If public men and great newspapers fear to attack this argument for fear of loss of popularity, a political question more vital to our future prosperity than any which has been presented since the abolition of slavery may not receive proper consideration.

There is no doubt but that this socialistic tendency is gaining strength and that the disposition on the part of the public to take power not consistent with true political economy is growing.

Weak men and designing politicians are accepting part of the theories of socialism either because they know no better, or they desire to take advantage of the political agitation for personal ends....

The demand that the "public" should control, regulate, and investigate everything and everybody who is making money, with a view of seizing any profit over and above a rate of interest that they (the public) think fair, is only the worst form of socialism (Ralph Nader please note—Ed.)

The clamor in some quarters that the public should own utilities, and that the government should regulate and control insurance, railroads, trusts, and other great private business ventures is nothing more or less than socialism, which would undoubtedly end in Despotism or Empire.

It cannot be that the American people wish to change our form of government, and these recommendations mean a change so radical that we would place back in the hands of an executive of our own selection a power we took away from the executive by the war of the Revolution. We are asked to place in the hands of our executive department the power claimed by kings and emperors, and to give to our executive officers the same form of control over business affairs from which we released ourselves by that long and bloody struggle....

The idea of the government "doing things" has grown very rapidly and the evident willingness on the part of our lower branch of congress to turn over to the executive every power requested, is quite in line with the history of Republics which have merged into Empire.

The lower branch of congress (the peoples representatives) has already built up the power of the executive department to such an extent that the congress itself is fast losing its independence and were it not for the Senate our political institutions would be in danger. But this semi-socialistic agitation proposes to give more and more power to the Executive and all of the reforms now apparently so popular are pointing to a change in the form of government laid down by our Fathers.

In Monarchies or Empires the people have not had the constitutional protection from inquisition, control and regulation which we possess, and this has been our greatest freedom.

My object in writing this book is to show the danger of departing from the written constitution in these matters....

(end of quotation)

Col. Browne, writing the above for publication immediately after the election campaigns of 1906, continually stresses the danger of drifting away from the strict guidelines laid down in the Constitution, or of saddling it with Amendments that would alter the basic nature of the Constitution. He insisted that "if we cut loose from our constitutional moorings which have bound us to individual liberty and personal rights, we cannot fail to drift toward the sands of Socialism or the rock of Empire; there is no open channel between these danger points."

In order to better understand the "mood of the times" in that first decade of this present twentieth century, we should like to quote from the conclusion to Col. Browne's book, wherein he summarizes the political dangers which faced the Nation at that time. In reading the following you may gain the impression that history seems to be repeating itself. We quote:

Thousands of voters who have taken an active part in politics (in the campaigns of 1906—Ed.) failed to see expressions in any of the party platforms which represented their political beliefs. It developed that at the present time there is no "conservative" party in the United States. Each one of the parties appears to be vieing with the other, in an attempt to get nearer the beliefs of socialism than its opponent. The leaders who framed the platform expressions appear to have lost their political bearings.

It is strange to see in a democratic platform a demand that the central national government should control private business ventures owned by citizens. It is far more strange to see in a democratic platform a demand that the national government should control, regulate and possibly purchase our railroads, which have been chartered by the several states and owned by private citizens. It is ridiculous to see a democratic endorsement of a civil service reform which has already created a "class" of office holders four hundred thousand strong. Recommendations such as these would cause Jefferson to disclaim the title of democrat, and a demand that the central government take control of the paper issues of currency instead of leaving that function to banks owned by citizens, should cause the ghost of Jackson to haunt the framer of such a resolution.

The natural concentration of power in the hands of an executive which these demands would bring about would but repeat the mistake of the democracy which made a Caesar possible. Can it be that the democrats have learned nothing in two thousand years and now wish to repeat the error that destroyed the first republic? Representative democrats should know that these things are not democratic principles, and that they are only inserted in their platforms to catch the votes of imperialists or socialists....

From appearances the conservative democrats have been "spewed out" of their party, as Mr. (William Jennings) Bryan expresses it.

The tendency and desire of democratic orators have been to create the impression that their party represents the man without money, and one branch of that party attempts to create popularity by inciting the indigent against the rich. Madison in the constitutional convention frankly stated that with universal suffrage this class of voters would outnumber the other and it is good political economy for some party to guide this class of voters if it is done through representative selections and in American ways.

In politics as well as legislation it is well to have an opposition; it creates a balance-wheel in our governmental machinery. Unfortunately at the present time the socialistic trend of thought drifts parallel to democratic beliefs and the democratic party has adopted many socialistic heresies in the hope of attaching that element to it. It would be better for the believers in the theories mentioned if they would join together either as socialists or democrats, and release the conservative element now associated with the democratic party....

Again, for forty years, either the intuitive or expressed knowledge that the democratic party hoped to represent the poor in antagonism to the rich, has had the effect of driving the greater portion of the commercial element into the republican party. The commercial and stockholding classes have assisted the republican party, and it cannot be denied that the party has protected these interests. The party did not protect these interests as against the poor, because the protection extended has created the greatest prosperity, and enabled the laborer to receive better pay than in any other country. So that this protection has been the greatest assistance our poor people have received. But in the last campaign the party, through unwise leadership, advocated reforms which ... did not come from the people up to the government, but originated in the government itself, and the untried leaders of the party attempted to engraft these ideas—inspired in Washington—into party platforms. So that we find in republican platforms a demand for the government to regulate and control the greater business ventures of our citizens..

If it is the desire of socialism that the government operate all of the business of the country and that no man should be better paid or better off than his fellow, and that the most ignorant citizen should have as much to say in government as the ablest; it is well to have the expression placed in their platform and every man who holds that belief, vote for it. Let him vote the socialist ticket and be done with it.

If the democrats believe in free trade, in states' rights, and that all the laws should be passed in the interest of the poor, or, as they express it, "the greatest good to the greatest number," it is right to put it in their platform.

But the party leaders who place expressions in a democratic platform favoring (government) ownership of public utilities, control of railroads and regulation of trusts, are practicing a deceit on their followers who do not study political conditions, and are leading them into socialism.

The republican who advocates that the government should regulate, control and investigate privately owned investments with an avowed determination of limiting the profits to a certain percentage to be determined by political parties or "the people," is adopting socialism in an indirect form.

There is no difference between a seizure of profits and a robbery of property. The only object in the ownership of property is to receive the benefits in the form of profit.

Unless one of the parties now in existence ... takes the conservative side in this issue socialism will be an assured fact, or the hardship of a financial panic will be necessary to bring the people back to reason. ... The majority of the people do not believe in these proposed reforms, and the fall elections prove it conclusively.

Are we to drift to socialism, ... or are we building up a power in our Executive Department so strong and comprehensive that some ambitious man when President will cast aside the precedent established by Washington and assume to rule not only eight years, but a lifetime?

If we cut loose from our constitutional moorings which have bound us to individual liberty and personal rights, we cannot fail to drift toward the sands of Socialism, or the rock of Empire; there is no open channel between these danger points.

(end of quotation)

The foregoing should give us a good view of the political mood of the people and their party leaders in the first decade of this century. It should be noted that Col. Browne did not fear the bomb-throwing anarchists, the violence-prone communists, the strike-fomenting syndicalists, or the socialists who formed political parties and declared themselves to be socialists seeking to overthrow our form of government. His fear was concentrated on those socialists who masqueraded as "liberal" Democrats or Republicans and who infiltrated and polluted the parties and inserted socialistic planks in otherwise conservative platforms. He feared the kind of socialist described by George Bernard Shaw when he spoke of himself and declared:

"...the true Fabian is not, and never can be, a party man or woman. My Party, right or wrong, is not our slogan. All Fabians have their price, which is always the adoption of Fabian measures, no matter what party."

It was the British historian, G. M. Trevelyan, who first identified publicly and wrote openly of this form of collectivism that was to socialize England, and later the United States also. At the turn of the century, Trevelyan wrote:

"The third current of fin de siecle Socialism, and the most important, was the Fabian doctrine. ... The Fabian Society was founded in 1883. Its name recalls a Roman General whose motto was 'slow but sure.' Eschewing revolution and intent on the actualities of England at the end of the nineteenth century Fabians exonerated socialists from the heavy obligation of reading Karl Marx.

Without dogmatizing as to the ultimate future of industrial organization, they preached practical possibilities, here and now—municipal socialism and state control of conditions of labor. Equally far from Marx and Morris, they left the New Jerusalem alone, and sought to impregnate the existing forces of society with collectivist ideas. The Fabians became experts in bringing electoral, journalistic, and personal pressure to bear on local bodies, and on the Liberal or Conservative Government of the hour. ... The Fabians were intelligence officers without an army—there was no Fabian party in parliament—but they influenced the strategy and even the direction of the great hosts moving under other banners."

It was this same Fabian doctrine, moving across the Atlantic to America, which captivated the "progressives" and the "liberals" in colleges and universities in the United States, and succeeded eventually in changing this Republic into a Welfare State.

(to be continued)

DON BELL REPORTS & CLOSER-UP are privately circulated. Subscriptions not sold separately. Complete service: $24 per year. Extra copies: 10¢ each. Address all orders:

DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

THE CONTRIVED EVOLUTION OF REGIONAL GOVERNMENT

. Part Eight

RECRUITING REVOLUTIONARIES

On the 12th of December in 1905 a group of young men held a meeting in a loft above Peck's Restaurant, at 140 Fulton Street in Lower Manhattan, New York. These men were not at all satisfied with conditions in the United States and they met to discuss ways and means of changing things, as things were then being changed in England. They had adopted the ideals of the Fabian Society, and they sought to organize themselves, even as the Fabians in England had been organized under intellectuals such as George Bernard Shaw, Sidney Webb, Graham Wallas and Sydney Olivier, "The Four" of Fabianism who later were to be joined by such intellectual luminaries as Bertrand Russell, H. G. Wells, John Galsworthy, Mrs. (Beatrice) Webb, R. H. Tawney, G. D. H. Cole, Harold Laski, and John Maynard Keynes (whose economic theories they were forced to accept in place of their own.)

In the United States, instead of calling their organization the Fabian Socialist Society, they decided upon the name Intercollegiate Socialist Society (to be changed in 1921 to the League for Industrial Democracy).

The founding fathers of Fabianism in the United States were young men. Upton Sinclair, its godfather, was twenty-seven. Jack London, its first president, was twenty-nine. Morris Hillquist, Harry W. Laidler, Owen R. Lovejoy, Thomas Wentworth Higgins, J. G. Phelps Stokes, Clarence Darrow; all these were young men who attended that first meeting.

But these young men were not members of any of the Communist cults that resorted to violence and sought to change America into a Socialist State overnight. Like their London counterpart, they adopted a program of gradualism, a "slow but sure" approach. First, they would "promote an intelligent interest in Socialism among college men and women." Then, after having indoctrinated the new school of professors, journalists, administrators and opinion molders, they would move into the political arena with seasoned and well-trained change-agents--as they were to do when FDR accepted their New Deal and their Brain Trust in 1933.

The New York organization copied the London Fabians in yet another important way: Though the Fabian Society sought to promote Socialism in English colleges, especially at Oxford and Cambridge, they felt that they should have their own center of higher education, one that was completely under their own control. So, they established the London School of Economics.

Similarly, in lower Manhattan, the Rand School of Social Science was founded; and here the Intercollegiate Socialist Society established permanent headquarters in 1908.

The next step of the ISS was to organize chapters in colleges and universities. These chapters (there were 61 of them in as many schools of higher learning by 1917) became training bases for future leaders in almost every branch of the overall Conspiracy. For example, Walter Lippmann was president of the Harvard chapter of the ISS in 1909. He went on to become an assistant to Colonel House, helped organize the Council on Foreign Relations, was a member of and an American Correspondent for the British based Round Table (of which CFR is the American affiliate). Lippmann, until his retirement, was on the staff of The New York Times, from which position he served as a transmitter of policy decisions and instructions to internationalist agents at home and abroad (a position now filled by James Reston and C. L. Sulzberger, both also staffmen at The New York Times).

Heywood Broun was a charter member of the ISS. He organized journalists in support of the CPUSA in the New Deal years. David Saposs, Russian born revolutionary, was president of the Wisconsin U. chapter of ISS. Became an instructor at the Rand School; wrote The Development of the American Empire, which was used as a textbook in Communist Workers' Schools. He is noted for the phrase: "Thus to bore from within and still retain a standing in the movement, militancy must be tempered and circumscribed."

Walter Reuther was president of the ISS chapter at Wayne State University. He is best remembered for his activities after returning from studies in Communist strategy in Russia, to organize the United Auto Workers Union and then head the CIO.

Eugene V. Debs was a member of the ISS chapter at Columbia. Was active in IWW, served a sentence for sedition in Atlanta Penitentiary (Apr. 1919 to Dec. 1921); is reported to have said: "Before serving time here, I made a series of addresses supporting the Russian revolution, which I consider the greatest single achievement in all history. I am still a Bolshevik. I am fighting for the same thing here they are fighting for there. I would go to jail again, yes, I would even go to the gallows for this cause."

Ella Reeves Bloor was a lecturer and organizer for the ISS. She became an anarchist leader.

Frances E. Perkins was an organizer for the ISS. Served as U.S. Secretary of Labor in FDR's New Deal Cabinet.

The foregoing is but a brief sampling of the ISS members who graduated into other branches of the overall Conspiracy. We might also include, among many others, Norman Thomas who headed the political apparatus known as the Socialist Party, John Haynes Holmes who helped socialize organized Christianity in America, W.E.B. DuBois who lent his name so the NAACP could call itself a "colored" organization, John Dewey who is called the father of Progressive Education, Reinhold Niebuhr who popularized the Social Gospel, etc.

These are but a few of the names. It is not our purpose to go into further detail regarding the Fabians, as such. Our study in this series of letters has to do with Regional Government, and we refer to Fabianism only as it concerns the foundation we must lay before discussing current events. For a more complete history of the Fabian movement in the United States, the best work we have seen to date remains, Fabian Freeway, High Road to Socialism in the U.S.A., by Rose L. Martin.

There is, however, an interlocking connection between Fabian Socialism and Finance Capitalism that has never, to our knowledge, been fully explored or explained. And this would take us back to England, and to Oxford University in the year 1870:—

Oxford had never had a professorship of fine arts, but in 1870 the university received a special bequest (Slade) which called for the creation of such a professorship, and John Ruskin was named to fill the chair. But Ruskin talked very little about the fine arts. Instead, he talked of the White Man's Burden or, more specifically, of the burden that should be borne by the world's elite, the Oxford undergraduates who were scions of the aristocracy, the ruling class, the privileged who should rule the world for the world's benefit. He told the Oxford students that they were the possessors of a magnificent tradition of education, beauty, rule of law, freedom, decency, and self-discipline; but that this tradition "could not be saved and did not deserve to be saved" unless it could be extended to the non-English masses of the world, by way of a world empire that should be established by and ruled by the English-speaking people of the world.

Ruskin's message had a sensational impact. From it came the British-Israel religious doctrine, the English Speaking Union, the Pilgrims Society, and other organizations calling for the reunion of the United States with the British Empire.

According to Carroll Quigley, author of Tragedy and Hope, Ruskin's "inaugural lecture was copied out in longhand by one undergraduate, Cecil Rhodes, who kept it with him for thirty years." With financial support from Lord Rothschild and Alfred Beit, Rhodes was able to monopolize the diamond mines of South Africa as De Beers Consolidated Mines, and to build up a great gold mining enterprise as Consolidated Gold Fields.

"In the middle 1890's," wrote Quigley, "Rhodes had a personal income of at least a million pounds sterling a year, which was spent so freely for his mysterious purposes that he was usually overdrawn on his account. These purposes centered on his desire to federate the English-speaking people and to bring all the habitable portions of the world under their control. For this purpose Rhodes left part of his great fortune to found the Rhodes Scholarships at Oxford in order to spread the English ruling class tradition throughout the English-speaking world, as Ruskin had wanted."

Ruskin impressed others in much the same manner that he had impressed Cecil Rhodes, not all of whom were to follow the dream of Imperialism. Graham Wallas was such a person, and Graham Wallas was one of the "Founding Fabians." In This Little Band of Prophets, the story of the British Fabians by Anne Fremantle, there is this important passage:

"Sir Alfred Zimmern and Walter Lippmann were among Graham Wallas's devoted pupils. And there is scarcely a considerable figure in England among the younger generation of politicians and publicists, who does not owe something to Graham Wallas's slow, fussy manners, his penetrating and inspiring counsels. As an undergraduate, Wallas had been very influenced while at Oxford, at Corpus Christi College, by John Ruskin. 'I heard his lectures,' he wrote, 'and for some time saw him almost every day. His mobile lips were not yet covered by a beard, and he always wore his precise costume, with an intensely blue neck-cloth. His face was that of a man who had seen, and was to see again, hell as well as Paradise.'"

So, the record reveals that John Ruskin, who was called, most incongruously, a Christian Socialist, had a profound effect upon Fabian Socialist Founding Father Graham Wallas, just as he made a lasting impression upon British Imperialist Cecil Rhodes. It is, of course, generally explained that Socialism and Capitalism are at opposite ends of the political pole. However, here is Professor John Ruskin inspiring and giving policy direction to both!

Furthermore, there was Walter Lippmann, who began as president of the Harvard chapter of the Intercollegiate Socialist Society, sitting at the feet of Fabian Graham Wallas who, in turn, sat at the feet of Christian Socialist John Ruskin.

Lippmann later became an important member of Col. House's The Inquiry group, which went with him to Paris where the Council on Foreign Relations was created, Lippmann being a charter member.

Ergo, it would appear that functionaries such as Walter Lippmann are members of an interlocking directorate which connects and controls, and gives policy decisions and instructions, to both the extreme right and the extreme left in world political movements!

Perhaps even more evidential is the very existence of an organization such as the Council on Foreign Relations, which has been called the Invisible Government of the United States and which has, among its very carefully chosen members, representatives of all branches of the Conspiracy. In the CFR are Communists, Fabians, Finance Capitalists, International Bankers, and all shades of political and economic ideology which allegedly lie between those two extremes called The Right and The Left. And, furthermore, this Council on Foreign Relations is, in turn, the American branch of a world-wide organization originally created to carry out the dreams of Christian Socialist John Ruskin of Oxford, whose two chief disciples were Imperialist Cecil Rhodes and Fabian Socialist Graham Wallas.

And that particular thread in our story must bring us back to Cecil Rhodes, his wills and his bequests and the organizations which were established in his name:—

Rhodes, financed by Lord Rothschild and Alfred Beit, became a multimillionaire but, while amassing his fortune, he kept with him the words of John Ruskin, and on Feb. 5, 1891, with the assistance of his friend and associate, journalist William Stead, he organized a secret society of which he had been dreaming for sixteen years.

"In this secret society," wrote Carroll Quigley, "Rhodes was to be leader; Stead, Brett (Lord Esher), and (Alfred Lord) Milner were to form an executive committee; Arthur (Lord) Balfour, (Sir) Harry Johnston, Lord Rothschild, Albert (Lord) Grey, and others were listed as potential members of a Circle of Initiates; while there was to be an outer circle known as the Association of Helpers (later organized by Milner as the Round Table organization)...the central part of the secret society was established by March 1891. It continued to function as a formal group, although the outer circle was, apparently, not organized until 1909-1913. This group was able to get access to Rhodes's money after his death in 1902 and also to the funds of loyal Rhodes supporters like Alfred Beit and Sir Abe Bailey. With this backing they sought to extend and execute the ideals that Rhodes had obtained from Ruskin and Stead. Milner was chief Rhodes Trustee and (Sir George) Parkin was Organizing Secretary of the Rhodes Trust after 1902....

"Milner recruited a group of young men..to assist him....In 1909-1913 they organized semisecret groups, known as Round Table Groups, in the chief British dependencies and in the United States....They kept in touch with each other by personal correspondence and frequent visits, and through an influential quarterly magazine, The Round Table, founded in 1910 and largely supported by Sir Abe Bailey's money (and still being published and distributed to Round Table members in eight countries, including the United States-Ed.)"

"In 1919," notes Quigley, "they founded the Royal Institute of International Affairs (Chatham House).... Similar Institutes of International Affairs were established in the chief British dominions and in the United States (where it is known as the Council on Foreign Relations) in the period 1919-27."

For several years the Round Table Groups worked desperately trying to find a way of converting the British Empire into a World Federation. It was even suggested that the United States be cajoled into joining such a federation by making Washington, D.C. the world capitol. But gradually it became clear to the Planners that the English-speaking nations and dependences would not accept the plan for a world federation. So, the plan was dropped for a while, and it was decided that a British Commonwealth of Nations be formed. Lionel Curtis, at this time the chief promoter of the plan, wrote a book (1916) in which he advocated changing the name "British Empire" to "Commonwealth of Nations," giving India and Ireland and other chief dependencies their complete independence on condition that they join this new Commonwealth of Nations; and at the same time the Round Tablers would work to bring the United States into this same worldwide orientation, while also "seeking to solidify the intangible links of sentiment by propaganda among financial, educational, and political leaders in each country."

So far as we know, the total American membership in Round Table Groups has never been made public. Carroll Quigley names a few, and we can expect his list to be accurate since he has worked with the groups and had access to some of their secret files. Quigley names the following Americans as past or present members of the Round Table:

George Louis Beer, a business associate of J. P. Morgan, a friend of Col. House and a member of the American delegation to the Paris Peace Conference in 1919, a charter member of the CFR.

Walter Lippmann, previously categorized.

Frank Aydelotte, Rhodes scholar.

Whitney Shepardson, member of the original board of directors, CFR.

Thomas W. Lamont, partner and successor to J. P. Morgan, Communist fronter, financial angel to many Communist and left wing publications, member CFR, etc.

Jerome D. Greene, general manager of the Rockefeller Institute, trustee to Rockefeller Foundation, General Education Board until 1939; then an investment banker, wrote constitution for Institute of Pacific Relations which was cited as a Communist front organization by HUAC, supporter of left wing publications, member CFR, etc.

Erwin D. Canham, Christian Science Monitor, American correspondent for the quarterly Round Table magazine, member CFR, etc.

The organizational plan laid down by the Big Four—Rhodes, Stead, Rothschild and Milner—has been maintained. There is the secret inner circle, the Round Table Group; and there are the semi-secret Institutes of International Affairs, the American organization being called The Council on Foreign Relations. There is probably an ultra-secret inner sanctum of rulers within the secret Round Table Group which directs the whole world-wide operation, including the Communist Parties of the world, the other Socialist groups such as the Fabians, the Bilderbergers, and all other internationalist organizations. But here, proof is impossible, there can be but speculation and conjecture.

We do know that the vast amounts of money for the widely ramified activities of this organization and its satellites, came originally from the Rhodes Trust, the Rothschild interests, the Beit brothers, Sir Abe Bailey, the Astor family; and since 1925 from the American members of the international banking fraternity and from the tax-exempt foundations. And the world headquarters was moved from London to New York City.

(to be continued)

THE CONTRIVED EVOLUTION OF REGIONAL GOVERNMENT

. Part Nine

1913 AND "THE NEW FREEDOM"

"We originally came from Holland and the name was Huis, which finally fell into House. Father ran away from home... He came to Texas, joined the revolution, fought under General Burleson and helped make Texas a republic. For his services in this war he received a grant of land in Coryell County. He lived to see Texas come into the Union, secede, and return to the Union. He lived in Texas under four flags."

Thus wrote Colonel E.M. House (a Texas Colonel), who had become very prominent as a political boss in Texas, but who was ever seeking broader fields. "During all these years," he wrote, "I had never for a moment overlooked the national situation, and it was there that my real interest lay.

In 1896 I was ready to take part in national affairs. My power in Texas was sufficient to have given me the place I desired in the national councils of the (Democratic) party."

"The great problem," wrote Charles Seymour in The Intimate Papers of Colonel House, "was to find the right leader. In 1910 he came East from Texas and, like Diogenes, sought a man."

"I began now to look about for a proper candidate," wrote Colonel House. And, after rejecting all other hopefuls, including the most logical man, William Jennings Bryan, "I now turned to Woodrow Wilson, then Governor of New Jersey, as being the only man in the East who in every way measured up to the office for which he was a candidate."

Woodrow Wilson and Colonel House first met on Nov. 24, 1911, just a year before the presidential election. Next day, House wrote a letter to his brother-in-law Sidney Mezes, saying in part:

"I had a delightful visit from Woodrow Wilson yesterday afternoon, and he is to dine with me alone next Wednesday... Never before have I found both the man and the opportunity."

D.F. Houston, then chancellor of Washington University in St. Louis, but later to become a member of Wilson's cabinet, also wrote a letter to Sidney Mezes after meeting the latter's brother-in-law:

"My Dear Mezes:... I have just returned from New York, where I saw a great deal of Mr. House... He has a vision. I should like to make him Dictator for a while..."

Col. House understood that if he were to be successful in placing his man Wilson in the White House, it would be necessary for him to gain the approval and the cooperation of William Jennings Bryan, perennial candidate who would want to try again for the Presidency. So, one of House's first tasks was to convince Bryan that he could never win an election but that he could win an appointment as Secretary of State if Wilson should win the election. This accomplished, there were differences of opinion on vital issues which had to be overcome. One of these was the banking issue. Bryan's Cross of Gold speech had become a political classic, and he was solidly against any plan offered by the International Bankers, who were trying to create a Central Bank similar to those already installed in England, Germany, and most other large European countries.

Although the Aldrich Plan, which called for the passage of the Federal Reserve Act, was a part of the Republican Party's platform, House (supposedly a Democrat) was an instigator and backer of the Central Bank plan, as was Wilson. As early as 1907, in the financial panic of that year, Wilson had declared that: "All this trouble could be averted if we appointed a committee of six or seven public-spirited men like J. P. Morgan to handle the affairs of our country." This plea for a financial dictatorship had brought Wilson—then Governor of New Jersey—to the favorable notice of the Big Bankers and they supported Wilson's campaign when he promised to help enact the Federal Reserve Act.

But Bryan was the principal and strongest opponent of the Aldrich Plan; and yet House had to have Bryan's support if Wilson were to win the election. So, House assured Bryan that Wilson and Bryan saw eye-to-eye on this issue, and that he, House, felt differently but that he wouldn't make a big issue of it. The following excerpts from letters from House to Bryan are evidential:

"New York, November 25, 1911
"Dear Mr. Bryan: ... Governor Wilson called yesterday afternoon and was with me for an hour and a half. I am pleased to tell you that when I asked him what he thought of the Supreme Court ruling about which we talked when you were here, he replied in almost the same terms you used to me. As far as I can see, your positions are identical. He is also opposed to the Aldrich plan, but I think you are both wrong there. You will have to convince me the next time I see you. ...

Faithfully yours,
E. M. House."

"New York, December 6, 1911
"Dear Mr. Bryan: ... I took lunch with Col. Harvey yesterday. ... He told me that everybody south of Canal Street was in a frenzy against Governor Wilson and said they were bringing all sorts of pressure upon him to oppose him. ... We are going to try to devise some plan by which we can use this Wall street opposition to Governor Wilson to his advantage. ...

With kind regards and best wishes,
E. M. House."

Biographer Charles Seymour wrote:

"There was in the foregoing letter a cleverness which might escape the too casual reader. ..."

Indeed there was. Bryan was being deceived and so were any number of political leaders: Wall Street and the Banking Interests opposed Wilson publicly and backed him privately. And the Republican party was split in two parts to assure Wilson's election. As Seymour wrote:

"The real struggle of 1912 was for the nomination. It would have been far otherwise had the Republican Party remained united and presented its normal strength at the polls; in such a case the election of Wilson would have been difficult, if not impossible. But the dissensions which during the spring had already threatened Republican solidarity culminated in Republican disaster at the Chicago Convention, where Taft was nominated; for the adherents of Roosevelt bolted, organized the Progressive Party, and in August nominated their hero. ... Generalizations are usually misleading, but in this case the historian may venture the assertion that Roosevelt put Wilson in the White House. Colonel House was among those who believed that the result of the split in the Republican Party would be certain Democratic victory. Hence he did not cut short the travels that he had planned for the summer of 1912, which included Sweden, Finland, Russia as far east as Moscow, Germany, France, and England. ..."

The election won, the new President inaugurated and House returned from his mysterious grand tour of Europe, a politician gained an audience with Wilson and asked him if House had represented the President accurately on a particular issue. President Wilson replied, according to biographer Seymour:

"Mr. House is my second personality. He is my independent self. His thoughts and mine are one. If I were in his place I would do just as he suggested. ... If any one thinks he is reflecting my opinion by whatever action he takes, they are welcome to the conclusion."

"Thus began House's career as Silent Partner," wrote Seymour. "It was a relationship which rested chiefly upon the political cooperation of the Colonel in meeting the problems of government. His labors were of the most varied kind, and he sought every opportunity to ease the load that bore upon the President, to bring him information, to work out details of policy."

And thus did 1913 become the year of "The New Freedom," which happened to be the title of a book by Woodrow Wilson, published that year, containing major portions of his campaign speeches, and labeled by the author "An attempt to express the new spirit of our politics."

In the year 1913 the following important events occurred:

- * A Rockefeller Foundation was chartered.
- * The Sixteenth Amendment to the Constitution, permitting the Federal Income Tax, was proclaimed in force on Feb. 25 by Secretary of State Frank Knox.
- * The Seventeenth Amendment to the Constitution, requiring the popular election of United States Senators, was proclaimed in effect on May 31, by Secretary of State William Jennings Bryan.
- * The Glass-Owen Federal Reserve Bill (a re-write of the Aldrich Plan) was signed into law on December 23, by President Wilson.

And all of these things having been accomplished, Colonel Edward M. House set sail for Europe, this time on his "Great Adventure." His announced mission was to promote a reduction of land and sea armaments. He spoke of using the armies of Germany, England, Japan and the United States "to develop the waste areas of the world." Instead, war came to Europe while House allegedly was promoting his "Great Adventure."

This seems the proper time and place to recall how D. F. Houston (later he would become President Wilson's Secretary of Agriculture) had referred to Col. House as a "man of vision" and how he, Houston, would like to see House made a "Dictator for a while." In all probability, Houston was referring to a book that House was writing, entitled Philip Dru: Administrator, wherein this "vision" of dictatorship was thoroughly expounded.

To avoid the charge of bias or prejudicial reporting, we quote what Charles Seymour wrote about Philip Dru: Administrator:

"The extent of Colonel House's influence upon the legislative plans of the Administration may be gathered from a remarkable document which deserves some attention. In the autumn of 1912, immediately after the presidential election, there was published a novel, or political romance, entitled 'Philip Dru: Administrator.' It was the story of a young West Point graduate, incapacitated for military service by his health, who was caught by the spirit of revolt against the tyranny of privileged interests. A stupid and reactionary Government at Washington provokes armed rebellion, which Dru joins whole-heartedly and which he ultimately leads to complete success. He himself becomes dictator and proceeds by ordinance

(by Executive Order—Ed.) to remake the mechanism of government, to reform the basic laws that determine the relation of the classes, to remodel the defensive forces of the republic, and to bring about an international grouping or league of powers, (League of Nations—Ed.) founded upon Anglo-Saxon solidarity (Cecil Rhode's dream of world empire—Ed.). His reforms accomplished, he gives effect once more to representative institutions as formulated in a new American Constitution better fitted than the old for the spirit and conditions of the twentieth century....

"Five years after its publication an enterprising bookseller, noting the growing influence of House in the Wilson Administration, wrote with regard to the book, 'As time goes on the interest in it becomes more intense, due to the fact that so many of the ideas expressed by "Philip Dru: Administrator" have become laws of this Republic, and so many of his ideas have been discussed as becoming laws...Is Colonel E. M. House of Texas the author? If not, who is?'

"Colonel House was, in truth, the author." He became ill in the winter of 1911 and, in House's own words: "When I began to convalesce at home, and before I was able to get about, I wrote 'Philip Dru; Administrator.'"

Here is more about the book from the pen of Charles Seymour, biographer:

"Through it runs the note of social democracy reminiscent of Louis Blanc and the revolutionaries of 1848... Through the book also runs the idea that in the United States, government is unresponsive to popular desires—a 'negative' government, House calls it... 'The theory of checks and balances has developed so as to re-enforce this negative character of government.' The specific measures enacted by Philip Dru as Administrator of the nation, indicated the reforms desired by House:

"The Administrator appointed 'a board composed of economists and others well versed in matters relating to the tariff and internal revenue... to work out a graduated income tax... Dru prepared an old-age pension law and also a laborer's insurance law covering loss in cases of illness, incapacity, and death..."

There is one important fact concerning the book which was not mentioned in Seymour's review: there was outlined in the book a condensed plan which House called "Metropolitan Area Government." The purpose of the plan, said Philip Dru, was "the transference of duties and authority from elected representatives of the people to appointees."

Another interesting set of facts concerning Edward Mandell House: He was in Europe on a personal mission when World War I erupted. Nevertheless, he travelled freely between the adversary nations, being accorded diplomatic immunity wherever he went. He returned to Washington in the summer of 1914, then sailed again for Europe on Jan. 30, 1915, on the Lusitania and in the interests of peace. Returning to the United States, he sailed yet again for Europe on Dec. 28, 1915 for conferences with British, German and French officials. Exactly what House said and did at these meetings is not on record, so far as we know. But we do know that House was on extremely close terms with the leaders of the Round Table Groups, and that there were Fabian Socialists on his immediate staff, called The Inquiry, which went to Paris with him and with President Wilson, when the Paris peace talks began. And there is also this hint concerning a connection with an esoteric group which claimed to be direct agents of the hierarchy which had charge of the world:

There is a "Group of World Servers" that headquarters in London, its activities being financed by the Lucis Trust (original name was Lucifer, but was changed to Lucis due to unfavorable publicity). A spokesman for this esoteric group is one Foster Bailey, son of Alice Bailey, who headed the "Arcane School" of Theosophy which was said to be guided by a "Tibetan Teacher." The Theosophists were, in their very beginnings under founder Madame Blavatsky, closely associated with the British Fabian Society, and remain so today.

This Theosophist, Fabian, World Server by name of Foster Bailey, wrote a book titled, "Changing Esoteric Values," which was first published in Great Britain in 1955 by Lucis (nee Luciferian) Press, Ltd., 38 Broadway Downs, Tunbridge Wells, Kent. On page 59 of this book we find this rather startling statement:

"Some of you will perhaps remember information given us about the way the old League of Nations came into existence. One of the Masters at a conference in the Hierarchy made a suggestion toward the improving of the relationships between nations in line with the new-age needed cooperation. It was considered useful. The different Masters thought about it and therefore the disciples in the Ashrams who were close to them and had achieved some telepathic relationships, also thought about it. Eventually one disciple picked it up and said, 'I will do something about it.' He then formulated a plan of physical plane action, and this was considered. The whole field was studied as to what would be practical and could be achieved, and the disciple was given the green light, so to speak, and went to work. In the case of the League of Nations that disciple happened to be Colonel House. He worked with all those he could influence, and the Sixth Ray Disciple Woodrow Wilson took the esoteric lead, and the League of Nations was born. Thus an hierarchical effort was anchored on the physical plane by a disciple and responded to by those who could catch the vision and serve their fellowmen. This example illustrates an Hierarchical technique."

If the above is to be credited, then House was the disciple of a Terrestrial Authority which supersedes all national loyalties, and proclaims the existence of an Internationalist Theory which can have no traffic with the Compact Theory upon which this Government was founded, and which takes full advantage of the Continental Theory by making strong central governments but regional departments of an all-powerful World Authority.

But we are getting ahead of our story. We must return to that fateful year of 1913, and understand the impact of the Sixteenth and Seventeenth Amendments to the Constitution and the chaos that was caused by the establishing of a Central Bank and by the Federal Chartering of certain tax-free Foundations. These shall be the subjects of the next letters in this series.

(to be continued)

DON BELL REPORTS & CLOSER-UP are privately circulated letters accenting the Christian American point of view. Subscriptions are not sold separately. Complete service: $24 per year. Extra copies: 10¢ each. Please address all correspondence to:

DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

THE CONTRIVED EVOLUTION OF REGIONAL GOVERNMENT

----- Part Ten -----

THE REPUBLIC IS DEAD, LONG LIVE DEMOCRACY!

On May 31, 1913, Secretary of State William Jennings Bryan announced that a sufficient number of States had ratified it, and that therefore the Seventeenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States was in effect. The vital alteration in the American electoral process is contained in the first paragraph of the amendment:

“The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, elected by the people thereof, for six years; and each Senator shall have one vote....”

Never before had the people elected United States Senators. Each State determined the manner in which its two Senators should be chosen. And it was the State Legislature, or the State Governor with the advice and consent of the State Legislature, that did the choosing. This was because the Senate was considered to be the House of the States, whereas the House of Representatives was the House of the people.

When the Seventeenth Amendment was enacted, the States lost their control over the Central Government, there were two Houses of the People wherein both Senators and Representatives began to be elected by direct, popular vote. Thus, the Compact Theory upon which the Founding Fathers based our form of government, was destroyed and the Continental—or strong central government—Theory was enthroned. Or, to put it even more dramatically, our government ceased to be a true Republic, and became a Representative Democracy!

Few historians have touched upon the real significance of this change in the American system of government. Back in 1921—over fifty years ago—a patriot named Harry Atwood was saying this same thing. In a precious little volume which he titled “Safeguarding American Ideals” he wrote:

“Has there ever been a United States history written that makes it clear to the average student...that during the period of history from the time we wrote the Constitution until we occupied the leading place among the nations of the world, there was little discussion of direct government, but much of representative government; little discussion of socialism or paternalism, but much discussion of individual property rights; little talk of class consciousness and labor unionism, but much of individual freedom in industry and proportionate reward for individual initiative and achievement; little talk of the red flag, but much devotion to the Stars and Stripes; little talk of a democracy, but much talk of the Republic?”

“There are comparatively few people who will insist that there has ever been written a textbook on civics or civil government that makes clear to the average student the form of government that was established here under the Constitution.

“There is much talk of democracy in our schools, and yet there is not a democratic thing in the Constitution of the United States, nor the faintest hint of a suggestion that anything under the Constitution would ever be done in a democratic way, even in the creation of the Constitution itself, or its adoption, or its amendment, or its plan of administration, and we still require our public officials to take an oath to uphold, protect and defend the Constitution of the United States, and that is the only thing they are sworn to do.

“The Constitution provided for a representative government, and the founders called it a Republic. It guarantees to each of the States a republican form of government. Those who are talking democracy in our schools should turn to the Federalist, the greatest governmental discussion in the libraries of the world, and ask themselves what Madison means in Federalist number X by the following language:

“Hence it is that such democracies have ever been spectacles of turbulence and contention, have ever been found incompatible with personal security or the rights of property, and have in general been as short in their lives as they have been violent in their deaths.... A Republic, by which I mean a government in which the scheme of representation takes place, opens a different prospect and promises the cure for which we are seeking....”

“Was Madison merely playing with words when he wrote the above language into the Federalist at a time when the destiny of his country hung in the balance, or was he clearing up a tremendously important distinction on which the world quite generally has been disastrously confused during recent years.” (End of quotation)

This era of progressivism, which culminated in America's entry into World War II, was a planned attack on the American System, and for the first time on a nation-wide scale, the Hegelian formula began to be used. That is, where a change was desired, an attack on the old system was made, the people were told that a national emergency existed and a new plan was offered; and because the old system was made to fail, the new system was installed by popular demand.

In his classic The Economic Pinch, by the Hon. Charles A. Lindbergh, Sr., father of the man who gained fame by flying across the Atlantic Ocean, the author refers to one of the ways in which this Hegelian “formula for planned change” was used. His reference is to the maneuvering that brought about the adoption of the Federal Reserve Act, but the movement to remake the U.S. Senate was similar and complementary. He wrote:

“In the early months of 1907 and for some time prior a great number of trusts had, by combination and other means, been formed into larger trusts. We then had what is termed ‘a business boom.’ The big profiteers saw the strain on our financial system and knew that if they were going to keep expanding to larger dealings and bigger profits they must have not only a finance system of their own, but through it the control of all or at least most of the banks. We too were dissatisfied with the old system. We complained, but we as a people are always slow to act, if we ever do decide to act on matters of that kind.

“The profiteers saw this opportunity and staged the 1907 (banker's) panic. That was their way of stirring us up. The city banks refused to pay on demands of the depositors—they also refused to pay in cash for checks. Many of the country banks did the same thing.... Secretly, the profiteers in New York and elsewhere organized headquarters in Chicago for a Citizen's League: propaganda to demand a new bank system. Speakers were sent to the cities and to most of the country towns, following the 1907 panic and up to 1913. They formed Citizen's Leagues everywhere. The people were induced to demand of Congress that ‘some bill’ be passed to create a new banking system.... Wall Street had its bill all ready-drafted in 1906....”

The same kind of a propaganda campaign was organized when it came time to destroy the United States Senate and make of it just another “House of the People,” something totally unnecessary since the House of Representatives was a sufficient “House of the People.”

Stories were circulated to the effect that the Senate was simply the instrument of the profiteers and the Big Business People. There was much truth in the claim that many Senators were the paid servants of Big Business and represented the money barons and special interest groups. But this was also true of many Members of the House of Representatives, even as it is true today. However, nobody launched a campaign to clean up the Senate; instead, propagandists demanded that the method of electing Senators be changed (as if that would really help.) The slogan became “property versus people” and the nucleus of the “one man, one vote” theory was launched. Theodore Roosevelt helped when he launched his New Nationalism (progressive) program in a speech he made in Ossawatimie, Kansas on August 31, 1910, declaring: “I stand for the square deal... property shall be the servant and not the master of the commonwealth.” A fair sample of the propaganda engaged in in order to reconstruct the Senate, is provided by the book The Big Change, 1900 to 1950, by Frederick Lewis Allen (Harpers, 1952). He writes of that era:

"Railroad companies issued free passes to lawmakers, officials, journalists, and their families. At one state capital after another, corporation lobbyists with well-filled pockets were ready to go into action whenever there was a threat of adverse legislation or a hope of favorable legislation. And as for the United States Senate—whose members were at that time elected, not by the people, but by amenable state legislatures—it had become the chief citadel for the defense of privilege. Most of the Senators were either rich men or carefully selected allies and messenger boys of the rich; they could deliver orotund speeches about the 'full dinner pail' for the workman but their hearts were with the big stockholders. . . ."

Let us concede that there is much truth in the above paragraph, but let us also admit that most Senators are still rich men or the "carefully selected allies and messenger boys of the rich." But this condition has nothing to do with the direct election of Senators. Eternal vigilance, and binding men down by the chains of the Constitution is the way to keep Senators in line. And the Constitution—in order to provide a Republic and prevent a Democracy—had declared that "The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, chosen by the Legislature thereof, for six years; and each Senator shall have one vote. . . ."

One patriot who recognized what the forces of "progressivism" were trying to do to the Constitution and to the Nation, was Col. Ed. F. Browne, author of the book Socialism or Empire, from which we quoted in a previous letter in this series. One chapter of this remarkable book was captioned The Treason (?) Of The Senate. We should like to quote pertinent parts of that chapter:

THE TREASON (?) OF THE SENATE

The socialistic writers of the times appear to derive great satisfaction in attacks upon the Senate of the United States. One young man made quite a reputation by attacking every prominent conservative member of the Senate, who had conscientiously tried to fulfill his duties as a Senator, and a sensational magazine gave his attacks great prominence. The writer gave evidence that he did not know why the Senate was brought into existence or what it was created for. He assumed that because its action was conservative, that it was not doing its duty, and made an appeal to the people that it should be changed so as to represent the interests of the "common people," as he expresses it.

What are the facts?

When our government was organized in its present form, a great discussion arose over what should vote, i.e., property and the tax-paying interests, or the common people. There was such a disagreement in regard to the class of property and amount which should represent a vote, that in the end the present system of universal suffrage was adopted.

After agreeing upon universal suffrage the framers of the constitution tried to and did provide a check upon the action of the "common people," to save them from an unwise or hasty use of the power given them. Mr. Madison explained the reason for the formation of the Senate, or second branch of the legislature as it was called, when he said that "the objects are two fold; first: to protect the people against their rulers, and second: to protect the people against transient impressions into which they themselves might be led."

In his speech in the constitutional convention he said: "An increase of population will of necessity increase the proportion of those who labor under all the hardships of life and secretly sigh for a more equal distribution of its blessings. These may in time outnumber those who are placed above the feelings of indigence; according to the laws of equal suffrage the power will slide into the hands of the former."

He suggested that among other means to check the encroachments of the most numerous, "the establishment of a body in the government sufficiently reputable for its wisdom and virtue to aid on such emergencies the preponderance of justice, by throwing into that scale." . . .

Another reason for the Senate's existence was the fact that it was feared that an impulsive House of Representatives would encroach upon the rights of the States. Col. (George) Mason in his remarks on this feature said, "The State Legislatures ought also to have some means of defending themselves against encroachments of the National Government, and what better means can be provided than giving them some share in or rather making them a constituent part of the national establishment?"

The danger of one class obtaining complete control of legislation was fully understood. Mr. (James) Wilson said, "A single legislature is very dangerous; despotism may present itself in various shapes. May there not be legislative despotism if in the exercise of their power they are unchecked or unrestrained by another branch?"

From these extracts taken from remarks made when the Senate was brought into existence, it will be observed that the present socialistic agitation was clearly foreseen, and that the Senate was provided as a definite check on any legislative tyranny attempted by the House of Representatives. . . .

The quotations show that these statesmen fully expected that in time the House of Representatives would be controlled by the laboring and agrarian elements (or by the welfare recipients in our day—Ed.), owing to a preponderance in number.

Mr. Madison, and, in fact nearly every member of the convention expressed frankly their fear that unwise action on the part of the people was the greatest danger to the Republic, and that as we were the first to give universal suffrage, a safeguard should be prepared which would check socialistic or communistic aggression. History was an open book to them as it is to us today. They knew that the destruction of the first great republic was the direct result of the seizure of the power to originate legislation on the part of the burgess of Rome, swayed by the oratory of the "tribunes" and controlled by a mob. The joint degradation of the Roman Senate by executive usurpation and these democratic influences, removed the check between executive ambition and unwise legislation, and disaster followed. . . .

Most of the framers of the Constitution lived to see the day when the socialistic mob in France drenched her fair plains with the blood of 1,022,350 innocent victims (over 46,000 of whom were frail women and innocent children) and if those statesmen had thought they had failed to protect our country from such a disaster, they would have amended the Constitution and corrected the error.

The present agitation in favor of the election of the Senate by "the people" is but an attempt to remove the check placed by the organizers of our government to prevent hasty, unwise or oppressive legislative action. . . .

Mr. (William Jennings) Bryan, one of the foremost agitators for the removal of this check to legislation, said in an open letter to the voters of Colorado, Oct. 21, 1906, "The laboring man ought to remember, too, that no remedial action is possible until we secure the election of Senators by direct vote of the people. If the Senate can be made elective then the gateway will be open to all reforms."

His reforms mean a change in our constitutional payment of tax (income tax—Ed.), an ownership and control of utilities, a seizure of the property of the rich for the benefit of the state and a limitation of profit on capital to suit the views of "the people." He is a student and evidently recites the orations of Caesar and repeats the street-corner talks of Claudius; there is no new thing in his arguments. Human nature is unchanged; it is the same as it was two thousand years ago. Grant undue power to one faction of the community; it but whets its appetite for more. . . .

If this socialistic agitation succeeds in removing this safeguard provided in our Constitution, how long would the courts be able to withstand the legislative tyrannies attempted?" . . .

If Senators are to be elected by the same class as the House of Representatives and represent the same interests, then why not abolish the Senate and increase the membership of the House and thus remove all check to legislation? . . .

The only weak point in our political system is the failure to have our State Senates appointed or selected in some other way than direct election by the people. This is the reason we have "freak" laws in various States. . . .

It is the hope of Socialism to destroy representative government, but this is the political road that leads to anarchy.

(to be continued)

DON BELL REPORTS & CLOSER—UP are privately circulated. Subscriptions not sold separately. Complete service: $24 per year. Extra copies: 10¢ each. Address all orders: DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223 Palm Beach, Florida 33480

THE CONTRIVED EVOLUTION OF REGIONAL GOVERNMENT

. Part Twelve

THE FIRST BATTLES OF THE SILENT REVOLUTION

"We stand in the presence of a revolution—not a bloody revolution; America is not given to the spilling of blood—but a silent revolution, whereby America will insist upon recovering in practice those ideals which she has always professed, upon securing a government devoted to the general interest and not to special interests."

So spoke the man who was about to become President of the United States. Warming up to his thesis concerning "the silent revolution," the speaker continued:

"We are on the eve of a great reconstruction. It calls for creative statesmanship as no age has done since that great age in which we set up the government under which we live, that government which was the admiration of the world until it suffered wrongs to grow up under it which have made many of our own compatriots question the freedom of our institutions and preach revolution against them. I do not fear revolution. I have unshaken faith in the power of America to keep its self-possession. Revolution will come in peaceful guise, as it came when we put aside the crude government of the Confederacy and created the great Federal Union which governs individuals, not States, and which has been for these hundred and thirty years our vehicle of progress. Some radical changes we must make in our law and practice. Some reconstructions we must push forward, which a new age and new circumstances impose upon us. . . . The whole stupendous program must be publicly planned and canvassed. . . . reason rather than passion. . . will enable us to win through to still another great age without violence."

The speaker might have been Richard Nixon proclaiming his "silent revolution," or it could have been Franklin Delano Roosevelt in a fireside chat discussing his New Deal which some have called the revolution that was. But, actually, the speaker was Thomas Woodrow Wilson, the 28th President of the United States, telling his listeners how "The Old Order Changeth," and explaining "The New Freedom" that he hoped to bring to America, and later to the world through the League of Nations."

The record will show that there have been three great efforts to bring to a successful conclusion the "silent revolution" that so many of America's people in high places have talked about throughout this century. Woodrow Wilson launched the "silent revolution" in 1913, but the rest of the world was unprepared for that "new order" about which he spoke; and the man who was made President to bring revolution at home, was destined to declare war in Europe against the Central Powers. And, thus, the "silent revolution" was pigeon-holed, could not be spoken of openly or waged publicly during the years of the "return to normalcy" that endured from Harding through Coolidge to the latter part of the Hoover Administration.

Franklin Delano Roosevelt launched the second phase of the "silent revolution," with an all-out crusade lasting through the "first hundred days," which would have been totally victorious had it not been for a tradition-bound and Constitution-honoring Supreme Court that found most of FDR's pet projects unconstitutional. Even so, the nests of Fabian Planners, Brain Trusters, Frankfurter Hot Dogs, and Communist spy cells that polluted Washington were finding ways and means of circumventing courts and the Constitution. They would have been completely victorious had it not been for the economic problem which they could not solve short of imposing a wartime economy. Mills were closed or working at half capacity, industry was crippled, breadlines were getting longer and longer, government-made WPAs and CCCs couldn't take up all the slack. World War II was necessary to conquer a depression that had become worldwide. And the "silent revolution" again had to be put in government moth balls.

Then came Richard the Tricky, and the third and final phase of the "silent revolution" was announced, and is being waged behind a camouflage called Watergate, and the people are bemused by being told how people appointed to serve them are serving time instead; and the people are cajoled into worrying about impeachment rather than inflation, etc.

It is important to understand that this system of governance called Regionalism has been a basic element of the "silent revolution" from the very beginning.

Which leads us to a more specialized treatment of the subject in these letters:

Up to this point in our Series we have found it expedient to generalize, to lay a broad foundation and speak of many things, of Compact, Continental and International Theories of Government, of the various schools of socialism, of events in history that seemed important as background to a specific subject. From here on, however, we shall try to specialize, to concentrate upon the one theme which, we believe, has not been treated fully or adequately by others. From here on, we shall attempt to devote our study to the subject which gave title to this series: The Contrived Evolution of Regional Government.

To properly understand Regionalism, a grasp of the growth of power within the Executive Branch of the Federal Government is essential. And one of the first visible signs of this development occurred in the latter part of the 1890s when people in high places in government began to be made aware of the writings and activities of a group of men who had started a new school of political science that they called scientific management. One of the leaders of this new school was Frederick W. Taylor, who had been instrumental in establishing the civil service in the United States Government. Because of malpractices that had occurred in the Federal Government after the War Between the States, there had developed a demand that the entire system of Federal employment be overhauled. This led to the establishment of a Civil Service Commission in 1871. But little or nothing was done until 1883 when President Garfield was killed, allegedly by a disappointed office seeker. The new rules were drawn up to award positions on merit in certain classifications of federal employment. On May 6, 1896, President Cleveland published a new set of civil service rules to improve the system. That set of rules remained more or less unchanged until 1940, when the Hatch Act was passed, forbidding office-holders from contributing to political campaigns.

This Civil Service Commission had nothing to do with elected officials or military officers. But Frederick Taylor and his scientific management school wanted to extend the reformation to include more and more people in government or political office. Briefly: elected officials are usually amateurs. They may be trained in law, or in husbandry, or they may be experts in business or professional circles. But the science of governmental management (now usually referred to as planning or administration) was a specialized field; and only trained specialists should be permitted to occupy positions as planners and administrators. (This same idea is expressed in Philip Dru-Administrator.)

One of the first manifestations of this new school of scientific management was seen, not at the federal but at the local level of government:—

In 1908, Staunton, Virginia, then a city of less than 10,000 population, "invented" a new system of scientific management by appointing a City Manager. One John Crosby of Staunton is recognized by all City Managers as the "father" of the city manager form of government. Taking his cue from Frederick Taylor's School of Scientific Management, City Commissioner Crosby developed the plan and then helped to popularize it throughout the Nation.

One of the men attracted by the new form of city government was a man named Louis Brownlow, who served as a city manager for a time, but was always looking for that greener pasture. For a time he edited the late David Lawrence's old newspaper, the United States Daily (which was said to be financed by Rockefeller money. During this time Lawrence became a member of the Rockefeller-financed Council on Foreign Relations). From this editorship, Brownlow went—in 1927—to the City Housing Corporation of New York, a private real estate company. This corporation was interested in the business of building model cities—now a regular thing with bigtime developers, but something novel in 1927. Fair Lawn, New Jersey was selected as a test site. A model city containing 1,500 acres, named Radburn, with all the legal powers of a full-fledged municipality, was to be developed. But the Great Depression ended that experiment.

But Brownlow was still on good terms with the Rockefellers, and the Rockefellerlets controlled the University of Chicago. And Louis Brownlow, with Rockefeller money (the Laura Spelman Fund) established the Public Administration Clearing House, on land owned by the University of Chicago, at 1313 East 60th Street. PACH was, of course, the nucleus of that organization which came to be known as 1313; about which we shall have much to say later.

Meanwhile, at the federal level, the urge for scientific management was growing apace. And one of the first important changes had to do with the establishment, in 1921, of the Federal Bureau of the Budget. In a paper entitled “Office of Management and Budget, Functions and Organization,” dated January 1974, we are told—and this is a direct quote—about how important that act of 1921 really was:—

“The basic authority for the Office’s (OMB) budget function is derived from the Budget and Accounting Act of 1921, as amended. Reorganization Plan No. 2 of 1970 transferred that function to the President, who, in turn, delegated it to the Director of the Office of Management and Budget. This Act gave the Bureau the authority ‘to assemble, correlate, revise, reduce, or increase the requests for appropriations of the several departments or establishments.’ The Act also safeguarded the budget as transmitted by the President to Congress by denying Federal agencies the right to seek funds outside regular budget channels except at legislative request. The Bureau was further authorized to make detailed administrative studies for the President with a view to ‘securing greater economy and efficiency in the conduct of the public service.’ The Act required the Bureau ‘at the request of any committee of either House of Congress having jurisdiction over revenue or appropriations’ to render ‘the committee such aid and information as it may request.’

“In response to a request by the Chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, the President, in 1921, instructed the Federal agencies to submit to him through the Director ‘all requests or recommendations for legislation, the effect of which would be to create a charge upon the Public Treasury or commit the Government to obligations which would later require appropriations to meet them.’ The scope of this clearance procedure was later extended to apply to all legislation.” (End of quotation)

The foregoing provides us with an excellent example of how, in the name of scientific management, duties assigned specifically to the Congress by the Constitution, were transferred to the expanding Office of the Presidency. The Constitution most clearly specifies that it is the duty of the Congress—not of an executive agency called the Internal Revenue Service—to “lay and collect taxes;” and the Constitution also commands that,

“... a regular Statement and Account of the Receipts and Expenditures of all public Money shall be published from time to time.”

For almost 150 years it was understood that it was the duty of Congress to prepare and keep the budget, and see to it that government expenditures were kept within that budget. That Congress did a commendable job can be seen by glancing at a record of the public debt before the budget-making task was handed over to a new Executive Bureau.

In a similar manner, in 1913, the power of the Congress to control the credit of the United States and to issue and regulate the value of its legal tender, was transferred to a newly created Federal Reserve Board, over which even the President of the United States has no direct administrative control.

As the growth of new bureaus and agencies expanded, the concept of Regional Government also grew. You’ll recall that when the Nation’s money was handed over to the control of a private corporation, the board of directors of that corporation determined that control over money could best be accomplished through dividing the Nation into twelve Regions, each Federal Reserve Region with its own Central Federal Reserve Bank.

When the New Deal came the Administration began to fashion innumerable new bureaus, agencies, commissions, councils, conferences, divisions, committees, units, boards, projects, corporations, combines, authorities, associations, trusts, co-operatives, centers, services, schools, companies, plants, factories, expositions, etc., etc. Known as the "alphabet agencies," one article dealing with the subject, published in 1937, commented:

"The following partial list will indicate the number of New Deal agencies and offices created or continued since March 4, 1933, which the average American may study in his fireside moments. Lack of space forbids a complete tabulation; only those bureaucratic growths falling alphabetically under A, B, and C are presented: . . ."

And there follows a listing of 87 different varieties of bureaucratic growth under only the first three letters of the alphabet. The article then goes on to point out this most important fact:

"Washington is merely a clearing house. Virtually all New Deal organizations have set up regional agencies, which exist in each of the forty-eight States or in groupings of several States together. Each regional agency is a minor Washington in itself; it maintains a headquarters, a staff of executives, a bureaucracy, and a publicity division. In the manner of Washington, each regional bureau grows year by year, enlarging the scope of its activities until agency overlaps agency and field-unit overlaps field-unit. . . . the White House is the Mother Church; the employees of the regional parishes are hardworking missionaries for the salvation of humanity—via the New Deal. For their creed, the missionaries utilize the words written by the Fuhrer himself:

"Only through a clear understanding by every citizen of the objectives, organization, and availability of the government agencies can they render truly effective service and assure progress toward economic security'."

The preceding is from an article entitled "Dr. Roosevelt's Propaganda Trust," by Gordon Carroll, which appeared in the Sept., 1937 issue of The American Mercury. The article shows that, although the Nation had not been divided legally and overtly into Regions, the idea of Regional Government was already being developed and utilized by the hundreds of bureaucratic growths that characterized the New Deal.

Next big step was the passage of the Executive Re-Organization Act of 1939. The story briefly:

At a meeting of the National Resources (Planning) Board in October, 1935, President Roosevelt brought up the idea of increasing the power of the Presidency by creating an "Executive Office of the President," and by reorganizing the Executive Branch in such a way that it would be less dependent upon the Congress. As a result of FDR's suggestion, the Brain Trusters created a Committee on Administrative Management (scientific management—Ed.), and Louis Brownlow, whom we have already introduced in connection with 1313, was named chairman of this new committee. The committee wrote a proposed Re-Organization Act of 1937, which came to be called "the Dictator Bill," and had to be watered down considerably before even the rubber-stamp Congress of 1937 would approve and pass it.

Consequently, Brownlow's committee went back to work and produced a similar but less power-packed Re-Organization Act of 1939, which was duly passed and signed into law.

A principal feature of this Act had to do with Executive Orders. Up to this time, Executive Orders could be issued by the President at any time; but they also could be revoked by Congress at any time. The new arrangement was more to a President's liking: He could promulgate an Executive Order and, if the Congress did not officially disapprove and reject within 60 days, then Congressional approval was taken for granted and the Executive Order had the full force of law.

There were other New Deal Acts which pre-saged the permanent establishment of the system known as Regional Governance. Power Districts, Conservation Districts, plans to abolish the States entirely; all of these were a part of the New Deal Program.
(to be continued)

DON BELL REPORTS & CLOSER-UP are privately circulated Newsletters. Complete service: $24 per year. Extra copies: 10¢ each. Please address all correspondence: DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223 Palm Beach, Florida 33480

THE CONTRIVED EVOLUTION OF REGIONAL GOVERNMENT Part Thirteen

THE FIRST CRUSADE

"Regional government as we know it today is a direct descendant of the utopian dream of Robert Owen, first expounded more than a century and a half ago, and described, clarified and structured by H.G. Wells. Through his efforts, the outline of what is now being developed was thus established more than sixty years ago."

So wrote Maureen Heaton in her excellent booklet "So Desperate a Step," which was one of the first attempts to point out the dangers of Regional Government and its companion control system known as PPBS.

It should be added that Robert Owen developed the embryo that became Regional Government out of a pure heart and a befuddled mind; he sought sincerely for a way to establish a perfect society on earth, and died still seeking the impossible. H.G. Wells was steeped in the equally impractical ideals of Fabian Socialism when he laid down the principles of what we now know as Regional Government; he recovered from the aberration, but too late for anyone to profit from his awakening.

But Regional Government is presently being installed throughout the world because it is an essential ingredient of the Planned Society. Planners can draw up their plans and write out their timetables, and secure the required finances and leadership- but without the control network that is provided by some system similar to Regional Government, such plans would merely gather dust in some think tank.

In her booklet, Maureen Heaton provided a summary of what we have written in previous letters in this series, but this is information that bears repeating. So, we quote:

"The first major breakthrough in this country came in 1913, when three crucial changes were made in the American government system - the graduated income tax, direct election of Senators, and the Federal Reserve System (to which we added a fourth: the federal chartering of tax-exempt foundations-Ed.). Without the access to the substance of the great middle sector of citizens provided by the 16th Amendment*...through the Marxian scheme of progressive taxation, this revolution would still be the impossible dream...unfunded. Without destroying the balance of power between land area and people, administrative government such as this would have been unworkable. Without the machinery for the destruction of the monetary value, the crisis necessary to obtain public acceptance could not have been constructed.

"In 1921, the next most important step was taken, when Congress was persuaded to abdicate its constitutional responsibility as watchdog of the public purse and transferred to the executive the keeping of the budget. Without that free access to the budgetary process, the Planning, Programming and Budgeting System could not have become the tool of executive power that it is today...

"During the 1920s, too, the first systemic efforts were made to test the techniques of planning. A preliminary survey was made of the Philadelphia metropolitan area in 1924, and the Tri-State District which resulted included parts of New Jersey and Delaware. By 1932, the Regional Planning Federation of the District unveiled the results of their labors, in a document of almost 600 pages, which included maps, diagrams, population statistics, and socialist plans for highways, transportation, airways and airports, parks and parkways, water supply and sanitation, and architectural and aesthetic elements of planning. This document stated that twenty areas in the northeast section of the country were being planned even then, and among these maps were those showing rudimentary regions for the greater Boston area, Connecticut, New York and New Jersey; and the Indiana, Illinois and Wisconsin regions.

But the greatest strides into this New American Revolution came in the 1930s, when: '...a plague of young lawyers settled on Washington.... These prattlers were, for the most part, employees of the government, and had taken the oath of office. But they took the position that their high purposes

OHIO NOT A STATE, AND 16TH AMENDMENT NEVER RATIFIED?

Since publishing our letter concerning the 16th, Income Tax Amendment, we have been swamped with letters and articles pointing out the fact that Ohio was not legally in the Union in 1913, therefore the 16th Amendment was never legally ratified, since the vote of non-State Ohio wouldn't count.

The facts as we have been able to dig them out of the archives: Ohio did not, legally, become a State on March 1, 1803, because of a Congressional blunder. The oversight was not corrected, legally, until August, 1953 when a Joint Resolution (Public Law 204) was passed, officially admitting Ohio to the Union of States.

However, much as we could wish it to be otherwise, this doesn't revoke the 16th Amendment. Approved by the Senate 77 to 0 on July 5, 1909, and by the House 318 to 14 on July 12, 1909, it was then submitted to the 48 States for ratification. 36 States had to ratify the Amendment before it could be certified by the Secretary of State as a part of the Constitution.

On February 3, 1913, Delaware, New Mexico and Wyoming ratified the Amendment, which made a total of 38 States that had ratified the Amendment (one of them being the non-State of Ohio). On February 4, 1913, New Jersey ratified and on February 19, 1913, Vermont followed suit. Connecticut, Florida, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Utah and Virginia never did ratify the 16th Amendment. However, when Secretary of State Philander C. Knox certified the Amendment on Feb. 25, 1913, 40 States had ratified (including the non-State of Ohio) and only 36 States were required.

Sorry, but we'll have to find another way to get rid of that cruelest Amendment of all.

gave them a supermorality that could not be confused with the morality the Nation had been using. They were quite above such old-fogy, Tory, reactionary stuff as oaths of office or other religious antiquities. They owed allegiance, not to the United States—patriotism was for the nonthinking—They had allegiance to a higher cause: The end justified the means.'

"So said George N. Peek, first administrator of the Agriculture Adjustment Administration, who soon realized that strange things were taking place in his department. His own allegiance to this country caused him to resist this group, and he was relieved of his duties. Even then the Planners had acquired that much strength, that they could remove someone who posed a threat to the Plan.

"One of the 'braintrusters' who swarmed into Washington at that time was a professor from Columbia University, Rexford Guy Tugwell, who became Assistant Secretary of Agriculture. He also wrote books, and made speeches (and recently wrote a proposed new Constitution for the United States—Ed.). He stated:

"We have a century and more of development to undo. It is, in other words, a logical impossibility to have a planned economy and to have business operating its industries, just as it is also impossible to have one with our present Constitutional and statutory structure. Modifications in both, so serious as to mean destruction and rebeginning, are required....'

"Tugwell publicly supported the theory that a planned economy required three great changes in the American system: first, a breaking down of existing statutes and constitutions of government; second, the destruction of private enterprise; and, third the destruction of the sovereignty of the States. He categorically asserted, 'All three of these wholesale changes are required by even a limited acceptance of the planning idea'...." (The foregoing is quoted from "So Desperate a Step," by Maureen Heaton, revised and updated as of March, 1973, and still one of the finest exposes of Regional Government yet written. If still available, can be obtained by sending a donation (at least 50¢) to National Families United, P. O. Box 445, Camino, California 95709.)

Planning was the key word; and on June 30,

1934, President Roosevelt demonstrated this fact by creating the National Resources Planning Board, which we mentioned briefly in our last letter in this series in connection with the expansion of the power of the Executive Order. But this Planning Board did much more. It laid down a plan for the socialization of the United States which included many features that are familiar to all citizens today. Proposed were: a minimum standard of living with the federal government guaranteeing the family income; a regional police force; rigid zoning and building codes (almost unknown in the 1930s); use of federal planning as a tool for the "better utilization of human and material resources;" a federal requirement that local planning bodies be established and operated in accordance with federal guidelines as a condition for receiving federal grants-in-aid; consolidation of "overlapping authorities" through the creation of regional headquarters (similar to present Regional Districts); a bill providing blanket consent of Congress to all Interstate Compacts that might be created; urban renewal, revenue sharing, uniform tax policies in the States; public land acquisition; re-distribution of industrial areas, etc., etc. This proposed program devised by the National Resources Planning Board also urged increased use of "State and National Associations of Municipalities, and municipal officers," and specifically mentioned 1313's Public Administration Clearing House.

As we noted, most of the proposals in this socialization program submitted to Congress by the Roosevelt Administration in 1937, are commonplace accomplishments or proposed programs of the Nixon Administration. But in 1937 the proposals were so revolutionary and so obviously socialistic, that a Congress which has otherwise been called a rubber stamp congress, not only rejected the whole set of proposals, but demanded the dissolution of the National Resources Planning Board as well. The Planners had moved too far to the left too fast and had to start all over again, proceeding more slowly. And many of the proposals would remain dormant for a few decades, awaiting the election of another President who would be elected on a conservative platform and then promote ultra-liberal policies and complete the winning of the New Revolution. It should be noted that FDR was elected on a conservative platform and then broke every promise he had made to the people by adopting the Fabian Socialist platform proposed by Norman Thomas and installed by the very "masterminds" whom he had denounced in his election campaign. Franklin Roosevelt as a candidate, had told the people:

"The doctrine of legislation and regulation by 'masterminds' in whose judgment and will all the people may gladly and quietly acquiesce, has been too glaringly apparent at Washington these past two years. Were it possible to find 'masterminds' so unselfish, so willing to decide unhesitatingly against their own personal interests or private prejudices, men almost Godlike in their ability to hold the scales of justice with an even hand, such a government might be in the interest of the country. But there are none such on the political horizon, and we cannot expect a complete reversal of all the teachings of history." (From The New York Times of March 3, 1930).

During this same campaign, Franklin Roosevelt referred to the 18th (the Prohibition Amendment) and then made a statement that caused conservatives to cheer, and vote for him. He said:

"As a matter of fact and law, the governing rights of the states are all of those which have not been surrendered to the National Government by the Constitution or its amendments. Wisely or unwisely, people know that under the 18th Amendment Congress has been given the right to legislate on this particular subject, but this is not the case in the matter of a great number of other vital problems of government, such as the conduct of public utilities, of banks, or insurance, of agriculture, of education, of social welfare, and of a dozen other important features. In these, Washington must never be permitted to interfere in these avenues of our affairs. . . . Now, to bring about government by oligarchy masquerading as democracy, it is fundamentally essential that practically all authority and control be centralized in our National Government." (Quoted from The New York Times, March 3, 1930; an article headed, "Roosevelt Decries Waning State Rule").

In a manner to be copied forty years later by another President from another political party, Roosevelt talked like a conservative before election, then acted like a socialist after winning the election. Roosevelt's sponsoring of the National Resources Planning Board's proposals—which were dubbed the “Dictator's Bill”—did not prevent its rejection by the Congress. Undaunted, other plans were made for destroying State sovereignty and strengthening the federal executive. On June 27, 1934, the National Housing Act was passed; this was the beginning of Urban Renewal. On September 23, 1935, the Resettlement Administration was established and four “model cities,” the so-called “Greenbelt Towns” were started (Greenbelt near Washington, D.C., Greendale near Milwaukee, and Greenbrook near Bound Brook, New Jersey.) This program was the forerunner of the New Towns concept, and established the federal precedent for moving entire communities into new locations.

Then, on February 29, 1936, Public Law 74-461, creating Social Conservation Districts, went into effect. And here we see a particular modus operandi being initiated: Model legislation was prepared and sent to all State Governors, with a covering letter of instruction from the President of the United States. Each Governor was advised that he should have this legislation passed by the State Legislature, in order that his State would be in the highest classification when federal aid was doled out. Provisions in this model legislation had to do with the manner in which States levied property taxes, establishment of work programs to relieve the unemployed, land use regulations, and other guideline provisions that are familiar to students of Regional Governance methods.

The gimmick worked like this: When a State qualified for federal assistance, then the federal government would set up “social conservation districts” for the administration of the aid. This program did not die with the New Deal, it carried on. And, by 1952, thirty-eight States were active in the federal program, and 1,981 social conservation districts were in operation in the United States (this according to John C. Bollens, author of Special Districts Governments in the United States. Berkeley University of California Press, 1957.)

These first Regional Districts were not mandatory. A State could refuse to comply, and suffer the consequences of no federal aid. Ten States did refuse to go along with the program. But with the passage of the Area Redevelopment Act of 1961, the States were forced to submit. More of this in a future letter.

Returning in time to that era which some have referred to as the New Deal Daze, a portent of what was being planned for these United States was shown to readers of The New York Times when, on April 21, 1935, a map was published, depicting the United States divided into nine “Federal Departments” which were to replace the 48 States. The accompanying article, by Delbert Clark, said, in part:

“There is a growing sentiment—still too inchoate to be termed a movement—among certain members of Congress with advanced social views and a willingness to break with tradition, in favor of drastic change in our form of government to facilitate nationwide reforms frequently blocked by the very nature of our confederation. Since, obviously, there is political dynamite in any proposal to abolish States in so far as they provide a check upon the Federal Government, no one has yet dared to broach publicly the thesis that the abolition would be in the public interest and is, in fact, a distinct possibility in the somewhat distant future. Yet there are those who feel that the change should be made....”

“Aside from the strictly legal and mechanical problems involved, clearly the greatest difficulty in the path of such a profound reorganization of our political system is sheer pride of Statehood...this sentiment is a powerful force. There has appeared of late a remarkable resurgence of State consciousness, a self-assertiveness on the part of States some of which in the old pre-depression days hardly knew they had boundaries.

“Whether the issue will ever be raised is a moot question. The revisionists may never be heard from publicly—...”

The author was correct: there was no fanfare and no publicity. The change was made by Executive Order in 1972, and few knew that a new form of government had replaced the old balance-of-powers form.

(to be continued)

DON BELL REPORTS & CLOSER-UP are privately circulated. Complete service: $24 per year. Extra copies: 10¢ each. Write to:
DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

THE CONTRIVED EVOLUTION OF REGIONAL GOVERNMENT

. Part Fifteen

MORE ABOUT ECUMENOPOLIS

Walter Lippmann was a student of pioneer Fabian Socialist Graham Wallas when the latter was teaching at Harvard University. Lippmann organized the Harvard chapter of the Intercollegiate Socialist Society, went to become an associate of Col. E. M. House, went with him to Paris where he became a member of the Round Table Group and a charter member of the Council on Foreign Relations. He eventually found his niche with The New York Times, where he was to remain until his retirement. It was Lippmann who described the principle dogma of Regional Government in his book "The Good Society" (Little Brown & Co., Boston, 1937). He wrote:

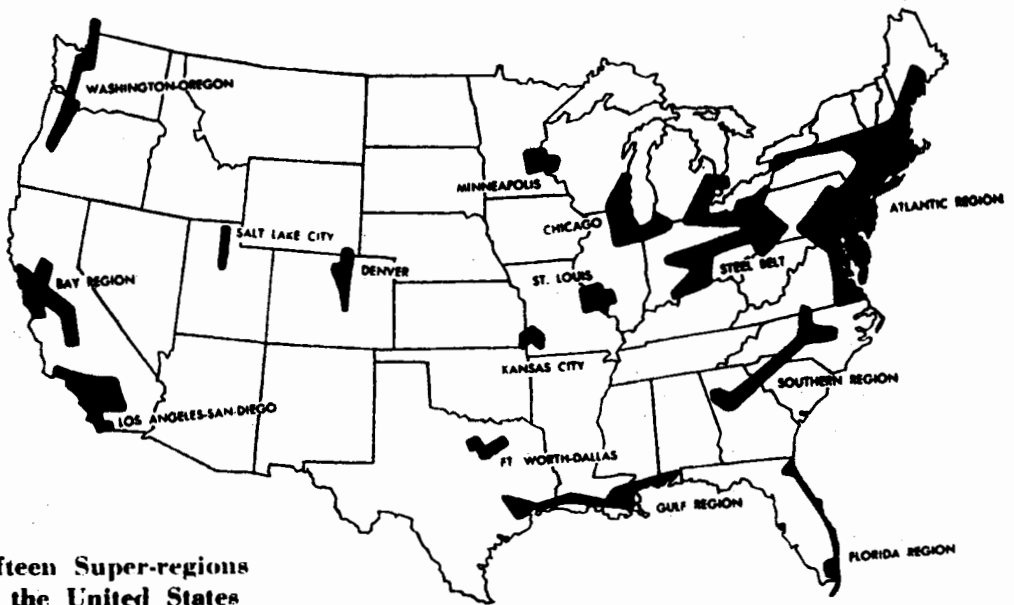

"Throughout the world, in the name of progress, men who call themselves communists, socialists, fascists, nationalists, progressives, and even liberals, are unanimous in holding that government with its instruments of coercion must, by commanding the people how they shall live, direct the course of civilization and fix the shape of things to come. They believe in what Mr. Stuart Chase accurately describes as 'the overhead planning and control of economic activity.' This is the dogma which all the prevailing dogmas presuppose. This is the mold in which are cast the thought and action of the epoch. No other approach to the regulation of human affairs is seriously considered, or is even conceived as possible. The recently enfranchised masses and the leaders of thought who supply their ideas are almost completely under the spell of this dogma. Only a handful here and there, groups without influence, isolated and disregarded thinkers, continue to challenge it. For the premises of authoritarian collectivism have become the working beliefs, the self-evident assumptions, the unquestioned axioms, not only of all the revolutionary regimes, but of nearly every effort which lays claim to being enlightened, humane, and progressive.... For virtually all that now passes for progressivism in countries like England and the United States calls for the increasing ascendancy of the state: always the cry is for more officials with more power over more and more of the activities of men."

The increasing ascendancy of the state, and the overhead planning and control of economic activity! This is the dogma that supersedes all dogma with the Planners, whether they be "communists, socialists, fascists, nationalists, progressives or even liberals." And Regional Governance has come to be the approved method for the achievement of this "ascendancy of the state" and the ultimate goal: the "overhead planning of all economic activity" on a world scale.

However, the Planners did not all agree, until quite recently, upon the best way in which to install this Regional Governance System. In the late 1950s and early 1960s, they seemed satisfied that their Regions be set up around "core cities." This was the original "Metro" system that was promoted and installed in Miami, St. Louis, and other metropolitan areas. "Metro" is a modernization of the old Greek city-state concept, expanded to include the world-city or ecumenopolis idea, which was conceived by the man who also coined the term 'social science' and called himself the world's first 'social scientist': Claude Henri de Rouvray' de Saint-Simon, a French aristocrat who survived the French Revolution and lived to develop a socialistic concept upon which to organize all of society. In the book The Great Deceit, a Veritas Foundation staff study of Fabianism and the social pseudo-sciences (1964), there is the following note regarding Saint-Simon:

"When he was a youth Saint-Simon felt that

Fifteen Super-regions of the United States

he was destined to great things and had his valet awaken him each morning with the words, 'Remember, monsieur Le Compte, that you have great things to do.' It was during the revolution, while suffering a temporary imprisonment in the Luxembourg that visions of a new social system, based on scientific principles and not on political conventionality, first unfolded themselves to his ardent imagination. His ancestor Charlemagne appeared to him one night in a vision and said: 'Since the world existed, only one family enjoys the honor of producing a hero and a philosopher of the first rank. This honor is reserved for my family. My son, your success as philosopher will equal that which I reached as soldier and politician.' ...Throughout his life Saint-Simon was afflicted with mental disorders...It is an irony of history that 'social science' was born in a mind completely lacking in scientific training...."

Saint-Simon's plan, briefly stated: he wanted to divide the whole world into city-states, after the manner of Athens, Sparta, etc. in ancient Greece. Each city-state would be governed by a company of philosophers; and overall rule would come from a world-city, a world capital which he would build on the site of Constantinople, then considered to be the geopolitical center of the world.

It is remarkable that the Planners at "1313" took these plans for ancient Greece, the concept of world government imagined by Saint-Simon, and the promotional scheme of a modern Greek Planner, and try to rebuild the United States according to such a pattern, and in line with the map that is reproduced on this page. When we first published this map (March 8, 1963), we wrote:

"Back to the Golden Age of Ancient Greece —this could well sum up the dreams of the New World Planners...It was a Greek Planner, bearing ideological gifts to a 1961 Conference of the National Association of Housing and Redevelopment Officials (this was a 1313 project), who showed how the "Super-Metro" concept fits into the "City-State" plan.

"According to a report prepared for the Ford Foundation, 'Dr. C. A. Doxiadis, Urban Consultant from Athens, Greece...said: 'Most of the evils from which we suffer today in urban areas stem from the fact that we have overlooked the trend that is heading top-speed toward an ecumenic city, and that we are, instead, struggling with the image of the city of the past.... The city has become a network of urban settlements which will one day cover the whole earth.'

"...Dr. Doxiadis traced the development of the city from a static to a dynamic force: The city first became a metropolis and then a megalopolis....The next stage will be merging into settlements which will cover the whole earth, and which Dr. Doxiadis called ecumenopolis. Ecumenopolis is the city of the future, and will have to be based on a new network of centers and lines of transportation and communication that will be able to stand the pressure and demands of the growing populations of the earth.'

Here, then, is the 1313 formula:

Metropolis to Megalopolis (Super-Metro); Megalopolis to Ecumenopolis (City-State, or Universal City);

A new network (world authority) to bind together these 'urban settlements which will cover the whole earth.'

"This world-wide network of urban settlements will, of course, have spaces in between, which are commonly called rural areas, the land usually devoted to farming and stock-raising. . . . Now comes the plan to put all land under the direct control of the Federal Government. According to a plan first published in the April, 1962, issue of Nation's Business, all land in the United States would be divided into eight classes:

"1) A "greenbelt" area 30 miles in depth which would surround each ecumenopolis or universal city, in which area no industry, no home building, and practically no gardening or truck-farming will be permitted.

2) Areas where farming will be permitted.

3) Areas where 'federally combined farming' will be pursued (co-op farming as in Russia?)

4) Areas where government controlled conservation prevents the use of land by individuals.

5) Areas around 'historical sites.'

6) Areas set aside for 'hikers only.'

7) Areas which will be set aside for 'government use,' and in which the people may have access to the land, but for recreational purposes only.

8) Areas which might be called 'the people's land,' since these are for mass use'." (End of extended quotation from Don Bell Reports of March 8, 1963).

Reproduced below is an illustration that accompanied an article written by International Planner Constantinos A. Doxiadis, for the book Cities of Destiny, edited by Arnold Toynbee, published by McGraw-Hill and retailing at $30 per copy. In other words, the book was not intended for mass circulation, and only "insiders" would be expected to read it. Hence, Doxiadis is not reluctant when he explains the international application of this form of Regionalism. He writes:

"... This (world-wide) city is already under construction. It will absorb almost all the important cities of the present, and will gradually grow out of them through their dynamic growth, as well as through the dynamic growth of new settlements that are going to be created. It will be composed of almost all the major cities of the past and the present. This city is going to expand widely over the plains and the great valleys, especially near the oceans, seas, great lakes and rivers, since the most restrictive factor in its formation will be the presence of water. Even when de-salinized water can be used economically for urban purposes, it will be available only near the level of the oceans and lakes, so these will attract the city of the future, as the small rivers attracted primitive settlements.

The city of the future will form a world-wide network consisting of centres of several orders interconnected by settled parts of various importance.

"The ecumenical city is going to pass through two phases. In the first phase, which has already started, it will gradually build up through the expansion of dynamically growing settlements. It will consist of dynamic parts and thus will change automatically from more primitive towards more developed forms. When it finally reaches the maximum calculable population and estimable area, it will not expand any more, and in this phase it will undergo only those minor alterations that will be indispensable for the re-adjustment of the population, the economy, and the functions necessary for the world-wide city.

"The city of the future is going to form a world-wide network. The centres of a higher order are going to be located mainly where the greater concentration of population are, i.e., in the greatest plains which have the best climate and best water-resources. The connections between them will follow the natural lines of communication as well as some underground and submarine tunnels and the corresponding air-corridors.

"In this network of major and minor centres, the Ecumenopolis will have a hierarchical structure of centres. The structure will range from the very small centre corresponding to present neighborhoods, through centres of middle importance with a population corresponding to the large metropolitan areas of the present, i. e., from 5 to 10 million, to centres of the highest order with populations running to hundreds of millions. These centres are going to form networks of different orders within the major network.

"Several of these centres are going to comprise all types of functions, since they will provide administration, management, transportation, culture, production and pastime for a wide area. Several others, though, are going to be specialized centres catering for special local factors or traditions. Such cities—for example, Cambridge, Massachusetts—will attract all types of educational facilities and become important specialized centres of education of a very high order in the network of the world-wide city, while others will be important cultural, political or pleasure centres.

"...The city as a whole will be the result of good programming and planning, based on very careful calculations of man's needs and of the possibilities of modern technology. The universal city of the future should be, as a whole and as a frame, the product of the creative work of every mind which can comprehend, and give shape to, the total habitat of man on this earth...."

(End of quotation)

But Planner Doxiadis and his 1313-oriented backers were to learn that this plan for the Universal City, or Ecumenopolis, made up of a global network of connected cities, contained a fatal flaw: The Master Planning required to change these "primitive" cities into "more developed centres" did not supply the dynamism the Planners hoped for. Instead, master planning began to kill once healthy cities. As the urban epidemic took hold, population changes began to occur. This was especially true when the racial integration fever reached its climax. Once prosperous cities began going broke, downtown shopping areas and high-tax districts began resembling ghost towns. Well-to-do whites moved out, poor blacks moved in, and cities went into the red. Suburban neighborhood shopping centers began doing most of the business previously transacted on Main Street.

The Master Planning that was supposed to provide the dynamism that Doxiadis talked about, began to provide death instead. So, the plan for establishing a world-wide network via cities and Metros has been relegated to the utopian cemetery.

Then came the "better plan," that of disregarding population and resources per se, and establishing geographical regions, these regions divided into smaller regions, and the smaller regions divided into sub-regions.

Thus, the whole world has been divided into Regional Governments, Nations are being divided into Regional Districts, and the Regional Districts are being divided into sub-regional districts. The world-wide network will be, not by connected cities, but by connected regions. All else will remain the same.

(to be continued)

For information concerning this letter, write:
DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

THE CONTRIVED EVOLUTION OF REGIONAL GOVERNMENT

. Part Sixteen

SOCIALISM BY ANOTHER NAME

On March 30, 1945, the United States was engaged in a war in which International Socialism (Communist Russia) was an ally and National Socialism (Nazi Germany and Fascist Italy) was an enemy. At that time the eminent economist Ludwig von Mises was attempting to explain the difference between the two forms of totalitarianism to members of the American Academy of Political and Social Science, meeting in Philadelphia. He addressed the distinguished audience, saying:

"There are two different patterns for the realization of socialism. The one pattern—we may call it the Marxian or the Russian pattern—is purely bureaucratic. All economic enterprises are departments of the government, just as is the administration of the army and the navy, or the postal system. Every single plant, shop, or farm, stands in the same relation to the superior central organization as does a post office to the office of the Postmaster General. The whole nation forms one single labor army with compulsory service; the commander of this army is the chief of state.

"The second pattern—we may call it the German (or Italian Fascist) system—differs from the first one in that it, seemingly and nominally, maintains private ownership of the means of production, entrepreneurship, and market exchange. So-called entrepreneurs do the buying and the selling, pay the workers, contract debts and pay interest and amortization. But they are no longer entrepreneurs. In Nazi Germany they are called shop managers or betriebsfuehrer. The government tells these seeming entrepreneurs what and how to produce, at what prices and from whom to buy, at what prices and to whom to sell. The government decrees at what wages laborers should work and to whom and under what terms the capitalists should entrust their funds. Market exchange is but a sham. As all prices, wages, and interest rates are fixed by the authority, they are prices, wages and interest rates in appearance only; in fact they are merely quantitative terms in the authoritarian orders determining each citizen's income, consumption, and standard of living. The authority, not the consumers, directs production. The central board of production management is supreme; all citizens are nothing else but civil servants.

"This is socialism, with the outward appearance of capitalism. Some labels of the capitalistic market economy are retained, but they signify something entirely different from what they mean in the market economy." (End of quotation)

Then there was this third form of Socialism which was used so very effectively in Britain and then exported to the United States when other forms of Socialism failed to conquer. Called Fabian Socialism, one of its early disciples, the "eminent historian" H. G. Wells, described the program and exposed the machinery in a book published in 1908 and titled "New Worlds for Old." He wrote:

"It was left chiefly to the little group of English people who founded the Fabian Society to supply . . . the amplifying conception of Socialism, to convert Revolutionary Socialism to Administrative Socialism. . . . From saying that unorganized people cannot achieve Socialism, they passed to the implication that organization alone, without popular support, might achieve Socialism. . . .

Socialism ceased to be an open revolution, and became a plot. Functions were to be shifted quietly, unostentatiously, from the representative to the official he appointed.

They worked like a ferment in municipal politics...the reconstruction of our legislative and local machinery is a necessary preliminary to Socialization in many directions....Scientific reconstruction of our methods of government constitutes a necessary part of the Socialist scheme....It supplies us with a vision of a great and disciplined organization of officials. A Scientific Bureaucracy, appointed by representative bodies of diminishing importance, and coming at last to be the working control of the Socialist State, the replacement of individual action by public organization...." (emphasis added).

Can you see how the citizens were deceived by the chosen few who really "knew the score"? We have been advised to build bomb shelters in our back yards, have been taught how to evacuate whole cities, and how to survive in case of invasion by hostile Socialist soldiers and airmen from across the seas. We have sent millions of men across those same seas to battle fronts in Korea and Southeast Asia, and to guardposts in half the countries of the world, in order to prevent the advance of this Socialist enemy. And we have given billions of dollars and inestimable technological aid to countries throughout the world, to help them to build or rebuild according to the capitalistic pattern, shunning Socialism of the type Ludwig von Mises called German, or the Zwangswirtschaft system.

But here at home we have been made the unwarned victims of another form of Socialism by means of which, in the terminology of H. G. Wells, our governmental functions have been shifted gradually from the elected officials to their appointees. Citizens have been made accustomed to "city managers" and "county administrators" and appointed officials of uncounted other kinds, from citizens advisory committees to administrators of special districts and Regional Councils that dictate to State Governors and Legislators. And the final achievement in this category: As this is being written we have an appointed President of the United States who is empowered to appoint his potential successor, the Vice President of the United States.

It all began, of course, just as Wells explained it, at the municipal or local level. Then it spread to the State level, and at last to the Federal level; and now it is invading the international level as Regional Governance becomes universal!

Tracing its beginnings and its maturing at the local level, Maureen Heaton wrote, in "So Dangerous a Step":

"The city manager now fulfills the duties formerly the responsibility of the elected city council, who now only act on the recommendation of their appointed successor. So, too, with the county administrator, who has become the appointed supervisor of the elected Supervisors. The appointed county counsel has usurped the position once held by the elected district attorney, who is now reduced to little more than a prosecutor. This situation holds true in the schools, as well, where appointed superintendents whittle away at the functions of the elected Boards, and 'experts' appointed by the appointed superintendent really make the decisions, which are then 'rubberstamped' by the 'representatives of the people.' All this has come about piecemeal, and has conditioned acceptance of the idea of government by appointed officials, so that many who would have resisted bitterly, now seem indifferent to it all.

"Like regional government itself, these changes are always sold to the people under the label of 'progress,' or because of 'proliferating government,' 'too heavy a workload,' or 'an expert is needed.' In the case of regional government, the people are told that existing government is not 'flexible' enough; or that a regional approach is necessary to handle the growing problems; or that there are so many overlapping areas which could be simplified under Metro. This last has some truth. Compared to a totalitarian state, our historic system is quite complicated. But do we want to pay that price for simplicity?"

It was this last reason which was used to sell Metro in Dade County, Florida. There were some 26 incorporated municipalities within the county, the city of Miami being the largest. The consolidation of functions previously performed by each incorporated area independently, was supposed to bring greater efficiency, save money, insure safety and the pursuit of happiness, etc. It did none of these things, but this was the sales pitch in 1958.

We were against Metro from the start and knew that plans called for the creation of a Tri-County Authority which would replace the existing functions of the local governments of Dade, Palm Beach, and Broward (Fort Lauderdale) Counties. If the movement could be stopped or limited to Dade County, the final plan would have been defeated. So, we "editorialized" in our August 8, 1958 issue of Closer-Up, saying in part:

"Let's see what happened in Dade County. On May 1, 1958, the offices of county assessor of taxes, county tax collector, county surveyor, purchasing agent and county supervisor of registration were abolished and the powers and functions of these offices were transferred to the county manager, an appointive officer who was given power to appoint and remove all administrative officers subject only to Civil Service regulations.

"The so-called 'Home Rule Charter' gave the board of county commissioners the right to abolish the offices of sheriff, constable or any other county officer except the supervisor of public instruction and the judges and clerks of constitutional courts.

"In one fell swoop the greatest right that Americans have, to elect and continue to supervise the conduct of their local offices, was destroyed under the high sounding name of 'Home Rule.' Instead of giving home rule to the voters of Dade County, the charter removed home rule from the voters and put it in the hands of an appointive county manager.

"From now on out the county manager, and not the voters, will determine the nature and the character of all local officials who were formerly elected. No one, not even the Board of County Commissioners of Dade County, who will be the only important administrative elective officers of the county, can 'direct or request the appointment of any person to, or his removal from, office by the Manager.' No matter how ruthlessly the citizens may be hounded by appointed police, you the voter have no recourse and the county commission cannot 'give orders to subordinate of the Manager, either publicly or privately.'

"Instead of home rule by the voters of Dade County, the charter gives such power to one man, the manager, who does not have to be a resident of the State at the time of his appointment and who may be extremely unfamiliar with the needs of the county.

"To show you the power of the county manager, let me quote Section 4:01: 'There shall be departments of finance, personnel, planning, law and such other departments as may be established by administrative order of the Manager. All functions not otherwise specifically assigned to others by this Charter shall be performed under the supervision of the Manager.' And to top this off, under the very next section, 'The Manager shall have the power to issue and place into effect administrative orders, rules and regulations.'

"Is this 'home rule' by the people? No, indeed. It is almost dictatorship by an appointive official who can be brought here from a distant point to run your life and mine. . . . This we must never do if we want home rule in the true sense of the word. Let those who would give us home rule be sure and bring home rule to you and me, and not dictatorship."

As we indicated previously, the foregoing was published August 8, 1958. There is no reason to change a word of it, for all things in the Metro department are much as they were sixteen years ago; except for one sad difference: proliferation. Dade County was the first such experiment in the United States and, while this "growth" has been confined to the one county in Florida, there are many other Metros in existence today. We have a publication of the Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations that carries the title: "Regional Governance, Promise and Performance." This 356-page book lists and discusses Metros that have been established in areas where the "core cities" are Miami and Jacksonville, Florida; Nashville, Tennessee; Atlanta, Georgia; Indianapolis, Indiana; the San Francisco Bay Area where nine counties are involved; the Twin Cities Area of Minnesota where seven counties are tied together; Sacramento, California; Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania; Portland, Oregon; the New York Interstate Metro which includes counties and planning regions in a three-state area; etc.

But, as we indicated in a previous letter, since the establishment of the Ten Federal Regions, the ACIR planners have been far more interested in the "Substate Districting Systems" which are being developed in the fifty States.

For example, in an ACIR report on Miami

Metro author Aileen Lotz (staff consultant for the Joint Center for Environmental and Urban Problems, Florida International University), begins her report with the statement: "For the purpose of this paper, Dade County, Florida is defined as a 'region.' Although most of the present discussion will be confined to... Dade County... it is recognized that the region, under more traditional definitions, includes additional area...."

And this is certainly true as of August 16, 1974. Because, as a result of the passage of a legislative package prepared by 1313 Planners, this "region" now includes five counties: Dade, Broward, Palm Beach, Martin, and St. Lucie.

Since about the same thing has happened in all of the 50 States, and since much the same story could be told about any of the 49 other States, here is what happened in Florida, briefly and to the point:

On March 27, 1969, the President of the United States announced the division of the Nation into ten federal regions. Florida was placed in Region IV along with seven other States. Then, on February 12, 1972, the President authorized the staffing of the capitals of these ten federal regions, with Federal Regional Councils which would administer all federal programs in the multi-state region.

Meanwhile, in Florida, the State Legislature was induced to pass two 1313-prepared and repackaged legislative acts: the Florida State Comprehensive Planning Act of 1972, and the Florida Environmental Land and Management Act of 1972. These Acts authorized the establishment of substate regions, which would act as local administrative branches of the Federal Region, whose capital is in Atlanta, Georgia.

The Governor lost no time in designating ten geographic, multi-county planning regions within the State "... for the purpose of preparing studies, reports, and plans, and all other planning, programming and budgeting activities (PPBS-Ed.), including but not limited to the activities named in (appropriate) Florida Statutes."

Protesting the progress of Regionalism in his home State, Dr. John L. Grady of the Florida Legislative and Research Committee, spoke before the Governor and the Cabinet of the State of Florida on Feb. 20, 1973, saying, in part:

"... This is Regional Government. And, as any informed and objective citizen can see, Regional Government means control. Control of all land, business, development, utilities, production, services, property and people. Control by appointed councils and committees, not by elected officials. Bureaucrats, paid by federal grants, will direct programs effecting social and physical planning and federal regulation over cities and counties and their people. Even local police and county sheriffs will be controlled through Regional Criminal Justice Planning Councils of the Governor's Council on Criminal Justice, which will administer the Federal Law Enforcement Assistance Administering program for the LEAA czar in Atlanta—paving the way for a dangerously powerful national police force.

"The Governor's ten regional 'sub-states' and their respective councils dovetail very neatly with the President's ten regional provinces and their ruling councils. And should anyone question our remarks here today, let them study the record and the statements of government leaders themselves, such as Robert C. Weaver, former chief, Department of Housing and Urban Development, who said, 'Regional Government means Federal control over all property and its development regardless of location, anywhere in the United States, to be administered on the Federal Official's determination. It would supersede state and local laws.... Through this authority we seek to recapture control of the use of land, most of which the government has already given to the people.'

"And when the regional councils are soon functioning, with federal authority and federal funds, and there is no longer a need for mayors and city councilmen, and county commissioners, then the municipalities and counties will be dissolved; and unnecessary too will be state senators and representatives, many of whom did not even read, let alone understand, the enabling legislation which they passed."

(to be continued)

For information concerning this Newsletter please address all correspondence to:
DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

THE CONTRIVED EVOLUTION OF REGIONAL GOVERNMENT

----- Part Seventeen -----

SUBSTATE REGIONALISM IN THE NEW FEDERAL SYSTEM

That socialistic form of control that is called Regional Governance took a giant step forward in the United States with the passage of the Area Redevelopment Act of 1965. According to the terms of this legislation, any State or any "distressed" area of any State wanting federal assistance, was required to prepare and submit to the proper agency in Washington, an "Overall Economic Development Plan," and to set up a Regional Planning Commission to carry out the program once it had been approved by the Central Authority. Any State or area thereof that was not conversant with the procedures required for the drawing up and submitting of plans, or filling out the proper forms, etc., need merely apply to 1313's Public Administration Service, and expert assistance would be forthcoming and federal financing would be assured.

However, it was the Economic Development Act of 1965 that succeeded in popularizing Regional Planning Commissions. Title V of this Act provided for the establishment of Multi-State Regional Commissions. The first of these to combine more than one State in a Regional Development Program was the Appalachian Regional Development Plan. This was a part of President Johnson's War on Poverty, but LBJ had a little difficulty in putting this one across. The appropriation required for launching the Appalachian Program required Congressional consent.

Congress balked at approving such an expenditure for just one section of the country. So, LBJ held out a carrot—he promised the Congressmen and Senators that if they would approve the Appalachian Regional Commission, then they could have a Regional Commission for their own District! It worked; LBJ's famed "art of compromise" brought about the Appalachian Regional Commission, the New England Regional Commission, the Coastal Plains Regional Commission, the Upper Great Lakes Regional Commission, the Ozarks Regional Commission, the Four Corners Regional Commission (New Mexico, Arizona, Utah and Colorado), the Old West Regional Commission, and the Pacific Northwest Regional Commission—eight in all and all of them still in existence and competing for funds with the Ten Federal Regional Districts that would be established a few years later!

Former President Nixon usually gets the blame (or the praise if one is a Socialist) for having installed Regional Governance in the United States; but it was President Johnson who began the actual work. In a memorandum dated Sept. 2, 1966, President Johnson directed the Bureau of the Budget (now the Office of Management and Budget) to coordinate at the Federal Level, all Regional Planning in the Nation. As a result, the Director of BOB (now OMB) issued circular A-80. According to Rep. Nelson Pryor of Berlin, New Hampshire, 1313 then got into the act in this manner: Governor John Love of Colorado, at that time Chairman of the National Governor's Conference Committee on State Planning (1313), wrote to the Governors of all States urging them to comply with BOB's Circular A-80, and establish State Regional Planning Commissions!

Later, July 24, 1969, Circular A-95 was issued. Briefly, this gives the federal executive the right to establish rules and regulations governing regional projects, and also gives federal agents the power to veto local plans and programs whenever any federal funding is involved. Thus "home rule" is abolished and this power is taken from the people and re-delegated to regional chiefs who are appointed by Washington.

Then, on March 27, 1969, under the authority of the Executive Re-Organization Act of 1949, President Richard M. Nixon told the American people, by means of one of his rare press conferences, that the United States was being divided into eight federal regions. After that announcement there was a flurry of jealous protest from some of the cities that had not been chosen as Regional Capitals, and Nixon revised his order to provide for Ten Federal Regions, as illustrated in the accompanying map.

By Executive Order 11647 of February 12, 1972 and Executive Order 11731 of July 25, 1973, the process had been completed: Each of the ten federal regions would have a Governing Regional Council composed of appointed administrators from each of the following departments or agencies: Department of Transportation, Office of Economic Opportunity; Department of Health, Education and Welfare, Department of Agriculture, Department of Housing and Urban Development, Department of Labor, Environmental Protection Agency, Department of the Interior, and the Law Enforcement Assistance Administration; and with the Office of Management and Budget in overall charge of the entire operation.

REGIONALISM

MAP COMPACTING FIFTY SOVEREIGN STATES INTO TEN FEDERAL REGIONS
 (Per, "Statement by the President on Restructuring of Government Service Systems," 27 March, 1969, and Executive Order #11647, "The Federal Regional Councils," 12 February, 1972.)

It was with the establishment of these Ten Federal Regions that the program of ACIR and 1313 was changed from one of setting up Metros, Megalopoli and Ecumenopoli to one of creating Sub-State Regions within the Ten Federal Regions that had been ordered into existence by Executive Orders.

First, however, we must go back in time and pick up yet another strand that has been woven into the Regional Blanket that is smothering the Republic:

In previous letters we have explained how 1313 was established with Rockefeller money on Rockefeller property at 1313 East 60th St., Chicago, and how 1313 was designed to do at the domestic level what its companion organization, the Council on Foreign Relations, was created to accomplish at the foreign level. 1313 worked with State, County, Municipal and local governments; but the time came when it was felt that a more direct tie-in with the Federal Administration was needed. Consequently, there was created, in 1959, the Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations. From this time on, we begin to hear more of ACIR and less of 1313, since ACIR now is the official "front" and mouthpiece of 1313.

"The system" used by ACIR is partially explained in one of its publications, which tells us that:

"Commission recommendations for State action are translated into draft bills and proposed Constitutional amendments which constitute ACIR's State Legislative Programs. The proposals have been made available in separate 'slip bill' form. They are brought to the attention of key legislative and executive officials of all the States, as well as other interstate groups and individuals."

After ACIR began to function, and the PPBS management and budget control system had been forced upon every federal administrative department, then came the division of the Nation into Ten Federal Regions, and the ensuing campaign to force all States to likewise divide themselves into Sub-State Regions.

The following is taken from an official publication of the ACIR, and is self-explanatory:

WHAT IS ACIR?

The Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations (ACIR) was created by Congress in 1959 to monitor the operation of the American federal system and to recommend improvements. ACIR is a permanent national bipartisan body representing the executive and the legislative branches of Federal, State and local government and the public.

Of the 26 Commission members, nine represent the Federal government, 14 represent State and local governments and three represent the general public. Twenty members are appointed by the President. He names three private citizens and three Federal executive officials directly and selects four Governors, three State legislators, four mayors and three elected county officials from slates nominated, respectively, by the National Governors' Conference, the Council of State Governments, the National League of Cities/U.S. Conference of Mayors, and the National Association of Counties (all are 1313 organizations—Ed.). The other six are Members of Congress—three Senators appointed by the President of the Senate and three Representatives appointed by the Speaker of the House.

Commission members serve a two-year term and may be reappointed. The Commission names an Executive Director who heads a small professional staff.

After selecting specific intergovernmental issues for investigation, ACIR follows a multi-step procedure that assures review and comment by representatives of all points of view, all affected levels of government, technical experts and interested groups. The Commission then debates each issue and formulates its policy positions. Commission findings and recommendations are published and draft bills and executive orders are developed to assist in implementing ACIR policies." (End of statement).

A petition protesting the activities and the very existence of ACIR was prepared and presented to Congress by Statewide Committees Opposing Regional Plan Areas (SCORPA). The petition charged that ACIR is unconstitutional since Senators and Congressmen serve on its 26-member commission and the Constitution clearly states, in Article I, Section 6 (2), that: "No Senator or Representative shall, during the time for which he is elected, be appointed to any civil office under the authority of the United States."

Further objections: ACIR is controlled by 1313, "a syndicate of like-minded affiliates and adjuncts linked by interlocking directorates and/or common purpose....";

"ACIR operates a 'law factory' and distributes pre-packaged legislation throughout federal, state and local governments, preempting the right of citizens to form their own laws through their representatives elected for that purpose...;

"The very existence of ACIR's federal-state-local collusion is a violation of both the word and the meaning of our Federal Constitution and the 50 State Constitutions....;

"ACIR promotes an implacable drive to eradicate local and State governments under its concept of Regional Governance, etc., etc."

From various ACIR reports and publications, we have gleaned the following pertinent information:

ACIR organization covers three major areas:

1. Taxation and finance;
2. Governmental Structure and Functions; and
3. Program Implementation.

ACIR devotes a major—and growing—proportion of time and resources to encouraging the implementation of the recommendations it makes to the legislative and executive branches of Federal, State, and local government.

Legislation to implement ACIR recommendations to Congress is usually introduced by United States Senators and Representatives who are members of the Commission.

The Council of State Governments includes most ACIR bills in its annual volume of "Suggested State Legislation" (copies of which volume of "mail order legislation" are sent to all important officials of every State for suggested State action—Ed.)

Attempts by the States to modernize their basic charters (State Constitutions) and to revamp the structure and organization of their governmental branches are basic ingredients of the continuing drive to put more muscle in federalism's frame (emphasis added).

The Commission and its key staff members submitted statements and testified before House and Senate committees on legislation of vital interest to federalism.

The creative partnership between Federal, State and local governments in responding effectively to old and new social, economic and developmental needs in urban and rural America can only flounder unless antiquated State Constitutional provisions are revised.

It should be noted that these Substate Regions that ACIR promotes are federally controlled if a single cent of federal money is involved in the project. This is brought about through the application of the provisions contained in that Circular A-95 which was previously mentioned in this letter. Under ACIR's official "Glossary of terms," there is given the following definition:

"A-95. An areawide comprehensive planning organization or State agency recognized by the U.S. Office of Management and Budget (OMB) to notify other affected local or State governmental units of proposed Federal-aid or direct Federal projects before they are funded, and to perform reviews of such projects and comment upon them as to their consistency with areawide or State policies. This process is established by OMB Circular A-95, pursuant to Section 204 of the Demonstration Cities and Metropolitan Development Act of 1966 and Title IV of the Intergovernmental Cooperation Act of 1968."

Translated into common English:

Any State or local agency desiring Federal assistance on a development project, must notify a "clearing house" of its intentions, furnishing a description of the project and other pertinent information. If the clearing house approves, then the request is forwarded to OMB for final action. If OMB approves, the project is coordinated with and made to conform to the computerized Planning, Programming, Budgeting System, by which all programs in which the federal government has any part, are managed and controlled. If the local project does not fit in with the long-range Planning for the Region, if it does not conform to "piggyback" Programming in the area, then the Budgeting of the project is denied. In more formal language, a bulletin issued by OMB to all executive departments and establishments states:

"The principal objective of PPB (Planning, Programming and Budgeting—Ed.) is to improve the basis for major program decisions in the operating agencies and in the Executive Office of the President. This requires clear statements of alternatives and of the reasons for decisions. Program objectives are to be identified and alternative methods of meeting them are to be subjected to systematic comparison. Data are to be organized on the basis of programs, and are to reflect the future as well as current implications of decisions. As in the case of budgeting, planning and programming apply not only to current programs but to proposals involving new legislation.

"The budget is the financial expression of the underlying program plan. Review by the Bureau (OMB) is conducted primarily in program terms. It is essential that the products of the PPB System—the Program Memoranda, Special Analytic Studies, and Program and Financial Plans—provide adequate bases for program decisions."

At the local level, it is the job of the clearing house to see to it that the local project fits in with all other projects in the area or Region; and OMB then determines that the project is in accord with overall long-range planning for the Region.

According to ACIR, there are three types of planning and developing clearing houses below the Multi-State Federal Regional level:

- The metropolitan clearing house;
- The regional clearing house, which approves planning and developing projects in the non-metropolitan areas;
- The State clearing house which... "usually is the State comprehensive planning agency."

"As of April, 1973," says an ACIR publication, "53 State clearinghouses existed (including the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, and American Samoa). Of the 212 metropolitan clearinghouses, 185 were intrastate and 27 were interstate, while only one of the 238 regional clearinghouses was interstate. The 450 substate and multistate clearinghouses in the United States covered over 2,000 counties, in which an estimated 88 percent of the nation's population lived."

Why these clearinghouses? According to ACIR:

"OMB's objective, then, is to provide the opportunity for achieving greater interlocal and intergovernmental cooperation in the long run and better coordination of specific State and substate planning and development activities in the short run. According to Dwight Ink (an ACIR Planner): 'A-95, in effect, forces people who should be talking to each other to talk to each other. Communication is fundamental to coordination. It has been our modest expectation that the intergovernmental dialogues contrived by A-95 would lead State and local governments to an identification of common interest which, quite possibly, would stimulate common enterprises and perhaps even continuing systematic cooperation... In short, we view A-95 and the laws on which it is based as institution building mechanisms—and institution building is a long term enterprise'."

In plainer language: A-95 forces everybody to obey OMB's PPB System, which is a long term enterprise aiming at a Total Managed Global Society. And there is not yet complete coordination at local levels because those OMB clearinghouses at present have control over only those development projects where some federal money is involved.

This is why federal land control is so important to the Regionalists: When the federal bureaucrats can determine just how every square inch of land is to be utilized or developed; once these clearinghouses hold dictatorial power over all land development, whether or not it is federally financed, then total tyranny will have arrived.

(to be continued)

DON BELL REPORTS and CLOSER-UP are privately circulated Newsletters. Complete service: $24 per year. Extra copies: 10¢ each. Write: DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223 Palm Beach, Florida 33480

Don Bell Reports

A WEEKLY COMMENTARY

Year Twenty-One Special Issue August 30, 1974

DEAR SUBSCRIBER:-

This is not a regular newsletter. Instead, it is a personal and, to us, a very important report on the state of the Bells. Time and the pressure of meeting deadlines have taken their toll and the time has come, at long and lamentable last, when we are forced to make a vital decision concerning our publications and our service to you; and we hope and pray that you will understand, and accept that decision.

It has become essential that, if we are to continue to serve you, we must curtail our operation or run the risk of ceasing operations altogether. Briefly and to the point: the work and the pressure involved in producing two different publications leaves us sick and exhausted. Therefore, we have decided that CLOSER-UP must be laid to rest, discontinued, in order that we may continue publishing DON BELL REPORTS, giving it the time and attention that it deserves. So, from this date onward, we shall publish DON BELL REPORTS only, with occasional bulletins and special reports as circumstances warrant.

You deserve an explanation, so, permit us to start at the beginning and tell you how this dilemma came about. A full explanation will serve a double purpose: it will also answer that question so often asked by new subscribers, "Who is Don Bell?" And it will also tell you about the "staff" that assists him. Some of the following some of you have read before, but it needs to be repeated:

Long before Korea and Vietnam, between the two World Wars, civil wars were raging in China. That's where the action was, and that's where young Upton Close was. In those turbulent years Mainland China was overrun with Communist agents, both Russian and American. If one wanted to learn, first hand, the nature of the World Conspiracy that brought on World War One and was about to precipitate us into World War Two, China was the place to "get the facts." Upton got the facts, and returned to the United States to become Far Eastern expert for NBC; until his knowledge, integrity and patriotism cost him his job, and he became an independent broadcaster and publisher of the newsletter CLOSER-UP.

Meanwhile, in February 1927, while Chiang Kai-shek's troops were beseiging Shanghai, young Don Bell arrived in China with the Fourth United States Marines, then under command of the famed General Smedley D. Butler. Fate decreed that Don Bell was to remain in Asia for the next nineteen years, as newsman and radio correspondent covering four wars. He returned to the United States to observe and report proceedings at the organizational meeting of the United Nations at San Francisco. He then returned to be with General MacArthur when the Japanese occupation began. Later, Bell flew to Bikini Atoll to serve as pool correspondent for all American radio networks and report the two atomic bomb tests. He then returned to the United States to become a network radio commentator until, like Upton Close, "knowledge, integrity and patriotism cost him his job" and he became an independent broadcaster and publisher of the weekly newsletter DON BELL REPORTS, now in its twenty-first year of continuous and uninterrupted publication.

A personal note regarding Don Bell: His experience as a member of the Fourth Estate is adequate. He began in 1928 as editor and publisher of Walla Walla, official organ of the Fourth Marines while stationed in China. As a civilian, he graduated to the feature editorship of the American-owned, now defunct, Shanghai Evening Post & Mercury. Then to service as foreign correspondent for UP, NBC, BBC, MBS, etc. (45 years in the news business as of this writing). There was a time, however, when Don Bell was better known for making the news than for reporting it. At the very beginning of our entry into World War Two, after broadcasting an eye-witness account of the attack on Nichols Field (it came to be known as Little Pearl Harbor) and the broadcast was heard on NBC), Bell was captured by the invading Japanese and was reported to have been publicly executed (after appropriate torture), but it was a clear case of mistaken identity, and Bell never did discover who had died in his stead. So, erroneously honored and posthumously decorated as the first American war correspondent to have been killed in World War Two, he actually spent three years: one month, and one day as a prisoner of war in Concentration Camp Number One, Santo Tomas University, Manila, Philippines, and was liberated when General MacArthur returned as promised, on February 3, 1945. Returning to duty as soon as health would permit, Bell was shot down during a bombing run over Amoy, China, on March 22, 1945. Again reported killed in action, Bell and six other survivors of the original crew of thirteen men, walked several hundred miles into China to an escape base, from which they were flown to Chungking, and safety. Returning to the United States by way of Africa and Europe, Bell arrived in time to cover the organizational meeting of the United Nations at San Francisco. He then returned to the Philippines, entered Japan with General MacArthur, remained in Asia until the Bikini Atomic Bomb tests. There he served as pool correspondent for the four American radio networks, then back to the United States and work as a radio commentator until the management's blue pencil began to delete too many of his commentaries.

Meanwhile, as Upton Close and Don Bell were learning about treason and other high crimes and conspiracies while reporting from overseas, New York and Washington; back home in West Virginia, a descendant of the Hatfields (of the Hatfield and McCoy feud and song fame) had been getting himself persecuted for trying to alert the Nation to the dangers of accepting Communists as one's best friends. The Federal Government had inadvertently created a Patriot's Honor Roll by charging a group of men and women with sedition because they spoke and wrote too vigorously against communism. George Deatherage was one of those defendants. Their trial lasted over seven months and then was called off without a verdict having been rendered—on the grounds of “mis-trial.”

And so it came to pass that these three—Upton Close, George Deatherage and Don Bell—by mutual agreement, were to move to the Palm Beach, Florida area, there to form a team of publishers of patriotic literature written from the Christian American point of view. So, from February 22, 1954 until today, CLOSER-UP and DON BELL REPORTS have been mailed together under a joint subscription plan.

The publications continued, but not the personnel:

Upton wanted to “write one more history book before I die.” Such a task could not be fitted into a life that consisted of constantly meeting deadlines and interpreting current, rather than historical, events. So Upton took his leave, moved to Mexico but never finished that last book—instead, he met that ultimate deadline which ends all mortal effort. In Upton's case, it was a train collision. Death was instant, unplanned, no suspicious circumstances existed.

George and Don carried on, but the load was heavy and George's health began to fail. In February 1958, George moved to northern Florida, shortly thereafter he succumbed to cancer.

With the double loss of Upton Close and George Deatherage, Don Bell was left with two publications and one big problem: what to do? It would have been impossible for one man to carry on, and when George left he predicted that, if Don tried to continue alone, he'd “fold” in less than six months. And he would have been right if the Lord had not intervened in a most marvelous way:

Almost immediately after our arrival in Florida, Upton introduced us to a “patriotic lady” who was interested in our work. We (we'll use the editorial “we” from here on to the end of this report); repeat, we had never set eyes on each other before. But, upon being introduced, this “patriotic lady” excused herself, began rummaging through a pile of old magazines and scrap books, and suddenly held up a copy of Life Magazine of April 13, 1942. In it was the illustrated story of the fall of Manila to the Japanese, and there was an action photo of Don Bell before a microphone interviewing General MacArthur. Under the picture was the caption: “Murdered by Japs, according to Manila reports, was radio commentator Don Bell, long anti-Japanese. Supposedly he had been tortured with fire and bayoneted.”

She was attracted by the man in the picture, “just knew” that the story of his death was untrue, and held onto the illustration in the hope of matching it up with the original sometime in the future. And, as predestined and as you've already guessed, this "patriotic lady" soon became Mrs. Don (Ginny) Bell. And she was willing to become the perfect partner as well as wife and helpmeet. So, with the departure of George, a "family corporation" was established. We made it a family affair and decided to continue the publication of both CLOSER-UP and DON BELL REPORTS.

And when we say "family affair," we mean exactly that. All research, newsgathering, writing and editing, Vartyping, platemaking, printing, folding, addressing, stamping, stuffing, mailing, record-keeping, collating and bookmaking; everything has been done by Don and Ginny, with what help Ginny's mother has been able to give (and how that help is appreciated), and with occasional emergency relief from daughter, son-in-law and three grandchildren (the fourth isn't old enough to stuff envelopes properly - yet).

Such an arrangement has obvious advantages where work of this type is involved. There is no danger of sabotage (at least not until after the letters get to the post office), there can be no union-inspired work stoppages or ADL-commanded contract cancellations, no organized interference as long as we are free agents. And so long as we can buy paper, ink and stamps, and so long as Don and Ginny remain in reasonably good health, we are in business and you will receive your newsletters according to schedule. But -

The time consumed and the pressure involved in publishing two well-written and sufficiently documented newsletters, cannot be described. Outside life becomes impossible. Answering correspondence is a luxury that can't be afforded. We can't take vacations, our own family members can come to see us only on "single weeks" or when their help is needed. Our one relaxation comes on Sunday when we all meet in church; but even then we must be prepared to preach and teach, and give help as the Spirit commands.

Let us give you an example which we are sure you will understand: Last October, because their national convention was being held in nearby Fort Lauderdale, we were privileged to be able to accept an invitation to attend and speak to the delegates of the Women for Constitutional Government, an organization which we admire and an organization which apparently admires us since we were named "Man of the Year" for 1973. But, when the time came to go to the convention, we had to go alone; Ginny was sick and exhausted and could not attend.

Once, while George was still here to cover, we got away for a few days to attend a Congress of Freedom convention. And once, a few years ago, we decided to miss a week of publishing and "take a real vacation." We got as far as Atlanta, got worried, turned the car around and came back home. The kind of pressure under which we exist does that to a person.

The real crisis began on July 25th, just over a month ago, when Ginny went to the dentist. Complications developed and, partly because of her run-down condition, her body rebelled and she was in a state of agony and torture for four weeks. At times we feared for her life, and it took some mighty strong praying and some wonderful work on the part of an old-time dental surgeon to get her on the road to recovery.

So the publishing team has been shattered. We have done our best to carry on alone, since Ginny couldn't even be with us physically. For the past month she has been under special care at our childrens' home, where she has received far better treatment than she would have received in any hospital; and she is recovering, but slowly. And she is too precious to sacrifice on an altar of deadlines. Never again will we ask her, expect her, or permit her, to take upon herself the burden of work which she has been carrying for the past sixteen years. As for ourself, Ginny said: "It's good to be dedicated to your work and do the best you can; but if you try to do more than is possible, and you fall dead in the midst of your machinery, who is going to replace you?"

So, this having been "a family affair" from the very beginning, we held a family conference and, after much prayer and discussion, we arrived at a conclusion:

Publishing two different newsletters is no longer possible. One of them must go, so that we can do a better job on the one and also have a little time left over for rest and relaxation, and for seeking a more balanced life. Closer-Up has been carried on as a kind of living memorial to Upton Close; he wanted us to continue the publication as long as possible. We believe we have done that. DON BELL REPORTS is, after all, more personal. It, says Ginny, carries the name of a living man, and it should continue to live.

Therefore, CLOSER-UP will no longer be published. The reprint of a previous issue which accompanies this letter is in the nature of an obituary, a memorial to an old friend whose time has been run. DON BELL REPORTS, on the other hand, will continue to be published on the regular weekly schedule. When circumstances require and time permits, we shall also issue special issues and bulletins. And the practice of sending two copies of each issue will be continued, on a weekly basis, except in the case of overseas subscriptions, where airmail costs prohibit this practice.

As of this writing, we have a few more chapters to write before our series on Regional Government can be concluded. Then the series will be offered in booklet form, and DON BELL REPORTS will return to its normal format, concentrating on the interpretation and analysis of current events and crises, always accenting the Christian American point of view.

As for subscription rates: we hoped that you wouldn't ask, yet we knew that the subject had to be dealt with. We realize that you'll be receiving one-third less original reading material (since DON BELL REPORTS weekly and CLOSER-UP was published every other week). But we believe that, given more time and less pressure, we'll be able to give you even more for your money, and we pray that a better product makes up the difference. Then, too, there is this matter of Nixonomic stagflation, which has hit us where it really hurts, and we see no hope of relief with the Rockefellers preparing to handle domestic as well as foreign affairs. Back in 1954 when we began joint publication of the two newsletters, the subscription rate for the two was $20 per year. At that time, stamps were three cents each, and other things such as paper and ink were comparably priced. Now those stamps are ten cents each and all other required materials have also more than tripled in price. If we had subscribed to that same ratio, our subscription rate would now be about $60 per year. But in all these years, we have raised our subscription rates just once: to $24 per year when stamps went up to eight cents each. Now the time has come when our troubles are economic as well as physical and temporal. So, let us maintain the subscription price at the current $24 per year, and we'll do our best to give you more for your money in one newsletter than you have been receiving previously in two newsletters.

But, we do have some recovering to do. The team is still at half strength, and it takes the two of us to do the job properly. Which is an overstatement, because it takes the two of us plus your prayers if the work is to be successful.

And it is our prayer that, under this new arrangement, we will be able to serve you better than ever before, in Truth and with total dedication to the calling which has been assigned us.

Ginny Bell

Don Bell

THE CONTRIVED EVOLUTION OF REGIONAL GOVERNMENT

- - - - - Part Eighteen - - - - -

ACHIEVING NATIONAL GOALS

In a Communist country such as Russia or Mainland China, or wherever an absolute dictatorship exists, the business of setting up national goals that are to be achieved at some future date, is a comparatively simple procedure. This does not mean that the goals are going to be attained, usually they are not. But putting the plan into operation is simple: The Big Bosses get together, decide upon what they want to come to pass, draw up a program that will supposedly bring about what is desired, publish the package and call it a New Five Year Plan - and the bureaucrats and the people will follow instructions - or else.

However, in a "participatory democracy," such as ours (that's what our former representative republic has become, they tell us), things are a bit more complicated. Here there must be more publicity, more fanfare, persuasion and education, more carrots and fewer clubs. Of course, things are the same up to a point: Here, too, the Big Bosses get together and make the decisions, have their underlings draw up the plans, etc. But then they launch a crusade, a propaganda drive in order to convince the people that they, the people, know what's going on, are in favor of what's going on, and demand that ~~the Big Bosses' plans be put into effect.~~

That's participatory democracy, as opposed to the hard-line socialism of Russia and China. You will already have understood, of course, that participatory democracy is just a synonym for Fabian Socialism. And here is a current and pertinent example of how it is used to promote Regional Governance in these United States:

Although 1313 and its allies and satellites have been preaching the gospel of Metro and Regionalism for nearly a quarter of a century the people are not yet convinced that it's a smart idea to toss out all the old forms and adopt this new federalism in their place. So the Big Bosses have decided that some "participatory democracy" is required. Now, whenever an "educational crusade" is needed, there is one army of propaganda propagators that has proved its worth to the Big Bosses time after time. We refer to the League of Women Voters. And the following, from The New York Times of September 1, 1974, needs no further explanation:

URBAN GOVERNMENT IS FOUND TO FALTER

Washington, Aug. 31 (AP)—A new study by the League of Women Voters Education Fund says that urban governments around the country are malfunctioning and "ripe for reform" but not quite ready to rush into improvements. The study, published under the title "Supercity, Hometown, U.S.A. Prospects for Two-Tier Government," concludes that current attacks on problems of urban government are piecemeal and hamstrung by antiquated political machinery devised when the country was chiefly rural.

Metropolitan areas are composed of too many governments, the study says, while none actually have the scope or authority to deal with problems adequately. The league's study finds that a majority of both citizens and government officials support the suggested solutions of two-tier government but are cautious. The two-tier government provides a broad central government, such as a metropolitan government covering an entire county, coupled with sub-governments covering neighborhoods or smaller communities within the larger governed unit.

The foregoing report about the work of the League of Women Voters in regard to Metro and Regionalism, is an excellent example of how pre-conceived plans handed down by the Big Bosses as "National Goals" are promoted at the local level. However, before proceeding, we should be a bit more explicit about those Big Bosses:

Back in the 1950s, when Regional Governance began to be installed, there was a "Goals For Americans" Committee which was composed primarily of Rockefeller underlings, CFR members and 1313 agents. Some of those proposed "National Goals" were adopted, some set aside for future action. Then in 1969, when Richard Nixon was still on the Rockefeller team, the President established within the White House a "National Goals Research Staff," directed by Leonard Garment and with Daniel P. Moynihan acting as Counsellor to the President and authoring the report, which was submitted on July 4, 1970. This particular National Goals report was titled "Toward Balanced Growth: Quantity with Quality," and was primarily an argument for the establishment of PPBS on a national scale, along with the need for "Regionalizing" the USA. A few brief quotes from the report should be sufficient:

"Social data...becomes indispensable to meeting the principle of accountability. There is no serious way for the Nation to know whether the (goals) are attained unless there is a steady, readily accessible, and understandable flow of information as to the actual results, which is to say the outputs, of government programs. In this respect, one of the most important legislative measures in American history was the Budget and Accounting Act of June 10, 1921, which established the Bureau of the Budget and the General Accounting Office (italics added)."

"...The art of national goal setting, then, is to be realistic about what can be attained, and to use social data in such a way as to enable both the expert and lay publics to understand that progress toward any seriously difficult goal is going to take place by increments..."

"New tools and techniques have been developed to help make the complex comprehensible: for example, computerized information systems...."

"Last year, the National Governors' Conference (1313-Ed.) resolved to petition the Congress to... provide a sense of direction in Federal planning and in Federal programs which would seek to alleviate the growing national frustration that is occurring in overpopulated areas and in areas which are now losing population. Similarly, the National League of Cities (also 1313-Ed.), called for a specific policy for the settlement of people throughout the nation to balance the concentration of population among and within metropolitan and non-metropolitan areas while providing social and economic opportunities for all persons."

More recently: Nelson Rockefeller quit his post as Governor of New York, to create a "National Commission on the Future of America in its Third Century." In other words, another National Goals Commission!

Here are startling coincidences: Rockefeller announced the creation of his new Goals Commission from the White House, Jerry Ford was named a member of the new Rockefeller Commission, shortly thereafter Ford was appointed (not elected) Vice President of the United States, and then after a brief delay Nelson Rockefeller was appointed (not elected) Vice President of the United States as his friend Jerry succeeded to the Presidency (by appointment).

So much for the nonce about the way the Big Bosses operate. Now let us shift our attention to the local arena, and here we find the Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations (ACIR) laying down the rules for the development of that program that is being promoted and popularized by the League of Women Voters.

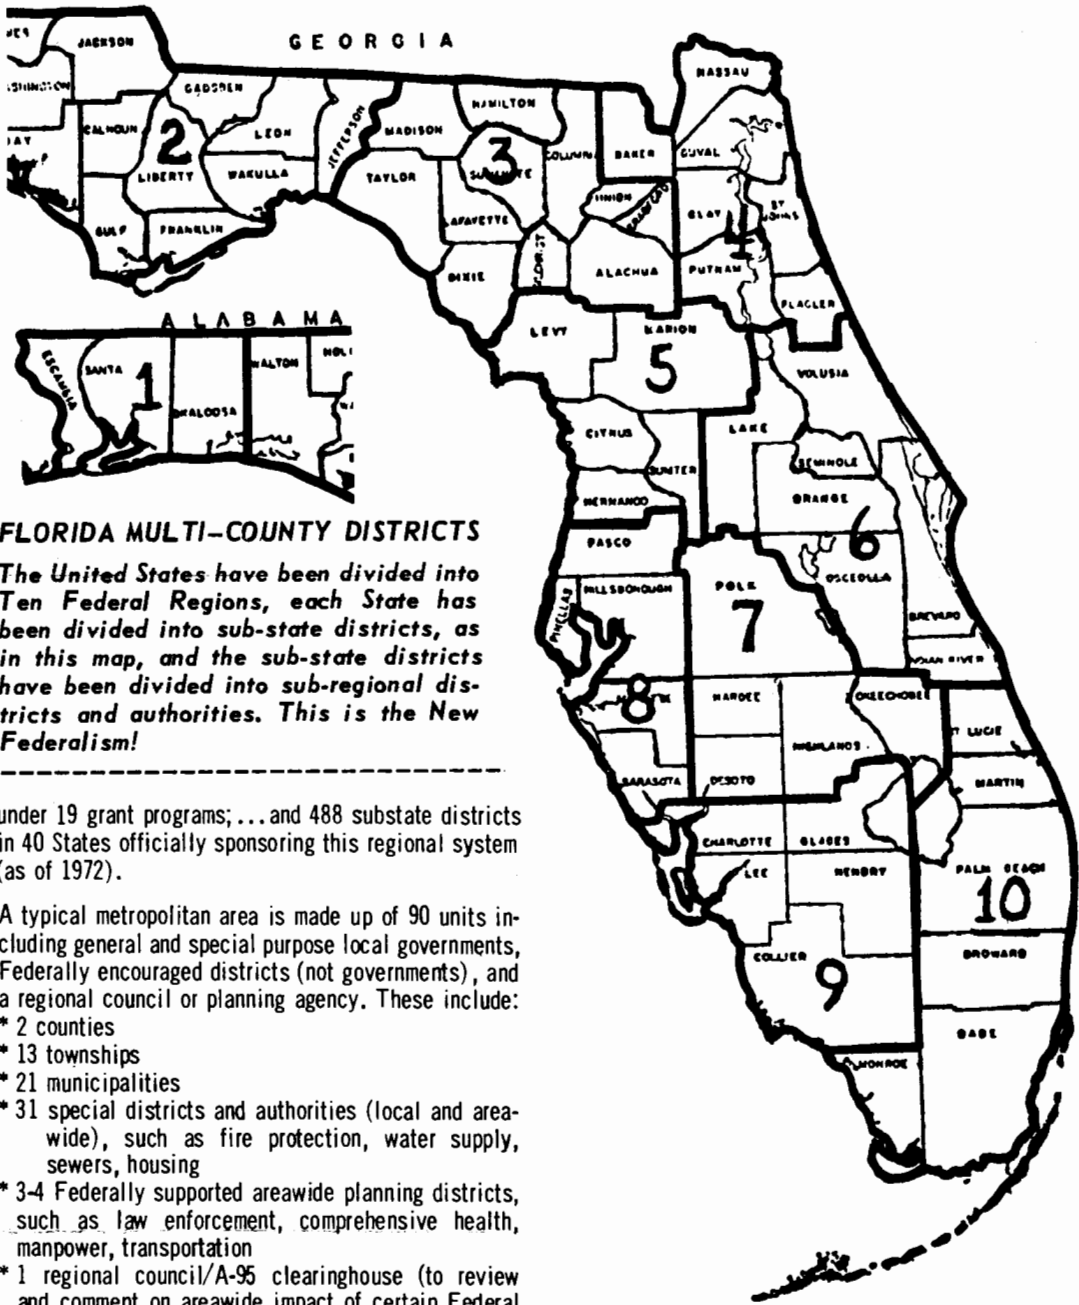

We have a copy of a rather lengthy directive issued about a year ago by ACIR. So you'll know exactly what ACIR has in mind for your area, we shall quote at length from that directive:

SUBSTATE REGIONALISM: A STAFF ANALYSIS

The Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations adopted five recommendations at its June 22-23 meeting in San Francisco which endorse a concerted, Federal-State-local strategy for bringing greater order, accountability, and sense of direction to more than 250 metropolitan regions and practically all rural areas.

A comprehensive 18-month Commission study of substate regions shows that this Nation faces a major problem regarding proliferating districts in urban and rural areas—especially at that new but active level above cities and counties but below the States—the substate regional level. Most of these districting developments have emerged over the past decade because of combined Federal-State-local efforts to treat areawide problems in an areawide context. What has been missing in all but a handful of cases, however, is a regional unit with the capacity to link areawide planning with program implementation, to coordinate the diverse activities of separate districts having single-function planning and operation responsibilities — in short, to serve as an effective regional decision-maker.

In these substate areas, the country now confronts the dilemma of sorting out the roles, responsibilities and relationships between and among towns, cities and counties; over 600 regional councils of government dominated by city and county spokesmen; nearly 25,000 special districts and authorities...approximately 1,800 Federally encouraged regional districts

FLORIDA MULTI-COUNTY DISTRICTS

The United States have been divided into Ten Federal Regions, each State has been divided into sub-state districts, as in this map, and the sub-state districts have been divided into sub-regional districts and authorities. This is the New Federalism!

under 19 grant programs; ... and 488 substate districts in 40 States officially sponsoring this regional system (as of 1972).

A typical metropolitan area is made up of 90 units including general and special purpose local governments, Federally encouraged districts (not governments), and a regional council or planning agency. These include:

- * 2 counties
- * 13 townships
- * 21 municipalities
- * 31 special districts and authorities (local and areawide), such as fire protection, water supply, sewers, housing
- * 3-4 Federally supported areawide planning districts, such as law enforcement, comprehensive health, manpower, transportation
- * 1 regional council/A-95 clearinghouse (to review and comment on areawide impact of certain Federal grant applications)

To coordinate these diverse bodies and develop an effective decision-making mechanism at the substate level, the Commission adopted a strategy building on areawide units—councils of government and regional planning commissions—that now exist in all metropolitan areas and over 300 non-metropolitan areas as well as on substate districting systems already instituted by 44 States. This strategy emerges from the five recommendations adopted by ACIR in San Francisco. Commission staff will now develop draft legislation to help individual States and the Federal government implement the plan. The following analysis describes the regional bodies that would result from adoption of the Commission's strategy.

Basically, ACIR envisions a multi-jurisdictional organization composed mostly of local general government officials, with some State representatives. It would have policy control over all areawide planning, programming and policy development programs in its region along with comparable authority over the actions of multi-jurisdictional special districts. This body also would have the capacity to resolve conflicts between certain State agency and local governmental actions having an areawide impact on the one hand, and officially adopted regional plans and policies, on the other....

The council would:

- * adopt and publicize regional policies and plans

- along with a program for their implementation;
- * provide planning and programming inputs into the State's planning and budgeting process;
- * serve as the region's A-95 review agency;
- * assume the responsibility for implementing all Federally encouraged areawide planning, programming, coordinating, districting, or even servicing programs as well as for similar State undertakings.
- * act as the basic policy board for multi-jurisdictional special districts;
- * promote mutual problem-solving among counties, cities, and towns, and provide such services as these units may singly or jointly request;
- * resolve differences between certain State agency and local government programs and projects that have spillover effects on policies adopted by the council; and
- * in certain instances, assume direct operating responsibilities under such terms as may be set down in the State authorizing legislation, provided half the local member units representing 60 percent of the region's population concur.

This reformed regional council would be a comprehensive and functional planning, coordinating, programming, servicing and implementing body.

A mix of Federal-State-local actions are recommended to provide the council with the arsenal of powers needed to help guide substate regional development.

The proposed council would become the preferred implementing instrumentality for Federally encouraged districting programs under State legislation establishing a comprehensive substate districting system and promulgation of a new OMB directive covering all Federally assisted programs having a regional thrust....

The council would be assigned special review authority over State agency actions having a regional impact....

In addition, the council would have its officially adopted regional policies or plans recognized as guides for pertinent local governmental programming, planning and implementation activities, pursuant to proposed action by the governing bodies of such jurisdictions.

With these powers conferred by Federal-State-local actions, the revitalized regional council could speak with authority....

ACIR's strategy for reforming regional councils is not an idealized dream of regionalism, but is rooted in the real world of substate development.

- * Regional councils with A-95 review and comment authority already exist in 212 metropolitan and 238 non-metropolitan areas.
- * Two-thirds of the 488 substate districts established in 40 States now are authorized, and action is underway in four additional States.
- * The boundaries of eight of the most significant of the Federally encouraged districting programs coincide (or are in harmony) with those of the State-established substate districts in about 50 percent of the cases. The Federal government has relied on substate districting organization in more than one-third of the possible cases in these eight program areas.

- * Approximately half of the regional councils already are the preferred unit for four-to-nine of the Federally encouraged areawide districting programs operating in their respective regions.
- * Seven States have given review and approval authority to some or all of their regional councils over certain State projects.
- * Four-fifths of the 3800 city and county officials surveyed by ACIR agreed that regional councils should perform the duties of an "umbrella" agency, especially with regard to the activities of independent special districts.
- * The Metropolitan Regional Council in Minnesota's Twin Cities area and the Atlanta Regional Council along with at least 5-10 percent of the other existing councils already possess many or most of the proposed powers and functions assigned to the reformed regional councils under the Commission recommendation.

To conclude, the Commission's proposed reforms for regional councils rely heavily on the building blocks already in place at the substate level. But they go well beyond the status quo in their systematic effort to provide an effective umbrella unit that can cope with the growing demand for better management, coordination, implementation—in short, decision-making—in those programs and institutions that are areawide in nature. (End of ACIR Staff Analysis)

ACIR is confident that Regionalism is here to stay, as the foregoing analysis asserts. Regionalism, more accurately identified as a corporate state, is promoted at municipal, county, State and Federal levels of government, aided and abetted by elected officials. Government leaders are no longer responsive to the will of the people; they have become mere implementing agents for programs promulgated by and for the dictating oligarchy of which the Rockefeller dynasty is a principal part, now having captured the White House itself!

Not only is Regionalism the new American form of government; it is the new form of World Government, as we shall see in our next letter in this series.

(To be continued)

DON BELL REPORTS is a weekly Newsletter accenting the Christian American point of view. Two copies of each issue are sent to each subscriber. Extra copies: 10¢ each. Complete service: $24 per year. Please address all correspondence and orders to:
 DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223
 Palm Beach, Florida 33480

THE CONTRIVED EVOLUTION OF REGIONAL GOVERNMENT

----- Part Nineteen -----

REGIONALISM – THE NEW WORLD ORDER

If you were asked to name some of the many forms of government that exist throughout the world today, you would probably name republics and democracies, kingdoms and monarchies, and the various forms of totalitarian government that have cropped up since socialism became a fashionable economic system. But whenever a person thinks of a government, he is thinking of some kind of a political system.

Regional Governance is different in this respect: It is not a political system per se. It is a corporate management system, a social control system, an accountability system, a system that seeks to manage and direct all human development. But these are not the functions of a political system.

We need to get back to first principles and understand that political systems, whatever their form and however good or bad they may be considered to be, properly concern themselves with three distinct yet related areas of civic organization: with the making of laws, with the administration of those laws, and with the maintenance of those laws through a system of justice which repairs broken laws by punishing those who broke them.

Law, then, is the principle concern of any political system; it is out of a proper regard for the revealed law of God that there must develop a proper regard for life, liberty and property. But Regional Governance has no regard for law as the cardinal principle of social organization. For law it substitutes regulation, and for justice it substitutes the Marxian concepts that the end justifies the means and that the greatest good is the "good society," as that utopian ideal is extrapolated by the Regionalists.

Webster's Third Unabridged Dictionary gives an excellent definition of what makes up a political system in its ethical and purest sense. "Politics," says the dictionary, "is primarily concerned with the conscious definite purpose of society to establish authority (government) and to determine its function (law); it does not go back to the origins of social institutions (sociology) nor to the causes of human actions (psychology) nor does it deal directly with social phenomena connected with materials (economics) nor with individual human beings as causative factors (history)..."

The point is important: political systems should not concern themselves with sociology, psychology, economics, or even history; their concern is with Law (and happy is the Nation whose Law is the Lord's).

In diametric opposition to this, Regional Governance does not concern itself with law as such. Indeed, under the concepts of Regionalism, laws upholding representative government are negated and appointed officials replace elected officials (even in the case of Presidents and Vice Presidents) and equal justice for all is ignored in the treatment of those guilty of political crimes. But Regionalism does concern itself greatly with sociology (in its attempts to create a new kind of world society); with psychology (in its attempts to develop a new kind of human who will fit properly into this new kind of society); with economics (in its determination to control land use, natural and human resources, production and distribution, etc.); and with history (in its attempts to predestinate and direct the evolution of man and the world which man inhabits).

In short, Regional Governance is not a political system; it is a corporate management system designed for the control of the world and all that's in it, on it, over it or under it!

If Regionalism is a management system for the whole world, then one would not expect this concept to be confined to the United States' Regionalism would be rearing its authoritarian head in other Nations of the world. And this is exactly what is happening.

As an example, the following press release came from the French Embassy, 972 Fifth Avenue, New York 21, New York; and we quote verbatim:

REGIONAL REFORM IN FRANCE

It has taken two hundred years for France to move from the system of provinces set up under the ancien regime to today's 'regions.' The original idea for regionalization was proposed as far back as 1890, but it was not until 1944 that certain reforms were undertaken to reorganize regional administration and establish a new administrative hierarchy. From that time on France has been engaged in adapting regional administration to the exigencies of the modern state.

The chronological development of regionalization is shown below:

- * 1955: interdepartmental zones were designated for the drafting and execution of economic development programs at the interdepartmental level;
- * 1959: a law was passed in January of that year providing for "interdepartmental conferences" prefects to coordinate their activities, and gradual coordination of the various administrative districts;
- * 1960: 21 groupings of departments, known as Districts for Regional Action, were set up to handle economic planning at the regional level.

Subsequent major stages in regional reform were:

- * 1964: the appointment of regional prefects and the founding of the Regional Economic Development Commission (CODER), a 40 to 50-member consultative body. It is composed of departmental delegates, mayors, representatives of various professions and labor unions, and qualified persons designated by the Premier (CODER corresponds to our ACIR-Ed.);
- * 1969: rejection by a nationwide referendum of President de Gaulle's proposal to set up regions with autonomous powers and considerable financial resources;
- * 1972: Parliament votes the law on regional reforms.

The major steps taken toward decentralization in 1964 and again in 1970 were dictated by the need for an efficient economic administration; in other words, the level at which "flexible, liberal and adaptable" decisions in administrative matters are made passed from the national ministries to the regional administrations.

Among the new (regional) institutions are:

- * Regional Councils composed of local deputies, senators and delegates from towns and departments. The number of seats on these councils is proportional to the number of inhabitants in each region.

- * Economic and Social Committees composed primarily of representatives of labor unions and management.

Both groups may be consulted on matters concerning regional development and land-use planning, particularly in respect to the formulation and implementation of the economic Plans. The two bodies also participate in determining the use of public funds for investments in projects of regional or departmental interest...

...The future of the regions will depend to a large extent on the way in which the existing legislative framework will be utilized and expanded. Additional resources will eventually be channeled into the regions either in the form of allocations from the state or from local communities. The Regional Councils and the Regional Economic and Social Councils do in fact serve to promote the policy of regional development. In view of their composition and representative character, regional bodies like these bring imagination and creative talent to regional activities just as much as they assist in deciding and implementing regional development policy.

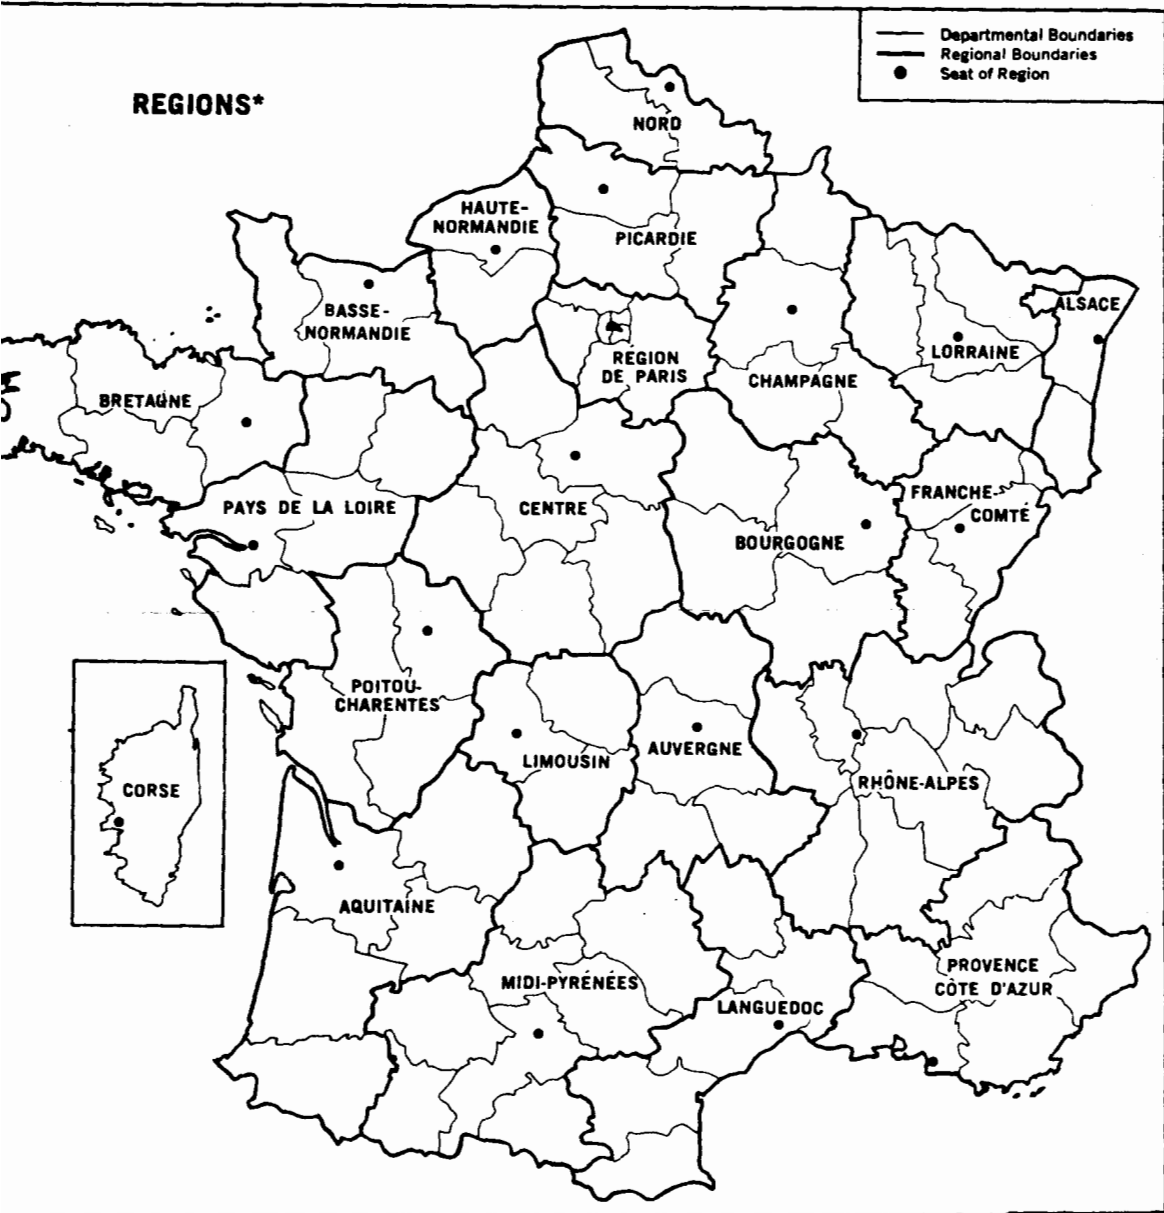

(End of press release from the French Embassy)

The accompanying "administrative map of France" carries this descriptive caption:

"France has traditionally been divided into Departments, each headed by a Prefect representing the Government. In July 1964, new Departments were created in the Paris Region, raising the total number of Metropolitan Departments from 91 to 95. All these Departments have been regrouped for economic and administrative purposes into 22 Regions, each headed by a Regional Prefect who coordinates activities in the Departments composing his Region."

We have quoted at length from this French Regionalism report to illustrate how, though the French Republic and the United States Republic are basically different in composition and construction, the concept of Regionalism follows exactly the same blueprint in both France and the United States!

There are 51 million Frenchmen in an area only about one-eighteenth the size of the United States. Because of this population density, France has been divided into 22 Regions, whereas the United States has been divided into only ten Federal Regions. Italy, also densely populated, has been split into twenty-odd Regions. On the other hand, that huge land mass known as the USSR has also been Regionalized, and the fifteen "Republics" which make up the Soviet Union have been regrouped into only seven regions, to be governed by seven Regional Councils (taking their orders from Moscow, of course).

This same general trend of delineating Regional boundaries according to population density is especially apparent in Canada. Here the "Metro" pattern has been followed and, rather than Regions as in USA, France, Italy, USSR, etc., Canada has concentrated on "reorganizing government in metropolitan areas."

An ACIR report of some 134 pages on the subject of "Canadian Regional Experience" begins with the statement that "Americans interested in local government reform have remarked enviously about Canadian success in reorganizing government in metropolitan areas." It seems that this success is partly due to the fact that "most of Canada is uninhabited" and "in area, Canada is larger than the U.S. and second only to the USSR." More important, however, is the fact that Canada's governmental structure is different from that of the United States:

"In the Canadian version of federalism, the provincial legislatures have limited, explicit powers, while Parliament has general and residual powers. This reversal of the United States constitutional formula has been the subject of continual debate.... Our Constitution does not mention substate governments, but the British North American Act of 1867, Canada's Constitution... gives the provinces complete authority over municipal institutions... As Donald Tansley expressed it, in Canada, 'Local government... is whatever the provincial government says it is'."

In other words, because of the difference in Constitutional authority, it has been much easier to install Metros and Regions in Canada than in the United States.

In Canada, as in all other countries of the world that are not patterned after the United States Constitutional system, political power extends from the top downward to the local level; whereas in the United States—before Regionalism began—the political power began at the local, or grass roots, level and extended upward to State Capitals and then to the Federal Capitol in Washington. In order to make the United States "more like Canada and the other countries of the world," the United States Constitution has been amended, misinterpreted and ignored, while State Constitutions have been entirely rewritten, and local governments have been swallowed up by Federal Regions, Substate Regions, and Metros.

ACIR makes the point that Regionalism has been quite successful in Canada, although it has been installed only in the more populous areas such as Montreal, Ottawa, Quebec, Toronto, Vancouver and Winnipeg.

In ACIR's summary of the "Canadian Regional Experience," written by Guthrie S. Birkhead of Syracuse University, Syracuse, New York, we are informed that "Canada no doubt is on the threshold of a period when a reordering of policies and priorities among the levels of government may take place. A few critics are asking the federal government to establish direct relations with major municipalities, and there is even a suggestion that Toronto and Montreal ought to be made separate provinces. The parallel with the United States in the sixties is again salient. If we may judge from the Canadian record of local reorganization since World War II, however, more firm action to strengthen local governments may be at hand. The case studies in this volume are, therefore, timely indeed."

If ACIR thinks that Canadian Regionalism has developed better than United States Regionalism, but is still not good enough; it is regrettable that ACIR has not published (yet, at least) a case study of the "Russian Regionalism Experience." For the way in which Regionalism can be developed in a totalitarian nation should please ACIR immensely.

You see, Regional Governance is not necessarily the management system that has been selected and that will be installed as the World Authority simply because the Western Nations such as Canada, France, Italy, et al, have followed the United States in the Regionalization of their countries. This could be but an Atlantic Alliance project, not a Regionalization of the whole world.

But when the USSR also adopts the concept of Regionalism so that Regionalism is made to apply to totalitarian as well as so-called democratic political systems, then we can assert with evidence to back up the statement, that Regionalism is the Corporate Management System that has been selected for the Rulership of the World!

Soviet Party leader Leonid I. Brezhnev, in his keynote speech marking the 50th anniversary of the Russian Revolution, spoke of the changes that were being planned. Then, the April 1973 issue of the Soviet Government's planning journal, Planned Economy, made the establishment of seven Regional Councils official. The overall policies of the USSR, declared the journal, now would be based on the new Regional Planning Units.

Of course, the concept of Regionalism includes the use of a Planning, Programming, Budgeting System (which is little more than a technological modernization of a Soviet Five-Year Plan); and computers and data banks are essential to Regional Governance. In this latter requirement, IBM and other computer manufacturers have been happy to help the Communists. Recently Control Data Corporation announced a $500-million deal with the Soviets for the development of an advanced computer and communications network. So, with Soviet Secret Police techniques, concentration camp knowhow, brainwashing methods, torture chamber knowledge plus American technological superiority in accountability systems and computerized memory banks, the USSR soon should be able to lead the world in corporate management, even as it is now said to lead the world in nuclear fire-power.

(to be continued)

DON BELL REPORTS is a weekly Newsletter accenting the Christian American point of view. Two copies of each issue are sent to each subscriber. Extra copies: 10¢ each. Complete service: $24 per year. Please address all orders and correspondence to:
DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

THE CONTRIVED EVOLUTION OF REGIONAL GOVERNMENT

- - - - - Part Twenty-One - - - - -

THE WRAP-UP

Regionalism is a control system designed to provide corporate management of all production, development, and use of all the resources, both natural and human, of all the world. It is a plan to secure control over all things and all persons at every social and governmental level, from the local community to the entire world. It is a highly developed form of corporate socialism.

Regionalist Richard C. Hartman, executive director of the National Association of Regional Councils, is in partial agreement with our statement. He wrote:

"To demonstrate the breadth and lack of clarity of the term regionalism ('region'), one can check a dictionary and find definitions such as:

- * Any large part of the earth's surface.
- * A place, space, area.
- * Sphere, domain.
- * A division of the earth according to plant or animal life.

"Regionalism is based on a geographic and community denominator. How you define region is based on the need or objective to be achieved... Historically, the national government has been the initiator and moving force for regional programs and agencies. The earliest concrete federal interest was in terms of multi-state regionalism to deal with specific concerns such as water resources or economic development. The noteworthy products of this interest are: creation in 1913 of the twelve-region Federal Reserve System; establishment in 1933 of the Tennessee Valley Authority...; cooperation with states to create... water resource compact agencies (22 regions—Ed.)... and, finally, creation in 1965 of the Appalachian Regional Commission and, under Title V of the Public Works and Economic Development Act, five economic development commissions. In the last two years Congress has considered additional proposals to establish more multi-state commissions for land use and transportation. There is also a pending proposal to expand the number of economic development commissions from five to ten to encompass the entire United States....

"In 1968, by executive order, President Nixon did take a significant step in multi-state regionalism. He established ten geographically defined federal regions...."

All of the foregoing is quoted from The Regionalist Papers, a research project by Metropolitan Fund, Inc., published in April 1974 and consisting of twelve "Regionalist Papers" which are compared quite brazenly with the "Federalist Papers" written by Madison, Hamilton and Jay to explain the United States Constitution and the new form of government which it provided. These "Regionalist Papers" are similarly written to explain the new form of governance which is to replace the old federal form—if the Regionalists continue to have their way.

This Metropolitan Fund is a nonprofit research corporation, financed by Ford and other foundations, and by "contributions from business, industry, and labor organizations." These "Regionalist Papers," 284 pages in all, deal with Regionalism within the United States, but a similar set of propaganda papers might well deal with the progress of Regionalism on a world-wide scale.

Students of the World Government Movement will recognize the fact that one of the chief arguments used by One Worlders was the success which our Founding Fathers had in taking thirteen sovereign and independent States and welding them into one Federal Union. One Worlders argued that, if such a plan was successful with the United States, then why couldn't the plan be extended to form a United States of the World?

Regionalists have a more practical idea: Why not create, first, a series of Regional Governments, and then, when circumstances permit, bind them all together under one World Authority (as Orwell had foreseen)? This was the purpose behind the establishment—under the authority of the United Nations Organization—of a series of Regional Organizations: NATO, SEATO, CENTO, the USSR's Warsaw Pact Satellites, etc.

It was understood by the Regionalists that a Regionalist World Authority could not be established while Iron Curtains and Bamboo Curtains and other divisive ideologies cut the world into separate parts.

This, we believe, was the chief purpose of Henry Kissinger's secret negotiations with Communist leaders in Moscow and Peking: In the interests of production, development, and use of the world's resources, both natural and human, the time had come when all the Regional Organizations of the world were to be brought together under one World Authority.

Meanwhile, Regionalism was progressing at National levels very satisfactorily. As we illustrated (with maps) in previous letters in this series, France and Italy had "Regionalized," behind the Iron Curtain the USSR had been Regionalized. And in that so-called "Third World" which consists of States not directly controlled by East or West Authoritarians, the United Nations was taking charge of Regionalization:

From the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations, we have a report on "Planning for Economic Development in Czechoslovakia and Hungary." An interesting observation: After describing a series of government agencies very similar to our own OMB, Domestic Council, Central Bank (FRS), Regional Councils, and an overall control system similar to PPBS, the UN report states:

"All of these agencies are specialized Government organs for the management of certain sectors of the economy, though they usually do not directly manage any enterprise or economic establishment. The enterprises and other economic organizations are managed by the Government (assisted by the above-named agencies) either through branch ministries or through regional agencies of the state power. . . ."

Here is an example of Regionalistic double-talk: The regional agencies don't manage or control, the Government manages and controls through the regional agencies!

But, let's get back to Regionalism in the United States.

At the very beginning of this series of letters, we wrote about the three theories of governance which have developed in the United States:

1) The Compact Theory.

2) The Continental Theory.

3) The International, or World Theory.

We explained that the Compact Theory originated with the Mayflower Compact and implied true home rule, or local rule; that the Continental Theory looked toward a strong central government in Washington, with a corresponding diminution of State and local political power; and the International Theory implied World Government.

We find an echo of what we wrote at that time being used as an argument for Regionalism in the Foreword to these Regionalist Papers from which we have quoted previously. Instead of Compact Theory this author writes of "localists" and instead of the Continental Theory, he refers to "centralists." And he very carefully avoids any mention of the Internationalist Theory. However, just as the One Worlders point to the founding of the United States as an argument for World Government; just so does this author (Kent Methewson, president of the Metropolitan Fund) pervert the meaning of home rule, or localism, and use it as an argument for Regionalism. We quote:

I believe that The Regionalist Papers represents a clear and compelling call for strong and effective local government... albeit on a regional scale... a call for united strength in a metropolitan context... a strength that has been dissipated through fractionation and debilitating competition among a gaggle of weak and ineffective political subdivisions.

Though it may be an imprecise analogy, I must liken the existence of our metropolitan regions today under voluntary councils of governments (in which this writer shares responsibility for creation of the COG institution) to the "disunited states" of America under the Articles of Confederation in the late 1770's and 1780's. And as others have said, the prospect for the future of our metropolitan regions is as bleak now in the absence of unity as was the future of our country in those critical times that spurred Madison, Hamilton, and Jay to write the Federalist Papers.

Our metropolitan areas now are undergoing that same struggle between the ideologies of the "localists" and the "centralists" as existed in 1787 at the national level. We are reminded that Hamilton found himself outnumbered two to one by the "localist" delegates when he and his followers arrived at the New York convention to ratify the new "centralist" constitution of the United States. The odds, actors, and arguments seem much the same today in the struggle to achieve an institutional arrangement sufficient to unite our metropolitan regions.

As pointed out by the authors of the Federalist Papers, the "excess of democracy" is as much to be feared as over-centralization. The balance between the two will be as difficult to chart in our metropolitan regions as our founding fathers found it to be in institutionalizing our nation. In Fairfield's introduction to his edition of the Federalist Papers, he speaks to this point when he describes the concerns of the Federalists in this way: "Can a republic, sometimes successful in small states, survive in a large geographical area—or will the forces of localism triumph where men regard themselves as citizens of Massachusetts, Maryland, or Georgia, rather than the United States?" Let us today similarly ask: "...or will the forces of localism triumph where men regard themselves as citizens of Detroit, Warren, and Pontiac rather than Southeast Michigan?"...

In 1974 an effort should be underway—this time at the regional level—to create and gain acceptance of an institution to meet a challenge of similar magnitude to that faced by our forefathers.... Nearly two hundred years ago, authors of the Federalist Papers promised no miracle from a federated union but saw no alternative save to try. Today, enforced regional coordination of governmental services would provide no panacea for our urban condition, but because logic and experience tells us that benefit can be expected, it would seem that the time has come to move the discussion from whether regionalism should be attempted, to consideration of the best arrangement for the New City. Accordingly, the Regionalist Papers are presented for that purpose.
(end of quotation)

We have quoted extensively from The Federalist Papers because it seemed important to present evidence of the passionate intensity with which these professional Regionalists pursue their pet version of the utopian mirage. They present their cause as being just as critical as that of Madison, Hamilton and Jay when they urged the adoption of the U.S. Constitution. Just as the Founding Fathers urged adoption of the Constitution in order to install the original federalism which has distinguished our form of government, these Regionalists urge the adoption of Regionalism in order to install the new federalism. And, just as the Constitution saved the Union in 1787, Regionalism is supposed to save the Union and create a World Union in 1894 or thereabouts.

REGIONAL FLAG

These Regionalists are so serious and so dedicated that they have drawn up a new flag which is to replace Old Glory if they have their way. The Regional Flag shown here was reproduced in the Smithsonian, a monthly magazine published by the Smithsonian Associates, 900 Jefferson Drive, Washington, D.C. 29560.

"Smithsonian asked for a new design from Whitney Smith of the Flag Research Center in Winchester, Massachusetts," says the 3-page, unsigned article which appears in the December 1973 issue of the magazine. In an article exposing the Smithsonian action, Jo Hindman commented: "It may be that the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, S. Dillon Ripley, might supply the answer to the question, who, or what tax-supported fund paid the vexilologist's fee for designing the unauthorized flag to replace the Flag of the United States of America?"

The seriousness, and the progress, of the Regionalists in achieving their aims, can be illustrated in two other ways:

1) A chief objective of the concept of Regional Governance is to replace elected officials with appointed administrators. As this is being written, the President of the United States is an appointed administrator, and the Vice President designate is to be an appointed administrator—the latter being, in addition, a principal proponent and financier of Regional Governance.

2) In this series of letters, we have concentrated attention upon the Ten Standard Federal Regions which were established by executive order and which are governed by appointed regional councilmen located in the Ten Regional Capitals. We have also referred to other federal regions, such as the 22 regions established through federally controlled interstate river bed compacts, the twelve Federal Reserve System regions, etc. But we merely scratched the surface in this respect. The official U.S. Government Organization Manual contains some 80 different regional maps! While the Ten Region Map is the most important, and is called the map of the "Standard Federal Regions," other regional maps include environmental geology regions, mineral resources regions, oil and gas operations regions, food and nutrition service regions, the 13 Federal Crop Insurance Corporation Regions, Federal Communications Commission Regions, Federal Power Commission Regions, Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation Regions, Federal Trade Commission Regions, etc., etc.

These are multi-State Regions; some of them disregard State boundaries; all are Federal Agency Administration Regions ruled over by appointed administrators often in total disregard of all State and local government officials, or even all Federal elected officials. These regions have nothing to do with Congress once they are established; their orders come from the eleven Cabinet rank Departments, or from the sixteen chief agencies within the Executive Office of the President (himself an appointee), or from one or more of the thirty-four independent offices and establishments of the Executive Branch of the Federal Government.

Key control center of this Regional Dictatorship is the Office of Management and Budget. It does manage the whole operation and it does approve the budget of every one of the regional and sub-regional operations. It also commands the computers and keeps the keys to the data banks.

However, anyone wanting to oppose this governmental behemoth should begin at the local level; for here is where real political power can best be applied by the individual citizen. And the Regionalist Conspiracy begins as an attack against home rule in the name of home rule!

In August 1974, in his brilliant minority report to the El Dorado County (California) Modernization Commission's Regionalization scheme, Supervisor William V.D. Johnson made the following important observations:

"In the beginning of American government, home rule meant exactly that: Local rule without interference from either State or National Government. The County Government was the unit which protected property, built roads and handled trials and execution of criminals. Slowly, State governments began creeping in and taking over where they had neither right nor duty....

"This governmental reform (that is, Regionalism—Ed.) is a long-term project because it includes attitude adjustment of our young people in their education, with de-emphasis of the Constitution, patriotism and nationalism, and emphasis on the false premise of antiquated constitutions, laws, etc., plus attitude adjustment of adults through the news media and television, as well as financial manipulation by the Federal Government; all of this done to induce the citizens to think this is what they want....

"... a report published by the Committee for Economic Development in 1966 contained the following recommendations:

- 1) The number of local governments in the United States about 80,000, should be reduced by at least 80 percent.
- 2) The number of overlapping layers of government in States should be severely curtailed.
- 3) Popular election should be confined to members of the policy-making body....
- 4) Each local unit should have a single chief executive, preferably appointed, with all administrative agencies and personnel fully responsible to him; election of department heads should be halted....
- 8) The 50 State Constitutions should be revamped....

"In recent years the Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations (ACIR) has been promoting these same ideas...."

And so have all the agents and agencies of 1313, the Fabians in our midst, the gullible officials who ought to know better or ought never to have been elected, and the culpable politicoes who do know better but find that revenue sharing, federal grants and fine titles are commendable ways of enlarging their bank accounts or exalting their egos.

It was Franklin Delano Roosevelt, an early advocate of Regionalism, who made the statement: "We have to get over the notion that the purpose of reorganization is economy.... The reason for reorganization is management!"

And total management is the purpose behind Regional Government; management of you and yours, of the community, the State, the Nation, and eventually the World.

But effective opposition must begin at the personal, and the local level. It is our hope that this series of letters will help you in educating friends, voters, and officials.

(end of series)

This series of 21 letters on "The Contrived Evolution of Regional Government" in booklet form, stapled and with appropriate cover:
Single Copies $2.00 each
10 or more Copies $1.50 each
25 or more Copies $1.00 each

Please address all orders to:
DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

Don Bell Reports

Year Twenty-One Number Thirty-Nine October 4, 1974

BIRTH OF THE NEW IMPERIALISM?

ECONOMIC SYNTHETICS

"It was, in a way," suggested Time, "an extended town meeting of the nation on its economic ills. . . . After almost a month of separate meetings with economists, businessmen, labor leaders, farmers, financiers, and other groups, the President and his top economic aides sat down last week with some 800 leaders of those interests, as well as key Senators and Congressmen, for a mammoth two-day debate on what to do about the U.S. economy. . . . there emerged an overwhelming economic consensus that the battle against roaring inflation will be long and painful, and during its course the nation will suffer a protracted period of stagnant production and rising unemployment that by any name will amount to a recession. . . ."

"Now that the experiment in economic summitry is ended and the returns are in," U.S. News & World Report summarized, "President Ford is taking steps to brighten the business outlook."

How? By balancing the budget? No. By the effective step of cutting out all deficit spending? No. By abolishing the fiat money system? No. By spending more money and expanding federal services to the people (the real cause of inflation)? Yes! Says U.S.N. & W.R.: "More funds are going to be channeled into the hard-pressed housing industry. Workers who suffer from long periods of unemployment are likely to get better benefits. . . . Utilities will get some help in raising the capital they need for new power plants and other facilities. . . . Tax cuts that would help low-income people make ends meet. . . . More public-service jobs financed by federal grants. . . . Unemployment benefits that would continue for longer periods and cover a somewhat larger proportion of the wages previously earned. . . ."

As the economic summit synthesized Alan Greenspan, new Chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers, came forth with that trite and irritating suggestion that there be more "patience on the part of consumers, unions, businesses." Treasury Secretary Simon agreed, adding that "The United States is facing a basic shift away from an economy which promotes consumption to one which encourages savings and investment."

Yes, it's the same old chorus and we've all heard that simple little tune before, and it's driving us crazy (to paraphrase the words of a popular song of little merit). The truth of the matter is that Gerald Ford has adopted the bread and circuses routine made infamous by Nero and Domitian and several short-lived Caesars who also disappeared with dispatch. This was a show that failed of its purpose in that it neither amused nor bemused: About 2,000 men of management capabilities got together, argued for about two months, sometimes on national television and often in one-night stands of the roadshow type; and they decided not a single thing that will really help to halt or even slow down the speed of inflation. And for a curtain call, Jerry Ford will command prime time on all TV networks and tell the people of the United States—and the world—not what was decided at these summits, but what was decided by a secret group that will tell Ford exactly what to say and when to say it. And if Gerald Ford: Administrator, really thinks he is going to be a President in anything other than name, then the whole wide world will be reminded of the fates of other recent Presidents of the United States—of the ileitis that kept Ike in line; of the gunshots that terminated the lives of Jack and brother Bob who wanted to "do it their way; of the less successful attempt on the life of George Wallace because this was the year of the smear for political parties—for the Democrats at Miami Beach Convention Hall, and for the Republicans at Washington's Watergate—and the Wallace campaign was a disturbing influence. Should Ford falter, the world will be reminded of how Lyndon Johnson was permitted to retire, and how Richard Nixon was permitted to resign.

President Ford seems to be "getting the message," if the number of times he has changed his mind about important issues in the past few weeks is any indication. Prime time example: Like predecessor Nixon, he told the people publicly that he would never allow the imposition of wage and price controls; already he is wavering. Also, he promised no new taxes this year; and now as of October 4 he awaits the word on whether to ask for an added gas tax, or an income surtax, or both.

If it were not so dangerous to the health of Americans individually and to their country collectively, it would be amusing to note how some "court historians" pervert the facts to arrive at predetermined conclusions and thus brainwash their readers. There is the case in point of Barbara Tuchman, who calls herself a historian because she is the author of that masterful smear job entitled Stillwell and the American Experience in China. Ms Tuchman takes a set of undisputed facts concerning our Presidential crisis, and arranges them so people will condemn the American system along with the people who are corrupting the system, and demand that the Presidency be abolished along with the current crop of Presidents; a process commonly allegorized as "throwing out the baby with the bath water." The following is a prime example of Fabian persuasion and re-education. Please read carefully and note how truth can be slanted to promote untruthful conclusions:

DEFUSING THE PRESIDENCY

By Barbara W. Tuchman

Cos Cob, Conn.—The American Presidency has become a greater risk than it is worth. The time has come to seriously consider the substitution of cabinet government or some form of shared executive power.

There is no use continually repeating that the form arranged by the Framers of the Constitution must serve forever unchanged. Monarchy too was once considered immutable and even divinely established but it had to give way under changed conditions. The conditions of American executive power today, commanding agencies, techniques and instruments unimaginable in the eighteenth century, no more resemble the conditions familiar to Jefferson and Madison than they do those under Hammurabi. The Framers may have been the most intelligent and far-seeing political men ever to operate at one time in our history but they could not foretell the decline of the Congress. In too willing subservience it confirmed as Vice President an appointee of an already discredited President and will doubtless do so again in the case of Nelson A. Rockefeller. The executive will then consist of an appointee and his appointee, which is not what the Framers designed. The checks and balances they devised are out of balance.

For one euphoric moment when the House Judiciary Committee functioned, it seemed the system might have revived, but when the House failed to carry through a vote on impeachment and the Senate said nothing, the self-emasculation was completed. If lost virginity cannot be restored, neither can lost virility; I do not think the trend is toward righting the balance.

The Presidency has gained too great a lead; it has bewitched the occupant, the press and the public. While this process has been apparent from John F. Kennedy on, it took the strange transformation of good old open-Presidency Gerald R. Ford to make it clear that the villain is not the man but the office. Hardly had he settled in the ambiance of the White House than he began to talk like Louis XIV and behave like Richard M. Nixon. If there was one lesson to be learned from Watergate it was the danger in overuse of the executive power and in interference with the judicial system. Within a month of taking office Mr. Ford has violated both at once. The swelling sense of personal absolutism shows in those disquieting remarks: "The ethical tone will be what I make it...." "In this situation I am the final authority...." and, in deciding to block the unfolding of legal procedure, "My conscience says it is my duty...." Our judicial system can operate well enough without the dictate of Mr. Ford's conscience. To be President is not to be czar.

But Mr. Ford is not alone responsible. The press overplayed him as it overplayed John Kennedy and the absurd pretensions of Camelot. The New York Times published Mr. Ford's picture twelve times on the front page in the first fourteen days of his tenure. Why? We all know what he looks like. But if it can be said that the press gives the public what it wants, then all of us are responsible. By packing our craving for father worship into the same person who makes and executes policy—a system no other country uses—we have given too much greatness to the Presidency. It seizes hold of the occupant as we have seen it do with Mr. Kennedy, Lyndon B. Johnson and Mr. Nixon. It has led Mr. Ford into an entirely unnecessary breach of our last rampart, the judicial process, an act that can be explained as being either crooked—that is, by some undercover deal with his predecessor—or stupid. We cannot at this date afford either at the head of the American Government.

