiti, South Africa, friendship for Russia and Red China, etc. As for domestic policy, the door-opening Brady Gun Bill was written by a Republican aide to Republican Reagan. Then suddenly it became a bipartisan promotion, and chances are it would never have been approved by the Senate if Republican minority leader Bob Dole had not secretly surrendered to the Democratic leadership.

The same is true of Goals 2000, the Educate America Act. In 1990, at the request of Bush, State Governors were called into conference to discuss ways of improving American education. It was named Goals 2000 and Arkansas Governor Bill Clinton was present. Six goals were named and when it was decided that Goals 2000 had to become federal law, those six goals were included. Writing in the April 1994 issue of Human Events, Howard L. Hurwitz, Phd, education columnist, history teacher and a high school principal in New York City for 40 years, who attended the original Goals 2000 conference, said, "Those six goals were pie-in-the-sky then, and are now." They are 1) All children will start school ready to learn; 2) The high school graduation rate will increase to ninety percent; 3) All children will be competent in core subjects; 4) The United States will be first in the world in math and science; 5) Every adult will be able to compete in the work force; and finally, 6) Every school in America will be free of drugs and violence. Since these six goals were approved by Bush in 1990, incumbent Republican Congressmen could vote for Goals 2000 in 1994 without thoughts of treason to party or country. As Dr. Horwitz says, "None of these goals can be reached by 2000, and in no event can the federal government play any substantial role in their achievement." But the Act does impose totalitarian control on all schools (if school districts don't "voluntarily" comply, no federal funding). The whole bundle is to be paid for with $422 million the first year. Hardly a tip for a meal prepared by Congress. But it is the tip of an iceberg.

Goals 2000 is but one of several bills-to-become-laws if the Clintons are successful in overcoming Whitewatergate, the smokescreen that has become an albatross. But Special Counsel Robert Fiske and his team have issued 150 subpoenas for witnesses and documents related to the Clintons. Whitewatergate just won't go away, but the Clinton administration may.

"Finally my brethren, be strong in the Lord and in the power of His might. Put on the whole armour of God that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil. For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places." (Eph. 6:10-12).

CROSSING THE RUBICON

It was to be the biggest boost for the big bankers since the creation of the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund (IMF). Even bigger than the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA), since this new World Trade Organization (WTO) would provide centralized global control over alleged "free trade" and tariffs. It had been a long struggle. Nineteen years ago the Insiders had created the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) and there had been repeated conferences and debates on how the nations of the world could be seduced into surrendering their sovereignty and independence in the matter of trade to an international agency that would hold monopolistic control over all trade that their people might buy or sell to the people of other nations. The planners of the New World Order almost gave up in this struggle seven years ago. But a new series of conferences known as the Uruguayan Round began. Then the Elitist hopes for absolute control would be accomplished with the end of GATT and a new treaty naming its successor as the World Trade Organization (WTO). On April 18, 1994 representatives from 120 countries convened at Marrakesh, Morocco, where they were to sign a 22,000 page, 385 pound agreement that would establish the Elitist goal of monopoly control of world trade between all countries of the world, with punishment provided for disobedience of any of the provisions of the treaty. The New York Times gave this brief description of "what it does" and we quote:

"Cuts import duties by about 40%, lowering prices on thousands of products. Phases out import limits that make textiles and clothing more expensive; Scales back state support to farmers. Liberalizes trade in such services as tourism. Establishes a World Trade Organization to help settle disputes." Peter Sutherland, Irish banker, former vice president of the European Union and European member of the Trilateral Commission, chaired the meeting and Vice President Al Gore was there to speak for the US, but not to sign the agreement. However, representatives of 109 of the 120 countries present did sign. Japan and France refused to sign until certain amendments had been approved and added to the 22,000 words of the agreement. Red China did not sign because it is not a member of GATT. Later, a little matter of "human rights" criticisms will be compromised, and China will sign because China is one of the most important of the members of the Asiatic Regional World Government that is to join NAFTA and the European Union as the third leg of the goal of the Trilateral Commission.

Interesting note: Al Gore addressed the convention and scared some of the members by telling them that "Washington would seek in future negotiations to discuss the relationship between trade and both environmental protection and workers' rights." The NYT explained: "Major exporting nations in Asia and Latin America fear that the United States, France and some other industrial countries want to link trade to the environment and labor as an excuse for creating non-tariff barriers to reduce the competitive advantage of poor low-wage economies." In any case, right or wrong, what has been called "the environmental religion" is the principal reason for the US not immediately signing the WTO treaty. This is one of those agreements in which the House of Representatives must approve and the Senate must ratify before the treaty is to become a "law of the land" in the United States. Consequently, it should be sometime next year before WTO becomes effective, and before that time there is a national election next November 8th. The results of that election could change many things for the better if the voters become aware, alert and active. But are we dreaming?