Nor is the Presidency getting first-rate men. The choice between candidates in the last three elections has been dismal. Things now happen too fast to allow us time to wait until the system readjusts itself. The only way to defuse the Presidency and minimize the risk of a knave, a simpleton or a despot exercising supreme authority without check or consultation is to divide the power and spread the responsibility. Constitutional change is not beyond our capacity.

(Barbara Tuchman in the New York Times,
September 20, 1974)

Ms Tuchman ignores the fact that "constitutional change" is responsible for the awful predicament in which we find our system of government. There was a Fourteenth Amendment which began the social havoc, a Sixteenth Amendment which provided almost unlimited amounts of money which would be administered by the Presidency, a Seventeenth Amendment which destroyed that balance of power written into the original text of the Constitution, and, finally, a Twenty-fifth Amendment which made it possible for the executive to consist of "an appointee and his appointee, which is not what the Framers designed." It is true, as Ms Tuchman declares, "The checks and balances they devised are out of balance." But anyone reading The Federalist Papers will know that the Framers warned us of these dangers. It isn't the fault of the system, it is the fault of the people who permitted the perversion of the system. We had a Republic, and we couldn't keep it; we let it become an Oligarchy masquerading as a Democracy, under which we are managed and controlled by a Computerized Corporate Socialist System that is variously called the New Federalism or Regionalism. And under this system the present occupant of the White House is but a mouthpiece who says what he is told to say; even his jokes are prepared by a specially selected writer.

Under such a system, how are policies determined and programs initiated? The answers become more obvious as the self-chosen Oligarchists grow greater in power and prestige. And a part of the explanation is easy to follow:

The Oligarchists (often called the Eastern Establishment but actually world-wide) are associated in semi-secret clubs such as the Council on Foreign Relations, the Committee for Economic Development, the 1313 Conglomerate, etc. And on the International level there are the Bilderbergers, the Club of Rome, the Round Table, etc. These organizations—especially those headquartered in the United States—employ staffs of specially trained planners and agents who study given problems, work out the best solutions, and prepare programs and suggest policies to be carried out by those in power. Thus did CFR experts get us into World War Two, plotting its course and determining its conclusion.

Additionally, tax-exempt foundations set up and finance "think tanks" where similar selected agents and planners provide solutions to problems proffered by Oligarchists, or sometimes by some agency of the Federal Government; as was the case with the Defense Department which, especially under the secretaryship of Robert Strange McNamara, employed the Rand Corporation to use the Vietnamese War as a field laboratory for the perfecting of that control system that came to be known as the Planning, Programming, Budgeting System, and which now is more popularly known as Systems Analysis.

Current examples of this kind of policy-making: We have on our desk "A Statement by the Research and Policy Committee of the Committee for Economic Development," published in September, 1974, and entitled Congressional Decision Making for National Security. It tells the Congress of the United States exactly what it is supposed to do about the defense budget! And Congress will do what CED says because there are a sufficient number of Senators and Congressmen so beholden to the so-called Eastern Establishment that they don't dare to do otherwise unless they are willing to follow Agnew and Nixon in retirement, exile and disgrace.

Again: We have a 55-page statement titled "Policy Options and the Impact of National Health Insurance," prepared under grants from the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare and the Office of Economic Opportunity, by RAND Corporation, This is dated June 1974, which is just about the time that the latest crusade for national health insurance began.

Moreover, at the international level, the policies adopted by politicians are apt to be products of a similar international think tank. Most important of all think tanks is one located on the outskirts of Vienna. We have referred to this Schloss Laxenburg in previous letters, but little public exposure has been accorded this place that tells Presidents and Prime Ministers what to do at the world level. Nor has it ever been publicly announced that this institute—and the Soviet Union, as well—has adopted PPBS, or Systems Analysis in its planning and programming.

The following article is by Victor Zorza, an accredited journalist who visited Schloss Laxenburg; it appeared in The Washington Post on September 24, 1974. Please read carefully; what Zorza says may be slanted, but his conclusions are important:

SOLVING GLOBAL PROBLEMS

Vienna—A unique international experiment, housed in an Austrian emperor's castle outside Vienna, has brought together the scientists of East and West in an attempt to work out rational solutions for the world's problems. The 70 scientists in residence at Schloss Laxenburg come from 14 countries, but the biggest contingents are from the United States (17) and the Soviet Union (13).

The energy crisis in the West is considered by some Soviet politicians a boon for the East, but here the scientists' only concern is how to deal with the energy problem in a worldwide setting, in the future rather than in the present. The comparatively backward state of the Soviet Union's computer industry is seen by some in the West as the means of extracting political advantage in exchange for advanced technology. But here the head of the computer project is a Russian, planning an international computer network which could make it possible for groups of scientists in different countries to work together on the same problems.

The urban project, under a Canadian, seeks the best way to manage the growth of cities, now a problem in both East and West. It tries to relate the tasks to commonly accepted goals, the mere listing of which presents a catalogue of the world's major problems: "economic growth and development, social mobility and opportunity, equity and justice, environmental quality." There is the industrial project, the ecology and environment project, the biology and medical project—9 projects in all, seemingly separate but closely interrelated, dependent on each other for information, for stimulation, for questions as well as for answers.

All these problems are certainly studied elsewhere, but here at the International Institute for Applied Systems Analysis (IIASA) they have been brought together under one roof to be viewed as one, regardless of national frontiers. After five years of delicate negotiation between Washington and Moscow, with the participation of other countries, the institute's charter was signed two years ago.

The chairman of the IIASA council, Jermen Gvishiana—a son-in-law of Premier Kosygin and the leading Soviet "science politician" in his own right—has repeatedly urged the use of systems analysis to solve some of the problems faced by the Soviet Union. More orthodox Marxists have been deeply suspicious of this "Western" science, but it is gradually being accepted in the Soviet Union as a useful, "neutral" tool of organizational management. Gvishiana argues that the resources now needed to use systems analysis for the solution of many problems exceed the means of any single country.

The director of IIASA, Dr. Howard Raiffa of Harvard, sees systems analysis not as a technique, but as a rational approach to the resolution of complex problems. As practiced at IIASA, it is a framework of thought designed to help decision-makers of all countries to choose the desirable—or the best—course of action. It combines all the new tools, from management science to information theory, from cost benefit analysis to behavioral decision theory, from operations research to organizational theory.

The long words and impersonal concepts which have to be used to describe what IIASA does ought not to be allowed to obscure the utterly simple and deeply personal commitment of its staff to a better world, to what might yet become one world. They do not discuss it in these terms, because this would immediately bring it into the realm of politics, of argument, of divisive ideology. They are content to leave this to the politicians, while they themselves fashion the tools for the politicians to use when the problems of the world become unmanageable.

But for IIASA to confine itself to this would be a counsel of despair, while in fact Schloss Laxenburg is a radiantly optimistic place. IIASA studies will identify for the politicians the problems which the world is going to face long before these become visible to the naked eye. The studies will identify possible solutions—not one solution, but all the options, and the trade-offs between them, so that the politicians can see the benefits as well as the costs of the choices they make—and the penalties for inaction.

IIASA is an optimistic place, because, even after three days spent there looking into the various projects, it is clear that sooner or later the politicians will have to accept its view that the world is one and will have to act on it. Three days is barely enough to capture the spirit of the place, certainly not enough to comprehend the whole complexity of the problems it is dealing with. But it is becoming a place of which much more will be heard, for no itinerant journalist visiting the capitals of Europe can now afford to miss it. There is more to be learned at IIASA than from a chat with many a prime minister.

"Sooner or later the politicians will have to accept its view that the world is one and will have to act on it." This is the keynote of every message dispatched to heads of state from this policy-making institute that is run by a Communist official and a Harvard professor. And it is ominous to note that since the establishment of Schloss Laxenburg, every time an American official of policy-making status has visited Europe, his first stopover is in Vienna, where this international think tank is situated. Former President Nixon, before loss of face, always visited Vienna first, Moscow second. Truly, the real rulers of the world are seldom seen, or recognized as such.

DON BELL REPORTS is a weekly Newsletter accenting the Christian American point of view. Two copies of each issue are sent to each subscriber. Extra copies: 10¢ each. Complete service:.....$24 per year

"The Contrived Evolution of Regional Government," a series of 21 letters in booklet format, now ready for delivery on request.
Single Copies $2.00 each
10 or more Copies $1.50 each
25 or more Copies $1.00 each

Please address all orders to:
DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

"WIN" - A CAMPAIGN TO WEAKEN THE MIDDLE CLASS

THE BURDEN TO BE BORNE BY THE HATED BOURGEOISIE

It was a prophetic opening statement: his speechwriters had chosen to quote from the first inaugural address of Franklin Delano Roosevelt, who came to the White House supposedly to end a carefully planned and horribly efficient depression. In launching his historic "one hundred days," FDR had said: "The people of the United States have not failed. They want direct, vigorous action; and they have asked for discipline and direction under our leadership."

With those words, the 32nd President of the United States launched the New Deal, and the Nation has never been the same since that time. And with those same words, the first non-elected President of the United States launched a campaign that has been given the acronym WIN, short for the slogan, "Whip Inflation Now," which is supposed to be a crusade against inflation, but which really will become a campaign to soak the middle class while protecting plutocrats and supporting the poor, if the Congress buys the package presented by the makers of Ford.

While everyone else gets relief or protection from the ravages of inflation, the bill for that relief and/or protection is to be paid for by individuals with taxable incomes of more than $5,450 per year, families with taxable incomes of more than $10,000 per year, and corporations that fail to fall into the loopholes afforded the favored.

The "WIN" package would work like this: There is a tax reform bill now pending in the House Ways and Means Committee. It would, among other things, provide tax relief for taxpayers who don't earn enough to be affected by the 5% surcharge. So, they would pay less taxes than before. Ford has accepted this tax reform bill as a part of his WIN campaign.

At the other end of the financial scale; WIN includes no provisions for forcing millionaires to pay any income tax. For example: no one outside the Rockefeller family and economic empire really knows how much money Nelson Rockefeller makes, nor do we know if he pays any income tax to the federal treasury. But back in July 1967, the late Senator Robert Kennedy let it be known that Rocky paid the grand total of $685 in personal income taxes for the year 1966. And we are told that he paid none at all in 1973. The point being: there is nothing in the WIN package which would force any of the Rockefellers or other plutocrats to pay more in 1975 than they will have paid in 1974. Indeed, their capital gains taxes will be even more lenient.

So: the rich pay no more, the poor pay less; the middle class pays all the bills!

If this alleged anti-inflation campaign were on the level and honestly designed to whip inflation, then it is strange indeed that not a single one of the 31 proposals in the Ford package is aimed at reducing the rate of inflation. The planners who prepared the package were not even honest with themselves; because they know that inflation is caused by one thing, and by one thing only: by Government expansion of the money supply. Stanton Evans gives us this honest explanation, which should be simple enough even for a court economist to understand:

"To the extent the Federal Reserve System pumps new dollars into our economy, to that same extent we will suffer the pains of inflation and rising prices. Over the past decade, for example, the money supply of the United States increased by a tidy $100-billion, going from $160-billion in 1965 to $260-billion in 1973. This expansion occurred as the Federal Reserve supported the massive deficits of the U.S. Government and sought to keep our overheated economy rolling forward. At one point in 1972 the rate of expansion hit an annual level of 14%. As a result of this performance, per capita disposable income nearly doubled during the period and consumer prices rose by 40%. This record of monetary expansion is not only the cause of inflation, it is inflation, and the rising prices we are all experiencing are the inevitable result thereof. So long as this essential cause remains, attempts to halt the process by (any means whatever) are utterly futile and an outcry for augmented funny-money will only serve to make the problem worse."

In his prepared message to Congress, Ford at one point actually admitted that the chief cause of inflation probably was Government overspending, and he promised to keep the federal budget down to $300-billion in the upcoming fiscal year. But, in his first few weeks in office, Ford endorsed, campaigned for and hoped for new domestic programs totalling between $66.2 and $81.2-billion. He signed a massive $25-billion education bill and an $11-billion mass transit program complete with operating subsidies. He is trying to push through that $15 to $30-billion "comprehensive health insurance program." He has signed a $4.5-billion public works appropriation, and has proposed a $4-billion public employment program. These are additional to the money he wants to spend for his WIN campaign, which money he thinks will come from that 5% surcharge on middle-class incomes. There is also at least $15.6-billion of federal spending that is not even listed in the budget itself. These items include the Federal National Insurance Corporation, the Federal Home Loan Banks, the Federal Land Banks, the Federal Export-Import Bank, the U.S. Postal Service, the Federal Intermediate Credit Banks, the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corporations, the Rural Electrification Administration, the Student Loan Marketing Association, the Bank for Cooperatives, the Rural Telephone Bank and Environmental Financing Authority, and others. These are federal loan companies that usually grant loans at rates lower than the rates the federal government itself must pay to borrow money. Moreover, notes The Network of Patriotic Letter Writers—which compiled the foregoing list of federal loan companies—"Millions of dollars of loans are in default, particularly in the field of student loans. To make matters worse, 22,000 names are being added to the federal payroll and the Tax Foundation reports that the salaries of federal civilian employees increased 88%, compared with 61% in private industry and are 'going up faster than inflation.' Benefits rose at an even higher rate: 147%."

One example selected from many: The Good Stamp Act began in 1965 with an appropriation of $34.3-million. This year it will amount to an estimated $4-billion.

Administrator Ford told Congress that it would not be fair to ask the people to bite the bullet if Uncle Sam didn't do the same. But all Uncle Sam is going to do, it seems, is reduce his budgeted spending from $304.4 billion to $300 billion. Now, when it is known that inflation is caused by a Government spending more money than it receives honestly from taxpayers, and when that Government continues to overspend regardless of the consequences, is this any way to Whip Inflation Now - or ever?

And knowing these things, does it not become obvious that this WIN, an alleged anti-inflation crusade is really a crusade against Middle Class America? Against that segment of society which Karl Marx hated as the Bourgeoisie, calling for its utter destruction?

In this same connection and in context with our assertion, there is a very interesting article in the current (Oct. 14) U.S. News & World Report which was written before Ford read his alleged anti-inflation paper. Entitled Squeeze on America's Middle Class this special report charges that 100 million Americans (the same 100 million that will be squeezed by the surcharge if it becomes law) have been, in effect, double crossed and "caught up in economic insecurity and attacks on their values."

Looking back to that period of artificial affluence mentioned by Stanton Evans in a previous quotation in this Letter, the U.S. News & World Report notes that "In 1972, riding a wave of prosperity, middle class Americans gave an almost unprecedented margin of victory to the presidential election of Richard M. Nixon, a man whom they saw as 'one of us' in character and conservatism." However, "the national leadership in which most had placed their trust is out of office in the wake of massive scandals reaching deeply into the White House." Therefore, the article continues, "Disaffection with its fiercely held values from the past—patriotism, hard work, respect for authority and dogged faith in the future—is spreading...into the middle class 'hard core' composed of white-collar and blue-collar workers."

The article then traces the development of the American middle class, and here are direct quotes:

"It was not until the early nineteenth century...that the term 'middle class' began to come into general use. For decades thereafter it was applied most often to professional people, such as lawyers and doctors, along with other citizens of some standing in the community, such as businessmen, prosperous farmers and skilled craftsmen. Scholars point out that being middle class a century ago was rewarded with respect and some status within the general community - that the heroes of Horatio Alger's novels, for instance, did not become millionaires, but honorable tradesmen and merchants...."

"Today, the economic definition of the U.S. middle class usually is applied to the vast majority of those making anywhere from $10,000 to $25,000 or thereabouts (those who are most directly penalized by the proposed 5% surcharge—Ed.)

"It is such Americans, driven by aspirations and the need for 'belonging,' who have filled the nation's suburbs, flooded its colleges with their children, supplied most of the manpower for Vietnam. They have traveled over the world, and a few have reached the moon. They tend to take their community duties more seriously than other Americans. Charity drives depend on the middle class to provide not only their dollars but also their time to meeting goals. In 1972, three quarters of those with a family income of $10,000 or more a year voted, compared with a national average of less than two thirds.

"...middle-class incomes—more than any others—are hit by a doubling of the maximum Social Security tax in the last six years.

And families earning between $10,000 and $25,000 pay half the nation's U.S. income tax—while getting little of the bounty bestowed on the poor through welfare programs, or the rich through subsidies and tax breaks.

"Result, in a troubled economy, is a financial squeeze that is forcing such families to watch outlays closely. A California poll conducted recently by Field Research Corporation found this:

"Families earning $10,000 a year and over led all others on cutbacks on electricity, gas and telephone. More than any other class, those in the $10,000-20,000 range were economizing on food—and they ranked second only to the poorest families in cutbacks on entertainment and recreation spending. More, too, were working overtime, 'moonlighting' on second jobs or putting additional family members to work than was true of any other class...."

As the foregoing article indicates, this middle class is made up of the kind of people who made America what it was when we were most proud of our Nation; this middle class forms the very backbone of the Country, holds it together, bears the burden of the bulk of its taxes.

And this is the part of the United States which the Planners hope to destroy; and this alleged anti-inflation program, as proposed through mouthpiece Ford, is but one more weapon in the arsenal of the Planners who seek ways and means of reconstructing a new society which will have no middle class!

Recently Jeffrey Hart, syndicated columnist and college professor (Dartmouth) observed that "There has come into being a vast middle-American constituency, which increasingly transcends regional and ethnic differences.... Yet neither Eisenhower nor Nixon focused on the interests of middle America in shaping the national agenda, and so far Gerald Ford—in image, at least, Mr. Middle America—shows no signs of doing so either."

But it was merely an image. While a Representative from Michigan, Ford sounded like a Middle American; but once he became a President in name, he began to assume that he was speaking for the world—and the world oriented have no place for the middle class. For the New World is to have only Masters and Servants and individualists and entrepreneurs are anathema to the Elite.

KISSINGER KAPUT?

On the subject of Servants, as opposed to Masters, and spotlighting Civil Servants, there has been a fast turnover of high ranking Civil Servants during the past few years. Khrushchev was looked upon as a dictator, possibly wielding more power than any other mortal man. Yet suddenly he was deposed and sent to pasture. He had done his job, finished his assignment for the Masters, and there was no longer need for him as an agent and mouthpiece. Similarly in the United States, Agnew of Maryland played his bit part on the world stage, and retired to private life. Connally of Texas was rushed to Washington and into world prominence because a certain monetary conversion manipulation required such a man; then, his task completed, he rode back to Texas and into private life. More recently the Man from San Clemente, who had been looked upon—like Khrushchev before him—as the most powerful political leader in all the world. It was Nixon who was used to standardize that new system of governance called Regionalism, who was used to devalue the dollar, to place Kissinger in a position where the latter could begin the tripartite alliance of the United States, the Soviet Union, and Red China. Then, his usefulness departed, the Man from San Clemente was also allowed to depart, with pardon and pension.

And now, there are rumors that the Man from Germany is also being listed among the dispensables, that he will retire or be retired as soon as his Master, Nelson the Rock, assumes the title of Vice President of the United States.

Dr. Peter Beter, author of the book Conspiracy Against the Dollar, who has been surprisingly correct in many of his predictions concerning men and events, said last May that Agnew was forced out to make a place for Rockefeller. But Nixon disobeyed orders and, instead of selecting Rockefeller for the vacant position, named Gerald Ford. That sealed Nixon's fate and, upon his forced resignation, Ford proved to be a more obedient Civil Servant, and accordingly named the man selected by the Masters to become Vice President—following which officially concluded event, Gerald Ford will also disappear from the world stage. So goes the rumor and the prediction.

We are told that in July 1974, Dr. Beter appeared at a meeting of American Party members in Georgia, at which time he told of a meeting held on June 2, 1974. This was a closed gathering consisting of David and Nelson Rockefeller, Richard Nixon, Gerald Ford, Henry Kissinger, and perhaps a few other, unnamed, individuals. Here, Nixon was given his walking papers; but so were Ford and Kissinger. According to Beter, Nixon was to resign by Aug. 10 (he actually resigned on Aug. 8). Ford was then to name Nelson Rockefeller his Vice President; and following Rockefeller's confirmation by the Congress, Ford is to step down by March 1975, whereupon Nelson Rockefeller will become President. And when this occurs, Henry Kissinger will retire to write his memoirs, and possibly later to become Secretary General of the United Nations. In any case, Henry Kissinger will no longer concern himself with National affairs; he will have become a World Diplomat dealing with affairs between Nations and/or Regions of the world. And, to conclude this rumor and prediction, sometime in 1975 David Rockefeller will also become a part of the Administration, either as Secretary of State or the Treasury.

Please understand: In the foregoing paragraphs we are dealing with rumors, based largely on information gained by Dr. Peter Beter, who has been exceptionally well informed on matters pertaining to the Rockefeller Klan (an informant within the inner circle of the Rockefellers recently fell, or was pushed, from a high window. The official verdict was suicide. Story appeared in National Tattler, July 7, 1974).

Regardless of rumors and predictions, Dr. Kissinger was, at one time, the untouchable, the uncensorable, the man who was to be trusted and praised by every segment of the communications media. Lately, however, there has been a change. Now editors and columnists are permitted to say bad things about Dr. Kissinger, Senators and Representatives have begun to doubt his integrity, his handling of the Nation's foreign affairs is being questioned.

An example: Morrey Marder and Marilyn Berger of the Washington Post News Service wrote an article which appeared in many newspapers in many parts of the country on October 7, 1974. Headlined "Image of an Infallible Kissinger Dies at Hands of Angry Congress," the article reads, in part:

"For Henry Kissinger the aura of infallibility is gone on Capitol Hill, swept away by two weeks of caustic personal attacks.... The damage is more than just a bruise to the ego of the Secretary of State....

"Kissinger was condemned for acting as an 'omniscient father-knows-best Secretary of State' who defied laws and treated 100 Senators as too 'feeble minded' to play a role in foreign policy.... The outbursts against Kissinger during the past two weeks represent an accumulation of years of pent-up frustration over his operating style...."

So, for the wrong reasons, Henry Kissinger may step out as a Rockefeller steps in. But it will make little difference at this stage of the game. It may be clarifying to think of Civil Servants and Super Agents as pieces on a gigantic checkerboard. Some occupy strategic positions and some back them up, some jump and some are jumped, some become kings and wield great power for a season. But none of them move of their own volition; they are moved by the Masters who are competing for the prizes offered by the "prince of this world." Yet, it is comforting to know that checkerboards are often overturned and games never finished. A real World Government is a rare and short-lived event in the world's history.

DON BELL REPORTS is a weekly Newsletter accenting the Christian American point of view. Two copies of each issue are sent to each subscriber. Extra copies: 10¢ each. Complete Service $24 per year

"The Contrived Evolution of Regional Government," a series of 21 letters in booklet format, now ready for delivery on request.

Single Copies $2.00 each
10 or more Copies $1.50 each
25 or more Copies $1.00 each

Please address all orders to:
DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

GODFATHER FORD AND HUMANISTIC CAPITALISM

WHY "WIN" MUST LOSE

"A government going into debt prefers inflation. That's why nobody in Washington is going to do a thing about inflation. And President Ford's call to arms is a public relations gimmick rather than the soberly conceived program of economic reality that it is supposed to be."

This is the consensus of a group of financial and editorial writers who were meeting "think tank style" at the University of Pennsylvania's Wharton School. Said the seminarists, the Ford "WIN" program is a commendable appeal to patriotism and thrift, but a contradiction in terms where inflation is concerned.

When the President spoke at the Future Farmers convention, one thing he said made sense inflation-wise: he spoke of balancing the budget. However, merely balancing the budget wouldn't curtail inflation in itself, because the budget does not reveal the real deficit spending that goes on and on. As Economist Henry Hazlitt notes: "The real cause of inflation has long been known. It is the issuance of too much paper money. The chief remedy has also long been known. It is to stop increasing the issuance of paper money."

Now, it seems generally believed by conservatives that if Government stays within its budgeted expenditures, it will not be necessary for the Government to continue to go into debt. But the budget itself is a phony!

A few years ago, Congress came up with the idea of financing a score of federal agencies outside the budget. Since that time the real federal deficit has been concealed from the people. According to a report issued by Saloman Brothers, those federal agencies that are not listed in the federal budget, borrowed $21.5 billion in 1973, will borrow about the same in 1974, and probably more in 1975. Thus, even if Ford does manage to balance the budget at $300 million, the Government will have spent an additional, unbudgeted $21.5 billion in this one area alone. And there are other areas hidden from public view.

Mr. Hazlitt makes sense where Mr. Ford either deceives the people or reveals his ignorance, or both. To wit:

1. The way to bring inflation to an end is to halt the rate of increase in the supply of money and credit. The President promised exactly the opposite: "I have personally been assured by the chairman of the independent Federal Reserve Board that the supply of money and credit will expand sufficiently to meet the needs of our economy and that in no event will a credit crunch occur."

2. The way to halt the chronic increase in the money supply would be to cut government spending. However, after promising to balance the budget, Mr. Ford made his promise seem silly by asking for additional money to

- * extend unemployment benefits,
- * create a "community improvement corps" to provide employment at federal expense whenever unemployment exceeds 6%,
- * make $3 billion immediately available for "mortgage purposes,"
- * and much more for many more purposes.

But this discussion, in this context, is academic. The editors said it all: "A government going into debt prefers inflation."

Then why the national "WIN" crusade? Because in the spirit of "bread and circuses" the people who have captured our government needed a new act to bemuse the people and keep them calm and contented; and because Gerald Ford needed to create a new image for himself. His image as a Congressman seeking to be Speaker of the House was outmoded. No longer was he a legislator; now he was an Administrator, a Chiefest Executive in all the Land. And to fit the role, a new image was required.

Public figures, having attained power or having had power thrust upon them, always require an image. Perhaps the need began with Satan, who appeared to the mother of men as a serpent. Nebuchadnezzar made an image of gold. The Caesars all had their images—usually being depicted as gods and saviors of mankind—stamped on the coin of the empire. The Revelation of St. John has much to say of the image of the beast.

Here in the United States, before and during the Winning of the West, Indian Chiefs were looked upon as the father of the tribe, all the braves being regarded as his children. When it became necessary to bow to some chief greater in power, the President of the United States came to be spoken of as the Great White Father.

Even today, that father image is popular with many, and perhaps millions of Americans like to think, at least figuratively, of "our father who is in Washington" as the giver of the necessities of life, even as were the potentates of old.

There are indications that Gerald Ford was eager to create that fatherhood image, His reference to the letter of an eight-year-old girl who spoke of turning out the light to save energy, and if you were scared of the dark, father or mother would take care of it, seemed a rather crude way of showing himself to be the father who would take care of his citizen-children. His reference to cleaning the plate before leaving the table, and his plan to offer lapel buttons to individuals and WIN flags to communities were in much the same vein. Even his scolding of Congress because they were expecting to bite the bullet and then wouldn't even eat the marshmallow he gave them, causing him to threaten a new menu of tough turkey, was as a father speaking to unruly children.

Harry Reasoner of the ABC-TV news program seems to have caught the same spirit emanations when he commented in his rather sardonic style: "The implication of Mr. Ford's program is that we are personally responsible for the problem. Rather than rounding us up and putting us away, though, he has given us a good talking to, and he has released us on our own recognizance, provided we keep our noses clean...."

There was a kind of godfatherish image in the fact that in his two talks to the people, allegedly about inflation, he got so very personal about it all. Where other chief executives would use the editorial "we," or refer to "the Administration" or "this office," or some similarly formal term, Mr. Ford used the personal pronoun. In his half-hour speech at Kansas City—the one that caused the delay of a world series baseball game and thus irritated many of his sports minded citizen children—we counted his use of the singular form of the personal pronouns "I," "me," or "my" over eighty times before we gave up counting and tried instead to find some way to relate the problem of inflation to the remedies he was suggesting. We gave up on that, too.

But it must be quite evident to any economist that if nobody is going to do anything about inflation (a government going into debt prefers inflation), then we are headed for an economic collapse, or the installation of some new system other than free enterprise capitalism!

So, as could be expected, a new economic order has been devised to take the place of our present "outmoded" economic system. It is designed as an integral part of the Regional Governance System that is to become planetary in scope, and it will utilize the Planning, Programming, Budgeting System (or Systems Analysis) that is already incorporated into the U.S. Government's New Federalism, or Regional Governance.

This new economic order, neither capitalism nor communism, but a hybrid offspring incorporating many of the features of both, is called Humanistic Capitalism. It was apparently developed at the U.S. Office of Education's Educational Policy Research Center at the University of Stanford's Research Institute, a think tank the activities of which are directed by one Willis Harman. Harman is said to have a staff of from 15 to 20 "full-time professionals." Harman says he is concerned with the "World Macroproblem." He is of the opinion that this World Macroproblem when "taken as a whole it is practically unsolvable" and "just to live with it will require a cultural revolution of major proportions. I'm not talking about a trivial thing here, I'm talking about a radical change in our whole set of basic values."

Harman's Humanistic Capitalism would, indeed, seem too radical to be considered seriously as a replacement for our present economic system except that 1) it was developed at a think tank financed by HEW, 2) the promotion of this Humanistic Capitalism scheme is being financed, at least in part, by the Rockefeller Brothers and 3) the promotion is being handled by organizations and publications affiliated with the United Nations. And when an agency of the U.S. Government, the Rockefellers, and the UN all get behind a scheme, that is mighty powerful backing.

Harman, who devised Humanistic Capitalism, is the author of a promotional piece that appeared originally in the Winter 1974 issue of the Journal of Humanistic Psychology, and then appeared almost immediately as a reprint in selected propaganda publications, among which is Fields Within Fields, a publication of the World Institute Council, United Nations Plaza. It is from this latter publication that we obtained the following parenthesized quotes:

Harmon says free enterprise "fails to meet the basic condition that every citizen have the opportunity to be a full and valued participant, with the feeling of belonging and being useful. It fails to achieve a synergism of individual and organizational micro-decisions...it fails to achieve a satisfactory equitable redistribution of power and wealth."

In different words: free enterprise does not permit the "integrated planning" that is essential if planners are to be successful in "choosing the future" for each individual and for the world.

"Achieving profound social change in the face of strong resistance to measures that appear to threaten jobs or income is one of the key challenges in the approaching demise of the industrial era," says Harmon. And, if you can understand this:

"Mentioned earlier as a needed institutional change was a mechanism for obtaining widespread citizen participation in 'designing for the future' and achieving necessary regulation at the lowest practicable level (which may be the local community for human welfare issues and the planetary level for oceanic pollution). The complexity and interconnectedness of these tasks demands a well-coordinated network of planning units at local, regional, national and planetary levels. In general these units have two tasks—the definition and comparison of alternatives, and the selection and actualization of the alternative to be followed. The first task is technical, requiring advanced skills and detailed information. The second task is political, involving citizen participation, stimulation of needed actions, and brokerage of the resources required from concerned organizations and agencies."

More about Humanistic Capitalism in future letters; but we now must "break for the following bulletin":

THE JOHN RARICK STORY

With Congressional Election time nearing, it seems important that voters understand how Congressman John Rarick, Louisiana, was defeated in a primary runoff. Since the same general treatment has been slated for at least fifteen other Congressmen who have refused to "toe the line" for AFL-CIO's COPE.

It should also be noted that the recent election campaign cleanup bill signed into law by appointed President Ford has no bearing whatsoever on the activities of such political organizations as COPE, since no direct donations to candidates are involved, and COPE's millions are spent to "educate" the voters and persuade them to vote for candidates that are friendly to organized labor.

It seems that the principal point of attack against incumbent Rarick lay in the fact that he was a member of the House Agriculture Committee. An estimated 20 to 40 agents posing as agricultural experts from out of State invaded like the carpetbaggers of old, spread throughout the rural areas of Rarick's Congressional District, telling the farmers that they needed a new congressman to represent them in Washington. The ACIR-1313 complex was anxious to help in the defeat of Rarick, since he was an outspoken opponent of Federal Land Use Laws and also had introduced legislation that would place ACIR under legislative review by the U.S. Congress.

Result: Congressman Rarick was defeated in the runoff election by about 4,000 votes. Following is Congressman Rarick's own story, which contains a warning that should be heeded by all voters:

A RUBBER STAMP CONGRESS

A "veto-proof," rubber stamp Congress, once merely the distorted dream of big labor's self-appointed king-maker, George Meany, could become a nightmarish reality within a few weeks. Meany's demand last spring was no idle threat. It has become a clear and present danger in the November Congressional elections.

The AFL-CIO through its political strong-arm machine the Committee on Political Education (COPE), is already well underway with its plan to subvert representative government in America. COPE's plan for a completely labor-bossed Congress could destroy majority rule and turn it over to radical minorities.

COPE's blueprint for a veto-proof Congress calls for electing hand-picked Congressmen and Senators under the influence and control of labor and its minority coalition, who will be able to override a presidential veto of any given bill. In simple numbers, it means control of two-thirds of the United States Congress.

The pyramid effect of the scheme to create a non-violent coup at the polls was exposed recently in my election race. The skill and cunning with which the big labor coalition is being mobilized and focused to defeat pro-American independents at the polls deserves much more attention than it has been given in the news media.

On April 10, 1974, COPE issued a list of 16 members of Congress "targeted for defeat." The full financial and manpower capabilities of big labor were concentrated behind this drive to unseat those 16 Congressmen who refused to knuckle under to the "bosses." I was the only Democrat in the AFL-CIO's "enemies list." The election in my district was seen as a testing ground in the drive to bring about a congressional coup—the end result being a legislative dictatorship under the control of labor bosses.

Despite the fact that federal law prohibits unions from donating money directly to candidates in federal elections, millions of dollars were amassed to defeat those "targeted" Congressmen. By early spring of this year, reliable sources in Washington placed COPE's campaign war chest earmarked to be concentrated in those targeted congressional races at $20 million. Increasing their financial demands on local labor union members, the national labor bosses launched a drive to raise that total to $40 million.

"Voluntary contributions," the euphemism COPE uses to refer to money drained from local union members, was upped from $1 per person to as much as $10 among locals of some unions. That's a lot of ammunition for taking pot shots at "targets."

Much of the big labor money is "laundered" for use in congressional campaigns in the form of "free" telephone banks, computer work, carefully selected labor leaders campaigning full-time while the unions pay their travel, lodging, transportation and food expenses. All this adds up to a powerful machine which is hard to counter with limited finances and volunteer campaign workers.

These dollars are never accounted for on a candidate's campaign reporting records, since they are considered as "educational services" for the union members.

In addition to massive amounts of direct and indirect campaign funds, COPE uses less obvious methods to strike at its targets. Fragmentation fronts, organized and backed by big labor money, are used to divide the great mass of American voters into smaller, more easily manipulated groups. Blacks, older citizens, consumers, the poor and the veterans are some of the groups splintered from their fellow Americans who are then organized and gathered together into a political coalition. The result is a mass of labor-directed voters and an alienation of the independent thinking and acting voter, who is discouraged from going to the polls.

Wrapped in the guise of "people programs," some of the labor-backed fragmentation groups used in the COPE target blitzkreig are the all-black A. Philip Randolph Institute, the National Council of Senior Citizens, National Education Association and the Committee on National Health Security. Each of these pressure groups produced its own "enemies list," which, interestingly, parallels the original target list issued by COPE.

Whether this well-financed and coordinated drive for a rubber stamp Congress can overpower the independent American voter at the polls will be decided in the November elections.

We are seeing a new era of political elections emerge. Many congressional elections are being turned into battlegrounds for the new politics. Unless the independent American voters are made aware of this reality and vote free of the pressure of special interest groups, we will see a radical change in our form of government which will bring about a great congressional purge. (End of Rarick statement.)

In addition to Rep. Rarick, here are the names of the other fifteen Congressmen that were targeted for defeat this year:

Robert B. Mathias, California; Donald G. Brozman, Colorado; Robert McClory, Illinois; George M. O'Brien, Illinois; David W. Dennis, Indiana; Roger H. Zion, Indiana; Marvin L. Esch, Michigan; Garry Brown, Michigan; Charles Thone, Nebraska; Joseph J. Maraziti, New Jersey; Charles A. Sandman, Jr., New Jersey; Manuel Lujan, Jr., New Mexico; Samuel L. Devine, Ohio; Alan Steelman, Texas; and Glenn R. Davis, Wisconsin.

In the preceding, Congressman Rarick refers only to pressure groups that are financed by COPE. That, of course, is but one side of the story. Recent revelations of the many "gifts" that have been given by Nelson and the other Rockefellers gives a hint of the kind of pressure that is exerted by individuals. And post-Watergate disclosures give further details of the enormous amounts of money that have been given by multinational corporations, milk trusts, etc.

Compounding the problem while offering no solution, the campaign reform bill that Ford signed into law on October 15 is more of an incumbent protection act than a reform act. This act will aid organized labor and the liberal Democrats who now control Congress and will make a mockery of what's left of any future presidential election campaign.

Rep. Rarick was sickeningly correct when he indicated that a change in political election campaigns is a part of the radical change in our form of government that is being brought about.

A real and unmistakable protest vote in November might make a significant and important difference in the direction that our Nation is currently headed.

DON BELL REPORTS$24 per year
Extra Copies 10¢ each

"Contrived Evolution of Regional Government," in booklet form, available on request
Single Copies$2.00 each
10 or more Copies$1.50 each
25 or more Copies$1.00 each

Please address all orders to:
DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

A DISEASE THAT THEY CALL STAGFLATION AND THE PROPOSED POLITICAL PANACEA

THE DANGER OF DEBT

"The U.S. economy stands atop a mountain of debt $2.5-trillion high," declared the McGraw-Hill publication, Business Week, of October 12, 1974. "The U.S. is the Debt Economy without peer. It has the biggest lenders, the biggest borrowers, the most sophisticated financial system. The numbers are so vast that they simply numb the mind. $1-trillion in corporate debt, $600-billion in mortgage debt, $500-billion in U.S. government debt, $200-billion in State and local government debt, $200-billion in consumer debt. To fuel nearly three decades of postwar economic boom at home and export it abroad, this nation has borrowed an average net $200-million a day, each and every day, since the close of World War II.

"It would be an awesome burden of debt even if the world's economic climate were perfect. It is an ominously heavy burden with the world as it is today—ravaged by inflation, threatened with economic depression, torn apart by the massive redistribution of wealth that has accompanied the soaring price of oil.

"Two critically important questions must be asked about the U.S. economy today:

* Can all the debt now outstanding be paid off or refinanced as it comes due?

* Can the economy add enough new debt to keep growing at anything close to the rate of the postwar era?

"If those two questions have been asked a thousand times in the past three decades, never have they been so hard to answer as they are today."

To put it more simply: for three decades, we have been dancing to the tune of cheap money and easy credit; now it's time to pay the piper, and our money is being devalued, and the credit squeeze is on!

Nor are we alone: Unable to pay the Pied Piper, we have caused the whole world to be led to the brink of destruction. For, while inflation is rampant everywhere except behind the so-called Iron and Bamboo Curtains, so is recession epidemic and worldwide depression threatening—except behind the Iron, Bamboo and OPEC Oil Curtains.

Dr. George S. Benson caught the spirit of the impending disaster when he wrote in the October National Education Program Letter:

"It was Franklin Roosevelt, in one of his famous fireside chats, who said, 'Don't worry about the national debt, we only owe it to ourselves.' That has been the watchword in many classrooms at all levels of education ever since, and nothing could be further from the truth. To test the truth of that statement, just divide 211 million into 30 billion. That comes out, roughly $142.00. If you did not get a check from the Federal Government for that amount, or a check for $568.00 if you are the father of a family of four, then someone else is getting your share of the interest paid on the national debt and you are not one of the 'ourselves' to whom the debt is owed.

"Of course, this is an oversimplification of the problem of the national debt, but it illustrates the point that of the entire debt, amounting now to 500 billion dollars, only a very small part of it is 'owed to ourselves' in the sense of individuals owning government bonds. The same 30 billion dollars in interest which will be paid on the national debt during the current fiscal year will be the third largest item in the entire federal budget. It has to be paid every year in cold cash. The deficit spending which has created the national debt has been proclaimed by outstanding economic thinkers from the chairman of the Federal Reserve System on down as the major cause of the inflation which is now 'threatening the very foundation of our society,' and we have added $100 billion to that debt in the past five years.

"The average American, instead of collecting $142.00 a year in interest on a debt we owe ourselves, must pay $142.00 a year in interest alone, much of which goes to international bankers. The interest alone on the national debt this fiscal year will require an average of $568.00 from every family of four, or $142.00 from every single American from the oldest to the newest baby...."

Government spending alone is not causing the high level of inflation, but government over-spending is the principle cause. There is the massive corporate debt, the enormous mortgage debt, the great consumer debt. But there is the evidence-supported argument that in a free enterprise economy these other debts would take care of themselves without creating any inflation. It is Government competition and government interference that causes the inflation which stems from these sources. An excellent example is supplied by Business Week as part of an 80-page special report on "The Debt Economy." One part of this report is titled "The Agencies Soak Up Too Much Money." The article is important, and we quote at length:

How is it that such demurely named institutions as Fannie Mae and Ginnie Mae have so upset the nation's credit markets this year? The fact is that in a year when there is plainly not enough money to go around, such giant federal agencies as the Federal National Mortgage Assn. (Fannie Mae), and the Government National Mortgage Assn. (Ginnie Mae) are taking quite a bite of what money there is.

The agencies, with Fannie Mae and the Federal Home Loan Banks in the lead, will take about 15% of all the nation's available new capital in the second half of 1974, up from 11% in 1973 and from 5% in 1972. Nor is the end in sight. The industry for which the biggest agencies borrow—housing—is destitute, unable to fund itself. And Congress seems determined to create still more agencies....

Most disturbing...the biggest agencies borrow and lend totally outside the federal budget!

It is too simple to say that the $20-billion-plus that the agencies will take this year would have gone to other borrowers if the agencies had not been around. Because the agencies were around, the Fed had to create more money than it really wanted to....

The rationale for federal agencies is plain enough! There are certain functions so inherently unprofitable for private enterprise that only the federal government can do them. There have been agencies to lend to farmers for more than half a century while Fannie Mae and the Federal Home Loan Banks go back to the 1930s. The plight of the housing market in 1966 produced Ginnie Mae and the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corp. In 1973, Congress created the Federal Financing Bank to borrow for agencies too obscure to borrow on their own. And the list could grow. Senate Leader Mike Mansfield (D-Mont.) wants to bring back the Depression-era Reconstruction Finance Corp. Senator Jacob Javits (R-N.Y.) wants a $10-billion Domestic Development Bank.

Yet the grim lesson of 1974 is that the agencies can cause havoc in the financial markets, limit the effectiveness of monetary policy, and still—as in the case of housing—not do much to help the industries they are supposed to help.

What troubles many people is that when it became obvious that the new-style budget, adopted in the late 1960s, would count federal agency loans, such big agencies as Fannie Mae were simply sold to private shareholders, or otherwise eased out of the budget. Some 90% of total agency debt outstanding is of agencies not part of the federal budget!

Is this part of the picture becoming clear? There are federal agencies that changed their legal status and became corporations so their financial losses would not be revealed by the federal budget! These public corporations compete with private corporations, especially in the money market, and borrow on credit just as private corporations do; with this one important difference: A private corporation can go broke and fall into the hands of receivers if it cannot pay its bills; but a public corporation is backed up by the Federal Government and cannot go broke unless the Federal Government itself declares itself bankrupt! And, instead of doing that, the Federal Government through the Treasury Department issues more interest-bearing bonds, the Federal Reserve turns on the press, and more fiat money is used to pay the bills of those federal agencies that have become corporations so their losses won't be shown on the Federal Budget!

In Italy this was called Fascism. Here it is generally referred to as corporate socialism.

This is over-simplification, but here is how Regional Governance becomes necessary in this corporate context: Corporations that sell or serve on a nation-wide (or multi-national) scale must have branch offices in various parts of the country (or countries), because trying to control such a vast area from one central office would be inefficient and impractical. These federal departments, agencies and corporations faced the same situation: Branch Capitals were required to properly serve and control the "customers." Therefore, the Nation was divided into Ten Federal Regions, each with a regional capital; and these serve as branch offices for the Federal Bureaucracy. At the present time these Regional Capitals work with the yet-existing State and local governments. But, once sub-regional offices are established throughout the Nation, and all the public corporations and agencies are properly settled and staffed and coordinated with all the other public corporations and agencies, then State, County and Municipal Governments will have become superfluous and unnecessary.

And this is why the Federal Establishment can do nothing to effectively curb inflation—or prevent recession—unless the Regional Governance network that throttles the Nation is abolished. Elected officials can do little or nothing; appointed administrators are in charge and have no intention of losing control.

“The inflation created by 2 million federal employees who produce nothing but eat up more than $50 billion, is simply staggering,” said Martin Larson in his book Tax Rebellion USA.” If these people were productively employed, the fruit of their labor would balance their consumption and the inflationary pressure would be relieved.... Since federal employees have the easiest jobs, the least responsibility, the shortest hours, the longest vacations, and the most generous retirement program of any large group in the nation, why should their pay be nearly double that of others doing the same kind of work in the nation’s capital?

“This is a good question: and we think we know at least a partial answer. Although one may find hard-working persons with independent minds in some federal offices, the transcendent virtue among the great majority is absolute obedience. They must never notice waste, the unbelievable incompetence, the downright dishonesty which prevail on every side. Above all, they must never criticize their superiors, but help them build a larger empire. Hypocrisy and subservience constitute the high road to success and promotion. Occasionally, a strange individual appears in the federal service who prefers personal integrity to advancement or even survival.... (but the great majority) prefer to remain, rise in their ratings as best they can, and finally retire at $1,000 a month or more. This is success!”

Despite the high cost of government, the country’s economic state still might be one of health if it were not for the pestering and the malicious interference of the federal agents and agencies in almost every phase of the Nation’s business, commercial, industrial, professional, and even social life.

OSHA is an example, one of many examples which could be used to illustrate how the federal bureaucracy feeds inflation, causes consumers to pay more than they ought for goods and services, harms the economy in general, and causes great distress to small businessmen and producers, seriously impairing their ability to stay in business and make a profit, even putting them out of business entirely on some occasions.

OSHA is the Occupational Safety and Health

Act of 1970. Conceived for a worthy purpose and then used by federal agents to snoop and pry and act like members of a gestapo, this Act is just one of many similar Acts that a gullible Congress has approved and a predatory bureaucracy has used as weapons to destroy representative government and private enterprise. In sponsoring legislation to have the Act repealed (a forlorn hope, we fear), Congressman John Rousselot (R-Cal.) testified before the Select Subcommittee on Labor, pointing out that:

- * The Act itself is unconstitutional on at least two grounds;
- * OSHA constitutes an unwarranted interference by the Federal Government in the collective bargaining process; and
- * The burden of complying with the multitude of rules, regulations, and orders that have been issued as a result of OSHA is actually forcing the small employer out of business.

A recent article in the Journal of Commerce pointed out how OSHA harms the small businessman, but not the big businessman:

“Taxes, inflation, material shortages, union demands, consumer complaints, government regulations—all problems, all important, and all shared by big and small businesses alike, but with a difference. That difference is the advantage of size. Where the large firm has specialists in law, accounting, data processing and planning to predict problem areas and handle them, the small firm often reacts as they occur.... we’re seeing the effects of these problem areas on the small firm. Particularly important is government regulation, especially OSHA....”

Print-Equip News, a newspaper serving the graphic arts industry in the Western States, published the following factual report:

19 OF 23 FIRMS INSPECTED
RECEIVE OSHA CITATIONS

The Management Services Department of the Printing Industries of America, Inc. has just released the results of a survey they recently conducted in cooperation with the OSHA Sub-Committee of the Environmental Protection Board to assist their efforts in pinpointing problems resulting from OSHA inspections. Participating in the survey were 86 printing firms of which number 23 have had official OSHA inspections and 63 have not yet had that experience.

Something to think about, if you are among the lucky ones who still have the inspection in front of them, is that 19 of the 23 firms inspected were issued citations and 7 of the 19 were assessed penalties totaling $2,180.00 The penalties ran from a high of $1,085 to a low of $35.00 from not having a "Men" sign on the men's room door and "No Smoking" signs to all kinds of possible accident hazards....

The survey turned up 41 different types of violations

The survey points up the hard fact of life that OSHA is here to stay and that lack of attention on the part of management can be costly as well as inconvenient.

(After inspection of 23 firms, the following 143 citations were given by OSHA agents):

1. Places of employment not kept in sanitary condition-7
2. Fire extinguishers improperly mounted or inadequate-11
3. Trucks not chocked while being loaded or unloaded-4
4. Flexible electric cords being used instead of fixed wiring-1
5. Fans, pulleys, electrical saws, grinders, etc. not guarded or inadequate-39
6. Plugs, drills, water-cooler, refrigerator, etc. not grounded-10
7. Excessive noise exposure-3
8. Lack of covered receptacles-2
9. Lack of handrails on elevated ramp-7
10. Lack of protective glasses-2
11. Need of front commode seats-1
12. Floor in disrepair-2
13. Lack of "MEN" sign on men's room door-1
14. Lack of 3-prong outlets-1
15. Safety cans not identified-1
16. No one able to render first aid-1
17. Ladder without safety feet or otherwise defective-4
18. Key left in unattended fork lift-1
19. Exits not marked or blocked-9
20. Lack of "No Smoking" signs-1
21. No water for flushing electrolyte-1
22. Permanent aisles and passageways not marked and/or not in good repair -4
23. Lack of facilities for flushing eyes and body for emergency use-2
24. Quantity of flammable liquid exceeding limit and/or not in covered container-4
25. Failure to assure that each disconnecting means was legibly marked to indicate purpose-1
26. Failure to assure that flexible cords are connected to devices and to fillings that tension will not be transmitted to joint or terminal screws-1
27. Insufficient access and working space around electrical equipment-1
28. Failure to provide danger, caution and/or safety instruction signs where applicable-1
29. Failure to protect all exposed parts of horizontal shafting-1
30. Failure to post floor load in building-3
31. Lack of or maladjusted work rest-3
32. Failure to maintain proper adjustment between the grinding wheel and the adjustable tongue-1
33. Failure to separate oxygen cylinders from fuelgas cylinders-1
34. Failure to stack materials against sliding or slipping-5
35. Lack of booth or screens to enclose welder-1

36. Failure to provide water closet with doors, walls or partitions to assure privacy-1
37. Switches and control boxes not identified as to what they control.
38. Fire door not in operating condition-1
39. Failure to post signs reading "Not An Exit"-1
40. Failure to wear foot protection-1
41. Clothes line creating hazard-1

All of the foregoing concerning OSHA agents and their nitpicking harassment of printing firms may seem trivial in the face of this double-barrelled attack of inflation and recession coming upon us at one and the same time (they call it Stagflation, which signifies a stagnate economy and an inflated money supply occurring concurrently.) But, it should be recognized that this stagflation was brought about—deliberately, we suspect—in order to destroy the small businessman and have his business gobbled up by conglomerates and multinationals, or by integration into a government-backed public corporation if the giant private corporations didn't want that particular business.

Thomas Latimer of the American Federation of Small Business recently stated: "Small Business is being 'crucified on a cross of gold' by the growing National regulation of private property and enterprise through the: National Labor Relations Board, Federal Communications Commission, Federal Reserve Board, Occupational Safety & Health Administration, Environmental Protection Agency, Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, OEO Legal Services, Consumer Product Safety Administration, Workmen's Compensation Advisory Commission, Labor Dept. Wage & Overtime Administration, Food & Drug Administration, Federal Energy Office, Internal Revenue Service, Federal Trade Commission, Inter-State Commerce Commission, Federalized Unemployment Compensation, HEW and 50 other Federal agencies!"

The equation is elemental: Governmental oppression of free enterprise plus Governmental overspending equals Corporate Socialism, alias Regional Governance!

DON BELL REPORTS.....$24 per year
Extra Copies.....10¢ each

"Contrived Evolution of Regional Government," in booklet form, available on request
Single Copies.....$2.00 each
10 or more Copies.....$1.50 each
25 or more Copies.....$1.00 each

Please address all orders to:
DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

Don Bell Reports

Year Twenty-One Number Forty-Three November 1, 1974

INFLATION, BUREAUCRACY, AND CONSUMERISM

SOMEBODY FINALLY SAID IT!

"Inflation," says Webster's New Collegiate Dictionary, Copyright 1973, is "an increase in the volume of money and credit relative to available goods resulting in a substantial and continuing rise in the general price level."

Do Presidents such as Ford, Secretaries such as Simon, and Keynesian economists who aide them, never use a dictionary or consult any elementary reference book? In declaring his alleged war against inflation, did our appointed Commander-in-Chief neglect even to properly identify the enemy?

You'll recall that, before plotting the overall strategy of the WIN campaign, Ford was responsible for calling together almost one thousand business, labor, academic and professional leaders, asking them to suggest ways and means of defeating this economic cancer that is destroying Middle Class America. If press reports are correct, not one of those leaders properly identified inflation or suggested a truly effective way of halting inflation.

Well, we think you'll be gratified to know that we have been advised of one man who is in a position to know what he is talking about, who has the courage and the honesty to "tell it like it is." What he says is not new; every reader of Don Bell Reports is familiar with the facts he states. However, this man's testimony is important, not so much because of what he says, but because of who says it, and to whom it is said:—

On July 18, 1974, Darryl R. Francis, who is President of the Federal Reserve Bank of St. Louis, appeared before the Committee on Banking and Currency of the U.S. House of Representatives and, among other things, he told the Congressmen:

"My position regarding the cause of inflation and high market rates is that they both stem from the same source—an excessive trend rate of expansion of the nation's money stock. Monetary policy, therefore, can contribute to solving both of these problems over a period of years by fostering a non-inflationary rate of growth of the money supply."

That is a direct quote, taken from the testimony of a Federal Reserve System executive before a House Committee; testimony given before Jerry Ford gave his WIN speech and available to Jerry Ford before he gave all the wrong answers to the right questions in what we believe was a deliberate attempt to perpetuate inflation while pretending to be trying to end inflation.

Much of what Fed Executive Francis said to the Congressmen on July 18 was a defense of the Federal Reserve System; he tried to lay the blame on other groups and other people. But his diagnosis and prescribed treatment of the economic illness are diametrically opposed to those of Ford & Co. Here are more important quotes from the Francis testimony:—

* * * * *

I believe that the historically rapid rate of money growth of the past few years has caused an excessive rate of expansion of total spending in the economy. Since rapid money growth has stimulated a growth in demand for goods and services at rates much faster than our ability to produce, inflation has resulted....

High and rising market rates of interest go hand-in-hand with a high and accelerating rate of inflation. This is because lenders and borrowers of funds take into consideration their expectations with reference to the future rate of inflation. Lenders desire a market rate of interest which provides them a real rate of return plus a premium based on their expectations regarding the future of inflation. Also, during inflation borrowers are willing to pay a higher market rate of interest because they expect the prices of their products to rise, and they wish to avoid the higher construction and other costs associated with delaying new products. Thus, the interaction of demand and supply in the market for funds during a period of inflation results in market interest rates which embody an inflation premium....

Since the direct method of printing money to finance Government expenditures is prohibited in the U.S., the monetization of Government deficits has occurred indirectly. Our deficit spending is always financed, at least initially, through the sale of new Government securities to the public. But when the Federal Reserve System buys outstanding securities from the public, a part of the Government debt is ultimately being financed by the creation of new money. This is because the Federal Reserve System pays for the securities on the open market by creating a credit to member bank reserve accounts, which increases the monetary base and money held by the public....

(There are) three methods of financing Government expenditures - taxes, borrowing from the public, and indirect debt monetization. Elements of our society have been continually demanding additional services from the Government, such as more defense, more social security, more medical security, and so forth. Since these services absorb resources which are limited, someone has to give up resources from other productive uses.

When these additional services are paid for with increased taxes, the real resource cost is clearly visible to all taxpayers since they find their disposable income reduced. When they are financed by borrowing from the public, the effect is immediately felt by those competing for funds in capital markets and is visible in the form of higher interest rates. But in the case of debt monetization, the immediate and even the short-range impact is neither an increase in taxes, nor an increase in interest rates. And yet, real resources still are being transferred from private to Government use. The ultimate effect of this method of financing Government expenditures is manifested in an increase in the price level-inflation-and this occurs only after a substantial lag. It is this lack of immediate visibility of the costs associated with this method of financing, I believe, that has contributed to the process of inflation. Once the inflation has been generated, a substantial period of time is required to reverse it, and unfortunately this can be accomplished only by incurring costs of lost output and higher unemployment.

Thus, over short periods of time it has appeared that debt monetization gives society something for nothing. And...the occurrence of large Government deficits led to this course of action.

I can find no benefits accruing to the whole of society from debt monetization, but the risks are very serious and can be expressed in one word - inflation....

It would also be helpful if all segments of society would realize that rapid monetary growth, inflation, and high market interest rates go hand-in-hand; that, once initiated, inflation cannot be eliminated without some temporary costs in terms of slower growth of output and employment; and that considerable time will be required to reduce substantially both the rate of inflation and the level of interest rates. Such realizations would tend to mitigate the short-run pressures that in the past have resulted in postponements of efforts to curb inflation.

(End of quotes from testimony of Darryl R. Francis, President, Federal Reserve Bank of St. Louis, before House Committee on Banking and Currency, July 18, 1974).

The fact that we have quoted a Federal Reserve executive at length should not be construed as any defense of or praise for the Federal Reserve System. After all, the Federal Reserve "creates" this excessive money (which causes inflation) when it "pays for the (Treasury Dept.) securities on the open market by creating a credit to member bank reserve accounts, which increases the monetary base and money held by the public" (direct quote).

However, we are indebted to Fed Executive D.R. Francis for explaining how inflation is brought about and how it can be curbed; and for showing how our Federal Government and the independent Federal Reserve Corporation conspire to monetize debt and thus create inflation.

Conclusion: Those officers of the Federal Government responsible for this situation should be removed from office, the Federal Reserve System should be eliminated, and as the Constitution provides, only the Congress should have power "to borrow money on the credit of the United States;" and "to coin money, regulate the value thereof, and of foreign coin, and fix the standard of weights and measures."

THE REAL RULERS?

Since the most important difference between Time and Newsweek is their price at the newsstand (Time is lagging in the alleged inflationary spiral but is expected to catch up any week now), that other newsmagazine, U.S. News & World Report, tries mightily to be different, and in so trying often manages to present the conservative viewpoint in a commendable, and sometimes surprising, manner. The current issue is an example. Just before a national election that promised more frustration than hope, USN&WR added to that frustration by presenting an article which said-between the lines, of course-that it made very little difference who was elected, because they wouldn't be running the country anyway; that the real rulers of America are the appointed bureaucrats who are not touched by election changes since their positions are secure no matter who is elected to what office, thanks to civil service protection.

In a special report headlined "Washington's Bureaucracy: 'Real Rulers of America'," it is pointed out that one in every six civilian employees in the United States works for a government agency, and that "The federal bureaucracy has emerged as the nation's elite work force in pay, in privileges, and in power."

Repeating many of the facts that were presented in last week's Don Bell Reports, the newsmagazine then quotes a "management consultant who had conducted in-depth testing of 2,400 bureaucrats" and who had concluded that:

"In general, those who seek a post in the federal bureaucracy are not basically creative. They are group-oriented and low risk takers. Most of them are looking for a secure emotional womb. If you pass a one-year probation, you've got it knocked. It's damned near impossible to fire you.

"They all look alike in the Government office. There's no tempo like that in the outside world. By 10 a.m. they've got their fingers hooked around a coffee cup and they're on one tempo: slow. A man with any hustle who goes to work for the Government doesn't stay very long....

"The government has a merit system, but it's a misnomer. In the military or civil service, you can be a Joe Stupid and not do a - - - - thing."

Although elections have little or no effect on the bureaucrats, they do have an impact on elections because they have the right to vote, and because their official status may give them special influence over ordinary citizens. As USN&WR concludes in its special report:

"... there is concern over the bureaucracy's eventual impact on voting patterns. Even now, one observer points out, if each of 14.5 million bureaucrats could influence two other votes, it would add up to 43.5 million votes, or more than half the number cast in the last presidential election—a pressure weapon of potentially fearsome size.

"Yet no one, at present, sees a quick and effective answer to the increasingly long shadow that the federal bureaucracy—and its State and local counterparts—is casting over the nation.

"Observes former U.S. Senator John J. Williams, of Delaware, for years a leading critic of bureaucratic wastefulness and inefficiency: 'There's no question that bureaucracy is getting more costly than ever. The more you try to reform it, the worse it becomes'."

While much is made of the proposition that these over-paid, over-privileged, over-powerful, under-worked Government employees who travel toward pensions in slow gear, are the "Real Rulers of America," this is only partially and indirectly true. It should be understood that these 14.5 million people are merely civil servants, with accent on the "servant." Supposedly, they are servants of "we, the people." Actually they are servants of the elitist clique that established the rules and regulations under which they operate. To say that the run-of-the mill members of the bureaucracy rule America is like saying that the Gestapo ruled Nazi Germany, whereas its members merely obeyed orders; adding their personal sadistic embellishments at times perhaps, but obeying orders nonetheless. The members of the elitist clique that gave those orders were the real rulers. So also with civil servants in the United States.

Your permanently placed civil servant is not the person responsible for creating the Planning, Programming, Budgeting System (now usually called systems analysis), or for installing the system in every federal agency. It was not the civil servant who restructured the Bureau of the Budget into a Management Office whose superiors have control over all federal agencies. It was not the run-of-the-mill civil servant who brought on this Silent Revolution whereby the Nation was divided into Ten Federal Regions and an Executive Dictatorship was thus created.

This army of civil servants operates PPBS, provides czars for the Ten Regional Capitals. Soldiers in this bureaucratic army run our lives. As USN&WR notes: "They grant, withhold or revoke broadcasting licenses, slap penalties on erring taxpayers, and tell employers whom they must hire. They decide on loans to needy countries and welfare payments to needy Americans. They print the nation's money... they count noses, keep records on births, marriages, divorces, deaths, crimes, diseases and hundreds of other facts about genus Americanus, and pass judgment on such products as armaments, food and medicines...."

But they don't personally make the rules and regulations under which they operate. It is supposed to be the duty of the Congress to establish such rules and regulations, by passing the appropriate legislation; and it is supposed to be the duty of the President's office to see to it that such rules and regulations are observed by all federal agencies. But, even as with the Nation's money and credit, Congress has relinquished its authority and turned its constitutionally ordained duties to appointed "experts," and the Executive Branch has welcomed the aid and assistance of representatives of that elitist group that really rules America (by agents of the elitist group, we refer to such men as Robert Strange McNamara, Arthur F. Burns, Henry Kissinger, Roy Ash, Casper Weinberger and others who were key members of the Nixon Administration yet were untouched by Watergate and remain as key members of the Ford Administration.)

CONSUMERISM GOES INTERNATIONAL

"The multinational company and the multinational product are realities in our time," notes Arch W. Troelstrup, author of a textbook on consumerism. "Consumers in a number of countries want to buy—and therefore want to test—the same products and services. So, why not get together to test such products jointly?"

This is the argument that is being used to create an International Nader's Raiders Group which can do on the world scale what Consumer's Groups have been able to do on the national scale here in the United States.

First, let's do what Jerry Ford fails to do: properly identify the enemy. Consumerism is defined as the protection of the consumer's interests, as against false advertising, bad merchandise, dangerous things or situations, exorbitant prices, etc. Consumerism demands that paternalistic government protect its subjects, as a guardian might protect his ward, or a mother her child.

Melvin Munn on his Life Line broadcast of May 15, 1974, said: "Consumerism is an insult to the American people. (It) robs you of the basic right to choose for yourself. Lose that right and you become a ward of the state... Consumerists use their irresponsible and often unsupported conclusions to justify state control..."

"Those who want a socialist America will take it any way they can get it. Helping to create an elite force to control the production and distribution of goods through the indirect method of laws presumably adopted for safety, they circumvent the private enterprise, free trade, and capitalistic order of our economy.

"Socialism is a parasite. Its only success is in soaking up accumulated wealth. Socialism appeals to the general population only so long as it can develop and manipulate some cause or cure some problem.

"Consumerism is such a cause today. It is manufactured out of whole cloth... The performance record of Ralph Nader and his cohorts to date is more than sufficient evidence to demonstrate that consumerists are not one whit concerned about the safety and welfare of the people. They want to mind people's business. They want to needle, rile, and discredit business and industry. It is a cheap, transparent, and tragic intrusion by people of monumental conceit into the privacy and the private affairs of our citizenry."

In America, consumerism has caused an increase in the price of consumer goods in every area, especially at the supermarket. It has been responsible for those Rube Goldberg devices that plague motorists and that cause new automobiles to operate inefficiently. Consumerism has brought about the creation of OSHA which is destroying small business in America, and PSRO which would put a federal snooper in your doctor's office, checking your health records and telling him how he should prescribe for you. Consumerism has done much more toward completing the socializing of the United States. In fact, Consumerism has become such an effective weapon in the hands of the self-chosen elite that it has become international, to teach consumers how to get along with multinationals—and it has adopted the concept of Regionalism in its promotions!

IOCU (International Organization of Consumers Union) is a Dutch foundation with international offices at The Hague, Netherlands. Dr. Colston E. Warne, president of Consumers Union of U.S., Inc., "was largely responsible for promoting the creation of an International Organization of Consumers Unions."

We are quoting from a textbook, "The Consumer in American Society," McGraw Hill, 1974; a textbook said to be in use in many schools in the United States (Santa Monica, California was especially mentioned). From pages 636-7:

"As of Jan. 1, 1973, there were 73 consumer member organizations from 36 countries in IOCU... national and regional bodies are eligible to be associates of IOCU... In early 1973, IOCU had consultative or liaison status with ECOSOC, UNICEF, UNESCO, FAO, ISO, IEC, CEPT and the Consumers Protection Committee of the Council of Europe..."

"The multinational company and the multinational product and realities in our time. Consumers in a number of countries want to buy—and therefore want to test—the same products and services. So, why not get together to test such products jointly?"

What consumers really need, we believe, is protection from Consumers Unions...

DON BELL REPORTS is a weekly newsletter that accents the Christian American point of view. Two copies of each issue are mailed, first class postage, to each subscriber (one copy, airmailed, to overseas subscribers). Extra copies: 10¢ each. Complete service: $24 per year. Address orders:

DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

THE NEW SPIRIT OF '76

ORGANIZING INTERDEPENDENCE

While the citizens of the United States were being harassed by planned inflation, worried by recession and the resultant increase in unemployment, tormented by the unchecked spread of crime and corruption, there came temporary titillation through an election that really meant little since the only important difference between Democrat and Republican is the spelling. And, while all eyes were focused on the American scene, much action was taking place at the international level—action that looked toward Great Changes in 1976.

Hugh Mullineux of the British Atlantic Committee made the pattern plain: He urged that in 1976—the 200th anniversary of the U.S. Declaration of Independence—there be a “Declaration of Interdependence by the Atlantic Alliance members, with common citizenship, followed by appropriate political action.”

In order to make interdependence successful, added Ms Frances Fitzgerald of the Atlantic Union, “a strong system of management, a supranational government . . . must be devised.”

To launch this propaganda drive that would change the traditional “Spirit of '76,” from one of independence to interdependence, the Federal Union Board met on Oct. 12, 1974 in Washington, D.C., to learn of the plans as they concerned the NATO Nations, from one Elias Demetracopolous, an exiled Greek journalist who now serves as a consultant with David Rockefeller’s Chase Manhattan Bank. At the same time, and also in Washington, D.C., the Youth for Federal Union were called together to study “the implications of interdependence” at the National Leadership Institute for Young Political Leaders, held Oct. 11-14 at Trinity College. Speakers included Sen. Gale McGee, Gen. William C. Westmoreland, Miriam LeVering of the Ocean Education Project, Dr. John Ross, Associate Director of the Institute for Environmental Studies of the University of Wisconsin, and others.

In further preparation for promotion of this “New Spirit of '76,” the Como Group came into being. Imitating the Bilderberg Group, which took its name from the hotel where it first met, this One World group took its name from the Italian lake where the first meeting of the Standing Conference of Atlantic Organizations was held. According to the June, 1974 issue of Together, the Atlantic Union Bulletin:

“The Como Group will continue to serve as a clearinghouse for Atlantic organizations, giving advice, assistance, and impulsion rather than conducting projects. . . . The Third Annual Meeting will take place in Fontainebleau in April, 1975. . . .”

Organizations which are represented by this Como Group include Federal Union, Inc., North Atlantic Assembly, Atlantic Treaty Association, North Atlantic Assembly, The Trilateral Commission, the Mid-Atlantic Network, Atlantic Information Centre for Teachers, Federation of European/American Organizations, English Speaking Union, NATO, Atlantic Association of Young Political Leaders, the Atlantic Treaty Association, Aspen Institute for Humanistic Studies, Atlantic Institute for International Affairs, International Institute for Strategic Studies, etc. We are told that a complete directory of Atlantic Organizations “can be obtained by writing to: The Como Group, c/o Atlantic Information Centre for Teachers, 37a High Street, Wimbledon, London SW19 5BY, and enclosing $1.25.”

The important thing about this Como Group is the plan to establish a World Federation and world citizenship for all people in 1976—the 200th anniversary of the American Declaration of Independence!

But, note the indirect approach and the subtlety that are employed, both being the recognizable trademarks of the “Regional Government” promoters who created NATO, SEATO, Atlantic Union, etc. This Como Group does not promote World Government per se. Instead, it promotes the concept of interdependence between Nations, this interdependence to be achieved through the establishment of international bodies, the writing of multinational treaties, and the creating of global programs. Then, later, in order to make this interdependence function successfully, the whole world will come to understand that successful interdependence demands "a strong system of management, a supranational government."

In this context, the principle work of such men as Henry Kissinger and Robert Strange McNamara is the initiating of international agreements and the making of multinational programs, always with the "affluent" nations—and particularly the United States—providing the wherewithal, whether that be money, material, men or military aid.

The proposed World Food Bank Program is an excellent example of the cooperative effort of these two "agents of the Elite." For it was McNamara who first proposed and outlined the plans for a world food authority. Speaking before the world's money managers at an International Monetary Fund Conference held in Nairobi, McNamara pointed out how the food-producing nations of the world should turn over their surpluses to a world authority that would then redistribute food in much the same manner that IMF redistributes money to the needy nations.

What with Watergate and a series of conflicting international developments like the Oil Ploy, the food bank scheme was postponed and arrangements made for an international conference to be held in the first week of November, 1974, at Rome.

When, according to plan, the Representative from Michigan, Gerald Ford, was appointed to replace the resigning Richard Nixon as President of the United States, one of the first official acts of the newly appointed was to go before the General Assembly of the United Nations and assure the Nations, one and all, that the voice of Henry Kissinger was as the very voice of Uncle Sam in all matters pertaining to international relations. Later, Ford announced that the Secretary of State also would appear on behalf of the United States at the upcoming World Food Conference to be held at Rome, superseding Agriculture Secretary Earl Butz as head of the U.S. delegation.

It was at this time that the eminent columnist Paul Scott scored a scoop over all his less courageous colleagues, by telling the whole story in his column of Sept. 28, 1974. The column is still pertinent and timely and worth reprinting.

FORD BACKING KISSINGER'S PLAN FOR GLOBAL OIL AND FOOD POLICY

Whether he fully realizes it or not, President Ford has put his stamp of approval on Secretary of State Henry Kissinger's grand design foreign policy for the establishment of a loosely knit world government before the end of the 1970s.

By calling for the development of a global strategy and policy for food and oil within the structure of the United Nations, the President clearly signaled his acceptance of the "new international order" being sought by Kissinger.

In linking the world's food and oil supplies together with all-out public support for his secretary of state, the stage was set by the President to have Kissinger use the full prestige of the U.S. government to implement his emerging world order plan.

The decision to have the free-wheeling secretary of state, rather than Agriculture Secretary Earl Butz, head the U.S. delegation to the World Food Conference in Rome in November shows the President's commitment to Kissinger.

Instead of using this nation's massive food production as a U.S. foreign policy tool for the development of freedom throughout the world, the President accepted Kissinger's plan of passing policy control over U.S. food surpluses—and eventually all U.S. food—to an international body through the establishment of an international food reserve.

Once this concept of international policy control over food is accepted by U.N. members, Kissinger then plans to move to establish this same concept over oil and eventually all energy in the world.

It is Kissinger's belief, according to his aides, that by controlling food one can control people, and by controlling energy, especially oil, one can control nations and their financial systems. By placing food and oil under international control along with the world's monetary system, Kissinger is convinced a loosely knit world government operating under the framework of the United Nations can become a reality before 1980.

How Kissinger plans to maneuver international policy control over oil is just now beginning to emerge and is one of the most intriguing stories of our times.

As they watch this strategy develop, government insiders see Kissinger using the disastrous financial position developing among industrial nations to put across his scheme. The reasoning of Kissinger, they say, is that the major industrial nations, including the United States, will soon be in such bad financial shape, due to the fourfold increase in oil prices and its related inflation, that they will have no other choice than to join in a united action plan.

This financial plight of the industrial nations is clearly indicated by recent decisions taken in separate areas of the world. Both decisions involved the borrowing of billions of dollars from the Middle East oil producers. The first involved the Japanese government, which must import 95 per cent of its energy from abroad. It decided to seek a billion dollar loan to help pay for its oil imports for the remainder of 1974. The other decision was made by the European Common Market, which is made up of the largest industrial nations of Europe. The organization is now seeking a loan of $2 billion to help its members meet their soaring fuel bills.

The reason for these loans is very simple. The industrial nations as a group, including the United States, will incur in 1974 a deficit of $22 billion compared with a $10 billion surplus in 1973.

In sharp contrast, the combined surpluses of the oil exporting nations will increase anywhere from $58 billion to $85 billion this year, from $5 billion in 1973. This unprecedented transfer of funds from Europe, Japan and the United States to the Middle East is bringing the world to the brink of financial disaster.

In other words, the nations that make up the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) will in a few years have sufficient reserves to dominate the world's monetary system.

With the OPEC in control of most of the world's oil and money, Kissinger sees a confrontation situation developing between oil producers and consumers out of which will arise the internationalization of oil production, pricing, and distribution.

(End of Paul Scott column)

As we commented previously in this letter, the present plans of the promoters of the concept of interdependence do not call for the construction of an actual World Government. Rather, the plans call for the establishment of as many international authorities as possible. These international authorities would operate under the power granted them through treaties; and the treaties would by their very nature supersede any national sovereignty that might have existed in the particular area covered by the particular treaty—and such a muddle and mess would be brought about by the existence of so many different supranational authorities with their overlapping jurisdictions and their areas of conflict both at national and international levels, that the establishment of One Central Authority—with a World Police to back up its decisions—would be the only alternative to universal anarchy.

So, according to plan and as might be expected, when Herr Kissinger arrived in Rome to deliver the keynote speech before the assembled representatives from some 130 different Nations, States and Sub-States, he did not demand the establishment of one World Authority to deal with food; he called for the establishment of three World Authorities to deal with the one problem.

Speaking from the same general outline that had been used by Robert Strange McNamara at Nairobi, Kissinger set forth a five-point program and called for three international bodies to carry them out. Here is the gist of Kissinger's program, as published by the New York Times:

The challenge before this conference is to translate needs into programs and programs into results. There is no time to lose. I have set forth a five-point platform for joint action.

1. To concert the efforts of the major surplus countries to help meet the global demand.
2. To expand the capacity of chronic, food-deficit developing nations for growth and greater self-sufficiency.
3. To transfer resources and food to meet the gaps which remain.
4. To improve the quality of food to insure adequate nutrition.
5. To safeguard men and nations from sudden emergencies and the vagaries of weather.

I have outlined the contributions that the United States is prepared to make in national or multinational programs to achieve each of these goals. And I have proposed three new international groups to strengthen national efforts, coordinate them and give them global focus:

- * The Exporters Planning Group.
- * The Food Production and Investment Coordinating Group.
- * The Reserves Coordinating Group.

A number of suggestions have been made for a central body to fuse our efforts and provide leadership. The United States is open-minded about such an institution. We strongly believe, however, that whatever the mechanisms, a unified, concerted and comprehensive approach is an absolute requirement. The American delegation headed by our distinguished Secretary of Agriculture Earl Butz is prepared to begin urgent discussions to implement our proposals. We welcome the suggestions of other nations gathered here. We will work hard and we will work cooperatively.

There was one set of developments that seemed to make this particular parley more important than most international conferences of this nature: Soviet Russia and Red China both sent delegations to this confab; both cooperated in the discussions; both made promises concerning the turning over of surplus grains to the international authority which would be created to accept same, for storage and/or for redistribution to needy nations

Moreover, while Russian and Chinese delegates were on amicable relations in Rome, and were "agreeing to consider a program to limit their foreign sales in an effort to free grain supplies for emergency aid to hungry people," even more startling news was emanating from Peking and Moscow. From Moscow came the story that "China, in a major shift in its public position, told the Soviet Union that she was interested in a non-aggression pact."

However, the present ploy has to do with the control of people through the control of food and the control of nations through the control of energy, especially oil. These are Kissinger's chief concerns at the present time.

It will be noted that Kissinger was very busy paying calls on the heads of state of the Middle East Nations, especially the Nations that export oil. He left the Middle East to go to Rome and make a keynote address at the food conference, then he flew back immediately to continue his discussions with Middle East leaders. The assumption that these visits have something to do with arranging a permanent peace in that part of the world, is sheer camouflage. Kissinger's mission has to do with finding a way to internationalize oil.

Suddenly Black Gold has become far more valuable than Yellow Gold; and with the coming of the technological age that old statement attributed to the first Rothschild: "Permit me to issue and control the money of a nation, and I care not who makes its laws," might now be paraphrased to read:

"Permit me to control the sources of energy of a nation, and I care not who controls its money or makes its laws."

Along with the internationalizing of the control of the world's food, oil, energy, and money, there must also be the internationalizing of the nation's armed forces. And, almost unnoticed and certainly not mentioned in the popular press, is the fact that our armed services are being converted from defenders of the Nation into international police: In a sharp criticism of the kind of officers now being turned out by the United States Naval Academy, Admiral Hyman Rickover father of the first atomic submarine, told a House Appropriation Subcommittee:

"I continue to find the Naval Academy offering midshipmen a wide variety of courses with high-sounding names in support of major programs which bear little relationship to learning how to operate the highly complex modern Navy. Instead of concentrating on teaching the basic subjects of history, geography, English, physics, engineering, mathematics, ordnance and seamanship in consecutive and ordered intellectual sequence, the Naval Academy teaches systems analysis, analytical management, international law, computer science, economics, and political science. This is absurd."

In substantiation of the above, we have a copy of the Naval War College second annual report for 1974. We quote from page 66 of that report:

"Prior to World War II the objective of the Naval War College was to teach officers how to beat the Japanese Fleet. In the immediate post-WW II era the entire Military Establishment became increasingly aware of the interaction between military considerations and diplomacy and politics. The scope of the War College program was extended to include substantial emphasis on international relations. Beyond that, every year there was something new added to the curriculum because of the pressures or the vogue of the day. There came a time when balance of payments was something of interest to the military; there came a time when the planning, programming, and budgeting system was the latest innovation; there came a time when multipolarity was replacing bipolarity as the current terminology." (Italics added-Ed.)

From the above it would appear that Naval Officers are being taught a little of everything except how to defend a country and run a warship. International relations are more important than national defense, and systems management is more important than ship management. And, of course, the same general criticisms are applicable to all the service academies.

Admiral Rickover put his finger on another dangerous innovation when he said, "In my opinion enrolling women at any of the service academies goes a step further toward their permanent downgrading and eventual demise. Unless and until the Navy allows women to serve in and command ships in combat, there is no need to train them at an institution whose prime purpose is to turn out officers of line, eligible to succeed to command at sea."

Of course, the Admiral is wrong in this; The prime purpose of service academies now is to turn out prospective international police officers. They are, seemingly, being trained to provide a security force for the control of food (which will insure the control of people), for the control of oil (which will insure the control of nations), and for the carrying out of the orders that will be issued by the World Authority that men like Kissinger are being paid to create.

Yes, they certainly are making a mockery of "The Spirit of '76."

DON BELL REPORTS is a weekly newsletter that accents the Christian American point of view. Two copies are sent each subscriber. Additional copies: 10¢ each. Complete service $24 per year. Address all orders and correspondence to: DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223 Palm Beach, Florida 33480

THE INFLUENCE OF THOSE WHO SAY THEY ARE JEWS

ISRAEL AN AMERICAN COLONY?

On the morning of November 13, 1974, the world situation was indeed explosive:

- * Headlines were asking, "Can Kissinger Head Off Mideast War?"
- * For the first time since President Truman had acted as godfather at the birth of the new state called Israel, the displaced Palestinians were to have their say and present their plea for justice before an international body.
- * Yasir Arafat had been promised safe conduct and had been flown to the United Nations headquarters in New York City, where he would present the case of the Palestine Liberation Organization before the General Assembly.
- * Pro-Israeli demonstrators—100,000 of them according to the commercial news media—were picketing the UN and waving banners reading "Arafat Go Home," and "No Surrender to Murderers," while assassination threats were said to be running "better than five a day."

Meanwhile, the Ford Administration had at long last admitted that the United States is in a state called recession; coal miners were on strike; steel foundries were banking their fires; automobile assembly lines were slowing to a halt; unemployment had gone beyond the officially proclaimed danger point of six per cent; prices were still rising; and there was no real leadership of any kind being manifested. In fact, Jerry Ford, as though the kitchen was too hot, was leaving the mess to his subordinates and preparing to take a totally unnecessary trip to Japan and points beyond.

Among the people in the United States there was much discussion about whether to blame the Arabian oil barons or the Jewish bankers for the economic plight in which the nation—and the world—found itself.

This was the general situation on November 13 when The Washington Post wire service chose to recall that back on October 10—over a month earlier—the Chairman of the U.S. Joint Chief of Staff had said publicly that the Jews have too much influence in the United States, that "Jews own, you know, the banks in this country, and the newspapers."

Of course, four-star Air Force General Geo. S. Brown had to soften his remarks and tender something of an apology. But, he said what he said, and said he said it, just the same. In case you missed the story, we reprint it as it appeared on the front page of the Miami Herald on November 13, 1974:

TOP GENERAL CITES 'INFLUENCE OF JEWS'

Washington—General George S. Brown, the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, has publicly suggested that Israel has too much influence in the U.S. Congress and that Jews "own, you know, the banks in this country, the newspapers."

Brown, the nation's highest ranking military officer, also suggested that if a severe new oil embargo imposed not merely inconvenience, but suffering among people in this country, that Americans might "get tough-minded enough to set down the Jewish influence in this country and break that lobby."

The four-star Air Force general, who took over as chairman of the Joint Chiefs last July, made these remarks during a question-and-answer session on Oct. 10 following a speech attended by about 150 persons at the Duke University law school forum in Durham, N.C.

In a telephone interview Tuesday night Brown acknowledged that he had made those remarks. He explained that he just tried to cover too much ground in a single answer to a question on the complex and volatile Middle East situation "and it just came out too damn poorly."

As Air Force chief of staff, Brown was in charge of the American arms airlift to Israel last fall that is widely credited with helping stave off severe military problems for the Israelis. He said that "it is going to be awfully easy to conclude (from the Duke remarks) for anyone who wants to, that the chairman is anti-Semitic. That's just not true."

Brown's comments with respect to Israeli and Jewish influence in this country came as part of his response to a question concerning whether the United States was contemplating the use of force against oil-producing nations.

"Now," Brown said, "in answer to the question of would we use force in the Middle East, I don't know. I hope not. We have no plans to. It is conceivable, I guess, it's kind of almost as bad as the 'Seven Days in May' thing, but you can conjure up a situation where there is another oil embargo and people in this country are not only inconvenienced and uncomfortable, but suffer and they get tough-minded enough to set down the Jewish influence in this country and break that lobby.

"It's so strong you wouldn't believe now," Brown went on. "We have the Israelis coming to us for equipment. We say we can't possibly get the Congress to support a program like that. They say, 'Don't worry about the Congress. We'll take care of the Congress.'

"Now, this is somebody from another country," Brown added, "but they can do it. They own, you know, the banks in this country, the newspapers; you just look at where the Jewish money is in this country."

The General is highly regarded within the military and Defense Department circles where there is no concern that his remarks will hurt him. There is also a widespread feeling of despair over these remarks, and the way they were phrased, because Brown, as one of the Navy's top commanders put it Tuesday "certainly is not anti-Semitic."

The only public report of Brown's remarks apparently was an article in the North Carolina Anvil, a so-called alternative newspaper published in Durham. The article said local newsmen from other papers were present but reported only a general "re-hash" of Brown's over-all presentation.

(End of article)

The time lag could be significant. General Brown made his remarks on October 10. Why such an incident should make front pages over a month later certainly suggests the possibility of deliberate editorial manipulation; especially when the delayed story hit those front pages on the very day that the great confrontation between Israeli and Palestine Liberation Organization representatives was to occur at the United Nations General Assembly. The circumstances are doubly suspect since, as Gen. Brown said, The Washington Post, which released the story a month later, is "Jewish owned."

The hint of any attempt to stir up a wave of so-called anti-Semitic fervor at a strategic time would have been less pronounced, had it not been for the fact that the "Jewish owned" New York Times chose to publish in its book review section of November 10, a critical review of Stephen D. Isaac's book "Jews and American Politics." A sub-head atop page 5 reads:

*3% of the population, 4% of the vote,
X% of the influence*

The critical book review is by Pete Hamill, who "is working on a novel about the Irish in America in the 19th century."

What drew our attention to this particular book review was an illustration that had been borrowed from the book itself and reproduced at the bottom of the page on which the review began (page 5). It showed former New York State Governor Nelson Rockefeller and Lieutenant Governor Wilson, both wearing skull-caps of the type always worn by men entering synagogues. The caption to the picture read: "Lieutenant Governor Wilson and Governor Rockefeller at the dedication of the new Garment Center Synagogue October, 1966."

This was supposed to be an illustration of the use of political wisdom since, according to author Isaacs and reviewer Hamill... "in the eight states with large Jewish populations (California, Maryland, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Florida, Connecticut and New York), they are often the difference between victory and defeat. In New York State, Jews cast between 15 and 20 per cent of the vote in general elections; in New York City, where one of every five residents is Jewish, they cast nearly half the votes in Democratic primaries. Nationally, the 3 per cent that is Jewish casts 4 per cent of the vote; that 1 per cent equals about 750,000 votes concentrated in large electoral vote states, enough to provide national victory in close elections."

All of the preceding, however, is of little importance when compared with the political influence of some of the individuals that call themselves Jews. Particularly cited in the book are the political journalists (David Broder, Art Buchwald, Theodore White, Walter Lippmann, and others); the media experts (David Garth, Charles Guggenheim, and others); the pollsters (Louis Harris, Daniel Yankelovich); the fund-raisers (Arthur Krim for the Democrats, Max Fisher for the Republicans), the speechwriters (among others, William Safire for the Republicans, Democrats Richard Goodwin and Adam Walinsky).

Hamill adds that "The chairman of the Democratic National Committee, Robert Strauss, is Jewish, as were seven of the first eight names on the top-level 'enemies list' drawn up in the White House in 1971."

"But," says reviewer Hamill of author Isaacs, "he also points out that Jewish influence still seems to operate most frequently on the secondary level. There has never been a network anchor man who was Jewish, due probably to the fact that all three networks grew to power and prominence under three brilliant Jews: William S. Paley (C.B.S.), David Sarnoff (N.B.C.), and Leonard Goldenson (A.B.C.) And Jews do not hold 'out front' elective offices in proportion to their share of the population."

"In the history of the United States," Isaacs writes, "108 Jews have been elected to high office—Governor, Senator, or Congressmen. Six-tenths of 1 per cent of all Congressmen have been Jewish; nine-tenths of 1 per cent of all Senators have been Jewish."...generally, according to Isaacs, most Jews continue to exert their influence on the secondary level of American politics."

Then, in Hamill's review of Isaac's book, we come upon this rather remarkable statement, which we quote verbatim:

"...generally, according to Isaacs, most Jews continue to exert their influence on the secondary level of American politics. Isaacs himself 'finds the position of America's politically active Jews to have striking parallels with their historic role in European politics; that of being court Jews.' Only the job descriptions have changed. 'Here one calls them strategists, computer experts, media managers, fund-raisers, but in the main they are still raising money and doing chores for the Protestants and Catholics who can then hire the manpower to fight their (political) wars.'

"On some levels, this is, of course, absolutely true. There is no better example of a 'court Jew' than Henry Kissinger, who started in service to a prince (Rockefeller), disregarded moral considerations while advising Richard Nixon, continues on in the court which Jerry Ford inherited from the dishonored king, and might yet find himself again in service to the original prince."

Isaacs discusses Kissinger, of course, but only in the narrowest political way; he never truly questions Kissinger's policies as they affect Jews as they accord or deviate with Jewish tradition, or as they serve the interests of the American establishment. Certainly that is a rich area for discussion and analysis in the way Kissinger has been used to deal with Israel in the wake of the Yom Kippur War; once the Arabs employed the 'oil weapon,' and Americans were forced to choose between Arabs and Jews the policy was changed. In some ways, Kissinger was employed in the way black policemen are employed in ghettos; no American Secretary of State ever made it more clear that Israel was essentially an American colony, and must bend to American interests."

(End of quotation, italics added).

The italicized portion of the preceding quotation revives a thought that has been expressed by many ranking Zionists who reside in the United States and have no intention of ever moving to Israel; a thought that has been soundly and publicly condemned by such Israeli-Firsters as David Ben Gurion and Golda Meir: that the real Zionist Promised Land is the United States of America and that Israeli citizens should look upon their state (which was first proclaimed a state by a President of the United States) as an American Colony—just what reviewer Hamill says Secretary of State Kissinger presently is telling the Israelis.

Another part of this revealing review is sure to incite a wave of what has been mistakenly called anti-Semitism on the part of "Protestants and Catholics" who read and ponder its portent, in a paragraph concerning the importance of one Norman Mailer:

"(Norman) Mailer has clearly been a major influence on an entire generation of political writers, thinkers and activists.... A novelist helps us to feel, and without the ability to feel, no group of citizens can ever respond to a politician. ~~The last 10 years~~ of our politics should have taught us that it doesn't matter who the county leader is, or what the polls say, if we do not possess the tools to detect the presence of evil. In a Protestant country, the Old Testament must police the New, and Mailer—to mention only one Jewish-American artist—served us better as a policeman than did the more conventional, respectable journalists such as (David) Broder."

To suggest that a porno-penman such as Norman Mailer epitomizes the supposedly commendable police power of the Old Testament over the New Testament, is to engage in a peculiar type of blasphemy that is at least as old as the time when a set of the original Pharisees said that Jesus was casting out devils by the power of Beelzebub, lord of the flies and prince of the devils. And to think of a man such as Mailer serving as guardian of the morals of Americans is about as logical as declaring Gore Vidal to be a preacher of righteousness.

However, reviewer Hamill does have a very important point when he says that the artists—authors, actors, producers, painters, composers, lyricists—are perhaps even more important in the “reshaping” of America than the fund-raisers, political staffers, pollsters and pressure-appliers; and, as Hamill says: “the one huge weapon that American Jews have forged to place themselves deeply, and inextricably, into American society ... is art.”

The following comments concerning the book, “Jews and American Politics” and its author Stephen Isaacs, are quoted directly from the New York Times, without any comment from your author:

“Isaacs also mentions the heavy presence of young American Jews in the New Left of the 1960’s singling out Jerry Rubin and Abbie Hoffman, and stresses the work that many of them did in opposition to the Vietnam war. But he nowhere mentions Joseph Heller whose novel ‘Catch 22’ did more to kill the spirit of jingo American militarism than the entire New Left, specifically because, through the force of his art, Heller managed to rearrange certain central myths. Heller drove his novel straight through the heart of ‘machismo,’ with all its lies about physical courage; he made a heroic act out of refusal, and literally thousands of young people chose to follow Yossarian where they would not follow Lyndon Johnson.

“Even more astonishing, Isaacs chooses to ignore still another Jewish-American writer whose words, language and cold anger sustained an entire generation of American young people. I mean Bob Dylan...”

“Isaacs, having assigned himself a rich subject, almost deliberately chooses to narrow the focus, to his own loss. Somewhere in this book, he says of Walter Lippmann: ‘One certainly could never conclude from his writings that he was Jewish.’ It is another way of saying: ‘funny, he doesn’t write Jewish.’ This book, by dealing with the fruits of Jewish industry and ignoring the glories of Jewish genius, settles for less than the subject demands. It is packed with useful information, but I wish Isaacs had allowed himself to write more Jewish.”

(End of book review)

We haven’t read the book and we have no desire to do so. The review was sufficient. But, it seems strange that here is a book of over 300 pages, with illustrations including a picture of Nelson Rockefeller wearing a skull-cap, retailing for $8.95 and purporting to tell all about “Jews and American Politics” and it says nothing about who owns the banks and the newspapers. And when the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff says something about this phase of “Jews and American Politics,” he is reprimanded soundly by his civilian Commander-in-Chief and threatened with dismissal unless he repents and apologizes.

Our personal conclusion: For their own purposes those who say they are Jews are in the process of creating a surge of anti-Semitism. Israel is on the verge of economic collapse, devaluation of the currency has made matters worse. Suddenly the power of the purse favors the Arabs (because of the oil manipulations). The Palestine Liberation Organization has suddenly aroused the sympathy of most of the world. War is a real threat and the United States has so undermined its own defenses that another arms airlift like that of the Yom Kippur War is next to impossible.

Furthermore, with the Vietnam fiasco still fresh in the minds of young Americans and American forces being placed on a “volunteer basis,” the very thought of sending American forces—especially ground forces—to the Mideast to defend that “American Colony” could cause such a social and political upheaval in the United States that the results of decades of careful planning could be lost to the ruling Establishment.

Hence the desire on the part of a minority group within the United States to create a state of so-called anti-Semitic hysteria, in order to gain widespread support financially, materially and morally. That this old tried and tested psychological gimmick still works, is proved by Jerry Ford’s immediate reaction to a few words spoken and then kept out of the papers and off the air for over a month, until the strategic moment for release.

Yes, the pen is still mightier than the sword, the microphone than the nuclear threat, and those who say they are Jews know this, act accordingly and expect reaction accordingly.

DON BELL REPORTS is a weekly newsletter that accents the Christian American point of view. Complete service: $24 per year. Extra copies: 10¢ each. Please address all orders and correspondence to:

DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

THE WORLD IS BEING REGIONALIZED

ENGLAND IS LATEST VICTIM

Regionalism is a form of scientific management that has been designed for the control of people, property, and production. It is characterized by three basic principles:

- 1) Rule is by appointive officials;
- 2) Enforcement of rules is by regional agents armed with police power, thus constituting a regional police force; and
- 3) All private property must be abolished or property rights rigidly controlled.

This regional power structure is pyramidal, and multi-tiered, with all power emanating from the "computerized all-seeing eye" at the apex of the pyramid, and trickling down through the many-tiered control centers to the community, or grass roots level.

Conversely, there are control agents at the local tier who are responsible to control agents at the County or Metro level, who are in turn responsible to control agents at the sub-regional level, who are in turn responsible to control agents (councilmen) at the ten-branched Federal Regional level, who are in turn responsible to a Federal Domestic Council, which is in turn responsible to the Office of Management and Budget, which manages and services the "computerized all-seeing eye" at the apex of the Regional Power Structure which is as a pyramid. (If this description is confusing, there is an illustration on the reverse side of any one dollar federal reserve note which should help one to understand. The pyramid is shown, with its all-seeing eye at the apex. This can be used as a fitting illustration of the Regional Governance Power Structure at the national-regional level. Beyond this, of course, there are the World Regions, each made up of many nations; and the World Control Center, or the so-called Invisible Government).

This regional power structure was made possible because the citizens of the States and the federal establishment lost all power to control their governments. Elections have become meaningless because national elections are controlled by special interest groups at the party nomination level and by minority groups at the general election level and because those elected have surrendered their power to an entrenched bureaucracy and appointed control agents who are not affected by elections.

We saw some interesting figures concerning national elections during this last futile attempt at making the franchise meaningful: In 1840, 80.2% of the registered voters participated in the Presidential election. By 1900 voter participation had dropped to 73.2%; in 1940, 62.5%. A new low was reached in 1972 with a voter participation of 55.6%; and the percentage is expected to be much lower in 1976, with a minority of registered voters participating.

At least a part of the reason for this voter apathy stems from the fact that it doesn't make much difference who is elected when appointees really run the government.

In short, Regionalism has replaced the traditional Representative Republican form of Government laid down in the United States Constitution before all the crippling amendments of the twentieth century were added.

In our booklet, "The Contrived Evolution of Regional Government," we detailed the development of this scientific management system, and we also pointed out that Regionalism is a worldwide movement. We gave some details of the regionalizing of the U.S.S.R., France, Italy, etc.

Now it seems that England also has succumbed to Regionalism, we are indebted to New Hampshire State Representative Nelson A. Pryer for the following report:

The United Nations Organization has been busy implementing its assigned task of regionalizing the world. Not satisfied with existing government boundaries and forms of government, it has meddled into the internal affairs of member nations. By its Resolution 1086, the UNO authorized the Secretary-General to organize a cadre to promote regionalism along with research facilities and training programs.

A member nation of the UNO, England is now feeling the full effect of the heel of regionalism. England has been busted up into nine regions.... The Town and Country Planning Act of 1947 set the stage for England. Under this act, the County (for urban areas) and County Borough (for rural areas) had to come up with a planning program that would meet the approval of the Minister of Planning. Failure of the 140 Councils to come up with a suitable plan by 1952 would cause the Central Government to supersede and impose its own planning program. The Act was in detail—requiring County and Town maps, supporting evidence and specifics such as requiring all new or expanded industries to have "Industrial Development Certificates" before start-up could get underway.

The softening-up process having gotten underway, the next step was much easier. That was to break England up into nine regions, in 1965. Each region was administered by a Regional Planning Board (consisting of appointees of the senior staff officer of the Regional Offices of the Central Government) and an Economic Planning Council (consisting of appointees of the Secretary of State for Environment).

To lock in this appendage and make it an integral part of the body politic, the Town and Country Planning Act of 1968 was passed by Parliament. Further inroads were made on traditional "home rule" of the 140 County and County Borough Councils through the formation of forty-four Planning Authorities to supersede and replace "local" planning.

In effect, the act institutionalized three-tier planning. The Central Government established national policy. Then, the nine regional planning councils were to collaborate with the forty-four Planning Authorities to plot their regional strategies, with resultant plans subject to modification by the Central Government. Each Regional Planning Council's "regional strategy" would then be filled out by the Planning Authorities assigned to it, with final plan approval subject to the Central Government.

... The English government is becoming unglued as power follows money. These nine Regional Planning Councils have acquired power through control over capital expenditures, various grants and subsidies which each has to dish out. Power is thus gravitating around each of the regionals as the Crown government is phased out along with the rest of the heretofore nations of the world. None are so blind as those who refuse to see.

(End of Rep. Pryor's report)

This "three-tiered" planning in England has its direct parallel in Regionalism as it has been developed in the United States: National Policy (Planning) is established by the Domestic Council which works in conjunction with the Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations (ACIR) and the Office of Management and Budget (OMB). Then the Ten Federal Regional Councils collaborate with the eleven Cabinet rank Departments and all federal agencies that provide grants, subsidies, services, instructions, rules and regulations, and otherwise provide "scientific management" of people, property and production. Then the final approval of all planning (long range goals) and programming (short range objectives) are subject to the approval of OMB (which then secures the necessary budgeting).

There is nothing really new about this concept of Regionalism. It was a part of the New Deal Program introduced in FDR's Administration, a part of the program that could not be effectuated at that time and had to await the Nixon Administration before it could be fully established.

However, at the international level, with the founding of the United Nations Organization that would-be world government was charged with the task of introducing Regionalism into every nation where such intrusion was permitted or tolerated.

The Secretary General of the United Nations was instructed to appoint a group of experts to work through the UN's Department of Economic and Social Affairs, and to promote Regionalism, while also providing research facilities and training programs for the "change agents" who would introduce Regionalism into the governmental structures of the nations of the world.

"Planning for Economic Development" was the name given this program for the promotion of Regionalism, and it fell naturally within the purview of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO). So, in the early 1950s UNESCO established regional workshops for the training of "change agents" in scientific management, budget control, etc. These workshops were set up in Asia, Latin America, Africa and the Far East. Later, between 1960 and 1963, new and improved training centers were established in Latin America (Santiago), Asia (New Delhi), the Arab States (Beirut), and Africa (Dakar). These new and improved training centers were made possible through the generosity and cooperation of the Ford Foundation, the World Bank, and the French Government. To provide a nexus for these regional centers and for the universities and other organizations in Europe that could be induced to promote studies and training in Regionalism, there was established in Paris in 1963 the International Institute for Educational Planning (France was one of the first of the European Nations to "Regionalize," as is explained—with accompanying map—in our booklet "The Contrived Evolution of Regional Government".)

"Planning for Economic Development" was the title given at least two publications of the United Nations, but none of these publications are now available to the public. However, we were fortunate in having received from a private source photocopies of Volume Two, which deals with "Centrally Planned Economies," and was published in 1965.

In reading this UN report, we were amazed at the striking similarities and parallels between the Regional Government apparatus in Socialist countries, and the Regional Governance concept in the United States. Czechoslovakia, for example, "was definitely established as a socialist society" in 1948, and "nearly all industry, building, transport, wholesale trade and foreign commerce came under public ownership."

This is the essential difference: Czechoslovakia aimed at public ownership (which is the Communist branch of Socialism), whereas in the United States the aim is corporate ownership, with the monopoly corporations acting as a part of the Government (which is the Fascist branch of Socialism.)

But, whatever the economic form, the machinery of Regionalism remains the same. In Czechoslovakia, we are told that the central planning agency is called the "State Planning Commission (SPC), whose president is always a prominent member of the Cabinet." We are then told that "to foster the close collaboration of other central offices with the SPC and to emphasize their responsibility for the establishment of the comprehensive economic plan, it may be useful to nominate leading personalities of the major central economic administrations as members of the planning commission, in addition to other prominent representatives from the economic and scientific fields and the leading personnel of the SPC itself."

Paralleling the above Czechoslovakian structure is our United States Domestic Council, drawing upon the "leading personalities" of ACIR, and cooperating with the other White House agencies within the Executive Office of the President: the Office of Economic Opportunity, the Council on Environmental Quality, etc.

Then, in this description of the Czechoslovakian Regionalism, we come upon the counterparts of our own United States Regionalism: our OMB, Federal Reserve, the PPB System of control, and the various insurance agencies connected with our own Executive Branch. See if you can identify the American counterparts as we quote from this report from Czechoslovakia:

"For the purpose of providing adequate factual information...it is necessary to build up a state statistical apparatus, directed by a central statistical organization, which must secure, attest and elaborate such information.

"A further essential government instrument for the planned management...is the finance ministry. Its task is to prepare the state budget and to manage the institutions of the finance system. In a planned economy, the comprehensive budget has a special character owing to its connexion with the over-all plan: it mirrors the material proportions of the comprehensive plan. Hence, a close connexion between plan and budget is unavoidable and necessary. A further link in the Czechoslovakian system is the State Bank, which operates as a deposit bank and credit centre for all organizations and enterprises, and is also the bank of issue responsible for financial operations abroad. The branch offices of the State Bank are in constant contact with local enterprises and exercise an influence on them by diverse financial instruments designed to control the fulfillment of the planned tasks and to maintain planning and financial discipline.

In addition to the State Bank, the financial system in Czechoslovakia includes savings banks, which accumulate the savings of the population, and grant credit to individuals, and the State Insurance Institute, which is a state monopoly."

Then we come to an explanation of how the Regional Councils operate in this socialist state:

"For the solution of fundamental questions...the Government establishes special committees...(They) are constituted in Czechoslovakia for such purposes as the arrangement of scientific or technical developments, wage problems and prices. All of these agencies are specialized Government organs for the management of certain sectors of the economy... (They) are managed by the Government... either through branch ministries or through regional agencies of the state power (in Czechoslovakia national committees for regions, districts and localities.)

"...The comprehensive economic plan must of course ensure not only that regionally managed branches develop from the standpoint of their regional location, but also that their development is proportionate to the over-all plan and to the centrally managed branches (italics added)."

The similarity between Regionalism in a socialist state and in a supposedly capitalist nation (the United States) is even more obvious when we come to the UN report on "Organization of the Planning System and Its Operation." We shall quote directly from this report, adding parenthetically the titles of the United States counterpart federal agencies:

"The central planning organ of the Hungarian People's Republic is the National Planning Office (OMB), an independent agency which enjoys rights similar to those of the ministries (cabinet rank departments), and which is directly subordinated to the Council of Ministers (White House Executive Office of which the Domestic Council is a part). The President of the Office (Director of OMB) has ministerial rank and is a member of the Council of Ministers (White House Executive Office), to which he is responsible for the Office's (OMB's) activities.

"The National Planning Office (OMB) is the only planning agency in the country which works as an independent institution and embraces the whole of the national economy. The other units of the planning machinery – the ministries (Federal Regional Councils) and the county councils (sub-regional councils or Metros) or their supplementary offices – plan in their own fields within the limits of their specific branch."

In this Hungarian concept of Regionalism, there is even provision for what our own Regionalists erroneously refer to as "home rule." We quote:

"The central planning body (White House Executive Office) is not in direct contact with the general public, nor does it deal with their economic complaints or suggestions of various kinds, except in cases of great importance (such as an energy crisis?) This task is incumbent on the different economic agencies of the ministries or, in other cases, on the council's offices (both of which are combined in the United States in the Ten Federal Regional Councils).

"The National Planning Board (OMB) maintains close relations with the regional and local government agencies only on economic and plan questions (PPBS). The Office has a department for this. On other questions the (sub-regional) councils – being the local bodies of State power – are subordinated to the Presidential Council. From the point of view of planning, the town and county councils and the Municipal Council of Budapest play a part similar to that of the ministries (semblance of home rule.)"

One more similarity is of importance. The Hungarian report speaks of the importance of the careful selection of planners, and national planners are provided a special education:–

"The orders of the President of the National Planning Office (Director of OMB in the United States) regulate the professional training of the persons taking part in national economic planning. According to these instructions, only people with proper degrees may work in planning jobs. Almost all the people engaged in planning at the superior level have either economic, engineering or architectural university degrees...."

In short, planners are specially selected and specially trained in Socialist Hungary. And in the United States, the Rand Corporation says of PPBS operatives: "The first point to emphasize is that the entire operation must be the personal responsibility of the executive head of the organization. No one at a lower level has the authority or the right or the ability to acquire the knowledge required to perform the necessary tasks of coordination."

The real purpose of this letter is to show that Regionalism is not a strictly American concept, nor is it a Communist plot; it is an internationalist scheme for acquiring universal control over people, property and production. USSR provided the means for obtaining "coercive participation" of the Nations of the world; USA provided the computerized scientific and technological methods of management; and the UNO is the instrument chosen for establishing Regionalism in the so-called "Third World."

If the financial and economic royalists of the world have their way, Regionalism is the New Order of the Ages. And, as ever, only the Truth can keep us free.

DON BELL REPORTS is a privately circulated Newsletter. For information, write:
DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

ANOTHER SHOOTING WAR TO DEFEAT DEPRESSION?

WHEN HISTORY REPEATS...

In the late 1930s the world's money managers and Keynesian economists were faced with a dilemma: their theories and practices had brought on a world-wide depression and the hardships and sufferings of the people threatened to bring about a destruction of the carefully constructed monetary and economic system which had been foisted upon the masses. So serious was the situation that World War Two seemed the only solution. For the duration of the war there was no unemployment, no idle factories or non-producing farms, no surpluses to glut the marketplaces of the world because all products went to feed the flames of war and all excesses went to Russia and/or the other allies. Such materials as ships, airplanes, tanks, artillery pieces, ammunition, etc. went to combat areas to be destroyed even as the men receiving them were destroyed. But destruction of materials and resources seemed like good business to the economic royalists who may have had blood on their hands but also had gold on deposit.

It seemed—as was later admitted in a think tank report allegedly prepared by Hudson Institute—that in order to maintain and perpetuate a debt-money economy, a little war is needed now and then; preferably a limited and easily contained grass-roots affair that can be stoked or banked as circumstances seem to warrant; as with Korea and Vietnam and, up to this point, the Middle East.

The current crop of economists having desks in the Executive Office of the President say that there have been five recessions since the end of shooting in World War Two. They do not add that there have been five international "incidents" that, more or less, coincided with the resolution of those recessions or prevented them from becoming depressions. There was the Marshall Plan and the rebuilding of the European economy. Then there was the Cold War. Later came the Korean Police Action and still later the Vietnam embroilment and the deliberate extension of that war after it should have been won. Incidentally, there are still some 38,000 American troops in South Korea, and we are still committed to the preservation of Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia as independent states.

But, in these waning days of 1974, the world situation is far more critical than it was even prior to World War Two. For we are not faced with mere depression, or with inflation, but with both. And to whip the inflation is to deepen the depression, and to overcome the depression is to spur inflation. When the Western World is faced with economic depression and monetary inflation at one and the same time, and when the money power is shifting from the West to the Middle East, drastic action is demanded. And, if the past is any criterion, then our entry into war in the Middle East is the one thing that will solve the problem called inflation!

This is what General George Brown, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, was talking about when he warned against all-out support of Israel in a future war. And this is what three retiring United States legislators were talking about when, in final statements as lame duck Congressmen, they warned of the dangers of American involvement in a Mideast War.

First, there was the retiring dean of the U.S. Senate, George Aiken of Vermont. We were reminded of a statement attributed to him prior to America's entry into World War Two.

On October 16, 1941—34 years ago—Senator Aiken wrote to a constituent: "...Greatly as I sympathize with the Allied cause, I am fully convinced that should America enter the war now, that our people here will lose our liberty to an even greater degree than the people of Germany have." If one compares the conditions in West Germany today with those in the United States today, this may qualify Senator Aiken as a true political prophet.

34 years later, on November 4, 1974, there appeared the following article in the Boston Herald-American: "Israel has made very heavy requests for financial and military aid that have not been made public, Sen. George Aiken (R-Vt.), says. Aiken, however, refused to say what the requests were. Speaking in Castleton, Vt., the dean of the U.S.

Senate said, 'We have people here in the United States who are very much opposed to the war in Southeast Asia that would probably want us to go lend our military establishment to the aid of Israel. I hope it can be avoided, but it can't be done overnight'."

Then, there is the warning issued by Sen. Fulbright who was defeated in the last election. Fulbright has been denounced as being "half-bright" and gullible, but as chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, he has had greater access to information on official U.S. relations with Israel than most men in the legislative branch of the federal government. So, what he says in a speech that is a kind of "curtain call" as he ends his act in the Capitol, deserves to be considered.

A strange historical coincidence: In 1946 Winston Churchill paid a visit to the United States and, on March 5, he spoke at Westminster College at Fulton, Mo., proposing "a fraternal association of English-speaking peoples" and voicing for the first time the term "Iron Curtain."

On November 2, 1974, Senator J. William Fulbright spoke at Westminster College in Fulton, Mo., perhaps his last as chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. He said, in part:

"The catalyst, if not the cause, of our current mounting difficulties was the Middle East war of a year ago. Like the assassination at Sarajevo in 1914, the October war set loose a chain reaction of events. The war precipitated the oil embargo, and the embargo combined with Arab military successes, gave the Arabs a whole new sense of their own power and capacity....

"...I believe that the current situation is shaped by two central facts: One is the volatility of the Arab-Israel conflict, the high probability of another, greater war if the central issue of the occupied territories is not soon resolved. The second fact... is the close relationship between the Arab-Israel conflict and the price and availability of oil. The danger of a fifth Arab-Israel war is acute, and if such a war comes, it will almost certainly be more violent and more protracted than the previous wars....

"Unfortunately, neither the Israelis nor their uncritical supporters in our Congress and in our media have appreciated what is at stake, and the enormous distortion of American interests in our present course. Endlessly pressing the United States for money and arms—and invariably getting all and more than she asks—Israel makes bad use of a good friend. Unlike the Saudis, the Israelis seem not to recognize that if the United States is gravely weakened, they themselves can hardly hope to survive....

"To state the matter with simple candor: The United States has done as much for Israel as one nation can do for another—we, and we alone, have made it possible for Israel to exist as a state. Surely it is not too much to ask in return that Israel give up East Jerusalem and the West Bank, as the necessary means of breaking a chain of events which threaten us all with ruin."

And now we come to our third witness from the Legislative branch of the federal government. Retiring Congressman John Rarick issued a statement on November 15, from which we quote at length:

THE STAGE IS SET FOR MIDDLE EAST VIETNAM

Possibilities of renewed warfare in the Middle East—this time war directly involving the United States—loom on the not-too-distant horizon, according to most international observers here in Washington. Secret alliances, stacking the full military might of this country on the side of Israel in the event of a new flare-up, have allegedly been made at the highest levels of government.

It appears that we are stumbling diplomatically into another Vietnam. The American people who will be called on to give their tax money and sons to fight for Israel are being given the same blind, one-sided presentation we received before plunging into that Southeast Asian fiasco....

Gen. Brown's comments, made more than a month ago, reveal some interesting sidelights on the extent of the power generated by the Israeli lobby in shaping U.S. policy in the Middle East....

Reports surfaced last April that Adm. Elmo W. Zumwalt, then Chief of Staff of Naval operations, was actively lobbying influential Jewish businessmen in an effort to get them to apply pressure on Congress to approve the Pentagon's $86.9 billion budget request. His argument was that the stockpile of U.S. military armaments had been reduced as much as one-third due to the Yom Kippur War. He asserted that they must be rebuilt if this country is to once again come to the rescue of the Israelis from the Arabs.

Ira Silverman, director of the Institute for Jewish Policy Planning and Research, confirmed the fact that Adm. Zumwalt was "lobbying the Jewish lobby." "One level is rather subtle," Silverman said: "They are saying, 'We helped you, now you help us'."

"At the practical level," continued Silverman, "C-5 transport planes and aircraft carriers, items previously opposed by the would-be military budget slashers, were invaluable in support of Israel during the war. So will American military capacity in the future determine Israel's security."

Interestingly enough, the Defense Department appropriations bill passed with only cosmetic cuts.

It is a potentially dangerous situation that a foreign country has as much unmitigated power to direct the military and diplomatic course of the United States as the tiny state of Israel apparently does. For foreigners to direct the internal affairs of Americans at all is outrageous. It is also frightening that any individual with the courage to even mention the possibilities of this (should suffer the treatment accorded Gen. Brown) despite his temporary "reprieve" from President Ford.

Needed is a foreign policy for the benefit of all Americans — not one controlled by a minority pressure, leading us toward another no-win war at the cost of our own national defense, and inviting another energy crisis.

(End of extended quotation)

In a previous letter we quoted Gen. Brown, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, who made his statement warning of the "Jewish lobby" a month before it was called to the attention of the American public.

Gen. Brown made another speech on Nov. 25, this time to a group of businessmen in Sacramento. This time he tried to underplay the danger of direct American participation in a Mideast War by mentioning several other trouble spots in the world: the Cyprus situation, the unrest in the Iberian Peninsula, problems in Asia, and finally the Middle East situation. "In order to prevent war, we must have the forces to deter aggression, and demonstrate to our would-be adversaries that there is no alternative (short of war) to reasonable negotiations. Those who would challenge the United States understand strength. Our surest guarantee against war is deterrence based on ready and responsive military power capable of defending our national interests."

But in this speech, Gen. Brown is speaking of defensive war; he is neglecting to point out that actual offensive war is in the minds of cliques in Congress and in the Pentagon.

The probability of American entry into an actual shooting war in the Middle East just to protect the Israelis from the Arabs, is remote and unlikely, because such an action might prove extremely unpopular with too many American taxpayers. Too many people will remember—or be reminded—that nearly 40,000 American servicemen died to protect South Korea from a Communist take-over, the final result being a South Korean dictatorship under Park Chung Kee that may be even worse than a Communist dictatorship would have been. And the same situation exists in South Vietnam; the people have no more freedom than they had before the U.S. went in to "save" them, probably less. And the prospects of another such adventure in the Middle East might not be popular with American citizen-soldiers and taxpayers.

However, should there be another oil embargo, and should there be real suffering in the United States as a result, there might be a popular demand that the United States go in and seize Mideast oil while helping the Israelis incidentally. This notion of a war to liberate Arab oil was explored in the current issue (Dec. 2) of U.S. News & World Report. Under the full page heading, "If Pushed Too Far Will U.S. Seize Mideast Oil?" there is this bold faced statement: "Washington isn't making threats, but some officials hint U.S. could eventually be forced to choose between economic ruin and armed action."

"This quiet—but significant—signal," the article asserts, "is being sent by the Ford Administration to Arab rulers who control much of the world's available oil: U.S. military intervention to secure oil supplies vital to the Western industrialized nations cannot be ruled out if the energy crisis turns into an international disaster.

"Open threats or bullying of any kind are being avoided. But the message comes through clearly in subtly contrived developments in Washington. Thus—

"* A comprehensive study of American military options in dealing with the oil crisis has just been initiated by one of the country's leading 'think tanks,' which has close Government connections (Rand-Ed.) No serious attempt is being made to conceal this from foreign intelligence agents in Washington.

"* Top-level Administration policy makers, in casual conversations, are not holding back from candid discussions of the possibility of armed conflict by the U.S. if the oil crisis becomes unmanageable. Typical is a comment by a ranking official to a newsmen: 'A flotilla of 60 American warships appearing at the head of the Persian Gulf would have quite an impact.'

"* Nationally, syndicated columnist Jack Anderson, on the basis of information from 'Important policy makers,' reported on November 8: 'A grim new mood is developing in Washington that military intervention may be necessary to bring down the price of oil and save the West from economic ruin.'..."

"...some highly placed Administration officials say that military intervention could become unavoidable if action by Mideast oil producers threatened the industrial West with economic disaster.

"That is the message that Washington is trying to communicate to Arab rulers."

(End of extended quotation)

How would such American armed invasion of the Middle East be viewed by other Nations? We are told that "most strategic and foreign-policy analysts discount the risk of Soviet intervention. They see the Russians as realists when it comes to vital interests—theirs or America's. To quote a high-level U.S. policy maker: 'The Soviets would recognize that American military intervention in Arab oil states involved vital U.S. interests and only marginal Russian interests. They would stand aside—just as we did in Czechoslovakia where we recognized that Soviet national interests were at stake'."

As for the attitude of Europe if we became an aggressor nation, the following comment from the highly respected Business Week (November 23) is significant:

"Kissinger is also worried by the growing sentiment, particularly among businessmen both at home and abroad, for a military solution to the high price of oil. In Europe, private bankers insist there is no other solution in the time left before bankruptcy catches up with every country in Western Europe. The trouble is that the Europeans want the U.S. to carry the military ball while they provide behind-the-scenes support. Publicly, they would denounce such action, both to calm domestic disapproval and to continue business relations with the oil producers."

So, the private bankers of Europe are convinced that the U.S. must invade the Arab oil-producing states to save Western Europe; and there is a growing sentiment among U.S. businessmen and bankers that we must invade those Arab states, not merely to save Israel although that is important to them, not just to solve an energy crisis although that is important, but to save the United States from financial disaster and economic collapse!

Let us hypothesize:

Could the money managers and Keynesian economists have suddenly come to realize that, even as in the late 1930s, they had once again brought the entire Western World to the point of no return both financially and economically. Could they have then decided—months ago—that the only thing that might prevent monetary collapse and economic ruin would be another large scale but limited war?

If we assume this to be true, and if we recall the prophetic words of Franklin Delano Roosevelt, that in great national and international events nothing ever just happens, but "it is planned that way," let us also assume that the sudden and unexpected Yom Kippur War didn't just happen, but was planned in order to bring about an oil embargo and an energy crisis.

Such a development, engineered by, say, Henry Kissinger and other agents of the oil magnates (and we don't mean the rulers of Arab oil-producing states) would certainly set the stage for a limited war if and when the word was given.

And this brings up the totally unnecessary and dangerous decision of Ford and Kissinger suddenly to take a trip to the Orient, especially dangerous since the Vice Presidential vacancy still existed. To pay a diplomatic visit to a Japanese leader who was on the verge of resigning, was inane and utterly pointless. To visit a most unpopular dictator in South Korea was meaningless.

And to visit with the Secretary General of the Russian Communist Party in—of all places—ice-bound Vladivostok, could not have been for the purpose of suddenly concluding arms control agreements.

But what could have happened, and probably did happen: Kissinger wanted to be sure that in case of an American invasion of the Middle East, the Soviets would not interfere actively or militarily and thus make of such an event an unlimited, potential world war! If this be true, then Kissinger journeyed on to Peking to obtain the same non-interference pledge from the Chinese Communist leadership.

This is hypothesis, and we could be wrong; but "when all the pre-cut timbers fit..."

DON BELL REPORTS is a weekly Newsletter that accents the Christian American point of view. Additional copies: 10¢ each. Complete service $24 per year Address all orders and correspondence to:

DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

THE ROCKEFELLERS AND THE NEW WORLD ORDER

TO CONSTRUCT THE CORPORATE STATE

"The President... will have... Rockefeller at his side, operating as a kind of domestic Henry Kissinger. Without additional formal title but with clear authority from Ford, Rockefeller will recruit a brain trust to delve into every aspect of domestic policy; he will arbitrate among conflicting Cabinet proposals and formulate plans for allocation of the nation's natural and financial resources...."

So predicts a weekly newsmagazine that, justifiably, takes it for granted that Nelson Rockefeller will receive his appointment as Vice President of the United States as a kind of Christmas present from his well-paid and grateful appointed and elected underlings in the Nation's Capital and in the Ten Regional Capitals appended thereto.

It has been pointed out in official testimony by witnesses who are on the Rockefeller payroll—friendly witnesses—that there are 84 members of the immediate Rockefeller family who hold blue chip stocks in IBM, Kodak, GE, 3M, Xerox, Alcoa and the many Standard Oil subsidiaries; that the picture of stock portfolios is so extensive that it takes 154 people working fulltime to manage them; this not including the vast holdings of the Rockefeller Foundation and other family connected funds. Other independent researchers testified that the Rockefeller family financial advisers are actively involved in directing twelve of the most powerful corporations in the United States. Named were Chrysler Corp., Eastern Airlines, IBM, American Motors, Howard Johnson, Bendix, S.S. Kresge. Also, "fifteen employes of the Rockefellers, working out of the family's central offices, have been identified on the boards of directors of nearly 100 corporations over a number of years and the combined assets of these corporations currently is some $70 billion."

In addition to the Rockefeller directorships and stock control, there are the corporations whose administrative or financial heads are members of the Rockefeller-controlled Council on Foreign Relations, a private club that can be said to shape this country's foreign policy.

All of the above—and more—is known to be true by the Senators and Congressmen who are going to accept Nelson Rockefeller as appointed Vice President of the United States. The Rockefellers do not deny their power; they merely say that power will be used wisely, and in the best interests of the United States and its people, and of the world and its people.

Knowing that we are stuck with Nelson Rockefeller, perhaps for the rest of the days of his life, it seems important that we should know what Rockefeller really stands for and what we should expect when he becomes the second most important political personage in the United States and in the Western Hemisphere and, time and circumstances permitting, the Chief Administrator in the Western World, and perhaps in the whole world; even as his youngest brother aspires to be (and perhaps already is) the economic czar of the planet. For, make no mistake about this: The Rockefellers are a Ruling Dynasty, even as the less fortunate Kennedy Klan sought to become a Ruling Family but failed because of assassins' bullets.

The Rockefellers may maintain their headquarters in the United States and call themselves American citizens, and even pay token taxes, but their domain is the world, and their control over conglomerates and multinational corporations is their chiefest instrument of power.

There is a Rockefeller sense of destiny and domain which is perhaps best explained by that statement of purpose that was contained in the Elder Rockefeller's General Education Board "Occasional Letter Number One" as written in 1904:

"In our dreams, we have limitless resources and the people yield themselves with perfect docility to our molding hands. The present educational conventions fade from our minds, and unhampered by tradition, we work out our own good will upon a grateful and responsive rural folk. We shall not try to make these people or any of their children into philosophers or men of learning or of letters. We shall not search for embryo great artists, painters, musicians, nor lawyers, doctors, preachers, politicians, statesmen, of whom we have an ample supply. The task we set before ourselves is very simple as well as a very beautiful one, to train these people as we find them to a perfectly ideal life just where they are. So we will organize our children and teach them to do in a perfect way the things their fathers and mothers are doing in an imperfect way in their homes in the shops and on the farm."

And thus was written, in clear and unmistakable language, the purpose for which this General Education Board was founded (in 1902) by John Davison Rockefeller, Sr. As the name itself indicates, this board was created to control the general education of people generally. The principles laid down by this board were not meant to apply to the children of the Rockefellers, their in-laws, business associates, and those who were called and chosen to serve the Ruling Dynasty in various and sundry ways. Special arrangements were provided for the training and educating of this group of elite servants.

There was the early establishment and endowment of the University of Chicago. It would serve as a training camp for Rockefeller agents. Chicago University also was the headquarters for a subversive group that called itself the "Committee to Frame a World Constitution." Its head (who was also Chancellor of the University at the time), Robert M. Hutchins, later moved to the West Coast where he established (with Ford and Rockefeller Foundation funds) the controversial think tank known as the Center for the Study of Democratic Institutions, which is trying to scrap our present United States Constitution and install one master-minded by Fabian Socialist and New Dealer Rexford Guy Tugwell. The University of Chicago also provides office space and library and consultation services to that Rockefeller-funded conglomeration of public administration agencies known as 1313.

The Rockefeller Foundations also provide grants, endowments, research project funds, etc. to most of the important colleges and universities in the United States that are in a position to "return favors" when called upon to do so. To name a few: Columbia, Colorado, California, Duke, Texas, Amherst, Iowa, Washington, Wisconsin, M.I.T., Brown, Cornell, Stanford, Pennsylvania, Yale, Virginia, Minnesota, Johns Hopkins, Princeton, Northwestern and, of course, Harvard.

Since the Rockefeller-controlled Council on Foreign Relations began to own and operate the U.S. State Department, a peculiar use has been found for these Universities. They have become supply centers for key personnel (appointive) in the Federal Government. With a change of administration, a new crop of top-level, elite appointees will leave their chairs at these universities and flock to Washington; while those they have replaced will return to their university jobs and await a call to return to Washington if and when a change of administration dictates a change of personnel.

Failure to honor this job-placement arrangement may have been the one thing that brought about the split between Nelson Rockefeller and Richard Nixon, and led to the latter's political liquidation. Nixon did follow Rockefeller's wishes in the matter of Henry Kissinger's selection as intelligence and foreign affairs chief. But when it came to other top positions, Nixon defied the established order and brought in his old classmates and cronies from the old days when he was a struggling young lawyer, a Red-baiting Congressman and an opportunistic Vice President. Denying professors, he placed Haldemans and Ehrlichmans and Deans in the most important positions; Western upstarts to challenge the entrenched Eastern Establishment. Nelson Rockefeller may not have written the script, but he rewrote the last act of the political drama, and gave the stage manager the hero's part.

But, this letter is supposed to deal with future Vice Presidents and Chief Executives, not with those who were brought on to set the scene and lay the plot and then move on into the wings -

Nelson Rockefeller, so his biographers say, always did have political ambitions, and his first big break came when the ubiquitous Harry Hopkins induced Franklin Delano Roosevelt to get a Rockefeller on his New Deal team. Nelson was offered many jobs, Assistant Secretary of Commerce being the one most often mentioned. But the Rockefellers evidently saw no future in that post, and accepted instead the position of Coordinator of Hemispheric Defense, later renamed the Administration of Inter-American Affairs.

"As Coordinator of Inter-American Affairs," wrote biographer Emanuel Josephson, "Nelson Rockefeller spent $6,000,000,000 of the taxpayers' money on what the members of Congress called 'boondoggling propaganda.' He distributed in South America such motion picture sensations as 'Willie & The Mouse' and 'Does Nature Prefer Blondes?'" He sent movie stars and clowns as 'good will ambassadors to divert the Latin-American 'peasants'."

Thus began Nelson's reputation for spending and spending taxpayers' money. Later, upon becoming Governor of the once wealthy State of New York, he had an opportunity to show his true ability for spending other people's money.

"As Governor of New York," wrote Phyllis Schlafly, "Rockefeller increased the cost of state government about 400 percent—that is, from $1.9 billion to almost $9 billion a year. He raised state taxes eight times, doubling the rate of state income and gasoline taxes, and imposing a 4% state sales tax. The total tax load nearly quintupled, and New York State taxpayers are the most overburdened in the country. As a result, New York's share of the Nation's manufacturing significantly declined.... New York State lost 400,000 jobs, and many national companies moved to other parts of the country. Business is fleeing what it considers a hostile climate."

So, with the Rockefeller millstone around the National Neck, this Nation and its citizenry will really begin to feel the effects of a policy of "tax and tax, spend and spend." And, as in New York State, the manufacturers, feeling this to be a hostile climate, will begin to pack up their plants and move to other countries where taxes are less and labor costs lower.

However, far more dangerous than Nelson's ability to spend other people's money, is his expertness in creating corporations that become appendages to the government and to which are delegated governmental powers and functions. The end result of such a program is the creation of a Corporate State, or, to use the more commonly known term, a Fascist State.

In his book "The Truth About Rockefeller," Emanuel Josephson refers to the time when Nelson Rockefeller served under FDR, and speaks of this fascistic use of corporations:

"Rockefeller adopted a plan of... corporate organization... that the (Rockefeller) Dynasty was instrumental in introducing in this country. Nelson Rockefeller and his cohorts have since made frequent and extensive use of it at various levels of government, national and local. We taxpayers now support more than seven hundred of them...."

"The basic pattern of these corporations... consists of a corporation to which is delegated governmental powers and functions... They set up companies that take over private industry, or compete with it, are financed by the taxpayers through the government, but are given super-governmental status and powers that place them above the reach of either local or federal laws, and are exempt from taxation. These governmentally financed corporations are given various names, the most popular of which is 'authority.' They are ideal devices for looting both the government and the citizenry. And they are completely immune from interference, prosecution or redress.

"The setup adopted by Nelson Rockefeller for his 'coordination' (in South America) consisted of five government corporations chartered in the State of Delaware, which allows widest leeway to corporations. They were: 1) Institute of Inter-American Affairs; 2) Inter-American Education Foundation; 3) Institute of Inter-American Transportation; 4) Prencinradio; 5) Inter-American Navigation Co."

It would not be fair to imply that Nelson Rockefeller invented or first used the Government Corporation idea. In May, 1933, the New Deal Administration created the Tennessee Valley Authority (a corporation) that manufactures electric power for sale in competition with private corporations, using taxpayers' money to finance the operation.

Five months later, in October 1933, Secretary of Agriculture Henry Wallace, Secretary of the Interior Harold Ickes, and Harry Hopkins, then head of the Federal Relief Administration, took out a charter under the ultraliberal law of Delaware for the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation. In his invaluable book Undermining The Constitution, (Devin Adair, 1951) Thomas James Norton referred to this as "the tip-top corporation of Fascism" and said that "no engineers of high finance ever piled a pyramid of corporations with powers to match those in scope or absoluteness. And, of course, none of those activities is any constitutional business of the United States." The stock in the corporation was owned by the United States, the money being taken out of the pockets of taxpayers, and the corporation's losses (running into the billions) were paid by the taxpayers. And these public corporations were delegated governmental powers, and were above the reach of local, State or Federal laws, were exempt from taxation and any losses they might suffer in the course of their competition with private corporations or individuals, were paid by the taxpayers of the country. No wonder the eminent constitutional authority, Thomas James Norton, referred to their operations as "Fascist activities."

So, to set the record straight, public corporations, which Mussolini used to set up a new form of Socialist Government, were not introduced into American Government by Nelson Rockefeller; Harry Hopkins was the first to suggest the idea, and he probably copied the whole plan from the Russian Communist corporation "Amtorg" which was brought to the United States as a corporation equipped to do business with American private corporations.

The sequence seems to go like this; Karl Marx first conceived the idea of using the public corporation as a weapon against the free enterprise system which he hated; Stalin made use of the plan for negotiating business deals with other countries; Mussolini perfected the plan and built an entire form of Socialism around it; students of Soviet affairs such as Hopkins, Wallace and Ickes adapted the plan for use as a part of the New Deal; and Nelson Rockefeller saw the profits that could be made out of the use of public corporations that were endowed with the powers usually reserved to sovereign states, and became a past master in their use and abuse. Rockefeller's familiarity with this socialistic technique would help to account for his great success in dealing with the Soviet "corporation." This plus the maxim that was drilled into the Rockefeller brothers by their father John D. That maxim was stated by one Frederick C. Howe, a business associate of J.P. Morgan and J.D. Rockefeller, in 1906: "These are the rules of big business. They have superseded the teachings of our parents and are reducible to a simple maxim: Get a monopoly; let Society work for you: and remember that the best of all business is politics, for a legislative grant, franchise, subsidy or tax exemption is worth more than a Kimberly or Comstock lode, since it does not require any labor, either manual or physical, for its exploitation."

Monopoly capitalists such as the Rockefellers are enemies of the free market and they promote public corporations because these provide monopolies that are protected by and guaranteed by the government itself. They favor totalitarian socialist states because such states provide ideal captive markets. That is why Wall Street financed the Russian Revolution while at the same time creating an anti-Communist movement to fool the people (quotation is from "Wall Street and the Bolshevik Revolution," by Anthony Sutton. 1974. Arlington House, New Rochelle, N.Y. 288pp. $7.95.)

As Frank Capell observed: "While Nelson is the political arm... and has exercised tremendous influence in U.S. Government policy, his brother David is the financial arm of the Rockefeller dynasty and between them they wield fantastic influence not only in the U.S. but throughout the world."

In short, because monopoly capitalists want it and because Nelson knows how to do it, we may expect him to complete what Nixon and Kissinger began; the conversion of this former free enterprise Republic into a Corporate Socialist State.

And One World Government will be just around the corner. Because of the media, we are taught to think of Nixon as the author of the New Federalism, with its concept of Regional Governance, PPBS control, etc. But, in actuality, Nixon was merely developing the plans laid down by Nelson Rockefeller nearly 13 years ago.

While still Governor of New York State but looking toward the White House, Nelson Rockefeller delivered three Godkin Lectures at Harvard University, in February, 1962. His theme was "Federalism and the Free World Order" and the lectures were eagerly grabbed up and published by Clarence Streit of "Union Now" and other world federalist schemes.

So that you will know what to expect when Nelson Rockefeller gets to the White House, we quote briefly from his third lecture:

"The old patterns and formulations of international order have been shattered... I was wholeheartedly committed to the battle at the San Francisco Conference for inclusion of Article 51 of the U.S. Charter to permit regional arrangements within the U.N. framework. And I certainly do not now abandon my belief in the value and importance of regional arrangements... But I have come to the conviction that events are driving us... to the logic of applying the federal idea wherever possible... For the force and value of the federal idea are not limited to the small, newer, weaker nations. The need is just as great for the most traditionally powerful..."

And so, with Nelson Aldrich Rockefeller receiving his appointment as our Domestic Administrator, we must expect more taxes, more government spending, more public corporations and less free enterprise, more monopolies and less competition, and, finally, World Federation in a World Socialist System, whether we like it or not. Such is the price of our turning from law to men, and from our Creator to those He created.

For information concerning this letter, write:
DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

ROCKEFELLER, KISSINGER, FORD - THE HOLISTIC TRINITY?

GENESIS

It may all have started in 1966 at the annual Bilderberg meeting. Certainly there was the opportunity: all the chief characters in the plot that was to unfold were together in one place at one time; a place so secret that not a single soul who might betray a trust could possibly overhear. And it was at a time when Nelson Rockefeller must have begun to doubt his ability ever to be elected to the Presidency of the United States, and he and brother David might have felt, even then, that an alternate route to the White House had better be mapped out, and the first steps taken.

This is, admittedly, conjecture, because no one could possibly know what really happened at this—or any other—Bilderberg meeting unless he was there; and if he was there he wouldn't tell you what went on. But, the coincidences are amazing if the events that followed "just happened" without rhyme or reason.

With Prince Bernhard of the Netherlands in the chair, the usual financial magnates were present at that 1966 conclave: David Rockefeller of Chase Manhattan Bank and scores of multinational interests, Baron Edmund de Rothschild of the French branch of that international family of international bankers, Giovanni Agnelli of Italy's (and now also Russia's) Fiat, and others of comparable monetary stature. Also present was the usual pack of political preeminences of varying persuasions: such as Britain's Fabian Socialist Prime Minister Harold Wilson and his conservative opponent and a future Prime Minister Edward Heath; they were opponents in Parliament, but cooperators at Bilderberg meetings, as were others such as Sweden's outgoing Erlander and incoming Palme. It may seem curious to some that publicly avowed Socialists like Gaitskill of England, Defferre and Mollet of France, and Erler of West Germany, would be found "cooperating" with international capitalists and money lenders. But that's a part of the reason for Bilderberg meetings: to the world they must appear as bitter opponents, but at such secret gatherings as Bilderberg, they can discard their disguises and conspire together as friends and collaborators seeking the same goals but by different routes.

Many men of consequence attended that Bilderberg confab of 1966; but there also were men who, in 1966, were of inconsequence on the world stage, but who were invited to attend that 1966 gathering: Kissinger of America, Schmidt of West Germany, Rumor of Italy, Palme of Sweden, Biesheuvel of the Netherlands, Gerald Ford of America. Giscard d'Estaing of France missed the 1966 meeting, but he was present at the 1968 Bilderberg sessions.

These were men of little international or even national consequence in 1966—but in 1974, eight years later, they would be running Germany, Italy, Sweden, the Netherlands, France, the United States, and the so-called Jew Kissinger would be called "brother" and "the Magician" by the Moslem leader of the Arabs, President Sadat of Egypt!

Coincidence? Happenstance? Or was it planned that way?

Commenting in the same vein and about the same subject, Life Lines of September 23, 1974, added:

"And do not forget those three Canadians who went to Bilderberger in 1966, Michener, Marchand and Martin, now Canada's Governor-General, Minister of Transport, and Senate leader.

"Much goes on here. Italian business executive Aurelio Peccei will, after the 1966 meeting, found the Club of Rome which will fund a study-by-computer by the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. Called the 'Limits of Growth,' it will in 1972 predict disaster for the world if world production and world consumption habits are not put under . . . deliberate international control. . . .

"In corporate newsrooms, the plushy board rooms of Chase Manhattan and Exxon, and CFR-controlled universities and think-tanks do they smile remembering the words of Mr. Kissinger, a delegate to that now famous 1966 Bilderberger meeting: 'The ultimate goal of a supranational world community will not come quickly . . . but it is not too early to prepare ourselves for this step beyond the nation-state.' Do they think of Kissinger's sponsor, Nelson Rockefeller, of the same CFR saying, 'the answer is a supranational political being with the power to tax?'"

EXODUS

If the current world situation, economically and financially, was brought about even inadvertently through plans originally formulated at the 1966 Bilderberg summit; if even the selection of today's leaders of the strategic Western Nations was made at that time and if they were made cognizant of what was in store for them, and what would be expected of them when they came to power; then there comes to mind yet another question: What subtle influence was exerted, and who's nimble machinations served to keep the Communist Powers in line and in their proper positions as regards today's world situation?

And we think immediately of how easily Mr. Kissinger was able to make himself at home inside the austere Kremlin, and how he was able to open the gates to the Forbidden City in Communist Cathay when all the world was told he was suffering from a routine bellyache in Burma. And we also are reminded of the whopping big business deals the Rockefellers and their commercial and industrial associates have been able to conclude with collectivist authorities behind the Iron, Rice and Bamboo Curtains Bilderberg, 1966.

The alleged conservative who took the seat once occupied by Eleanor Roosevelt at the United Nations, William Buckley, recently wrote another book which he called: United Nations Journal: A Delegate's Odyssey. In the book, Buckley refers now and then to his friend (since the mid-fifties) Henry Kissinger. He recalls that he and Henry both attended the Al Smith Memorial Dinner held at the Waldorf on October 16, this year. Kissinger was the principal speaker (which might have started Smith's body twirling in the grave, were such phenomena possible).

On his way to the Waldorf, writes Buckley, he was handed a pamphlet bearing the title: "Henry Kissinger: Soviet Agent." During the early part of the dinner before the heavy speechmaking began, Buckley says he had an opportunity to look through the pamphlet, noting its documentation. Then he sent it on down to Kissinger, who sat a few places away, after writing on the cover, "Henry, is this true?" Kissinger's reply, passed back to Buckley, was to the effect that such questions are best answered only before Senate Foreign Relations Committees.

In his book, Buckley tossed it all off as a big joke. But was it? There is much solid evidence suggesting that Kissinger has been a double agent since his days as a G.I. in Germany at the end of World War II. However, much more serious—if we could just get people to believe it—is the undisputed fact that Henry Kissinger is a Rockefeller agent and has been one ever since his undergraduate days at Harvard.

For, in this writer's opinion, as dangerous as is Henry Kissinger's role as Secretary of State and Chief of the Nation's Intelligence Services, it is far more dangerous to have a Rockefeller a breath away from the Oval Room in the White House. But, as Isaiah cried out: "Who hath believed our report?"

We presume that the same query might be made of some very important information contained in a series of articles written by the Philadelphia Inquirer investigative reporting team of James B. Steele and Donald L. Bartlett, who spent six months studying the U.S. foreign aid program, and discovered that the entire program is a "flawed dream" and that one of its principal uses is to protect Rockefeller overseas investments. As one observer stated, before he voted against the Rockefeller confirmation as Vice President of the United States:

"The one-world syndrome would have the American people believe that the Rockefeller confirmation is essential to international peace and stability. Seldom revealed to the American people is the story that the same one-world instability is in many instances the result of Rockefeller family financial interests and manipulations in the world community. The Chase Manhattan Bank and other Rockefeller corporations have reportedly been successful in converting foreign aid dollars, intended for the needy and poor of the world, into profits for their overseas corporations. In fact, the report from the Philadelphia Inquirer of November 24, 1974, would conclude that the U.S. foreign aid program is but a clever device to siphon taxpayers' dollars into the Rockefeller combine, all in the guise of aiding humanity.... Power, it is said, corrupts; absolute power corrupts absolutely."

Following are important excerpts from the November 24th article:

Each year, when State Department officials trudge up to Capitol Hill in Washington to justify proposed foreign aid spendings before congressional committees, they carry with them the support of a diverse and prestigious lobby. Trailing along behind the State Department are professors from the nation's leading universities, officials of the country's large multi-national corporations, labor union representatives, bank presidents and spokesmen for charitable foundations. All of these people, who either testify before Congress in support of foreign aid expenditures or travel around the country delivering speeches on behalf of the foreign aid program, have one thing in common:

They have a vested interest in the United States' $172 billion foreign aid program and they, or the organizations they represent, are benefitting financially, either directly or indirectly, from that program.

Two especially interested supporters are the Rockefeller brothers, David Rockefeller, chairman of the board of the Chase Manhattan Bank, and Nelson Rockefeller, the vice-president-designate.

In a speech to the Council on Foreign Relations in Chicago in April 1967, David Rockefeller, ticking off the accomplishments of foreign aid, observed:

"Not the least of the lessons we have learned in 20 years of dispensing foreign aid is the need for relying more extensively on the private sector—and this is now being done. The Agency for International Development (the State Department agency which administers foreign aid) has set up an Office of Private Resources specifically to help United States investors interested in the less developed countries. It has also worked out a variety of instruments designed to encourage and support private investment."

Indeed it has. So much so that if you look at the foreign aid program in just about any part of the world, you will find a connection with a Rockefeller financial interest. For example:

The Chinese International Investment Corp. is a subsidiary of the Chase Manhattan Bank

... Chase International has used the foreign aid program to insure investments in a poultry farm and synthetic fiber plant in Costa Rica, gaming lodges in Kenya, an agricultural production and marketing operation in Iran, and a ceramic tile and bath accessory plant in South Korea. These products are insured by the Overseas Private Investment Corp. (OPIC), a wholly owned government corporation whose operations are supervised by the State Department.

OPIC acts as an insurance company, guaranteeing loans and insuring private investments in foreign countries against expropriation, inconvertibility of local currency, and war, revolution or insurrection. ... The OPIC program carries the backing of the United States government. This means that if losses should exceed the corporation's reserves, the American taxpayer will pick up the bill. In addition, OPIC offers private corporations a more subtle, indirect benefit—the weight and leverage of the United States government in a company's day-to-day business dealings in less developed countries.

The Chase Manhattan Bank has used OPIC to protect its banking or lending operations in the Dominican Republic, South Vietnam, South Korea, India, Guyana, and Brazil...

Arbor Acres Farms, a poultry breeding and supplying firm, has used OPIC to insure poultry farms in Thailand, the Republic of China, Pakistan and the Philippines. Arbor Acres is a division of the International Basic Economy Corp. (IBEC), a New York based development company. Rodman C. Rockefeller, a son of Nelson Rockefeller, is the $75,000-a-year president of the company. Nelson Rockefeller, Rodman C. Rockefeller and Steven C. Rockefeller, another son, together own directly or as trustees about 37 percent of the stock of IBEC....

Development and Resources Corporation... is another subsidiary of the International Basic Economy Corporation.... Through another part of the foreign aid program, the Agriculture Trade Development and Assistance Act, the Chase Manhattan Bank was authorized in September 1970 to borrow about $2.2 million in South Korean currency.... Through yet another foreign aid guaranty plan called the Private Export Funding Corporation (PEFCO), Chase Manhattan Bank in 1971 arranged two loans totaling $13.1 million for a nuclear plant project in Italy....

PEFCO was organized in 1970 to supplement the lending operations of the United States Export-Import Bank (Eximbank). The Eximbank has provided a revolving line of credit for PEFCO, and all its loans are fully guaranteed by the government.

While none of these guaranty plans under the foreign aid program involve direct expenditures of American tax money, at least at present, there is both a hidden cost to the taxpayer and a potential liability for the future. If losses under the plan should exceed the reserves set aside — and claims filed, but not settled, have been running ahead of reserves — then the taxpayer is liable. In addition, critics of the guaranty plan argue that they unnecessarily involve the United States government in what should be private business dealings by private corporations.

As for hidden costs, a University of Michigan economics professor told a House Foreign Affairs subcommittee last year:

"To the extent that OPIC is supported by present or possible future congressional appropriations... part of the political risk and cost... is transferred to the United States taxpaying public. This transfer of private business costs amounts to a public subsidy of the particular subgroup of United States businesses that have invested or intend to invest in the poor countries. All the OPIC can do is to transfer some of the costs of the risk from private investors to the public, thereby increasing the profitability of the foreign investment for the private investor, but not for the United States as a whole."...

For his part, Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger, who served as a foreign affairs adviser to Nelson Rockefeller before joining the Nixon administration in 1969—and who was one of the recipients of a Rockefeller financial gift ($50,000)—remains firmly wedded to the OPIC concept. When there were unsuccessful attempts in Congress earlier this year to kill the OPIC plan, Kissinger came to the agency's defense, saying that "it would not be in the national interest to terminate OPIC programs at this time." Kissinger maintained that planned private American investments in less developed countries "might not go forward in the absence of OPIC programs, which provide the kinds of insurance and financing that cannot be undertaken by private insurance and credit markets"....

The Rockefellers are far from alone in their support of a foreign aid program linked to private investment. There is a hard core of multi-national corporations that has made extensive use of the American foreign aid program. That core includes such companies as International Telephone and Telegraph Co., which was deeply involved in the internal politics of Chile, and Cargill, Inc., the grain dealer involved in the massive 1972 Russian wheat deal.

There are companies like Dow Chemical Co., and E.R. Squibb & Sons, Inc., and Gillette Co. and General Electric Co. and Mobil Oil Corp. and the Bank of America and the Del Monte Corp., the world's largest canner of fruits and vegetables....

(End of extended quotations from article)

It should be understood that all of the multi-national corporations listed in the preceding paragraph—and many more the authors did not but could have listed as recipients of foreign aid subsidies—are closely linked to the Rockefeller interests through interlocking directorates or trusteeships, through the Council on Foreign Relations memberships, or through connections with the latter organization's subsidiary Corporation Service Program, its Committees on Foreign Relations, its American Institute of International Affairs, the associated Business Council, etc.

In addition to all of this, it was Nelson Rockefeller who resigned as Governor of the State of New York to organize the still functioning Commission on Critical Choices for America, a super think tank which operates on tax-exempt funds and which listed one Gerald Ford as a member before he became more prominently known to the world as President of the United States by appointment.

Now that Nels and Jerry—and Henry—are all officially engaged in higher pursuits, it seems that Sol Linowitz of Xerox and CFR has become chief mouthpiece for this Commission which, recently, issued its first formal recommendation: that the United States Government should proceed forthwith to recognize and restore diplomatic relations with the Communist Government of Cuba. Sol Linowitz was questioned by reporters, said in effect that business interests from other nations were reaping huge profits through trade with Cuba, and American businessmen were being discriminated against because of this — and the United States Government ought to forget its ideological differences—as it had already done in the case of Russia and Red China—and give American business interests a break.

ADVENT

And so it came to pass that Nelson Rockefeller was appointed Vice President of the United States, an event looked upon by a sizable majority of United States Senators and Representatives as a kind of Christmas gift to the people of America, and perhaps to the world. As though it were an act of reciprocation, the last thing the Congress did before passing into history, was to pass a new Trade Act which will guarantee that the Rockefellers and their associates can expand their trade relations with Russia and Red China. And just think: Three Bilderbergers are running America!

DON BELL REPORTS is a weekly newsletter that accents the Christian American point of view. Additional copies: 10¢ each. Complete Service.....$24 per year
Address all orders and correspondence to:
DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

Don Bell Reports

Year Twenty-One ----- Number Fifty-One ----- December 27, 1974

WHAT EVERY CONGRESSMAN SHOULD KNOW ABOUT MONEY - AND MAY HAVE BEEN AFRAID TO ADMIT

DEAR MR. CONGRESSMAN: . . . "

As we prepare to set aside the old calendar of events and open up new sheets for the weeks and months of the new year of our Lord, 1975, it is generally agreed that the state of the economy is the most serious national problem facing the United States. The President and the Vice President have their program for recovery, the Senate and House that has adjourned sine die had other programs and other ideas. Everyone in authority (especially those looking toward the Presidential Handicap of 1976) has a plan and a program. But all of these plans and programs seem to be directed at symptoms. They are pain relievers perhaps, but they are not cures.

Recently there have been a few individuals who have dared to name the disease that may have brought on this national terminal illness. In this newsletter we bring nothing new on the subject, but we do bring some new witnesses to back up what every reader of this letter already knows, and what United States Senators and Congressmen may or may not know, but who should know that you know, and that you expect to hold them responsible for the state of the economy as they take the pledge of allegiance to the Constitution of the United States and begin their duties as representatives of the people in the 94th Congress on January 14, 1974.

Our three chief witnesses are 1) the National Taxpayers Union, a knowledgeable group of private citizens who want to hold down taxes; 2) a chairman of a large insurance company who is concerned with the threatening death of the Republic; and 3) a Congressman who has dared to place the blame for the nation's economic ills exactly where the blame belongs. So, first:-

Here are some highlights from an article by Felix R. McKnight in the Dallas Times Herald of Sunday, December 15, 1974.

The National Taxpayers Union is a bellringing group dedicated to the goal of "limiting taxation in America to no more than was taken from the serfs in the Dark Ages." Some of its literature keeps coming to the desk and its latest bulletin reveals that U.S. taxpayers are now on the hook for at least $5 trillion. And your personal share of this shocker, the National Taxpayers Union advises, is $115,000. Itemized for your convenience, are such things as:

- * National debt, $458 billion;
your share, $11,777.
- * Other fiscal liabilities, $63 billion;
your share, $1,400.
- * Undelivered orders, $102 billion;
your share, $2,666.
- * Long term contracts, $9 billion;
your share, $200.
- * Financial commitments, $158 billion;
your share, $3,511.
- * Insurance commitments, $1 trillion, 22 billion;
your share, $22,711.
- * Annuity programs, two trillion, 635 dollars;
your share, $58,555.
- * Unadjusted claims, $5 billion;
your share, $133.
- * International commitments, $7 billion;
your share, $155.

But there is more, says the National Taxpayers Union. Figure in liability growth in fiscal 1974 of another $600 billion, with your share of 1974 coming to $18,333 and you come up with the neat total as your personal part at $114,818.

The union's final pitch at the taxpaying individual is that it is working toward the enactment of a new constitutional amendment that would prohibit government "confiscation" of more than 25 percent of your income—not entirely a reachable goal for a myriad reasons—but still its objective.

It adds: "We don't think you should have to spend any more of your time working for the government than did indentured serfs in the Dark Ages. The serfs of old were required to spend only three months toiling for their masters. The remainder of the year they were free to work for themselves. We want you to be at least as free as a serf!"

So, serfs, you've got a National Taxpayers Union out there pitching for you — and that $115,000 they say is your share. But big government spending has been a stubborn, and consistent hitter. (End of quote).

So, according to the National Taxpayers Union, and it is being very conservative in its statistics, the United States Government is in the red five trillion dollars as of the end of fiscal 1974. Five trillion dollars is five thousand billion dollars; and we should remember that this figure is subject to inflation, too. Each year, Big Government spends more than it takes in. That means that, each year, our personal indebtedness grows greater, and the only people who make money out of debts are the people who collect the interest on those debts. Overspending and going deeper in debt is what inflation is all about; and, in the final analysis, it is what recessions and depressions are all about.

This is a part of what John Lloyd was saying to students at Northern Kentucky State College, in a recent speech. What he told the students might do some good if it were told to United States Congressmen as well. John A. Lloyd is chairman of the Union Central Life Insurance Co. in Cincinnati. He thinks that we are in such deep economic trouble that only a system of government controls can bail us out. In this we disagree; because we believe that only a system of controls over government spending can bail us out. It isn't what people spend that causes a national problem, it's what government spends in the name of the people that creates the problem. And, as someone so wisely said, "When Government tries to solve a problem, the solution becomes the problem."

However, Mr. Lloyd's analysis is excellent, and something every Congressman should peruse, pause and ponder. Here are excerpts from Mr. Lloyd's address to the students at Northern Kentucky State College:

CURB INFLATION, SAVE THE REPUBLIC

First, let us search for the causes of inflation... To do so, we must go back to the Great Depression which began on October 29, 1929... President Hoover... attempted to deal with the problem... He secured enactment of statutes creating the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the Federal Home Loan Corporation and of a $3 billion relief and reconstruction act... and ultimately (and I feel certain very sadly) permitted the first federal deficit since World War I... Mr. Hoover, of course, did not start the Depression or do anything whatever to bring it about but he was blamed for it... The new President (Franklin D. Roosevelt) reacted vigorously. However, his policies were exactly the opposite of his campaign promises. This statement is not a criticism but a recitation of a fact of history. Whereas he was elected on a platform of rigid economy in government, promising to reduce its cost by 25 percent, elimination of deficit financing... his program caused the size of government to profligate.

He took the country off the gold standard, devalued the dollar from 100 cents to 52 cents, prohibited the ownership of gold bullion or coins... The result was that the currency of the United States was free to fluctuate in value, uncontrolled by any anchor other than the politically contrived anchor of the will of the Federal Reserve Bank—and we lost a defense against the disease of inflation which we never have recovered.

There are certain unwritten laws of economics which dare not be violated... Let us enumerate the major economic crimes which we have committed. First, a free-swinging, unanchored, monetary system violates the fundamental law of the need for a firm and strong medium of exchange... Second, no nation can go on an unbridled deficit financing program without inducing inflation and it cannot fail to pay its debts without going bankrupt... If the richest man in the world gave away his wealth, he would impoverish himself... The same simple reasoning applies to nations... Since 1917, the United States has given away or loaned to foreign countries more than $167 billion, 179 million. All of this huge sum we borrowed. On all of it we are paying interest.

I do not discuss the desirability or the wisdom of our making donations to other countries and peoples. I simply say that this is one of the causes of inflation... Fourth, the immediate reaction and inter-reaction of inflation produce the spiraling cycles by which the fires of distortion feed upon themselves.

Let us deal with the national debt. As of June 30, 1974, the gross federal debt of the United States was reported as $469,251,000,000... The interest cost on this debt for fiscal year 1974 is $26 billion, 100 million, or about $49,660 for every minute... This public debt... is one of the basic causes of inflation...

Perhaps a description of the malignant cycle of inflation can be helpful. Profits are the wages of capital. Salaries and wages are the profits of labor. The cost of government at all levels is a controllable factor which consumes the profits of both capital and labor. When, because of the imbalance of debt, the instability of the monetary system and the waste to our capital structure due to (for example) the government's profligacy in so-called foreign aid, the economic system sways insecurely as has ours for several years, profits get out of line, prices go up, wages must be increased to enable the wage earner to meet the cost of higher prices, which in turn are increased to provide for the cost of higher wages... Government, the largest employer and the most profligate spender, with the power to pump more paper currency into the system, does so and inflation goes still further out of control...

A British historian, commenting on the constitution of our country when that document first was issued, said that it had created a government that was "all sail and no anchor." That statement was made before we moved over from being a republic with a system of checks and balances to being a democracy with no checks and no balances. . . . Many great men have pointed to the incontrovertible fact that democracy contains the seeds of its own destruction. . . . It (democracy) is at the very root of our problem.

When you have a government solely dependent upon the acts of officials elected by the people, you inevitably have a system where the politicians give the people that for which they cry. If they want the government to support them, the politicians will fix it so that the government supports them.

In all truth, I think we all had better cry out with absolute and desperate sincerity those dramatic words with which every session of every federal court is opened: "God save the United States of America," and then we had better work to that end no matter what sacrifice we must make. . . .

(End of quotation)

Our third witness is Bud Shuster, Congressman from Pennsylvania, who prepared a statement for publication in the newspapers in his congressional district. He also submitted his statement to the House of Representatives on December 10, 1974. But, in those last days of the dying 93rd Congress, it is doubtful that many, if any, Representatives paid any attention to the facts presented, or permitted those facts to interfere with their vote-casting on the remaining money bills. Here is Representative E. G. Shuster's statement:

INFLATION WAS NOT MADE IN HEAVEN

No great mystery cloaks the causes of inflation, even though some would have us believe that inflation is so esoterically complex, pervasively uncontrollable, and possibly even made in heaven.

Our present inflation was caused fundamentally by the actions of Congressmen, Senators and Presidents just as surely as fire causes gasoline to burn. And those elected officials responsible for inflation would just as soon keep the subject fuzzy rather than answer for their actions.

Inflation—that is, the decline in the purchasing power of our dollars—has several causes. Included among them are population growth, the scarcity of raw materials, rising expectations, devaluation, government controls, anti-competitive policies, and political decisions such as the Arab oil embargo. But the inflation we face today, while aggravated by these many factors, was caused fundamentally by the enormous deficit spending of our Federal Government. Here's how it works: When a President requests and Congress approves spending measures which add up to more money than the Treasury collects in taxes, the difference is the deficit. When the Government spends more than it takes in, it has to find the difference somewhere to pay the bills. The Treasury does the only thing it can do since the President and Congress made financial commitments in excess of their means. Treasury tries to borrow the money.

When the deficit is so big that the Treasury can't sell enough government bonds or notes to the American people without causing interest rates to rise too high, the Treasury raises the money it needs to pay the Government's bills in a very unique way. The Treasury Department sells its bonds or notes to the Federal Reserve System, which is the federal agency that controls the supply of money in America. And get this—the Federal Reserve literally prints up more money on the government printing presses and pays it to the Treasury in exchange for the bonds which the Treasury printed up. The Treasury then takes this new money and pays the Government's debts.

This is a neat little arrangement which makes it easy for politicians to keep voting in favor of big spending programs without having to raise taxes to pay for them. It's all very pleasant to give every special interest group that knocks on your door the government programs that it wants, and all so painless since the Treasury can pay for those programs with the additional money printed by the Federal Reserve.

There is just one rub! If the Government keeps flooding more newly printed dollars into the economy, and if the economy is not increasing the annual amount of goods and services it produces, then the increased number of dollars in the economy represent the same amount of goods and services that the smaller number of dollars previously represented. And what is it when it takes more dollars to represent the same amount of goods and services—Inflation!

Think of it this way—suppose we awoke one morning and the only things of economic value left in the world were ten apple pies. If there were no money in the world we might decide to print ten one-dollar bills to represent the total money supply. That means, assuming all the pies were alike, that each pie would be worth one dollar.

But suppose that while we were admiring our 10 pies, someone printed up 10 additional paper dollars, making the money supply to represent the 10 pies $20.00. Now each pie would be worth $2.00. The pie wouldn't be any bigger or better—it would just cost twice as much. Sound familiar?

Although it's an over-simplification, that is exactly the way our national money supply works. When the Government presses print more paper money to pay for deficit spending, the real value of the dollar goes down since it takes more dollars to buy the same product or service.

Paper money is only valuable to the extent that it represents something of value—that is, all the paper dollars in our economy only stand for all of the things of real economic value in our economy. If we increase the total number of paper dollars but do not increase the things of real economic value (goods and services), then each dollar stands for a smaller amount of real economic value. The proof of the pudding is in the economic statistics of the past 15 years. According to the Treasury Department, the money supply (the M1 portion for any economists and financial types who have read this far) increased at an average rate of 2.4 percent from 1955 to 1965. Inflation (according to the Consumer Price Index) averaged 1.8 percent during that period. From 1965 to 1973 the money supply increased an average of 6 percent and inflation averaged 5.5 percent, trending upward to a 1973 rate of almost 9 percent.

The foregoing can be represented by a simple economic law. If over the long run, the money supply is increased at a rate greater than the increase in productivity, inflation will occur.

I don't like that economic law, and I wish we could make it go away. But we can't. When I'm adding up my income I wish two-plus-two would equal five, and when I'm adding up my bills I wish two-plus-two would equal three. Regardless, the sum equals four and I'm not going to get along too well until I face the facts of life, even though I may not like them.

The majority of Congressmen and U.S. Senators, as well as several past Presidents, have refused to face squarely this economic fact of life.

When Lyndon Johnson decided that the American people could finance a "guns and butter" policy—that is, pay for a war in Southeast Asia as well as his so-called "Great Society" programs—he sowed the seeds of today's inflation. But it took at least 218 Congressmen and 51 Senators to vote the funds for those mis-adventures of the sixties. Johnson ran up spending deficits of over $50 billion in just six years. Although Nixon inherited those programs, he must share the blame for an additional $66 billion in deficits.

Most importantly, no President can spend one penny unless Congress appropriates it. So the American people can thank those Congressmen and Senators who vote for all our wonderful spending programs... Congressmen and Senators who either did not have the knowledge or the guts (take your pick) to tell the American people that there are only two ways to pay for such enormous government spending programs—either by increasing taxes to pay the bills or by incurring high deficits and printing up paper money to cover the expenses. Either way, it's the American people who pay.

With increased taxes we would have paid the bills while they were being incurred. That would have been the open and forthright approach for our political leaders to take, but they knew the American people wouldn't stand for greatly increased taxes and would have thrown the rascals out of office. Instead, they chose the more devious way. Spend now and pay later became the philosophy—and later is finally here.

Every senior citizen who has watched the purchasing power of his pension and savings decline, every parent who had hoped to send his children to college but now finds the soaring cost out of reach, and every young married couple who watched their dreams of owning a home evaporate in the collapse of the housing industry, can thank those Congressmen and Senators who vote "yes" on so many "good" programs.

In my short two years as a freshman Congressman, I haven't seen a "bad" program yet. Well, that's not completely true, but the point is that all government programs have worthy purposes. If we want them, we must be willing to pay for them, either with increased taxes at the time we spend the money or through deficit spending and inflation later.

Some say, "cut out those 'unnecessary' programs so I can have my program," but so often that simply translates into "just so we can get ours now, the devil with the rest."

Unfortunately, there will always be more good programs than we can afford.

The American people want neither increased taxes nor inflation. It's about time for public leaders to talk straight and act responsibly.

Only through increased productivity can we continue to raise our standard of living. Only by increasing the size of the pie can we all get a larger slice.

(End of statement by Rep, Bud Shuster)

Three witnesses. The first, a taxwatchers group, suggests relief through a constitutional amendment limiting the power of Congress to tax. The second, a business executive, blames democracy and its policy of permitting people to vote themselves largesse from the public trough. The third, a Congressman, blames Congress for not warning constituents that they were destroying themselves through too many "good" programs.

A keyhole summary might read: When Government replaces God and the majority accedes, then all shall want and none shall be satisfied. We hope there are a few Congressmen and Senators who "get the message" before a Nation is lost.

DON BELL REPORTS is a weekly Newsletter. Complete service: $24 per year, Extra copies: 10¢ each. Please address all correspondence to: DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223 Palm Beach, Florida 33480

WORLD WAR III: A THREAT OR A PROMISE?

IS OIL THE KEY?

"The year 1975, all in all, is to be a rough one—at least at the start," reported the Jan. 6, 1975 issue of the national newsmagazine that, editorially, leans least to the left. "Hard times," the article continued, "will deepen before they end. Seven million people will be out of jobs by summer. Prices will keep going up for months, eating further into incomes of those still at work. Washington, split between a Republican White House and Democratic Congress, will be stalemated on many issues.

"Arabs will raise new threats to resume war in the Middle East and cut off oil to the U.S. and Europe. It will take the most skillful American diplomacy to avert it. . . . The Mideast. . . is the most crucial foreign-policy problem American will face in 1975."

Confirming this is George W. Ball, Bilderberg alumnus, sometime State Department Undersecretary and onetime U.S. representative to the United Nations. In the leading article in the Jan. 1975 Atlantic Monthly, Ball offers an alternative: more detente with the Soviet Union. He reckons that "to agree with Moscow on the practical determination of 'secure and recognized boundaries' (in the Mideast—Ed.) should not—after all this time—be too difficult, provided the settlement was guaranteed jointly by the United States and the Soviet Union. In addition, it might be necessary to provide for joint Soviet-American patrols of buffer areas."

After proposing that both the United States and the Soviet Union send troops to the Mideast—but as allies rather than opponents—Ball concludes his presently impossible dream with the words:

"With almost unlimited funds at their disposal, the Middle Eastern countries are frantically engaged in building up huge military machines, while the major industrial nations, with the exception of Japan, all vie with one another to pour arms into the region, and the Soviet Union arms Syria for its own strategic purposes. That is a far from happy prospect, for if one looks far enough into the future, it is hard to envisage an arms race of such magnitude that will not lead some nation somewhere down the line to use the weapons it has procured.

"Let us, then, be quite realistic. Unless we can develop some common approach with the Soviet Union, the danger that the Middle East may become a Balkan-like situation, involving the superpowers in a nuclear confrontation, cannot be lightly dismissed."

What Ball suggests concerning joint U.S.-Soviet action in the Mideast is seen as a possibility by some European leaders. The Associated Press, December 23, released a dispatch which reported that "West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt said joint intervention by the United States and the Soviet Union is 'possible' in the Middle East if the oil problem or a military crisis in the area threatens world peace. In an interview published Sunday (Dec. 22) by the German economic newspaper Handelsblatt, Schmidt said . . . 'one must remember that the 1956 Suez crisis. . . and other world-endangering crises since then were resolved through partly open, partly hidden concerted action of both powers. I would consider the same also possible in case the Middle East should again present a difficult, world-endangering crisis. I would also consider intervention possible if, from the oil problem, either in connection with a Mideast crisis or independent thereof, a new crisis would come endangering the entire world'."

The possibility of "united" action by the U.S. and the U.S.S.R. would be frowned upon and treated with utmost suspicion by all rational and patriotic Americans, but such a move would be what might be expected of Henry Kissinger, who is U.S. Secretary of State, head of U.S. Security Agencies (including the controversial C.I.A.) and is, at the same time, accused of being a double-agent for the Soviets as well as for the Rockefellers.

Perhaps the possibility of a USSR-USA-Rockefeller Coalition (to be arranged by Kissinger) for control of the distribution of Mideast oil, was the real reason for Soviet Communist Party Secretary Brezhnev's cancellation of a scheduled visit to Cairo. A dispatch from Cairo, dated Dec. 31, stated:

"Soviet Communist party leader Leonid I. Brezhnev told Egyptian Foreign Minister Ismail Fahmy that he was forced to postpone his visit to the Middle East because of ill health, informed diplomats said yesterday. The diplomats did not define the nature of the Soviet leader's ailment but said he had been confined to bed since shortly after his return from a state visit to France and that he received his Egyptian visitors in a sanitarium outside Moscow and not, as originally reported, in a government villa.

"Members of the Egyptian delegation that returned here (Cairo) last night steadfastly declined to comment on the reports of Brezhnev's illness. The plane carrying Fahmy and Defense Minister Mohammed Abdel Ghani Gamassy touched down in the early evening and the two men were received almost immediately by President Anwar Sadat." (End of quotation from Cairo dispatch).

At Vail, Colo., before he began skiing, President Ford held a brief press conference, at which he said that there was a "high likelihood of war" in the Middle East, unless something broke. Just what he hoped would break and prevent war, he did not say. But the U.S. News & World Report said the "danger point in the Middle East will come in April or May of this year, American intelligence experts say. By that time Israel, bolstered by armaments from the United States, and Syria, beefed up by Russia, will have completed resupply operations to make up for losses suffered in the October war of 1973, and forces of both Syria and Israel then will be in peak combat position."

But Newsweek of Jan. 6 reports something that could alter the entire calendar. "A major worry for President Ford's policy planners," said Newsweek, "is a new political coalition in the next Congress that could block investment in the U.S. by dollar-heavy Arabs and other oil-producing countries. The new bloc is composed of pro-Israeli legislators and isolationists, and one top Administration official expects them to put about 40 bills into the Congressional mill to block or slow down investment in the U.S. by oil-producing countries. The problem is that such investments are a key part of the economic program the Ford Administration's planners are trying to put together in order to 'recycle' the huge stocks of dollars that are continuing to pile up in the treasuries of the oil sheiks and other producers."

Regardless of the financial and economic considerations, upon his return from that "vacation" with VeePee Nelson Rockefeller

Secretary of State Henry Kissinger assured newsmen that nothing less than an oil embargo and "strangulation of the industrial nations" would precipitate American military action in the Mideast.

However, there are reports from usually reliable Washington sources that the Ford Administration has made contingency plans for a takeover of the Mideast oil fields, and there are equally reliable reports from Cairo to the effect that the Arab leaders are already prepared for such action, have mined their oil fields and would blow them up at the slightest hint of an invasion. It is estimated that it would then take at least a year before any oil could be produced. This, of course, would "strangle" the industrial nations of Europe—who might then be forced to make deals with the Soviet Union for the oil and gas which is to be produced from fields being developed in Siberia with American technology and money through the courtesy of Rockefeller-Hammer-Eaton and associated multinational interests.

However, propaganda to the contrary notwithstanding, the closing down of Mideast oil sources would have little direct effect on the United States because we do not depend on Mideast oil. Senator Mike Mansfield is reported to have said: "We're not going to solve our oil crisis by confrontation or by aggressive actions in the Middle East which, incidentally, is not the main supplier of imported oil to this country. The main supplier happens to be Venezuela, followed by Canada, followed by Nigeria, followed by Iran, and then the first Middle East country, Saudi Arabia, imports to this country approximately 9.5 percent of all our imported oil."

Confirming the foregoing information, Frank Capell in his reliable Confidential Intelligence Report of January, 1974, says that:

"From Washington, reports are that a comprehensive study of American 'military options' in dealing with the oil crisis has been initiated by one of the country's leading 'think tanks' (believed to be the Rand Corporation of California) and that no serious attempt is being made to conceal this from foreign intelligence agents in Washington. A number of Ford Administration policy makers are not holding back from candid discussions of the possibility of armed action by the United States if the oil crisis becomes unmanageable.

"The liberal and pro-Zionist communications media consistently concentrate on the Arab oil as affecting the U.S. economy, and remind us of the long gas lines we endured last winter. The fact is that there was no gasoline shortage; there was a surplus. It was held in reserve tanks and the government deliberately allocated large quantities to areas where the need was small and smaller quantities were allocated where the need was greater. All of this, of course, resulted in the oil companies jacking up their prices until their financial statements showed unprecedented profits.

"The Ford Administration is also working on tentative plans to bring about gradual restrictions on gasoline beginning early in 1975, according to Washington sources, and this has absolutely nothing to do with Arab oil. To the contrary, it is believed the Administration wants to stockpile the oil to supply to those nations which support the Zionists and which as a result will be subjected to an oil embargo from the Arab countries.

"During the 1967 'six-day war,' Israel seized territory in the Sinai which contained the Egyptian oil fields and Washington intelligence sources state that in an effort to improve relations with the Egyptian government, Henry Kissinger has led the Egyptians to believe that the U.S. will reimburse them for the $2 billion worth of oil taken by the Israelis from these fields. The Arab governments have formed a close military and economic alliance and are going to insist on the return of the seized territories before too much longer. The Israelis, on the other hand, are determined to hold Jerusalem, the oil fields, and much of the other seized territories. Observers believe that unless Israel can be prevailed upon to give back the territories, there will be a new and major war in the Middle East within six months." (End of quotation from The Confidential Intelligence Report, monthly, $10 per year; Box 3, Zarephath, N.J. 08890.)