Meanwhile there is growing opposition to NAFTA in the three countries that sacrificed their sovereignty and independence in the matter of trade. NAFTA will operate under the direction of WTO, and is in the process of selecting and naming the various bureaucratic appointees who are to man the 40 commissions that are to dictate the rules under which "free trade" can be conducted by members of the North American Regional Economic Sphere. A NAFTA labor commission called "The Ministerial Commission for Labor Cooperation" will be based in Dallas with a staff of 15 bureaucrats (5 from each country) and a budget of $3 million for 1995, to be provided by taxpayers. Other commissions will be concerned with health and safety, environmental issues, trade laws and policies which are deemed unfair barriers to goods and services and must be nullified or rewritten. Heading the US section of this regional economic zone will be Labor Secretary Robert Reich. He is a Rhodes Scholar, is said to have been Bill Clinton's roommate when they attended Oxford University studying the techniques and strategies of Fabianism and the plan for World Government as outlined by Cecil Rhodes.

While the architects of the New World Order were progressing as planned in economic, commercial and monetary matters, things didn't seem to be progressing as the Cabalists might hope in matters of human relations. People were not cooperating as expected by the planners. There were too many wars and rumors of wars that they hadn't planned, as well as nationalistic, ethnic, religious and cultural differences that belied belief in a One World Global Plantation. In the Middle East diplomatic agents of the Elite Cabal had finally worked out a peace plan that would keep the Israelis safe and the Palestinians content. But while the leaders seemed satisfied, the people were not. In this area in this century there had been trouble ever since property had been taken away from the landowners and given to people who stormed in from Russia and Germany to set up a new nation called Israel. And when this latest peace plan was announced, the bitter feud grew greater and more violent. In that land which contained the oil rich Arabian countries, the Cabal had not been able to divide between themselves the oil of the Middle East. After World War One the oil barons had established countries that would divide the oil between themselves and keep peace in the region. It didn't. Later, a long war between Iran and Iraq settled nothing. A UN coalition headed by the US to keep Iraq from taking oil assigned to Kuwait settled nothing favorable to the Cabal. Latest word from Joseph de Courcy's Intelligence Digest was that Saddam Hussein may be planning a "pride-restoring operation" against the Kurds in northern Iraq. That rumor may have provided the reason for the 'screwup' when two American pilots spotted two helicopters in the no-fly zone over Northern Iraq, thought they were Iraqi and shot them down, killing 15 Americans, 3 Turks, 1 French, 2 British and 5 Kurds. The incident was so serious and so beyond rational explanation that Defense Secretary William Perry canceled an important trip to Korea where war is possible, to take personal charge of an investigation to see how such a careless catastrophe could have happened.

Things were not working out as well as had been expected by the Planners in the South African takeover. There was more resistance than expected by the Global Peacekeepers. The Cabalists had planned for a Communist government to take charge. Nelson Mandela had been freed from prison, his wife had been isolated so her violent past would not affect his planned political future, and he was prepared to become president of the new Communist government of South Africa. If all has gone as expected, when you read this Mandela will have been elected, and 25 of the 35 hand picked assistants in his administration will be members of the South African Communist Party. It is predicted that Joe Slovo is to be the minister of foreign affairs, Joe Modiso will be chief of the military, and communist strategists such as Pallo Jordan and Mac Maharaj are named; the cream of the Communist Party will now become the rancid cream of the South African government. Lest anyone doubts that Mandela is a Communist, it should be remembered that when he was arrested in 1964 for conspiracy to commit acts of violence and for seeking to overthrow the South African government by violent means, he had in his hand a document he had written himself which included this passage: "In our country, the struggles of the oppressed people are guided by the South African Communist Party and inspired by its policies. The aim of the SACP is to defeat the Nationalist government and to free the people of South Africa from the evils of racial discrimination and exploitation and to build a classless or socialist society in which the mines and factories will be owned by the state. Under a Communist party government, South Africa will become a land of milk and honey." Mandela has never retracted those views.