In the firm belief that in national and international affairs nothing "just happens," but that crucial confrontations "are planned that way," it is passing strange that an oil crisis developed after Henry Kissinger—the chief agent of the oil-controlling Rockefeller—became United States Secretary of State and began acting as a mediator of disputes involving Israelis and Arabs. It is also strange that at a time when an international oil crisis threatens to create a "new world order" via petrodollars, the "political brother" of the oil-controlling Rockefeller family is appointed Vice President of the United States. Equally strange is the fact that Time Magazine, which has always been so careful never to offend the Zionist interests, departed totally from its usual first-of-the-year practice of naming some important political or humanitarian leader, and named King Faisal of Saudi Arabia as its "Man of the Year." The cover story, adorned with impressive full-color illustrations and pictures of fellow Arab leaders, bore the significant headline:

DRIVING TOWARD A NEW WORLD ORDER

It is as though the United States were being "used" to establish a New World Order in which multinational deals will replace international compacts and treaties, and national governments will become the mere policing powers for multinational corporations and the instruments of corporate individuals.

We used the term "USSR-USA-Rockefeller Coalition," and we were not kidding. With the Rockefeller Multinational Corporate Amalgam already possessing more financial and economic power than most nations, all it needs is a supranational political base and a military establishment sufficient to protect its resources and its investments, and this Amalgam becomes a New World Order of the type International Bankers and Cartelists have dreamed about ever since the dawning of the so-called Industrial Age.

With the Rockefellers assuming virtual control of the Executive Branch of the Federal Government while at the same time forming an alliance with the Council of Ministers of the Soviet Union, the head of which is the Secretary of the Communist Party; and here will have been formed a power combination unchallenged and unchallengeable.

As an indication of this possible intent, observe the manner in which Nelson Rockefeller seems to be taking charge. The current U.S. News & World Report page of "Washington Whispers" is headed by the following item: "Vice President Nelson A. Rockefeller hopes to keep close at hand some well-paid aides who have served him over the years but who are unwilling to go on the federal payroll at reduced salaries. One idea is to place a number of the brain-trusters in prestigious Washington law firms. The Vice President is encountering some difficulty in finding firms willing to cooperate."

So, we see the Rockefeller Corporate Administration coalescing with the Rockefeller Federal Government Administration! Conflict of interests? Not if Rockefeller and American interests have become synonymous and if we accept the "planted" idea that "what is good for Rockefeller is good for the United States."

Furthermore, it should never be overlooked that the real head of the Rockefeller Royal Family is the youngest brother, David. And what David wants, David always seems to get. Of him it has been said that he is "the only man for whom the Presidency of the United States would be a step down." In a recent issue of a hard-to-get, controlled circulation magazine called "Business and Society Review/Innovation," we ran across an interview with David Rockefeller which was granted to the editor, Theodore Cross. In his introduction to the interview, Cross notes that David is "the controlling force behind a $37 billion institution," that David is very ambitious in social matters, cultivates a very high profile in international circles. Cross notes that David's Chase Manhattan Bank was "the first U.S. bank with a representative office in Moscow. And the first banking link between (Red) China and the U.S. in twenty-four years is a newly created correspondent relationship between Chase and the Bank of China. The latest word is that Chase will open a representative office in Cairo soon."

It is revealed by Editor Cross that Business and Society Review sat down with Mr. Rockefeller to explore the subject of morality in business," and under the title, "The Dilemma of Corporate Responsibility and Maximum Profit," here are excerpts from the published interview (we suspect that the original copy was carefully edited):

CROSS: ...you said that it is vital that social accountability become an integral part of corporate conduct rather than a philanthropic add-on. ...

ROCKEFELLER: ...I think that a bank such as ours has some accountability to society as a whole. ...in the world of today we must increasingly recognize that all elements of society interrelate. ...

...I personally feel that the role of the church is to try to interpret religion as they see it and to try to improve the moral standards and quality of their membership. I myself find it very difficult to see them getting into economic issues. ...What we have done with South Africa is to try to inform ourselves. ...I met not only South African government figures and business men, but also a great many liberal people... blacks and members of the so-called colored community. ...They (all) feel that quiet pressures by American business can be and have been very effective.

CROSS: Professor Milton Friedman makes an argument that if a corporation takes it upon itself to determine what is right and wrong, what is in the public interest and what is not, that the corporation is "playing God" and assuming the role of the legislature in determining public policy. ...

ROCKEFELLER: ...as for "playing God," I feel that, in the last analysis, one has to make a judgment. ...

CROSS: Would you say that ... the banks are acting as legislatures setting public policy?

ROCKEFELLER: Well, in a sense they are. ...I feel quite strongly that banks should not try to take political positions. ... They shouldn't refrain from making loans just because there are some who disagree with the political implications. ...

All of these questions you're asking me are dilemmas, and I don't think there's an open-and-shut answer to any of them. We're dealing with shades of gray, and I think that the right decision for a bank may change from one year to another. The attitudes of society on such issues, and in relation to corporations, change over time. I don't propose to feel that there is one right answer and one wrong answer to every question, or that what is right in one context at one time must always be right. ...

CROSS: A final question. Are you optimistic about capitalism?

ROCKEFELLER: Yes. I think it's undergoing a lot of modification. The important thing is that capitalism remain flexible and not try to adhere to an arbitrary, preconceived notion of what it should be and not deviate from that. This is one reason why I disagree with those who say that a corporation should attend only to business and pay no attention to the rest of the world. I think that if that happens, I would be pessimistic. If corporations are responsive to the trends and forces of society, and try to adapt their actions and behavior to those forces, then the chances are that capitalism can and will survive. (End of quote).

So, says David, there are no eternal verities, only shades of gray. Churches should not "play God" but corporations may. Corporations should act like legislatures yet disregard politics and boundaries when promoting trade and making loans. And capitalism will survive if it learns to live with socialism. Finally: is war a threat or a promise? That depends on what's good for the Rockefellers.

DON BELL REPORTS Weekly. Complete service: $24 per year. Extra copies: 10¢ each. For further information please write: DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223 Palm Beach, Florida 33480

ON SEEKING A STATE OF EMERGENCY

BEWARE OF E.O. 11490

Whenever a nation is in the throes of moral or economic disaster its leaders—be they kings or dictators, presidents or premiers—seek some emergency which will induce the people to think of other things, and get them united against some common enemy, be it a real or an imaginary enemy. Usually, this common enemy is a people or peoples, such as the Nazis, Fascists and Bushidoists of World War II, the Communists of the Cold War period, the North Koreans and the North Vietnamese, and now perhaps the Arabians whose lands are oil-bearing. Sometimes this common enemy is an idea or a created situation, such as an oil-crisis, a food shortage, an aggravated ecological crusade, a civil rights or womens rights movement, or even a consumer protection campaign.

Taking our cue from history, it was this editor's belief that our emergency-panacea in 1975 would turn out to be American military involvement in the Middle East. And our leaders must have had the same idea. However, when the temperature of the American people was tested, there came doubts. Surprisingly, James C. Jones, Detroit bureau chief for Newsweek, was given a full page in that publication's January 6th issue. He used the space to write an open letter to President Ford, in which he said he would not permit his sons to be sent to fight a war in the Middle East.

"I no longer accept the argument," declared Newsweek's Jones, "that the world is too small for us to ignore. I do not accept the thesis that we are policemen of the world. Korea and Vietnam taught us otherwise. Personally, I prefer now to let such small antagonists hammer each other without U.S. intrusion.... My family owes nothing to anyone in the Mideast, not good old Golda nor Hussein nor... Arafat nor Faisal nor Sadat, none of them. Nor do we ask anything of them, other than to reckon us out of their fray. In one generation, this family has managed to do combat with Germans, Japanese, North Koreans and Chinese, and that suffices.... my sons will not engage in any mail-order police action designed to capture oil or to prevent the displacement of Israelis or Palestinians or to rearrange geographical boundaries. In the event that the U.S. is committed to Mideastern combat, my sons will take their leave or perhaps even jail, but I insist that they shall not take part...."

That such words should appear in a pro-Zionist, CFR-controlled propaganda outlet, was indeed surprising. And so was the world-wide response to a warlike statement made by Henry Kissinger in an interview by the editors of McGraw-Hill's Business Week. Kissinger had made previous statements on the subject that were much stronger, and generally they were bypassed with little serious comment. In the Business Week interview, all Kissinger said was that "military action on oil prices" would be "a very dangerous course. We should have learned from Vietnam that it is easier to get into a war than to get out of it. I am not saying that there's no circumstance where we would not use force. But it is one thing to use it in the case of a dispute over price. It's another where there's some actual strangulation of the industrialized world.... the use of force would be considered only in the gravest emergency."

Almost immediately after the publication of that statement, the leaders of that "industrialized world"—and the Soviet press as well—were figuratively up in arms, accusing Kissinger of war-mongering and engaging in gunboat diplomacy.

Actually, Kissinger is using the oil price situation, as well as the world food situation, and the overly dramatized energy crisis, and the alleged population explosion, and every other pretext he can find or invent, to promote this New World Order that he is attempting to set up for the Rockefeller-Rothschild Combine. Kissinger takes every opportunity to tell the world that "today's economic problems can be solved only through international action," and he offers "international action" as the only solution to any and all problems, domestic, personal, or otherwise.

Kissinger's "solution" was made public at that world food conference that proved to be such a dud. Then late in November he managed to bring together representatives of some sixteen nations at Paris, where he supervised the birth of an International Energy Agency (IEA). It soon became obvious to all the oil-hungry nations that Kissinger intended to convert the governing board of IEA into a "powerful, centralized energy policy-making body for the Western industrial world." Kissinger had plans for forcing Japan, the United States, and the industrial nations of Western Europe into accepting drastic limitations for energy usage, and to establish a minimum price for oil. IEA was also set up to ration oil imports to Japan, Western Europe and the U.S. Nationally syndicated columnist Paul Scott reported that "aides say Kissinger sees the international panel (the governing board of IEA) as one of several to be set up to develop worldwide policies on energy, food, water, the environment, and population." The overall plan is then to link up all of these international agencies under a "World Control Committee," thus forming a loosely knitted world government.

"It is planned," Scott reported, "that the standard of living in Western industrial nations will be gradually lowered while that in the rest of the world is raised" so as to "develop the climate" for what Kissinger refers to as the World Community, or the New World Order.

It is for this final goal of the New World Order that crises are created, or adverse conditions are propagandized and developed until they become crises; then the crises are used as pretexts for creating new international agencies to deal with the crises. The key assumption always being: "this crisis can be solved only through international action."

Hence the oil price crisis which shifted the world's financial center to the Middle East, made billions for a few people, and brought about Kissinger's International Energy Agency. If "strangulation" and Mideast War should eventuate, this IEA will become a little world government within itself, with mandatory powers over the world's energy sources and supplies.

However, with American opposition to our entry into a shooting war to steal oil and save the Israelis, and with worldwide opposition to Kissinger's 'gunboat diplomacy,' it now appears that U.S., or U.S./U.S.S.R. allied military action in Araby will come only as a last, extreme measure.

Meanwhile, since the state of the economy seems to demand a war somewhere, as the threat of a Mideast War waned, the threat of our re-entry into Vietnam and Cambodia became real and possible. A little jungle town, neither more nor less important than scores of others that have fallen since the Vietnamese troops were left to defend their own, was captured by the Vietcong. And the propaganda mill was turned on: The Vietnamese needed immediate aid, a U.S. Navy fleet headed by the Carrier Enterprise was dispatched to Vietnamese waters, a bill to provide additional billions for Vietnam was broached and as we went to press, the usual highly reliable sources in Washington began to hint that American troops just might be sent back into Vietnam.

However, the reaction to sending troops into Southeast Asia would be even stronger than the reaction to sending troops into Mideast Asia.

All in all, Kissinger's plans are meeting with opposition or outright failure at every turn. His latest international venture had to do with his attempts to "recycle petrodollars" through OECD. The overall opposition is evidenced in this Los Angeles Times news dispatch of January 8:

"London—Common Market Finance Ministers Tuesday rebuffed Secretary of State Henry Kissinger and approved a British plan to recycle more than $10 billion in Arab "petrodollars" through the International Monetary Fund. Kissinger had been urging that the recycling should be done through a new $25 billion fund administered through the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD), a smaller group limited to industrialized nations.

"The finance ministers' decision was taken at an informal meeting in London and was viewed as a notable success for Chancellor of the Exchequer Denis Healey. The plan, designed to ease the massive drain on foreign exchange in oil-consuming countries, will be discussed at a larger meeting of finance ministers in Washington next week.

"After the meeting Tuesday, Healey declared that the nine ministers supported his plan 'unanimously.' Healey said he hoped that IMF Managing Director Johannes Witteveen would begin talks with the oil-producing states soon to set up the plan originally advanced by the British minister in October. "The Common Market ministers said they would 'study' the Kissinger plan, which Healey said could be developed as a supplement to the IMF proposal. He declared, however, that the Kissinger plan involved legal and technical difficulties that would make it difficult to bring into operation before the end of the year.

"Critics maintained that the Kissinger plan would give the United States undue influence in administering the petro-dollars that the oil producers would return to the consumers for investment. Also, some critics fear that the Kissinger plan could lead to confrontation between the producers and consumers, to the detriment of the Common Market countries, which are more heavily dependent on Arab oil than is the United States." (Correction, please: What the Common Market ministers feared was that Kissinger's plan would give too much power not to the United States government, but to the United States Invisible Government, which wants to be on top when the New World Order is finally established.)

Kissinger has lost none of his power, but he has lost much prestige and reverence. His essays and excursions as mediator in the Middle East have not been crowned with success, his remarks at the world food conference were not digested by the representatives of other nations, his setting up of the International Energy Agency was criticized, his attempts to gain control of the disbursement of petro-dollars have been rebuffed, and the industrialized nations of the world still smart because of his obvious toadying to Soviet Russia and Communist China during the Nixon regime.

And here at home, also having lost no power but much prestige, Kissinger is blamed for the threat to send American troops into the Mideast to save oil and Israelis, and he will be blamed if this threat to send Americans back into Vietnam grows more imminent.

Even more disturbing to the Kissinger image is the current campaign to uncover the domestic activities of the Central Intelligence Agency. Kissinger already has been linked to certain wiretapping episodes; he has not escaped suspicion of being the man who prompted the breaking and entering of the office of a psychiatrist who was treating a certain CFR member and alleged Communist agent who stole papers from RAND and gave them to the New York Times and the Washington Post. Though Ehrlichman took the rap in the Daniel Ellsberg case, the fact that the CIA was said to have been involved (as it also was alleged to have been involved in the Watergate break-in), pointed the finger of suspicion at Secretary of State Henry Kissinger, because that individual was nominal head of the CIA at the time of the violations charged by The New York Times.

Aside from his roles as Secretary of State of the United States, foreign policy adviser to the Rockefeller Dynasty, and alleged double agent in the service of the Secretary General of the Communist Party of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, Kissinger also is the President's chief adviser on national security affairs, as such dominates the National Security Council, and is chairman of the so-called "40 Committee," which oversees all activities of the United States "intelligence community." This includes the CIA, the FBI, the U.S. Secret Service, and the counterintelligence activities of the Army, Navy, Air Force and Coast Guard.

In short, Kissinger is chief of all spy activities of the United States Federal Government and, as such, all illegal activities of the CIA would redound to Kissinger's discredit.

However, there are ways of covering for very important people, and some kind of new sensation was needed to bemuse the American citizenry. In the political tradition of "bread and circuses" to prevent outright rebellion against the rascals in office, the Watergate affair had served its purpose well and lengthily. Scapegoats had been exiled or imprisoned, or even pardoned. But all the important cases were closed, Watergate was drained dry, something new in the way of national scandal was needed to occupy the newsmen and the commentators. And a sensational investigation of the controversial CIA would fill the bill excellently, if the investigation could be kept under control, and if the VIPs could be protected and kept clean of smear and smut. So -

As in previous similar sensational news beats, The New York Times was chosen as the bearer of "all the news that fits." President Ford, acting his part as "Mr. Clean," displayed the expected shock and surprise, interrupted an attempted slalom to state unequivocally that no such shenanigans would be tolerated as long as he was President (six months, say the oddsmakers.) President Ford also sent a message to his security chief, Kissinger, directing him to investigate and report. Accordingly, Kissinger prepared a report, said to be of some 10,000 words in length, sent the report to President Ford and immediately took off on a "vacation trip" with the newly appointed Vice President of the United States, Nelson Aldrich Rockefeller. And upon their return from that "vacation," the said Nelson Rockefeller was named as head of a blue ribbon panel which was to investigate the illegal activities of the CIA within the national boundaries of the United States.

What a mockery! It rivals the panel that was set up to investigate the assassination of President John Kennedy, a national tragedy in which the CIA allegedly had a hand, although the final report on the circumstances surrounding that event was a cover-up operation. Like the assassination of President Abraham Lincoln, the true story may never be revealed officially.

Conditions have been arranged to make this CIA investigation a similar cover-up operation. That is why Nelson Rockefeller, who is Henry Kissinger's real boss, was chosen to chair the panel. Too, it is to be a limited investigation.

Within the CIA there was established, in 1962, a Domestic Operations Division, a super-secret section of the CIA about which most CIA officials know little or nothing. It is not the CIA that is being investigated, but the DOD, a section of the CIA. Since few officials know much about it and since those who do know probably will never be called upon to testify except at executive (secret) sessions, this can be a controlled and limited investigation, producing many headlines and sensational stories, but few solid facts.

Moreover, as a follow-up to Watergate, this CIA performance will be like a side-show act coming on after a center ring extravaganza.

More importantly, in this bread and circuses routine, CIA may keep the circus going, but what of the bread? The ranks of the unemployed are growing dangerously, basic industries are closing their doors. Production lines are slowing, and consumers are making only necessary purchases. Government officials are anxious to treat the symptoms. They seek to encourage the fearful by lowering income taxes, which may slow down the recession but will speed up inflation. To counter this, they seek ways of imposing hidden taxes on oil, etc. This may slow down the rate of inflation, but it will encourage the recession.

So, Government leaders—even the Rockefellers—seem to be caught on the proverbial horns of a dilemma. And this at a time when the ages-old solution of plunging the nation into a foreign war, seems most dangerous.

Which brings up the one possible solution which was arranged over five years ago, just in case dictatorial control became necessary. We refer to Executive Order 11490. This is that all-embracing stand-by order of October 28, 1969, which was published in the Federal Register two days later. This order brings the regulation of our entire population under the absolute control of twenty-eight branches of the Federal Bureaucracy, beginning with Kissinger's Department of State and ending with the Veterans Administration.

Working through the Ten Federal Regional Districts and their sub-regions, these 28 agencies will assume dictatorial control over all communications media, electric and power sources, food supplies, transportation and highways, railroads, inland waterways, storage facilities, civilian labor control, health, education and welfare. Every person in the country would be registered and, where necessary, entire populations would be shifted from one area to another. Federal management of all farms and productive properties would be assumed. Wages and prices would be frozen. Private homes would be requisitioned where necessary for "proper shelter of the population." Bank deposit withdrawals would be regulated and the stock and grain exchanges closed.

There is a catch-all provision: all similar or regulated authorities called for in all preceding Executive Orders of all past Presidents of the United States are incorporated in Executive Order 11490, unless such order has been previously revoked. E.O. 11490 is a 33-page, 2,000-word document giving any President of the United States—be he appointed or elected to that office—the power to place this country and its people under and absolute dictatorship. In invoking this drastic nationwide command simply by declaring that a national emergency exists, any President can subject the entire country to his absolute "rule by decree" and thus solve any national crisis by force, and even order us into a World Government if he so conceives such action as being in the best interests of his Bureaucratic Dictatorship. At the height of Watergate Nixon might have invoked this Executive Order but he did not, possibly because he was ordered not to do so, possibly because he was less wily than wicked. But with a President who has struggled all his life to gain such power, can we trust him to use such power wisely and in the best interests of the people of the United States?

We may see that question answered; for the man of whom we speak is but a breath away from possession of the greatest powers a mere mortal ever exercised.

DON BELL REPORTS Weekly. Complete service: $24 per year. Extra copies: 10¢ each. Please address all correspondence to:
DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

CONCERNING THE FORTY COMMITTEE

CONSPIRACY, COVER-UP OR DEvised DIVERSION?

We are at a watershed, said Secretary of State Henry Kissinger on a public television broadcast aired Thursday evening, January 16. He said that we face a choice; we can move forward, constructively, toward the building of the New World Society, or we can sink back into chaos and catastrophe.

What bothers your reporter, is that there are no strong voices in positions of leadership to refute Kissinger. We have, in fact, become a nation without national leadership. The same is true of the other nations of the world that once were important and extremely nationalistic. There are international leaders, but no national leaders of real importance. Even in the Communist countries, Mao Tse-tung and Chou En-lai are leaving none with the strength to fill their shoes, Tito is without important successor, and we are told that Brezhnev is ill and incapacitated. There are, we are told, many leaders who are international communists, but there are none of importance left who would think of Russia first.

In a previous letter, we suggested that this lack of important national leadership in the Western Nations may have been planned at a historic meeting of the Bilderbergers in 1966, a meeting attended by Gerald Ford, among others of little importance at the time.

At the convening of the 94th Congress of the United States, this liquidation of old leaders—be they good or bad leaders—is taking place, especially in the House where men who have grown gray in chairmanships of standing committees, are being ousted and replaced by mavericks with little talent or political wisdom.

And at the White House, where there remains a vestige of national leadership, there are hints that appointed internationalists are about to assume full and complete control. And, the bad advice being given to Ford, advice which is being accepted naively and without blueprint or programming to carry it through to conclusion (as with the WIN campaign and the present plan of giving the people a tax rebate of $15 billion, taking back from oil manipulations $55 billion, and ending up with a deficit of $40 billion). It would seem that there is a deliberate plan to make President Ford seem foolish—and he was a linesman, not a quarterback.

Among the more discerning students of current events, there is much speculation as to the stability and duration of the Ford-Rockefeller-Kissinger power combine. Some believe that, now that Rockefeller is about to attain the position he has always sought, by purchase if not by election, Kissinger will soon bow out of the "national" arena and move on to a strictly international post where he can continue to develop the "New World Order" without nationalistic or legalistic restrictions of any kind. Others are of the opinion that Kissinger will remain as Rockefeller's chief operative as the delayed-since-Watergate Triangular Constellation is developed to conclusion (this is the Orwellian concept of a three-way division of the world into Regional Governments headed by the United States, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the Peoples Republic of China, with the Common Market Nations of Europe and the new Japanese Co-prosperity Sphere coming in to make of the world a Pentagonal Power Constellation.

This latter development might find Ford an impediment to progress and but a transitory occupant of the White House. And in this connection, the current alleged investigation of the Central Intelligence Agency may play an important part. Ford demanded an investigation into the domestic activities of the CIA, an agency in which both Kissinger and Rockefeller are, or have been in Rocky's case, personally involved. Even though Ford seemed to make the whitewash available by naming his Vice President to head the probe, things could get out of hand because of "another Mr. Dean" or through the investigative activities of eager newshounds who think the people have a right to know the facts behind a story; and in such a situation the naive and uncontaminated (by CIA) Mr. Clean might become a threat to the "integrity" of Messers Rockefeller and Kissinger—in which case it would become necessary to dispense with the services of Ford.

A very perceptive correspondent came upon a strange historical parallel that may be germane. We quote from a personal letter, deleting parts therefrom to protect the identity of the writer:

"I recently . . . found an interesting parallel with Kissinger's latest statement as quoted in the Arizona Republic Jan. 8, 1975. He is quoted as saying, 'Congress has severely limited my ability to act in critical areas' and he has asked his aides to mount a massive effort to persuade Congress to give him 'more flexibility' and to end what he regards as 'unwarranted interference in the day-to-day conduct of foreign affairs.'

"One might ask, 'was there ever such egotistical audacity?'"

"Well, the answer can be found in the Congressional Record, in an article by William Wilmouth which begins on page A2688, June 19, 1935 (for the legislative day June 15) inserted by Sen. Robert Reynolds. In this article it is shown how Col. House was trying to get us into the war against Germany (World War I) with plans he had worked out with Sir Edward Grey—even going so far as to set up their own private code — but he was being frustrated by Congress also. The direct quote taken from his own writings, is:

"In precipitating this controversy with Congress and making the situation so acute with Germany, I feel that the President and Lansing have largely interfered with my plans abroad."

"Henry Kissinger must be working for the same bunch Col. House was." (End of quote from letter).

Let's pursue that parallel between House and Kissinger:— House worked hard to secure the election of the man he had chosen to be President of the United States, Woodrow Wilson. After Wilson's election, House came to be known as Wilson's alter ego, and whatever House did or said had the automatic approval of the President—until 1919. In that fateful year, Wilson decided that he, personally, must attend the Paris Peace Conference and head the American delegation which had previously been headed by House. Wilson blundered in and began to upset the carefully calculated plans of Col. House and a violent disagreement arose between the two. Wilson returned to the United States to campaign for his beloved League of Nations (masterminded by House) but the U.S. Senate refused to approve the Paris Peace Treaty, which contained the League of Nations Charter and would have established a "World Government" in 1920 if the United States had joined.

Wilson, a defeated man, died soon thereafter without ever permitting a reconciliation with House. The "Texas Colonel," on the other hand, continued to work with the British Round Table Groups, established the Council on Foreign Relations (which the Rockefellers now control) and continued to work for the creation of a "New World Order" until his death in 1938.

And now, over half a century later, Kissinger is "working for the same bunch House was." Only, this generation of that bunch is wiser and wealthier, and more powerful than their ancestors; and Kissinger has one of the bosses of the bunch working with him actively and officially.

Now, Woodrow Wilson was also the "Mr. Clean" of his political generation, a sincere man, a principled man, an idealist. True, the U.S. Senate and most patriotic American citizens disagreed with his principles, his ideals and his ideas (especially in those seven years when he was under the total influence of Col. House). But he continued to be respected and admired, and his real political death came only after he openly broke with House because of the latter's secret international dealings and his clandestine intelligence activities in his attempts to "make the world safe for world government."

Now, if as a result of the information that be exposed by the CIA probe, President Ford breaks with Kissinger or Rockefeller—both of whom are deeply involved in CIA activities—then Gerald Ford's political demise is just as sure as was the physical demise of John Kennedy, who also sought to curb the "misdemeanors" of the CIA.

A bit of history seems worthy of recall. And the following information comes from various sources, some of which we choose not to identify in order to protect the jobs and security of the informants. So, we'll tell the story without documentation:

At the end of World War II the Office of Strategic Services (OSS) had a very bad name, and deservedly so. A secret agency headed by W. H. Donovan and created in 1942 for the purpose of obtaining information about other nations and for sabotaging the war potential and morale of enemy nations, the OSS had been involved at least indirectly in the execution of Gen. Draja Mikhailovich and the elevation of Marshall Tito in Yugoslavia, in promoting Mao Tse-tung and denigrating Chiang Kai-shek in China, etc.

President Truman did away with the OSS, transferring its research and analysis branch to the State Department, and its spy operations to the War Department. Then, with the passage of the National Security Act of 1947 when the Department of Defense was established, the CIA was created to perform certain designated and above-board intelligence functions, and (this is the clause that was to open the door to all sorts of clandestine operations, and we quote verbatim):

“to perform such other functions and duties related to intelligence affecting the national security as the National Security Council may from time to time direct.”

As a Washington correspondent informs us, this does not permit the CIA to conduct clandestine operations, either in the United States or abroad, except “as the National Security Council may...direct,” and this only from “time to time.”

So, if the CIA was to become a power responsible to itself alone, a way had to be found to “get around” the National Security Council.

The NSC, also established in 1947, is an independent agency of the executive branch of the federal government. It consists of the President, the Secretary of State, the Secretary of Defense, the Chief of Staff and the Secretaries of the three branches of the Armed Forces. When the President couldn't attend these highly important and super secret meetings, the Vice President was permitted to act as a substitute, which often happened when Richard Nixon was Vice President and President Eisenhower began to assign extraordinary duties to his number two in line of succession.

When Allen Dulles was appointed Director of the CIA by President Eisenhower, John Foster's brother began a deft campaign to make the CIA more independent of the NSC. He pointed out that the members of the NSC were “the busiest men in Washington” and could be relieved of a part of their work load if they appointed representatives to a sub-committee of the NSC. Then this sub-committee could meet regularly and act upon these clandestine functions of the CIA and thus not bother the President and his busiest secretaries with trivia. There was no Congressional authority for any such delegation of important duties to inferiors, but the sub-committee, or “special group” was created nonetheless, and it so happened after that, that whatever the CIA did clandestinely or otherwise, was automatically approved by this “special group.”

This “special group” which has assumed the authority of the National Security Council and made of the CIA an organization that is responsible to itself and its superiors only, has had several names. When Allen Dulles secured its creation, it was called the Special Group 10/2. Later it became the Special Group 5412 or 5412/2. Then it became the 303 Committee, and presently it is called the Forty Committee.

Whatever its name, this organization has always ostensibly been made up of a representative of the President (usually called the President's Adviser for National Security Affairs (one of Kissinger's titles), a representative of the Secretary of State, a stand-in for the Defense Secretary, the Director of the CIA and since Kennedy's time the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. These five men have taken the place of the National Security Council without Congressional authorization. As a matter of fact, Congress doesn't even know how CIA spends its money or for what purposes.

This important post of the President's Adviser on National Security Affairs has been held by Nelson Rockefeller, Robert Cutler, McGeorge Bundy, Maxwell Taylor, and then by Henry Kissinger who has held the post both before and after becoming Secretary of State.

“The power of this committee,” says our Washington informant, “is awesome. Like the Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court, there is almost nothing in the world that cannot be done secretly by the might and money of the government of the United States.” And, it seems that the CIA has done some amazing things under the guise of having the Forty Committee's support.

You will recall that interesting sidelight that came up during the Watergate trials: Charles Colson had ordered E. Howard Hunt to doctor up the State Department cables concerning the Diem murders in Vietnam, in order to make it appear that President John Kennedy had ordered the assassination of the South Vietnam heads of state. The only rational explanation for such a cover-up was that Colson was trying to protect someone else by trying to place the blame on a dead President's shoulders.

This is not to intimate that the CIA killed the Diem brothers. Not at all, the CIA men who had been acting as bodyguards were suddenly removed. Diems' enemies were so informed, and they did the killing.

As one informant declared, “Assassinations are not made by the Forty Committee; they are permitted." Trujillo of the Dominican Republic met a similar fate. He was being protected by the CIA, suddenly that protection was removed. Trujillo was said to have been too proud to heed the warning and leave the country, and he was shot down in the streets.

As for domestic activities, there was the case of John Kennedy in Dallas. President Kennedy and the CIA got into quite a tangle over the Bay of Pigs fiasco. Who was right or wrong has never been disclosed publicly but it was reported that Kennedy wrote three strong orders intended to curb the clandestine and unauthorized activities of the CIA. But he did not live to complete that task.

Let us repeat what the man said about it: "Assassinations are not made by the Forty Committee; they are permitted." However, President Lyndon Johnson was much more outspoken. He is reported to have said that the CIA ran a "damned Murder Inc.," but confessed that he had been unable to do anything about it.

And so, because something of a sensational nature is needed to replace the drained Watergate syndrome, a blue ribbon panel has been named ostensibly to investigate the CIA, but its chief task will be to whitewash the super secret organization. U.S. News & World Report probably sounded the popular consensus when it declared that the investigating committee was neither balanced nor impartial. It surmised that:

"President Ford's 'blue ribbon' investigation of the Central Intelligence Agency now threatens to become as controversial as the spy agency itself. Mr. Ford named a top-level panel of eight members.... Distinguished as the panel might be, it came under immediate attack. Main burden of the criticism: that the committee is 'loaded' with members who, in past positions of power in the government, have had direct or indirect contact with the intelligence community. In The New York Times, political columnist Tom Wicker described the commission as 'suspiciously like a goat set to guard a cabbage patch.'...

"Mr. Rockefeller, it was pointed out, has served as a member of the President's foreign Intelligence Advisory Board... he also has close ties to Secretary of State Kissinger, who is head of the National Security Council with major responsibility for intelligence matters. Retired Army General Lemnitzer was Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff in 1961 and reportedly approved of the CIA's plans for the Bay of Pigs invasion of Cuba in that year. Mr. Dillon, as an official of the privately funded Council on Foreign Relations, reportedly was cognizant of CIA clandestine operations. Mr. Griswold, while Solicitor General of the U.S., argued in one court case that Army spying on civilian antiwar demonstrators had not violated their constitutional rights. It is that kind of spying that the CIA is now charged with in the domestic scene. Mr. Kirkland has long been associated with the AFL-CIA, which, it has been reported, has received CIA money in the past for use in influencing labor unions abroad. Mr. Shannon, while he was president of the University of Virginia, had on his teaching staff James R. Schlesinger, one-time Director of the CIA and now Secretary of Defense....

"The CIA, mostly under fire for domestic operations, is also threatened with a curb on some of its secret operations abroad.... Whatever the verdict of the President's commission on the charges of illegal spying on Americans by the CIA, this much seems certain: Congress is in the mood to put an end to the freedom from public scrutiny in which this agency has largely operated since its founding in 1947."

(End of quotation).

As we were completing this letter, word came that the present CIA Director, William Colby, "in a public recital unprecedented in the agency's 27-year history," admitted that the CIA spied on some 10,000 citizens, opened the mail of private citizens, conducted physical surveillance in two American cities "to abort a plot to kill Vice President Spiro Agnew in 1971 or 1972 when a long-standing foreign source tipped the agency to the reported plot."

In a 45-page statement, Colby declared that all of these illegal activities were things of the past, that all of the current activities of the CIA are "within the limits of its authority." However, its activities are authorized by the Forty Committee which is itself probably illegal, and which is headed by Henry Kissinger, also probably illegally since a certain inevitable conflict of interests would exist between a Secretary of State and a Director of Clandestine Activities.

Just as with Watergate, there is more than meets the eye in this CIA probe. One eliminated Nixon, is the other supposed to install Rockefeller?

DON BELL REPORTS Weekly. Complete service: $24 per year. Extra copies: 10¢ each. Please address all correspondence to: DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223 Palm Beach, Florida 33480

THE NEW STRATEGY OF THE BILDERBERG TRIPLETS

COMMUNICATION, CONCILIATION, COMPROMISE AND COOPERATION.

"The moment has come to move in a new direction," declared President-by-appointment Gerald Ford, because "the state of the union is not good." And the public reaction to that sad state of the union was most poignantly pictured in an editorial by Howard Fliieger in the Jan. 27, 1975 issue of U.S. News & World Report. He observed that "something is amiss in this country," that people are "frustrated, cynical, angry and—above all—genuinely worried." The people "feel a way of life slipping from them. They yearn for strong leadership but despair of getting it from present leaders. They feel patronized, their wisdom belittled, their fear and anger rising in direct ratio to the rise in lawlessness—and they don't know what to do about any of it. They look to government for solutions at the same time they resent its encroachment in their affairs."

Editor Fliieger reckoned that almost any subject that comes to mind produces "a flare of reaction." And he cited a few subjects:

- * Morals? A recent article discussing honesty in America brought a flood of letters saying it is too late; there is no honesty."
- * Politics? "The two major parties are regarded as alike as Tweedledum and Tweedledee—and both worthless."
- * Education? "In school districts across the nation, parents and educators are at odds—sometimes violently so—over what, and how, children are being taught."
- * News? "TV, radio and the press... are accused by many of implanting distrust in the country...."
- * Government? "...an ever present force that grows, spreads and invades every nook and cranny of their lives—and accomplishes nothing at great expense. Take just one item as an example: More and more people feel that their social security number—once sacrosanct—has become a sort of 'citizen identification number,' on file with the tax collector, money lenders, maybe the FBI and the credit bureau. To them it smacks of the police state...."

To add to the confusion and frustration, in his state of the union message to Congress, President Ford said:

"The moment has come to move in a new direction. We can do this by fashioning a new partnership between the Congress on the one hand, the White House on the other, and the people we both represent... For my part, I pledge this Administration will act in the closest consultation with the Congress... I promised the last Congress a policy of communication, conciliation, compromise and cooperation. I renew that pledge to the new members of this Congress."

A few days later and that "partnership" had turned into a sharp confrontation over economic and energy policy, and the "new direction" had turned toward a stalemate between the Executive and the Legislative branches of Government. "President Ford," said The New York Times, "rejected outright a request from a key Congressional committee chairman that he postpone his plan to impose an additional... fee on imported oil... Mr. Ford wants to increase the import fee by an additional $1 each month for three months starting Feb. 1, for a total increase of $3 a barrel. He claims legal authority to do this (by signing an Executive Order—Ed.)"

Not content with rejecting "communication, conciliation, compromise and cooperation" with the Congress, Ford also created havoc among the residents of the New England States, who must depend upon imported oil to keep themselves from freezing during the cold winter months; five of the six Governors of the New England States began legal action in an attempt to block the oil import fee.

Also adding to the confusion and frustration, there was a deadlock between Capitol and White House on how that proposed income tax rebate was to be handled, Ford swore that he would veto any mandatory gasoline rationing legislation passed by Congress, and the President and his aides and assistants began scheduling speeches across the nation, to condemn Congressional plans and drum up support for Presidential policy in regard to the critical troika: inflation, recess-sion and energy.

Meanwhile, Secretary of State Henry Kissinger was paralleling Ford's domestic program in the area of foreign affairs. Kissinger made a special point of appearing before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee to "seek advice on how to conduct trade relations with the Soviet Union in the future." But the advice was being sought because Kissinger had earlier complained that the Congress had interfered with his foreign policy programming, and he wanted to "soft soap" Congress so that it wouldn't happen again.

So, on both the domestic and the foreign fronts, we have confusion, frustration, and crisis. There is the inflationary crisis, the recession that has become a crisis, the alleged energy shortage has been used to create the most serious crisis of them all (see article below). Then, in Kissinger's department, there are the international aspects of the oil situation, the Soviet trade vs. detente crisis, the potential Middle East war, etc.

WORDS SPOKEN IN JEST?

Josiah Lee Auspitz is a former president of the ultra-liberal Republican Ripon Society. He served in 1969 as a member of President Nixon's commission on the restructuring of the executive branch of the federal government. Currently he is said to be completing a doctorate on concepts of practical reasoning in politics at Harvard. Writing in the January 1975 issue of Harpers Magazine, he puts the following words in the mouth of a mythical Dr. Balsam, a Machiavellian type adviser to kings, presidents, premiers, secretaries of state, etc.:

"America is the only country to benefit from keeping oil prices high for a while. The higher the price of oil, the more incentive to tap the domestic oil and coal supply. The greater the use of domestic supply, the lower the import bill. The lower the import bill, the better the balance of payments. The better the American balance of payments, the greater the competitive edge over Europe and Japan, who have no domestic supply. The greater the European disadvantage, the more attractive the American economy. The short-term result: everybody but the Americans will be giving the Arabs more money for oil. The Arabs will be using the money to buy American goods and securities. And the Americans will lend it back so that the Europeans and the Japanese can buy more oil...."

According to the applicable Machiavellian formula—which would be well known to that student of the Prince, Kissinger—crises are created in order that pre-planned solutions may be brought into play, for the purpose of establishing a new order. Which brings us to the point where we should have a look at the progress of that new world order being promoted by Kissinger & Co.:

"...to a self-anointed architect of a new world order, it may appear that patriotism is an ignoble parochialism, and that the only meaningful loyalties are supranational or egocentric. 'Henry,' say some who know him well, 'has no God.' Does he have a country?"

Those are the closing sentences of a most important book: "Kissinger On The Couch," by that superior writing team, Phyllis Schlafly and Chester Ward (Arlington House, New Rochelle, N.Y. $12.95). It is far and away the best book yet written about that most powerful man in America who is destroying the nation he pretends to be serving. Particularly informative is the chapter dealing with the Council on Foreign Relations and the debt Kissinger owes to it and its master, the Rockefeller Dynasty.

We were especially impressed by the book

"...this is a question not of conspiracy but of timing. The Americans cannot plan far enough ahead to conspire about such matters. But at some point, you know, they must break the oil cartel to save the international economy. One cannot expect them to apply their full influence until they themselves begin to feel disadvantaged. This will take a while, as they can use a bit of hardship to teach their younger, postwar generation that prosperity cannot be taken for granted. Furthermore, they are so moralistic, these Americans, that they always need to work themselves into a rage before taking action. Just as it took Pearl Harbor to get them into the last European war, it may require nothing less than the total collapse of credit in Italy to convince them to do even some minor thing, like having their CIA reshuffle the Cabinet of one of the fragile governments touching the Persian Gulf. Or perhaps since they are now full of contempt for gentle, covert measures, they will even wait for a renewal of Near Eastern fighting before taking up their role as defender of the interests of NATO and Japan. In any case, by the time the Americans are ready to sneeze, major financial institutions in Europe will be dying of pneumonia...."

because it adds further confirmation to a scheme which we first exposed some three years ago, but which has seldom been mentioned or even credited by other patriotic publications.

In "Closer-Up," issue of Feb. 18, 1972, we wrote:

"The Nixon Administration is intent upon developing a triangular relationship involving U.S.A., U.S.S.R., and P.R.C.... It is an internationalist scheme to open up all the world for trade and commercial exploitation.... Again comes a variation of the 'Balance of Power' play, in which international merchants, bankers, and masters of technology will play two sides of a triangle against the third side in varying combinations depending upon the particular prize to be gained in the particular play. Presently it would seem to be USA and PRC against USSR. Later plays will find USA and USSR taking sides against PRC, and USSR and PRC forming an alliance against USA. Two sides against the other to promote the interests of the internationalists.... The name of the game is neither War and Peace nor National Security; it is Trade and Development of Resources—and if this harms the people of the United States, helps the Communists in China, strengthens the chains binding the Czechs and Slavs, the Poles and Romanians, so be it; it's all in the game!"

We wrote the foregoing approximately three years ago. Now we find documented confirmation in "Kissinger On The Couch," a book being released for publication on January 30, 1975. The authors project a scenario wherein Chou En-lai of China and Henry Kissinger of the United States (?) form an alliance for mutual defense against the super-powerful USSR, as we had predicted in February, 1972. Then the authors write, and this is a direct quote from page 123:

"Dr. Kissinger does write and talk a great deal about his theories—but the ones he enunciates publicly and for the President are an ancillary set of 'cover theories' that he selects with meticulous care. Although they come close to explaining what Kissinger is really up to, they never quite reveal it; and thus they serve as an effective diversion to protect his operational theories. It is a tribute to his rhetorical skill that these 'cover' theories are at the same time simple enough for public consumption and highbrow enough to convince his several elitist constituencies that he is still working for them.... The Kissinger theory of a new world order—the 'structure of peace' he is planning for generations to come—is a prime example of meeting the specifications of both of these... groups. Known to his admirers as 'Henry's triad,' his theory postulates: (1) a pentagonal 'equilibrium of power' involving the military and industrial power of the Soviet Union and the United States, the military and industrial potentials of the People's Republic of China, and the industrial power of Japan and Western Europe; (2) recognition by the two Communist giants and the United States that their differences are 'nonessential' and are overshadowed by common vital national interests, and by what he asserts is 'the basic fact' that 'none of us can survive a nuclear war'; and (3) recognition that these common national interests can be 'linked' together in a process for which all make concessions, but all gain and none loses....

"He fully realizes that both Moscow and Peking will play along with his new world order, at least on a temporary basis, while they respectively skim off all the goodies of trade and credits, of science and technology and of prestige and power, that he is holding out to them as bribes for moving from confrontation to negotiation. Their temporary participation in the charade is all he needs to provide a facade of reality impressive enough to convince current skeptics that Henry Kissinger has, indeed, changed the world.

"The whole purpose of the illusory world of detente, spun out of the triad-balance of the great powers' own national interests, is to provide essential concealment of the all-too-real changes he is wreaking in the real world." (End of extended quotation).

The authors of "Kissinger On The Couch" then present considerable evidence to show that what Kissinger is really doing is selling us out to the Communists.

That may be the end result; but it is the belief of this editor that Kissinger is trying to sell us all out—Americans, Russians, Chinese, Japanese, Europeans—everybody, to a new world order controlled by the elitist banker and industrial cartel groups headed by the Rockefeller-Rothschild multinational monopolists!

Here is why:

When Kissinger, working through Nixon, was setting up his Washington-Moscow-Peking Triad, the Japanese and the Western European powers, especially West Germany, rebelled against the whole idea, because they saw the expansion of Russian and Chinese military and industrial strength as a very real and present danger to themselves. And the Kissinger 'Triad' remained just that, and never became a "Pentagonal" structure embracing Japan and the European Community.

Therefore, careful to "cover all bases" and prepare for all contingencies, Rockefeller let his man Kissinger proceed with the "Triad." But at the same time, Rockefeller (David, not Nelson) established a similar power group which encompassed Japan and the European Community, which he called "The Trilateral Commission."

While Kissinger continued to promote the "Henry's Triad," the Rockefellers moved to establish this rival-yet cooperating-organization of international bankers, industrialists, politicians and multinationalists. A trusted Rockefeller protege was chosen to act as director of the Trilateral Commission: Zbigniew Brzezinski, who heads the section on Communist Studies at Columbia University and who has long been engaged in international studies and promotions for the Council on Foreign Relations. And Rockefeller chose Gerard C. Smith to serve as North American Chairman of the new Trilateral Commission. Smith—also active in CFR work—held the rank of United States Ambassador, headed the U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, and sat in as chief of the American delegation at the first SALT conferences. Kissinger and Smith both ambitious men, rivals in a sense, and they did not agree on American policy toward the Soviet Union. Ergo, Smith was "fired" by Kissinger from his position as head of the U.S. Disarmament Agency, then he was "rehired" by David Rockefeller to serve as Chairman of the 70-member American section of the Trilateral Commission.

This Trilateral Commission consists of 200 bankers, industrialists, academicians, journalists, parliamentarians, state governors, key labor leaders, etc., from North America, Europe, and Japan. All in all, this group appears to be far more powerful than the Bilderbergers (from which many of its European members are drawn). In short:

The Trilateral Commission seems to be the embryo Multinational Government that is to replace the United Nations and direct the external activities of all National Governments of the world! Just as the Council on Foreign Relations has been called The Invisible Government of the United States, this Trilateral Commission has been set up to become the Invisible Government of the World.

As is so often the case, The New York Times has been chosen to publicize the Trilateral Commission's existence and its purposes. In the Times of March 2, 1973, Chairman Smith is quoted as saying that "The United States, Western Europe and Japan face a common condition. They are the major industrial areas of the world, and they share common concerns about the problems of environment and modern industrial society as well as common security concerns. They are the only regions with the economic and technical resources to respond to the larger problems that face us. They jointly share a global responsibility and we think their relations are threatened by domestic concerns which tend to drive the regions apart."

Zbigniew Brzezinski, who carries the title of Director of the Trilateral Commission, is the author of an article which appeared in the July, 1973 issue of Foreign Affairs, the official publication of the Council on Foreign Relations. In this article he detailed his reasons for support of a policy of "common political planning" by a multinational organization such as the Trilateral Commission, which is not bound by "the dictates of national interest alone."

Brzezinski concludes his article with a virtual forecast of the end of American power and "a gradually emerging community of the developed nations... a world in which the spheres of exclusive (national) predominance fade."

So, here is the two-pronged drive for world control: on the one hand Nelson Rockefeller, Henry Kissinger and (perhaps unwittingly) Gerald Ford are promoting a "Triad" under which the Big Three Governments (USA, USSR, and PRC) would divide and rule the world. On the other hand David Rockefeller, Gerard Smith and Zbigniew Brzezinski are promoting a governing body composed of the elitist individuals of North America, Europe and Japan, which will dictate to all the governments of the world.

And finally, these two are to meet and form a dictatorial world government. Crises such as inflation, recession, energy, inter-nation conflict, are created to promote their ultimate goal.

We seem as helpless as were a small band of patriots 200 years ago. But when they got together and determined a course of action, read what happened! Are we of this generation made of weaker stuff?

DON BELL REPORTS Weekly. Complete service: $24 per year. Extra copies: 10¢ each. Please address all correspondence to:
DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

THE WORLD MANAGERS

PROFITS OF DOOM

"The men who run the global corporations are the first in history with the organization technology, money, and ideology to make a try at managing the world as an integrated unit. . . . The Napoleonic system, Hitler's Thousand Year Reich, the British Empire, and the Pax Americana left their traces, but none managed to create anything approaching a global organization for administering the planet that could last even a generation. The world, it seems, cannot be run by military occupation, though the dream persists.

"The managers of the world's corporate giants proclaim their faith that where conquest has failed, business can succeed."

So state authors Richard J. Barnet and Ronald E. Muller in their recently published book Global Reach—The Power of the Multinational Corporations (Simon and Schuster, 508 pages, $11.95).

The corporate executives call it world management rather than world government, but they insist that we are going to have it whether we like it or not. And what nations could not do by military means, what such organizations as the League of Nations and the United Nations could not do by political means, the Rockefellers and the Rothschilds will do through control of the resources of the world.

To quote others who say the same in different words:

Aurelio Peccei, a Bilderberger, a director of Fiat, and organizer of the Club of Rome: "The global corporation is the most powerful agent for the internationalization of human society."

George Ball, former Under Secretary of State and now chairman of Lehman Brothers International: "Men are able for the first time to utilize world resources with an efficiency dictated by the objective logic of profit."

Jacques G. Maisonrouge, president of IMB World Trade Corporation: "The boundaries that separate one nation from another are no more real than the equator. They are merely convenient demarcations of ethnic, linguistic, and cultural entities. They do not define business requirements or consumer trends. Once management understands and accepts this world economy, its view of the marketplace—and its planning—necessarily expand. The world outside the home country is no longer viewed as a series of disconnected customers and prospects for its products, but as an extension of a single market."

Charles P. Kindelberger, a leading U.S. authority on international economics: "The international corporation has no country where it feels completely at home."

Christopher Tugendhat, a British financial writer and Member of Parliament points out that the global interests of the world company are separate and distinct from the interests of every government, including its own government of origin. Although, in terms of management and ownership, all global corporations are either American, British, Dutch, German, Swiss, Italian, Swedish or Japanese (most, of course, are American), in outlook they are becoming companies without a country.

Therefore, we might add, they are seeking a country they can call their own: a global country which they must construct out of the existing countries of the world, and manage as a gigantic holding company would manage and oversee the activities of its multifarious corporate satellites.

So much for statements by multinational corporation executives and observers of the progress of the New World Order. Let us look at the actual situation:

After World War II when, in the spirit of Pax Americana, the United States Government began rebuilding the world—and supervising the rebuilding with troops, finances, advisers and technicians—the American giants of Big Business followed the troops and the money and began to invest their corporate assets abroad. In the 25 years between 1948 and 1973, U.S. corporate investment abroad increased from $9 billion to $107 billion (book value). Latest available figures show that if we compare the annual sales of corporations with the gross national product of countries, General Motors is bigger than Switzerland, Pakistan and South Africa; Prince Bernhard's Royal Dutch Shell is bigger than Venezuela, Iran and Turkey; while only about fifteen people in all the world know the actual size of the Rockefeller Empire. But, as the authors of Global Reach point out, "size is only one component of power. In international affairs Mao's dictum that power grows out of the barrel of a gun shocks no one. To those who question their power, corporate statesmen like to point out that, like the Pope, they have no divisions at their command. The sources of their extraordinary power are to be found elsewhere—the power to transform the world political economy and in so doing transform the historic role of the nation-state. This power comes not from the barrel of a gun but from control of the means of creating wealth on a worldwide scale. In the process of developing a new world, the managers of firms like GM, IBM, Pepsico, GE, Pfizer, Shell, Volkswagen, Exxon, and a few hundred others are making daily business decisions which have more impact than those of most sovereign governments on where people live; what work, if any, they will do; what they will eat, drink and wear; what sorts of knowledge schools and universities will encourage; and what kind of society their children will inherit."

Business International Corporation, a service organization for multinational corporations, made a survey for the year 1972 and reported that 122 of the top U.S.-based multinational corporations had a higher rate of profit from abroad than from domestic operations. By 1973, America's seven largest banks were obtaining 40 percent of their total profits from overseas operations—up from 23 percent in 1971.

These corporations and financial institutions that are destroying the domestic economy, putting Americans out of work and shifting their operations to foreign countries have "outgrown the American dream." They are no longer Americans in spirit; they are globalists, citizens of the world. And David Rockefeller has called for a "crusade for understanding" to explain why global corporations should have free rein to move goods, capital, technology, and work forces around the world without the interference of nation-states. And he has placed his brother Nelson in the second highest political post in the United States to see to it that this most powerful nation-state does not interfere with the activities of his global enterprises—even as he saw to it that Bilderberger-trained politicians were to head the governments of the most important industrial nations of the world in 1975!

In order even to begin to understand the enormity of the power that is exercised over the world, its nations and its people, by the global corporations, it is first necessary to know something of the size and scope of that giant among giants, the Rockefeller Dominion and the realms controlled by the satellite Rockefeller Connections.

Only the Rockefeller Family and Associates have full knowledge of the power and the glory of the Rockefeller Dynasty. That, incidentally, is the actual name of the Rockefeller "holding company," which is known as Rockefeller Family and Associates, has its offices over three floors of the building at 30 Rockefeller Plaza, New York City. According to Edward H. Burdick, one of the Rockefeller "associates," this office was "established by John D. Rockefeller, Jr., to provide personal services and advice to members of his family." The office "is not a corporate entity but a group of privately employed individuals. The staff provides legal, investment, management, philanthropic, accounting and a number of other services to family members and certain other organizations."

The scope of Rockefeller control over the world's activities is hidden through the use of "associates" who act as representatives of the Rockefeller Family and hold Corporate Directorships for the Rockefellers, but in their own (the associate's) names.

G. William Domhoff, associate professor of psychology, Cowell College, University of California, Santa Cruz; and Charles L. Schwartz, professor of physics, University of California at Berkeley collaborated on a report "Probing the Rockefeller Fortune" which was prepared for and presented to Members of the United States Congress in November, 1974, prior to the confirmation of Nelson Aldrich Rockefeller as Vice President of the United States. That report, well documented, showed that through the Rockefeller family members and the "Associates" there were:

- 59 major industrial corporations,
- 29 commercial banking and diversified financial companies,
- 8 major life insurance companies,
- 3 utilities,
- 7 retailing companies
- 2 major airlines

and any number of unlisted corporations, all of which had multiple interlocks with the Rockefeller Family!

The table prepared by Professors Domhoff and Schwartz showed that the Rockefellers (or their "Associates") held directorships or interlocks in:

6 of the Nation's top 10 industrial corporations,

6 of the Nation's top 10 commercial banking companies,

5 of the Nation's top 10 life insurance companies.

The combined assets of all the companies listed added up to $640,000,000,000.00.

There are, we understand, fifteen of these Rockefeller Family Associates who act as proxies for the Rockefellers. The following list includes their more important directorships, which they hold in lieu of one or more of the Rockefellers:

Louise A. Boyer: International Basic Economy Corp. Also listed by the company as "Assistant to Nelson A. Rockefeller."

Reginald G. Coombe: National Bank of Westchester, U.S. Borax & Chemicals, First New Haven Bank.

Peter O. Crisp: International Basic Economy Corp., New England Nuclear Corp., Crum & Forster, Clarcan Petroleum.

J. Richardson Dilworth: Rockefeller Center, R.H. Macy, International Basic Economy Corp., Chase Manhattan Bank, Diamond Shamrock, Chrysler Motors, Selected Risk Investments, S.A., Luxembourg, Omega Fund, Youngstown Sheet & Tube, Carbon Limestone, United Nuclear, Pickands

Mather, Rockwell Mfg., Commonwealth & European Investment Trust, Provident Loans Society, Trans America Overseas Finance.

George L. Hinman: I.B.M., New York Telephone Co., Lincoln First Banks, First City National Bank of Binghamton, N.Y., Security Mutual Life Insurance, I.B.M. World Trade Corp.

Warren T. Lindquist: Downtown-Lower Manhattan Association, Laboratory for Electronics, also listed as special aide to David Rockefeller.

John E. Lockwood: Milbank, Tweed, Hadley & McCloy (law firm), Greenwich Savings Bank, Rockefeller Center, Rockefeller Brothers, Inc., National Bank of Westchester, International Basic Economy Corp.

Randolph B. Marston: (now deceased). Was director of Scantlin Electronics, Cutler-Hammer, Aircraft Radio, Stavid Engineering.

Robert W. Purcell: C.I.T. Financial Corp., International Minerals & Chemicals, Investors Group, Investors Mutual Fund of Canada, Investors International Mutual Fund, Inc., Manhattan Fund, Paribas, Agricultural Insurance Co., Bendix, Caneel Bay Plantations, Seaboard World Airlines, S.S. Kresge, Chemway, I.B.E.C., Industrial & Mining Development Bank of Iran, Anelex, Pakistan Industrial Credit & Investment, Investors Syndicate of Canada, Hemisphere Fund, Basic Resources International, S.A., Mauna Kea Beach Hotel Corp.

Carl E. Siegesmund: National Bank of Westchester, Merchants Fire Assurance of New York, Merchants Indemnity Corp.

Charles B. Smith: AVX Ceramics, Ventron, Thermo Electron, Intel, Aerovox, Fansteel, Electronic Specialty, Plasmachem, Coherent Radiation.

M. Frederik Smith: Mallinckrodt Chemical Works, Howard Johnson, Perini Corp., American Motors, American Capital Life Insurance.

Theodore C. Streibert: present association with Rockefeller Family & Associates in question; may have left organization.

Theodore F. Walkowicz: Evans & Sutherland Computer Corp., GCA Corp., Itek, CCI-Marquardt, National Aviation, Iomec, Mitre, Riverside Research, Scantlin Electronics (Quotron Systems), Cerro, Pocantico Oil & Gas, Cryonetics, FMA Corp., Mithras, Inc., Thickol Cemical, United Nuclear, U.S. Borax & Chemical, Safetran Systems, Airborne Instruments Laboratory, Vertol Aircraft, Cornell Aeronautical Lab.

Harper Woodward: Eastern Airlines, Itek, GCA Corp., CCI-Marquardt, General Applied Science Laboratories, James Talcott, Inc., Mithras, Inc., Thermo Electron Engineering Corp., Flight Refueling Corp., Nuclear Development Corp. of America, Dorado Beach Hotel Corp., Airborne Instruments Lab., Aircraft Radio Corp., Stavid Engineering, Vertol Aircraft.

"This list adds up to 118 Directorships in 97 different companies," stated the compilers of the list, who then added: "There may of course be other people and other companies tied to RF&A which were not discovered in this search; there are indications that at least some of the Family's representatives keep their 'Rockefeller' label obscured from general view."

In addition to these human proxies that conceal the extent of the Rockefeller power, there are the family members' own funds, the family members' trust funds, the family philanthropies' funds, and non-family allied funds. These plus the control that is maintained over those who are members of the Council on Foreign Relations and the newer Trilateral Commission.

The Family, itself, is a formidable army:

Sister Abby R. Mauze, Brothers John D. III, Laurance S., Nelson A., and David; there are nine sons and fourteen daughters (they are known as "the cousins"), and thirty-seven grandchildren.

A chief source of financial power seldom mentioned these days, is the close connection between the Rockefeller and the Morgan organizations. The John D. Rockefeller, Sr., and the J.P. Morgan financial operations became so coordinated that, as early as 1904, John Moody, the founder of Moody's Industrials (still the leading directory to the labyrinth of high finance) concluded that it was impossible to talk of the Rockefellers and Morgans as separate economic actors, so intertwined were their activities. And much later, Peter Dooley confirmed that "it is not possible to separate these groups" (from an essay, "Interlocking Directorates"? by Peter Dooley, in The American Economic Review, June, 1969).

These "inseparable groups" are six of the country's largest banks: Chase Manhattan, First National City, Manufacturers Hanover Trust, Chemical Bank of New York, Morgan Guaranty Trust, and Bankers Trust.

Then, when David Rockefeller established The Trilateral Commission on October 22, 1973, he was careful to invite and accept as members of the very exclusive club (only 70 North American members, 77 European members and 62 Japanese members), the following bankers and investment chieftains: Ernest C. Arbuckle, chairman Wells Fargo Bank; George W. Ball, Senior Partner Lehman Brothers; Alden W. Clausen, President Bank of America; Archibald K. Davis, Chairman Wachovia Bank & Trust Co.; Alan Hockin, Executive Vice President, Toronto-Dominion Bank; Bruce K. MacLaury, President Federal Reserve Bank of Minneapolis; John H. Perkins, President Continental Illinois National Bank & Trust Co.; Peter G. Peterson, Chairman Lehman Brothers; Robert V. Roosa, Partner Brown Bros. Harriman & Co.; and others.

And there is the French connection, that is, the intertwining of Rockefeller-Rothschild Interests. We have seen no trustworthy documentation in this area. But, when the Bilderbergers meet in the United States, David Rockefeller plays host; and when the group meets in France or Switzerland, the conferees are the guests of Edmond de Rothschild. Too, even as David Rockefeller is the most important North American member of the super-exclusive Trilateral Commission, Edmond de Rothschild seems to be the most important European member of the select group.

The foregoing was intended to demonstrate the dominance and importance of the Rockefeller Dynasty in the New Order of World Management.

What to do with States and Nations has been a leading question since these World Managers began to "take charge." At first, it seemed that Nations might simply be abolished and a new system of management installed. But, after due consideration, it seems that a "new and better" idea was advanced:

"When the United States is fully integrated into the Global Shopping Center, the Federal Government will limit its interventions into society to those tasks which are beyond the capacity of businessmen... The primary function of government is to enable the corporation to fulfill its promise. In the corporate vision of 1990, government no longer plays its traditional role under the Constitution... The real job of government is to perform certain services essential to the development of a good business climate." So said the Multinational Executives at a White House Conference in 1972. The consensus of the conference:

The Federal Government should control interest rates and credit policy, impose price and wage controls when necessary, take care of highways, harbors and communications networks, manage the ecology; the task of government will be as educator and provider of services to the people. It will furnish health services, take care of population control, law enforcement, fire protection, ecology, environmental economics, waste disposal, etc. But it must not impede the development of the Global Shopping Center; though it may furnish guards, janitors and information centers for same.

The World Managers want a stronger centralized Executive and a weaker Congress. For this, Nelson Rockefeller is their man. And Henry Kissinger has really been a help.

And if this sounds like the World Managers are building a Corporate State—or a Fascist Dictatorship, to give it its historical name—the Managers will probably agree, and dare you to try to stop them.

DON BELL REPORTS Weekly. Complete service: $24 per year. Extra copies: 10¢ each. Please address all correspondence: DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223 Palm Beach, Florida 33480

THE CHANGING OF THE WHITE HOUSE GUARD

THE QUIET COUP

Outgoing Director of the important Office of Management and Budget, Roy Ash, fired a parting shot that ought to have been heard far beyond the bug-proofed walls of the White House Executive Office Building. He said that the Nation will become a Socialist State if the growth of Social Security and other income redistribution programs is not ended. If current trends continue, Ash said, by the year 2000 government will be eating up more than half the Gross National Product—and we will be saddled with a fully controlled economy.

Ash should most assuredly know whereof he speaks. He came into Federal Government service to complete the installation and perfect the operation of that control system that was called the Planning, Programming, Budgeting System. Having accomplished his mission, he now returns to the management end of the Multinational Industrial complex from which he was borrowed. But, before leaving OMB, he prepared the greatest and most fearful Federal Budget ever foisted upon a nation of economic serfs who—despite Ash's statement—are even now entering into a Corporate Socialist State.

(A part of Ash's contribution toward the "controlled economy" of which he speaks, was the completion of the first phase of the PPBS plan for remaking society. This was termed the "unfreeze" phase of the overall formula and involved "decentralizing the powers of government into units of management," or the establishment of federal regions and sub-regions. This "unfreeze" phase also involved the creation of an economic crisis (such as we have) in order to initiate phase two (re-education), which would pave the way for phase three (the "freeze," or establishment of the new world order. The "unfreeze" having been accomplished, bureaucrats will now tell you that "PPBS is dead." Actually, its name has merely been changed to "Management By Objectives," or MBO, still administered by OMB.)

Roy Ash stayed on to prepare a federal budget that will cost the people, in big round numbers, a billion dollars a week and cause them to go another billion dollars deeper in debt each week. And Roy Ash is right: the end result will be "a fully controlled economy" with Multinational World Managers controlling the production and governments controlling the consumption (and the consumers).

With the departure of Ash and others, the shape of the "new world" is beginning to emerge. We might oversimplify and say that David will handle the producers while Nelson handles the consumers.

And with Nelson taking over there came the need for a "changing of the guard," and for the filling of all important posts with men faithful to or purchased by the Rockefellers. A pertinent example: U.S. Attorney General William Saxbe seemed to be taking his job too conscientiously, and acting too much as an honest attorney general ought to act. He was very outspoken about the past misuse of FBI, IRS and CIA agents as political spies for the Administration. Then, just a few days ago he said he wondered about the purposes of the National Law Enforcement Assistance Administration (LEAA). He suggested that doling out $3.2 billion to LEAA might have been a sheer waste of taxpayers' money, "I take scant comfort," said Saxbe, "from the estimate that crime might have been worse without LEAA—since it already is awful beyond description . . . the way to reduce crime would be to begin imposing appropriate sentences, and to end the destructive practice of freeing dangerous offenders who are awaiting trial."

And with that statement Saxbe demonstrated his lack of understanding of LEAA, which was not founded and financed to fight crime, but to assume federal control of all State and local police forces; not to control criminals, but to control policemen.

LEAA was established as a result of Title One of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968. It works through the Ten Federal Regional Commissions of which it is a part, and the heart of its program is the block grant concept. Each of the States must set up a State Planning Agency for the carrying out of various criminal justice programs. LEAA works closely with the State and local units in planning and initiating improvement programs. If LEAA does not approve of any State or local law enforcement or criminal justice program, then the money is cut off at the source.

One of the chief objectives of LEAA is the disarming of the citizenry (which amounts to a repeal of the Second Article of the Bill of Rights without going through the formality of amending the Constitution). It is important to remember that no dictatorship ever came about without first disarming the people, and that is what this plan is really all about, although we are assured that the result will be a "benevolent" dictatorship. So were those established by Hitler and Mussolini—in the beginning. LEAA would see to it that only the military and the law enforcement officers would be allowed to have guns.

It is obvious that the people of the United States—especially those not yet controlled in their thinking by the Eastern Establishment opinion molders—are not yet ready to submit to total disarmament, either at the national or the personal level. Therefore, the Hegelian principle is brought into play: We are in a period when crime is being allowed to flourish so that the people will be psychologically conditioned to accept a National Police Force as the only solution to rampant lawlessness and anarchy.

William Saxbe is not the man to go along with such a program; so he is being booted upstairs to an Ambassadorship, and a tried and trusted Rockefeller agent, Edward Levi, has been named to replace him.

A word about Edward Hirsh Levi, now president of the Rockefeller-financed University of Chicago. He first entered federal service in 1944 when he was in the Justice Department in the same unit with John Abt, Alger Hiss and other notable Communists. For years he was a dues-paying member of the Communist-front National Lawyers Guild. Though an active supporter of many Communist activities, he isn't, even now, sure of his political affiliations. Perhaps more serious than all other activities—for an attorney general, that is—was his 'bugging' of juries without their knowledge. The Senate Security Subcommittee learned that Levi was in charge of a grant of $400,000 from the Ford Foundation (which was followed by another million dollar grant) to be used for the purpose of bugging jury room deliberations without the knowledge or consent of the jury or the court. This occurred in the mid-50s and Chief Justice Warren Burger, in a speech delivered October 12, 1955, said that the University of Chicago Law School (of which Levi was dean at the time) planned to eavesdrop on some 500 to 1,000 juries during its research project into the American jury system. The aim, of course, was to discredit and abolish the Constitutionally-mandated jury system.

Fortunately, the "researchers" were discovered and exposed in their very first attempt when they planted microphones in a Wichita, Kansas jury room; and the whole project was then abandoned—at least so the University of Chicago group insisted. But, for a man who would head such a project to now head the U.S. Department of Justice, is a fair sampling of what we are in for under these New World Managers.

Another important change now that Rockefeller is taking charge, is the choice of William Thaddeus Coleman, Jr., to become the new Secretary of Transportation, which will make him the second black Cabinet member in U.S. history (Robert Weaver of H.U.D. under President Johnson having been the first). Long associated with the N.A.A.C.P., Coleman was co-author of the legal brief that persuaded the Supreme Court to outlaw public school segregation.

A Harvard alumnus, member of the Council on Foreign Relations, director of the Rand Corporation, and director of many Rockefeller investment interests such as Pan Am, Penn Mutual Life, First Pennsylvania Bank and Trust Co., Western Savings Fund Society, and on the board of directors of the American Stock Exchange, Coleman is a "Rockefeller man" through and through. As Secretary of Transportation, Coleman will be in a position to oversee environmental, safety and consumer affairs, as well as all means and methods of transportation.

Yet another new appointee is John Dunlop, who will replace Peter Brennan as Secretary of Labor. Dunlop joined the Harvard faculty 36 years ago as a teaching fellow in economics, became chairman of Harvard's economics department in 1961, later served as dean of Arts and Sciences before taking over as chief of Nixon's Cost of Living Council early in 1973. He is a friend of the Rockefellers, but apparently got his job because he was one of the few Rockefeller men who could get along with George Meany of AFL-CIO.

The little-publicized but highly important Domestic Council is the one group that

Nelson Rockefeller is finding hard to capture and dominate. A word of explanation:— Exactly 13 years ago, in the first week of February, 1962, Nelson Aldrich Rockefeller, then Governor of New York but aspiring to become President of the United States, delivered three Godkin Lectures at Harvard University, which he labeled “The Future of Federalism.” In the course of these lectures he laid down the broad principles of what would later come to be known as “The New Federalism.” Calling for a kind of Regionalized World Government, the details of which were still vague and poorly defined, Rockefeller said, in part:

“—Just as no city or county or state within our Federal Union can live unto itself and meet its problems, so is it equally impossible for any nation—even the strongest nation—to secure its own freedom by its own resources.

“—Just as the operation of our own national economy and social life is interdependent with a federal system of government, assuring freedom and order, so just as dramatically do the economic and social workings of a free economy in the world require movement toward a federal idea, bringing order to the chaos of nation-states.

“—The very social and economic problems that require political action and leadership on the most close-to-home levels of American government — problems of education, transportation, power resources, economic growth — are the same problems that challenge action by nations large and small in all regions of the earth.

“—Just as the equalization principle within our own nation recognizes that an Arkansas or a Tennessee can meet its economic problems only within a larger political framework, so the same basic concept of federalism applies on the world scene to the economic problems of a Bolivia or a Burma.

“—Just as the American federal system invites the larger and stronger states to take the lead in showing the nation new political paths, so should this nation as a whole, and all the more powerful free nations, assume a similar role of leadership in the world at large....

“Out of this, I would venture to prophesy that—sooner perhaps than we may realize and despite the enormity of the apparent difficulties—there will evolve the bases for a federal structure of the free world.”

(End of quotation)

Thus did Nelson Rockefeller prophesy the coming of World Government wherein the various regions of the world would be led by the stronger nations of the world. This so-called “prophecy” of Rockefeller’s that the Rockefeller Dynasty was determined to see fulfilled, brought about great changes in both our foreign and domestic policies. Rockefeller’s dream of “the future of federalism” led to the stirring up of this seducing spirit of detente which may destroy us as a sovereign nation. It led to the promotion of “Henry’s Triad” which proposes a regional division of the world between a Communist China, a Soviet Union, and a Corporate Socialist United States. It led to David Rockefeller’s creation of the Trilateral Commission which unites the “wise men” of Western Europe, Japan and the United States into a governing body capable of managing the economies of the world (while brother Nelson’s new federalism manages the consumers of the world).

Here at home, the men in U.S. Government who were faithful to or in the pay of the Rockefellers (Richard Nixon was such a one at the beginning of his Administration) were busy setting up the machinery of Regional Government, or the “New Federalism” that was to replace the traditional federalism that is defined and directed by the Constitutions of the Nation and its 50 States.

In 1969 President Nixon, by Executive Order, divided the country into ten federal regions, each to be governed by a Commission composed of the regional czars of various administrative departments and agencies: Health, Education and Welfare, Housing and Urban Development, Labor, Transportation, Interior, Agriculture, the Environmental Protection Agency, the Office of Economic Opportunity, and the Law Enforcement Assistance Administration; all of these were tied together and overseen by associate directors of the Office of Management and Budget. The States were to be phased out, and local government regionalized under the authority of appointed public administrators who would carry out the dictates of their superiors who composed the Ten Federal Commissions that governed the Ten Federal Regions that would eventually replace the Fifty Original States.

However, at the federal head, or the Washington level of command, there was a kind of vacancy that required filling. It was felt that there should be some kind of special council which would do the overall planning of the programs that were to be carried out at the regional levels after they had been approved on a “systems analysis” basis by the Office of Management and Budget.

Accordingly, there was established on July 1, 1970—again by Executive Order—a new “Domestic Council” which would “formulate and coordinate domestic policy” and “endeavor to resolve federal-state-local problems.” This new Domestic Council was given office space at 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue (the White House Executive Offices are located here), and Kenneth R. Cole, Jr. was made executive director of the new administrative agency. And, since this Domestic Council was in such a potentially powerful position in that it could dictate all of the domestic policies for all of the United States, the President of the United States was named Chairman of the Council, and the seventeen most important policy makers in the federal government were made members of this Domestic Council.

You can see just how important this Domestic Council could become if it were put in the hands of somebody like Henry Kissinger—who is in absolute charge of all foreign policy. A man strong enough to take absolute charge of all domestic policy (and this is Nelson Rockefeller’s aim) would be a dictator indeed!

And there are some in Washington who recognize this. Hence, there is a fight for control of this Domestic Council. The following article from The New York Times of February 6, 1975, tells the story:

ROCKEFELLER ACTS TO GAIN DOMESTIC COUNCIL CONTROL

Vice President Nelson A. Rockefeller has proposed that two of his top assistants be put in charge of the White House Domestic Council and reorganize its functions, but the proposal has run into resistance from the President’s staff. Under the Rockefeller proposal, the council, which has been functioning largely as a day-to-day advisory body to Ford on domestic policies, would turn its attention to proposing innovations that the President would consider in making long-range policy.

Ford and Rockefeller have been discussing privately the question of what to do with the Domestic Council and White House officials indicated yesterday that no decision had been made. However, the Rockefeller proposal has been received coolly by the White House staff because it would, in effect, give the vice president control over an important segment of the presidential staff. It is important to Rockefeller, because domestic policy is the only area of government in which he has been promised more authority than is customary for a vice president.

Rockefeller’s proposal, as disclosed by Ford and Rockefeller associates, was that two members of the vice president’s staff—James Cannon and Richard L. Dunham—be dispatched as a team to run the council staff, which numbers about 30 persons, and turn it into a body that would study long-range domestic problems and give the President options for solving them.

Cannon was legislative liaison and Dunham state budget director for Rockefeller when he was governor of New York.

... Ford has promised Rockefeller substantial authority in domestic affairs. In an interview with Newsweek magazine, published Dec. 9, Ford said, “I want him to be very active on the Domestic Council, even to being chairman of the Domestic Council.”...

Ford officials indicated that a decision might be weeks away, although they had known for months that Cole (present director) was leaving, and that if Cole’s successor was both director and assistant to the President, as the organization chart shows, Ford might feel compelled to name his own man. ...

Cannon and others involved declined to comment, but one Rockefeller associate... said, “The domestic council does not do what its charter says. It is part of the White House operations staff. They have moved over to the area where they’re preparing papers, talking points, memoranda. They’re not focused on tomorrow, they’re focused on today.”

If the proposal to make the council a long-range planning body does not work out, the Rockefeller associate said, “We’ll figure out some other way.” But he added that this would not mean bringing the Rockefeller Commission on Critical Choices down from New York, because that would look too much like a shadow cabinet. ...

No space for summary; but with Henry Kissinger in absolute control of foreign policy, and Nelson Rockefeller in absolute control of domestic policy, all that remains is for David Rockefeller to fit our country into the World Federation that is being built.

DON BELL REPORTS Weekly. $24 per year.
Extra copies: 10¢ each. Please address all inquiries, orders and correspondence to:
DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

TO NATIONALIZE THE LAND

CENTRALIZED CONTROL OF LAND IS ESSENTIAL

"Now to bring about government by oligarchy masquerading as democracy, it is fundamentally essential that practically all authority and control be centralized in our National Government." So said Franklin Delano Roosevelt in an address delivered on March 2, 1930, while he was yet governor of New York.

Centralized control of all land usage in the United States is an essential ingredient of this "government by oligarchy," or by a few self-chosen "master minds" who believe we all should acquiesce in their right to rule over us.

These "master minds" almost had it made in respect to national land control with the introduction of the Jackson-Udall Bill that was supposed to sail through both Houses of Congress with little or no opposition. But on June 11, 1974 Congress rejected this blueprint for dictatorship.

However, these "master minds" had yet another course of action: they could forget about Congress and use the Executive Order to gain control over the use of all land. The "ecological and environmental crisis" that had been built up to a boiling pitch could be brought into play to control the land.

Back in 1972 a group of these "master minds" had met in Stockholm under the aegis of the United Nations, to draw up plans for a world-wide environmental clean-up. David Rockefeller headed the American delegation to that UN conference, and it might be suspected that his ideas of a clean-up involved more than environment. In any case, Russell Train, member of the Council on Foreign Relations and a faithful Rockefeller henchman, was named to head the new Federal Environmental Protection Agency, which was charged with the task of "coordinating governmental action to assure protection of the environment by abating and controlling pollution."

And so it came to pass that, when Congress killed the Land Use Bill—at least for that session of Congress—on June 11, 1974, the EPA was ready to step in and take over. A mere 28 days later (July 9, 1974), Train's agency caused to be published in the Federal Register some ten pages of regulations relative to "indirect sources" of pollution. Actually, these regulations amounted to a nation-wide land control edict, providing for precisely the same kind of land control mechanisms as were contained in the defeated Jackson-Udall Bill.

The EPA Executive Order defined "indirect sources" of pollution as including, but not being limited to: (a) highways and roads, (b) parking facilities, (c) retail, commercial and industrial facilities, (d) recreation, amusement, sports and entertainment facilities, (e) airports, (f) office and government buildings, (g) apartment and condominium buildings, (h) education facilities.

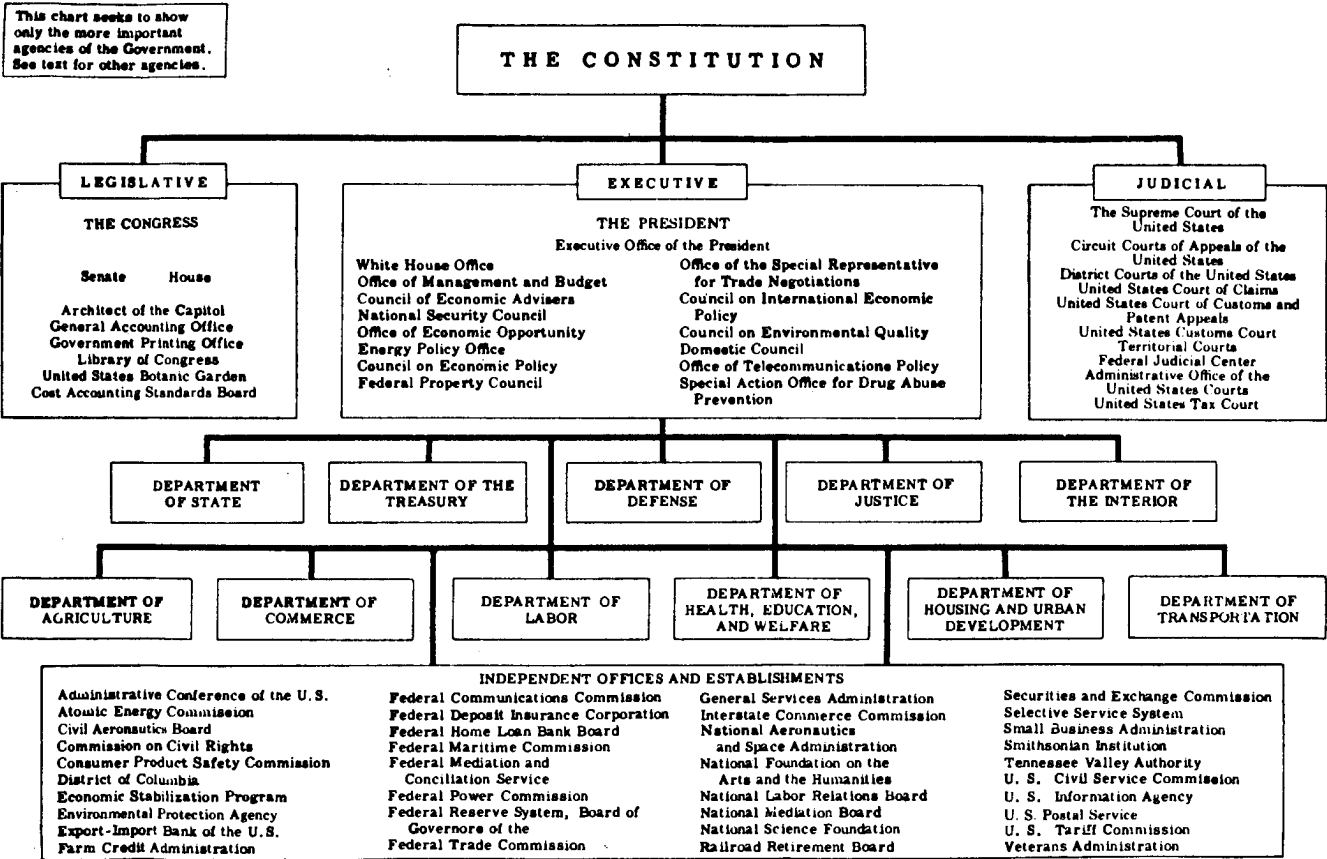

The regulations further provide that: "No owner or operator of an indirect source subject to this paragraph shall commence construction or modification of such source after December 31, 1974, without first obtaining approval from the Administrator (of EPA, who is Russell E. Train of the Rockefeller controlled Council on Foreign Relations.)

Congressman Bob Casey (Texas) saw the ten-page entry in the Federal Register and immediately recognized it for what it is. He told his colleagues via the Constitutional Record of July 11, 1974:

"Let me assure you that if these regulations are allowed to stand, 'czar' will be far too mild a description for the Administrator of the EPA. He will have the authority to approve or reject every construction project of significance in the United States. Every builder, developer, landowner and every industry, plus State and local governments, would have to go to the EPA to get a construction permit. With a stroke of his pen, the EPA Administrator could undo years of planning if by some whim — and mind you, no scientific evidence would be required — he decided that some project should not be built."

This EPA Executive Order was supposed to go into effect on January 1st, but due to cir-circumstances that were not explained publicly Russell Train announced that the Order's implementation would be delayed, and no one seems certain as to when the Order will be enforced. Best guess regarding this delay: the construction industry is in an economic crisis and any further harassment at this time might derail Mr. Train.

THE GOVERNMENT OF THE UNITED STATES

Besides, as a result of the liberal swing in the recent national elections, there is every reason to believe that this new Congress will pass a Land Use Act; and such legislation will have far more teeth in it than any "indirect pollution" regulations that Train's EPA could muster.

In regard to this latter possibility, that the new Congress will pass a new measure similar to the defeated Jackson-Udall Bill, Rep. Robert E. Bauman (Maryland) brought his constituents up to date by publishing the following information, which appeared in the Baltimore Sun:

"We have been promised that the new 94th Congress, with its 'veto proof' majority of liberals, will have the opportunity to enact some form of federal land-use control legislation. Last year the House of Representatives refused to consider H.R. 10294, a far-ranging bill which would have increased federal control over decisions regarding how land in this country could be used. Advocates of federal land-use legislation hope that the new Congress will look upon their schemes more favorably.

"Those who desire such federal legislation are fond of inflated rhetoric filled with gloomy prophecies of uncontrolled growth and the increased pollution which will inevitably follow unless the federal government is allowed to place its stamp of approval on all proposals regarding the use of the land anywhere in the country.

"As a member of the House Interior Committee I have heard the repeated argument that without the loving supervision of the federal government, chaos, disorder and filth will engulf us. Thus the need for what amounts to a national zoning law. This argument ignores the fact that States and local jurisdictions have been involved in land-use planning and zoning in some form since the United States began. Most people have learned the bitter lesson that not all wisdom resides in Washington and that, in fact, most local jurisdictions have a better feeling for the needs of the people and the character of the land than do the bureaucrats of Washington.

"We are asked to believe that a government that can barely deliver the mail, that takes weeks and months to answer a citizen's inquiry or grant a permit, and treats individuals as so many computer numbers, is now capable of deciding in detail the future use of every square inch of land in these United States. Baloney!

"We heard last year, and we will hear again this year, that this legislation does not really increase federal control over our land. Last year the method was to grant $800 million of taxpayers' money to States which adopted a 'suitable' comprehensive land-use policy. This formulation will doubtless be used again. The carrot will be followed by the stick.

"Those who utilize this argument face a dilemma. If the legislation does not increase federal control, what is the point of passing it?

"The fact is that any federal land-use legislation will serve as the 'foot-in-the-door' for increased federal control. The first bill which is passed may be moderate in tone and not very alarming in specifics. But once it is passed, amendments will provide a gradual increase of federal control and a diminution of the powers of local jurisdictions and private land owners. Federal land-use legislation is often offered to us as the cure-all for uncontrolled growth which threatens the environment. The assumption is that a bureaucrat in Washington has a greater respect and feeling for the ecological balance of a given piece of land than somebody who lives on or near the land. This argument is weak on the face of it. . . .

"It is my contention that the unique character of local areas, and the interests of local citizens, can best be served by keeping decision-making power at the local level.

"Federal land-use legislation, in whatever formulation it is offered, contains no guarantees that the environment will be better protected. Such legislation will eat away at the principles of individual liberty and decentralized government which have characterized the American Republic. . . .

"Let's keep control of our land in our own hands." (End of article.)

With due respect for Rep. Bauman's logical presentation of the case against federal control of land use, and with due regard for all arguments as to who is best qualified to see to it that land is used properly, etc., it must be pointed out that these are all secondary considerations. The primary consideration has to do with the concentration of power. Because of the English common law and our Christian traditions, we of the West are a land-oriented people. In the days before the mass exodus to urban areas and the mad scramble to exchange homes for glorified ghetto cells called condominiums, a man's home was his castle. "No trespassing" applied to government agent as well as to stranger, unless the former was armed with a warrant signed by a legally authorized judge. A man's control of the use of his own land was the outward evidence of his individual freedom, the visible proof of his right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.

A man with a home and landed property that is his own is a free man. But when Big Government assumes the control of that property, the man has become a subject; he is no longer a citizen.

"Now, to bring about government by oligarchy (master minds) masquerading as democracy," said FDR, "it is fundamentally essential that practically all authority and control be centralized in our National Government." This is the real issue: centralization of control in a National Government. And while centralized control has been attained—either directly or indirectly—over the conduct of public utilities, banks, insurance, business, agriculture, education, social welfare, organized labor and the professions. But land taxes are still levied at city and county levels, land records are still kept within the States. If States and Counties are to be done away with, and replaced by Federal Regions and sub-regions, then land control must be taken over by the Ten Federal Regional Councils.

This, then (as FDR understood so clearly 45 years ago), is the ultimate aim: that "all authority and control be centralized in our National Government" so that "regulation and legislation by 'master minds' in whose judgment and will all the people may gladly and quietly acquiesce" may be brought about. This is the reasoning that lies behind the establishment of Regional Government, at both the National and the Global levels; this is the reason for National Land Control legislation; and this is the reason behind what has been going on at the Federal Government level ever since—and even before—Watergate!

"Control by master minds" is the aim, and there remains little doubt but that this group of alleged master minds is controlled by the Rockefeller Brothers. The plan calls for control of the United States Government by the placing of a member of the "Rockefeller Team" in control of each important department and agency of the Federal Executive.

On page 2 of this letter there is a chart of the Government of the United States, taken from the official manual of organization. It lists 14 agencies within the "Executive Office of the President," 11 Cabinet level Departments and 36 independent offices and establishments under the direct control of the Chief Executive or his appointees. In addition there are at least 20 agencies not listed, and the Ten Federal Regional Councils are not listed. Moreover, there are some 1,250 federal advisory committees (ACIR will be recognized as one of the more important of these) which are composed of businessmen, educators, bankers, politicians, CFR members, etc. To have each of these controlled by a Rockefeller teammate is the plan, with Brother Nelson heading this government, which will have become a mere service organization to keep the people contented and "in line" while Brother David controls the resources and the economy.

There is, of course, some opposition to this takeover of the people and their country. It was manifested in a "revolt of the conservatives" who met and fell to haggling over what plan to adopt: 1) try to recapture the Republican Party, 2) re-align the two parties so that one is conservative and the other liberal, or 3) pronounce a plague on both Big Parties and start a new one, as did the leaders who got Lincoln elected in 1860 (they did seem to agree that Ronald Reagan would be their choice as leader).

Again: an item in the current U.S. News & World Report (Feb. 17) betokens opposition. It reads: "A 'dump Rockefeller' movement already is developing. 'Conservative' Republicans are showing signs of alarm over the Vice President's maneuvering to solidify his political position in case Mr. Ford does not run next year. The concern is deepened by reports the Vice President soon will have 90 persons from his New York hierarchy in Washington—either in Government or in key law offices and research institutions."

Also; there was that revolt which developed around the highly important Domestic Council, which was reported in our last letter.

But President Ford was induced to strike back at the revolters, both in and out of government service. A gala banquet to honor Nelson Rockefeller, the new and appointed Vice President of the United States, was arranged, a $175-a-plate dinner at the Waldorf Astoria in New York City. Principal speaker was President Gerald Ford, who complained that Congress was interfering with the activities of Rockefeller-man Kissinger in his conduct of foreign affairs. Then he turned to the conduct of domestic affairs and announced that "Vice President Nelson A. Rockefeller will take over the Domestic Council... Ford also said two key Rockefeller aides will hold the top staff jobs on the important White House panel dealing with all facets of domestic policy.

To be executive director of the council, Ford named Rockefeller's special assistant James M. Cannon... Richard L. Dunham, 41, New York State's budget director when Rockefeller was governor, was designated deputy director of the council" (quotation from wire services, Feb. 14, 1975).

If there was any doubt that Ford is Rocky's assistant, this report should dispel same.

DON BELL REPORTS Weekly. $24 per year.
Extra copies: 10¢ each. Please address all inquiries, orders and correspondence to:
DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

OF CITIZEN SURVEILLANCE AND SECRET POLICE

EMBRYO GESTAPO?

Clarence M. Kelley, who succeeded the late J. Edgar Hoover as Director of the FBI, is quite concerned because of the "hue and cry over the individual's right of privacy—his right to be left alone, his right to be protected from oppressive governmental snooping."

"There is considerable demand," said the FBI chief, "to place tighter reins on law enforcement. And I read and hear, to my chagrin, dire pronouncements that Americans' freedoms are threatened by the FBI's alleged uncurbed lust for personal information on every man, woman and child in this country. And there are demands that the FBI be fettered by stringent laws, and kept honest by the closest official scrutiny and supervision...."

"While this is a legitimate issue, I say the greater threat to Americans' liberty is crime, ever-increasing and oppressive crime. Crime that drives people from the streets. Crime that kills and maims and divests people of their hard-earned property. Crime that spreads fear like a disease."

But Mr. Kelley confuses the issue, perhaps deliberately. He talks like a Chief of Police which he once was; but now he is the director of a federal investigative agency. His primary responsibility is not local crime, such as murder, rape, robbery. As Ronald Reagan once said: "effective law enforcement is primarily a local responsibility. Other levels of government, both state and federal, can supply assistance, but we must never forget that the basic tasks of crime prevention and control belong at the local level."

Federal officials choose to overlook the fact that it is federal interference (they call it federal assistance) which prevents the local law enforcement agencies from doing their job properly. When judges, following federal guidelines, release criminals faster than the police can arrest them, crime is bound to become epidemic. And when this double-digit inflation is accompanied by double-digit unemployment and depression stalks the land, crime will increase even more rapidly.

But this does not give police powers to any federal agency. There is the serious threat that a crime wave is being used as an excuse for creating a national police force, like the Gestapo of Nazi Germany, or the KGB of Soviet Russia.

It is the fear of what may happen to the United States if the FBI and the CIA are permitted to overstep their bounds of authority that has brought on the present demand for an investigation of these investigative agencies. Let the FBI confine itself to interstate affairs, and let the CIA limit its activities to inter-nation affairs that might jeopardize national security, and the hue and cry will subside.

Meanwhile, CIA Director William Colby has joined FBI Director Clarence Kelley in protesting the investigations. He says "the sensational atmosphere surrounding intelligence encourages oversimplification and disproportionate stress on a few missteps rather than on the high quality of CIA's basic work."

Those "few missteps," however, may be indicative of the trend toward the creation of a Police State, and of far greater significance than either Colby or Kelley are willing to admit. And for that reason, AP informs us that "creation of a select House Intelligence Committee like the Senate's was approved yesterday (Feb. 19) over Republican complaints that it might look like a witch hunt. The committee's mandate is to determine whether all foreign and domestic CIA, FBI and other U.S. intelligence operations are needed and how to prevent alleged spying on citizens in the future."

It wasn't intended to become so serious. When President Ford named his "blue ribbon" citizens' panel and told the panel to report its findings in the spring, that was supposed to satisfy everyone. But when it was learned that Nelson Rockefeller was to head the panel, it satisfied few people. It was like having Meyer Lansky investigate the Mafia. So, the Senate immediately named a special committee to investigate the in-investigators and the "cult of intelligence." Now the House has followed suit and also names its own special committee.

Meanwhile, there are rumors that the congressional investigations may also include that very mysterious supra-governmental private police force known as Interpol.

The following information is important, if for no other reason but that so very little is ever published about the activities of Interpol. This editor has little regard for the official activities of Senator Joseph Montoya, and the Church of Scientology is, in our opinion, neither a church nor a scientific association. But the information contained in the following article which appeared in the Washington Star-News of Feb. 8, 1975, is important in view of current investigations into the activities of the CIA:

CHURCH PRESSES PROBE OF INTERPOL

By William F. Willoughby Star-News Staff Writer

Sen. Joseph Montoya, D-N.M., said he is weighing an investigation into the activities of the American arm of Interpol, an international police agency, to determine if its files have provided security leaks to communist countries. A letter to Treasury Secretary William Simon asked what safeguards the American branch provides against leaks. Also of concern, according to Jim Boyer, a Montoya aide, is whether the privacy of American citizens is being invaded through Interpol activities. Montoya is chairman of the Senate Subcommittee on Treasury Appropriations, which funds the American arm of the agency.

Montoya told Simon he intends to take a closer look at funding for American participation in Interpol when he reviews Treasury Department budget requests.

The Senator's staff is studying closely extensive documents submitted by the Church of Scientology in which the church makes several allegations against Interpol. It was the church's report which prompted Montoya's action.

Montoya's statement came after he called three Treasury officials, including Louis Sims, chief of the National Central Bureau, to his office for questioning. The National Central Bureau is the American arm of the Paris-based Interpol. Also with Sims were Assistant Secretary of the Treasury David MacDonald and the director of the Office of Operations of the Treasury, William P. Hausman.

The officials denied that the National Central Bureau's activities have violated the rights of Americans or that communist countries can have indirect access to classified government police and intelligence files....

An investigation could have widespread implications and could link into the domestic spying charges being brought against the Central Intelligence Agency, the FBI, the Internal Revenue Service and other federal law enforcement agencies.

Through American connection with Interpol, access to criminal and other files on individuals are available to the 118 member nations, including some Eastern bloc and Fascist nations, the church report said....

Interpol's American arm has been housed in the Treasury Building since 1958. Internationally, it is a private organization, not answerable to any government, and now has its headquarters outside Paris. It had been established in Vienna before World War II, but when Germany took over Austria, the Nazis moved it to Wannsee.

Should Montoya decide on a full investigation the role of former White House aide Edward L. Morgan might come under scrutiny. Morgan began serving a four-month term for illegally backdating pre-presidential papers of President Nixon so the former president could obtain tax benefits. On Dec. 6, 1972, Nixon appointed Morgan an assistant secretary of the Treasury in charge of the Enforcement and Operations arm, holder of membership in Interpol. In October, 1973, Morgan went to Interpol's General Assembly in Vienna and was named to its nine-member Executive Committee. He resigned the post a few months later, in January 1974, when the Watergate Special Prosecutor's Office began closing in on his backdating activities. (Louis) Sims, of the Office of Protective Intelligence, the agency considered to be responsible for bugging the White House under Nixon, has held Morgan's post since Sept. 1.

(End of excerpts from article)

Although it is the CIA that is primarily "on the carpet" because of its various clandestine and domestic "dirty tricks," it should be pointed out that the CIA accounts for less than 15 per cent of the funds expended and the personnel employed in what is generally referred to as the U.S. Intelligence Community. According to men who should know—ex-CIA executive Victor Marchetti and ex-State Department intelligence executive John D. Marks, co-authors of the controversial best-selling book, The CIA and the Cult of Intelligence—there are ten different federal agencies involved, all of which are under the control of Henry Kissinger. They are, and the following figures are approximate and probably somewhat low:

Central Intelligence Agency, 16,500 employees, annual budget of $750,000,000.00.

National Security Agency, 24,000 employees, annual budget of $1,200,000,000.00.

Defense Intelligence Agency, 5,000 employees, annual budget of $200,000,000.00.

Army Intelligence, 35,000 employees, annual budget of $700,000,000.00.

Naval Intelligence, 15,000 employees, annual budget of $600,000,000.00.

Air Force Intelligence (which includes the National Reconnaissance Office), 56,000 employees, annual budget of $2,700,000,000.00.

State Department (Bureau of Intelligence and Research), 350 employees, annual budget of $8,000,000.00.

Federal Bureau of Investigation (Internal Security Division), 800 employees, annual budget of $40,000,000.00.

Atomic Energy Commission (Division of Intelligence), 300 employees, annual budget of $20,000,000.00.

Treasury Department, 300 employees, annual budget of $10,000,000.00.

All of which adds up to an annual expenditure of $6,228,000,000.00, of which only $750,000,000.00 goes to the CIA.

But, it is the CIA which has been most in the public eye, because of the Bay of Pigs fiasco, its operation of a private airline in Thailand to assist Cambodian loyalists, the Chilean controversy, etc.

And in this connection it is significant that the CIA became a kind of private military and intelligence force working for and on behalf of the Council on Foreign Relations!

While we find ourselves in disagreement with many of the conclusions drawn by Marchetti and Marks in their book about the CIA, their facts are straight enough, since the manuscript of the book was censored by the CIA, and some 168 deletions are marked in the book.

The following is quoted from page 267 of the paper back (Dell) edition of the book:

“It was no accident that former (CIA) clandestine Services chief Richard Bissell (Groton, Yale, A.B., Ph.D., London School of Economics, A.B.) was talking to a Council on Foreign Relations discussion group in 1968 when he made his ‘confidential’ speech on covert action. For the influential but priate Council, composed of several hundred of the country’s top political, military, business and academic leaders has long been the CIA’s principal ‘constituency’ in the American public. When the agency has needed prominent citizens to front for its proprietary companies or for other special assistance, it has often turned to Council members. Bissell knew that night in 1968 that he could talk freely and openly about extremely sensitive subjects, because he was among ‘friends.’ His words leaked out not because of the indiscretion of any of the participants, but because of student upheavals at Harvard in 1971.”

Bissell’s speech would have remained absolutely secret from all but CFR members, as are all such off-the-record discussions held at CFR headquarters, had it not been for a most unusual occurrence. In 1971, the radical students—with outside help—held an anti-war demonstration at Harvard University. The students occupied the building in Cambridge, Massachusetts, that houses Harvard University’s Center for International Affairs. Once inside, the rioters barricaded the entrances and ransacked the files of faculty members who worked there. And among the documents they discovered were the confidential minutes of that meeting held on January 8, 1968, at Pratt House, which is headquarters of the Council on Foreign Relations. Again according to authors Marchetti and Marks:

“The minutes were not absolutely complete; Center associate William Harris, who had served as rapporteur for the meeting, later admitted privately, after the document had been reprinted by the African Research Group, that it had been partially edited to eliminate particularly sensitive material. Even so, the purloined version was still the most complete description of the CIA’s covert-action strategy and tactics ever made available to the outside world. Aside from a few newspaper articles which appeared in 1971, however, when it was reprinted... the Bissell paper attracted almost no interest from the American news media.”

We reprint the foregoing to show how much the CIA was the “tool” of the CFR even in 1968. However, certain sections of the U.S. Intelligence Community were not under the total control of the CFR. This was true even of certain sections within the CIA. So, in 1969 when Henry Kissinger joined the White House staff, it became his duty to gain complete control of the entire U.S. Intelligence Establishment. And he did this through his pal (who often poses as a rival) James R. Schlesinger, currently Secretary of Defense.

Schlesinger graduated from Harvard in 1959, took a teaching job at the University of Virginia and while there did an article on "Quantitative Analysis and National Security." The article caught the eye of Schlesinger's old Harvard buddy, Daniel Ellsberg (of the Council on Foreign Relations, and the pro-communist purloiner of the Pentagon Papers which were made available to the New York Times, Washington Post, etc. Ellsberg was at that time an important personage at RAND, and he had little difficulty in arranging for the transfer of his protege, James Schlesinger, from Virginia University to RAND. That was in 1965 and almost overnight Schlesinger became a sensation; he was made director of strategic studies and impressed Henry Kissinger, who was still working with the CFR and for Nelson Rockefeller at the time.

PPBS (now called Management by Objectives, or MBO) was developed at RAND, and so was Schlesinger. So, in 1969 when President Nixon installed PPBS and created the Office of Management and Budget to run the new management system, Schlesinger was transferred from RAND to OMB. Then, with the arrival of Roy Ash to take charge of OMB, Schlesinger was transferred to the Atomic Energy Commission. Then, when Henry Kissinger was ready to assume absolute control over all phases of foreign affairs, including the Intelligence Community, he called on James Schlesinger to do the dirty work for him. Schlesinger was transferred to the CIA, and in April 1973, Keyes Beech, a newsman formerly with the New York Times, reported:

"Morale of the (CIA) . . . has sunk to an all-time low under the impact of a drastic reorganization under the new director, James R. Schlesinger. . . . more than 1,000 employees have been lopped off the CIA payroll since Schlesinger took charge February 2. . . . For the most part, it's the World War II types who are getting the ax. . . ."

Having completed the reorganization of the CIA and having arranged its absolute control by Kissinger (and Kissinger's real boss, Nelson Rockefeller), we next hear of James R. Schlesinger through his appointment as Secretary of Defense. Phyllis Schlafly and Chester Ward, co-authors of Kissinger On the Couch, wrote (pp. 557-8): "Kissinger was the puppet-master moving Schlesinger into the job. Neither the Congress nor the press dug out the man's total lack of qualifications. . . . So far as Kissinger was concerned, however, Schlesinger had demonstrated superlative ability to accomplish the sort of things that were vital in destroying the existing order in the Free World, so that it could be replaced by the planned new world order. . . ."

A side benefit to Kissinger which occurred when he succeeded in placing Schlesinger in position as Defense Secretary: As Secretary of State and, simultaneously, head of the National Security Council, Kissinger was in absolute command of all intelligence agencies except those that reported to the Pentagon for their policy directions and their authorizations. There were four important agencies in this category: Defense, Army, Navy, and Air Force Intelligence Agencies. With these (and all armed forces) responsible to Schlesinger, with Schlesinger responsible to Kissinger, with Kissinger responsible to Nelson Rockefeller who, as Vice President of the United States, is in charge of a covert as well as an open government of the United States; well, that's just about the whole ball game, as the Madison Avenue habitues might say.

This is why Congressional investigations of the U.S. Intelligence Community could be important: Such probes might uncover the fact that a Bureaucratic Dictatorship—managed entirely by appointed administrators—is about to be installed as a replacement for our traditional, constitutional, representative republican form of government.

If the Congress convenes at Washington just to sign Administrative demands and approve OMB-ordered appropriations, then Congress has become a luxury which we need no longer afford; our benevolent dictators can do the same for less money and red tape. But, if Congressmen will come to realize that the Executive Branch of this Government is administered entirely by appointed officials, that all members of the Federal Judiciary are appointees, and that they, the Senators and Congressmen, are the only federal officials representing and therefore responsible to the people of this Nation; and if they really take charge because they are the only officials remaining who are responsible to the States and to the people, then Watergate and CIA investigations will not have been in vain.

But with the New Order almost completely installed, and with the kind of Congress we seem to have this year, little short of a miracle can turn the tide in time.

DON BELL REPORTS Weekly. $24 per year. Extra copies: 10¢ each. Please address all inquiries, orders, and correspondence to:
DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

WE'RE STILL TRYING TO PURCHASE PROSPERITY

SPEND AND SPEND...

The President and the Congress have, as of this date, reached a stalemate on economic policy. Unfortunately, that stalemate is over two variations of how the Government should interfere and attempt to "manage" the economy, not over the fundamental changes that are necessary if the Nation's economic problems are to be solved on a permanent basis. Both the President and the Congress are proposing programs that merely delay an eventual collapse of the economy.

Therefore, we present the complete and unabridged texts of three letters, followed by portions of an article concerning the letters which appeared in the Wall Street Journal of February 2, 1975.

October 1, 1974

President Gerald R. Ford,
The White House,
Washington, D.C.

Dear Mr. President: With all the economic advice you received at the Summit Conference you may not mind hearing from the Economics Department of Grove City College which, as you may recall, conferred the degree of Doctor of Laws on you at our commencement of June 8, 1968. We feel especially moved to proffer our advice as the gold school we represent was conspicuously absent at the Summit Conference.

To end inflation and to stabilize the U.S. dollar the following steps need to be taken immediately:

1. The Federal budget must be balanced now, next year, and every year thereafter.
2. Your engine of inflation, the Federal Reserve System, must be inactivated, or better yet, abolished.
3. The Federal Reserve money now in circulation must stay in circulation and be made fully redeemable in gold.
4. With these steps you will have achieved monetary stability. But you will face a recession which past deficit spending and credit expansion have made unavoidable. Without an engine of inflation to accommodate new deficit spending and credit expansion, you will need to cut federal spending even further as federal revenue declines. And to facilitate speedy recovery from the recession business taxes should be cut. We are confident that in a year or two the American economy will resume full speed again, with stable prices and a sound monetary system.

We realize that our advice may not be popular with the economics fraternity, which since the 1930's has preferred the "new economics" of easy money and deficit spending. We are proud to represent the great tradition of classical economics and the gold standard that gave the world natural money rather than depreciating political paper.

Mr. President, the choice is yours. Proceeding on the present road you will preside over an accelerating depreciation of the dollar and all the economic and social evils thereof. Or, you may embark upon the road to gold money, which is hard money. There are no alternatives.

Yours respectfully,

William H. Burdick,
Paul J. Fair,
Charles J. Guiler,
Hans F. Sennholz,
Professors of Economics,
Grove City College.

The White House,
Washington,
December 2, 1974.

Prof. William H. Burdick,
Department of Economics,
Grove City College,
Grove City, Pa.

Dear Professor Burdick: Thank you and Professors Fair, Guiler and Sennholz for your thoughtful letter expressing your concerns for our Nation's economic problems.

As you know, I consider inflation public enemy number one. It is my intention to bring about a moderation of inflationary pressures. A wide range of consequences implied by our current economic policies was explored during the Conference on Inflation.

I am encouraged by the responses received so far and particularly welcome opinions such as yours as an invaluable source of information that can only improve the formation of our economic policy. Accordingly, I have forwarded your letter to Mr. L. William Seidman of my team of economic advisers for his full consideration in conjunction with the other views we have received.

With hard work, sacrifice and cooperation, I am optimistic of our chances of promoting stabilization in our economy once again.

With best wishes,

Sincerely,

Gerald R. Ford.

January 17, 1975.

President Gerald R. Ford,
The White House,
Washington, D.C.,

Dear Mr. President: The professors of economics at Grove City College appreciate your letter of December 2. It encourages them to confess their great disappointment in your State of the Union Message. You are making recommendations that are diametrically opposed to our own.

We advised that the Federal budget "be balanced now, next year, and every year thereafter." You are projecting deficits of at least $32 billion this fiscal year and $45 billion in the next. The massive budget deficits will do incalculable harm to capital markets, greatly raise interest rates, prolong and aggravate the economic stagnation, and precipitate an inflationary growth in the money supply. They are providing the fuel for the depreciation of the U.S. dollar at ever faster rates.

We recommended that the quantity of money and credit be stabilized. Your proposals are designed to bring about a rapid expansion. In fact, since you took office on August 9, 1974, the Federal Reserve System has already expanded its credit, which constitutes the national money base, from $90,479 billion to $96 billion on January 1, 1975. That is an expansion of 6.1 per cent in less than five months. In our economics classes we call this "inflation" and soaring prices the "inevitable consequences."

We recommended that business taxes be cut in order to facilitate speedy recovery from the recession. You are proposing a temporary increase of investment tax credits yielding $4 billion, and a reduction of the corporate tax rate to 42 per cent from 48 per cent, or $6 billion this year, provided $30 billion are collected each year from new energy taxes. This is an important increase in business taxation.

Your energy plan, in our considered judgment, will raise the costs of living of all Americans and lower their standards of living. If the reduction of U.S. oil imports is an urgent defense objective the domestic energy industry should be liberated from stifling controls and encouraged to expand tax cuts. But instead, you are proposing new excise taxes and a "windfall profits tax" of up to 75 per cent of net income. $8 billion of new excise taxes on natural gas and $12 billion of new taxes on the oil industry do not promote exploration and production, but rather impede it. The new taxes on domestic industry are bound to prolong our dependence on foreign oil.

The economics professors at Grove City College are sad and disappointed about the economic road you are traveling. In the footsteps of your predecessors you are following the sign posts of the "new economics" of deficit spending and inflation. It is unfortunate that on this road that leads to monetary destruction and social disorder you cannot find the turn-off to classical economics that assures stable money and economic stability.

Yours respectfully,

Paul J. Fair,

Charles J. Guiler,

Hans F. Sennholz,

William H. Burdick,

Professors of Economics.

From the Wall Street Journal, Feb. 2, 1975:

REVIEW OF CURRENT TRENDS IN BUSINESS AND FINANCE

President Ford has received advice from many economists in recent months. Some has been solicited, as at the so-called summit conference on inflation late last year, and some has been unsolicited. The latter category includes advice from the economics faculty of Grove City College, a Pennsylvania institution that seven years ago conferred an honorary doctor of laws degree on Mr. Ford. His degree notwithstanding, the President appears most unlikely to heed the Grove City professors. Still, their view seems worth bearing in mind when so many economists are beginning to talk sanguinely of reduced inflation and economic recovery later this year, and a surging stock market seems to agree.

The Grove City economists sent a letter to the White House on Oct. 1 spelling out their idea of how the President should tackle the country's economic woes. The professors, noting that they had been "conspicuously absent" from the inflation summits, stress that "the federal budget must be balanced now, next year and every year thereafter."

The massive budget deficits that loom for the current fiscal year and for 1975-76 indicate the attention that the President has given that suggestion far better than his polite response to the professors. . . .

Hans Sennholz, chairman of the Grove City economics department and a signer of the letter, expands on where current government policy may lead in a lengthy article in the January issue of The Freeman, a monthly publication devoted to the discussion of "ideas on liberty." The Sennholz scenario contrasts remarkably with the mildly optimistic forecasts beginning to emanate from many analysts as the recession deepens.

The government, Dr. Sennholz states, is "alarmed about the recession that is engulfing consumer goods industries" and obviously wants "to stimulate these industries once again." As he puts it, "by popular demand, the government is expected to cope with this recession with all means at its disposal." This assures intensified "deficit spending and credit expansion," the economist contends. And this, in turn, will lead eventually to an even "hotter boom" than the recent inflationary period. As a result, he warns that "two-digit inflation must rage on" and "the purchasing power of the dollar must fall at ever faster rates."

How does this gloomy scenario end?

"Two-digit inflation only comes to an end with the advent of three-digit inflation, which signals the approaching demise of paper currency." Dr. Sennholz writes. "When millions of consumers hurry to spend their monetary assets and use all their lines of credit in order to seek refuge in real goods, the end of the currency comes in sight (and) the dreaded depression that was so long delayed will finally make its entrance with irresistible force."

In the end, Dr. Sennholz claims, "the inexorable laws of economics will prevail over political intrigue."

It is possible to dismiss such commentary as simply out of touch with realities. . . . Nevertheless, it doesn't necessarily follow that the fears of the Grove City professors should be totally disregarded. The idea of triple-digit inflation seems unrealistic at the moment. However, how many forecasters several years ago foresaw that every major country in the non-Communist world, save West Germany, would suffer double-digit inflation in 1974? One of the precious few back then who did warn about such an eventuality was Hans Sennholz.

Alfred L. Malabre, Jr.

Hon. Robert E. Bauman of Maryland, in the House of Representatives, Tuesday, February 18, 1975:

Mr. Speaker, recently I read an article in Politics, published by the Business-Industry Political Action Committee—BIPAC—and written by Edward I. Maher. In the article Mr. Maher comments on the change in attitude which has occurred in the minds of many American citizens regarding obligations once considered to be family duties but now considered by many to be an obligation of the Federal Government. Mr. Maher properly notes that everyone curses inflation but also wants the direct benefits of costly programs operated by the Federal Government and funded out of our tax monies. I include at this point in my remarks Mr. Maher's article which certainly offers us a subject for thoughtful consideration.

LET'S STOP PLAYING DUMB ABOUT INFLATION

In February, 1934, Marge Wilson's husband died. She was left, at 28, with boys 6 and 2 and a girl 4. Her husband's life insurance yielded barely enough for funeral expenses and medical bills. Without relatives to turn to, Marge would have been in desperate straits. As it was, she and her children were able to move in with her parents. Her father still was actively at work and, although 4 additional mouths to feed created a problem, he and his wife accepted it as a matter of course. In due time, Marge got a job as a stenographer at $18.75 a week. Publicly-funded day care centers were unheard of in those days and to grandmother fell the responsibility of looking after the children while their mother was at work. Planned expenditures and a vacation trip had to be postponed indefinitely.

Down the street, a block away, Joe Walker was laid off that summer, for the last time ever. At 68, it was unlikely he would be called back to his long-time job. A little money had been put aside over the years, but not much. Joe and his wife held to the theory that children were a form of insurance against want in old age and had raised six. All were grown, of course, and had families of their own. Although it meant sacrifice, providing for their parents was recognized as a primary family responsibility and they all chipped in to the best of their respective abilities.

Such examples could have been multiplied endlessly in 1934—not only involving widows like Marge or older folks like Joe Walker and his wife, but virtually everyone singled out for “the slings and arrows of outrageous fortune.” But in those days most families took care of their own when trouble came. If Brother Jack lost his job or Sister Anne had to go to a sanitarium, the family rallied round and shared the burden.

Things are different now. Forty years have gone by and Marge Wilson’s daughter has become a widow like her mother. But her financial status is far different than her mother’s had been. She will receive Social Security Benefits for herself and her children until the youngest reaches 18, at least. Her husband’s group life insurance, provided by his employer, yielded a nice nest egg of two year’s salary. His medical and hospital bills were taken care of by Blue Cross, and Blue Shield, all paid for by his employer.

Marge is now retired from her $225-a-week job as secretary to the president of the company. She enjoys a nice income from her pension, provided by the company, Social Security, half paid by the company, and her own savings. There is no need for her to spend any of this income to provide for her daughter or grandchildren, although she would do so, of course, if the need arose. Marge’s chief complaint these days is about rising prices. The inflation everyone talks about—and for which scores of erudite economists have been trying to find the cause and a cure—has all of us complaining about high prices. Yet, few of us make the connection between rising prices and taxes and the benefits we have come to expect from government and the companies we work for.

Over the past 40 years there has been a veritable explosion of social programs designed for the laudable purpose of helping people to help themselves. We have witnessed the advent of Social Security, unemployment compensation, Blue Cross, Blue Shield, major medical insurance, Medicare, Medicaid, welfare, aid to dependent children, income supplements, free food stamps, free legal services, subsidized student loans, aid to education, crop supports, foreign aid and numerous other programs intended to alleviate the ills which beset the human race.

No widespread movement seems to have developed for the curtailment of any of these programs, even among those who complain the loudest about inflation. Most people, it seems, are glad to be relieved of the responsibility of caring for the sick, the old, the unfortunate and the improvident among their relatives and are quite willing to let government do it. And surely no one objects to the steadily rising pensions, insurances and other benefits provided for employees by private business and government agencies.

However, these things cost money. Government can relieve individuals of the bother of caring for their own or themselves, it cannot relieve society as a whole of the cost. Government social programs must be paid for either in higher taxes or through borrowing—“printing press money” which is the classic cause of inflation.

Fortunately, concurrent with the proliferation of social programs there has been rapid growth and application of technology in the factory and on the farm. This has tended to offset a large part of the cost of such programs, but what is not offset by increased productivity must be reflected in higher prices.

So, there really is nothing mysterious about the inflation everyone complains about. But even as the complaints about high prices and high taxes reach a crescendo the seeds are being sown for more of the same. Proposals are under consideration for subsidized transit fares, universal health insurday care centers, etc., and scarcely a week goes by without some new proposal. Seldom does the public link these programs to the rising cost of living—or the rising cost of living to the politicians who promote such programs.

Probably we all would feel somewhat better about inflation if we stopped to consider that what we pay in higher taxes and prices we don’t have to pay to take care of family obligations and to protect ourselves against ill health, joblessness and poverty in old age. To that extent, at least, the inflation we complain about is an illusion.

Edward I. Maher.

Space limitation permits but one personal comment, and again we quote: “But if any provide not for his own, and specially for those of his own house, he hath denied the faith, and is worse than a heathen.”

(I Timothy 5: 8).

DON BELL REPORTS Weekly, presenting the Christian American point of view. Two copies of each issue (except overseas airmail) are sent each subscriber. $24 per year. Extra copies: 10¢ each. Address all orders: DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223 Palm Beach, Florida 33480

THE POTENTIAL DOLLAR FLOOD MAY DROWN US ALL

THREE-CORNERED CONFLICT

If all those in authority were agreed upon the nature of the enemy and were aiming at the same target, the situation would still be sufficiently serious as to make successful solution of our economic and monetary problems doubtful. But when there seems to be such disagreement, one begins to wonder if there is any hope this side of disintegration. The United States Congress is fighting a recession, and this is a right thing to do. The Federal Reserve System and the United States Treasury are fighting inflation, and this also is a right thing to do. And the State Department is fighting to maintain an alleged state of detente, using deflated dollars as their principal ammunition, and this is a very questionable thing to do.

Meanwhile, an appointed President is not sure what he ought to be doing about it all. He vacillates, vetoes, pontificates, postpones preordained plans of action. He began by declaring an all-out war to Whip Inflation Now. Then, before that enemy had been met, he changed courses and named the recession his number one enemy. Now he neglects both to concentrate on the task of overcoming an alleged energy crisis.

And, as a result of this misdirection and conflict of targets, the American citizenry—especially the Great Middle Class Majority—is beginning to be submerged in a sea of debt-dollars and funny-money.

We are oversimplifying, of course. But this seems expedient when the Government and the communications media make everything so very complicated that even they no longer can separate fact from fiction.

Part of the confusion stems from the choice one makes of the various economic indicator charts. One set will show an alarming drop: in construction, housing, new orders, production, consequent unemployment. That's the recession part of the picture, and it's real. And these are the charts that the Congress reads with anxiety and trepidation. But there is another set of charts that keep booming upward: things like personal income of those who have jobs, wholesale prices, retail prices, the money supply. This is the inflation part of the story, and this is what the FED and the Treasury are looking at.

Now, both Congress and the FED are looking for quick cures, when there is no such thing. To whip the recession, more money must be fed into the economy; but this will cause a disastrous upsurge of inflation. On the other hand, to defeat inflation, budgets must be balanced and money must be made scarcer and harder to get, and this is certain to convert any existing recession into a full-scale depression.

There is one remarkable result of this conflict between the Congress and the Fed: As Senate Banking Committee Chairman William Proxmire said, Congress really is the boss and can even abolish the Federal Reserve System if it chooses to do so. Fed Chairman Arthur Burns had to defend his Corporation before a session of Chairman Proxmire's Senate Banking Committee, and when the media found it necessary to report, much more was published concerning the inner workings of the Federal Reserve System than the Fed Directors could have desired.

As an example, note the following excerpts that are taken from articles appearing in the current (March 10, 1974) issue of Newsweek:

...The Fed was created in 1913, after the panic of 1907 finally convinced Congress that the nation needed a central bank, but its craft has always been far more art than science...It was originally meant mainly to assure an adequate flow of money throughout the economy. Inevitably, new crises brought out the Fed's other roles as lender of last resort, defender of the national currency and moderator of boom and bust, and its role in the economy grew....

In the domestic economy, the Fed operates mainly by influencing interest rates and creating new money. It has three main tools: it can raise or lower the discount rate, at which member banks borrow from the Fed itself; it can raise or lower the proportion of reserves that member banks must keep to back their loans; or it can buy or sell securities—mostly short-term Treasury notes—on the open market.

When the Fed buys, it pays with a check drawn on itself—literally creating money from thin air and buying a piece of the national debt. The seller usually deposits the check in a bank account, where the money becomes part of the bank's reserves and counts as backing for loans, thus helping to expand the economy. If the Fed's reserve requirements average 15 percent, for example, each new dollar can theoretically support up to $6.67 in loans. . . . economists figure that each dollar in new bank reserves can increase the gross national product by $3.90 to $7.80 within six months. In the reverse process, the Fed sells securities from its own account and thus pulls in money from the banks, reducing their reserves and forcing a decline in lending. Either way, the Fed affects interest rates; when there is less money available for lending, rates are bid up; when there is more money, the market tends to relax. . . .

(Burns said he has made moves to expand the money supply) but he insisted that to move any more aggressively would risk a new burst of inflation—"an explosion of money and credit that could wreck all chances of lasting recovery. . . . Oh, sure, we could do more. We could even wreck the country, but we are not going to do it."

. . . Proxmire's Senate resolution, backed by an ideological spectrum ranging from Hubert Humphrey to James Buckley. . . would order the Fed to consult with the House and Senate banking committees twice a year, setting money-supply growth targets and by implication being held responsible for past performance. "It is very important that the Fed at least hear from its master," Proxmire said last week. "Without goals, targets, we'll never hear anything meaningful from a Federal Reserve chairman." . . . One way or another, the resolution seemed likely to pass; whether Burns could defang it might depend heavily on the economy over the next few months. (Excerpted from article by Larry Martz and Rich Thomas which appeared in Newsweek, March 10, 1975).

And so, at long last, and because of a controversy between the Congress and the Fed, the media condescends to tell the public how the Federal Reserve System engages in a craft that is "far more art than science" in "literally creating money from thin air" by merely writing and signing "a check drawn on itself."

Readers will remember that Article I, Section 8 of the United States Constitution provides that Congress shall have the power "...to coin money and regulate the value thereof."

Congress delegated that power to the Federal Reserve when it created the system in 1913. Since that time our money has lost its gold backing, then its silver backing, our coins became mere tokens, and finally our paper money lost its U.S. Treasury backing and became mere Federal Reserve promises to pay that must be accepted as legal tender. (In this connection, someone has said that governments determine what is legal tender, but the public determines what is money; when the man in the street or in the field feels his paper currency is a terrible storehouse for his prior labors, he will then turn to gold or silver or "things." This is a part of the reason that sales remain high in many lines despite the stagflation.)

After Congress relinquished its power over money to the Fed, coining money (or printing paper promises to pay) and regulating the value thereof took on a new form because of the growth of Big Government:

Since Government became a service organization, doing for people what people ought to be doing for themselves, Government has been spending more than it has been able to collect. To get the extra money, Government must "borrow" and pay interest, just as you or I must do. And the Fed was set up as the Government's Central Banker. When the Government needs money, the House of Representatives "appropriates," the Senate approves, the Treasury provides and the Executive spends the money. When there is not enough money in the Treasury, it is "borrowed" from the Fed and we, the taxpayers, presently pay some $30 billion a year in interest on those loans. This interest is paid to the Fed or to those who purchase the Treasury notes and bonds from the Fed; the principle is created with the stroke of a pen, but the interest must be paid in full by the American taxpayers. This is a part of the story Newsweek did not tell. And this is how the National Debt got to be $458 billion as of fiscal 1974, and how the total outstanding obligations of the Federal Government got to be over $5 trillion (estimated at $5,077,000,000,000.00 as of fiscal 1974).

Now, as costly as is the Fed to the taxpayer and as enriching as it is to the Governors of the Fed and to their favored clients, the monster bankers and the multinationals, it is obvious that the Fed does not, of itself, pump new money into the economy. First, it waits until the politicians ask for more money. Then the Fed is happy to oblige. And this is why the present controversy between the Congress and the Fed is just a bit ridiculous. The Fed can make the existing money supply tight or loose; but it cannot increase the money supply; that's up to Congress. So, again oversimplifying, we might say that Congress caused the inflation while Fed created the recession, and while they're battling each other in defensive wars the Federal Executive is taking advantage of the situation to grow more powerful.

This was brought out very tellingly by the eminent gold bug Harry Schultz, who is so well respected that he is able to charge a consultation fee of $1,000 per hour ($2,000 on Saturdays and Sundays), and whose newsletter sells for $14 per copy.

Mr. Schultz says it appears to him that the undercover United States monetary policy now is a "para-military, eco-aggression, that is being strategized to pull US burning chestnuts out of the fire." He believes that the immediate ploy is to pay for high priced oil with low priced currency; and that the final result will be a flooding of the world with cheap and finally worthless American dollars, which will "have a diabolical effect on civilization, may in fact virtually bring it to an existence confrontation, if not a termination." He reckons that when currency is debased on a massive scale, the people's sense of values is destroyed; and what follows is always violence, chaos, anarchy, and destruction. "We already have this process in progress of course," says Schultz. "What's new is a great expansion of it."

According to Schultz and those of his school of economics (he does not stand alone, he just stands near the head of the class) the situation was brought about because U.S. monetary policies are now being run by the State Department instead of the Treasury. One of the earliest moves was to put Henry Kissinger in charge of the State Department. Then, even as pal Schlesinger was moved into the Pentagon, another controversial operative, CFR's Helmut Sonnenfeldt, was supposed to move in and take over Treasury. But that scheme backfired and Sonnenfeldt was awarded to Super-K in State. To weaken the Treasury Department, a lightweight by name of William E. Simon was moved up into the Secretaryship.

"One can see now, in retrospect," observed Schultz, "that asking (Chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers Alan) Greenspan to Washington was a window dressing operation, to give a front to the covert action to be undertaken in the State Department. In fact, it made little difference who was at Treasury, when the real decisions were going to be taken at State. What friend Greenspan says is therefore of little moment and it keeps the natives from getting restless."

Schultz concedes that "the powers who move political men around like chessmen are the monster US banks. They've been doing it for decades, yea centuries. Men are moved into place to implement policies favored by these bankers."

In the foregoing there is one piece missing from the jigsaw: While it seems true enough that the present critical economic and monetary decisions are being made and carried out by State, not Treasury, it is also true that the Super-K is no giant when it comes to things economic and monetary. Given the plan and the program, Kissinger can carry them out superlatively, but even he admits that in these areas, somebody else must do the blueprinting.

And that is why Mr. Rockefeller went to Washington. Nelson had his heart set on the Presidency and under no other conditions would he have demeaned himself and the family name by playing second fiddle to a Ford (and certainly not to a Nixon who was virtually an employee—which partly accounts for the forced resignation and ostracism of the latter). But the time was ripe, all others were in their places, the last act was ready to begin; but Kissinger could not play the double role, and the Top Man, Nelson, had to be brought onto the stage because he knew exactly what was in Producer David's mind, and he knew how to get the players to carry out the plans that were in David's mental portfolio.

Ford, like Greenspan and Simon, might be referred to as window dressing. A current wisecrack making the rounds in Washington has it that Rockefeller may even let Ford stay on and run for the Presidency—with Rocky. In any case, Ford is quite capable when it comes to chiding a reluctant Congress about such matters as an extra quarter of a billion dollars for Cambodia. However, the television networks may have overplayed the buildup to that particular press conference. The manner in which so much film footage showing maimed and mutilated women and children allegedly just wounded in and around Phnom Penh, was edited into television newscasts just before the Ford appeal, was rather obvious and in bad taste.

There is the suspicion that the real reason for sending that extra quarter of a billion to Cambodia is to add impetus to the dollar flood that may engulf the world. Added fact: after Iran promised to make all its international deals in U.S. dollars, along came the announcement that a major economic agreement had been made whereby some $15 billion would be spent on American goods and services.

Another item of greater concern, and we are quoting from the editorial page of Business Week of March 10, 1975:

"With stunning swiftness, the U.S. has accelerated its shipment of sophisticated military weapons to countries in the war-prone Middle East and North Africa. U.S. arms sales to the area are now running close to $7 billion a year—up from $1.3 billion only three years ago. Obviously this rapidly growing arsenal, coupled with shipments from the Soviet Union, Britain, and France, is making the Middle East the world's No. 1 tinderbox. It also presents the U.S. with troublesome moral and political dilemmas... the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and the Senate Appropriations Committee should face up to some difficult questions in their upcoming hearings:

* Are U.S. arms sales changing the military balance in the Middle East?

* Is the U.S. arming countries that may turn out to be enemies in any future war over oil?

* Are sales to the Middle East taking away weapons needed by U.S. forces?

* Are arms sales merely an expedient to help the U.S. balance of payments?

"Many of the planes and missiles reaching the Middle East are capable of carrying nuclear warheads. Though no nuclear weapons have been exported to the region, both the Arabs and the Israelis could someday produce weapons-grade fissionable materials on their own, as India has done, making nuclear war possible."

As this is being written, Kissinger is once more in the Middle East, and it is becoming evident that his visits to various and sundry countries of the world have more to do with trade than with peace. His visits to Peking had nothing to do with peace, had everything to do with opening up Red China to trade, trade especially with the corporate and the financial interests controlled by his patrons, the Rockefeller Brothers. The same is true of his visits to the Kremlin. He sold out the United States with the Salt Agreements that he masterminded; but he did great and wonderful things for the American-based multinational corporations. And when Kissinger pays visits to London, Brussels, Berlin, Paris, Bonn, Rome, etc., he visits as an honored representative of the United States of America; but we fear that his talks with heads of states have little to do with the interests of states—even the USSR—and have much to do with advancing the interests of that new set of sovereignties known as the Multinationals, and whose executive heads see themselves as World Managers.

Now, if the Secretary of State were running this para-military eco-aggressive policy on behalf of the people of the United States, if he were insisting on the spread of US dollars throughout the world as a way of aiding and abetting the US economy and strengthening the US dollar, keeping US factories running and US workmen employed; then we, too, would praise Kissinger as most do in the upper echelons of politics and finance. But, if he is using his office and US dollars for any other purpose, ought he not to be exposed and condemned?

Unfortunately, what is good for the Multinationals is not necessarily good for the United States. These global corporations operate as private economic systems, but control 70% of the Nation's wealth and pay 14% of its taxes. The following is by Judith Randall in a recent article in the Washington Star-News:

"Obsolete federal policies have bred inflation and unemployment by allowing global corporations to operate as private economic systems... Prof. Ronald E. Muller told a news conference... By shifting their enterprises to wherever they can maximize profits they are able to buy labor and raw materials cheaply, escape many taxes and avoid the costs purely domestic firms must pay... the globals can often drive solely domestic single industry competitors out of business... With the competitors out of the way, they can then raise prices... Muller said 30% of total corporate U.S. profits are now earned abroad (and) global corporations now control over 50% of the Nation's bank assets, which are for the most part concentrated in the 20 or so U.S. banks which also operate internationally. (Muller is co-author of the book Global Reach: The Power of Multinationals, and a professor at American University)."

These Multinationals whose agents (such as Henry K. and Nelson R.) use United States credentials and U.S. dollars, but act otherwise as independent, ultranational managers of the world, have precipitated a global economic and monetary crisis, perhaps intentionally, since they anticipate as a result a socialist world order. To gain control of a Government in order to destroy it is an act the general public may never comprehend.

DON BELL REPORTS Weekly, presenting the Christian American point of view. Two copies of each issue (except to overseas air-mail subscribers) are sent each subscriber. $24 per year. Extra copies: 10¢ each. Please address orders and correspondence:

DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

ACIR'S CONFERENCE ON FEDERALISM ----- of ----- THE TENSION OF INTERDEPENDENCE

FEDERALISM IN ACTION?

A conference to complete the structuring of the "new order," or "Regional Governance" was held at the Statler Hilton Hotel in the Nation's Capital, February 20-22, 1975. It was called by the Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations (ACIR), was assisted financially by the National Science Foundation, was assisted by the Office of Management and Budget (OMB), the General Services Administration (GSA), and by the following satellite organizations of the Rockefeller-endowed 1313:

- The Council of State Governments
- The International City Management Association
- The National Association of Counties
- The National Governors' Conference
- The National League of Cities
- The National Conference of State Legislatures
- The U.S. Conference of Mayors

There were some 30 speakers and a roster of about 350 conferees which included 49 Federal officials, 72 State officials, 18 Regional officials, 64 County officials, 80 City officials, 66 Academics, 31 Education officials, 42 representatives of national organizations associated with "1313," 23 representatives of State organizations affiliated with "1313," 17 representatives of "private research" institutions (such as Aspen, Carnegie, Brookings, etc.), 14 officials of business and labor organizations, 23 representatives of private industry, 8 representatives from foreign countries, 5 Press representatives, and 25 who were classified as "Miscellaneous" registrants. Not all of this last group were in sympathy with the activities of ACIR, and were there to act as citizens' representatives insofar as this is possible in such a "closed conference."

Your reporter did not attend the conference, but he did receive reports from reporters who did gain entry, and has been supplied with copies of the propaganda material that was distributed among the registrants, as well as copies of all the speeches delivered by the proponents of Regional Government (we are deeply grateful to those patriots who were able to supply us with this information in order that we might relay the "highlights" to our readers).

Our first general impression is that the Planners were not at all happy with the way their plans did not materialize as planned in 1974. ACIR Chairman Robert E. Merriam was of the opinion that Watergate was the reason since there had developed a growing distrust of politicians and government officials in general, both elected and appointed. He temporized and explained that:

"The shifting sands of American governmental actions alternately form solid dunes of accomplishment only to be blown into endless deserts of mediocrity. The alternate ebb and flow of these sands has been the subject of intense wonder in the rest of the world—and with reason." (We suspect that had Mr. Merriam recalled what Jesus said of houses built on sand, he would have used a different illustration to explain the failures of ACIR in 1974).

Harlan Cleveland, former U.S. Ambassador to NATO, CFR member, and presently director of Aspen Institute's Program in International Affairs, was more direct in his explanation: "We Took Our Eye Off the Ball."

In case any reader is unfamiliar with ACIR, here is Chairman Merriam's description of it: "ACIR is a national bipartisan body established by Congress in 1959 to study points of intergovernmental conflict and tension and to make recommendations for easing them and thereby improving the system. Because of its unique stature as a permanent commission, ACIR is able to follow-up on its recommendations, encouraging and assisting the legislative and executive branches of Federal, state and local governments to implement them. The work of the Commission flows in three stages: staff research and information gathering at the direction of the Commission; policy making by the Commission; and efforts by both Commission and staff to see that adopted policies are implemented....

"ACIR is the first official 'federal' body created since the Constitutional Convention itself. Lacking the action mandate of that great body, the ACIR nevertheless has over the years forged an important agenda as we move into the third century of this vast American experiment."

This is, of course, no idle boast. ACIR and its cooperating organizations have been able to influence the Federal Executive into dividing this Nation into Ten Federal Regions, and into inducing Congress to accept the validity of the Executive Orders that so divided this Nation.

Now ACIR and its satellites are busily promoting sub-state regions, in placing such regions under the control of the Federal Government through what the Planners call "Federal Mandating."

In a "Legislator's Guide to Substate Districting" which is sent to all State Legislators by ACIR, we learn that "Nearly all the States have adopted a substate planning district system for the purpose of coordinating State, Federal and locally encouraged planning operations....The question no longer is whether there will be systems of regional governance. These structures exist and more are being created every year. The ... ACIR has four objectives for governing at this crucial level:

- to coordinate areawide agencies and reduce their proliferation;
- to develop a framework for responsive decision-making at the areawide level;
- to curb special districts; and
- to establish a short-term environment of cooperation between regional agencies and local governments that still facilitate long-range government modernization and reorganization."

"To this end," the ACIR action agenda continues, "the Commission has developed a three-pronged strategy: umbrella multi-jurisdictional organizations at the multicounty level; modernized counties and reorganized local governments; and systematic assignment of government functions among these levels. This strategy is the product of a far-reaching, two-year ACIR study, Substate Regionalism and the Federal System, published in six volumes."

Translation: Local and County Governments must be "modernized" so that all their activities will be under the control of substate district commissions; these, in turn, will be under the control of areawide, multicounty,

"umbrella multi-jurisdictional organizations;" these, in their turn, will be under the control of the Ten Federal Regional Councils which, again in turn, are under the control of the White House Executive Office.

Thus is formed a bureaucratic dictatorship extending to the community level, managed absolutely and without appeal by a newly invigorated Domestic Council (which in turn, is dominated and controlled by appointed agents of the appointed Vice President, Nelson Rockefeller).

This Bureaucratic Dictatorship called Regional Governance (which is one branch of a Corporate Socialist State that is being built to replace our representative republic) is to be accomplished by ACIR and its cooperating organizations, by means of what the Planners sometimes call "Federal Mandating." A "mandate" is an order from the Central Authority to a subordinate body such as a substate district, which must be followed—or else. Examples of such Federal Mandates: Revenue Sharing, OSHA, PSRO, Flood Insurance, and the hoped-for Federal Land Use Planning.

ACIR issued a paper entitled "Federalism in 1974: The Tension of Interdependence." The following is quoted from a section of that paper. Please read with discernment:

FEDERAL MANDATING

The Congress and the Federal executive took a series of actions in 1974 which showed their continued ability to mandate policies affecting the operations of the states and local governments when they choose to do so....

With the interdependence of the revenue systems of the partners in the federal system, and with the continued substantial Federal assistance provided to the states and local governments, the Federal government has ample means to set guidelines for local programs and practices....

On December 31, 1973, President Nixon signed the Flood Disaster Protection Act of 1973... Effective July 1, 1975, Federal mortgage guarantees and insurance, mortgage loans, and other lending by Federally insured or regulated financial institutions, as well as other forms of Federal assistance for financing the capital costs of construction and equipment, will not be available to businesses and individuals in identified flood hazard areas unless the community has qualified for the Federal Disaster Protection Program by adopting Federally determined land use controls. By this means, and by the use of the threat to withhold both Federal funds and funds of private institutions regulated by the Federal government, the new law provides a strong impetus for flood control planning in several thousand communities nationwide.

(End of quotation)

Now, let's see how this one particular Federal Mandate—the racket called National Flood Insurance—will operate on and after July 1, 1975. We are indebted to Cal Steinger of Fairfax, Oklahoma, who analyzed and published the following:

We are using as our references: (1) the National Flood Insurance Act of 1968, (2) the Flood Disaster Protection Act of 1973, and (3) the National Flood Insurance Manual. In order that we may understand the meaning of these documents, let us first define several terms:

Community means any State or political subdivision thereof, such as its counties and municipalities.

Land Use and Control Measures means zoning ordinances, subdivision regulations, building codes, health regulations and other applications and extensions of the normal police power to provide standards and effective enforcement provisions for the prudent use and occupancy of flood-prone areas.

Flood-Prone Area means any area which might become inundated from a flood which might occur at a frequency of at least once in 100 years.

Structure means any building which is used for residential, business, agricultural, or religious purposes or which is occupied by a private non-profit organization or which is owned by a State or local government or an agency thereof.

With the above definitions in mind, we find that in order for a community to be eligible for flood insurance—and all flood-prone communities have been ordered by the federal government to enter such a program by July 1, 1975—it must adopt the above described land use and control measures for the entire area within its jurisdiction. The Dept. of Housing and Urban Development (HUD), must approve these regulations and when once approved they may not be modified or changed without HUD's permission. The community must also appoint an agency or official with the authority and means to implement (enforce) such regulations. Here is how the scheme works:

First: HUD determines for your community the flood plain elevation of the area.

Second: HUD approves the community's mandatory land use and control measures.

Third: The National Flood Insurance Association (NFIA) moves in via local insurance broker promoters who are "induced" with the promise of receiving a "cut" of at least 15% of the amount of premiums sold—with a minimum guarantee of at least $10 per policy. A separate policy is written for each structure (i.e., blanket coverage by an owner is not permitted). The NFIA—headquartered at 160 Water Street in New York City—"cooperates" with the Federal Insurance Administration (a department of HUD). It is a virtual closed shop for certain elite insurance companies. All premium checks are made payable to the NFIA, and policies written in each State are "assigned" to certain of the elite companies which act as the NFIA Servicing Agent.

Fourth: The NFIA insurance policy (which is subsidized by the federal government) is a nationwide standardized policy with the premium varying according to the number of feet difference in elevation between the structure's first floor and the 100-year flood plain elevation—and whether it is "above" or "below" such elevation, and whether or not there is a basement involved. The premium is a minimum of $25, is for a one-year term, and is payable in advance. It has a mandatory $200 (or 2% of the amount of the loss to the building, whichever is greater) standard deduction clause.

And finally the catch: HUD then informs the community and all owners of structures within the flood plain area that all existing non-conforming uses shall not be expanded, and they are "advised" that such flood plain areas should be reserved for "open space purposes." And, that all new construction or substantial improvements of residential structures shall have the lowest floor (including basement) elevated to or above the level of the 100-year flood—with attendant utility and sanitary facilities to be flood-proofed up to such a level. The community is also informed that it must conform to all pollution control edicts of the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) to prevent pollution from spilling into the flood plain area.

By this time the community (including the entire State and all counties) has learned to its dismay that its entire incorporated area has been coerced into adopting restrictive zoning, standardized building and housing codes, subdivision regulations, health regulations, etc. which its citizens do not want, and they have lost all control over the implementation of such laws. Also, property owners are forced to buy the flood insurance under the threat of the community losing all federal grants-in-aid. In fact, we are now learning that banks, savings and loan companies, and other federal mortgage lending agencies will not lend the property owners any money without their first buying such flood insurance!

Any idea that a person might entertain as to whether or not the federal government will control the property being insured, is quickly dispelled upon reading the policy's fine print. It blatantly states that: "Any terms of the policy which are in conflict with the statutes of the State are hereby amended to conform to such (present or future) statutes, except that in cases of conflict with applicable Federal law or regulation, such Federal law or regulation shall control the terms of this policy."

(End of explanation of the Federal Flood Insurance racket).

The foregoing explains how land control has been attained by Federal Mandate, but it applies only to areas where the flood plain description can be utilized, to "several thousand communities nationwide," says an ACIR report. What ACIR wants is total control of the use of all land within the fifty United States. And still to be desired, therefore, is a federal land use planning bill of the type introduced—but defeated—in the 93rd Congress. Here is ACIR's official report on this development:

FEDERAL LAND USE PLANNING BILL

...The Congress... considered the proposed Land Use Planning Act in 1974. The bill was the product of a hard fought compromise between those who sought strong sanctions against states which did not set up land use planning programs and those who saw land use planning as a threat to private property. In its final form, the bill would have authorized $100-million a year for eight years for states to establish and implement land use planning. The bill, which encouraged and provided a framework for state land use... was killed by the House when it sent the conference report back to committee on June 11, 1974. But Congress did pass and the President signed a rejuvenated Planning Assistance Act under which the Department of Housing and Urban Development will continue their assistance to state, regional, and local planning efforts only if the planning covers land use. (Italics added).

(End of quotation from ACIR Report)

In addition to flood insurance and the HUD assistance regulations, there is one other type of Federal Mandate which can be used to attain Federal control of land use in the States and communities of the Nation; this is by the application of certain land control regulations that were enacted by Executive Order in 1974 by the Environmental Protection Agency (ERA). These regulations were to have become effective on January 1, 1975 but for some reason or reasons not publicly announced (to our knowledge), enforcement of these regulations was delayed until further notice. It is this reporter's belief that enforcement was postponed because such action might jeopardize the passage of a new Federal Land Use Planning Act in this first session of the 94th Congress. ACIR does not like to depend on Executive Orders when there is a possibility of obtaining the same power through legislative action. For example, ACIR's current major project is the establishment of these substate districts in all States. In ACIR's most recent Substate Districting Analysis, it is noted that 42 of the fifty States have established substate districts as per "advice" of ACIR. However, of those 42 States only 18 have established their sub-regions through legislative action; while the other 23 States have been subdivided by Executive Orders issued by the respective Governors of those States. ACIR knows that State Legislatures can—even as the Federal Legislature can if it ever wakes up—rescind an Executive Order. Thus, says ACIR: "if a substate districting system is to successfully coordinate Federal, State, and local substate planning operations, it should have the following characteristics: * First, it must be securely created in law rather than executive order." (Italics added for emphasis).

When the Ten Federal Regions were created by Executive Order, the authority for doing so was provided by Public Law 90-577; so there was a law to back up this Executive Order. This would hardly be the case with an Executive Order issued by EPA Chairman Russell Train, and ACIR wants its land control power "securely created in law."

And so; on Feb. 20, 1975, a new Federal Land Use Control Bill—H. R. 3510—was introduced in the House of Representatives. It is similar to last year's bill and must also be defeated if property rights are to be retained!

More on this subject in future letters...

DON BELL REPORTS Weekly. $24 per year.
Extra copies: 10¢ each. Address all orders:
DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

THE INVISIBLE GOVERNMENT REVISITED

A CHANGE IN STRATEGY?

As the American people are confronted with one political scandal after another, with crime increasing at what seems to be an uncontrollable rate, with new crises crowding existing crises off the front pages, with rising unemployment and soaring prices, and with recession and inflation forming the two horns of an economic dilemma, everything seems to be a mass of seething confusion. Nothing seems to make sense, and people who never really worried about such things before are asking, "What is happening to us; where are we headed?"

For those who will believe, the answer is as simple as it is agonizing: All that is happening to us as a Nation and a people was planned to happen to us, and we are headed toward a completely new form of government and a New World Order. The problems we face today were deliberately created; tailor-made in order to produce a state of chaos which will induce the people to demand the setting-up of a pre-planned dictatorship as the only solution short of total anarchy.

Most of us who have attempted to study the course and chart the steps leading to the final cataclysm, would probably have agreed that the climax would not come until after the "falling away" of yet another President. We expected that Gerald Ford would resign or otherwise "disappear," leaving the supreme rulership in the hands of Nelson Aldrich Rockefeller who, together with his Brothers, his in-laws and his associates in the Council on Foreign Relations, would then proceed to establish an oligarchic dictatorship—at the request of the people.

But there may have been a change in the plans. It may be that the two appointed Executives will remain at their posts, but that their positions will be changed. That is, Ford will remain as Domestic Administrator, while Rockefeller will become International Administrator.

An explanation is in order:

The Rockefellers have two change agents who are perhaps equal in importance: Henry Kissinger who is an Ambassador-at-Large to all the world representing both the United States and the Rockefeller Empire; and the lesser known but equally powerful Zbigniew Brzezinski who is director of the Research Institute on International Change at Columbia University, and director of the Trilateral Commission, a supranational organization similar to the Bilderbergers but limited in membership to invited individuals of European, Japanese, and American citizenship, which was founded and financed, and is managed by David Rockefeller. Even as Henry Kissinger was made Secretary of State by the Rockefellers, so also was this man with the unpronounceable name made director of the Trilateral Commission by the Rockefellers. And Brzezinski, even as Kissinger, speaks for the Rockefellers when he speaks, or writes.

Brzezinski's latest policy directions for the Establishment's army of followers appeared in the March 3, 1975 issue of the New York Magazine, under the provoking title: "Unmanifest Destiny: Where Do We Go From Here?" He answers the question with this summary:

"Finally, it seems to me that we have to recognize that the world that is emerging today is made up of independent nations seeking more equity, and this is, in fact, the world that we have long desired. Its appearance is bound to produce frictions with the richer and more established nations. That is a reality which we cannot avoid. Therefore, rather than turning our backs on it, we should become more involved in getting that new world engaged in shaping a global community. This means our speaking at the United Nations with greater moral authority. This means upgrading the level of our representation at the United Nations, not lowering it. We should participate actively in the discussion of reforms, especially in the new economic world order. We should take the lead in reapportioning voting rights for the new influential members of the global community in the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank. We should even consider creating machinery for global planning and arrangements for long-term system principles. However, Ford's executive order in removing top career jobs from Civil Service in regional offices has raised concern anew over the future of the merit system. Henderson and his colleagues seek to determine whether legislation is necessary to give stronger protection to the merit system. (End of article).

(continued on page 3)

Typically, Congressman Henderson and his colleagues have their eyes on the lesser of the evils: instead of worrying about legislation to protect the merit system, they should be seeking ways to prevent "legislation by executive order," and they should be seeking to prevent the growth in power of the Regional Governance System. Whether the Regional Administrator is a political appointee or a career bureaucrat is of minor importance when compared with the fact that he is a Regional Dictator in either case. However, that's another story....

It does seem probable that, in line with his act of "taking charge," the President is engaged in a slow, silent but sure program of weakening the hold of "entrenched bureaucrats" on key departments and agencies and replacing career men with political appointees who are loyal to the policies and proposals of Rockefeller and the New World Order. Also under fire are the CIA, FBI, IRS, Internal Security Committees of the Congress, etc. While commendable in some respects the real reason for the attacks is to reshape these security agencies and to make sure of their loyalty to the New World Order which is being installed.

This became apparent to your editor when the CFR-controlled Newsweek permitted the publication in its issue of March 17, 1975, of an article titled "The Invisible Government," written by William S. Banowsky, who is president of Pepperdine University, the Republican National Committeeman for California, and rated as a staunch conservative. Had there not been an ulterior motive, we are convinced that the publisher of Newsweek would never have permitted the publication of such an article. Excerpts follow:

For years we have heard warnings... about the evils of big government. Now these warnings have been given a new credibility. Millions of Americans, growing uneasy about this awesome concentration of power that controls much of our lives, see it as a threat to our civil liberties....

Self-righteous politicians can condemn the FBI, CIA, IRS and other departments, bureaus, agencies or commissions... But so long as we deal merely with the effects rather than the cause we miss the real danger.

The 3 million civilian employees of the federal government work in numerous agencies which form a kind of invisible government. ... Insulated from public scrutiny, these unelected and, for the most part, unappointed civil servants are nameless and faceless. The majority simply carry out orders. Somewhere between them and the American people they serve, the line of accountability has been blurred. ... In the total American work force, one out of six civilian employees is now on a government payroll.

But it's not the size nor even the cost, but the power of the entrenched bureaucracy that is most alarming. ... HEW occupies 57 buildings in Washington. If power is where the money is, we should take notice that HEW's proposed 1976 budget is $118 billion, one-third of the total federal budget. ... Similar power is at HUD, OMB, EPA, SEC, FCC, FTC, ICC. One could go on and on. The initials are forbidding acronyms for anonymity. ... the machinery of government remains in the hands of anonymous bureaucrats protected by Civil Service so that neither their positions nor their actions are subject to the electoral process. The whole system remains ripe for future abuse. (Unquote).

Right on. But think for a moment: The whole Administration, from the President and Vice President on down through the 3 million employees, none of their positions or actions have been subject to the electoral process. That there will even be another Presidential election is moot.

Crises are created so that preplanned solutions can be effectuated; and a part of the planning includes the reshaping of the CIA, FBI, other agencies as well as effective control over Congress! As Rep. McDonald observed (p. 2), many of the new initiates in the CFR are Members of Congress. Of the 17 "heavyweights" in the Senate, 15 are members of the CFR now. There are 175 CFR members in the Executive branch, and more are being moved in as Ford "takes charge" and rules America so that the Rockefellers and their associates may rule the world.

How few realize that we have, in 200 years, deteriorated from a Republic to an Oligarchy.

DON BELL REPORTS Weekly. For information concerning this Newsletter, write to:
DON BELL REPORTS, P.O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

FEDERAL SUPERSESSION: ANOTHER ROAD TO DICTATORSHIP

HOW BIG GOVERNMENT CAN BECOME ORGANIZED CRIME

In the Constitutional Convention of 1789, one of the major issues to be debated had to do with the size of the federal government that the States were about to create and empower. The faction known as the "Federalists" argued for a strong central authority, while the "Anti-Federalists" insisted that the power should be diffused and that the future federal government should be granted only a limited list of powers which should be specified and enumerated in the Constitution. The "Anti-Federalists" won—at the Convention—but the States were not yet satisfied. They feared strong central government and only after it was promised that a Bill of Rights (the first ten amendments) would be added, would a majority of the States ratify the Constitution. Because of this situation Virginia was the last to ratify (George Mason and Patrick Henry did their best to prevent it), and North Carolina and Rhode Island refused to ratify.

Even with the Bill of Rights added to the Constitution a majority of the States were apprehensive of the powers granted to the federal government; they had just freed themselves from a strong central authority. But never in their wildest imaginings would those early Americans have believed that their complaints and grievances against the London government would pale into insignificance when compared to the oppressive abuses that future generations of Americans would suffer at the hands of a Washington government.

We don't know who wrote the following; it appeared on the front page of the Armed Citizen News of March, 1975 (the official publication of the National Association to Keep and Bear Arms), but it fits our thesis, and we quote:

"There is no nation on earth which offers its citizens as much opportunity as we Americans enjoy. Even the so-called 'poor' in America live better than the average middle-class of any other country in the world.

"A few people have said that our paper does nothing but complain about our government, and never says anything good about America. But this is saying two different things. America is not our government.

America is anything and everything from the East Coast to the West Coast, including our people, their homes, farms, businesses and factories and even more than that, America is an idea, the great idea of freedom. Our people are free to work, to play, to worship as they see fit, as long as they do not, infringe on the rights of others (at least, that is the way it's supposed to be).

"Our government is something else again: government represents the police power. Our forefathers gave the U.S. Government certain powers, limited mainly to defense of our Nation and of its people. They put definite limitations on this power, as shown by the Ninth Amendment, which reads: 'The enumeration in the Constitution of certain rights shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people.' The Tenth Amendment is even clearer and more definite about the limitation of power of the U.S. Government. It reads: 'The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively or to the people.'

"We find today that the people who control our Nation are not content with the limited powers given them by the U.S. Constitution. The three branches of government are constantly passing illegal laws, issuing unconstitutional Executive Orders and making unlawful court decisions; and every time they do it, we lose some more of our freedom.

"Again we say that there is no nation on earth which offers its citizens as much opportunity as we enjoy in America, but we are rapidly losing our freedoms, and we will be foolish if we sit back and do nothing just because we are still better off than any other people. It is our responsibility to pass freedom on to our children and our grandchildren. . . ." (Quoted from Armed Citizen News, Box 1030, Red Bluff, CA 96080).

The chief objective of the author or authors of the preceding article is to retain the freedom supposedly safeguarded by the Second Amendment to the Constitution, which reads, in part "...the right of the people to keep and bear arms shall not be infringed." This is one of the basic rights of citizenship which has been infringed by the application of Federal Supersession, a tactic which is seldom mentioned by politicians or the controlled media, and one which we shall try to explain in this letter.

First, a definition; Federal Supersession is any act of the Federal Government which disregards Constitutional limitations and overrides, or supersedes, State or local laws.

We might say that it all began when the Supreme Court established the legal point that whenever Federal and State laws conflict, the Federal law is supreme and the State laws and local ordinances must give way. Of course, it should be recalled that this Nation fought a long, costly and bloody Civil War over one facet of this issue. The "Federalists," by this time renamed the "Republicans," won that war and what was originally referred to as States Rights died with the Southern Confederacy.

However, this nullified none of the rights which the Constitution declared to be "reserved to the States respectively or to the people." It is true that whenever Federal and State laws conflict, Federal laws must supersede. But there are areas where there should be no conflict because there should be no Federal law in the first place! When the Federal Government invades those areas where jurisdiction is reserved to the States or the people (local government), the Federal Government is acting in a criminal manner and in violation of the Law of the Land which is defined by the Constitution.

Nevertheless, the Congress passes laws, the Administration issues Executive Orders and the Federal Judiciary renders rulings in areas in which no branch of the Federal Government has any right to intervene since these are areas left specifically to the States or to the people (local governments).

This is what we are talking about when we refer to unlawful Federal Supersession. And we can cite about fifty such cases of Federal Supersession, and we shall later in this letter. But, first, let us categorize the types of Federal encroachment, and in this we are aided by James B. Croy, a Research Associate with the Oklahoma Legislative Council, who published an article dealing with Federal Supersession, which appeared in the current issue of State Government, a publication of the 1313 Satellite, the Council of State Governments. We might add that Mr. Croy believes these federal supersessions to be Constitutional. In this we disagree with the author absolutely and completely. Further, we are convinced that the article would never have been accepted for publication by a 1313 Satellite if Mr. Croy had come to any other conclusion as to the Constitutionality of the Acts he describes.

Nonetheless, Mr. Croy is very much "on the ball" when he outlines five different types of Federal Supersession.

The first type he calls "Overt Supersession" because the language which characterizes it is clearly stated in the legislation or the executive order or the court ukase. It goes like this: "the provisions of this act shall supersede any and all laws of the States" and their political subdivisions. Mr. Croy cites as examples of this type of federal supersession the Civil Rights Act of 1964, the Fair Packaging and Labelling Act, the Uniform Time Act of 1966 with its offensive "spring forward, fall back" conundrum that is forced upon us twice a year, and the Noise Control Act of 1972 that declares all State and local noise control efforts to be null and void, and that only the Federal Noise Suppression Act is to be honored and obeyed.

The second type of federal supersession is called the "unless-surprise" type. "Basically, this category begins by stating that it is not the intent of Congress to supersede state authority," writes Mr. Croy, "unless state law disagrees with the provisions of the federal act, in which case—surprise—the State must give way. For instance:

"No provision of this chapter shall be construed as indicating an intent on the part of the Congress to occupy the field in which such provision operates to the exclusion of the law of any State on the same subject matter, unless there is a direct and positive conflict between such provision and the law of the State so that the two cannot stand together."

"While this example is from the Gun Control Act of 1968...this 'If we agree, then we are both right; but if we disagree, then I alone am right' logic is used by the Federal government in approximately one third of the acts surveyed and found to be supersessive."

The third, the "enforced compliance" type of supersession is more involved, and is found in much of the environmental legislation and regulations. It follows the "If-then, if-then" pattern. That is, if a State does not issue regulations acceptable to the federal agency, then the federal agency will do so, and if the State does not adopt and enforce these federal regulations, then the federal agency will assume jurisdiction and take over, leaving the State government with no power in that area.

Sen. Jake Garn of Utah cites an example of this type of supersession which occurred when he was Mayor of Salt Lake City: "Under authority of Federal air quality legislation, the Environmental Protection Agency threatened me as Mayor of Salt Lake City, and the Governor of the State of Utah with jail and a fine if we did not produce air quality plans acceptable to the bureaucrats in Washington."

The fourth type of federal supersession is one that prohibits a State from acting where the Federal Government has already acted. The Federal Cigarette Labelling and Advertising Act provides an example. The Act reads: "No statement relating to smoking and health other than the statement required by section 4 of this Act shall be required on any cigarette package." A similar act prohibits any State from putting any warning regarding hazards to health on pesticide cans and containers. Despite the widely varying use patterns of pesticides for different crops in different parts of the country with differing weather conditions, the State and local governments must keep "hands off" and let Washington and Regional agents assume all control over the warning system in regard to these types of poison.

The fifth and last type of federal supersession has to do with cases where the Federal Government—through the Federal Regional Commissions and agents—takes over and does the work that is supposed to be done by—and previously was done by—State or local officials. In his article, from which we have quoted freely in this letter, Mr. Croy cites as an example, the Food and Agriculture Act of 1965, under which the Secretary of Agriculture is given authority to determine the apportionment of wheat acreage allotments among the counties of various States where wheat is grown "as opposed to allowing the States to make this determination." The 1965 amendments to the Federal Coal Mine Safety Act are also cited, "in which State agencies are directed to require State personnel to carry out certain actions." Such persons are on the State payroll, but the federal bureaucrats tell them what to do, and what they must not do.

"Supersession," writes Mr. Croy, "is not the only means whereby federal control is exercised over the State legislative and executive process. Far more prevalent is grant-in-aid and voluntary compliance legislation" and revenue sharing. In these cases the federal agency sets certain regulations and standards which must be accepted and enforced and/or obeyed if the State or local government is to receive federal assistance. the federal bureaucrats make the rules and regulations, and there is no direct pressure: the State or local government "volunteers" to comply, or "volunteers" not to accept federal aid.

Following is Mr. Croy's breakdown, by category, of the "supersessive legislation" which he studied. He admits that his list is far from complete, though it contains 48 specific legislative acts (but no Executive Orders, which are not included in his list):

* * * * *

BREAKDOWN, BY CATEGORIES, OF SUPERSESSIVE LEGISLATION

Health and Safety (18 Acts—37.5 percent):

Drug Abuse Control Amendments of 1965.
Federal Cigarette Labelling and Advertising Act.
Federal Coal Mine Safety Act Amendments of 1965.
National Traffic and Motor Vehicle Safety Act of 1966.
Highway Safety Act of 1966.
Federal Metal and Nonmetallic Mine Safety Act.
Child Protection Act of 1966.
Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968.
Natural Gas Pipeline Safety Act of 1968.
Radiation Control for Health Safety Act of 1968.

Gun Control Act of 1969.

Federal Coal Mine Health and Safety Act of 1969.
Public Health Cigarette Smoking Act of 1969.
Federal Railroad Safety Act of 1970.
Occupational Safety and Health Act of 1970.
Federal Boat Safety Act of 1971.
Lead Based Paint Poisoning Act of 1973.
Health Maintenance Organization Act of 1973.

Environmental Protection and Conservation 9 Acts—18.7 percent):

Water Quality Act of 1965.
Highway Beautification Act of 1965.
Clean Air Act.
Clean Air Act Amendments of 1970.
Federal Environmental Pesticide Control Act of 1972.
Noise Control Act of 1972.

Federal Water Pollution Control Act Amendments of 1972.

Marine Mammal Protection Act of 1972.

Marine Protection Research and Sanctuary Act of 1972.

Consumer Protection (7 Acts—14.6 percent):

Fair Packaging and Labelling Act.

Flammable Fabrics Act, Amendment.

Wholesome Meat Act.

Consumer Credit Protection Act.

Poison Prevention Packaging Act of 1970.

Motor Vehicle Information and Cost Savings Act.

Consumer Product Safety Act.

Agricultural Standards (3 Acts—6.2 percent):

Food and Agriculture Act of 1965.

United States Grain Standards Act.

Egg Products Inspection Act.

Civil Rights (3 Acts—6.2 percent):

Civil Rights Act of 1964.

Voting Rights Act of 1965.

Voting Rights Act Amendments of 1970.

Miscellaneous (8 Acts—16.6 percent):

Atomic Energy Act of 1954, Amendment.

Uniform Time Act of 1966.

Employment Security Amendments of 1970.

Federal Deposit Insurance Act, Amendment.

Horse Protection Act of 1970.

Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971.

Emergency Petroleum Allocation Act of 1973.

Emergency Highway Energy Conservation Act.

In this letter we have quoted Senator Jake Garn of Utah, a Republican newcomer to Washington who recalled the difficulty he experienced when an EPA agent tried to have him locked up and fined, along with the Governor of the State, because the Governor of Utah and the Mayor of Salt Lake City refused to obey the directives of the EPA. In a statement which appeared in the March 22, 1975 Congressional Record, Sen. Garn remarked, in part:

"If I have sounded a recurring theme since I came to the U.S. Senate, it is that local government officials are frustrated by the lack of comprehension by the Federal Government of the problems actually facing local government. ... Federal legislators and bureaucrats... are inexperienced in local government and so far removed physically from the problems they seek to solve that they cannot help but produce results which are worse than the original problems. ...

"As Federal legislators, we must be aware, not only of the fact that local mayors, city councillors, county commissioners, aldermen, Governors, and just plain people, are (usually) men of good will, but of the fact that they are (usually) extraordinarily competent people. I am not saying that they could come here to Washington and run the Department of HEW, but they do not have to do that. What they can do is run their local schools and health centers, and they can do that a whole lot better than HEW can, and better than they can do it with HEW looking over their shoulders. What someone needs to do is to make the point that the Apostle Paul made in a slightly different context:

All things are lawful unto me but all things are not expedient.

"Court decisions have pretty well established that the Federal Government can do pretty much anything it wants to, under cover of the commerce clause of the Constitution, or the taxing power, or something. But we need to begin to realize that Federal solutions are not always the best ones; that sometimes variance among the States is desirable, indeed essential, if restrictive regulations and guidelines are to be avoided (that is to say, if bureaucratic dictatorship is to be avoided—Ed.)"

Senator Garn calls to mind an aphorism that is making the rounds among conservatives: "When Government tries to solve a problem, the solution becomes the problem."

In the final analysis, federal supersession is but a new way of saying federal invasion of States' rights, but the invasion is so subtle and so seemingly beneficial that both State and local officials are rushing eagerly to destroy their own jobs and their positions as government officials. Of course, supersession is only one of several ways that the States, Counties and Community governments are being weakened, and eventually will be liquidated in favor of the New Federalism which envisages Regional Governance as part of a system of World Management.

Each of the 48 examples of supersessive legislation which we have listed in this letter, is but another link in the chain of control by the Federal Government, through the Ten Federal Regional Commissions and at the local level by the subregional commissioners who will replace your elected officials.

It is indeed frustrating to know that elected officials are begging bureaucrats to supply the rope with which they are to be hanged.

For information concerning this letter write:
DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

THE NEW WORLD ORDER - THROUGH THE TRIPLE CRISIS

THE CAREFULLY PREPARED "AGONIZING REAPPRAISAL"

In the welter of events and the turmoil of upheaval throughout the world as well as here at home in the United States, it is easy to lose sight of what is really happening—and of what is being prepared to happen.

In the recent past we have been provided with a multitude of clues, but it has been difficult to relate them and fit them into the proper niche in the overall conspiracy; and this is doubly difficult when we are told repeatedly that there is no conspiracy—just things that happen without rhyme or reason.

Here at home there was Watergate, an utterly stupid attempt at petty burglary that led to the near destruction of the American Federal Government structure and a wholesale fall of the mighty, so that confidence in the "American System" was shaken cataclysmically both at home and abroad.

Then came the alleged "energy crisis." The economists of the First National City Bank wrote this summary in Citibank's publication Economic Week of Jan. 13, 1975: "By late 1973, economic activity in most advanced countries of the world was slowing down, and the sharp increases in oil prices speeded the descent into a synchronized recession. With high oil prices adding to already strong inflationary pressures, the erosion of the purchasing power of money quickened and the consequence was a drop in the volume of real spending by households and businesses. Share prices slumped in New York and London and banks came under suspicion. And to those infatuated with the past, it looked like an encore of the 1930s."

Note that Citibank says nothing of any real oil shortage, but speaks of increases in oil prices. As a matter of fact, while we were lining up at service stations hoping to be able to buy a little gasoline at any price, petroleum products were actually being exported to other countries, and we know now that there never was any real shortage of oil or gas at the time. A note of confirmation is supplied by this same issue of Citibank's publication. Under the heading Energy

Watch, there is this article:

"PETROLEUM EXPORT QUOTAS:

"The Commerce Department said U.S. export quotas for petroleum products other than crude oils will be 9.1 million barrels for the first three months of 1975, or 100,917 barrels per day. The major categories for first-quarter export quotas are residual fuel oil, 34,545 barrels per day; propane/butane, 34,910 barrels per day; and carbon-black feedstock, 18,889 barrels per day. . . . In the fourth quarter of 1974, export quotas for petroleum products were 9.3 million barrels, or 101,500 barrels per day."

In other words: no serious decrease in oil supplies, but a very sharp increase in oil prices. Ask yourself: Does this not smack of the deliberate and premeditated creation of a crisis, and for some ulterior purpose?

Now, add this piece to the global jig-saw puzzle: Shortly after the completion of that multi-billion-dollar Mekong Delta Project by a consortium of multinationalists who were aided and abetted by the Communist Peoples Republic of China; and after the multinationalist's land and off-shore explorations for oil had been concluded; then—and only then—did Henry Kissinger contract to withdraw American military personnel from Vietnam, leaving behind billions of dollars worth of the very latest in arms and equipment, and the world's third largest air force, complete with American mechanics and technicians to keep it in order until the Red Viet Cong forces could come in and take it over! Even the controlled news media admit that South Vietnamese troops are withdrawing in near panic, leaving behind in perfect condition guns, tanks, airplanes, helicopters, ammunition, and other armaments and equipment.

What a way to arm the Mao-controlled Communists and bring Red China up to a state of military equality with Soviet Russia and the United States; this being the aim of Kissinger's Triangular Constellation Concept of a New Order Power Balance—and all this at the expense of the American taxpayer, plus the blood of the millions of innocents who were but pawns in the game!

Meanwhile, on the opposite side of the Asian Continent, equally portentous moves were being made. There the oil-producing nations were discovering that where paper dollars were losing their purchasing power, petro-dollars—which were backed at least indirectly by oil—had become far more potent in world marts than either Eurodollars or SDRs—neither of which were backed by much more than confidence in promises, and certainly not backed by gold. Came the report that Saudi Arabia was buying out Aramco, the mammoth cartel that had been formed by Texaco, Mobil, Exxon and Standard Oil of California. The Oil Producing and Exporting Countries had formed their own consortium and were beginning to make the previously untouchable International Bankers tremble in their vaults. A war in the Middle East seemed the inevitable solution. In this way Israel could be saved, and the Western-based Multinationals could regain their oil-drawing-rights, by force. But the Arabs proved to be more astute and adamant than expected. More astute in that the oil wells had been mined and could be destroyed at the first sign of invasion from any direction. And more adamant in that they were determined to keep control of their oil fields or leave no oil fields for anyone to control.

So, Kissinger was delegated to set up yet another international agency: An Energy Consortium of Nations which could meet the OPEC forces in conference rooms rather than on battlefields.

Then came the incident which reminds one of the manner in which World War I was ignited: King Faisal of Saudi Arabia was assassinated. Like so many of the recent assassinations which have remained unsolved mysteries as to motive and aim—John Kennedy, Robert Kennedy, Martin Luther King, the less successful attempt on George Wallace, and a number of similar assassinations in other countries of the world—we may never know whether the killing of King Faisal was a part in The Conspiracy performed by a hashish-controlled dupe after the manner of the Ancient Order of the Assassins (or the modern Mafia); or merely the act of a madman relative who couldn't adjust to his position in a feudal society after receiving a liberal education at Denver University.

But the result is much the same in either case. This was not merely a king who was assassinated. Because of the oil price increases, King Faisal had become one of the wealthiest men in the world, for whatever power and prestige pelf may produce. More importantly, he was the spiritual head of the world's third largest religion (there are over half a billion people of the Islamic faith, according to the 1974 Encyclopedia Britannica Book of the Year). And perhaps even more important than his financial and religious positions of leadership, he was a friend of the United States despite our extreme favoritism toward that "51st State that is called Israel." King Faisal was the balance of power in the Middle East. He could cause wars to be started, or never begun, or stopped. And now, he is gone, and there is none of such stature to take his place. It is significant, too, that none other than "Mr. Oilbucks" himself, Nelson Rockefeller, flew to the funeral to represent both the United States and the American-based Multinational interests that are deeply concerned with what happens in the Middle East tomorrow, and tomorrow, and tomorrow.

With Faisal gone, war in the Middle East may come sooner than Kissinger and the present Israeli head of State desires. About five months ago, when another outbreak was narrowly averted, a London correspondent dispatched an article which read in part:

"There have been riots in the working class neighborhoods of Tel Aviv, with attacks against shop windows, banks, public administration centers and against the police. The cost of living has jumped by almost 50 percent.... Israel is dedicating $2 billion to its military budget.... Until now 87 percent of the wages and salaries were retained at the source by the government in the guise of taxes and compulsory purchase of bonds. ...It is a virtual collapse of the Israeli economy."

In the past five months Israeli's chief supporter, Uncle Sam, has been in financial and economic difficulties and has been unable to maintain Israelis in the manner to which they had become accustomed. And it now is reckoned by the "experts" that Israel is in a position where it must go to war to save itself (or go to war so that the United States will be forced to save it).

Meanwhile, here in the United States, the situation was summed up by the U.S. News & World Report, April 7, 1975, in a special article headed: "Why U.S. is Losing in the World." The article began:

"Americans, looking beyond their borders, see almost everywhere turmoil and upheaval, setbacks to vital U.S. interests, an uneasy stirring among allies."

Kissinger's failures in the Middle East, the awful setbacks in Vietnam and Cambodia, and then came reactions: "Thailand ordered the withdrawal of all American servicemen within a year. President Ferdinand Marcos of the Philippines began re-evaluating his government's relations with the U.S.—including the desirability of American bases on his soil."

"In other areas, too," the article continued, "difficulties for the U.S. piled up. Portugal lurched toward a left-wing dictatorship dominated by Communists. American bases in Southern Europe were threatened by the bitter quarrel between Turkey and Greece over Cyprus. There was even talk in Western European capitals that Greece, Turkey and Portugal are no longer strong, reliable NATO partners—and that defense of Southern Europe, in view of Italy's economic and political weakness, is becoming too difficult, too expensive. Britain's cut of 8 per cent in military spending in 1975-76, accompanied by a planned pullback from its air and naval bases on Malta and Cyprus in the Mediterranean, adds to the insecurity of a region where the Russians are already strong. . . . Such was the dismal backdrop for the reappraisal set in motion in Washington. . . ."