But even he must admit that South Africa is no longer a land of milk and honey. The extreme resistance to this 'one man, one party' election may have shocked even the Elitists who had planned it that way; and it certainly must have been a shock to those who have been told, and who believed, that Communism is dead. In order to mitigate the presence of murder and mayhem that predominated throughout the election, Henry Kissinger and a group of top ranking Insiders were sent to South Africa. They came, saw and were conquered in their salving attempts and quickly flew back to New York City where they said they hoped things would quieten down after the election had been won. One of them added: "The new South African government will represent the first major reversal of the almost universal post-Cold War move away from communism." He would have been more on target had he said that throughout Europe and Asia as well as Africa, there seems to be a move away from Democracy toward Communism, Fascism, or some other form of Socialism.

It should never be forgotten that members of our own federal government have been actively responsible for the creation of a Socialist government in South Africa, and that the involvement of the US with the former members of the USSR is highly questionable. Nowhere has this been more evident than in the current Bosnian affair. It has been known from the beginning that Russia sided with Serbia; and our government has been careful not to offend the Russian government in its dealings with the ethnic groups involved in the Bosnian crisis. When the three-way war erupted, the newly active European Union and its member states were stymied and asked the US to bail them out by taking charge of the situation. After about a dozen starts and stops, all designed to stop the Serbs without offending the Russians, it seems the only way to handle the situation was to call upon NATO. This was an international organization representing them all, originally created to protect Europe from possible Soviet attacks. Now the Soviets were gone and NATO was looking for a new purpose for its existence. Bosnia gave NATO a chance to become a military arm of the UN, if the US approved. It was agreed by all that intervention by ground forces would be disastrous, another Vietnam. So NATO's air arm was selected to scare the Serbs. Russia rejected the plan, so NATO had to scare the Serbs without angering the Russians. In the raid that stopped the Serbs temporarily it also sent Russian peacekeeping troops into Bosnia to save the Serbs from real danger. That bombing attack was most unusual. Four bombs were to be dropped. Two were duds and never exploded. One got caught in its own hangings and was never delivered. The fourth hit a truck or some similar unarmed vehicle. Wire services admit that NATO had made "two symbolic airstrikes against Gorazde. The strikes were too modest to make an impression on the Serbs, who continued their assault on the town. Boris Yeltsin was said to be visiting in Italy at the time, but other Russian officials expressed anger at the airstrikes without first warning Moscow. The Swedish Secret Service has told the CIA that Yeltsin is "dangerously ill" with cirrhosis of the liver, and Vladimir Zhironovsky, who has recently been confirmed as head of the Liberal Democratic Party (neo-Fascist) is preparing to take over if and when possible. But Yeltsin did return to Moscow and has asked that American and European leaders meet with him in Moscow to find a way to bring an end to the 2-year-war. Clinton is quoted as saying, "It deserves serious consideration, and I want to discuss it with him and the other nations that would be involved." So that places Yeltsin in a peculiar situation. Seems that he won a Serbian cease-fire pledge only to be double-crossed, and asked for a summit. Meanwhile the Clinton administration "hopes to devise a joint high-level approach with Moscow that might help press the Serbs to return to the negotiating table." So Yeltsin responded, asked for such a summit. "Oh what a tangled web we weave, when first we practice to deceive," wrote Sir Walter Scott.

James McCartney of Knight-Ridder Newspapers made more sense than most when he warned that "We have crossed the Rubicon. We are now in the position of having resorted to force ... and are stuck with it." He quotes Gen. John Shalikashvili, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff: "Right now it is our judgment that conditions do not lend themselves to the use of air power." Meaning, air power is ineffective, ground forces would provide the only answer, and that would mean another Vietnam. Defense Secretary William Perry agrees, said flatly that the United States would not enter the war to save Gorazde. But Clinton and his State Department continue to believe that the Serbs can be intimidated by threats and airstrikes. So far the Serbs do not appear to be intimidated by the UN, NATO, or Clinton. Serb Leader Radovan Karadzic responded to the airstrikes by touring the Serbian front, giving pep talks to his troops, and declaring that "the United Nations has made a catastrophic mistake. We have won. They have put their last card on the table. Now they will have to send land forces to fight with us." McCartney concludes: "The questions in the situation are basic. What exactly are American interests in Bosnia? To what extent does the turmoil there threaten Americans? The administration is teetering on the brink of an escalating military involvement." The answer:

"Stand fast therefore in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free, and be not entangled with the yoke of bondage." (Galatians 5:1).

THE TWO-STAGE REVOLUTION

The fall of the Union of South Africa and the installation of Communist control of the nation was inevitable. After Rhodesia had been destroyed and communized, the fall of South Africa was scheduled to come next in due time. With the aid of the US State Department and the Foreign Offices of the United Kingdom and the Communist International, the architects of the New World Order would direct the Communist takeover of South Africa, gain complete control of the mineral resources of that nation and, along with control of the new Russian Federation, would have control over 90 percent of the mineral resources of the entire world. Back in 1973, long before the arrival of Gorbachev and his Perestroika plan, Brezhnev referred to the two great strategic mineral chests of the world: South Africa and the Persian Gulf oil fields. Whoever controlled them would be in a position to dictate terms of settlement to the governments of the world, including the United States. A war to prevent dominance over the Persian oil fields was fought and won, by the United States in behalf of the UN. And assured control of the mineral resources of South Africa would be effected through the International Communist control of the Union of South Africa. We have been told that Communism is dead. It is more truthful to say that national control of Communism by a single government (USSR) is dead, but International Communism is alive throughout the world. Joe Slovo, the Chairman of the South African Communist Party (SACP) is also a colonel in the KGB and has been the chief strategist for the revolution which has seen the rise of Nelson Mandela to the presidency of the new government of South Africa. The African National Congress is the name of the party under control, and it is under the control of the SACP. The ANC/SACP leadership is closely allied with the KGB which headquarters in Russia but is now international in scope, is also closely allied with Kadafy in Libya, with Arafat in the PLO, with Castro in Cuba, and with other Communist organizations throughout the world. The Communists still dominate the Peoples Republic of China, North Korea, Nicaragua, Angola, Mozambique, Zimbabwe, Namibia and they are working to overthrow the Philippines (the New Peoples Army), and 'former Communists' are in control (through the KGB) in virtually all of the Russian Republics and in several of the Eastern European countries such as Romania. Don McAlvany in his April Intelligence Adviser adds that "Communist parties all over the world (some under innocuous names such as the Democratic Party in Italy, or the Social Democratic Party in Poland) are resurfacing and are experiencing the greatest resurgence of membership in decades. ... In Russia, the KGB is not only alive and well, but it has been reorganized three times in the past five years, and is today larger than it was five years ago. The KGB (or its predecessor) has controlled and directed the South African Communist Party since its inception in the 1920s. The chairman of the SACP today, which controls the ANC, is Joe Slovo, a White Lithuanian and a colonel in the KGB... But the communist revolution in South Africa would not be succeeding today if not for betrayals of the peoples (Black, White, Colored and Indian) of the RSA by high government officials of the South African government, who long since have been coopted by the US State Department and CIA, the New World Order and/or the KGB. There has also been an unholy alliance of forces in the West that have been behind the ANC/SACP revolution, including the US government, media, and Liberal Establishment, the governments of United Europe, dozens of other Western nations who have financially supported the ANC/CSCP alliance; the World Council of Churches and other domestic and international religious organizations; and that international vehicle for world government, the United Nations."

Because of the intermittent, brutal, necklacing type warfare between the tribes in South Africa, the Communist-led ANC adopted the "classic, text-book, Marxist-Leninist type of revolution" sticking closer to Lenin's and Mao's revolutionary script than any other since the rape of Russia and China by the Communists. Strategies and methods used in the Western industrial nations are more like the Fabian Socialist blueprint. But in the case of Africa, "a step backward to go forward" was adopted. It appears that the Ruling Cartel didn't care what methods were used; the final goal was the creation of a sociofascist government that made the Insiders owners or controllers of all the mineral wealth of the nation. So the re-emergence and resurgence of the Bolshevik type of takeover didn't bother the power brokers. So the Communists could do whatever they decided to do, so long as the general guidelines set by the New World Order Planners were observed. As the 4/16/94 issue of Fact Finder noted: "The International Bankers have no fear of the Communists because they hold the wealth of the world, and money to them means power. However, the Communists have plans to take over [for themselves] the natural wealth of South Africa, and that may give them greater power - the power to rule the world." In this regard, there are serious discussions within the most inner circles of the SACP and the ANC regarding a minerals/oil cartel between a Marxist South Africa, radical Islam, and Russia, and a subsequent blockade against the West (particularly America). The 6/1/93 issue of Intelligence Digest spoke of an emerging alliance between Russia and radical Islam and an ANC-dominated South Africa. Also, Russia and KGB-controlled Kazakhstan have applied for membership in OPEC. This would give OPEC 50 percent of the world's oil production and 80 percent of the world's known oil reserves. Commented Intelligence Digest: "When the ANC gains total power [and it has], only those who bow to radical Islam and the ANC will get their raw materials, and there was a report that the ANC will try to link up with the Islam-Arabic empire spreading south from Libya to control all of Africa." Another important item: The ANC which now controls South Africa has moved its bank accounts to the Islamic Bank. It must also be remembered that Russia's military, now the world's largest due to the Clinton Administration's reduction in America's military, is still largely intact, and KGB "former communists" still control Russia from behind the scenes, just as America's Eastern Establishment controls the United States from behind the scenes. J de Courcy noted that "There are powerful globalists who own a number of the top officials in the ruling South African National Party, and have paid them well (i.e., hundreds of millions of rands) to deliver South Africa to Marxist rule under the ANC (which is being accomplished now that the election is over), and these Insiders believe this will enable them to better exploit the RSA's vast mineral wealth, and a quantum leap toward moving the African continent under the umbrella (and control) of the New World Order."