On Thursday, April 3, 1975, President Ford interrupted a vacation to enter a San Diego television studio and tell the world that he did not expect the fall of the Saigon government and that America would remain the guardian of world peace. After the broadcast he told a select group of business and civic leaders:

"I must say with all the certainty of which I am capable: no adversaries or potential enemies of the United States should imagine that America can be safely challenged; and no allies or time-tested friends of the United States should worry or fear that our commitments to them will not be honored because of the current confusion and changing situation in Southeast Asia. We stand ready to defend ourselves and support our allies as surely as we always have."

But action was speaking much louder than words, and Ford's attempts at reassurance were very similar to those of a fireman trying to comfort a man who is watching his house burn down and doesn't know the whereabouts of his wife and children.

Besides, there is every indication that the "agonizing reappraisal" had already been made, months earlier, by the Invisible Government which is bringing in the New World Order. The "reappraisal" of America's role in foreign affairs in the future was spelled out quite clearly in the October, 1974, issue of Foreign Affairs, the official publication of the Council on Foreign Relations. In this issue there are three articles which point out in as many different ways, that the New Order is to be managed by the Multinational Corporations, and that traditional political sovereignties are being rendered obsolete.

C. Fred Bergsten is a senior fellow at the policy development center known as Brookings Institution in Washington. Bergsten's article is titled "Coming Investment Wars?" and in it he discusses the "home country," the "multinational firm" and the "host country." In most cases the "home country" is the United States, while the "host country" is the foreign country in which the American-based multinational sets up a factory or industrial plant. Here is perhaps the most important paragraph in Bergsten's article:

"With the onset of detente, host countries large and small no longer fear to cross the United States by challenging U.S.-based firms and the international economic environment which helped them flourish in the 1950s and 1960s. Multinational firms based in the United States, recognizing these basic changes and with their own international exposure greatly increased by virtue of their rapid global expansion, complete the circle by seeking in virtually all cases to accommodate to the new leverage of host countries and by eschewing the backing of the U.S. government."

Translation: Detente made the great change. After its installation as American foreign policy by Henry Kissinger, countries large and small ceased to fear the United States government. As a corollary they also ceased to fear American-based Multinationals. By the same token, American-based Multinationals also ceased to fear their own government; but now they do fear the possible actions of the governments of the countries into which they have moved. To say it yet another way: our government offers Americans doing business abroad no security; and American businessmen doing business abroad offer our government no loyalty. Their loyalty is to the "host country" rather than to the "home country."

The result, in C. Fred Bergsten's words:

"The main impact of these new global trends is on the home countries of the multinational firms. It falls most heavily on the United States, the largest home country by far. If host countries are achieving an increasing share of the benefits brought by multinational firms, someone else is receiving a decreasing share. . . . this 'loser' is seldom the firms themselves; indeed, they may gain more from the incentives than they lose from the requirements....But the United States as the home country, may frequently be on the losing side of the new balance...."

(As we were "on the losing side in the new balance" in Southeast Asia. We lost men, money and prestige. The "host country"—Communist China which is Kissinger's Third Power in the "new balance"—gained much armament and a newly developed area ready for exploitation. The Multinationals gained operational rights and natural resources in the Mekong Delta Project area, along with untapped wealth in oil. Indeed, as Bergsten writes: "the United States, as the home country, may frequently be on the losing side of the new balance." Next loss, the Middle East?)

This New Order is spelled out quite clearly in the Foreign Affairs article written by Peter F. Drucker, a professor of social science at Claremont Graduate School. In his article, "Multinationals and Developing Countries: Myths and Realities," Drucker makes this statement:

"The multinational, while the most important and most visible innovation of the postwar period in the economic field, is primarily a symptom of a much greater change. It is a response to the emergence of a genuine world economy. This world economy is not an agglomeration of national economies as was the 'international economy' of nineteenth-century international trade theory. It is fundamentally autonomous, has its own dynamics, its own demand patterns, its own institutions—and in the Special Drawing Rights (SDRs) even its own money and credit system in embryonic form. For the first time in 400 years—since the end of the sixteenth century when the word 'sovereignty' was first coined—the territorial political unit and the economic unit are no longer congruent."

In plainer English: The multinational, global corporations are directed by a conspiracy which aims at rendering traditional political sovereignties obsolete.

We won't bother with Joseph Nye of Harvard, who wrote the third article in October 1974 Foreign Affairs. He echoes what Bergsten and Drucker wrote, in different words. More important was an address delivered at a meeting of the Council on Foreign Relations early this year by Dr. Zbigniew Brzezinski, who is director of David Rockefeller's Trilateral Commission and, as such, a direct spokesman for the Rockefeller Interests.

We do not have a copy of the speech as delivered at the meeting in New York City. What we do have is an "edited" copy of the "transcription of informal remarks delivered at the Council on Foreign Relations, Jan. 7, 1975." But this edited transcription is sufficient as evidence.

Brzezinski says we face a triple crisis: economic, cultural, and international. After much intellectual gobbledegook, he comes to the point that:

"The primary objective of American foreign policy today and in the years ahead is to help shape a true global community...."

Note that this is the same term used by Henry Kissinger when he refers to the New Order: a global community. Notice, too, that Brzezinski doesn't say our foreign policy ought to be, but that it is to shape a true global community. No ifs, ands, or buts; this is the primary objective of American foreign policy today and in the years ahead.

We must become involved in shaping this new world community and, says Brzezinski:

"This means speaking at the UN with greater moral authority....We should participate more actively in the discussion of reforms, including even the very controversial issue of the new economic world order. We should certainly take the lead in discussing new voting rights in the IMF and the World Bank for the new influentials of the global community. We should even explore the possibility of creating machinery for global indicative planning and of arrangements for long-term transfer of resources....We desperately need...energetic supra-departmental integration of our global policy....The Vice Presidency could become an organ for integration of the major executive departments of the government with regards to global issues...."

In summary: This is the agonizing reappraisal that we should be facing: The United States is growing weaker, militarily and morally, and in the eyes of the world. This is not because of some distant enemy, but it is because the Multinational Corporations grow stronger as the United States grows weaker. This is a deliberate, planned policy both of the government and of the multinationals, since the policy was developed by an intellectual elite that is financed by family clans such as the Rockefellers and the Rothschilds, and that is represented at the visible level by such men as Henry Kissinger and Zbigniew Brzezinski. And now the plan is to place Nelson Rockefeller—who already is our domestic tsar—in charge of all foreign programming; so that our government will contribute toward its own destruction in order that "One World" can become reality.

DON BELL REPORTS Weekly. $24 per year.
Extra copies: 10¢ each. Please address all inquiries, orders and correspondence to:
DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

ON THE DEVELOPMENT OF CORPORATE SOCIALISM

TO DESTROY MIDDLE AMERICA

"Most Americans do not realize that there is no difference whatsoever between international, monopolistic supercapitalism and international communism," said the author of a recent Liberty Letter. Being very explicit, the writer went on to compare the two economic systems:

"Both seek to destroy the middle class. There is no room under either communism or supercapitalism for the free laborer or for the free enterprise small businessman. Economically, communists and supercapitalists aim for monopoly and the elimination of all competition. Socially, both desire a world of two classes only: the very rich (themselves) and the very poor (everyone else).

"Communism is simply a system wherein the bosses have a monopoly on all politics and property, and competition in either does not exist. This is why both the communists and the international supercapitalists seek to destroy the middle class through war, rising taxes, inflation, devastating competition from slave labor communist countries, free trade and taxpayer supported 'philanthropy.'

"Nelson Rockefeller and other members of his family have often commented on the sympathy and empathy they feel for the political Left, the Negroes and the poor. This is not soft-headedness; it is perfectly consistent with their aims. They are not confused; it is the average American who is confused and misled and who misunderstands the real aims of the Rockefellers and their ilk. It is also why our government has been moving in a direction opposite to that which most Americans want for fifty years. What seems like stupidity or treason on the part of politicians is merely what serves the interests of the supercapitalists.

"Until this fact is understood and the real enemies of the American people are recognized, there is no hope whatsoever for the survival of the United States."

(End of Liberty Letter)

To some, the foregoing may seem like the views of an extremist and an alarmist. But, there is a historical record which proves that it was conspiratorial effort, not mere happenstance, that brought us to the mess in which we find ourselves today.

Perhaps one way of "making Americans understand" is to point out that World War I failed of the purposes for which it was initiated; it did not re-unite the United States with the British Empire, and it did not succeed in establishing a World Government. The Annual Report (1973) of the Council on Foreign Relations begins:

"The origins of the Council on Foreign Relations lay in the disappointment of the founders at the conduct of the Versailles Treaty negotiations (in which most of the founders had been participants) and concern at what they regarded as the short-sighted rejection by the United States of membership in the League of Nations. . . ."

So, the CFR was formed, but amounted to little until about 1925, when the Rockefeller interests began financing and directing its activities. Even then, the CFR did little save grow in strength and influence until World War II was "arranged" and it was determined that the United States should be a participant in same. The CFR went into action by gaining permission to plan U.S. post-war policy almost immediately after Pearl Harbor—to insure that there would not be another "disappointment" like that of Versailles and the League of Nations. Col. Arch Roberts, Director of the Committee to Restore the Constitution, Inc., summarized the events in the following statement:

"In a letter to President Franklin D. Roosevelt Dated December 22, 1941, Secretary (of State Cordell) Hull, at the direction of his faceless sponsors recommended the founding of a Presidential Advisory Committee on Post-War Foreign Policy. . . . The purpose of the Committee, said Mr. Hull, would be to prepare for effective participation in the solution of 'vast and complicated problems of international relations which will confront the United States and the world after final defeat of the forces of aggression. It (the Committee) will work in the inseparably interrelated fields of general security, limitation of armaments, sound international economic relationships, and other phases of international cooperation'...."

This Committee was created and staffed by the Council on Foreign Relations and was to become an official part of the Department of State. Thus did the CFR gain control of one vital agency of the Federal Administration. Since that time, this "Invisible Government" has extended its control until there are 175 CFR members in government, according to the CFR's Annual Report for 1974.

But there is another, a corporation phase of this takeover, which has not been exposed until quite recently.

Not often mentioned is the CFR's Corporation Service Program. It is generally known that there are 1500-plus men and a few women who are individual members of the CFR. There are also 36 Committees on Foreign Relations located in cities throughout the country, which look to the parent CFR for guidance and instruction. And there are 163 corporations (mostly multinationals) which are "participants in the (CFR) Corporation Service."

These are the giant corporations that intend to develop monopolistic control over the United States economy, and in order to do so, must become a part of the United States Government, as did the individual members of CFR!

Now, with this thought in mind, please note the following column which appeared in the Sunday, April 6, 1975 issue of all newspapers that subscribe to Jack Anderson's column. Note, too, that the corporations he mentions are a part of the CFR Corporation Service Program:

* * * * *

CORPORATIONS TURN PLAN INTO TROJAN HORSE

By Jack Anderson
United Features Syndicate

A noble project, calling for the business community to swap about 50 executives a year to promote better understanding, has been turned into a Trojan Horse. Some corporations have used the program to plant key executives inside the government in high positions, where they can influence decisions affecting their firms. One interchange executive, for example, allegedly helped draft a ruling worth millions to his company.

With such high stakes, the big corporations have competed to get their executives accepted in the interchange program. Most of the appointments, it now turns out, have gone to big political contributors.

This Trojan Horse project, known formally as the Presidential Executive Interchange Program (PEIP), has institutionalized the shuffle of executives from corporate boardrooms to government conference rooms. It was supposed to be heavily policed, of course, to avoid conflicts of interest. Instead, the program appears to have been manipulated deliberately to create conflicts of interest. The best opportunities to exploit these conflicts, apparently, have gone to the biggest contributors as their political reward.

These are the findings of a House Small Business subcommittee, which has been conducting a quiet investigation. "At the very least," declares the investigators' memo, "the program has been severely mismanaged. Viewed from a less charitable and undoubtedly more realistic viewpoint, (the evidence) strongly suggests that placements made through the program have been politically used to reward companies who support the administration."

The memo contends, indeed, that there is little incentive for the companies to participate in the program except for the "opportunity to influence government policy."

The PEIP, swathed in noble language, was established in 1969 by outgoing President Lyndon Johnson at the insistence of the incoming Nixon administration. Despite the highfalutin' statements, however, the committee investigators suspect the program was used blatantly for political purposes.

Of the 29 companies that participated in PEIP in 1973-74... "28 (employed individuals who) were contributors to the 1972 Nixon campaign, and 24 contributed $10,000 or more," the investigators discovered. They also turned up memos revealing that then PEIP Director Joseph T. McCullen tried to recruit six former interchange executives as Nixon advance men for the 1972 campaign. In late 1971, McCullen met with White House aide Fred Malek to discuss "targeting" particular companies for participation in the program. The same Malek coordinated the White House effort to put all government agencies to work to reelect Nixon.

More important to the public, however, may be the impact these executives have had on government policy. The cost may have been as high as $100 million, for example, for the work of interchange executive Robert Bowen.

On loan from Phillips Petroleum, he was given a policymaking position with the Federal Energy Administration. According to congressional testimony, he was the "key party" in drafting the crude oil allocation rule, which allowed the oil companies to "double dip" and overcharge consumers.

The Bowen case stimulated the House investigation. Rep. John Dingell (D., Mich.) directed his Small Business subcommittee to examine the entire PEIP operation.

The investigation came up with some startling appointments, some of which were made in direct conflict with PEIP's own regulations. Here is a sampling:

* Robert Witter, a timber resource manager for the giant Weyerhaeuser lumber company, was put into the U.S. Forest Service "pursuant to an agreement which had previously been worked out by PEIP, Weyerhaeuser and the Forest Service," says the Dingell memo. Although the timber industry is often at odds with the Forest Service, Witter was put in a sensitive post dealing with programs and legislation.

* The administration was so eager to keep a smooth relationship with General Electric that one of GE's executives, George Tappert, "was officially accepted into (PEIP) five weeks before his nomination form was filled out," says the memo.

* Exxon specifically requested that its man, Wiley Custer, be placed in one of two jobs in the bureaucracy. PEIP regulations officially disallow such selectivity. Nevertheless, "Custer was interviewed only for those two positions and was placed in one of them." He worked on international affairs in the Treasury Department, a highly important area for the oil industry.

* Shell was able to place one of its pesticides experts in the Office of Pesticide Programs at the Environmental Protection Agency, which handles pesticide products made by Shell and others. The oil giant also slotted an energy expert in the office of energy programs at the Commerce Department.

Other examples include an American Airlines executive who landed in the Federal Aviation Administration as a project officer, an IBM expert who was put in a Transportation Department office which had need of IBM-type systems and an Underwriters Laboratory man put into product safety work at the Commerce Department.

Despite all these conflicts, the PEIP file on "conflicts of interest" consisted of only about six sheets of paper dealing with three executives, including Bowen. The subcommittee memo said these "conflict of interest reviews...were initiated only after the June 26, 1973, publication of a Jack Anderson column." Thus, no original initiatives were ever even taken by PEIP to weed out its conflicts.

Since the interchange program was created by executive order, Congress has no oversight responsibility. But now Dingell has planned hearings to determine whether the PEIP should be laid to rest.

Footnote: A spokesman for PEIP told us that the conflict of interest precautions had now been "tightened very substantially," and that the program has new managers. He said that contrary to Dingell's findings, a General Accounting Office probe of PEIP "was very complimentary."

(End of Jack Anderson column)

Columnist Jack Anderson, like most people, interprets conflict of interest as occurring when a top executive of a lumber company is placed in a policymaking position in the U.S. Forestry Service, or when a ranking officer of a giant oil corporation is allowed to make decisions concerning the government's regulation of the buying and selling of petroleum products. Certainly, these are conflicts of interest. But there is a more subtle, and more dangerous, form of conflict of interest, which strikes at the very heart of our system of government and is changing ours from a republic to a fascist state!

By classical definition, politics is "the science of government," and economics is "the science that treats of the production, distribution, and consumption of wealth." So, in the classical sense, when economists replace politicians, you have socialism.

Politicians are supposed to represent their constituents in matters relating to government; whereas corporation executives are supposed to represent their stockholders in matters relating to "the distribution and consumption of wealth" as represented by corporate profit and loss. So, when corporate executives replace politicians in government positions, you have a special kind of oligarchic government known as corporate socialism, or Fascism.

This is the real danger in permitting a Rockefeller to act as Vice President of the United States and assume control of all domestic policy and, through Kissinger, all foreign policy; or allowing executives of the "163 companies (that) are now participants in the Corporation Service" of the Council on Foreign Relations to become participants in a "Presidential Executive Interchange Program" that permits selected corporations to direct the policies of government in certain selected areas.

To paraphrase a once popular quotation: What is good for America may be good for General Motors, and what was good for General Motors may have been good for America; but that was before General Motors became a Multinational Corporation with loyalties to host countries often more important than loyalty to the home country.

AND MONEY CONTROL, TOO

There is one other phase of this corporate control of governmental matters which is equally important, and equally dangerous. The Federal Reserve System is a private corporation which controls the Nation's money supply and also controls the Nation's banks and banking procedures. Bearing this in mind, please note the following which appeared in the financial section of the New York Times of Sunday, April 6, 1975. It is a long article and we can reprint only the most important parts of it:

Burbank, Calif.—Richard DeCarlo did his banking the other day at his supermarket. Mr. DeCarlo...drove to the Hughes market, picked out some groceries and then told the clerk he wanted to withdraw money from a savings and loan association several miles away. A few moments and a few flashing lights later, he had the money to pay his grocery bill, and some spare cash for himself. The medium...was a small counter-top computer terminal about the size of an electric typewriter. It is a symbol of an emerging technological upheaval that is sending tremors through the banking world and promising to alter fundamentally the way Americans handle their money.

Within recent months, 14 commercial banks in nine states, and 117 savings and loan associations in 17 states, have installed such devices or notified Federal authorities that they intend to do so...

Thus...the electronic system threatens to do to the check what the check did to currency—usurp the bulk of bill-paying functions...The positioning of such devices in supermarkets or shopping centers...could reduce the need for branch banks...large banks such as California's Bank of America or New York's First National City Bank, could flood the nation with low-cost electronic terminals and use their huge resources to drain off assets from small banks in the hinterlands.

What is happening now in banking is that a revolution in the transfer of money on the wholesale level is beginning to be felt at the retail level...Significantly, the new systems allow access to bank accounts at a point of sale, thus eliminating the need for a customer to write a check...

On Dec. 12, Controller of the Currency James E. Smith, who heads the Federal agency that regulates national banks, decreed that electronic terminals did not constitute a branch office under banking laws. This meant that national banks did not need to abide by any geographical boundaries in deploying their electronic terminals. It was a ruling that went to the core of the structure of the nation's banking system! Under Mr. Smith's ruling, a New York bank could place a terminal in, say, Sioux City, Iowa, or any other community in the country. A Sioux City resident could use this terminal to add or subtract money from his account in New York or even arrange to have the bank transfer money from his account automatically to pay a local merchant or doctor bill...

Under this interpretation (Mr. Smith's), a handful of large money-center banks could establish electronic branches throughout the United States and siphon money from local chartered financial institutions...

(End of quotation)

What a way for the favored few banking corporations to establish a money monopoly and at the same time gain complete knowledge of and control over every individual checking and savings account in the Nation! Just as in Russia, where IBM and other multinational computer manufacturers are modernizing and improving Police State methods.

To end as we began this Letter: "Most Americans do not realize that there is no difference whatsoever between international, monopolistic supercapitalism and international communism. Both seek to destroy the middle class...Until this fact is understood and the real enemies of the American people are recognized, there is no hope whatsoever for the survival of the United States."

DON BELL REPORTS Weekly, presenting the Christian American point of view. Two copies of each letter (except overseas airmail where postage prohibits) are sent each subscriber. $24 per year. Extra copies: 10¢ each. Please address all correspondence to:
DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

FUTUROLOGY - THE SCIENCE OF THE WORLD-CHANGERS

"THE NEXT 25 YEARS - - - "CRISIS AND OPPORTUNITY"

There is nothing new about the idea of men who think themselves wise getting together to make predictions about the future and then to formulate plans for fashioning the world of tomorrow after the desires of their collective and composite hearts. In ancient Greece such men as these assembled at the foot of Mt. Parnassus to ask the Oracle of Delphi what the future might hold in store for them. It is recorded that Oracle spoke to them through the lips of the current Priestess of Pythia in an unknown tongue, which was translated into verse by a Priest of Apollo. The answers thus given to questions both public and private, though often enigmatic, were said to have been highly revered by the populace and they greatly influenced the future of Greece and Greeks. The idea of trying to fashion the future became a preoccupation of the Encyclopedists and remained much in vogue during the period known as the Enlightenment. In the English-speaking world the idea was revived at the turn of the century by the Fabian Socialists. And now the idea has a name and is called a science. It is titled "Futurology: the science of predicting and trying to fashion a desirable future for the world."

According to an article appearing in the New York Times of September 9, 1973: "Futurology is a world-wide phenomenon. In the United States alone, about 400 independent research groups are doing some form of futures work. About 10,000 predictive publications are in print. Futures institutions are active in France, the Netherlands, England, Germany, Japan and the Soviet Union.

"In Washington, the World Future Society which acts as a clearing house for research, lists about 10,000 members in 45 nations."

To illustrate how this society has grown: 18 months ago it had 10,000 members in 45 nations; today it claims "16,000 members residing in 80 countries." These are the elite of the elite, the creme de la creme of the wise men and women of the world who believe that they have both the wisdom and the right to change our life styles, our society, government, educational methods, art, human values; the wisdom and the right to fashion the future world and all that's in it.

As the New York Times states, there are thousands of these "change groups" in the world, and the clearing house for their research is the World Future Society, which has its international headquarters at 4916 St. Elmo Avenue (Bethesda), Washington, D.C. Organized in 1966, it now holds an annual "General Assembly" at which all the representatives of these futurist groups get together to discuss ways and means of reshaping us and the world in which we live.

As a result of last year's plenary session, the subject of which was "Energy: Today's Choices, Tomorrow's Opportunities," a book was published and offered to the general public for the first time in the group's short history.

Some interesting sidelights about this book that was published last year by the World Future Society: The foreword was written by Gerald R. Ford, then Vice-President of the United States. It contains an epilogue by John W. Gardner of Common Cause, the organization to which Nelson Aldrich Rockefeller and brother David contributed at least $70,000 in return for which "Common Cause took a walk during the Rockefeller Vice Presidential confirmation hearings;" this according to Walter Scott in his weekly feature Personality Parade (3/23/1975).

There are 47 articles in the book. Some of the authors, and the titles of their contributions may prove interesting. Here are a selected few:

Martin Agronsky: Bringing Our Energy Goals Into Focus.

Lester R. Brown: A Global Society; At the Crossroads Again.

Orville L. Freeman: Increasing World Cooperation Through Commerce.

John W. Gardner: Rebirth of a Nation.

Senator Mark O. Hatfield: The Net Energy in All Government Policy.

Senator Hubert Humphrey: World Food Production.

Senator George McGovern: Price Changes and Nutritional Status.

Senator Walter F. Mondale: Let's Establish a Council of Social Advisers.

Glenn Seaborg: The Recycle Society.

The book, with foreword by Gerald Ford and epilogue by John Gardner actually is a compilation of papers submitted in conjunction with The World Future Society's Special Energy Forum held April 24-25, 1974 in Washington, D.C.

Now, another assembly is being held, this one to plot the course of the world for the next 25 years. Following is a press release from the World Future Society, which we reprint in full:

SCHOLARS WILL DISCUSS THE NEXT 25 YEARS

More than one thousand scholars, scientists and professionals will gather in Washington in June for a four-day exploration of what may happen during the next 25 years.

The occasion is the second General Assembly of the World Future Society, an international association of people seriously interested in forecasts and studies of the future. The first Assembly, held in 1971, had more than 1,000 registrants.

Two plenary sessions will head the roster of events at the General Assembly. At these sessions some of the world's most stimulating thinkers will debate mankind's prospects during the next 25 years and plot strategies for achieving a peaceful and productive world. Among the more than 200 speakers who will address the Assembly are Alvin Toffler, author of Future Shock; Herman Kahn, author of The Year 2000 and Things to Come; and Stewart Brand, editor of The Whole Earth Catalog.

During the four-day meeting, experts will present their views before some fifty sessions dealing with futurizing education, technology forecasting, the limits to growth, political futuristics, and many other topics. Former U.S. Secretary of Agriculture Orville Freeman will lead a session devoted to problems of world food supply and population. Anna and Robert Francoeur, authors of the recently published Hot and Cool Sex, will explore the future of the family and sex, and faculty members of the New England School of Art will direct a session on the arts in the next 25 years. In addition to the formal sessions, the Assembly will feature a number of informal sessions which attendees will be encouraged to organize on an impromptu basis.

Those attending the Assembly will receive a volume of papers dealing with the meeting's theme of crisis and opportunity in the next 25 years. They may take advantage of a variety of special events, including future-oriented exhibits, demonstrations of computer conferencing and other innovative techniques, orientation courses in futuristics, and an employment exchange service. Between sessions attendees will be able to view future-related films and sample "foods of the future."

The World Future Society's journal, The Futurist, notes that the General Assembly will focus on the next two or three decades because "many scholars and scientists believe that the next quarter century will be a turning point for humanity." In this period, The Futurist continues, mankind "may wipe itself out or revert to barbarism," or it may join to "create a global civilization in which people everywhere could be happy and productive."

Attendance at the World Future Society's General Assembly is open to all interested persons. The registration fee for non-members is $60 before April 30 and $70 thereafter. For more information about the Assembly, please contact the World Future Society, 4916 St. Elmo Avenue, Washington, D.C. 20014.

The World Future Society was founded in 1966. It now has 16,000 members residing in 80 countries. Its principal publication is The Futurist: A Journal of Forecasts, Trends, and Ideas About the Future.

(End of press release)

In order that you may understand just how important this General Assembly is to the World Planners, here is a list of the subjects that will be studied and a consensus on each subject reached, in order that the Master Planners may then return to their respective Think Tanks and prepare the Planning, Programming and Budgeting Systems which will prepare the rest of us for existence in their prefashioned World Future Society.

Sessions are to be held on the following subjects:

ENVIRONMENT, TECHNOLOGY AND ECONOMICS

Population, Limits to Growth, World Food Supply, Climate, Natural Resources, Energy: Conservation and Choices, Environmental Protection and the Quality of Life, Transportation, The Developing World, Communications and Information, Space, Technology (Man and Machine), The World Economic System, Business Organizations and the Future, Money and Wealth.

SOCIETY AND GOVERNMENT

Health Systems, Education, Family and Sex, Sex Roles, Youth: How They See the Future, Old Age, Minorities, City and Regional Planning, Government: its changing role and techniques, International Affairs.

HUMAN VALUES AND ARTS

Goals for Humanity, Changing Human Values, Evolving Ethical Systems, The Future of Religion, Utopias and the Ideal Human Life, Lifestyles for Tomorrow, The Future of Art and Music, Ethics in Biomedicine, A Philosophy for Tomorrow.

METHODS OF ANALYSIS

Technology Assessment, Forecasting Future Technology, Econometric Models and Forecasting, Social Indicators and Social Auditing, National Goals and Planning, Simulations and Games, Conferencing and Information Display, Systems Analysis, Science and Science-Fiction.

METHODS OF IMPLEMENTATION

Social Inventions, Creativity and Brainstorming, Futurizing Education, Experimental Cities and Communities, Institutional Change: how can we prevent organizational "future shock?", Careers: how to prepare for jobs that don't yet exist, Behavioral Modification and Attitudinal Change, Social Systems Engineering.

Just how seriously do these World Changers take to their work of refashioning the world? In a Don Bell Reports dated Nov. 10, 1972, in the series, Proofs of a Conspiracy to Build a Total Managed Global Society (no longer in print), we made reference to the World Future Society, and at that time we wrote:

"This is an association of social, behavioral and other professors of the inexact sciences who actually believe that it is their duty to predict the shape of the world of tomorrow and then set down to the task of making their predictions come true. They believe that it is within the power of man to control his future 'evolution,' and that they have been specially trained and delegated the responsibilities of directing that control. In short, they are playing at being gods and the new humanity will be their creation! Francois Hetman, a French Futurist, has expressed the goal in the following words:

"To the extent that man fulfills himself by

"projecting" himself into the future, the future becomes the realm where he has true freedom to act, the reservoir of his potentialities. By increasing his mastery of the environment, he sees it with new and more perceptive eyes; the increasing multiplicity of technical choices implies a permanent reappraisal of his social and ecological heritage. It is therefore necessary for him to develop new "sciences of man" which will permit him to make informed choices as to options for the future and to defend his estate against all forms of deprecation. The future is therefore our most precious resource. Its methodological exploration becomes a new dimension of our society. Concern for its implications must therefore increase rapidly." (From The Language of Forecasting. Paris, 1969).

The preceding was written in 1972. But the World Future Society has grown, has become more exclusive and yet more inclusive in the past two years. Now the Rockefellers seem to have taken over the World Future Society, just as they took over the Council on Foreign Relations in the 1920s.

We have referred to an article which appeared in the New York Times of Sept. 9, 1973, entitled "Futurology—A New Science Spots Trends," and written by John J. Goldman, a Times staff writer.

The writer affirms that the World Future Society is "the clearing house" for all futurist organizations the world over. He comments on the activities of some of the associated groups, such as the Hudson Institute, the Institute for the Future at Menlo Park, the Center for Integrated Studies at Binghamton, New York, the National Science Foundation, the Industrial Conference Board, the National Institute of Mental Health, the World Academy of Arts and Sciences, etc. Of one particular group, he writes:

"By far the most ambitious effort planned in the field goes by the title of the National Commission on Critical Choices for America. It was formed by New York Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller (now Vice-President Nelson Rockefeller, and one of the men appointed to membership in the Commission was the then Congressman Gerald Ford—Ed.)

"Last February (1973) the President (then Richard Nixon) expanded the Rockefeller's study into a national commission.

"The project's goals are as lofty as its title. Inside the commission's modest offices above Radio City Music Hall in Rockefeller Center, the aim is a study of the world's principal problems, with suggestions on options mankind should choose from 1976 through 1989—the anniversaries of the U.S. republic and the Constitution.

“‘We live in a world of fantastic, accelerating change,’ Rockefeller told the National Governors’ Conference in June (1973), explaining the aims of the commission. ‘The question is whether we will shape the forces of change—or be overwhelmed by them. Frankly, we are not responding sufficiently....The institutions that we count on to fulfill human needs and human aspirations — whether governmental or private, whether domestic or international — have lagged behind the realities.’

“‘The commission’s first task is a fundamental philosophical review of the nature of man and his institutions. It will seek to project present political, economical, social and military trends into the years ahead. Out of this will come alternate approaches to deal with emerging problems—and in Rockefeller’s thinking—a clearer sense of purpose at home and abroad. A principal aim: to develop a set of new concepts relating to the federal system and to domestic and to national institutions.

“‘Those familiar with the group’s work so far believe the amount of time and thought the governor can devote to the body between now and the end of the year—when Rockefeller may be running for reelection and face campaign pressure—will determine whether the commission will be one remembered in years ahead, or just another superficial study to be filed and forgotten....

“‘Much of the commission’s work will be subcontracted to existing futures institutes. One advantage: A large body of research already exists for the commission to draw upon—much of it recent, for it is only in the last few years that a scientist could admit a professional interest in the future without being publicly considered a science fiction dreamer.’” (End of extended quotation from New York Times article).

It will be recalled that Nelson Rockefeller did not interrupt his initial work with the National Commission on Critical Choices for Americans. Instead, he resigned from the Governorship of New York that he might concentrate on those “domestic and international” projections of the commission, until Commission Chairman Rockefeller was called by Commission Member Ford to become Vice-President of the United States—Ford having become President in the meantime. After appointments to higher offices, Ford is said to have resigned from the commission which still meets in New York City; and Rockefeller resigned as chairman of the commission; but it is still his commission and it reports regularly to him, and has even been referred to as Rockefeller’s “shadow cabinet.”

Another item which has to do with “the science of futurology” and the management of the world by an Elitist Cabal, on behalf of the rest of us, including the citizens of the United States:

The Bilderberg Group, an international club controlled by the Rockefeller and the Rothschild families and operated in their interests by Prince Bernhard of The Netherlands, will hold its next annual meeting April 24-27, 1975 at Izmir, Turkey. According to an Associated Press dispatch:

“...The topic of discussion will be inflation and its effects....Directors of the central banks of many Western countries, and trade union officials...are expected to be on hand.

“The meeting will be held under the chairmanship of The Netherlands Prince Bernhard who founded the Bilderberg meetings 21 years ago...Past participants have included President Gerald Ford while still a member of the House of Representatives. Secretary of State Henry Kissinger, another former participant, has been invited to attend the Izmir meeting, and the new leader of the British Conservative Party, Mrs. Margaret Thatcher, has also been invited.”

While meditating upon these Futurist Societies, we recalled how we had read about one of the first of the breed: a man named Plato. He dreamed of a society managed by an elite group which maintained complete control over the productive classes. All property was held in common, privacy was forbidden, each individual was assigned a job best suited to him by nature, love was free but breeding was selective. The State was ruled by gifted guardians, but it was static, rigid, totalitarian, although it was called a Republic. And such ideas helped to destroy a great civilization.

Two millenia later what’s really new among the heathen and the infidels?

DON BELL REPORTS Weekly, presenting the Christian American point of view. Two copies of each letter are sent, first class, to all subscribers (except in the case of overseas airmail, where postage cost prohibits). Subscription rate: $24 per year. Extra copies: 10¢ each. Address all orders: DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223 Palm Beach, Florida 33480

THE ANATOMY OF THE "SECOND AMERICAN REVOLUTION"

UNFREE AND INTERDEPENDENT

The first American Revolution brought about the confederation of thirteen States and the formation of a new kind of government: A representative republican form later defined as being a government "of the people, by the people, and for the people."

Now, we are told, we are engaged in a second American Revolution, one which is designed by its promoters to bring about a "federal union of nations" that will be managed by an Oligarchic Elite.

Taking advantage of the National Bicentennial Celebration which is to mark the Nation's 200th birthday, a special group of individuals and organizations is attempting to utilize the celebration to bring about a World Government.

This second American Revolution is said to be underway and was supposedly launched when President Ford made ceremonial visits and appropriate speeches at Lexington and Concord. However, prior to that, a non-profit organization calling itself The National Committee for the Bicentennial Era caused to be published in selected newspapers across the country a full-page 'Declaration' which sounds very patriotic. The two most revealing paragraphs declare:

"What our forebears did 200 years ago had never been done before. What we must do today is equally unprecedented. At every level in our society, there is an urgent need for achievement - in education, housing, transportation, the arts, communications, new ways of solving social problems, new methods of setting goals for the future, increased citizen participation in government. We believe that dedicating the Bicentennial to achievement is the way to put the sense of alienation and powerlessness behind us, to become once again the masters of our own destiny...."

"The first American Revolution neither started nor ended on the Fourth of July, 1776. Thirteen difficult years elapsed between the signing of the Declaration of Independence and the creation of an enduring system of government based on the Constituition. Many of the problems of today are different from those of 200 years ago, but they are at least as grave. Therefore, the second American Revolution will require at least a comparable period of time to grow strong and firm roots. We endorse the concept of a Bicentennial Era from 1976 to 1989 as a realistic period for tough-minded planning and accomplishment."

This "Declaration of Interdependence" informs us that the world is "growing increasingly interdependent." Therefore we are called upon "to resolve our problems in many areas," and to accomplish this, a "second American Revolution is called for, a revolution not of violence, but of fulfillment, of fresh purposes, and of new directions."

This scheme that is being promoted by The National Committee for the Bicentennial Era might sound patriotic and worthy of support; it might deceive even the elect—as well as the elected—except for the obvious fact that the promoters give the whole show away because of whom they are and what they have promoted in the past. Many of the backers of this ploy may be merely gullible and don't know what they are doing. But the leading lights and the financial angels behind this scheme combine to create a conglomeration of the most incongruous set of characters ever assembled to man a Trojan Horse. Here are International Bankers playing patsy with crypto-communist liberals, Multinational Executives cohabiting with Labor Leaders, Bilderbergers making bed-fellows of NAACPers, CFR members consorting with Women Libbers, and so on.

Following are a few of the names of the 41 signers of this call for a second American Revolution. Compare them with the names of those who signed the original Declaration of Independence—names like John Hancock, John and Samuel Adams, Benjamin Franklin, Thomas Jefferson—and you will begin to understand why this Committee for the Bicentennial Era is trying to turn a National Holiday into a Victory for Internationalism. Sponsors include:

A.W. Clausen, President, Bank of America.

Walter Cronkite, CBS News.
John W. Gardner of Common Cause.
Theodore M. Hesburgh, Notre Dame U.
Robert S. McNamara, Bank for Reconstruction and Development.
Margaret Mead, Anthropologist.
George Meany, AFL-CIO.
Eleanor Holmes Norton, Commission on Human Rights, New York City.
Elliot L. Richardson, presently U.S. Ambassador to the United Kingdom.
John D. Rockefeller 3rd, New York City.
Roy Wilkins, NAACP.
Dr. Helen Wise, NEA.
Leonard Woodcock, U.A.W.

And the Multinationals are represented by such prominent executives as Charles E. Adams of Raytheon, Reuben E. Mettler of TRW, J. Stanford Smith of International Paper, George H. Weyerhaeuser, etc.

The planning has been subtle and has deceived almost all Americans. But, on this side of Watergate and Vietnam, perhaps the outlines of the plan will become clearer and more easily discerned:

IS IT A CONSPIRACY?

It should be obvious to any student of current history that any organization such as this National Commission for the Bicentennial Era is merely a front, a transmission belt (to use a term made popular by the Communists) to raise money and gain popular support from citizens-at-large. Behind such a front there is always the faceless directorate that prepares the long-range plans, supervises the programs, provides the budgeted funds, and hopes to bring to fruition the planned objectives step by step.

Let us assume that the Communists knew what they were talking about when they named 1976 as their Target Date. If any group were to take over the United States with the majority of the citizens aiding and abetting the takeover without even knowing what they were doing (as Lenin predicted), then a bicentennial year would be the most opportune time for such a coup.

But, let us dig deeper, let us assume that Target Date: 1976 was agreed upon years earlier; perhaps at about the time the Bolshevik takeover of Russia was approved and practically guaranteed by the leaders of the victorious Allies meeting at Versailles, at the time that the Paris Peace Treaty was rejected by the United States Senate and the Council on Foreign Relations was founded by Col. House and associates for the purpose of bringing about a Global Authority which would assume control of the whole world.

If such a scheme were ever to succeed, it would be necessary to restructure the entire system of government of the United States. To put it in the simplest form possible: the people of the United States must be taught to have no confidence in their elected officials, and to place their confidence in appointed officials. Elected executives and legislators must be disgraced and appointed administrators exalted.

Whether it happened by plan or accident, this was what was accomplished at Watergate and even before: a Vice-President was forced to resign, in disgrace. A President likewise. Both were replaced with appointed administrators whom the people are told to admire and obey. Nor did this denigration of elected officials stop with the Executive Branch. Senator Ed Gurney of Florida and many lesser legislators found themselves facing indictments in State after State. Of all those charged, only John B. Connally of Texas seems to have been cleared; and he will probably rejoin the appointed administrators at some later date.

We are not commenting upon the guilt or the innocence of disgraced elected officials; we are emphasizing that these events played into the hands of the conspirators who sought to have the country, every State, County and City therein, managed by appointed administrators instead of elected representatives of the people.

This change from elected to appointed officials is one of the primary reasons for the installation of the Regional Governance system (the New Federalism); because this new system requires control by appointees, a national police force, and centralized control of all taxing and spending.

If there is a Conspiracy, then while the new federalism is being installed, the old representative republican system must be discredited, shown to be no longer suitable for the new technological age, and brought into such disrepute that the people themselves will demand a change in the form of government. That the United States Government has been discredited and made to seem untrustworthy, is becoming apparent. Watergate and political scandals, attacks on the CIA, the FBI, the IRS, the Congress (for not cooperating as it should with the appointed members of the Executive Branch).

As for the United States foreign policy, not since the darkest days of World War II has this country experienced so many failures. In 1973 Henry Kissinger of the U.S. and Le Duc Tho of North Vietnam were awarded joint Nobel prizes for having brought peace to Vietnam. Kissinger accepted, but Le Duc Tho refused the prize because peace had not yet been established in Vietnam. To all Orientals this was a prime example of "losing face" on the part of a country that was once respected and even feared.

With the collapse of Cambodia and Vietnam, the Thai government fears it is next on the list because of its past friendliness with the U.S. government. The Philippine government now feels that the presence of Clark Field—an American air base on Luzon—is an embarrassment and a danger, and they wish the Americans would go home and take their Vietnamese evacuees with them. With Chiang Kai-shek gone, the Nationalist government would like to depend on the United States for support, but feels that Uncle Sam is like a broken bamboo stalk, and that this "friend" may be as dangerous as any enemy.

In the Mideast, Kissinger has suffered one political defeat after another. There are festering problems inside NATO and again, Kissinger is not able to cope with them. Currently, he has alienated Latin America by treating South American governments as a rich miser might treat poor relatives (only in this case the miser is no longer wealthy). He has promised to visit South American countries where an American official is still welcome; but he has postponed, cancelled, delayed such a visit. And the Nations involved are understandably angry. Other Nations are disturbed because of the friendship Kissinger has been displaying toward Castro and Cuba. Too, the planned giveaway of the Panama Canal, instead of causing anyone to respect us more, is but another example of the political weakness that has overcome the United States, one more example of how almost any Nation—however small and powerless it may be—can make demands on the United States and receive tribute.

A columnist, writing from Europe, recently concluded his article with this paragraph:

"In the face of America's setbacks in Asia and the Mideast and in view of the crumbling multi-nation facade of NATO, Europeans are wondering if they can still rely on their most important ally. For if the United States can no longer assure Western Europe's security, who can?"

The one thing that was supposed to have been a successful undertaking on the part of the United States was the adoption of the policy of detente with Soviet Russia and Red China. But this was suspected and feared from the beginning by Western Europeans and now most Americans are coming to realize that detente is a one-way street and a real and present danger to the United States in the political sense.

It is in the political sense that the United States has been brought to her knees. And, let's face reality: so many setbacks and failures in so short a time could not have just happened; there must have been a plan, and a plan means there is a Conspiracy to destroy the United States politically, and to replace our present political system with a new kind of management!

This new kind of management—at the global level—is discussed in a book scheduled for publication on May 1: Who's Afraid of 1984? by Jerome Tuccille, a libertarian writer and political activist who ran for governor of New York in 1974 on the Libertarian ticket. The book is published by Arlington House, New Rochelle, New York. $7.95 and worth it, although we do not agree with all of the author's conclusions. But, this is the passage that drew our attention:

"The multinational company has the capacity to diminish the power of centralized government—indeed perhaps even to distribute power more equitably throughout the world," said Walter E. Schirmer in 1974. His projection at the time turned out to be amazingly prescient. Political structure has changed considerably in the freer nations of the world. . . . In general terms, the marketplace has replaced the seat of government as the focal point of human energy and activity, and the trend continues at an accelerated rate.

"Heads of state are frequent guests on television talk shows. . . . They also golf a good deal on weekends, usually in the company of movie and television stars. They are invited on fishing and skiing trips by wealthy singers and industrialists, and otherwise made to feel important by the productive elements of society. By and large, their salaries are still paid out of public tax funds. . . . But their power is not the same as it used to be. Their position is increasingly a figurehead one. They are called in as consultants by representatives of industry and labor, but this is more a goodwill gesture than anything else. For the most part, the decisions that affect our lives are made in the markets of the world. Our political leaders are tolerated and, in some cases, venerated just so long as they do not upset the general standard of living. Like that old plug-in TV console in the attic we just can't bring ourselves to toss out with the rubbish, we like to keep our politicians around more out of a sense of nostalgia than anything else."

Please note that the preceding lines were written by an aspiring politico, by a man who sought last year to fill the office in Albany that had been vacated the previous year by one Nelson Aldrich Rockefeller who, supposedly without conflict of interests, is a multinational executive and a politico at one and the same time. And it is the opinion of politico Jerome Tuccille, stated simply and without embellishment, that the head offices of multinational corporations are replacing the political seats of Nations as the real seats of government and of world management!

Is this, then, the real aim of the Conspiracy --not to create a World Government in the political sense, but to establish a World Authority for the control of the world's resources (human as well as natural), and for control of the world's goods and services?

If it be true that multinationals are starting to replace political governments as the real power centers, then it must follow that the political governments, if they are to survive at all, must change their form and become as handmaidens to their corporate masters.

Notice how political governments, especially the central government of the United States, have been changing from guardians of freedom to service centers, from keepers of the peace to keepers of the people, from representatives of the people to custodians of the peoples' property, and from a body of elected lawmakers to a corps of appointed administrators and regulators.

And, if it be true that the Target Date is 1976, the Bicentennial Year, then haste is required. And it has been shown by history that the quickest way to make political changes and inspire popular support for the change, is to create a crisis. The sinking of the Battleship Maine launched us into the Sea of Internationalism. The sinking of the Lusitania paved the way toward making us a World Power. The sinking of an entire fleet at Pearl Harbor began the events that made Soviet Russia a World Power. An alleged attack on a couple of U.S. Destroyers began the course of events that will make Red China a Third World Power, just as Kissinger was instructed.

Of course, the day of crises at sea has gone forever. Now a crisis must be global in scope, not an incident involving two or three political units, but an incident that affects the whole world: a population explosion, a food shortage, an energy crisis.

These are areas where political bodies can work together with corporate boards, and make World Control seem essential.

A current example is the multinational and Paris based Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD) which is handling the Global Energy Crisis for which Kissinger seeks to take the credit. The Atlantic Union Bulletin for October/December 1974 reported that "The draft of the oil-sharing plan of the International Energy Agency... is to be established within the OECD.

The OECD Newsletter for January 1975 reports: "The Governing Board of the newly established International Energy Agency held its second meeting at OECD headquarters in Paris on December 18-19.... The Board also appointed Dr. Ulf Lantzke... as Executive Director of the Agency."

February issue of the OECD Newsletter informed its members that "At the invitation of the President of the United States, the Secretary-General of the OECD, Mr. Emile van Lennep, will take part in the meeting to be held in Washington on February 11 to examine the world energy situation."

Sequel: As the Paris based and Bilderberg dominated OECD organized the International Energy Agency at the suggestion of Bilderberger Kissinger, Bilderberg member and appointed President Gerald Ford followed through with Executive Order 11814 which activated a national Energy Resources Council, and with Executive Order 11819 which fixed the membership of this new agency, named Interior Secretary Rogers C. B. Morton as chairman and placed under one head the energy research activities of the old Atomic Energy Commission, the Environmental Protection Agency and the National Science Foundation. With a $15 billion-plus budget and 7,124 employees, Ford said the new Energy Research and Development Administration (ERDA) would "give us the unified, high-quality scientific, technical and management organization to achieve the greatest benefit" from the investment. And AP commented that this "marked a major step toward the administration's goal of creating a Department of Energy and Natural Resources that would absorb the present Interior Department."

Global control of natural resources is the aim, via OECD is the plan, with Bilderbergers running the show.

For information concerning this report write:
DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

LEGISLATING THE PLANNED SOCIETY

HUMPHREY BILL TO BE REVIVED

He may know in his heart that he'll never be a President of the United States, but Hubert Horatio Humphrey has one overweening aim in life that he may be able to realize while serving as a Senator. For the United States can be totally socialized through legislation as well as by Executive Order. And this is his aim: to be the author and finisher of the Planned Society that he sincerely believes to be The New Order which is inevitable if the United States is to have any future as a State within a World Community.

Senator Humphrey introduced his plan last year, as Senate Bill 3050. At that time, on February 25, 1974, he told his colleagues in the Senate that this was "one of the most important bills that I have ever introduced in this body. This particular piece of legislation has been in the making since early 1972. . . ."

In one of two Don Bell Reports devoted to an exposure of the dangers inherent in S.B. 3050, we summarized: "This is a bill designed to own, control, and regulate your land, water, wealth, resources, industries, and substance. . . . Its intent is to reduce you to a number (and force you) to buy, sell, and live in economic bondage and slavery. It is a gross and flagrant violation of the Bill of Rights and the republican form of government clearly set forth in the Constitution of the United States of America. This is a 'Central Government Bill,' or Union of Soviet Socialist Republics style of legislation. It is a bill designed to take over America by political consent and economic conquest. It is National and World Regional government! This bill must never become law in this country." (Don Bell Reports, April 19, 1974.)

Senate Bill 3050 did not become law. It died in committee. The Committee on Government Operations became bogged down with other important matters in 1974 and never got around to serious study of the bill. But this is a new year and a new Congress, and we have been informed by usually reliable sources in Washington that the Senator from Minnesota has had the help of more "experts" and has "polished and improved" old 3050, and he is ready to introduce a new "Balanced National Growth and Development Act of 1975."

It should be noted that 1974 was not a good year for the passage of such a radical piece of legislation. Watergate, Vietnam, Energy Crises, Stagflation, resignations and appointments of Presidents and Vice Presidents; these and other burning issues kept legislative action on new bills at a minimum—which is always a blessing.

But 1975 is a new year and the 94th Congress is so anxious to be a "do something" body, and is so loaded with liberals and political novices that anything could happen—even the passage of a Planned Economy Act that would convert this Nation into the United Socialist States of America, without some of them even knowing what they had done to the Country.

Add to this the fact that the situation is different in 1975, and the people are being told that Socialism is almost inevitable, and that it may be better than a free enterprise system, after all. Having suffered our first military defeat, with morale running low and no really trustworthy leadership in 1975, people are looking for answers, and they are being told that Socialism is the answer. The planning has been excellent and the programs have been carried out well—for the One Worlders, that is. Frank A. Capell, in his latest Confidential Intelligence Report (May, 1975) summarizes:

"Our record of involvement in Southeast Asia has been one of defeat after defeat. The U.S. lost over 50,000 servicemen (more than 125,000 were wounded) and billions of dollars; the involvement caused dissention and division among our people, due to our entering an undeclared, no-win war. Secretary Kissinger, identified as a Soviet agent by a thoroughly competent and proven authentic source, has by his one man diplomacy made a series of secret commitments and in every instance it was the Soviet Union which benefitted. While Kissinger was negotiating detente, wheat sales, and enormous credit loans to the Soviet Union and Communist China, those countries were supplying 90% of the weapons and military hardware being used in Southeast Asia.

"Anyone who analyzes Henry Kissinger's activities, even the most confirmed skeptic, will see that the U.S. is not opposing Communism. Southeast Asia is rapidly falling under Red control, the anti-Communist governments of Greece and Portugal have been overthrown, and Kissinger has committed us to the surrender of the Panama Canal Zone. His Mideast policy has favored the Soviet policy of keeping that area of the world under tension and conflict. We do not know how many other secret commitments Kissinger has made, but the ones we do know about have been disastrous."

One result of this policy of disaster which has been felt but not seen openly, has been the trend toward total Socialism in the United States. On April 30, UPI reported:

"A new survey indicated yesterday that a majority of Americans still believe in the work ethic but many families may be losing faith in the American dream. Particularly among distressed families, the report on the American Family and Money showed the ideal of working to own your own home, to send the kids to college and to provide a nest egg for retirement has been displaced by the idea that the government should see to it that everyone has a good job and a decent standard of living.

"Fifty per cent in the survey agreed with a statement expressing such an expectation which the report called-'the psychology of entitlement.' The survey was conducted by Yankelovich, Skelly and White Inc., and involved a scientific cross-section of families. Commissioned by General Mills Inc., the study took place during the midwinter of 1974-75 - the last interviews being in January."

The current issue of a newsweekly notes that "A mood of uncertainty and concern is in full flower across the United States in the spring of 1975.... They wonder, increasingly, what has happened to national leadership. They yearn for clear-cut values that many feel are their lost heritage."

Through foreign policy defeats, the twin burdens of inflation and recession, the crises of massive unemployment coupled with induced shortages of food and energy, and other crises that have been planned and carried out expertly, the trend toward the nationalization of industry and the socialization of society has reached a dangerous level.

And, at a time like this, when the ground has been plowed and painstakingly prepared, Senator Humphrey is about to introduce the "Balanced National Growth and Development Act of 1975," an act that would install the machinery for a Planned Society. Indeed, even as you read this, such a bill may have already have been introduced.

When Humphrey presented his bill in 1974, he said that the bill had been in the making for two years. He had unveiled its general principles before the Commonwealth Club in San Francisco in May, 1972. Five months later he presented his plan before the American Institute of Planners and "invited the professional planning community to join me in my efforts to further its development." On Feb. 26, 1973 he had his plan published as a committee print by the Joint Economic Committee of the Congress and 3,000 copies were sent out to friends and constituents for comment and suggestion. Next, he had the Congressional Research Service prepare "two important reports on national growth and development policy" which were published by the Senate. Finally, the bill that Senator Humphrey actually introduced in the Senate last year was endorsed (and probably written) by a Fabian-slanted think tank in Washington called the Woodrow Wilson International Center for Scholars. This WWICS provided a "working group" to study Humphrey's plan and prepare the bill, which included such federal government officials as:

Russell Train, chairman of the President's Council on Environmental Quality, Alvin Elm, Staff Director of the Council on Environmental Quality,
David Beckler of the Office of Science and Technology,
Henry Eschwege, Director of the Resources and Economics Division of the Comptroller General's Office, George Jaszi, Director of the Bureau of Economic Analysis, Dept. of Commerce,
John Sawhill of the Office of Management and Budget, Harry Blaney of the Planning and Coordination Staff, Department of State.

Also assisting Humphrey in the preparation of the bill (S.B. 3950) were Archibald C. Rogers of the American Institute of Architects, and James E. Thornton, now of the Senate Agriculture Committee Staff, who "spent much of his office hour time working on this proposal and related matters for me," said the Senator.

S.B. 3050 also bore the endorsement of such liberal Senators as Javits, Hughes, Kennedy, Mathias, Metcalf, Cranston, McGovern, Hart, Abourezk, Mondale, Nelson, Pell, Randolph, Stafford and Williams. So, you see, this bill—as we stated in our Report of April 19, 1974—“is not merely a fly-by-night idea being proposed by an ambitious Senator. Rather, it is a plan which has been carefully and painstakingly worked out by Fabian scholars intent upon socializing this country....”

However, and fortunately, the Senate Committee on Government Operations found no time to study the bill and report it to the full Senate.

But this did not stop Senator Humphrey, it merely delayed him; and on March 18, 1975—six weeks ago as of this writing—he gained the floor of the Senate to reopen his campaign. He said:

“Mr. President, a question central to the future of our Nation is now coming to the forefront: namely, do we wish to exchange ‘crisis management’ for ‘long-range policy planning’ at the federal level of our Government? As the number and magnitude of various national crises become more and more frequent and devastating in their impact on our national economy, and on the lives of our Nation’s people, it is becoming increasingly evident that our National government will have to adopt some type of policy planning process for dealing with national economic and related policy questions.”

Notice the procedure that has now become a standard method of operation on the part of Fabian Socialists: 1) a crisis or a series of crises is created; 2) the people are propagandized and brought to the point where they demand a solution; 3) the pre-planned solution is presented and installed “at the demand of the people.” Humphrey’s bill is just such a pre-planned solution to created crises. Georg Wilhelm Friedrich Hegel would have been proud of Hubert Horatio Humphrey.

During the hiatus between the 93rd and 94th Congresses, Humphrey had been busy enlisting more aid for his Planned Society program. A new group headed by Wassily Leontief of Harvard and Leonard Woodcock of United Auto Workers and the Council on Foreign Relations, had been formed to promote The Planned Society. Calling itself the Initiative Committee for National Economic Planning, this new group published a proposal almost identical with Humphrey’s proposal, and the Initiative Committee’s proposal was duly published in the March 16, 1975 issue of The New York Times. This proposal called for the creation of an Office of National Economic Planning which would make plans “at the highest level” and then have the plans carried out through the Regional Governance System that has already been established by Executive Order. A key to the manner in which this Office would operate is contained in this key paragraph from the NYT article:

“It should be clear that the planning office would not set specific goals for General Motors, General Electric, General Foods or any other individual firm. But it would indicate the number of cars, the number of generators and the quantity of frozen foods we are likely to require in, say, five years, and it would try to induce the relevant industries to act accordingly.” (The Marxian Socialist demands government ownership of industry; the Fabian Socialist prefers government control of production and distribution).

This Initiative Committee declares, and we quote: “In order to be effective and useful, an Office of National Economic Planning must be set up at the center of our economic and political life as one of our most influential institutions. To provide leadership at the highest level, we propose the establishment of such an office within the White House, provided with sufficient funding and supported by a professional staff large enough to carry out its many functions....”

In renewing the campaign for his bill in 1975 Senator Humphrey granted an extended interview to a reporter from Challenge Magazine (this is a HUD publication), which was published in the March-April issue, and then inserted in the Congressional Record of March 18, 1975, at the Senator’s request. In this interview, Humphrey again insisted that he considered his Balanced Growth and Development Bill to be “the single most important piece of legislation in my twenty-five years of public service.” He explained how his bill would fit in with the Regional Governance, or New Federalism program that already has been installed by Executive Order:

“The framework of my bill would require a sort of national planning console, or what I call The Office of Balanced National Growth and Development. That Office, within the Executive Office of the President, would consist of what today are scattered parts of the government, which would be brought into synchronization. The Office of Management and Budget, and the Council of Economic Advisers, for example, would become part of the Office.... There would also be eight to twelve regional offices working with the national office in the decentralization setup to encourage feedback from the regions."

We have not seen the text of Humphrey's 1975 version of the Balanced Growth and Development Bill, but judging from what he said in his interview with Challenge Magazine, few changes can be expected from the 1974 edition. That bill provided for an Office of Balanced National Growth and Development which would:

- Provide for the "policy direction of all federally assisted programs for planning and land use development" at all levels, including the local community or the individual farm or factory;
- Assign goals, plans and programs for all government departments and agencies generally;
- Assess all national needs, goals, and priorities;
- Evaluate all federal, State and local tax policies;
- Evaluate and review all present and proposed programs within departments and agencies;
- Evaluate regional resources and human resources to determine the direction in which future regional policies should be developed or stabilized;
- Establish Regionalism nationwide, and;
- Gather economic growth and population growth through the Regional Planning Commissions (which are already provided for, and in operation through the Regional Councils and the sub-regional councils.)

According to this bill, Centralized National Planning is necessary because:

- A "decline in the quality of life in our Nation's people" has developed, due to the lack of coordinated policies for federal programs and the "lack of incentives to private enterprise designed to achieve balanced national growth;
- The heavy concentration of our Nation's population in small areas has increased the vulnerability of our Nation to "resource shortages, national disasters, and even destruction by weapons of modern warfare."
- Individual citizen interest may be more efficiently served through comprehensive regional planning and decision making;
- Management decisions on land use made by individuals or firms, when such land use decisions are of wide public concern are "often being made on the basis of expediency, tradition . . . and short term economic considerations";
- Public services and facilities may be "optimized" when they are planned "as an integral part of national, regional, state or local growth and development policies";
- A multi-mode transportation system between all regions of the United States should be developed to improve the mobility of the Nation's population;

-A need for national housing has reached "critical proportions";

-Poor fiscal policies have failed to stabilize economic growth "or more equitable income distribution."

As can be seen from the above, Humphrey's bill would be a panacea for just about every governmental, economical, fiscal and human ill with which we are beset as Americans. All we need to do is accept total socialism and turn over the running of our country and our lives to an elite group that will operate out of the White House Office Building, and will extend their tentacles of control to every village and hamlet through the Regional Councils and their sub-regional fragmentations. Humphrey's bill concurs in the "panacea" charge that we have made, by listing sixteen specific goals in its "Statement of Purpose." These goals include:

- The encouragement of income distribution;
- The formulation of a national fuel and energy policy, a national food and fiber policy, a national transportation system, provisions for adequate national health care, manpower training, recreational facilities, adequate educational programs at all levels in all regions, etc.;
- Achievement of a balanced national population level;
- Coordinated land-use planning;
- Development of a national communications system to facilitate the dissemination of information conducive to an informed public;
- Development of planned communities;
- Utilization of advanced technology, systems planning (PPBS-Ed.), and computer sciences (data banks-Ed.), to enable a growing population to enjoy a higher quality of life and standard of living.

The foregoing should adequately accomplish the total and complete socialization of the Nation and its citizens.

In this letter, we have given you the highlights of the "Humphrey Bill" of 1974. If recent statements by Humphrey are any indication, the Balanced National Growth and Development Act of 1975 will include the same provisions and purposes. The chances for its passage in this present Congress are far greater than in the last. For, this year and the next, more than at any time in the last 100 years, will prove that eternal vigilance is the price we must pay for liberty.

For information concerning this letter write:
DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

MORE ABOUT THIS "NEW AMERICAN REVOLUTION"

END OF AN ERA?

"The bicentennial band seems to be tuning up smartly enough," comments Newsweek columnist Shana Alexander, "but the main works—the central machinery that turns our 200-year-old carousel—appears in serious disrepair. We seem to be in a crisis of integrity, massive and system-wide. Not the end of the Vietnam war itself, but the appalling way it has ended, coming on top of all the rest of the economic and political bad news, has left a lot of people feeling rotten, queasy and shaken. This is a time for reconciliation, says the President. It's the end of an era, say others. I only wish it were...."

No, it is not yet the end of an era. Rather, it is the painful transition period between eras. The time when the Planners may say "The Old Order is Dead, Long Live the New Order," is yet to come. And the target date is the Year of our Bicentennial as a Nation, 1976. In that year, if Kissinger is right in his public pronouncements, all Europe will have 'gone Socialist.' And in that same year, if the celebrated social philosopher and ex-Keynesian Friedrich A. von Hayek is right in his predictions, America too will have 'gone all Socialist.'

It took time and effort on the part of the Planners, and it took apathy and indifference on the part of the people, in order that the New Order might be prepared and installed. For example:

On October 20, 1972, the President of the United States made a special visit to Independence Hall in Philadelphia to make a speech and sign a bill into law. The importance of the event was minimized by the communications media, but its significance was not lost upon the uncivil servants of the invisible government. Here is a part of what was read from a teleprompter by a President of the United States at that time:

"In my State of the Union address nearly two years ago, I outlined a program which I described as 'a New American Revolution—a peaceful revolution in which power (is) turned back to the people... a revolution as profound, as far-reaching, as exciting as that first revolution almost 200 years ago.'

"The signing today of the State and Local Fiscal Assistance Act of 1972—the legislation known as General Revenue Sharing—means that this New American Revolution is truly underway. And it is appropriate that we launch this New American Revolution in the same place where the first American Revolution was launched by our Founding Fathers 196 years ago—Independence Square in Philadelphia. It is appropriate that we meet in this historic place to help enunciate a new declaration of Independence for our State and local governments....

"As we sign this historic document today, we are carrying on the work which started here in Independence Square—where independence was declared, where the Constitution was written, and where the Bill of Rights was formally added to the Constitution....

"We expect great things from this program—and we are going to be watching for them. I am asking the Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations to monitor and evaluate the results of revenue sharing so that we can all know its full impact as we follow up on this initiative. For the enactment of General Revenue Sharing represents only the first part of our comprehensive design to reform the institutions of government so they can respond to the needs of the people....

"Many people have suggested in recent years that America's sun was setting, that our glory was behind us. One reason was the government was not responding well to people's needs. But today as we come back to Independence Hall we do so with confidence that we are giving our government back to the people again. And like Franklin, we can be confident, as we approach our 200th anniversary, that the sun is rising for America." (End of quote.)

It should be understood that "giving the government back to the people" is a stock political phrase that has many meanings. Red China is called a "people's republic," implying that when the Nationalist Government of Chiang Kai-shek was overcome, the act of establishing a Communist Dictatorship gave "government back to the people" in that unhappy land. When the Bolsheviks swarmed in and conquered Russia, they boasted of a "Dictatorship of the Proletariat," implying a government of the common people as opposed to the royal and middle classes. In the presidential peroration at Independence Hall when the "New American Revolution" was made official, the term "giving government back to our people" really meant taking political power and tax monies from the people and then returning some of the power and the monies to the

(The following appeared in a recent issue of Moody Magazine. We reprint verbatim and without comment.)

THE BEAST

Dr. Handrick Eldeman, Chief Analyst of the Common Market Confederacy, announced from Brussels that a computerized restoration plan is already underway in the aftermath of world chaos. In the crisis meeting which brought together scientists, advisors, and C.M.C. leaders, Dr. Eldeman unveiled the "BEAST." The Beast is a gigantic computer that takes up three floors at Administration Building of Market Headquarters. This "monster" is a self programming unit that has over one hundred sensing input sources. Computer experts have been working on a plan to computerize all world trade. This master plan involves a digital system for every human on earth. The computer would assign each citizen of the world a number to use for all buying and selling to avoid the problem of ordinary credit cards. The number would be invisibly "laser-tattooed" on the forehead or back of the hand. It would provide a walking credit card system. The number would show up under infra-red scanners to be placed at all check-out counters and places of business. Dr. Eldeman suggested that by using three six-digit units, the entire world could be assigned a working credit card number. Other Common Market Officials believe that the present chaos and disorder caused by the 'mystery' points to the need of a world currency - perhaps an international mark that would do away with all currency and coin. Instead, credit notes would be exchanged through a world bank clearing center. No member could buy or sell without having an assignment of a digital mark. Market directors are now convinced that world order depends on allegiance to an international program of peace and politics, as well as a people. This particular scheme is known as General Revenue Sharing. It is accomplished in conjunction with the Regional Governance System. This latter plan is intended to centralize all political power and the handling of all tax revenues in the Federal Executive Offices at Washington, D.C. Then, a part of the power and the money are "given back to the people" through the Ten Regional Commissions and the multitude of sub-State and inter-State Commissions.

In the matter of this General Revenue Sharing Act (Public Law 92-512) which was signed into law on Oct. 20, 1972 and became fully effective on Jan. 1, 1974, there is a "hidden gimmick" in the law that will, when enforced, make the collection of State tax monies the prerogative of the Federal Government!

Title I of this Act gives money "back to the people," that is, to local improvement programs, etc., provided that the local administrators of such programs conform to certain provisions and guidelines set up by the federal government. However, Title 2 of this Act sets up the machinery whereby the States are expected to "enter into agreement with the Secretary of the Treasury ... and ... the Federal Government shall begin to col-

new world trade and numbering system. One man could have at his finger tips the number of any man on earth. It could provide the most powerful levers known to mankind. He could have a solution bank for world problems. It could be a tool for peace, or a dictator's weapon.

When one of the Market leaders was asked what would happen if a person objected to the system and refused to co-operate, he replied rather pointedly, "We would have to use force to make him conform to requirements."

When we remember what the Bible (Rev. 13:16.17.18) says concerning the appearance of the Antichrist at the head of this organization, the following quotation becomes exceedingly illuminating. Henri Spaak, early planner of the European Common Market, and Secretary-General of NATO, said in one of his speeches:

"We do not want another committee; we have too many already. What we want is a man of sufficient stature to hold the allegiance of all people, and to lift us out of the economic morass into which we are sinking. Send us such a man, and be he god or devil, we will receive him."

-Moody Magazine

lect all State individual income taxes." The States not having income tax laws are urged to enact same so that this provision of the Revenue Sharing Act can apply to all States!

To further illustrate how anxious the appointed federal bureaucrats are to become collectors of all taxes, note the following which appeared in the April 22 issue of the San Francisco Chronicle:

"...IRS Commissioner Donald Alexander said that in 1974 tax information on 63 million Americans was passed to the states under 'treaties' designed to ensure that taxpayers comply with both state and federal laws. The information was disclosed as IRS and Justice Department officials testified before the Senate Finance subcommittee on Internal Revenue, about bills that would restrict access to federal tax returns....

"Senator Floyd Haskell (Dem.-Colo.) ... expressed concern about the widespread distribution of federal tax returns.... Alexander said one solution would be for the States to assign IRS officials the responsibility of collecting State income taxes."

(Italics added for emphasis.)

Along with the movement to make all State and local government units dependent upon central government for their existence, there is also the companion drive to make all individuals dependent upon the central government for their very existence. Individual freedom is a dangerous commodity in any socialist society. The following article from the current issue of U.S. News & World Report (May 12, 1975) is indicative of the success that the Planners are enjoying in this respect:

BIG GOVERNMENT - NUMBER ONE CONSUMER, EMPLOYER, BORROWER

Chalk up another victim of recession: the drive to curb the growth of big government. In fact, the dollars-and-cents impact of government—federal, State and local—on Americans is rapidly intensifying amid hard times. For example:

* While private firms lay off employes, governments at all levels are putting more people to work, in part through public-service job programs.

* Swollen by outlays for unemployment benefits and welfare, funds laid out by government to provide income for people are growing much more rapidly than income provided by industry.

* Borrowing by government to finance deficits is drawing more and more funds away from prospective private borrowers, or at least making the money more expensive.

It all adds up to a widening lead for government as the country's biggest employer, consumer and borrower....

Governments employ 1 in 5 workers... And that doesn't include jobs in private industry, particularly in defense, that stem from government contracts.

Nearly 3 in every 10 dollars of income Americans receive—29 per cent—comes from government. Of the 345 billion dollars paid to people, nearly half is in the form of wages and salaries. Almost as much comes as Social Security payments, unemployment compensation, welfare benefits, veterans' benefits and the like.

Government's growing role takes its toll on the taxpayer—draining off 37 per cent of every dollar of national income, up from 28 cents two decades ago.

Why the steady growth, even before the recession? Two things, primarily:

* An expanding population that has insisted on more spending for education, protection, and other basic services.

* Persistent demands for new public programs to cushion adversities of all kinds, stimulate various kinds of businesses or serve other special interests....

What's ahead? Once the recession ends, you can expect an upsurge of demands to put a lid on "big government." Still, the lessons of history suggest that government expands in good times as well as bad. (End)

With Big Government continuing to expand and with private enterprise continuing to narrow itself down into a few hundred massive and monopolistic conglomerates and multinationals, the two combining to stifle free enterprise and to liquidate the middle class that was the "backbone of America," Corporate Socialism becomes the inevitable result.

Like the alligator and the crocodile, free enterprise is private enterprise, but private enterprise is not necessarily free enterprise. Private enterprise is growing, registering greater profits than ever; but free enterprise is being strangled and is dying.

It was free enterprise that von Hayek talked about when he addressed a group of congressmen and journalists recently. The story was carried by Human Events (April 26).

Friedrich A. von Hayek is an important witness, because at one time he was a firm believer in the Keynesian doctrine. As a professor at the London School of Economics (a Fabian Socialist institution), he knew Keynes personally and taught the latter's theories to students from all over the world. Then he began to see what Keynesian ideas were doing to the Western industrial Nations, including the United States. He started a personal crusade to expose the dangers of Keynesian theories to his fellow economists and feels he has had considerable success. Here are highlights from the article published by Human Events:

NOBEL ECONOMIST WARNS
U.S. FACES SOCIALISM

On a recent visit to Capitol Hill the world-renowned economist and social philosopher Friedrich A. von Hayek warned that "The threat to the free enterprise society has never been more imminent in the United States than now." What's more, said von Hayek... this danger is coming from a different direction than he had ever expected.

Addressing the Free Market Lunch Group, a Hill organization formed this year that already numbers among its members over 130 members of Congress, congressional aides, and Washington journalists interested in free-market economics, the Austrian economist said he had long thought that socialism was a danger. "But I didn't expect you would be led into socialism by reason of an unsound monetary policy. I thought the United States had a fundamental belief in the importance of a sound currency."

As von Hayek sees it, the seeds of our present peril trace back to the acceptance of the so-called Keynesian "full-employment" doctrine in the 1930s and enshrined in the Nation's statute books by the Full Employment Act of 1946. According to Keynes' theory, he explained, unemployment is caused by insufficient aggregate demand. In order to increase this aggregate demand, Keynes suggested that government should use fiscal deficits and expansionary monetary policies to stimulate the economy. And Western governments, including ours, have been doing so almost uninterruptedly ever since. Witness estimates that this year's U.S. budget deficit alone may exceed $100 billion.

Hayek fears that the cumulative effect of these policies could before much more time has elapsed lead to an inflationary situation so bad that "the government, to control the flood they've caused, will be forced to impose permanent wage and price controls." And since, under such controls, prices could no longer be counted upon to allocate resources, the government would have to step in to perform this function. The result: a fully planned, centrally directed Socialist system....

The sad thing about our present economic plight, said von Hayek, is that "it has been caused by government following the advice of the great majority of my fellow economists." For the future, however, he believes the biggest obstacle to realistic economic policies may come not from the economists but from the news media.

"Now many economists finally know they were wrong," explained von Hayek, "but it will be hard for them to change the direction of government policy because they have convinced the media of Keynesian doctrines." The media, he said, are "dealers in second-hand ideas." As distinguished from scholars, reporters have a tendency to take ideas and keep them for life. Hence, concluded von Hayek, although economic theorists are changing their minds on Keynes, we are stuck with a generation of newsmen who will propagate Keynesian ideas for the next 30 years....

He told the Capitol Hill gathering that the chief thing he holds against the late British economist is that, for its propagandistic effect, Keynes entitled his work the general theory when, in fact, it was applicable only to a very rare set of circumstances that happened to exist in the England of his day. But for Keynes' prescriptions to work generally, von Hayek pointed out, it would be necessary for government to continually cause inflation to outpace public expectations, which becomes increasingly difficult and ultimately impossible as the rate of inflation mounts.

Thus, said Hayek, ... such stimulative policies must lead to intolerable rates of inflation, which can wreak havoc not only on the economy but on the entire fabric of society (and will end in Socialism). (End)

DON BELL REPORTS Weekly, presenting the Christian American point of view. Two copies of each issue are mailed, first class, to each subscriber (except overseas subscribers, who receive one copy, airmailed.) $24 per year. Extra copies: 10¢ each.

Please note: "Proofs of a Conspiracy" now out of print. "Contrived Evolution of Regional Government" still available in quantity.

Please address all orders and inquiries to:
DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

REGARDING ATTACKS ON THE SECOND AMENDMENT

THE HISTORICAL RECORD

Following is a presentation by Edward M. Davis, Los Angeles Chief of Police. His remarks are slightly abridged, due to lack of space; otherwise the address is exactly as he delivered it on April 22, 1975, in San Diego, California.

Today, we stand at the threshold of celebrating the two hundredth anniversary of this government....Our government was sired in a revolution which began on April 10, 1775, when a British expedition marched on Concord in an effort to seize colonial arms. So you see that gun control way back then started the American Revolution. The maturation and growth of this nation was nourished in debate beginning with the Revolutionary War and continuing even today. You have heard the voices of those who desire to limit your rights and install government control over your life. That concept has been the subject of debate ever since there was government. One of the very basic liberties that seems to raise serious conflict with some critics is the Second Amendment to the Bill of Rights.

Let's digress for a moment and briefly trace the development of our Bill of Rights. During the Constitutional Convention between 1787-89, our founding fathers sought to modify the Articles of Confederation. The convention was composed of two camps of political thinkers. One group, in favor of a strong centralized government, became known as the Federalists. The other group, desirous of state's rights and a loosely knit central government, became known as the Anti-federalists.

About midway through the convention, a representative from the state of Virginia—a truly outstanding patriot—George Mason, recognized that the Constitution was deficient in providing for the rights of the people. He expressed a desire to preface the Constitution with a Bill of Rights. He said, "It would give great quiet to the people; and, with the aid of state declarations, a Bill might be prepared in a few hours." This was later developed as a motion and it was soundly defeated. As the convention progressed, Mason and others expressed serious concern and reflection over the power this new government might exert on the states and on the people. In fact, it was through the urging of such men as Mason that the Fifth Article, providing for amendments to the Constitution, was finally adopted. Governor Randolph, of Virginia, George Mason of Virginia and Elbridge

Gerry of Massachusetts refused to sign the Constitution because of its serious deficiencies in freedom. They feared that the Constitution's deficiencies in personal freedom would soon lead this nation to monarchy or tyranny. This great concern for liberty coupled with a desire for a Bill of Rights was nothing new to these men. Each state had its own Constitution and a majority of the states had their own Bill of Rights.

The first Bill of Rights, after considering the Magna Carta, was probably the English Bill of Rights of 1689. It was codified after the English Revolution of 1688, and after James II had fled his kingdom. Among the many provisions of this Bill was the right of the people to keep and bear arms.... With the development of Colonial Charters and Laws in this country, many of these liberties (contained in the English Bill of Rights) became a part of our law. These liberties were further defined and included in many revolutionary declarations and constitutions. The Seventeenth Amendment to the Massachusetts Declaration of Rights, for example, includes a right to keep and bear arms. So, when George Mason asked the Constitutional Convention to consider a Bill of Rights, his request was made as a result of long-standing practice for the insurance of freedom. He was the author of Virginia's Declaration of Rights and he had a profound love for these basic liberties....

When the work of the convention had concluded and the representatives left for their home states for the purpose of seeking ratification of this document, the fate of the Constitution was in serious jeopardy. Many of the delegates, like Hamilton, Washington, Jefferson, and Madison voiced concern for the ability of the Constitution to extricate itself from the deep divisions of the Convention....

The most crucial state in the ratification contest was Virginia. It was, at that time in our history, the largest and most important state. The debates in Virginia's State Convention are well recorded and the ratification debates lasted a month. The most profound and most glorious oratory for individual rights was delivered by Patrick Henry and supported by such men as George Mason. Mason expressed a fear that the new government's standing army, like the British Regulars, might invade the state and keep the people under martial law. Henry thought that this new government might exercise its "power oppressively" and cautioned about enslaving the people. He asked if the other members were able to recall that France, Spain, Germany, Turkey and other countries were enslaved by their own people. He agreed with Mason's concern about providing the absolute power of the sword as well as the purse in the hands of this new government. The convention finally adopted 20 provisions for a Bill of Rights. These provisions were later used by Madison in the (United States) Congress.

In the first Congress, the issue of a Bill of Rights was a very crucial concern. There was talk of a Second Constitutional Convention to modify the existing draft of the proposed Constitution; 210 different amendments to the Constitution were proposed by eight states. This was finally refined to 22 amendments, and 14 were included in Madison's recommendations to Congress.... The 14 amendments submitted by Madison were cut down to 12. Each of those 12 amendments was debated and defined. Finally, ten amendments were adopted.

The purpose of our Bill of Rights was perhaps best summed up in the House: "These are essential and unalienable rights of the people designed to protect them from maladministration."

Let's look at the second provision of the Bill of Rights: "A well regulated militia being necessary to the security of a free state, the right of the people to keep and bear arms shall not be infringed." When Madison presented that article it read: "The right of the people to keep and bear arms shall not be infringed; a well regulated militia being the best security of a free country; but no person religiously scrupulous of bearing arms shall be compelled to render military service in person." After some debate on the "religiously scrupulous" portion of this provision in both committee and in the full House, the Article came out in final form as we have it today. There was little discussion of this provision in the Senate.

Now, let's tear this article apart and try to define it. The first part says, "A well regulated militia..." Does that mean an Army? Does this mean a National Guard? When you read the debates of these meetings the answer is definitely no. The framers of this provision believed that standing armies were a threat to peace and liberty. Madison, Mason and Henry spoke at great lengths about the problems of a standing army ruling the people or supporting a tyrant. So, what was the militia? Well, according to the framers of the Constitution, and this is supported by dictionaries of that era, it was individual free men, like you and me, who would leave their usual occupations to fight for the town or the state or the government. The officers of the old militia units were often prominent businessmen or statesmen. The soldiers were just workers, like you and me, lovers of liberty. And Patrick Henry, when speaking at the Virginia Convention said "all people;" he didn't say able bodied men only.

Okay, we are not talking about any army. We are talking about free men willing to fight. The second half of this amendment states, "...being necessary to the security of a free state..." These amendments were designed to protect the people against the tyranny of central government. They were concerned about their ability to protect themselves, their families, and their friends from invasion both without and within. Is the danger any less today? I think not. Let us not forget the plight of the British during the second World War. They were about to be invaded by the German Army. If the British had been totally unarmed during an invasion, they would have been forced to peacefully submit to Nazi Germany. If this country ever again went to war, could our Army and Navy protect us at home while it is divided upon two continents? Could it protect more than 4,000 miles of coastline? I think not. It would become the responsibility of individual citizens.

Remember, our Navy was almost destroyed at Pearl Harbor and thousands of our regular army troops were lost in a holding action against the Japanese. Remember, the same people who advocate gun control are the same people who advocate cutting the budget for the Department of Defense. It could happen again. On June 20, 1940, a United Press story stated, "The British people, undaunted by Germany's air attacks, grimly asked the government to put arms in their hands so that they might meet their invaders in hand-to-hand combat." That was a reality in England a short time ago. That could be a reality for us at any time in the future....

We represent about five percent of the world's population.... President Ford and Secretary of State Henry Kissinger commented recently on the possibility of our using force against some smaller nations. Obviously, 95 percent of the rest of the world can make the same threat against the United States.

Let's discuss the threat from within. During the early days of settling our Western States, there was a threat from the powerful Indian Nations. In the 1800s, the army was most inept at protecting the frontiersmen from Indian raids. By the time the army heard about an attack and a troop of cavalry had travelled a distance of 100 miles or so, the ashes of the ranch house were cold.... That was less than a century ago and things really haven't changed. Instead of fighting Indians, we are fighting modern hoodlums. The hoodlums and the criminals are terrorizing our communities. Look at the crime statistics. Crime increased nationally by 17 per cent in 1974. This is the largest annual increase in the recorded history of this country. The largest increase was not in the central city. It was in the suburbs—the small towns and rural areas. It went up 17 per cent on the average; about 6 per cent in the major cities, about 19 per cent in the suburbs, and up 25 per cent in the towns under twenty-five thousand.

I can tell you that today's law enforcement cannot protect you. When you call, do the police immediately appear? I don't think that there is any town that, when you call, the policeman appears like a genie. In order to insure your protection, we would have to hire ten times as many policemen—as they do in many foreign countries. The costs for such an increase would be prohibitive. So, if the law enforcement agencies can't insure your protection and the protection of your family from hoodlums, it becomes your responsibility. When and if we arrive at a point in time where all the criminals are properly processed through the criminal justice system—properly meaning that the criminal no longer presents a threat to the community—and I (as a police chief) am able to insure your protection, then you may want to give up your gun. However, I don't see that secure existence ever presenting itself. The crime rate so far this year is even going up at a higher rate than in 1974.

Okay, I've talked about the threat from without and the threat from within, represented by the criminal element, but I failed to mention the terrorists. Groups like the SLA and the Weather Underground could pose a threat to you. If the police and the National Guard are busy battling these terrorists, who is going to protect your home and your family? Again, it comes down to the ability of the individual to provide for his own self-protection.

The final part of this (Second) Amendment states: "...The right of the people to keep and bear arms shall not be infringed." According to Webster's New College Dictionary, the word "infringe" means to "defeat, frustrate; violate, or transgress." The final part of the Amendment, therefore, seems to indicate that "The right of the people to keep and bear arms shall not be" violated or frustrated or defeated. Patrick Henry speaking before the Virginia Convention stated: "If you intend to reserve your unalienable rights, you must have the most expressed stipulation; for, if implication be allowed, you are ousted of those rights. If the people do not think it necessary to reserve them, they will be supposed given up." Well, ...that statement tends to sum up the intent of our forefathers in developing this Bill of Rights. So, when they said that this right should not be infringed, they meant that Government could not take this right (to keep and bear arms) from the people. Mason and Henry the other Antifederalists had just rid themselves of one King George and they wanted to retain the ability to rid themselves of any future tyrant.

Mason, Henry, Jefferson and other true patriots had some specific protections in mind when they developed our Bill of Rights. The need for liberties has not become less in our brief 200 year history. The fact that this Amendment was placed second in our Bill of Rights has special significance. Members of the House of Representatives at our First Congress were asked, after debating the amendments, to arrange them in proper order. The Bill of Rights starts with Freedom of Speech, Religion, Press and Assemblance and concludes with an admonition prohibiting the Government from taking any powers not expressly granted in the Constitution. It's interesting to note that the Right to Keep and Bear Arms was placed second after the Right of Free Speech and Religion.

Judicially, the full intent of this Constitutional Right has not been tested. In reviewing an old legal text book, I found this definition of the Second Amendment: "This Amendment means no more than that the right of bearing arms for a lawful purpose shall not be infringed by Congress. It is one of the amendments that has no other effect than to restrict the powers of the National Government, leaving the people to look for their protection against any violation by their fellow citizens of the rights it recognizes to be the State power of internal police." ...

Let's discuss the thinking and reasoning behind those who desire to compromise our liberties. They cite the misuse of guns as a reason for their abolition. They point out that a certain percentage of all robberies, murders and assaults are accomplished with firearms. What they seem to overlook is the fact that we are talking about a very small percentage of people. Would it be fair to sanction 99-plus percent of the people in an effort to control one-tenth of one percent of the population? If such a sanction were imposed on the populace, would it work? Would it be effective? Would it be a viable alternative? Most emphatically no. Tim Sullivan gave New York one of the strictest gun laws in this country and it has done little to help New York. Criminals still use guns in New York. As a matter of fact, New York and several other States with strict gun control laws have distinguished themselves with their high crime rate. Some officials from these States are now asking the government to ride roughshod over the Second Amendment. They want others to share in the unsuccessful efforts of their gun control measures. You see, when a criminal makes up his mind to violate one law, like robbery, the violation of another law is a very small thing. A professional criminal—one who makes a living by violating the law—doesn't give a thought about violating society's rules. He has his own rules. So, gun laws, like those in New York, restrict the law-abiding citizen and not the criminal.

Alan S. Krug, an economist formerly with Pennsylvania State University, completed a comparison study of jurisdictions with strong gun laws compared to those with lenient laws. He found that firearms are involved in only three percent of all crimes. He found that while the number of guns purchased and owned by citizens has increased significantly during the past decade, the number of deaths resulting from firearms, per hundred thousand population, has remained fairly constant. So, the availability of firearms to the general public is not the cause of abuse. The United States Congress in 1967 involved itself in a study dealing with the hypothesis that strict firearm licensing laws resulted in a lower crime rate. The study found no correlation between firearm regulations and crime. The antagonists of our liberties appear to be utilizing a false and emotional argument as a reason for infringing upon our rights. When that is done by government, it smacks of tyranny. King George the third is alive and well in the United States today.

Now listen to this king, or would be king. The United States Senate Judiciary Committee of the 93rd Congress, headed by Senator Sam Ervin of Watergate fame, drafted a "Layman's Guide to Individual Rights Under the United States Constitution." Under the Second Amendment, the following quote is provided: "The Right to Bear Arms. The Second Amendment provides for the freedom of the citizen to protect himself against both disorder in the community and attack from foreign enemies. This right to bear arms has become much less important in recent decades as well-trained military and police forces have been developed to protect the citizen."...I wonder where they got that information. I don't know anything about it. "No longer does he need to place reliance on having his own weapons available," says the quotation. And I say no thank you, King Sam. This Senate Committee believes that your right is not as important as it once was. I disagree. I believe that this right is just as important today as it was when it was developed. It is an unalienable right of the people promulgated for posterity by our forefathers. It will not be infringed.

Now listen to this. The new Attorney General of the United States, Edward Levi, in a meeting just a few weeks ago, came out with a proposition that would impose Federal gun control on certain cities, at certain times, under certain conditions. To me, it is incredible that this brilliant legal scholar has not heard of the Second and Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution....

The answer to gun abuse lies not in abolishing the right of the majority, but in protecting that majority against a few. This end should be achieved by the criminal justice system, working with existing law. The proper administration of penalties against those who abuse this right will act as a proper deterrent. I have statistics on the workings of this Criminal Justice System which indicate that the criminal is more often rewarded with probation than censured by punishment. Those who would propose an endorsement for the abolition of our right to keep and bear arms must seriously consider this (are you listening A.C.L.U.): They must seriously question their future position on the relinquishment or renunciation of other Constitutional guarantees. For to surrender and abandon one liberty might well lead to the surrender of others. When man forsakes his liberties, he becomes a slave.

And now there's this House of Lords who would impose something. Listen to what this group has to say. The United States Conference of Mayors just a few days ago endorsed a proposition that would take our bullets away. Now this is the theft of our Second Amendment rights by trick and device. A special form of theft covered in the penal code and we say, no, thank you, Lord Mayors, we will not have that here.

In conclusion, let me say that Mason and Henry and Jefferson probably had these protections in mind when they drafted our Bill of Rights. Certainly, the value of these liberties is no less today than it was at the time of our founding. The abandonment of these guarantees will ultimately lead to the destruction of this great Nation. I am but a servant of the people and a lover of liberty and I cannot let that happen.

And there is in existence in the beginning of the bicentennial, a well coordinated nation-wide effort to strip us of our personal Constitutional right, to keep and bear arms. Unless we match the efforts of those would-be tyrants, we will lose these (Constitutional) rights. We must alert our fellow countrymen and have them stand with us. Perhaps our badge or lapel pin during the bicentennial period could be a serpent floating in a circle with a No. 2 inside. This would be similar to the Minuteman flag of the Colony of Virginia where Patrick Henry did his great work for us. That flag said, "Liberty or Death—Don't Tread on Me."

And let this bicentennial of ours mark the beginning of a new declaration against tyrants. Let this bicentennial mark an awareness of our unalienable rights. Let this mark a return to a deep reverence for the law, its principles, and our rights, and obligations.

(End of Presentation)

PRECIS:

The Second Amendment is an integral part of the United States Constitution. Article Six of that Constitution affirms that it "... shall be the Supreme Law of the Land; and the Judges in every State shall be bound thereby...". Furthermore:

"The general rule is that an unconstitutional statute, though having the form and name of law, is in reality no law, but is wholly void, and ineffective for any purpose; since unconstitutionality dates from the time of its enactment, and not merely from the date of the decision so branding it. An unconstitutional law, in legal contemplation, is as inoperative as if it had never been passed. Such a statute leaves the question that it purports to settle just as it would be had the statute not been enacted.

"Such an unconstitutional law is void, the general principles follow that it imposes no duties, confers no rights, creates no office, bestows no power or authority on anyone, affords no protection, and justifies no acts performed under it....

"No one is bound to obey an unconstitutional law and no courts are bound to enforce it." (Sixteenth American Jurisprudence, Second Section, 177.)

Our problem is how to force the officers of the courts to obey the laws by which they are legally bound.

DON BELL REPORTS Weekly, presenting the Christian American point of view. Two copies of each issue are sent each subscriber. $24 per year. Extra copies: 10¢ each. Please address all orders and inquiries to:
DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

HUMPHREY AND JAVITS BECOME BEDFELLOWS FOR PROMOTION OF THE PLANNED SOCIETY

TOWARD A SOCIALIST AMERICA

During this Nation's recent and pre-planned winter of discontent, five men got together to draft plans for America's future and for the future of its inhabitants. Four of these men were long-standing members of that exclusive conglomerate of the Eastern Establishment known as the Council on Foreign Relations, the fifth was a representative of that center for the promotion of Fabian Socialism known as Harvard University. Occupationally, one was a Republican Senator, one was a Democratic Senator, one was a Big Labor Leader, one was a Big Business Executive, the fifth was a Representative of Academia. By name and profession, they were: Senator Hubert Horatio Humphrey, representing Minnesota and the World; Senator Jacob K. Javits, representing New York and Socialist Israel; Leonard Woodcock, president of the United Auto Workers; J. Irwin Miller, chairman of Cummins Engine Co. and Wassily Leontief, Nobel Laureate in Economics and co-chairman of the Initiative Committee for National Economic Planning.

With Humphrey and Javits acting on behalf of the five, there was introduced in the U.S. Senate, the Balanced Growth and Economic Planning Act of 1975. This is a blueprint for the creation of a Planned Society, complete with five-year plans, carrot-and-stick enforcement measures, and all the other legislative and administrative paraphernalia which made Russia the slave nation that it is today.

First, let us understand the real meaning and the full import of economic planning at the government level, which is pure Socialism, nothing less.

Seymour E. Harris, professor of economics at Harvard University, Fabian Socialist and a forerunner of this aforementioned Wassily Leontief, was one of the first promoters of Economic Planning for the United States. In 1949 he published a textbook on the subject, in which he praised Soviet Russia for the great strides that had been made in economic planning up to that time, and in which he bemoaned the fact that the United States would not subscribe to total economic planning at the government level (at that time.) Harris admitted, in the preface to his book, that "under the capitalist system, the allocation of economic resources is determined by businessmen responding to preferences expressed by . . . consumers; but under planning the hated bureaucrat may determine what is to be produced and when."

His book begins with this statement:

"Planning has no place under pure capitalism, for it does not allow much room for the capitalist trinity—sovereignty of the consumer, the tyranny of the price system, and the quest for profits. In a planned economy, the economic architects generally determine what is to be made. . . . Their targets are set according to an objective determined by the state. . . . and since these goals are selected by the general board of strategy, acting for the party, the government, or the people, the planned economy supplants the entrepreneur, who is the human magneto in the capitalist system."

Finally, Fabian Socialist Seymour Harris comes to this conclusion: "It is indeed unfortunate that Americans know so little about the planned economy. In this quasi-war world, a planned society may be just around the corner. Even in a peaceful world, the survival of a capitalist society, an island in a socialist sea, is not probable. Capitalism may well be but a stage in the historical process from feudalism to socialism."

It is obvious that Humphrey, Javits and their comrades are in agreement with this theory of historical analysis that Karl Marx called dialectical materialism, because their "Balanced Growth and Economic Planning Act of 1975" would spell the end of free enterprise and all other forms of freedom.

Senator Humphrey said: "The Federal Government has become the last bastion of un-planned activity in the modern world. . . . The Federal Government . . . must learn to look ahead, to at least try to see down the road. That is what our bill is designed to do. . . . I hope that many of my colleagues will join me in sponsoring this important new legislation....”

Then Senator Javits said, in part: “Many people are reluctant to consider the need for planning in this country because of its pejorative connotations. At bottom they are convinced that planning means regimentation, and the end of the American free enterprise system. This concern proceeds from the assumption that planning will dictate economic activity and supplant the free market. This assumption is highly erroneous in the case of our bill for several reasons: first, the Economic Planning Board cannot tell anyone what to do—its powers are those of persuasion—not direction. Second, the planning process brings in all parties and all interests and requires the approval of Congress—it will open up economic debate in this country rather than limit it.” In this statement Senator Javits truly reveals his character as a deceiver rather than an outright prevaricator. What he says of this legislation could also be said of the whole Regional Governance Conspiracy with its Domestic Council and the Ten Regional Councils, and OMB with its PPBS and General and Special Revenue Sharing systems: they don’t “tell anyone what to do” either; they merely say, in effect, “If you don’t do it our way, we’ll cut off your money supply.” The deceptiveness of Javit’s statement will be further revealed when we analyze the bill itself.

So much for the preliminary statements of Senators Humphrey and Javits. At a press conference called to let the world know that this specially created “Initiative Committee for National Economic Planning” was backing the Humphrey-Javits Bill, Big Labor Boss Leonard Woodcock also spoke. He said in part:

“The need for long-range democratic economic planning on a national basis has never been more urgent.... Experience has taught us that the unseen magic of the so-called free market does not work.... Our economic well-being and our basic freedom of choice too often have been decided by the wrong people, for the wrong reasons, in the wrong time frame.... The bill is distinctively American—which is Federalism in action.” (and here Labor Boss Woodcock makes a slip of the tongue and reveals a “home truth” that was to have remained hidden: this National Planning Bill is a part of the New Federalism that the Rockefeller dominated Eastern Establishment has been promoting since the early 1960s).

At this same press conference, J. Irwin Miller—representing Big Business—also made a statement for the benefit of the press (as represented by the Washington Post and the New York Times). He said, in part:

“...If business did not plan careful cost-effective use of scarce assets, it could not survive.... As business looks at the nation, much the same condition seems to lie in its future as well.... planning is now a necessary and vital tool for the accomplishment of any long-term economic objectives, public or private....”

And the last speaker at this press conference was the Fabian Socialist economist from Harvard, Dr. Wassily Leontief. Here are excerpts from his presentation:

“...The framers of the bill, ‘The Balanced Growth and Economic Planning Act,’ propose to establish an adequate institutional framework for keeping the complex and delicate mechanism of the American economy in good working order. This involves much more than watching a few aggregate pointers on a stripped-down statistical dashboard and shifting back and forth two levers: one controlling the budget, the other regulating the discount rate. It requires lifting the hood, and adjusting if necessary, the operation of all moving parts of the engine, and occasionally replacing those that turn out to be defective. What the government and the public need is a Service Manual describing gears, nuts and bolts; not just a Keynesian ‘Owners Manual,’ of the kind usually found in the glove compartment of a new car, which tells you only how to replace a bulb or change a tire. In other words, the maintenance of our national economy in good working order is predicated on a steady, massive flow of detailed, up-to-date factual information....”

Although he attempts to deny it later on in his speech, Comrade Leontief, in using this automated Service Manual figure of speech, makes it quite clear that totalitarian control of the American economy by a Central and Dictatorial Authority is what he is talking about. And history has shown that whenever a Central Authority controls the production and distribution of goods, it must also control the consumers as well as the producers of those goods. This is exactly the situation which exists in Russia, Red China and other totalitarian countries; and it is exactly the situation which Comrade Leontief hopes to bring about in the United States.

STOP PRESS BULLETIN: An important fact which we discovered after we had started to write this Report: The “Initiative Committee for National Economic Planning” is really a four-man group, not a three-man committee as was indicated by Humphrey and Javits in the announcement of their co-sponsorship of this Planned Society Act. In addition to Leonard Woodcock, representing Big Labor; J. Irwin Miller, representing Big Business; and Wassily Leontief, representing the Intellectual Community; there is also Robert V. Roosa, representing the International Bankers. Roosa is a partner in the prestigious firm of Brown Brothers, Harriman. He is, of course, a member of the Council on Foreign Relations, as are Humphrey, Javits and Miller.

Roosa's involvement in the cabal was disclosed by Jack Friedman, a management consultant with Arthur D. Little, Inc., and who also writes on a "string" basis for the Business and Finance Section of The New York Times. In a lead article appearing in The Times of Sunday, May 18, Friedman also indicated that the "private group" backing the Humphrey-Javits Bill was a "three-man group." He omitted the name of J. Irwin Miller (Big Business) but added the name of Robert V. Roosa (International Banking.) For whatever importance it may have in the propaganda sense: in reporting the results of the Humphrey-Javits press conference, The Washington Post left out the name of Roosa as a backer of the bill; while The New York Times left out the name of J. Irwin Miller.

In his report in the New York Times, Jack Friedman also revealed that there was some opposition to the Planned Society Act in Big Business circles. He even named some CFR members as being opposed to the Bill. Here are excerpts from the Friedman article:

Although widely practiced in Western Europe planning was for years associated here with Communist central planning alone. It has not been attempted in the United States in peace time since the National Resources Planning Board of the New Deal Days.

A change in thinking has recently occurred. America's economic turmoil during the last decade has created a new open-mindedness throughout the United States, even among businessmen, toward the idea of national planning....

The Humphrey-Javits bill would establish comprehensive planning, with consideration of the economy as a whole... gross national product, investment, employment, prices, government spending, taxes and other factors. When imbalances between national needs and resources are identified, specific steps could be taken to correct them (as in any communist country—Ed.)

According to this concept, the plan, covering six years (to make it seem different from Soviet five year plans?—Ed.), would be a guiding document for the executive branch. It would be revised and extended every two years....

The first step in establishing United States planning would be to improve data collection, analysis and forecasting capabilities (more P.P.S.S., or Management by Objective, as it is generally called as of this writing—Ed.). The incompleteness and decentralization until recently of data gathering on energy is cited as an example of the general weakness of current collection methods....

(But there is opposition, as Timesman Jack Friedman points out)..

Despite the support for planning without direct controls, there is fear that it could create momentum toward such controls, fears that often spur violent opposition:

Walter Wriston, chairman of the First National City Bank, believes that the Leontief group "is pressing for a program designed to destroy the free-market system and with it our personal liberty. National economic planning would be delegated to bureaucrats who, like all regulators, would then require arbitrary power to enforce each decision."

Conservative Senator James Buckley of New York agrees: "The economic efficiency that comes from the free-market system is the key to satisfying human needs. Planning will systematically inhibit industry's ability to respond to the wishes of individuals."

Eli Shapiro, chairman of the finance committee at the Travelers Corporation, asks: "How do you keep planners, who believe that they have a better vision of the future than anyone else, from eventually trying to run the private sector as a self-appointed elite?"

(End of quotations from NYT article)

As Congress adjourned for the Memorial Day vacation, the Humphrey-Javits bill had not yet been made available to the press. But Senator Humphrey did prepare a "Fact Sheet on the Balanced Growth and Economic Planning Act of 1975." This fact sheet explained that the purpose of the Act "is to establish procedures within Congress and the Executive Branch to formulate systematically and comprehensively long-term national economic goals and to recommend policy that will match goals and resources."

When enacted and implemented the bill will—and notice how it “hits all the bases” and provides for total socialization of the nation and its resources—“establish long-term economic objectives, paying particular attention to the attainment of the goals of full employment, price stability, balanced economic growth, an equitable distribution of income, efficient utilization of private and public resources, balanced regional and urban development, stable international relations, and meeting essential national needs in various sectors of the economy. The plan will identify the resources required for achieving the objectives and recommend legislative and administrative actions to achieve them.”

If the Federal Government is going to do all of these things for all of the people, there will be nothing left for the private sector and the people to do but “cooperate and obey.” Personal liberty, private property and individual initiative will have become un-American concepts.

Here is the “machinery” of which Wassily Leontief spoke, and we are quoting directly from the Humphrey-Javits Fact Sheet:

“The bill sets up an Economic Planning Board in the Office of the President, provides for Congressional review and approval or disapproval of each proposed plan, and established procedures for public participation in the planning process. (The public participation is provided through utilization of the Regional Governance machinery already installed and in operation—Ed.).

“The Economic Planning Board is composed of three members, appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate. The Board will operate in close association with the Council on Economic Planning, composed of members of the President’s Cabinet and other high ranking officials. There is also an Advisory Committee on Economic Planning composed of 4 members appointed by the President, 4 members appointed by the Speaker of the House, and 4 members appointed by the President of the Senate (who also is Vice President of the United States. For example, Nelson Rockefeller, although an appointed official (with the advice and consent of the Senate) is second in command in the Executive Branch and first in command of the upper house of the Legislative Branch—Ed.).

This three-man Economic Planning Board is top banana in this arrangement, and:

“It is the Board’s duty to submit a proposed balanced economic growth plan to the Council for its approval...The Board is responsible for evaluating and reporting on achievement of the goals and objectives in any approved plan, determining whether major Federal programs are consistent with any approved plan, and coordinating the long-term planning activities of Federal agencies.

“The function of the Council is to review any proposed plan submitted by the Board, and transmit it...to the President. The functions of the Advisory Committee are to help provide the Board and the Council with the views of broad segments of the public...and to establish advisory subcommittees.”

There is also a “Division of Economic Information” which is to operate as a kind of public relations department through the Domestic Council and the Ten Federal Regional Councils “to assist in the dissemination of information to State and local governments and to private persons so that they can...participate effectively in the planning process.”

In handing out this Fact Sheet to reporters, he also gave out a prepared statement in which he said, in part:

“...We are not going to meet our critical needs in areas such as employment, price stability, housing, education, health, and transportation unless we establish some long-term goals and focus our economic policies on the achievement of those goals. ...It has been correctly observed that the federal government has become one of the last bastions of unplanned activity....

“The Federal Government has an obligation to the people under the Employment Act of 1946...I believe that the Balanced Growth and Economic Planning legislation we are releasing...is a major step in providing the modern tools we need to improve the performance of the economy. A major piece of complementary legislation is the Equal Opportunity and Full Employment Act of 1975, which would focus federal planning and policy on providing full employment. I intend to hold hearings before the Joint Economic Committee in June to carefully integrate these two major policy areas.”

A future letter will deal with this new “Employment Act” and other Humphrey-Javits plans to Collectivize America.

DON BELL REPORTS Weekly. $24 per year.
Extra copies: 10¢ each. Address all orders:
DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

TO SAVE THE WORLD AND LOSE AMERICA

IN MEMORIAM?

In the old Orient they called it "losing face." It was a very serious, a terminal matter. When any person of importance, responsibility and respectability lost face, the only honorable recourse was to report personally to one's ancestors in the spirit world by committing suicide. They have a special name for it in Japan, and a ceremonial rite. According to the ancient Bushido code, in which honor is valued above life, the one who has lost face also loses his head at the hands of his best friend, who performs the coup de grace with the victim's samurai sword.

Nations also lose face, as did the United States in the eyes of Orientals primarily, and Occidentals secondarily. A current Freedom Club Bulletin begins:

"If you like Kissinger's 'Detente' and 'treaties' you will love just a very brief review of a few 1975 happenings:

- A. Loss of Laos.
- B. Pillage of Cambodia.
- C. Conquest of Vietnam.
- D. Portugal take over.
- E. Continuing Chinese Communist narcotics export.
- F. Communist espionage and theft of computer technology.
- G. Kidnappings and bombings by Communist Groups in our own Republic.
- H. Indian Ocean buildup by Soviet armed forces.
- I. The next scheduled "Peaceful Coexistence" involves Panama."

As the author indicated, there is much, much more that could be added to this list of "face losing" items. And, as suggested, the listed items all have to do with the activities of one Henry Kissinger, who seems to be the best friend who is holding the sword and who is preparing to perform the coup de grace on Uncle Sam.

A current intelligence report by Frank A. Capell notes that "The so-called detente between the U.S., the Soviet Union, Communist China and various Communist satellites was carefully worked out on a long range basis...part of the plan for strengthening the world Communist movement. The Communist control of South Vietnam, Cambodia and Laos, and the impending Red activities elsewhere in Southeast Asia are also part of the plan."

"Henry Kissinger's cooperation with the Communists has not been limited to Southeast Asia," Capell continues. "The invasion of Cyprus and the State Department's policies in connection with Greece and Turkey have turned both countries against the United States and the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, which was set up in the first place to protect Europe. The Communist takeover of Portugal was accomplished with no interference whatsoever from Henry Kissinger in spite of CIA requests to give aid to the anti-Communists in Portugal..."

"Through the efforts of Henry Kissinger, the U.S. has recognized Communist East Germany, an objective that Moscow and the satellites had been working toward for many years.... In the Middle East, Henry Kissinger has again aided the Communist Conspiracy, whose objective here is to gain control of the Arab oil fields.... The Ford administration (like the Nixon administration), following the policies of Henry Kissinger like puppets, continues to pour hundreds of millions of dollars in aid to India, knowing full well that India has become virtually a satellite of the Soviet Union....

"... With U.S. foreign policy and intelligence services under the control of Henry Kissinger... the recent advances made by the Communists have gone beyond their wildest expectations. Not only have they been successful in takeovers but they have caused other still free countries to reconsider whether the U.S. is a worthwhile ally, whether they can depend on our word and pledges of support...." (End of quotation from Frank A. Capell's "Confidential Intelligence Report," Box 3, Zarephath, N.J. 08890. Published monthly, $10 per year).

From another source comes corroborating evidence, though written from the economic (as contrasted with the political) standpoint. The author of a highly respected newsletter of Swiss origin writes:

"Communism is spreading with lightning speed. Portugal is in their control regardless of recent elections. In France the red or in-bed-with-red vote speaks ominously. In Britain trade unionism is so destructive to the interests of the nation as to render it rudderless and vulnerable.... In Italy the only thing that works is the Communist party. Next on the masterplan is Spain. Socialism has virtually devoured Denmark, Sweden and Holland....

"As an appendix to the above, here are an assortment of straws-in-the-wind notes which illustrate how far we are down the road to socialism and currency destruction and the shredding of the fabric of society...

1. Ford Motor in Great Britain asks staff to work harder, staff strikes, locks bosses out. 2. Portuguese revolutionaries, in charge, locked a businessman out of his office, said he was a 'capitalist who works too hard' (set bad example, apparently). 3. State Department pushed for every U.S. citizen required to carry government ID card, with fingerprints (ID cards are essential for 1984 big brother type control). 4. Stuart Hollander sent this Taylor Caldwell quote from 'Pillar of Iron'—which was said of Rome before her fall: 'We have come on the age of tyrants. Governments use national emergencies to restrict, and then destroy, liberty.' For 60% of the world this is already a fait accompli. For the western democracies it is well into the second phase....

"...The World Bank, long a treacherous arm of the IMF, is now financing the most radical, socialist experiments in the world; in Tanzania, Algeria, Somalia, Ethiopia. The World Bank has long been, now furiously so, a prime promoter and financier of socialism in the 3rd world... And so goes the list. In fact, these aren't so much straws in the wind anymore as drops of rain, turning from a light sprinkle to a heavy downpour. When it creates a flood, you had better have an ark ready." (Quoted from Harry Schultz Letter No. 336, Mid May, 1975).

And with such a background from which to start out, accidental President Gerald Ford and intended Secretary of State Henry Kissinger set out from Washington to "keep the world safe for democracy," leaving Congress not in session and appointee Nelson Rockefeller in charge.

First, however, there was the Mayaguez incident which would boost Ford's image in some quarters and leave him open to charges of "gunboat diplomacy" in others. Here at home, the handling of the news, and the deliberate suppression of facts concerning the series of events surrounding the rescue of 39 men at the cost of 41 lives all combined to widen that credibility gap which continues to separate the people from their federal government. As a military maneuver, the chief complaint seemed to be that the whole operation was conducted from the Pentagon, and the officer in command of the assault, Lt. Col. Randall W. Austin, made no decisions on his own but merely relayed orders given him via radio from Pentagon superiors, all of which, as the late General Patton might say "is a helluva way to fight a war." U.S. News & World Report summarized:

"Throughout the operation, highest officials in the Pentagon remained in radio contact with an airborne command post that circled above the fighting, providing a voice link between officers in the field and their superiors in Washington. Asked if there might have been too much supervision, one Pentagon general replied, 'Let's say there was enough'."

If compared with a similar operation led by Stephen Decatur against the Barbary pirates in 1804, it must be concluded that the Mayaguez incident was a sorry operation indeed. But then, President Thomas Jefferson did not use the Tripolitan War to promote personal political ends. He permitted Decatur to have the last words and the glory ("may she always be in the right; but our country, right or wrong." Current propaganda would substitute "government" for "country" in that toast—resulting in a kind of subtle treason in thought).

Anyway, "Ford — Up, Up and Away," was the headline coined by "Newsweek." Just before departing for Europe, however, Ford called in four favorite European newsmen and gave them his views on world problems, for publication in Europe. Briefly, his comments:

ON RUSSIA: I think detente has had mutual benefits... I don't believe that those who challenge detente and say it is one-sided are accurate.... We have clearly said that detente is not a fishing license in troubled waters... We intend to be very firm, but detente gives us an opportunity to be flexible... in a very meaningful way.

ON PORTUGAL: I am concerned about the Communist element and therefore Portugal's relationship with NATO... I intend to discuss this while in Brussels.

ON SPAIN: We think Spain, because of its geographical location, because of other factors, is important... We believe that somehow Spain should be eased into a greater role in the over-all situation in Europe.

ON TURKEY: Turkey is a fine ally in NATO. We have had, over a long period of time, excellent political and diplomatic relations with Turkey. I am working very hard to try and get the Congress to remove that limitation on aid to Turkey.

ON MIDEAST OIL: We have sought... to have a policy of co-operation rather than confrontation... Since we do believe in co-operation, we don't consider military operations as a part of any policy planning that we have in mind.

ON THE U.S.: I believe that the United States, the American people will completely live up to any international commitments that we have.

After laying this groundwork, and against the background which we have described, Ford was off for the first visit of an "accidental President" with the heads of state of the Nations of Europe. First he would go to Brussels to shore up NATO. Then to Madrid to talk to President Franco and try to get Spain to join NATO and continue to provide bases for U.S. air, sea and land forces. From Spain back to Salzburg in Austria where a meeting had been arranged with President Sadat of Egypt. Then, on June 3, from Salzburg to Rome, where he would call on Pope Paul and see the present President Leone of Italy. And, as you read this letter, President Ford should be on his way back to, or already in, Washington, D.C.

It should be noted that Henry Kissinger went to Europe before Gerald Ford, and made an unusual commitment on a world food supply before joining Ford in Brussels. Addressing the 24-nation Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD), Kissinger told his fellow Western ministers that they must work together "to restore sustained and stable economic growth." But, he added, this in an "increasingly interdependent world, would not be enough to assure prosperity." So, as an American gesture, he promised that we would "contribute toward a $1-billion fund to increase food production in developing countries."

Coincidentally, a Food Emergency Bulletin has just been received as we write this. It notes that the U.S. Government continues to hand out grains and other food supplies to Russia and the Red Satellites, and: "...the government has pledged itself to continue handing out food to the world, and refuses to build up any emergency supplies" for the United States! This is yet another example of the Kissinger strategy of "saving the world while destroying the United States." But saving the world for whom? The Rockefellers and the Rothschilds?

As for the United States, considered apart from the world scene, a key quotation in a newsletter from the American Research Institute seemed to "hit the nail on the head." It said: "By creating an economic crisis which leaves millions unemployed, without the means to obtain food or shelter, it develops into a battle for the "survival of the fittest," as people revert back to the law of the jungle. This then serves as evidence that the present economic system and form of government no longer work and becomes an excuse for a national emergency wherein the government seizes control of everything, and a new form of government is established."

Backing up this prediction is a recently published book by Ronald Segal, who is said to have written the book while a Visiting Fellow at the leftwing Center for the Study of Democratic Institutions. Segal wrote:

"That an economic crash will occur, to force a fundamental readjustment, if not the displacement of the capitalist system itself, seems certain. And there are signs that the crash is close." This is from page 177 of the book "The Decline and Fall of the American Dollar." The author describes a new monetary system which would:

"reduce the role of money itself to a merely marginal one. Education, medicine, transport, electricity, housing, clothing and food would be provided free, with each citizen assigned an equal amount of currency."

It was Col. Arch Roberts of the Committee to Restore the Constitution, Inc., who declared that "Political madmen in Washington have created economic chaos, shortages of food and fuel, confiscatory taxation, a crisis in education, the threat of war, and other diversions to condition Americans for regional government dictatorship." We may add; Because of its dictatorial nature, this new form of government requires a new economic system because, as Henry Kissinger says, "economic issues are turning into central political issues" (from his speech at OECD on May 27, 1975).

What has gone before in this letter should put into proper context what is to follow:

◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆

THE PLANNED SOCIETY ACT

On May 21, 1975, Senator Hubert Horatio Humphrey introduced Senate Bill 1795, "The Balanced Growth and Economic Planning Act of 1975." Immediately endorsed and seconded by Senator Jacob K. Javits and sponsored by Senators Bayh, Eagleton, McGovern, McGee, Nelson and Clark, the bill was referred to the Senate Committee on Government Operations.

The contents, and the dangers, of this bill have been discussed in previous letters. However, something new was added when the bill was presented: it is offered as "A bill to amend the Employment Act of 1946 by providing for the development and adoption of a Balanced Economic Growth Plan, and for other purposes."

It was this "Employment Act of 1946" that installed inflation as a permanent fiscal policy of the federal government. The first paragraph of this Act reads:

"The Congress hereby declares that it is the continuing policy and responsibility of the federal government to use all practicable means consistent with its needs and obligations and other essential considerations of national policy, with the assistance and cooperation of industry, agriculture, labor, and State and local governments, to coordinate and utilize all its plans, functions, and resources for the purpose of creating and maintaining, in a manner calculated to foster and promote free competitive enterprise and the general welfare, conditions under which there will be afforded useful employment opportunities, including self-employment, for those able, willing and seeking to work, and to promote maximum employment, production, and purchasing power."

In his highly recommended "Remnant Review," Gary North had occasion to refer to this Employment Act of 1946. He labeled it "probably the classic piece of Keynesian legislation" since it declares it to be the duty and responsibility of the federal government to maintain high levels of employment; "full employment" being the ultimate goal. This is to be accomplished by the use of Keynesian fiscal measures. "The federal government," writes Mr. North, "is supposed to intervene in the marketplace whenever 'effective demand' drops as a result of the individual preferences of those who would trade (or refrain from trading) voluntarily. The state is to increase 'effective demand' by buying up strategic items, such as airplanes that do not fly, or even worse, airplanes that fly for a little while and then come down very, very fast. Apparently, there is not enough 'effective demand' for these items on the free market, and those who produce them often find themselves unemployed when they continue to manufacture them.... The policy makers believe that when unemployment increases, they can simply crank up Federal spending, and unemployment figures will inevitably tumble." (Quoted from Gary North's "Remnant Review," Vol. II, No. 10. Published every other Wednesday. $45 for 26 issues. P. O. Box 5025, Long Beach, CA, 90805.)

Thus comes inflation, which at this writing is accompanied by recession. They coined a new word for it, and call it stagflation. And even the Keynesians are beginning to understand that full employment is no answer, because full employment without full production will bring on uncontrollable inflation. And full production is not the whole answer, because if the things produced are not sold or used, and simply pile up in warehouses, then recession is inevitable—and then unemployment begins again.

Boom and bust, the vicious circle, which has existed ever since governments began trying to revoke the law of supply and demand. It was the Fabian Socialist Stuart Chase who understood that something more than full employment and full production was necessary, that government control of employment, production and distribution was essential if socialism were to replace free enterprise. In his book "The Nemesis of American Business" he called for detailed and complete planning:

"In my judgment, the only final way out lies through planned production.... For America, industrial co-ordination must probably take the form of a drastic revision of the anti-trust laws; an alliance between industry, trade association, and government to control investment (i.e., plant capacity) on the one hand, and to guard against unwarranted monopoly prices on the other; a universal system of minimum wages and guaranteed hours of labor to frighten off fly-by-night entrepreneurs and to stimulate purchasing power; and finally ... the setting up of a National Planning Board as a fact gatherer and in turn an adviser... on every major economic undertaking in accordance with a master blueprint."

Stuart Chase, author of the preceding quotation which was first published in 1931, was a Harvard graduate (1910), a lifelong member of the London Fabian Society, a member of the Fabian Society's American affiliate, the League for Industrial Democracy, and the author of innumerable books and articles (including an advance prospectus for insiders written in 1928 and entitled "A New Deal." Chase's masterwork was a book called "The Proper Study of Mankind," published in 1948. Its publication was subsidized by the Carnegie Foundation on behalf of the Social Science Research Council which, in turn, was financed by the Rockefeller Foundation. In this "bible of American Fabianism," Stuart Chase wrote:

"Theoretically, a society could be completely made over in something like fifteen years, the time it takes to inculcate a new culture into a rising crop of youngsters.... Culture patterns do change and can be changed.

"These are some of the exciting vistas which anthropology and sociology open up to the inquiring layman. ... Furthermore, it is not a doctrine, a philosophy, a prophet's message. It is social science where reasonable proof has been established, and speculation practically eliminated. It is something you can lean up against." (For further information concerning Stuart Chase and the Fabian Socialist movement in America, we recommend two books by Rose L. Martin; "Fabian Freeway," and "The Selling of America;" Fidelis Publishers Inc., P.O.Box 1338, Santa Monica, CA, 90406.)

It took a little more than fifteen years, but the plan has been working, society has been "made over," and the installation of the New Order is to be a function of what Americans are being told is a "Bicentennial Celebration."

At the Federal level, one thing remains to be set up: the National Planning Board of which Chase wrote in 1931. And a chief provision of the Humphrey-Javits Bill, S. 1795, is the establishment of a National Planning Board (renamed the Economic Planning Board in S. 1795).

Can you see why, in introducing the bill, Humphrey could boast that "This is an extremely important bill, perhaps the most important I have authored in my Senate career"? And can you also see why this bill must never be permitted to become a law of the land?

DON BELL REPORTS Weekly, accenting the Christian American point of view. $24 per year. Extra copies: 10 cents each. Please address all orders and inquiries: DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223 Palm Beach, Florida 33480

ANOTHER AGONIZING REAPPRAISAL

DECLINE AND FALL OF THE AMERICAN EMPIRE

"The concern about where America is going has been eased—probably eliminated," said Secretary of State Henry Kissinger to assorted reporters while aboard the Presidential plane flying back to the United States and bringing home a weary but satisfied President after a week of visiting with the leaders of some 17 countries.

Kissinger said the 'concern' is gone about where the United States is headed, but he did not answer the leading question concerning 'where' we are headed. U.S. foreign policy, in the wake of Vietnam, is due for a drastic overhaul—or an "agonizing reappraisal," as a former Secretary of State would have described it—and we know that Gerald Ford's trip to Europe had much to do with this drastic overhaul. We also know that for the first time since Richard Nixon visited the Middle East while yet a President, Kissinger was forced to play "second fiddle" on a diplomatic jaunt; and this time Kissinger did not threaten to resign. To the contrary, he said he would not resign as long as he felt needed.

So, it seems certain that Kissinger is going to direct our new foreign policy, despite Ford's sudden stealing of the spotlight. But it is not at all certain just what that new foreign policy is going to be.

One of the better recent attempts at an analysis of the new foreign policy of the United States is the work of James McCartney of the Washington Bureau of the Knight newspaper conglomerate, which appeared in the Knight dailies of Sunday, June 1, 1975. We reprint the article, although we do not agree in full with the conclusions of the author:

* * * * *

Washington—The United States is developing a post-Vietnam foreign policy that may well involve the most basic changes since World War II. The policy of containment of communism is gone, wiped out by Vietnam. The so-called Nixon Doctrine is also on recent history's junk heap. Only bits and pieces of it remain.

No new name has been chosen officially to describe the evolving policy, but Undersecretary of State Joseph Sisco has made a try. His choice: "selective engagement." That means that the United States is going to pick and choose far more carefully whom it supports in the world and how it supports them.

Secretary of State Kissinger is trying to get down to what one official has described as "the bedrock of real American interests" that the public and Congress could be expected to support. A difficulty is that neither Kissinger nor anyone else has yet been able to define exactly what American "interests" are so that the public and Congress can be sure what he is talking about.

No formal announcement of an attempt to put together a new policy has come from the White House, but one top-level State Department official concedes that "a re-examination of our posture worldwide" is under way. "It started in the Pacific, with the end of Vietnam," he said, "but it's much bigger than that."

Current European trips by both Ford and Kissinger are a result, in part, of the policy re-examination. The trips are designed to dramatize continuing U.S. interests in Europe. The outlines of a new policy are already discernible from interviews with top-level officials and from administration statements. And the reason for no formal announcement is also clear. Officials are not anxious to shake up allies with fears about where the United States may be going. Many already are shaken by Vietnam.

More than that, the announcement of a "reappraisal" or "reassessment" in foreign policy normally is used as a diplomatic device to try to bring a recalcitrant party into line. Ford and Kissinger already had fired that weapon against Israel with announcement of a "reassessment" of Mideast policy at the end of Kissinger's last negotiating trip to Egypt and Israel. They didn't want to run the risk that Israel would fail to get the message by adding a new announcement of a worldwide reassessment of U.S. policies.

Over-all, what the re-examination of the U.S. posture means is that the age of the American empire after World War II is gone.

"We are no longer predominant," says Kissinger, but "we are inescapably a leader."

Sisco has put it more bluntly: "It is clear the United States can no longer play the role of world policeman."

In Vietnam, according to Kissinger, Americans learned of the limits to what even we can accomplish: that not every struggle everywhere in the world is necessarily one in which the United States must involve itself; that not every injustice man inflicts upon his neighbor is something that America must or can seek to remedy." Kissinger has added: "While the Cold War structure of international relations has come apart, a new stable international structure has yet to be formed." The "Cold War" structure was simple, it was "us" versus "them"—the United States and all the allies it could round up versus the Soviet Union and all of its allies. Communist China was assumed by U.S. policymakers to be a part of the Soviet bloc.

The new world of the 1970s is far more complicated. As Kissinger has explained, there are many power centers now, not just the United States and the Soviets. The Chinese Communists, the Europeans, Japan and the newly powerful oil-producing states which have cornered much of the world's financial wealth must be considered power centers. The rest of the world also is developing. Owners of other raw materials besides oil are beginning to flex their economic muscles. Thus, the United States is trying to adapt to this changing world by learning what is really important for the United States.

Kissinger is trying to build a whole new set of international organizations designed to meet specific kinds of problems. The International Energy Agency to which Kissinger spoke last week, is one example. So are the industrial nations of the Organization for Economic Development, where he also appeared. He described both organizations as representing "a kind of architecture of the structure of the world as we can foresee it developing."

At the same time the United States is trying to decide how important specific countries, or areas, may be in the new world. Some tentative major decisions already are apparent. Among them:

* THAILAND, often referred to as the possible "next domino" in Southeast Asia, is largely being written off. It is expected to strive for neutrality and an accommodation with its new Communist neighbors in Cambodia, Laos and Vietnam.

* MALAYSIA and SINGAPORE—other Southeast Asia countries—also are expected to strive for neutrality. Officials do not foresee efforts to equip them to fight possible Communist insurgencies, as in Vietnam.

* KOREA is considered to be the most dangerous built-in situation in the Far East, because of the unpredictability and aggressiveness of the North Koreans, plus an (un)attractive, but friendly, dictatorship in South Korea. The United States sees any basic change in the situation in Korea as threatening to the "stability" of Asia because Japan, China, Russia and the United States are all involved.

* THE PHILIPPINES and INDONESIA also are considered serious potential problems, the more so because of undemocratic governments.

CENTRAL EUROPE is considered the most vital of all American interests. It is protected by the North Atlantic Alliance (NATO), but NATO is in a state of disrepair. Its entire southern tier, from Portugal through Italy to Greece and Turkey, is threatened by economic and political disorder.

* ISRAEL also is considered a basic American interest but the United States is attempting to cultivate other friends in the Middle East, in Arab countries and Iran, largely through the sale of arms.

But top administration officials frankly are not sure how far Congress and the public may be willing to go to protect any of these "interests" or commitments, in case of a showdown. One top official said, "Frankly, after Vietnam, I'm not sure if we could rally public opinion behind a defense of Central Europe, unless there was overt and outrageous Soviet aggression—which we wouldn't expect anyway.

A basic problem is that "showdowns" aren't coming the way "cold warriors" expected them to come. Threats to NATO haven't come from the Soviets. They come from economic and political weaknesses in individual countries. Most top officials concede that a general retreat of American power, from the heydays of the Cold War, will continue. But they are not sure how far it will go. Kissinger is arguing that further American withdrawals will lead inevitably to chaos, because no one else is around to lead the West.

Arguments to come are not really between "isolationists" and "internationalists," for even those who are arguing in Congress for U.S. cutbacks are not suggesting that the United States abandon involvements abroad. The questions are not whether the United States will be involved abroad, but how much? And what exactly will it take to start a fight?

(End of analysis by James McCartney)

* * * * *

Please note the following key phrases in the preceding analysis:

- 1) "Over-all, what the re-examination of the U.S. posture means in that the age of the American empire after World War II, is gone."
- 2) "We are no longer predominant," says Kissinger, but "we are inescapably a leader."
- 3) Kissinger has added: "While the Cold War structure of international relations has come apart, a new stable international structure has yet to be formed."
- 4) Kissinger is trying to build a whole new series of organizations designed to meet specific kinds of problems.

- 5) "I'm not sure we could rally public opinion behind a defense of Central Europe, unless there was overt and outrageous Soviet aggression—which we wouldn't expect anyway."

Now, let's analyze this analysis, predicating our presentation on the proposition that no media reporter would "Dare Call It Conspiracy," and that other slogans and phrases would be chosen to mask the Acts of the Conspirators.

A) At the end of the shooting phase of World War II, it was deemed advisable to divide the world into areas (or regions) of control, with diplomatic and trade competition replacing outright belligerence and military competition. Winston Churchill's "Iron Curtain" address at Fulton, Missouri, was the signal. There followed NATO, the Warsaw Pact, SEATO, CENTO, and the creation of a "Third World" which would play the "Democratic West" against the "Communist East." There also were arranged specific areas where military conflict on a limited scale could be introduced whenever such actual armed aggression would prove useful to the Conspirators. These areas of contained conflict were arranged by cutting nations into two parts: East and West Germany, North and South Korea, North and South Vietnam, Communist China and Nationalist China, the carving-up of the Middle East to create a new political body called Israel, etc.

B) By 1968, with Russian dictators replaced by the Troika of Brezhnev, Kosygin and Podgorny, and with a Communist government firmly entrenched in Mainland China ready to extend its control over most of Asia and much of Africa, the "Cold War" had served its purpose, and a new policy of "Detente" was introduced. Kissinger was brought in to set up the new world arrangement. The two Great Powers that ruled the world (USA and USSR) were to be replaced by a set of "Power Centers," which Kissinger would designate as "the United States, the Soviet Union, Communist China, Japan, Central Europe, and last but not least, the oil producing nations of the Middle East." First, however, to make this new Regionalism scheme work, it was necessary to make the USSR as strong, or even stronger in some respects, than the USA. So, the SALT agreements made the Soviet Union stronger militarily than the United States. Another interesting development is revealed in the June 1, 1975, Parade Weekly. In Lloyd Shearer's "Intelligence Report," there appears this important item:

"SOVIET OIL. The Soviet Union has become the world's leading oil producer, ousting the U.S. from its historic number one position. Last year Soviet oil fields produced an average of 9,160,000 barrels a day. The U.S. produced 8,830,000 barrels a day in 1974. its fourth consecutive year of decline. Last year marked the first time since oil was discovered in Pennsylvania in 1859 that the U.S. failed to lead the world in oil production. Most of the Soviet increase stems from its new oil fields in Western Siberia (which were developed by American based multinationals headed by Armand Hammer and the Rockefellers—Ed.)."

While "equalizing" the strength of the USA and the USSR, it was also felt necessary to increase the power of Red China. This was what Korea and Vietnam was all about. As for Japan and Central Europe, it is their industrial strength which makes them "centers of power" (to re-use Kissinger's phrase). And the Middle East oil cartel makes this part of the world powerful economically and monetarily; to such an extent that one reporter wrote: "To a company like Standard Oil of California, which gets 60% of its worldwide crude oil supplies from Saudi Arabia, the late King Faisal was a more powerful man than the President of the United States" (Robert A. Rosenblatt in the Los Angeles Times, Sunday, May 11, 1975, Part VI, page 5.)

C) Now that these "many centers of power" have been established, now that "we are no longer predominant" and the "age of the American empire is gone" along with the outmoded "Cold War" ploy, the time has come for the setting up of Kissinger's "new, stable international structure," which he more commonly refers to as the "World Community." In this new international structure—as James McCartney indicated in his analysis—individual nations and states are to be slowly replaced by Regions, or areas of the world. Instead of using political place names, the Conspirators now refer whenever possible to Central Europe, Northern Africa, the Western Hemisphere, Southeast Asia, the Middle East, etc. So prevalent has this tendency become that support of individual countries is being discouraged and the idea of having allies is considered old fashioned, even as James McCartney suggests in his "selective engagement" reference. That this act of downgrading "nationalism" and promoting in its place "Regionalism" and Multinationalism, is shown quite clearly in a report concerning the Rockefeller Trilateral Commission which appeared in The New York Times on Sunday, May 31, 1975, page 23. The article is rather ambiguous (perhaps this was intentional) and barely makes sense unless read carefully—except for one important paragraph. Nonetheless, we reprint the entire article since so little is published concerning this newest and very important Rockefeller organization:

* * * * *

A GROUP OF AMERICANS, EUROPEANS AND JAPANESE DENOUNCES A CALL FOR STRONGER GOVERNMENTAL AUTHORITY

Tokyo, May 31—A private commission of prominent Americans, West Europeans and Japanese strongly denounced a call today for less democracy and more government authority in their respective nations. Members of the Trilateral Commission, an association of leading professional persons, business executives, labor leaders, academicians and politicians acting as private persons, nearly demolished a study that the commission itself had requested be made.

The report, entitled "The Governability of Democracies," was issued in Kyoto and made available in Tokyo. It was perhaps the most ambitious and provocative since the Trilateral Commission was established in October, 1973 at the initiative of David Rockefeller, chairman of the Chase Manhattan Bank. It was prepared by three scholars, Samuel P. Huntington of Harvard (and the Council on Foreign Relations—Ed.), Michel Crozier of the University of Paris (and the Organization for Economic Co-Operation and Development—Ed.) and Joji Watanuki of Sophie University in Tokyo (who is said to have done the work by benefit of a Rockefeller Foundation grant—Ed.)

The report asserted that "demands on democratic government have grown, while the capacity of democratic government seems to have shrunk." It recommended that "overall, the United States and Western Europe need to establish a more equitable relationship between governmental authority and popular control, and Japan will probably face this necessity in the not-too-distant future."

In response, American and European members criticized the report as much too pessimistic while Japanese members complained that the section on Japan was much too complacent, given democracy's relatively short history here. None spoke in support of the study and several members urged that the Trilateral Commission disown it.

The commission has as its objective to reflect thinking in the nations of its members and to influence decision makers throughout the democratic industrialized world.

The members of the commission also criticized a call yesterday that the United States take the initiative in outlining a framework for a peace settlement in the Middle East. Many termed the suggestion foolhardy, declaring that it would be impossible to satisfy either Israel or the Arab states and would most likely turn both sides against the United States. Under the rules of the meeting, speakers cannot be publicly identified.

Administratively, the executive committee of the commission tentatively agreed last night to continue the work of the commission for another three years. Japanese members, who have taken an unexpectedly active role in the commission, urged that it be continued.

In the controversial report on democracy, the authors said that a "democratic surge" in the United States in the nineteen-sixties had led to a "democratic distemper" in the nineteen-seventies. They said that the decline in authority in America could be seen in slipping public confidence in political leaders and institutions, decay of the party system and a shift in the balance of power between government and Congress and the press.

(End of article)

* * * * *

Translation: The Trilateral Commission, calling ours a "democratic government" rather than a Representative Republic, noted that "democratic governments" had been slipping and had become suspect (Watergate and its aftermath). The report recommended that this trend be reversed, that national governments should be strengthened, and that public confidence in them should be restored.

This is where the Trilateral Commission balked and rejected its own requested report, because the Commission did not want national governments strengthened! The Commission didn't even want the United States government to settle the Mideast mess; this might increase confidence in national governments at a time when the Conspirators are downgrading political institutions and promoting multinational organizations that are concerned primarily with economic and monetary matters, only secondarily with political matters. James McCartney's analysis gives the clue. He wrote: "Kissinger is trying to build a whole new series of international organizations designed to meet specific kinds of problems. The International Energy Agency... is one example... the Organization for Economic Co-operation (is another)." So is David Rockefeller's Trilateral Commission.

It was David Rockefeller who pointed to the demise of political institutions and the growth of economic agencies when he spoke recently at the University of Manchester in England. He said, in part: "...economic growth must follow its own laws, and these laws are best served by the greatest possible degree of freedom for individuals and institutions. It is this very freedom to move and to grow that has fed the mushrooming of multinational enterprise.... With the joining of the most critical issues in the modern world—hunger, the threat of overpopulation, energy needs, protection of the environment, massive needs for capital—it becomes clear that our expectations are advancing, not receding. I think the time has come to praise success, not condemn it."

So: Goodbye Nationalism and hail Multinationalism! Goodbye Republic and hail World Community! This is what the Rockefellers and Kissingers want. But is it what We, the People, want?

DON BELL REPORTS Weekly. $24 per year. Extra copies: 10 cents each. Please address all orders to:
DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

THE PLANNED LIQUIDATION OF ECONOMIC FREEDOM

A WORLDWIDE PATTERN

If we are to believe the newspaper that prints all that fits, it would seem that Henry Kissinger has recently made a discovery, that, "Economic issues are drifting into central political issues." Roughly translated: After having almost completed his appointed task of making the world safe for Communism in the political sense, he has just started. Now he must concentrate on economics and make the world safe for Socialism in this latter sense. In short, and again we quote The New York Times of June 8, 1975, he must fashion and install a "Worldwide Economic Design." Because the United States is "drifting into a world of commodity agreements and cartels with their partial repeal of free markets and the law of supply and demand."

Here is the way Kissinger said it in an address delivered before the Ministerial Council of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD), meeting in Paris on May 28:

"The political evolution and economic growth of the last 30 years have brought about a new diffusion of power. No nation or bloc can dominate any longer. Economic issues are turning into central political issues. Thus it has become a central test of statesmanship to ensure the orderly reconciliation of conflicting interests and to prevent a slide into political and economic warfare...."

"It is time to end the theoretical debate over whether we are seeking a new order or improving the existing one. Let us deal in reality, not rhetoric. Let us address the practical common concern of all the world's peoples with realism, maturity, mutual understanding, and common sense."

In other words, the new political world order can not be established and made secure until a new economic order has also been established and made secure. Thus, Herr Kissinger has his work cut out for him.

Meanwhile, as Kissinger began his new assignment at the global level, his cohorts and companions at the domestic level were busy at their task of completing the socialization of America. Since names are sometimes important, the chief "socializers" in the Federal Administration include the following prominent Zionists; Secretary of Defense Schlesinger, Treasury Secretary Simon, HEW Secretary Weinberger, Economic Council Chieftain Greenspan, the President's principal speech writer Friedman, Press Secretary Nessen, Financial Adviser Seidman, Federal Insurance Adviser Bernstein, Attorney General Levi, FRS Chairman Burns, Energy Tsar Farb, the First Lady's personal secretary Weidenfeld, and others.

In the House of Representatives the promoters of Socialism are too numerous to list in this short newsletter. In the United States Senate, the chief "Socializers" include Ribicoff, Javits, Magnuson, Cranston, Moss, Weicker, Abourezk, Bayh, Biden, Brooke, Case, Clark, Culver, Gravel, Gary Hart, Philip Hart, Haskell, Hatfield, Hathaway, Wendell Ford, Inouye, Humphrey, Jackson, Kennedy, Leahy, Mathias, McGee, McGovern, Mondale, Muskie, Nelson, Pastore, Proxmire, Stafford, Stevenson, Stone, Tunney and Williams. (These are the 38 Senators who are sponsoring S 200, a bill which would establish an Agency for Consumer Advocacy, a Nader-authored idea that would effectively destroy economic freedom in the name of consumer protection. More about this socialistic measure later....)

In addition to the federal administrative officers who are appointed and the legislators who are elected, that lend their support to the promotion of socialistic causes, either intentionally or otherwise, there also is the propaganda corps. This little but powerful army of specialists is made up of publishers, editors, columnists, commentators and other types of opinion molders who lend their considerable talents and abilities to the crusade to destroy economic freedom and free enterprise. The most favored of these word wranglers are honored—and controlled—by being permitted to become members of the Rockefeller-financed Council on Foreign Relations. For example, and we are now about to quote from that excellent book, "Kissinger on the Couch,"

by Phyllis Schlafly and Chester Ward:

"Equally important is CFR's influence in the mass media. Out of its 1,551 members, 60 were listed in official CFR reports as engaged in 'journalism.' An additional 61 were listed in 'communications management,' a highly descriptive title, because CFR members do indeed 'manage' mass communications media, especially in the influential segments. They control or own major newspapers, magazines, radio and television networks, and they control the most powerful companies in the book publishing business... Columnists who are members include Joseph Craft, Bill Moyers, Joseph C. Harsch, Roscoe Drummond, Marquis Childs, James Reston, John R. Roche and C. L. Sulzberger."

Interestingly, there was formed recently a group of conservatives dedicated to the preservation of economic freedom and free enterprise. A worthy cause, indeed. But why such an organization should choose to buy an ad in The New York Times is something which this reporter cannot fathom. Anyway, Bill Moyers of Newsweek and CFR took it upon himself to publicly ridicule the patriotic effort. He wrote, in part, in Newsweek, June 16, 1975:

"Something called Operation Freedom came out swinging the other day, with 44 vice presidents on its masthead and a quarter-page ad in The New York Times summoning us 'to prevent the socialization of our government, the destruction of the goose that laid the golden egg, and the creation of a totalitarian police state.' Sen. Barry Goldwater is a vice president. Likewise Lowell Thomas, Gen. James A. Van Fleet, and Adm. Arleigh Burke. Yes, and William Loebe, the New Hampshire publisher...."

"Their entreaty is to save capitalism. 'Our home-front radicals, extremists, Marxists and some misguided intellectuals are on the march with well-organized plans to socialize America,' the ad proclaimed. 'Under the Marxist plan, our already burdened taxpayers would lose their savings to the menace of socialism and business confidence and private initiative would be destroyed... How long will the American people remain silent while the radical and Marxist elements undermine our free institutions and free enterprise system, and substitute a foreign form of socialism?'"

Bill Moyers ridicules and says it isn't the Marxists but the capitalists who have brought on socialism. Which is true, in a sense; but what he calls capitalism is really cartelism and corporate socialism, both of which are enemies of the free enterprise system. And note Moyers's words as he turns the table on himself:

"Democracy in America has become a lobocracy. Organized pressure, not the ballot box, is the arbiter of public policy, and the result... is that the government has already been socialized, for private profit. Capitalism couldn't even sell the F-16 jet fighter to Belgium last week until the U.S. Government offered to spend 30 million tax dollars to buy Belgian machine guns as a 'sweetener' to the deal; Presidents go to Europe now to peddle...."

Moyers is correct in this instance; but this is not free enterprise, nor is it an example of economic freedom. It is the corporate socialism that the CFR has been forcing upon the United States for 10, these many years. And Bill Moyers had better watch out, he is testifying against himself and the CFR which honors him and feeds him with the material wherewith he fills many of his opinion-molding columns.

In the past few years there has been published much information designed to confuse readers in regard to such terms as private enterprise, free enterprise, capitalism, public ownership, etc. all for the purpose of popularizing government control of all enterprise, and elitist control of all government.

The terms need to be clarified; and one of the finest efforts in this direction which we have read in many a moon is that of Darryl R. Francis who is President of the Federal Reserve Bank of St. Louis. Despite his position, he is on our side and he must be a real thorn in the flesh to one Arthur Burns. On April 3, 1975, there was dedicated at Washington University in St. Louis, a Center for the Study of American Business. As speaker at the occasion, Mr. Francis said (space limitations allow only selected excerpts):

...I view economic freedom as the freedom to determine and to seek to satisfy one's own wants as he sees them. Aside from its desirability as an end in itself, I subscribe to the widely held doctrine that the promotion of economic freedom is consistent with the attainment of the maximum possible standard of living for society. According to this view, state regulation should be regarded with suspicion as a potential enemy of society's material well-being. On the other hand, maximum freedom for individuals to act in their own self interest should be viewed as a source of the variety and diversification of ideas, experiments, and innovations which lead to the discovery of new products and more efficient means of production, If one accepts these premises, then a free economy should be viewed not only as precious in itself, but also as the most promising means by which the standards of living of all members of society can be raised.

...The maintenance of maximum economic freedom demands the organization of our economic life largely through individual participation in a game with definite rules. The necessity of rules arises because absolute economic freedom is impossible. One man's freedom can conflict with another's security and property rights. Hence, each person must give up some freedom in order to resolve individual conflicts. The major problem is determining those freedoms which the individual should give up in order to resolve conflict with others.

Just as a good game requires player acceptance of the rules and an umpire to interpret and enforce such rules, so a free society requires that its members agree on the general rules that will govern relations among themselves, and on some device for enforcing compliance with them. Unfortunately, we cannot rely on custom or consensus alone to interpret and to enforce the rules: we need an umpire. These then are the basic roles of government in a free economy - to provide a means whereby we can establish some set of general rules, and to enforce compliance with the rules on the part of those few who would not play the game.

The advocate of a laissez-faire policy today realizes that there is a constructive role for government in the economy; he is not an anarchist. He recognizes that a system which promotes maximum economic freedom may not be a God-send and that its existence depends, in part, upon affirmative government action. However, he also recognizes that each new governmentally enacted rule of the game involves a loss of some freedom. Herein lies the problem: where do we draw the line? At what point does affirmative government action begin to have a net negative impact on economic freedom?...For it is an indisputable, yet frequently overlooked, reality that every new rule has its cost in terms of a loss of some freedom.

We have witnessed abroad the culmination of movements from constitutional government to dictatorships, from freedom back to authority. This spectacle, for most of us, is revolting, and something to be avoided at all costs. Yet, faced with the same problems as these other nations, we too have adopted measures which call for more government authority and less individual freedom. We have often been too eager to justify and rationalize policies which propel us in a direction in which we overwhelmingly disapprove. As an indicator of how far and how fast we have moved in this direction, consider for a moment just a few facts and figures which are indicative of the tremendous growth of the government's influence on our economy.

1) It took 186 years for the Federal budget to reach the $100 billion mark, a line we crossed in 1962, but in only nine more years we reached the $200 billion mark, and in only four more years we broke the $300 billion barrier.

2) In 1930, prior to the New Deal, government spending at all levels accounted for just 12 percent of our gross national product. Today, government spending accounts for over 32 percent of our gross national product, and if present trends continue, government could account for as much as 60 percent of GNP by the year 2000.

3) As the role of government has increased, the bureaucracy has also grown so that today one out of every six working men and women in this country works directly for either Federal, State or local government....

Why is it that society seems so bent on curtailing the very freedoms that have netted us the highest standards of living and economic freedom in the entire world? I submit to you that the reason for this drift is that there are natural biases in its favor. One of these biases has to do with what I will call the regulatory reflex that seems to have grown to almost epidemic proportions in our country. The other has to do with the same political realities which led Joseph Schumpeter to argue thirty years ago that there was an irreconcilable conflict between democracy and free enterprise.

The regulatory reflex operates in the following manner. Upon observation of what some individuals deem an undesirable result produced by the free enterprise system, government officials or the press suggest that this is an area in which the government should "do something." This usually has meant the creation of a powerful new government agency, or an increase in the powers of an existing one. Such an agency is empowered to make decisions regarding the allocation of resources according to its own interpretations of what is best, rather than leaving the outcome to determination by the market process....

Unfortunately, it is a truism that regulation begets further regulation and that regulations outlive their rationale. Though most government regulation was enacted under the guise of protecting people from abuse, much of today's regulatory machinery only provides jobs for the regulators, increases the cost of doing business, and shelters those who are being regulated from the normal consequences of free enterprise competition. In some cases, the Interstate Commerce Commission for example, the original threat of abuse no longer exists. In other cases, the regulatory machinery has simply become perverted. In still other cases the machinery was a mistake from the start. In any case, the individual, from whatever presumed abuse he is being spared, is paying for the regulation through both a loss of freedom and a loss of material well-being....

Despite the fact that the regulatory reflex contaminates so much of our society, I do not believe that it could be as pervasive as it has been were it not provided with a political framework conducive to its proliferation. Consider the situation in a community in which the mass of the people are in favor of economic freedom of choice in their daily lives and are against government direction. As will normally happen, however, many groups are formed which perceive an opportunity for material gain through a particular form of government intervention. Under the guise of such slogans as "fair prices," "equitable wages," or "fair trade" laws, they perceive an opportunity to be protected from the sources of competition. In such situations a political party hoping to achieve and maintain power will have little choice but to use its power to buy the support of these special interest groups by catering to their legislative demands. The reason they will do so is not necessarily because they think that the majority of society is interventionist, but rather because they cannot achieve and retain a majority if they do not solicit support through the promise of special advantages. This means, in practice, that even a statesman wholly devoted to the maintenance of freedom, and who realizes that every new regulation is an abridgment of those freedoms, will be under constant pressure to satisfy the interventionist demands of organized groups....

Those of us who firmly believe in the preciousness and efficiency of a system which maximizes economic freedom more often than not find ourselves on the defensive. Given the biases that seem to continuously propel our society away from such a system, being merely defensive is not nearly enough. We must take the offensive and encourage others to restudy the philosophy of free enterprise....

(End of extended quotation)

Senate Bill 200 provides an excellent point for starting an offensive for economic freedom. It would "establish an independent agency to protect and serve the interest of consumers, and for other purposes to be known as Agency for Consumer Advocacy.

On May 8, 1975, on the floor of the Senate, Sen. Paul Fannin of Arizona began the offensive stating: "It is irresponsible for Congress to add another level of bureaucracy to an already burgeoning Federal Bureaucracy. During the last decade, Congress has reacted to consumer protection demands by enacting many new laws creating new Federal agencies. To mention a few of the better known agencies over which the new agency would become a super agency:

"National Commission for Product Safety; Fair Packaging and Labeling Act; Product Safety Administration; Occupational Safety and Health Administration; Interstate Land Sales Act; Truth in Lending Act; Environmental Protection Agency; The Clean Air Act; The Ban and Warning on Cigarette Advertising; The Radiation Control Act; The Federal Energy Office; The Interstate Protection System for Wholesome Meat; The Legal Services Act. Earlier created but recently more active, we have: The Food and Drug Administration; The Federal Trade Commission; The Federal Communications Commission; and The Security and Exchange Commission. Speaking as a consumer I sometimes feel already overprotected.

"...This is no time to create new expensive agencies.... I am concerned about the logic behind the Consumer Protection Act as proposed in S. 200. Who is it that is asking for another sprawling bureaucracy?"

Despite opposition from conservative Senators the Consumer Protection Act of 1975 passed the Senate on May 15, 1975, by a vote of 61 to 28, with 9 not voting. The bill has gone to the House which approved a similar bill in the previous Congress (defeated by Senate filibuster in 1974). House action on the bill hasn't been scheduled yet, so now is the time to get letters going to House members if you feel we don't want or need this new Super Agency, which could become the means of destroying what's left of our economic freedom and the free enterprise system.

DON BELL REPORTS Weekly, presenting the Christian American point of view. Two copies of each issue are mailed each subscriber, 1st class. $24 per year. Extra copies: 10 cents each.
DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

PLANNING THE DEATH OF FREEDOM

MORE GOVERNMENT, LESS LIBERTY

"There are many political spokesmen in the United States who are deeply suspicious of freedom," said Congressman Philip Crane, Illinois Republican. Obviously including Senators Hubert Humphrey and Jake Javits in that category, he went on to remark: "Men and women, they argue, do not dispose of their incomes in an appropriate manner. The answer, of course, is to take those incomes away from them in the form of taxation and permit an elite—usually themselves—to dispose of the money in 'the public interest'... Now, a bill has been introduced in the Senate which is called the 'Balanced Growth and Economic Planning Act of 1975.' It is important that we understand the implication inherent in any legislative approach to national planning... The answer to our economic difficulties is more freedom in the marketplace, not less. It is Government intervention in the economy which is largely responsible for our current difficulties, together with a tax system which discourages capital accumulation and, as a result, leads to a stagnating economy."

It's really quite simple: Before any national planning scheme can work, there first must be complete government control over the whole economy. Because, if detailed economic blueprints for the nation were drawn up, and if the people were still free to disregard those blueprints if they chose to do so, what good would the blueprints be? For planning to work, there must be a central authority in control to see to it that the plans are carried out. And, once any government gains such power over a nation's economic life, how long can political freedom, or any kind of individual freedom, survive. We have the object lessons of Fascist Italy, Nazi Germany, and Communist Russia. We also know that other countries that have experimented with economic planning in the so-called post-war years have invariably suffered a loss of freedom, or prosperity, or both. Have we any reason to assume that things would work out any differently in the United States if we experiment with national economic planning along the lines laid down in the Humphrey-Javits Bill?

Some very keen observations concerning our loss of economic and other freedoms were made recently by another Republican Congressman, Jack Kemp of New York State. His remarks are to be found in the June 12, 1975 Congressional Record starting on page H5406. We quote from his presentation:

* * * * *

There has been an erosion of economic freedom during the past half-century. This erosion—because it has worked and is working almost imperceptibly, yet relentlessly in the longer view—is liberty's most effective enemy. Liberty is not generally lost by the forces of violent attack, for those specific incidents when revolution and upheaval did quickly destroy liberty were preceded by an intellectual revolution which made those acts both possible and allowable.

Our former House colleague and now Senator, Robert P. Griffin of Michigan, recently addressed himself to this phenomenon:

In the course of history, freedom has died in various ways. Freedom has died on the battlefield; freedom has died because of ignorance and greed. But I should like to suggest that the most ignominious death of all is when freedom dies in its sleep.

These more subtle threats must, therefore, be a cause of great concern among all who cherish freedom and the enjoyment of life, liberty, property, and happiness which freedom engenders. The nature of the remainder of our natural lives and those of future generations will be governed in great degree by our present ability to perceive these threats and to undertake successfully those efforts required to restrain them.

There are many views on the process through which liberty is lost, but I believe its particular decline during the past half-century has been inversely proportional to the growth of Government within the economic lives of the people. The greater the tax burden, the greater the degree of regulatory control, the greater the share of human action governed by statute, the less liberty there is.

We should, therefore, remember that when Government intervention in the economy is sought, as an answer to a problem, liberty declines. And, inasmuch as those regard their roles as, and measure their successes through, the promulgation of Government initiatives, the results should be obvious. More and more Government. Less and less liberty. Jefferson said 200 years ago, that

It is the nature of human history that as government grows, freedom recedes.

This loss of liberty comes through the narrowing of the range of alternative choices of action available to people. The examples are endless, and these restrictions on the exercise of choice are not without penalties: prison terms, fines, loss of license, and the silent intimidation which accompanies an awareness of burgeoning Government control.

It is well worth recalling the extent of Government regulation of our lives. A guest editorial in the New York Times of last month, authored by Russell Baker, outlined the author's encounter with Government control in one day's time. It bears repeating.

The author recalled awakening that morning with a woman whom the government had licensed him to marry, rolling over on bedding materials which had been certified by a Federal agency, to turn on the radio to listen to a station which broadcasts only with Government permission. Of course, the electricity which powered the radio and lit the mirror at which he shaved was priced at rates established by the Government and brought to him by a Government-established monopoly.

Outside stood his car—licensed by the Government and registered by the Government. It had been built to specifications set forth by the Government. Each year the Government taxes it. He can drive it only by carrying a permit issued by Government. And, only recently, the Government told him he could only obtain ten gallons of gasoline at any one time, and now with the lifting of that imposition, has told him that they will tax him even more heavily for his future gas consumption. If he wishes to park his car, he cannot park it near fire plugs, within 20 feet of a stop sign, or in places reserved for Government officials, or anywhere else without putting money into a Government meter.

Of course, he could take a bus, subway, or train to work, but those would have been either owned by the Government, running on schedules approved by the Government along routes specified by the Government at fares established by the Government.

If he had a business or pleasure trip that day, he could have flown on airplanes operating under Government license along Government authorized routes, flying in and out of airports along paths dictated by Government controllers, paying for all this at Government-set fares.

The clothes he wore would carry labels prescribed by Government, made from imported cloth whose entry was regulated by Government tariff or from subsidized domestic cotton, for the purchase of which he would have paid a sales tax.

After dressing, he had breakfast comprised of foods whose quality and packaging had been regulated by Government on dishes washed by water bought from Government, water heated by oil the price of which is determined partly by Government policy. He had coffee that morning imported under Government license, with cream priced by Government through milk price supports, and then he sat down to read his newspaper—made from pulp whose harvesting was regulated by a myriad of Government agencies.

After breakfast his children are required by the Government to report at fixed hours to a building owned by Government where persons hired by the Government instruct them in such matters as the Government sees fit.

Before leaving the house, he placed his garbage in a trash can for the Government to pick up, ran his garbage disposal to enter residue into the Government sewage system, and placed a Government stamp on an envelope to place it in a Government-approved home mail box.

Then he started his work day, where even more extensive Government regulations controlled his and his company's actions.

The United States Code Annotated, the basic compilation of congressionally enacted statutes, now totals more than 55,000 pages. The Code of Federal Regulations—consisting of the regulations which carry those statutes into effect and which also have the full force of law—totals hundreds of thousands of pages. The Internal Revenue Code of 1954—the tax laws under which we all live—is now nearly 1,900 pages long, and the regulations which carry those tax laws into effect constitute another 4,500 plus pages. In addition, one is governed by the rulings and regulations of a myriad of Federal agencies, bureaus, departments, commissions, administrations, offices, and boards, as well as the rulings of our vast court network. The point is that each circumscribes our behavior—the behavior freely exercised and otherwise acceptable between private parties. We have come a long way since Moses brought the Ten Commandments—only ten rules to govern our lives—down from the Mount.

Through the enactment of a multitude of program activities, Government has taken unto itself the exercise of functions once regarded as the province of private conduct. And, whether one regards a specific Government intervention or influence as good or bad, one still ought to weigh the impact of the totality of extensive and still growing Government regulation upon the exercise of personal freedom.

It is almost impossible to itemize the areas of conduct now subject to Federal control because there are so many, but a cursory examination of any Government organization chart shows us the areas of our lives now subject to Government regulation: health, education, welfare, labor, commerce, housing, environment, communications, wages and prices, energy, labor-management relations, trade, alcohol, tobacco, firearms, savings, community relations, civic affairs, land and natural resources uses, recreation, commodities, consumer affairs, productivity, nutrition, research, forestry, product standards, travel, economic development, shipping, vocational and career opportunities, employment standards, occupational safety, child development, retirement and income security, rehabilitation, interest rates, credit availability, land sales, aviation, railroads, highways, safety, institutionalized voluntarism, arts and humanities, equal employment opportunity, export-import terms, trucking, small business, veterans, postal service, ad infinitum.

The point is this: As Government assumed each of the many components within each of these areas, it removed decisionmaking from the people, a process inherently antithetical to the exercise of free choice. Some of these are indeed necessary and clearly in the interest of the health, safety, and welfare of the people. But, taken all together, Government as a cure-all, is diminishing freedom.

The effect of these regulatory policies on prices and productivity cannot be overlooked either—additional costs in the form of higher consumer prices, more taxes, and a decline in the standard of living. Dr. Murray L. Weidenbaum, director of the Center for the Study of American Business at Washington University in St. Louis, recently authored an extensive report: "Government-Mandated Price Increases: A Neglected Aspect of Inflation," which was published by the American Enterprise Institute for Public Policy Research in Washington. Dr. Weidenbaum makes the charge that Washington is now running most business enterprises through government regulations. He said:

"This new revolution (of management under government regulation) involves the shift of decision-making from managers, who represent the shareholders, to a cadre of government officials, government inspectors, and government regulators....The problem is that these government agencies are not responsible to the pressures of profit and loss and though their decisions affect management, they have no management responsibility....Some of this is very costly, not only to the business, but to the public as well.

"The increase in the cost of producing consumer goods is the ultimate burden imposed by government regulation of business. It costs $4 billion a year to support all these Federal regulatory agencies that ride herd on business (in the form of taxes.)"

However, tax costs are just the beginning. Dr. Weidenbaum points out that it costs incalculable billions more in higher costs of consumer goods, higher costs of industrial production, higher costs of Government purchases, higher costs of personnel, higher interest rates, and so on. He summarizes:

"What all this so-called government protection does is protect the consumer against new products, new processes, and lower costs."

Then Dr. Weidenbaum recites a few of the horror stories connected with Government regulation:

"There is such a proliferation of government regulations that, in trying to obey one, you run afoul of another. For example, to desulfurize coal—and to reduce air pollution—requires a combination with lime. But when you do that, you generate large amounts of solid waste, calcium sulfate. And disposing of calcium sulfate creates water pollution problems. Let me give you another example:

"Federal food standards require meat-packing plants to be kept clean and sanitary. Surfaces that are easiest to clean are usually tile or stainless steel. But tile and stainless steel are highly reflective of noise and don't always meet Occupational Safety and Health Administration standards.

"Both OSHA and EEOC have jurisdiction over toilets. OSHA once said women need special lounge facilities as part of their restrooms. But EEOC says, well, if you provide lounges for women, you have to provide them for men also.

"When you look at the power of the Consumer Product Safety Commission, it is really scary. The commission has the ability, and has used it on occasion, to drive a company out of business—through the commission's own mistakes. The commission put the Marlin Toy Co., a small firm in Wisconsin, out of the toy business by inadvertently putting its products on the banned list. Later, the commission recognized its error, but it was too late. As it turns out, the company was an employer of handicapped people in the little town where it was located. So we are talking about a socially responsible business."

...A few pertinent questions:

Does one have economic freedom when one gives up over 40 per cent of earnings to the Government?

Does one have economic freedom when one involuntarily surrenders purchasing power because of Government-created inflation?

Does one have economic freedom when one cannot plan his or her own future—for education, for business, for children, for retirement—because Government's policies are so unpredictable and so corrosive of his or her livelihood?

Does one have economic freedom when one cannot obtain a loan—for a small personal need or a massive corporate capital investment need—because Government has drained the Nation's capital money markets and in so doing created record-high rates of interest?

Does one have economic freedom when life savings can be wiped out in just a few years' time by double-digit inflation?

Does one have economic freedom when one cannot buy a product or pay a freely negotiated price for it because of Government-control created shortages and mandatory price regulations?

Does one have freedom when one cannot find a job or find one at a desired salary because of what Government has done to this economy in the past half-century—a period of time which corresponds to the growth in Government intervention in the market place?

It was in this context that nearly 200 years ago Thomas Jefferson addressed himself to this ageless problem in these words:

A wise and frugal government which shall restrain men from injuring one another and shall leave them otherwise free to regulate their own pursuits of industry and improvement and shall not take from the mouth of the laborer the bread he has earned. This is the sum of good government.

(End of extended quotation)

To put the proposition in its simplest terms: Ours is no longer a government of law; it is a government of regulations. Law—and especially Christian law, carries with it a system of rewards and punishments (this is what is meant by the word justice). Law declares "thou shalt" and "thou shalt not" with the added promise that "if you obey the law you will be blessed" but "if you disobey you will be punished." Law forbids wrongdoing, it does not regulate it. Law does not say "you may not do this unless you purchase a license;" it does not say "you may steal your neighbor's property if you use it for the "common good" and follow the set of guidelines established by the one or more of the 1200-plus regulatory agencies maintained at taxpayers' expense.

As Rev. T. Robert Ingram wrote in the conclusion to his invaluable "The World Under God's Law":

"...all socialism and any other alternative to the Christian order of society must be dedicated exclusively to setting up complete regulatory powers in government. The power of a human agency to regulate every aspect of human life, extending even to the thoughts of men, becomes of necessity the description of any social order other than Christian. The Biblical portrayal of the final achievement of the anti-Christ is accurately met by the avowed utopian passion of the socialist to enthrone man in the place of Christ."

Ergo: Secretary of State Henry Kissinger proclaims that "We are moving into a New World." And Senator Hubert Humphrey says in all seriousness that the Humphrey-Javits "Balanced Growth and Economic Planning Act of 1975" is the most important bill he has ever introduced in the Congress.

While serving as President of the United States, Thomas Jefferson told the Nation: "Work out your own fortunes under a just government and an equal jurisprudence." But now we are told that we are no longer capable of taking care of ourselves and what is ours. Instead, we must be protected in the store and in our basket, in our coming in and our going out, and everything that we do must be regulated — and taxed — for our own good and our own protection, of course.

Dr. Hans Sennholz of Grove City College recently described the contrast, and the inevitable result, in these words: "In the first century of American independence, the people believed there was only one way to gain income: through work, or production. A revolution that occurred only a generation ago changed that. That was the discovery on the part of the American people that there was another source of income: the political process. Getting something from others through government is what most Americans favor today. It is the same idea which led to the downfall of every civilization since ancient Greece. The free society is perverted into a rip-off society, with everyone scrambling to get benefits from government. Bankruptcy and dictatorship result."

But the Great Majority like it that way. So Kissinger is called a Great Statesman and Humphrey a Great Lawgiver; and only a remnant will know how to prepare for the flood.

DON BELL REPORTS Weekly. $24 per year. Extra copies: 10¢ each. Please address all orders and correspondence to:

DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223.
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

AND WHO WILL REGULATE THE REGULATORS?

THAT GREAT ARMY OF FEDERAL SNOOPERS

"A new campaign—perhaps the biggest yet—is opening against the unchecked and increasingly arbitrary powers that federal regulatory agencies wield over the lives of the American people," declares U.S. News & World Report in its current (June 30) issue.

Quoting President Ford as its authority for the statement that such a campaign is really underway, the magazine presents factual evidence to show that such a crusade is urgently needed:

The "Regulators" cost taxpayers $130 billion a year; cause more harm than good in most cases; there are 63,444 of them snooping for the following departments and agencies in the following numbers:

Agriculture Department	14,054
Environmental Protection Agency	9,203
Food and Drug Administration	6,405
Labor Department	4,715
Treasury Department	3,760
Federal Energy Administration	3,125
Interior Department	2,851
National Labor Relations Board	2,454
Equal Employment Opportunity Commission	2,189
Securities and Exchange Commission	2,086
Transportation Department	2,079
Interstate Commerce Commission	2,061
Federal Communications Commission	1,971
Federal Trade Commission	1,569
Federal Power Commission	1,320
Other agencies	3,602
TOTAL FEDERAL REGULATORS	63,444

"Every day," says USN&WR, "decisions of the agencies (based on the reports of these regulators) affect 213 million Americans in almost innumerable and often invisible ways." Then comes what we are expected to accept as good news:

"President Ford has called a 'regulatory summit' with chairmen of 10 federal agencies to discuss what he describes as 'excessive Government regulations that stifle productivity, eliminate competition, increase consumer costs and contribute to inflation.' Says the President, 'I want small business released from the shackles of federal red tape. I want to end unnecessary, unfair and unclear regulations—and needless paper work.' Mr. Ford places the annual cost to consumers of unnecessary and wasteful regulatory policies at $2,000 per family...."

This, of course, is only a part of the story of how political totalitarianism and economic corporate socialism are being foisted upon an unsuspecting citizenry. Another part of the story can be read in a just published book, "The Federal Rathole," written by Donald Lambro and published by Arlington House, New Rochelle, New York (207 pages with appendix, $7.95).

In the introduction to his well documented and sometimes shocking book, author Lambro sets the scene for what is to follow by reminding the reader that:

"Each weekly paycheck stub is a constant and painful reminder to the American taxpayer that Washington has gone berserk. Annual federal budget requests are now over $349 billion and climbing, with the fiscal 1977 budget conservatively projected to hit $393 billion.

The gross federal debt reached $505 billion by the end of 1974 and was estimated to go over $605 billion by the end of the 1976 fiscal year. Interest on the debt is costing taxpayers over $29 billion a year and is estimated to rise to $36 billion annually by June 30, 1976. Between 1970 and 1974 the government ran up deficits of $68 billion, but Treasury Secretary William Simon predicts that in 1975 alone the government will have to borrow $79 billion to pay its mounting bills. Under President Ford's proposed fiscal 1976 budget, government spending will race upward to nearly $1 billion a day. Meanwhile, the average taxpayer must work four full months each year to pay his total federal, state and local taxes. And there is no end in sight....

"There is nothing that comes closer to achieving immortality than a federal program. Once enacted, it goes on seemingly forever, its funds appropriated almost automatically each year, its original rationale for being often all but forgotten. I possess no illusions that Congress, as it is presently constituted, will make any...cuts in the foreseeable future. Congress is a miasma of competing interest blocs and every member has his pet programs that he will fight...to defend."

Lambro gives an alphabetical list of 1,250 advisory committees on which an estimated 24,000 private and public citizens sit, which are fueled and run by an assigned government staff of more than 4,000 employees; at an estimated annual cost of more than $75 million. Often referred to as the "fifth arm of government," most of them could—and should—be eliminated and cut out of the budget entirely.

But these are all parts of the executive branch of the federal government and the idea of calling bureaucrats together for the purpose of finding ways and means of liquidating their own jobs or reducing their own payrolls, is like trying to get Satan to quit promoting sin.

True, Ford is calling in ten of his top agency chieftains, and he says he will discuss ways and means of reducing the ranks of the Regulators. But he said this at a meeting of small businessmen who are being driven out of business by the Regulators; and Ford needs the votes of those small businessmen if he is to get elected to the post he now holds by appointment. He's also posing as the Great Conservative and makes hints about taking on John Connally as his running mate to gain those Nixon votes that have no place to go in 1976. He's also suggested that he might accept Ronald Reagan as a running mate, in order to gain the support of the conservative wing of the Republican Party, which he lost when he joined Rockefeller and Kissinger to make it a Troika like they have in Soviet Russia. To believe anything a politician promises when he's trying to get elected to an office which he was awarded by appointment as a result of third party manipulations, is like believing that Watergate never happened. Besides, it would be the height of naivete to expect bureaucrats to gather together to seek ways and means of liquidating their own bureaus or even reducing the size of their staffs.

As for any hope from Congress, just as Donald Lambro says, "there continues to be an almost religious commitment to dream up federal programs for every conceivable national ill. One wonders at times whether we have evolved into a system of government in which 435 representatives and 100 senators are being paid $42,500 a year primarily to think up ways to spend our money... Unfortunately, pipedreams in Congress become laws. Thousands of them are introduced each year."

And the year 1975 is certainly no exception to the rule. In fact, it seems that there is a positive crusade being waged by such Senators as Hubert Humphrey and Jake Javits, and such Representatives as Udall and McCloskey, to get enacted into law certain bills that will serve to complete the socialization of the United States by July 4, 1976.

Many of these strategic bills have already become laws. For example, Public Law 93-641 became effective on May 3rd of this year. Known as the National Health Planning and Resources Development Act, it requires, among other things, that Governors of States must designate "health service districts" within their States if they wish to continue to receive federal funds for health services. This accounts for the sudden proliferation of Health Planning Districts within the various States during the past weeks. It is, of course, another step toward the completion of the sub-state regions network which is a part of the Regional Governance System already installed and being prepared to take the place of Counties and County Governments and—eventually—State Governments as well.

High on the list of priority legislation is S 50, The "Equal Opportunity and Full Employment Act of 1975" which would "establish a national policy and nationwide machinery for guaranteeing to all adult Americans able and willing to work the availability of equal opportunities for useful and rewarding employment." This bill was introduced by Humphrey and co-sponsored by Senators Philip Hart, Hathaway, Javits, Kennedy and Schweiker.

Also high on the priority list is S 200, a bill which would establish a super agency to be known as the Independent Consumer Agency, which we discussed in our letter of June 13, 1975.

Then there is S 1473, a bill which would establish a "National Development Bank." This is another of Hubert Humphrey's proposals, and in introducing the bill to the Senate on April 18, 1975, Humphrey said:

"The United States is a leading partner in the International banks, assisting in the development of other nations—the World Bank, the Asian Development Bank and the Inter-American Development Bank. Why cannot these established principles of international financing be applied to our own Nation?"

According to Humphrey, The National Domestic Development Bank would provide an alternative source of credit to state and local governments for the "purpose of financing public and quasi-public facilities of all types." The Bank would, of course, reserve the right to "reject any projects inconsistent with comprehensive planning for the communities being served." According to the bill, the Bank would be, purposely, a losing proposition, with its losses taken care of by federal subsidies. Annual federal payments would be made to the Bank in order to "make up the difference between the interest paid by the Bank or its obligations and the interest received from its loans to local governments."

This proposed National Domestic Development Bank would have a board of directors of fifteen members appointed by the President of the United States. And here is the "give-away": One member would be appointed from the Federal Reserve System. Four members would be "from among the heads of departments and agencies in the executive branch of the government," four members would represent the general public. The board would be completed by "two members who are elected officials from among nominees of the National League of Cities (NLC); two members who are elected officials from among nominees of the National Association of County Officials (NACO); and two members who are nominees from among the National Governors Conference (NGO)."

So, we find that this Bank is to be a creature of our old enemy, 1313. And the proper name of this bank should be The Regional Development Bank, since it is to be a part of the Regional Governance System which is to replace our representative republican government if the Humphreys and the Javits have their way. In an excellent commentary on this proposed Domestic Bank, Audrey Wood of "The Ozark Sunbeam" staff (Seligman, Missouri) in its weekly issue of June 9, 1975, wrote:

"The National Association of Counties, the National League of Cities, and the National Governor's Conference have two aspects in common—they are all units of '1313,' a syndicate of 22 political organizations which have constantly pushed regionalism at every level of local and state government. The National Association of Counties instituted the 'New County Program' which works to abolish sovereign county government, replacing it with regionalized multi-county systems. The National Association of Counties and the National League of Cities combined their talents to produce the regionalism propaganda service known as the National Association of Regional Councils (NARC). Both of the above organizations and the National Governor's Conference urged the devastating enactment of the Intergovernmental Cooperation Act which established the foundation for Regionalism as a national way of life. It is not difficult to teleologically discern what direction and what emphasis the (proposed) National Domestic Development Bank's Board of Directors would take in securing a development program for the United States of America." (Unquote).

One other aspect of this proposed Domestic Bank: the creation of federal banking and borrowing agencies has probably been as much a factor in causing soaring inflation as have the federal budget deficits. The list of agencies authorized to borrow capital includes the Federal Financing Bank, the Federal Home Loan Banks, the Federal National Mortgage Association, the Export-Import Bank, the Postal Service Fund, the Rural Electrification and Telephone revolving fund, the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corporation, the Farm Credit Administration, the Student Loan Marketing Association — and Senator Humphrey and like-minded legislators want to add on one more colossal Bank that will operate at a loss just to gain federal control over all State, County and Local Development Projects!

Also on the priority list—and rated as the "most important piece of legislation I have ever proposed in the Senate," said Hubert Humphrey, is S 1795, The Balanced Growth and Economic Planning Act of 1975," which we have discussed at length in previous letters.

And last, but certainly not least, just as soon as the House returns from its July 4th vacation, it plans to take up, debate, and vote on H 3510, a Land Use Bill which is designed "To encourage conservation of natural resources, to authorize grants for land use programs, to coordinate Federal actions concerning land use planning for the public lands, and for other purposes." (It is the "for other purposes" which makes this an especially destructive bill.)

Officially known as "The Land Use and Resource Conservation Act of 1975," this is a federal power grab of momentous proportions. It is a sneaky attempt to gain federal control over the way in which every square foot of land in the United States is to be used, but to make the States do the work and take the blame for the seizure of property rights. The bill is designed to work like this:

Each State will receive a special allocation of federal funds if the State enacts land use laws which are in agreement with the guidelines laid down by the Federal Planners. In anticipation of the passage of this or a similar Federal Act, and at the prodding of ACIR and the 1313 organizations, about three quarters of the States have already enacted (or Governors have put into effect by Executive Order) the necessary Land Use Laws. State control of your land is bad enough but Federal control is what the Regionalists are really seeking; and Rep. Udall's HR 3510 is exactly what they want to "secure the land."

There is a certain deceptive quality common to all the State Land Use Bills: all of them seem to be aimed at the unscrupulous land developer whose concern is not social or ecological, but purely economic. However, the bills all seem to conclude that you are a Developer if you change the "type of use of a structure" on your land, if you change the "type of use of your land," if you conduct any "building operation" on your land, if you change the material appearance of a structure on your land, if you clear your land for construction purposes, if you demolish any structure on your land, if improve the road on or leading to your land, etc.

The preceding list was taken from the Missouri Land Use Law, but all State laws are similar since they are copies of the "model law" proposed by the Council of State Governments (1313), and sent to all State Governors and Legislators for the purpose of making all State Laws uniform and in conformity with Federal Regulations.

In regard to State Land Use Laws, Professor Robert H. Freilich of the Missouri-Kansas City School of Law explains in a HUD-financed study entitled "Missouri Planning Legislation for State, Regional, and Local Government": "The state plans are binding on the regions and the regions must adopt plans which conform to the state plan and the localities must conform to the regional plan which in turn conforms to the state plan." And he might have added: The state plan must conform to the federal plan if and when HR 3510 or a similar bill becomes law; and the federal plan must in turn conform to a world plan if and when this "world community" that Henry Kissinger keeps talking about is installed in toto.

FINALLY:- We have discussed in this letter the five bills that are pending in Congress and which, in our opinion, are top priority bills to those of the Humphrey-Javits-Udall ilk who sincerely believe that the United States should be totally socialized, that this should be completed by July 4, 1976, and that it should be accomplished by legislative process, so that socialism will seem to have been accepted as the "wave of the future" and therefore demanded by the majority of the people. For quick and ready reference, we repeat:

S50 To establish a national policy and nationwide machinery for guaranteeing to all adult Americans able and willing to work the availability of equal opportunities for useful and rewarding employment.

S200 To establish an independent consumer agency to protect and serve the interest of consumers, and for other purposes.

S1473 To establish a National Domestic Development Bank to provide an alternative source of credit to State and local governments for the purpose of financing public and quasi-public facilities of all types, and for other purposes.

S1795 To amend the Employment Act of 1946 by providing for the development and adoption of a balanced economic growth plan, and for other purposes.

HR 3510 To encourage conservation of natural resources, to authorize grants to States for land use programs, to coordinate Federal actions concerning land use, to require land use planning for the public lands, and for other purposes.

It is the opinion of this editor that each of these bills must be defeated. Urgent action is required!

WORDS WORTH REMEMBERING

(At the conclusion of a patriotic address delivered at the Capitol Plaza Civic Center in Prince Georges County, Maryland, on November 29, 1973, the speaker, Mrs. John M. Masters, gave the following warning to her listeners.)

It is only fair to warn you that when you leave this auditorium tonight, you will have only three choices open to you. Either you will listen and, like most Americans, decide to let someone else do your job for you. Or, perhaps—unfortunately—you will mull it over in your mind and discover your philosophy is more closely aligned to that of the educationist change agent than it is to ours. Or, hopefully, you, too, will join us and, as Hamlet so beautifully put it, "...take arms against a sea of troubles and, by opposing, end them."

There will be no other way to go, than one of these three. Should you join us, I can guarantee you hardship beyond belief, for what you hear tonight is just one page in a massive, sordid tome.

You will be open to ridicule, perhaps even the possibility of physical abuse.

The material things of life will no longer matter to you. You'll find money is better spent on xeroxing, postage, and long distance calls, than on a new dress, or a new suit.

You will never again be your own person. Most of your waking hours will be dedicated to a fellowship of people who have learned to love and depend on each other—quickly—as soldiers do in battle, without question or excuse.

You might find you have lost an old friend, or a neighbor—sometimes even a family member—those who turn away from you because they cannot understand. Nor will they, until it is too late.

There will be many times when you will have to neglect your own home, or your children, but through it all there will come to you many unexpected blessings. For, as you fight to retain for your children the moral values and religious ethics you have so lovingly nurtured in them, your own will be replenished and strengthened. The old mores and traditions you have allowed to slide, in this age of change for innovation's sake, will become precious to you once again.

The sleeping love you possess for your country will awaken, and fill you with an urgent protectiveness you had long forgotten.

You will become a better person — if only because you want to put yourself on the opposite pole from your enemies.

And, finally, you'll come to understand that you have taken up God's sword in this armageddon for western civilization—and you will know that what you are doing is ultimately and eternally right.

DON BELL REPORTS Weekly. $24 per year. Extra copies: 10 cents each. Please address all orders to:
DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

THE CONSPIRACY TO COLLECTIVIZE

THE BICENTENNIAL BILK

On July 4, 1975, the Bicentennial Celebration had its official beginning. It is to last a full year, culminating in a gala 200th birthday observance on July 4, 1976. The start of the year of celebration was kicked off by all-night television network programs in which the historical highlights of the Nation's history were re-enacted, often erroneously, sometimes downright dishonestly, in attempts to discredit the Founding Fathers and make out that Humanism—not Christianity—was the faith of the fathers.

Speaking of the prospects for the success of the year-long observance of the Nation's bicentennial, one newsmagazine looked ahead and forecast: "Look for some flops, some big successes. Don't count on a uniform theme. National leadership bogged down early. So did plans for a world's fair in Philadelphia to keynote the whole observance. Still, more than 5,000 communities already are officially designated as Bicentennial participants. Sampling of events being planned shows this pattern:

"Residents of Denver and Niagara Falls intend to rebuild neighborhoods. In Brooklyn, teenagers join in writing a history of their community. A Bicentennial ball is in the works for Yankton, S.D. The main project in La Porte City, Ia., is the opening of a farm museum. In Baton Rouge, it means a new river-front park. Some whole cities are brushing up historic areas—including Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Charleston, S.C. Federal agencies will join city officials in efforts to turn Washington, D.C. into a showcase of American achievement. Coast to coast: a rich selection of parades, fireworks, pageants, conferences, specially commissioned symphonies and operas—you name it. Added up, it's to be a grass-roots dedication to the country's federal tradition of progress through local and regional initiative."

But "national leadership bogged down early." As a known matter of fact, Communists and radicals got hold of the national machinery at the very beginning and sought to use what should have been a patriotic celebration for very unpatriotic purposes.

And, as another well known matter of fact, those same people who sought to pervert the Bicentennial Celebration are hard at work trying to bring about their own goal: the total and complete socialization of the United States on the Nation's 200th birthday.

It is a many-sided attack on the Republic. Kissinger and his cohorts are trying to construct a World Community which would be divided into Regions of Control with leadership honors being shared more or less equally by Soviet Russia, Commune-ized China, Cartelized Japan, Socialized Western Europe, and Fascist Corporate Socialist) United States of America.

There is another group, headed presently by U.S. Senators like Humphrey and Javits, which aims to bring about the socialization of the United States by means of legislation and education (this is the Fabian Socialist method). Other groups camouflage their socialistic goals by crusading for "equal rights." Prominent in this respect are the women's liberation groups, the homosexual activists, the ecumenicists of the World and National Councils of Churches, etc.

Whatever the professed goals of these groups, in almost every instance there is one propaganda weapon that is used by them all; that weapon is Communism. Some utilize the fear of Communism to promote their purposes; some profess adoration of Communism to advance their causes.

So, whether these groups are pro-Communist or anti-Communist in their public proclamations, makes little difference, because they are using Communism as a weapon to promote their own, anti-American causes!

Hence, as we start the Bicentennial Year, we find that there is a great resurgence and revival of Communist Parties and Communist Organizations. There is, for example, the new Revolutionary Communist Party, which is being formed by some of the former members of the old Students for a Democratic Society (SDS). According to Dr. Fred Schwarz, who is usually quite accurate in his reports concerning Communism and Communist activities:

"The Revolutionary Communist Party... will be both in competition with and in opposition to the Communist Party, U.S.A., which it accuses of having returned to the support of capitalism and of having renounced violent revolution. It will also be in opposition to the foreign policy of the Soviet Union which it attacks as both capitalist and imperialist. The program of the new party will emphasize gaining leadership among industrial workers in order to promote industrial conflict as a prelude to armed revolt. Every effort will be made to overthrow the established leadership of the labor unions, led by George Meany. The so-called 'Labor Bureaucracy' is classified as a servant of capitalism exploiting the working class.... The objective (of this Revolutionary Communist Party) is to unite the various communist sects that emerged from the campus turmoil of the late sixties and which support Mao-Tse tung and the Chinese Communist Party, into the nucleus of a Communist Party with mass appeal."

Yet another new Communist Group is the October League, a nationally active, self-proclaimed Maoist organization which aims to "lead the people to make a revolution." Rep. Larry McDonald of Georgia was able to obtain a copy of a confidential document titled "October League Manual on Open and Secret Work, May, 1975." He says it is a "28-page packet" which sets out for the OL cadres the methods by which the league is building an underground secret organization fully equipped for illegal revolutionary activities in the planned revolution. The October League Executive Committee states in the introduction:

"At times we will be compelled to change our tactics in order to work under conditions of extreme illegality. ... In the course of leading the people to make a revolution, many of us will have to sacrifice our lives. It is this that is the basis of all our efforts when we speak of security."

"The party we are building," states the manual, "will be capable of functioning effectively while suffering the most ferocious attacks of the state. It will be able to recruit and train new members while subject to the most brutal repression. Able to conduct propaganda and agitation under any conditions, it will be a party that leads the struggles of the people while withstanding the open terror of the state. In short, it will be a fighting party of insurrection.

"The building of a secret, illegal organization is not a task to be put off and dealt with later. It is a Marxist-Leninist principle that reflects our understanding of the state as an instrument of class dictatorship and our strategy for revolution. In what is to be done, Lenin pointed out the price revolutionaries must pay for their primitiveness, and stated that we must use relatively legal periods to build up our secret work and dig deep among the masses." (Unquote).

However, the most important--and dangerous--of these newly formed Communist organizations is one that calls itself the People's Bicentennial Commission (PBC), a propaganda organization headed by one Jerry Rifkin which is attempting to "indoctrinate the American people with a warped version of the political philosophy of our Founding Fathers."

This Marxist propaganda organization has been exposed in a pamphlet prepared for the U.S. Industrial Council Educational Foundation by Allan C. Brownfeld. This analysis was published in the June 25 issue of The Congressional Record, page E 3515. Following are excerpts from the Record.

THE PBC: DISTORTING HISTORY

While the American Revolution Bicentennial Commission prepares for 1976, another organization, which proclaims itself "The People's Bicentennial Commission" is preparing for its own--and quite different--commemoration of the 200th anniversary of the American Revolution.

The founder and head of this private organization... is Jeremy Rifkin. A self-proclaimed socialist revolutionary, Rifkin makes no attempt to conceal the purposes of his group. He states that "I imagine those people at the White House feel a little uncertain playing around with such a revolutionary thing as celebrating America's 200th birthday. We think real revolutionaries ought to be in charge."

Declaring that his goal for America's "second revolution" is an end to free enterprise and the introduction of a socialist economy, Rifkin declares that "We want to democratize the economy just as the founders democratized the government." Simon and Schuster is scheduled to publish nine books for the Peoples Bicentennial Commission. The second in the series, called "Common Sense II," states that "The basic goal of a democratic economy should be a nation of decentralized economic enterprises with the ownership and control being shared jointly by the workers in the plants and by the local community in which they operate."

The PBC claims that 935 radio stations have promised to broadcast one-minute spots and 120 television stations have agreed to show a similar series of bicentennial observances....

While Jeremy Rifkin's recent public statements have toned down the long-run radical goals of the PBC, his earlier efforts to get fellow leftists to assist him in putting the program together make his real goals quite clear. Writing in "The New American Movement," published in Cleveland, Ohio, Rifkin declared that:

"...it makes no sense for the New Left to allow the defenders of the system the advantage of presenting themselves as the true heirs and defenders of the American revolutionary tradition. Instead, the revolutionary heritage must be used as a tactical weapon to isolate the existing institutions and those in power by constantly focusing public attention on their inability to translate our revolutionary dreams into reality."...

The packet distributed by the PBC consists of five well-written, tabloid-size pamphlets. Each is decorated with authentic 1776 memorabilia, and a set of supporting material—leaflets, brochures, buttons, and a poster. While the material looks outwardly patriotic, the message within is clearly one which calls for a “new” and “radical” American Revolution. The PBC’s monthly publication, called “Common Sense,” makes this abundantly clear. The April, 1974 issue, for example, includes the following:

“...Can any reformer of the giant corporation tell us how it’s possible to put that institution in the hands of the people without taking it out of the hands of the wealthy few that control it? Make no mistake about it! This was the same dilemma that faced the moderate reformers at the Continental Convention in 1776. They advocated power to the people and the preservation of the monarchy at the same time. The fallacy of their position seems self-evident in perspective. Yet, there are some among us today who hold the same position in regard to the business corporation....”

Thus, the PBC mocks even those who would reform the current American system of freedom and free enterprise. Only total overthrow is appropriate for these “heirs” of the revolutionary tradition of 1776.

This Mr. Rifkin sets forth in his “New American Movement” article: “The left must take up this challenge and turn this Bicentennial Celebration into a campaign designed to create a mass revolutionary consciousness in tune with the revolutionary legacy of 1776...A genuine understanding of revolutionary ideals links Thomas Paine, Sam Adams, and Benjamin Rush and the American people with Lenin, Mao, Che Guevara, and the struggle of all oppressed people in the world.”

...Rifkin and his colleagues understand that revolutionary propaganda must be presented to the American people with a patriotic veneer, so as not to frighten them away. He notes that “The New Left must be willing to meet people where they are, rather than where we would like them to be. The left movement’s character has become increasingly strange and at times frightening to many Americans. Most people perceive little or nothing in common with the New Left.”

It is the thesis of the PBC organizers that the left must stop frightening people and that the present economic and political difficulties facing the nation provide an excellent opportunity for planting radical ideas and programs. To do so effectively, Rifkin believes, the left must play on the heritage and symbols “to which the great majority of Americans can respond,” and that it must do so in terms which will not drive people away. He states that, “If the New Left hopes to engage this new consciousness and give it positive direction through political struggle, it must...build on the base erected in the revolution of 1776 and refurbished in the successive dramas of the more affirmative periods in American history.”...

Fortunately, a number of individuals have observed the activities of the PBC and have been vocal in pointing out the dangers inherent in them...the publication, “America’s Future” points out that “At the base of the PBC campaign is the continuing propaganda gimmick of trying to equate the American revolution with modern revolutionary movements. This is especially serious—indeed could even be called vicious since it is so false—because it is aimed primarily at schools, colleges, students and teachers. They are particularly susceptible to this falsehood because under modern educational methods so many of them are so deficient in American history and specifically in the facts surrounding the men and events of the 1776 Revolution. This leftist campaign, in reality, is a brazen hoax to equate the aims, strategy and activities of our modern leftists with the men and the movement that brought about American independence and culminated in the promulgation of our great Charter of Freedom: the Constitution of the United States. Yet, despite the evidence offered by any number of distinguished writers and historians, the hoax goes on being perpetrated.”

Some time ago the distinguished editor, Eugene Lyons, pointed out that, “It is silly and mischievous to equate the American Revolution with other varieties—with those in Russia and China and Cuba, for instance. And it is grotesque to suggest, as so many are doing, some true affinity between the responsible conduct of the 13 American colonies of 1776” and the objectives of today’s revolutionaries. He said that “The analogies happen to be utterly false...The American Revolution was essentially conservative—a War of Independence from a foreign tyranny, not an internal class or social revolution.” He noted that the American Revolution “was led, and its purposes were articulated, by men deeply committed to law and reason and religious concepts. The colonists were defending established rights against the encroachments of a dictatorial power overseas.” And he notes that “In England itself, the action had the support of conservatives like Edmund Burke, what we would now call ‘men of the right,’ rather than far-out innovators. The Americans were not radicals and their revolution had nothing in common with the revolutions of the present epoch or, for that matter, with the extremism of the French Revolution in their own epoch.”

(End of extended quotation)

So much for the violent approaches to the Revolution of 1976. We have given some of the details concerning the new Revolutionary Communist Party and the October League, both of which are designed to promote death and destruction and further the causes of Maoism. What we could not tell you is what people and organizations are financing these activities; we can only suspect their aiding and abetting comes from groups and individuals within the United States, not from Communist China or Soviet Russia. Perhaps their backers are the same who backed the original SDS, from which most of the present-day nihilistic and kidnapping gangs have sprung up.

And we have supplied documentation on the activities of the New Left, in its connection with the Bicentennial Celebration. Also, in our Report of April 25, "The Anatomy of the 'Second American Revolution'," we gave details concerning the activities of a group which calls itself "The National Committee for the Bicentennial Era", which has published a "Declaration of Interdependence" that is supposed to supersede our original Declaration of Independence. We commented:

"It should be obvious to any student of current history that any organization such as this National Commission for the Bicentennial Era is merely a front, a transmission belt (to use a term made popular by the Communists) to raise money and gain popular support from citizens-at-large. Behind such a front there is always the faceless directorate that prepares the long-range plans, supervises the programs, provides the budgeted funds, and hopes to bring to fruition the planned objectives, step by step."

"Let us assume," we continued, "that the Communists knew what they were talking about when they named 1976 as their Target Date. If any group were to take over the United States with the majority of the citizens aiding and abetting the takeover without even knowing what they were doing (as Lenin predicted) then a Bicentennial Year would be the most opportune time for such a coup."

"But, let us dig deeper," we suggested. "Let us assume that Target Date: 1976 was agreed upon years earlier; perhaps at about the time the Bolshevik takeover of Russia was approved and practically guaranteed by the leaders of the victorious Allies meeting at Versailles, at the time that the Paris Peace Treaty was rejected by the United States Senate and the Council on Foreign Relations was founded by Col. House and associates for the purpose of bringing about a Global Authority which would assume control of the whole world. If such a scheme were ever to succeed, it would be necessary to restructure the entire system of government of the United States." ... (End of quote).

If viewed from this perspective, then the activities of a new Revolutionary Communist Party, an October League, a New Left's People's Bicentennial Commission and a National Committee for the Bicentennial Era, are all "sideshow" activities. They spread fear among those who can be won over or rendered helpless through "fear of the Communists." They "sell" socialism to the masses through deception and what George Orwell called "Newthink." They raise money and they influence the gullible, and they are extremely successful with the new generation of Americans that is about to assume control of the social, commercial, professional and governmental institutions of the country.

But, in a larger sense, these are sideshows. The Big Tent Performance is being managed by those faceless elitists who are seldom identified, and the acts are put on by men in positions of leadership in the Visible Government of the United States; by men and women who believe with Henry Kissinger that "We are the only non-Communist country strong enough and cohesive enough to play a world role." But, in order to maintain that position in the world, we must kowtow to Communist and Totalitarian Nations, play that dangerous game called Detente, reduce our own standards of living and strength of arms in order to "be like other nations," and even reshape our form of government so it will be acceptable to a world gone Socialist, in which we are the only remaining important "non-Communist country."

In short: If we are to take our place in a World Community, we must be like other Nations and cease to be a Representative Republic with a Free Enterprise Economy and a Christian Heritage!

This is the real intent of the "Second American Revolution. And there is nothing new about this Conspiracy. Back at the very time that our Founding Fathers were signing a Declaration of Independence, another group of men in Europe were publishing an antithetical document which called, not for a Confederation of Free and Independent States, but for the

1. Abolition of all ordered Government.
2. Abolition of private property.
3. Abolition of inheritance.
4. Abolition of patriotism.
5. Abolition of the family (i.e. of marriage and morality, and the institution of the communal education of children).
6. Abolition of all religion.

These were the aims of the Illuminati. Their Manifesto was published on May 1, 1776; our Declaration of Independence on July 4 of that same year. Down through the generations these two documents have vied for leadership in the ordering of the social and governmental affairs of mankind. And now, Target Date for the Death of our Declaration of Independence and the installation of a Declaration of Interdependence has been set—by the enemies of liberty—for July 4, 1976. But, lest we forget: The Spirit of '76 was not the Spirit of submission to enslavement by man or men!

DON BELL REPORTS Weekly. $24 per year. Extra copies: 10cents each. Address all orders and inquiries: DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223 Palm Beach, Florida 33480

SELLING ROPE TO THE SOVIET HANGMEN

BY BREAD ALONE?

Alexander Solzhenitsyn, in his first major public address in the United States, in Washington, D.C. on June 30, told the story behind Lenin's oft-quoted remark concerning the Americans and rope. As translated into English by an interpreter, and clarified by the editors of U.S. News & World Report, the Russian expatriate delivered the following warning to the fast-shrinking "free" world:

"Something which is almost incomprehensible to the human mind is the West's fantastic greed for profit and gain, which goes beyond all reason, all limitations, all conscience. I have to admit that Lenin foretold this whole process. Lenin, who spent most of his life in the West and knew it much better than Russia, always said that the Western capitalists would do anything to supply the Soviet economy--'They will fight each other to sell us goods cheaper and sell them quicker so that we'll buy from one rather than from the other.'

"And in the difficult moments of a party meeting in Moscow, he said: 'Comrades, don't worry when things are hard with us. When things are difficult, we will give a rope to the bourgeoisie and the bourgeoisie will hang itself with this rope.'

"Then Karl Radek, a witty fellow you may have heard of, said: 'Vladimir Ilyich, where are we going to get enough rope to hang the whole bourgeoisie?' Lenin said immediately: 'They'll supply us with it.'

"Nikita Khrushchev came here and said, 'We're going to bury you.' People didn't believe that--they took it as a joke. Now, of course, the Communists have become more clever in my country. They do not say, 'We're going to bury you', any more. Now they say 'Detente.'

"Nothing has changed in Communist ideology. The goals are the same as they were." (unquote)

And we might add that little has changed insofar as the official United States attitude toward the Soviet Union is concerned. We (the "great democratic majority" of Americans) passed it off as a joke in doubtful taste if we ever heard about what Lenin had said in regard to rope; we thought it funny when Khrushchev pounded a desk with his shoe and shouted that he would bury us; and we will not take Solzhenitsyn seriously when he insists that "Detente" is just a new and more sophisticated word with exactly the same meaning as the former expressions. However, Solzhenitsyn cited history to back up his warning. In the 90-minute extemporaneous address he delivered at a dinner sponsored by the AFL-CIO at the Washington Hilton Hotel, he recalled these historical events:

The Bolsheviks came to power in Russia "by an abhorrent uprising." They initiated mass murders without trial, crushed the church, plundered villages, resorted to genocide of landowners, created utter chaos. Then, when hunger and poverty threatened to destroy their movement, they called upon the Western Nations to save them. And the United States Government, instead of demanding a reorganization of government before coming to their aid, organized the so-called American Relief Administration with Herbert Hoover at its head, and the world was made safe for Communism. As an added gesture of concern, engineers, agricultural experts, technicians, and teachers were sent from the United States to Bolshevik Russia to resuscitate the dying socialist experiment. Meanwhile, fifteen million peasants were "sent off to extermination" and 6 million persons died of starvation in an artificially created famine in the Ukraine in 1932 and 1933. That was the time chosen for President Roosevelt to honor this "system as being one worthy of diplomatic recognition, of friendship and of assistance. This was the beginning of the friendship, and ultimately, of the military alliance" of World War II. When that war was over:

"Your statesmen of the West, for some inexplicable reason, signed one capitulation after another.... In Yalta, without any need for it, the occupation of Mongolia, Moldavia, Estonia, Latvia, Lithuania was recognized. Immediately after that, almost nothing was done to protect Eastern Europe, and seven or eight countries of Eastern Europe were also surrendered."

"Stalin had demanded that the Soviet citizens who did not want to return home be handed over to him," Solzhenitsyn recalled. "And the Western countries then handed over 1.5 million human beings--by force.

"...after that came the 30 years that followed--the constant retreat, the surrender of one country after another, up to the point where now, in Africa, there are Soviet satellite countries; almost all of Asia is taken over by them; Portugal is rolling down the precipice. During this 30 years, more was surrendered to totalitarianism than ever—ever in the world history after any war had any defeated country surrendered. There was no war, but there might as well have been.”

In one of the few reports-in-depth carried by newspapers, “Human Events” of July 12, noted, and we quote:

“The famed Russian received a tumultuous ovation, both at the beginning and end of his fascinating talk. . . . Nevertheless, the enthusiasm for Solzhenitsyn was not shared by all. Conspicuously absent, for instance, were any representatives of the White House itself. Vice President Nelson Rockefeller, who had been extended an invitation by the AFL-CIO, declined on the grounds that he would be vacationing. Secretary of State Henry Kissinger, who is also the President’s national security adviser, rejected the invitation to appear for the same reason. President Ford, moreover, snubbed Solzhenitsyn in the most rude and abrasive manner. First, he turned down the AFL-CIO invitation because he said he had a Monday night family dinner at the White House for his daughter, Susan. . . . Press Secretary Ron Nessen then informed the press corps on Tuesday that the President had no plans to see Solzhenitsyn during his entire stay in Washington, though the Russian author remained in the Nation’s Capital several days following the Monday night dinner. Nor did the President plan to speak to him over the phone. Nessen said that Ford was not refusing to see the Russian author, only that he couldn’t seem to fit him into a busy schedule. On Wednesday, Nessen elaborated on the matter again. He confirmed for reporters that Senators Strom Thurmond and Jesse Helms had suggested that Ford call on Solzhenitsyn, but Nessen brushed off their advice by saying that ‘for image reasons, the President does like to have some substance in his meeting,’ and that he really would have nothing of substance to talk over. He said that President Ford is aware of his views anyway, and that ‘it’s not clear what he would gain by a meeting.’ Nessen then reiterated on Wednesday that the President’s schedule was crowded. . . .

“The President, of course, has had time to see Brazilian soccer star ‘Pele’ in the last two weeks, and even bounce a ball off his shoe. In the past, he has also made room for Bella Abzug, Muhammed Ali, Charles Goodell, Ralph Nader and Dick Cavett. But somehow he couldn’t squeeze in a 10-minute session for one of the . . . most articulate and telling opponents of a tyranny that the U.S. spends $90 billion a year to defend itself against.

“Some informed sources say that Ford, under Secretary of State Henry Kissinger’s strong counselling, didn’t want to risk seeing Solzhenitsyn because it might have offended the Russians. . . .” (unquote)

While speaking of the “genocide of the peasantry” that was carried out by the Communists in Russia, Solzhenitsyn said: “At the height of Stalin’s terror in 1937-38, if we divide the number of persons executed by the number of months, we get more than 40,000 persons shot per month. . . . (This) still did not prevent the entire united democracy of the world — England, France, the United States, Canada, Australia and other small countries — from entering into a military alliance with the Soviet Union. How is this to be explained? How can we understand it?”

And nothing has changed in this respect. “Nothing has changed in Communist ideology. The goals are the same as they were.” And we are still making alliances with the Soviet Union and with other Communist dictatorships.

And we can still ask: “How is this to be explained? How can we understand it?”

As this letter is being written American astronauts are making final preparations to meet Soviet cosmonauts in space; the technology that put men on the moon is being shared with totalitarians who put millions of men in their graves. Knowing what happened to the American economy—and the economy of the rest of the industrialized West—when the last “wheat deal” was made with the Soviet Union, there are rumors that an even bigger “wheat deal” is being planned for the Fall of ’75. Fourteen United States Senators and their wives and entourage have just returned from a taxpayer-paid vacation in the Soviet Union where they were brainwashed by experts.

Meanwhile here in the United States security officials report that “the KGB has been eavesdropping on hundreds of thousands of U.S. phone calls, many of them dealing with top-secret and classified government information. Using space satellites and ultra-modern detection equipment located in the Soviet Embassy in Washington, the Russians have been ‘monitoring’ phone conversations from the White House, the CIA, the National Security Agency and other vital U.S. installations. Construction of a new Soviet Embassy, on one of the highest peaks in the District of Columbia, will enable the Communists to pick up even more governmental conversations.” (Quoted from “Human Events,” July 5, 1975).

An article appearing in “The Washington Star” of July 6, 1975, lends detail and substance to the preceding. Headlined “KGB in U.S.,” and written by Jeremiah O’Leary of the Star staff, the article says, in part:

“If you should happen to meet one of the 1,097 Soviet government officials in the United States at a party, a supermarket or a bus stop, the chances are 50-50 that you will be talking with a member of the KGB. And if the conversation turns to anything more significant than the price of eggs or the traffic problems of Washington rush hours, the chances are 100 percent that the KGB will hear all about it—especially if you have any wisp of knowledge of or insight into American military, political, technological or economic developments.

“The Kometit Gosudarstvennoy Bezopasnosti, or Committee for State Security, is the principal agency through which the Soviet Union is ruled and the Kremlin’s foreign policy is executed. It combines all the functions of the American CIA and FBI, plus a number of other roles that go beyond anything ever conceived by the Western intelligence community.

“The KGB presence in the United States...has dramatically increased since 1972 because of the evolution of detente....

“...officials point out that in the open American society the opportunities for the gathering of information are infinitely greater than it is in the USSR or even in the United Kingdom which has an Official Secrets Act for which there is no American counterpart.

“Any Russian, diplomat or not, can go to the Government Printing Office or government departments and pick up publications by the suitcase load,” said one U.S. official, “Their main interest is in technology, any technical development. They go to the industry conventions, the economic and trade fairs. The correspondents from TASS can even go to background briefings by U.S. officials. Did you ever hear of any American reporter who could wander around in the Kremlin interviewing people and picking up handouts?”

Of course, the answer to this is simple: Officially, we treat the Communists as friends, while they treat us as enemies. To our State Department “Detente” means “We accept you as an equal partner in all things, and we will share and share alike;” while to the Kremlin, “Detente” means “We will bury you.”

However, it seems unnecessary for the KGB to waste the time of its thousands of agents ferreting out technological secrets from the United States Government or from American Industry (capitalized). With Kissinger and the Rockefellers laying out the ground rules, we are committed to the official program of giving the Communists almost anything they ask for, from technological know-how to complete factories, from control of the Indian Ocean to military mastery of the skies.

A pertinent and current example in the technological field: We in the United States, and in other Nations of the Industrialized West, are told to keep worrying and fretting about an alleged energy crisis. We are told to conserve and seek new ways of developing needed energy. But at the same time, on a cooperative program, U.S. scientists are sent to Russia to help the Communists develop new energy sources—research that has been stopped in the United States in order to permit Russia to develop the new method first! (Even as General Patton was stopped at the Elbe in order that Russian troops might enter Berlin first at the end of World War II.)

It takes but a minimum of reading between the lines to understand how the Communists are being favored at the expense of the United States in the matter of a new energy source, as we reprint important parts of an article which appeared in The Los Angeles Times of March 3, 1975:

RUSS PLANT YIELDS POWER WITHOUT MOVING PARTS

By Robert C. Toth
Times Staff Writer

MOSCOW—In principle, the novel Soviet power plant is a rocket on its side, with a great magnet around its exhaust. The result is electric power without moving parts. The promise is cheaper electricity, less fuel consumption and cleaner smoke emission....

It was the first demonstration of...“a very significant step forward that should make some heads turn back home,” according to Dr. William Jackson, a U.S. Energy Research and Development Agency official visiting here. “They are five years ahead of us in this area,” he added. “This field is one of the cooperative programs between the two countries in science and technology....”

The full promise of magneto-hydrodynamics (MHD), as the principle is called is some distance from being realized...But the odds are now for success. The Soviet developers are sufficiently convinced to be committed to building a 1,000-megawatt plant by 1981.

The Soviet lead in the field is embarrassing because U.S. scientists first proved MHD’s feasibility and now lag in exploiting it. A generation ago it was European science that was being converted to practical use by American technology.

“The pioneering work done in America,” said Soviet MHD program chief Alexander Sheindlin, “was made possible by U.S. rocket technology.”

“If I may be critical,” he told the first group of American journalists to visit his facility Thursday, “there was exaggerated interest and support in your country for nuclear electricity in the early 1960s and all plans for developing fossil fuel power were cut drastically. It was not easy for us to stay in the field in isolation but we were sure of the correctness of the approach, and continued it.”...

In the two most significant tests so far—producing 12.4 megawatts for a half hour and four megawatts for 100 hours—the electricity was dissipated by sending it into the Moscow system to be used, Dr. Sheindlin said....

In comparison with steam-turbine plants, those using oil and coal power plants are at most 40% efficient, nuclear plants 33%. So MHD is potentially 50% more efficient than other methods.

"As conservation of fuel becomes more and more important," said (U.S. Energy and Research Development Agency official) Jackson, "this improved efficiency is very significant indeed." (End of article).

In addition to energy research and development, it has also been announced that the Soviet Union is ahead of the United States in the production of petroleum and petroleum products—especially in the production of natural gas.

But even more significant is the fact—now admitted by Defense Secretary James Schlesinger—that the USSR is now ahead of the United States in the field of nuclear armament and in the number of nuclear powered submarines now making the Soviet Navy master of the more important seas and of some of the oceans.

An item in the U.S. News & World Report of July 7 read: "American experts on arms control warn that the U.S. must hold out for stricter terms in any future strategic-arms-limitation agreement with Russia. They cite Soviet exploitation of ambiguities in the SALT I pact — the launching of a big build-up of missile strength. In the words of one authority: 'We are witnessing a lesson in how not to do business with the Soviets'."

Another current report, this one by Associated Press: "U.S. intelligence has received reports that about 3,000 Soviet specialists are manning a growing Russian military complex in strategically located Somalia. ... U.S. intelligence specialists believe the development of missile-handling, refueling and other facilities in Somalia foreshadows an increase in Soviet fleet operations in the Indian Ocean now that the Suez Canal has been reopened...."

The Soviet Union has emerged as a maritime super power, with a large, modern and well-equipped ocean-going fleet that includes an estimated 400 operational submarines—over 100 of which are nuclear-powered—and over one thousand naval aircraft. By building up such maritime strength, the Soviet Union has gained control of most important waterways with the single exception of the Panama Canal which is vital to the defense of the Americas. And Henry Kissinger is doing his very best (in the spirit of Detente) to give away U.S. control over this vital sea passage.

In the important book "Kissinger on the Couch" by Phyllis Schlafly and Chester Ward, on page 733 the authors ask: "If Kissinger had been consciously and deliberately acting on behalf of the Soviet Union, could he have promoted the Kremlin's interests any more effectively? Could he have weakened our strategic defense capability any more effectively? ... Our strategic surrender is being tendered now, and the Kremlin is already acting on it." Reference was to the SALT agreements and Kissinger is in Europe arranging even more concessions to the Communists as this letter is being written.

On page 743 of this same book there is this important information: "Buried in two sentences in President Gerald Ford's first message to Congress on August 12, 1974, was a Kissinger 'plant,' identified by his inimitable indicia. To the American people it merely sounded typical of what we have been led to accept as the innocuous grandiloquence of a presidential pronouncement. To the Politbureau in Moscow, however, it carried a convincing answer to the question the Kremlin must have been pondering: 'Can Kissinger capture Ford as totally as he captured Nixon?' Here is Kissinger's answer in President Ford's address, with its veracity attested by its staggering brashness:

To the Soviet Union I pledge a continuity in our commitment to the course of the past three years. To our two peoples and to all mankind, we owe a continued effort to live and, where possible, to work together in peace—for in a thermonuclear age there can be no alternative to a positive and peaceful relationship between our nations.

"The official voice is that of President Ford. The words are Henry Kissinger's, and they commit the new President to adopt and continue the Kissinger-Kremlin policies.... These Kissinger policies... have brought the United States down to the penultimate point of strategic surrender and to the brink of ultimate political surrender which will inexorably follow. They subject the United States to detente on Soviet terms...."

And, in the words of Alexander Solzhenitsyn, who learned it the hard way, to the Soviet Union, detente means, "We'll furnish the rope and you'll hang yourselves, and we will bury you."

Yet, there keeps ringing in our hearts certain words of sure hope for a Nation: "If my people, which are called by my name, shall humble themselves, and pray, and seek my face, and turn from their wicked ways; then will I hear from heaven, and will forgive their sin, and will heal their land."

(2nd Chronicles 7:14)

DON BELL REPORTS Weekly, accenting the Christian American point of view. Subscription rate: $24 per year. Extra copies: 10 cents each. Address all orders to:
DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

WE WIN A FEW BATTLES, BUT . . .

THEY PAUSED TO SHOUT "BANZAI"

The introduction to this letter is strictly personal, and at a time when American astronauts and Russian cosmonauts are shaking hands while encircling the earth, it may seem archaic. But it concerns an important lesson we learned the hard way and, to us, it seems pertinent:

A little more than thirty years ago, on March 22, 1945, to be exact, we were one of a 13-man crew aboard a PB4Y2 (the Navy's version of the famed B17) engaged in a patrol-bombing mission along the South China coast. At Amoy, we spotted some Japanese ships and went down to investigate and bomb them. A Japanese anti-aircraft battery also spotted us, shot off the tail of our plane, and we went hurtling to the bottom of the sea. The water wasn't too deep at that point and, miraculously, seven of us were able to extricate ourselves from the wreckage and float to the surface. The other six perished, but we seven managed to salvage a life raft and consider some way of escape.

The Japanese gunners were within sight and sound of us but they obviously thought that no one could have survived such an experience. So, instead of going after any survivors, they held a "banzai party," a celebration complete with toasts to the Emperor, because they had destroyed an enemy four-engined bomber and killed its crew.

Within a few minutes they spotted the tell-tale yellow of our life raft, and armed motor boats were sent to finish the job they had not completed. But, by that time a group of courageous Chinese fishermen had seen us, came to our rescue and, after some twenty-four hours of hair-breadth escapes, we were joining the fishermen in their toasts to Chiang Kai-shek and his American ally (our government hadn't yet double-crossed Chiang in favor of Mao Tse-tung).

The lesson we learned, and the moral to our tale: Don't start celebrating a victory until you are sure the battle has really been won; and remember that winning a battle is not the same as winning a war.

With that admonition as a preface, now we can note that, at least for this Congressional term, we have indeed won some important battles, though the war continues. Perhaps the most important is the death, for this session, of Rep. Udall's Land-Use Bill. As reported by David Hess of the Knight Washington Bureau, on Wednesday, July 16:

"The House Interior Committee wrote an end to two years of stormy debate Tuesday by voting, 23-19, to reject a federal land-use planning bill. Twice passed by the Senate and once left for dead in the House last year before being revived in a watered-down version, the bill would have provided federal aid to states willing to meet federal guidelines for orderly growth.

"The bill's sponsors said after the vote that the issue is dead in this session of Congress. Rep. Morris Udall, the bill's chief backer and a Democratic candidate for President, said, . . . "I suspect the victory of land planning opponents will be shortlived." . . ."

Not a clear-cut victory, but certainly a stand-off, can be reported in the attempted give-away of the Panama Canal. This comes about because the Panamanian Government has become too greedy, and wants even more than Kissinger offered to give.

A special report from Panama tells the story. Here are important excerpts:

"Panama and the United States appear as far away as ever from a new Panama Canal treaty, judging by a position paper given . . . by the Panama Foreign Office. Entitled 'Situation Actual de las Negociaciones,' the paper outlines the positions of both countries on the principal points of the new treaty. Panama's basic position (is) that it wants a new treaty which eliminates the 1903 treaty 'and its perpetuity,' . . . and an acceptable period for the control of the canal to pass exclusively to Panama. At the same time, Panama wants a 'program of progressive elimination of United States Military Bases.'

" . . . Panama wants complete jurisdiction over the Canal Zone . . . (and) . . . About the only thing the two countries appear to be agreeable to is an arbitration clause, but this has yet to be negotiated." (unquote)

Also important and something of a victory for conservatives is the news that the National Planning Bill (S1795) being sponsored by Senators Humphrey, Javits and other crypto-collectivists in Washington, has little or no chance of passage in this session of Congress. And, if it should happen, by some fluke, to clear the Senate and House, it is sure to receive a Presidential veto (whether the President be Ford or Rockefeller). We can say this with assurance because the majority of industrialists and bankers in the United States have turned against the type of socialism being promoted by the sponsors of this and similar bills.

While both are collectivist, authoritarian and totalitarian, there is a basic and irreconcilable difference between corporate socialism (fascism) and bureaucratic (soviet) socialism; a difference that was great enough to cause a split between Soviet Russia on the one hand, and Nazi Germany and Fascist Italy on the other after the start of World War II. The difference has to do with "who's in charge and running the dictatorship?"

Stated simply: Corporate Socialism is a politico-economic system which is run by corporations (public and private), while Soviet Socialism is a politico-economic system which is run by bureaucrats (commissars).

The split between the two collectivist forces in the United States can be discerned by reading an editorial which appeared in the current (July, 1975) issue of "Fortune," Time, Inc.'s slickest magazine. The lead editorial is reproduced, without permission of the publishers and without alteration or deletion:

THE PLANNERS ARE BACK AGAIN

The economic stresses of recent years have brought a revival of the old planning urge, and lately it has reached worrisome proportions. Among the bills recently introduced in the Senate is one that would create a federal apparatus to draft and eventually oversee a grandiose national economic plan, encompassing all levels of government and "the private sector" too. The measure was sponsored not by rash freshmen, but by a couple of seasoned legislators, Democrat Hubert Humphrey and Republican Jacob Javits.

While the bipartisan image is illusory—the other seven cosponsors are all Democrats—the bill must be taken seriously. It has the backing (and is partly the handiwork of) a formidable organization called the Initiative Committee for National Economic Planning, whose members include eminent names from academia, organized labor, and business.

One of the less endearing characteristics displayed by the bill's advocates has been a tendency to talk as if the only alternative to grand-scale national planning is no planning at all. Says Senator Humphrey, for example: "We cannot hope to find full employment, price stability, and economic growth the way a beachcomber hopes to find seashells."

into every corner

Fortunately, though, we are not really confronted with a choice between all or nothing. It seems obvious enough that the U.S. government should do more planning. In particular, we need more (and certainly better) assessment of the consequences, costs, and benefits of existing and proposed public undertakings. We are continually running into unpleasant surprises that could have been at least partly foreseen.

Careful weighing of consequences, for example, could have anticipated some of the unwelcome economic waves and backwashes from the famous Soviet wheat deal. In a longer time perspective, government too often undertakes large and complex tasks—housing the poor, say, or improving air quality—without adequate analysis or costs or adequate consideration of alternatives.

The Humphrey-Javits bill, however, calls for planning very much more extensive than that. Just what it calls for remains disturbingly hazy—in the bill itself and in the statements of sponsors and backers—but the wording of the bill indicates that planning would reach into every corner, if not every cranny, of national life.

For openers, the Economic Planning Board created by the bill would "establish economic objectives...paying particular attention to the attainment of the goals of full employment, price stability, balanced economic growth, an equitable distribution of income, the efficient utilization of both private and public resources, balanced regional and urban development, stable international relations, and meeting essential national needs in transportation, energy, agriculture, raw materials, housing, education, public services and research and development." Whe w!

Signals from the market

On any realistic assessment this kind of pervasive meddling in the workings of the economy cannot provide increased efficiency to make up for the freedom it takes away. To the extent that it replaces or overrides private decision making, central economic planning weakens and impedes the allocating functions of the free market. A market system, with its constant interplay of enormous numbers of large and small economic decisions, continually gives off signals that can help guide the efficient allocation of resources and efforts. A national planning apparatus—even if the planners were immune to political pressures and ideological biases—would be at best a clumsy and dim-eyed substitute.

Advocates of the Humphrey-Javits bill do not point to the historical record, and that is understandable. Given the record of grand-scale national economic planning it is hard to imagine why any rational American would urge us to take that road. Just about every Western economist who has studied the Soviet economy has concluded that pervasive planning and central control drag heavily upon growth and efficiency. Some Eastern European countries, such as Hungary, that have let a little freedom into their economies have shown distinct improvement in performance.

According to Senator Javits, the planning called for in his bill would be "free of coercion, direct or indirect." But the text of the bill itself makes this assertion seem confused if not disingenuous. The national plan would include recommendations for "legislative and administrative actions necessary or desirable to achieve the objectives of the plan."

Walter Wriston, chairman of First National City Bank, charged the Initiative Committee for National Economic Planning with "pressing for a program designed to destroy the free-market system and with it our personal liberty." While Wriston's wording may seem somewhat overwrought, it is all too clear that enactment of the Humphrey-Javits bill, or anything like it, would lead to deep erosion of freedom and economic efficiency.

(end of editorial)

Before we close the positive side of the ledger, we should note that there may be some hope of relief in the heated "forced busing" battle. With Caspar Weinberger going back to private pursuits in California and David Mathews scheduled to replace him as HEW Secretary, that solid phalanx of Zionist guards that has surrounded the President has been breached, and the new secretary-designate told a Senate committee that forced busing of school children "has not produced good results." The president of the University of Alabama told the Senators at his confirmation hearing: "In the end, any method has to be justified in the final analysis by its effectiveness. My view is that it has not produced good results and has made a great number of persons think their rights have been abused in the process." Senator Herman Talmadge agreed, added that forced busing "creates ill will between the races, is expensive, hurts education, and uses vast amounts of energy."

NOW THE LABOR LEADERS GET TOUGH

So much for what might be classified as good news for conservatives and patriots. Now we must call your attention to the black side of the ledger. And, in the first place, we are not at all sure that you'll be getting this Report at the usual time. There are four different postal unions, and their contracts all were to have expired at midnight on Sunday, July 20. Postmaster General Benjamin Bailar was of the opinion that there would not be a general walkout of his 605,000 postal employees, but he couldn't promise that there wouldn't be a slowdown in service.

The four unions involved are the American Postal Workers, the Letter Carriers, the Mail Handlers, and the Rural Letter Carriers. Considering the type of service they've been handing out to the citizens of this Nation, they haven't done badly at all since their last contract settlement of 1973. There's a semiannual COLA clause (Cost of Living Adjustment clause) and the contracts they signed in 1973 provided them with $1,100 of stipulated increases, so that prior to the Sunday deadline, the average postal worker was receiving $12,500 a year, plus fringe benefits that were worth another 15 per cent or so. Which is hardly a depressed level of income. Nevertheless, they are (and may have received when you read this) more money for less hours of work.

As serious as the situation may be—and there was a threatened railway strike deadline on this same Sunday which would make the situation doubly serious—there was a certain droll humor attached to the mail carriers contract demands. The national herald of government workers is the "Federal Times," a Washington based publication. In one of its recent issues, it reported the following:

"Collective bargaining has its light side. Witness these two demands from one of the four exclusive postal unions, which to save it from being laughed out of Washington shall remain nameless:

"That its members not be held legally liable for 'honest errors or thefts' and 'embezzlements or manipulations.'

"That its members be accorded 'franking privileges' (free postage—Ed.)

"Earlier the labor organization had insisted that the U.S. Postal Service provide its rank and file with sun glasses and watches."

"Such are some of the hundreds of demands made upon the Postal Service by the unions." (unquote).

Despite the above inanities, the unions were demanding (and may already have received) substantial wage hikes and a shorter—35 hour—work week. This at a time when it is expected that the postal service will run more than $800 million in the red. It seems that the more it costs to mail a letter, the longer it takes for that letter to reach its destination. And we wonder if giving the carriers sun glasses and watches will really improve the service.

As we write this Report, the House Subcommittee on Manpower and Civil Service is holding hearings on several union-backed bills that would impose compulsory collective bargaining on all federal employees. There are three bills which are virtually identical: HR13, HR79, and HR1841. They would:

- 1) Impose compulsory collective bargaining on all federal employees, including bargaining on vital economic issues.
- 2) Grant certified unions "monopolistic bargaining status" over all employees.
- 3) Give unions the power to demand—not negotiate—compulsory agency shop fees from all federal employees.

- 4) Force elected government officials—your congressman and your Senator—to abide by binding decisions of outside arbitrators.

If the import and danger of the above legislation is unclear, perhaps this quote from a recent issue of The League of Men Voters of the United States, Inc., newsletter will help to clarify:

This is a public sector union drive for "Compulsory Union membership for the 14 million federal, state and local government employees of the Nation.

"Can you imagine the chaos if teachers, firemen, policemen, sanitation workers, plus the state and federal employees went on strike against the public—legally? It would really be a great country with union officials dictating policy throughout the land! The only hope of defeating such a program is an aroused American public that is totally committed and determined to defeat it." (unquote)

For your information, the members of the House Subcommittee on Manpower and Civil Service are: Reps. David B. Henderson (D-N.C.), chairman, William D. Ford (D-Mich.), Stephen L. Neal (D-N.C.), William M. Brodhead (D-Mich.), John W. Jenrette, Jr. (D-S.C.), Stephen J. Solarz (D-N.Y.), James M. Hanley (D-N.Y.), Edward J. Derwinski (R-Ill.), Trent Lott (R-Miss.), and Gene Taylor (R-Mo.).

It should be understood that passage and enactment of this legislation would not end the drive. If the Big Labor Bosses were to succeed in unionizing all 14 million government employees in the Nation, and imposing compulsory collective bargaining so they could call nationwide strikes against their own government and its people at all levels of public service, then they would be ready for the next step. And that would be the unionization of the members of the Armed Forces of the United States. Thus would wholesale mutiny be legalized! Think what might happen to an American citizen who is not a member of a labor union in such a case.

THE SECONDARY BOYCOTT

In addition to the union-backed bills we have already mentioned, there are two more which are equally dangerous: HR5900 and S1497. These are almost identical and would legalize secondary boycotts. This would mean that if any union were having a dispute with any company, then the union could force all other companies to stop doing business with the company involved in the dispute. The indirect effects of such a law: companies having nothing to do with the dispute could be put out of business, and workers involved in no way whatsoever with the dispute could be put out of work!

In addition to domestic dangers, there are some overseas developments that are extremely serious. First, an AP dispatch of July 13 reported that: "Two researchers said Saturday that it is now certain that Israel possesses nuclear weapons, and the United States and the Soviet Union should decide how they will react if atomic warfare breaks out in the Middle East.

"It may well be that nuclear weapons will be used in the Middle East in the near future, perhaps even in the next round of the fighting," Dr. Robert J. Pranger and Dale R. Tahtinen said.... "To offset an apparent Israeli advantage, Arab nations are likely to develop their own," the researchers added. Pranger and Tahtinen head the foreign and defense sections of the American Enterprise Institute, a non-profit, nonpartisan, research organization."

Now, the U.S., the Soviet Union, Britain, France, Red China, India and Israel have atomic weapons. The Soviet Union is providing Libya with a nuclear research center and a reactor, West Germany is doing the same thing for Brazil. These have "complete fuel cycle" systems, which makes conversion to nuclear weapons relatively easy. And the U.S. is selling or giving away nuclear reactors to almost any country that pleads a power shortage.

With the knowledge that Israel—and perhaps other Middle East Nations also—has nuclear weapons, the following front-page item from the New York Times of July 13 becomes extremely important:

"London, July 12—The United States, seeking to facilitate a new disengagement between Israel and Egypt, is considering the possibility of having American technicians man electronic surveillance stations in the strategic Sinai passes, reporters traveling with Secretary of State Kissinger were told today....

"It was stressed, however, that there was no discussion of positioning American troops in Sinai or assuming an active policing role. 'We're not that crazy,' an American official said with a smile. "But if the manning of the stations proves to be a crucial point in reaching an agreement, we will consider it'."

You will recall that this is exactly how we got involved in the Vietnam disaster. We were not crazy enough to position American troops in Vietnam, the officials told us. But if the stationing of observers would help... And from observers to instructors to actual participants developed, step by step. Does Kissinger think he can use the same formula to get us actively involved in the Arab-Israeli conflict? And will we permit history to repeat, knowing the horrible cost of the Vietnamese misadventure?

DON BELL REPORTS Weekly. $24 per year. Extra copies: 10 cents each. Please address all orders to:
DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

THOSE MYSTERIOUS MILITARY MANEUVERINGS

THE MIDDLE EAST, KOREA, OR A MILITARY TAKEOVER?

Kurt Waldheim, Secretary General of the UN, was recently quoted as saying that "an almost universal sense of apprehension about the course of world events now combines with a feeling of helplessness and fatalism which I find deeply disturbing."

Waldheim is not alone; that sense of apprehension is universal because we are living in a time of crises. There are dire predictions of a coming economic collapse, there is the threat of World War Three, or of our direct involvement in the Arab-Israeli conflict, or of a renewing of aggression in Korea. And there is the growing feeling that Rev. Charles E. Coughlin was right again when he warned in one of his most recent appearances that "the most formidable enemies of Christians and of all men are not to be found in the Kremlin, but on Wall Street, on Madison Avenue, on Fleet Street, and in Zurich where opposition to traditional social values is most potent." He should have included the TV networks, Broadway and Hollywood-in-diaspora, and his statement would have been more complete.

This feeling of universal apprehension and fear grows greater as a result of certain disturbing news that has been published in the past few weeks. For example:

"In your town before too long you'll again see young men in long lines at the Selective Service office to register for the draft. This is the first word you'll get of a decision still under wraps in Washington. All males who reach age 18 this year must register next year during a single three-to-five day period for the draft pronounced dead two years ago," reported Bill Mezelle (with Virginia Pruitt on National Public Radio.) "The dates in 1976 are still a secret but any who miss this brief registration period will be in trouble with the law."

Commenting on this item in his syndicated column which appeared in the San Francisco Examiner and Chronicle of July 13, 1975, Nicholas von Hoffman added: "This organ of government has added 400 new people to its employment roster and increased its budget by $6 million in 1975. The inference we get is that Selective Service has been upgraded to being but another instance of federal theft.

"Possibly, but is that the all of it? The rationale for continuing Selective Service is that the machinery for a levee en masse must be ready to go at the drop of a national emergency. If we didn't have conscription we wouldn't be able to rush eight or nine million men into arms...."

Veterans of World War Two will recall that the Selective Service System was initiated in 1940 in preparation for our entry into the war. Selective Service began on Sept. 16, 1940; Pearl Harbor did not occur until Dec. 7, over a year later. Those who remember might consider the renewal of the draft as a preparatory step toward entry into a new war.

There is, in addition, an important item that appeared on page 51 of the July 2, 1975 issue of Review of the News (Belmont, MA 02178). The article follows:

Plans For Military Takeover

In May of 1975 the 303rd Civil Affairs Group of the U.S. Army Reserve in Kearny, New Jersey, conducted an exercise to sharpen plans for a military takeover of the state government of New Jersey. According to Colonel Francis Clark, executive officer of the group, they had conducted similar studies on how to seize municipal and county governments over the past few years, but this was the first time they had "studied" the state government. One wonders how many other such "studies" are, or have been, conducted across the nation.

The activities are perfectly legal. They grow out of military government units established during World War II to facilitate military occupation of captured areas. The units involved were structured to replace entirely the former civil governments including police, judges, lawyers, and personnel trained to administer rationing, wage and price controls, labor, business, industry, and health, etc. Originally known as the G-5 units, their purpose was to run occupied Germany, Italy, and Japan after the expected surrenders.

But we never had federal troops training to take over governments in the United States. When local violence or catastrophe required military action it was the National Guard, under command of the governor, who restored

WEATHER REPORT

The old adage—everybody talks about the weather but nobody does anything about it—is now a complete deception, for everybody is doing something about it. First came the ambitious, self-appointed scientists to try and make it rain. Then to try and stop the hailstorms they stopped the summer thunderstorms and their rains. Then came the ambition to break up hurricanes. So successful were they that today we have weather modification used by insurance companies, road builders, golf tournaments, ski resorts (auto races?), drought farmers, and the continued attempts to break up hurricanes.

The Army and the Navy are experimenting with the weather for war purposes to destroy the enemy; the colleges and universities are experimenting with the weather in their studies of meteorology; corporations and private enterprise are using weather modification for selfish purposes; and now the U.S. government has appropriated some $300 million for weather modification. Hence, everybody who pays a federal tax directly or indirectly on anything they buy, is in the business of buying weather modification.

Needless to say anything about the experimental activities with the weather in the past 15 years which have precipitated the devastating hurricanes and the floods that brought some 10 to 20 inches of rainfall in a matter of a few hours; which has already cost taxpayers millions upon millions of lost dollars, and instituted unusual weather all over the world.

After all: If man can cause rains to fall in one place, surely those rains cannot fall in another place. Likewise, if man can stop rains from falling in one area they must fall, out of necessity alone, in some other area. And certainly, they will not fall in nature's appointed place!

Rather than be negative about this proud scientific breakthrough—in playing God with the weather—I will predict that the unemployment problem can be solved, for a while, when a city like the Chicago swamplands, or some other megametropolis, is inundated with 10 or 20 inches of rain, with hurricane and cyclonic winds and vacuums (mother nature taking vengeance for violations of her zone of authority and control.) Some will call this natural weather change; but I will call it God at work!

Rev. Frank Rottier,
Sheffield, Illinois.

law and order. And, even then, the Guard did not effect a total seizure of the local governments but merely preserved the peace and provided emergency relief.

The legal excuse for this training is that the Constitution requires the federal government to guarantee to each state a republican form of government, and it has to be ready for any eventuality. Maybe so, but Americanists should be concerned that their tax money is being used to finance training for military seizures of their state and local governments. They should also demand to know who has the authority to authorize these seizures. The President by Executive Order? Some bureaucrat in Washington? Henry Kissinger? And what if the state or local officials believe they can handle the problems? Can Caesar still march in with his legions and take control? Is this why the Left is pushing gun control, to prevent citizens from resisting a Communist-controlled military dictatorship as in Portugal?

Your reporter doesn't yet know the answers to all of these questions, but you may be certain our investigation is continuing.

(End of article)

Or Korea Revisited By War?

In line with the previous article, a rather disturbing idea is being marketed by one I.F. Stone, presently a contributing editor to the New York Review of Books and a columnist with the New York Times News Service, which certainly qualifies him as a trained opinion molder. In his column which was published July 23, 1975, he wrote, in part:

"During the Korean War, Gen. James A. Van Fleet, then commander of the U.S. 8th Army, made a remark worth recalling now. 'Korea has been a blessing,' he told a Filipino delegation visiting his headquarters. 'There had to be a Korea either here or some place else in the world.'

"A war that cost almost 130,000 casualties and at a bare conservative minimum more than $50 billion...may seem a strange blessing. But military hardliners saw it differently. From their point of view the Korean War served three purposes. It brought to an abrupt end President Harry S. Truman's post-World War II reductions in the military budget. It solidified the cold war and the arms race for a quarter century, ending the first wistful demands for detente that had begun in 1947-48. And it threw a protective U.S. umbrella over Taiwan, giving Chiang Kai-shek a formal alliance in the mutual defense pact of 1955.

"A new Korean War would serve the same purposes as the first. It would end the reductions Congress has begun to make in the military budget now that the Vietnamese war is finally over. It would disrupt the precarious detente with the Soviet Union and with China, refueling the arms race and the cold war. And it would again save Taiwan from being taken over by mainland China."

(End of quote)

Let it be understood that in the opinion of this editor, that I.F. Stone's history is a rewritten version, his statement is fallacious and we have our doubts about Gen. Van Fleet ever having made such a statement about the Korean War being a blessing. But, memories are short and most readers of such columns as those written by Stone and other trained opinion marketers, will believe that a draft is logical and even necessary since another Korean War is threatening.

Or A Military Takeover?

Despite the rumblings in the Middle East, the chaotic situation in the Orient, and the threat of a third world war, there is one other possibility that should never be overlooked. If the present "necessary evil" that is our federal government intends to continue to restructure itself until it has become a Corporate Socialist State, and the Representative Republic has disappeared (even as the Roman Republic disappeared never to return when the Caesars took over.) In such a situation an actual military takeover would become essential, and an Administrative Dictatorship would have to be established in order to "keep the peace."

There is, after all, Executive Order #11490, outlining the emergency functions to be performed by each of some 28 Executive Departments and Agencies whenever the President of the United States declares a national emergency to be in existence.

As Commander in Chief of the Armed Forces of the United States, the President would be legally empowered to call upon the military to do his bidding.

Now, assuming that our worst enemy is in Washington instead of Moscow, we ask you to read between the lines of the following "scare story" by Robert Young of the Chicago Tribune Press Service, which was published by many dailies subscribing to that service, including the Chicago Tribune itself, on July 16, 1975. We might point out that on the same day these same newspapers carried front-page stories concerning the upcoming meeting in space of Russian cosmonauts and American astronauts; all lovey-dovey stuff. And in another column, the following:

The scenario goes like this: Hostility between the United States and the Soviet Union builds to a crisis point and the superpowers edge toward nuclear confrontation.

The Soviets start to evacuate their major cities. The U.S. responds immediately by activating its own emergency evacuation plan. President Ford goes on national television and radio to tell the American people they are threatened with nuclear attack.

Continuous urgent broadcasts, augmented by regular and extra editions of newspapers, instruct the residents of certain key urban centers and other likely target areas to move out and take refuge in the countryside.

Streaming out of cities and away from communities near strategic military installations, the Americans take designated routes to reach their preselected "host areas." There they follow orders from coordinated federal, state, and local civil defense units and take shelter by the tens and hundreds of thousands in public and commercial buildings, mine shafts, and caves.

After two or three days the danger-zone cities and high-risk areas are empty except for essential maintenance workers and government administrators. Food and water have been diverted from their normal distribution channels to supply the shelters in the refuge areas 15, 20, or more miles away. The civil defense units are rapidly setting up emergency sanitation and medical facilities. The evacuees settle down to wait for the possible nuclear attack, or for international negotiations to resolve the crisis and avert the missiles.

Something from the movie 'Dr. Strangelove?' No, indeed, the scenario is for real and very much in the works at the Pentagon. The low-visibility Defense Civil Preparedness Agency (DCPA) is in dead earnest. It expects to spend $33 million in the next year as its 671-man staff plans for dealing with nuclear catastrophe—"thinking the unthinkable."

Defense Secretary James Schlesinger believes well-organized population relocation, shelters, emergency operating and communications centers, radiological monitoring facilities, and warning systems are critical to the U.S.'s nuclear deterrence strategy.

Schlesinger and John Davis, DCPA director, emphasize that for years the Soviet Union has had a strong, functioning civil defense program. Davis...protests that the public and critics overlook two vital points:

* Altho the odds against nuclear attack on the U.S. are "extraordinarily high," nations do go to war and the U.S. and the Soviet Union have arsenals of nuclear weapons.

* The U.S. civil defense program is not a government boondoggle being promoted by far-out planners solely to deal with the remote possibility of a nuclear attack. Civil defense also saves lives and protects property when not-so-remote and recurring disasters, such as hurricanes, tornadoes, floods, earthquakes, fires, and explosions strike....

As he told Congress this year, Schlesinger wants the U.S to be as flexible in population evacuation as it is in nuclear strategy.

...The DCPA estimates that as many as 70 million lives could be saved by relocating the populations of cities and military target areas....The civil defense agency has compiled a list of 400 likely nuclear attack targets and defined three levels of risks:

- * Intercontinental ballistic missile complexes, Strategic Air Command bomber bases and missile-launching submarine bases.

- * Other important military targets, including Washington.

- * Population and industrial centers, including cities of at least 50,000 inhabitants.

Nine target areas have been chosen in various parts of the country for pilot studies to determine whether emergency population relocation will work. These areas include Duluth, Minn., Great Falls, Mont., Oklahoma City, Tucson, Ariz., and Colorado Springs, where headquarters of the North American Air Defense Command are located beneath a mountain....

Davis and his DCPA are fully committed to the necessity for escalated population relocation planning. But he admits to some reservations about the success of evacuating and relocating in safer places the millions of people living in densely populated areas like those surrounding Chicago, New York, and Los Angeles.

"The more we work at it, the more complicated it gets," he sighs.

(End of article)

"Come now, and let us reason together." If the Kremlin bosses decided to attack us with nuclear missiles, they certainly would not give us three days to evacuate strategic areas. Their only hope of winning would be by surprise attack; to destroy our nuclear capabilities before we had a chance to retaliate. However, the Communists have no desire to destroy our cities and factories and industrial potential. In short, the Communists have no desire to conquer us. They want us to surrender. And we seem to be doing just that. Detente is merely a name that has been given to this form of gradual surrender. It is both an alias and a camouflage. That surrender, of course, is not to Soviet Communism per se. Rather, it is to the idea that Socialism is inevitable, and that Corporate Socialism (Fascism) is the better form for the United States—so long as the elitists promoting the other forms of Socialism give their consent.

Someone invented a formula to describe what has been happening to us; or, perhaps we should say, what we have permitted to happen to us, plus what we have been doing to ourselves. The formula goes like this: "External encirclement, plus internal demoralization, plus thermonuclear blackmail, leads to progressive surrender."

The external encirclement can be seen in the loss of Portugal. The internal demoralization is evidenced by the latest crime reports and the state of public—now federal—schools. The article previously quoted in this Letter is a type of that thermonuclear blackmail that is hastening our surrender. But note that the blackmail is being perpetrated, not by agents of the Kremlin or the Forbidden City, but by agents within our own government and our own society.

In the final analysis, just as so many of our earlier statesmen have predicted, the destruction comes from within. No outside agency forced the "New Federalism" upon us. No outside agency conferred such dictatorial powers on one branch of our Federal Government. No outside agency caused us to be governed by appointed—as opposed to elected—officials.

Using only the powers now legally delegated to him by the Congress (and therefore by the people, since Congressmen are their legal and lawful representatives), an appointed Administrator could establish himself as a virtual dictator over our national and our personal lives and pursuits. There are the Executive Orders having the force of law to make this possible. There is the Federal Regional Governance System through which such an Administrative Dictatorship can be effected, and maintained. A Military Take-over of states and cities by a draft army would be the final step "to preserve the peace and to maintain law and order."

Perhaps it is the fear of God and a certain remaining respect for the Constitution that gives us yet a little time, and perhaps one more national election.

DON BELL REPORTS Weekly, accenting the Christian American point of view. Two copies of each issue are sent all regular subscribers (except overseas airmail). Complete Service:.....$24 per year. Extra Copies:.....10¢ each

Please address all correspondence to:
DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

CAPITULATION BY CONSENT OF THE CITIZENRY

SURRENDER AT SEA

If it is the goal of the Internationalist Elite to make all Nations equal, and the USSR more equal than others, then that goal is within sight. And the American citizenry; through fear, lethargy, apathy, or willingness to believe lies; is doing nothing to prevent the destruction of America and the creation of a World Authority. A recent Warner & Swasey Co. advertisement carried the following warning:

"Have you ever faced the possibility that your country could cease to exist?"

"Nations richer and more powerful in their day than we are in this, have been sabotaged, defeated, enslaved. Babylon was the largest and richest nation of its time, but its lust for luxury made it an easy mark for the Medes and the Persians who overran it, and divided its land and enslaved people between them. Rome was a greater military power than we ever were. But when free bread and circuses became more important to the people than hard work and patriotism, Rome was invaded and looted by the tougher Vandals. The Incas were the most civilized richest people in the Americas, but ruthless, better armed invaders destroyed them as a nation, and looted everything they owned and had spent generations creating.

"In every case it was the self-indulgent weakness of the victim which made the victory of the invader easy.

"How strong is a nation which allows foreign competitors to capture the world leadership from one after another of its most vital industries? How wise is a nation which gives away so much of its substance abroad and at home that it can no longer afford to keep up its own strength and protection? How intelligent is a nation more careful to protect the criminal than his victim? How weak is a nation which allows bureaucracy and a socialist philosophy to run riot and squander billions?

"Undoubtedly there were Babylonians, Romans, Incas who warned against overindulgence and weakness, who warned that each citizen is responsible for his nation, and that responsibility cannot be shrugged off onto officials. But to those who warned of impending trouble there was then as now the smug sneer, 'It can't happen here.'

"But it did." (End of quote).

Example: Not much was published or broadcast about the fact that during the week of May 1, 1975, the most massive naval exercise in the history of mankind was conducted by the Soviet Union. Soviet fleets were careful to operate in every ocean that is important to the defense of the United States, and the Soviet Navy carried out a mock, full-scale, first-strike nuclear attack on the United States.

Dr. George S. Benson, in his important and highly respected National Education Program Newsletter for July, 1975, commented:

"To the intelligence gathering forces of the free world, this massive naval exercise has very ominous meanings. Enough Soviet vessels were deployed to play the role of the entire U.S. Navy, and then the Soviet Navy strike vessels went through the war-game of capturing or destroying the entire U.S. fleet in all oceans. Cuba was used as a base for operations of the Soviet Navy in the Atlantic and the Caribbean, in clear violation of the Monroe Doctrine. Yet, our State Department and some members of the Congress continue to push for diplomatic recognition of Dictator Castro and his communist government of the enslaved island of Cuba. (Editor's Note: This article was written and published prior to the lifting of the 11-year-old embargo of Communist Cuba, which was accomplished through the urgings of the U.S. State Department.)

"That extreme alarm is running through American intelligence forces and through our military is evidenced by the admission, as quoted in a recent Jack Anderson column, that the entire Soviet Navy war-games were predicated on a successful nuclear first strike attack on the U.S. mainland by Soviet missiles." (End of quote.)

Also there is the belated information that was released recently by Admiral Zumwalt concerning a serious confrontation between the Soviet and U.S. military high commands at the time of the last Arab-Israeli conflict. According to Admiral Zumwalt, when the Israeli forces, after initial setbacks, had succeeded in driving the Egyptian army across the Nile and threatened to destroy it, the Soviet high command stepped in and demanded that the United States Government stop the Israelis and end the war, or else the Soviet would get into the action. Whereupon Kissinger did the bidding of the Kremlin and stopped the Israeli advance. As a gesture, a U.S. military alert was called at the time; Kissinger promised to explain why and never did. Zumwalt says the war was stopped at the Kremlin's bidding because Soviet naval forces outnumbered and outmanned U.S. naval forces in the Mediterranean three-to-two. We backed down because of admitted superior Soviet strength.

We can be assured that the Kremlin takes full psychological advantage of such incidents as these in its dealings with other nations it intends to take over; Portugal and Spain being the current objectives.

SURRENDER IN SPACE

So much for our surrender to the Soviet of superiority on the seas. Even the liberals in our midst couldn't help commenting on the manner in which the Apollo-Soyez space spectacular was handled, in order to give the Soviet cosmonauts equal glory and make Soviet technology more equal than ours.

=====

REP. UDALL'S NEW LAND USE BILL

*From The Congressional Record
July 25, 1975, page H 7577*

Mr. UDALL: Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. Steelman) and I are today introducing H.R. 8932, a revised version of H.R. 3510, the Land Use and Resources Conservation Act of 1975. Unfortunately, on July 15 the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs voted not to report this measure to the full House for its consideration. While it is unfortunate that the House will not have an opportunity to debate this bill, I think, for a number of reasons, it is important enough to reintroduce what was the final product of the Interior Committee's deliberations. The clean bill introduced today contains all amendments adopted by the committee....

...I have recently learned that the 1975-76 national college debate topic is the question of whether or not the Federal Government should adopt a comprehensive program for land use. Thus, there will be an even greater interest in this subject among college students and others in the coming months and it will be helpful if copies of the most recent thinking on Federal legislation is available for these debaters....

=====

George Ball, for example, is a flaming liberal according to almost anyone's definition. Under Secretary of State in the Kennedy and Johnson Administrations, he is now a partner in Lehman Brothers. From star billing in international politics to star billing in international finance is hardly a role for a hard-hat conservative. Yet, listen to how George Ball tells it in the current (August 4) issue of the not-so-conservative Newsweek:

"As every schoolboy should know, but too few do, before Catherine the Great barged down the Dneiper, Prince Potemkin dotted the riverbank with temporary villages to impress the foreign envoys in her entourage with the power and achievements of Mother Russia.

"In many ways the Apollo-Soyez space spectacular was quite as deceptive, but this time America played the Potemkin role. Though we billed the project as a joint enterprise, the Apollo managed the rendezvous, sought, found, homed in on the Soyez and kept the two spacecraft on course, while American VHF radio equipment was used aboard both ships. Yet, though our technology was indispensable, we conspired to create the impression that the two nations are equally advanced. Then, by a symbolic handshake, we made it appear that the Soviets are our friendly partners for the good of humankind.

"All this was done in the name of 'detente' which has become more of an obsession than a policy...." (end of quote).

Please note: This is a trusted agent of the International Bankers we've been quoting, a partner in the firm of Lehman Brothers. And he's talking like conservatives would expect Barry Goldwater or James Buckley to talk. There has to be a reason for this seeming change of attitude on the part of men like Ball. May we suggest the likelihood of an ulterior motive? That the Money Barons are trying to promote a little extra fear of the Communists for their own purposes. The long-standing program has been to pit Communism against Capitalism in order to develop a synthesis: World Government. And, until the time is ripe, this conflict between the two must be maintained. Lately, however, our Federal Government has been too gullible; detente has worked too well and too fast, and the Reds are winning all the plays. In fact, our Federal Government has become so grovelingly obsequious to the Kremlin gangsters that even the Internationalist Elite—for whom Ball is a mouthpiece—may be wondering if there is any chance that this Marxist Monster which they created to serve them, might not go berserk and require a little tranquillizing.

It should be remembered that while we have been schooled to treat the Communists as enemies (which they certainly are), perhaps the best friend the Soviet Union ever had has been the Federal Government of the United States. In fact, it was our Federal Government that made Soviet Russia what it is today. It was FDR's recognition of the Bolshevik Regime that kept the Soviet Government alive when it was about to expire in 1933. It was our food, clothing, medicine and armaments which made it possible for the Communists to save themselves from the Nazis in World War II. We gave them U.S. money plates so they could support their occupation forces in Germany at our expense. We developed their industrial potential, gave them our nuclear secrets, watched them apply our technical knowhow and outstrip us in one industry after another. We watched the price of our bread skyrocket because we gave them—and still give them—grain.

Tomorrow, they will be more equal than we in space, as they are today in the air and on and under the sea:

As for the diplomatic arena, let the ex-diplomat George Ball speak again. His reason for saying what he says may be different from ours, but what he says is still basically true:

"Of course, the President cannot take time to see Aleksander Solzhenitsyn, who speaks awkward truths about the Soviets; he must fly to Helsinki to embrace Brezhnev and celebrate the European Security Conference. And what a heart-warming occasion for the Soviet leaders who have peddled that conference for two decades! To have statesmen from 35 countries drinking champagne to the conference's achievements before the eyes of world television is a triumph for Brezhnev and a defeat for the West."

AND SURRENDER BY LAND

Thirty years ago, when World War II was supposedly ended, no peace treaty was ever signed. Western Nations (excluding Russia, of course) were determined that they would not sign a treaty because the boundaries between Nations were not fixed, some Nations—like Germany—were split asunder, and the Nations of Europe were not about to sign any papers that would "legitimize the bastardies" of the Soviet Union that had been committed at the expense of European States. If the truth be told, England and the United States often aided and abetted the Kremlin in this stealing of lands and enslaving of peoples (Operation Keelhaul is one awful example of this kind of cooperation.) But the Nations of Europe proper did not cooperate and did not approve of the Kremlin's theft of parts of Poland, of the annexation of Bessarabia from Rumania and of Ruthenia from Czechoslovakia, of the absorption of Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania, and part of Prussia. The division of Germany into two parts (and Berlin into four parts) was an exceptionally sore point that made the signing of a peace treaty impossible thirty years ago.

However, time does alter attitudes and mitigate miseries, even those that have caused countries to go into slavery. And the Soviet leaders—from Stalin to Brezhnev—all have sought unceasingly to have their theft of lands that were not theirs accepted and honored.

In the "Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe" just concluded in Helsinki, the Kremlin gangsters have seen their objective obtained at long last. For this so-called "Declaration of Intentions" is little more than an "ersatz peace treaty" that affirms the present boundaries in Europe to be "inviolable."

The hypocrisy of the situation can be seen when it is recalled that each year, for the past seventeen years including 1975, the President has proclaimed and the Congress has observed "Captive Nations Week" at which time the fate of the nations and the people that have been gobbled up by the Soviet leaders is bemoaned and pledges are made that it is the policy of the United States "not to recognize the annexation" of States in Europe by the Soviet Union, etc.

President Ford followed the practice of past Presidents and signed the usual Captive Nations Declaration, which condemns the conquests of the Soviets in Europe and expresses the hope that the enslaved peoples will eventually see the light of liberty.

Then, with utter hypocrisy, the President traveled to Helsinki to sign a document that approves of the Soviet conquests and condemns millions of Europeans to lifelong enslavement.

This document that is said to be a declaration of intent but not a treaty, covers one hundred and six typewritten pages in its English version, represents twenty-two months of bargaining over words by negotiators from thirty-five different countries arguing in six different languages: English, Russian, French, German, Italian and Spanish. And, grammatically as well as politically, it is said to be a mess. The New York Times published an abbreviated version of the Declaration, which was so garbled (by its authors, not the Times) that it hardly makes sense.

For instance, here is a sentence from the document that is supposed to cover the requirements of a nation to give advance warning to other nations if it is going to engage in war games. The sentence reads like this—and we are quoting verbatim from The New York Times:

“In the case of a participating state whose territory extends beyond Europe, prior notification need be given only of maneuvers which take place in an area within 250 kilometers from its frontier facing or shared with any other European participating state, the participating state need not, however, give notification in cases in which that area is contiguous to the participating state's frontier facing or shared with a non-European state.”

The Times tried to explain: “Some English-speaking delegates pleaded for a period instead of a comma to be inserted after the sentence ending ‘other European participating state.’ But Andreas Mavrommatis, leader of the Cypriote Government of Archbishop Makarios, said ‘no,’ And it was still ‘no’ when a semicolon was suggested as a compromise.”

The kind of a document this must be, is hinted by Times correspondent Victor Lus-inchi: “A conflict not over grammar or punctuation but between the differing approaches of the capitalist and Marxist nations regarding trade relations produced one of the most convoluted sentences in the document. When a reporter remarked to one of the English-language delegates who helped work out the compromise wording that he did not understand the sentence, he was told:

“‘You are not supposed to understand it. Neither do we, and, what’s more, we meant it that way’.”

Which is sufficient commentary on this Declaration that the leaders of 35 States chose to solemnize with their signatures: Nobody understands what it’s all about, and they meant it that way. With this one very important exception: The present boundaries in Europe are inviolate. The Kremlin leaders worked for thirty years to get the other nations of the world to agree to that; and the victory was won at Helsinki. In all other respects, this document is just another worthless bundle of papers.

At the time this Summit began, Ronald Hilton wrote a column about it. Hilton is on the Stanford University faculty and is also executive director of the Institute of International Studies and editor of the quarterly “World Affairs Report” (not to be confused with CFR’s publication “Foreign Affairs.) If one disregards the proposition that the conflict between Capitalism and Communism is a “staged affair” managed by someone bigger than both of them, then Hilton’s explanation makes sense. He wrote, in part:

“The basic problem of United States foreign policy is our relationship with the Soviet Union. One would assume that the subject would be covered with the utmost care by the press and in our universities. Such, unfortunately, is not the case. There is evidence that all the news is not being told, and that those responsible range from businessmen eager to conclude deals with Moscow to individuals or groups who have in detente a pretext to close their eyes or to promote a cause.

“There is something quaint about the chairman of Pepsico, Inc., Donald M. Kendall, one of the Kremlin’s favorite Americans, presenting a Soviet delegation to President Ford, on whom it bestowed a scarf with the inscription ‘Pepsi-Cola Peace’....

“President Ford fell into a trap by meeting Brezhnev in Vladivostok... Western leaders have likewise fallen into a trap by agreeing to conclude a European security pact that would guarantee the present European borders. Claims that concessions have been obtained on human-rights issues, thus opening up the closed Soviet society, are supported only by insignificant and meaningless details....

“The Russians believe time is on their side, that the laws of history will bring about the collapse of capitalism... (They) all are agreed that history is irreversible, that the Communists will come to power through some kind of popular front, win control in some way, and then declare that the process is irreversible. Moscow believes that it has a historical mission and that the new world system will have Moscow as its focus... Moscow seeks victory, not peace.

“...As for President Ford’s ‘Pepsi-Cola Peace’ scarf, like Virgil I can only comment ‘timeo Danaos et dona ferentes’ (‘I fear the Greeks, even when bringing gifts’).”

The Communists are wrong about gaining a final victory, because they have forgotten the Hegelian dialectic which is the very basis of their historical materialism: That the thesis (capitalism is attacked by the antithesis (communism), out of which is developed the synthesis (World Government) which is neither capitalistic nor communistic, but the synthesis of both.

As for Americans, we have forgotten the admonition: “And fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul; but rather fear him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell.” (Matthew 10:28).

DON BELL REPORTS Weekly. Complete service: $24 per year. Address all orders: DON BELL REPORTS, P.O. Box 2223 Palm Beach, Florida 33480

WORLD GOVERNMENT THROUGH REGIONALISM

"UNION NOW" TRIES AGAIN

Every time a new United States Congress convenes, there is an organized group of its members who are promoters of world government. They get together and write a resolution calling for an international convention of appointed representatives of the various governments that are members of NATO. The purpose of the convention: To draft a Regional World Constitution which will bind together in one Union, all the Nations now belonging to NATO. They reckon that since The United States of America has worked out so well, and the United States of Europe is in the making, the two ought to get together and form a United States of the Atlantic. They point out that such a Regional Government would be approved by, and become a part of the United Nations and thus would amount to the taking of one more giant step toward total and absolute World Government. In this they are right, of course. The United Nations Charter has a section dealing with such regional arrangements. Article 52 reads: "Nothing in the present Charter precludes the existence of regional arrangements or agencies... provided that such... are consistent with the Purposes and Principles of the United Nations." And, in Article 53 it says: "The Security Council shall... utilize such regional arrangements or agencies for enforcement action under its authority."

These Representatives with the one-world minds were a little late this year. It was not until August 1—just before the start of a month-long congressional summer vacation—that their perennial spokesman, Rep. Paul Findley, Illinois Republican, gained the floor to say, in part:

"Today a bipartisan group of 111 Members of the House have joined Congressman Jim Wright, Don Fraser, Allan Howe, and me as chief cosponsors in introducing a resolution to call an Atlantic Convention of the NATO democracies. Its purpose is to explore the possibility of agreement on: (a) declaration that it is the goal of their peoples to transform their present relationships into a more effective unity based on Federal and other democratic principles; (b) a timetable for transition by stages to this goal; and (c) a commission or other means to facilitate this transition.

"Although similar proposals have been before Congress since 1949, never before has it had so many cosponsors from so many States on the first day it was introduced as it has today. The highest number of sponsors before was 73, set in 1973. We have shattered that record now with 111—by 38. The record for the number of States was set in 1971, with 25. Today this resolution's support is spread through 31 States. Nor is this all.

"This proposal never before had so much vigorous fresh blood as it has today. Nearly half of its sponsors are new—59 to be exact. Of these, 26 are freshmen, elected last November; 13 others voted for it when it was stalled on the floor last year by the thin majority of 210 to 197. Most significant of all, 10 of those who voted against it two years ago and still remain in the House are sponsoring it today; 56 of the 210 who opposed it in 1973 are no longer among the Members of the House...."

In praising his resolution and asking for yet more support for Regionalism and Union with Europe, Findley attempted to brush aside the fact that Federation with the "democracies of NATO" would mean the loss of independence and sovereignty. He said:

"We are not suggesting the eventual relinquishment of our sovereignty, and persons who rely on this argument dramatically misunderstand the meaning of the term. Nor do we for even one moment believe that this call for an Atlantic Convention will necessarily result in a federation of our peoples." (Emphasis added—Ed.)

However, cosponsor Donald M. Fraser, Minnesota Democrat, wasn't so sure about this last statement. In fact, he belied the gentleman from Illinois when, in seconding the resolution, he said, in part:

"It is time for our Atlantic allies to turn from mutual recrimination to explore ways of strengthening liberty and democracy. That is what our forefathers did at the federal convention they called when the 13 States were disunited under the Articles of Confederation. The far-reaching success of that convention should encourage us to explore that possibility once again... What of its cost in time? In the age of the ox cart, when words could travel no faster than a horse or a sailing ship, our forefathers, once they had convoked the Philadelphia convention, and despite all the crises and deadlocks that plagued its discussions, worked out our present Federal Constitution between May 14 and September 17, 1787. After further soul-searching and often bitter debate in each of the 13 States, it was ratified and in operation by March 4, 1789, a period of less than 2 years."

So, despite what Findley says, cosponsor Fraser suggests calling a Constitutional Convention (in Brussels, Belgium, we presume, since this is the capital of NATO), where a United States of the Atlantic would be created, and ours would become a State—or Regional—Government within a Regional World Government!

Following are the names of the 111 United States Congressmen who sponsored this Resolution calling for an Atlantic Convention.

LIST OF SPONSORS

Brock Adams (D-Wash.), Joseph P. Addabbo (D-N.Y.), Glenn M. Anderson (D-Calif.), John B. Anderson (R-Ill.), Les Aspin (D-Wisc.), Les AuCoin (D-Oreg.), Herman Badillo (D-N.Y.), Max Baucus (D-Mont.), Berkley Bedell (D-Iowa), Alphonso Bell (R-Calif.), James J. Blanchard (D-Mich.), Michael T. Blouin (D-Iowa), Lindy Boggs (D-La.), Richard Bolling (D-Mo.), Barry Brown (R-Mich.), Yvonne Brathwaite Burke (D-Calif.), Bob Carr (D-Mich.), Elford A. Cederberg (R-Mich.), Cardiss Collins (D-Ill.), Silvio O. Conte (R-Mass.), James C. Corman (D-Calif.), Lawrence Coughlin (R-Pa.).

Robert W. Edgar (D-Pa.), Don Edwards (D-Calif.), Glenn English (D-Okla.), Marvin L. Esch (R-Mich.), Frank E. Evans (D-Colo.), Dante B. Fascell (D-Fla.), Millicent Fenwick (R-N.J.), Paul Findley (R-Ill.), Joseph L. Fisher (D-Va.), Daniel J. Flood (D-Pa.), Harold E. Ford (D-Tenn.), Donald M. Fraser (D-Minn.), Bill Frenzel (R-Minn.), Richard H. Fulton (D-Tenn.), Robert N. Giaimo (D-Conn.), Sam Gibbons (D-Fla.), William F. Goodling (R-Pa.), Willis D. Gradison, Jr. (R-Ohio), Gilbert Gude (R-Md.).

Tim L. Hall (D-Ill.), Mark W. Hannaford (D-Calif.), Michael Harrington (D-Mass.), Herbert E. Harris II (D-Va.), Augustus F. Hawkins (D-Calif.), Philip H. Hayes (D-Ind.), H. John Heinz III (R-Pa.), Henry Helstoki (D-N.J.), Frank Horton (R-N.Y.), Allan T. Howe (D-Utah), Andrew Jacobs, Jr. (D-Ind.), Ed Jones (D-Tenn.), William M. Ketchum (R-Calif.), Martha Keys (D-Kans.), John J. LaFalce (D-N.Y.), Robert L. Leggett (D-Calif.), William Lehman (D-Fla.), Clarence D. Long (D-Md.), Manuel Lujan, Jr. (R-N. Mex.).

Paul N. McCloskey, Jr. (R-Calif.), Matthew F. McHugh (D-N.Y.), Spark M. Matsunaga (D-Hawaii), Helen S. Meyner (D-N.J.), Abner J. Mikva (D-Ill.), Parren J. Mitchell (D-Md.), Joe Moakley (D-Mass.), William S. Moorhead (D-Pa.), Charles A. Mosher (R-Ohio), John E. Moss (D-Calif.), Morgan F. Murphy (D-Ill.).

Stephen L. Neal (D-N.C.), Lucien N. Medzi (D-Mich.), Robert N.C. Nix (D-Pa.), Henry J. Nowak (D-N.Y.), James L. Oberstar (D-Minn.), James G. O'Hara (D-Mich.), Claude Pepper (D-Fla.), Albert H. Quie (R-Minn.), Tom Railsback (R-Ill.), Thomas M. Rees (D-Calif.), Ralph S. Regula (R-Ohio), Donald W. Riegle, Jr. (D-Mich.), Matthew J. Rinaldo (R-N.J.), Theodore M. Risenhoover (D-Okla.), Peter W. Rodino, Jr. (D-N.J.), Robert A. Roe (D-N.J.), Leo J. Ryan (D-Calif.), Philip E. Ruppe (R-Mich.).

James H. Scheuer (D-N.Y.), Herman T. Schneebeli (R-Pa.), John F. Seiberling (D-Ohio), B.F. Sisk (D-Calif.), William A. Steiger (R-Wisc.), Leonor K. Sullivan (D-Mo.), Frank Thompson, Jr. (D-N.J.), Charles Thone (R-Neb.), Morris K. Udall (D-Ariz.), Richard F. Vander Veen (D-Mich.), G. Willism Whitehurst (R-Va.), Charles Wilson (D-Texas), Jim Wright (D-Texas), Gus Yatron (D-Pa.), Clement J. Zablocki (D-Wisc.).

This latest "Joint Resolution to Call an Atlantic Convention" is approximately the same as all other similar resolutions that have been offered—and turned down—by Congresses since 1949. This maverick 94th Congress, however, might approve the plan which could make of this Nation a mere Region in a Regional World Government arrangement. The proposal provides that 18 delegates be sent from the United States to a convention composed of similar delegates from each of the "democracies of NATO." Six delegates would be appointed by the Speaker of the House, six by the President of the Senate (appointee Nelson Rockefeller) and six by the President of the United States (appointee Gerald Ford.) "All members of the delegation shall be free from official instructions, and free to speak and vote individually in the convention." The convention is supposedly necessary because:

"...a more perfect union of the Atlantic Community consistent with the U.S. Constitution and the Charter of the United Nations gives promise of strengthening common defense, assuring more adequate energy resources, providing a stable currency to improve commerce of all kinds, and enhancing the economic prosperity, general welfare and liberty of the people of the member nations."

Just how all of these things can be accomplished by entering into a Federal Union with the "NATO democracies" is never explained adequately or satisfactorily by the sponsors of the Atlantic Resolution.

"Federalism" is the word that this type of one-worlder likes to use to describe this concept of Regionalism. When used in the domestic sense, it is called "The New Federalism." Fernando De Baca is the Director of Region IX and Chairman of the Western Federal Regional Council. In a guest editorial which appeared in the January 1974 issue of Healthnews, an organ of the California Department of Health and Welfare, he gave this revealing definition of "The New Federalism":

"New Federalism (or Regionalism—Ed.) is a new philosophy backed by a new system for the delivery of federal funds....(it) means returning the resources—your tax dollars—to the states and localities for a comprehensive assault on local problems through general revenue sharing, already in effect, and the President's proposed special revenue sharing programs. New Federalism means 'decentralization' or moving the federal role to regional offices...."

"It also means 'regionalization' or strengthening the Office of Regional Directors... to accomplish overall effective management and coordination of federal activities in each of the nation's ten regional offices. Administratively, it goes even farther by enhancing the status of Federal Regional Councils, coordinating bodies that work across federal agency lines.... The concept is called 'Services Integration,' a phenomenon we see growing, and encourage, at state and local levels."

Note the progression that is indicated in the preceding: Tax money and administrative power and authority is concentrated at the top, that is, with the Executive and Administrative Bureaucracy at Washington. Then, this power and money is rationed to the ten Federal Regional Councils. They, in turn, empower, control, and finance (with the taxpayer's money) the sub-regional and local councils, commissions, authorities, agencies, etc.

Under the traditional Constitutional system of American government, the political power is concentrated at the local, grass-roots level and is delegated upward. But, under this New Federalism (Regionalism), power is concentrated at the top and is apportioned downward as it is in any collectivized dictatorship!

In the setting up of a Regional World Government, the first step, therefore, is to Regionalize the yet independent Nations. The Regionalization of the United States was not unique; Regionalization is being accomplished in all the developed countries. In our Don Bell Reports of Sept. 13, 1974, we published a map showing how France has been divided into 22 Regions, each with a Regional Council administering the Region according to instructions handed down from the Central Authority in Paris—exactly as the American Regional Councils are responsible not to the people in the Regional District but to the Central Authority in the White House Executive Offices in Washington, D.C.

Similar Regional Governance has been installed in Canada, the United Kingdom, Italy, the U.S.S.R., etc. In countries where a Regional Governance arrangement might prove difficult to establish, the United Nations has taken the lead and "instructed the natives" in the theory and practice of Regional Governance.

Then comes the next step: When the various Nation—States have succumbed to the alleged advantages of Regional Governance at the national level, then they are to be federated into Regional World Government Unions, exactly as is proposed with the planned Federal Atlantic Union.

ENTER THE BILDERBERGERS

Instrumental in all the plans for the changing of NATO into a Federal Union is that semi-secret organization known as the Bilderbergers. While this is an internationalist clique, it is primarily interested in promoting an alliance of Western Nations, this alliance then to be welded onto a similar Iron Curtain Country alliance, thus bringing about worldwide control of commerce, industry, natural resources and money by the Bilderberger Elite, chief among whom are The Rockefellers, Rothschilds, and other international bankers and multinational cartelists. In the July 29, 1975 issue of The Congressional Record, page E4251, there appeared an interesting article about the Bilderbergers. In calling attention to the article, Rep. Larry McDonald (D-Ga.) said:

"The activities of groups such as the Bilderbergers have been reported and commented on for a long time by those who uphold U.S. sovereignty and oppose world government. Strangely enough, however, the activities of these groups are almost totally ignored by our major news media. Thus I would like to call attention to the following article by Nicholas von Hoffman, entitled 'Bilderbergers as Prey.' It appeared in the Washington Post on July 25, 1974.

"The Bilderbergers give every appearance of being international coordinators of various groups working for a world government. The domestic link in this chain is the Council on Foreign Relations and it is interesting to note that virtually all of those mentioned by von Hoffman, including William F. Buckley, are members of the CFR as well as Bilderbergers in good standing. Cord Meyer, it so happens, is former president of the United World Federalists, a group also working for a world government along socialist lines. Now that von Hoffman has broken the ice, I trust that other members of the media will begin examining the activities of groups promoting world government. As von Hoffman observes: 'You don't have to be a political paranoid to reason that informal meetings of major bankers, industrialists, professors, foundation executives, journalists and high government officials must have something to do with why and how powerful people come to nearly identical judgments'." (Unquote.)

Following, as space permits, are highlights of the von Hoffman commentary.

BILDERBERGERS AS PREY

The Bilderbergers have been given that name—they don't call themselves that—from the hotel where they first met in the town of Oosterbeek, The Netherlands, in 1954 under the chairmanship of Prince Bernhard of the Netherlands. They have met annually in one NATO country or another ever since, always at a remote resort hotel, always in secrecy and always protected by the political police of the host nation.

The meetings, however, are in no sense official or governmental. The attendees are best described as the international power elite and have included David and Nelson Rockefeller, Robert McNamara, Baron Edmond de Rothschild, William Paley, chairman of the board of CBS, former Sen. William Fulbright, Cord Meyer of the CIA, William F. Buckley and George W. Ball, the former State Department man who achieved a brief fame for a degree of tepid, establishmentarian opposition to the late war. The officers of such companies as Alcoa, Standard Oil, H. J. Heinz, Time, Inc., Chrysler, Manufacturers Hannover Trust, Washington Post-Newsweek, and Dillon-Reed, among others, have been reported as frequent attendees, along with their counterparts from most of the nations of Western Europe. That alone might make the Far Right suspicious, but the guest list has also included socialists like Helmut Schmidt, the West Germany Chancellor, and France's Gaston Defferre, who, it is alleged, was the Bilderberger's candidate to topple DeGaulle. Such a mixture of men, political parties and economic interests have served to confirm the right wing suspicion that men like the Rockefellers are in league with the social democrats or even the communists.

Occasionally a Bilderberger has tried to explain what these meetings are about. In 1964 New York's Sen. Jacob Javits, one of a number of congressmen who've attended, said the purpose is merely to 'create a better understanding of the forces and trends affecting Western nations.' That kind of Wheateena hasn't allayed right wing anxieties. Thus in 1971 the reactionary Manchester Guardian Union Leader charged that the Bilderberger conferees of that year were given advance notice of President Nixon's upcoming shift in economic policies, making it possible for them to pocket as much as $20 billion. More recently, a Liberty Lobby publication put the blame for the overthrow of the Portuguese dictatorship on the Bilder-bergers, saying this opened the way for the 'effective capture of the incredibly rich natural resources of Angola and Mosambique by the international Rockefeller cabal'.

Even after the revelations of the last few years, upper-echelon people consider the use of words like cabal and conspiracy as signs of emotional instability. But what is a conspiracy? It is an agreement by a group of people to do something that the user of the word conspiracy doesn't like.

In an extended sense, the Bilderberger conferees have been doing something that a lot of people don't like; they've been making and carrying out the military and economic policies of the North Atlantic Alliance. That doesn't mean that this "Cold War Internationale," as the meetings have been called, was making the decisions. Meetings like this popularize and familiarize people with ideas and are thus part of a long and intricate chain of social process by which ruling classes come to the consensus. But to the people who don't get invited, these transactions can take on a sinister appearance. Every other group in our society gets studied, surveyed and observed, but not the upper classes. They don't let the world in to look at them and therefore they invite others to think the worst.

But you don't have to be a political paragon to reason that informal meetings of major bankers, industrialists, professors, foundation executives, journalists and high government officials must have something to do with why and how powerful people come to nearly identical judgments....

Far right wing material on these subjects is often disregarded because they CAPITALIZE for emphasis and use a lot of exclamation points in their prose! That's bad form in the Ivy League, but it should not make us ignore that it was political analysts on the right who first raised the question about the multinational banks and corporations and the alarming union of capitalists and democratic socialists here and abroad.

(end of article)

Nicholas von Hoffman writes from a different point of view and his inferences are questionable; but his information is factual and perhaps more impressive because this might be called an instance where the left is helping the right. Truth, after all, is neither far right nor far left, but a thin, straight line that knows no turning.

DON BELL REPORTS Weekly. $24 per year.
Extra copies: 10¢ each. Address all orders:
DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

THE CASE OF THE FIFTY DISAPPEARING STATES

USURPATION: A TWO-WAY STREET

State Governors are little more than elected administrators for an all-powerful National Government. Their power has been usurped by the Federal Executive. The power of the State Legislatures has been taken over by (or handed over to) the National Congress. State Courts are little more than inferior adjuncts of the Federal Judiciary. And State and local law enforcement departments must abide by the advice handed down by the Federal Law Enforcement Assistance Administration.

In short, promoters of the New Federalism (another name for Regionalism) look upon the States as "horse-and-buggy anachronisms" that have seen their day and should be done away with completely just as soon as it can be done without causing a violent counter-revolution. The managerial system that is to replace the States has already been installed and, slowly but surely, the service functions formerly performed by State agencies, are being taken over by the Ten Federal Regional Councils and their myriad sub-councils and agencies.

Usurpation is the word for it. But, as T. David Horton, eminent Constitutional lawyer and legal counsel for the Committee to Restore the Constitution, Inc. pointed out:

"Usurpation is a bi-lateral act. It does not consist alone of an attempt to exercise power by someone having no authority to exercise that power. It consists of that in the first instance (someone trying to exercise the power who has no authority to do so.) But to complete that act, usurpation consists of the person or the entity having lawful authority to exercise that power, surrendering it or acquiescing in the exercise of the power by the usurper."

In easier words: The Federal Government could never have usurped all that power if the States (and the people) had not allowed it to happen. And, in allowing it to happen, the States (and the people) were just as guilty as the Federal Government, because all were violating the Constitution, which is the Supreme Law of the Land regardless of what its detractors may say or think.

Hence, it was heartening to hear the Hon. Meldrim Thomson, Governor of the State of New Hampshire, protest the usurpation of power when he appeared recently as a guest speaker on the Manion Forum Radio Broadcast. Here is what he said at that time:

In recent years we have seen the Federal Constitution hauled from its first conceptual moorings by the tugs of judicial interpretation and legislative usurpation. A long succession of guarantees of personal freedoms, to be freely determined, have been tortured into permanent deformity. The most important of all of these for the future of our nation and the liberties of our people is a concept of sovereign duality. Here in the north we call this "state sovereignty."

The Articles of Confederation, under which the Continental Congress acted on behalf of the original 13 colonies, demonstrated the weakness of a loose league of states and a need for a national entity with power to act for the collective whole in national affairs. Massachusetts, in 1790, and New Hampshire, in 1784, pioneered the concept of a dual sovereignty in their respective constitutions, several years before the adoption of the Federal Constitution. In each of these two earliest state constitutions in continuous operation, it was provided "the people of this state have the sole and exclusive right of governing themselves as a free, sovereign and independent state and do, and forever hereafter shall, exercise and enjoy every power, jurisdiction and right pertaining thereto, which is not or may not hereafter be by them expressly delegated to the United States of America in Congress assembled."

Seven of the 13 states that had wrested their independence from Great Britain provided in their resolutions of ratification that the Congress should be encouraged to institute amendments to the new Constitution that would guarantee to each state the reservation of those sovereign powers not expressly delegated to the national government. One of the strongest of these imperatives was made by New Hampshire. Our state urged that in order to remove the fears and quiet the apprehensions of many of the good people of this state and more effectually guard against an undue administration of the Federal Government, that certain amendments to the Constitution be promptly made.

Clearly Defined

At the first session of the First Congress of the United States, held in New York City, beginning March 4, 1789, the first ten amendments to the Federal Constitution were proposed to the several states. They were ratified and become effective December 15, 1791. The Tenth Amendment provided that "the powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively or to the people." Thus, a year and a half after our First Congress had convened, a clear expression of the division of powers between the Federal and State governments was incorporated into the Federal Constitution.

James Madison, one of the three co-authors of the Federalist Papers, described in January, 1788, in Paper No. 45, the difference in the nature of the sovereign powers possessed by the national and the state governments. This was several months before the seven states had conditioned their ratification on the adoption of an explicit reservation to the states of their undelegated powers.

Precisely what was the division of sovereign powers? Which of these were State and which Federal? In answer to such questions Madison wrote in the 45th Paper:

"The powers delegated by the proposed constitution to the Federal Government are few and defined. Those which are to remain in the State Governments are numerous and indefinite. The former will be exercised principally on external objects, as war, peace, negotiation, and foreign commerce, with which the power of taxation will for the most part be connected. The powers reserved to the several States will extend to all the objects which in the ordinary course of affairs concern the lives, liberties, and properties of the people, and the internal order, improvement and prosperity of the State."

Early in our history, in the case of McCulloch vs. Maryland, the United States Supreme Court fashioned its doctrine of implied powers. This doctrine held that when an express power was delegated to the national government by the Constitution, it carried with it such implied power as might be required to fully implement the related express powers. This became in time a judicial shoehorn by which the Federal government began an intrusion on the residual sovereignty of the States that now over-spreads State boundaries and leaves States which at the ratification of the Constitution were fully sovereign Nations, simple administrative districts in an all-powerful national government.

Like the lean fleshed kine in Pharaoh's dream that came up out of the river and ate up the seven fat kine, the national government has devoured the residual sovereign powers of the State. Who today can read the words of our Founding Fathers and believe that they ever intended that an omnipotent Federal government should exercise control over abortions, capital punishment, busing, schools, wages and hours of State and local government employees, and levy penalties in factories and shops without due process?

Fears Realized

Thus, the drastic diminution, perhaps even the elimination of the residual sovereign powers of the states guaranteed in the Tenth Amendment, is exactly what patriots like Richard Henry Lee, George Mason and Patrick Henry feared would come to pass. Lee, who was the author of the resolution in 1776 calling for the independence of America from Great Britain, said some 12 years later that the proposed Federal Constitution was not Federal in its principles and was calculated ultimately to make the States one consolidated government.

Any Governor today could enumerate a long list of usurped powers which Madison wrote were to be reserved to the States: those matters which concern the lives, liberties and properties of the people, and the internal order, improvement and prosperity of the States. Nothing has done more to vitiate the powers of State governments than the system of general and categorical grants, including revenue sharing. The re-cycled flood of Federal dollars, your taxes and mine back to the States, accounts for 45 per cent of the average budget of our States.

Strings Attached

Not a dollar of the billions doled to the States by the national government arrives without some form of persuader attached to it. If it is money for the public schools, we are told how to teach, what to teach, and when to teach. If it is for school lunches, we are advised we cannot allow students to work for their meals, presumably because working for a reward is a nasty, capitalistic activity.

The Federal-grant dollars being used to re-shape our social structure must be matched with various sums of State dollars, 50-50 for the Bureau of Reclamation money, 75-25 for certain welfare and health programs, and 90-10 for some highway funds. Almost no Federally imposed programs can be approved without agreements by the State, set forth in ponderous planning volumes, to follow federal regulations and directives from the bureaucrats who weave the strings that pull the programs....

Our Republic...will remain so only if we preserve the balance of sovereign power between the State and National Governments...If the founding concept of Federalism is to survive and continue to sustain our freedom, it is imperative that we resolve this vital matter while there yet may be time.

(End of radio address by Governor Meldrim Thomson)

An interesting sidelight: Governor Thomson lays particular stress on the importance of the Supreme Court decision in the case of McCullough vs. Maryland, because this was the first in a long string of abuses of and violations to the Constitution involving the concept of implied powers, this decision having been rendered as early as 1819 by Chief Justice John Marshall. However, this case was important in yet another respect: It gave Congress the right to establish a Bank of the United States. In spite of the very learned arguments of the counsel for the State of Maryland, Marshall ruled in favor of U.S. Treasury Secretary McCullough saying, in effect, that since Congress had the power "to coin money and regulate the value thereof," then it was implied that the Congress also had the power to create a national bank. This was a vital question, and the decision was discussed pro and con for years thereafter. When, in President Jackson's Administration, it became necessary for the bank to obtain an extension to its charter, President Jackson refused to re-charter the bank. However, a precedent had been established and, in 1913, it was deemed to be constitutional when Congress passed the Federal Reserve Act, creating a privately owned Corporation which would control the Nation's money supply. Also, on June 22, 1932, when Congress created Reconstruction Finance Corporation, this was considered to be an implied power of the Congress. Now we have a whole string of public corporations that are so many and so powerful that this Nation is on the verge of becoming a Corporate State—which is a polite way of saying Fascist State!

And the Labor Unions

"The Corporate State" is defined by the New University Encyclopedia (1967) as an "economic-political system developed in Italy under Fascism. In it the individual was related to the state through the intermediacy of corporations, or syndicates (labor unions), to which he belonged in connection with his employment. Distinct from Russian Communism in recognizing corporations of employers as well as of employees... (empowering) these, acting through the national council of corporations, to coordinate areas of the national economy and administer economic policy."

More simply: The Corporate State is an economic-political system administered by the heads of corporations and labor unions, with the real power in the hands of an elite.

In the Corporate State labor unions become a part of the Administration. Now note this: Last year, Congress passed a law, as an amendment to the Federal Fair Labor Standards Act, which would give the National Congress the right to make minimum wages and over-time rules for the more than eleven million employees of the fifty States and the eighteen thousand local governments in the nation. This, as Governor Thomson asserts, is a palpable usurpation of states' rights, and the law is being contested before the United States Supreme Court. But, if it is declared to be constitutional, we are told that the AFL-CIO hierarchy is ready with a series of bills which will set up collective bargaining standards for application to every unit of government in the country. These bills, we are told, would force States, Counties and Cities to recognize their employees' union shops, which would require union membership by all government employees, would collect union dues from all government employees, guarantee all employees the right to strike under Federal supervision.

In short, the syndicates (unions) will have become an integral part of the administrative apparatus of the government, along with the corporations, both public and private (if the latter is sufficiently monopolistic and cartelized, and subscribes to the right organizations, such as CFR, CED, OECD, Bilderbergers, Trilateral Commission, etc.)

Now, turn back the page and re-read the definition of a Corporate (or Fascist) State, and you'll get a glimpse of our real enemy within!

Land Control Essential

Regardless of the type of collectivism that is envisioned, private property in land is anathema. Control of the use of land is an essential ingredient of collectivism in any form. And in this connection the fifty States have their uses as administrative agencies for the Federal apparatus. The States will not totally disappear until land use control is in the hands of a Centralist Authority. This is understood by one United States Congressman, Steven D. Symms of Idaho. Just before Congress voted itself another hefty raise and keyed salaries to the cost of living so future raises will be automatic, Rep. Symms (who voted against the raise) had the following inserted in the Congressional Record (August 1, page E 4355):

"...Unfortunately, dogs are dogs, cats are cats, and planning is planning. You can call it anything you want, but Federal regulation by any other name smells just as foul.... By definition Federal legislation equals Federal intervention. If the land use planners are not advocating Federal intervention then there would be no need for them to propose Federal legislation. They would concentrate on the State and local levels, and keep Washington out of the picture...."

"In June of 1973 a task force on land use and urban growth, sponsored by the Rockefeller Brothers Fund and reporting to the President's Citizens Advisory Committee on Environmental Quality, chaired by Laurance Rockefeller, issued a report calling for the usual pervasive governmental land controls. ... Also in that same year, the Council on Environmental Quality—CEQ—issued a report The Taking Issue: An Analysis of the Constitutional Limits of Land Use Control, which is essentially a brief in support of... the earlier Rockefeller study. All of this appears to be an orchestrated move by those who advocate central planning and a controlled society to overcome the major obstacle to the realization of their goals—the inconvenience of having to pay private landowners for the expropriation of their property. These two reports, coming as they do from so close to the Federal Government, should alert us that critics of land use planning legislation are well founded in their fears that the logical course of these measures will lead to a massive and uncompensated transfer of private land to government control...."

"Unfortunately, a new land use planning bill has been introduced since the defeat of H.R. 3510 on July 15. The new bill is H.R. 8932 introduced on July 25, 1975...."

"Is it any business of Congress to decide what the States should and should not do in this area? Is it proper for Congress to use our tax dollars as bribe money to make the States do its bidding?"

"Already there are 22 Federal departments and agencies administering some 122 programs which deal with land use. If the Udall bill ever becomes law, Federal regulation of our property rights will increase many fold over that. Although the legislation has been defeated for the moment, now is not the time to drop our guard. The idea of Federal land control is still quite alive in the minds of those who wish to plan our lives. Like numerous other coercive measures, Federal land use planning will remain a constant threat to our freedom until the liberal-authoritarian makeup of Congress is substantially altered. Meanwhile, citizens should let their public officials know exactly how they feel about Federal land control legislation—in no uncertain terms!"

"One final point... every time a new piece of liberal or collectivist legislation is defeated, its authoritarian proponents refuse to admit the real reason for the defeat—that the people simply do not want it. Invariably, they use the familiar scapegoat 'rightwing pressure groups' and blame the defeat on everything except the fact that it is just bad legislation.... Maybe the truth of the matter is that leftwing pressure groups are forcing laws on the American people which they clearly do not want. Let us rejoice but not quit, because the same rancid intellectual soil from which this idea grew is still with us—so we must continue our efforts for liberty."

DON BELL REPORTS Weekly. $24 per year.
Extra copies: 10¢ each. Address all orders:
DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

THE NEW EDUCATION FOR THE NEW WORLD SOCIETY

A PROGRESS REPORT

An old McGuffey's Eclectic Reader, vintage of 1854, was prophetically correct when it stated: "If you can induce a community to doubt the genuineness and authenticity of the Scriptures; to question the reality and obligations of religion; to hesitate, undecided, whether there be any such thing as virtue or vice; whether there be an eternal state of retribution beyond the grave; or whether there be any such being as God; you have broken down the barriers of moral virtue, and hoisted the flood gates of immorality and crime. I need not say that when a people have once done this, they can no longer exist as a tranquil and happy people. Every bond that holds society together would be ruptured; fraud and treachery would take the place of confidence between man and man; the tribunals would be scenes of bribery and injustice; avarice, perjury, ambition, and revenge would walk through the land, and render it more like the dwelling of savage beasts than the tranquil abode of civilized and Christianized men."

It hardly needs mentioning that that which McGuffey feared has come upon us. Proof of this can be found in the daily press, on radio and television news and talk shows, in the public statements of politicians and bureaucrats, in the admissions of educationists, and in the official reports of ever increasing crime and violence. Blacks battle Whites, minority groups battle other minority groups, students prepare to attack teachers, teachers stay out on strike for higher wages or for fear of going back to work with young savages, buses are overturned, textbooks are burned, school buildings are vandalized or set afire, while Presidents and lesser politicians argue about how money can buy "quality education for everybody on an equal basis;" as though a brain were like a storage battery that would take and hold a charge of knowledge exactly equal to the charge that could be held by any other battery of that make or model.

Interestingly, the information that something is wrong with the public education system is being told us by some of the same people who made public education what it is today. Example: Time, the Weekly Newsmagazine, of August 25, 1975, carries a special essay entitled "Can't Anyone Here Speak English?" which admits, among other things:

"... the role of college English teachers has shifted from introducing students to great literature to introducing 'growing numbers of young adults to literacy, to reading and writing and even speaking.' It is not only the minorities, the poor, the Spanish-speaking young who are having trouble; the same pattern is evident among the white middle class (or anyone who went to a public school—Ed.). Examples can be found across the nation:

- * Last year the Association of American Publishers' guide to reading textbooks, a guide intended for college freshmen, had to be rewritten for a ninth-grade reading level.
- * The City College of New York spent $15-million last year on remedial English courses. Many of the students enrolling under an open-admissions policy are reading below the ninth-grade level.
- * In 1957, the average verbal score on the national Scholastic Aptitude Tests was 473 (on a scale of from 200 to 800). In 1973, the average was down 33 points, to 440.
- * More than one-third of the students who want to become journalism majors in their junior year at the University of Wisconsin did not meet the minimum admissions standards in grammar, spelling, punctuation and word usage. At the University of North Carolina's journalism school, 39% of the students flunked the basic spelling test. The problem is compounded when racial sensitivities are involved...."

Then there is the case of the leading think-tank operated by futurist Herman Kahn, the Hudson Institute. Human Events of August 23, 1975, featured this report:

"F. David Mathews, who was recently sworn in as the new secretary of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, should take a look at a brand-new 300-page study published by the Hudson Institute on primary and secondary education if he wants to show President Ford where he can cut the budget. Funded, ironically, under a grant from the Office of Economic Opportunity, the study, completed under the direction of Frank E. Armbruster, is a devastating critique of federal aid to education and shatters a host of liberal shibboleths about the matter.

"Armbruster's major finding bears out what conservatives have been saying all along: that despite the astronomical sums spent on education, achievement in both verbal and mathematical skills has been going down. Moreover, these skills have been declining most dramatically among the brightest group of children. . . ." (Unquote).

NEA and other educationist organizations and teachers unions are in agreement: there is something wrong with the public school system and with the quality of the product it is producing. However, we should not be deceived into believing that those who were instrumental in creating the educational chaos are anxious to reduce expenses or offer any really constructive suggestions for remedying the situation. Time, Hudson Institute, NEA, et al point out that the system is bad because that gives them a chance to ask for more money to introduce innovations and to try out new experiments in which the children of the nation could be used as captive guinea pigs!

A Look at the Record

Assuming, with Cicero, that "history is the witness of the times, the torch of truth, the life of memory, the messenger of antiquity," let us look, briefly, at the history of education in this part of the world now known as the United States of America:

No matter how hard historical revisionists try to conceal the fact, America was first settled by people who based their values and moral standards (their "life styles," the mods would call it) on the Holy Bible. The first public schools were established to teach children to read, so that they could read the Bible. As early as 1647 the legislature of the Massachusetts Colony enacted a law whose preamble began: "It being one chief project of that old deluder, Satan, to keep men from the knowledge of the Scriptures. . . ." The law went on to order that every township containing fifty families or householders should set up a school in which children might be taught to read and write.

Some 150 years later, George Washington, our first President, held that a nation can not be governed properly without a strict adherence to the moral principles contained in the Holy Bible.

However, when the Founding Fathers wrote the Constitution of the United States, they were careful to grant no power whatsoever in the area of education to any branch of the Federal Government. They held that the duty and privilege of establishing and controlling public schools fell to the parents and the community, that parents had the primary right in the education of their children and that public schools were established to help the parents in meeting this right and responsibility. And, as McGuffey's Reader of 1854 affirmed, this traditional form of American education adhered to the precepts of the Bible and the U.S. Constitution, and fostered progress and domestic tranquillity, as well as giving vitality to the life of a nation of free people. The very idea of a Federal Department of Health, Education and Welfare would have been abhorrent to any American citizen of the 17th, 18th, or 19th centuries. In fact, it wasn't until the second half of the present 20th century that such a Federal Department was installed; on April 11, 1953.

The idea of Federal control of education was a product of the tax-exempt Foundations. Early in this century John D. Rockefeller Sr. organized a foundation known as the General Education Board, which is still in existence and still influencing the course of education in the United States. The General Education Board Letter No. 1 stated the doctrine that was to be followed:

"In our dreams we have limitless resources (tax-exempt foundation money—Ed.), and the people yield themselves with perfect docility to our molding hands. The present educational conventions fade from our minds, as, unhampered by tradition, we work our good will upon a grateful and responsive rural folk."

The plan was to control the minds and the lives of the people of the United States (and eventually of the entire world) by controlling the teaching. Financing teachers' colleges was the first step. Columbia University was built on Rockefeller land. Rockefeller then gained control of Chicago University. Later, other foundations joined with the Rockefeller Foundations (Carnegie-Guggenheim, Russell Sage, Twentieth Century, Mellon, Ford, etc.) and together they took control of the halls of academe, while at the same time financing educationists and behavioral scientists who had innovations to offer.

In an excellent paper prepared for the "Concerned Citizens and Taxpayers for Decent School Books," (Box 1984, Baton Rouge, Louisiana 70821), Dr. Charles Macmurdo gave the following historical sketch of the development of the new education for the new society:

In contrast to the traditional education with its emphasis on helping the student to develop his intellect and to acquire helpful skills so as to be able to lead a productive life in a free society, the main thrust of the New Education seemingly is to alter attitudes and traditional values so as to condition students as well as adults to accept greater degrees of social controls required in a collectivist society.

The foundations for the New Education were laid in the early 1930's when John Dewey and his educational disciples of the Progressive Education Association and the John Dewey Association promoted plans for socializing America. They championed the New Education which would spawn the New Social Order. They committed themselves to fashioning a form of collectivism and to striving for world government. Dr. Theodore Brameld, one of the "frontier thinkers" as they were labeled, wrote that the world of the future "should be a world in which national sovereignty is utterly subordinated to international authority."

To achieve world government it is necessary to remove from the minds of men their individualism, loyalty to family traditions, national patriotism and religious dogmas. Dr. G. Brock Chisholm, first director of the World Health Organization, commented as follows on the above needs: "We are all now, perforce, citizens of the world, whether we are sufficiently mature to carry the responsibility or not.... The reinterpretation and eventually eradication of the concept of right and wrong which has been the basis of child training, the substitution of intelligent and rational thinking for faith in the certainties of the old people, these are the belated objectives of practically all effective psychotherapy. ... If the race is to be freed from its crippling burden of good and evil it must be psychiatrists who take the original responsibility.... The responsibility for charting the necessary changes in human behavior rests clearly on the sciences working in the field...."

These views could be discarded as the aberrations of a collectivist mentality were it not for the fact that we are witnessing their implementation today....

Mr. George Fisher, a president of the NEA in recent years, has referred to the important role of teachers in becoming change agents. Since 1952, the NEA has operated the National Training Laboratory to train teachers as well as leaders in other areas than education as change agents. Beginning with the enactment of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965, the U.S. Office of Education and HEW have bribed local school boards with federal grants to adopt and implement experimental and innovative programs for planned change and behavior modification. These federally funded programs give a lending hand to making a reality of the future trends of education in the United States, as forecast in a report published in the NEA Journal Today's Education: "The roles and responsibilities of teachers will alter.... The basic role of the teacher will change noticeably. Ten years hence it should be more accurate to term him a "learning clinician." This title is intended to convey the idea that schools are becoming clinics whose purpose is to provide individualized psychological treatment for the student, thus increasing his value both to himself and to society."

(End of extended quotation)

While NEA and similar organizations were promoting this new education for the new society, the Federal Administration was White House Conferences on Children and lending official credence to the work of the change agents. As a matter of record, Children's Lib was well under way before the Women's Lib movement got off the ground. Example: As a result of the White House Conference on Children in 1970, an official study was published; a 450-page document obtainable from the Superintendent of Documents, Government Printing Office, price $4.50. Here is a quote from that document:

"Much of the law now covering the relationship between parent and child relegates the child to a status little more than chattel.

Parents, for example, are described as having 'property rights' in children and in almost every instance children's economic interests are subordinated to those of the parent. Legal concepts of parental control and the legal requirements of parental consent leave the child little opportunity for self-determination.

"The time has come to re-examine such fundamental issues as the extent to which a child is entitled to seek medical and psychiatric assistance, birth control information and even abortion, without parental consent or over parental opposition; the entire concept of 'emancipation' and its consequences; the concept that the child is economically subservient to the parent as now embraced in Common Law and Statutory directives; and the desirability of subjecting children to the stigma of Juvenile Court proceedings merely because their conduct conflicts with parental standards.

"A serious commitment to children must involve re-examining the laws, statutes, ordinances, rules and regulations covering marriage, divorce, custody, support, paternity, illegitimacy, adoption, dependence, guardianship and property rights. It is especially important that the school honor children's rights and recognize the primacy of their interests...." (Unquote).

The gist of this official report of a White House Conference on Children could be paraphrased in these words: The child should be legally equal to his parents and to all adults in all respects, and is the property, not of the parents, but of the state.

The Federal Administration lent aid to the educationists, behavioral scientists and change agents in another very important manner: As an essential part of the New Federalism (or Regional Governance) that was being installed, a management and control system called the Planning, Programming, Budgeting System was ordered to be incorporated into every department of the Federal Administration, and this included, of course, HEW and its Office of Education. The name has been changed; the system is now referred to generally as "Management by Objective," but it's the same old PPBS, slightly refined and matured through usage.

Now, in a systems management operation, the total objective is the end product. A fitting—and successful—example was the trip to the moon, Everything was sacrificed and/or directed toward the achievement of the end product: putting a man on the moon.

In such an operation, PPBS might be considered satisfactory and without serious fault. However, when PPBS is applied to the educational system, then the end product is the child himself! A certain kind of end product is the objective: a person whose feelings, reactions, values, behavior and intellectual development have been pre-ordained and pre-determined by the change agents and the Planners.

Conditioning people to behave according to predetermined behavior patterns has become the objective of educational institutions. We are, of course, talking about conditioned responses in human terms. Pavlov experimented with dogs; the new educationists and change agents do it with children. And this is no 1984 dream: it's being done right now in the public school system!

A reading of teachers' guides, educational journals, even popular magazines and daily newspapers, will confirm the fact that education no longer means the development of the intellect to equip the student to make independent decisions which will determine his behavior as a free man. The objective is conditioned response; and PPBS provides the machinery required to accomplish this management objective. Educationists have a term for it: they call it unfreezing and refreezing, and it goes like this:

- 1) Unfreeze a child's previously held values, standards, and morals taught by the family and the church; and place him in a state of confusion.
- 2) Change the child's image of himself, create a new identity.
- 3) Refreeze the child into this new self, or identity; so that he constantly acknowledges and desires peer-group control, for a continual molding of his "relevant" thoughts, attitudes, and values.

Thus does the new education create the new man for the new world society.

We realize that millions of parents are asking "What can we do?" And there is a great effort on the part of many to regain control of the public school system and have the schools run by the parents at the community level. But we can see no hope in this; the cup of iniquity must first overflow.

Then what to do? Well, our grandchildren attend a private, Christian school.

For information concerning this letter write:
DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

THE POLICE STATE SYNDROME

LEAA TO THE RIGHT OF THEM UNIONS TO THE LEFT OF THEM

While violent crime continues to increase at a catastrophic rate, police forces go out on strike, leaving whole cities undefended and its law-abiding citizens at the mercy of robbers and rapists, muggers and murderers. As arson becomes more and more prevalent firemen leave their posts and people fight fires with garden hoses. Political kidnaping is on the increase, and the forces that are supposed to maintain order find it impossible to learn the whereabouts of a missing Hearst or the fate of a missing Hoffa. And, in the midst of a growing national crisis, the CIA and the FBI come up for investigation by such prestigious personages as the appointed Vice President, the Attorney General, the Senate and the House, etc.

Did all of these things "just happen," or were the crises created in order to bring about the centralized control of all the people and organizations charged with the responsibility of maintaining law and order? Was a crisis created so that the people will demand the establishment of a national police force, which could make this a police state?

If it be true that centralized control of all police forces is the plan, then it is also true that the conspiracy involves two forces that are working from different angles of attack but for the achievement of the same objective. Big Labor and Big Government both are pursuing policies that could lead to the establishment of a centrally controlled and "nationalized" police organization, that eventually could be "internationalized" and controlled by a World Authority!

First, let's look to the left, at the efforts of Labor Leaders:

There is nothing new about policeman, firemen, teachers, sanitation workers and other government and public sector employees going out on strike. But, the public attitude toward such strikes seems to have changed considerably over the years. For example, the Nation was especially strike happy in 1919. On Jan. 9 workers in New York harbor walked off the job. On Feb. 6 Seattle shipworkers called a general strike. On March 12 the Public Service Railway (New Jersey) shut down to forestall strike violence. On

Aug. 1 almost two million railroad workers went out on strike, while streetcar and elevated railway workers paralyzed public transportation in Boston and Chicago. Then, on Sept. 9, came the Boston police strike. There were grievances, of course, and by a vote of 1,135 to 2, the whole police force decided to strike, leaving the city with no police protection whatsoever.

Official reaction was immediate, and positive. Governor Calvin Coolidge called out the National Guard, and public response to his stand had much to do with his becoming Vice President and, in 1924, his re-election as President of the United States.

After the strike had been settled, Samuel Gompers, then head of AFL, pleaded with Coolidge to reinstate the striking policemen. Governor Coolidge answered, "There is no right to strike against the public safety by anybody, anytime, anywhere." Even President Woodrow Wilson sent Coolidge a message saying in effect, "Amen!"

Some eighteen years later the official attitude remained much the same. President Franklin Delano Roosevelt, one of the best friends the AFL (and the Communists) ever had, wrote a letter to a union organizer in which he said, in part, "A strike of public employees manifests nothing less than an intention on their part to obstruct the operations of government until their demands are satisfied. Such action looking towards the paralysis of government by those who have sworn to support it is unthinkable and intolerable."

It was President John F. Kennedy who, in 1962, laid the groundwork for the new attitude toward strikes by employees of the federal government. He issued an Executive Order—#10988—which permitted the Union Camel to get his nose inside the government employees' tent. The order seemed harmless enough in that it said any government employee could choose for himself: he could join a labor union, or he could refrain from joining a labor union "freely and without fear of penalty or reprisal. . . ." This would seem merely to be a statement of the "freedom of choice" policy. However, in his executive order before the "Now Therefore" paragraph there were some "Whereas" paragraphs which had the effect of making the respective labor union practically a partner with the federal government in all employee-management relations (exactly as in the Fascist system established by one Benito Mussolini). Said Executive Order #10988:

"WHEREAS participation in the formulation and implementation of personnel policies affecting them contribute to effective conduct of public business; and

"WHEREAS the efficient administration of the Government and the well-being of employees require that orderly and constructive relationships shall be maintained between employee organizations and management officials; and

"WHEREAS subject to law and the paramount requirements of the public service, employee-management relations within the Federal service should be improved by providing employees an opportunity for greater participation in the formulation and implementation of policies and procedures affecting the conditions of their employment; and

"WHEREAS effective employee-management cooperation in the public services requires a clear statement of the respective rights and obligations of employee organizations and agency management;

"NOW, THEREFORE..."

"Prior to the promulgation of the order," writes Ralph de Toledano in his latest book Let Our Cities Burn, "the American Federation of State, County, and Municipal Employees (AFSCME) had included a no-strike clause in its constitution. Once it had reaped the benefits of the order (EO 10988) AFSCME struck out the no-strike clause, while the government looked on benignly."

"The immediate results of EO 10988," the author continues, "were fourfold: (1) Because of the blessings bestowed upon it by the President, AFSCME and other government-employee unions zoomed in membership and ballooned in prestige. (2) Many states, some of which had in the past outlawed union membership for their employees, enacted legislation embodying much of the Kennedy order. (3) Public-sector strikes increased from fifteen a year in 1968 to 409 in 1969, with man hours lost rising from 7,510 to 744,600—to the detriment of the people. (4) Legitimate employee associations like the National Association of Federal Employees, were compelled to become militant trade unions in order to survive.

"As public sector unions grew in membership and financial resources, moreover, they changed from economic associations to political mechanisms.... ('How can I vote against AFSCME,' a Michigan State legislator pleaded, 'when they contributed $5,000 to my campaign.') And by driving municipal governments to the wall, they contributed substantially to the disarray of orderly urban government and the blight of America's cities." (Editor's note: Direct quotes, and many of the facts and figures presented up to this point in this letter, are taken from Ralph de Toledano's Let Our Cities Burn (Arlington House, New Rochelle, N.Y. 189 pages including foreword by Senator Jesse Helm and five important appendices. Title comes from the remark made by a labor leader during the Baltimore policemen's strike. The author shows that the unionization of government employees—once held illegal by the courts—threatens to change the entire fabric of American life. This book is important reading for those who are concerned with Big Labor's big new drive, which is a basic part of the plan to convert this Nation into a corporate socialist state within a socialist world government. $7.95).

So successful has been this drive to unionize all government workers, including the policemen of every community, that one in every five public-service employees belongs to a labor union. According to a recent survey conducted by the U.S. Department of Labor, 2,907,000 government workers belong to unions. An additional 2,400,000 belong to associations that, though not considered unions, bargain on behalf of employees. Thus, according to government statistics, a total of 5,300,000 public employees—more than one third of all civilians who work for government at all levels—are in unions or bargaining associations.

Russell Kirk recently asked the question: "Will the American Republic come to be ruled by an oligarchy—by a set of labor bosses who control the swiftly-growing unions of public employees?" He suggests that "Nowadays the real menace... comes not from little bands of ideological fanatics, but rather from the clique of ruthless men who dominate the public-employee unions, and who would convert civil servants into uncivil masters."

Mr. Kirk is correct—up to a point. But let us answer his question with another question: In the corporate socialist state established in Italy in the 1920s and 1930s, did the labor syndicates dominate the corporations, did the corporations dominate the labor syndicates, or did they cooperate one with another, form a "fasces" and jointly dominate everybody else?

There is yet another group of "leaders" that aims to gain centralized control over all police agencies in the United States. And this is a more serious threat to our freedoms because "people in government" are behind this drive.

Mr. Cal Steinberger of Fairfax, Oklahoma, an ardent opponent of Regional Governance, did some extensive research on the subject, and we are borrowing from his sequence of events:

In 1965 the federal government created the Office of Law Enforcement Assistance as a department within the Department of Justice. Then, in 1968, Congress passed the Omni-bus Crime Control Act which, among other things, converted the Office of Law Enforcement Assistance into what is now known as the Law Enforcement Assistance Administration (LEAA).

The real purpose behind this series of official acts began to surface when, on March 3, 1971, Clarence Coster, Associate Administrator of LEAA, told two dozen police chiefs in Massachusetts that American police must be "regionalized." He said: "Today in this country we have 40,135 law enforcement agencies, ranging from one-man departments to New York City with more than 40,000 police officers. This many units form a completely ungovernable body."

In August, 1971, the Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations (ACIR), the brainchild of the Rockefeller controlled Council on Foreign Relations and 1313, issued a pamphlet identified as "M-67." On pages 48-50 of this pamphlet there will be found the recommendation that "Special Police Task Forces" be established. They would be "a force under the direction of the local governments (which have become) party to multicounty or interstate agreement (providing for the) setting up of such a special purpose police force." The pamphlet explains that the "Director" of the State law enforcement agency shall appoint a "Commander" for this task force to serve at his pleasure. And, "an officer of the task force shall have legal authority to detain, search, and arrest any person on probable cause that he believes has been involved in organized crime." On pages 56-58 the ACIR recommends that "some states may wish to authorize a state commission on local boundary adjustments to consider the failure of a metropolitan local jurisdiction to provide basic minimum police services as evidence that the jurisdiction should no longer exist as a separate government entity and order its consolidation with an adjacent municipality where appropriate." (A "metropolitan local jurisdiction" is defined as any unit of general local government located in an area designated by the US Office of Management and Budget as a Standard Metropolitan Statistical Area. "Basic minimum police services" is defined as continuous 24-hour police patrol and preliminary investigative service by a 2-man patrol with appropriate supporting police personnel.)

As a follow-up: on Sept. 30, 1973, the National Advisory Commission on Criminal Justice Standards and Goals (a commission created by and financed by LEAA) recommended the elimination by merger of all police departments with fewer than 10 men. This would effectively eliminate more than 80% of our Nation's autonomous police forces! The real purpose behind this technique of forced consolidation of our police forces is, of course, to gain control through "regionalization."

On Sept. 29, 1973 came news, via the Tulsa Daily World, that an ACIR sponsored agency was sponsoring an Oklahoma pilot project to establish a Sheriff's Tactical Patrol Squad (STP), to be staffed by personnel whose salaries would be paid, 90% by the federal government and 10% by the participating counties. The STP would consist of mobile units having crime detection equipment and which could operate within and converge on any potential trouble spot within the entire county.

Latest development in this area of law enforcement comes from Jon Roush of the staff of The Ozark Sunbeam, a weekly newspaper published at Seligman, Missouri. $7.50 per year and highly recommended to those seeking up-to-date information concerning the "regional conspiracy." In its Issue of Aug. 25, 1975, Roush wrote:

"Once again the office of the elected County Sheriff is lined up in the crosshairs of the high caliber long gun of the regional police movement: the LEAA. In the 1975 Guideline Manual of the LEAA, which is used for funding what they call National Priority Programs, Chapter 17, sec. 4 is entitled: "Rural Enforcement Assistance Program." A description of this program reads as follows:

* * * * *

Police specialists are needed to assist multiple, organizationally weak rural enforcement agencies to better direct, coordinate and cope with increasing rural crimes.

a) This program will assist in supporting a district deputy or resident trooper in areas where the existing police agencies are organizationally weak. The program will support the maintenance of a professional organizational police officer from a state, county, or local municipal force...

c) This officer will serve as a police supervisor. He will supervise the law enforcement personnel in not more than three contiguous communities having a collective population of not more than 20,000 people.

d) Officer chosen must be a full time, sworn, full power, career oriented person, and must have met state minimum standards for training... Officer must live or move to one of the communities under his supervision..."

* * * * *

"This 'Resident Trooper' could totally eliminate the function and the authority of the County Sheriff. Furthermore, this resident trooper could tie the hands of the Sheriff in utilizing his County's Posse Comitatus. The sole reason for having an elected Sheriff is to have one man with the total authority of law enforcement in his County, who is answerable only to his constituents, the Comitatus, and no one else."

(End of quotes)

Another pilot program is being conducted in California, where federalization of the local police is a current project. The following information came to us some time ago from Mrs. Bernadine Smith of California Citizens Opposing Regional Governance, P.O.Box 26392, Perkins Station, Sacramento, California 95826. We quote Mrs. Smith:

Project Safer California (also called California Standards and Goals Program), the current scheme to control local police, courts, and jails from Washington, D.C. is now more than one-half completed. By Oct. 22, 1976, the final take-over will commence, and by Dec. 31, 1983, the following, among other drastic changes, will be in effect:

- 1) The elected Sheriffs will be eliminated or have no authority.
- 2) Ownership of handguns by private citizens will be eliminated and other firearms registered.
- 3) All local police and sheriffs departments will be merged with the National Guard into a military police under centralized command of the "Public Safety Agency."
- 4) All police departments with fewer than 24 persons will be eliminated.
- 5) Standards (regulations) set by federal edict will effectively remove local control and these standards will be changed as and when required by the federal control center.
- 6) Counties and cities which accept federal and state funding must also accept the "California Standards and Goals Program", and they must contract to continue the funded programs at their own expense after federal and state funding stops.
- 7) Computer based "planning, programming, budgeting systems" (PPBS) or so-called "cost effective" programming will effectively monitor every individual police officer.

This program is funded 90% by federal and 10% by state and local funds. It is headed by Anthony L. (Lou) Palumbo... (who said on) July 29, 1974 in his first meeting with the carefully selected and pre-qualified advisory committee members of "Project Safer California" that this project "is one which is visualized nationwide, because it came out of the National Advisory Committee Report." (End of quotation)

It should be born in mind that the 90% funding by the federal government on all of these police-consolidation and sheriff-elimination projects, is funnelled down to the states, counties and communities through LEAA, which is an arm of the Justice Department. LEAA operates as a part of the ten Federal Regional Councils and is said to be the nucleus of the future National Police Force which will replace local elected Sheriffs and Police Chiefs with appointed "Resident Troopers."

In addition to the re-making of local law enforcement agencies to fit into a collective national (eventually international) pattern, there is also the current drive of the change agents to restructure the entire US Intelligence Community and make it a functioning part of a National (Secret) Police Force! There are ten different federal agencies involved. According to the best-selling book, "The CIA and the Cult of Intelligence" the ten are, with the number of their employees: Central Intelligence Agency. 16,500. National Security Agency. 24,000. Defense Intelligence Agency. 5,000. Army Intelligence. 35,000. Naval Intelligence. 15,000. Air Force Intelligence (which includes the National Reconnaissance Office. 56,000. State Department Bureau of Intelligence and Research. 350. Federal Bureau of Investigation (Internal Security Division. 800. Atomic Energy Commission, Division of Intelligence. 300. Treasury Department. 300.

All of which adds up to a total of 153,000 employees (at an annual expenditure of $6,228,000,000.00). All of these agencies, along with the entire Departments of State and Defense, make up what is known as the U.S. National Security Council. And this council is under the directorship and control of Heinz (alias Henry) Kissinger!

Then there is INTERPOL, an international police agency responsible to no government yet its American arm is housed in the U.S. Treasury Building!

Put them all together and you will find the nucleus of a Police State; indeed of a Police World! The best defense: Insist that your Sheriff and Chief of Police are elected officials, and local residents.

DON BELL REPORTS Weekly. $24 per year.
Extra copies: 10¢ each. Address orders to:
DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

OUR UNAMERICAN FOREIGN POLICY

POLITICAL SUBVERSION

During the current calendar week the United States was being wracked (if not wrecked) by a long chain of school and transportation strikes, busing confrontations, confusion concerning oil and other consumer goods, continuing unemployment, mounting inflation and other political, economic and moral woes. Morale was at exceeding low point.

Meanwhile, in the international arena, the events of the week were equally ominous. At the Sheraton Park Hotel in New York City an estimated 3,000 men who control money and men who want to control money, representing at least 120 nations and mini-nations and all the world's important financial institutions, were trying to help the officials of the International Monetary Fund (IMF) decide how best to divide the world's wealth and substance equally among all the nations of the world without regard to industry, resource, or point of origin.

In yet another section of Bankrupt City, the delegates to and officials of the United Nations were trying to decide how best to inaugurate the New World Economic Order which had been blueprinted at last year's UN meetings but which had not yet been put into operation.

We'll return to the monetary and economic happenings of current history, but first let us explore the political subversions that were accomplished by our Secretary of State as he commuted between Jerusalem and Alexandria and irritated yet another balance of power structure—this time with Americans scheduled to maintain the balance between irate Israelis and angry Arabs.

Political blackmail is a potent persuader. It was sufficient to make reluctant adversaries sign a worthless agreement against their wills, and it will be sufficient to induce a disapproving United States Congress to sign a document permitting Americans to be placed in exactly the same position which caused United States entry into the Vietnam War; this time replacing UN troops in observation posts in a Sinai no-man's-land stretched out between American equipped Israeli troops and Russian outfitted Egyptian forces (some 58 UN observers have been killed in the past five years manning such observation posts).

President Gerald Ford insists, at least publicly, that he is well pleased with the work of his Secretary of State. Both he and Vice President Rockefeller whirlbirded out to Andrews Air Base to welcome the returning Kissinger and sing praises unto him. But, if Ford was really happy about the turn of events, he was of a minority group. Most other leaders felt they were being blackmailed; even the Israelis:

"This Sinai deal was not made between Israel and Egypt," said one member of the Knesset (Israeli Parliament). "It was made by the United States, for its own big-power purposes." To the speaker, the United States and Henry Kissinger are virtual political synonyms in the field of international affairs, and he assumes that what the U.S. Secretary of State does is done in the best interests of the United States of America—an assumption also shared, unfortunately, by a majority of U.S. Senators and Representatives.

However, on the very day that Kissinger concluded his temporary peace-purchasing, UPI issued the following brief roundup:

"The triumph of Secretary of State Henry Kissinger's shuttle diplomacy in arranging an interim peace settlement between Israel and Egypt made all the headlines Monday. But elsewhere in the Mideast, reports said:

- * Fighting broke out again between leftists and right-wingers in Lebanon.
- * Iraq renewed her long-standing dispute with Syria.
- * Libya's bellicose leaders did some saber-rattling in the form of a big military parade.
- * Jordan's King Hussein hinted he might turn to the Soviet Union for weapons if the U.S. Congress does not come through.
- * Israeli troops shelled several Arab villages.
- * Palestinian guerrillas showed themselves to be as intransigent as ever toward the Jewish state."

While an Israeli official in Jerusalem was insisting that this agreement, especially the stipulation concerning the use of American observers in the Mitla and Gidi Passes in the Sinai, was an American idea and that Israel had nothing to do with it, an Egyptian spokesman in Alexandria told Ray Vickers of The Wall Street Journal that, "This was an Israeli idea, not ours. We are not pressing for it. We just saw no reason for objecting to it."

Nevertheless, political blackmail was involved in the negotiations: Arms to Israel were slowed down, not delivered until Israeli leaders agreed to go along with the plans submitted by Kissinger. And now, if the U.S. Congress doesn't agree to the placement of American technicians in the Sinai, the whole agreement will collapse, and more war will be inevitable, say the backers of Kissinger's agreement. And if that isn't blackmail, perhaps someone can think up a better word for it.

A fair and more or less impartial analysis of the situation was written by James McCartney of the Knight Newspaper Chain's Washington Bureau. McCartney was in the Mid-East during the shuttling diplomacy and filed his impressions from Jerusalem. We quote pertinent parts of his analysis:

IT DOESN'T MEAN PEACE BUT IT BUYS TIME

The new interim agreement between Israel and Egypt on the Sinai Desert initialed here Monday will not mean peace in the Middle East, but it may buy time. And... the Middle East needs time—and plenty of it. The agreement represents the first time that Israel has surrendered territory conquered in the 1967 war as a result of negotiation rather than violence. Secretary of State Henry Kissinger... points out that it is more than a military withdrawal, it includes political commitments between the two for the first time—particularly a promise not to "resort to the threat or use of force or military blockade." But the Israelis are not necessarily buying that. They don't trust the Egyptians and they deeply believe, almost to a man that they have been pressured by the U.S. into an agreement they really did not want.

"The agreement, if approved by Congress, also represents a new and possibly dangerous step for the U.S. The stationing of slightly less than 200 U.S. civilian technicians on the Sinai between the two armies automatically will involve the United States more deeply than it ever has been involved before in any new threat of war between these bitter enemies.

The gut question is: What will happen if somebody starts shooting and U.S. citizens are killed? What will the United States do? Officials are not answering that one, and the silence has a meaning of its own.

Israel wanted the technicians stationed there for a reason that should not be misunderstood. It wanted the United States involved as a form of guarantee for Israel security.

The U.S. government put Marines in action only a few months ago to save the civilian crew of the Mayaguez. The United States will have a far greater moral commitment to the safety of those civilian technicians than it ever had to the crew of the Mayaguez.

At best the agreement can only be described as a hopeful and tentative step that will bring peace only if there are more steps to follow. And no one knows whether more steps will follow.

The agreement totally ignores the really tough questions in the Middle East. What is to be done about more than three million Palestinians, the root cause of terrorism and persistent violence? What is to be done about the other occupied lands? What will be the fate of the contested Holy City of Jerusalem? The Sinai Desert is a barren wasteland, without population. But the occupied territories of the Golan Heights, on the West Bank of the Jordan River and in Jerusalem have people and have value as real estate.

These are the tougher problems that lie ahead and the fact that they are not addressed in this agreement is precisely why peace is not (repeat not) at hand.

(End of quotes from McCartney analysis)

The Wall Street Journal of Sept. 8 asks in its lead editorial: "Are we buying a real peace, or are we buying our way into another Vietnam?" And the answer—not given by TWSJ—seems to be: The primary objective of this Sinai Agreement was to get the United States directly involved in the Middle East conflict!

The maddening aspect of this whole situation lies in the fact that ~~nobody~~ in authority started an objection to the proposed American presence in Sinai until after it was too late for the objection to carry weight. All parties who might have prevented it waited until after the agreement had been initialed by all the principals involved, and then they began to object—when it was too late to object effectively!

Due warning was given. The New York Times—sometimes called the "paper of record"—carried the story of what was to happen on the front page of its July 13, 1975 edition. We felt the information of sufficient importance that we printed in our July 18, 1975 issue of Don Bell Reports, the following warning:

"With the knowledge that Israel—and perhaps other Middle East Nations also—has nuclear weapons, the following front-page item from The New York Times of July 13 becomes extremely important:

“London, July 12—The United States, seeking to facilitate a new disengagement between Israel and Egypt, is considering the possibility of having American technicians man electronic surveillance stations in the strategic Sinai passes, reporters traveling with Secretary of State Kissinger were told today....”

Our comment at that time: “You will recall that this is exactly how we got involved in the Vietnam disaster...from observers to instructors to actual participants developed, step by step. Does Kissinger think he can use the same formula to get us actively involved in the Arab-Israeli conflict?...”

Obviously, Kissinger did, and it worked; even when an eight-week warning had been published in the Times!

Kissinger, in his alleged strivings for world peace (the Communists are also striving for world peace) uses a time-worn and time-disproved theory known as the Balance of Power. This is the theory that “international equilibrium exists so long as no single nation, or group of nations, has sufficient power to dominate the others. The first full formulation on the idea was by Grotius (Dutch jurist and author of the first definitive text on international law) in the 17th century. The Balance of Power concept prompted such international alliances as those against Louis XIV and Napoleon. (Quoted from The New University Encyclopedia, 1967).

Kissinger’s use of this concept prescribes that no one nation (such as the United States) and no one combination of nations (such as NATO) should be able to dominate the world. Hence his “Triad Theory” which is a variation of the Balance of Power idea in that U.S.A., U.S.S.R. and Red China are to be made equal and “balanced” in power against each other, with Japan and Western Europe forming fourth and fifth “balanced power groups.”

There is a slogan used to promote this Balance of Power ploy. It was coined by Edward Filene, pro-Communist, capitalist, Boston department store owner and New Dealer, who wrote in 1932: “The road to peace is the balance of power.” Kissinger resurrected Filene’s theory and changed the slogan to: “The Road to World Community is the Balance of Power.”

The Kissinger stratagem is cleverly and accurately described in the book Kissinger on the Couch, by Phyllis Schlafly and Chester Ward, who wrote (page 123):

“The Kissinger theory of a new world order...known to his admirers as ‘Henry’s Triad’...postulates: (1) a pentagonal ‘equilibrium of power’ involving the military and industrial power of the Soviet Union and the United States, the military and industrial potential of the People’s Republic of China, and the industrial power of Japan and Western Europe; (2) recognition by the two Communist giants and the United States that their differences are ‘nonessential’ and are overshadowed by common vital national interests, and by what he asserts is ‘the basic fact’ that ‘none of us can survive a nuclear war’; and (3) recognition that these common interests can be ‘linked’ together in a process for which all make concessions, but for which all gain and none loses.”

This is Henry’s Balance of Power Triad; but the authors of the above description left out one vital ingredient, probably because it was not germane to the theme of their particular presentation. It is this: While these five world power groups are being welded into a World Order, the United States itself is being “restructured” internally, and is being changed from a Representative Republic with a Free Enterprise economic system, into a Corporate Socialist (Fascist) State, with an economic system based on monopoly control of all means of production by a chosen few (this is what the concept of Regionalism (the New Federalism) is all about.

You’ll notice that in the delineation of the five power bases that are to form the parts of the New World Order, the Middle East is not included as one of the five. For reasons that have to do mostly with religions and with oil, this part of the world had to be treated differently. Here, a temporary and separate Balance of Power application had to be utilized. So, the Soviet Union and the United States cooperating, a Balance of power between the Israelis and the Arabs is being maintained, with Henry Kissinger managing the weights and American technicians manning the fulcrum in this unique balancing of power act. Later on, when the oil problem has been liquidated and the world’s great religions have been ecumenized or sufficiently humanized, then this part of the world will probably fall under the exclusive suzerainty of one of the original “Triad,” probably the U.S.S.R.

To summarize: Henry Kissinger’s Mideast maneuverings had three objectives, all of which will have been realized if Congress does what is expected of it: (1) a temporary period of peace has been assured; (2) more time to work out the overall plan has been secured; and (3) direct involvement of American citizens in the Mideast conflict has been arranged. Meanwhile:—

ECONOMIC SUBVERSION

While Kissinger was delayed in the Mideast, the United Nations General Assembly convened at its headquarters in New York City; its chief purpose: to initiate the new World Economic Order which it had completed—on paper—but which it had not been able to put into actual operation.

Here, too, Kissinger has been selected as the key spokesman and promoter. Due to circumstances beyond even his ability to control, Kissinger was in Jerusalem when he was supposed to be in New York City telling the United Nations delegates how to launch this New World Economic Order. So, he did the next best thing: He sent the text of his speech to Daniel P. Moynihan, the chief U.S. delegate to the U.N., and Moynihan became the voice of Henry Kissinger as he read for an hour and forty-five minutes.

Lest we forget: last year the U.N. General Assembly adopted a "Declaration on the Establishment of a New International Economic order based on equity, sovereign equality, interdependence, common interest and cooperation among all States, irrespective of their economic and social systems which shall correct inequalities and redress existing injustices, make it possible to eliminate the widening gap between the developed and the developing countries and ensure steadily accelerating economic and social development in peace and justice for present and future generations" (a direct quote of the first paragraph of this outline of the New International Economic Order.)

The Declaration says: "The United Nations as a universal organization should be capable of dealing with problems of international economic cooperation in a comprehensive manner and ensuring equally the interests of all countries. It must have an even greater role in the establishment of a new international economic order... All the States members of the United Nations are therefore called upon to exert maximum efforts with a view to securing the implementation of this Declaration, which is one of the principal guarantees for the creation of better conditions for all peoples to reach a life worthy of human dignity...."

So that is what the current debate in the UN General Assembly is all about: they're trying to find a way to implement their New World Order. And, of course, it seemed appropriate and important that Henry Kissinger lead the way.

On our part, it seems fitting and proper to point out that any "New International Economic Order" that is established will not be the work of the United Nations. The New International Economic Order will be set up and managed by the Multinational Interests, who will not delegate the job to the UN, but to their own organizations: OECD, The Bilderbergers, The Club of Rome, The Trilateral Commission, CFR, etc. However, the United Nations is extremely important to the Elitists for this reason:

The UN has been developed into a debating society where the so-called "Third World" nations and mini-nations can vent their spleen, demand the righting of wrongs, and make the developing nations feel that there really is equality and justice in relations between member nations. Or, to put it in a less diplomatic way: The UN is a place where the people who really rule the world can mollify, placate and "butter up" the people who think they rule the world.

Therefore, you see, it is quite important that such a one as Henry Kissinger act as leader when the UN starts inaugurating New World Orders.

AND MONETARY SUBVERSION

Kissinger's speech, read by Moynihan, contained suggestions that were really meant for the ears of the delegates to the meeting of the International Monetary Fund (IMF), which was going on at the same time but in a different part of the former Fun City. Even Kissinger can't be in three places at the same time (physically, anyway); so Treasury Secretary Simon did the pinch-hitting before the IMF-World Bank confab. But he talked mostly about oil while Moynihan subbing for Kissinger called for the IMF to set up a new financing agency to lend developing nations another $2.5-billion or more a year; and a new investment trust to attract private investment in developing countries; and a new international energy institute; and an international industrial research institute to help developing countries with industrialization. And more of the same — and the delegates from the mini-states must have begun to feel that Kissinger, Uncle Sam and Santa Claus were really one and the same person.

Business Week of Sept. 8 quotes a Kissinger aide who may have the answer to all of his boss's power balancing. He said: "As long as we are talking about reasonable things they want, there is less chance they will take unreasonable action."

Apply this to Ford and Rockefeller as well as to Kissinger and the Congress, and you'll get an inkling of how taxpayers and constituents are being duped.

DON BELL REPORTS is published weekly, accents the Christian American point of view, and two copies are mailed first class postage to all subscribers. $24 per year. Extra copies: 10¢ each. Address all orders: DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223 Palm Beach, Florida 33480

HAS BIG GOVERNMENT BECOME OUR BIGGEST ENEMY?

THE ARROGANCE OF POWER

"People don't know what to make of their Government," says U.S. News & World Report in its edition of Sept. 15. "They're confused, impatient at its failure to take on today's problems—let alone solve them." In calm, yet telling, understatement the weekly then cites a few specific examples:

"Economists insist the recession is over. But what ordinary citizens see is unemployment still running at 8.4 per cent, their dollars buying less. Energy crisis? It's widely viewed as nothing more than a consumer rip-off. Many authorities—white and black—now conclude that busing to integrate schools doesn't work. Still, the courts keep ordering more and more busing. Officials vow to cut red tape—while grinding out new rules daily. Voters want the White House and Congress to stop talking, start acting.

"As for what they'll get in the weeks ahead:

"On energy, President Ford will be forced to compromise with Congress. That means no sudden lifting of controls. But prices will creep up anyway.

"Spending battles will flare again. If recovery continues to drag Democrats will push for more federal works projects, housing aid, public jobs.

"Lawmakers will reluctantly approve sending Americans to monitor the Mideast truce. There'll be a scrap over 3 billion dollars in aid for Israel, Egypt.

"Tax cuts will be extended for 1976—but no big tax reform very soon.

"Most other major proposals will go on the shelf until next year—when elections will give the politicians incentive to get moving.

"New discoveries of Government foul-ups are making taxpayers ask whether anyone ever takes the blame when things go sour in Washington. Enough arms and equipment to equip 10 combat battalions have vanished from U.S. military bases around the world in three years. The Social Security Administration overpaid at least 400 million dollars in 18 months. Agriculture Department experts lost 1.6 billion by miscalculating crop yields in 1973. Defense-cost overruns are so common that nobody seems shocked any more.

"Fact is, bureaucrats seldom have to answer for their mistakes. The Government fires between 13,000 and 26,000 employes a year, but most of them are new workers who didn't finish their probationary period. Entrenched bunglers, if pressed, can resort to an almost endless maze of hearings, appeals. Usual solution: transfer to a do-nothing job at same pay. An investigator explains: "You can never put your finger on anyone when something goes wrong. In the bureaucracy, one person is never responsible."

"Don't count on any change. Officialdom has survived reforms before." (End of extended quotation; emphasis as in original).

Of all the evils mentioned in the preceding article, busing of children to achieve pre-determined percentages of ethnic groups in pre-designated schools, has been most in the public eye, thanks to extensive TV and newspaper coverage of the Louisville and Boston atrocities. On Sept. 5, Congressman Gene Snyder (R-Kentucky) made the statement that "the totalitarian hand of the Federal judiciary has fallen upon my people. In the name of the Constitution the court is taking our children from us. In the name of the Constitution they are polarizing the races in their attitudes toward each other."

Then he mentioned a very revealing article by Michael Novak which appeared in the July 25, 1975 Wall Street Journal. Following are important excerpts from that article:

"Busing is, in important ways, the Vietnam of the 1970s. It is a quagmire; a lost cause; taxation without representation; a policy of massive social engineering with little clear prospect of benefit; a mistake; a tragedy; a breeder of endless demonstrations, riots and dissent.

"At last count, only 4% of whites and 9% of blacks favored busing. Only the 'best and the brightest,' it seems, as in Boston, favor it. They designed it, they impose it, and they will never suffer their children to experience it....

"In my view, busing... is an immoral policy. It goes against the basic social principles of American life, against family, neighborhood, class, ethnic, and even educational realities which are so basic they are seldom even voiced....

"Human beings are not parts of a machine, to be anonymously fitted into slots. They approach each other from complicated past histories and diverse past experiences... Busing is to black equality what Prohibition was to the moral crisis of the Depression. It is a flaming moral issue of dubious social judgment. Now, as then, the fundamental problem is economic. Blacks do not need buses; they need jobs."

Now, if Mr. Novak is correct when he states that only 4% of whites and 9% of blacks in the United States are in favor of busing, and if the federal government still insists on the mass busing of children "as a social experiment," than has not that federal government become an enemy of the people? And is not a massive house-cleaning called for? Isn't that what our honored Declaration of independence was all about?

There is yet another item of controversy that the U.S. News & World Report did not mention: the business of certain officials in our federal government trying to abolish the Second Amendment of the Bill of Rights, and deprive all law-abiding citizens of the right to keep and bear arms.

In this connection, Representative Sam Steiger (R-Arizona), on Sept. 4 had printed in the Congressional Record an article by Bill Beers, a columnist for the Prescott, Arizona Courier which brings out some facts which may not be generally known about guns and gun control. We reprint that article as it appeared in the Sept. 4 Congressional Record, pages E 4495-96:

THE "EXPERTS" TALK ABOUT GUN CONTROL

For some time now a great debate has been going on between the pro and anti-gun folk throughout the nation. Lots of people have been getting into the act who have no real knowledge of guns or their use, either as sporting weapons or by criminals. All kinds of statistics have been bandied about concerning the use of weapons for commission of various crimes. Lots of opinions have been expressed by public officials and others regarding the effect of banning handguns from use by anyone but law enforcement officers. Most of this opinion has no basis in fact, nor until now has anyone ever taken the trouble to check with criminals as to their thoughts on the matter... at least until very recently.

Finally, a State Senator in California, Bill Richardson, did a little checking around and whipped up an article which was published in the July issue of True Magazine. To prepare the piece, Senator Richardson solicited opinions of some of the toughest cons in Folsom Prison. Results from his questionnaires may well leave anti-gunners in a state of shock... unless they simply have their minds made up and don't wish to be confused with facts.

First, the Senator distributed his questionnaires among 13 prisoners whose records included every conceivable crime of violence from five counts of bank robbery to two counts of first degree murder. Primary question was 'How gun control laws would effect the criminal.' Of the 13 cons, nine felt that handgun registration laws would not stop them from using a gun while committing a felony; ten felt that suspected gun ownership in a residence would stop them from burglarizing that particular house; and nine knew of specific cases where robberies were not performed because the subject was known to be armed!

...ten of the thirteen experienced law breakers stated that they would definitely take into consideration the presence of weapons in a house or business before becoming committed to action. Seven firmly stated that businesses do develop reputations among outlaws for using handguns in self-defense, and six of these seven were certain that such action and reputation does deter burglaries of that particular business!

When the big question came up: "If guns were totally banned, would you still be able to get one?", ten of the cons answered a firm and unqualified "Yes!" Two merely stated that they had no opinion and the remaining one didn't answer the question.

When the results of all thirteen questionnaires had been tabulated, Senator Richardson took the extra precaution of running a personal check to assure that the opinions expressed were representative of prison inmates. He trotted out to Folsom and interviewed cons singly and in groups out in the prison yard. Every interview agreed with the responses contained in the questionnaires!

One inmate in particular made the flat statement that "Only a fool would try to burglarize a house where the owner was home and known to have a gun!" When Senator Richardson remarked that the anti-gun people were telling him the presence of a gun does not make any difference to a criminal, another inmate quipped, "Anyone who'd tell you that has never been shot at!"

Last man to be interviewed by Richardson was a professional armed robber. In his interview he made it abundantly clear that whenever he "cased" a place prior to a robbery, the very first thing that he looked for was a gun. If he saw one, or anything indicated the presence of one, the job was off!

This old con, who had spent many years behind bars and many more perpetrating robberies, summed up the situation with this answer: "I don't appreciate anyone shooting at me! If you take a gun away from a guy, naturally it makes it better for the armed robber because the guy that has the gun has got the power."

And that's the way it is, at least in the "professional opinion" of those who should know... the hardened and professional criminals at Folsom Prison.

(End of article by Bill Beers)

It would appear from the preceding that gun-toting burglars believe themselves to be at a distinct disadvantage in plying their profession when residents, home owners and businessmen are permitted to have handguns at their disposal for the protection of their lives, their families and their property.

We are not suggesting that the federal government is trying deliberately to make things easier for the professional burglar, and more difficult and dangerous for the property owner, but the following article certainly makes it seem that way. The following is from the New Orleans Times Picayune of Sept. 3, 1975, and is written by that newspaper's Washington observer, Jack Landau. We reprint the article in full:

CONGRESS TACKLES BILL ON PROWLERS

Washington—As Congress goes into session this month, it will debate a bill which would make it a federal crime for a citizen to shoot a night-time prowler on the spot. Under the proposed revision of the Federal Criminal Code, a citizen would be justified in using deadly force against an intruder only if the citizen was reasonably certain that he or his family were in danger.

The bill, which is supported by the Ford Administration and a coalition of Republican and Democratic senators, would negate the widely held belief that a person can shoot a night-time prowler with no questions asked.

There is considerable debate arising over this provision of the proposed Criminal Justice Reform Act of 1975. The American Bar Association (ABA) at its annual meeting last month voted to oppose the provision.

The home defense section states that a citizen in his home can be convicted of murdering an intruder unless the citizen had reached the conclusion that "deadly force" was "reasonably required to protect" him or his family "from risk of death or serious bodily injury."

The bill also states that the resident could be convicted if he had the opportunity of "retreating (to another part of his house) with complete safety to himself and others" before shooting a prowler.

It also would be a crime under this section for a resident to use "deadly force" to stop a night-time prowler from taking away "personal property" such as jewelry or a TV set, or from damaging his home.

There is some debate over whether the proposed federal law on defense of a person's family and property from an intruder merely re-states existing law or amends it in favor of the prowler. A Senate subcommittee report on the bill states that the ban on shooting an intruder unless the resident decides it is reasonably necessary to protect life (but not property) is "an accurate statement of existing law" as interpreted by the Supreme Court and the states.

But a well-known Washington attorney, Northcutt Ely, says that the provision goes beyond most state laws.

"How do you know whether some person prowling around in your house at night is going to harm your family?" he asks. "Do you interview him? Do you first ask him whether he is going to rob you or kidnap you before you shoot him?"

Another lawyer said it was his understanding that the law in most states permitted the use of "deadly force" against a person who "breaks and enters the home at any time."

Several states such as New York have changed their laws to require "safe retreat" rather than shooting but several lawyers said the law is not working. What reportedly happens is that the home dweller who shoots the intruder testifies that he thought the intruder went for a gun or made a menacing movement—and most juries tend to believe him.

However, some lawmakers are concerned that juveniles—without any intention to do serious harm, have been shot on the spot by frightened citizens overreacting to night-time vandalism.

(End of article by Jack C. Landau in New Orleans Times Picayune, 9/3/75)

This legal bickering about when and under what circumstances the use of deadly force against an intruder is permissible is, or should be, irrelevant. English common law, which became basic American law in most States of the Union, holds that no one, be he king or sheriff, president or prowler, may intrude upon another person's property against that person's wishes, unless he has first obtained a court warrant; and the owner or resident may use any force he deems necessary, deadly force or otherwise, in order to protect his life, his family and his property.

UNIONIZED MILITARY NEXT?

While considering the growth of totalitarian power of Big Government, there is yet one more dangerous development that ought to be quashed before it becomes too big to handle:

Senator John Tower (R-Texas) is a ranking member of the Senate Committee on Armed Services and he is greatly concerned about attempts of labor unions to gain control of United States Armed Forces. Recently he gave the following statement to Americans Against Union Control of Government, a division of the Public Services Research Council, Suite 306, 8206 Leesburg Pike, Vienna, Virginia 22180. Senator Tower said:

"A lot of dangerous notions are circulating around Washington these days. Few have more serious implications for the security of this country than a plan that is quietly being discussed by the satraps of the 300,000 member American Federation of Government Employees (AFGE), one of the most militant unions in the AFL-CIO.

"AFGE is carefully laying plans to organize the Army, the Navy, the Air Force and the Marine Corps. The long-term implications of the union plan are horrifying.

"Imagine an army in which enlisted soldiers refuse to carry out orders from superior officers until they have been cleared by a shop steward or agreed to at a union meeting.

"Imagine an army unprepared to perform its mission because the union blocked unpleasant working conditions such as night marches, weekend duty and rugged physical fitness training.

"Imagine an army in which soldiers could go on strike in the middle of a war.

"Recent events in New York City have provided us all with graphic illustrations of the havoc that can be wrought by public employee unions unmindful of the public interest.

"Americans can get along without having their garbage picked up, and can survive slowdowns by policemen, firemen and hospital workers. But, in this time of international tension, could America entrust its safety to armed forces directed more by union bosses than by generals? I hope we never have to find out.

"A military organization must be disciplined in order to survive. Nothing can be permitted to undermine the chain of command. I believe unionization of the armed forces would undermine the chain of command, and thus put our country in jeopardy. I intend to do what is necessary to thwart the union scheme."

SUMMATION

There is a remarkable paragraph in Antony C. Sutton's latest book, Wall Street and FDR (Arlington House, $7.95 and worth it for its documentation alone). The author shows that the creation of a corporate socialist (fascist) state was the aim of the Robber Barons and the New Dealers from the very beginning, and FDR was their "front man." Sutton states:

"...the essence of socialism is monopoly control by the state using hired planners and academic sponges. On the other hand, Rockefeller, Morgan, and their corporate friends aimed to acquire and control their monopoly and to maximize its profits through influence in the state political apparatus; this, while it still needs hired planners and academic sponges, is a discreet and far more subtle process than outright state ownership under socialism. Success for the Rockefeller gambit has depended particularly upon focusing public attention upon largely irrelevant and superficial historical creations, such as the myth of a struggle between capitalists and communists, and careful cultivation of political forces by big business. We call this phenomenon of corporate legal monopoly—market control acquired by using political influence—by the name of corporate socialism."

The scheme: "Drive out your competitors, reduce competition, eliminate laissez-faire, and above all get state protection for your industry through compliant politicians and government regulation. This last avenue yields a legal monopoly, and a legal monopoly always leads to wealth."

Government regulation destroys the middle class, eliminates the small and independent businessman and farmer, and aids the monopolist. To secure his monopoly and wealth, in addition to the hired planners and the academic sponges, police control, gun control and control of the military establishment is necessary. Remember that the supposed struggle between management and labor is even older than the created struggle between capitalism and communism. Under corporate socialism (fascism) the corporation and the labor syndicate are partners in the totalitarian control of the people. And regulation is the name of the gambit.

DON BELL REPORTS Weekly. $24 per year.
Extra copies: 10¢ each. Address orders to:
DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

HOW CAPITALISTS AND COMMUNISTS COOPERATE TO DESTROY FREEDOM AND FREE ENTERPRISE

DOWNWARD FROM THE TOP & UPWARD FROM THE BOTTOM

Why do capitalist millionaires give money to promote communist, fascist and other types of socialist causes? Why do they even plan the programs and train the leaders who are to carry out those programs? Why should International Bankers and Industrial Cartelists finance the political activities of such men as Lenin, Trotsky, Stalin, Mussolini, Hitler, Mao Tse-tung, Ho Chi Minh and others who seem to be arch enemies of the very men who are financing their programs?

These are leading questions that have been asked time after time, and many different answers have been given, most of them having some basis in fact. But no answer, however factual and complete it may be, is going to be accepted or believed by those who have been "sold" on the idea that it is their patriotic duty to defend "the people's capitalism" (as the late Henry Luce was wont to call it), and that "participatory democracy" should be encouraged and used as a weapon against socialism (when it is really the same thing with a different alias).

Nevertheless, because these same monopoly capitalists who keep communism alive are presently using communism and communists to promote a "Second American Revolution," it seems important to point out, once again, just why these billionaires are trying to destroy the very system which—they would have us believe—made them billionaires in the first place.

A part of the answer we are seeking can be supplied by a long-range view of history: "From the beginning of history," wrote Alan Stang," aspiring dictators have used trickery to take over, because they know that people don't want to live under a dictatorship. That trickery almost always consists of the would-be dictator sending mobs into the streets to make demands and foment turmoil, in the confusion of which the dictator tries to take control. This is how the demagogues of ancient Greece came to power. In ancient Rome, Catiline, a nobleman, recruited a mob for this purpose. Socialist dictators Hitler and Mussolini both did the same thing. And the Communists have refined the technique into a science, in which they refer to 'pressure from above,' and 'pressure from below.' The former is exerted by revolutionaries hidden at the top, in government, industry, banks, and so on; the latter by revolutionaries in the streets. From the beginning of history, wealthy totalitarians have conspired with ordinary thugs to loot and control the working people in the middle. And this is what is happening here...." (Quoted from an article entitled "Georgia Power: Prototype Target For The New Bolsheviks," by Alan Stang, which appeared in the May 1975 issue of American Opinion magazine. The article is obtainable from any American Opinion bookstore for 30¢).

There is one other technique which should be mentioned in this connection. It is an adaptation of Hegel's dialectic theory.

Hegel held that one concept, or condition, situation, ethic, etc. (thesis) inevitably comes up against its opposite (antithesis), and the two interact to form a new concept, or condition, situation, ethic, etc. (synthesis). This synthesis then becomes a new thesis and the "dialectical historical process" starts all over again.

This Hegelian dialectic appealed so strongly to the Socialists that it was developed into the Marxian dialectic materialism that has become a kind of religion to all Socialists of all shades and stripes. As used by Corporate Socialists and Planners in the United States, the formula goes like this:

The Thesis is law and order.

The Antithesis is anarchy.

The Synthesis is a new system of control which combines capitalism with socialism and which is called Corporate Socialism (or Fascism if the Italian name is used).

Note that last statement: Corporate Socialism combines capitalism with socialism. Does this begin to give an inkling of the idea of why some capitalists finance, promote, aid and abet the growth of Communism and all other forms of Socialism?

Whenever an important change is desired by the people who really rule the world, and this adaptation of the Hegelian formula is to be utilized, whether this change be a world-wide alteration or merely a local or domestic "improvement," the technique is the same, quite simple and, at least up to now, quite successful:

1. The Plan is drawn up in advance (a pre-determined synthesis);
2. The people are told that the existing condition or situation (thesis) is impractical, intolerable, "horse-and-buggy program in an atomic age," etc.;
3. A crisis or chaotic condition (antithesis) is created to demonstrate that a change is demanded (this prepared crisis may be a world war or a street riot, an energy crisis or an increase in the crime rate—anything that will influence the people into demanding that "something be done about it);
4. The Plan (prepared synthesis) is then presented to the people as the best solution possible;
5. The people demand that The Plan be put into operation; and this further loss of liberty and freedom of choice is hailed as another great victory for Democracy!

But, our question had to do with why some capitalists cooperate with the communists in the destruction of freedom and free enterprise. Therefore, to further develop our answer, let's get down to specifics and to persons in particular; especially to the Rockefellers and their associates in the financial, industrial, governmental, and social spheres of power and influence.

"Old John D. Rockefeller and his 19th century fellow-capitalists," writes Antony C. Sutton in his invaluable book Wall Street and FDR, "were convinced of one absolute truth: that no great monetary wealth could be accumulated under the impartial rules of a competitive laissez-faire society. The only sure road to the acquisition of massive wealth was monopoly... a legal monopoly always leads to wealth.

"This... is also, under different labels, the socialist plan. The difference between a corporate state monopoly and a socialist state monopoly is essentially only the identity of the group controlling the power structure."

Understanding, then, that Rockefeller, Sr., J.P. Morgan and the 19th century band of robber barons were really corporate socialists disguised as free enterprise capitalists, it becomes easier to understand how they had an affinity toward all forms of socialism; so much so that "With Guaranty Trust Company, the American International Corporation constituted the central points for financing German and Bolshevik espionage in the United States and North America during World War I." Guaranty Trust was a Morgan-controlled international banking establishment, while American International Corporation was founded in 1915 by Morgan, Rockefeller and Stillman interests.

120 Broadway, New York City, became a most important location in the development of this story. Franklin D. Roosevelt had his offices there in the 1920s, before he became Governor of New York and later President of the United States. As vice president of the Fidelity and Deposit Company at that time, he can certainly be identified as an international banker as well as a politician. At this same address, the Equitable Office Building at 120 Broadway where FDR had his offices, the No. 2 District of the Federal Reserve System was also located, as were the offices of four directors of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, and the previously mentioned American International Corporation, whose directors included Percy Rockefeller, then director of the National City Bank; Pierre S. Du Pont of the Bankers Trust Company (among other things); Albert Wiggin, director of the Rockefeller Chase Bank; Matthew C. Brush, president of the Empire Trust Company; Beekman Winthrop of Warburg's International Banking Corporation; Frank Altschul of the Chase National Bank; Arthur Lehman of Lehman Brothers and the Manufacturers Trust Company, John J. Ras-kob of the Bankers Trust Company; Gerard Swope of General Electric; Owen Young of General Electric; and last but not least, Bernard Baruch, key Wall Street operator, adviser to Presidents, and the man who boasted that during World War I he held more power over America and Americans than any other man (up to that time).