In this crucial post-election situation in South Africa, it has been most difficult to obtain honest and objective information. The media are intent upon covering up the fact that Nelson Mandela is a Communist and a figure-head president whose real boss is Joe Slovo, Lithuanian, Colonel in the KGB, and chairman of the South African Communist Party. The news you have been reading in your local paper is censored, not necessarily by your local outlet, but by the news agency feeding the propaganda to local outlets. We know this because of news coming from Aida Parker, editor and publisher of a newsletter coming to us from South Africa. In her last letter (4/94) she wrote: "Ghastly as it is, we must no longer shirk the truth. When the London Sunday Times editorialized 3/4/94, that SA's coming elections were an 'enormous fraud,' that there was 'no way' that the elections are by any standard going to be 'free and fair', that the campaign is a 'bloody mess', that SA 'is now on the brink of civil war,' it was merely saying what SA's own media should have been saying weeks ago. Despite belligerent denials from both the ANC and F.W.deKlerk, still trying to pretend that he is Commander-in-Chief of the SA situation, SA is indeed committing slow-motion suicide." She also reported that "the UK Government is indeed examining the possibility that it might have to evacuate 300,000 British nationals ... if a Bosnian repeat should blow up in coming weeks or months. And Lisbon reportedly is well ahead with contingency plans to airlift 600,000 Portuguese nationals to safety should the SA crisis collapse into bloody chaos." There was a personal note from Aida. She wrote: "Your publisher tried to break up a dog fight: as a result, has spent more time in hospital surgeries than at my desk. It could not have happened at a more unfortunate time." We know the feeling. We were hospitalized with a broken hip when a devastating hurricane hit South Florida and we were unable to report. However, Aida Parker of South Africa is of sterner stuff than this editor; and if you are interested in reading of the hell that has been visited upon South Africa, write to APN, POBox 91059, Auckland Park, 2006, South Africa. Usually 20 pages, monthly, airmailed US$80.00.

Another highly recommended newsletter is Donald McAlvany's Intelligence Advisory. Fifteen years ago Don made his first visit to South Africa, toured the country for six weeks, fell in love with the country and its people, and has made fifteen more trips to South Africa. His issue of 4/94 deals almost exclusively with the "The Rape of South Africa: Revolution, Betrayal and Resistance." Everyone should read it. The McAlvany Intelligence Advisory for April is a 44-page special report. Domestic rate: $115 per year. Subscription office, POBox 84904, Phoenix AZ 85071.

Don calls the South Africa takeover a "Two-Stage Revolution." He describes the strategy being employed by the Communists, and we quote: "Marxist-Leninist theory accords a central role to 'national liberation movements' in the Third World countries. In terms of Marxist-Leninist theory, Third World countries cannot move directly to the stage of a communist revolution. They must first pass through the stage of 'national liberation.' During this stage, a broad national front should be created comprising a coalition of all 'progressive elements' (i.e., liberals, churchmen, students, media and press sympathizers, and workers) under the leadership of the 'vanguard party.' In the case of South Africa, the 'vanguard party' during Stage 1, the national liberation stage is the ANC. Once the 'national liberation' (Stage 1) has been achieved (i.e., the interim government is in place, the security forces are neutralized, the 'democratic' elections are held, and the 'national democracy' under the ANC/SACP has been established -- all should be a fait accompli by the time the elections are completed or shortly thereafter) then Stage II of the revolution will begin under the leadership of the 'vanguard party of the workers (i.e., the SACP.)"