All of these men had offices at 120 Broadway during World War I or during the rise of the Bolshevik dictatorship, or both. This fact becomes very important because during the Bolshevik takeover of Russia, the "revolution-related financiers were concentrated at a single address in New York City, the same Equitable Office Building" at 120 Broadway," and there was found "an identifiable pattern of pro-Bolshevik activity by influential members of Wall Street concentrated in the Federal Reserve Bank of New York and the American International Corporation, both at 120 Broadway."

Later, prior to World War II, many of these same financiers (or their successors) were supporters of Mussolini and fascism. As a matter of serious conjecture, Mussolini's fascist program was so very similar to Bernard Baruch's War Industries Board of World War I that the former might have been a re-write of the latter; and the Swope-Baruch-Johnson-Roosevelt National Recovery Administration was so very similar to the fascist program that it, too, might have been a re-editing of Mussolini's platform. In support of this conjecture, there is the statement by Herbert Hoover in his Memoirs, which we quote:

"Among the early Roosevelt fascist measures was the National Industry Recovery Act (NRA) of June 16, 1933.... During the campaign of 1932, Henry I. Harriman... urged that I agree to support these proposals, informing me that Mr. Roosevelt had agreed to do so. I tried to show him that this stuff was pure fascism; that it was merely a remaking of Mussolini's 'corporate state' and refused to agree to any of it. He informed me that in view of my attitude, the business world would support Roosevelt with money and influence. That for the most part, proved true."

FDR was elected and Hoover defeated, and the NRA was declared unconstitutional by an as yet "unrestructured" Supreme Court. But the following statement by Frances Perkins, Secretary of Labor under FDR, shows how eager Bernard Baruch and his "fellow capitalists" had become in trying to make this Nation a corporate socialist state under the New Deal Administration:

"At the first meeting of the Cabinet after the President took office in 1933, the financier and adviser to Roosevelt, Bernard Baruch, and Baruch's friend Hugh Johnson, who was to become the head of the National Recovery Administration, came in with a copy of a book by Gentile, the Italian Fascist theoretician, for each member of the Cabinet, and we all read it with great care."

(Acknowledgement: In the part of this letter dealing with Rockefeller and associates and their activities as corporate socialists, we are indebted to Antony C. Sutton for much of the documentation, and all unidentified quotes are direct quotations from his book Wall Street and FDR (Arlington House, New Rochelle, New York. $7.95). In this book Mr. Sutton also reveals details of the plot for a military coup which was intended to convert this Nation into a Fascist Dictatorship with FDR as Dictator. General Smedley Butler exposed the plot and a Congressional Committee aborted it. Little publicity was given the attempted coup at the time).

The United States was to have become a Corporate Socialist (Fascist) State during the New Deal Administration. But the heart and sinew of the program were hidden in the text of the National Industry Recovery Act, and when NRA (as well as the original Agricultural Adjustment Act) was declared unconstitutional, the plan had to be discarded—at that time. The New Deal became just a Socialist Deal, was failing and a 'new game plan' was introduced, with the Pearl Harbor infamy arranged in order to make the people eager to enter a Second European War.

THE SECOND AMERICAN REVOLUTION

Having failed in the 1930s, the Corporate Socialists seem to have decided that the Bicentennial Anniversary of our Republic would be an ideal time to try again. And the Communists and other revolutionary elements are being organized, trained and supported financially by these alleged capitalists who seek to obtain monopoly control of the United States, and of the whole world.

About the Rockefellers in this Second American Revolution: Each of the Four Brothers is in his assigned position. While all are interchangeable and utilitarian, they also are specialists. David has assumed full charge of matters monetary, economic, and multinational or global. Nelson Aldrich is in charge of all political affairs, himself serving as Domestic Czar and his helper Henry Kissinger acting as Commissar of Foreign Affairs. Brother Laurance isn't talked about much, but he is the environmental and ecological chieftain. As chairman of a Citizen's Committee charged with advising the President on environmental matters "from the public's point of view." As such he is able to act as a sort of "propagandist for all industry" (shades of Hugh Johnson and the NRA).

That leaves John D. Rockefeller III, eldest and some say wisest of the lot. John III is the thinker; he has a dream and then the other brothers go into action to make the dream come true. Example: Back in 1948 John III took a two-month trip to Africa. He returned filled with enthusiasm about the commercial and industrial potentialities of that continent. The Brothers went into their acts, and history will bear witness to the amazing political, commercial, industrial and ecological changes that have taken place in Africa since November, 1948.

John III is also the "philanthropist" of the family. He assumes charge over the many Rockefeller Foundations, and he is the final arbiter on who gets grants and endowments, and for what purpose.

Back in 1972 John III had another idea, and he wrote it all down, had it published in book form, giving it the title, The Second American Revolution. In this book, he says that we need a Fourth Branch of Government made up of educators, the foundation world, industrial and financial experts, etc. It all adds up to a Corporate Socialist (Fascist) State similar to that programmed in NRA, with the added features of Management-By-Objective (PPBS), controlled through the Ten Federal Region and Sub-State Regional Framework.

Under the terms of the Hegelian formula that we outlined earlier in this letter, this Fascist Dictatorship would be the pre-planned synthesis. And the developed antithesis would be the turmoil and chaos that can be created through Communist, anarchist, and nihilist groups. John III speaks particularly in his book of a Youth Project which he is promoting and financing. This Youth Project is a satellite of the Center for Community Change in Washington, D.C. It also has working arrangements with Saul Alinsky's infamous Industrial Areas Foundation Training Institute, the Institute for Southern Studies and the Communist Party's National Defense Organization Against Racist and Political Repression. All of these are financed by what John III refers to as the "Foundation World," which includes the Rockefeller Brothers Fund, J. Irwin Miller's two tax exempt organizations, the Irwin-Sweeney-Miller Fund and the Cummins Engine Foundation; the Ford Foundation; Carnegie Corporation; the Lilly Endowment; the Field Foundation; the J.M. Kaplin Fund and the Stern Fund.

These are financing the "Second American Revolution" in order to bring about the Corporate Socialist Dictatorship which the corporate socialists failed to achieve under the New Deal. And, for the accomplishment of this aim, they are financing communist and other radical groups.

An example of their activity: A coalition of over 300 organizations have been formed into a National Defense Organization Against Racist and Political Repression. Its top leadership is said to consist of members of the Communist Party (Angela Davis, Burt Corona, Carl Braden, etc.) The organizational meeting was held last May 11-13 at Chicago's Pick-Congress Hotel. Among the more than 300 organizations represented at the meeting were:

Communist Party, Mau Mau Defense Committee, Gay Prisoners Coalition, National Lawyers Guild, United Methodist Church, National Board Y.W.C.A., Black Panther Party, Teachers Union, National Council of Jewish Women, United Farm Workers, The (Rockefeller founded) Youth Project, Students for a Democratic Society, Southern Christian Leadership Conference, National Association for the Advancement of Colored people, etc.

SUMMARY: As in ages past, the would-be dictators are "sending mobs into the streets to make demands and foment turmoil, in the confusion of which the dictator tries to take control." Whenever this happens, there is usually a Planner who writes a book or publishes a program. And sometimes there is someone who is able to interpret the book or program and warn the people in time. As early as 1841 Clinton Roosevelt, a 19th century cousin of FDR, wrote "The Science of Government Founded on Natural Law." It advocated Corporate Socialism, but was not taken seriously. Later, in 1914, Colonel House wrote his "Philip Dru-Administrator" hoping he had found his man in Woodrow Wilson. A few years later Bernard Baruch developed his War Industries Board, but his dictatorship ended with World War I. Then with the coming of the New Deal, Gerard Swope of General Electric rewrote Baruch's Plan and it was enacted as N.I.R.A., but it was defeated by Supreme Court action. Now, on the eve of our Bicentennial year, a Rockefeller has written a book advocating the Corporate Socialist State. Have we the courage and the strength to defeat it once again, or is the middle class doomed?

DON BELL REPORTS Weekly. $24 per year.
Extra copies: 10¢ each. Address all orders:
DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

THE WEIRD, WEIRD AUTUMN OF 1975

FEMININE MYSTIQUE

Four names dominated the front page of our local newspaper on the morning of Wednesday, September 24, 1975. Each printed in enormous, bold-face type, the names in the order of their appearance from the top downward, were Patty, Sara Jane, Squeaky, and Eloise. Of the four, the destructive antics of Eloise were at least comprehensible. Not so the other three. Eloise was a hurricane, literally; and if one discounts the potential interference from cloud seeders and other alleged weather-changers, Eloise would be classified as an Act of God (if that phrase is still permitted in this humanistic age), no political connotations could be ascribed to the devastation caused by Eloise, and certainly no conspiracy could be suspected. However, with the other three:—

Patty, nee Patricia, renamed Tania Hearst was caught by the FBI while living with fellow members of the Symbionese Liberation Army, smiled and gave the closed fist salute to onlookers while being transported to jail. She signed in on the jailhouse booking form as an "Urban Guerrilla," and she bore herself defiantly and even proudly as a captured commando revolutionary.

That is how the media reported the story; with special accent on the dramatic reunion "with the rich and powerful family she had denounced as capitalist pigs." The first reports of the news media highlighted the general relief felt by all because a wanted criminal had at last been caught and placed behind bars. Newsweek reflected that attitude in its announcement that "A beaming FBI official said that the arrest of Patty and three fellow fugitives had wiped out the last vestiges of a self-styled Symbionese Liberation Army, which kidnapped and converted the pretty newspaper heiress nineteen months ago."

But that was before she had been embraced by her "capitalist pig" parents and advised by the family lawyer. Then came the 180 degree turnabout on the part of Patty and part of the press. Said the dispatches:

"Patricia Hearst swore yesterday that she was driven to insanity by SLA kidnapers who tortured her mentally and physically. She...did not willingly join the SLA and had returned to the San Francisco area to discover whether her parents still loved her. She said the radical band had locked her in a closet for several weeks, then forced her to help rob a bank on the threat of instant execution if she disobeyed...She had lived in a fog, in a perpetual state of terror...."

Then, almost immediately, as though they had never heard of that charge about people being "tried by the press" and thereby being denied the possibility of a fair trial by the court, media representatives began to take polls and otherwise encourage pre-judgment. Nationally, NBC was first to announce the results of a poll they had just completed: approximately three out of every four people questioned did not believe Patricia Hearst's story of coercion and torture.

It was as though this had been a gigantic experiment: the people were being tested to determine the extent of their gullibility and the quality of their discernment. If the American people could be made to believe improbable things, then they also could be trained to believe impossible things. Perhaps they could even be deceived into the acceptance of an unpopular man as their Administrator if anything should happen to their President.

A weird supposition concerning a weird development in the Patty Hearst case? Well, it is no weirder than the case of the 26-year-old member of the Manson family who has been dubbed "Squeaky."

This commando who didn't know the gun wasn't loaded, this woman in red who had been trained in ballistics and other things by the head of her "family," by Charles Manson himself, poses plenty of unanswered questions. In the first place, this woman whose real name is said to be Lynette Fromme "had an extensive criminal record, was intimate with persons knowledgeable about murder." And she carried a handgun which the ballistics experts said "couldn't go off. They also said the .45 caliber, automatic with no bullet in its chamber, was nine inches long and weighed nearly two and a half pounds. Fromme is a small woman, frail, probably not capable of aiming such a pistol with one hand and then pulling the trigger (which she didn't do). If she meant to carry out an assassination, a smaller and lighter weapon—one that she could aim and fire, and conceal easily until time to use it—would have served her purpose better.

However, the circumstances surrounding the event lead one to believe that she had no intention of shooting anyone, and that she had every intention of getting caught in the act of supposedly trying to assassinate the President. For example, as the bodyguards wrestled her to the ground, she was heard to say, "Easy, boys. Easy. I'm very still. It didn't go off." No panic, no struggle, and nobody got hurt.

Again surprisingly, eyewitnesses said that Gerald Ford was very calm. Secret service men surrounded him, rushed him up the steps and into the Capitol Building at Sacramento to get him away from any possible danger. But his face was said to have shown no fear, no anger, no effort to keep his emotions under control. He went in and kept a scheduled appointment with Governor Brown and according to at least one report "didn't tell the Governor about the incident until late in the meeting." Later, Ford spoke to the California Legislature, then he held a press conference, and he "still disclosed no nervousness, no delayed reactions."

The Sacramento City Police, the Sheriff's Department, the State Police, the FBI, the Secret Service; all knew that the Manson "family" members that were not in prison lived in Sacramento, in a house on P Street. Yet there was no surveillance ordered over the occupants of that house on the day the President visited Sacramento. Asked why not, the Attorney General was quoted as saying, "I don't know, but I am going to find out." That's the answer we can expect to a lot of other questions concerning the weird case of Squeaky Fromme.

Things get weirder and weirder when we skip some seventeen days and get to the case of Sara Jane Moore. Here was a woman who was well known to the authorities. She had worked as an informer for the FBI for a while and was allegedly fired because she was a troublemaker and something of a weirdo. She had gone to the police and had asked to be placed in custody 24 hours before she fired a pistol, supposedly at President Ford, in front of the St. Francis Hotel in downtown San Francisco. The police did take a pistol away from her and gave her a citation, and sent her home. So she went out and bought herself another pistol—a .38 chrome plated revolver; and there she was at the appointed time and place, ready to "test the system" by firing a shot at the President. In this instance, a shot actually was fired, but harmlessly, except that it ricocheted from the pavement and struck a bystander, wounding him slightly. But the President remained comparatively calm....

These alleged attempts to assassinate Jerry Ford come at a strange time. A judge has ordered a further investigation of the circumstances surrounding the assassination of Robert Kennedy at a time when he was a candidate for the Presidency of the United States. Also, public demand for a reopening of the President Jack Kennedy assassination case is at a peak. And terrorism for political ends is at an all time high on a worldwide scale. In a special interview with Robert A. Fearey, Special Assistant to the Secretary of State and Co-ordinator for Combating Terrorism, U.S. News & World Report quoted this official as saying:

"Terrorism seems likely to be a growing, increasingly important and increasingly dangerous thing in the years ahead....(The United States is headed into a dangerous time with the Bicentennial, and Canada with the Olympics coming up and) added security precautions are going to be necessary. Both Governments are giving a lot of thought and preparation to this.

"...After Munich, President Nixon set up a Cabinet Committee to Combat Terrorism. The Committee consists of the heads of 10 departments and agencies concerned with terrorism, including State, Defense, Justice, the CIA and FBI. Under the Cabinet Committee which is chaired by Secretary of State Kissinger, there's a working group on which the above 10 and 11 other departments and agencies are represented. I chair that group. We meet every other week. During terrorist incidents, we set up a task force in the State Department Operations Center to provide centralized direction...."

Aside from the merely weird terrorist activities of Patty Hearst and "urban guerrilla" groups, the fanatical actions of Squeaky and the "Manson family," and the "loner" escapades of Sara Jane Moore (Kahn) who in her childhood was a next door neighbor of Charles Manson in Charleston, S.C., there are at least three more, possibly dangerous future potentialities:

- 1) Someone might really assassinate Gerald Ford. This would make Nelson Rockefeller an "incumbent" President of the United States; and with the new Federal Election Campaign Act that was passed last year and signed into law by President Ford on October 15, 1974, it will be extremely difficult to defeat any incumbent in any national office; especially if the Hatch Act is repealed or amended so that government employees and Labor Unions working together can actually control national elections and dictate the results. Under such circumstances, even Rockefeller could be elected President, if he were an incumbent on election day. This makes the preservation of Gerald Ford, in office, for another year, rather important.
- 2) This frenzy that is being aroused over the possession of guns by the people because of attempted assassinations, might lead to the passage of legislation disarming all citizens of the United States except the military, the police, and the criminals.
- 3) Increasing crime, violence, terrorism and attempted assassinations could lead to the creation of a National Police Force and the making of a Police State.

While we are cataloguing the weird events that have transpired or are apt to transpire in the United States in this Autumn of 1975, there is yet another set of weird circumstances that has been uncovered and analyzed by the editorial staff of the Ozark Sunbeam. (This is a weekly newspaper that publishes the kind of information that is hard to find in other papers. The Sunbeam is in financial difficulties because it publishes factual news that other papers are afraid to print. There are few such papers remaining in publication in the United States, and they deserve the support of patriots everywhere.

As Editor-in-Chief Delamer Duveris and Editor Don Wood say: "Your government supports your enemies. Shouldn't you support your friends?" Subscription rate is $7.50 per year, and well worth it. Address: The Ozark Sunbeam, Seligman, MO 65745).

The following is quoted from the Sunbeam issue of September 22, 1975:

* * * * *

SOMETHING WEIRD IS GOING ON

What do Alexander Solzhenitsyn and Eldridge Cleaver Have In Common?

Alexander Solzhenitsyn, provided with a national forum by the mass media, has slashed gaping holes in the arguments for detente. The effect has been such that Mr. Kissinger himself has been forced to answer the charges.

Mr. Solzhenitsyn's integrity and sincerity are not in question. The question is why is he being allowed to exercise it with such telling effect? Why did Soviet Russia exile the author, in a sense throwing him right into Uncle Remus' allegorical briar patch? Why did the Soviets allow him to gain worldwide acclaim and notoriety, when they had the means to halt the process at its roots? Why was he awarded the Nobel Prize? Why did the New York Times, among others, herald the author? In short, why was he allowed to live until it was too late to squelch him?

As an isolated case, the success of Alexander Solzhenitsyn is encouraging — and mysterious. Now we must add another case which emphatically underlines the mysterious aspect of the successes of Solzhenitsyn and causes a pattern to form.

Fugitive Black Panther Eldridge Cleaver, a "former" avowed Communist, now wants to return to the United States. In an interview in Rolling Stone, Cleaver states that Communism has resulted "in the most oppressive regimes in the history of the earth." He states, after learning through first-hand observation, how Cuba, China and the Soviet Union function, that "the U.S. should be second to none militarily, that we have to strengthen, not demise, our military" (sic).

Cleaver formerly saw the enemy as "U.S. imperialism"; now he sees it as the Soviet Union. In the Rolling Stone, he stated:

"Instead of moving toward detente with the Soviet Union, I think we should be resolutely opposed to the present regime.... (It is) treasonable to make concessions to the Soviet Union.... If we are truly the force for democracy in the world, then we have an obligation to help in the disintegration of the Soviet regime...."

Once again, Mr. Cleaver's sincerity, or lack of same, is not the question. The question is why is such a man, with the connections he was forced to make, the debts he must owe, his accessibility to the Soviets, and his general all-around vulnerability, allowed to proceed? The powers behind Russia and China did not gain their positions by slapping the wrists of those who crossed them.

Why? And what monumental changes do these cases signify?

(End of article)

Among these "monumental changes" are the about faces of Israel and Egypt. For a quarter of a century—ever since President Harry Truman recognized Israel as an independent nation in 1948—the world has looked upon the United States as the chief provider and supporter of Israel. At the same time, the world has considered the USSR to be a government having special designs on Egypt and the Arab Nations, and therefore the "friend" of all who openly opposed the land-greedy Israelis.

Now, however, an Israeli good-will delegation is visiting officials at the Kremlin, and a political friendship that has been kept secret all these years is about to be admitted openly and officially. Israel and the Soviet Union are about to tell the world they have been friends all the time.

Meanwhile, President Sadat of Egypt is preparing for a state visit to the United States where he will be embraced once again by Henry Kissinger, and handed money and arms with which to fight the Israelis when the present truce-time has expired.

Admitting the weirdness of foreign affairs these days is columnist Jack Kofoed, an admitted liberal, who noted in his column of September 23 that "our brand of diplomacy seems contradictory." He wrote:

"Everyone admits that Dr. Henry Kissinger, the only German-born man to become Secretary of State, is a brilliant man, probably the shrewdest diplomatic dealer we've ever had. Yet, somehow, it seems to many of us that diplomacy is hardly more than a bag of lies, deceptions and double dealings, with a soupcon of stupidity added for flavor.

"Take the recent Middle East blatherskite as an example. The USA is so hot for peace that we're blowing five billion dollars to buy a non-shooting agreement between Israel and Egypt for three years.

"Peace? Oh, yes, anything for peace. But, we'll pass on planes and tanks and all kinds of death-dealing weapons so, when the deadline is over, they can begin blasting each other again. We're happy to ship lethal weapons to Turkey and Iran and other places while we cry 'Peace, let there be peace.'

"I shudder every time Dr. Kissinger gets into his giant jet to take off for foreign parts. The end result will be a triumph of diplomacy, you may be sure, but if we hold to a policy of paying $5 billion every couple of years to keep countries from trying to destroy each other, we'll go broke pretty fast. We knuckle under to Turkey, Greece, and Spain, and let giant fearsome Panama tell us to get away from the canal we built...."

(End of quotation.)

Remember, this is a liberal talking out loud, and he seems to be stealing some of our lines. Weird? Is there any explanation?

Yesterday (Sept. 25) we received a letter from a friend in California asking for extra copies of a Report. In the letter she spoke of a liberal acquaintance who is "the foremost authority on the research of the conspiracies behind the assassinations.... She is a liberal but she is uncovering the same enemies that the conservatives have been exposing. One of these days the people will come together and we'll concentrate on fighting our common enemy."

This, we believe, is the real answer to the weird and contradictory things that have been going on. People are beginning to realize that there is a common enemy, and that people are coming together and are beginning to "concentrate on fighting our common enemy."

Therefore, to confuse, bemuse, and amuse the people the bread and circus routine is being expanded, Communists are becoming anti-communists, Ford and Rockefeller are even beginning to talk like conservatives and women are being sent out with guns to do a man's job.

If the people can discern and stand against these wiles of the devilish, and can come together and concentrate on fighting our common enemy, then there is yet hope.

DON BELL REPORTS Weekly, presenting the Christian American point of view. Two copies of each issue are sent to subscribers. $24 per year. Extra copies: 10¢ each. Please address all orders and inquiries to:
DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

DICTATORSHIP OF THE PROLETARIAT, AMERICAN STYLE

BUREAUCRATIC TAKEOVER ?

At least one Congressman is convinced that the bureaucrats are running our federal government without check or hindrance; that these entrenched office holders who neither campaign for votes nor are elected by voters are regulating the lives, liberties, and properties of all the people of this Nation, that they are representing "the system" rather than the people, and that they are so solidly entrenched in their positions that little short of death can remove them. The President can't do anything about the situation, and the Congress won't do anything about it.

These are the sentiments of Representative Trent Lott, Republican from Mississippi, who would like to see some changes made. He says, and we quote:

"Most people assume that the Chief Executive runs the executive branch of the government, but it just isn't so. Somewhere in all that maze of executive red tape and double talk sit thousands of seasoned bureaucrats, each one trying to run the show. The President, if he's smart, just tries to stay out of their way. After all, everyone knows that you don't talk down to a bureaucrat.

"Time after time the bureaucrat ignores not only the intent of Congress, but also directives from the President, moral considerations and human considerations. He just wants to enforce the 'regulations.'

"The bureaucrats in Washington have their own ideas about education, transportation, occupational safety and health, environmental protection, wage grade levels, and a multitude of other programs.

"One solution would be additional congressional oversight. Believe it or not, there are many members of Congress who want to dismantle the bureaucracy and restructure it in the best interests of the people. Unfortunately, a small but vocal minority in the Congress makes every effort to prevent any oversight at all. Government, in their eyes, apparently should be totally beyond the control of any one....

"The only other solution would be an exceptionally strong President determined to tear out the bureaucracy at its very roots.

"If a President were to strike at the bureaucracy, he would be striking at a monster that provided 715,000 new jobs in the past year—while private jobs dropped 2.3 million. He would be tangling with a combined federal, state, and local payroll that now tops 15 million people, which is enough to account for $1 of every $3 in U.S. economy.

"When you get right down to it, we've grown too big for our britches.... That's the problem with Social Security, welfare, or any other problem you care to mention."
(Unquote)

If we stick to basic dictionary definitions, a bureaucracy is a "government by bureaus managed by officials who are appointed rather than elected;" and a bureaucrat is "an official who governs by rigid routine." And bureaucrats form one segment of an overall group of people who are generally known as "public employees." This latter term includes all those persons who work for the public and are on the public payroll: diplomats, the so-called "intelligence community," policemen, firemen, teachers, garbage collectors, street cleaners, those who work for utilities that are publicly—as opposed to privately—owned, etc.

Now, the chief difficulty seems to be one of perspective: These public employees (and the term includes all whose salaries and/or wages are paid by the taxpayers) are supposed to be working for the taxpayers. But they seem to have gotten the idea that the taxpayers are working for them! At least, so they are being told by union organizers who are busy with plans to compel all public employees to join labor unions, so these labor leaders can "rule the public" just as the bureaucrats in government rule the public in their particular areas of rulership.

What happens when the public employees decide that the taxpayers are working for them, is amply demonstrated by the present plight of New York City (a small-scale model of what is going to happen to the United States unless some changes are made soon). An excellent article dealing with the overall situation was written by Allan C. Brownfeld, and appeared in the current (October 4) issue of Human Events.

Because of the important information contained in this article, we reprint excerpts:

ARE PUBLIC EMPLOYEE UNIONS ABOVE THE LAW?

(by Allan C. Brownfeld)

In recent days we have witnessed a strike of sanitation workers in New York City, of policemen in Baltimore, and of teachers in cities throughout the country. In almost all instances of strikes by public employees, local and state laws are being broken. Clearly, public employee unions believe that they are above the law. Political leaders, by acquiescing in their tactics of blackmail, are showing that they are correct.

Public employees receive wages and benefits which are now higher than those received by men and women employed in private industry and business. Average annual earnings per full-time employee advanced 183 per cent in government and only 146 per cent in private industry between 1952 and 1972. In 1952, the average worker in private employment was wage-wise 5 per cent ahead of the public employee ($3,430 vs. $3,279).

In addition to dramatic salary increases, public employees are the beneficiaries of generous pension programs.... The public is almost always unaware of the huge pension commitments that are being piled up—and when it learns of them it is far too late to do anything about them.... Public employee payments (over and above wages) multiplied more than 10 times between 1952 and 1972—from $831 to $8,562 million—while salaries meanwhile only quadrupled. At present rates public employee pensions will more than triple in the current decade. In some cities certain agencies already pay out in pensions as much as in current salaries and their number is increasing.

Federal employee retirement funds held a balance of $28 billion in 1972, with uncovered liabilities well over twice that high. State and local employee retirement funds owned $68 billion worth of assets in 1972, certainly only a fraction of their long-range obligations. In some public systems a worker can retire on half pay after 20 years, regardless of age, while few private pension systems distribute benefits before age 60. Private pensions and annuities are usually based on actual contributions which are related to wages earned. Under federal civil service retirement rates, pensions are based only on the highest years.

At the present time, the benefits of Social Security recipients are annually adjusted for inflation by the consumer price index. But retired federal employees get an extra 1 per cent pension increase every time their checks are adjusted for changes in the cost of living. Yet, at the very moment when federal workers are the recipients of such generous benefits, there is an effort to force all of them, whether they wish to join or not, into labor unions.

Legislation now before the Congress would impose compulsory public sector bargaining on all governments. This means that the U.S. government will be in the position of having to negotiate as an equal with a private organization, in this case with a labor union.

Secondly, workers would be forced to grant monopoly bargaining privileges—that is, individual public employees would be compelled to accept union officials as their "exclusive representatives" in dealing with their own government.

Third, compulsory membership will be imposed where all public employees, including those who do not wish to join a union, will have to join and pay money to the union, or lose the right to work for their own government.

This legislation is dangerous, both for those workers who will be forced into unions against their will and to the American society as a whole, which will be subjected on a federal level to the "public be damned" attitude which public employee unions have evidenced on local and state levels.

... There are now hundreds of public workers' strikes every year—their number has grown from 15 in 1958 to more than 400 in 1970 and 388 in 1973. Governors and mayors are unwilling to fire and replace public employees even though the law, in many instances, mandates it.

The courts have also changed since Judge T. Alan Goldsborough in December 1946 sentenced the United Mine Workers Union to a fine of $3.5 million and John L. Lewis to $10,000 for disobeying an order to postpone strike action. The conviction was upheld by the U.S. Supreme Court 7 to 2 because "the course taken by the union carried with it such a serious threat to the orderly constitutional government, and to the economic and social welfare of the nation, that a fine of substantial size is required in order to emphasize the gravity of the offense..."

Today, a typical situation was that of a District of Columbia Superior Court which imposed fines and jail sentences against leaders of striking Washington teachers in 1972—but vacated them on the following day. When a state superior court ordered a picketing ban in a San Francisco municipal strike in 1974, the mayor refused to enforce it because he "would not act as a strike-breaker."

New York City has set the pattern for many others. New York State has a strict law against strikes of public employees, the Condon-Wadlin Act. It was never enforced because officials deemed it too severe and punitive. After a 12-day subway strike in 1967, Gov. Rockefeller sponsored its repeal and replacement by the more lenient Taylor Act. But a few months later, in February 1968, when the mayor of New York was trying to hold firm against striking garbage workers, Rockefeller intervened. Instead of carrying out the mandate of the Taylor Act or calling out the National Guard as the mayor had requested, he capitulated to the demands of the strike leaders.

Rocky Thinks Big

In seeking Republican support in 1976, Vice President Nelson Rockefeller has been campaigning around the country, insisting that he is no longer a big-government liberal. But that's not the way he talked to Robert Scheer, the far-left journalist who recently did a profile of Rocky for Playboy magazine. To Scheer, Rocky suggested he was still a big advocate of government planning, not only on a nationwide scale, but on a worldwide scale as well. Scheer quotes this dialogue between Rockefeller and himself:

"Rockefeller: I'm a great believer in planning.

"Scheer: What kind of planning?

"Rockefeller: Economic, social, military, total world planning."

What public employee unions have learned from all this...is that "strikes against government, though they are a felony under federal or state law, can be undertaken with impunity. Moreover, such unlawful strikes pay off in fat wage agreements because no public official has the courage...to uphold the public interest..."

If the Congress wishes to see federal employees conduct themselves as city employees in New York and other cities have done, the thing for the Congress to do is pass legislation calling for compulsory unionization. Congress is on notice that public employee unions believe that they are above the law. To sanction that kind of illegality by giving it more force is to cause other citizens to doubt that we really live, in reality, in a society of law and not of men—especially those men we call union leaders.

(End of quotes from Allan Brownfeld article in Human Events, 10/4/75).

It isn't just that public employee union leaders want to prove that they are above the law; they want people to believe that they are the law. Take the case of Jerry Wurf as an example. He is Big Boss of the American Federation of State, County, and Municipal Employees, who boasts that in the past two years he has called more than 75 illegal strikes, and has boasted that "We are as political as hell." He admits that he uses his labor union for political purposes and hopes to turn his union chapters into political clubs, so that he and other labor leaders will be able to select and elect our future Presidents and Vice Presidents, U.S. Senators and Representatives, Governors and State Legislators, Mayors and Municipal Officials.

In a sworn statement signed and given the Clerk of the Superior Court of the District of Columbia, Jerry Wurf deposed, among other things, that:

"The American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees... receives revenues in the form of per capita tax payments of $1.50 per member per month from its local unions... Per capita tax revenues so received are co-mingled in the general fund of AFSCME and used for its programs and activities, including political action and legislative action programs.... In recent years, the political programs and activities of AFSCME have been closely related to one of the two major political parties, particularly at the national level. Some AFSCME officers and staff personnel hold official positions in that party at the national, state or local level, and participate in the election campaigns of candidates of that party. Through coordination with other international unions and their state and local representatives AFSCME and its PEOPLE Committee (Public Employees Organized to Promote Legislative Equality) assist in providing financial, organizational and manpower resources for voter registration drives, preparation and dissemination of campaign literature, and get-out-the-vote activities in support of candidate campaigns. . . . Contributions are made from the general funds of AFSCME to candidates for state and local offices. . . . the PEOPLE Committee furnished financial assistance to some candidates for federal office. . . ."

From the preceding it should be very clear that union leaders are organizing all government employees for the purpose of controlling elections and, in effect, choosing their own bosses.

It was the intent of the authors of our United States Constitution that no government employee should engage in political activity. That is why, in the choosing of Presidential Electors, the Constitution states: "...no Senator or Representative, or Person holding an Office of Trust or Profit under the United States, shall be appointed an Elector."

The alleged aim of our federal government is, among other things, to provide for the general welfare of all citizens; whereas, the aim of a labor union is to provide for the particular welfare of its members, at the expense of all other citizens, as in the cases of police strikes, firemen strikes, sanitation workers strikes, teachers strikes, etc.

Unions are political instruments, and they can, when organized and their actions legalized, control elections and control elected officials. The voter-at-large cannot match the superb organization that Big Labor has introduced into the political process.

And, if we are to believe George Meany of AFL-CIO, Leonard Woodcock of UAW and CFR, Jerry Wurf of AFSCME, Albert Shanker of AFT, Helen Wise of NEA, and other Big Union Bosses, the next national election is the time when the Unions are going to take over.

This is what we meant when we titled this letter the "Dictatorship of the Proletariat, American Style." The evolution of the word "proletariat" is interesting in this connection. Derived from the Latin "proletarius" which meant a Roman citizen of the class that, lacking property, served the state only by having children (our perpetual welfare workers are unionized). When the Socialists of the last century wanted to re-classify people, they used the word "proletariat" to identify all who worked for others, especially industrial workers. When Soviet Russia became a "Dictatorship of the Proletariat," everybody worked for the government and drew their salaries, wages, benefits, food stamps, social security, etc., from the government (the bourgeoisie, or middle class, had been liquidated and there were no private employers.) Theoretically, all were of the proletariat, even the dictators. Hence, in Russia, a totalitarian dictatorship was established under a "better smelling" name.

Here in the United States, all do not work for the government all of the time—not yet, anyway. So, the term "proletariat" might be applied to all who work for the government, and all who work for salaries or wages and who can be organized into unions, and thus controlled by union leaders who will cooperate (as Syndicalists) with the Government sponsored Corporation Monopolists and Money Controllers — all of which adds up to another kind of totalitarian dictatorship called Corporate Socialism. This is a political system (Fascism) which calls for the liquidation of the middle class (bourgeoisie) so that all people will work for the government, or for Corporations that are a part of the Government!

In his book Let Our Cities Burn (Arlington House), Ralph de Toledano documents the danger and declares: "The battle... will be a long and bitter one. With unlimited power almost in their grasp, and with it hegemony over all of Big Labor, the sachems of public employee unionism will not give up easily. They have demonstrated in the past their ability to ride heedlessly over the public and over the nation's basic laws, and they are certain they can do it again. If they succeed, then these United States will succumb to a government of, by, and for a Big Labor oligarchy." And the Corporate Monopolists will aid and abet. It is the Endangered Middle Class that must defeat this Conspiracy.

DON BELL REPORTS Weekly. $24 per year.
Extra copies: 10¢ each. Address all orders:

DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

DID THE CIRCUS BEGIN BEFORE THE BREAD ARRIVED?

PACESETTERS SELDOM WIN

The touts will tell you that in an important race, the horse that takes the lead and sets the pace for the first few furloughs, usually slows down in the long run and seldom wins the race. And politicians tell us that election races generally follow the same pattern; the candidate that starts too soon and runs too fast seldom finishes in the money.

And it does seem that the election race began exceptionally early (it's still over a year before the big event), and some of the hopefuls are running very fast too early. True, there are any number of things going on in the world that the American people shouldn't be permitted to think about too long or too seriously. Things like the sell-out of Portugal and Spain, the real danger behind the sending of American civilians into no-man's-land in the Gaza Strip, the true import of the events following the bankruptcy of New York City, the fact that the recession is not really easing up as much as was promised and that prices are still climbing too fast for comfort and that unemployment is worse than predicted - and that the whole United States seems about to be in the same situation as that now facing the "big apple."

These are problems that could cause revolutions right here at home, and a big political circus to bemuse the subjects is the historically approved answer. But, when the Roman leaders gave circuses they also gave out bread and corn - and an unconscionable quantity of our wheat and corn has gone and is going to Russia and her satellites and So, perhaps in an effort to keep the hoi polloi from meditating on the hard times that seem sure to come under our present leadership, the political hopefuls have felt it politic to start politicking in earnest and earlier than usual. So, at least ten Democratic runners are in the race, with most of them appearing in person in the first primary of the season. We refer to the recently concluded AFL-CIO Convention. After George Meany had made it quite clear that he would do anything within his power to get Gerald Ford out of the White House, the parade of bidders for Big Labor's endorsement began, beginning early in the morning with Henry Jackson and ending late at night with Hubert Humphrey. For what it may be worth in the home stretch, Humphrey was the only speaker at that party who had not yet announced his candidacy, and he was the one who almost surely did win Big Labor's endorsement. Humphrey also played it smart by requesting that his name be dropped from the membership list of the Council on Foreign Relations, an act that President Kennedy found advisable when he ran for the Big Prize. As things stand at present, Hubert has the Democratic nomination all but wrapped up.

Meanwhile, on the Republican side of the track, Ford is running like a rogue elephant. He has promised to visit every State in the Union at least once before the year is out. He has started inventing excuses to obtain prime time on TV networks. Despite the threat that someone is going to take a shot at him every time he goes to California, he intends to make as many trips as possible because he fears that Ronald Reagan will win the California primary with a dangerous majority unless he, Ford, wins friends and gains influence fast. Meanwhile the real threat-Rockefeller-who wants to be President but knows he'll never win the post in an honest election, is playing the part of Ford's alter ego and indispensable assistant, ready to take over the minute anything happens to his "boss". We use the term advisedly, of course.

Meanwhile, solicitations for funds also seem earlier and more prolific than usual. There are requests for money from party headquarters, special blocs and caucuses, coordinating councils and common causes, individual candidates and special interest promoters. An answer to one such solicitation appeared as an open letter in the September, 1975, "American Voice." It is worthy of extensive circulation and we help the cause by reprinting the letter, as it appeared in the original publication:

REPUBLICRAT-SOCIALIST BILDERBERGER MERGER?

National Republican
Congressional Committee,
U.S. House of Representatives,
Post Office Box 2837,
Washington, D.C.

Gentlemen:

So now you have become alarmed! I say it is about time. And now you want money from me to help fight the Democrats. Ridiculous!

Let me ask a few questions: Where has the Republican Party been for the past 62 years? The answer is that the Republicans have been helping the Democrats socialize America.

Where was the Republican Party when the Marxist income tax was established? When the privately-owned Federal Reserve Banks were established? When the tax-free foundations were established? When the "temporary" withholding system was established? When the UN was established? I will answer. You were right there with the Democrats bringing these things about.

Where were you while the people of this country were being robbed and the wealth of this country was being squandered all over the earth? Where were you? You know the answer.

Where were you when U.S. based multinational corporations used U.S. technology to build the military-industrial complex of Soviet Russia and thus create an "enemy"? At the same time we were taxed to build the military-industrial complex of America to "protect" us from the "enemy" we had created. The whole situation is absurd because both countries are managed by the same greedy, avaricious people—the Rockefeller, CFR, Bilderberger cabal.

Where were you when OSHACRATS and other parasites were sent scrounging through the country to harrass and destroy businesses? Where were you when a political committee redesigned automobiles to make them less efficient and more costly? Where were you when dummies designed caps for medicine bottles so that not even doctors, nurses or pharmacists can open them conveniently?

I see little difference between the Democrats and the Republicans. They look alike, think alike and stink alike. We don't have a two-party system because both parties are owned, managed and manipulated by the same people—named above.

I think we should have two parties — the socialists, Rockefellers and Bilderbergers in one party; and Americans in the second party. The second party would have a platform based on limited government as prescribed by the U.S. Constitution. It would be nationalistic — America First. It would be isolationist and would let the "enemy" collapse from its own internal weaknesses. When such a party comes along, and I think it will, I will give it complete support.

In the meantime, why don't you and Rocky hold hands and say a prayer — while you are "preying"?

Sincerely yours,

Norman L. Cotton, R.W.E.,
Palo Alto, California

It is not the business nor the desire of this editor and reporter to recommend parties, or candidates. Though such people as the Rockefellers and the Kissingers, the Bayhs and the Udalls, et al, render it impossible, we try to avoid discussing personalities and stick to issues and situations, cabals and conspiracies, ploys and plots which affect America and Americans, with the accent on Christian Americans.

Therefore, we cannot recommend Ernest L. Miller, who has declared himself to be an independent candidate for President of the United States. Never having met the man, or heard him speak, we wouldn't feel qualified to judge him as a candidate. However, he sent us a copy of his Platform and, with a few rather unimportant reservations, we believe that Mr. Miller has come up with just the kind of a Platform that would meet with the wholehearted approval of our previous contributor, Mr. Norman Cotton.

Because Mr. Miller hits most of the high-lights of what has gone wrong, and what can be done to rectify those wrongs, we compliment Mr. Miller for his stated stand, and are pleased to publish most of his Platform, with a few expurgations which will be explained in the text:

PLATFORM OF AN INDEPENDENT CANDIDATE FOR PRESIDENT

I. The complete restoration of the Constitutional right to unmolestedly worship and exercise faith in the Supreme, Sovereign Creator, Preserver and Ruler of all things. All laws, court rulings, or bureaucratic edicts designed to forbid, restrain, or interfere with voluntary public worship in educational institutions, or other suitable places, must, by proper legal procedure, be immediately abrogated.

2. The restoration of national sovereignty and constitutional government. I will not try to reform our present, bureaucratic, pro-communist government. I will not try to put a new patch on an old garment. My administration will build a new structure on the foundation of our founding fathers, our original Constitution, and the Word of God.

3. Repeal the Unconstitutional Federal Reserve Act of 1913 and make Congress control our money while the taxpayers control the Congress.

4. Repeal, abrogate, and abolish the United Nations Charter. Pull the United States out of the United Nations and kick the United Nations out of the United States.

5. Repeal the Arms Control Act of 1961 and every law to register or take guns from the American people.

6. The immediate repeal and complete repudiation of the treasonable State Department Top Secret Publication 7277, Disarmament Series 5, signed by President Kennedy in 1961 and accepted and approved and endorsed and implemented by the Congress of the United States through passage of Public Law 89-297, also classified as a top secret document. . . .

7. Weather Modification or Cloud Seeding is bringing chaotic weather, destructive floods and droughts, and global famine. . . . I am now working with members of the United States Senate for the introduction of legislation that will eliminate, or at least control Cloud Seeding. My administration will turn the weather completely over to Almighty God, where it belongs.

8. The consistent Foreign Policy of the United States has been the promotion, financing, and encouraging of International Communism. . . . My administration will completely clean up and reorganize the State Department and reverse our Foreign Policy.

9. Welfare cases across the Nation increase at the rate of 39% annually while welfare costs increase 42% annually. Only 9% of the people receiving welfare actually need or deserve it. . . . HEW occupies 57 large buildings and operates on a budget of $118 billion a year. My administration would completely abolish the Rockefeller, pro-communist, welfare state Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, fire every case worker, put every able-bodied welfare recipient to work, and adequately and economically provide for the 9% who deserve and need assistance.

10. Take the Devil, sensitivity training, sex education, One-Worldism, Socialism, Marxism, witchcraft, brainwashing, and change techniques out of our schools and bring the Bible, Prayer, Patriotism, honesty, chastity, personal integrity, and a free enterprise economic system in. Eliminate all federal aid to education, stop all busing for integration purposes, and completely abolish all compulsory attendance laws.

11. The maintenance of a defensive military capability second to none on earth, the only positive deterrent of aggression and war. Stop indoctrinating our Armed Forces with Atheism, Marxism, and One-Worldism, and get them established in true Christian Americanism.

12. The establishment of rigid immigration controls and the deportation of millions of illegal entrants and communist-trained guerrillas and revolutionists, drug pushers, and subversives.

13. The immediate and complete discontinuance of all government controls, restrictions, and bureaucratic hindrances and menaces and harassments and subsidies that have limited the productive capacity of the American farmer. A complete reversal of the present policy of furnishing the technology and money for Communist countries to build factories to employ Slave Labor to compete with the American free labor. American industry and labor must be protected by an adequate tariff. And American taxpayers must no longer be required to endorse pro-communist countries.

14. The repeal of the 25th Amendment which was designed to appoint a Communist Dictator to rule the United States.

15. Stop the 'Give Away' of the Panama Canal and the adoption of the Genocide and Seabed Treaties and repudiate all secret treaties and entangling alliances with all foreign powers.

16. Repeal the 16th Amendment and do away with the Communist-hatched income tax fraud.

17. Immediately discontinue Foreign Aid which has been consistently used to destroy Christianity and to promote International Communism.

18. Repeal all Communist-hatched Mental Health legislation designed to put psychiatric wards in every hospital and build mental institutions to be staffed by Pavlovian psychopoliticians and to arrest and change or lobotomize all Christian Patriots without warrant or justification.

19. Adopt legislation outlawing the Communist Party and all subversive organizations that plot against or threaten the internal peace and security of the United States.

20. Completely abolish the (proposed) Equal Rights Amendment, Regional Government, Fluoridation of water, and recognition of and detente and trade with all Communist-controlled countries.

21. Abolish all laws, court orders, and bureaucratic edicts that restrict or interfere with the testing and use of cancer cures, herbs, vitamins, and organic food supplements known to have proven medicinal values.

22. Immediate adoption of strict laws against abortion and so-called mercy killings.

23. Restoration of capital punishment for murder and other serious criminal offenses.

24. Locally supported and controlled police forces absolutely independent of federal control.

25. Strict laws against the sale, distribution and use of marijuana and other drugs.

26. The election by the people of all District Court Judges; with Supreme Court judges to be appointed or elected for a period of 4 years.

(Planks #27, 28 and 29 are omitted, due to lack of space—Ed.)

I prayerfully solicit the opportunity to explain in detail to any church, organization, group, or party my reasons for adopting each Plank in the above Platform.

(signed) Ernest L. Miller

Independent Candidate for President of the United States.
Miller for President Committee
Post Office Drawer 959
Harrisonburg, Virginia 22801

Now, come, let us reason together. There are more than a dozen candidates for President of the United States already campaigning, with many more expected to announce that they are also running. Hundreds of millions of dollars will be spent on air, paper and ink, transportation, banquets, primaries, national conventions, etc. When all is over, one bearing the Democratic party label, one bearing the Republican party label, and numerous minority party and independent nominees will vie for that seat in the Oval Room which seats—at least in theory—the most powerful man in the world.

The way it was when the Constitution was respected and regarded by all, was quite different: literate property owners elected State Representatives, who chose Presidential Electors, who chose a President and a Vice President of the United States. Then we had a Republic, not a Democracy; then our Presidents were seasoned Statesmen, not crowd pleasers seeking a better job with more pay and power and privilege.

Let us suppose an honest political party were able to win election to the Presidency of an honest man on a platform similar to that of Ernest L. Miller. What would then happen? Let us quote a man whose answer we respected greatly. At one time a great many people were clamoring for the election of General of the Army Douglas MacArthur. He might even have won. But, in our last intimate conversation with him he said, in effect, that if he became President he would institute such a house-cleaning that nothing would result but a bloody civil war, unless he were assured that the vast majority of the American people were behind him; that this Republic could not be restored until the people themselves began to demand it. So, MacArthur asked people to back Sen. Taft, who was double-crossed in Texas so that Eisenhower might win. The rest is history.

Today, the tenor of the body politic is even better attuned to the disharmonies of democracy. We are told that in 1974 and 1975 the number of Americans supported by taxes (government employees, the disabled, servicemen, the unemployed, those on welfare, and those on social security) totals 80.65 million; while workers in the private sector number only 71.65 million. The scales are beginning to point toward radical collapse. And, believe it or not, that is the time of greatest opportunity for Christian reconstructionists. In the long run, any condition of life that fails to conform to the law of God becomes untenable. And we have been called, not to defeat and slavery; but to victory and dominion.

DON BELL REPORTS is published weekly; accenting the Christian American point of view. Two copies of each issue are mailed, first class postage, to each subscriber. We also have a limited supply of our last book, "The Contrived Evolution of Regional Government," which are available at $2 per copy. Don Bell Reports subscription rate: $24 per year. Extra copies: 10¢ each. Write:
DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

HOW TOTAL TYRANNY COULD COME TO THE UNITED STATES

IF A GOVERNMENT GOES BANKRUPT -

When history is made to repeat itself, can the people be depended upon to react in the manner expected of them? Can they be trusted to exhibit the "conditioned response" for which they have been trained? The answers to these and similar questions may be causing considerable concern and worry in the ranks of the self-chosen "history makers" as they prepare for the Great Happenings of Bicentennial 1976. Their concern seems to have to do with whether they can bring about a revolution without also starting a counter-revolution—which their predecessors were not able to do in 1776, were able to do in 1932, but may not be able to do again in 1976. If they cannot prevent a counter-revolution, then they must be prepared to quell it by force, even as the forces of George III attempted in 1776.

First, about the historical repeat:

The year 1932 was to have been the time for a great national celebration. It was the bicentennial anniversary of the birth of our first great President George Washington who has ever been honored as the Father of our Country, first in war, first in peace, and first in the hearts of his countrymen. His 200th birthday was to be the occasion of a Great Bicentennial Celebration. However, behind the scenes, a very carefully planned crisis was created (an economic collapse and a financial panic), in order to bring about a revolution (called The New Deal), without bringing about a counter-revolution, as had occurred in 1776.

If you have been listening to the political speeches of Gerald Ford as he rails against the Congress (often with justification), you may have noticed certain striking historical similarities:

In 1932 there was a famine in the midst of plenty, and FDR ran on a Platform that contained specific remedies which would have healed the land, had they been carried out as promised. That 1932 Platform—and these are direct quotes—expressly denounced "the indefensible expansion and contraction of credit for private profit at the expense of the public," which is exactly what the Federal Reserve System does today, and which Ford says he is against (when he speaks publicly, that is). The 1932 Platform also denounced "the merger of competitive business into monopolies," because this constituted a grave threat to free enterprise, just as do conglomerates and multinationals today. That 1932 Platform also contained some very constructive pledges which we keep hearing today; such as:

"a sound currency to be preserved at all hazards....

"maintenance of the national credit by a federal budget annually balanced...

"an immediate and drastic reduction of governmental expenditures by abolishing useless commissions and offices, consolidating departments and bureaus, and eliminating extravagance, to accomplish a saving of not less than twenty-five percent in the cost of federal government...

"removal of government from all fields of private enterprise except where necessary to develop public works and natural resources in the common interest...."

FDR won election on such a Platform and then reversed and circumvented that Platform by deliberately substituting a program Fabian in form and Fascist in intent (the Fascistic intentions were stalled by the Supreme Court when it declared AAA and NRA both unconstitutional).

The point being: Roosevelt and his Brain Trusters were able to bring about a revolution without causing a counter-revolution! True, it took a Second World War to divert the impending default of a system that was destroying itself. However, before it became necessary to go to war to salvage the socialists' impossible dream, Roosevelt had demonstrated his possession of so-called political charisma and the spell-binder's power to keep the majority of the people—and the Congress—hoodwinked. Even after he began to boast publicly that he had “built up new instruments of public power” that in other hands than his might “provide shackles for the liberties of the people.” (Public Papers of Franklin D. Roosevelt, Vol. 5, page 16). Even after it was known that he had advised a Congressional Subcommittee: “I hope your Committee will not permit doubts as to constitutionality, however reasonable, to block the suggested legislation.” (Congressional Record, Volume 79, page 14363.)

Even as when America's first counter-revolution was fought in 1776, it might also have been said of FDR as it was of George III, that “He has refused his assent to laws, the most wholesome and necessary for the public good. He has erected a multitude of new offices, and sent hither swarms of new officers to harass our people, and eat out their substance.” (Declaration of Independence).

However, the times and conditions were such that FDR could get away with things that were not permitted George of England. And even the Planners are doubtful that a Ford, a Rockefeller, a Humphrey, or even a Reagan, could complete this “New Revolution” without inciting that dreaded counter-revolution on the part of what a former Vice President dubbed “the Silent Majority.”

It is this fear of counter-rebellion that may be behind the current attempts to alter the image and change the purpose of such institutions as the CIA, the FBI, and the rest of the Intelligence Community, to “unionize” the U.S. Army, Navy and Air Force, and to give the Big Labor Bosses control over all public employees, especially the local police and fire departments. It is this fear

GUNS IN THE HANDS OF THE PEOPLE A POLITICAL INSURANCE POLICY

By Hon. Larry McDonald of Georgia

Over 100 gun control bills have been introduced into the 94th Congress. Those of us who are fighting the antigun people find that they want to ignore, or deliberately misinterpret, the second amendment to the U.S. Constitution.

The right to keep and bear arms came to America with British Common Law. It was considered both a right and a responsibility, essential to both individual and community self-defense. And when the British marched on Lexington and Concord to seize the weapons of the colonists, the minutemen fought back.

Later, there was no hope of ratifying a U.S. Constitution without a Bill of Rights which included the second amendment protecting the right to keep and bear arms. The dangers of a powerful central government, even an American, republican style central government, seemed too great without it.

It is my sworn duty to uphold and defend the Constitution of the United States. That includes the second amendment.

Criminal Control, Not Gun Control

It should not be necessary to state the obvious—crime is the work of criminals, not their weapons. Gun-control is not an effective crime-control measure. It is only a slight inconvenience to the criminal, but a burden to those who pay attention to the law.

It is significant that when big-city criminals especially are found to be in violation of existing gun laws—including the onerous laws of New York City and Washington, D.C.—they are very rarely penalized for the gun offense. In fact, they are rarely penalized for anything.

As a result, there are tens of thousands of people walking around free today who believe that they can get away with murder—because they already have. My staff recently investigated the case of a sadistic torture murderer, sentenced to life imprisonment, who was released in a little over two years. Thanks to heavy patronization by “liberal” academics, this high school dropout was “laundered” through Harvard in one year, presented with a master's degree, and given a job as a college dean.

There is no logical way to blame our soaring rate of murder, armed robbery and aggravated assault on “guns” when it is the “liberal” policy of releasing murderers, and even rewarding them, which is really responsible.

Back-Door Confiscation

Years ago, gun-control advocates denied that their objective was the total disarmament of the American people. Nowadays, more and more of them do admit to this objective. When noted radicals agree with such of counter-action that has inspired all the present frenzy concerning gun control and the disarming of citizens (see accompanying article by Rep. McDonald).

Let us assume that history is being made to repeat itself, because the take-over was not wholly completed under FDR. Let us assume that, once again, planned economic collapse and financial panic will create the crisis which will, in turn, make it possible for the tyrants to take over. Only, this time, something new has been added; governments will themselves default, so that a new form of government can be created "out of necessity," to replace the old representative republican, free enterprise form.

Harry Schultz, in his first October issue, gives us a clue. He writes: "New York is on the verge of bankruptcy and a study by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation shows about 100 commercial banks would be in serious trouble if New York defaults on its obligations! Shades of the Credit Anstalt of 1929, the straw that breaks the back? Analysts are warning the US budget deficit could exceed $90 billion in 1976. TWA and Pan Am are trying desperately not to go broke. There have been 320 threats on the President's life in the first 20 days of September, and 1541 Vietnamese are threatening to kill themselves unless they are sent back to Vietnam from US territory. Whatever happened to the American dream? (My view is the dream began to die as the Constitution was raped. That began in earnest in 1901 and increasingly over the years with the 1913 FRB Act (money creation by government) the worst attack, along with the income tax about the same time... And Gerald Ford continues to shake hands! It's like singing 'We shall overcome' as we all go down for the third time." (Harry Schultz Letter, PO Box 2523, Lausanne 1002, Switzerland).

a policy, it is surprising only to those who do not realize how close they are to taking us over. Many radicals now want only police and soldiers to be armed, because they believe that what they have to worry about is not the "oppression" they bewail in public statements, but a counter-revolution from the American people.

The gun controllers are not yet strong enough to disarm us all at once, with a single comprehensive law. Thus, they try to pass a series of laws to curtail and chip away at our rights bit by bit. Each law represents a wedge, and the bureaucrats can be relied on to drive each wedge deeper.

For that reason, I will support none of the gun-control laws now before the House. In fact, I have proposed the repeal of the Gun Control Act of 1968, since it is unconstitutional, and in addition, it has had no effect on crime.

The Federal Government has recently disguised itself as everybody's fussy maiden aunt, trying to take our dangerous toys away before we hurt ourselves with them. Yet the record shows that the American people as a whole are remarkably responsible with firearms. We, the American people, possess perhaps 120,000,000 rifles, shotguns, and handguns; yet only about 2,500 people a year are killed by them accidentally. This is about the same number as were killed in 1900, when our population was less than half its present number.

Actually, the concern for "safety" is a new wrinkle in the same old game. Now the gun-controllers are trying to convince us that it is safer not to try to defend ourselves, because we may provoke the poor criminal and force him to shoot us. It is true that one takes a chance when one tries to defend one's self. But is that not better than having no chance at all? Perhaps we should poll the victims of violent crime about that.

Insurance

Since our dominant "liberals" have proven unwilling to perform one of the basic functions of any government—protecting the public from criminals—we have every right to do what is necessary to protect ourselves. And the right of self-defense implies the means of self-defense.

The right of self-defense applies to society as a whole, as well. Our Founding Fathers included the second amendment in the Constitution for a political reason—it was intended to make tyranny hazardous to the tyrant's health.

A population armed with 120,000,000 weapons presents a very real deterrent to would-be tyrants, foreign or domestic. The gun controllers are concerned about their safety, not ours. An armed citizenry is a sturdy political insurance policy.

Let us keep it that way.

The possibility of using a financial crisis for ulterior political purposes, is hinted by Dr. George Benson in his latest letter. He writes:

"The alternatives to fiscal responsibility are ugly to contemplate. We have seen an example in New York City when 19,000 city employees were laid off out of sheer necessity (30,000 have been laid off as of this writing—Ed.) Various countries of the world have shown us what happens when government tells its citizens they have the 'right' to certain government-paid-for services and then cannot deliver those services. Violent chaos and revolutionary overthrow of that form of government has resulted, sometimes with thousands of citizens being shot down in the streets. It can happen in America... Has it been planned to happen just as it is happening? Will there be skilled opposition to our taking the necessary steps to successfully solve our problems? There have been and still are in England, as there were in Rome." (Accent as in original).

The following "information leak" regarding preparations for a possible military takeover of the country, to be followed by the imposition of a dictatorship, occurred on a nationally televised program last August 17. In a "Meet the Press" interview with Senator Frank Church (D-Idaho), who heads the Senate investigation of the CIA, FBI, etc., the following dialogue was broadcast, and we are quoting directly from the transcript of that program:

Mr. Rowan: I just reviewed the report of another committee that you chaired on the National Emergency, and I'd like to ask if your Intelligence Committee is going to follow up on that subject? Specifically, are you looking into the security index of the FBI, which lists thousands of Americans who will be detained in the event of a national emergency? Specifically, are you looking into the Emergency Office's Mount Weather computer system which gives the White House virtual access to many government computers, and third, are you looking into the military's contingency plans for martial law, including something called "Garden Plot"?

Senator Church: In due course the committee will pass judgment on those questions. I am not going to pre-guess the committee or prematurely attempt to pass judgment on this program. But let me tell you this: In the need to develop a capacity to know what potential enemies are doing, the United States government has perfected a technological capability that enables us to monitor the messages that go through the air. These messages are between ships at sea, they could be between units, military units in the field; we have a very extensive capability of intercepting messages wherever they may be in the airwaves. This is necessary and important to the United States as we look abroad at enemies or potential enemies. We must know.

At the same time that capability at any time could be turned around on the American people and no American would have any privacy left, such as the capability to monitor everything; telephone conversations, telegrams, it doesn't matter. There would be no place to hide. If this government ever became a tyranny, if a dictator ever took charge in this country, the technological capacity that the intelligence community has given the government could enable it to impose total tyranny, and there would be no way to fight back because the most careful effort to combine together in resistance to the government, no matter how privately it was done, is within the reach of the government to know. Such is the capability of this technology... I know the capacity that is there to make tyranny total in America... That is the abyss from which there is no return. (End of quotation).

In summary: All it takes is a "declared" national emergency, and whoever is in the White House at the time can become an automatic dictator. In terms of emergency statutes, the federal government has been operating under scores of them which were set up for special purposes. Still in effect is Roosevelt's Banking Holiday Emergency Decree of 1933, as is Truman's Korean Emergency Measure, Nixon's Postal Emergency Declaration, etc. There are said to be some 470 different laws carrying certain "emergency" provisions.

But most important of all, there is Executive Order 11490 "assigning emergency preparedness functions to federal departments and agencies." This is a stand-by, catch-all Order which would convert the nation into a bureaucratic dictatorship at any time the Chief Executive decides that a national emergency of sufficient importance exists, and he declares EO 11490 to be in effect. A financial crisis could be the panic button. But things looked even worse in 1776.

THE MANY FACES OF THE SECOND AMERICAN REVOLUTION

THE COMPLETE CONSPIRACY

Under the guise of a national bicentennial observance, the people of the United States are being herded into mass participation in a Second American Revolution. This fact, of course, hardly qualifies as news to any individual who reads a newspaper or magazine, watches a television show, or hears a radio broadcast. Everybody of importance—from Presidents on down—talks about the New Revolution, the Second Revolution, the New Federalism, the Changing Times, or some other term meaning the same thing. It seems that we must adopt revolutionary new attitudes toward government, law, morals, religion, education, or you name it. The change agents in our midst have made the word "change" a key word of life, a household word, a word which provides both excuse and justification for any new thing that is to be foisted upon the public.

What is not so well known by the general public is that, behind what is supposed to be a laudable, worthwhile and patriotic attempt to honor our Nation, its founders, and the basic ideals and principles of government they left us, every conceivable means and method are being employed to destroy our Republic and its system of free enterprise. This, of course, is the work of a whole network of conspiratorial groups who want to convert this Nation into a Socialist State within a Socialist World Government.

Again, the fact that such a conspiracy does exist, is hardly news to most thinking Americans. However, what does seem to qualify as news, if not revelation, concerns the devious and conniving means and methods being employed by these conspirators to hoodwink the people-at-large. And the people and organizations that are busy trying to "collectivize" us.

A few years ago—in 1962—the following paragraph constituted a concise summation of the dangers which threatened us as a Nation:

"The preservation and expansion of freedom are today threatened from two directions.

The one threat is obvious and clear. It is the external threat coming from the evil men in the Kremlin who promise to bury us. The other threat is far more subtle. It is the internal threat coming from men of good intentions and good will who wish to reform us. Impatient with the slowness of persuasion and example to achieve the great social changes they envision, they are anxious to use the power of the state to achieve their ends, and are confident of their own ability to do so. Yet, if they gained the power they would fail to achieve their immediate aims and, in addition, would produce a collective state from which they would recoil in horror and of which they would be among the first victims. Concentrated power is not rendered harmless by the good intentions of those who create it." (Economist Milton Friedman in "Capitalism and Freedom," 1962, p. 200).

Now the situation is different, partly because of the "spirit of detente" introduced by Henry Kissinger, which was to make virtual partners of "the evil men in the Kremlin" and "the men of good intentions" who wish to reform us. Thus, it became a world-wide conspiracy which has many faces and many methods.

That "external threat" still exists, of course, and has been made more serious by the policy of unilateral disarmament that has been pursued by Secretary of State Kissinger and Secretary of Defense Schlesinger. Example: General L. D. Clay, Jr., Commander-in-Chief of the North American Defense Command (NORAD), said in a speech on Nov. 13, 1974, that "We no longer have as our primary mission the air defense of the North American Continent." He said that NORAD would still provide warning of any strategic attack upon the United States, but he added the chilling comment that "the nation as an entity and every citizen in it may measure longevity from the instant warning is received."

For those who fear external attack, the facts are disturbing. A mid-1975 report from the Defense Department stated that the U.S. has 2208 strategic offensive weapons, as compared with the U.S.S.R.'s 3524. We had 291 major surface combatant ships and submarines; Russia had 546. We had 9,000 tanks; Russia had 40,000. Our military manpower, a little more than two million; Russia's, approximately four-and-a-half million. As for the strategy of detente, an estimate by the Defense Intelligence Agency, of the Department of Defense, September 2, 1975, read in part:

"For the Soviets, detente is intended to facilitate their attainment of ultimate, overall dominance over the West... in the U.S. detente tends to be seen as an end in itself, in the U.S.S.R. it is seen as a strategy for achieving broader Soviet objectives as well as tactical aims without fueling the sorts of concern that might galvanize the West into serious counteraction. Soviet long-term strategic objectives, which the detente strategy seeks to promote include: ...the establishment of Soviet political, military, technological and economic superiority worldwide. Soviet detente strategy has facilitated Soviet strategic nuclear expansion and the cancelling out of U.S. superiority without provoking extensive Western counter efforts." (From a leaflet being distributed by Bicentennial Operation Alert, Boston, Virginia 22713).

In the opinion of this editor, any threat of an external attack upon the United States is a threat, and little more. However, the threat is there, hanging over our country like the legendary sword of Damocles, and cannot be dismissed lightly.

Perhaps more serious are the Communist plans for terrorism within the United States during the bicentennial observances. From September 5 through 7 a meeting was held in Havana, Cuba. Ostensibly, the purpose was said to be to consolidate worldwide support of a drive to make Puerto Rico an independent Marxist-Leninist state; but the larger purpose was to promote guerrilla warfare and terrorist activities in the United States in 1976. In attendance were top Communist leaders from the U.S.S.R., Eastern Europe, North Vietnam, North Korea, and Portugal. U.S. delegates to the meeting included:

Vernon Bellecourt, American Indian Movement (AIM);
Margaret Burroughs; DuSable Afro-American Museum, National Anti-Imperialist Movement in Solidarity with African Liberation (NAIMSAL), the National Council of Soviet-American Friendship, etc.;

John Carro; New York Criminal Court, former law partner of Mark Lane;
Anthony Monteiro, CPUSA member;
Grace Mora, chairperson of CPUSA's Puerto Rican Commission;
William "Bill" Scott, UAW Local 664, and active in several Communist fronts;
Piri Thomas, Puerto Rican Socialist Party;
Doron Weinberg, president, National Lawyer's Guild;
Helen Winter, CPUSA International Affairs Secretary;
Rosemary Mealy, coordinator, Third World Coalition of the American Friends Service Committee;
Irwin Silber, exec. editor "The Guardian";
Wilbur Haddock, United Black Workers; and others representing CPUSA and the Puerto Rican Socialist Party.

In a syndicated column in the Chicago Tribune of September 19, 1975, Ronald Koziel wrote, in part:

"Just three weeks before a woman pointed a loaded gun at President Ford in Sacramento, Cal., a mysterious San Francisco Bay area terrorist group issued a public warning that it would begin a campaign of political assassinations and kidnappings. To law enforcement officials, the message was clear: The new wave of terrorism would escalate, not only in California, but in other parts of the country, too, as the nation's Bicentennial celebration approached.

"The underground terrorists, who have always sought symbolic targets to strike, expect 1976 to be their year. After all, what could be more symbolic for revolutionaries than a celebration of our own Revolution? Certain urban guerrilla groups, like the Weather Underground and the New World Liberation Front, have already declared their intention to use the Bicentennial to "bring the revolution to the people." Now, comes the Emiliano Zapata Unit, which announces that commando units will engage in political assassinations and kidnappings, among other violent acts. It notes in a communique that 'the people's struggle has now reached the point where we must in some cases depart from a noninjury policy.'

Now, what are the police and the federal government doing about it so that we can enjoy the Bicentennial activities without worrying about a bomb going off at some historic site we might be visiting? The answer is: very little or nothing at all. Sen. James O. Eastland's subcommittee to in-investigate internal security laws is quietly being nudged out of existence. At the moment, it's the only congressional group working to expose terrorist activity in this country...."

Columnist Koziol is wrong when he says that little or nothing is being done about future terrorist and other criminal activity. He neglects to mention the national drive to disarm all law-abiding citizens in the land, so that the only opposition which terrorists and criminals will be forced to face will come from the police. And as for the police, there is this federal program to nationalize all police forces and place them under centralized federal, rather than local, control.

This scheme is being developed through the Regionalized Law Enforcement Assistance Administration. To accomplish this "Police State" program, LEAA has been granted an allocation of over $200 million for fiscal 1975, to deal with six areas of law enforcement: Police, Adult Corrections, Juvenile Delinquency, Courts, Criminal Justice Information Systems, and Community Crime Prevention—these in addition to task forces for educating the public in the desirability of gun control legislation.

LEAA is an agency of the Department of Justice whose head is the Attorney General of the United States, a gentleman by name of Edward Levi. At this point some background information seems appropriate:

Among their "philanthropic" undertakings, the Rockefeller family established and financed the University of Chicago. Back in the days when the Rockefeller Empire was being built, the head of this university was Robert M. Hutchins, who also was chairman of a Committee to Form a World Government. This committee wrote a World Constitution, and on August 12, 1945, Hutchins said on a University of Chicago Round Table Broadcast that he favored turning over the control of this nation to a Socialist World Government. Associated with Hutchins at the time was Rexford Guy Tugwell who, along with Hutchins and $15 million of Ford Foundation money, went west to Santa Barbara, California where they established the Center for the Study of Democratic Institutions. It was there that Tugwell completed his draft of a new Socialist Constitution for the United States, with which they hope to replace the present United States Constitution—in 1976, of course.

When Hutchins left the University of Chicago, left behind was a professor by name of Edward Levi, who eventually succeeded Hutchins to become Chancellor of the University—with the approval and blessing of the Rockefellers, of course.

In the list of people who attended that Communist meeting at Havana in September, was Doron Weinberg, president of the National Lawyers Guild. This guild was declared by the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee to be "the foremost legal bulwark of the Communist Party."

Interesting, because for many years Edward Levi was a dues-paying member of this same National Lawyers Guild. And this same Dr. Levi was exposed by this same Senate Subcommittee as having ordered the electronic bugging and recording of jury-room deliberations. Nevertheless, when Nelson Rockefeller so requested, this same Edward Levi became Attorney General of the United States, in charge of LEAA, the agency which could become the nucleus of a centrally directed, national police power. And if a fortuitous increase in terrorist and crime activity made federal control of all police activity mandatory, then the way would be made clear for Edward Levi to become our National Commissar of Police, with commensurate dictatorial powers in that area of national control.

HISTORY PERVERSION AND FRIENDLY PERSUASION

In addition to outright coercive measures that might be adopted to win this Second American Revolution for the collectivists, there are the Fabian methods which are already being utilized on a national scale. We have mentioned in previous letters the phony propaganda activities of the People's Bicentennial Commission, an organization headed by Jerry Rifkin and whose stated purpose is the overthrow of the present government of the United States and the setting up of a socialist state—in 1976, of course. The latest technique of this outfit is the taking of polls. You may have read the AP story of Sept. 1 which appeared on the front page of many of the nation's largest newspapers (largest in circulation, that is.) The story announced that the American people now favor public ownership of private business and industry. According to this story, two out of three Americans favor drastic changes in the economic system. Also, according to a poll conducted for this PBC by the Hart Research Association, one third of the people polled felt that "capitalism has had its day and is on the decline." And, a majority of those questioned would support a presidential candidate "who favored employee control of companies," which is outright socialism, of course.

Later in the story it was admitted that only 1,200 people had been polled (probably selected beforehand). But the damage was done. Most people are of the opinion that capitalism and free enterprise are different names for the same system, and that to denounce one is to condemn the other.

Now, it seems that the once respected and respectable National Education Association has joined PBC and is promoting the idea of "A Declaration of Interdependence: Education for a Global Community." According to NEA:

"Humankind finds itself living with a system of political organization that does not always function well. The primary entity of that system is the nation-state, and the crucial trait of the nation-state is its sovereignty. Nation-states have been subject to no higher authority. . . . But nations can no longer achieve safety behind national frontiers. The world has been technologically, if not politically, integrated and the usefulness of unlimited sovereignty has been brought into serious question."

The foregoing is from a Teachers Study Guide which accompanies some filmstrips that are to be shown to students in public schools. The filmstrips "are designed to help students see the world as it is now and explore possibilities for how it might be in the future. The filmstrips question the usefulness of our system of sovereign nation-states. They challenge the students to design a more appropriate world system. . . ."

The study guide explains that since the films "deal with the most critical problems of our time, teachers will find they are appropriate for use in all secondary school social study classes. . . ."

The American Revolution Bicentennial Administration gave the federal government's official endorsement to the NEA's "Declaration of Interdependence" program a year ago, on September 26, 1974. Cooperating with NEA in the project are the left-wing Institute for World Order, the Jane Addams Peace Association, and the American Friends Service Committee (AFSC also sent a delegate to the Communist Conference in Havana which we mentioned earlier in this letter).

So, secondary school children become a captive audience to propaganda lectures and movie films denouncing American patriotism and praising World Government!

THE ECONOMIC PLOY

One of the most serious of the many faces being displayed by those who are promoting the Second American Revolution has been the subject of previous letters. Succinctly:

By creating an economic crisis that leaves millions unemployed and totally dependent on government welfare for food and shelter, and by simultaneously creating a condition of monetary inflation which makes it almost impossible for all but the super-rich to survive, a "crisis" has thus been engineered which will serve as evidence that the present economic system no longer works, and that the present form of government is no longer adequate to "provide for the general welfare" of the people. This, then becomes the excuse for a "national emergency" wherein the leaders of the Second American Revolution take over, seize control of everything, and set up a new form of government, which will become part of a newly established World Government.

And lest there be any confusion as to who these "leaders" may be, remember that it was John D. Rockefeller 3rd who wrote the preliminary book of instructions and labeled it "The Second American Revolution"!

Is there anything that Christian American Patriots should do about this situation that has come upon us? Is there any advice that might be given?

Perhaps repentance is the key to the door of national as well as individual hope. Too many of us have denied the faith, the faith that carried men through the First American Revolution. There are three great loves in the life of a Christian: love of God, love of family, and love of country, in that order of importance and intensity. And love is evidenced by faith: faith in God, faith in family, faith in country (not in men but in law).

And finally, we should remember that, as with faith in God, faith in family, or faith in country; faith without works is dead.

DON BELL REPORTS Weekly, accenting the Christian American point of view. Two copies of each issue are sent each subscriber. Subscription rate: $24 per year. Extra copies: 10¢ each. Address orders to:
DON BELL REPORTS, P.O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

THOSE SPURIOUS ATTACKS ON THE FEDERAL RESERVE SYSTEM

CONJURED UP OUT OF THIN AIR

Ever since its very inception in 1913, the methods utilized by the Federal Reserve Board to control the Nation's money—and determine its economic destiny—have been withheld from the public. Money is such a mysterious matter, say its controllers and creators, that only specially trained economists and monetary experts can fathom the arcane operations of a system such as that employed by Central Bankers. The operation of the Federal Reserve System is so secret that even the President of the United States and the Members of Congress are generally kept in the dark, and are seldom told how a dozen exalted men can expand or clamp a lid on the national economy with a few strokes of a pen.

Observant citizens probably have noticed that United States currency has been replaced by Federal Reserve notes, and that the chairman of the Fed—Arthur Burns—has been much in the news these past weeks. And it may have been noted that neither the President nor the Congress could sway him and compel him to change the fiscal course he has chosen to pursue, regardless of taxes or deficits or national debts. But just how the Fed ties in with this strange and uncomfortable national illness called stagflation is understood by few people. And this is the way the Feds have always wanted it to be.

Hence, it was with much amazement that many readers of the nationally circulated Sunday Newspaper Magazine, "Parade," thumbed through the stories of divorce booms and Raquel Welch's joy at being a sex symbol, to come upon an article which tells how the Fed, whenever it wants money, just "conjures it up out of thin air."

Most of our subscribers will be familiar with the way the Fed operates; but most people in the United States have never questioned the rights of the Fed to control our money supply, nor have they questioned the way it is done.

So, when the powers that be have always tried so hard (and so successfully) to make money mysterious, why the sudden publishing of a story that abolishes a good part of the mystery? Why this revelation after all these years of deepest secrecy?

The answer involves some political deception and subterfuge: Socialists, with Senator Hubert Humphrey as their mouthpiece, are attacking the Federal Reserve System, not to abolish it, but merely to change the membership of the Federal Reserve Board and its Open Market Committee, making them more responsive to socialist control. First, however, here is that article, reprinted in full, as it appeared in the October 26, 1975 issue of "Parade" Magazine:

WHERE YOUR MONEY COMES FROM

by Alexander Cockburn and James Ridgeway

Washington, D.C.—Who really decides the country's economic destiny? Is it the President, flanked by legions of advisers? Or is it the big New York banks with their control over loans? Or is it the Congress, setting tax policy? Every expert has his own theory. But more and more the experts have concentrated on one crucial factor—the secret decisions of a group of important men called the Federal Open Market Committee.

On the third Tuesday of every month 12 men gather in Washington. After hours of secret debate they vote on decisions that affect the lives of every man, woman and child in the United States. The place they meet is the closely guarded conference rooms of the Federal Reserve Board. The committee is made up of five presidents of different Reserve banks and seven governors of the Reserve Board.

These are the men who create the money we all spend. Each month at their meetings they all pore over their charts, study economic indicators, receive special reports and argue among themselves whether or not to make more money. In effect, they determine whether you will be able to buy a car, can afford to take a vacation or buy a new home. Their decisions can affect the security of your job.

One man dominates the meetings. He is Dr. Arthur Burns, chairman of the Federal Reserve Board. Burns steers the discussion and usually it is his view that prevails. Listening closely is another man—Alan R. Holmes. It is his job to implement the decisions of the committee. By the next day Holmes is back in New York and closeted with his staff on the eighth floor of the New York Federal Reserve Bank building in Wall Street. There, in the deepest secrecy, they plot their strategy for the next week.

Eye On The Goal

During the early part of 1975 Holmes' mission was single-minded—to pump money into the stagnant market places. And how he does it is really quite simple. If the Open Market Committee wants to create more money, then Holmes conjures it up out of thin air. Here's what happens:

Holmes buys government securities from one of the two dozen big banks or dealers licensed to trade in them. In effect, he gives the dealer a check, drawn against the Federal Reserve account. The dealer deposits this check with his bank and when the bank presents it to the Fed for collection, the Fed merely punches a few computer buttons and tells the bank that it has credited its reserves with the due amount.

So the bank has more reserves and thus can lend more money. Its borrowers find in turn that they can lend more, too. The sum the Fed has conjured out of thin air begins to circulate round the economic system. If Holmes writes out a lot of checks in one week, more money begins to circulate. Since the banks can make more loans, money becomes cheaper to borrow and hence business conditions pick up: loans for houses, cars, business activities are easier to obtain.

But how can the Fed write that check? Under the law it has what amounts to an open-ended bank account. It can create money whenever it wants. So when he returns to New York, Holmes gathers his staff about him and plots a strategy for the week. Then, Holmes spends a morning studying bank reports and economic analysis (sic) which pour into the New York Federal Reserve Bank. By 11 o'clock everything is ready. At 11:10 Holmes picks up the telephone for a daily conference call to key members of the Reserve system. They review the events of yesterday and discuss the plan which is about to be enacted. A summary of the conversation is telegraphed over the Fed's private network to all the members of the Federal Reserve system. Everything is cloaked in deepest secrecy.

Traders At Work

The scene shifts to a modern room with orange carpets. There teletype machines quietly click away. Eight traders are poised at their "turrets." Two casually dressed attractive girls wearing headsets move about changing quotes on a blackboard along one side of the room. The atmosphere is that of a tasteful betting parlor. Within minutes of the end of the conference call the traders have opened their phones and are in contact with the leading banks and security dealers in the nation.

The "go-around" begins. With no flicker of indication of their strategy the traders test the waters of the market—the prices of different government securities. Minutes later they are off the phone and in a huddle. Quickly they review the prices offered and, if the plan is to inject more money into the system, they begin to buy. At the other end of the telephones, in the banks and trading houses, the dealers and their colleagues strain to interpret the Fed's strategy. Is the Fed subtly changing its policy? Is it really shoveling money into the system? If so, then interest rates will change; the stock market may improve. Within hours of the news of the Fed's latest move, people are engrossed in speculation

The Results

Week by week this game goes on. Over the months major changes in Fed policy become visible. Fueled by this money-making device the economy picks up or lets down. This is the power of the Federal Open Market Committee. But there are those who say that decisions of this importance should not be taken in secret meetings of bankers and government officials. Congressman Wright Patmen, the elderly Texas populist who has spent much of his political life attacking the Federal Reserve's money policies, calls the Federal Open Market Committee "one of our most secret societies. These 12 men decide what happens in the economy...In making decisions they check with no one—not the President, not the Congress, not the people. If Congress votes a tax cut to stimulate the economy, the Federal Open Market Committee can meet the next morning, instruct its trading desk to sell bonds, and sop up the credit—wiping out any benefits from the tax increases. Under the present law the Federal Open Market Committee has the power to make monkeys out of the President and the Congress any time it chooses."

Even among the officers of the system there are bitter disputes about the monetary policies it puts into practice. Daryl Francis, president of the St. Louis Federal Reserve Bank, argues that the board has been adding too much money to the economy which results in both inflation and high interest rates. At the height of the recession, Francis said, "I believe that the risk is indeed great that the well-intentioned efforts to improve the economic situation in the short run by expanding money at too rapid a pace could create a nightmare solution in two or three years."

A Senator's View

In Congress, too, there are strong attacks. William Proxmire, the outspoken Wisconsin Democrat who heads the Senate Banking Committee, believes the rate of money flowing into the economy is at too slow a pace. "I agree," Proxmire recently told Dr. Burns at hearings on monetary policy, "that a moderate monetary policy may instill confidence on the part of some people, but I think what instills confidence is the growth of the economy, recovery of the economy, a drop in unemployment, real progress.

Dr. Burns takes all this criticism in stride. Only once did he seem vulnerable. That was last spring when there was a move by Patman and Henry Reuss, who superseded Patman as chairman of the House Banking Committee, to pass a law placing Fed money policy under closer Congressional supervision. Burns managed to sidetrack the legislation. Instead both House and Senate adopted a milder resolution requiring the Fed to "consult" with Congress on monetary policy that aims at full employment and stable prices.

"Before passage of the resolution," Reuss explains, "the Fed set monetary policy under a shroud of secrecy, accountable to no one. Now the Fed must report its money supply target to the House and Senate Banking committees every three months. This creates a new atmosphere, the Fed can no longer ignore Congress and the public, and Congress must take some responsibility for monetary policy as it does for fiscal policy."

Not everyone is as optimistic as Reuss. The Federal Reserve system has proved to be remarkably durable, seemingly immune from bids to place it under Congressional control. But recently its operations have come more under the spotlight of public attention. Burns recognizes this. After his recent testimony before Congress, where for the first time, Burns announced monetary policy targets, he won praise from all quarters. "It may serve a very constructive purpose to carry on these dialogues," Burns said. "We will understand one another better." Perhaps at last the long years of secrecy are over.

(end of article)

HUMPHREY AND S. 2540

The trial balloon was launched by Senator Humphrey at the annual convention of the AFL-CIO, held in San Francisco on Oct. 6. He talked to the labor union delegates of many things that should be done for the benefit of Big Labor—things that could be done if the right man were in the White House, although he insisted he was running for a Senate seat only. Then Humphrey said:

"But of all the things I have talked to you about, they really won't do much good unless we get everybody on the team. You know, we have an executive branch of government, a legislative branch of government, and a judicial branch of government. Then we have a fourth one called the Federal Reserve branch.

"Now, I want to talk to you about that. I have proposed tax cuts and programs, and I know they cost money. Unless this Federal Reserve Board cooperates, nothing is going to work.... I think it is time it was made more responsive to the Congress and the people.... I think it is time that someone in the Federal Reserve Board speak up for labor, for the consumer, for the farmers, or the smaller businessman, and that is why this week when I leave here and go back to Washington tomorrow, after a year of study, I will be introducing legislation in the Congress to undertake this long overdue reform of the Federal Reserve.

"Oh, I know I'm going to catch hell, I know that.

"And it will reorganize that board, a board of seven today that has five bankers, and we are going to put on that board one from labor, one from agriculture, one from small business, one to represent the consumer, and then we will give the other three spots to bankers and the corporations...."

(end of quotation)

Humphrey followed through. Fifteen days after having made that speech (which was well received by the labor delegates), he introduced in the Senate, S. 2540, "A bill to amend the Federal Reserve Act to reduce the length of terms of members of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, to provide for annual appropriations for the Federal Reserve Board, and for other purposes." In introducing the bill, Humphrey said, in part:

"... The basic problem, to put it in very simple terms, is that our central bank is not coordinated with the economic policies of the Federal Government. It operates as an independent body with all the mystery and majesty that the high priests of ancient Egypt exercised. My bill would bring it into the fold of Government and make it responsive to the needs of society, rather than to the commercial banks or to the particular philosophies of its leaders....

"... the discovery and development of this open market function, which is the essence of modern central banking, started a prolonged struggle for the control of this power. The struggle was between the dominant private banking interests and the advocates of public control of financial power. This was the issue that pervaded the debate on the 1935 amendments to the Federal Reserve Act.... Unfortunately, the final legislation embodied a compromise wherein the open market function was exercised by a separate open market committee made up of the seven governors of the Federal Reserve System and five reserve bank presidents, four of whom serve on a rotating basis. The President of the New York bank is a permanent member. This committee is one of the most important elements in the system because it controls the purchase and sale of Government securities." (Unquote).

THE FULL EMPLOYMENT ACT

The whole picture will become clearer if we recall that earlier this year—on May 21—Senators Humphrey and Javits jointly introduced a bill (S. 1795) that, if made law, would bring total socialism to these United States via "economic planning." In introducing this bill, an interesting stratagem was employed: the bill was labeled an "amendment to the Employment Act of 1946 ... providing for the development and adoption of a Balanced Economic Growth Plan, and for other purposes."

It is important to note that this bill to revise the Federal Reserve Board membership is also tied in with the Employment Act of 1946. In introducing his "bill to amend the Federal Reserve Act," Humphrey told his colleagues on October 21:

"The Employment Act of 1946 marked a major break-through in the development of public economic planning. It permitted the Federal Government to 'coordinate and utilize all its plans, functions, and resources for the purpose of creating and maintaining ... conditions under which there will be afforded useful employment opportunities, including self-employment, of those able, willing, and seeking to work and to promote maximum employment production and purchasing power.'

"Reading this language today, it seems axiomatic that the mandate calls for the harmonious integration of fiscal and monetary policies, the two major instruments available to the Federal Government for influencing the economic climate. Yet neither the Federal Reserve System nor monetary policy are mentioned in the act.... My bill goes to the heart of the problem.... it requires that the actions and policies of the Federal Reserve Board be conducted in accordance with the programs and policies of the President and Congress under the Employment Act of 1946."

Please note that Senator Humphrey and his socialist colleagues have no desire to do away with the Federal Reserve System; they merely want to alter it and its membership in such a way as to assure that monetary policies will be coordinated with all economic planning policies, and with the goal of full employment. Hence, both S. 1795, the economic planning bill, and S. 2540, the amendment to the Federal Reserve Act, are tied in with the Full Employment Act of 1946, to create what amounts to an Act that would bring socialist totalitarianism to the United States, legally and absolutely!

Full employment in any country is possible only if the government of that country is the employer of last recourse. There is no unemployment in Soviet Russia, the government guarantees full employment, even if a few million must be employed in concentration camps. But, even in Russia, full employment can be assured only if the government also does all the economic and industrial planning, and coordinates all fiscal and monetary policies with such economic planning and full employment.

This is what went wrong in the United States (wrong for the socialist planners, that is): the Employment Act of 1946 would not work properly because the Federal Government could not dictate all economic planning throughout the Nation, and could not dictate the manner in which all money would be spent, and for what it would be spent.

These deficiencies would be eliminated with the passage of Humphrey's twin bills: S. 1795 which would amend the Employment Act of 1946, and S. 2540 which would amend the Federal Reserve Act of 1913.

In introducing his Planning Bill (S. 1795), Humphrey said: "The Federal Government has an obligation to the people under the Employment Act of 1946.... I believe the Balanced Growth and Economic Planning legislation... is a major step in providing the modern tools we need to improve the performance of the economy. A major piece of complementary legislation is the Equal Opportunity and Full Employment Act of 1975, which would focus federal planning and policy on providing full employment."

And when introducing his latest complementary bill (S. 2540), Humphrey said: "No other central bank in the industrialized world has the independence and the aloofness that we permit the Federal Reserve. This extreme degree of independence has caused us serious troubles in the past.

These problems can easily be eliminated and that is what my bill is intended to do."

Now, if we could take Humphrey's testimony and use it not to amend the Federal Reserve Act, but to rescind it, that would really be a reflection of the Spirit of '76!

DON BELL REPORTS Weekly, presenting the Christian American point of view. Two copies of each issue are sent to each subscriber. $24 per year. Extra copies: 10¢ each.
DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

"AND ABSOLUTE POWER CORRUPTS ABSOLUTELY"

AND FORD FALLS INTO THE CREDIBILITY GAP

The title of this letter is taken from an oft-quoted passage written by that great British historian, philosopher and politician, Lord Acton (1834-1902). The quotation contains two sentences; the second is usually omitted. It reads:

"Power tends to corrupt and absolute power corrupts absolutely. Great men are almost always bad men."

Since becoming the first unelected president in the history of our republic, Gerald Rudolph Ford has striven mightily to become known to the world as a great man. And he might have succeeded to a degree, had not the desire for power tanded to corrupt. The most glaring example of this occurred on the night of November 3, 1975, when President Ford stood before television cameras at a hastily-called press conference to tell the world about the new team of "his guys" and the dismissal of Secretary of Defense James Schlesinger and CIA Director William Colby, the resignation of Commerce Secretary Rogers C.B. Morton, the political separation of Vice President Nelson Rockefeller, etc.

First, Ford amazed the assembled press corps by insisting that all the changes in the "foreign policy team" were made by him, and by him alone, without any help or advice whatsoever from anybody whomsoever. He did it all with his own political hatchet, said President Ford. And everybody in the room must have known that he was taking credit for something he was told to do by his secret brain trust; a group that has told Ford what to do and when to do it ever since Ford decided he could "go it alone" without consulting with his Vice President on important policy decisions.

Ford began to listen to his own brain trust and disregard the Rockefeller brain trusters! And this, we believe, will bring about the political death of Gerald Ford, even as the same set of circumstances brought about the political death of Richard Nixon!

Let us use that "lamp of experience" of which Patrick Henry spoke:

President Franklin Delano Roosevelt had his brain trust: General Hugh Johnson, Alexander Sachs of Lehman Brothers, Raymond Moley, Rexford Guy Tugwell (who is still busy writing new Constitutions and promoting world government), and most important of them all, Bernard Baruch. It is true that FDR also developed a strong attachment to and dependence upon a second group: Harry Hopkins, Henry Agard Wallace, Harold Ickes, several imported British Fabians and some "best friends" who were Communists. But FDR remained loyal at all times to the three "men from Wall Street": Johnson, Sachs, and Baruch. Consequently, he remained in the Presidency until separated from it by death.

Richard Nixon also had his brain trust, and his "men from Wall Street", the Rockefellers and their CFR coterie. However, Nixon developed a divided loyalty. There was the group that had helped him score his initial political successes; men such as Rebozo, Haldeman, Ehrlichmann, Dean, etc. But it was Nelson Rockefeller who had made it possible for Richard Nixon to become President of the United States. Nixon was as much a "Rockefeller man" as was Henry Kissinger. But "his guys," his personal Prussian Palace Guard, protected him, praised him, made him feel both omnipotent and omniscient, and he began to feel that he could do it all "on his own and by himself" and that he no longer needed to worry about Rockefellers and Kissingers; especially after that tremendous election "mandate from the people" in November, 1972. And so, the political demise of Richard Nixon probably was determined when, at the conclusion of the Yom Kippur War, he went to Egypt and to Israel to steal the plaudits and adulation that Kissinger felt properly belonged to him. Kissinger threatened, on the spot, to resign; and he probably sent word to the Rockefellers: "It's either him or me." And it was Nixon, even as it was to be

James Schlesinger when Kissinger said: "It's either him or me."

As with Roosevelt and Nixon, Ford also has his brain trust. It is composed of a group of men who met daily to tell Ford what to do and how to do it in his early days as President after Nixon's resignation. They meet less often now, since Ford has become more adept at his job; but they are said still to advise him on every important decision he makes. And, when Ford said he decided on reshuffling of his Cabinet all by himself alone and without help or advice from any other person, that legendary credibility gap that has been dividing office holders from their constituents, began to loom large as the Grand Canyon.

Gerald Ford's brain trust, which certainly did advise him on how to reshuffle "his team," is composed of nine men:

Melvin Laird, former secretary of defense, now a consultant to Reader's Digest;

Bryce Harlow, former Nixon adviser, now an executive and lobbyist with Procter & Gamble;

William Whyte, lobbyist for U.S. Steel;

John Byrnes, former Wisconsin congressman, now a corporation lawyer specializing in taxes;

Senator Robert P. Griffin of Michigan, Republican Whip and long-time congressional ally of Ford's;

Donald Rumsfeld, White House chief of staff who was named by Ford to succeed James Schlesinger as secretary of defense;

Philip Buchen, old-time Grand Rapids friend of Ford, now his White House counsel;

William Scranton, former Governor of Pennsylvania;

David Packard, multinational industrialist who recently resigned as Ford's chief campaign fund-raiser.

All but the last two men named in this list met on October 16 at the White House to tell President Ford that he must make some changes in his "team." The story, as told by Saul Friedman of the Knight newspaper chain, goes like this:

"Since its earliest meetings, the group has been advising Ford to replace some of the more controversial members of the Nixon Cabinet. And more importantly, members of the group have been urging the President to take a strong leadership role over his top advisers and not allow them to give the appearance of dominating him...."

With the (Oct. 16) meeting in the background the President was moved to action when Schlesinger, on Oct. 20, blasted the House Appropriations Committee and its chairman, Rep. George Mahon, an old Ford friend, for making 'deep, savage and arbitrary cuts' in the Pentagon budget that would 'have harmful effects upon the defense posture of the United States.' A few days later in Florida, Schlesinger declared that 'by most of the available measures, American power is declining and Soviet power is rising.' Perhaps because Schlesinger has been popular with the right-wing and other hard-liners, the President took action...."

The truth of the matter has to do with egos rather than arms. Earlier this year the Washington bureau of Newsweek did a character sketch of James Schlesinger, stating:

"Schlesinger has long been a brusque, independent man who is used to getting his own way, but he can be flexible as well. By birth Schlesinger was a Reform Jew, but after graduating from college he made a tour of Europe and the Middle East and converted to Presbyterianism on the road. As a compromise with his wife Rachel, a Radcliffe girl and Methodist whom he married in 1954, Schlesinger and the family became Lutherans."

More importantly in the political sense, Schlesinger was a protege of Daniel Ellsberg, who stole the Pentagon Papers from the Rand Corporation, allegedly supplying copies of same to the New York Times, the Washington Post and the Soviet Embassy. We repeat: Schlesinger was a protege of Daniel Ellsberg, and Daniel Ellsberg was a protege of Henry Kissinger. According to the book, "Kissinger on the Couch," by Phyllis Schlafly and Admiral Chester Ward (Arlington House), it was through the recommendation of Kissinger that President Nixon on December 21, 1972, named Schlesinger as Director of the CIA, replacing Richard M. Helms. Later and again on Kissinger's recommendation, Schlesinger was named Secretary of Defense and was sworn in on July 2, 1973. Then, on November 3, 1975, and once again on the recommendation of Kissinger, Schlesinger was fired from this last post.

The simple facts devoid of political overtones: Schlesinger was the "creature" of Kissinger; the latter believed that through his "creation" he could run the Defense Department while at the same time running the State Department, the National Security Council and the United States Intelligence Community. However, as Lord Acton might have written: Power exalts the ego even as it breeds corruption. James Schlesinger must have begun to believe that, since he held the title to the Pentagon chieftainship, he ought to be able to exercise the powers of a boss in his own right, instead of being a mere stooge to Henry Kissinger. And so it came to pass that, whenever Kissinger made any policy statement having to do with defense or detente, Schlesinger immediately took the opposite side of the issue. By so doing he pleased Senator Scoop Jackson and any number of right-wingers and hard-liners, because what he said whenever he disagreed with Kissinger usually could be backed up by facts. This, of course, infuriated Henry Kissinger, who hates to be challenged in such matters, especially by a man who was once a faithful yes-man to the great Kissinger.

It followed, therefore, that when the Secretary of State declaimed: "It's either him or me," the choice was obvious.

As for Schlesinger's nominated successor, Donald Rumsfeld, that individual may be the only one of Ford's new appointees who will receive the consent of Congress. Lou Cannon and David Broder of the Washington Post collaborated on a news analysis which opined that:

"White House chief of staff Donald H. Rumsfeld, considered the master maneuverer of the Ford Administration... not only winds up with an important Cabinet post, secretary of defense, and access, with Henry Kissinger, to President Ford. He also left behind him in the White House as chief of staff his deputy, Richard Cheney, who is considered capable and loyal to Rumsfeld. While Kissinger still retains enormous power and prestige in the administration, it clearly is Rumsfeld who gained power...."

As for that man of many short-time jobs in many administrations, Elliot Richardson was considered a misfit in his new job as secretary of Commerce. Said the Wall Street Journal, which is supposed to speak with authority and wisdom in matters pertaining to trade and commerce:

"Even though he has served as Under Secretary of State, Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare, Secretary of Defense, Attorney General and Ambassador to Britain, Elliot L. Richardson is not qualified to be Secretary of Commerce.

"Above all, the post calls for a political veteran who can give the speech, 'What's Right With America' on an interminable dinner circuit. The Secretary should be the kind of person who can privately nod agreement that the country would be better off without labor unions. He should be able to sing the praises of the free market on Tuesdays and Thursdays, yet argue persuasively the rest of the week that the government should promote exports and that the Japanese should 'voluntarily' limit the amount of goods that Americans want to buy from Japan. The Secretary should be willing to trumpet the news that there is a $1 trillion capital information 'gap' that can be closed by doubling the investment tax credit and shortening up on coffee breaks.

"Clearly, Mr. Richardson is ill-suited to the post. We can't imagine him doing or saying any of the above.

"But President Ford's choice may prove to be most felicitous, both for Mr. Richardson and for the Commerce Department. For years, Mr. Richardson has been discussed as possible Republican presidential timber, except by the business community, which has never had direct evidence that he has learned what capitalism is all about in his previous posts. Commerce may benefit by Mr. Richardson's inquiring mind, which may help lift the department out of the 19th Century and make it a force to be reckoned with in Washington." (End of quote).

Aside from the satiric ridicule of the Commerce Department and Elliot Richardson's aversion to the capitalistic system, the Wall Street Journal suggests that Richardson is being brought back from London to be tried out for yet another post, perhaps that of Ford's running mate, replacing Rockefeller but still presenting a balanced ticket: one alleged Reagan-type conservative and one Rockefeller-type liberal.

It was this suggestion that Ford was bringing possible Vice Presidential material into Washington and onto Ford's first team, that got the President into further trouble with the press. The "Bush vs. Colby" blunder redounded disastrously, making Ford appear either too naive or too unknowing to be considered seriously for the post of elected President of the United States. When he announced that he was firing William E. Colby as director of the CIA, and was bringing George Bush back from his post in China to take Colby's place, it was quickly recalled that Bush was a very partisan politician. He had campaigned unsuccessfully against Sen.

Lloyd Benson in 1970, and he had headed the Republican National Committee during the second Nixon Administration.

The point being: The CIA is a non-partisan intelligence organization—or should be. Like Caesar's wife, the head of the CIA must be above suspicion politically, and must never be suspected of being either pro-Republican or pro-Democrat; being pro-American is the criterion by which CIA directors ought to be judged.

The controversy may never have occurred if nothing more had been said about it at that crucial press conference. It might have been taken for granted that Bush's love of America was greater than his love of the Republican Party. But a correspondent asked the President if Bush was being considered as a possible Vice Presidential candidate and was being brought back from China to test the possibilities; and the President hinted that this might be the case.

The reaction could have been expected: almost every conceivable excuse was conjured to keep Bush in China and Colby in the CIA. And Colby was rehired, asked to stay on at least for the rest of the year and until Senator Frank Church's investigating committee gets through with its probe of the U.S. Intelligence Community.

And that brings us back to Dr. Kissinger, who allegedly lost one of his hats, and is no longer titular head of the National Security Council. Let it be noted that Kissinger's loss of the National Security post had to do with maintaining his personal security. In all of these investigations of the CIA and other investigative agencies, Kissinger has been protected while CIA, FBI and other heads have fallen, but Kissinger's second hat hasn't even been targeted. Yet, as head of the National Security Council, and the Forty Committee, and the United States Intelligence Board, Kissinger has been in charge of every operation of every U.S. Intelligence Agency, be that operation legal or otherwise, domestic or foreign. How he has managed to escape censure in this regard is something of a "state secret." However, Senator Frank Church's ferreters are getting nearer and nearer to the heart of the problem. For this reason, Kissinger had to consent to give up his title as head of the NSC.

However, contrary to general reports, Kissinger gave up no power and no authority. His faithful assistant, Brent Scowcroft, is now head of the National Security Council, and he is an obedient and trusted Kissinger staffman.

And that leaves us with Nelson Rockefeller, who has divorced himself from Ford the candidate but must remain as bedfellow to Ford the President. And as he said at that press conference called especially to celebrate the new arrangement, this places Nelson Rockefeller closer to the Presidency "than I have ever been before."

Rockefeller said that he had accepted the appointment as Vice President because, if anything ever happened to the President ("God forbid," he uttered as an aside), then he would become President. Rockefeller also remarked—seemingly out of context—that historically, whenever an incumbent President campaigned for reelection, he almost always won that election and was returned to the White House. This left the unspoken hint that if by hook or crook, Rockefeller could be President of the United States before the next election, then he could probably remain President after the next election!

Think of the advantages now that Rockefeller won't run with Ford. Now he will be excused and exonerated from any future mistakes Ford might make; if Ford loses out, it will merely aid Rockefeller; if he wants to make a deal with Reagan or anyone else, he is free to do so; he has all the advantages of being Vice President without suffering any of its disadvantages; etc.

The parallel is striking: Ford needed Rockefeller in order to become President, now he thinks he can go it alone and no longer needs Rockefeller.

On the other hand: Rockefeller needed Ford in order to become Vice President, now he thinks he can go it alone and no longer needs Ford.

So an unelected President thinks he can be elected in his own right if he gets rid of that left-winged albatross named Rockefeller. And an unelected Vice President thinks he can be elected President if Ford follows Nixon into political oblivion before next November.

It will be something of a national blessing if both are proved wrong.

DON BELL REPORTS Weekly. $24 per year.
Extra copies: 10¢ each. Address orders to:
DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

PREPARING FOR POLICE STATE '76

PROTECTION IS PROMISED BUT PRIVACY PROSCRIBED

"Revolution Within The Form." These were the words used by the late, great New Deal critic Garet Garret, to describe the manner in which people within our government were converting it into a socialist dictatorship, while yet retaining its Constitutional, Representative Republican form of government. This modern type of revolution doesn't rely on arms and armies or coercive power as a principal weapon. Rather, it depends upon the art of friendly persuasion, the ability to enact "progressive" legislation, and the kind of mind-changing propaganda and mind-changing education which will cause the people to demand socialism as their human right!

A revolution of this kind is carried out by people who have positions of power within the government itself, and by selected "leaders" and change-agents having political, economic or social power. It follows, therefore, that it is important to these elitist leaders to have the right people in the right places in government at the right time. The many changes in personnel in positions of importance in the federal government during the past few years, would suggest that this is not an easy task. A national newsweekly observes:

"In not quite seven years, the Republican Administrations begun by Richard Nixon and continued by Gerald Ford have had an astonishing record of high-level turnovers. The CIA has gone through three directors—Richard Helms, James Schlesinger and William Colby—and will soon have a fourth, George Bush. The FBI has had four chiefs: J. Edgar Hoover, L. Patrick Gray (acting), William Ruckelhaus (acting) and Clarence Kelley. The Office of Management and Budget (formerly the Budget Bureau) has had five directors: Robert Mayo, George Shultz, Caspar Weinberger, Roy Ash and James Lynn.

"Most remarkably, the new nominees (of Nov. 1—Ed.) will bring to 36 the number of people occupying the eleven Cabinet jobs since January 1969—and that figure does not include the repeat performances of Elliot Richardson, George Shultz and Rogers Morton. The most stable departments have been State (William Rogers and Henry Kissinger) and Agriculture (Clifford Hardin and Earl Butz). All other departments have had from three to six secretaries:

JUSTICE: six—John Mitchell, Richard Kleindienst, Elliot Richardson, Robert Bork, William Saxbe, Edward Levi.

COMMERCE: five—Maurice Stans, Peter Peterson, Frederick Dent, Rogers Morton, Elliot Richardson (nominated).

DEFENSE: four—Melvin Laird, Elliot Richardson, James Schlesinger, Donald Rumsfeld (nominated).

TREASURY: four—David Kennedy, John Connally, George Shultz, William Simon.

LABOR: four—George Shultz, James Hodgson, Peter Brennan, John Dunlop.

HEW: four—Robert Finch, Elliot Richardson, Caspar Weinberger, David Matthews.

INTERIOR: four—Walter Hickel, Rogers Morton, Stanley Hathaway, Thomas Kleppe.

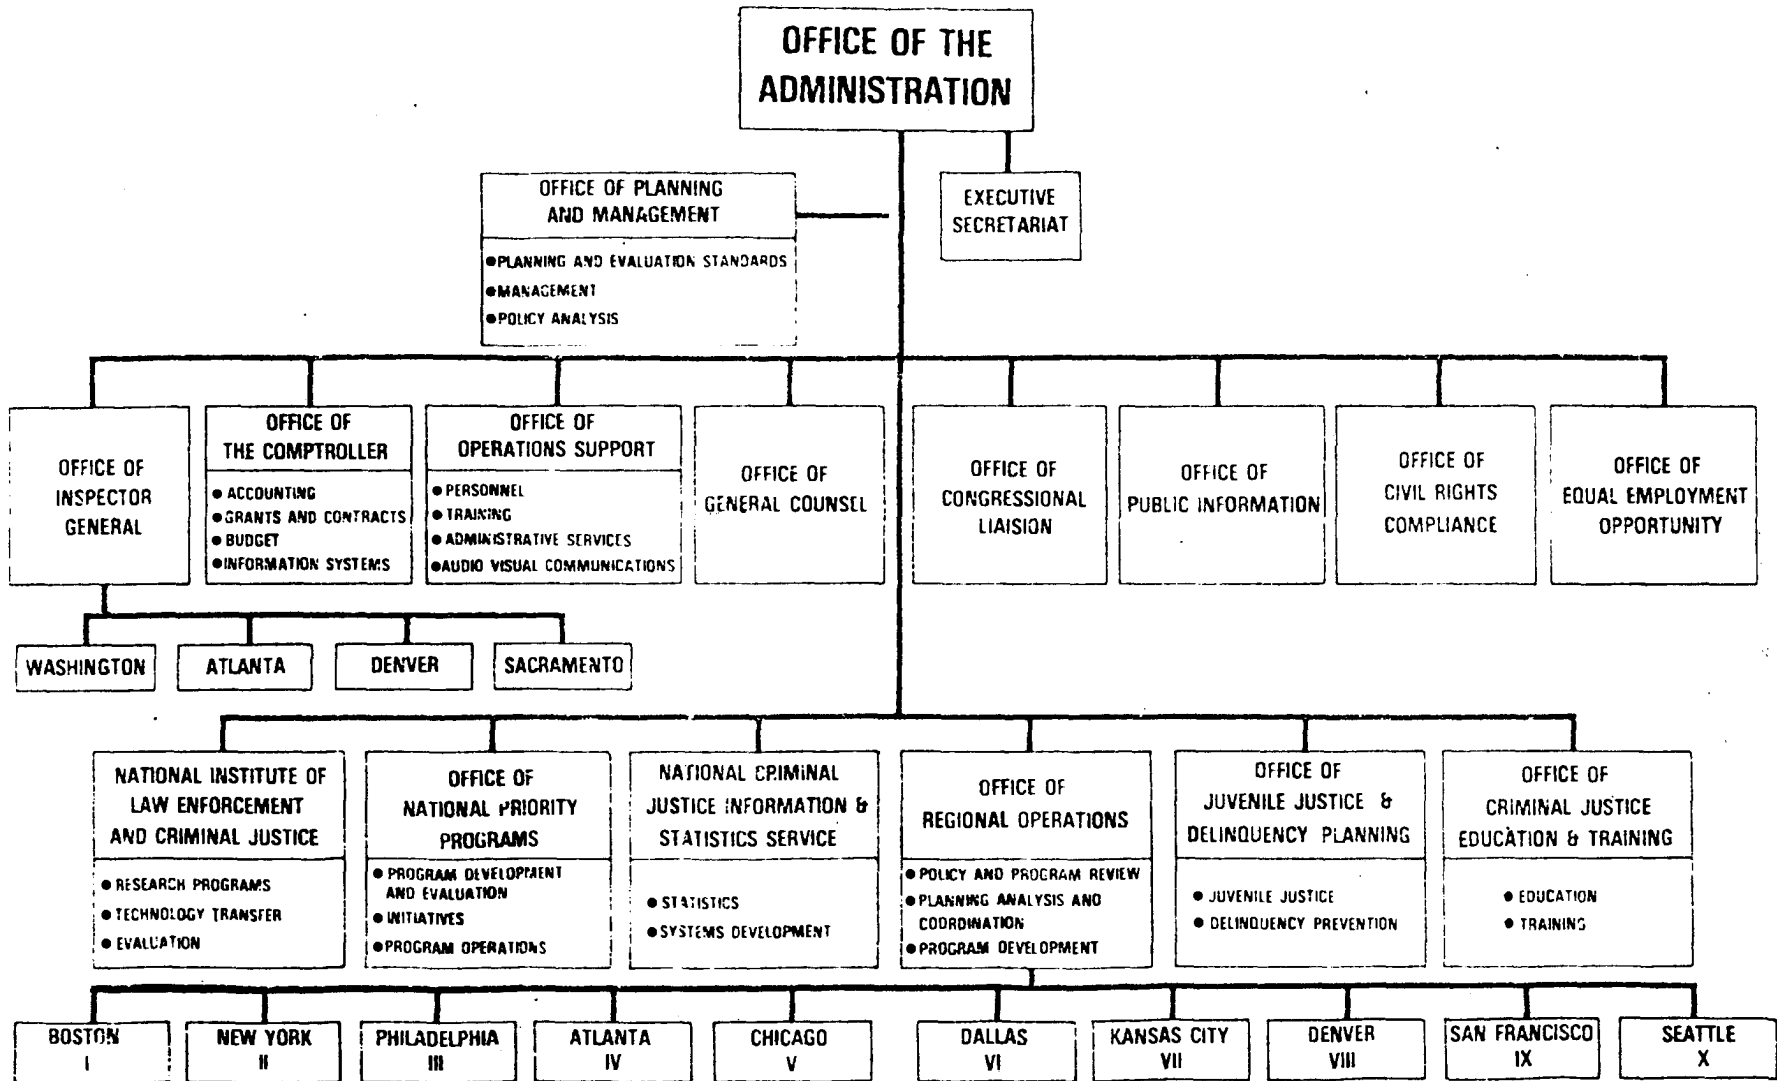

HUD: three—George Romney, James Lynn, Carla Hills.

TRANSPORTATION: three — John Volpe, Claude Brinegar, William Coleman."

(End of quotation)

It seems most important to note that during the "revolutionary years" beginning with the first Nixon Administration, only one man—Henry Kissinger—has remained continuously and uninterruptedly in a key position in the federal government. The Vice President was removed, the President was removed, men were appointed to occupy these posts. But Henry Kissinger remained throughout the many changes; first as Foreign Policy Czar, then also as Commissar of Intelligence, and finally as Secretary of State, but always as a chief assistant to the President, whomever that personage happened to be.

We remarked that in this modern type of revolution, the chief weapons used by the revolutionists were persuasion, legislation and education. One of their most important objectives involves the establishment of a national police force. For this purpose, a vicious kind of psychological warfare is now being used. We like Calvin Steinberger's description:

"Very basically, the strategy of this technique for conquest is as follows: (1) Government agencies (such as the Office of Economic Opportunity) and tax exempt foundations (such as the Ford and Rockefeller) are financing the escalation of crime from below — among such groups as the MAFIA, Communist terrorist organizations and racially oriented subversives. (2) The same government and tax exempt foundations acting through the LEAA (Law Enforcement Assistance Administration), are creating a nationally controlled police network at the top, in order to offer collective solutions to the crimes from below. (3) When trouble erupts from below—such as a riot, etc— the 'duped' American middle class citizens will then be expected to scream and holler for 'relief and protection' from the already established national police force at the top. This produces a demand 'by the people' that more power be placed in the hands of the central government. The 'pincers' will close when the government begins to surrender to the demands of the mobs 'in order to prevent further violence,' while simultaneously centralizing police power 'in order to restore law and order. This technique of conquest has been used successfully throughout history. The coup de grace comes when the Comrades use the centralized police to confiscate all privately owned firearms."

(End of quotation)

Opposite is an official diagram taken from a federal government manual, showing the extent of the LEAA, which is the nucleus of the National Police Force that is being built. Accompanying this diagram is a description of LEAA and how it operates. We quote from this official text:

"The Law Enforcement Assistance Administration (LEAA) was established June 19, 1968... is under the general authority of the Attorney General, and is headed by an Administrator.... The purpose of LEAA is to assist State and local governments to reduce crime.... The agency's programs are principally delivered by four offices. LEAA's Office of Regional Operations implements the LEAA program through 10 regional offices.... Block planning funds are granted to each State to finance development of an annual comprehensive law enforcement plan. The plan is prepared by the State Planning Agency (SPA), and reflects the needs of city and county, as well as State governments....

"With the approval of the comprehensive plan designed to meet the needs of the state-wide criminal justice system, each State then receives a block action grant to carry out the planned programs and projects. For most action grants... the Federal share is 10 percent. The purpose for which these action grants may be used include: development of public protection devices, the recruiting and training of law enforcement personnel, public education, projects to prevent and control civil disorders, improvement of courts and correction systems, the organizing and training of special units to combat organized crime, and improvement of police-community relations....

"...Approximately 10 percent of the Nation's uniformed police have attended college courses with LEAA education grants.... Areas of study may include such subjects as police science, police administration, corrections, correctional administration, law, criminalistics, penology, criminology, deviant behavior, courts administration, or police-community relations. Education program funds are also being used for innovations in curriculum design.

"With a legislative mandate 'to encourage research and development to improve and strengthen law enforcement,' the National Institute of Law Enforcement and Criminal Justice makes grants to public agencies, colleges and universities, and private organizations...." (end of quoted excerpts).

At the State and local levels LEAA controls law enforcement agencies through the ten regional councils, each of which has a Regional Director. As of July 10, 1975, here are the names of those directors and their office addresses:

- Region I. Boston. George Campbell, Regional Administrator, 147 Milk St., Suite 800, Boston, MA 02109.
- Region II, New York. Jules Tesler, Assistant Administrator, 26 Federal Plaza, Room 1337, Federal Office Building, New York, NY 10007.
- Region III. Philadelphia. Cornelius Cooper, Regional Administrator, 325 Chestnut St., Suite 800, Philadelphia, PA 19106.
- Region IV, Atlanta. Charles Rinkevich, Regional Administrator, 730 Peachtree Street, N.E., Room 985, Atlanta, GA 30308.
- Region V. Chicago. V. Allen Adams, Regional Administrator, O'Hare Office Center, Room 121, 3166 Des Plaines Avenue, Des Plaines, IL 60018.

Region VI. Dallas. Robert Grimes, Regional Administrator, 500 South Ervay Street, Suite 313-C, Dallas, TX 75201.

Region VII, Kansas City, Marvin Ruud, Regional Administrator, 436 State Avenue, Kansas City, KS 66101.

Region VIII. Denver. Joseph L. Mulvey, Regional Administrator, Federal Building, Room 6324, Denver CO 80202.

Region IX. San Francisco. Thomas Clark, Regional Administrator, 1860 El Camino Real, Burlingame, CA 94010.

Region X. Seattle. Bernard Winkoski, Regional Administrator, Room 3292, 915 2nd. Ave., Seattle, WA 98174.

These are your local police commissars, depending upon which Federal Region has engorged your particular State (which was once a Republic, and which should have remained a Republic, according to the United States Constitution).

On March 3, 1971, Clarence Coster, Associate Administrator of LEAA, told a meeting of Police Chiefs that the American police must be "regionalized." He said: "Today in this country, we have 40,235 law enforcement agencies, ranging from one-man departments to New York City, with more than 40,000 police officers. This many units form a completely ungovernable body."

That the American police are to become a nationally governed body, is the aim and the purpose of LEAA. How this is being accomplished is explained in the official description of LEAA from which we have quoted.

Recently, the FBI has been enlisted in the plot to nationalize the American police. The following editorial which appeared in the New York Times of Sunday, November 9, 1975, discusses this new development.

COMPUTER FEDERALISM

The plan to put the Federal Bureau of Investigation criminal information computer center at the service of local law enforcement agencies has now gone to the White House for approval. The basic question for the President to ask about this plan is: Who needs it?

Although the F.B.I. asserts that the plan is in large measure a program for the decentralization of state criminal records, its central feature is that the F.B.I. would be the switchboard of a nationwide computerized information exchange system.

Opponents of the plan have argued that it would give the F.B.I. too great a technological capacity to intrude upon local law enforcement functions, thus moving it one step closer to becoming a national police force. Proponents of the plan, including F.B.I. Director Clarence Kelley, argue that it would enhance local law enforcement capabilities and that the F. B. I. has no intention of overstepping the limits of propriety.

This proposal raises anew the question of how best to control the Government's technological capacity to intrude on the rights and liberties of American citizens. Unlike the related problem concerning the capabilities of the National Security Agency, this issue can easily be resolved—because the best solution is not to establish such capacity if it is unnecessary. The states already operate their own telecommunications system which will be able to interchange criminal history records within another twelve months.

Deputy Attorney General Harold Tyler argues in behalf of the F.B.I. plan that it is consistent with the new federalism. It would seem that helping the states perfect their own system without Federal intervention is more in keeping with the spirit of the new federalism and of the old federalism as well.

No space for comment on the foregoing, but FBI Director Kelley is an active supporter of LEAA, served on the Police Task Force of its National Advisory Commission on Criminal Justice Standards and Goals. The proposed tie-up between LEAA and the FBI is ominous indeed, and foreshadows a future Police State when this Nation's socialization has been completed and made secure.

The present plan: destroy the morale and efficiency of locally controlled law enforcement agencies, turn the streets over to criminals and revolutionary subversives, and prepare for the time when a terrified public can be "persuaded" to demand the services of the already prepared, centrally controlled, national police force.

"Wherefore, take unto you the whole armour of God, that you may be able to withstand in the evil day, and having done all, to stand."

DON BELL REPORTS Weekly. $24 per year. Extra copies: 10¢ each. Please address all orders, inquiries and correspondence, to: DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223 Palm Beach, Florida 33480

THE AUTUMN OF POLITICAL BANKRUPTCY

A WORLD WITHOUT STATESMEN

The last of the soldier-statesmen has gone to his rest, leaving the world devoid of truly great leaders. Francisco Franco's name can be added to that list of nationalist heroes which included Douglas Arthur MacArthur, Chiang Kai-shek, Charles de Gaulle, and Winston Churchill. In their ideals and in their actions they may not always have been in the right, as God gives others to see the right, but they were respected, honored, venerated by their followers. In trying to keep their countries together they helped to keep the world from falling apart; and there is none to replace them. The day of the soldier-statesman has ended, and the morning of the economic-political tyrant is fast approaching its noontime zenith.

This dearth of leadership, which is worldwide in scope, is understood by such as Henry Kissinger, who likes to manipulate leaders and is hard put to find any leaders worth manipulating, whether in the West or in the East, or even in the Mideast where he might have been expected to feel at home but where the Israelis look upon him as a traitor because he embraces their enemies. Just before accompanying Jerry Ford to Paris and that so-called economic summit of the world's principal industrial powers—the United States, Japan, West Germany, Britain, France and Italy—Kissinger gave the reason for the trip to a select gathering of members of the Pittsburgh World Affairs Council (a satellite of the CFR): He told them: "The deepest consequence" of the current depression "is not economic but the erosion of people's confidence in their society's future.... This worldwide crisis of the democratic process is the deepest challenge before the leaders at the economic summit. They meet to give their peoples the sense that they are masters of their destiny."

Of course, the summit was a failure in this respect. As The New York Times admitted editorially, "the summit is more political than economic in purpose." The political purpose on Ford's part was to impress the people with his "foreign affairs expertese," which is supposedly the weakest chink in the political armor of his chief opponents—Ronald Reagan and George Wallace.

But there were no real leaders at that Paris meeting, only political puppets, with the possible exception of Helmut Schmidt of West Germany and Valery Giscard d'Estaing of France. Of the other four, Wilson of Britain balances precariously in an uneasy position where some sudden wind of discontent could blow him off his political perch; while Aldo Moro of Italy counts his Premiership by days rather than years; and Schmidt of West Germany, Takeo Miki of Japan, and Gerald Ford of the United States all face upcoming elections next year. A motley sextet to settle the world's economic ills. One may rest assured that whatever was accomplished at that summit was masterminded by Henry Kissinger—and it will take far more than a charge of contempt of Congress to pry loose any details that are being reserved exclusively for the ears of the Rockefeller Brothers.

Still referring to the dearth of leadership, especially in the United States, it is now beginning to appear that any candidate who sounds like a conservative—whether he be serious or otherwise in that respect—automatically becomes a target for potential assassins' bullets. At first it seemed that perhaps Ford and Reagan were being promoted so that there would be a deadlock at the Republican National Convention; this paving the way for the entry of a dark horse, Rockefeller or his hand-picked stooge if it still became impossible for Nelson to make his lifelong dream come true. Now, however, there is the hint that there is a conspiracy to scare everybody out of the Republican race or otherwise eliminate anyone who might qualify as "the people's choice."

Still referring to the dearth of leadership, this time on the international plane, permit us to cite James Reston, a columnist with The New York Times. Please understand, we are neither a fan nor an admirer of this man who is one of the ablest mouthpieces of the Eastern Establishment. Allegedly, it is "Scotty" Reston who writes into his columns hints and cues as to the policies and attitudes that are to be promoted and projected by the multitudinous lesser brethren who look to this Eastern Establishment for their sustenance. And because what Reston foretells so often comes to pass, it becomes important to learn what the enemy has in mind by forcing one's self to read The New York Times, and especially columnists Reston and Sulzberger.

Reston's column of Sunday, November 16, 1975, touched on this dearth of leadership, and what we may expect to happen as a result thereof. And we suspect that Reston is right in much of what he writes (in this column, that is). Therefore, we quote parts of the column:

WAITING FOR THE FUTURE

Washington—Don't expect any major domestic or foreign policy developments out of here in the next twelve months. Until the future leadership of the United States, the Soviet Union, and China is much clearer than it is now, the big three will be in a holding pattern.

The visit of Leonid Brezhnev to the United States has been put off until next year, and in his poor state of health, he may not be in power long enough after the Communist Party Congress early in 1976.

President Ford's China trip next month is not expected to produce anything substantive. Mao Tse-tung is still said to be mentally alert, but he is no longer able to speak and writes his answers to visitors' questions on paper. Chou En-lai has vanished from the political scene into a hospital in Peking. So Washington, Moscow and Peking are all hesitating to make any long-term commitments until they know who will be in charge at the end of next year.

The outlook in the Middle East is for stalemate. With the U.S. elections coming on, Ford is not likely to press the Israelis to make more concessions to the Arabs in the next twelve months....

Meanwhile, the politics of succession dominate almost everything. New York may not default on its debts, but Washington is already in a state of political bankruptcy. The President's trips to Paris and later to Peking are seen here primarily as good television and political opportunities....

This... is the main reason why there is now a pause in making major policy decisions at home or abroad in the next twelve months. It is not only that Ford, Brezhnev, Mao Tse-tung and Chou En-lai will be off the stage a year from now, but also that the whole leadership of the United States Congress in both the House and the Senate, may also be quite different after the primaries, the Bicentennial, and the Presidential election next November.

The presiding figures on Capitol Hill then may very well be not Mike Mansfield of Montana in the Senate but Senator Robert Byrd of West Virginia, and not Carl Albert of Oklahoma, but Tip O'Neill of Massachusetts, or somebody else. This is not merely speculation. Changes in the leadership of the U.S. Congress are already under way, and this is one more reason why everybody is waiting to see what happens, not only in the leadership of Moscow and Peking but at the White House and in the Congress.

After the Thanksgiving holidays and Christmas in America, after the Communist Party Congress in Moscow early next year, after the inevitable succession of new leaders in Peking, the cards in the world political deck will be quite different.

Then the parties at home and the nations abroad may come back to the basic problems of population control, arms control and the hunger and misery of the majority of the human family. But not before then. For next year, all the major powers will be waiting on the accidents of life and politics. They will deal with the larger questions later on—at the earliest, at the beginning of 1977.
(end of extended quotation)

BUT WHAT ABOUT THE UNELECTED RULERS?

It should be noted that when Reston refers to the lack of leadership, especially in the West and particularly in the United States, he is referring to elected leaders and to the fact that the big changes that must be made by elected leaders, must wait until the beginning of 1977.

What Reston omits is the equally important fact that when there is no strong elected leadership to direct the course of the Ship of State, then the Unelected Bureaucracy and the rightly named Invisible Government have full control over the destiny of the Nation.

There exists a Conspiracy whose aim is to complete and perpetuate a Revolution in these United States in the Bicentennial year of 1976. For this purpose, it is better for the Conspirators if there exists no strong elected leaders in 1976. It serves their purposes well that Ford, Mansfield and Albert "may very well not be...the presiding figures in Washington."

In a "top of the iceberg" manner, U.S. News & World Report touches on this situation in its Nov. 24 issue, in an article titled "Who Really Runs Washington?" Taking a look at what it terms the Super Bureaucrats, the article begins:

"Once again it is the politicians who are attracting the attention as the U.S. heads into a presidential-election year. Yet the fact is, politicians come and go in Washington...It is the 'Super Bureaucrats' who stay forever—and it is they who really run the Government in Washington. Elected by nobody, the Super Bureaucrats form a thin layer of anonymity between the rank-and-file Government workers and those appointed to top-level jobs with each new Administration. Numbering barely 10,000, they direct the work of the 2.9 million federal civilian employees.

"In the Super Bureaucrat's hands, for the most part, are the big billion-dollar decisions. They dole out welfare and rule on who is—or is not—eligible for aid, federal contracts and subsidies...They promote or sidetrack bills in Congress, maintaining close political ties that transcend party lines. And they tell Presidents what they can and can't do..."

Now, this is the sixty-four billion dollar question: Who tells the Super Bureaucrats what they can and can't do? And who is able to maintain among them those "close political ties that transcend party lines"?

The only positive answer seems to reside in the letter St. Paul wrote to Timothy: "For the love of money is the root of all evil." (I Timothy 6:10). It would follow, then, that he who provides the money subsidizes the evil. We all, as taxpayers, are guilty in part, because we continue to submit to the fleecing and do little to resist the evil. The following article brings us up-to-date and illustrates in dollars and sense our present predicament:

(From Dr. George Benson's National Program Letter, November, 1975)

BIG GOVERNMENT

Some years ago, after Walt Disney had completed Disneyland in California, someone asked him if he were rich. He replied, "Of course I am rich. No one could owe $7 million and not be rich." When most Americans talk about the United States being the richest nation in history, they are thinking about the productivity of our industries, the richness of our farm output, and the high standard of living enjoyed by the American people. Perhaps it is time we began to measure our richness by our debt. The results might change our minds about just how rich America really is.

The debt of the Federal government by the standard we call the National Debt is now about $450 Billion — over a half-trillion dollars. If we take into consideration the unfunded obligations of the future, the figure suddenly swells to more than one and a half trillion dollars.

At this present moment, government at all levels is taking approximately 43% of the total gross national product. That means the average person is paying 43% of everything he earns to pay his part of government spending.

In addition to debts of the Federal government in Washington, it is estimated that American Corporates owe debts totaling more than a trillion dollars. State Governments have begun to put the brakes on their indebtedness. State and Local governments slowed the rise in their debts in 1973 to the lowest rate of increase since 1946. Their net debt rose $9.5 billion, compared with $12.5 billion in 1972. This simply means that the closer government is to the people who have to pay the bills, the more restraints the people are able to impose on elected officials.

It only takes a little simple arithmetic to figure out just how much each of us is in debt because of government spending policies alone. The National Debt stands at approximately $540 Billion, and State and local debt stands at $215 Billion. That makes a total of $755 Billion for which the American taxpayer is responsible. By dividing the number of Americans, 220 million, into the total debt, we come up with approximately $3,430.00 as the average individual share in the total government debt for every man, woman and child in the United States. For an average family this means $13,720. Then this year's Federal budget amounts to approximately $365 Billion dollars and the same arithmetic tells us that the average American man, woman and child is going to have to pay $1,659. For an average family of four, that means the 1975 tax load alone on the average is $6,636.00

The time has come for the American people to ask some very hard questions and demand some truthful answers. Such questions as: How can we afford to continue to give money away in the form of foreign aid to foreign nations that have already become wealthy? How can we continue to lend money to a total of 108 nations to the tune of $58 Billion in long-time loans? This debt is separate from the $188 Billion which the United States has given away since World War II with no provision for replacement. Russia owed the United States $1.9 Billion. We settled it at 28 cents on the dollar in 1972. Why?

Why does the United States continue to pay the lion's share of the U.N. costs when 68 of the member nations are far behind in their payments on the regular budget of that organization? Why don't we tell the world that Russia owes to the U.N. more than any other member?

The unlimited power to tax has always in the end created unlimited power, and has destroyed the freedom of the people.

It is time for Americans who want to preserve our freedoms and our prosperity to do some serious thinking.

Here is our situation as a nation and a citizenry: We have no effective elected leadership, and this condition will continue throughout the so-called Bicentennial Year. However, the Super Bureaucrats and those who tell them what to do, remain in charge of our Federal government and, through the Regional Governance set-up, they are also in charge of most of the activities of State and Local governments.

Through legislation already enacted, and executive orders already published, the implementation for the completion of this so-called "New Revolution" has been provided. The non-elected rulers of our Nation have the tools to complete the task of converting this Nation into a Corporate Socialist State. Only one little detail remains: the Revenue Sharing scheme is about to expire. Elected officials are needed to renew the authority and vote the appropriations needed to continue the supply of "bait" which is used to hook State and Local officials and make them a part of the Regional Governance Conspiracy (again, the love of money is the root of the evil at the grass roots).

But no difficulty is expected in regard to the extension of Revenue Sharing. Meanwhile, those unelected officials are getting busy.

Example: Under the auspices of the Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations (ACIR), leaders of the 1313 Cabal met on Oct. 20, 1975, to complete ACIR's 1976 edition of the "State Legislative Program." This is a collection of sample bills prepared by the 1313 Elite, and sent to all State Legislators, who are supposed to act as sponsors for these bills, and get them enacted into legislation at the State level. We are told that this year's "mail order" bills cover "ten comprehensive subject areas." The next sessions of State Legislatures will see these bills being proposed and promoted at every State level.

In this, as in other similar moves to collectivize the Nation, elected officials at the Federal level are not required. That part of the program has been completed. What is yet needed is the aid of elected officials at the State and local levels. Despite the inroads made by Centralists and Collectivists, there still remains a considerable amount of political power at the State and Grass Roots level. Despite the creation of the Ten Federal Regions, the States have not yet been destroyed, although the plight of New York City and New York State are intended to be examples of how the Centralists expect to be able to take over all municipalities and all States "in due time."

This should show to the true Christian and Patriot that if he hopes to save his country he must first save his own locality, his own State, and let the power flow upward.

DON BELL REPORTS Weekly, presenting the Christian American point of view. Two copies of each issue are mailed to each subscriber, except overseas airmail where postage rates preclude. $24 per year. Extra copies: 10¢ each. Address all orders to:

DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

UNCLE SAM PREPARES HIS SEASONAL GIFT LIST

ISRAELIS HEAD THE LIST

Just before the United States Congress took its traditional Thanksgiving Day recess the Secretary of State, Henry Kissinger, made an appearance, without benefit of subpoena, before the House International Relations Committee to try to explain just why both Israel and Egypt must receive unusually large handouts when the foreign aid goodies are distributed to the scores of needy neighbor nations this fiscal year. Under the title "Security Assistance," Kissinger asked for $4.7 billion, more than 70% of which is earmarked for Israel, Egypt and the other Arab Nations. It seems that the Israeli economy is in a shambles, even worse than that of New York City (a city which claims more so-called Jewish residents than the whole State of Israel). The Israelis never have been able to pay their own way; since the very day that Harry Solomon Truman declared Israel to be a recognized Nation, the country has depended upon foreign handouts and donations for its very existence. But since the October War two years ago things have been worse than ever before. At that time the United States gave Israel a special gift of two billion dollars, which was used to replace the weapons lost during the Yom Kippur War. But, in the words of Don Farmer of CBS, Israeli's civilian economy "has been pounded, drained, pummelled and inflated to the point of disaster. Israel has devalued its own currency, restricted its own luxury imports, and generally imposed austerity upon its three million residents. And still, Israel is in trouble."

The situation is so bad that the Israeli Defense Establishment cannot afford to purchase any Pershing missiles, which are needed to propel nuclear warheads if and when such propulsion seems expedient. So, Henry Kissinger asked Congress for a gift of $2,240,000,000.00. He assured shocked Congressmen that none of this money would be used to buy Pershing missiles from the United States. However, Israel would be able to buy them from a "third party" when the two and a quarter billion dollars would be given her.

As for Egypt, only $750,000,000.00 is earmarked for that country for the next fiscal year. However, it should be clearly understood that this is bribe money; nothing more and nothing less. It is money that was promised to Sadat if he would play the game with Kissinger and sign that phony truce agreement with Israel; an act that won more plaudits for Kissinger, but heaped the coals of scorn and contempt on the head of Sadat because the other Arab leaders wanted no part of Sadat's "selling out." Again quoting Don Farmer, who covers the Capitol for CBS:

"Dr. Kissinger told Congress that aid to Egypt was necessary. Sadat had led his country into the path of Arab moderation...

"Kissinger reminded Congressmen that Sadat had alienated many other Arab leaders with his moderate position visavis Israel. Sadat needs U.S. aid to survive. He had put his future in the hands of the U.S.

"Kissinger courted Sadat, he wooed him, he touted him, he romanced him, maybe he even warned him. Whatever, Sadat gave up his Russian connections, landed squarely in the lap of the Americans. So, having come over to our side, Sadat then asked us to help him stay solvent."

Of course, this gift of $750 million to Sadat and $2.24 billion to Israel is not all the expense involved in Kissinger's interim peace agreement. For example, Israel is oil poor and during the October War she seized some oil wells that belonged to Egypt. As a part of the temporary truce settlement, Israel was talked into giving the oil wells back to Egypt. However, Kissinger promised to reimburse Israel for the oil, and this will cost American taxpayers from $350 to $450 million a year for the next five years. According to Israeli sources, Kissinger promised to see to it that Israel has sufficient oil and gas to satisfy Israeli requirements, even if drastic rationing has to be instituted in the United States!

Also, the United States is to pay for that early warning system, the cost of staffing technicians and back-up teams; which will run into more millions of dollars. It is estimated that the overall cost to the U.S. taxpayers of the Middle East Peace Pact will amount to about $25 billion over the next five years.

This all comes under the general heading of foreign aid. However, foreign aid has many names and a diversity of deceptive titles.

Nowadays, for example, when it is a matter of aid, say, to Russia, it is labeled trade. However, before Russia buys anything from us, in most cases she has borrowed from us the money to make the purchase. Russia has a system: she borrows, finds it impossible to repay principal and interest, and then settles at so many cents on the dollar; as with the Russian war debt to the United States.

This business of foreign aid ties in with the policy of detente, but the connection is not immediately apparent. We'll try to explain and illustrate. First, however, we should like to quote a statement that was inserted in the Congressional Record on November 17, 1975, by Congressman Steven D. Symms of Idaho. The statement follows:

THE ORIGIN OF DETENTE

For many years now many Americans have wondered why the United States seems to make so many foreign policy blunders — blunders that seem to work out to the advantage of our adversaries. Many people have asked why we did not go for all-out victory in Korea, even when we could have done so without risking another world war because at that time the United States was the sole possessor of the atomic bomb and the means to deliver it. Going back a little further, many ask why the United States made such massive concessions to Stalin at the close of World War II, literally giving the Communists half of Europe and enslaving millions and millions of people, when there was absolutely no reason to do so. And, I have always wanted to know just why it was that we fought a 10-year "no-win" war in Vietnam that caused great turmoil within our country and weakened us strategically and economically while the Soviet Union rapidly built up their strategic nuclear forces. Then we go to the bargaining table with Russia and agree to a Strategic Arms Limitation Pact—SALT I—that allows the Russians to have 50 percent more ballistic missiles with much greater throw-weight than we do—all in the name of Henry Kissinger's policy of "detente."

There are a number of explanations and theories for the tragic events mentioned. Recently I ran across one that is chilling to say the least. It was offered by Dr. Howard Kershner of the Northwood Institute in Houston, Texas. Dr. Kershner's comments are as follows:

Origin Of Detente?

At mid-century, Republican Congressman B. Carroll Reece of Tennessee was appointed chairman of the committee to investigate the big foundations. A friend of mine, Norman Dodd, was associate counsel in charge of research. One of his responsibilities was to interview the president, or other officers, of the larger foundations. Among others, he interviewed Mr. Rowan Gaither, at that time president of the Ford Foundation.

In answer to Mr. Dodd's request for information as to how the policies of the foundations were determined, Mr. Gaither replied:

"We who are working for the large foundations formerly worked for the State Department, the Marshall Plan, the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Association, or other foreign relief agencies. In those capacities, we were working under instructions from the White House, to bring about such sociological, economic, and political changes as would make union with Communist Russia easy and comfortable for the American people."

"Now," he continued, "in the foundations we are working toward the same objective."

That was a frank statement of the purpose of detente. Years earlier Franklin Roosevelt inaugurated the policy when he reversed the policies of four previous Presidents: Wilson, Harding, Coolidge, Hoover, and their secretaries of state, by recognizing Communist Russia. From that day to this, every man who raised his voice against communism in high places in our country was persecuted, hounded, and in some cases, lost his life as a reward for his efforts to counteract the Communist movement in our country.

What Rowan Gaither reported, as stated above, was in line with this policy of assisting communism.

It is hard for Americans to believe these facts. I asked Norman Dodd to give me a written statement concerning the incident I have quoted. He did so, and I have it on file. I have quoted it on the platform, over the radio, and in print, for a score of years, and it has never been challenged.

=====

A correspondent whose opinions on world and national affairs we regard highly, wrote recently:

"The International Banking Syndicate is the 'guiding hand and all-seeing eye' behind the entire International Socialist, and/or Communist, or One-World Movement. Said simply and without elaboration, Communism is merely a 'front' for the Syndicate. It was designed to be the 'hammer' and Finance Capitalism is the 'anvil.' And with these two instruments, the world is to be pounded into one unified mass: one government, one economy, one integrated race, and one religion. Once the pounding and the shaping has been accomplished, the 'hammer' (Communism) will simply be discarded as no longer required. And, unless and until the American people can be educated to a full understanding of this conspiracy, I am afraid for the survival of our civilization."

Again, said simply and without elaboration: the motive is the acquisition of wealth and power; the methods vary according to the people and places involved, the circumstances, and the overall timetable.

The time-table dictates "detente." This means that the time for uniting the U.S.A. with the U.S.S.R. and with the rest of the world is approaching. Therefore, the United States is to become "socialized" and the Soviet Union is to become "industrialized." This is the method being employed at the present time to "bring about such sociological, economic and political changes as would make union with Communist Russia easy and comfortable for the American people." And when this has been accomplished "the 'hammer' will be discarded as no longer required."

Thus, as was previously planned by the Syndicate, when the timetable called for such action, a specially trained agent of the Syndicate, Henry Kissinger, was brought forward and placed in the predetermined position of power. Using Nixon as a "front" Kissinger proceeded to establish that new relationship which he calls "detente" with the Soviet Union and with Communist China.

It was then that the "industrialization" of Communist Russia began in earnest:

The largest iron and steel plant in the world was built in the Soviet Union by the McKee Corporation, a multinational conglomerate of American extraction. The plant is an expansion and modernization of the U.S. Steel plant at Gary, Indiana. Another giant steel plant has been built at Kursh, Russia, by a West German multinational corporation. As a result, Iron Age magazine recently announced that the Soviet Union produced 137.6 million metric tons of steel in 1974, more than was produced by the United States or any other nation in the world.

Meanwhile, Armand Hammer and other oil interests began developing the Russian oil and natural gas potential. As a result, it is reported that Soviet Russia now produces more oil than the United States.

Here are some other results of the plan to "industrialize" the Soviet Union, as compiled by J. Fred Schlafly, President of the American Council for World Freedom:

"During the years 1973, 1974, and the spring of 1975, when the Soviet-aided North Vietnamese were conquering Southeast Asia, the United States was financing, building, and equipping the largest truck factory in the world on the Kama River in Russia.... During the same time the United States was financing, building and equipping the largest tanker shipyard in the world, on the Black Sea, the largest fertilizer complex in the world at Togliatti on the Volga River, and a very large chemical plant at Severodonetz.

"In April 1975 the Ford Administration licensed the sale to the Soviet Union of 11 late model, advanced design, giant computers, made by IBM, for $10 million.... On April 12, 1975 Sargent Shriver...announced that his clients, Lazard Freres, Banque Nationale de Paris, Morgan Guarantee Bank of New York, and 20 other big banks, were lending $250,000,000.00 to the Soviet Union 'with no strings attached to the loan.' Also on April 12, 1975, the Bank of America announced that it has a syndicate ready to lend the Soviet Union $500 million. Earlier this year the National Westminster Bank of London loaned the Soviet Union $100 million. On February 18, 1975 Prime Minister Harold Wilson agreed to give the Soviet Union $2 billion in low interest credits to acquire British plants and technology. Great Britain has owed the same sum, $2 billion, to the United States since a post-war 1946 loan, but insists she has no funds to repay us." (End of quote).

The foregoing will show quite clearly how the International Banking Syndicate (IBS) has moved in to take charge of Russia's "industrialization". This action follows a pattern which was established by the IBS when United States foreign aid programs first began after World War II with the Marshall Plan. David Rockefeller, dean of America's contributions to the IBS, was quite candid about this when he spoke before the Council on Foreign Relations at Chicago in April 1967. According to a syndicated article which appeared in the Philadelphia Inquirer on Nov. 24, 1974, he said:

"Not the least of the lessons we have learned in 20 years of dispensing foreign aid is the need for relying more extensively on the private sector—and that is now being done. The Agency for International Development has set up an Office of Private Resources specifically to help United States investors interested in the less developed countries."

"Indeed it has," commented the Inquirer. "So much so that if you look at the foreign aid program in just about any part of the world, you will find a connection with a Rockefeller financial interest."

In short, the IBS "uses" the federal government of the United States to "open the door" and then proceeds to move in and take over. This is true, of course, not only of the United States, but of all other countries that have central banking systems, ours being called the Federal Reserve System.

Lest there be any misunderstanding, please note that in this letter we are not discussing local commercial banks. They have nothing to do with the particular conspiracy which is the subject of this report. Indeed, the local banks are often victimized by the IBS, even as are governments and individuals. For example, in the IBS-induced Great Depression which brought on the New Deal, the banks not owned by IBS soon ran out of coin and currency and the Federal Reserve System refused to come to their aid. The Federal Reserve Act, which was supposed to eliminate bank failures, eliminated banks instead. The number of commercial banks in the United States dropped from 26,401 in 1928 to 14,771 in 1933.

THE BUSINESS ROUNDTABLE

There is, incidentally, a new organization that can be added to those already working with the IBS. According to an article by Eileen Shanahan which appeared in The New York Times of Nov. 16, 1975:

"A carefully organized lobbying effort, chiefly directed by a little-known organization whose members are all giant corporations, has succeeded in killing a proposed amendment to the antitrust laws. Similar efforts against other legislation are in process and planned.

"The organization is the Business Roundtable, whose 158 corporate members range alphabetically from the Alice (sic) Chalmers Corporation to Xerox Corporation. Its members include the three largest automobile manufacturers, the three largest banks, seven of the largest oil companies, the largest steel companies, major retailing organizations and many of the largest utilities, including American Telephone and Telegraph Company. The Business Roundtable has an annual budget of 'around $1.5 million,' according to its executive director, John Post. ... The money to run the Roundtable comes from the corporate members' dues, which range from $2,500 to $35,000 a year, depending on the size of the company, according to Mr. Post.... 'The whole theme of the Business Roundtable is to get the chief executive of the companies involved,' Post said. ... 'Roundtable members are getting concerned about the attacks on economic concentration.' ..." (End of quote).

Perhaps it is coincident, but prior to World War I, Lord Milner, successor to Sir Cecil Rhodes, created a secret society called the Round Table and composed of world leaders. Out of that select circle was developed a series of semi-secret internationalist organizations the American section of which is the Council on Foreign Relations. Since the members of this newly exposed American Business Roundtable seem also to be members of the CFR, one wonders if we now have a glimpse of the true Inner Sanctum of the hierarchy that aims to own the world and rule its integrated and enslaved inhabitants. We'll do our best to learn more, and let you know what we learn.

During the month of December you may give gift subscriptions to Don Bell Reports for $20 per year. This does not apply to renewals. Regular subscription rate is $24 per year, and two copies of each issue are sent each subscriber. Extra copies: 10¢ each.

DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

THE RELIGIOUS CRUSADE FOR PEACE AND JUSTICE THROUGH UNION WITH THE COMMUNIST WORLD

WORLD COUNCIL OF CHURCHES SPEARHEADING THE MOVEMENT

Once upon a time, within the memory of most of us, there were Representatives and Senators who deserved to be called Patriots. There were men like McCarthy and McCarran and others who feared for the future of our Country, who tried to rid the government of the subversives who had infiltrated its committees and departments, especially the State Department. And we who backed the efforts of such exterminators often were accused of "seeing a Communist under every bed." Times have changed, however, and today such an exaggeration wouldn't hold even a grain of truth. Because they no longer hide under beds; they have crawled out, and crawled in, and have become political bedfellows of many of today's Representatives and Senators.

This seems to be the substance of the statement made recently by Sen. Barry Goldwater, who still thinks of himself as the conscience of what's left of The Grand Old Party. Goldwater says he got his information from a CIA report that was given the Rockefeller Commission, but which was not included in the final draft of the commission report sent to the White House by Nelson Rockefeller.

"The Soviet espionage in this country is so fantastic," said Goldwater, "that there's no way to talk about it. They have our country absolutely infiltrated. I would say (they have penetrated into) every major industry, every major business, they know what's going on in the committees of Congress. Every once in a while in the Armed Services Committee I'll see the Russian equal sitting out there. Once in a while someone will say, 'If there's anything you're not understanding'—just to make him feel at home...."

Frank Capell in his Confidential Intelligence Report for December 1975 remarks that "The K.G.B. (Soviet Secret Police) has stepped up its activities in the United States virtually free of interference as a result of the detente policies carried out by Secretary of State Henry Kissinger and the Ford Administration. Not only have K.G.B. agents infiltrated into the staffs of some congressional committees, the media and elsewhere, but they operate openly under the guise of being trade representatives, cultural and educational visitors, and also as journalists...."

The striking thing about this change in national policy: Even agents of the Soviet Secret Police are no longer looked upon as spies; they are now friends, comrades, fellow workers in the fields of peace and justice.

At the same time, anti-communists are looked upon as the subversives, the FBI is condemned because under J. Edgar Hoover it kept files and checked on the activities of questionable characters, of security risks, of communist activists such as Martin Luther King (who now is looked upon as a martyred hero).

What is not generally known and understood is the fact that "organized" religion lies at the very root of this conspiracy. This is not, necessarily, because these religious organizations are pro-communistic in their ideology, but because they see it as their "Christian duty" to do all in their power to unite the Soviet Union and the United States, and thus create "One World," with one religion, one government, one economy.

As this letter is being written, there is in session the Fifth Assembly of the World Council of Churches at Nairobi, Kenya, in Northeastern Africa. The conference began on Nov. 23 and is to end Dec. 10. It was called "to plan policies for member churches through the 1970s."

The National Council of Churches of the United States is an affiliate of the WCC; so all member churches of the national organization are automatically members of the World Council and, at least in theory, are subject to and in agreement with all decisions made by the world body.

The Philadelphia Inquirer of Nov. 24 reported that "About 800 delegates representing more than 400 million Christians gathered to the beat of African drums at the Kenyatta Conference Center.... Nearly 2,000 observers, including Catholics, Buddhists, Hindus, Moslems, Jews, and Sikhs attended the opening ceremony...."

By actual count, there were 747 registered delegates at the conference, 109 of which came from the Communist dominated countries of Eastern Europe. The chief delegate from the Communist bloc was Metropolitan Nikodim, allegedly a member of the Soviet Secret Police as well as being Commissar in charge of all religious activity throughout the Soviet Union. Said Dr. Carl McIntire in regard to Nikodim and the WCC conference:

"Nikodim stands supreme over this assembly. Of the 747 votes he can depend on on less than 500. He is powerful enough to see that the Central Committee that will be elected will be his and that the policies adopted will be his. Since 1961 at the WCC Conference in New Delhi, India, when Dr. Eugene Carson Blake welcomed Nikodim before a cheering assembly, Nikodim has toured the world and promoted every foreign policy program of the Reds, and become the great man of 'peace' for the Communist world. No one doubts that the Soviet bloc and the Third World control the Nairobi assembly...."

Dr. McIntire's prediction that Nikodim would control the election, and the policy making seems to have been fulfilled when the votes were counted. An AP dispatch from Kenya reported:

"A reshuffling of the policy making body of the World Council of Churches... trims the proportion of North Americans and West Europeans and boosts it for the Soviet bloc...."

The policies being adopted by the WCC followed the general line laid down in a speech delivered by the Prime Minister of Jamaica, who was a Third World delegate to the Conference. We quote:

END CAPITALISM, WORLD CHURCHES TOLD

Nairobi, Kenya—(UPI)—Jamaican Prime Minister Michael Manley told a global conference of churchmen Saturday that Christendom must help destroy the capitalist system and create a new world economic order. In an address to the fifth assembly of the World Council of Churches, Manley said that organized churches must support and eliminate "every trace of imperialism and colonialism."

His speech, perhaps the toughest delivered in a week of debate and discussion here, received prolonged applause from nearly 800 Protestant and Orthodox delegates.

"In the name of capitalism, all of the most dangerous instincts of man have been elevated to the status of behavioral laws," He said. "It is the burial ground of his moral integrity."

Organized religion and the third world together must create a new economic order, he said. "I do not believe that Western Christendom can cease from struggle until... outrages that violate our religious faith and mock its moral teachings have been totally overthrown and abolished."

While these leaders who call themselves Christians were damning private enterprise, praising socialism, condemning South Africa's apartheid policy, calling for aid to the radicals and terrorists who are assassinating, kidnaping, bombing and otherwise creating havoc throughout the world, the same general theme was being promoted by so-called Christians here in the United States. Take the case of the Reverend William Sloane Coffin, Jr. as an example.

The Coffin family has been active in what they call the "Christian Socialist Movement" for some time. Back in 1916 the Church Peace Union began its first campaign for what it then called "international cooperation for peace," a very questionable venture at the time. Among the names of sponsors of the movement was that of Henry Sloane Coffin. Then, in 1937 when the Commission on Christian Unity started the ecumenical movement that was to sweep the world for years to come and beguile millions into straying away from the straight and narrow path of true Christian faith, one of the leaders in the ecumenical movement was Henry Sloane Coffin.

Now there is a representative of the second generation of Coffins who has become a minister of a Christian church in order to spread the gospel of socialism. His name is William Sloane Coffin, Jr., and he is chaplain at Yale University.

On November 22, just one day before the Fifth Assembly of the World Council of Churches got under way at Nairobi, the following article appeared in the Akron (Ohio) Beacon:

ECONOMIC PRIVILEGE KILLS MILLIONS, REV. COFFIN SAYS

Cleveland — Murder through economic privilege is the greatest crime, according to the Rev. William Sloane Coffin, Jr., Yale University chaplain. The civil rights advocate and anti-war activist told a Cleveland City Club audience that 10 million people will die this year because of the economic relationship governing the rich and the poor.

And, he said, those 10 million represent just the tip of the iceberg.

Mr. Coffin, 51, gained national attention in 1968 when he was indicted with Dr. Benjamin Spock for conspiring to counsel draft resisters. He was convicted, but two years later federal charges were dropped.

Mr. Coffin said Americans will be much happier if they share their wealth and power with other nations. "If we are called upon to redistribute wealth and power and if austerity is ahead, that's not bad news," he said. "Austerity is a necessary ingredient for the human community."

He said austerity lets generous instincts surface and crises allow new thinking. Mr. Coffin said the present is "not a moment to fear, but one in which to take heart and take a world made for just some of us and create a world for all of us."

He also discussed establishing a "long overdue" international income tax and a small standing army at the service of the United Nations and having each country lop 10 percent from its military budget to give to underdeveloped areas.

Mr. Coffin will resign as Yale chaplain at the end of December, after 18 years with the school. He said he wants to "free fall" for a while and do a lot of listening. He said he is attracted to causes that have a 15 to 20 percent chance of success. "That's where all the interesting stuff is these days."

THE CHRISTIAN PEACE CONFERENCE

When Metropolitan Nikodim of Moscow went to Nairobi, in addition to being an agent of the KGB, he carried two titles: he is chief delegate representing all the Christian churches in the Communist controlled countries of Eastern Europe and in the Soviet Union, and he also heads a thoroughly Communist organization called the Christian Peace Conference. As head of this CPC, Nikodim presented to the WCC "An Ecumenical Imperative for Christians and Churches," which he expects to have approved as a policy directive of the WCC.

It should be understood that there are true and faithful Christians behind the Iron Curtain; but they are members of what has been described as "the church in today's catacombs," and they are not represented by Nikodim who, while posing as a great Christian leader, is one of the chief persecutors of the "church in today's catacombs."

A book with that title, "the Church in Today's Catacombs," edited by Sergiu Grossu and translated from the French by Janet L. Johnson, and published by Arlington House, New Rochelle, N.Y., tells the story of a church that the world knows little about. In the introduction to the book, Sergiu Grossu writes, in part:

"...the Church of Silence continues; savagely tortured for its faithfulness to Christ in the midst of treason and apostasy...the actual forms of persecution—practiced in thousands of prisons, hard labor camps, and psychiatric asylums across the Soviet empire—exceed all methods of degradation and torture that man has known..."

"The amazing spiritual tenacity of our brothers under the cross should cause us to revise our thinking, our plans, our daily behavior and, especially, the direction of our lives so that we may be true Christians, always ready, as the Apostle Paul exhorts us, to remember those who are mistreated as though we were 'of one body.' Thus may we heed the cry of those innocent victims who from the depths of their social pit incessantly entreat the political and religious leaders of the free world. We wish to draw our readers into 'the good fight for the faith' against the flagrant atheism of our day... 'Communism has declared all-out war on Christendom,' an enlightened French believer has said. 'Christendom will wage war against it, or perish.' This is the war of the free spirit against the revolt of atheistic materialism that was unleashed to corrupt even the authorities of the Church and to transform the world into one vast death camp." (Quoted from "the Church in Today's Catacombs," translated from the French, Arlington House Publishers, 224 pages, $8.95).

To paraphrase the statement made by Editor Grossu: the delegates to the WCC have certainly become corrupted, because as one Christian observer has remarked: "Nikodim, no doubt, is the most shining, brilliant, glorified angel of light which the Devil has produced" in this generation. He is a persecutor of true Christians yet he poses, and is accepted, as a great Christian leader. He has produced this document as leader of the thoroughly communist Christian Peace Conference, and the document will, without doubt, be accepted as the WCC position and policy, theoretically binding on all member churches of both the WCC and the National Council of Churches. We reproduce portions of the CPC document, but please take note: This is Communist propaganda which is intended to deceive Christians:

PEACE AND JUSTICE

An Ecumenical Imperative for Christians and Churches

-The CPC contribution to the Fifth Assembly of the World Council of Churches

In terms of the good cooperation between the World Council of Churches and the Christian Peace Conference the CPC has made a contribution to the theme of the Vth Assembly of the WCC. Papers on the sub-themes were received in the centre of the movement from various countries: Czechoslovakia, Hungary, the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, Holland, the United States, India, Sri Lanka, Kenya, the Soviet Union, etc.... Valuable comments have also been received from a number of member churches. Viewpoints of special theological significance were expressed by the Russian Orthodox Church and the Romanian Orthodox Church. All these comments were taken into consideration in elaborating the final text published on the following pages.

We of the Christian Peace Conference welcome the theme of the Fifth Assembly of the World Council of Churches...
- "Jesus Christ Frees and Unites."

... We welcome those voices in the World Council of Churches which strongly favour the cause of peace... We follow with great interest and acceptance the Programme to Combat Racism... To this end, we find the discussion concerning the meaning of "Salvation Today" very helpful...

As members of the CPC, we are deeply troubled in conscience by the fact that the churches in today's world are closely tied with the power structure of the so-called "Christian nations," which is the reason for the participation of such churches in economic oppression, exploitation and division. They cease to be forces of liberation and unity...

The struggle for social justice, for the liberation of peoples from oppression and exploitation, is the struggle for peace. This struggle requires a clear designation of forces which promote peace, even if they are not Christian, and forces which endanger peace, even if they claim to be Christian. The call to creativity as a co-worker with God is a call Christians share with all mankind. Thus, their peace witness requires their joining with all peace forces....

Christians should support the United Nations in their efforts to achieve world peace and social justice....

The ecumenical movement has recognized as the main source of social injustice... the exploitation which characterizes the systems of capitalism....

When Christians support revolution, their right to do this is not based on any idea of revolution but on the Gospel...

The work for peace undertaken by Christians and by churches is inevitably characterized by at least these two traits: This work must be conceived and carried out ecumenically, and peace can be achieved only through justice. The necessary pre-requisite for peace is represented by the struggle against those economic and political structures and power relations which constitute "the structure of injustice." (Italics added in these quotes-Ed.)

In a previous letter we quoted a former Ford Foundation president who said he had been instructed "to bring about such sociological, economic, and political changes as would make union with Communist Russia easy and comfortable for the American people."

The WCC is cooperating in this effort. These church leaders seem to think that when they have established a world government and a world religion they will also have established the Kingdom of God in the earth. The error that will finally destroy them: He said to Caesar's procurator, "My kingdom is not of this world."

For information concerning this letter write:
DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

THE QUICKENING PACE OF THE QUIET REVOLUTION

REGIONALISM MARCHES ON

This might be called A Tale of Two Cities. It is a chronicle concerning the corporate destruction of two great cities: New York City (financial bankruptcy) and Boston (educational bankruptcy), and their consequent takeover by a Great Holding Company, a Conglomerate once called the Federal Government of the United States of America. This onetime Confederation of Republics had become a Socialist Corporation as a result of what John D. Rockefeller 3rd had helped design and had personally designated The Second American Revolution.

Though the setting is different and this second revolution is two hundred years apart from the first, we might begin our narrative with the very same words used by Charles Dickens in his fictional portrayal of events connected with that first socialist revolution which occurred in France shortly after that counter-revolution which had occurred in America beginning in 1776. Dickens wrote:

"It was the best of times, it was the worst of times, it was the age of wisdom, it was the age of foolishness, it was the epoch of belief, it was the epoch of incredulity, it was the season of Light, it was the season of Darkness, it was the spring of hope, it was the winter of despair, we had everything before us, we had nothing before us, we were all going direct to Heaven, we were all going direct the other way—in short, the period was so far like the present period, that some of its noisiest authorities insisted on its being received, for good or for evil, in the superlative degree of comparison only."

There was a city bearing the code name of "The Fun City" whose Mayor was a political clown named John Lindsay, and whose gubernatorial overlord was a political opportunist named Nelson Aldrich Rockefeller. Feigning competition between New York City as the welfarist heaven, and Albany as Acropolis of the Modern Age, Lindsay was able to bankrupt New York City through welfare handouts, soaring wages to public employees, free education to all who applied, etc. Meanwhile, Rockefeller squandered the wealth of the State through gigantic public works programs that would rival the pyramid building efforts of the Pharaohs of ancient Egypt, and which were supposed to make of Albany the world's most impressive center of political government, and make of New York City the world's greatest trade emporium as well as the world's financial capital; of Albany a modern Athens with an awesome Acropolis-type clutter of political temples, and of New York City a modern Babylon, with its UN compound, its Rockefeller Center, its Wall Street, and its International Trade Towers.

Their works of financial destruction about to become apparent, when all might see what had been accomplished, the two principals departed, Lindsay to full time duties with the Jet Set and their works, Rockefeller to the Vice Presidency of the United States of America.

The next step in the plot was the public announcement that the grasshopper days of fun and games were ended, that worms had infested The Big Apple, and that hunger and starvation were about to be visited upon the New York's largest city. And out went the first of a long series of appeals of help from the Federal Government. The announcement of bankruptcy also served as the signal for Nelson Rockefeller to break with Gerald Ford (he had previously used and then had broken with Richard Nixon); and leave Ford to sink or swim in the sea of debt that Rockefeller himself had helped to create.

The surface, the openly observable political repercussions of these cries for help were the subject of a report in the Dec. 12 issue of the weekly newspaper, People's Voice. We quote therefrom:

"...in a major address before the Press Club on October 29 the President vowed to veto any legislation that would provide federal aid, whether loans or guarantees, before the city defaulted.

absolute most he would do for the city, said Ford, would be to support legislation that, in the event of default, would make it easier for New York to maintain essential services while working out arrangements with its creditors.

"Yet not even one month later, on November 26, the President called a news conference in the White House to tell reporters that he had decided after all to push for federal loans to the city without waiting for a default. In short, a complete reversal (of his previous promise—Ed.)"

This, of course, is the kind of thing that creates incredibility gaps. It also causes people to wonder if Ford is his own boss, or if he—like Eisenhower and Nixon before him—takes a pro-American stand without considering the personal consequences of such an act and then is forced to reverse his stand, or else....

Anyhow, the President who wouldn't give a cent to bail out New York City, suddenly proposed that the federal government could lend up to $2.3 billion in any single year for the next three fiscal years. The stipulation that made it seem okay, according to Ford: the loans would carry interest rates of up to one percentage point above "what the federal government has to pay to borrow its money" and the loans would have to be paid off in full by the last day of each fiscal year.

When the legislation came up for debate in the House of Representatives, Congressman John Ashbrook of Ohio was one of the many (yet not enough) who opposed the measure for both financial and moral reasons. He declared:

"I strongly oppose...the New York City Seasonal Financing Act. The Federal Government should not assume responsibility for bankrolling the irresponsible liberal spending policies of New York City politicians. Approximately four years ago I voted against the Federal bailout of the Lockheed Aircraft Corp. As I stated (Aug. 4, 1971):

"Increasing reliance on the Federal Government as an inexhaustible, bottomless pit of funds is a trend I have frequently deplored. This dependency has eroded individual initiative, as well as local and State Government initiative."

Unfortunately, this trend has continued. Now it is New York City that wants to tap the federal largess. I oppose the putting of failing cities on welfare just as I opposed the practice of putting failing corporations on welfare....

"For years New York State and New York City in particular have followed a policy of fiscal irresponsibility. The employees of that city are among the highest paid in the whole country. These employees, moreover, receive fringe benefits and paid retirement costs exceeding 50 percent of base pay. Welfare benefits are also generous. They are so high that they have attracted people from other cities and States to go to New York in order to receive welfare. Even the education is free. While parents and students in other parts of the country worry about meeting tuition expenses, City University—one of the largest universities in the world—offers all high school graduates free tuition....

"The list goes on and on...After following a course of action that could only lead to financial disaster, New York City asks the entire Nation to bear the burden of its own folly." (Unquote).

When the New York City bailout measure was debated in the upper house, Senator Harry F. Byrd, Jr. of Virginia gave more of the financial details behind the New York City bankruptcy, as well as that of the United States itself. Said the Senator:

"Running to the Federal Government to bail it out is no answer to New York's problem. In fact, the Federal Government is in worse shape financially than is New York City. If any Senator wants to dispute that, I shall be glad to hear what he has to say. The only difference is that the Federal Government has presses which print money, and which it can run at whatever speed it wishes. But the more money the Government prints, the less valuable the wage earner's dollar becomes. Already the value of the dollar has declined 42 percent in 6 years.

"The Federal Government this year will have the highest deficit in its history, an astounding $75 billion.... On top of that, the pending proposal that the Federal Government borrow an additional $2.3 billion and loan it to New York City compounds the Federal Government's problem without solving the city's problem.

"I shall give more specific reasons for opposing the New York City bailout.

"The purpose of the legislation, as the proponents make clear, is to prevent default on New York City bonds. Thus, the chief beneficiaries are the bondholders; and the major bondholders are the New York banks.

"The New York banks will benefit by this legislation to the extent of tens of millions of dollars, and some perhaps by hundreds of millions of dollars. Yet, no information has been presented to the Senate to show the holdings by each of these New York banks. It has been asserted on the floor of the Senate that such information must remain secret lest various banks holding these New York bonds be damaged.

"...The real effect of the pending legislation is to use the tax funds of all the people to protect the private investments of a few, namely the New York bondholders. I do not approve of that principle of government."

Enough about the moral and pecuniary arguments concerning the New York City bailout. These are really secondary considerations when one thinks of the harm that is being done to the American system of government when a Central Authority takes total power over State and Municipal Governments in these United States. One newspaper columnist, James J. Kilpatrick of the Washington Star Syndicate, a professional conservative who often writes like a conservative, came close to the heart of the issue when he cited the Constitution and the principle of federalism which it proclaimed. Here are excerpts from Kilpatrick's column as it appeared in the Miami Herald of December 9, 1975:

THE PRINCIPLE OF FEDERALISM SHORT-CIRCUITED BY BAIL-OUT

Once upon a time, a group of wise men wrote a Constitution for a brand-new Republic. They made a grand design. Almost 200 years later, another group of men, not so wise, took the grand design apart: They bailed out New York City. The first design was better.

The massive sign of relief that has greeted the rescue of New York has blown away some constitutional questions that ought not to be so lightly treated. After the politicking subsidies and the moralizing stops, these questions will remain.

Once upon a time, to continue the tale, men put great store in two doctrines. One was the doctrine of federalism, the other the doctrine of enumerated powers. And these were truly doctrines — principles of faith, explicitly taught by those who devised the more perfect union.

The doctrine of federalism holds that, so far as the structure of government is concerned our Republic is pre-eminently a union of States. We used to call them sovereign States. In this view the American people, whenever they act politically, act through their States. Members of the House and Senate are named State by State; presidential electors are chosen by each State "in such manner as the legislature thereof may direct." Only the States, by amendment, can alter or dissolve the basic structure of the union.

The doctrine of enumerated powers holds that the States, in creating the union, delegated certain specific powers to the national government. The exercise of other powers they prohibited to themselves. All remaining powers they reserved to be exercised by the States "respectively."

The two doctrines had a common purpose. This was to prevent the growth of a single, omnipotent national government, remote from the people and beyond their effective restraint. There was a further purpose, not so relevant here, to cultivate variety and to encourage the States to experiment with diverse answers to political problems.

Both doctrines have withered over the years. Old principles of federalism have yielded to federal "solutions." The theory that Congress is limited to certain enumerated powers had been soaked up in the sponge of the general welfare clause. Even so, the grand design remains in place; the structure is still intact.

Now the President has recommended, and Congress will provide, direct loans from the Federal Treasury to the City of New York. Constitutionally speaking, the arrangement is bizarre. Nothing quite like it has happened before. The pipelines of power have been rerouted. Federal aid to Lockheed could be rationalized under the power to raise and support armies; federal aid to Penn Central could be tenuously justified under the commerce clause; uniform revenue sharing programs, funneled through States, might be said to provide for the general welfare.

The bill for the aid of New York City recalls the story of Davy Crockett and a bill for the aid of victims of a Georgetown fire. This was about 1828, when Crockett was a representative from Tennessee. A night fire had left a number of families homeless. The next morning Crockett enthusiastically cast a vote to appropriate $20,000 for their relief. When he went home to campaign for reelection tion, a constituent asked a blunt and hostile question:

"Colonel, where do you find in the Constitution any authority to give away the public money in charity?...The people have delegated to Congress, by the Constitution, the power to do certain things. To do these, it is authorized to collect and pay moneys, and for nothing else. Everything beyond this is usurpation...So, you see, Colonel, you have violated the Constitution, in what I consider a vital point. It is a precedent fraught with danger to the country, for when Congress begins to stretch its power beyond the limits of the Constitution, there is no limit to it, and no security for the people."

Crockett called the lecture a "sockdolager" —meaning a knockout blow, with nothing left to follow. The great frontiersman dies a few years later at the Alamo. Some great principles, I am minded to say, died at the Alamo with him. (End of column)

THE CONQUEST OF BOSTON

Kilpatrick refers to the New York City bailout as "bizarre," unconstitutional and unprecedented. In terms of money, the New York City Bankers have a first mortgage on the City of New York, and it is in default. To protect the bankers' investment, the U.S. Treasury is executing a second mortgage, and the U.S. Taxpayers must guarantee the redemption of both mortgages.

In political terms: The grand old doctrine of Federalism has been replaced by a New Federalism which embraces the socialistic concept of Regionalism. The centralization of all power, the federal control of all the States, Counties, Municipalities, Communities, and all individuals: this is the aim of the New Federalism. And the New York City drama was a well planned, well staged, well acted, and excellently produced part of the plot.

The Boston act is similar, yet it differs in that New York City was said to be financially bankrupt, whereas a federal judge says South Boston is educationally bankrupt. The background to this latter act is interesting, careful planning is evident:

If a Central Authority is to gain total control over the human resources (the people) of a Nation, it must control the schools where those human resources are developed and prepared for their assigned places in the Planned Society. One of the gimmicks that was created for this purpose came with the judicial proclamation that segregation is a social crime, and that federal judges have a right to override and declare null and void all State laws and local ordinances that interfere with the bringing about of forced integration in all the schools of the United States, public, private, church operated, or otherwise. There was the greatly publicized drama of the local authorities of Little Rock, Arkansas being forced to submit to the Central Authorities. Then there was the public spectacle of a State Governor being forced to stand aside and watch the Central Authority take charge of a State-owned and State-operated university. Federal marshalls were assigned to the task of making integration work—at gun point. And it worked, up to a different kind of point:

Most people prefer segregation, and they began to segregate themselves voluntarily by communities; and this dis-integrated the schools, voluntarily. The Central Authority then came up with the idea of forced busing, to make voluntary segregation by communities of no avail.

For this Great Encounter, a northern city was selected. Boston, Bicentennial show-place, home of revolutionary patriots, long-standing social, cultural and educational hub city of New England, this would be the ideal spot to take the new, unprecedented step in the affirmation and public demonstration of the power of the Central Authority.

So, with no Constitutional authority and in defiance of both State and local governments as well as the ninth and tenth amendments of the Constitution, Judge W. Arthur Garrity, Jr. placed South Boston High School in "receivership," placing it under the direction of a court-appointed officer who would be responsible, not to parents, not to school board, not to City authorities, or to State authorities, but to one appointed official, a federal judge who should have no authority at all in such a local matter if the Constitution were still being honored!

Taxation without representation is a small thing in comparison. Thinking bicentennially we wonder if this present Boston confrontation might not be compared with the Tea Party, when a whole new Nation rushed to Boston's aid?

For information concerning this letter write:
DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

"AND THE EARTH IS FILLED WITH VIOLENCE"

ANOTHER PLANNED CONSPIRACY?

"Violence is on the rise, worldwide, as the year ends," comments U.S. News & World Report's "Worldgram" newsletter of December 22. Citing civil wars or guerrilla activity in Angola, Lebanon, Oman, Timor and elsewhere, the conclusion is reached that these could lead to the possibility of a big war between the United States and the Soviet Union. Angola was especially mentioned in this connection.

Exactly what Kissinger had planned to do before the U.S. Congress got wind of his secret maneuverings in Angola may never be known; there was the hint that another Viet Nam was in the making before Congress stepped in. There was this difference, of course: we were acting with Red China and against Red Russia. But the Kremlin was pouring in arms and men as though a real war between big powers—not a mere civil war involving natives—was being planned. Early in November Russia began pouring in big T-54 tanks and sophisticated missiles, along with a reported 400 Soviet Army technicians to keep the tanks and arms operating. At least 4,000 Cuban troops were sent to Angola. These were said to be specially trained officers and noncoms, who would lead the MPLA forces of some 30,000 men. Angola began to look a lot like Spain at the time of her civil war, which was a training maneuver in preparation for the outbreak of World War II.

However, it is not the open warfare which poses the real danger. Rather, it is the guerrilla activity, the bombings, the kidnappings, the assassinations and near assassinations, the psychological warfare that is being waged in connection with the Bicentennial Celebration in the United States, the constantly increasing crime that can no longer be controlled. These things constitute the real danger to America and to the world.