During this second stage, liberal and democratic elements in the former national front are dispensed with (i.e., purged) prior to the establishment of the 'people's democracy,' or communist state. Stage II is the consolidation phase of the gains of the revolution and the elimination of the liberals, moles, quisling-types such as Pik Botha, F.W. De Klerk, Roelf Meyer, etc., who helped facilitate Stage I, and the establishment of socialist structures and people control machinery.... Stage I of the South African revolution (i.e., the 'national democratic revolution') took place over several decades but advanced more rapidly when Pik Botha became Prime Minister in the late '70s and really accelerated with De Klerk became State President in 1990 (both very 'useful assets' to the revolution). Stage I of the revolution is now drawing to a successful conclusion (from the viewpoint of the ANC/SACP alliance) and Stage II (the 'socialist revolution') is about to begin. The second stage of this classic Marxist-Leninist revolution could last three to five years, but should accelerate rapidly over the next 6 to 12 months. Neutralization of the opposition (i.e., conservatives, anti-communists, Christian Zulus, etc. will be a key component of Stage II. So real persecution of the good guys is about to begin..... South African Foreign Minister Pik Botha said on Cable News Network a couple of years ago: 'As soon as democracy is in place in South Africa the New World Order will be ushered in.' ... It should be kept in mind that like Bill and Hillary Clinton, Al Gore, or George Bush - F.W. De Klerk and Pik Botha are simply low ranking employees of the New World Order, and as such they take orders, and can be dumped as easily as Carter or Bush were... In the meantime, the challenge for the free peoples of South Africa is to keep from being delivered into the New World Order or a communist hell by their leaders and the ANC/SACP partners.... Upheaval and oppression are coming to South America in the immediate future. That seems certain. However, out of these convulsions is likely to come spiritual revival and resistance, and one day sometime in the future South Africa is likely to be free again. In the meantime South Africans should hunker down, walk close to the Lord, seek His wisdom, guidance and strength, and get ready for a mighty big fight. What you have just read is but a sampling of this Special Report. It should be read by everyone.

"Who will rise up for me against the evildoers? or who will stand up for me against the workers of iniquity? Unless the Lord had been my help, my soul had almost dwelt in silence. When I said, My foot slippeth; thy mercy, O Lord, held me up. In the multitude of my thoughts within me thy comforts delight my soul. Shall the throne of iniquity have fellowship with thee, which frameth mischief by a law? They gather themselves together against the soul of the Righteous, and condemn the innocent blood. But the Lord is my defence; and my God is the rock of my refuge. And He shall bring upon them their own iniquity and shall cut them off in their own wickedness; yea, the Lord our God shall cut them off." (Psalm 94:16,23).

THE OPEN CONSPIRACY

With a $200 haircut, a $76,000 hairport tie-up, a pre-emptive purging and rehiring of the seven-member White House travel staff, mishandling of the Bosnian trouble, near defeat in the House and expected defeat in the Senate of his budget basket, things were getting out of hand. Paul Greenberg of the Arkansas Democrat Gazette in Little Rock commented, "This was supposed to be a presidential honeymoon. It's turning into a wake.... During the presidential campaign, Bill Clinton seemed protected by some lucky star that worked off all his good-ol'-boy carelessness about details like character and principle. Suddenly it's gone. Surely even his hardest critics have to feel a little sorry for the guy just now. Neither his success nor his failure nor his remarkable ability to turn failure around, or at least hide it, has prepared this president for such a run of bad luck." To top it off, Walter Scott's Personality Parade of May 30 almost told the whole truth about why all this is happening. Scott published a question which is said to have come from W. Lassiter of Los Angeles who asked, "When he was running for President, Bill Clinton sounded eager to have the chance to appoint liberal judges to the Supreme Court and the federal bench. Yet after Associate Justice Byron White announced his resignation from the High Court, the new President delayed choosing a replacement. Who or what is responsible for his hesitation?" Scott answered: "The 'who' is Hilary Rodham Clinton. The 'what' are the two things that have distracted Mrs. Clinton for months - first the illness and death of her father, then the gargantuan task of putting together a new national health-care plan. Because the President values his wife's opinions, some decisions are not made at the White House until the First Lady has had the chance to review the available evidence and weigh in with her recommendations. The appointment of a new Supreme Court justice is such a case." Walter Scott seems to have answered another question that was not asked by the questioner: "Who is really in charge at the White House?"