When Lt. General Vernon A. Walters, deputy director of the CIA, was asked recently if he believed there was a conspiracy operating to destroy the U.S. government, he replied by referring to the book titled "Art of War" written by a Chinese 500 years before Christ. Reading from a chapter on how to undo your enemies, Walters quoted: "The most consummate art is to subdue your enemies without having to fight them on the battlefield. The direct method of war is necessary only on the battlefield, but it is only the indirect methods that lead to true victory and its consolidation.

"Denigrate everything that is good in your opponent's country. Involve their leaders in criminal operations. Undermine them by every means and then expose them to public scorn of their fellow citizens.

"Use the most execrable and vile individuals. Cause trouble by every means at hand within their government. Spread discord and quarrels amongst the citizens of the opposing country. Agitate the young against the old.

"Destroy by all means the weapons supply of your opponent. Cover with ridicule their old traditions and heritage. Be generous in your offers and rewards to purchase information or accomplices. Put secret agents everywhere. Never stint on money or promises, and thus you will reap a rich reward."

In a final comment on what he had read, General Walters added, "If any of you find anything familiar about this, you're not wrong. This is the new form of war with which we have to contend. It is not the old thing of divisions marching across the field. It is this type of thing which is the silent battlefield of which I speak." (This portion is reprinted from a recent Paul Scott report).

Bearing in mind the tactics described above, could it be that criminality is being encouraged and permitted to pay, while crime fighters—the FBI, State and local Police—are being denigrated and mis-managed for some ulterior purpose which has to do with the capture, or destruction of our country? Is this why J. Edgar Hoover is now painted as an arch-villain, and Martin Luther King extolled as a persecuted hero?

The latest official crime report (FBI) shows that the 1974 increase in crime was the largest yearly jump in history—18% over the previous year. Police reported over 10 million serious crimes for the year—four times as many as reported ten years ago. And only 21% of those serious crimes in 1974 were “cleared” through arrest of the criminals; and of those arrested less than half were convicted, and of those convicted more than half were out again in a few months, ready to get back to work at their “chosen profession.”

Glenn D. King, executive director of the International Association of Chiefs of Police, speaking at a recent conference of criminal justice officials at Washington, D.C., said: “At the present time there is no effective deterrent to crime at all. In the past there was a social stigma attached to crime, but we don’t see much of that attitude now.”

One editor called it “double-digit crime inflation” and noted that much of the increase in crime was due to the fact that more and more women seemed to be taking up crime as a career. He remarked that “arrests of women since 1960 have increased almost 110%; arrests of males in the same period rose 24%.”

The current issue of U.S. News & World Report carries an article titled “Crimes by Women are on the Rise All Over the World.”

A sampling based on reports from over 1,800 local agencies in the United States compared the number of female arrests in 1960 with those of 1974 for the following types of offense, and revealed the following crime increase in that 14 year period:

Narcotic laws, up 861%; receiving or possessing stolen property, up 767%; larceny, up 404%; carrying or possessing weapons, up 391%; fraud and embezzlement, up 332%; robbery, up 306%; drunken driving, up 249%; burglary, up 246%; forgery and counterfeiting, up 167%; auto theft, up 162%; aggravated assault, up 134%; prostitution, up 90%; drunkenness, down 51½%; vagrancy, down 60%; gambling, down 65%.

More serious and not shown in these lists as such, is the increase in political crimes—crimes that are committed not for money or property, but for strictly political purposes. This would include such women as Patricia Hearst, “Squeaky” Fromme, Sara Jane Moore, Joan Little, etc. In other parts of the world, the leader of the West German Baader-Meinhof terrorist band is a 40-year-old woman, Ulrike Meinhof; Japan’s “Queen of the Red Army” is Fusako Shigenobu. And so on in other industrialized nations.

Six months ago the FBI allegedly knew of 21 terrorist groups in the United States with a total membership of over 15,000. Members are armed and dangerous, and the number of such terrorist groups has increased greatly in the past few months, as revolutionaries prepare to “celebrate” the Nation’s Bicentennial observance.

There were 2,041 bombings in the United States in 1974, another 1,178 bombing incidents during the first seven months of 1975, according to the FBI. Most of these bombings go unreported in the national news media. Little or nothing is said of the raids on Army and National Guard armories by terrorist groups who thus obtain massive amounts of ammunition, explosives, hand grenades, mortars, rockets and demolition devices.

Major General Richard Clutterbuck, British army officer for 35 years, an acknowledged authority on guerrilla warfare and political violence, has written a book on the subject which is soon to be published by Arlington House. The title is prophetic: “Living With Terrorism.” We cannot end the terrorism, it is not going to end of itself; all we can do is learn to live with it, rather than die from it. Gen. Clutterbuck points out that “since 1968 there have been more than 300 attempted hijackings of which about 170 have been successful. There have been over 50 major political kidnappings and hundreds of other kidnappings which, classed primarily as criminal (i.e. for personal gain), had some political overtones. Political assassinations have been too numerous to record and it is even more difficult to differentiate between political, criminal and other motives in the case of murders.”

“Kidnapping for ransom is nothing new,” the author admits. “It has been endemic in America for generations and in East Asia for centuries.” But, before 1967 political kidnappings were rare. They are still comparatively rare because “there is much less risk... in attacking a victim by posting him an explosive letter or parcel.” Also, “the coercion of governments and the provocation of repression may be achieved more safely by planting a time bomb than by an orgy of shooting.”

Gen. Clutterbuck makes this important point: "Terrorists, without exception, claim to speak and fight on behalf of the working classes—the proletariat and the peasants. Yet with very rare exceptions (such as the Provisional IRA) they are led and predominantly recruited from university students, graduates and the sons and daughters of the affluent. They make the most of the few working-class recruits whom they do manage to attract into their ranks, and especially so where these come from the deprived or coloured communities—as, for example, in the Symbionese Liberation Army (SLA) in California.... Sadly, most of these few recruits from poor backgrounds are enlisted from among the criminal fringes of society or are inadequate, rejected or rootless people who can find nothing else on which to pin their lives. Terrorist recruits from the farms or the shop floors are almost unknown." (Italics added for emphasis).

Finally, these university students and college graduates who are dedicated terrorists "can no more be deterred by reasoning than can a poisonous snake, yet they are harder to keep out than snakes because they have the human intelligence and the means to cooperate with each other, both locally and internationally."

OPERATION "GARDEN PLOT"

Now comes the leading question: Why are terrorism, violence and organized criminal activity permitted to prosper, increase, and win out against the forces of law and order? Is it really impossible to control such lawlessness, or is it being permitted to continue for some ulterior purpose?

Some time ago federal officials looked with alarm at the growth of crime, violence and terrorism. Allegedly as a means of restoring order and curbing crime, there was created the Law Enforcement Assistance Administration (LEAA). But this was a part of the new Regional Governance Scheme, and we know now that LEAA was installed not to control criminals but to control police departments and make them subservient and submissive to LEAA Directors located in the Nation's ten Regional Capitals.

Now comes exposure of yet another—and far more dangerous—Police State Plot, which is known as "Garden Plot." We mentioned "Garden Plot" in a letter a few weeks ago, promised to seek more information and let our readers know more about the plot. And, thanks to four different sources—the conservative "American Challenge," the leftist "New Times," the foundation-financed Fund for Investigative Journalism, and Don Wood of the trustworthy "Ozark Sunbeam"—we have a fairly complete story. It involves the potential creation of a Police State through use of the Pentagon and its computerized intelligence dossier of over 18,000 citizens (it is lodged in the Pentagon basement), the National Guard, State and Local Police Departments, LEAA, plainclothes military forces, SWAT teams, and the Department of Justice.

First, it will be recalled that there is in existence a set of Executive Orders which, when invoked by the declaration of a State of Emergency, can convert this Nation into a Bureaucratic Dictatorship. "Garden Plot" could be the Gestapo-type force required to establish and maintain such a dictatorship.

Secondly, a tried-and-true formula for attaining an otherwise hard-to-accomplish objective in a so-called democracy is as follows:

1. Make plans for the takeover;
2. Create an emergency;
3. Promote public demand for a solution;
4. Present the prefabricated plans as the only possible solution to the emergency;
5. Carry out the prefabricated plans "in answer to public demand."

Now, about "Garden Plot":

The leftwing "New Times" describes it as "an elaborate and insidious structure that has developed over the last seven years, an intermeshing of Army, National Guard and local police forces, led by the most rightwing public officials and military men, designed to decimate leftist dissent but capable of crushing anything."

Don Wood's comment: "Those on the right who likewise feel threatened would certainly disagree with the characterization of the leadership as 'rightwing' but certainly agree as to the 'elaborate and insidious 'structure's ability to crush'."

Our comment: It may have been true seven years ago that "Garden Plot" was led by enemies of the leftists. But in the intervening years, J. Edgar Hoover has left the scene, the old-line military leaders have retired or "faded away" to be replaced by a new breed, the Attorney General's list of subversives has been "bookburned" and the present Attorney General has a leftist background, the House Committee on Internal Security was quietly abolished last January, the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee may be abolished next spring, and all of the old time lefties and commies still among the living have "crawled out of the woodwork" and are making television documentaries, running for office, being appointed to office, or are otherwise occupying positions of importance in the opinion-molding field of endeavor. Even the black terrorists who fled America a few years ago to escape imprisonment are flocking back to receive slaps on the wrist by sympathetic judges, and then resume their interrupted activities as terrorists and guerrilla leaders.

So, any federal policing agency set up seven years ago to "decimate leftists" would have rightists as their chief target today. But, in any case, whenever an elite oligarchy decides it is time to impose a dictatorship, all protesters and resisters will be concentrated or liquidated, be they leftists, rightists, or Christian patriots.

According to our sources of information, it all began with President Lyndon Johnson. Because of the riots in the late sixties, he established a National Advisory Commission on Civil Disorders. At the same time, the Pentagon established a similar task force. The two got together, recommended: a) a massive domestic intelligence-gathering operation; b) training of military, National Guard and police officers; c) "planning packets" or contingency plans for counter-revolution; d) army and local security forces to implement the plans; and e) the evolution of the Pentagon task force into a national coordinating center for these efforts.

To carry out these goals, according to the "New Times," the Pentagon built up a secret, computerized intelligence file on some 18,000 citizens ranging from "the celebrated to the obscure." Two counter-revolutionary training centers were also established, one at the Military Police Academy at Fort Gordon, Georgia (recently transferred to Fort McClellan, Alabama), the other at the California Specialized Training Institute in San Luis Obispo. Both of these centers were financed through LEAA!

"Between September 1971 and May 1974, 4,063 officials of the National Guard, the Army, local police forces, fire services, city governments, courts, legislatures, utilities, prisons, and private corporations" attended the course at San Luis Obispo, the "New Times" reported.

It seems that Senator Ervin's Subcommittee on Constitutional Rights got wind of the scheme in 1972, saw a copy of the national master plan of "Garden Plot," condemned the Pentagon for keeping a secret computerized file of civilians in its basement, but dismissed "Garden Plot" itself as "an aimless kind of thing."

However, Ervin's subcommittee did not see the plans for "Operation Cable-Splicer." This was a training operation for the military takeover of the States of California, Arizona, Oregon and Washington. The operation was under the command of the Sixth Army, with National Guard, local police and other groups cooperating.

"Cable Splicer programs," said the "New Times," provide for an orderly progression from state to federal control." (emphasis supplied.)

There was a similar exercise which was first reported in "The Review of the News" on July 2, 1975. This involved the takeover of the government of the State of New Jersey. Colonel Francis Clark, the executive officer in charge of the operation, was quoted as saying that they had conducted studies on how to take over all municipal and county, as well as State governments, during the past few years.

There is a saying: Men who will not govern themselves will be governed by tyrants. And "Garden Plot" is such an act of tyranny. If it isn't too late, there is an opposite course that involves governing ourselves. It is contained in the Posse Comitatus Act 18 U.S.C. 18 1385. It is designed to prevent Federal, State, and local officials, as well as the military, from using the Army to execute the civil laws except where expressly authorized by the Constitution or an Act of the Congress. Posse Comitatus is a common-law term for "the men of the county." Ask your sheriff about it.

If maintaining law and order, and preventing bombings, kidnappings and assassinations, is too much for the "men of the county," then perhaps we have reached the point where the prefabricated plan for federally enforced martial law is the only solution to the "created" emergency.

We might paraphrase another saying: When men turn from God, they turn toward tyrants.

DON BELL REPORTS Weekly. $24 per year. Extra copies: 10¢ each. Please address all correspondence, orders and inquiries, to:
DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

HERE LIES THE REPUBLIC OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA
1776 ----- 1976
----- ? -----

EPITAPH

In a speech delivered November 23, 1975 at Salt Lake City, Ezra Taft Benson outlined the reasons why he thinks the United States is headed for disaster. A Constitutionalist and a champion of the free enterprise system, Mr. Benson has served the state as a former U.S. Secretary of Agriculture, and he serves his church as the president of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints—Mormon Church. We have been informed that Mr. Benson's church has long held the belief that the day would come when the Constitution of the United States would hang as if by a single thread. As a result of the actions and policies of the executive, legislative and judicial branches of the federal government over the past half century, that "day of the single thread" may coincide with the Nation's 200th birthday, which is to be observed next July 4th.

Because Mr. Benson presents facts in their simplest terms, and in words that even a gulliberal should be able to comprehend, we reprint his speech, with the hope that it will receive the widest possible distribution before next July 4th:

Through my good friend Clarence Manion, former Professor of Constitutional Law and Dean of Notre Dame Law School, I have an item which came from a professional archeologist who died a few years ago in Rome. During a long lifetime of professional diggings he had turned up hundreds of relics and readings from the ancient past. Always a passionately patriotic American, he didn't like the way things were going here in recent years, and in one of his last letters, he sent his anticipation of an epitaph—that centuries from now some exploring archeologist will find carved upon the unearthed tombstone of the United States. Here it is:

"Here lies the greatest civilization that the world has ever seen. It died at the peak of its tremendous power, which it refused to use in its own defense.

"Here lies the nation that wagered its fabulous wealth and strength upon the love of mankind and in the process of the wager, lost all three.

"Here lie the people who abandoned their priceless patriotic heritage of religious truth and with it their freedom and their will to live.

"Here lies the last hope of earth. Here lies the United States of America."

As Americans, we have marched a long way down the soul-destroying road to socialism, atheism, and totalitarianism. It is the price we pay when we turn away from God and turn to government to do everything for us. It is the formula by which nations become enslaved by their own leaders.

As England's Lord Acton so succinctly put it, "Power tends to corrupt—but absolute power corrupts absolutely."

Increasing numbers of Americans today are subscribing to the myth that you can get something for nothing—as long as the government is footing the bill. In fact, they believe it is the duty of government to take care of them, from the womb to the tomb.

There is no such thing as a free lunch. Everything we get from the government—everything—we pay for in debilitating taxes. Everything the government gives to the people it must first take from the people. This is something few Americans appear to understand.

We tend to forget that America became the greatest, most prosperous and powerful nation in the world, blessed with an abundance of everything needed for the good life. It didn't just happen. It wasn't an accident. It was all an integral part of the divine plan for America. In the early frontier days of this country, a special breed of men and women came here from all over the world, seeking not only opportunity, but freedom. They were strong, proud, and fiercely independent. They believed that the surest helping hand was at the end of their own sleeves. They shared one thing in common—an unshakeable faith in God, and in themselves. And that, without doubt, is the secret of success that is as viable today as it was yesterday.

With little but raw courage and indomitable purpose, those intrepid pioneers set forth into the unknown by covered wagon, on horseback, and sometimes on foot. The land demanded iron men with steel in their backbones. Nature did the weeding out. But they didn't whine or bleat because things were tough. They asked no favors from any man. They knew what they were up against, and they accepted the challenge. All they wanted was to be left alone to do what had to be done. They were wrenching a civilization out of the wilderness.

America soon blossomed into a rich, fertile, productive nation. Individual initiative—free enterprise—paid off, and American ingenuity flourished in a climate of freedom. Very soon our technology, our inventiveness, and our business know-how became the envy of the world. America had reached maturity—a giant among nations, a glowing example of free enterprise in action, and a perfect demonstration of what free men can do when they are left alone to do it.

But, as those affluent years slipped by, voices were heard in the land singing the siren songs of socialism. And many Americans tapped their feet to the beat of the music. Politicians were already promising something for nothing...that elusive free lunch. Thus, gradually, the people let the government infringe upon their precious freedoms, and the preliminary signs of decay began to appear in our young Republic.

A current example of this moral erosion can be seen in the current Food Stamp Program. Originally intended to assist those who were on minimum subsistence by drawing on great government surpluses being stored at a cost of a million dollars a day and which had accumulated by government bungling, this program has burgeoned—increased—to the extent that today one out of 13 Americans is drawing food stamps—one out of every four has been made eligible by recent legislation.

And who pays for all of this? We do — the taxpayers. There is no such thing as a free lunch.

According to Earl Butz, Secretary of Agriculture, 71 per cent of Puerto Rico's population is drawing food stamps. One newspaper has advertised that taxpayers who make up to $16,000 a year are eligible for food stamps. By 1977 this program will be costing the American taxpayer a billion dollars a year. Even more importantly, let us ask ourselves the question; what has it done to the character and morality of the individual? It is an eternal principle that you cannot help people permanently by doing for them what they can and should do for themselves.

Today, as government becomes increasingly dominant in our affairs, we are becoming more and more like ancient Rome before it crumpled and collapsed. We are choosing bread and circuses instead of facing the challenges that always test a free people. We are no longer the proud leader of the world. We have lost the respect of almost every country...through our policies of equivocation and our politics of expediency and appeasement. We think we are buying world peace. This is not diplomacy, it is national suicide! No wonder we have earned the contempt of our enemies, who are only too happy to take our money, our food, our industrial equipment, and our technical expertise.

Some of you no doubt have read the "Warning to America" by the Russian Nobel prize winner, Alexander Solzhenitsen.... Time will not permit an analysis of this remarkable address.... May I highlight only a few points made by Mr. Solzhenitsen.

There are appeasing, strident voices in our midst, he says, who maintain that the Soviet leaders have given up their inhumane ideology. Mr. Solzhenitsen answers the proponents of this thesis by charging that the Communist system is one which:

"Introduced concentration camps for the first time in the history of the world."

"Was the first to use false registration," that is, "they would order such and such people to come in and register. People would come in. At that point, they were taken away to be annihilated."

"It's a system which introduced genocide of the peasants (the deliberate and systematic destruction of people). Fifteen million peasants were sent off to extermination."

"A system which...artificially created a famine, causing six million persons to die.”

“It’s a system where for forty years there haven’t been genuine elections, but simply a farce.”

“A system without an independent press.”

“A system without an independent judiciary, where people have no influence in external or internal policy....”

“It’s a system where unmasked butchers of millions like Molotov...have never been tried in the courts, but retire on tremendous pensions.”

“It’s a system where these forces continue today....”

“It’s a system where the very constitution has never been carried out for one single day, where all the decisions are made somewhere high up by a small group in secret, and then released on the country like a bolt of lightning.”

You ask how did such a system gain such a stranglehold on a third of the world’s population? Mr. Solzhenitsen answers: “A process” on our part, as Americans, which has been in progress for more than thirty years, “of shortsighted concessions, a process of giving up, giving up, and giving up in hope that at some point the wolf will have eaten enough.” It’s a process Mr. Solzhenitsen unmasks as the present foreign policy of the United States toward the Soviet Union that is called detente.

Finally, he makes an appeal to our leaders and politicians “to stop this senseless process of endless concessions to aggressors, these clever legal arguments for why we should make one concession after another and give up more and more and more.”

Despite what many say and think, the cold war continues today and during this period of detente. One of the main weapons in the cold war arsenal of our enemies is inflation.”

Our economic system, I believe, is extremely serious. The facts are harsh and cold. This is a grim topic. But how can one soften the truth? Inflation, like an insidious disease, is weakening us. We are in this position because we have lost our national pride, our sense of independence. When we want something, we go crawling to the government instead of doing it ourselves. We have exchanged those God-inspired principles upon which this once mighty nation was built, for a mess of shoddy values. No wonder our structures of freedom are cracking.

WHO OR WHAT IS TO BLAME?

Many voices in government today are blaming the businessmen—the unions—and even the buying public for not practicing thrift and economy in their shopping habits.

The blame for inflation must be laid directly at the door of the Federal Government itself. Inflation is an increase in the nation’s money supply—an increase, to be more exact, in the supply of money and credit. Inflation is not caused by rising prices and wages. To the contrary, rising prices and wages, as any solid economist knows, are the direct results of inflation. It stands to reason that when the money supply is increased, all money automatically becomes less valuable. This includes, of course, our savings. So... when our dollar shrinks in value, businessmen naturally raise their price tags, and then their employees demand higher wages. You can see how it all becomes a vicious circle.

In a free society such as ours only the Federal Government can cause inflation. And the reason it puts more money into circulation is to finance its disastrous policies of deficit spending. As the Federal Government promotes more and more costly and unnecessary programs, it spends far more money than it receives. So...to keep in business, the government has to borrow. To do this, it offers bonds, which are purchased mainly by private banks. Many of these bonds are resold to the Federal Reserve. The Federal Reserve then issues newly printed paper money—or issues credit to pay for the bonds. Thus, new money is created, the money supply is increased, and the value of all money is reduced.

It is well to remember that continued government deficits cause inflation; inflation is used as an excuse for ineffective price controls; price controls lead to shortages; artificial shortages inevitably are used as an excuse to implement rationing. When will we learn these basic economic principles?

The Prophet Isaiah wrote: “Therefore my people are gone into captivity, because they have no knowledge.” (Isaiah 5:13).

(End of address by Ezra Taft Benson)

THE FEDERAL RESERVE AND OUR MANIPULATED DOLLAR

In his address Mr. Benson made a brief reference to the Federal Reserve System and its role of creating money and thus feeding the inflation that is destroying us economically. The Fed—as it is called—is much in the news these days. Its power to manipulate interest rates, increase the amount of money in circulation, its ability to control the value of the dollar and therefore the material worth of every individual citizen, is little understood by most of our citizenry.

Fortunately, there now is a book which explains in layman's language "the nature of money, its function in an industrial society, and how it has been manipulated by powerful international forces which constitute an invisible empire, reduce parliaments and congresses into mere puppets, and reduce the productive citizens of many nations into servitude."

The book that lays bare "the mystery of money" and its manipulation by a clique that intends to own and enslave the world, is titled "The Federal Reserve and our Manipulated Dollars," by Martin A. Larson, to be published on January 15, 1976, by Devin-Adair Co., 143 Sound Beach Ave., Old Greenwich, Connecticut 06870. 192 pages, paperback, $4.95.

We don't often recommend newly published books, but this is one that will take its place alongside those of Antony C. Sutton in alerting citizens to the nature of the real conspiracy that is destroying our Republic. (Especially Sutton's "Wall Street and the Bolshevik Revolution" and "Wall Street and FDR," both published by Arlington House, New Rochelle, N.Y. 10801).

Since our aim is the spreading of knowledge that may save our Republic, and while we are mentioning books that should be read by those who fear for the future of our Republic, there is the highly recommended latest book by Col. Archibald Roberts: "The Republic: Decline and Future Promise," Bicentennial Edition, $2.95. Betsy Ross Press, 480 Savings Building, Ft. Collins, Colorado 80521. We also have remaining a few copies of our last book, "The Contrived Evolution of Regional Government," a compilation of 21 different letters on that subject, originally published between May 3 and September 27, 1974. Still timely and informative. While the supply lasts: $2.00 each.

When the Prophet Isaiah wrote: "Therefore my people have gone into captivity, because they have no knowledge," he knew very well that "the fear of the Lord is the beginning of knowledge" and he also knew that "fools despise wisdom and instruction" (Proverbs 1:7). He knew that he was writing for only a Remnant of his people; but this was a Remnant that would know the Truth and therefore be made free individually, and while it was then too late to save the Nation from captivity, there was the Remnant that would reclaim the land and prepare it for the coming of Salvation. After the manner of Isaiah:

In this year of our Lord 1976, and the year of our Nation the 200th, it is lack of knowledge that is sending us into captivity. As Col. Roberts wrote in the introduction to his latest book:

"American citizens have failed to understand, or even recognize the fact, that gross changes have been gradually and illicitly brought about in the political and sociological climate of this land. It is evident, however, that a subtle and perilous change has occurred in America. Within the past two or three generations the civilization of our forefathers has come under sophisticated assault. The structures of freedom erected at such great cost in blood, sweat and treasure are crumbling. Our God is blasphemed, our lineage reviled, and our Constitution dismantled. Our destiny has turned to dust.

Americans have been reduced to economic serfs in the land that once was theirs. A secret government of monetary power, employing perverted mass media and the coercive authority of a captured Bureaucratic Civil Service, is forcing us into a 'New World Order'....

Gone is the Constitution and its protective covenants. Gone are the courts and their shield to personal freedom. Gone is representative government and the sovereignty of the individual. Gone is the U.S. dollar and its authority in the market place. All have been surreptitiously phased out of the society to usher in a totalitarian, one world autocracy of the financial 'elite'....

"There is, however, a practical and attainable solution to the state of national emergency.... America need not become a land of 'yesterday's people'."

The searching out and the dissemination of Knowledge that will make us Free, will continue to be the chief aim and purpose of this publication throughout the year of our Lord 1976 and the year of our Republic the 200th, and for whatever remaining years the Lord permits us to publish.

DON BELL REPORTS Weekly. $24 per year. Extra copies: 10¢ each. Please address all correspondence, orders and inquiries to:
DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

1976, THE TARGET DATE, HAS ARRIVED

CAN WE PREVENT THE TAKEOVER?

1976 is the chosen year, control of America is the goal, because control of America implies control of the world. "The War Has Begun" is the headline of a conservative newsletter with a national circulation. It expressed fear of a Communist takeover and its opening paragraph read:

"For months we have been warning that the communists were planning a war on U.S. soil. It will not be Russian missiles attacking American cities and military targets, nor will it be Russian soldiers in uniform marching through our countryside. But, the current style of communist war is on in the United States of America and will advance until it is destroying property and taking lives on an increasing scale.... The Communists will call it a War of Liberation for Panama, Puerto Rico and Guantanamo Bay. Violence will likely start in New York City first. Then the violence of guerrilla terrorists may be expected to spread across the entire nation in the name of the 1976 revolution to destroy faith in the American system with criticism directed at Constitutional government and private enterprise."

And, as predicted, the violence did start in New York City, at LaGuardia Airport, a very strategic move in the modern art of psychological warfare.

Another news source, a religion-oriented tabloid with an international circulation, carried an article which hinted that violence in the United States was but part of a worldwide series of crises. Under the headline "Will Mankind Survive the 20th Century?" the opening paragraph reads:

"Uncontrollable crises seem to be zeroing in on the peoples of the world. Dwindling food supplies, soaring populations, mass starvation, rampaging inflation, monetary crises, resource competition, political disarray and paralysis, wars and threats of wars, arms races, nuclear proliferation, terrorism, soaring crime, moral decay, weather upsets, pollution, and natural disasters all seem to defy solution by anything short of a new world order." (Emphasis added).

The inevitability of this "new world order" line of propaganda is merely a newer model of the old "better red than dead" sales pitch. We are told in various ways and in words selected to fit the particular occasion that this "new world order" is a sign of progress, an evolutionary inevitability, that we shouldn't resist it, but should submit supinely and seek to enjoy it. This propaganda line is preached by the Socialists, promoted by the Regionalists and bankrolled by the Monopoly Capitalists. When the Communists and other Socialist species preach this doctrine, they call it dialectical materialism and say it is historically inevitable. When the doctrine is promoted by the Regionalists, New Federalists and other kinds of Centralists, they praise it as progress toward utopian peace and justice through World Law. When the Monopoly Capitalists finance the movements preaching and promoting the "new world order," they see it as a way of gaining control of all natural and human resources, of monopolizing production and distribution and controlling the world market in their particular field—or fields—of operation. Power, Pelf and Prestige comprise their Holistic Trinity.

All three of the groups we have mentioned, the Socialists, the Regionalists and the Monopoly Capitalists, look upon 1976—our Bicentennial Year—as their Target Date. As Dr. Peter Beter said recently: "The overthrow of our Republic, our great United States of America, is now far advanced and proceeding rapidly. The powerful family Dynasty that now rules America behind the scenes is succeeding in this plan to bring upon us a horrendous depression combined with runaway inflation and cruel shortages. By election day, 1976, they plan to have America in a desperate situation, ready to grasp at any straw of hope. And while we are dazed and weakened, we will be invited to scrap our beloved Constitution, to accept their new one as the answer to all of our problems. If we fall into their scheming trap... we will be forfeiting the freedom we take for granted and consenting to our enslavement and that of our children." (The family "Dynasty" to which Dr. Beter refers is the Rockefeller family and business associates; sometimes referred to as "The Dirty Thirty"; the owners of the Class A, common stock of the Federal Reserve Corporation.)

A very lucid explanation of the situation that faces us in this Target Year, 1976, and an identification of the real enemy and the enemy's plan of conquest, was published by Ned Touchstone in the December, 1975 issue of "The Councilor," hard-hitting and fact-telling tabloid which is gaining both in circulation and credibility in this 13th year of its publication (The Councilor, P.O. Box 3567, Shreveport, Louisiana 71103. $4 per year). Editor Touchstone's statement follows:

LET'S SHARE A SECRET...

Americans have been falsely led to believe that the economic conflict in America is warfare between Capitalism and Socialism. If this were the case, the biggest self-styled "capitalists" would not be giving so much of their money to promote socialism.

There are three, not two, major forces in the conflict:

1. Free Enterprise. Under this system, competition, freedom, progress, construction, traditions and the family are major elements of consideration.

2. Monopoly Capitalism. Under this system, monopoly, repression, Big Brother government, regression, destruction, denial of tradition and destruction of the family are major elements of consideration.

3. Socialism and Welfarism. Persons who fight for more government control and more government handouts are merely the dupes of Monopoly Capitalism. In return for bribery (free lunches, etc.) they are willing to lock-step to the polls on election day to vote for those candidates who are the secret pawns of the Rockefellers, Rothschilds and other members of the Frankfurt Bloc.

If there is any humor in the situation above, it is the fact that the Monopoly Capitalists will make slave laborers out of the Socialists and Welfarists once it is no longer necessary to use them as voters.

Real goals of the Monopoly Capitalists appear to be the ancient Illuminist goals: Captivity of all mankind by whatever means, captivity of the means of production and natural resources, and destruction of Christendom.

Corporate Socialism is a means toward this end of capturing our nation. Under Corporate Socialism the same brand names will appear in the marketplace, and most of the old corporate names will remain. But through a system of mergers and holding companies, Illuminists who control Monopoly Capitalism aspire to complete mastery of the marketplace. At the top of this pyramid would be the same families who began to prey together in Frankfurt 200 years ago.

If you are naive enough to regard these paragraphs as incorrect, we challenge you to find and share with us a better explanation of the strange events that have been happening in America and the world in our lifetimes. You can't. We've spent 31 years of intensive study to learn what is happening.

The antidote to this poison is simply. Less than 1 person in 10,000 is truly dedicated to Monopoly Capitalism. About 400 persons in every 10,000 already know the value of Free Enterprise and have enough information to want to protect themselves and their families. The rest of the people are blotter brains. They soak up the last message they hear.

The good guys outnumber the bad guys at least 400 to 1. We simply are not yet making our share of the noise and grabbing our share of the blotter brain votes.

We can.

(signed) Ned Touchstone

DIVIDE AND CONQUER

One of the chief difficulties in attempting to grab "our share of the blotter brains" has to do with the strategy being employed by the architects of this New World Order. It is made possible because "The Dynasty" controls, directly or indirectly, at least 85 per cent of the communications outlets in the United States. The strategy involves brainwash, psychological warfare, and the withholding of important information from the public.

The current involvement in Angola provides an excellent example of how "The Dynasty" wages psychopolitical warfare against the American citizenry, dividing them on a pre-planned issue where neither side is wholly right nor wholly wrong, and which should never have been allowed to become a major foreign policy issue in the first place! But, the so-called "blotter brains" can never be convinced that the Angola involvement was carefully planned long before Portugal descended into chaos; that the chief purpose was to get the control and development of Angolan natural resources (oil, diamonds, gold and other minerals) into the hands of the chosen Monopoly Capitalists (as had already happened in Central Africa, the Congo, Ghana, Kenya, and other mininations whose establishment was supervised by the UN on behalf of the Monopoly Capitalists. A secondary purpose in the creation of the Angolan involvement has to do with the fact that the Vietnamese involvement had been milked dry, and a new issue was needed to divide the American citizenry into opposing camps: Conservatives vs. Liberals, and to keep them arguing about Angola while the architects of the New World Order continued centralizing all political power and stealing the people's remaining freedoms while the people were looking the other way, toward far away Angola.

Here is a lesson from history which we did not learn: In the years leading up to World War II and our entry therein, the United States government permitted the sale of massive quantities of scrap iron to Japan; this despite the protests of wiser and more patriotic heads who said this iron might be returned to the United States in the form of bullets and bombs—which it was. This sale of strategic materiel to Japan—which could have been obtained from no other source at that time—made it possible for Japan to develop the forces necessary to challenge us at Pearl Harbor and throughout the Pacific.

Today's parallel: The United States government is permitting, even encouraging, the sale (or give-away) of massive quantities of wheat, tools, and technological know-how to Soviet Russia; making it possible for that imperialistic power to challenge the United States militarily, industrially, and even spatially. To paraphrase Lenin: we gave Japan the bullets and bombs; we're giving Communist Russia the hangman's rope!

Another unlearned history lesson: While the United States government was according a kind of favored nation trade relationship with pre-war Japan, that island empire was busy building a great navy, with which it could challenge our foreign trade and "open door" policies in China and other Asian trading areas, through the development of Japan's East Asia Co-Prosperity Sphere. Then, to rectify our alleged mistakes, we (the federal government) imposed economic sanctions and embargoes. This made it necessary and essential for Japan to fight for her economic existence; so Pearl Harbor was attacked. And there were certain U.S. government officials charged with seeing to it that Pearl Harbor was attacked, and that the disaster would be great enough to make the people of the United States agree to a declaration of war against Nazi Germany and Fascist Italy as well as against Japan!

Today's parallel: Through trade and aid and under-the-counter most favored nation treatment of the Soviet Union and her satellites, Russia is beginning to compete with the United States and other industrialized nations and, as did Japan half a century ago under similar circumstances, Russia is in the process of building the world's largest navy and air force, and is beginning to establish a kind of East Africa Co-Prosperity Sphere, with Angola as a strategic defense base for such a sphere.

The history lesson: Japan would never have been able to attack Pearl Harbor if she had not been sold that scrap iron and other war materials. And Russia would never have been able to take over Cuba in the Americas and now Angola in Africa if she had not been given wheat, tools and technological know-how by the United States!

You won't read much about it in the controlled communications channels, but thanks to American rope-sellers (cf. Lenin), the Soviet Union is about to launch a third aircraft carrier. Russia now has more than 2,000 naval vessels—about four times that of the United States. The Soviet Union has more cruisers, more submarines, and more destroyers than the United States. And the Russian ships are said to be much faster and more heavily armed than U.S. ships. Said an authoritative report: "The remarkable Soviet superiority in numbers of vessels was achieved through an all out construction program in the last decade, in which the U.S.S.R. out-built the U.S. by three ships to one, while the U.S. was, at the same time, mothballing many of its older vessels."

"In four crucial regions—all significant to Western oil shipments," the report states, "the Soviets have established growing fleets of attack ships.

- * In the Mediterranean, the Russians outnumber the American Sixth Fleet at times by almost 50%...

- * In the western Pacific, the Soviets have surpassed the American Seventh Fleet in tonnage, numbers and submarines.

- * In the Indian Ocean, where 75 per cent of Europe's and 85 per cent of Japan's oil moves, the Soviets operate about twenty warships....

- * In the North Sea, a growing Soviet submarine fleet poses a threat to the British and Norwegian oil fields...over 160 submarines are based in the area."

"It is ironic," this report concludes, "that a great land power, Soviet Russia, has built up its navy to the point where it could threaten the isolation of the great Atlantic sea power, Western Europe. The Soviet navy may be the chief factor in eventually cutting off the U.S. from Western Europe."

May we suggest yet another historical comparison? In the years between the League of Nations Covenant and the United Nations Charter, Japan was permitted to build up a huge war machine, which could be used to anger Americans into entering a World War that would end with the dividing of the world into three Regions:

- * The "Free West," under the suzerainty of the United States;

- * The "Enslaved East," under the control of the Soviet Union; and

* The "Underdeveloped Third World" which was to grow up under the guardianship of Red China, but with financial assistance from the U.S. and military assistance from the USSR. (This was Kissinger's Trilateral Constellation which began to come to light as an already established policy when Kissinger opened up Moscow and Peking as co-equal partners with Washington).

Now, in tune with "the changing times," Russia being permitted, and even encouraged by the Rockefeller-Rothschild-Hammer-Eaton Cabal, to build up a huge war machine to scare the so-called 'blotter brains' into demanding the establishment of the pre-planned "New World Order"!

And how does Angola fit into this jigsaw puzzle? Well, avoiding the details and the involved technicalities, the crux of the controversy is controlled confusion. It is right for us to intervene militarily in Angola, it is wrong for us to intervene militarily in Angola....

It is called "divide and conquer." All the conservatives, with the Executive Branch leading the way, promote intervention; and all the liberals, with Congress blocking the funds needed, protest intervention. This thus becomes an example of the Hegelian formula in operation: the only solution (or synthesis) being the establishment of the New World Order!

However, as we stated previously, before the world can be taken over, the United States must itself be taken over. Because this Nation really is the last hope of the world, in the sense of physical—as opposed to spiritual—freedom.

And that's why terrorism becomes such an important item on the agenda of the promoters of this "Second American Revolution."

It is well known by this time that Communists are forming, and leading, terrorist groups who are told to destroy and kill wherever they can find, or make, an opportunity; the aim being to destroy faith in the American system so that a new system can be raised on the ashes of the old system. But what is not so well known is the fact that these terrorist activities are being financed by the Monopoly Capitalists, via their foundations, organizations such as the World and National Council of Churches etc. Their "change agents" also caused the creation of a special Regional Agency that would take charge of controlling the terrorism they were financing. (Same old ploy: make a plan, create an emergency, put the plan into operation to solve the created emergency).

From the LEAA Newsletter for January-February

1975, this item: "In the research and development area, Mr. Velde noted that the National Institute of Law Enforcement and Criminal Justice has launched a $2 million Model Evaluation Program that will develop model systems at the state or regional level. A civil disorder and terrorism task force will soon be established to draft national standards and goals for state and national programs, he announced. An LEAA-funded symposium on terrorism associated with the American Bicentennial Celebration was conducted by the FBI in December."

About the same time that the foregoing was published, Jack Anderson included this information in a syndicated column:

"Law enforcement experts fear that revolutionaries, citing the 1776 revolution as justification, may use violence to attract attention to their radical causes during the Bicentennial celebrations next year. This threat of terrorism has prompted the Law Enforcement Assistance Administration to set aside $1 million to help beef up police forces in the 13 original colonies...."

We have often referred to LEAA as the nucleus from which a national police force can be developed, thus ushering in a police state, as a necessary part of the New World Order. That the LEAA intends to become international in scope, not merely national, is indicated by the following article which also appeared in the LEAA Newsletter:

"LEAA's National Criminal Justice Reference Service is developing an international clearing house for criminal justice information. The Crime Control Act of 1973 gave NCJR's parent organization, LEAA's National Institute of Law Enforcement and Criminal Justice, the responsibility for establishing an 'international clearinghouse for exchange of information with respect to the improvement of law enforcement and criminal justice'."

Finally: terrorism, inflation, unemployment, shortages, all will combine to make people (the "blotter brains") feel that the only solution is federal control of everything. Centrally controlled Regionalism will replace State and Local Government, thus preparing the Corporate Socialist Republic of America for entrance into the New World Order. Internationally, this World Order will be promoted as the only way to prevent an all out war between the Two Great Powers.

But these things need not be if we abide by and act according to the true Spirit of 1776!

DON BELL REPORTS Weekly. $24 per year.
Extra copies: 10¢ each. Address all orders:
DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

REGIONALISM MARCHES ON

FOUR STATES SURRENDER

The trend began with the capitulation of New York City. When the Nation's largest city appealed to the Federal government for direct aid, and received it, the pattern was set. No longer would the Feds move in and take over through coercive measures; they would simply wait until cities and States asked to be taken over, and then they would move in and take command, reluctantly and resignedly.

The next step came when four State Governors asked the Federal government to take over their welfare problems. The New York Times gave the story front page treatment on Sunday, January 4. The report began:

"The Governors of four major states, contending that the national welfare system is 'out of control,' have called on President Ford to espouse a Federal takeover of state and local welfare programs. 'The current patchwork of Federal, state and local welfare programs is not working,' the Governors said yesterday in a joint telegram to the President. 'It is time for a fundamental re-ordering of our approach to income maintenance, mere tinkering with existing programs is not enough.'

"The telegram was signed by Governors Brendan T. Byrne of New Jersey, Hugh J. Carey of New York, Milton J. Shapp of Pennsylvania and Patrick J. Lucey of Wisconsin, all Democrats."

The Governors asked for a White House conference on the subject of Federal takeover and, according to the Times, proposed the following:

* Consolidation of existing Federal programs for the poor into a "single, federally financed cash system providing a floor to the income available to every family." The proposal would consolidate the Federal food stamp program, the Supplemental Security Income program for the aged and disabled, and the principal Federal welfare program, Aid to families with Dependent Children.

* A Federal welfare program that would provide equality to divided or fatherless families as well as to united ones.

* The preservation of work incentives and a "fair level of assistance to the poor." Ac-ording to New Jersey officials who helped draft the proposals, a minimum income of about $4,000 a year would be guaranteed to a family of four.

* A uniform and easily understood benefit reduction schedule, gradually reaching a "zero point of no benefits and no income taxation" when actual family income reached about $7,500 a year.

"Although the four Governors did not say what a Federal takeover of welfare programs would cost," the Times article reported, "New Jersey officials estimated that it would total from $5 billion to $7 billion a year for the Federal Government."

Without arguing the merits or demerits of the proposed welfare program, or any other welfare program, let us note the trend: Welfare began in the United States as a community obligation. Churches and various benevolent associations "provided for their own," with Government keeping its nose out of all welfare programs except where malfeasance or misappropriation might occur. It was a type of Christian adherence to the admonition that people should "render therefore unto Caesar the things which are Caesar's; and unto God the things that are God's." (Matthew 22:21). In the Constitutional sense, "providing for the general welfare" did not intend or legalize the providing for individual or special interest welfare.

As time went on and regard for both Bible and Constitution began to wane, people began to ignore the second of the two great commandments given by Jesus ("Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself" - Matt. 22:39). And they also seemingly began to believe that the Christian obligation "to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction" (James 1:27) was too great a strain upon individuals and independent congregations; and they fell for the false premise that the local government should be empowered to organize and direct the relief and welfare activities of the community. The majority obviously felt that it was right and proper to break with Constitutions and Christian tradition, and permit Government to lay and collect taxes for this purpose.

Also at about this time in history, the meaning of certain words began to change. If the relief work was done by Government, it was called "welfare;" while if it was done by individuals or privately organized groups (such as The March of Dimes) it was called "charity;" thus making it seem Christian and Biblical, but in reality besmirching the name of true charity; since charity is of the heart, not of the pocketbook.

As with public education when it was turned over to the politicians; also with welfare when it became a Government activity. The step-by-step deterioration of both society and government proceeded. First, welfare became onerous to free agencies and was turned over to coercive local government. Then local governments found the task too burdensome and it was turned over to State Governments. They, in turn, found the job too tough for them and four Governors have requested the Federal Government to take over the whole responsibility for welfare programs; which means in the final analysis slavery from womb to tomb for all; both the welfare recipient and the welfare provider. Slavery in the political and economic sense, is the refusal to pay a man a wage so that he can store his wealth and plan for his own future. The free enterprise system abolished slavery, although all the flaws were never totally abolished from the system itself. However, with the coming of government welfare, man went right back into slavery; he became a slave of the State. Under this new enslavement, the working man would be fed by Corporate Enterprise so long as he was able or willing to work. But when he was unable or unwilling to work, then the State would feed him. His condition would be that of the draft animal, pensioned to the pasture when he could not or would not pull the load or finish the race.

To support this welfare system, the profit-makers and wage-earners would be equally enslaved. Their every action would be open to government inspection and they would be regulated in all their comings and their goings. They would be allowed to retain enough to support themselves and their dependents; the rest would be taken to support the Government and those on Government welfare. Life for the governing elite would, of course, be different. However, one would have to be born into the caste, or be specially selected for a special job in the machinery of government in order to escape economic slavery.

The Federal Takeover was well planned. A new system called Regional Governance was set up to take over the administrative duties formerly performed by local and State governance. (This, incidentally, is a worldwide operation. Regionalism has been installed in Soviet Russia, Britain, France, Italy, and other "developed" countries. Regionalism is but a giant step toward the "World Community" that Secretary of State Henry Kissinger keeps talking about).

To inaugurate Regional Governance, the fifty United States were divided into Ten Regions, each with a designated "capitol" to handle all matters within that particular Region (or Province). The stated purpose of the action is well explained in one paragraph taken from "Hearings Before the Subcommittee on Urban Affairs of the Joint Economic Committee," United States Congress, May 19-26, 1971:

"REGIONALISM: The Quiet Revolution.

"Local government is changing itself in an effort to better meet the needs of the people. Across the nation, cities, towns, and school districts that serve a common area are joining together in a regional effort to solve mutual problems. In a quiet way, regionalism is a revolution in the structure of our Federal system."

To promote this "quiet revolution" on a national scale, President Nixon issued Executive Order 11647 on February 12, 1972 which said, in part:

"There is hereby established a Federal Regional Council for each of the ten standard Federal regions. Each Council shall be composed of the directors of the regional offices of the Departments of Labor, Health, Education, and Welfare, and Housing and Urban Development, the Secretarial Representative of the Department of Transportation and the directors of the regional offices of the Office of Economic Opportunity, the Environmental Protection Agency, and the Law Enforcement Assistance Administration. The President shall designate one member of each such Council as Chairman of that Council and such Chairman shall serve at the pleasure of the President. Representatives of the Office of Management and Budget may participate in any deliberations of each Council."

It should be understood that each of these directors is an appointed bureaucrat, as are his bosses in Washington. The only elected officials that have any connection whatever with the administration of Regional Governance are the President and Vice President of the United States (who themselves are appointed officials as of this date). Hence, we have in Regionalism a Bureaucratic Dictatorship ready to assume all real authority over State governments and the people they represent. The people and the States will be reduced to political impotency.

And, in the politically potent handling of all welfare, four State Governors are now begging the President to grant this dictatorial power to the entrenched bureaucrats!

But Welfare is just one area of administration that is involved. The following gives us another example, and we are quoting excerpts from an article which appeared in The Chicago Tribune on January 1, 1976:

"The Illinois-Indiana Bi-State Commission is one year old Thursday. Never heard of it? ...It was forced on the eight-county Chicago metropolitan area—six counties in Illinois, two in Indiana—by the federal government as part of a chain of regional organizations.

"The Federal government used the power of the purse to get local officials to establish an agency to coordinate planning in the region. It took an announcement two years ago that it was suspending eligibility for federal funds to get the local people into gear. So now the commission exists (12 members and a staff of three), empowered to coordinate federal, state and local planning and developments as they affect the bi-state, eight-county region of 7.7 million people. It has to review, under federal 'A-95' powers, plans to spend federal money on projects with interstate implications....

"Robert E. Merriam, chairman of the prestigious federal Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations (ACIR), says the Bi-State (Commission), 'can play a very important role.'...

"The federal government is barred by the Constitution from directly interfering with the internal structure of local government in the states. It has used its treasury, however, to force greater regional activity in local government, by requiring regional review before disbursing federal money."

THE "MAD BOMBER" SYNDROME AND THE TERRORIST TECHNIQUE

There is yet another way in which the Feds are forcing Regionalism down the throats of the people; and this involves the creation of a regionally controlled, nationally directed police force.

We are being scared into demanding that we become a "Police State." Literally. The following United Press report is an example of the methods being used:

Washington — UPI — The United States will remain the target of international terrorists no matter what policy it adopts toward the turbulent developing world, according to a research organization's report. The report urges Americans not to overreact to terrorist attacks, however, but to treat them like "natural calamities." It warns that despite sophisticated security systems, government attempts to counter terror can fail. "There simply is no final solution to the sufficiently dedicated fanatic with a moment of luck," the report said. "The threatened must accept that, however spectacular the deeds of terror, they are more easily tolerated than prevented," it said.

The report, "Transnational Terror," published by the American Enterprise Institute for Public Policy Research, was commissioned before the bombing of LaGuardia Airport in New York City — which has heightened fears that terrorists might increase attacks against U.S. monuments and institutions during the Bicentennial. The AEI is a publicly supported, non-partisan research and educational organization. It said the purpose of the study is to aid policy-makers in their approach to the problem.

"Because of Third World perceptions of the international system, this country will remain a revolutionary target no matter what our posture; 1776 is very long ago, and even the Marshall Plan is ancient history to a young Palestinian Arab," said the author, J. Bowyer Bell. "Attacks on transnational order by rebels, often with built-in incapacities, must not be perceived as truly terminal threats to the system, and can be tolerated like natural calamities," the report said. "It is, of course, unwise to ignore natural calamities entirely, although it would be better to ignore such violence than to overreact," he said.

On the same day that the preceding article appeared, in the same newspaper, and on the same page, there was a companion article written by Ronald Kotulak of The Chicago Tribune Service, which pointed out that "there may be a little bit of a mad bomber in many people," according to psychiatrists. Dr. Jules Masserman, president of the International Association for Social Psychiatry, is quoted as saying:

"Some individuals are so angry at the system that to them there are no innocent people. Everyone is guilty. If they had it in their power they would feel justified in destroying entire cities."

Masserman continued: "It is relatively easy to indoctrinate small and even large groups with the idea that they are right, others are wrong, and that the others should either be converted or eliminated."

The "planted" conclusion: Terrorism has become a way of life, we must accept it as a "natural calamity." Yet, it would not be right to do nothing to try to stem the tide of terrorism. Therefore, the Federal government should take steps to curb the torrent of terrorist activity.

Ergo: as if it were a direct response to the stated crisis, the following appeared in the San Francisco Chronicle of Dec. 17, 1975.

"The state of California is planning to train and equip about 1200 National Guardsmen to handle law enforcement duties in any area where police have gone on strike. Members of the new unit, to be called the 'Law Enforcement Assistance Force (LEAF),' are to travel in sedans with red lights and sirens, carry revolvers and nightsticks and wear motorcycle style white helmets...."

"Douglas Cunningham, executive director of the state Office of Criminal Justice Planning, emphasized that the new unit was not to break strikes but was to be used whenever local law enforcement agencies needed help. This could include strikes but also covers events like riots, fires and natural disasters...."

We hesitate to refer to the "Berkeley Barb" as an authoritative news source. However, our first authentic information concerning Operation "Garden Plot" came from left wing sources, and checked out as correct. And Ray Riegert of the "Barb" has spent a great deal of time and effort studying this potential Police State plot. He writes:

"Berkeley police Capitan T.W. Johnson was given a special assignment two weeks ago, to attend the California Civil Disorder Management Course, given every few weeks at Camp San Luis Obispo by the California Specialized Training Institute. (Here students like the Police Captain) play a domestic war game that is part of a stratagem being developed on a national playing board.

"The name of the master game plan is 'Garden Plot,' a massive surveillance system, directed largely by the army, designed to quell civil disorders, surveil hundreds of thousands of Americans and make contingency plans for martial law...."

Is there any answer to the dilemma? Have we any recourse short of supine submission to enslavement? Col. Arch Roberts, who is director of the Committee to Restore the Constitution, Inc. (Suite 480, Savings Bldg., Fort Collins, Colo. 80521), tells us to start with the knowledge that Regionalism is unconstitutional, that "the authority of the United States is the Constitution," and "all persons involved in the regional governance conspiracy are unlawfully attempting to alter the form of government in the respective States in violation of Section 3, paragraph 1, and Section 4, Article IV, of the United States Constitution.

"It is quite clear that individuals, both public and private, who promote or otherwise participate in the conspiracy known as 'regional governance' are in violation of Section 2384, Title 18, United States Code, and must be held to answer for such crimes by the people and by the elected officials who represent the people." (Write to Col. Roberts for details of an action program).

There also is the "Posse Comitatus" action which we mentioned briefly in a previous letter. The following from the Sheriff's Posse Comitatus, Cook County, Illinois, is self-explanatory:

The "Posse Comitatus," "Sheriff's Posse Comitatus," or "Power of the County" is a lawful constituted body politic of the citizens of a particular county, who volunteer to keep the peace, prevent crime and assist the Sheriff in his lawful duty. The Sheriff is elected by the people and is directly responsible for law enforcement in his county. It is his responsibility to protect the people of his county from unlawful acts on the part of anyone. The Sheriff is accountable and responsible only to the citizens who are inhabitants of his county. The Sheriff has taken an oath of office to uphold, preserve and defend the Constitution of the United States and the State in which his county exists. The U.S. Constitution is the Supreme Law of the Land and all acts of legislatures, degrees, custom or usage, contrary to it notwithstanding.

The Sheriff's Posse Comitatus, after registering and notification of such to the Sheriff, is thereby lawfully constituted and brought into being. It is then the Sheriff's choice when and how he shall use it.

The authority and lawfulness of the Posse Comitatus is recognized in the U.S. Constitution, federal and state laws, American Jurisprudence, Magna Carta, Common Law, and the Bible.

This program is supported by responsible citizens of their counties throughout the Nation.... The Sheriff's Posse Comitatus is a stand-by group of responsible citizens dedicated to the preservation of constitutional law and order in their community and county.

For further information, see your County Sheriff, or write to the Sheriff's Posse Comitatus, Post Office Box 305, Homewood, Illinois 60430.

DON BELL REPORTS Weekly, presenting the Christian American point of view. Two copies of each issue are sent to each subscriber. Extra copies: 10¢ each. Please address all orders and correspondence to:
DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

THE WAR AGAINST THE FREE ENTERPRISE SYSTEM

PRIME MINISTERS TRUDEAU AND MANLEY ARE STALKING HORSES

A strange thing happened on the road to the New World Order. Some of the Nations of the West took a right turn, left the broad Socialist highway, and began drifting back toward the areas of Conservatism from which they had been lured by the pied pipers of Progressivism. There was no stampede, mind you, but people were beginning to shy away from Big Government, Planned Economies and Unsound Money. They were beginning to look for political leaders who would lead them away from Socialism and Big Brotherism. There was a restlessness pervading the human herd that prompted the herders to worry and wonder. New York Timesman James Reston sounded the alarm in his column of January 13, 1976:

"The economic and financial crises of the last year," wrote CFR Mouthpiece Reston, "has been just severe enough to change almost all political assumptions. Not only in this country, but in Europe and Japan, the rates of inflation and unemployment have challenged not merely the governments in power, but the whole theory of the welfare state. The financial crises in Britain and in New York City have dramatized the problem. The conservatives have been gaining in Australia and New Zealand. Even the Fabian Socialists in London, including Prime Minister Harold Wilson, have been singing a more conservative tune."

Reston remarked that in spite of bungling and back-tracking on promises, Jerry Ford was still maintaining a semblance of popularity, apparently because he was turning to the right. "This cannot be explained by any economic or financial brilliance or consistency on the part of the Ford Administration.

It has waffled all over the landscape on whether inflation or unemployment was the presiding issue. Its energy policy has been a jumble of contradictions. It has promised what it could not deliver, vetoed its own promises, and come into the Presidential campaign of 1976 with a budget deficit that makes the Kennedy and Johnson years seem almost a model of fiscal responsibility. Even on foreign economic policy,..."

Reston then reviews the Ford record of foreign policy bungling which, he intimates, matches his domestic stumbling; and yet,

Ford remains a strong candidate and a probable winner because he has taken a turn to the right in his campaign utterances.

The professional mouthpiece for the Eastern Establishment is careful not to mention Reagan or Wallace in his column, nor the fact that they are topping the polls in their respective political parties because they are talking like conservatives. Reston preferred to speak of parties rather than personages, and noted that "the Republicans have put the Democrats on the defensive on economic policy—in effect stolen the Democrats' main issue."

"This is, as the basketball players say, quite a 'turn-over.' The Democrats had the economic offensive ever since the days of Franklin Roosevelt, the decisive play in the game of politics, but they have lost it in the first quarter of the 1976 campaign, and are now wondering how to get it back."

In short: If the Nations of the world and the people thereof could "have their druthers," and were left alone to seek their own economic and political salvation, they would turn their backs on Socialism and Big Brother Government, and return to the free market system with its individual liberties and responsibilities and the rewards and punishments that accompany economic and political freedom, Paternalism and Big Brotherism are plagues the people would like to do without, if only they could. (When we speak of "people," we are not referring to those who like the idea of being slaves).

However, regardless of what the people may desire, there are those in the Elite Circle who have no intention of permitting the world to "go conservative." And that is where two American Prime Ministers were chosen to resist the trend. Lest we be misunderstood, please note that in the hemispheric sense, Canadians and Jamaicans are Americans too, just as much as are citizens of the United States. So, possibly because they are Americans, Prime Minister Manley of Jamaica and Prime Minister Trudeau of Canada were chosen to command the Socialist forces that would destroy the Free Enterprise System.

The propaganda war began with Manley's appearance at the World Council of Churches Assembly at Nairobi, Kenya, in November 1975 Posing as a leader of the "Third World," and a spokesman for Political Action Christianity, Manley attacked capitalism and the Western economic order, and told delegates to the Assembly that "Organized religion and the third world together must create a new economic order." Later, Manley came to the United States and was permitted to speak out against capitalism and free enterprise over network television and radio networks. Manley then returned to Jamaica to prepare for the upcoming IMF meeting which his country was hosting. And, suddenly Henry Kissinger took off on a week-long vacation in Jamaica, where he spent hours comparing notes with Prime Minister Manley. Returning to the United States, Secretary of State Kissinger, using the SALT negotiations as an excuse, would go to Moscow to compare notes with Kremlin officials.

Meanwhile, Prime Minister Trudeau was in the process of completing the socialization of Canada. Also, just as Manley became a Third World crusader against free enterprise, Trudeau became a Western World crusader against the free market system. The following article that appeared in the Washington Star of January 9, 1976, is self-explanatory:

TRUDEAU'S VIEWS TRIGGER BIG BROTHER ACCUSATIONS

By Peter Ward

Ottawa—Recent statements by Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau indicating that the days of the free market system may soon be over has brought opposition to the government's price and wage controls to a boiling point. Criticism of the program previously confined to business and labor has now spilled over to Trudeau's own Liberal party, and the premier is facing charges ranging from "fascist" to "Communist."

Business is organizing write-in campaigns for donations to fight the prime minister and organized labor has warned: "We must not let this Orwellian nightmare happen. We must not relinquish our hard-won rights, freedoms, and traditions, to a 1984-type Big Brother."

The statement came from Joe Morris, president of the Canadian Labor Congress, and he called on labor to fight the trend toward government by decree. "Far from improving economic conditions," said Morris, "the government's program actually threatens to slow the potential growth rate of the economy and create higher unemployment."

And now disagreement has spread to the Liberal party itself. Four Ottawa Liberal electoral district presidents have criticized him, four more in Toronto have denounced government economic policies and Liberal provincial government ministers in Nova Scotia have come out opposed to the Ottawa Liberal government.

The turmoil results from three radio and television interviews Trudeau gave during the Christmas-New Year holidays. In each interview he warned that unless Canadian values change within the next few years, the controls imposed last October will be replaced with other controls, not removed when they are due to expire in 1978.

"Some economists say all you've got to do is get back to the free market system and make this market system work," said Trudeau. "It won't you know." Only Government can control big business and big unions, he said, and "that means the government is going to take a larger role in running institutions," to end the cycle of high unemployment and inflation. "It means there's going to be not less authority in our lives, but perhaps more," he said.

... The swift imposition of price and wage controls last October—after he had fought an election campaign to majority victory in 1974 arguing against controls—and the complexity of the regulations which will operate the control system, have shocked most Canadians into believing Trudeau: that the country's economic situation is indeed serious. (Emphasis added throughout this article).

It should be noted that when Trudeau set out to replace the free market system, his first act was to renounce a campaign promise and impose price and wage controls. The chief economist for the National Chamber of Commerce of the United States has stated that he expects price and wage controls to be imposed in this country before November 2—election day. Gary North, who publishes "Remnant Review" is of the opinion that, if Ford is still on the scene, controls are almost inevitable, because:

"Ford has to demonstrate that he is a forceful leader, not a bumbler. If he has an economic Mayaguez available, and if the polls are going against him in September, I fear that he will act. The reimposition of controls is just too obvious a possibility. Anyone who is so naive politically as to state that price controls are impossible because the American public has learned that they do not work is so out of touch with reality that he almost certainly has to have a Ph. D. in economics. If Jerry Ford can sign legislation that would forcibly roll back oil prices in order to solve the energy crisis—and let us not forget that this is what he did—then the 'success' of the energy program, which I assure you the Republicans will announce next fall, will serve as a fine precedent for the so-called temporary roll-back of other prices. The precedent has been set. The character of the individual has been announced. He is only quibbling now about his price." (From Gary North's "Remnant Review," Jan. 7, 1976. Published every other Wednesday. $45 for 26 issues. P.O. Box 5026, Long Beach, CA. 90805).

Permit us again to call attention to the personages involved in this current battle to prevent any return to economic conservatism anywhere in the world, and to note the "positioning" of these personages on the battlefield. Leading the forces of the so-called Third World is the Socialist Prime Minister of Jamaica, Michael Manly. He is a leader of the Communist-controlled World Council of Churches, he played host to the recent meeting of the World Bank, he "entertained" the United States Secretary of State during the latter's recent "vacation" to Kingston, and he recently paid a state visit to Havana where he was entertained by Fidel Castro. (Coincidentally, and of extreme interest to all who oppose Kissinger's attempts to give away the Panama Canal. Senator Jake Javits—whose wife is a paid employee of Iran Air—was in Panama on Jan. 9 and 10 to meet with Panamanian Chief of Government Brigadier General Omar Torrijos and other officials to discuss the Panama Canal treaty negotiations. When the meetings with Javits were concluded, Gen. Torrijos then traveled to Cuba on Jan. 10 for a five-day visit with Fidel Castro and other Cuban Communist officials. Wheels within wheels...)

While Manly manages the Third World forces the Western and Industrial Nations are represented in the Socialist spectrum by Pierre Elliott Trudeau, Prime Minister and head of the Liberal party of Canada. And, perhaps to keep Kremlin officials informed first hand as to what is happening in the West, Henry Kissinger, after conferring with Manly and later being informed of the results of the World Bank Conference at Kingston, then made a sudden change in his plans, and re-scheduled a trip to Moscow, one which had been cancelled previously because of the Angola confrontation and other rough waters on the Sea of Detente.

So much for the current maneuverings and the principals that are being maneuvered, all for the seeming purpose of preventing any interference with plans to complete the installation of the New World Order. Let it be understood that these principals we have mentioned—Trudeau, Manly and Kissinger—do not themselves call the plays. They do no crucial maneuvering on their own. They are themselves maneuvered, as are pieces of a gigantic chessboard. Their maneuverers are the governors of an elite group which can be called the International Banking Syndicate (IBS). This elite group has become all-powerful because it controls the issue of what we use for money in all the Nations of the world having Central Banking Systems. In the United States this is known as the Federal Reserve System. This elite group is proving John Maynard Keynes to be right in one respect. In 1920, eight or nine years before he came to be recognized as the leading proponent of monetary expansion by fiat (money based on debt instead of gold or silver) Keynes stated:

"Lenin is said to have declared that the best way to destroy the capitalist system was to debauch its currency.... Lenin was certainly right. There is no subtler, no surer means of overturning the existing basis of society.... The process engages all the hidden forces of economic law on the side of destruction and does it in a manner which not one man in a million can diagnose.... The governments of Europe... are fast rendering impossible a continuance of the social and economic order of the 19th century. (Quoted from Keynes "The Economic Consequences of the Peace," pages 235-37.)"

Control of the issue of currency was the key to control over all Nations. And the final aim of IBS is the destruction of the social and economic order of Christian civilization and the installation of a New World Order which calls for the elimination of National sovereignty, the creation of a World Currency and literal ownership of all the human and natural resources of the world!

To achieve this purpose, in the beginning, the control of the money of a Nation was thought to be sufficient. Later, the IBS which was then centered in Europe, began to learn something from those American upstarts who were beginning to compete with then for control of the world. They learned that financing governments and corporations was not enough to guarantee control of the world's natural resources, and that actual ownership of governments and corporations was better than the mere financing of them. John Pierpont Morgan did not start a bank and thus become powerful. He first gained control of railroads and industries. Likewise the Rockefeller Dynasty. Old John D. Senior maneuvered a monopoly in oil and then his offspring went into the International Banking business, but at the same time kept gaining control of industries and setting up multinational corporations. If the first Lord Rothschild of London had known what his five reigning cousins know today, he would not have lent the money to Disraeli and the British Government to build the Suez Canal; he would have formed a corporation and then have had his corporation build the canal.

James Rothschild (he changed his name from Jacob to James), who ran the Paris branch of the family syndicate, was instrumental in teaching the IBS yet another lesson: that the ownership of governments is important for the protection of a banker's interests. James (nee Jacob) built France's first great railroad, the Chemin de Fer du Nord. This enriched the Rothschilds greatly until the French government nationalized the railroad. So the Rothschilds had to start buying the French government to protect the investment! (Nelson Rockefeller as Vice President of the United States is a somewhat similar guarantee: the Manhattan Chase Bank is in a bit of trouble currently.)

Anyway, to summarize: the IBS is now a cabal of International Bankers, Multinational Corporations, and financiers of governments, which aims to rule the world. To do this it intends to establish a New World Order in which corporate management replaces government by law, in which money will become merely an entry on a Central Ledger, where full employment is guaranteed, where prices and wages are fixed by a Central Authority, and where womb-to-tomb security is assured for all who conform and love and obey Big Brother.

To achieve this "utopian" new order, it is necessary that unemployment continue at a dangerous level, that inflation continue to grow, that economic stagnation develop, and that recession continue. All of these things so that the people will demand a New World Order. Then the agents of the IBS can take charge and the people will rejoice.

The program is well under way. Last June 30 Newsweek described the OK Supermarket in a suburb of Tokyo where 67 vending-style machines holding 2,479 kinds of goods, all computer-controlled, served shoppers who had the correct plastic ID plate. "When the shopper has made all her purchases and is ready to leave, the cashier inserts her plastic card into a small computer and the total bill instantly pops out." That system, plus a computer that links the supermarket to the bank so that actual money is never used, is now being incorporated in United States stores on a test basis.

The January 1975 issue of Burroughs Clearing House carried a map and the following headline: "Work begins on a private international telecommunications network that will speed the movement of funds throughout Europe and also link with banks in the U.S. and Canada." The opening paragraphs of the article read in part: "Burroughs Corp. has been selected by the Society for Worldwide Interbank Financial Telecommunications (SWIFT) to supply data processing and data communications equipment which will be used in a new international telecommunications network which is based in Brussels, currently has a membership of 246 banks... in Amsterdam, Brussels, Copenhagen, Frankfurt, Helsinki, London, Milan, Montreal, New York, Oslo, Paris, Stockholm, Vienna and Zurich...."

The cashless society and the universal recording of all personal accounts in a computerized data bank is the objective. And this automatically means centralized control over every individual anywhere in the world. Because without one's own assigned computer code number, how can a person buy, or sell, or get credit for work performed? Absolute control over one's identity card is the ultimate in one-world economy, one-world government, one-world religion....

How long before such a planned economy can become a total reality? There is a saying: "Both history and common sense indicate that when the tools of a dream have been provided, the fulfillment of the dream is not far behind."

Wally Wood, Jr. did some research for an article he did on this subject for the Southwest Radio Church, Box 1144, Oklahoma City, Okla. 73101, and he asked several experts, "how long?" Some answers:

An executive of the Honeywell Corporation: "In my opinion, from a professional standpoint, there's no doubt that we will be in such a society in five to ten years at the most. From a personal point of view, it scares me. We will be forced to sacrifice our individuality."

A credit manager in a large department store: "Most assuredly, within the next ten years, if not sooner."

The executive vice president of a national bank: "Make no mistake, this is going to happen. The computer companies and our systems people want it."

They have the tools, the resources, the communications media, the political puppets, the specialists and the technicians, the power and the determination to bring about their New World Order. If a conservative trend continues, they will take over its leadership. If real resistance develops, they will infiltrate and render it ineffective. The only way of stopping them would seem to be by an act of Divine intervention; perhaps by the raising up of a 20th Century Gideon. But if there is such an one, he is still in the field threshing and hasn't shown himself. Our present most powerful weapon is prayer.

For information concerning this letter write:
DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

DOES THE STATE OWN YOUR CHILD?

CHILDREN NOW "WARDS OF THE STATE" IN CALIFORNIA

The story came to light "by accident." A California mother learned, just by accident, that her teenage daughter had received an abortion at the county hospital, without the parents' knowledge or consent. When the mother complained to the District Attorney, she was reminded that California has a law which permits children 12 years of age or older to receive abortions and other medical aid without parental consent or knowledge. The D.A. told the mother he could empathize with her but could do nothing more, because "children are now wards of the State."

In another case dealing with 'sexual health' a California judge ruled that "The State interest in the health of its children outweighs the claims based on religious freedom and right of parental control."

There is a long history of legal battling behind this decision. Six years ago, in 1969, a group of concerned citizens formed an organization which they called "Citizens for Parental Rights" (CPR), and brought suit against the San Mateo County School Board of Education and others, in an attempt to halt the "Family Life Sex Education" program that had been introduced into the schools that year. The legal charges: that the program interfered with the free exercise of religion, with the right of parental control of the children, and with the right of privacy.

Then followed eight court hearings, with one more yet to come. At the first five of the Superior Court hearings, four different presiding judges ruled in favor of CPR. However, each time CPR won a decision, the School Board appealed, and the case was tried all over again.

At the sixth Superior Court hearing, a judge was brought in from another County, and he ruled that "no constitutional issue exists." So now the CPR has found it necessary to appeal to a higher court. It has been a very expensive undertaking for a small group of private citizens and Margaret Scott, Publicity Director for the group has written a letter in which she says: "We hope you will see the urgency of turning the national 'spotlight' on the Citizens For Parental Rights 'Family Life Education' suit... This is our crucial hour for petitioning the Supreme Court, and if they can pretend we don't exist, you know they'll try. Publicity is probably our biggest weapon right now... Our religious liberties are at stake and all private education may well hinge on this case. It takes little imagination to predict what the 'state' will demand of these institutions 'in the interest of the 'health' of its children.' We truly believe this is the first order of the day for our Bi-Centennial... and, as He promised: 'Seek ye first the kingdom of God and His Righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you.'"

Note the emphasis on the "health" of the "State's" children. This is the key to the method of operation by which the Planners hope to legislate the family unit out of existence and make all people wards of the State, regardless of age or condition of servitude. "Health" is the key:—

On July 30, 1975 the United States Senate passed, with little fanfare and almost no public notice, Senate Bill 1466, the title of which reads: "A bill to amend the Public Health Service Act to extend and revise the program of assistance for the control and prevention of communicable diseases, and to provide for the establishment of the Office of Consumer Health Education and Promotion and the Center for Health Education and Promotion to advance the national health, to reduce preventable illness, disability, and death; to moderate self-imposed risks; to promote progress and scholarship in consumer health education and promotion and school health education; and for other purposes."

A catch-all bill, to be sure; but it was made especially dangerous through the passage of certain amendments. The existing Public Health Service Act deals, in part, with the prevention and control of "communicable diseases." This amendment strikes out the word "communicable" before the word "disease," thus broadening the whole area of personal health control. Thus, as in the case of alcoholism, which now is defined as a "disease," dope addiction and unwanted pregnancy also could be defined as "diseases," and therefore subject to prevention and control by an agency of H.E.W.

This new act would set up two agencies to conduct almost unlimited promotion and supervision of all physical and "mental" health in the Nation. For example, in regard to the proposed Center for Health, Education and Promotion, the Congressional Quarterly of August 9, 1975 commented:

"...the committee proposed creation of a private center to promote health education in ways the Federal Law could not; direct efforts to modify citizens' behavior, mass media content and school curricula..." In other words, this "Center" would become a center for the dissemination of propaganda for HEW, which is most interested in establishing a national health program similar to those already in operation in Russia, England, and other countries with Socialist Governments.

"The committee further explained," said the Congressional Quarterly, "that the 'private' center could play an important role in encouraging consumers to adopt healthy habits because the Federal government could not compel actions that would interfere with individual freedoms under the Constitution."

That you may better understand the real intent of this bill, we quote from Sec. 1708 which deals with the establishment of a corporation to take charge of the Nation's "Health Education and Promotion":

Sec. 1708. The Congress finds and declares that—

"(1) It is in the public interest to inform the public about health and about ways to best protect and improve personal health;

"(2) The public must develop the ability to examine and weigh consequences of personal decisions respecting health;

"(3) The public must be motivated to desire changes supportive of more healthful lifestyles;

"(4) Impediments that inhibit the voluntary adoption and maintenance of more healthful practices by the public must be identified and mitigated or removed;

"(5) To achieve these goals it is necessary for the Federal Government to complement, assist, and support a national policy that will advance the national health, reduce preventable illness, and death, moderate self-imposed risks, and promote progress and scholarship in consumer health education and promotion; and

"(6) A private corporation should be created to facilitate the development of a health education and promotion strategy for the Nation."

This corporation is to have a Board of Directors "consisting of twenty-five members appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate." This Board then will name and appoint a President and other officers of the "Center," and fix their salaries and terms of service. The "Center" will then be given the sum of $11,000,000 for each fiscal year ending June 30, 1978; and with this money the "Center" shall:

"...establish communications with, provide a forum for the involvement of, and seek the advice and support of, organizations, agencies, and groups involved in health care, education, labor and business, social and civic organizations, consumer organizations, and communications....

A few paragraphs later we are told that: "included in the activities of the Center authorized for the accomplishment of purposes set forth in this section are among others not specifically named—

"(A) to obtain grants from and to make contracts with individuals, and with private, State, and Federal agencies, organizations and institutions.

"(B) The Center in carrying out its functions under this section may prescribe such regulations as it deems necessary."

Here in the United States we have been brainwashed into referring to this kind of a program as "participatory democracy." But in pre-war Italy where the system was first developed and used, it was called Fascism. The very idea of a group of appointed individuals using taxpayers' money to set up a private corporation for the purpose of installing a National Health Program, and being given the power to "prescribe such regulations as it deems necessary" for the enforcement of such a program, amounts to absolute authoritarianism, no matter by what name it may be called!

In case there may be any remaining doubt as to the actual purpose of this bill, we are given the following definition:

* * * * *

DEFINITIONS

Sec. 1719. For purposes of this Act—
“Health education and promotion” is a process that favorably influences understandings, attitudes, and conduct, including cultural awareness and sensitivity, in regard to individual and community health. Specifically, it affects and influences individuals and community health behavior and attitudes in order to moderate self-imposed risks, maintain and promote physical and mental health and efficiency, and reduce preventable illness, disability, and death.” (We can find no definition for the phrase “self-imposed risks;” but we have the feeling that the ‘moderation’ of same in individuals might well include incarceration for political activities not approved by the appointed administrators, for lobotomies, shock treatments, enforced sterilizations and abortions, and even “humane liquidation” of those who are deemed risks to the mental health of the community).

Now, referring back to the two incidents mentioned at the beginning of this letter, involving school children in California, and assuming that “health control” is the key weapon; it is understandable why compulsory health care of teenagers, including abortions, can be performed legally without the knowledge or consent of parents. Also, it becomes understandable why a judge will rule that “the health of its (the State’s) children outweighs the claims based on religious freedom and right of parental control.”

Lest we have created a wrong impression: S. 1466, “a bill to amend the Public Health Service Act,” is still a bill, and not a law. It has been passed by the Senate, but action is still pending in the House of Representatives. So now is the time to “go to work” on that Congressman who is asking for your vote in November.

Perhaps it also should be explained how this “Center” would operate if and when it were given the power and authority to do so. Although created by a “private corporation” similar to the Federal Reserve Board, the Postal Service Corporation, etc., this new “Center for Health Education and Promotion” would be associated with and become a propaganda and promotion agency of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, using the latter’s facilities and autho-riety to achieve its purposes. So, the new “Center” would headquarter in Washington. But it would “decentralize” itself by operating out of the ten Regional Capitals that have been set up through the Regional Governance, or “New Federalism” system. As you know, the Nation has been divided into Ten Federal Regions (or Provinces), and these in turn have been subdivided into a multitude of inter-State, inter-County, and inter-community commissions, authorities, councils, associations, services, etc., so that the power that is “Centered” in the Federal Capital can be exercised by agents of the Federal Authority at the community, even the personal, level. This often in total disregard of State laws and local ordinances that might not be in conformity with Federal regulations.

Thus, by joining with the Regional Governance Conspiracy, this “Center” would be able to “prescribe such regulations as it deems necessary” and see to it that such regulations were obeyed by every individual—all in the name of Public Health.

When such power is exercised by a central authority through the Regional Governance System, a total Bureaucratic Dictatorship will have replaced our Representative Republic with its Constitution and its system of free enterprise.

Despite what has been written and spoken on the subject, there are few Americans who really understand the dangers inherent in Regional Governance. Our Bi-Centennial Year has been selected as the propitious time for the complete implementation of Regional Governance, which is to be the New World Order. For that reason, we should like to reprint a description of the Concept of Regionalism, which we first published in our Don Bell Reports of September 13, 1974:

* * * * *

REGIONALISM—THE NEW WORLD ORDER

If you were asked to name some of the many forms of government that exist throughout the world today, you probably would name republics and democracies, kingdoms and monarchies, and the various forms of totalitarian governments that have cropped up since socialism became a fashionable economic system. But whenever a person thinks of a government, he is thinking of some kind of a political system.

Regional Governance is different in this respect: it is not a political system per se. It is a corporate management system, a social control system, an accountability system, a system that seeks to manage and direct all human development. But these are not the functions of a political system.

We need to get back to first principles and understand that political systems, whatever their form and however good or bad they may be considered to be, properly concern themselves with three distinct yet related areas of civic organization: with the making of laws, with the administration of those laws, and with the maintenance of those laws through a system of justice which repairs broken laws by punishing those who broke them.

Law, then, is the principle concern of any political system. It is out of a proper regard for the revealed law of God that there must develop a proper regard for life, liberty and property.

But Regional Governance has no regard for law as the cardinal principle of social organization. For law it substitutes regulation, and for justice it substitutes the Marxian concept that the end justifies the means and that the greatest good is the "good society," as that utopian ideal is extrapolated by the Regionalists.

Webster's Third Unabridged Dictionary gives an excellent definition of what makes up a political system in its ethical and purest sense. "Politics," says the dictionary, "is primarily concerned with the conscious definite purpose of society to establish authority (government), and to determine its function (law); it does not go back to the origins of social institutions (sociology); nor to the causes of human actions (psychology); nor does it deal directly with social phenomena connected with materials (economics) nor with individual human beings as causative factors (history)...."

The point is important: political systems should not concern themselves with sociology, psychology, economics, or even with history. Their concern is with the Law (and happy is the Nation whose Law is the Lord's).

In diametric opposition to this, Regional Governance does not concern itself with Law as such. Indeed, under the concepts of Regionalism, laws upholding representative government are negated and appointed officials replace elected officials (even in the case of Presidents and Vice Presidents), and equal justice for all is ignored in the treatment of those guilty of political crimes.

But Regionalism does concern itself greatly with sociology (in its attempts to create a new kind of world society); with psychology (in its attempts to develop a new kind of human who will fit properly into this new kind of society); with economics (in its determination to control land use, natural and human resources, production and distribution, etc.); and with history (in its attempts to predesignate and direct the "evolution" of man and the world which man inhabits).

In short, Regional Governance is not a political system. It is a corporate management system designed for the control of the world and all that's in it, on it, over it, or under it!

(End of reprint from DBR, 9/13/74)

Regional Governance (also called the New Federalism) is not a political system concerned with law; it is a management system concerned with the control and regulation of people, land, resources, and the production and distribution of food, clothing, and manufacture. And intrinsic to the Concept of Regionalism is the use of a Planning, Programming, Budgeting System, now generally referred to as "Management by Objectives" and designed to provide dictatorial control over all State, County and Municipal governments, and over the people as well. The chief promoter of this system is HEW, and this "Health Bill," S. 1466, is a basic part of the overall plan. Abortions without parental knowledge or consent is but a beginning. For, when an appointed official can decree that State interest in health makes children wards of the State, and outweighs all religious freedom and right of parental control, the family unit has been liquidated!

The purpose of this entire program is to change human nature, from individualism to collectivism, from free enterprise to corporate monopoly, from money to credit cards, and from Christianity to Humanism!

Eternal vigilance is not enough; it must inspire action as well. And if we won't protect our children, how can we preserve a Nation?

DON BELL REPORTS Weekly, accenting the Christian American point of view. Two copies of each issue are mailed to each subscriber. Extra copies: 10¢ each. $24 per year. Please address all correspondence to:

DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

THE GATHERING OF THE BENEDICT ARNOLDS

A DECLARATION OF INTERDEPENDENCE

Hon. Marjorie S. Holt of Maryland, in the House of Representatives on Monday, Jan. 19, 1976:

"Mr. Speaker, many of us recently received a letter from the World Affairs Council of Philadelphia, inviting Members of Congress to participate in a ceremonial signing of a "Declaration of Interdependence" on January 30 in Congress Hall, adjacent to Independence Hall in Philadelphia. A number of Members of Congress have been invited to sign this document, lending their prestige to its theme, but I want the record to show my strong opposition to this declaration.

"It calls for the surrender of our national sovereignty to international organizations. It declares that our economy should be regulated by international authorities. It proposes that we enter a 'new world order' that would redistribute the wealth created by the American people.

"Mr. Speaker, this is an obscenity that defiles our Declaration of Independence, signed some 200 years ago in Philadelphia. We fought a great Revolution for independence and individual liberty, but now it is proposed that we participate in a world socialist order.

"Are we a proud and free people, or are we a carcass to be picked by the jackals of the world, who want to destroy us?

"When one cuts through the high-flown rhetoric of this 'Declaration of Interdependence, one finds key phrases that tell the story. For example, it states:

We affirm that the economy of all nations is a seamless web, and that no one nation can any longer effectively maintain its processes of production and monetary systems without recognizing the necessity for collaborative regulation by international authorities.

"How do you like the idea of 'international authorities' controlling our production and our monetary system, Mr. Speaker? How could any American dedicated to our national independence and freedom tolerate such an idea?

"The declaration goes on to urge a strengthening of the United Nations and a broadening of the jurisdiction of the World Court, 'that these may preside over a reign of law that will not only end wars but end as well the mindless violence which terrorizes our society even in times of peace.'

"Examine this closely. It suggests that world government will somehow cure the problems of crime and terrorism, not just the problem of war. Quite obviously, the sponsors of this declaration have lost all contact with reality.

"Mr. Speaker, we have lately witnessed the United Nations Organization in full cry against America and her allies of the Free World. We have watched the U.N. become an instrument of the Soviet Union and its shoddy following of despots large and small. America should never subject her fate to decisions by such an assembly, unless we long for national suicide. Instead, let us have independence and freedom.

"A major threat to world peace is the Soviet Union, which imposes slavery on its people and devotes its economy to the single task of building a war machine to extend that slavery throughout the world. It subverts governments of independent nations; it arms and impels its subservient client states to wage wars of conquest against their neighbors.

"Mr. Speaker, there is one force that preserves freedom, where it still survives in this world, and that is the strength of the United States. To the extent that we maintain a powerful, credible economic and military deterrent, we shall also have peace. ... If we surrender our independence to a 'new world order' dominated by the Soviet Union and its clients, we will be betraying our historic ideals of freedom and self-government. ... The fathers of our Republic fought a revolution for those ideals, which are as valid today as they ever were. Let us not betray freedom by embracing slave-masters; let us not betray self-government with world government; let us celebrate Jefferson and Madison, not Marx and Lenin."

(End of extended quote)

This "Declaration of Interdependence" that was designed to "update" and replace our original Declaration of Independence, and inspire the creation of a New World Order, was written by Henry Steele Commager for the World Affairs Council of Philadelphia, and was published by that satellite of the prestigious Council on Foreign Relations on October 24, 1975: United Nations Day. It was to be signed by delegates assembling at Philadelphia on January 30, 1976 (Franklin Delano Roosevelt's birthday), and proclaimed publicly on July 4, 1976 (which is celebrated as our Nation's birthday).

This is all a part of a five-part Bicentennial program which was prepared last fall by delegates representing the following organizations;

- Council on Foreign Relations
- World Affairs Council of Philadelphia
- Members of Congress for Peace Through Law
- American College of Physicians
- Committee on Space Research
- International Peace Academy
- Section on International Law of the American Bar Association.

These delegates assembled at Independence Hall in Philadelphia last September and announced their plans, which were reported by John Corr of the Philadelphia Inquirer staff. Here are excerpts from his article:

A five-part Bicentennial program centering on a "Declaration of Interdependence" was announced last week by the World Affairs Council of Philadelphia. The council is sponsoring the declaration...as the first step in a 13-year program stressing "the need to deal with the reality of global interdependence." It is also sponsoring a convocation of the United Nations and a number of U.N. agencies in Philadelphia next fall. U.N. Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim will attend.

The council also is developing an "interdependence curriculum" for schools....Also planned is a series of "interdependence assemblies" here in the spring and summer of 1976. The assemblies will include organizations "which have a broad input into the determination of America's global relationships."...

Following is the complete text of the "Declaration of Interdependence" as published by the World Affairs Council of Philadelphia on "U.N. Day," October 24, 1975:

A Declaration of INTERdependence

WHEN in the course of history, the threat of extinction confronts mankind, it is necessary for the people of the United States to declare their interdependence with the people of all nations and to embrace those principles and build those institutions which will enable mankind to survive and civilization to flourish.

Two centuries ago our forefathers brought forth a new nation; now we must join with others to bring forth a new world order. On this historic occasion it is proper that the American people should reaffirm those principles on which the United States of America was founded, acknowledge the new crises which confront us, accept the new obligations which history imposes upon them, and set forth the causes which impel them to affirm before all peoples their commitment to a Declaration of Interdependence.

We hold these truths to be self-evident; that all men are created equal; that the inequalities and injustices which afflict so much of the human race are the product of history and society, not of God or nature; that people everywhere are entitled to the blessings of life and liberty, peace and security and the realization of their full potential; that they have an inescapable moral obligation to preserve those rights for posterity; and that to achieve these ends all the peoples and nations of the globe should acknowledge their interdependence and join together to dedicate their minds and their hearts to the solution of these problems which threaten their survival.

To establish a new world order of compassion, peace, justice and security, it is essential that mankind free itself from the limitations of national prejudice, and acknowledge that the forces that unite are incomparably deeper than those that divide it—that all people are part of one global community, dependent on one body of resources, bound together by the ties of a common humanity and associated in a common adventure on the planet Earth.

Let us then join together to vindicate and realize this great truth that mankind is one, and as one will nobly save or irreparably lose the heritage of thousands of years of civilization. And let us set forth the principles which should animate and inspire us if our civilization is to survive.

WE AFFIRM that the resources of the globe are finite, not infinite, that they are the heritage of no one nation, or generation, but of all peoples, nations and of posterity, and that our deepest obligation is to transmit to that posterity a planet richer in material bounty, in beauty and in delight than we found it. Narrow notions of national sovereignty must not be permitted to curtail that obligation.

WE AFFIRM that the exploitation of the poor by the rich, and the weak by the strong violates our common humanity and denies to large segments of society the blessings of life, liberty and happiness. We recognize a moral obligation to strive for a more prudent and more equitable sharing of the resources of the earth in order to ameliorate poverty, hunger and disease.

WE AFFIRM that the resources of nature are sufficient to nourish and sustain all the present inhabitants of the globe and that there is an obligation on every society to distribute those resources equitably, along with a corollary obligation upon every society to assure that its population does not place upon Nature a burden heavier than it can bear.

WE AFFIRM our responsibility to help create conditions which will make for peace and security and to build more effective machinery for keeping peace among the nations. Because the insensate accumulation of nuclear, chemical and biological weapons threatens the survival of Mankind we call for the immediate reduction and eventual elimination of these weapons under international supervision. We deplore the reliance on force to settle disputes between states and between rival groups within such states.

WE AFFIRM that the oceans are the common property of mankind whose dependence on their incomparable resources of nourishment and strength will, in the next century, become crucial for human survival, and that their exploitation should be so regulated as to serve the interests of the entire globe, and of future generations.

WE AFFIRM that pollution flows with the waters and flies with the winds, that it recognizes no boundary lines and penetrates all defenses, that it works irreparable damage alike to Nature and to Mankind—threatening with extinction the life of the seas, the flora and fauna of the earth, the health of the people in cities and the countryside alike—and that it can be adequately controlled only through international cooperation.

WE AFFIRM that the exploitation and utilization of outer space is a matter equally important to all the nations of the globe and that no nation can be permitted to exploit or develop the potentialities of the planetary system exclusively for its own benefit.

WE AFFIRM that the economy of all nations is a seamless web, and that no one nation can any longer effectively maintain its processes of production and monetary systems without recognizing the necessity for collaborative regulation by international authorities.

WE AFFIRM that in a civilized society, the institutions of science and the arts are never at war and call upon all nations to exempt these institutions from the claims of chauvinistic nationalism and to foster that great community of learning and creativity whose benign function it is to advance civilization and the health and happiness of mankind.

WE AFFIRM that a world without law is a world without order, and we call upon all nations to strengthen the United Nations and its specialized agencies, and other institutions of world order, and to broaden the jurisdiction of the World Court, that these may preside over a reign of law that will not only end wars but end as well the mindless violence which terrorizes our society even in times of peace.

We can no longer afford to make little plans, allow ourselves to be the captives of events and forces over which we have no control, consult our fears rather than our hopes. We call upon the American people, on the threshold of the third century of their national existence, to display once again that boldness, magnanimity and vision which enabled the founders of our Republic to bring forth a new nation and inaugurate a new era in human history. The fate of humanity hangs in the balance. Throughout the globe, hearts and hopes wait upon us. We summon all Mankind to unite to meet the great challenge.

(End of the Declaration of Interdependence)

One of the principal promoters of the foregoing Declaration of Interdependence is "Members of Congress for Peace through Law." This organization is composed of a motley crew of U.S. Representatives who want to convert NATO into a Regional World Government. Each time a new U.S. Congress is convened, MCPL introduces a resolution calling for an international conference of delegates chosen from the member nations of NATO. They are to assemble and draw up plans for the political and economic unification of all NATO States, along with the surrender of national sovereignty to this new regional authority. The current attempt is vested in House Joint Resolution 660, presently before the International Relations Committee of the House of Representatives, apparently awaiting a propitious time for presentation to and passage by the full House membership.

This Atlantic Convention Bill was written by Clarence Streit, author of "Union Now" and head of "Federal Union, Inc.," and was introduced in the House by Rep. Paul Findley (R-Ill.)

We mention all of this because we have a copy of a letter signed by Clarence Streit, dated Dec. 20, 1975, which explains much in connection with current efforts to destroy this Republic and integrate it into the New World Order (or the World Community, if you prefer Henry Kissinger's name for it).

Here are excerpts from Streit's letter:

"The State Department gave the Atlantic Convention bill its best endorsement yet in this letter sent Paul Findley Dec. 17:

Thank you for your letter of Sept. 19, giving the background and status of the Atlantic Union joint resolution. ... I have no doubt that the Executive Branch will continue to support the goals expressed in your resolution.

"Signed by Ambassador-at-Large Robert McCloskey, this reply is far warmer in tone and much stronger than State's best previous position, that of 1973. ... Secretary Kissinger, by my best information, favors the bill even more than the letter indicates.

"...Vice President Rockefeller's recent withdrawal from the 1976 GOP Presidential ticket race opens the door for him to become, as President of the Senate (the sole function the Constitution gives him), Chairman of the resolution's Delegation to represent "free from official instructions," We the People of the United States at the proposed Convention to explore the Federal way to unite Atlantica. That post is as important for the Convention's success as State's support is for the bill's enactment. "... (There is) hope for the resolution's early enactment in 1976....

"Yours, for a Happy,
Triumphant Bicentenary!
(signed) Clarence Streit."

Collaborating in the educational field in the scheme to push us into the New World Order is the National Education Association. NEA would like us all to pledge our allegiance to the "Declaration of Interdependence," and then exhibit our sincerity by endorsing NEA's program called "Education for a Global Community," which it hopes to foist upon all public schools. Toward this end, NEA has endorsed a special textbook that it would like to have used in all grades 7 through 12. Titled "Learning Peace," this book encourages children to imitate such "courageous spokesmen for peace" as Joan Baez, Jane Fonda, Dick Gregory, Shirley Chisholm, Daniel Ellsberg, Linus Pauling, Benjamin Spock, the Berrigan Brothers, Sister McAllister, etc.

"Learning Peace" tells the young people there should be an "International Police Force," "a world agency consisting of an ombudsman from each nation who would be empowered to have the final say in international peace," and "The U.N. Charter should be revised to provide for a federal organization of nations." Also: "World pollution should be under the jurisdiction of a world court," "the ocean's resources should be controlled by the UN," "Nations must relinquish more of their sovereignty to a world organization," and more of the same.

Yet another attack is being made on the Republic by a powerful group which hopes to install a new Constitution. This is the proposed constitution that was prepared by Rexford Guy Tugwell at the Center for the Study of Democratic Institutions. We did a book, "Damn the Constitution," which was an in-depth analysis of this monstrosity, and which was published January 1, 1971. Unfortunately we were "ahead of the times" and the book is now out of print. However, Dr. Peter Beter has made a recording, "The New Secret Constitution," which we are told is a scholarly and detailed treatise. Order from Audio Books, P.O. Box 16428, Ft. Worth, Texas 76133. Tape: $6.00.

The danger concerning this "new" constitution: It is planned to call a Constitutional Convention for the alleged purpose of introducing "needed amendments" to our present United States Constitution. However, once the Convention gets under way, then the present Constitution will be voted out and the "new constitution" installed to replace it. There are short-sighted conservatives promoting the idea of such a convention, thinking this a way to get some pet amendment ratified. But here is the fallacy: House Concurrent Resolution 28 is the bill calling for a Constitutional Convention. According to its terms, one of the co-chairmen of the committee to set up the convention would be the Senate President Pro Tempore, Nelson Rockefeller! If a Constitutional Convention is called with Rockefeller in charge, you can forget about protecting your Constitutional Rights; you will have just lost them!

Instead of promoting Declarations of Interdependence and Constitutional Conventions, let us remember that in the words of the original Declaration of 1776, these United States are "and of a right ought to be FREE and INDEPENDENT STATES: that they are absolved from all allegiance" to all organizations that would deprive us of that freedom and independence.

Extra copies of this newsletter: 10¢ each.
Subscription: $24 per year. Please write:
DON BELL REPORTS, P.O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

THAT COLOSSAL FRAUD CALLED "NEW FEDERALISM"

TO DECEIVE THE ELECTED

Nelson Rockefeller initiated the use of the catchword, Richard Nixon introduced the concept into the federal system. Gerald Ford hopes to perpetuate the concept, and the "Young Republicans" have made it the second point in their national platform. We quote from a pamphlet titled "Platform Highlights" which is receiving wide distribution:

"PREAMBLE. In the midst of our Bicentennial celebration, we, the Young Republicans of the National Federation, reaffirm our faith and our dedication to the principles upon which our nation and our Party were founded.

"INDIVIDUAL FREEDOMS. The strength and basis of our government is the individual and his freedom of choice....

"NEW FEDERALISM. The YRNF strongly supports the concept of limited government to make more effective local forms of government and to place more power of governing in the hands of the people."...

Here is the deception: "New Federalism" is supposed to bring federal government closer to the people, but what it really does is bring closer federal government control of the people.

A lifelong Republican, upon receiving a copy of the YRNF Platform for 1975-1977, from which we have quoted, wrote a letter of protest to the supposedly "conservative" Young Republicans. He wrote, in part:

"How many Young Republicans know what New Federalism actually means? How many know that the New Federalism, with its 'management science' (Management-by-Objectives, or PPBS), funded by Revenue Sharing funds, consists of a restructuring of the Federal government's service systems that is tearing our 'balance-of-powers' safeguards asunder? How many Young Republicans realize that the so-called President's Domestic Council... under Office of Management and Budget direction, has become a virtual dictatorship over all State, County and Municipal governments? How many Young Republicans are aware that such an unconstitutional restructuring of the Federal governmental framework is directly inter-related to the World Affairs Council of Philadelphia's new 'declaration of interdependence', and the Bicentennial Era Committee's New Constitution; new flag for the U.S.A.; and, new map of the U.S.A. (the latter being developed at the Smithsonian Institution). All of this is directed toward a 'New World Order'! All of this comes under the caption of the 'New Federalism' that you so proudly include in the YRNF Preamble.... You might look into the New Federalism's 'Regional Governance' network and identify it for what it actually represents - National Socialism.'

As the writer of the letter from which we've been quoting indicates, the term "Regional Governance" refers to a "management and control system" that has been developed and installed in the Executive Branch of our Federal government, for the purpose of bringing about this New Federalism which, in its completed form will be a One World Authority. To be precise, New Federalism is the Goal, while Regional Governance is the Method for attaining that Goal. However, in popular usage, there are three terms that are used interchangeably and that are assumed to mean the same thing. They are: Regional Governance, Regional Government, and New Federalism. The remainder of this letter is based on this assumption.

To paraphrase a proverb, there are times when a diagram is worth a few thousand words. We have borrowed such a diagram from the Association for Land Use Planning by Land Owners, Inc. (ALUPLO), P.O. Box 214, Bentonville, Arkansas 72712. That diagram appears on the inside pages of this newsletter. It summarizes the entire concept or Regional Government in a manner which mere words alone could never achieve so conclusively in such a concise manner.

There is one thing which a diagram cannot do. That is, give the historical development of this new form of management and control,
(text continued on page 4)

REGIONAL GOVERNMENT

The Necessary Political Structure For Land Control

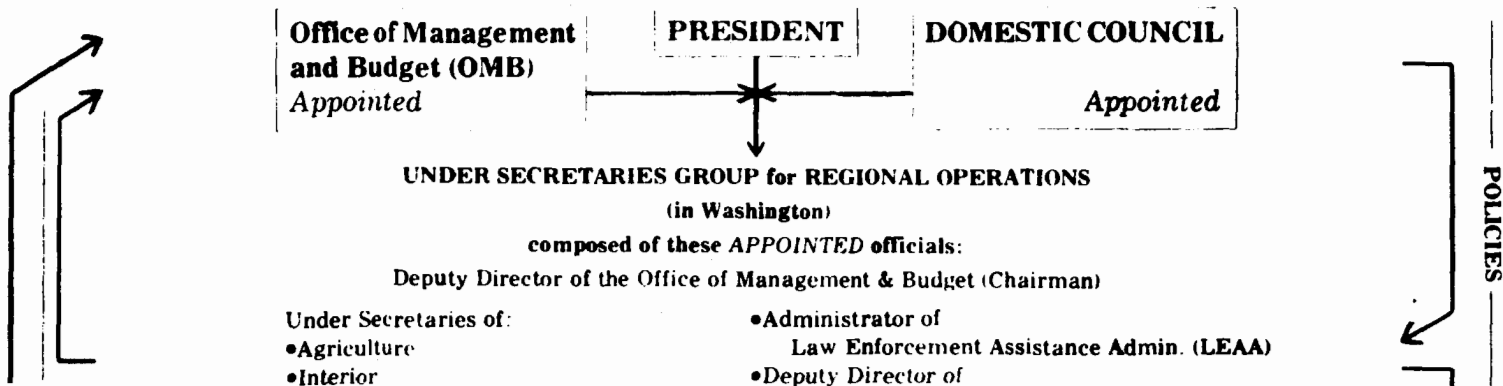

Our representative Constitutional Republic of fifty sovereign states is being transformed into a regimented regionalized government without the knowledge and consent of the people.

On March 27, 1969, President Nixon divided the United States into ten Federal Regions with a capitol for each region.

Regional Government Structure

Executive Order 11647 (February 12, 1972) as amended by Executive Order 11731 (July 23, 1973)

TAXES FOR PLANS

Associate Director of the Domestic Council
The under secretaries group shall be responsible for the proper functioning of the system established by this order.

FEDERAL REGIONAL COUNCILS (10 Regional Capitals) composed of principal regional officials of: (APPOINTED, not elected)

- Departments of:
- Agriculture
 - Interior
 - Labor
 - Transportation
 - Health, Education & Welfare (HEW)
 - Housing and Urban Development (HUD)
 - Law Enforcement Assistance Admin. (LEAA)
 - Office of Economic Opportunity (OEO)
 - Environmental Protection Agency (EPA)
 - Office of Management and Budget (OMB) representative

Chairman of this group is appointed by President

STATE DEPARTMENT OF PLANNING
APPOINTED OFFICIALS — (in Office of Governor in Ark.)

SUB-STATE REGIONAL COUNCILS
Regional Planning Commissions, Economic Development Districts or Council of Government — composed of County Judges, Mayors, and their appointees. (DOMINATED BY STAFF — hired Bureaucrats)

CITIES AND COUNTIES

Implement plans handed down thru channels from Washington.
Locally developed plans must be approved by the higher levels in the chain of command.

CONTROLS
GRANTS

Regional Government is designed to gradually replace city, county and state government.
Note that the system is organized around appointed (not elected) officials.

Regional Government is said to bring the Federal Government closer to the people, but what it brings closer is Federal Government Control.

Land Control and Regional Government are tied together — both must be stopped.

of both property and people. Because of the widespread misunderstanding of the New Federalism, as exemplified by the platform of the "Young Republicans," we feel that the following chronological record of the development and installation of Regional Governance is of great importance in this, our National Bicentenary and Election Year.

On October 16, 1968, the United States Congress adopted Public Law 90-577, "The Intergovernmental Cooperation Act of 1968." This law destroyed the concept of the separation of powers, a basic principle of the U.S. Constitution. By its Title IV, this Act yielded certain legislative powers to the President. The President could then delegate these law-making powers to appointed directors of grant-making agencies of the Federal government. Example: Title IV, Sec. 401 (a) reads: "The President shall, therefore, establish rules and regulations governing the formulation, evaluation, and review of Federal programs and projects." ... Then, Sec. 403 states: "The Bureau of the Budget (now Office of Management and Budget—Ed.) or such other agency as may be designated by the President is hereby authorized to prescribe such rules and regulations as are deemed appropriate for the effective administration of this title."

Here is the legal (but unconstitutional) foundation upon which the Regional Government concept is based. And here is wisdom: Inanimate objects such as land, natural resources, transportation systems, utilities and such cannot be controlled by law. Therefore, the people who use inanimate objects must be controlled: Therefore, power to control the people has been placed in the hands of appointed officials in the Executive Branch of the Federal government.

On March 27, 1969, the President, quoting the Reorganization Act as his authority, divided the fifty United States into ten Federal Regions, and named a Capitol for each. Coordination and control of the Regions would be administered from Washington.

On October 30, 1969, Executive Order 11490 consolidated a previous set of Executive Orders into one omnibus directive which provided for a take-over by agencies of the Executive Branch of the Federal government of all communications, power, gas, petroleum, minerals, food resources and farms, all modes of travel, health, education, welfare functions, etc. Provision is also made for the mobilization of civilians into work brigades, gives power to relocate whole communities, and grants power to the Department of Justice to enforce all provisions of the Executive Order. This order would go into effect "by an order or directive issued by the President in any national emergency type of situation."

On February 12, 1972, Executive Order No. 11647 created a Federal Regional Council for each of the ten Federal Regions. The Council is composed of the Regional heads of all grant-making agencies, one of whom is appointed chairman by the President. The Office of Management and Budget is designated as the control agency (OMB also controls the Management-by-Objectives, or the Planning, Programming, Budgeting System (PPBS), which is essential to the operation of the Regional Governance system).

On October 20, 1972, the Revenue Sharing Act became effective. This was a new concept in taxation: Taxes would be collected at the Federal level, then a part of the tax money would be returned to local governments, with controls attached. Example: When a local government applies for Federal funds, OMB form # 63-R1471 states, in part: "The applicant hereby assures and certifies that he has complied with the regulations, policies, guidelines and requirements of OMB Circular No. A-95, and that he will comply with the regulations, policies, guidelines and requirements of Federal Management Circulars 74-4 and 74-7 as they relate to the application, acceptance and use of Federal funds for this federally-assisted program."

The Revenue Sharing Act also provides that "If two or more states request it of the U.S. Government, and at the option of the individual states, all State taxes may be collected and administered by the Federal government (emphasis added.)"

Such is the enabling legislation that has made possible the Regional Governance structure. This is the "New Federalism" that the Young Republicans and other misguided "blotter brains" are promoting. Let it be said that if anyone knowingly promotes the "New Federalism," that person is not a Republican, or a Democrat, he is a National Socialist.

DON BELL REPORTS Weekly, presenting the Christian American point of view. Two copies of each issue are included in weekly mailings. $24 per year. Address all orders: DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223 Palm Beach, Florida 33480

MORE ABOUT THIS "NEW AMERICAN REVOLUTION"

END OF AN ERA?

"The bicentennial band seems to be tuning up smartly enough," comments Newsweek columnist Shana Alexander, "but the main works—the central machinery that turns our 200-year-old carousel—appears in serious disrepair. We seem to be in a crisis of integrity, massive and system-wide. Not the end of the Vietnam war itself, but the appalling way it has ended, coming on top of all the rest of the economic and political bad news, has left a lot of people feeling rotten, queasy and shaken. This is a time for reconciliation, says the President. It's the end of an era, say others. I only wish it were...."

No, it is not yet the end of an era. Rather, it is the painful transition period between eras. The time when the Planners may say "The Old Order is Dead, Long Live the New Order," is yet to come. And the target date is the Year of our Bicentennial as a Nation, 1976. In that year, if Kissinger is right in his public pronouncements, all Europe will have 'gone Socialist.' And in that same year, if the celebrated social philosopher and ex-Keynesian Friedrich A. von Hayek is right in his predictions, America too will have 'gone all Socialist.'

It took time and effort on the part of the Planners, and it took apathy and indifference on the part of the people, in order that the New Order might be prepared and installed. For example:

On October 20, 1972, the President of the United States made a special visit to Independence Hall in Philadelphia to make a speech and sign a bill into law. The importance of the event was minimized by the communications media, but its significance was not lost upon the uncivil servants of the invisible government. Here is a part of what was read from a teleprompter by a President of the United States at that time:

"In my State of the Union address nearly two years ago, I outlined a program which I described as 'a New American Revolution—a peaceful revolution in which power (is) turned back to the people... a revolution as profound, as far-reaching, as exciting as that first revolution almost 200 years ago.'

"The signing today of the State and Local Fiscal Assistance Act of 1972—the legislation known as General Revenue Sharing—means that this New American Revolution is truly underway. And it is appropriate that we launch this New American Revolution in the same place where the first American Revolution was launched by our Founding Fathers 196 years ago—Independence Square in Philadelphia. It is appropriate that we meet in this historic place to help enunciate a new declaration of Independence for our State and local governments....

"As we sign this historic document today, we are carrying on the work which started here in Independence Square—where independence was declared, where the Constitution was written, and where the Bill of Rights was formally added to the Constitution....

"We expect great things from this program—and we are going to be watching for them. I am asking the Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations to monitor and evaluate the results of revenue sharing so that we can all know its full impact as we follow up on this initiative. For the enactment of General Revenue Sharing represents only the first part of our comprehensive design to reform the institutions of government so they can respond to the needs of the people....

"Many people have suggested in recent years that America's sun was setting, that our glory was behind us. One reason was the government was not responding well to people's needs. But today as we come back to Independence Hall we do so with confidence that we are giving our government back to the people again. And like Franklin, we can be confident, as we approach our 200th anniversary, that the sun is rising for America." (End of quote.)

It should be understood that "giving the government back to the people" is a stock political phrase that has many meanings. Red China is called a "people's republic," implying that when the Nationalist Government of Chiang Kai-shek was overcome, the act of establishing a Communist Dictatorship gave "government back to the people" in that unhappy land. When the Bolsheviks swarmed in and conquered Russia, they boasted of a "Dictatorship of the Proletariat," implying a government of the common people as opposed to the royal and middle classes. In the presidential peroration at Independence Hall when the "New American Revolution" was made official, the term "giving government back to our people" really meant taking political power and tax monies from the people and then returning some of the power and the monies to the

(The following appeared in a recent issue of Moody Magazine. We reprint verbatim and without comment.)

THE BEAST

Dr. Handrick Eldeman, Chief Analyst of the Common Market Confederacy, announced from Brussels that a computerized restoration plan is already underway in the aftermath of world chaos. In the crisis meeting which brought together scientists, advisors, and C.M.C. leaders, Dr. Eldeman unveiled the "BEAST." The Beast is a gigantic computer that takes up three floors at Administration Building of Market Headquarters. This "monster" is a self programming unit that has over one hundred sensing input sources. Computer experts have been working on a plan to computerize all world trade. This master plan involves a digital system for every human on earth. The computer would assign each citizen of the world a number to use for all buying and selling to avoid the problem of ordinary credit cards. The number would be invisibly "laser-tattooed" on the forehead or back of the hand. It would provide a walking credit card system. The number would show up under infra-red scanners to be placed at all check-out counters and places of business. Dr. Eldeman suggested that by using three six-digital units, the entire world could be assigned a working credit card number. Other Common Market Officials believe that the present chaos and disorder caused by the 'mystery' points to the need of a world currency - perhaps an international mark that would do away with all currency and coin. Instead, credit notes would be exchanged through a world bank clearing center. No member could buy or sell without having an assignment of a digital mark. Market directors are now convinced that world order depends on allegiance to an international program of peace and politics, as well as a people. This particular scheme is known as General Revenue Sharing. It is accomplished in conjunction with the Regional Governance System. This latter plan is intended to centralize all political power and the handling of all tax revenues in the Federal Executive Offices at Washington, D.C. Then, a part of the power and the money are "given back to the people" through the Te Regional Commissions and the multitude of sub-State and inter-State Commissions.

In the matter of this General Revenue Sharing Act (Public Law 92-512) which was signed into law on Oct. 20, 1972 and became fully effective on Jan. 1, 1974, there is a "hidden gimmick" in the law that will, when enforced, make the collection of State tax monies the prerogative of the Federal Government!

Title I of this Act gives money "back to the people," that is, to local improvement programs, etc., provided that the local administrators of such programs conform to certain provisions and guidelines set up by the federal government. However, Title 2 of this Act sets up the machinery whereby the States are expected to "enter into agreement with the Secretary of the Treasury ... and ... the Federal Government shall begin to col-

new world trade and numbering system. One man could have at his finger tips the number of any man on earth. It could provide the most powerful levers known to mankind. He could have a solution bank for world problems. It could be a tool for peace, or a dictator's weapon.

When one of the Market leaders was asked what would happen if a person objected to the system and refused to co-operate, he replied rather pointedly, "We would have to use force to make him conform to requirements."

When we remember what the Bible (Rev. 13:16.17.18) says concerning the appearance of the Antichrist at the head of this organization, the following quotation becomes exceedingly illuminating. Henri Spaak, early planner of the European Common Market, and Secretary-General of NATO, said in one of his speeches:

"We do not want another committee; we have too many already. What we want is a man of sufficient stature to hold the allegiance of all people, and to lift us out of the economic morass into which we are sinking. Send us such a man, and be he god or devil, we will receive him."

-Moody Magazine

lect all State individual income taxes." The States not having income tax laws are urged to enact same so that this provision of the Revenue Sharing Act can apply to all States!

To further illustrate how anxious the appointed federal bureaucrats are to become collectors of all taxes, note the following which appeared in the April 22 issue of the San Francisco Chronicle:

"...IRS Commissioner Donald Alexander said that in 1974 tax information on 63 million Americans was passed to the states under 'treaties' designed to ensure that taxpayers comply with both state and federal laws. The information was disclosed as IRS and Justice Department officials testified before the Senate Finance subcommittee on Internal Revenue, about bills that would restrict access to federal tax returns...."

"Senator Floyd Haskell (Dem.-Colo.) ... expressed concern about the widespread distribution of federal tax returns.... Alexander said one solution would be for the States to assign IRS officials the responsibility of collecting State income taxes."

(Italics added for emphasis.)

Along with the movement to make all State and local government units dependent upon central government for their existence, there is also the companion drive to make all individuals dependent upon the central government for their very existence. Individual freedom is a dangerous commodity in any socialist society. The following article from the current issue of U.S. News & World Report (May 12, 1975) is indicative of the success that the Planners are enjoying in this respect:

BIG GOVERNMENT - NUMBER ONE CONSUMER, EMPLOYER, BORROWER

Chalk up another victim of recession: the drive to curb the growth of big government. In fact, the dollars-and-cents impact of government—federal, State and local—on Americans is rapidly intensifying amid hard times. For example:

* While private firms lay off employes, governments at all levels are putting more people to work, in part through public-service job programs.

* Swollen by outlays for unemployment benefits and welfare, funds laid out by government to provide income for people are growing much more rapidly than income provided by industry.

* Borrowing by government to finance deficits is drawing more and more funds away from prospective private borrowers, or at least making the money more expensive.

It all adds up to a widening lead for government as the country's biggest employer, consumer and borrower....

Governments employ 1 in 5 workers... And that doesn't include jobs in private industry, particularly in defense, that stem from government contracts.

Nearly 3 in every 10 dollars of income Americans receive—29 per cent—comes from government. Of the 345 billion dollars paid to people, nearly half is in the form of wages and salaries. Almost as much comes as Social Security payments, unemployment compensation, welfare benefits, veterans' benefits and the like.

Government's growing role takes its toll on the taxpayer—draining off 37 per cent of every dollar of national income, up from 28 cents two decades ago.

Why the steady growth, even before the recession? Two things, primarily:

* An expanding population that has insisted on more spending for education, protection, and other basic services.

* Persistent demands for new public programs to cushion adversities of all kinds, stimulate various kinds of businesses or serve other special interests....

What's ahead? Once the recession ends, you can expect an upsurge of demands to put a lid on "big government." Still, the lessons of history suggest that government expands in good times as well as bad. (End)

With Big Government continuing to expand and with private enterprise continuing to narrow itself down into a few hundred massive and monopolistic conglomerates and multinationals, the two combining to stifle free enterprise and to liquidate the middle class that was the "backbone of America," Corporate Socialism becomes the inevitable result.

Like the alligator and the crocodile, free enterprise is private enterprise, but private enterprise is not necessarily free enterprise. Private enterprise is growing, registering greater profits than ever; but free enterprise is being strangled and is dying.

It was free enterprise that von Hayek talked about when he addressed a group of congressmen and journalists recently. The story was carried by Human Events (April 26).

Friedrich A. von Hayek is an important witness, because at one time he was a firm believer in the Keynesian doctrine. As a professor at the London School of Economics (a Fabian Socialist institution), he knew Keynes personally and taught the latter's theories to students from all over the world. Then he began to see what Keynesian ideas were doing to the Western industrial Nations, including the United States. He started a personal crusade to expose the dangers of Keynesian theories to his fellow economists and feels he has had considerable success. Here are highlights from the article published by Human Events:

NOBEL ECONOMIST WARNS U.S. FACES SOCIALISM

On a recent visit to Capitol Hill the world-renowned economist and social philosopher Friedrich A. von Hayek warned that "The threat to the free enterprise society has never been more imminent in the United States than now." What's more, said von Hayek... this danger is coming from a different direction than he had ever expected.

Addressing the Free Market Lunch Group, a Hill organization formed this year that already numbers among its members over 130 members of Congress, congressional aides, and Washington journalists interested in free-market economics, the Austrian economist said he had long thought that socialism was a danger. "But I didn't expect you would be led into socialism by reason of an unsound monetary policy. I thought the United States had a fundamental belief in the importance of a sound currency."

As von Hayek sees it, the seeds of our present peril trace back to the acceptance of the so-called Keynesian "full-employment" doctrine in the 1930s and enshrined in the Nation's statute books by the Full Employment Act of 1946. According to Keynes' theory, he explained, unemployment is caused by insufficient aggregate demand. In order to increase this aggregate demand, Keynes suggested that government should use fiscal deficits and expansionary monetary policies to stimulate the economy. And Western governments, including ours, have been doing so almost uninterruptedly ever since. Witness estimates that this year's U.S. budget deficit alone may exceed $100 billion.

Hayek fears that the cumulative effect of these policies could before much more time has elapsed lead to an inflationary situation so bad that "the government, to control the flood they've caused, will be forced to impose permanent wage and price controls." And since, under such controls, prices could no longer be counted upon to allocate resources, the government would have to step in to perform this function. The result: a fully planned, centrally directed Socialist system....

The sad thing about our present economic plight, said von Hayek, is that "it has been caused by government following the advice of the great majority of my fellow economists." For the future, however, he believes the biggest obstacle to realistic economic policies may come not from the economists but from the news media.

"Now many economists finally know they were wrong," explained von Hayek, "but it will be hard for them to change the direction of government policy because they have convinced the media of Keynesian doctrines." The media, he said, are "dealers in second-hand ideas." As distinguished from scholars, reporters have a tendency to take ideas and keep them for life. Hence, concluded von Hayek, although economic theorists are changing their minds on Keynes, we are stuck with a generation of newsmen who will propagate Keynesian ideas for the next 30 years....

He told the Capitol Hill gathering that the chief thing he holds against the late British economist is that, for its propagandistic effect, Keynes entitled his work the general theory when, in fact, it was applicable only to a very rare set of circumstances that happened to exist in the England of his day. But for Keynes' prescriptions to work generally, von Hayek pointed out, it would be necessary for government to continually cause inflation to outpace public expectations, which becomes increasingly difficult and ultimately impossible as the rate of inflation mounts.

Thus, said Hayek, ... such stimulative policies must lead to intolerable rates of inflation, which can wreak havoc not only on the economy but on the entire fabric of society (and will end in Socialism). (End)

DON BELL REPORTS Weekly, presenting the Christian American point of view. Two copies of each issue are mailed, first class, to each subscriber (except overseas subscribers, who receive one copy, airmailed.) $24 per year. Extra copies: 10¢ each.

Please note: "Proofs of a Conspiracy" now out of print. "Contrived Evolution of Regional Government" still available in quantity.

Please address all orders and inquiries to:
DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

Trilateral Commission, and Woodcock's importance on the current political scene can be understood by reading an article that was published in the Knight-Ridder newspapers on July 13. We quote portions of that article.

NEW LABOR LEADERS BUILT A POLITICAL POWERHOUSE

By Saul Friedman
and Remer Tyson

For the first time in 20 years, the grumpy, burly, cigar-chewing plumber who has personified the American labor boss is absent from a Democratic National Convention. And with AFL-CIO President George Meany sitting this one out in Washington, a new sort of union leader—more liberal, more modern, more flexible—has taken command of labor's power in the Democratic Party.

This year that power is considerable and perhaps unprecedented. And it fulfills the long dream of men like Walter Reuther... who broke with or were burdened by the crusty, conservative, back-room politics of Meany. Under the leadership of Reuther's successor, Leonard Woodcock, the liberal unionists have put together a disciplined army of 450 delegates at the convention, nearly four times the number loyal to Meany.

...When the convention is over, that liberal union power is expected to grow.... The makeup of the new-style union group, called the "Labor Coalition Clearing House," represents a force a Democratic administration must reckon with. Besides the UAW—perhaps the nation's most savvy and effective union in a political campaign—members of the coalition include the United Mine Workers, the militantly liberal Oil, Chemical and Atomic Workers, the Communications Workers, the International Association of Machinists, the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees and the National Education Association.... This is the first time the traditionally neutral NEA has stepped into the national political arena. And the alliance of white-collar professionals from the classrooms and state and local governments with veteran blue-collar laborites is a new dimension in union political power.

Furthermore, throughout the long months of the primary campaigns and even before they began, leaders of the Labor Coalition were talking privately with Carter, probing his views and helping his lieutenants plan his most significant victories.

Indeed, as early as last Dec. 13, key staff members of the coalition met secretly with Carter aide Hamilton Jordan in Orlando to plot a concerted effort against Alabama Gov. George Wallace in Florida's March 9 primary. The coalition's aim was to force every other Democratic candidate out of that race and use Carter to put an end to Wallace's strength and prevent him from again creating political havoc in labor states like Michigan, Maryland and Wisconsin....

The Plan was born at the Democratic mini-convention at Kansas City in 1974, when Woodcock and other liberal unions played a major role in putting together a series of party reforms. During the battle for the reforms, Meany's political agent, Al Barkan, was badly defeated, partly by AFL-CIO unions that had been balking at the federation's conservative views. As a result, Meany angrily pulled the AFL-CIO out of national Democratic politics. And in the vacuum the coalition was formed to enhance the position of liberal labor in the 1976 campaign and back up its views with political power.

The top political operatives of the coalition unions—William Dodds of the UAW, Michael Miller of the communications workers, Bernie Aronson of the mine workers, William Welsh of the municipal employees and Terry Herndon of the teachers—set up a command post in Washington to keep track of the races for delegates around the country.

(end of quotation)

Union Control of Government is the ultimate aim of these political activists. That's why the Hatch Act is to be revoked if Carter becomes President. That's why there are a number of bills awaiting passage. Jon Minarek of the non-profit organization "Americans Against Union Control of Government" recently wrote:

"HR 79, HR 13, HR 1837, HR 4800, HR 77, HR 1488, HR 55, HR 56, HR 8617, and on and on they go. There seems no end to the union-demanded proposals tossed into the hopper by friendly Congressmen promoting government unionization. The bills above mentioned were only introduced in the House of Representatives. These proposals came in the last session, and we haven't mentioned all of them!

"Take, for example, HR 4415, which passed last year. Among other things, there is a provision allowing tax money to be granted to public employee unions to instruct their members on how to bargain for higher wages. Imagine—your tax money to teach them how to get more tax money, money they receive as pay to interfere in your lives with regulations, edicts, strikes and so on—

"We are telling you this for a reason. The sooner we make Congressmen who vote for monstrosities like HR 4415 understand the dangers of such legislation the better we'll become at minimizing the union menace."

But this union menace is becoming critical in yet another area. According to Senator John Tower of Texas:

"AFGE (the American Federation of Government Employees union) is carefully laying plans to organize the Army, the Navy, the Air Force, and the Marine Corps. The long term implications of the union plan are horrifying... In this time of international tension, could America entrust its safety to armed forces directed more by union bosses than by generals? I hope we never have to find out."

When union bosses began unionizing Policemen and Firemen, they went on strike, in New York, Milwaukee, Kansas City, Albuquerque, and San Francisco. Then what happened? According to press reports:

In San Francisco striking policemen slashed tires and blocked traffic. A bomb exploded on the Mayor's front porch. Jack Crowley, local union boss, told the strikers: "I would like to compliment you on...the way you kept this city in turmoil until your demands were met."

In Baltimore, union boss Jerry Wurf came to town during the Police strike and shouted: "We have no choice but to break the law." He threatened the Governor of Maryland, saying "Baltimore City would burn to the ground" unless city officials met his demands.

Imagine what could happen if our armed forces were unionized by such labor bosses as Jack Crowley and Jerry Wurf.

Just as dangerous but in the political arena, is the fact that Big Labor controls the National Democratic Party and COPE, Labor's Committee on Political Education, is said to control the votes of over half of the United States Senators and a majority of the members of the House of Representatives. As for the coming national elections in November, union members have been alerted to vote for the "33 U.S. Senators and 435 U.S. Representatives" that bear the endorsement of COPE.

As we said, the union bosses want to control the government. But this is not the final aim of the Elite that is running things. This is but a step toward the final goal which is the establishment of the Corporative System, which will replace our present free enterprise economic system, and our representative republican political system.

This was the dream of Franklin Roosevelt; Jimmy Carter intends to make the dream a reality. And Leonard Woodcock of the Labor Coalition Clearinghouse and the Council on Foreign Relations, is there to help make the dream come true. COPE-sponsored Walter Mondale will be there to help — and so will a majority of U.S. Senators and Congressmen, unless the American voters can be awakened and alerted between now and November 2, 1976.

The Corporative System involves a working compromise between "private capitalism and the requirements of the totalitarian state." Also: industrial unions are linked with industrial management, and both are closely linked with the government. In Italy it worked like this: The major industries were organized into 22 corporations. These were operated by "councils" which were made up of members representing employers, employees, and the government. All production, distribution, banking, labor relations, foreign trade, etc. were under the supervision of a ministry of corporations, a department of the national government (the Humphrey-Hawkins Bill calls this the "Economic Planning Board," a kind of three-man dictatorship).

And so: Behind a smoke-screen of "peace and new-found unity," all the plans have been made; the actors have been selected and assigned their roles, coached and rehearsed; and the curtain will rise on a "new-found version" of the Great American Drama on Inauguration Day in the Year of our Lord, 1977—unless the so-called Dispossessed Majority decides to repossess the polls and "keep the rascals out."

DON BELL REPORTS Weekly, accenting the Christian American point of view. $24 per year. Extra copies: 10¢ each. Address: DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223 Palm Beach, Florida 33480

THE STRUGGLE TO PROTECT THE CONSPIRATORS

LOCKHEED IS INDISCREET

Prince Bernhard of the Bilderbergers, the husband and royal escort of Queen Juliana of The Netherlands, is up to his royal ears in a sea of scandal that threatens to topple a throne, raze financial fortresses, and demolish multinational strongholds. The charge: as an officer of the Dutch Royal Military Establishment, Prince Bernhard accepted a sizable bribe from the Lockheed Corporation as a reward for persuading the Dutch Government to purchase Lockheed airplanes. And the immediate problem is: how to punish the prince without destroying the power and the influence of the Bilderberger Organization, which Bernhard manages in behalf of the Rockefellers, the Rothschilds and other multinational families that are linked together for the purpose of creating a New Economic World Order. Although the Bilderberger Group is on the spot in this instance, also threatened are similar organizations that are promoting the New World Order such as the Council on Foreign Relations, the Trilateral Commission, the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development, the Committee for Economic Development, etc., etc.

The trouble all seems to have begun when the multinationalists started worrying about the complaints that were being made about them by people who feared the multinational organizations were getting ready to replace established governments and do away with existing Nations and States. So, it was decided to set up a special committee to investigate and give the multinationals a clean bill of health.

Accordingly, they selected Senator Frank Church to head a Senate Subcommittee on Multinational Corporations. They invited Church to join the Council on Foreign Relations, the Zionist Lobby heaped special favors on him, and all the elitists seemed pleased at Church's selection for the post. He was a liberal, he would sign the upcoming "Declaration of Interdependence" promoting world government, he seemed a favorite of Big Labor and ERAites, etc. In short, Church seemed safe and secured.

However, Frank Church is an ambitious man who dreams of bigger things than being a Senator from Idaho. The White House looms; not this year, but perhaps in 1980. And any exposure of multinational malfeasances and illicit activities is a sure way to get national publicity—as Church's constant exposure on nationally televised programs attests.

Much of the preceding is surmised; we can't prove it, we can only allege. However, the following are facts: According to the Washington Post of Sept. 12, 1975, Senator Frank Church's Senate Subcommittee on Multinational Corporations "launched a sweeping investigation of how international money transactions are affecting American commercial banks and foreign policy." And Church began checking into the bribes paid out to foreigners by American-based multinational corporations. Church revealed that Exxon had paid an $86,000 bribe to the Italian Communist Party; had made over $27 million in political contributions to various parties and individuals in Italy between 1963 and 1971. The story proved to be an overnight sensation, but was soon forgotten. Similarly, when Gulf Oil was accused of handing out bribes to foreigners, some "responsible executives" resigned and the story faded off the front pages.

Much the same treatment might have been expected to be accorded the Lockheed bribery charges but for two things:

- 1) Lockheed had been bailed out in 1971 when the U.S. Congress voted to grant an unusual loan to Lockheed to keep it from going bankrupt; and
- 2) The chairman of the Bilderberger Group was one of the men charged with accepting a bribe from Lockheed.

It all came out because of an alleged oversight on the part of a Lockheed employee. Certain papers were to be delivered to the federal investigators and, inadvertently, the files involving Prince Bernhard were included with those papers (we use the word "inadvertently" advisedly).

At first controlled communications media tried not to involve Prince Bernhard with the scandal. The New York Times, in its first reports, said that "a high Dutch official" had received $1.1 million in bribe money from the Lockheed Aircraft Corporation. Later, however, the paper admitted that the high Dutch official had been identified as Prince Bernhard. Never, however, was Bernhard ever named as chairman of the Bilderbergers, nor was this Group ever mentioned in connection with the scandal.

Time Newsmagazine was quite protective of the Prince of Bilderberg. It carried nearly a full page story on the scandal (page 56 of the February 16, 1976 issue). But the entire article had to do with the bribe accepted by Yoshido Kodama of Japan, another principal in the same scandal. But Prince Bernhard wasn't even mentioned in the entire article!

Newsweek did a bit better in its coverage. While most of the story (page 60) dealt with the Japanese bribery charge, the weekly did admit that "A similar uproar loomed in the Netherlands, where Prince Bernhard, inspector general of the Dutch armed forces, now stands accused of doing favors for both Lockheed and Northrop." The weekly then added: "The Prince himself told Newsweek he would neither confirm nor deny the story, adding: 'I am standing above these things. My wife and me, we had a big laugh about it.'"

But none of these publications ever printed a single word about the Bilderberger Group, or the fact that Prince Bernhard is the top Bilderberger!

Later when it became impossible to exclude Bernhard's name from the follow-up stories, a new strategy was developed: Those who received bribes were "excused, exonerated and forgiven," while all the blame was heaped on the giver of the bribes. Lockheed was condemned as the great sinner, until penance was paid through the firing of Lockheed's president, A.C. Kotchian, and the chairman of the board, Daniel J. Haughton. To further impress the public with the high crime of giving bribes while mitigating the seriousness of receiving bribes, the Feds demanded that Boeing Aircraft also submit to search and seizure proceedings.

As an example of how the controlled media "played down" the involvement of the top Bilderberger in the bribery scandal, the lead editorial in the Times of February 11 read, in part: "Lockheed has admitted paying at least $22 million in what it calls kickbacks; the General Accounting Office puts the figure $2.4 million higher. Either sum amounts to more than 10 percent of the total of outstanding loans which Lockheed obtained in 1971 on the strength of an extraordinary Federal guarantee approved by Congress to avert bankruptcy of the major aerospace contractor.... The United States Government and its taxpayers have been had—financially and diplomatically...."

True enough. But when such deals were made and carried out through the good offices and officers of such organizations as the Bilderbergers, should Lockheed and a few other multinational executives take all of the blame?

Another example of how the media can tell the truth but not the whole truth, and thus influence public opinion toward forgiving some malefactors while condemning others, is provided by a lead editorial which appeared in the Miami Herald, a Knight-Ridder chainpaper of great circulation. We reprint the entire editorial:

* * * * *

LOCKHEED'S WAY IS JUST WRONG

We will leave to the Dutch the question of whether Prince Bernhard pocketed $1.1 million for helping Lockheed sell some aircraft. And we will leave to the Japanese the question of whether a war criminal turned wealthy businessman got $7 million for the same kind of under-the-table service.

But considering the loan guarantees that the federal government provided for Lockheed's financial stability, every citizen of the United States must be somehow involved in the ugly story of international bribery now unfolding. And that has to bother all of us.

We are tired of the apologists for Lockheed who say that's the way business is done in selling airplanes around the world, that Lockheed has to pay bribes thinly disguised as commissions because the Germans, the French and the English are doing it.

Where is it written down or commanded that American businessmen must adopt the sleazy principles of graft and bribery used by Middle Eastern gun runners and Far Eastern opium smugglers?

(text continued on page 4)

126 CONGRESSMEN SIGN DECLARATION OF INTERDEPENDENCE

The "ceremonial signing of 'A Declaration of INTERdependence' by members of the Congress of the United States of America" was held at 11:30 a.m. on January 30, 1976, in the Congress Hall at Independence National Historical Park in Philadelphia. The Congress Hall is one of the wings of Independence Hall where for many years the Liberty Bell had been on display. The signing of this spurious document was sponsored by the World Affairs Council of Philadelphia (Don Bell Reports of January 30, 1976, gives details as well as the text of the "Declaration".)

Here is the complete list of those United States Senators and Representatives who swore to uphold and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, both foreign and domestic, who now have sworn to aid in the work of having that same U.S. Constitution superseded by some International Compact (which action might be classified as treason if the U.S. Constitution remains the supreme Law of the Land).

U. S. Senators

James Abourezk (D-SD), Edward W. Brooke (R-MA), Dick Clark (D-IA), Alan Cranston (D-CA), Frank Church (D-ID), Jacob Javits (R-NY), Mike Gravel (D-AK), Philip Hart (D-MI), Vance Hartke (D-IN), Mark Hatfield (R-OR), Hubert Humphrey (D-MN), Daniel Inouye (D-HI), Gale McGee (D-WY), George McGovern (D-SD), Thomas McIntyre (D-NH), Mike Mansfield (D-MT), Charles Mathias (R-MD), Lee Metcalf (D-MT), Walter Modale (D-MN), Gaylord Nelson (D-WI), James Pearson (R-KA), Claiborne Pell (R-RI), William Proxmire (D-WI), Abraham Ribicoff (D-CT), Richard Schweiker (R-PA), Hugh Scott (R-PA), John Sparkman (D-AL), Adlai Stevenson III (D-IL), John Tunney (D-CA), Milton Young (R-ND), Harrison Williams Jr. (D-NJ).

U.S. Representatives

Carl Albert (D-OK), Mark Andrews (D-ND), John Anderson (R-IL), Les Aspin (D-WI), Herman Badillo (D-NY), William Barrett (D-PA), Berkley Bedell (D-IA), Edward

Biester (R-PA), Jonathan Bingham (R-NY), Edward Boland (D-MA), Richard Bolling (D-MO), John Brademas (D-IN), George Brown (D-CA), William Brodhead (D-MI), Yvonne Burke (D-CA), Goodloe Byron (D-MD), Robert Carr (D-MI), Cardiss Collins (D-IL), Silvio Conte (R-MA), John Conyers (D-MI), James Corman (D-CA), George Danielson (D-CA), Ronald Dellums (D-CA), Robert Drinan (D-MA), Robert Duncan (D-OR), Robert Edgar (D-PA), Don Edwards (D-CA), Joshua Eilberg (D-PA), Millicent Fenwick (R-NJ), Daniel Flood (D-PA), James Floria (D-NJ), William Ford (D-MI), Edwin Forsythe (R-NJ), Donald Fraser (D-MN), Sam Gibbons (D-FL), William Green (D-PA), Gilbert Gude (R-MD), Thomas Harkin (D-IA), Michael Harrington (D-MA), Augustus Hawkins (D-CA), Henry Helstoki (D-NJ), Frank Horton (R-NY), Robert Jones (D-AL), Barbara Jordan (D-TX), Martha Keys (D-KS), Robert Legett (D-CA), Norma Lent (R-NY), Clarence Long (D-MD), Torbert MacDonald (D-MA), Paul McCloskey (R-CA), Matthew McHugh (D-NY), Spark Matsunaga (D-HI), Lloyd Meeds (D-WA), Ralph Metcalf (D-IL), Helen Meyner (D-NJ), Edward Mezvinsky (D-IA), Abner Mikva (D-IL), Norman Mineta (D-CA), Patsy Mink (D-HI), William Moorhead (D-PA), John Moss (D-CA), Thomas Morgan (D-PA), John Murphy (D-NY), Robert Nix (D-PA), Richard Nolan (D-MN), Richard Ottinger (D-NY), Claude Pepper (D-FL), Charles Rangel (D-NY), Thomas Rees (D-CA), Henry Reuss (D-WI), Frederick Richmond (D-NY), Peter Rodino (D-NJ), Fred Rooney (D-PA), Charles Rose (D-NC), Edward Roybal (D-CA), Leo Ryan (D-CA), Fernand St. Germaine (D-RI), Herman Schneebeli (R-PA), Patricia Schroeder (D-CO), John Seiberling (D-OH), Paul Simon (D-IL), Fortney Stark (D-CA), Lou's Stokes (D-OH), James Symington (D-MO), Frank Thompson (D-NJ), Paul Tsonga (D-MA), Morris Udall (D-AZ), Lionel van Deerlin (D-CA), Charles vanik (D-OH), Bob Wilson (R-CA), Clement Zablocki (D-WI).

Additional Delegates

Jaime Benitez, Resident Commissioner of Puerto Rico; Antonio Won Pat, Delegate of Guam.

The character of a Dutch prince married to one of the world's wealthiest women is not the point. The character of a rightwing Japanese militarist selling influence is not the point. We are concerned with the character of the men who run Lockheed Aircraft Corporation which is still in business today at least in part because the American Congress thought it was a vital business concern worth saving.

We are not sure Congress was right.

There are those who will disagree with the preceding editorial and insist that the character of a Dutch prince is a point that must be considered; because that Dutch prince just happens to be a spokesman for multinational interests far bigger than Lockheed. By condemning one multinational corporation in order to protect an international conspiracy, the major U.S. papers keep the U.S. readers in the dark.

By contrast, when a somewhat similar deal was made by the British government, to keep the Chrysler installation in England from declaring bankruptcy and closing down, a major European financial writer, Gordon Tether, told the whole truth about the international elitist conspiracy. Here are important excerpts from Mr. Tether's article as it appeared in the London Times of Dec. 22;

JUGGLING BEHIND THE SCENES

When labour MPs who take a poor view of the Chrysler rescue terms complained to Ministers at a party meeting last week of having been kept in the dark until the deal had been signed, sealed and settled, it was "explained" that the "delicate talks" with the corporation's bosses might have been jeopardised had they been subjected to the glare of publicity while still in train.

So what, you may ask, is wrong with that? My answer is nothing, except that you have achieved the ultimate in non-open government if no opportunity is ever going to be afforded for commenting on negotiations of such crucial importance to the nation before they have produced an agreement that is effectively irrevokable.

For a long time past, politicians of all persuasions have been stressing the importance of keeping the "grass roots" fully informed about what was going on as a means of restoring their lost faith in the functioning of the democratic process. Yet one does not have to be a rabid "conspiratologist" to be left with the feeling that matters of great moment for the people's future are being decided to an ever increasing extent by influential figures largely or wholly behind the scenes.

... Added force is undoubtedly given to the suggestion that far too much of this country's business is being decided in undercover talks between influential Britons and their foreign counterparts by the efforts that are consistently made to divert attention from British participation in such international societies as the Bilderbergers and the Trilateral Commission.

Readers may recall my drawing attention some months back to the fact that the Chancellor of the Exchequer, the Governor of the Bank of England and the Leader of the Opposition, Mrs. Thatcher, were among the hundred or so prominent personalities who attended this year's annual meeting of the Bilderbergers—an international group composed of super-capitalists and similarly powerful people which shrouds all its discussions in the strictest secrecy. Their journey to a remote holiday village in Turkey—in company with such outstanding Britons as Sir Eric Roll, deputy chairman of the merchant banking house of Warburg, and chairman of NEDC's new committee on finance for investment—attracted virtually no comment in the Press...

If these affairs are not the occasion for behind the scenes plotting to advance such causes as World Government, why did not the Chancellor of the Exchequer make this clear (when questioned by an MP) ?

... A people continually exhorted to make sacrifices in the national interest has a right to know how that national interest is being cared for in international discussions while there is still time for it to do something about it. (End of quotations, all emphasis was added.)

Final note: This year the Bilderbergers are scheduled to meet at the Homestead Hotel in Hot springs, Virginia, the last week of April. President Ford, Vice President Rockefeller and Secretary of State Kissinger all have attended some previous meetings. In view of the current scandal, will they attend this year? And will Prince Bernhard be there to chair the discussions? We have a right to know.

THE CONGRESSIONAL COP-OUT

APPOINTEES FILL THE VACUUM

"By virtue of the authority vested in me by (.....), (.....), and as President of the United States of America...it is hereby ordered:..."

So begin most of the thousands of Executive Orders that create new agencies, councils, commissions, authorities, administrations, corporations, or other bodies of appointees. These appointed bureaucrats then proceed to issue rules and regulations with which they investigate and straightjacket the lives of American citizens from womb to tomb. And we must accept their dictates and ultimatums as though they were law, because the United States Congress has deputized them to run the country, has financed them and given them broad powers to "do as they will" within the particular area of their delegated authority.

A pertinent example came up this week: The President-by-Appointment issued an Executive Order which purported to reorganize the United States "Intelligence Community." In doing so, he created a new three-man "Oversight Board"—appointees all and responsible not to elected representatives of the people, but to the President only. The Executive Order also created a new "Committee on Foreign Intelligence" headed by George Bush—an appointee—and staffed by appointees. This new committee, as well as the new "Operations Advisory Group" that replaces the old "40 Committee," also is responsible solely to the President of the United States. In his televised press conference Tuesday night (Feb. 17) President Ford was reminded by one of the correspondents present that the House Intelligence Committee had investigated and found that the "paramilitary operations of the worst type seemed to come from outside the CIA" and were ordered by previous Presidents or by Henry Kissinger. So, asked the correspondent, where was the guarantee that future Presidents or Secretaries of State might not order assassinations of foreign leaders, or inspire revolutions in foreign countries, if Congress had no scrutiny or veto of covert activities by the Intelligence Community? To which Ford replied that he could be trusted and he trusted that the people could be trusted to continue to elect presidents that could be trusted (what was it that former President Thomas Jefferson said about placing trust in men?)

Ford was very definite about this one thing: Congress would have no veto power over the intelligence community's covert operations. He would welcome a Joint Congressional Oversight Committee, but it would have only advisory powers.

In the beginning of our grand experiment with a new form of government which was a Republic if we could keep it, things were different. Our founders started with the Biblical premise that there were certain unalienable rights which were given by God; that to secure these rights, governments were instituted among men. So, to institute and, hopefully to perpetuate, such a government, a Constitution was written and ratified. And the very first section of the very First Article of that Constitution says that "all legislative powers granted to the Federal government shall be vested in a Congress of the United States which shall consist of a Senate and a House of Representatives."

Two things should be noted. First, all legislative power was not granted to the Federal government, only certain enumerated powers were granted, the rest being reserved to the States and the people. Secondly, the legislative powers that were granted, were granted to the Congress; not to the President, and not to the Judges.

However, in current practice, this exclusive power of Congress to do all necessary legislating has collapsed completely. Most of our Federal laws are now being made in the form of Executive Orders or as rules and regulations dreamed up by hundreds of overlapping bureaucracies.

The general procedure: Congress decides to delegate some of its vested powers and its Constitutionally assigned responsibilities to some other branch of government. So it creates a new Executive Bureau and appropriates tax money for its support, lays down some general rules for its operation, and then gives it the power to make its own laws! These are generally called administrative laws, and are usually published in the Federal Register.

As an example of how an Executive Order becomes the "Law of the Land" in violation of the Constitutional command that all legislative powers shall be vested in Congress, we publish Executive Order 11892, which enlarges the "lawmaking" power of the Regional Governance system:

(Following is the text of Executive Order # 11892, which expands the purview and power of the Regional Governance system. Reprinted from the Federal Register, Vol. 41, No. 2, Monday, January 5, 1976.)

THE PRESIDENT

Executive Order 11892 December 31, 1975

Amending Executive Order No. 11647 Relating to Federal Regional Councils

By virtue of the authority vested in me by the Constitution and statutes of the United States of America, and as President of the United States of America, in order to include the Department of Commerce and the Federal Energy Administration in the Regional Council System and thus expand interagency cooperation and improve the coordination of services to the States, consistent with Section 401 (d) of the Intergovernmental Cooperation Act of 1968 (82 Stat. 1103, 42 U.S.C. 4231 (d)), it is hereby ordered as follows:

Section 1. Subsection (a) of Section 1 of Executive Order 11647 of February 10, 1972, as amended by Executive Order No. 11731 of July 23, 1973, is amended to read as follows:

"(a) There is hereby continued a Federal Regional Council for each of the ten standard Federal regions. The President shall designate one member of each Council as Chairman. Representatives of the Office of Management and Budget may participate in any deliberations of each Council. Each Council shall be composed of the principal regional officials of the following departments and agencies:

- (1) The Department of the Interior.
- (2) The Department of Agriculture.
- (3) The Department of Commerce.
- (4) The Department of Labor.
- (5) The Department of Health, Education, and Welfare.
- (6) The Department of Housing and Urban Development.
- (7) The Department of Transportation.
- (8) The Community Services Administration.
- (9) The Environmental Protection Agency.
- (10) The Federal Energy Administration.
- (11) The Law Enforcement Assistance Administration."

Sec. 2. Section 3 of Executive Order No. 11647 of February 10, 1972, as amended by Executive Order No. 11731 of July 23, 1973, is amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 3. Under Secretaries Group for Regional Operations. (a) The Under Secretaries Group for Regional Operations is hereby continued and shall be composed of the following:

- (1) The Under Secretary of the Interior.
- (2) The Under Secretary of Agriculture.
- (3) The Under Secretary of Commerce.
- (4) The Under Secretary of Labor.
- (5) The Under Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare.
- (6) The Under Secretary of Housing and Urban Development.
- (7) The Deputy Secretary of Transportation.
- (8) The Deputy Director of the Community Services Administration.
- (9) The Deputy Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency.
- (10) The Deputy Administrator of the Federal Energy Administration.
- (11) The Administrator of the Law Enforcement Assistance Administration.
- (12) An Associate Director of the Domestic Council.
- (13) The Deputy Director of the Office of Management and Budget, who shall be Chairman.

"(b) When the Chairman determines that matters which significantly affect the interests of a Federal agency not represented on the Group are to be considered by the Group, he shall invite an appropriate representative of the agency involved to participate in the deliberations of the Group.

"(c) The Under Secretaries Group for Regional Operations shall, consistent with the objectives and priorities established by the President and the Domestic Council, establish policy with respect to Federal Regional Council matters provide guidance to the Council, respond to their initiatives, and seek to resolve policy issues referred to it by the Councils. The Under Secretaries Group, under the Chairmanship of the Deputy Director of the Office of Management and Budget, shall be responsible for the proper functioning of the system established by this order."

(signed) Gerald R. Ford

The White House,

December 31, 1975.

(FR Doc. 76-295 Filed 1/2/76; 10:54 am)

Our subject is "Congressional Cop-outs," the unconstitutional delegation of the law-making power by the Congress to some other agency or bureau. And the worst example—prior to the creation of HEW and Regional Governance—was the establishment of the Federal Reserve System. Thus was the Congressional power to "coin money, regulate the value thereof, and of foreign coin" delegated to a private agency. And there are many sincere patriots who insist that this was the beginning of the woes that have all but destroyed us.

Briefly: The Federal Reserve System, the central banking system of the United States which was authored and installed by an International Banker who came here from Germany for that specific purpose, was established December 23, 1913 by an Act of Congress. Its purported purpose: to give the country an elastic currency, to provide facilities for discounting commercial paper, and to improve the supervision of banking in the United States. The system consists of 1) a Board of Governors, 2) the Federal Open Market Committee, 3) Twelve Federal Reserve Banks and twenty-four branches, 4) the member banks, and 5) the Federal Advisory Council.

The seven members of the Board of Governors in Washington are appointed by the President with the advice and consent of Congress. And this, for all practical and effectual purpose, ends any Federal governmental control over the System. The Board of Governors, headed currently by Arthur Burns, has the authority to approve changes in discount rates, to change member bank reserve requirements, to set margin requirements for certain kinds of stock transactions, and to set maximum interest rates payable on member banks' savings and time deposits. They also supervise member banks and bank holding companies.

The Federal Open Market Committee is composed of the Board of Governors and five other FRS representatives. They control the purchase and sale of government securities and deal in international currency as well.

The Federal Reserve System "has created inflation and recession at the same time. Very few Americans realize that the elected Congress and the President have no control over this Political Pyramid. They could change the law, but only a few would have the courage to try, and probably none could stand the trouble that would be heaped upon them. We must remember that the Federal Reserve is a privately held bank; they deal in international currency, and considerable control is wielded by international bankers. They have investments in industry of all kinds... The Federal Reserve thrives on the debt of the Federal Government. The way they make money is by loaning it out.

They have the power to make war or recession and have complete control over the American economy. They are immune to outside audit—6% income with no taxation. ...Whoever controls the money controls the laws, and from this system and through it our Invisible Dictator controls America." (Quotation from the booklet "America's Invisible Dictator," by Loren Cook, Trust Publications, Inc., 2029 N.W. 2nd Ave., Boca Raton, Florida 33432. Paperback, 89 pages, $2.50.)

The preceding sets a necessary background to the following remarks by Rep. Patman (D-TX) in the House of Representatives on February 14, 1976:

* * * * *

THE FEDERAL RESERVE SYSTEM AND THE BUSINESS ROUNDTABLE

Mr. Speaker, for some time, I have been curious about the intense interest of the Business Roundtable in the affairs of the Federal Reserve System. Now the reasons are becoming clear why there have been so many telegrams and telephone calls to help the Federal Reserve block an audit by the General Accounting Office. My research indicates that—in many instances—the Business Roundtable and the Federal Reserve are one and the same—honeycombed with interlocking personnel.... In fact, five of the nine directors of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York—the most influential in the system—have direct or indirect ties with the Business Roundtable. This pressure group has managed to put officers and directors of its member corporations all through the System. These are not small businesses I am talking about, but the biggest of the big.

Take a look at the bank in New York—those five directors are from:

Chase Manhattan, with almost $34 billion in deposits as of December 13, 1975;

J. C. Penney, with annual sales of $6,200,000,000;

Texaco, annual sales of $23,255,000,000;

Union Carbide Corp., with annual sales of $5,320,000,000;

Kennicott Copper, with annual sales of $1,664,000,000;

All member companies of the Business Roundtable. . . .

In that all-important Federal Reserve Bank of New York resides the portfolio of Government bonds—about $93 billion worth—from which the Federal Reserve System—not the Treasury—draws interest of about $6 billion annually. This portfolio of bonds is managed by the Federal Open Market Committee in the New York Federal Reserve Bank. Using a select list of securities dealers, the Federal Open Market Committee buys and sells bonds in the open market. These transactions involve billions of dollars a year. And sharing in that lucrative business—part of that select list of bond dealers—are the names of Chase Manhattan Bank, almost $34 billion in deposits; Bank of America, $57 billion in deposits; and the First National City Bank, $45 billion in deposits—member corporations of the Business Roundtable.

One day these bond dealers buy and sell Government securities for the Federal Reserve. The next day they are out lobbying with the Business Roundtable to protect themselves and the rest of the Federal Reserve from an audit. . . .

The big decisions—the really crucial decisions—are made in a high-level committee which goes under the name of the Business Roundtable Policy Committee. This is where the fattest of the fat cats start the influence ball rolling. And of course, the Federal Reserve influence is right there on the Policy Committee: 11 of the 40 members of that committee have ties with the Federal Reserve. These ties involve links between the Federal Reserve System and Federated Department Stores, Chase Manhattan Bank, Union Carbide, Kennecott Copper, Westinghouse Electric, IBM, Sears Roebuch, Exxon, A.T. & T., Alcoa, and Bank of America.

Mr. Speaker, the link between the Federal Reserve and the Business Roundtable is complete—it encompasses all areas. . . .

(End of extended quotation.)

And, after checking Rep. Patman's list of Business Roundtable members who are also members of the twelve Federal Reserve Banks and their 24 branch banks, we can add that the link between the Federal Reserve, the Business Roundtable, the Council on Foreign Relations, and the American members of the Bilderberger Group, the Trilateral Commission, and the International Round Table is also complete.

Now this warning: The citizens of these United States are "all hot and bothered" about who is going to be the next President. insofar as the future of this Nation is concerned, it makes little or no difference who wins the presidential sweepstakes, with this one exception: If Nelson Rockefeller should happen to win, he would take it as a mandate from the people to complete his plan for World Federalism at the fastest possible pace. Any other electee in the White House and the pace would be slower.

What is important—and what is being ignored by the majority of the people—is the membership of the next, the 95th Congress; and the personnel making up State Legislatures. At the political level we have one hope: To send representatives to the National and State Congresses who will start recovering the vested and delegated powers that previous Congresses have relinquished to the Presidents, to the FRS, IRS, OSHA, EPA, HEW, Domestic and Regional Councils, and about a thousand other agencies that use our money to enslave us.

It may seem a forlorn hope, but, to paraphrase Dean Manion: If our Bicentennial is to be a bright beginning rather than a bitter and final end of American freedom, our Congressmen must quit their exhibitionist antics and start reading and understanding the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution they have sworn to defend.

DON BELL REPORTS Weekly, accenting the Christian American point of view. Two copies of each issue are mailed, first class postage, to all subscribers, except overseas airmail to foreign countries where postage limits to one copy. $24 per year; extra copies: 10¢ each, mailed third class unless extra is sent for first class postage.

DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

MORE ABOUT THIS "NEW AMERICAN REVOLUTION"

END OF AN ERA?

"The bicentennial band seems to be tuning up smartly enough," comments Newsweek columnist Shana Alexander, "but the main works—the central machinery that turns our 200-year-old carousel—appears in serious disrepair. We seem to be in a crisis of integrity, massive and system-wide. Not the end of the Vietnam war itself, but the appalling way it has ended, coming on top of all the rest of the economic and political bad news, has left a lot of people feeling rotten, queasy and shaken. This is a time for reconciliation, says the President. It's the end of an era, say others. I only wish it were...."

No, it is not yet the end of an era. Rather, it is the painful transition period between eras. The time when the Planners may say "The Old Order is Dead, Long Live the New Order," is yet to come. And the target date is the Year of our Bicentennial as a Nation, 1976. In that year, if Kissinger is right in his public pronouncements, all Europe will have 'gone Socialist.' And in that same year, if the celebrated social philosopher and ex-Keynesian Friedrich A. von Hayek is right in his predictions, America too will have 'gone all Socialist.'

It took time and effort on the part of the Planners, and it took apathy and indifference on the part of the people, in order that the New Order might be prepared and installed. For example:

On October 20, 1972, the President of the United States made a special visit to Independence Hall in Philadelphia to make a speech and sign a bill into law. The importance of the event was minimized by the communications media, but its significance was not lost upon the uncivil servants of the invisible government. Here is a part of what was read from a teleprompter by a President of the United States at that time:

"In my State of the Union address nearly two years ago, I outlined a program which I described as 'a New American Revolution—a peaceful revolution in which power (is) turned back to the people... a revolution as profound, as far-reaching, as exciting as that first revolution almost 200 years ago.'

"The signing today of the State and Local Fiscal Assistance Act of 1972—the legislation known as General Revenue Sharing—means that this New American Revolution is truly underway. And it is appropriate that we launch this New American Revolution in the same place where the first American Revolution was launched by our Founding Fathers 196 years ago—Independence Square in Philadelphia. It is appropriate that we meet in this historic place to help enunciate a new declaration of Independence for our State and local governments....

"As we sign this historic document today, we are carrying on the work which started here in Independence Square—where independence was declared, where the Constitution was written, and where the Bill of Rights was formally added to the Constitution....

"We expect great things from this program—and we are going to be watching for them. I am asking the Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations to monitor and evaluate the results of revenue sharing so that we can all know its full impact as we follow up on this initiative. For the enactment of General Revenue Sharing represents only the first part of our comprehensive design to reform the institutions of government so they can respond to the needs of the people....

"Many people have suggested in recent years that America's sun was setting, that our glory was behind us. One reason was the government was not responding well to people's needs. But today as we come back to Independence Hall we do so with confidence that we are giving our government back to the people again. And like Franklin, we can be confident, as we approach our 200th anniversary, that the sun is rising for America." (End of quote.)

It should be understood that "giving the government back to the people" is a stock political phrase that has many meanings. Red China is called a "people's republic," implying that when the Nationalist Government of Chiang Kai-shek was overcome, the act of establishing a Communist Dictatorship gave "government back to the people" in that unhappy land. When the Bolsheviks swarmed in and conquered Russia, they boasted of a "Dictatorship of the Proletariat," implying a government of the common people as opposed to the royal and middle classes. In the presidential peroration at Independence Hall when the "New American Revolution" was made official, the term "giving government back to our people" really meant taking political power and tax monies from the people and then returning some of the power and the monies to the

(The following appeared in a recent issue of Moody Magazine. We reprint verbatim and without comment.)

THE BEAST

Dr. Handrick Eldeman, Chief Analyst of the Common Market Confederacy, announced from Brussels that a computerized restoration plan is already underway in the aftermath of world chaos. In the crisis meeting which brought together scientists, advisors, and C.M.C. leaders, Dr. Eldeman unveiled the "BEAST." The Beast is a gigantic computer that takes up three floors at Administration Building of Market Headquarters. This "monster" is a self programming unit that has over one hundred sensing input sources. Computer experts have been working on a plan to computerize all world trade. This master plan involves a digital system for every human on earth. The computer would assign each citizen of the world a number to use for all buying and selling to avoid the problem of ordinary credit cards. The number would be invisibly "laser-tattooed" on the forehead or back of the hand. It would provide a walking credit card system. The number would show up under infra-red scanners to be placed at all check-out counters and places of business. Dr. Eldeman suggested that by using three six-digital units, the entire world could be assigned a working credit card number. Other Common Market Officials believe that the present chaos and disorder caused by the 'mystery' points to the need of a world currency - perhaps an international mark that would do away with all currency and coin. Instead, credit notes would be exchanged through a world bank clearing center. No member could buy or sell without having an assignment of a digital mark. Market directors are now convinced that world order depends on allegiance to an international program of peace and politics, as well as a people. This particular scheme is known as General Revenue Sharing. It is accomplished in conjunction with the Regional Governance System. This latter plan is intended to centralize all political power and the handling of all tax revenues in the Federal Executive Offices at Washington, D.C. Then, a part of the power and the money are "given back to the people" through the Te Regional Commissions and the multitude of sub-State and inter-State Commissions.

In the matter of this General Revenue Sharing Act (Public Law 92-512) which was signed into law on Oct. 20, 1972 and became fully effective on Jan. 1, 1974, there is a "hidden gimmick" in the law that will, when enforced, make the collection of State tax monies the prerogative of the Federal Government!

Title I of this Act gives money "back to the people," that is, to local improvement programs, etc., provided that the local administrators of such programs conform to certain provisions and guidelines set up by the federal government. However, Title 2 of this Act sets up the machinery whereby the States are expected to "enter into agreement with the Secretary of the Treasury ... and ... the Federal Government shall begin to col-

new world trade and numbering system. One man could have at his finger tips the number of any man on earth. It could provide the most powerful levers known to mankind. He could have a solution bank for world problems. It could be a tool for peace, or a dictator's weapon.

When one of the Market leaders was asked what would happen if a person objected to the system and refused to co-operate, he replied rather pointedly, "We would have to use force to make him conform to requirements."

When we remember what the Bible (Rev. 13:16.17.18) says concerning the appearance of the Antichrist at the head of this organization, the following quotation becomes exceedingly illuminating. Henri Spaak, early planner of the European Common Market, and Secretary-General of NATO, said in one of his speeches:

"We do not want another committee; we have too many already. What we want is a man of sufficient stature to hold the allegiance of all people, and to lift us out of the economic morass into which we are sinking. Send us such a man, and be he god or devil, we will receive him."

-Moody Magazine

lect all State individual income taxes." The States not having income tax laws are urged to enact same so that this provision of the Revenue Sharing Act can apply to all States!

To further illustrate how anxious the appointed federal bureaucrats are to become collectors of all taxes, note the following which appeared in the April 22 issue of the San Francisco Chronicle:

"...IRS Commissioner Donald Alexander said that in 1974 tax information on 63 million Americans was passed to the states under 'treaties' designed to ensure that taxpayers comply with both state and federal laws. The information was disclosed as IRS and Justice Department officials testified before the Senate Finance subcommittee on Internal Revenue, about bills that would restrict access to federal tax returns...."

"Senator Floyd Haskell (Dem.-Colo.) ... expressed concern about the widespread distribution of federal tax returns.... Alexander said one solution would be for the States to assign IRS officials the responsibility of collecting State income taxes."

(Italics added for emphasis.)

Along with the movement to make all State and local government units dependent upon central government for their existence, there is also the companion drive to make all individuals dependent upon the central government for their very existence. Individual freedom is a dangerous commodity in any socialist society. The following article from the current issue of U.S. News & World Report (May 12, 1975) is indicative of the success that the Planners are enjoying in this respect:

BIG GOVERNMENT - NUMBER ONE CONSUMER, EMPLOYER, BORROWER

Chalk up another victim of recession: the drive to curb the growth of big government. In fact, the dollars-and-cents impact of government—federal, State and local—on Americans is rapidly intensifying amid hard times. For example:

* While private firms lay off employes, governments at all levels are putting more people to work, in part through public-service job programs.

* Swollen by outlays for unemployment benefits and welfare, funds laid out by government to provide income for people are growing much more rapidly than income provided by industry.

* Borrowing by government to finance deficits is drawing more and more funds away from prospective private borrowers, or at least making the money more expensive.

It all adds up to a widening lead for government as the country's biggest employer, consumer and borrower....

Governments employ 1 in 5 workers... And that doesn't include jobs in private industry, particularly in defense, that stem from government contracts.

Nearly 3 in every 10 dollars of income Americans receive—29 per cent—comes from government. Of the 345 billion dollars paid to people, nearly half is in the form of wages and salaries. Almost as much comes as Social Security payments, unemployment compensation, welfare benefits, veterans' benefits and the like.

Government's growing role takes its toll on the taxpayer—draining off 37 per cent of every dollar of national income, up from 28 cents two decades ago.

Why the steady growth, even before the recession? Two things, primarily:

* An expanding population that has insisted on more spending for education, protection, and other basic services.

* Persistent demands for new public programs to cushion adversities of all kinds, stimulate various kinds of businesses or serve other special interests....

What's ahead? Once the recession ends, you can expect an upsurge of demands to put a lid on "big government." Still, the lessons of history suggest that government expands in good times as well as bad. (End)

With Big Government continuing to expand and with private enterprise continuing to narrow itself down into a few hundred massive and monopolistic conglomerates and multinationals, the two combining to stifle free enterprise and to liquidate the middle class that was the "backbone of America," Corporate Socialism becomes the inevitable result.

Like the alligator and the crocodile, free enterprise is private enterprise, but private enterprise is not necessarily free enterprise. Private enterprise is growing, registering greater profits than ever; but free enterprise is being strangled and is dying.

It was free enterprise that von Hayek talked about when he addressed a group of congressmen and journalists recently. The story was carried by Human Events (April 26).

Friedrich A. von Hayek is an important witness, because at one time he was a firm believer in the Keynesian doctrine. As a professor at the London School of Economics (a Fabian Socialist institution), he knew Keynes personally and taught the latter's theories to students from all over the world. Then he began to see what Keynesian ideas were doing to the Western industrial Nations, including the United States. He started a personal crusade to expose the dangers of Keynesian theories to his fellow economists and feels he has had considerable success. Here are highlights from the article published by Human Events:

NOBEL ECONOMIST WARNS U.S. FACES SOCIALISM

On a recent visit to Capitol Hill the world-renowned economist and social philosopher Friedrich A. von Hayek warned that "The threat to the free enterprise society has never been more imminent in the United States than now." What's more, said von Hayek... this danger is coming from a different direction than he had ever expected.

Addressing the Free Market Lunch Group, a Hill organization formed this year that already numbers among its members over 130 members of Congress, congressional aides, and Washington journalists interested in free-market economics, the Austrian economist said he had long thought that socialism was a danger. "But I didn't expect you would be led into socialism by reason of an unsound monetary policy. I thought the United States had a fundamental belief in the importance of a sound currency."

As von Hayek sees it, the seeds of our present peril trace back to the acceptance of the so-called Keynesian "full-employment" doctrine in the 1930s and enshrined in the Nation's statute books by the Full Employment Act of 1946. According to Keynes' theory, he explained, unemployment is caused by insufficient aggregate demand. In order to increase this aggregate demand, Keynes suggested that government should use fiscal deficits and expansionary monetary policies to stimulate the economy. And Western governments, including ours, have been doing so almost uninterruptedly ever since. Witness estimates that this year's U.S. budget deficit alone may exceed $100 billion.

Hayek fears that the cumulative effect of these policies could before much more time has elapsed lead to an inflationary situation so bad that "the government, to control the flood they've caused, will be forced to impose permanent wage and price controls." And since, under such controls, prices could no longer be counted upon to allocate resources, the government would have to step in to perform this function. The result: a fully planned, centrally directed Socialist system....

The sad thing about our present economic plight, said von Hayek, is that "it has been caused by government following the advice of the great majority of my fellow economists." For the future, however, he believes the biggest obstacle to realistic economic policies may come not from the economists but from the news media.

"Now many economists finally know they were wrong," explained von Hayek, "but it will be hard for them to change the direction of government policy because they have convinced the media of Keynesian doctrines." The media, he said, are "dealers in second-hand ideas." As distinguished from scholars, reporters have a tendency to take ideas and keep them for life. Hence, concluded von Hayek, although economic theorists are changing their minds on Keynes, we are stuck with a generation of newsmen who will propagate Keynesian ideas for the next 30 years....

He told the Capitol Hill gathering that the chief thing he holds against the late British economist is that, for its propagandistic effect, Keynes entitled his work the general theory when, in fact, it was applicable only to a very rare set of circumstances that happened to exist in the England of his day. But for Keynes' prescriptions to work generally, von Hayek pointed out, it would be necessary for government to continually cause inflation to outpace public expectations, which becomes increasingly difficult and ultimately impossible as the rate of inflation mounts.

Thus, said Hayek, ... such stimulative policies must lead to intolerable rates of inflation, which can wreak havoc not only on the economy but on the entire fabric of society (and will end in Socialism). (End)

DON BELL REPORTS Weekly, presenting the Christian American point of view. Two copies of each issue are mailed, first class, to each subscriber (except overseas subscribers, who receive one copy, airmailed.) $24 per year. Extra copies: 10¢ each.

Please note: "Proofs of a Conspiracy" now out of print. "Contrived Evolution of Regional Government" still available in quantity.

Please address all orders and inquiries to:
DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

Trilateral Commission, and Woodcock's importance on the current political scene can be understood by reading an article that was published in the Knight-Ridder newspapers on July 13. We quote portions of that article.

NEW LABOR LEADERS BUILT A POLITICAL POWERHOUSE

By Saul Friedman
and Remer Tyson

For the first time in 20 years, the grumpy, burly, cigar-chewing plumber who has personified the American labor boss is absent from a Democratic National Convention. And with AFL-CIO President George Meany sitting this one out in Washington, a new sort of union leader—more liberal, more modern, more flexible—has taken command of labor's power in the Democratic Party.

This year that power is considerable and perhaps unprecedented. And it fulfills the long dream of men like Walter Reuther... who broke with or were burdened by the crusty, conservative, back-room politics of Meany. Under the leadership of Reuther's successor, Leonard Woodcock, the liberal unionists have put together a disciplined army of 450 delegates at the convention, nearly four times the number loyal to Meany.

...When the convention is over, that liberal union power is expected to grow.... The makeup of the new-style union group, called the "Labor Coalition Clearing House," represents a force a Democratic administration must reckon with. Besides the UAW—perhaps the nation's most savvy and effective union in a political campaign—members of the coalition include the United Mine Workers, the militantly liberal Oil, Chemical and Atomic Workers, the Communications Workers, the International Association of Machinists, the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees and the National Education Association.... This is the first time the traditionally neutral NEA has stepped into the national political arena. And the alliance of white-collar professionals from the classrooms and state and local governments with veteran blue-collar laborites is a new dimension in union political power.

Furthermore, throughout the long months of the primary campaigns and even before they began, leaders of the Labor Coalition were talking privately with Carter, probing his views and helping his lieutenants plan his most significant victories.

Indeed, as early as last Dec. 13, key staff members of the coalition met secretly with Carter aide Hamilton Jordan in Orlando to plot a concerted effort against Alabama Gov. George Wallace in Florida's March 9 primary. The coalition's aim was to force every other Democratic candidate out of that race and use Carter to put an end to Wallace's strength and prevent him from again creating political havoc in labor states like Michigan, Maryland and Wisconsin....

The Plan was born at the Democratic mini-convention at Kansas City in 1974, when Woodcock and other liberal unions played a major role in putting together a series of party reforms. During the battle for the reforms, Meany's political agent, Al Barkan, was badly defeated, partly by AFL-CIO unions that had been balking at the federation's conservative views. As a result, Meany angrily pulled the AFL-CIO out of national Democratic politics. And in the vacuum the coalition was formed to enhance the position of liberal labor in the 1976 campaign and back up its views with political power.

The top political operatives of the coalition unions—William Dodds of the UAW, Michael Miller of the communications workers, Bernie Aronson of the mine workers, William Welsh of the municipal employees and Terry Herndon of the teachers—set up a command post in Washington to keep track of the races for delegates around the country.

(end of quotation)

Union Control of Government is the ultimate aim of these political activists. That's why the Hatch Act is to be revoked if Carter becomes President. That's why there are a number of bills awaiting passage. Jon Minarek of the non-profit organization "Americans Against Union Control of Government" recently wrote:

"HR 79, HR 13, HR 1837, HR 4800, HR 77, HR 1488, HR 55, HR 56, HR 8617, and on and on they go. There seems no end to the union-demanded proposals tossed into the hopper by friendly Congressmen promoting government unionization. The bills above mentioned were only introduced in the House of Representatives. These proposals came in the last session, and we haven't mentioned all of them!

"Take, for example, HR 4415, which passed last year. Among other things, there is a provision allowing tax money to be granted to public employee unions to instruct their members on how to bargain for higher wages. Imagine—your tax money to teach them how to get more tax money, money they receive as pay to interfere in your lives with regulations, edicts, strikes and so on—

"We are telling you this for a reason. The sooner we make Congressmen who vote for monstrosities like HR 4415 understand the dangers of such legislation the better we'll become at minimizing the union menace."

But this union menace is becoming critical in yet another area. According to Senator John Tower of Texas:

"AFGE (the American Federation of Government Employees union) is carefully laying plans to organize the Army, the Navy, the Air Force, and the Marine Corps. The long term implications of the union plan are horrifying.... In this time of international tension, could America entrust its safety to armed forces directed more by union bosses than by generals? I hope we never have to find out."

When union bosses began unionizing Policemen and Firemen, they went on strike, in New York, Milwaukee, Kansas City, Albuquerque, and San Francisco. Then what happened? According to press reports:

In San Francisco striking policemen slashed tires and blocked traffic. A bomb exploded on the Mayor's front porch. Jack Crowley, local union boss, told the strikers: "I would like to compliment you on...the way you kept this city in turmoil until your demands were met."

In Baltimore, union boss Jerry Wurf came to town during the Police strike and shouted: "We have no choice but to break the law." He threatened the Governor of Maryland, saying "Baltimore City would burn to the ground" unless city officials met his demands.

Imagine what could happen if our armed forces were unionized by such labor bosses as Jack Crowley and Jerry Wurf.

Just as dangerous but in the political arena, is the fact that Big Labor controls the National Democratic Party and COPE, Labor's Committee on Political Education, is said to control the votes of over half of the United States Senators and a majority of the members of the House of Representatives. As for the coming national elections in November, union members have been alerted to vote for the "33 U.S. Senators and 435 U.S. Representatives" that bear the endorsement of COPE.

As we said, the union bosses want to control the government. But this is not the final aim of the Elite that is running things. This is but a step toward the final goal which is the establishment of the Corporative System, which will replace our present free enterprise economic system, and our representative republican political system.

This was the dream of Franklin Roosevelt; Jimmy Carter intends to make the dream a reality. And Leonard Woodcock of the Labor Coalition Clearinghouse and the Council on Foreign Relations, is there to help make the dream come true. COPE-sponsored Walter Mondale will be there to help — and so will a majority of U.S. Senators and Congressmen, unless the American voters can be awakened and alerted between now and November 2, 1976.

The Corporative System involves a working compromise between "private capitalism and the requirements of the totalitarian state." Also: industrial unions are linked with industrial management, and both are closely linked with the government. In Italy it worked like this: The major industries were organized into 22 corporations. These were operated by "councils" which were made up of members representing employers, employees, and the government. All production, distribution, banking, labor relations, foreign trade, etc. were under the supervision of a ministry of corporations, a department of the national government (the Humphrey-Hawkins Bill calls this the "Economic Planning Board," a kind of three-man dictatorship).

And so: Behind a smoke-screen of "peace and new-found unity," all the plans have been made; the actors have been selected and assigned their roles, coached and rehearsed; and the curtain will rise on a "new-found version" of the Great American Drama on Inauguration Day in the Year of our Lord, 1977—unless the so-called Dispossessed Majority decides to repossess the polls and "keep the rascals out."

DON BELL REPORTS Weekly, accenting the Christian American point of view. $24 per year. Extra copies: 10¢ each. Address: DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223 Palm Beach, Florida 33480

THE STRUGGLE TO PROTECT THE CONSPIRATORS

LOCKHEED IS INDISCREET

Prince Bernhard of the Bilderbergers, the husband and royal escort of Queen Juliana of The Netherlands, is up to his royal ears in a sea of scandal that threatens to topple a throne, raze financial fortresses, and demolish multinational strongholds. The charge: as an officer of the Dutch Royal Military Establishment, Prince Bernhard accepted a sizable bribe from the Lockheed Corporation as a reward for persuading the Dutch Government to purchase Lockheed airplanes. And the immediate problem is: how to punish the prince without destroying the power and the influence of the Bilderberger Organization, which Bernhard manages in behalf of the Rockefellers, the Rothschilds and other multinational families that are linked together for the purpose of creating a New Economic World Order. Although the Bilderberger Group is on the spot in this instance, also threatened are similar organizations that are promoting the New World Order such as the Council on Foreign Relations, the Trilateral Commission, the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development, the Committee for Economic Development, etc., etc.