One thing was sure. The power brokers of the Council on Foreign Relations and the American section of the Trilateral Commission decided something had to be done about the situation. Seems that the CFR and TC hierarchy will overlook snafus of their agents if only domestic affairs are involved. In the case of Jimmy Carter they ignored his strange story of seeing white rabbits in the middle of a lake. And he did give away the Panama Canal and help to set up the truce between Israel and Egypt. But it was a different matter when he ordered that ridiculous attempt to rescue by helicopter the American diplomatic staff incarcerated in Lebanon. Added to his staff were Democratic foreign affairs veteran Lloyd Cutler and Time magazine editor Hedley Donovan. Now the same treatment must be applied to save the Clinton administration. And the Republican moderate David Gergen was called on to protect CFR and TC programs involving US Presidential action. Gergen, also CFR and TC, was called on to do the same for Ronald Reagan's First 100 Days as President. Gergen also had assisted Nixon and Ford. So, dependable and his ability proven, David Gergen gave up his job as editor-at-large of US News and prominent commentator for CNN, to become "director of communications with the difficult task of reshaping the [Clinton] administration's message," according to the Cox News Service. Gergen is, of course a ranking member of both the CFR and the TC. And with Clinton also a member but presently ranking very low in the estimate of other western leaders and heads of state, Gergen can be expected to function for Clinton in much the same manner that Kissinger functioned for Nixon and Ford, and as Brzezinski functioned for Carter.

But the man to watch is the former Secretary General of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and Chairman of the Communist Party: Mikhail Gorbachev. There is a historical parallel that, to us, seems significant. In July, 1945, the wartime Prime Minister of Britain, Winston Churchill, was defeated. As a final act, he appeared eleven months later in Fulton, Missouri. There he spoke of the Iron Curtain descending across Europe. That speech was accepted as the signal announcing that the "hot war" era occasioned by World War Two was ended, and the new era, the Cold War, was to follow. Forty-six years later, the General Secretary of the Soviet Union was defeated in a political contest with Boris Yeltsin. Gorbachev also resigned as leader of the Communist Party. Approximately one year later, he, too, as had Churchill in 1946, appeared in Fulton, Missouri. There he, in effect, signaled an ending of the Cold War era, and the beginning of a new era, one that H.G.Wells, sixty years earlier, had predicted and called it the Open Conspiracy which would create a Socialist New World Order. Wells had written: "Fundamentally important issues upon which unanimity must be achieved from the outset are: Firstly, the entirely provisional nature of all existing governments, and the provisional nature therefore of all loyalties associated therewith [the surrender of sovereignty and independence of all nations and the creation of a global government]; Secondly, the supreme importance of population control in human biology [legalized abortion and euthanasia] and the possibility it affords us of a release from the pressure of the struggle for existence on ourselves; and

Dear Don: I have been taking your fine letter for twenty-five years but now, at the age of ninety-five, I have run out of time and money.... Probably you are not old enough to remember when President Woodhead Wilson, the puppet of the communist, Mandel Huise ("Colonel Edward Mandel House" from the Round Table in England, Wilson's "alter ego"), sent a shipload of 140 anarchists and six million dollars in gold from the Zionist bankers in New York to ensure the success of Lenin's revolution....But for the action of Huise's stooge Wilson, our President, communism would have collapsed, countless millions of lives would have been saved and this once-great nation would not be sinking into the morass of the New World Order.....

Once or twice a week I see a "friend" of sixty-five years. Two years ago he remarked that I seemed so disturbed about the world situation. I said, "At my age, what happens to me doesn't make much difference. My concern is for my ten grandchildren." "Aw, why don't you just live your life and let your grandchildren look out for themselves!" That from a former teacher at the Virginia Military Institute! Is it any wonder that we are headed for another Dark Age?

P.S. I see that I owe you seventy-five dollars so enclose small check. Perhaps some day, if and when my ship comes in, I'll be able to send you the rest. Cordially....(P.P.S. Parts of this letter deleted, too personal for publication without permission, including identification of writer-Ed.).

Thirdly, the urgent necessity of protective resistance against the present traditional drift towards war (check the Report from Iron Mountain on the Possibility of Peace, through a global environmental drive and creation of an international movement known as The Greening)." Said Wells, "People who do not grasp the significance of these issues do not really begin to understand the Open Conspiracy."

Before George Bush, in behalf of the oil industry, induced the Security Council of the United Nations to mandate a war against Iraq, and when Bush spoke openly of that war's importance in promoting The New World Order, the previously secret and concealed conspiracy became an Open Conspiracy. The people at large, the outsiders, were to join with the insiders in developing this New Age. Only then did it become The Open Conspiracy that Wells had predicted some sixty years earlier. So, between Bush's announcement of a New World Order and Gorbachev's speech at Fulton in May 1992, did the previously secret conspiracy become an Open Conspiracy which all the people were to assist and promote. In addition, thanks to Bush and Gorbachev, the previously feeble and ineffective United Nations was awakened, rejuvenated and spoken of as the One World Government. Joseph de Courcy, editor of the important Intelligence Digest, issue of May 21, 1993, noted:

"Gorbachev's May 1992 speech was billed in advance as the official declaration that the Cold War was over, and that was how it was reported. But there was much more to his speech than a declaration that the Cold War was over. The critical element was about the UN and how the new world order should be based on international democracy. 'In a qualitatively new and different situation, the overwhelming majority of the United Nations, will, I hope, be capable of organizing themselves and acting in concert on the principles of democracy,' Gorbachev said. This was not a call for all the nations of the world to practice democracy internally but a proposal for the UN to be run by majority voting with the poor nations, led by Russia, using their numerical superiority to outvote the UN and its industrially-developed allies. Of course there was little chance of the US falling for this, but from a Russian point of view it made good propaganda in the Third World."

When Gorbachev was allegedly surprised and incarcerated for a time in that strange and still unexplained coup that allowed Boris Yeltsin to capture the crowd with his physical stand against a tank and thereby gain control of the Russian government, it seemed for a time that this would end Gorbachev's career. He seemed as politically dead as was his New World Order partner, George Bush, when their version of The New World Order was tabled and other strategies adopted by the Power Brokers' Elite. However, Gorby wasn't that easily retired from the world stage. In a little time the author of Perestroika was found heading a think tank. Yeltsin tried to stop Gorby by ordering the shutdown of the Moscow-based think tank. But Gorby simply left the East and went to the West, still looking for a way to create a New World Order with Russia and a different brand of Socialism running the global government. His international headquarters was transferred to the United States. But that didn't put him out of touch with Russia. He gave a talk via Russian TV in which he said, "Everything that started in 1985 has to be continued. You think the Gorbachev era has ended. I only gave the dawn. It is still not midday. I think there is more ahead of us." (This according to Washington Report, 10309, St. Petersburg, FL 33733. Monthly, $25 per year.)

Apparently to hasten the coming of his predicted midday, Gorby then announced that he had formed a new environmental organization, one which is likely to develop into an international political party replacing the now seemingly supine Communist International. Gorby calls his new organization The International Green Cross and Green Crescent. "On 4/17/93 Gorbachev presided over the founding [in] Kyoto, Japan. Before the big event, Gorby had been in Washington, where he told the House of Representatives, 'The Green Cross aspires to be for environment crises what the Red Cross and Red Crescent already is for disaster relief....Mr. Gorbachev spoke fervently and at length about it, saying the group would seek to standardize anti-pollution laws worldwide. (Translation: promote one-world government through the Greening)." (Quoted from Franklin Sanders' Moneychanger, 6/93. Monthly, $95.00. P.O.Box 341753, Memphis TN 38184).

Gorby's next move was not widely publicized in the United States. But an article he wrote, which appeared in the May 13th issue of the London Daily Telegraph, proved to be sensational in Europe. We haven't been able to obtain a copy of the article, but the British based Intelligence Digest (5/21/93) gave a review of it. We quote: "Gorbachev expanded his ideas for the UN's role in the new world order (and you can be sure that his views coincide very closely with the Kremlin's objectives). The most important part of his article was his proposal for regional UN security councils. The purpose of this proposal, openly stated, was to exclude America from European matters. After reiterating his views on the need to make critical reforms through the UN 'to change how we handle international security', Gorbachev argued that Europe 'can't go begging to Washington' every time a problem arises in Europe. What is needed, he wrote, is 'a European Security Council, a secretary-general for Europe, structures that have authority and a collective mandate, plus military forces for prevention of future crises and for rapid deployment when necessary...Obviously, the United States and Canada need to be associated with these structures, but these new organizations would take on 'regional' functions directly'."

At Fulton Gorby called for international democracy among the nations as well as national democracy within each nation. A year later he is saying that the world should be divided, much as the Socialist George Orwell's 1984 divided the world into regional governments. "left unsaid is the corollary that without an American presence the European Community would be overshadowed by Russia's military might," said the Intelligence Digest report.

No, dear reader, Communism is not dead. It merely changed its name. And its leaders, now calling themselves promoters of democracy, have chosen another set of socialist tactics and strategies to deceive the world. And the Conspirators, once secret like the sodomites, now come out of their closets, take high places in society and government, and invite the people of America and the Western World to join them in an Open Conspiracy to create their New World Order.

"And for this cause God shall send them strong delusion, that they should believe a lie: That they all might be damned who believed not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness...Therefore, brethren, stand fast and hold the traditions which ye have been taught." (II Thessalonians 2:11,15).