The trouble all seems to have begun when the multinationalists started worrying about the complaints that were being made about them by people who feared the multinational organizations were getting ready to replace established governments and do away with existing Nations and States. So, it was decided to set up a special committee to investigate and give the multinationals a clean bill of health.

Accordingly, they selected Senator Frank Church to head a Senate Subcommittee on Multinational Corporations. They invited Church to join the Council on Foreign Relations, the Zionist Lobby heaped special favors on him, and all the elitists seemed pleased at Church's selection for the post. He was a liberal, he would sign the upcoming "Declaration of Interdependence" promoting world government, he seemed a favorite of Big Labor and ERAites, etc. In short, Church seemed safe and secured.

However, Frank Church is an ambitious man who dreams of bigger things than being a Senator from Idaho. The White House looms; not this year, but perhaps in 1980. And any exposure of multinational malfeasances and illicit activities is a sure way to get national publicity—as Church's constant exposure on nationally televised programs attests.

Much of the preceding is surmised; we can't prove it, we can only allege. However, the following are facts: According to the Washington Post of Sept. 12, 1975, Senator Frank Church's Senate Subcommittee on Multinational Corporations "launched a sweeping investigation of how international money transactions are affecting American commercial banks and foreign policy." And Church began checking into the bribes paid out to foreigners by American-based multinational corporations. Church revealed that Exxon had paid an $86,000 bribe to the Italian Communist Party; had made over $27 million in political contributions to various parties and individuals in Italy between 1963 and 1971. The story proved to be an overnight sensation, but was soon forgotten. Similarly, when Gulf Oil was accused of handing out bribes to foreigners, some "responsible executives" resigned and the story faded off the front pages.

Much the same treatment might have been expected to be accorded the Lockheed bribery charges but for two things:

- 1) Lockheed had been bailed out in 1971 when the U.S. Congress voted to grant an unusual loan to Lockheed to keep it from going bankrupt; and
- 2) The chairman of the Bilderberger Group was one of the men charged with accepting a bribe from Lockheed.

It all came out because of an alleged oversight on the part of a Lockheed employee. Certain papers were to be delivered to the federal investigators and, inadvertently, the files involving Prince Bernhard were included with those papers (we use the word "inadvertently" advisedly).

At first controlled communications media tried not to involve Prince Bernhard with the scandal. The New York Times, in its first reports, said that "a high Dutch official" had received $1.1 million in bribe money from the Lockheed Aircraft Corporation. Later, however, the paper admitted that the high Dutch official had been identified as Prince Bernhard. Never, however, was Bernhard ever named as chairman of the Bilderbergers, nor was this Group ever mentioned in connection with the scandal.

Time Newsmagazine was quite protective of the Prince of Bilderberg. It carried nearly a full page story on the scandal (page 56 of the February 16, 1976 issue). But the entire article had to do with the bribe accepted by Yoshido Kodama of Japan, another principal in the same scandal. But Prince Bernhard wasn't even mentioned in the entire article!

Newsweek did a bit better in its coverage. While most of the story (page 60) dealt with the Japanese bribery charge, the weekly did admit that "A similar uproar loomed in the Netherlands, where Prince Bernhard, inspector general of the Dutch armed forces, now stands accused of doing favors for both Lockheed and Northrop." The weekly then added: "The Prince himself told Newsweek he would neither confirm nor deny the story, adding: 'I am standing above these things. My wife and me, we had a big laugh about it.'"

But none of these publications ever printed a single word about the Bilderberger Group, or the fact that Prince Bernhard is the top Bilderberger!

Later when it became impossible to exclude Bernhard's name from the follow-up stories, a new strategy was developed: Those who received bribes were "excused, exonerated and forgiven," while all the blame was heaped on the giver of the bribes. Lockheed was condemned as the great sinner, until penance was paid through the firing of Lockheed's president, A.C. Kotchian, and the chairman of the board, Daniel J. Haughton. To further impress the public with the high crime of giving bribes while mitigating the seriousness of receiving bribes, the Feds demanded that Boeing Aircraft also submit to search and seizure proceedings.

As an example of how the controlled media "played down" the involvement of the top Bilderberger in the bribery scandal, the lead editorial in the Times of February 11 read, in part: "Lockheed has admitted paying at least $22 million in what it calls kickbacks; the General Accounting Office puts the figure $2.4 million higher. Either sum amounts to more than 10 percent of the total of outstanding loans which Lockheed obtained in 1971 on the strength of an extraordinary Federal guarantee approved by Congress to avert bankruptcy of the major aerospace contractor.... The United States Government and its taxpayers have been had—financially and diplomatically...."

True enough. But when such deals were made and carried out through the good offices and officers of such organizations as the Bilderbergers, should Lockheed and a few other multinational executives take all of the blame?

Another example of how the media can tell the truth but not the whole truth, and thus influence public opinion toward forgiving some malefactors while condemning others, is provided by a lead editorial which appeared in the Miami Herald, a Knight-Ridder chainpaper of great circulation. We reprint the entire editorial:

* * * * *

LOCKHEED'S WAY IS JUST WRONG

We will leave to the Dutch the question of whether Prince Bernhard pocketed $1.1 million for helping Lockheed sell some aircraft. And we will leave to the Japanese the question of whether a war criminal turned wealthy businessman got $7 million for the same kind of under-the-table service.

But considering the loan guarantees that the federal government provided for Lockheed's financial stability, every citizen of the United States must be somehow involved in the ugly story of international bribery now unfolding. And that has to bother all of us.

We are tired of the apologists for Lockheed who say that's the way business is done in selling airplanes around the world, that Lockheed has to pay bribes thinly disguised as commissions because the Germans, the French and the English are doing it.

Where is it written down or commanded that American businessmen must adopt the sleazy principles of graft and bribery used by Middle Eastern gun runners and Far Eastern opium smugglers?

(text continued on page 4)

126 CONGRESSMEN SIGN DECLARATION OF INTERDEPENDENCE

The "ceremonial signing of 'A Declaration of INTERdependence' by members of the Congress of the United States of America" was held at 11:30 a.m. on January 30, 1976, in the Congress Hall at Independence National Historical Park in Philadelphia. The Congress Hall is one of the wings of Independence Hall where for many years the Liberty Bell had been on display. The signing of this spurious document was sponsored by the World Affairs Council of Philadelphia (Don Bell Reports of January 30, 1976, gives details as well as the text of the "Declaration".)

Here is the complete list of those United States Senators and Representatives who swore to uphold and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, both foreign and domestic, who now have sworn to aid in the work of having that same U.S. Constitution superseded by some International Compact (which action might be classified as treason if the U.S. Constitution remains the supreme Law of the Land).

U. S. Senators

James Abourezk (D-SD), Edward W. Brooke (R-MA), Dick Clark (D-IA), Alan Cranston (D-CA), Frank Church (D-ID), Jacob Javits (R-NY), Mike Gravel (D-AK), Philip Hart (D-MI), Vance Hartke (D-IN), Mark Hatfield (R-OR), Hubert Humphrey (D-MN), Daniel Inouye (D-HI), Gale McGee (D-WY), George McGovern (D-SD), Thomas McIntyre (D-NH), Mike Mansfield (D-MT), Charles Mathias (R-MD), Lee Metcalf (D-MT), Walter Modale (D-MN), Gaylord Nelson (D-WI), James Pearson (R-KA), Claiborne Pell (R-RI), William Proxmire (D-WI), Abraham Ribicoff (D-CT), Richard Schweiker (R-PA), Hugh Scott (R-PA), John Sparkman (D-AL), Adlai Stevenson III (D-IL), John Tunney (D-CA), Milton Young (R-ND), Harrison Williams Jr. (D-NJ).

U.S. Representatives

Carl Albert (D-OK), Mark Andrews (D-ND), John Anderson (R-IL), Les Aspin (D-WI), Herman Badillo (D-NY), William Barrett (D-PA), Berkley Bedell (D-IA), Edward

Biester (R-PA), Jonathan Bingham (R-NY), Edward Boland (D-MA), Richard Bolling (D-MO), John Brademas (D-IN), George Brown (D-CA), William Brodhead (D-MI), Yvonne Burke (D-CA), Goodloe Byron (D-MD), Robert Carr (D-MI), Cardiss Collins (D-IL), Silvio Conte (R-MA), John Conyers (D-MI), James Corman (D-CA), George Danielson (D-CA), Ronald Dellums (D-CA), Robert Drinan (D-MA), Robert Duncan (D-OR), Robert Edgar (D-PA), Don Edwards (D-CA), Joshua Eilberg (D-PA), Millicent Fenwick (R-NJ), Daniel Flood (D-PA), James Floria (D-NJ), William Ford (D-MI), Edwin Forsythe (R-NJ), Donald Fraser (D-MN), Sam Gibbons (D-FL), William Green (D-PA), Gilbert Gude (R-MD), Thomas Harkin (D-IA), Michael Harrington (D-MA), Augustus Hawkins (D-CA), Henry Helstoki (D-NJ), Frank Horton (R-NY), Robert Jones (D-AL), Barbara Jordan (D-TX), Martha Keys (D-KS), Robert Legett (D-CA), Norma Lent (R-NY), Clarence Long (D-MD), Torbert MacDonald (D-MA), Paul McCloskey (R-CA), Matthew McHugh (D-NY), Spark Matsunaga (D-HI), Lloyd Meeds (D-WA), Ralph Metcalf (D-IL), Helen Meyner (D-NJ), Edward Mezvinsky (D-IA), Abner Mikva (D-IL), Norman Mineta (D-CA), Patsy Mink (D-HI), William Moorhead (D-PA), John Moss (D-CA), Thomas Morgan (D-PA), John Murphy (D-NY), Robert Nix (D-PA), Richard Nolan (D-MN), Richard Ottinger (D-NY), Claude Pepper (D-FL), Charles Rangel (D-NY), Thomas Rees (D-CA), Henry Reuss (D-WI), Frederick Richmond (D-NY), Peter Rodino (D-NJ), Fred Rooney (D-PA), Charles Rose (D-NC), Edward Roybal (D-CA), Leo Ryan (D-CA), Fernand St. Germaine (D-RI), Herman Schneebeli (R-PA), Patricia Schroeder (D-CO), John Seiberling (D-OH), Paul Simon (D-IL), Fortney Stark (D-CA), Lou's Stokes (D-OH), James Symington (D-MO), Frank Thompson (D-NJ), Paul Tsonga (D-MA), Morris Udall (D-AZ), Lionel van Deerlin (D-CA), Charles vanik (D-OH), Bob Wilson (R-CA), Clement Zablocki (D-WI).

Additional Delegates

Jaime Benitez, Resident Commissioner of Puerto Rico; Antonio Won Pat, Delegate of Guam.

The character of a Dutch prince married to one of the world's wealthiest women is not the point. The character of a rightwing Japanese militarist selling influence is not the point. We are concerned with the character of the men who run Lockheed Aircraft Corporation which is still in business today at least in part because the American Congress thought it was a vital business concern worth saving.

We are not sure Congress was right.

There are those who will disagree with the preceding editorial and insist that the character of a Dutch prince is a point that must be considered; because that Dutch prince just happens to be a spokesman for multinational interests far bigger than Lockheed. By condemning one multinational corporation in order to protect an international conspiracy, the major U.S. papers keep the U.S. readers in the dark.

By contrast, when a somewhat similar deal was made by the British government, to keep the Chrysler installation in England from declaring bankruptcy and closing down, a major European financial writer, Gordon Tether, told the whole truth about the international elitist conspiracy. Here are important excerpts from Mr. Tether's article as it appeared in the London Times of Dec. 22;

JUGGLING BEHIND THE SCENES

When labour MPs who take a poor view of the Chrysler rescue terms complained to Ministers at a party meeting last week of having been kept in the dark until the deal had been signed, sealed and settled, it was "explained" that the "delicate talks" with the corporation's bosses might have been jeopardised had they been subjected to the glare of publicity while still in train.

So what, you may ask, is wrong with that? My answer is nothing, except that you have achieved the ultimate in non-open government if no opportunity is ever going to be afforded for commenting on negotiations of such crucial importance to the nation before they have produced an agreement that is effectively irrevokable.

For a long time past, politicians of all persuasions have been stressing the importance of keeping the "grass roots" fully informed about what was going on as a means of restoring their lost faith in the functioning of the democratic process. Yet one does not have to be a rabid "conspiratologist" to be left with the feeling that matters of great moment for the people's future are being decided to an ever increasing extent by influential figures largely or wholly behind the scenes.

... Added force is undoubtedly given to the suggestion that far too much of this country's business is being decided in undercover talks between influential Britons and their foreign counterparts by the efforts that are consistently made to divert attention from British participation in such international societies as the Bilderbergers and the Trilateral Commission.

Readers may recall my drawing attention some months back to the fact that the Chancellor of the Exchequer, the Governor of the Bank of England and the Leader of the Opposition, Mrs. Thatcher, were among the hundred or so prominent personalities who attended this year's annual meeting of the Bilderbergers—an international group composed of super-capitalists and similarly powerful people which shrouds all its discussions in the strictest secrecy. Their journey to a remote holiday village in Turkey—in company with such outstanding Britons as Sir Eric Roll, deputy chairman of the merchant banking house of Warburg, and chairman of NEDC's new committee on finance for investment—attracted virtually no comment in the Press...

If these affairs are not the occasion for behind the scenes plotting to advance such causes as World Government, why did not the Chancellor of the Exchequer make this clear (when questioned by an MP) ?

... A people continually exhorted to make sacrifices in the national interest has a right to know how that national interest is being cared for in international discussions while there is still time for it to do something about it. (End of quotations, all emphasis was added.)

Final note: This year the Bilderbergers are scheduled to meet at the Homestead Hotel in Hot springs, Virginia, the last week of April. President Ford, Vice President Rockefeller and Secretary of State Kissinger all have attended some previous meetings. In view of the current scandal, will they attend this year? And will Prince Bernhard be there to chair the discussions? We have a right to know.

THE CONGRESSIONAL COP-OUT

APPOINTEES FILL THE VACUUM

"By virtue of the authority vested in me by (.....), (.....), and as President of the United States of America...it is hereby ordered:..."

So begin most of the thousands of Executive Orders that create new agencies, councils, commissions, authorities, administrations, corporations, or other bodies of appointees. These appointed bureaucrats then proceed to issue rules and regulations with which they investigate and straightjacket the lives of American citizens from womb to tomb. And we must accept their dictates and ultimatums as though they were law, because the United States Congress has deputized them to run the country, has financed them and given them broad powers to "do as they will" within the particular area of their delegated authority.

A pertinent example came up this week: The President-by-Appointment issued an Executive Order which purported to reorganize the United States "Intelligence Community." In doing so, he created a new three-man "Oversight Board"—appointees all and responsible not to elected representatives of the people, but to the President only. The Executive Order also created a new "Committee on Foreign Intelligence" headed by George Bush—an appointee—and staffed by appointees. This new committee, as well as the new "Operations Advisory Group" that replaces the old "40 Committee," also is responsible solely to the President of the United States. In his televised press conference Tuesday night (Feb. 17) President Ford was reminded by one of the correspondents present that the House Intelligence Committee had investigated and found that the "paramilitary operations of the worst type seemed to come from outside the CIA" and were ordered by previous Presidents or by Henry Kissinger. So, asked the correspondent, where was the guarantee that future Presidents or Secretaries of State might not order assassinations of foreign leaders, or inspire revolutions in foreign countries, if Congress had no scrutiny or veto of covert activities by the Intelligence Community? To which Ford replied that he could be trusted and he trusted that the people could be trusted to continue to elect presidents that could be trusted (what was it that former President Thomas Jefferson said about placing trust in men?)

Ford was very definite about this one thing: Congress would have no veto power over the intelligence community's covert operations. He would welcome a Joint Congressional Oversight Committee, but it would have only advisory powers.

In the beginning of our grand experiment with a new form of government which was a Republic if we could keep it, things were different. Our founders started with the Biblical premise that there were certain unalienable rights which were given by God; that to secure these rights, governments were instituted among men. So, to institute and, hopefully to perpetuate, such a government, a Constitution was written and ratified. And the very first section of the very First Article of that Constitution says that "all legislative powers granted to the Federal government shall be vested in a Congress of the United States which shall consist of a Senate and a House of Representatives."

Two things should be noted. First, all legislative power was not granted to the Federal government, only certain enumerated powers were granted, the rest being reserved to the States and the people. Secondly, the legislative powers that were granted, were granted to the Congress; not to the President, and not to the Judges.

However, in current practice, this exclusive power of Congress to do all necessary legislating has collapsed completely. Most of our Federal laws are now being made in the form of Executive Orders or as rules and regulations dreamed up by hundreds of overlapping bureaucracies.

The general procedure: Congress decides to delegate some of its vested powers and its Constitutionally assigned responsibilities to some other branch of government. So it creates a new Executive Bureau and appropriates tax money for its support, lays down some general rules for its operation, and then gives it the power to make its own laws! These are generally called administrative laws, and are usually published in the Federal Register.

As an example of how an Executive Order becomes the "Law of the Land" in violation of the Constitutional command that all legislative powers shall be vested in Congress, we publish Executive Order 11892, which enlarges the "lawmaking" power of the Regional Governance system:

(Following is the text of Executive Order # 11892, which expands the purview and power of the Regional Governance system. Reprinted from the Federal Register, Vol. 41, No. 2, Monday, January 5, 1976.)

THE PRESIDENT

Executive Order 11892 December 31, 1975

Amending Executive Order No. 11647 Relating to Federal Regional Councils

By virtue of the authority vested in me by the Constitution and statutes of the United States of America, and as President of the United States of America, in order to include the Department of Commerce and the Federal Energy Administration in the Regional Council System and thus expand interagency cooperation and improve the coordination of services to the States, consistent with Section 401 (d) of the Intergovernmental Cooperation Act of 1968 (82 Stat. 1103, 42 U.S.C. 4231 (d)), it is hereby ordered as follows:

Section 1. Subsection (a) of Section 1 of Executive Order 11647 of February 10, 1972, as amended by Executive Order No. 11731 of July 23, 1973, is amended to read as follows:

"(a) There is hereby continued a Federal Regional Council for each of the ten standard Federal regions. The President shall designate one member of each Council as Chairman. Representatives of the Office of Management and Budget may participate in any deliberations of each Council. Each Council shall be composed of the principal regional officials of the following departments and agencies:

- (1) The Department of the Interior.
- (2) The Department of Agriculture.
- (3) The Department of Commerce.
- (4) The Department of Labor.
- (5) The Department of Health, Education, and Welfare.
- (6) The Department of Housing and Urban Development.
- (7) The Department of Transportation.
- (8) The Community Services Administration.
- (9) The Environmental Protection Agency.
- (10) The Federal Energy Administration.
- (11) The Law Enforcement Assistance Administration."

Sec. 2. Section 3 of Executive Order No. 11647 of February 10, 1972, as amended by Executive Order No. 11731 of July 23, 1973, is amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 3. Under Secretaries Group for Regional Operations. (a) The Under Secretaries Group for Regional Operations is hereby continued and shall be composed of the following:

- (1) The Under Secretary of the Interior.
- (2) The Under Secretary of Agriculture.
- (3) The Under Secretary of Commerce.
- (4) The Under Secretary of Labor.
- (5) The Under Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare.
- (6) The Under Secretary of Housing and Urban Development.
- (7) The Deputy Secretary of Transportation.
- (8) The Deputy Director of the Community Services Administration.
- (9) The Deputy Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency.
- (10) The Deputy Administrator of the Federal Energy Administration.
- (11) The Administrator of the Law Enforcement Assistance Administration.
- (12) An Associate Director of the Domestic Council.
- (13) The Deputy Director of the Office of Management and Budget, who shall be Chairman.

"(b) When the Chairman determines that matters which significantly affect the interests of a Federal agency not represented on the Group are to be considered by the Group, he shall invite an appropriate representative of the agency involved to participate in the deliberations of the Group.

"(c) The Under Secretaries Group for Regional Operations shall, consistent with the objectives and priorities established by the President and the Domestic Council, establish policy with respect to Federal Regional Council matters provide guidance to the Council, respond to their initiatives, and seek to resolve policy issues referred to it by the Councils. The Under Secretaries Group, under the Chairmanship of the Deputy Director of the Office of Management and Budget, shall be responsible for the proper functioning of the system established by this order."

(signed) Gerald R. Ford

The White House,

December 31, 1975.

(FR Doc. 76-295 Filed 1/2/76; 10:54 am)

Our subject is "Congressional Cop-outs," the unconstitutional delegation of the law-making power by the Congress to some other agency or bureau. And the worst example—prior to the creation of HEW and Regional Governance—was the establishment of the Federal Reserve System. Thus was the Congressional power to "coin money, regulate the value thereof, and of foreign coin" delegated to a private agency. And there are many sincere patriots who insist that this was the beginning of the woes that have all but destroyed us.

Briefly: The Federal Reserve System, the central banking system of the United States which was authored and installed by an International Banker who came here from Germany for that specific purpose, was established December 23, 1913 by an Act of Congress. Its purported purpose: to give the country an elastic currency, to provide facilities for discounting commercial paper, and to improve the supervision of banking in the United States. The system consists of 1) a Board of Governors, 2) the Federal Open Market Committee, 3) Twelve Federal Reserve Banks and twenty-four branches, 4) the member banks, and 5) the Federal Advisory Council.

The seven members of the Board of Governors in Washington are appointed by the President with the advice and consent of Congress. And this, for all practical and effectual purpose, ends any Federal governmental control over the System. The Board of Governors, headed currently by Arthur Burns, has the authority to approve changes in discount rates, to change member bank reserve requirements, to set margin requirements for certain kinds of stock transactions, and to set maximum interest rates payable on member banks' savings and time deposits. They also supervise member banks and bank holding companies.

The Federal Open Market Committee is composed of the Board of Governors and five other FRS representatives. They control the purchase and sale of government securities and deal in international currency as well.

The Federal Reserve System "has created inflation and recession at the same time. Very few Americans realize that the elected Congress and the President have no control over this Political Pyramid. They could change the law, but only a few would have the courage to try, and probably none could stand the trouble that would be heaped upon them. We must remember that the Federal Reserve is a privately held bank; they deal in international currency, and considerable control is wielded by international bankers. They have investments in industry of all kinds... The Federal Reserve thrives on the debt of the Federal Government. The way they make money is by loaning it out.

They have the power to make war or recession and have complete control over the American economy. They are immune to outside audit—6% income with no taxation. ...Whoever controls the money controls the laws, and from this system and through it our Invisible Dictator controls America." (Quotation from the booklet "America's Invisible Dictator," by Loren Cook, Trust Publications, Inc., 2029 N.W. 2nd Ave., Boca Raton, Florida 33432. Paperback, 89 pages, $2.50.)

The preceding sets a necessary background to the following remarks by Rep. Patman (D-TX) in the House of Representatives on February 14, 1976:

* * * * *

THE FEDERAL RESERVE SYSTEM AND THE BUSINESS ROUNDTABLE

Mr. Speaker, for some time, I have been curious about the intense interest of the Business Roundtable in the affairs of the Federal Reserve System. Now the reasons are becoming clear why there have been so many telegrams and telephone calls to help the Federal Reserve block an audit by the General Accounting Office. My research indicates that—in many instances—the Business Roundtable and the Federal Reserve are one and the same—honeycombed with interlocking personnel.... In fact, five of the nine directors of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York—the most influential in the system—have direct or indirect ties with the Business Roundtable. This pressure group has managed to put officers and directors of its member corporations all through the System. These are not small businesses I am talking about, but the biggest of the big.

Take a look at the bank in New York—those five directors are from:

Chase Manhattan, with almost $34 billion in deposits as of December 13, 1975;

J. C. Penney, with annual sales of $6,200,000,000;

Texaco, annual sales of $23,255,000,000;

Union Carbide Corp., with annual sales of $5,320,000,000;

Kennicott Copper, with annual sales of $1,664,000,000;

All member companies of the Business Roundtable. . . .

In that all-important Federal Reserve Bank of New York resides the portfolio of Government bonds—about $93 billion worth—from which the Federal Reserve System—not the Treasury—draws interest of about $6 billion annually. This portfolio of bonds is managed by the Federal Open Market Committee in the New York Federal Reserve Bank. Using a select list of securities dealers, the Federal Open Market Committee buys and sells bonds in the open market. These transactions involve billions of dollars a year. And sharing in that lucrative business—part of that select list of bond dealers—are the names of Chase Manhattan Bank, almost $34 billion in deposits; Bank of America, $57 billion in deposits; and the First National City Bank, $45 billion in deposits—member corporations of the Business Roundtable.

One day these bond dealers buy and sell Government securities for the Federal Reserve. The next day they are out lobbying with the Business Roundtable to protect themselves and the rest of the Federal Reserve from an audit. . . .

The big decisions—the really crucial decisions—are made in a high-level committee which goes under the name of the Business Roundtable Policy Committee. This is where the fattest of the fat cats start the influence ball rolling. And of course, the Federal Reserve influence is right there on the Policy Committee: 11 of the 40 members of that committee have ties with the Federal Reserve. These ties involve links between the Federal Reserve System and Federated Department Stores, Chase Manhattan Bank, Union Carbide, Kennecott Copper, Westinghouse Electric, IBM, Sears Roebuch, Exxon, A.T.&T., Alcoa, and Bank of America.

Mr. Speaker, the link between the Federal Reserve and the Business Roundtable is complete—it encompasses all areas. . . .

(End of extended quotation.)

And, after checking Rep. Patman's list of Business Roundtable members who are also members of the twelve Federal Reserve Banks and their 24 branch banks, we can add that the link between the Federal Reserve, the Business Roundtable, the Council on Foreign Relations, and the American members of the Bilderberger Group, the Tri-lateral Commission, and the International Round Table is also complete.

Now this warning: The citizens of these United States are "all hot and bothered" about who is going to be the next President. insofar as the future of this Nation is concerned, it makes little or no difference who wins the presidential sweepstakes, with this one exception: If Nelson Rockefeller should happen to win, he would take it as a mandate from the people to complete his plan for World Federalism at the fastest possible pace. Any other electee in the White House and the pace would be slower.

What is important—and what is being ignored by the majority of the people—is the membership of the next, the 95th Congress; and the personnel making up State Legislatures. At the political level we have one hope: To send representatives to the National and State Congresses who will start recovering the vested and delegated powers that previous Congresses have relinquished to the Presidents, to the FRS, IRS, OSHA, EPA, HEW, Domestic and Regional Councils, and about a thousand other agencies that use our money to enslave us.

It may seem a forlorn hope, but, to paraphrase Dean Manion: If our Bicentennial is to be a bright beginning rather than a bitter and final end of American freedom, our Congressmen must quit their exhibitionist antics and start reading and understanding the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution they have sworn to defend.

DON BELL REPORTS Weekly, accenting the Christian American point of view. Two copies of each issue are mailed, first class postage, to all subscribers, except overseas airmail to foreign countries where postage limits to one copy. $24 per year; extra copies: 10¢ each, mailed third class unless extra is sent for first class postage.

DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

THE MANIFOLD FACES OF FEDERALISM

MADISON WOULD THINK WE'D ALL GONE MAD

When Gerald Ford called Ronald Reagan an extremist some people might have thought of that old aphorism about the pot describing the color of the kettle. It brought to this reporter's memory a squib published back in 1964 by Leonard Read of the Foundation for Economic Education, Inc.:

THE MAKING OF AN EXTREMIST

1900

PAT: Government should be limited to keeping the peace.

MIKE: You are absolutely right, Pat.

1925

PAT: Government should be limited to keeping the peace.

MIKE: You are right, Pat, but - 1950

PAT: Government should be limited to keeping the peace.

MIKE: You are right, Pat, but, but-but, but, but-but, but - 1964

PAT: Government should be limited to keeping the peace.

MIKE (aside): Don't pay any attention to Pat, folks; he's becoming an extremist!

There once was a time when political terms and labels had precise meanings and could be defined accurately and intelligently. As a pertinent example: A Republic and a Democracy were considered to be poles apart in their basic ideologies. For that reason the Founding Fathers took great pains when they wrote the Constitution, to prevent our country from ever becoming a Democracy. All we had to do to keep our Republic was to adhere to the Constitution. We didn't. So that now, liberals—another label that has lost its original meaning—like to refer to our country as “a democracy within a republic” (a contradiction in terms that would make the writers of The Federalist Papers shudder).

Even so, neither a Republic nor a Democracy could ever have been called a totalitarian form of government. Yet, the USSR is a collection of soviet socialist “republics” and their Communist Dictators like to refer to theirs as a “democratic” form of government. Likewise the Chinese Communists, who call their country a “People’s Republic” and keep telling their enslaved subjects that theirs is the only true democracy in all the world.

Here in the United States, the Republican and the Democratic political parties once adhered to specific and different ideologies, stood for different policies on different platforms, and thus gave the voters a choice. Now, however, if a socialist program were desired by the voters, the perfect teammates would be Hubert Humphrey who calls himself a Democrat, and Jacob Javits who is supposed to be a Republican.

As for the Republican candidates for the Presidency, their theme song is the same: “Federalism,” but they each sing different lyrics.

There is the man from California, Ronald Reagan, who calls his program Creative Federalism. Then there is the appointed incumbent, Gerald Ford, who inherited the program called The New Federalism which was initiated by the man who made it possible for him to become President, Richard Nixon. And there is the third, the unannounced candidate who is working overtime and spending feverishly in an attempt to bring about a dead-heat standoff between Reagan and Ford so he'll have an opportunity to slip into the winner's circle at the Kansas City Convention, as a dark horse. We're speaking, of course, of Nelson Aldrich Rockefeller, the man who really started all the propaganda about Federalism, and who calls his variety The Federal Idea, which he frankly admits is the basis of his Free World Order!

They are all sung to the same tune but the lyrics are different. Briefly:

Reagan's Creative Federalism is based on the premise that the Federal government's Regional Government program should be handled through the States, rather than the Regional Councils. He is not an opponent of the Regional Governance system; he is merely proposing that the States themselves be regionalized, regional councils replacing county and city governments, and they in turn taking their orders from the State Capitol. Thus, the billions of dollars collected by the Federal government to run the Regional Governance System would, instead, be collected by State agencies, and disbursed through the States acting as administrative departments of the Federal government. And there would be no billions of dollars saved; the burden would simply be shifted from the Federal to State governments.

Perhaps the best way to explain the phoniness of Reagan's Creative Federalism is to quote from a record of Reagan's activities while Governor of California, which was compiled by United Republicans of California, a group which opposes Reagan's nomination. This report shows that:

As a candidate Reagan proclaimed: "Government is best when it is closest to the people. Upon becoming Governor he called for the rearranging and merging of cities and counties saying: "California shouldn't be saddled with a horse and buggy system of local government." Upon replacing Nelson Rockefeller as a member of the National Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations (ACIR), Reagan's name appeared on a commission brochure urging consolidation or dissolving local units through comprehensive development of national urbanization planning policy, with the States' policy complementing the national policy, and with State authority over all zoning, building codes, licensing and funding of elementary and secondary education. In 1973 Reagan appointed the California Council on Intergovernmental Relations to hold hearings on reform of local governmental structure along lines suggested by ACIR.

Upon first learning that Reagan might run for President or Vice President, the United Republicans of California (UROC) passed the following resolution (May 4, 1975):

Whereas Ronald Reagan has made eloquent conservative speeches while his deeds have served the liberals;

Whereas despite Reagan's claim of conservatism since 1950, the left dominated his politics prior to 1960;

Whereas during his 1966 gubernatorial race,

Reagan selected liberal Rockefeller men to run his campaign, and upon election his appointments continued in the same pattern, excluding conservatives;

Whereas Reagan supported Nixon and his leftist policies, and praised Kissinger, but betrayed conservative candidates;

Whereas Reagan promised economy but doubled the State Budget and raised taxes;

Whereas Reagan actively promoted regional government, contrary to his expressed philosophy of local control;

Whereas under Reagan liberal educational programs accelerated, and PPBS, a budgetary process of political change was established, moving public schools toward total State control; and

Whereas Reagan also betrayed conservative principles in the areas of property rights, income tax withholding, gun control, medicine, mental health, welfare reform, crime control, etc.;

Now Therefore Be It Resolved that UROC opposes Ronald Reagan as candidate for President or Vice President and urges Americans nationwide to carefully scrutinize his record.

(end of quoted resolution)

The New Federalism being promoted by Pre-

THE MYSTERIOUS METAMORPHOSIS OF MR. RICHARD MILHOUS NIXON

Speculation is rife regarding the sudden and spectacular emergence from political and social ostracism, and the honor and glory being accorded Citizen Nixon by the rulers of the Peoples Republic of China. A slap at Ford? A violation of national security law? What are the political overtones?

We have it on good authority that Mr. Nixon is merely following in the footsteps of Spiro Agnew, who also left public office in apparent disgrace, only to emerge later as a very important Ambassador-at-large, representing Multinational Interests at Mideastern Capitols. Mr. Nixon's services to certain industrialists, bankers and other VIPs while in the White House, coupled with his act of opening the door to trade with Red China, make him an important go-between in places where Watergate is little more than the name of a building.

Having established a certain sovereign status, the Multinational Empires are now setting up their own Diplomatic Corps. Ex-Presidents and Vice Presidents are well equipped for such positions of power.

sident Ford differs only in form from the creative federalism promoted by Reagan. In fact, while criticizing Reagan as an extremist, Mr. Ford has adopted many of the very same programs that Ronald Reagan had installed at the State level while Governor of California. Example: When Ford grew tired of waiting for Congressional action and issued an Executive Order reforming the Food Stamp program, Ford's reform turned out to be an almost exact copy of the food stamp reform Reagan had initiated while in Sacramento.

As a Congressman, Ford was not conversant with the New Federalism (Regional Governance) that had been installed by Richard Nixon. So, as soon as Nelson Rockefeller was confirmed by the Senate as Vice President, Ford hastened to turn the Domestic Council over to Rockefeller's management. Rockefeller was the very author of Regional Governance, and knew exactly how to perfect and expand the system. Later, Rockefeller gave up the post, along with all other posts that might make him appear to be a teammate of Gerald Ford in November. But Rockefeller adherents still run the Domestic Council, ACIR, and other components of the New Federalism system.

Nevertheless, Ford is now conversant with the Regional Governance system authored by Rockefeller's brain trust and installed by Richard Nixon. And Ford knows that the New Federalism depends upon the Revenue Sharing program for its very existence. The tax monies that are taken from communities and then returned to them (in part) as shared revenue, is the "bribe money" that causes local politicians to cooperate with the ten Federal Regional Councils and to set up sub-regional councils and commissions at inter-State and inter-County levels, thus aiding and abetting the liquidation of State, County and Community Governments.

So, when President Ford appeared before the National Governors Conference on Feb. 23, 1976, he explained that "the whole concept of balanced federal-state relations (that is, the Regional Governance system) is at stake," and, "I ask you today to join me in moving the mountain which we know as Capitol Hill." He was pleading for an extension of the general revenue sharing program, which must be approved by Congress this year; otherwise it expires for lack of funds.

Ford's defense of the New Federalism is the same that we hear so often: State and local governments can't survive on their own, they must have the helping hand of Big Brother in Washington if they are to live and grow. Ford's way of saying this: "I will never irresponsibly transfer serious problems from the federal government to state governments without regard for human needs and fiscal realities. I am determined to preserve a constructive partnership with the states on all mutual concerns through cooperation..."

While Ford was asking for an additional two billion dollars for the New Federalism program Nelson Rockefeller was busy stumping for much more: he wants all welfare programs taken out of the hands of the States and transferred, in toto, to the ten Federal Regional Councils. Speaking before this same Governors Conference on the day after Ford had made his pitch, Rockefeller outlined a five-point program: 1) shift the entire cost of welfare to the Federal government; 2) install the negative income tax scheme; 3) 210 separate categories of Federal aid should be consolidated into seven

RADIATION USED AS COLD WAR WEAPON?

Sen. Robert C. Byrd in the U.S. Senate on Feb. 17, 1976: "Mr. President, in light of the recent information that the U.S. Embassy is being subjected to high levels of radiation from Soviet bugging devices, I urge that immediate diplomatic action be taken to halt plans underway permitting the Soviets to open a new embassy in Washington, unless the radiation bombardment on our Embassy in Moscow ceases. Unless this radiation ceases, the health and welfare of hundreds of American officials and their families are in danger. Under the cloak of detente, the Soviets are placing American lives in jeopardy with their nefarious spying techniques. Any nation which willingly subjects American officials and their families to the threat of possibly virulent radiation exposure does (not) deserve special consideration under the loosely defined terms of detente..."

At publication time, at least two cases of cancer had been reported, the U.S. Ambassador was suffering from a rare type of amnesia, other Embassy officials were reported suffering from varying degrees of radiation poisoning, due to the microwave detection devices being used by the Soviets to bug the U.S. Embassy. Our State Department refused to comment, but a medical expert was being flown to Moscow to investigate.

“block grants” totalling some $36 billion the first year; 4) more money for new programs; 5) the allocations be made on a permanent basis rather than being revoted by the Congress every five years.

So:—While Ronald Reagan was talking about Creative Federalism, and Gerald Ford was promoting The New Federalism, Nelson Rockefeller is free to develop his Federal Idea which involves not merely regionalized governance at the National Level, but as the basis for a New World Order.

Rockefeller outlined his plan thirteen years ago, in February, 1962 when he gave three Godkin Lectures at Harvard University on the subject, The Future of Federalism. His lectures were reprinted in the magazine “Freedom & Union,” edited by Clarence Streit of “Union Now” and Atlantic Union prominence. We quote from pages 6 and 7 of “Freedom & Union,” May, 1962, this being a direct quote from Nelson Rockefeller’s third Godkin Lecture:

* * * * *

How does the federal idea evolve and apply in the future immediately before us? . . . All the problems we face have this in common: we can solve not one of them in isolation. . . . I have long felt that the road toward the unity of free nations lay through regional confederations—in the Western Hemisphere and in the Atlantic community, perhaps eventually in Africa, the Middle East and Asia.

Such work toward regional unities is, in fact, steadily progressing. The Common Market in Europe is an outstanding example. Such developments are hopeful and may prove historic. But events in the world are moving with such swiftness—and the danger to the free world is so great—that I increasingly believe that our advances toward unity must extend to action between regions as well as within them.

Regional Concept Not Enough

I was wholeheartedly committed to the battle at the San Francisco Conference for inclusion of Article 51 in the U.N. Charter to permit regional arrangements within the U.N. framework. And I certainly do not now abandon my belief in the value and importance of regional arrangements among free nations. But I have come to the conviction that events are driving us rapidly beyond even the limits of regional concepts. . . .

I hope and urge:

First: That we develop an understanding at home of the nature and character of the problems that we and the other free nations face—and the significance of the federal idea as a practical framework within which they can be solved.

Second: That leaders throughout the free world work to develop a consensus of purpose and bring forth positive suggestions and recommendations for practical application of the federal idea to the problems which we all face.

Third: That informal, intergovernmental consultations by the political leaders of free nations be undertaken to define agreed objectives and develop means to achieve them through application of the federal idea.

Fourth: That these consultations be supplemented by regional, and functional conferences to attack specific problems and launch explicit programs.

Out of this, I would venture to prophesy that—sooner perhaps than we may realize and despite the enormity of the apparent difficulties—there will evolve the bases for a federal structure of the free world.

(Note: Emphasis was added by us—Ed.)

* * * * *

The foregoing federal idea was voiced by Nelson Rockefeller in 1962; before Rockefeller agents Kissinger and Nixon gave favored nation treatment to Soviet Russia, and arranged a new “Open Door Policy” with Communist China. Now, the Rockefeller federal idea and the evolving Free World Order would include Russia and the Soviet Constellation of satellites, as well as Communist China and enslaved countries. So that, while there may have been some doubt in 1962, now it is certain that the Rockefellers’ evolving Free World Order includes enslaved as well as free nations.

To paraphrase one of the Warburg brothers: We shall have World Government whether we want it or not. The only question: whether by the National Democratic Party or by the National Republican Party. There is but one political alternative: a new party with new leaders who stand for Independence, not Interdependence.

DON BELL REPORTS Weekly. $24 per year. Extra copies: 10¢ each. Please send extra if 1st class postage is desired. Address orders:
DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

THE MAD SCRAMBLE TO RAM BAD LEGISLATION THROUGH CONGRESS

THEY FAILED WITH THE GUN LAW

There's an old saying about how, when the cat's away, the mice (or rats) will play. In a similar sense there are times when all the hopeful political candidates are away from Washington on electioneering crusades, and all the voters' eyes are turned toward and their ears tuned in on campaigners who are making promises that can never be kept, and nobody is paying much attention to who is running the store. At such times there are always eager-beaver incumbent lawmakers remaining in Washington who scamper out to take advantage of Congressional absenteeism and public distractions, and try to push through Congress dangerous and undesirable legislation.

One especially distressing example comes to mind: A few days before Christmas in the year of our Lord 1913, when most Congressmen were thinking of going home for the holidays and their constituents were thinking of gifts for loved ones, the Glass-Owen Bill was passed. Late in the evening of December 23 it was approved by the Senate by a vote of 43 to 23, with 27 Senators absent or abstaining. Less than an hour after the Senate had passed it, the President, Woodrow Wilson, signed the bill into law. Thus did the citizens of the United States receive from their Central Government a Yuletide gift: the Federal Reserve System!

In this, our Nation's Bicentenary, which also happens to be a National Election year, similar coups are being attempted. Certain Congressmen, remaining in Washington, are taking advantage of Congressional absenteeism and electioneering distractions and are trying to ramrod through Congress legislation that has already been defeated in previous Congresses or has been resoundingly denounced by the people—or both.

The first such attempt was a near miss. The backers of anti-gun legislation succeeded in getting the bill out of a subcommittee, and it seemed almost certain that the House Judiciary Committee would approve the bill and send it on to the Ways and Means Committee to be scheduled for full House action.

But the word got out and the National Rifle Association and the Citizens Committee for the Right to Keep and Bear Arms alerted their members to what was being planned; the members and other concerned citizens flooded the Congressmen with protests and, as a result, the bill was sent back to the subcommittee by the House Judiciary Committee. But the vote against the bill was 17 to 16.

"This will kill the bill for this year," said Rep. Robert Drinan (D-Mass.), one of its backers. But, there'll be other years and other bills, and the anti-gun crowd won't rest until they have succeeded in nullifying the Second Amendment to the Constitution—or until their comrades have succeeded in replacing the Constitution itself.

The second attempt to take advantage of the current condition of Congress, has to do with House Joint Resolution 606, the passage of which would provide the key to the "New World Order."

THEY MAY SUCCEED WITH HJR 606

House Joint Resolution 606 calls for the creation of an Atlantic Convention which would lay the groundwork for a Federation of North Atlantic Nations; a Regional World Government which would form one segment of an eventual World Government.

This is an extremely serious, and urgent, matter. Here was the situation at the time of our going to press:

HJR 606 was reported out of the House International Relations Committee on Feb. 24, 1976, following approval by voice vote (unrecorded) with only a handful of members in opposition. The Committee has a membership of 40 Representatives, and we have been informed that Lester Wolff of New York and Edward Derwinski of Illinois spoke against the Resolution. But there was only 20 minutes of debate before the vote was taken. The schedule was for HJR 606 to go to the Rules Committee this first week of March. Prompt approval was anticipated, and the advocates of Atlantic Union expect the Resolution to reach the floor of the House the following week; that is, between March 8th and 12th, where, unless deterred by an overwhelming adverse public reaction (as in the case of the anti-gun bill), approval is said to be a virtual certainty.

If further information is needed concerning HJR 606 and its Congressional sponsors, refer to our Don Bell Reports of August 8, 1975, which gives, among other pieces of vital information, the complete list of Congressional sponsors of HJR 606 (there were 111 of them at that time). But don't write or send wires to them; they are dedicated one-worlders and you won't sway them). Send your protests to Representatives who will listen, and learn.

AND ONCE AGAIN, THE CHILD AND FAMILY SERVICES ACT

HR 2966 and S 626 are twin bills, almost identical twins, sharing the name, The Child and Family Services Act. In the words of its opponents the Act would bring to the United States "comprehensive child development, the Soviet-style system of communal child rearing" which would destroy family ties and make children wards of the State. A similar bill had passed both the House and the Senate in 1971 but had then been vetoed by President Nixon. It seemed to its backers that if this new bill were allowed to proceed in the normal manner through the legislative processes, it too would suffer a similar fate: it would never become a law; and the socialist planners desperately needed for it to become law. So, some master strategy must be developed which would help to secure its safe passage through the required channels of law-making.

The master strategy adopted by the backers of this newer Child and Family Services Act seems to have involved two types of propaganda. First, some editors or columnists who are generally regarded as conservatives should be persuaded to write articles about the Child and Family Services Act which would assure their readers that the Act was not at all dangerous and, even if it were, it has no chance of passage in an election year. This would serve to reassure doubters and also lull opponents into discarding reaction in favor of inaction.

And secondly, backers of the bill should, themselves, arrange for a spurious attack on the bill; an attack filled with untruths and half-truths. Then backers like Senator Birch Bayh could bemoan the "Dishonest Campaign Against the Child and Family Services Act." This would be designed to gain sympathy and support for the bill. Senator Bayh used this very tactic in the Senate on February 19, when he said: "There is a vicious and totally inaccurate propaganda campaign currently being waged against this bill in my home State of Indiana. Allegations have been raised that the child care bill would give a child the right to sue his parents if they required him to attend Sunday school. It has also been alleged that the bill would provide children with a legal right to organize in a labor union against their parents. Worst of all is the contention that this legislation would force parents to turn over their children to government-run centers—virtually making their children wards of the State.... These allegations are totally false...."

Senator Bayh is right in saying such allegations are false; but they are not all totally false, as we shall see later in this report.

But, back to the first phase of that master strategy which was developed to promote the controversial Child Care bill: that of getting conservative writers to endorse the bill, or at least to pooh-pooh the alleged dangers inherent in the bill. In the case of James J. Kilpatrick, the strategy backfired: he wrote about the bill, but he criticized it instead of praising it, pointing out that it would, among other things, "weaken the family ties."

However, Sen. Mondale and Rep. Brademas, sponsors of S626 and HR2966 respectively, apparently had much better luck with Howard Flieger, editor of the prestigious and supposedly conservative U.S. News & World Report. If we are to judge by what he wrote, Editor Flieger fell right into the trap laid by the two who call themselves Progressive Democrats. Flieger authored an editorial that was published in the March 1, 1976 issue of the newsmagazine, an editorial that was quite obviously designed to convert patriotic reaction into submissive inaction. Under the title "False Alarm" Editor Flieger wrote:

"Every now and then a reader writes us in words of terror that a Marxist plot is afoot in Congress to 'nationalize' our children—take them away from the protection or control of their parents and destroy the American home, utterly and forever."

After more of the same, Flieger then tells his readers that "...there isn't a word of truth in it," and that "no such legislation is before this Congress, or ever has been."

Flieger concludes: "So why all the excitement? It is puzzling to Senator Mondale, one of the chief sponsors, who says the measure 'is being subjected to one of the most distorted and dishonest attacks I have witnessed in my 15 years of public service.'

"There is another practical thing to keep in mind about The Child and Family Service Act. It would cost a lot of money. Estimates are that an initial annual expense of 150 million dollars would grow to almost 2 billion by the third year of operation. This present Congress is in no mood to add such a burden on taxpayers who already are making angry noises about waste and the high cost of Government. Since this is election year, the measure probably has less chance now than a year ago, when it was introduced — and that means practically none. Also remember the President is demanding that Congress do more to hold the line on spending. It is a keystone of his campaign to be against this bill, and any like it.

"So everybody can stand at ease. The bill doesn't provide all those wild things the letter-writers fear. It has no realistic chance of adoption. And even should it overcome its rating as one of the longest shots in history and somehow be enacted by Congress, it would be vetoed almost the minute it reached the White House.

"The furore is a false alarm. Forget it."
(end of editorial)

All the foregoing sounds plausible enough. But a strange thing happened: As this disarming editorial hit the news-stands and thereafter, there arose in Congress a general and unusual discussion of The Child and Family Services Act of 1975; a bill that was supposedly dead for this session of the Congress. And, while it is true that President Ford would undoubtedly veto the bill, in these changing times who is to say how long the present President will remain, and just what action the next President would take on such a bill, and on similar socialist measures such as guaranteed incomes and nationalized medical care? And to say that this Congress would balk at a bill because it would cost a lot of money, is to be naive or ignorant or both. The President and the Congress both talk about economy, but are hardly fitting action to their words.

There is one hopeful note: While many Senators and Representatives are trying to take advantage of Congressional absenteeism and election campaign distractions in order to get unpopular or dangerous legislation enacted, there are a few legislators remaining in Washington who are acting as watchmen and who are trying to prevent the passage of such legislation.

Such a watchman is Rep. Philip M. Crane of Illinois, who, in February 18, observed that "in recent weeks it has come to my attention that the Child and Family Services Act, which is being sponsored by Mr. Mondale and Mr. Brademas, has once again become the subject of some controversy. When the proposal to establish Federal day care centers was first made in 1971, it was ... vetoed by President Nixon. In his veto message, the President gave nine reasons for his opposition to the child development amendment. Among those reasons were the following:

Good public policy requires that we enhance rather than diminish both parental authority and parental involvement with children, particularly in those early decisive years.... For the Federal Government to plunge headlong financially into supporting child development would commit the most moral authority of the National Government to the side of communal approaches to child rearing over against the family-centered approach.

"Shortly after President Nixon made this statement, proponents of the idea of Federal institutional day care reacted by calling his view 'irresponsible, cruel, hysterical, and false,' but neglected to address the basic issue which was and still is at stake—whether such widespread encouragement of institutional day care for young children would in fact accelerate the break-up of American family life...."

Rep. Crane introduced a letter which had been written by Onalee McGraw, Coordinator of the National Coalition for Children, which refutes almost every point made by the sponsors of The Child and Family Services Act. We quote at length from that letter:

Senator Walter Mondale and Rep. John Brademas defend their bill on the grounds that it is not "family weakening" but designed to "strengthen and support" families by providing needed "services" on a voluntary basis. Despite this cosmetic language, what this bill basically does is create a new bureaucracy, the Office of Child and Family Services to set up a nationwide network of child development day care programs, including massive training programs for proliferating hordes of "child development" experts.

Our organization is an association of independent grass roots groups nationwide who are completely opposed to further taxpayer subsidy of social planners and bureaucrats who presume to know what is best for us. The thrust of the Child and Family Services bill is that (1) children exist for the convenience of the parents (2) the state will be in "partnership" with parents in the rearing of children and (3) institutionalized federally funded day care centers are preferable to family-centered care (in spite of statistics that show that most mothers who have to work prefer informal family-centered care to institutionalized day care for their preschoolers.)

Brademas and Mondale state that "parent control is guaranteed by requirements in the bill that every program will be selected, directed and governed by the parents whose children participate in it." Yet for the past decade the public has endured government by HEW administrative decree. Parents now know that statement of Congressional intent in the statute means very little in the face of HEW bureaucratic arrogance that produces administrative rulings that either negate the Congressional intent or "broadly interpret" it to mean something quite different. Two examples are HEW guidelines requiring busing for racial balance and the recent Title IX regulations in which Congressional intent to deny discrimination by sex was interpreted to require all schools funded by tax dollars in any way have to have co-educational physical education classes for all students from nursery school on up. The bill's sponsors are members of the Committees in Congress who are responsible for HEW conduct and policy and they know that their committees have never acted to correct these bureaucratic abuses of power. That the bill's sponsors would "guarantee" total parental control under the Child and Family Services bill, in view of what has occurred in the past, is a telling indication of their estimation of the intelligence of the American public.

(end of letter)

In a similar letter, written by Charles A. Moser, who is on the advisory board of the Emergency Committee for Children, a similar warning is voiced:

"The history of Federal programs should by now have taught us at least two things: that we should look, not so much at the stated intentions of a proposed program's sponsors, as at its likely effects in reality; and that any Federal program, once established, tends to mushroom in all directions. The opponents (as well as many proponents) of this legislation see it as merely a first step toward a scheme of universal early childhood education perhaps from age 3, a program which is openly advocated by certain teacher organizations.... Parents have discovered what a sham 'local control' of school systems is once Washington has provided funding for the local programs....

"The central philosophical question raised by the bill is: who ultimately controls a child's education? Senator Jacob Javits, one of its major sponsors, leaves us in no doubt as to his view on that score, for he has declared publicly that 'the child is the ward of the state.' That is a fair formulation of the opinion of most of the legislation's backers. Parents unhappy with the damage the public schools have already inflicted upon the family are discovering that providing an alternative education for them is no easy matter; state officials in Ohio, for example, have attempted to remove children from the custody of parents who insist upon providing them an education with a religious orientation in private schools....

"The argument is not over financing, or over administrative details, as Mondale and Brademas would have us believe, It is over whether we and our children shall have the right to live our own lives without dictation from Washington." (end of quotation)

SUMMATION: In this letter we have cited three examples of how certain legislators have taken advantage of absenteeism and of election-year distractions, and tried to pass undesirable, dangerous bills. Many other examples could be listed. These are crucial times, calling for extra vigilance. So, let us pay less heed to candidates' promises, and pay more attention to incumbents' actions.

DON BELL REPORTS Weekly. $24 per year.
Extra copies: 10¢ each. Address all orders:
DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

WHEN BIG BROTHER BECOMES CHAIRMAN OF THE BOARD

HUMPHREY AND JAVITS PROPOSE ANOTHER PUBLIC CORPORATION

Socialist Hubert Humphrey who calls himself a Democrat, and Zionist Jacob Javits who says he is a Republican, are never tight-fisted when it comes to finding new ways of spending taxpayers' money while at the same time promoting corporate socialism in the United States. Their latest scheme—with Senator Charles Mc. Mathias of Maryland joining them as a co-sponsor—is a bill to create a $100-billion National Technology Development Corporation, to be funded for the next twenty years with authority to guarantee loans of $5-billion yearly.

This new public corporation would “assist industrial and business development of energy, urban areas, transportation and environmental protection.” According to UPI: “Javits said the measure is designed to provide capital for breakthroughs in oil discovery techniques, the manufacture of solar heating and cooling equipment, safe fertilizers and pesticides, new engine concepts for urban and long-range travel and development of solid waste conversion facilities.”

In proposing the scheme on Tuesday, March 9, 1976, Javits explained that the bill would “provide for a single federal corporation which has the financial capability to provide investment capital where existing market resources are not available.” And the public corporation would differ from private corporations in that it would:

- * Invest in promising technologies even though they may be high risk and may not produce tangible economic results for several years.
- * Limit its investments to areas established by a technical advisory board as necessary for the public good and in need of increased utilization of development.
- * Provide the option of taking either a non-voting stock interest in the borrower or a traditional debt obligation depending on the risk involved and other factors.

This latest Humphrey-Javits collaboration is, of course, a corollary to the Balanced Growth and Economic Planning Act (S 1795) which they hope to get enacted this year. In regard to this latter measure, a recent issue of The Indianapolis Star carried the following editorial comment:

PLANNING

Planning has become an obsession with a great many of America's so-called and would-be political and intellectual leaders. The thrust is for centralized, nation-wide planning of economic activity, land use, manpower allocation, education, child and family development.

Plans for this sort of whole-hog planning have gone far beyond the preliminary stage. They are incorporated in various bills being pushed by powerful pressure groups in both houses of Congress. One such bill is the Balanced Growth and Economic Planning Act of 1975 (S 1795) which can be expected to be trotted out again, renamed the Act of 1976, by its sponsors, Senators Hubert Humphrey (Minn.) and Jacob Javits (N.Y.) If enacted, S 1795 would permit a governmental triumvirate to run the national economy. It would eventually abolish free enterprise.

The qualifications of the Federal government—or any government anywhere—for this sort of thing are not questionable. They are ~~definitely~~ negative. Everywhere the Federal government has meddled with the economy—railroads, airlines, housing, energy—it has made an awful mess. As for foreign planned economies, the oldest, that of the Soviet Union, is such a failure that the country must import food and technology from the U.S.A., whose economy although damaged has not yet been totally ruined by government intervention.

The background of S 1795 is revealing. One outfit pushing the bill is the Initiative Committee for National Economic Planning in which a guiding light is Wassily Leontif, who studied economics at the Soviet Union's Leningrad State University, and who thinks that planning plus commuters can solve U.S.

economic problems.

Javits and Leontif draw upon the Socialist ideas of Prof. Wesley C. Mitchell, an American theorist, who said in 1913:

“Civilized nations have not yet developed

=====

SEXUAL REVISIONISM IS RAMPANT IN CHURCHES

From the Richmond News Leader

One of the more ridiculous results of efforts to grant women equality is taking place in the churches, where translations from original Greek and Hebrew texts are being altered to remove references to men. It is another instance of foolish over-reaction in the churches' attempts to become 'relevant.' Some of them may become so 'relevant' that they cease to exist. In one hymnal, for example, the beautiful old hymn, "Faith of Our Fathers," has become "Faith in Our Heritage." Church publications are pushing the use of "sustainer," "redeemer," and "liberator" as substitutes for a masculine God. The use of the words "mankind," "fellowship," and "brotherhood" are frowned upon.

A particular example of bowdlerizing can be found in the draft of a proposed new Nicene Creed for Catholics. The Creed now is a moving pledge of faith: the new version would butcher both the grace and the rhythm of the Creed. Here "God" would become "Mother/Father." Christ would become the "Offspring"—not the Son—of God who will be "seated at the right hand of the Mother/Father."

This latest assault on the majesty of religious observances comes as but one more in a long list of revisionism. Many worshippers were outraged by the publication of the Revised Standard Version of the Bible in 1947, and the way since then has been generally downhill. In some churches, religious observances have been turned into sensitivity training sessions, while in the basements the young people have their wine-and-folk-music parties.

God as "Mother/Father"—the "Mother/Father of Our Parents," as the hymn goes? Perhaps, among those who are guilty of Taking Themselves Too Confounded Seriously. Meanwhile, church leaders should not be surprised if many of their flock depart in search of churches that worship the old-time religion. It meant more.

sufficient intelligence to make systematic plans for the sustenance of their populations; they continue to rely on the badly coordinated efforts of private initiative."

His concept is echoed in Javit's remark: "The government cannot continue to follow its present inconsistent course of limited intervention, in certain areas at certain times, but without a systematic approach ... We are not true to ourselves if we pretend that laissez-faire economics can operate in today's world."

That translates roughly into: "In economic planning the USA should go whole-hog."

What's wrong with this? In Reader's Digest, Economist Milton Friedman of the University of Chicago explained clearly and briefly what's wrong. When other people make plans for you, you lose your freedom."

(end of article)

In regard to this new bill that Javits and Humphrey are promoting, to create a $100-billion National Technology Development Corporation, Javits remarked that the corporation would provide funds "primarily to businesses outside the Fortune 500 list. Priority would be given to small and medium sized borrowers." In other words, the multi-national and the monopoly industrial corporations would not be affected by this new public corporation. This, we should point out, is precisely in line with the program for establishing Corporate Socialism as a replacement for Free Enterprise in the United States. Under this concept, the big multi- and monopoly corporations would be a part of the government, while any remaining industries or businesses would be operated by, or totally controlled by, the Federal government! Remember that the best definition of Socialism is: Government ownership or control of all means of production, distribution and use or consumption.

To destroy or totally control all small and less-than-monopolistic sized businesses, is the aim of the Corporate Socialist. And in this connection, some very interesting facts have been revealed in the Halls of Congress during the past few days. Where small businesses are concerned "regulation" and "control" are virtual synonyms. In a most informative presentation in the U.S. Senate on March 4, 1976, Senator Paul J. Fannin (Arizona) revealed some of the stratagems being used to "control" small business.

We quote at length from his presentation:

BIG BROTHER AND THE LITTLE BUSINESSMAN

I have heard it said that the Federal bureaucracy has grown so huge that the average American is being forgotten by the Government he has elected and paid taxes to. That may well be true, but the small independent businessman is certainly not a "forgotten man" in America today. Unfortunately, he is not being overlooked by Big Brother and our huge system of Government agencies. Instead, he finds that he is being besieged from all sides by Federal regulators... He finds increasingly that he cannot make ordinary, everyday business decisions without prior approval from Washington....

First, the American businessman is drowning in a sea of Federal paperwork. There is widespread public frustration over the growing tide of endless smallprint, multipage forms that must be studied, filled out and filed, raising the suspicion that Uncle Sam is really Big Brother who no longer trusts responsible citizens.... The Commission on Federal Paperwork has given us an idea of how serious the paperwork problem really is, and I quote some of the statistics:

Government agencies print about 10 billion sheets of paper a year to be completed by U.S. business—enough to fill more than 4 million cubic feet of space. Paperwork stemming from Federal, State and local governments averages to about 10 forms for every man, woman and child in the United States.

Each year, the U.S. public spends about $40 billion on paperwork. The Federal government spends about $15 billion to process paperwork. Small business spends about $18 billion completing paperwork.

Businesses with 50 employees or less complete approximately 75 to 80 types of forms.... A typical small business with gross income under $30,000 is required to file 53 tax forms....

Another serious problem faced by many small businessmen is the problem of compliance with conflicting regulations. There are many different kinds of agencies exercising control over business. Some agencies specialize by industry. For instance, the Federal Communications Commission regulates all aspects of radio and television broadcasting. Other Government agencies, like OSHA, regulate only one aspect of business activity, such as job safety, but its authority extends to many businesses. The Environmental Protection Agency, for example, deals with environmental impact only, but its regulations affect all industry. In addition, there is a proliferation of Government regulations, some of them contradictory and confusing. No one knows how many Federal regulations there really are. Just to list all the rules and regulations established last year required 45,000 pages of very small print in the Federal Register. Many of these rules, besides being complex and obscure, were written by Government lawyers in very legalistic and bureaucratic jargon which is difficult for the average layman to understand. It is not uncommon, therefore, for a small businessman, who is trying to comply with one regulation innocently runs afoul of another....

And finally, today's small businessman is caught up in what Dr. Murray L. Weidenbaum, the director of the Center for the Study of American Business at Washington University, has called the "second managerial revolution." The first revolution saw the rise of professional managers, as distinct from owners. But as Dr. Weidenbaum has observed:

"This new revolution is far more subtle. It involves the shift of decisionmaking from managers who represent the shareholders to a cadre of Government officials, Government inspectors, Government regulators."

The result of this development is that the Government increasingly substitutes its preferences and sovereignty for the judgment of the business entrepreneur. Regulations, rather than consumers, are determining the kinds of products and services that will be offered for sale. Government regulations are influencing the costs of such products and services, and consequently, their prices in the marketplace.

The economy is being influenced more by the whims of a faceless army of unelected, unresponsive bureaucrats than the profit-and-loss considerations and seasoned business judgment of the businessman....

Today, the average businessman in virtually every aspect of his operations must take into consideration the infinite variety of Government directives, rules, regulations, decisions, and advisory opinions that are issued by the thousands from Washington, not only by the traditional regulatory agencies—the ICC, FCC, FPC, FTC, SEC, FEA, EPA, et cetera—but also by the line departments and bureaus of Government—the Departments of Agriculture, Commerce, HEW, Interior, Justice, Labor, Transportation, and Treasury. Government in its regulatory function controls and influences manufacture, research, development, finance, personnel, marketing, facilities, and planning....

Obviously, the adverse effects of Government facilities, and planning....

(end of extended quotation from speech by Senator Paul Fannin, March 4, 1976)

Let us repeat that definition of Socialism: Government ownership or control of the means of production, distribution and consumption. And, under this form of corporate socialism which is being developed in the United States, control has been found to be the better way: Government really runs the business, but the actual owner and/or manager is retained because of his expertise and know-how. So long as that owner and/or manager plays according to the Government rules, of course. Let him get out of line and he either goes bankrupt or is gobbled up by a Conglomerate Corporation which has become a part of the Government in a Corporate Socialist State, even as the Labor Unions have become a part of such a Government!

To complete such a corporate structure is the purpose of such bills as the Balanced Growth and Economic Planning Act, the newly proposed National Technology Development Corporation and other bills whose "thrust is for centralized, nation-wide planning of economic activity, land use, manpower allocation, education, child and family development" et cetera.

These same men who are trying to legislate us into total socialism domestically, are also attempting to lead us into the acceptance of a Socialist World Government. It is significant that both Humphrey and Javits signed that odious Declaration of INTER-dependence which was proclaimed on Jan. 30 in Congress Hall, at a meeting sponsored by the World Affairs Council of Philadelphia that allegedly was paid for with $100,000 of Pennsylvania Bicentennial funds. This interdependence scheme is a part of the plan which calls for the creation of a Regional World Government composed of the Nations belonging to the Atlantic Union. It should be noted that surrendering our sovereignty to such a Regional Government would be a surrender to Socialism. Most of the nations that are members of the Atlantic Union are "social democracies," a term that denotes collectivism. These are the Nations that have Regionalized themselves domestically—as have the United States and all of the Communist countries—in preparation for the proposed World Regional Government that is being promoted by such men as Humphrey and Javits.

It is also significant that Jacob Javits has a fondness for Communism and Communists and was visiting with Castro of Cuba and Torrijos (the Communist dictator of Panama) at the time that his wife Marion was publicly exposed as an employee of the Iranian government with a salary of $67,500. The exposure allegedly embarrassed husband Jake because Israel and Iran are supposed to be public enemies. But the exposure did nothing to discredit Javits with the Communists since, while in Havana, he was guest at a block party for a unit of the Committee for the Defense of the Revolution (CDR), a nationwide security network supervised by Cuban Intelligence and controlled by the Soviet KGB (this according to Frank Capell in the Herald of Freedom of March 12, 1976).

Another important interrelation: Hubert Humphrey, Jacob Javits, Henry Kissinger and Nelson Rockefeller are all members of the Rockefeller-dominated Council on Foreign Relations, and a close relationship exists between Javits and Rockefeller. In fact, at the Senate confirmation hearings on Nelson Rockefeller (for Vice President) it was brought out that Rockefeller had donated some $15,000 toward the political campaign of Senator Javits, whereupon Rockefeller stated: "He (Javits) has been my friend for thirty years."

The Humphrey-Javits-Kissinger-Rockefeller camaraderie becomes important if one recalls that Humphrey is the man most likely to win a nomination, that Javits is an agent of the most powerful foreign lobby in Washington as well as a friend of Communists, that Kissinger represents the most powerful political force in America, and that Rockefeller aims to "stalemate" Ford and Reagan so he and Humphrey can compete for the big prize, and so nobody can win but the International Socialists.

If Americans could only be made to realize that Socialism and Slavery are Synonymous!

DON BELL REPORTS Weekly. $24 per year.
Extra copies: 10¢ each. Address all orders:
DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

"DETENTE" BY ANY OTHER NAME - -

WORDS ARE THE WEAPONS OF POLITICAL WARFARE

When certain Presidential aspirants—notably Ronald Reagan and Henry Jackson—began to receive standing ovations whenever they referred to detente as a "one way street," those who think for incumbent Gerald Ford quickly sensed the turning of the tide of public opinion, and Candidate Ford announced to the world that he had deleted from his political lexicon the word detente. The announcement by Ford seems to have caused a bit of embarrassment for German-born, Harvard-educated, CFR-indoctrinated, and Rockefeller-controlled Henry Kissinger. As an American Secretary of State Kissinger had fashioned a French term to describe (or camouflage) a pro-Soviet policy designed to promote the establishment of a New World Order; one which Kissinger calls a World Community, and which the Communists call an International Federation of World Socialist States.

However, the discomfiture caused Kissinger by the alleged death of detente, was short-lived. Quickly, he recovered his acumen and his accent, took a speaking tour of CFR affiliates and satellites to inform what the Birchers call the "Insiders" that the name had been changed to protect a candidate, but the policy of detente remained the same. To the Insiders at the Boston World Affairs Council, Kissinger asked: "What do those who speak so glibly of one-way streets... propose concretely that this country do?" And, it being a sympathetic audience, the group applauded as Henry Cabot Lodge presented the speaker with the Council's award for improving international relations.

Kissinger then flew westward to assure the members of the Chicago Council on Foreign Relations that he was seeking a new name but not a new foreign policy. And President Ford indicated total agreement by telling an audience, "I would not, under any circumstances, want Henry Kissinger to quit-period."

According to Rep. Philip Crane, Illinois

Republican, that new name for which Kissinger was seeking has been found. In the House of Representatives on March 9, 1976, Congressman Crane said:

"The word 'detente' is about to disappear from the pages of administration announcements on foreign policy. Words are the weapons of political warfare, and detente has become an obsolete weapon and thus, an obsolete word. Now our policy of detente will be known as 'peace through strength,' although other descriptions will probably emerge. The State Department insists that there will be no change in foreign policy, but the change in name is not without meaning.

"George Orwell, in his novel '1984,' and in his perceptive essay 'Politics and the English Language,' pointed out how often in politics words are turned upside down and sometimes even take on the opposite of their normal meanings. Thus, in '1984,' peace came to mean war. The respected scholar, Theodore Draper, has remarked... that the word detente has come to mean 'appeasement' and for that reason, one supposes, is no longer acceptable to the American people... Detente achieved wide use during the Nixon years to describe a relaxation of tensions between democratic and totalitarian regimes. Detente has fallen from favor because only the United States has relaxed... Detente has become a word distasteful to the American people, so it must go. However, the American people are actually questioning the policy.... The time has come to ask what the Soviet Union wants out of detente.... We must examine the Soviet view of detente to see if understanding is possible...."

Let us note: the name of the policy was "Peaceful Coexistence;" then was changed to "Detente;" and now is to become "Peace Through Strength;" if Congressman Crane is correct. However, the policy itself is not to be changed; only the name is to be changed. And Kissinger still keeps talking about "relaxation" and "strategic equality" and "the twin temptations of provocation and escapism" which we must avoid.

But, whatever the name of the policy, it is quite clear that the people of the United States are told that the policy means one thing, the people of the Communist countries are told that the policy means something entirely different; and those people called the "Insiders" look upon the policy as something entirely different from what Americans are told, or from what Communists are told.

The Communist meaning of "Peaceful Co-existence" or "Detente" or whatever the current name happens to be, is told over and over again to Communist readers in their party publications, the Soviet World Outlook, World Marxist Review, and similar journals which are published for members of the Communist parties to read; they are not published for "outside" consumption. The Christian Anti-Communist Crusade Newsletter for March, 1976, published an analysis of "a steady stream of articles in the World Marxist Review by recognized communist authorities." These articles all stress the following points:

1. The essence of Peaceful Coexistence and Detente is the avoidance of thermo-nuclear war. All other forms of struggle continue.

2. The climate of detente creates favorable conditions for victory for communism through the use of ideological, psychological, and economic weapons.

3. Peaceful coexistence does not apply to the ideological war. A constant attack must be made against the profit motive, private enterprise, and "bourgeois" democracy. Above all, the United States must be attacked as "Imperialist." This attack must be made in every country in the world. Great attention must be paid to the high schools, colleges and universities to generate hatred of "U.S. Imperialism" in the minds of the youth.

4. Peaceful coexistence does not prevent the communists from giving military, economic and moral support to forces waging wars of "National Liberation." The supply of advanced Soviet weapons and Cuban troops to enable the Marxist-led MPLA to conquer Angola is quite consistent with the communist interpretation of detente and peaceful coexistence.

5. The support of Communist and "progressive" factions in developed countries, as they seek to overthrow their own governments is an essential feature of peaceful coexistence. Comradely advice and financial help to the American Communist Party by the Soviet Communist Party advances detente.

6. The citizens and governments of non-communist countries are prohibited from giving help to dissident individuals and National Liberation movements in communist-controlled countries. Thus, a friendly reception to Alexander Solzhenitsen by President Ford would be contrary to the spirit of detente. Assistance to the liberation movements in Angola which oppose communist control, the FNLA and UNITA, violates detente.

7. The Brezhnev Doctrine is consistent with the spirit of detente. This doctrine states that once a country falls under communist control, it must remain under communist control permanently; that if the people of a country act unitedly to overthrow their communist overlords, they must be prevented from succeeding, by external military force if necessary. The invasion of Czechoslovakia by Soviet and Warsaw Pact Forces was a fulfillment of peaceful coexistence.

8. Detente and peaceful coexistence will advance, not retard, world communist conquest. They will lead to the "International Federation of World Socialist States." They are euphoric names to glamorize the program of conquest expressed by the formula: "External encirclement, plus internal demoralization, leads to progressive surrender."

The preceding is a summary of what communist party members are told by their leaders about the uses of and the reasons for that policy called detente, or peaceful coexistence, or whatever other name is given it. And, what party members are told by their leaders, they believe; and to communists, faith without works is dead, or they're dead. This is especially true in the seventeen countries governed by communist parties. It is true that there is doctrinal division among them, that there is hostility between the communists of China and those of the Soviet Union; but they are united in their determination to destroy free enterprise (monopoly capitalists share that determination; that's why they finance communism).

So much for the communist meaning of the policy of Detente. Let us now compare this with what Kissinger tells the "Insiders" about the uses of and reasons for Detente.

In a study of "The Economics of Detente," (Heritage Foundation), author Miles Costick writes:

"'Detente is an imperative,' declared Secretary of State Henry Kissinger in his speech to the Pilgrims of Great Britain. 'In a world shadowed by the danger of nuclear holocaust there is no national alternative to the pursuit of relaxation of tensions.' That is, the avoidance of the risk of war must be the supreme and overriding goal of U.S. foreign policy, almost regardless of cost in other respects. If detente is an imperative, the official statements say, it is also an opportunity for building an international order conducive to peace.... 'As political relations have improved on a broad front,' says Kissinger, 'economic issues have been dealt with on a comparably broad front,'... The prospect is that 'over time, trade and investment may leaven the autarkic tendencies of the Soviet system, invite gradual association of the Soviet economy with the world economy, and foster a degree of interdependence that adds an element of stability to the political equation.' This is contemplated as the 'Grand Design' which will remove the confrontation between the two political systems as it has existed during the past thirty years." (unquote).

TRANSLATION: If we can improve the economic conditions in the Soviet Union by feeding the people, building a great industrial system within the USSR, providing the Soviets with technical knowhow, and make the USSR equal to the USA economically, so a World Economy can be developed with the USSR a part thereof; then there can be developed a World Political System (that is, a World Government) with the USSR being a part thereof!

This is the voice of Henry Kissinger, but it is the design of David Rockefeller and that elite clique of monopoly capitalists who are determined to destroy free enterprise (and are using the Communists for that purpose.)

Perhaps we can gain a better understanding of why "Detente is imperative" if we study some of the statements made by some of these elite "insiders" who are "molding" the people of the United States and enslaving the people of seventeen countries now ruled by communist dictators.

C. Douglas Dillon (Lapowski) is such an elitist. His credentials: Undersecretary of State 1958-1961. Secretary of the Treasury 1961-1965. Chairman of the United States &

Foreign Securities Corporation. Chairman of the Executive Committee, Dillon, Reed & Co. President, the Metropolitan Museum of Art. Chairman, the Brookings Institution. Chairman, the Rockefeller Foundation. Director, the Council on Foreign Relations. Member of the Bilderberger Group. Chairman of the Board of the Institute for World Order (formerly the World Law Fund). Et cetera.

This last listed group, the Institute for World Order (IWO), has a limited circulation publication called Transition (a key word in elitist lexicology). The January, 1975 issue of Transition contained an interview with Dillon (Lapowski). Excerpts follow:

Q. Can you cite an example of how foreign policy elites are beginning now to think about system change?

A. Take the Council on Foreign Relations which has always mobilized the best thinking in the nation in the area of foreign policy. It is embarking on a new program, looking ahead to the 80's. They call it the 80's Project. It's one of the largest projects they've ever undertaken, and it posits in their thinking the need for system improvement....

Q. There's been a lot written recently about that. Do you think it's possible that the American public will see its way to surrendering some of its sovereignty, through the government, to global authorities? If this happened, would it be in keeping with the thinking of our founding fathers?

A. I think that can be done. It can be done by treaty in many areas. We already do it by treaty, but also, if necessary, we have a very flexible form of government and it's conceivable that it could involve constitutional change. We have the mechanism for that.

Q. But would the American public accept such a change? Wouldn't they strongly oppose it?

A. They're not yet ready for it by any means but I think this readiness is growing as people realize, maybe for the first time, that we're no longer totally masters of our own destiny. We as well as other countries are dependent on imports for energy and many other things. That's been really brought home for the first time in a very effective way. But it will take a while before people in this country will be ready as a whole for any substantial giving up of sovereignty to handle global problems.

Q While it's been said that we're in the age of globalthink, it seems that most of our government leaders are oblivious to being part of the world community. ...What is there to being a leader that stands in the way of addressing problems of world order?

A. From my experience the people who are involved directly in government are involved so heavily in day-to-day matters of great import to the public that they literally don't have the time to think in longer range terms. That's the reason I feel that it's so important that we educate the intellectual elites so that thinking of this nature can come from a broad group of people. Once that happens there will be public pressure for action. That can happen relatively soon. You can have some members of Congress who are more interested in this sort of thing begin to talk about it. It can catch on. As soon as that happens, then as a reaction, the people in the executive branch of our government will immediately begin to take it very seriously. (End of quote).

That final paragraph may require some explanation: Dillon says that globalthink should be popularized by educating the intellectual elites "so that thinking of this nature can come from a broad group of people." By "a broad group of people" he does not mean a broad group of run-of-the-mill citizens; he means a group of elitists representing a broad group of interests. In this way authors, journalists, speakers, actors, philosophers, teachers, preachers, doctors, lawyers, etc. will be talking in terms of globalthink. "Once that happens," says Dillon, "there will be public pressure for action."

Adam Weishaupt of the infamous Order of the Illuminate said the same thing, only his language was more explicit.

While Dillon is honorary chairman of the Institute for World Order, another internationalist of the same ilk, Saul Mendlowitz, serves as president of this elitist group. And mendlowitz is more explicit, more outspoken, and more boastful, than Chairman Dillon. In the October, 1975, issue of the publication Transition, Mandlowitz wrote:

"We live in a system in which traditional law and international law talks about the nation state as being sovereign in having the authority to make its own decisions. But I conceive of the 1980's as a period in which people will be demanding a central guidance system. It means a governance is about to come into being... that will say to the Brezhnevs, the Fords, the Tanakas of the world: "You can't build an army any more. You must give a certain amount of your income to other areas of the world." ...

To promote their aims, the IWO elitists are busily indoctrinating "a broad group of elitists" in a series of seminars which are financed by the Rockefeller Foundation, the Kettering Foundation, and other individuals and groups. Recent participants in these World Government Seminars include:

Cyrus Vance, former undersecretary of Defense; Robert Anderson, Atlantic Richfield Co.; Raymond Shafer, former Governor of Pennsylvania; Daniel Yankelovich, sociologist; Henry Porter, General Mills; Adrian Dewind, international lawyer; Sen. Mathias, Maryland; Ruth Clusen, League of Women Voters; Joseph Murray, Queens College; Stephen Rhinesmith, American Field Service International Scholarships; Irving Bluestone, UAW; William Coffin, former Yale Chaplain; James Greenfield, New York Times; Heath Larry, U.S. steel; David Mathews, Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare; Paul McCloskey, Congressman; James Rouse, Rouse Co., and Robert S. McNamara, World Bank.

Summary: In order to bring about this World Community, New World Order, International Federation of World Socialist States, or World Government by any other name; it seems, in the words of Henry Kissinger, that Detente is imperative. The name can be changed, and has been. But the policy itself must not be changed by one jot or tittle. And in order for detente to be successful in bringing about this World Government, by whatever name; Detente must mean one thing to free men, must mean something different to men already totally enslaved, and must mean yet a different thing to the elitists—a variation of the "divide and conquer" technique.

If we interpret detente as we wish it to be, and ignore what others affirm it to be, we are easily victimized. And if we kill the word without expunging the policy, we are victimized, not by elitist duplicity, but by punishable ignorance. If we know the Truth, freedom still demands action and sacrifice.

DON BELL REPORTS Weekly, presenting the Christian American point of view. $24 per year. Extra copies: 10¢ each. Write to: DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223 Palm Beach, Florida 33480

THE ECONOMIC PLANNING SYNDROME - ROUND TWO

THE PLANS OF MICE AND MEN AND HUMPHREY AND JAVITS

The non-candidate most likely to succeed as Democratic nominee for the Presidency of the United States, Hubert Horatio Humphrey, keeps repeating that he'll be very happy to serve the cause by accepting it and when he is drafted. But he has no intention whatever of throwing his hat in the ring and hitting the campaign trail. He says he's much too busy being a Senator. The implication: There is important work to be done in the legislative field before the important administrative tasks can begin.

And busy he is. Of the one hundred elected individuals who are supposedly representing the fifty States, respectively, there cannot be another who introduces half as many important and dangerous bills, makes half as many speeches on half as many different subjects, before half as many different clubs, organizations, associations, leagues, unions, and heterogeneous gatherings of gullible humankind.

There does seem to be a plan and a pattern: Humphrey is one of the chief spokesmen for that covert cabal which seeks to establish a new World Economic Order. His role is to introduce and push through Congress the kind of legislation which will convert the United States into a Socialist Nation, prepared to take its place in a Socialist World. To make his efforts seemingly bi-partisan, he has been given an able partner in Jacob Javits; and together they have introduced and promoted an ominous batch of bills. The pay-off if they are successful: a Presidential nomination (and perhaps an election) for Humphrey, and suitable rewards for Javits in other areas, since he is too old to serve in the political arena other than as Senator and Elder.

The most dangerous bills which bore the Humphrey-Javits co-endorsement:

S 50 was introduced on January 15, 1975. This was a bill "to establish a national policy and nationwide machinery for guaranteeing to all adult Americans able and willing to work the availability of equal opportunities for useful and rewarding employment.

S 1795 was introduced four months later. This was the most important of all their co-sponsorships and was called the "Balanced Growth and Economic Planning Act." More about this bill later in this Report.

S 2540 came next. Introduced in October, this bill would have amended the Federal Reserve Act so that, among other things, the Federal Reserve Board which has seven members, would be reshuffled so there would be "one from labor, one from agriculture, one from small business, one to represent the consumer, and then we will give the other three spots to bankers and the corporations," said Humphrey to delegates at the annual AFL-CIO convention held in San Francisco last October.

S 3111 was introduced March 9th, this year. And there was a variation in the pattern in that Javits, the Republican, was permitted to introduce this bill, with Humphrey, the Democrat, co-sponsoring. This is a "bill to reorganize activities of the executive branch of the Government which are supportive of technological development, to centralize funding for energy and natural resources in a National Technological Development Corporation, and for other purposes." DonBell Reports of March 12, 1976, carries details of this bill.

Of these four principal bills which were introduced, S 1795 is the most dangerous and, fortunately, it has received the most exposure and public opposition. Typical of this opposition were the comments made by Ralph Harris, British economist who is head of the London Institute of Economic Affairs.

As a preface to his remarks, recall that the former great empire "on which the sun never sets," which was the world's greatest merchant and banker nation, now is in deep economic agony. A Prime Minister has given up the struggle and resigned, British money sells for less than two dollars the pound, if buyers can be found. And much, if not all, of England's economic ills can be traced to the simple fact that Fabian Socialists got control of the government and did to England what the Humphrey-Javits Cabal want to do to the United States.

The following article needs no further introduction:

CENTRAL ECONOMIC PLANNING—DON'T

By Frank van der Linden

Washington—When Ralph Harris flew from London to Washington the other day, he felt the strange sensation of moving backward in time. Harris, who is general director of London's Institute of Economic Affairs, found himself in a city where senators are solemnly proposing a new "Office of National Economic Planning," to inflict upon the prosperous American economy the same socialistic idiocies that have nearly ruined his own country. Was he in a "reverse time machine" or a madhouse? He could not be sure.

Of one thing he was certain: The central economic planning bill being pushed by liberal Senators Hubert Humphrey, Democrat of Minnesota, and Jacob Javits, Republican of New York, is a blue-print for disaster.

Humphrey and Javits have bought the scheme cooked up by an outfit called "The Initiative Committee for Economic Planning" whose co-chairmen are Wasily Leontief of Harvard University, and Leonard Woodcock, president of the United Automobile Workers Union. The senators propose that Congress set up the economic planning agency within the President's office "as one of our most influential institutions," with power to create five-year plans just like those in the Socialist countries.

To counteract an orchestrated chorus of left-wing propaganda for the misbegotten scheme the Institute for Contemporary Studies at San Francisco has commissioned 15 economists and political scientists to write a book of essays, "The Politics of Planning." Herbert Stein, former chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers, wrote one chapter. Harris contributed the chapter exposing the fallacies of Britain's experiments in socialism.

"It was written in a cold and controlled rage," he told a Capitol Hill audience, as he warned Congress against passing the Humphrey-Javits bill, and thus repeating Britain's 15 years of mistakes.

"You here are talking about planning—we have done it," he said. "I have seen the future—and it doesn't work.

Harris tossed onto the table two volumes: Britain's economic planning programs of 1961 and 1965.

"We had, in 1961, the first national plan, rather like this committee that Senators Humphrey and Javits would set up," he said. "The words you find in the British planning book of 1961 are the same words you find in the Humphrey-Javits proposal: assessments, goals, targets, consultation, participation, coordination, rationality... It was, in fact, a cover-up for the failure of the government."

When the Labor government took over in 1964, it proposed an even more detailed program for a controlled economy. This five-year plan was scrapped in nine months. "It mocked nature," Harris quipped, "by passing from teething troubles to death rattle without the usual interval of hopeful life."

By 1967, Britain ran into such economic trouble that it had to devalue the pound. The rate of growth set for 1970 has not been achieved six years later. But government spending, between 1960 and 1975, has risen from 40 per cent to 60 per cent of the gross national product. "The government has managed its own growth splendidly," the economist noted with a wry smile. "But the inflation has moved up from 3 per cent a year to 25 per cent a year. Unemployment has risen from 2 per cent to 6 per cent."

Obviously, Harris said, national planning doesn't work. But the government persists in pushing it, on the theory that "we need better planning" and therefore, more controls. "So we escalate the whole nonsense and absurdity."

In cautioning the United States against going down the same primrose path that had led to Britain's economic mess, Harris said: "Why look at a crystal ball when you can consult the record?" He would paraphrase the advice that "Punch" magazine gave to the young man contemplating matrimony:

"Don't."

In a previous Report (3/12/76) we quoted from an article appearing in the Indianapolis Star in which reference was made to this Balanced Growth and Economic Planning Act (S 1795) and it was predicted that it "can be expected to be trotted out again, renamed the Act of 1976, by its sponsors, Senators Hubert Humphrey and Jacob Javits. If enacted, S 1795 would permit a governmental triumvirate to run the national economy."

Well, at presstime, the two Senators had not yet trotted out S 1795. Instead, they started at the beginning of their quartet of bills, and trotted out the very first one: S 50, and proposed an amendment to it (Amendment No. 1468). We quote from the Congressional Record of March 16, 1976, page S 3434:

"Mr. Humphrey (for himself, Mr. Williams, Mr. Kennedy, Mr. Javits, Mr. Nelson, Mr. Bayh, Mr. Brooke, Mr. Hartke, Mr. Case, and Mr. Philip A. Hart) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by them jointly to the bill (S 50) to establish a national policy and nationwide machinery for guaranteeing to all adult Americans able and willing to work the availability of equal opportunities for useful and rewarding employment."

Humphrey explained: "Mr. President, today I am submitting the Full Employment and Balanced Growth Act of 1976, as an amendment, in the nature of a substitute, to S 50. ... I believe this is the most comprehensive and important economic legislation proposed since the Employment Act of 1946...."

This Full Employment and Balanced Growth Plan is verbose, tediously complicated and filled with "booby traps." A comprehensive analysis of the bill would not be possible in this Newsletter. However, here are some of the key provisions of S 50 as submitted to the Senate by Hubert Humphrey. (H. R. 50, submitted to the House of Representatives by Augustus Hawkins, is an exact duplicate of S 50):

... The President shall transmit to the Congress not later than January 20 of each year an Economic Report...

... In conjunction with the Economic Report ... the President shall transmit to the Congress a proposed Full Employment and Balanced Growth Plan prepared with the assistance of the Council of Economic Advisers, and in consultation with the Office of Management and Budget. The plan shall propose, in quantitative and qualitative terms, and for the number of years feasible, long-term national goals related to full employment, production, purchasing power, and other essential priority purposes, and the major policies and programs, including recommendation for legislation, to achieve such goals and priorities....

The Full Employment and Balanced Growth Plan shall set forth the foreseeable trends in economic and social conditions.... (It) shall contain long-term economic goals as follows—

- (1) full employment goals...
- (2) full production goals...
- (3) full purchasing power goals...

... In establishing the component parts of such a comprehensive proposal, and making a determination of the role of each, the President should consider the following programmatic entities—

- (A) countercyclical public service employment;
- (B) accelerated public works...;
- (C) State and local countercyclical grant programs...;
- (D) the levels and duration of unemployment insurance;
- (E) skill training in both the private and public sectors...;
- (F) youth employment programs...;
- (G) a community development program...;
- (H) augmentation of other employment and manpower programs...;

"Full employment, full production, and full purchasing power." These are the goals that are to be attained within four years, according to S 50. It might be noted that the Soviet Union has been able to attain full employment by government decree. So has Communist China, and other nations and states that have totalitarian governments. But wherever freedom and free enterprise exist, full employment is impossible, and undesirable. Because in order to guarantee full employment, a government must control all production and all distribution of goods manufactured or grown (which means full control of "purchasing power.")

While Soviet Russia and Communist China have been able to guarantee "full employment" at a horrible cost in human suffering, they have never been able to achieve "full production" either on farms or in factories. They have been able to control "purchasing power" by the simple expedient of depriving people of the power to purchase by not producing the items which they should not purchase.

There is an interesting international aspect to this Humphrey-Javits full employment and economic planning program which should not be overlooked:

In introducing S50, Humphrey told the Senators present:

"At the press conference on Friday, March 12, when the bill was released to the public, we were also honored to have the presence and support of the Speaker of the House, Carl Albert.... In addition, Congressmen Henry Reuss, Richard Bolling, Carl Perkins and over 100 Members of the House have expressed support for this bill. Support at this early stage has also been encouraging on the Senate side...."

"But the support for this measure goes beyond Congress. This bill already has the support of the AFL-CIO, the National Farmers Union, many mayors, Governors, local government officials and many of the church, community, business and labor groups associated with the Full Employment Action Council."

Humphrey's reference to "church" groups supporting his bill refers to the World Council of Churches, which has as its current goals at the world level, precisely the same goals that the Humphrey-Javits Cabal is promoting at the national level. The establishment of a "New Economic Order" is the principal aim of both.

In this connection, an article appearing in the March 11 issue of "Christian Beacon" is important. We quote from that article:

NEW INTERNATIONAL ECONOMIC ORDER, DECLARATION OF INTERDEPENDENCE HAVE WIDE CHURCH BACKING

As was expected, the publications of the liberal denominations are beginning to appear with their support for the Declaration of Interdependence and the Declaration on the Establishment of a New Economic Order. Church and Society, January-February, 1976, a 60-page publication, is devoted to "A New Order." Recognizing that the program for a new international economic order was launched in May, 1974, by the Sixth Special Session of the United Nations General Assembly, the document...quotes Michael Manley, Prime Minister of Jamaica; who, when he spoke before the World Council of Churches in Nairobi, called for the elimination of capitalism. (He acted as spokesman for the "Third World." See our Report of January 16, 1976 for further details--Ed.)

The document says, "All states were born equal and therefore possess the right to a full participation in the international decision-making process in the solution of economic, financial, and monetary problems." It suggests that this be done through the United Nations. However, with the United Nations being in the control of the Communists and its allies, the Communists would thus be in charge of the socialization of all international activity.

The conclusion is final: "Only when international reporting on corporate activities is required and some kind of international chartering is enforced can anything resembling social control be extended over global business enterprises...."

The entire 60 pages are devoted to the arguments for the control of capitalist activity. There is no suggestion that the Communist countries be required to reveal their activities....

The booklet speaks of "denominational plans" in support of the same program being developed in the American Lutheran Church, Lutheran Church in America, Church Women United, the United Church of Christ, the Reformed Church in America, United Methodist Church, United Presbyterian Church, and Presbyterian Church, U.S.

(end of quotation)

SUMMATION: It has been determined that A New Economic World Order must be established before any Political World Order can be installed and publicly proclaimed. This means that the Free Enterprise System must be eliminated and a Corporate Socialist System installed in its place.

Following the program utilized by Fabian Socialists in England, the plan calls for the use of the present political system to set up a socialist order in the United States. To "legislate" us into a Socialist Dictatorship is the Humphrey-Javits aim. And they will succeed unless we realize that our political target is the Capitol Building, not the White House, and act accordingly now and in November.

DON BELL REPORTS Weekly, accenting the Christian American point of view. $24 per year. Extra copies: 10¢ each. Please address all orders and correspondence to:

DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

U.S. FOREIGN POLICY - AN IMPENDING DISASTER

THE GATHERING STORM

This is National Election Year as well as Bicentennial Year in the United States, and most of the candidates would like to ignore the world's trouble spots. But foreign policy is a campaign issue and people are asking questions. Mostly, they're getting evasive answers.

War in Rhodesia seems almost inevitable. Beirut is called the "city of the dead." Violence has erupted inside Israel. In Moscow the American Embassy was evacuated for the second time in a week because of another bomb scare. In Canberra, Australia, Vice President Nelson Rockefeller had to be slipped out through the back door exit from the U.S. Embassy because of an estimated 500 demonstrators demanding that "Rockefeller, go home."

The national news media is beginning to admit that "politics here at home is reshaping American policy abroad." What this really means is that the "get tough" policy advocated by two candidates, Republican Reagan and Democrat Wallace, is causing official Washington, Ford and Kissinger, to respond by talking tough. However, their actions speak much louder than their words. The result is a kind of political dilemma that leaves people wondering if they can trust anybody in power, or anybody seeking power.

"Confusion compounded" seems an apt description of our foreign policy. Example:

When Rhodesians stopped talking and began preparing to shoot, Kissinger warned that the United States "will not tolerate any further Cuban intervention abroad." This was interpreted as a warning to the Kremlin that those 12,000 Cuban troops in Angola had better not be sent toward Rhodesia, or else. But "or else" what? Did this mean we would take really strong measures against Soviet Russia, or Communist Cuba, or both? What would we do in an attempt to prevent the possible slaughter of the White Christian citizens of that African State? The answer came when Kissinger told a Congressional Committee that "no forthright military move against Cuba is planned" and any military strategy sessions that have been called represent a "precautionary review, not a crisis situation." Hubert Humphrey remarked that "Henry is barking, but I don't know if he can bite. I always believe you should not make threats unless you can carry through."

Another example: When Syria's President Hafez Assad indicated that he might once again send troops into Lebanon to stop the slaughter of Christians, and when the Israeli government warned that such a move might ignite another Arab-Israeli conflict, Henry Kissinger warned that any movement of foreign troops into Lebanon "would not be tolerated." But this was apparently one bark too many, because not only did Syrian troops continue to prepare to move into Lebanon, but Iraqi troops are ready to move in also and take a hand if Syria intervenes. So, his bluff called, Kissinger decided to call back into service as a mediator, L. Dean Brown, a retired Ambassador. Brown was commissioned to try to achieve a cease-fire in Lebanon before either Syrian or Iraqi troops were ordered into the country. Ships of the U.S. Sixth Fleet were also standing by, to evacuate all Americans remaining in Lebanon if such a move became necessary.

An ironic sidelight to the Lebanese agony: The U.S. pays the U.N. some $450 million every year (more next year unless the raise is vetoed by President Ford), allegedly "to save succeeding generations from the scourge of war," to "establish conditions under which justice and respect for the obligations arising from treaties and other sources of international law can be maintained," et cetera. So we are informed in the Preamble to the Charter of the U.N. This is supposed to mean that when any one country—Red China, Soviet Russia, Zionist Israel, Syria, Iraq, Turkey, or even the United States—moves in and takes over territory

(text continued on page three)

UNITED STATES FOREIGN AID
Fiscal 1946 Through Fiscal 1975:

Afghanistan	$455,700,000	Libya	220,200,000
Albania	20,400,000	Malagasy Republic	26,100,000
Algeria	449,600,000	Malawi	31,000,000
Argentina	376,000,000	Malaysia	129,200,000
Australia	214,000,000	Mali	76,800,000
Austria	1,219,500,000	Malta	52,800,000
Bahamas	28,200,000	Mauritania	25,400,000
Bahrain	700,000	Mauritius	15,400,000
Bangladesh	837,800,000	Mexico	563,100,000
Barbados	1,600,000	Morocco	805,100,000
Belgium-Luxembourg	1,759,400,000	Nepal	201,900,000
Belize (British Honduras)	7,500,000	Netherlands	2,158,800,000
Bermuda	22,500,000	New Zealand	87,700,000
Bolivia	671,100,000	Nicaragua	200,500,000
Botswana	37,000,000	Niger	61,800,000
Brazil	3,362,200,000	Nigeria	436,400,000
Brunei	17,700,000	Norway	1,461,600,000
Burundi	11,100,000	Oceania, Other	13,200,000
Burma	158,500,000	Oman	300,000
Cambodia	352,800,000	Pakistan	4,796,400,000
Cameroon	49,800,000	Panama	358,100,000
Canada	295,900,000	Papua and New Guinea	25,900,000
Central African Republic	9,900,000	Paraguay	152,400,000
Chad	24,300,000	Peru	614,200,000
Chile	1,244,200,000	Philippines	2,374,100,000
China, Republic of	6,185,800,000	Poland	555,600,000
Colombia	1,340,200,000	Portugal	517,100,000
Congo (Brazzaville)	6,400,000	Portuguese-Speaking Africa	10,000,000
Costa Rica	191,800,000	Romania	62,000,000
Cuba	45,500,000	Ryukyu Islands	403,200,000
Cyprus	55,200,000	Saudi Arabia	108,800,000
Czechoslovakia	189,500,000	Senegal	64,800,000
Dahomey	16,900,000	Seychelles	700,000
Denmark	928,700,000	Sierra Leone	55,900,000
Dominican Republic	547,500,000	Somali Republic	79,500,000
East Germany	800,000	South Africa, Republic of	-34,100,000
Ecuador	298,400,000	Southern Rhodesia	900,000
Egypt	1,129,800,000	Spain	2,437,700,000
El Salvador	156,600,000	Sri Lanka (Ceylon)	243,700,000
Ethiopia	567,700,000	Sudan	151,800,000
Finland	-30,500,000	Surinam	8,700,000
France	7,215,200,000	Swaziland	9,200,000
Gabon	18,900,000	Sweden	231,100,000
Ghana	233,900,000	Switzerland	98,400,000
Germany and Berlin	3,767,800,000	Syrian Arab Republic	107,800,000
Greece	4,096,200,000	Tanzania	131,700,000
Guatemala	343,500,000	Thailand	1,929,100,000
Guinea	120,900,000	Togo	26,200,000
Guyana	86,500,000	Trinidad and Tobago	55,700,000
Haiti	142,500,000	Trust Territory of the Pacific	527,800,000
Honduras	204,900,000	Tunisia	740,900,000
Hong Kong and Macao	95,000,000	Turkey	6,379,800,000
Hungary	12,500,000	Uganda	42,600,000
Iceland	43,400,000	United Kingdom	6,222,200,000
India	7,803,400,000	U.S.S.R.	1,216,100,000
Indochina (undistributed)	1,542,500,000	Upper Volta	45,100,000
Indonesia	2,061,200,000	Uruguay	206,400,000
Iran	2,329,200,000	Venezuela	291,400,000
Iraq	84,400,000	Vietnam	22,862,000,000
Ireland	58,200,000	West Indies, Other	37,800,000
Israel	5,187,800,000	Western Samoa	4,700,000
Italy	5,461,500,000	Yemen Arab Republic	67,300,000
Ivory Coast	128,100,000	Yugoslavia	2,815,400,000
Jamaica	155,100,000	Zaire	664,300,000
Japan	3,305,100,000	Zambia	30,400,000
Jordan	1,257,900,000	CENTO	51,400,000
Kenya	137,300,000	Worldwide Regional	21,820,000,000
Korea	11,821,700,000	Total net disbursements to foreign nations, 1946-1975	$170,303,600,000
Kuwait	-2,400,000	Total net interest paid on what we have borrowed to give away	$115,575,500,000
Laos	2,580,400,000	Grand Total, Cost of foreign assistance, 1946-1975	$285,879,100,000
Lebanon	150,300,000	(note: total may not add, due to rounding)
Lesotho	21,900,000
Liberia	234,600,000

belonging to another country, then the U.N. is contractually obligated to step in and act as mediator, referee, or peace-keeper. The U.N. actually tried to fulfill its contract in the case of the first Israeli takeover of Arab land in Palestine. The U.N.'s efforts have been a miserable failure in this connection. The U.N. was more successful in Northern and Central Africa; it managed to drive out the European governors that were preventing the natives from slaughtering each other, and installed in their places local dictators that were beholden, either to the International Bankers and Multinational Cartelists, or to the International Communists. They were successful, that is, except in the cases of the Republics of South Africa and Rhodesia; and the pressure is really being mounted against those two: by the Communists in the case of Rhodesia, and by the International Bankers in the case of South Africa.

But back to the U.N. in connection with Lebanon: After all these months during which the Christian Lebanese have been the major martyrs, and after a gentle prodding by the new U.S. Ambassador to the U.N.; William Scranton, Kurt Waldheim made a statement. He said the situation in Lebanon carried "implications extending well beyond the boundaries of that country," and the Security Council ought to meet and discuss the matter.

There is little oil and there are few known mineral deposits of importance in Lebanon. The country is mainly agricultural. Its chief importance to the multinationalists lies in the fact that Tripoli (Tarabulus) and Sidon (Sayda) are terminals of oil pipelines from Iraq and Saudi Arabia. So, since only people, as opposed to "industrial development," are involved, it is unlikely that the U.N. will do anything other than talk about the Lebanese crisis.

In the final analysis, $450 million a year is a large sum of money to pay to an organization whose principal task in affairs between nations has been to provide permanent war so it can search for permanent peace.

But, our waste of some eight billion dollars over the past eighteen years just to keep the U.N. alive, is "peanuts" when compared with the billions we have spent on gifts and donations to some 134 nations and 8 territories of the world.

On the opposite page is a compilation of the total net foreign assistance which we, as taxpayers, have given to the other countries of the world in a hopeless attempt to buy friends and influence governments. This list was presented by Senator Harry F. Byrd, Jr. Virginia Independent, while the Senate was debating the current foreign aid bill, on March 23rd. The bill was for a little over $5 billion, over half of which was for Israel. The bill passed, as such bills always do. But in arguing against it, Senator Byrd said, in part:

"This... is only one part of a total foreign aid program that is expected to cost the United States more than $9 billion in fiscal 1976. ... This does not include the activities of the Export-Import Bank. If those figures are included... then the total foreign aid bill to the people of the United States for fiscal 1975... will be nearly $15 billion.... In addition to these aid programs, the United States has made little effort to collect a total of $60 billion owed to our country by foreign nations on outstanding debts...."

"Our Federal spending is at an all-time high, and we face, in this year alone, a budget deficit of $76 billion.... Washington's current economic program provides for Federal spending at the rate of $1 billion a day—with deficits of more than $1 billion a week...."

"Over the course of the last 30 years, the United States has given massive aid to 130 countries. We are presently still giving aid to some 100 countries. However noble the intent, however humanitarian the purpose, our foreign aid program has not helped solve problems; it has only served to compound them.

"Through June 30, 1975, it is estimated that the United States will have provided economic and military assistance, of one form or another, amounting to a net total of $170,303,600,000, of which $33,423,800,000 was in the form of loans and the balance of $136,379,800,000 was in the form of grant aid. Since we have had a surplus in the administrative budget only six times since the end of World War II, it has been estimated that an additional cost of $115,575,500,000 in interest has been incurred to borrow the money we have given to other countries."
(end of quote)

The crux of the matter: The United States Government doesn't have this kind of money; so it borrows the money and then gives it away to other governments, and the International Bankers and Multinational Monopolists collect the interest on the loan, through the courtesy of the Federal Reserve System.

Compounding the swindle is the fact that the people who are in charge of shaping our foreign policy seem to be forming it to aid International Communism and the "World Community" to the detriment and destruction of the United States!

Henry Kissinger, United States Secretary of State, has never answered satisfactorily the charges that he is a "Communist agent." And he merely remarked that Admiral Zumwalt was an excellent "writer of fiction" when Zumwalt wrote in a book and Ronald Reagan repeated on nationwide television: "Now we must ask if someone is giving away our freedom. Dr. Kissinger is quoted as saying that he thinks of the U.S. as Athens and the Soviet Union as Sparta. 'The day of the U.S. is past and today is the day of the Soviet Union' . . ."

Kissinger's chief assistant in the State Department is one Helmut Sonnenfeldt. Like Kissinger, "Hans" is a "German Jew refugee," a member of the Council on Foreign Relations, and a man who consistently supports a policy of appeasing the Soviet Union. When recommended by Kissinger for an important post in the Treasury Department, Sonnenfeldt's appointment was held up for six months by the Senate on charges that he was a security risk. He finally received the appointment because Elliot Richardson, then Attorney General, refused to release the FBI file on Sonnenfeldt. As soon as Kissinger became Secretary of State, he had Sonnenfeldt transferred to State to serve as his -Kissinger's- chief counsel.

Recently columnists Evans and Novak discovered the text of a secret briefing Sonnenfeldt had given United States Ambassadors to European Nations, meeting in London in mid-December, 1976. In that secret briefing, Sonnenfeldt told the U.S. Ambassadors that "organic union between the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe was critical to the avoidance of World War III." He implied that Eastern Europe-Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Romania, East Germany-should be placed under greater Soviet domination.

"Piling up one astonishing statement after another," reported Human Events, April 3, "Sonnenfeldt mourned the fact that Eastern Europe is far less loyal to the USSR than he believed should be the case. 'The Soviets' inability to acquire loyalty in Eastern Europe,' he declared, 'is an unfortunate historical failure because Eastern Europe is within their scope and area of natural interest. It is doubly tragic that in this area of vital interest and crucial importance it has not been possible for the Soviet Union to establish roots of interest that go beyond sheer power.'

"Sonnenfeldt apparently pointed to Poland with some pride as a nation that had tossed away its 'romantic political inclinations' and was now more submissive to the Kremlin. And he suggested that Yugoslavia should kowtow to the Soviet Politbureau as well. . . . Sonnenfeldt cautioned against any intensive pressure against the Soviets, saying that 'any excess of zeal on our part' could reverse this 'desired process' of organic union. . . .

"For Kissinger to disavow Sonnenfeldt's statement would be less than credible. They have been friends since their youth in New York, and Sonnenfeldt was the first man Kissinger asked to join him on the National Security Council after Kissinger joined Nixon in 1968. . . . He is considered a loyal lieutenant." (End of quotation.)

That the Soviet Union should increase and the United States decrease, seems to be the conviction of these men who are determining and carrying out the foreign policies of this Nation. Is it any wonder than that, while Sonnenfeldt is advising that Eastern Europe become an "organic part" of the U.S.S.R., Kissinger is at the same time arranging the give-away of the Panama Canal by the U.S.? John Reed, an American journalist who became a Bolshevik and spent his last years in Moscow, reported that Lenin realized the importance of the Panama Canal and was determined to force the United States to give up unilateral control of the waterway. This was told by Hon. Jack Edwards (R-Ala.) who added, "I firmly believe that if the canal ceases to exist as an entity of the United States and is relinquished to the Republic of Panama, it will just be a matter of time before the operation of the canal is under the influence of Fidel Castro, supported by the Soviet Union."

This is what the Soviet Politbureau has wanted from the very beginning. Is it also what our own State Department wants? World Ownership through American purchase and Communist control! Let us strive and pray that this dream never becomes a reality.

UNION NOW - WITH RUSSIA?

ATLANTIC UNION SCHEME DEFEATED ONCE AGAIN

After a series of delays and postponements while proponents of H.R. 606 sought the most propitious moment for presenting the 1976 version of the Atlantic Union Resolution to the whole House, the vote finally came on April 1, 1976. And, once again, the bill was defeated: Yeas-165; Nays-194; Not Voting-73.

One of the important reasons for the defeat of this bill this year, was the fact that both the American Legion and the Veterans of Foreign Wars took an official and public stand against the "Atlantic Union Resolution."

"The American Legion strongly opposes H.J.Res. 606," declared Harry G. Wiles, National Commander of the American Legion, "because it envisions some new form of unidentified union which could relinquish U.S. sovereignty."

In an extended statement, "Pete" Walker, national commander-in-chief of the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, noted that the real issue was not "To Call an Atlantic Convention," but "whether we Americans opt for independence or dependence upon others; sometimes called 'interdependence.'" He also pointed out that:

"Atlantic Union is but the latest incarnation of Clarence Streit's 37-year effort—it was called 'Union Now' in the 1930's and 1940's—to alter the political arrangement that has kept America free and sovereign for 200 years."

"The V.F.W. is in absolute opposition to all proposed forms of world government—including Atlantic Union," said Walker. "Once again, Members of the Congress, stand up for our country and kill off this 'pig-now-poke-later' once and for all."

And so, the 94th Congress did kill the Atlantic Union Resolution, for this session of Congress. But, we can be sure that a new Atlantic Union Resolution will spring back to life each time a new Congress convenes, for as long as NATO exists.

But the defeat of H.J.Res. 606 does not mean the end of the efforts to establish a "World Community" and the surrender of sovereignty to an international organization. In fact, "Atlantica" has begun to lose favor with the promoters of the New World Order—or the "World Community," as Henry Kissinger is wont to call it.

In this connection, it is important to recall some of the statements made recently by Herr Kissinger. In mid-1975 he predicted that all Europe would have become socialist within a year. He did not define the word "socialist" when he made the statement; he could have meant Soviet-type socialist.

Then, last December, Kissinger addressed a group of 28 American ambassadors that were stationed in Eastern and Western Europe, telling them that "if communist governments were elected in Western Europe the Atlantic alliance would be smashed and the United States isolated;" this according to The New York Times of April 7, 1976.

This statement, along with a statement that was made to this same gathering by Kissinger's chief assistant, Helmut Sonnenfeldt, was not published in the United States, and was just brought to light recently by U.S. journalists. According to David Binder in The Times of April 8:

"A Washington newsman said today that confidential comments on Europe by Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger and his adviser Helmut Sonnenfeldt, which emerged as the focus of a disclosure controversy this week, were passed to him as long as a month ago. The reporter... said one of the officials who had passed the copy of the Sonnenfeldt summary to him was in the State Department, while the other worked for another branch of the Administration... Mr. Sonnenfeldt had proposed a United States policy fostering a permanent 'organic' union between the Soviet Union and its East European allies."

After the disclosure of the confidential comments, Kissinger said he had been misquoted, and Sonnenfeldt said he had been misunderstood. However, it should be noted that Kissinger (and those whom he represents clandestinely) has never been in favor of an Atlantic Union. His idea has been more direct: he favors the union of the United States, the Soviet Union, and Communist China, on a tripartite and equal basis (and we do mean equal in all ways).

It also should be understood that this same elitist cabal that provides Kissinger as a foreign policy adviser to President Ford likewise provides cabal-approved foreign policy advisers to all of the leading Presidential candidates, with the exception of George Wallace and the possible exception of Ronald Reagan.

Rather than explain this situation in our own words, we shall quote from an article that appeared on page 11 of The New York Times of Saturday, March 27, 1976. One thing has been added: Names of Members of the Council on Foreign Relations are in bold face type, for purpose of emphasis:

Foreign policy advisers are a standard feature of Presidential campaigns. While the candidates change, the advisers stay just about the same.

For Jimmy Carter, his aides say that the principal man is Prof. Zbigniew Brzezinski of Columbia University. Mr. Brzezinski used to be closely associated with Senator Hubert Humphrey.

For Representative Morris K. Udall, a principal source of outside advice has come from Paul C. Warnke, Washington lawyer and a high Pentagon official in the Johnson Administration. Four years ago, Mr. Warnke was in the inner circle of Senator Edmund S. Muskie...

Besides Mr. Schlesinger and Mr. Moynihan, the (Scoop) Jackson staff says the Senator has talked with Prof. Lucien W. Pye of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology; Paul H. Nitze, a former top Pentagon official; George W. Ball, a former number two man at the State Department; and Prof. Eugene V. Rostow of Yale University.

Mr. Carter has attracted the most foreign policy advisers...a little group that Mr. Brzezinski had put together for the leading Democratic contender. Among its members are Prof. Richard N. Gardner of Columbia University, Henry Owen of the Brookings Institution, Professors Milton Katz and Abraham Chayes of Harvard, and Bayless Manning, president of the Council on Foreign Relations....Mr. Carter also speaks directly to Cyrus Vance, the number two man in the Pentagon in the Johnson Administration and now a New York lawyer, Milton Gwirtzman and Theodore C. Sorensen, speechwriters for the Kennedys in the 1960's....

Gov. George C. Wallace, the other major Democratic candidate, is not known to have any foreign policy adviser. (End of quotes).

The preceding from The New York Times makes it quite obvious that the Rockefellers—who finance and control the CFR—have “covered all the bases” in the Democratic, as well as the Republican, party campaigns for the Presidency. Jimmy Carter’s chief adviser is Zbigniew Brzezinski, a director of the Rockefellers’ Trilateral Commission, an officer of the Council on Foreign Relations, and a long-time Rockefeller henchman.

Of particular importance: If Carter is but a stalking-horse for Hubert Humphrey in the primaries stage of the race—as many political pundits proclaim—Brzezinski has also served the Rockefellers as Humphrey’s principal foreign policy adviser, and could shift back to the Humphrey stable at a moment’s notice.

The following from Newsweek of April 5, 1976, is in agreement with The New York Times article from which we have quoted:

“Early form charts are taking shape on who might succeed Henry Kissinger as the next Secretary of State. If elected, Gerald Ford would probably not rename Kissinger; the handicappers see Nelson Rockefeller as Ford’s first choice, with William Scranton, the U.N. ambassador, and durable Elliot Richardson, now Secretary of Commerce, also in the picture. Ronald Reagan’s likely choice would be either James Schlesinger, Ford’s former hard-lining Defense Secretary, or Texan John Connally. On the Democratic side, George Ball, a high State Department official under both JFK and LBJ, might expect a call from Hubert Humphrey, Henry Jackson would consider ex-U.N. Ambassador Daniel Patrick Moynihan, and Jimmy Carter is said to lean toward Zbigniew Brzezinski, an expert on the Soviet Union. Cyrus Vance, the New York Lawyer who served in the Pentagon and as an LBJ troubleshooter, and Washington lawyer Paul Warnke, another Pentagon ex-official, would both be acceptable to Morris Udall. They would also be well thought of by Humphrey and the other leading noncandidate, Senator Edward Kennedy." (End of item).

However the Presidential race develops, the man to watch in the foreign policy field is Zbigniew Brzezinski, who is neither a Republican nor a Democrat, but a confirmed and admitted One World Internationalist, ranking in importance with that other agent, Henry Kissinger. Incidentally, if and when Kissinger quits or is quitted as Secretary of State, he cannot be expected to retire from the political arena; he will merely be kicked upstairs to some important position in the international bureaucracy, as was Robert Strange McNamara of Edsel infamy.

As for Brzezinski's views on foreign policy: Shortly after he was named by David Rockefeller as a director of the Trilateral Commission, he wrote an article for Foreign Affairs, the official journal of the CFR, in which he said:

Following is from the Toronto (Canada) Star of Friday, April 2, 1976:

CHAMBER HEAD ATTACKS FREE ENTERPRISE'S CRITICS

The free enterprise system is especially vulnerable to attack in the current economic debate because for years it has stood as an "undefended fortress," the president of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce said yesterday.

Gerald E. Pearson of Edmonton, speaking to the Empire Club of Canada said the attack has come from "intellectuals who have more leisure time than ever before," time granted by the efficiencies and progress of the system they're attacking.

"Government bureaucrats have a natural alliance with intellectuals, with whom they share a common educational background. On the one side, there are the bureaucrats who are increasingly involved in anti-business legislation; and on the other side, the unemployed intellectuals who are only too happy to get a job with decent pay and indecent amounts of power over others."

Using an economist's definition, Pearson said intellectuals are distinguished from other people by the absence of direct responsibility for practical affairs. "The cri-

"...The Atlantic (Union) concept was a creative response to the problems of the cold war era. Today, the Atlantic framework is too narrow to encompass the multitude of challenges—and opportunities—that confront the international community. It is a recognition of this reality to propose...that the active promotion of such trilateral cooperation must now become the central priority of U.S. policy."

Some clarification may be needed: Kissinger is concerned with the "Triangular Constellation," while Brzezinski is concerned with "triangular cooperation." There is a difference in the two concepts. Kissinger's Triangle refers to the United States, the Soviet Union, and the Peoples Republic of China. Brzezinski's Triangle refers to the United States, Western Europe, and Japan. Kissinger's Triangular Constellation is primarily political, economics is secondary; while Brzezinski's Triangular Cooperation is primarily concerned with economics, trade and monetary matters, and politics is secondary. Both concepts derive from and are promoted by the Monopoly Capitalist Cabal, of which tical attitude" of an intellectual, he said, arises from the fact that his main chance of asserting himself lies in his actual or potential nuisance value."

The critical question now, Pearson told the club, is whether the businessman "will finally sense the danger to himself and to the system of which he is a part, and rise to meet the challenge."

In the current economic debate "we have been invited to convince a doubting administration and a questioning public that the nation has been served well by the current mix of private and public enterprise, and that it is not time to tear down a productive yet imperfect mechanism in favor of an idealistic abstract of planned perfection operated by remote control from Ottawa."

The task of business, he said, "is to safeguard freedoms and to stave off further government intrusion into a delicate mechanism already upset by government meddling."

And, Pearson added, "as it currently stands, government sees the economy as the patient. The cabinet believes it is the only medical team in town, and it has the added distinction of having inflicted most of the diseases. We are involved in an intellectual malpractice suit."

the Rockefellers are an integral part.

If the Kissinger Concept entails a World Community divided in three equal parts, then it is easier to understand why he is so anxious to give away the Panama Canal. Some thirty years ago, Ralph de Toledano wrote an article for the short-lived Plain Talk magazine, entitled "Stalin's Hand in the Panama Canal."* He commented that "If Stalin has in the Canal Zone, too, his 'secret battalion' for 'the organization of catastrophe,' then he would be in a position to strike a deadly blow of sabotage at the jugular vein of our system of defense. Through such an operation he could paralyze our navy and immobilize a whole fleet of aircraft carriers in a moment of crisis."

"Panama began to witness unusual Communist activity in July 1931," de Toledano reported.

Commenting on this article written in 1946, Isaac Don Levine wrote in 1976: "If anyone had suggested in 1946 that Cuba, a rampart of the Monroe Doctrine, would within a few years become a military outpost of Muscovite colonialism, the idea would have been regarded as the ravings of a lunatic. Today, when the anatomy of the Kremlin's underground fifth column in Portugal is fully exposed, the evidence presented by Ralph de Toledano...takes on an ominous color."

"We bought and paid dearly for our vital rights in Panama," said Dean Manion in a recent broadcast, "and we dare not surrender them to any petty dictator, whether his name is Castro or Torrijos. We should give up the Panama Canal Zone to Torrijos on the same day that we give Alaska back to the Russians, and not before that."

Another peculiar deal that has not been published by the controlled press in the United States concerns the trading of India for Egypt in our roster of alleged friendly nations.

Egypt has been trying for some time to ex-

* Quotation is from Plain Talk, a newly published book, edited by Isaac Don Levine and containing 70 of the most important articles originally appearing in the leading anti-Communist publication of the 1940s. Each article is prefaced with a note from Mr. Levine, and the authors run the gamut, from liberals like Bertrand Russell to conservatives such as Ludwig von Mises. 464 pages. $12.95. Arlington House, Publishers. New Rochelle, New York.

tricate itself from total dependence on Soviet Russia for small arms, spare parts and other military supplies. At the alleged suggestion of "someone in our State Department," Egypt began to order such supplies from factories in India. Then India was ordered (by the Soviet Union) to stop selling such supplies to Egypt. Now the materiel is supplied to Egypt by the United States, and as compensation for India's loss in trade, on February 27th, the World Bank announced a $200 million loan to India at no charge. The loan was interest free! But loans to other under-developed countries are at full rates: 8½ to 9½% interest. While India is granted a loan interest-free, South Korea is denied credit from the World Bank, except in special circumstances (as are any other countries that are friendly to the United States).

Result of the deal: India now has become a Soviet satellite in every sense of the word; while Egypt has become dependent upon the United States for her survival. So, India is granted interest-free loans from the World Bank while we guarantee Egypt's economic survival.

This India-Egypt realignment is not an isolated case. It is but one part of a wholesale "Realignment of Nations" that is being carried out by the Monopoly Capitalists in their building of the New World Order. Involved are Spain, Portugal, Angola, Panama, Rhodesia, South Africa, and other nations and regions that must be aligned or realigned. American capital, Russian coercion, Cuban manpower, all are being used. But, through the Bilderbergers, the Trilateral Commission and other exclusive clubs of the Monopoly Capitalists, yet another force is being employed. As Gary Allen said in his excellent The Rockefeller File: these have been created by David Rockefeller to guide his fellow internationalists in using their private influence to make certain their governments remain on the proper public course—a headlong rush toward the Great Merger. And the country that ignores the warnings, and pays too much attention to its 'domestic' concerns may find itself in a food/fuel/financial crisis that will make the Great Depression seem like an idyllic trek through the Promised Land."

Our first step is to know the Truth....

For information concerning this Report write
DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480.

TRADING WITH THE ENEMY - A CAMPAIGN NON-ISSUE

NONE WILL CALL IT TREASON

A few weeks ago the leader of the British Conservative Party, Mrs. Margaret Thatcher, delivered an address in which she warned of the danger to Britain and the West that was posed by the alarmingly rapid buildup of the Soviet military establishment. Commenting on that speech, Kevan Bleach wrote in "The British Views-Letter," Candour:

"If Mrs. Thatcher thought her speech on Russia had the intended effect of 'shaking the British people out of their long sleep,' she was mistaken. It had as much effect as an alarm clock with a highly-muffled bell. Certainly as far as it went, her words on the threat posed to Britain and the West by the rapidly increasing military and naval power of the Soviet Union were sound. The evidence of Russian rearmament does fly in the face of any notion that they are seeking genuine detente and their rise as a naval power does endanger our traditional sea life-lines. Sedatives have been applied to the British public by fools and traitors in and out of government who have been telling us that there is no external threat to Britain and that propping-up a loss-making company or lending cheap money to Russia is more important than a new squadron of fighter-planes.

Yet where in her speech was the slightest hint of recognition of the forces that have made possible, and are still behind Russia's ever-increasing might? Were Mrs. Thatcher really intent on alerting the British people to the threat confronting them, how could her speech have failed to expose and attack with equal, if not greater, vehemence the international financial power which spawned the Bolshevik regime in 1917 and has ever since nourished its growth into the menacing war-machine it has become today? 'The Russians are rapidly acquiring the means,' she cried, 'to become the most powerful imperial nation the world has ever seen.' But did she ask from where these means were being acquired? 'The submarines and missiles the Russians are building,' she warned, 'could be destined to be used against us.' But did she enquire from whom the technical know-how was being obtained? On both counts she was silent.

"It is not lack of conclusive evidence which could have held Mrs. Thatcher back. A study of Anthony Sutton's several scholarly works would have left no doubt in her mind that there is hardly anything worthwhile in the form of modern industry, technology or military hardware which has not been put in Russia by the West in one form or another. Had she button-holed David Rockefeller for just five minutes at the last Bilderberg meeting they both attended, she could have learned from him something of the role his Chase Manhattan Bank is playing in setting up at Kama, four hundred miles east of Moscow, the world's largest truck plant.

"For all her true words about the might of Russia, Mrs. Thatcher's speech—possibly out of ignorance, possibly out of deliberation—overlooked the source of that might and the motive in its sustenance. The armed power of Russia is but an element, though a very important one, in a global conspiracy to establish an all-powerful World Government, and this one-world imperium will be maintained by whatever means (that proves) expedient—the Red Army, control of the world's currencies, the availability of international loans and so forth. So long as this is appreciated, what Mrs. Thatcher had to say makes not disagreeable reading if all one wants to find out is the present strength of Russian forces. But to look to the Tory leader for any effective exposure of the conspiratorial forces presently constituting a threat to Britain and the free world would be a waste of time. On that level, her words about the real threat were no more than a red herring." (Unquote).

This is the vital fact that most run-of-the-mill, dedicated-unto-death Communists are never told; and that most sincere anti-Communists have never understood and won't believe it when they're told, that:

Communism is but an element in a global conspiracy to establish an all-powerful World Government!

Communists believe that their system is an end in itself. They are taught that progress is inevitable, that there is an inevitable progress from lower to higher forms of organization, that capitalism is a lower form of organization, and that since progress is inevitable, communism must triumph over all the earth. As Phyllis Schafly once remarked, the communists' greatest asset is their certainty of victory. That communism, with all its donated power and its dedication to a false theory, is but a means to an end, would never be accepted by any Communist beneath the rank of Commissar. To believe a lie is a common failing of the human creature.

By the same rule of nature, most sincere anti-communists fear communism because of its military strength, its brutality, its habit of mass murder and use of slave labor in what Solzhenitsen has taught us to call the Gulag Archipelago. So, people who ought to know better tolerate appeasement and kowtowing to Communism and attempts to buy friendship and pay for gangster-type protectionism on an international scale because they still think there's no alternative to being either red or dead. Still others will sell the communists the weapons that may destroy them because they love the almighty dollar more than they fear communism.

Then there is that elite band of conspirators who know, and use communism as a means to an end, even as they are using monopoly capitalism as a means to the same end in supposedly free nations of the world.

And there is yet another band of opportunists who are neither communists nor anti-communists, but who have sold their souls to the monopoly capitalists. These are, for the greater part, intellectuals and professional people; professors, psychiatrists, international lawyers, bureaucrats, etc.

Elements of this latter group will be found gathered together in organizations that are quite similar to unions; unions that are controlled by more exclusive clubs, such as The Council on Foreign Relations, The Trilateral Commission, the Bilderberg Group, the Committee for Economic Development, the Business Round Table, etc., etc. And in these satellite organizations there is always at least one member of the Council on Foreign Relations, who usually directs the activities of the group and, perhaps, reports back at stated intervals to the VIPs who really "run the whole show."

One such "union," recently formed, is The American Committee on U.S.-Soviet Relations. It has a very important purpose, so it is literally "loaded" with CFR members; Harrison Brown, Richard Gardner, Marshall Goldman, Theodore Hesburgh, Philip Jessup, George Kennan, Edward Korry, Carl Marcy, Gerard Piel, Edwin Reischauer, Robert V. Roosa, Harrison Salisbury, Thomas Watson, Jerome Wiesner and Leonard Woodcock, all being members of the CFR and the ACUSSR.

The purpose of this recently formed group is "to promote better relations between the United States and the Soviet Union." And the immediate goal is "to help work out amendments to the 1974 Trade Act which will remove present restrictions on this trade" with Russia. Under date of March 1, 1976, a letter was sent to each Congressman explaining the ACUSSR purposes. The letter also promised that "From time to time we will be writing to you with respect to the modification of trade restrictions and other means to promote better relations between the U.S. and the Soviet Union."

Among those who saw this trading with the enemy lobby as an un-American activity was Rep. John Ashbrook, Republican from Ohio. He told his colleagues in the House on April 8th:

"One of the reasons the American left and the Communist fronts in this country hated the old Un-American Activities Committee and its successor the House Internal Security Committee was the fact that those committees kept comprehensive records and painstakingly fitted together pieces which illustrated the web of subversion and leftist activities in this Nation. Time and time again, these committees helped inform the American public about the pro-Soviet Union and radical movements in the United States. Card files were assiduously compiled and cross-referenced.

"I heard many of my colleagues on the Judiciary Committee earlier this week indicate that they were voting, in effect, to destroy these files and make them inaccessible to the public because they had no value. As I said in rebuttal at that time, hundreds of examples could be given to illustrate their meaningful value—meaningful that is, if you have one iota of interest in the activities of the radical left in this country. For example, when the SLA first surfaced and made its radical demands, only one group in the country was in a position to know about the SLA, its members, and their background. That was the Internal Security Committee. Examples could go on and on.

"I would like to point out a recent letter which Members received regarding a leftist group which is cranking up public sentiment in favor of not only trading with the Soviet Union but, far more significant, giving the Soviet Union favored trading status and making available loans for export of strategic products to that country.

"A study of the cardfiles of the old Internal Security Committee would tie this new group to the same old gaggle of one-worlders, professors, seminarians, professional leftists, out-of-step union leaders, leftist think tanks and big business patsies. They are all there. You need only to fit together the pieces....

"First, of course, they use the same old tired names of liberal and socialistic organizers of the past. John Kenneth Galbraith, Jerome Wiesner, former Senator Eugene McCarthy, Phillip C. Jessup, Edwin O. Reischauer, Harrison Salisbury, former Governor Terry Sanford... Kirk Douglas the actor, Attorney Charles Rhyne, Father Hesburgh, Leonard Woodcock.

"Second, the key groups are there, too. The same liberal-leftist organizations that have rallied to dozens of past causes, usually attacking the American position and looking with favor on Communistic and radical movements throughout the world: the Center for the Study of Democratic Institutions, the Fund for Peace, and the Council for a Liveable World. That pretty well tells you what kind of a group they have assembled.

"Third, they attract the usual bevy of big businessmen who put profits over their country's national interests....

"Fourth, there is almost incestuous conduct in the way these leftist organizations operate out of the same quarters and with the same personnel....

"On and on we could go. For the past 15 years, while studying the leftist movement, I could cite scores of examples of interlocking organizations, headquarters and individuals in these leftist causes, but the end result is always the same: set up a front to advance the cause of our enemies and endeavor to sell it to the American people as progress." (End of quote).

THE AMERICAN COMMITTEE ON U.S.—SOVIET RELATIONS

List of Members, March 1976

Ashmore, Harry; Center for the Study of Democratic Institutions, Santa Barbara, Calif.
Benton, Charles; Film, Inc., Wilmette, Ill.
Berger, Meyer; M. Berger Co., Pittsburgh, Pa.
Berman, Dr. Harold J.; Story Professor of Law, Harvard Law School, Cambridge, Mass.
Bernbach, William; Doyle, Dane, Bernbach, Inc., New York, N.Y.
Bookman, George B.; New York Botanical Gardens, The Bronx, New York, N.Y.
Broadwater, Robert J.; Coca-Cola Co., Atlanta, Ga.
Brooks, Dr. Howard; the Claremont University Center, Claremont, Calif.
Brown, Prof. Harrison; International Council of Scientific Unions, California Institute of Technology, Pasadena, Calif.
Caldwell, Lawrence T.; Altadena, Calif.
Carter, James R.; Nashua Corp., Nashua, N.H.
Clemens, Prof. Walter C. Jr.; Dept. of Political Science, Boston University, Boston, Mass.
Colburn, Richard; Rolled Alloys, Inc., Los Angeles.
Compton, Randolph; Kidder Peabody, New York, N.Y.
Davidson, Dr. William; Institute for Psychiatry and Foreign Affairs, Washington, D.C.
Douglas, Kirk; Beverly Hills, Calif.
Edmonds, Dr. Helen G.; The Links, Inc., Durham, N.C.
Fenton, Richard C.; Fenton International, Inc., Washington, D.C.
Filmer, Joseph; Noblemet, New York, N.Y.
Frank, Dr. Jerome D.; Professor of Psychiatry, Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore, Md.
Freers, Edward L.; Formerly Minister-Counselor, U.S. Embassy, Moscow, and Political Advisor to Commander-in-Chief of U.S. Strategic Air Command, Bermuda Dunes, Calif.
Galbraith, Prof. John Kenneth, Former Ambassador, Harvard University, Cambridge, Mass.
Gardner, Prof. Richard; School of Law, Columbia University, New York, N.Y.
Goldman, Prof. Marshall I.; Economics Department, Wellesley College, Wellesley, Mass.
Griscom, Rufus K.; Attorney, New York, N.Y.
Hartt, Julian N.; Department of Religious Studies, University of Virginia, Charlottesville, Va.
Theodore M. Hesburgh, University of Notre Dame, Notre Dame, Indiana.
Hill, John W.; Hill and Knowles, New York, N.Y.
Hutchins, Robert; Center for the Study of Democratic Institutions, Santa Barbara, Calif.
Jessup, Philip C.; Norfolk, Conn.
Kendall, Donald M.; Pepsico, Inc., Purchase, N.Y.
Kennan, George; Former Ambassador to the Soviet Union, Woodrow Wilson International Center for Scholars, Smithsonian Institution Building, Washington, D.C.
Kistiakowsky, Dr. George B.; Harvard University, Cambridge, Mass.
Korry, Edward; Briarcliff Manor, N.Y.
Leontief, Prof. Wassily; New York U., New York, N.Y.
Lewis, Mark; Washington, D.C.
Marchy, Carl; Former Chief of Staff, Senate Foreign Relations Committee; Editor, Foreign Affairs Newsletter, Washington, D.C.
McCarthy, Sen. Eugene; Washington, D.C.
Mills, Sheldon T.; Santa Barbara, Calif.
Morgan, Prof. Patrick; Washington State University,

Pullman, Wash.
 Moss, Dr. Robert V.; United Church of Christ, New York, N.Y.
 Nacht, Michael L.; Program for Science and International Affairs, Cambridge, Mass.
 Neal, Prof. Fred Warner; Claremont Graduate School, Claremont, Calif.
 Nyary, Nicholas; The Fund for Peace, New York, N.Y.
 Oliver, R. Spencer; American Council for Young Political Leaders, Washington, D.C.
 Oztemei, Ara; Satra Corporation, New York, N.Y.
 Philips, Gifford; Santa Monica, Calif.
 Piel, Gerald; Publisher, Scientific American, New York, N.Y.
 Prill, George; Lockheed International, Burbank, Calif.
 Proehl, Paul O.; international trade consultant, Santa Monica, Calif.
 Reischauer, Prof. Edwin O.; former Ambassador to Japan, Harvard University, Cambridge, Mass.
 Rhyne, Charles C.; Rhyne and Rhyne, Washington, D.C.
 Rome, Dr. Howard P.; World Association of Psychiatrists, Mayo Clinic, Rochester, Minn.
 Roosa, Robert V.; Brown Brothers, Harriman Co., New York, N.Y.
 Rubstein, Peter A.; Rubstein Associates, New York.
 Salisburg, Harrison; New York Times, New York, N.Y.
 Salter, Leonard M.; Wasserman and Salter, Attorneys, Boston, Mass.
 Sanford, Terry; Duke University, Durham, N.C.
 Scheuer, Sidney H.; Scheuer and Co., New York, N.Y.
 Schachter, Marvin; Volume Merchandise, Inc., Los Angeles, Calif.
 Schmidt, Robert D.; Central Data Corp., Minneapolis, Minn.
 Scott, L.W. Jr.; Crose International Houston, Texas.
 Shipley, Richard; American Casein Co., Burlington, New Jersey.
 Thompson, Dr. Kenneth W.; International Council for Educational Development, New York, N.Y.
 Thurston, Raymond L.; former Ambassador, Sarasota, Florida.
 Tree, Mrs. Marietta, New York, N.Y.
 Wadsworth, Hon. James J.; Genesco, N.Y.
 Watson, Thomas, Jr.; IBM, Armonk, New York.
 Watts, William; Potomac Associates, Washington, D.C.
 Wiesner, Dr. Jerome B.; Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Cambridge, Mass.
 Wilkin, Eugene; Wilkin Associates, Woodland Hills, California.
 Woodcock, Leonard; UAW, Detroit, Michigan.
 York, Dr. Herbert F.; University of California at San Diego.
 Ziffren, Paul; Attorney, Los Angeles, Calif.

After presenting certain documentary evidence for the record, Congressman Ashbrook continued his speech before the House, and we quote:

"As I have pointed out many times, these groups endeavor to promote a basic fraud on the American people. That fraud is the fiction that by selling computers, planning equipment, milling equipment, tooling equipment, geophysical equipment, instruments of all kinds and other vital products which the United States has but the Soviet Union does not, they are not harming us militarily. The chairman of the board of Control Data Corp.,

William C. Norris, for example, indicated that the purpose of selling computers to China is to assist in the exploration and development of oil resources. He goes on to say, 'Surely it is in the best interests of the United States to encourage a major new source of oil supply.'

"Now is it really? Since when is Red China on our side? He further indicated that 'the purpose of our computer that would be sold to the Soviet Union is to process weather data that would be fed into a world-wide forecasting network—from which the United States would benefit a great deal.' Now, really; what guarantee that the Soviet Union will not use these computers for non-peaceful purposes? Absolutely none, but these callous businessmen are not putting their Nation's best interests first. Recall what the Communist philosopher said about capitalists selling the rope to hang themselves.

"Time and time again, I have documented that the Soviet military-industrial complex is just like ours. It is made up of components of the private sector every bit as much as ours is. The same equipment that builds compressors, engines, copper tubing, alloy products which can go into refrigerators and consumer goods, just like in the United States, can also go into missiles, tanks and the war machine.

"Greedy business interests seem bent on promoting a big lie and they become willing accomplices of the radical left when it serves their purpose." ... (Unquote).

It is unfortunate that Mr. Ashbrook (even as with Mrs. Thatcher of Britain) failed to dig beneath the surface and expose the CFR and other exclusive groups that make "willing accomplices" of greedy business interests, and of the International Communist organization itself; and that all are but elements in a global conspiracy to establish an all-powerful World Government.

It is regrettable that Treason is not even listed as a campaign issue in 1976—save by a few whom the Media has cancelled out—and that Treason is actually being promoted by those who seek to be our national leader, to lead us deeper into slavery.

 DON BELL REPORTS Weekly, accenting the Christian American point of view. $24 per year. Extra copies: 10¢ each. Please address all orders and correspondence to:
 DON BELL REPORTS, P.O. Box 2223
 Palm Beach, Florida 33480

GOVERNMENT PLANNERS NEVER QUIT THEY JUST GET REDDER AND REDDER

HUMPHREY-JAVITS TRY AGAIN

Aside from those who are actually running for the office of President, Senators Hubert Humphrey and Jake Javits are the two busiest men in the game of politics. They have just introduced a new plan: S. 3300, "A bill to amend the National Labor Relations Act to provide a framework for the establishment by way of collective bargaining, of jointly managed labor-management employee stock ownership trust funds, which meet statutory safeguards."

The idea behind that rather ambiguous title is to make it mandatory for employees to own stock in the corporation by which they are employed. This would be mandatory on the part of both employee and employer, and the terms would be arrived at through collective bargaining.

There are corporations in the United States where employees share the profits; and there are corporations that encourage employees to buy stock in the firm that employs them. These ventures are usually very successful; and are consistent with the free enterprise system; so long as they are free associations. But when Big Brother Government steps in and supervises and makes mandatory such arrangements, then free enterprise will have become that brand of socialism commonly called Fascism!

Don't worry about it in this election year; it has no more chance of passage than the other socialist programs that Humphrey and Javits have proposed this legislative session. We only cite this latest venture that was introduced jointly by the Javits-Humphrey team on April 13, to indicate that the Planners never quit. If one proposal is defeated, they simply do a little editing and rewriting and present the same old proposal under a new name and a new number.

Before the editors of Barron's were apprised of this latest Humphrey-Javits socialist manifesto, James Grant wrote a very keen commentary on the subject, noting in the headline that "Hubert Humphrey Has Never Gotten Over the New Deal." The commentary is important to us because it confirms much of what we have already written in previous Don Bell Reports. In case you missed this editorial commentary which appeared on page 7 of Barron's issue of April 19, 1976, we quote extensively from James Grant's perceptive paragraphs:

... A left indeed thrives this election year. It is the Left of economic planning and federal crusades, of promises, deficits and inflation. Its champion is Senator Hubert H. Humphrey, front runner among those not running for the Democratic Presidential nomination.

The papers are full of the former Vice President. Whatever he says and does matters. In Washington, the health of his bladder is front-page news. He basks in the knowledge that the world, at long last, is seeking him out. "Senator Hubert Humphrey," declared New Jersey State Democratic Chairman James P. Dugan last week, "is the best we have, and we should go with him into the November election." In Pittsburgh this month the Minnesotan held an audience of labor leaders enthralled for an hour; they leapt to their feet and cheered him, chanting "We need Humphrey!" For what it was worth, the hapless George McGovern tendered his own endorsement of Hubert Humphrey last week. "I don't want to see us elect a President," he said, "who's afraid of using the power of the federal government."

... Senator Humphrey, for whom every day is the first day of spring, craves few things more than bestowing one man's money on another. The Great Society, in his view, was never given a chance... No matter. Hope springs eternal for Hubert Humphrey. In May 1975 he introduced a bill to establish a prototype economic planning system in the United States. Last month he cosponsored legislation to guarantee a job to every man, woman and child over the age of 16. He has said wondrous things. "Frankly," he told a gathering at the American Enterprise Institute for Public Policy Research in Washington, "the farmers ought to have a computer service that gets market prices out to them so they can stay in the marketplace and not be swindled by the grain-trade speculators. That is really needed in this country." A farmer, of course, could always turn on the radio for market reports. That way, he wouldn't be waiting around for the Post Office to deliver the latest government printout.

But Humphrey's ambitions go far beyond the enrichment of farm life. "We all pay for each other," he said recently on the sub-

FOUR CONGRESSMEN RECAT ONE SENATOR WEASELS

At least four United States Representatives have decided that signing that treasonous Declaration of INTERdependence was not such a good idea, and that they should have read the fine print before endorsing such a document. Apparently reacting to protests from irate constituents, they have told the World Affairs Council of Philadelphia to remove their names.

"I feel I was misled in this matter," said Representative Charles Rose (D-N.C.). "I was led to believe that my signature was requested to reaffirm my commitment to the original Declaration of Independence, upon which this country was founded, and not this Declaration of INTERdependence."

Other Congressmen who told the Council to remove their names include Rep. Goodloe Byron (D-Md.), Rep. John Murphy (D-N.Y.), and Rep. Danial Flood (D-Pa.). A Byron aide admitted that Byron didn't read the document thoroughly and called signing it a mistake. "Primarily I questioned the breach of United States sovereignty," said Byron.

Senator Mark Hatfield, Oregon Republican, did not recant, but he did react. In answer to the letters he had received protesting his action, "including those printed in newspapers and those received in my office," Hatfield wrote a "letter to the editor" that was printed in most Oregon newspapers, including the weeklies. We have a copy of the letter as it appeared in the Illinois Valley News, Cave Junction, Oregon. In it he resorts to technicalities in an attempt to justify his support of the Declaration of INTERdependence:

ject of federal aid to New York City.... Last year he and eight Senate colleagues unveiled the Balanced Growth and Economic Planning Bill (S. 1795).... Just last month he and Rep. Augustus F. Hawkins (D-Calif.) introduced the Full Employment and Balanced Growth Act of 1976 (H.R. 50).... It would usher in a new and giddy period in U.S. economic history. It seems to prescribe that monetary and fiscal policy be geared to nothing but the attainment of 3% unemployment....

He (Humphrey) has demanded more government, without let or hindrance, for 30 years. Today he is flushed with the prospect of still bolder collective action. The issue... concerns an observation made by Albert Jay Nock during the early New Deal. "The political liberal," he wrote, "is the most dangerous man in the world to be entrusted with power, for no one knows what he will do with it; and the worst is, that whatever he does, he will persuade himself that it was the divinely appointed thing to be done... Where, in the name of the social good, would Hubert Humphrey stop?

(end of extended quotation)

"First," he wrote, "A Declaration of Interdependence is not a government document. It does not carry the authority of law...."

Second, when it calls for a "New World Order," the word "order" means "condition or the prevailing mode of a period." It does not mean a "New World Order," it means a "new world order" (without the capitals).

And finally, Hatfield asserts, 92 Members of the House and 32 Senators did not sign the Declaration of INTERdependence itself. Instead, they signed a statement which read:

"We, the undersigned members of Congress, support the principles embodied in the Declaration of Interdependence of the World Affairs Council of Philadelphia, and urge their study and discussion to promote American policies and initiatives which respond to new global conditions of interdependence."

We don't think Senator Hatfield's defense is worthy of extensive comment. But it is heartening to know that there are Representatives and Senators who still worry about it when constituents protest against their un-American activities.

In the preceding article, there is one glaring oversight; forgivable and understandable, because this is an election year and author James Grant was writing in terms of partisan political perils. However, to place all the blame for dangerous legislation on Hubert Humphrey the Democrat, and not even mention his partner-in-planning Jacob Javits the Republican, is to miss the point and the impact of the Total Conspiracy.

For example: This latest Humphrey-Javits horror—S. 3300—was introduced to the Senate by both Humphrey and Javits, with Javits making the opening presentation. In his opening speech, Javits used some terms that are right out of the Communist Lexicon. To wit, and we quote from the Congressional Record of April 13, 1976, page S5594:

"...The theoretical class struggle predicted by Karl Marx is anachronistic, in light of our knowledge of the corporation. Now the time has come to establish in our system a 'peoples' capitalism' thereby truly leveling economic classes...."

"Using the tried and true mechanism of collective bargaining which has served our Nation so well in the past, we are expanding the dynamic framework of mutualized corporate ownership which can form the basis for a 'peoples' capitalism' and put our Nation on a new plateau of economic well-being. This is the first framework of its kind that can be effectively utilized by labor and management...."

Here is a so-called Republican proposing the adoption of a program of Corporate Socialism for the United States, the system that was called Fascism in Italy.

It is true that National Economic Planning began on a serious scale in this country during the Wilson (Democratic) Administration. There was the passage of the Federal Reserve Act; the ratification of the 16th, the Income Tax, Amendment; ratification of the 17th Amendment providing for popular election of U.S. Senators; and the federal authorization of tax-exempt foundations. This National Planning spree led us into World War One, after which a "return to normalcy" preserved the Republic for a decade.

The second grand attempt at National Economic Planning came to be known as The New Deal, again during a Democratic Administration. And this second attempt led to World War Two, after which came a series of cold wars and wars-to-end-wars, and the Nation has been in a state of emergency ever since.

However, in regard to National Planning, since the end of The New Deal, the roles of the two National Political Parties have been changed: Now the Democrats propose and popularize, while the Republicans dispose and install the plans and programs.

Example: The Planning, Programming, Budgeting System was proposed and popularized during the Johnson Administration, but it was not actually installed in the federal government and in the schools until the Nixon—a Republican—Administration.

Another example: The Regional Governance System was proposed by the Democrats, as early as the first years of the Roosevelt Administration. But the actual establishment of the system did not come about until 1972, when the Nation was divided into Ten Federal Regions, during the Nixon—Republican Administration.

Yet another example: Democratic Administrations under both Kennedy and Johnson proposed and tried to popularize the idea of friendly relations with Soviet Russia and Communist China. But it was Kissinger during a Republican Administration who "opened the doors" and established the Soviet Union and the Peoples Republic of China as "co-equal" partners in a world fellowship.

You see, the way the real rulers have things planned, we are supposed to think of the Republicans as conservative (the nomination of Goldwater in 1964 and the current campaign of Reagan promote this image); while we are taught to consider the Democrats as liberals (the McGovern nomination in 1972 helped promote this image).

Thus, when the Democrats are in power and propose some new plan or program, people look at it askance and suspect that it is a "Communist scheme" or worse. But, when the Republicans are in power and propose the very same plan or program, the people look upon it as a sign of progress or a "necessary evil."

Consider the current "swine flu" crusade in this context. The idea of National Health Insurance and a Nationalized Health Service similar to that in England, has always been looked upon as a Democratic program. So, if there was a Democrat in the White House today, and if he predicted almost one year in advance the coming of a great epidemic that might kill millions of people, and if he then proposed a mass inoculation of all of the people of the United States with an as yet undeveloped, untested serum that would cost $135 million to produce, the people of the United States would immediately suspect that 1) it was a plot to bring in socialized medicine "by the back door", 2) a kind of census to determine how subservient the people had become, 3) a form of behavior control, 4) a Communist plot, 5) or worse.

However, with a Republican in the White House, even though he was not elected, the people are "falling all over themselves" to go along with the program.

Nobody has been told much about this program, but let us consider what has been reported up to this point in time:

At the end of a long forced march, which is a thoroughly exhausting experience, four Fort Dix soldiers contracted influenza and one died. Someone is said to have examined the victim, and suggested that this was very similar to the so-called "Spanish Flu" that ravaged the world back in 1918, 1919. Some unidentified person gave it the name "swine flu"—knowing the reputation given swine by a certain ethnic group, the name given the influenza might be a give-away.

Historical note: The Spanish Flu was not directly responsible for all those deaths. The victims of 1918-1919 actually died of pneumonia and other ailments while convalescing, because there were no "wonder drugs" to combat such diseases at that time, plus the fact that this was something new to the world and nobody seemed to know how to fight the epidemic.

When it was proposed that everybody be inoculated against this predicted killer, the World Health Organization pooh-poohed the idea all the way from Geneva, and most State Health Departments rejected the plan. But, within 24 hours all had changed their minds and endorsed the plan. Even Switzerland took measures, and WHO said "it was impossible to predict whether the disease would spread" but still alerted its 95 influenza centers throughout the world to be on the lookout for "swine flu."

Rep. Paul Rogers (D-Fla.) was responsible for introducing the legislation that granted the $135 million for developing the mass immunization program. Speaking while on a visit to his home base in the Palm Beaches, Rogers admitted that nobody really knew whether there would be any swine flu epidemic. But, he reasoned, "what if there was an epidemic and we were not prepared for it?"

A note that may be pertinent: John Davison Rockefeller, Jr. was responsible for the creation of the Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research in 1901 and began to collect drug and pharmaceutical companies along with oil wells and foundations. Only the Rockefellers would know what hold they have on the drug producers. But, soon after President Ford launched the Swine Flu Crusade, Nelson Rockefeller let it be known that he would be available if Jerry wanted him as a running-mate in November.

But, back to our original theme: Because a supposed "conservative" is in the White House, the Great Majority hails the swine flu crusade and praises Ford for "taking care of all of us." However, if there were an alleged "liberal" in the White House, what think ye the consensus would be?

One more current outrage: The United States Supreme Court has revoked the 4th Amendment to the Constitution where agents of the Internal Revenue Service are concerned. This is the Amendment which protects all citizens from "unreasonable searches and seizures." But now an IRS agent needs no warrant before entering your home or office to seize papers and private documents. He can also demand that your bank, without any prior notice, must hand over all your records—the bank being forced to keep a complete record of all transactions passing through their hands.

If a "liberal" Court had rendered such a decision, there would be weeping and wailing and real resistance before the people would accept such a decision as "the law of the land." However, presently we have a "conservative" collection of jurists. So, the protests are minimal and people accept a patently unconstitutional decision.

As we said, Democrats (Liberals) propose and Republicans (Conservatives) dispose. Eventually, of course, they become political bedfellows (as with Humphrey and Javits). And that's when we need a new Party and a new broom.

DON BELL REPORTS Weekly, accenting the Christian American point of view. $24 per year. Extra copies: 10¢ each. Write to:
DON BELL REPORTS, P.O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida

COMPLETING THE CONQUEST OF A CONTINENT

KISSINGER'S WAR OF ATTRITION AGAINST RHODESIAN WHITES

In the opinion of Christian patriots, respect for the incumbent Federal Administration must have sunk to an all-time low on April 27, 1976. That was the day when the U.S. Secretary of State spoke in Lusaka, Zambia, announcing a new American policy toward southern Africa. He told the government of Rhodesia that it would face "unrelenting U.S. opposition," that "massive discouragement" would include an economic boycott which would include the purchase of needed chrome, a warning to all American travelers to "shun Rhodesia," a request that all U.S. citizens now in Rhodesia "come home," and a promise of tripled aid and assistance to all enemies of the current Rhodesian regime who might suffer hardships because of their opposition to that regime.

The text of Kissinger's speech took up almost all of page 16 of the April 28th issue of The New York Times, but a condensation appeared in The Wall Street Journal of the same date, and Kissinger's specific pledges were listed. We quote:

"—Strong support for a British plan that would transfer political power to blacks within two years....

—Repeal of the Byrd amendment. This refers to a U.S. law that lets Americans buy chrome and other materials from Rhodesia despite a U.N. boycott. Mr. Kissinger said the Ford administration will seek repeal, something it has long favored but never sought strenuously.

—Aid to Mozambique.... He also promised unspecified assistance to other nations that have suffered because they closed their frontiers with Rhodesia....

"Turning to Namibia, a U.N. mandated territory formerly known as South West Africa, the Secretary also promised American aid for the establishment of majority rule there. It is currently managed by South Africa....

"Predictably, the Secretary had less to say about South Africa itself. He repeated a call for faster progress toward racial equality and said the 'institutionalized separation of the races must end.'...Mr. Kissinger warned white rulers to 'heed the warning signals of the past two years' and end the practice before violent consequences result. 'The U.S. will exercise all its efforts in that direction,' he said."

(End of quotes from Wall Street Journal)

In short, Kissinger declared a full-scale war of attrition against the indigenous white inhabitants of South Africa, the last part of that dark continent that has not yet been restructured for the benefit of the world's monopoly capitalists. The controlled media would have us believe that Kissinger's new policy is designed to combat the Communist expansion in Africa; but it is really part and parcel of the same plot. It was Henry Kissinger who wrote: "If the West can be humiliated over a period of time, the new nations (of Africa), whatever their moral preference, will consider Communism the wave of the future....No amount of economic assistance will avail against the conviction that the West is doomed." (From "The Necessity for Choice," by Henry Kissinger, published in 1961).

It should be emphasized that Henry Kissinger, no matter what his position or title, is an agent of the Monopoly Capitalists; and the Soviet Union is the supreme example of monopoly capitalism at work.

But, before intelligent comment is possible, we need a brief historical review:

Before World War I Africa might have been considered a wholly-owned subsidiary of Europe, with the exception of the one State of Liberia which was founded in 1821 by the American Colonization Society for the resettlement of freed American slaves. In the early 20th century. Liberia was the poorest, most miserable part of all explored Africa, because its government was all-black and no white leadership was permitted. In 1920, the Firestone Rubber Co. made substantial investments in the country; and during World War II the U.S. Government poured money into the tiny country in exchange for military and naval bases. But Liberia remains poor and miserable, because its rulers have always been all-black. (When we speak of Africa in this connection, we are not including the Arab, Moslem and Coptic nations of North Africa. They are only African by geography. Their religion, culture, history and racial composition—as well as their anti-Zionism—make these countries part of the Middle East.)

World War II was fought, in part, to make the world safe for Communist enslavement of East Europe and Northeast Asia, and for Communist expansion and coercion in the rest of the world, especially the rest of Asia and all of Africa. World War II also made the world safe for the reconstruction of Europe and Japan, and for the development of the underdeveloped areas of the world by the Monopoly Capitalists, who would use American foreign aid and assistance monies for these purposes.

Along with this crusade to develop the world came a movement for self-government in Africa. Surprisingly, most of the colonial powers gave in without much of a struggle. France and Belgium tried to hold out, as did Spain and Portugal. So there were wars of attrition or bloodshed in Algeria, Madagascar, Kenya, Zanzibar and the Congo. But the real bloodshed and massacres did not begin until after the European nations had capitulated and permitted the natives to take control. In the one year of 1966, in the new African states there were seven military takeovers, two bloody army coups, a tribal massacre, 100,000 civilian dead and a million refugees; this according to the San Francisco Examiner of Jan. 8, 1967. The New York Times of June 14, 1970 reported that in the forty new states in Africa, there had been thirty military coups since 1960, and Dahomey and Burundi had had eight coups each.

Political and military coups, tribal feuds and massacres (it's called genocide), and almost unending civil wars; this is the record of self-government in darkest Africa. Then comes the diplomatic pattern that was probably planned before any new African nation was formed; planned by the elitists who mean to take control of all natural resources in Africa, not by the black natives:

When a tribal clique or political caucus gets control of a country, it begins to play the East against the West. But, having removed all whites from political control, and having made the carrying on of business and commerce almost impossible, and the growth of heavy industry totally impossible; then the new black leaders have no choice but to ask whites to return and run things for them, to prevent total collapse of the new nation.

And this is what the monopoly capitalists have expected, and what they are waiting for. They can move in and take over almost on their own terms. Of course, they need a World Government and a World Police Force to protect their interests. They're working on that.

To the above pattern, there were two important exceptions; South Africa and Rhodesia. South Africa's development parallels that of the United States in many ways. The original settlers were Protestants from Northern Europe who brought their families with them. The Boers began settling in that part of Africa as early as 1652. Then came the British and eventually the shameful Boer War when "Perfidious Albion" took over. But what the Dutch settlers lost on the Battlefield, they later won at the ballot box. While the European colonial nations were retreating and giving the land back to the blacks, South Africa voted to cease being an appendage to Britain, and became an independent republic in its own right. It has prospered, but there is a weakness that may prove fatal: Harry Oppenheimer is to South Africa what the Rothschilds are to Europe and what the Rockefellers are to the United States. And these three financial dynasties are cooperating, collaborating and consolidating their forces on a world-wide scale.

An ominous article appeared in the South African Financial Gazette last March 19th. We quote parts of the article:

* * * * *

The reason behind the fall in South African gold shares in Europe is uncertainty about the future of Southern Africa. Gold, by contrast, is holding up because people are not sure how well the mines would be run by insurgents. The mood towards the Republic has thus veered sharply since the fall of Angola to Cuban-led Communist forces. It is assumed that it is only a matter of time before both Rhodesia and South West Africa go the way of Angola... As week succeeds week, the speed of change in Southern Africa never ceases to surprise people in this part of the world. The pessimists on Rhodesia, for instance, have long been a tiny minority; that is no longer the case, however, for there would be absolutely no support given to Rhodesia from the outside world in the event of a major guerrilla war. Without such support, it tends to be assumed here, the Rhodesian Government would be unable to sustain a long conflict.... There is no questioning the will of South Africans to fight for their future; it is simply presumed that they would not be able to win a knockdown, decade-long battle against overwhelming forces backed by the Soviet Navy,

(end of quote)

From the tone of the preceding article, and from the words of Henry Kissinger, it would appear that the Secret Government of the United States and the Central Government of the Soviet Union are working hand-in-hand—with Soviet supplied troops (Cubans) and American supplied money—to destroy the Government of Rhodesia, and eventually the Government of the Republic of South Africa. In fact, the eminent journalist Douglas Reed said as much in slightly different words back in the early 'fifties when he observed that the "actual aims of American high policy and of the Communist empire are not separate or opposite, but the same."

The truth of this statement began to be apparent when Cubans were sent in to conquer Angola and establish it as a base for future attacks on Rhodesia, South-West Africa and South Africa. Now, with Communist Cuba supplying the manpower and "capitalist America" supplying the money power, the White Rhodesians are to be slaughtered or driven from the land in which they were born, land which they developed, and land to which they brought peace and prosperity—until they got in the way of the New World Developers.

Back in the days when Africa was being decolonized and democracy installed (majority rule is democracy), South Africa became an independent republic. But Rhodesia was to suffer the same fate as the forty-odd newly established mini-states in Africa. However, having watched the murder or disestablishment of the whites in Kenya, of some 75,000 whites in Northern Rhodesia (now Zambia), and the fate of whites in surrounding areas; the 220,000 white Southern Rhodesians seceded from Britain, asserted their independence and did in 1970 exactly what the United States of America did in 1776:

declared themselves to be a free and independent republic.

Rhodesia defied the "Developers," and did its own developing, despite U.N. sanctions and economic boycotts. It has survived, and prospered and maintained peace and a stable government despite external pressure. As the saying goes, the blacks in Rhodesia "never had it so good."

Milton Friedman is anti-Keynesian and pro-free enterprise, yet suspect because he is a columnist for Newsweek, a CFR-slanted propaganda dispenser. Yet what Friedman says about Rhodesia does not agree with what Kissinger says about Rhodesia. In his May 3rd column, Friedman writes:

"Of the 49 countries in Africa, fifteen are under direct military rule and 29 have one-party civilian governments. Only five have multiparty political systems—the Republic of South Africa, Rhodesia, Botswana, Gambia and Mauritius."

This is a mild way of saying that fifteen countries are military dictatorships, twenty-nine are civilian dictatorships, and five are republics and/or democracies.

Friedman says of Rhodesia and South Africa that "both provide a larger measure of freedom and affluence for all their residents—black and white—than most other countries of Africa. Both would be great prizes for the Soviets—and our official policy appears well designed to assure that the Soviets succeed in following up their victory in Angola through the use of Cuban troops by similar take-overs in Rhodesia and South Africa." (This was written before Kissinger made his speech in Zambia—Ed.)

Friedman's closing paragraphs are worth repeating:

The external pressures against Rhodesia arise from its unwillingness to grant "majority rule" within a definite and brief timetable. Whatever the merits or demerits of "majority rule" as an abstract principle, the imposition of sanctions against Rhodesia on this ground is a striking example of a double standard. The other former African colonies of Britain that were granted independence without question and without sanctions do not have anything approximating what Americans regard as majority rule. They have a minority rule by a black elite that controls the one party permitted to exist. If the elite minority in Rhodesia had happened to be black instead of white, Britain would have rushed to grant them independence and provide "development assistance."

"Majority rule" for Rhodesia today is a euphemism for a black-minority government, which would almost surely mean both the eviction or exodus of most of the whites and also a drastically lower level of living and of opportunity for the masses of black Rhodesians. That, in any event, has been the typical experience in Africa—most recently in Mozambique....

Rhodesia has a freer press, a more democratic form of government, a greater sympathy with Western ideals than most if not all of the states of Black Africa. Yet we play straight into the hands of our Communist enemies by imposing sanctions on it! The Minister of Justice of Rhodesia cannot get a visa to visit the U.S.—yet we welcome the ministers of the Gulag Archipelago with open arms. James Burnham had the right phrase for it: suicide of the West.

* * * * *

As we were completing this newsletter word came that Kissinger, while in Zaire, had been eating too much pork and had come down, not with swine flu, but with gastroenteritis. We wondered if that might have been a typographical error and should have been spelled Castro-enteritis. Because the story behind those Cuban troops that were sent to Angola, and perhaps later to Rhodesia, is an interesting one.

People in the United States are never told that there is more racial discrimination in Soviet Russia, Socialist Israel and Communist Cuba than there ever has been in the United States. In Cuba, for example, there are the Cubans, descendants of European colonists; and there are Afro-Cubans, descendants of slaves. When Castro sent those soldiers to Angola, he sent Afro-Cubans, commanded by Afro-Cuban officers. Later, when Angola had been secured for the Communists, Castro sent the families of those Afro-Cuban soldiers to join them in Africa, and establish homes in Africa.

Remember Eldridge Cleaver, the Black Panther leader who was engaged in that shoot-out with the Oakland police in 1968, and who fled to Cuba, remained an exile in Communist countries for seven years, then voluntarily surrendered to federal authorities last November and is now in a California prison? Evidently he prefers being in jail in the United States than being at large in a Communist country. There seems to be a considerable amount of factual information in a page, "My Turn," which he wrote for Newsweek of May 3. He says "The White racist Castro dictatorship is more insidious and dangerous for black people than is the white racist regime of South Africa." He quotes an Afro-Cuban Captain who said that by sending militant young black officers off to fight in Africa, Castro kills two birds with one stone: (1) he gets rid of an explosive element capable of causing him trouble at home; (2) he impresses black Cubans that he is a fighter for black people's rights, thus quelling opposition to his rule amongst blacks.

According to Cleaver, Castro has been sending Afro-Cubans to Africa to fight wars of liberation ever since he came to power in Cuba. They were there to help destroy the short-lived regime of Moïse Tshombe, they helped set up every Communist dictatorship in Africa. It became public knowledge in the United States only when it was learned that fresh Cuban troops were being sent to Angola.

So all is not peace and serenity within the ranks of International Communism. People are beginning to realize that when Communists are sent to "liberate" people, it is the "lesser brethren" that are sent to fight and die. The "elite" stay at home and live as monopoly capitalists are expected to live.

As for United States foreign policy, Wilmut Robertson summed it up expertly in his book The Dispossessed Majority: "A denationalized foreign policy has many heads and hearts, but no soul. It supports imperialism in one part of the world and opposes it in another. It upholds democratic principles in some areas and violates them in others. It gives money and arms to anti-American regimes and boycotts pro-American governments. It demands total opposition to Russian aggression in the Middle East, but tolerates it ninety miles from Florida. If there is any doubt who is and who is not running America, one has only to count the disasters inflicted upon the Majority since the day it lost control of American foreign relations.

DON BELL REPORTS Weekly. $24 per year.
Extra copies: 10¢ each. Please address all orders, correspondence and inquiries to:
DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

MAKING THE WORLD SAFE FOR MONOPOLY CAPITALISM

CONGRESSIONAL PROTESTS

Representative Steven Symms and 29 of his Congressional colleagues are deeply concerned over the State Department's lack of interest in the fact that our southern neighbor, Mexico, is being taken over by Marxists. "We made contact with the Mexican desk at the State Department," said Symms; "an air of studied unconcern was detected. Therefore, the question arises, is Secretary Kissinger aware of these developments? If he is, has he spoken to President Ford about them? Or is all this taking place with the approval of Secretary Kissinger?" . . .

Getting no response from the State Department, the 30 Congressmen addressed the following letter to the President, "in order that he be aware of our concern":

Washington, D.C., May 5, 1976

Hon. Gerald R. Ford
President of the United States
The White House
Washington, D.C.

Dear Mr. President:

Surely you must agree that the development of a Cuban or Chilean "road to Socialism" in neighboring Mexico would pose a tremendous danger to the United States. However, it is not evident whether our Secretary of State, Dr. Henry Kissinger, has troubled to inform you of the situation existing in Mexico, and its grave implications for our national security.

Within the past year, long strides toward the imposition of a Communist regime have been taken by Mexican President Luis Echeverria, who appears to be making himself acceptable to Moscow and Havana.

Mexican newspapers and magazines are filled with accounts of insecurity, unrest, and violence resulting from a broadfront attack upon private property in all forms. Officially tolerated land seizures are widespread. Compulsory textbook changes are intended to indoctrinate young Mexicans with Castroite propaganda. An amnesty has been proposed which would release hardened Communist cadres from prison and allow them to enter the government.

Mexico is in turmoil over these changes which are being imposed from above, and which are inspired by a large group of foreign Communists and Marxists who presently advise President Echeverria. They include such notorious Chileans as the former Foreign Minister, Clodomiro Almeida, the former Minister of Economics, Pedro Vuskovic, and the head of the far-left Socialist Party, Carlos Altamirano.

The popular Mexican magazine Impacto, describing these events in its April 29 issue, says, "For several months there have been mobilized 'brigades of parachutists,' invaders of small farms, flying columns which are transported by truck, to fall upon rural properties. . . . Of course, they carry arms and are affiliated with organizations which count on the sympathy of the authorities." The picture is one of cynical terrorism against small property owners. . . .

(We emphasize) the grave danger that would be posed by a hostile Marxist state across our virtually unguarded fifteen-hundred mile southern border. Under these circumstances, we believe it is very important to determine whether or not the Department of State, under the direction of Dr. Henry Kissinger, has seen fit to inform you of this problem. Certainly there has been no effort to inform us, or the public. Has Dr. Kissinger made known to President Echeverria the natural concern of the United States which has actions have caused? There is apparent indifference to this most serious problem.

Your timely attention to this matter will be greatly appreciated. Sincerely,

Don Young, Richard H. Ichord, George Hansen, John Ashbrook, Ron Paul, Joe S. Waggoner, Jr., Goodloe Byron, Tim Lee Carter, John B. Conlan, Mendel J. Davis, Bob Bauman, Sam Devine, Gene Snyder, William L. Dickinson, Albert

W. Johnson, Larry P. McDonald, Dan Daniel, Del Clawson, Steve Symms, Trent Lott, Marjorie S. Holt, Philip M. Crane, Robin Beard, Bill Nichols, Chuck Grassley, Robert Lagomarsino, Bo Ginn, James M. Collins, Floyd Spence, John J. Flynt.

Hon. Marjorie Holt, one of the thirty who signed this letter to the President, wanted to register her objection to another matter as well: the way Kissinger had represented the United States in his recent diplomatic mission to Africa. His unconcern over the Communization of Mexico was matched by his concern for the Communization of the ministates of Northern Africa, and his hostile remarks about Rhodesia and South Africa. All of these actions seemed to favor America's enemies at the expense of her few remaining friends. She wanted to be "on the record" on the subject; so Rep. Holt had the following published in the Congressional Record of May 6, 1976 (p. E 2400):

Mr. Speaker, the news reports about Secretary of State Kissinger's declarations of American policy on Africa are certainly disquieting to some of us, to say the very least. From all accounts I have read, it appears as though Kissinger is fishing in very murky waters, where perhaps it would be better not to fish, and is promising to send possibly hundreds of millions of American tax dollars to very questionable African countries.

I am absolutely outraged that the Secretary of State has offered $12.5 million to Mozambique, a country which found release from colonialism only to plunge into a Communist slave state. All land in Mozambique has been nationalized, people are forced to labor in collectives without pay, thousands have been incarcerated in "re-education centers" to be tormented by cruel mind-bending.

Mr. Speaker, if this Congress is sincerely interested in human rights, as it has professed on many occasions, we will not appropriate a single dime for this African outpost of the Soviet empire.

In the same Lusaka speech in which the Secretary promised aid to Mozambique, he also promised to "triple our support for development programs in southern and central Africa over the next two years." I can tell you that the people of my congressional district are not interested in sending many millions of their tax dollars to the countries that have been offered this aid. Most of them are dictatorships of one form or another. Most are very questionable in terms of whether they would ever become stable allies of the United States....

But I promise this: I will never vote to support them with American tax dollars.

The resentment and opposition to American foreign policy is not a domestic phenomenon in any sense. Some of our best friends are beginning to despair of our ever regaining our senses and acting like a great nation should when dealing with other nations. An example comes to us from the Australian press. Vice President Nelson Rockefeller went on a world tour in March and April, visited Australia in the first week of April. That event was the subject of an editorial which appeared in the Australian News Weekly of April 7. Here are excerpts:

The visit of the American Vice-President, Mr. Nelson Rockefeller, has come and gone with the anticipated outbreak of nasty violence....Mr. Rockefeller is not one of this newspaper's favorite Americans. The fraudulent policy of detente, which has prevailed in the Kissinger era, cannot be dissociated from the financial pressure brought on the U.S. government by great American banking institutions, including the Rockefeller controlled Chase Manhattan Bank. They have supported detente, regardless of security risks, to expand profitable trade with the Soviet.

Mr. Rockefeller's "gift" of $50,000 to Dr. Kissinger—to demonstrate the personal regard in which he held the man who later became Secretary of State—did not add to the general health of the American political system.

The ceremonial aspects of the visit placed a desirable emphasis on the overwhelming wish of the Australian people for close association with the United States....Yet, once again, the rhetoric which covered the visit may do a signal disservice to the cause of Australian security...."Wishing," as President Lyndon Johnson pointed out in one of his more significant Australian speeches, "won't necessarily make it so."

We are fools if we overlook the fact that, however much we want the United States to recover its nerve and to be faithful to its allies, we can do nothing about it. As to fidelity, the record in South Vietnam, Israel and Angola is only too clear and too recent.

Most recently in Angola, there can be little doubt that the United States, however unofficially, gave the South Africans the 'nod' to try to save the Unita forces; and then, when the Soviet made the going too tough, it left the South Africans hanging at the end of a noose. That sort of thing can happen to the ally of any one of the Great Powers, not excluding Australia....

Incidentally, that comment concerning the double-cross of South Africa is confirmed in a negative way by South African Prime Minister John Vorster. Interviewed by the senior editor of Newsweek, Arnaud de Borchgrave, the following series of questions and answers appeared in the current (May 17) issue of the weekly, on page 53, under the heading, "I Won't Call You a Liar":

"Q. Would it be accurate to say that the U.S. solicited South Africa's help to turn the tide against the Russians and Cubans in Angola last fall?"

"A....If you are making the statement, I won't call you a liar."

"Q. Would it also be accurate to say you received a green light from Kissinger for a military operation in Angola and that at least six moderate Black African presidents had given you their blessings for the same operation?"

"A. If you say that of your own accord, I will not call you a liar."

"Q. Were you, in other words, ditched in midstream by Washington?"

"A. I am not prepared to discuss it, but remember that your own Congress was also involved in the ditching of the pro-Western African (forces in Angola)."

THE PERFIDIOUS PARADOX

Here is a situation that seems incongruous, ambiguous, almost unexplainable:

First. The State Department under Henry Kissinger tolerates the expansion of Communism in Mexico, Panama, and other Latin American neighbors; promotes the advance of Communism in Africa; extends favored nation treatment to Russia and the Soviet Satellites. And yet:

Second. Monopoly capitalists are rushing to invest money and build plants in Communist countries, knowing that they face the danger of the nationalization of industries and the confiscation of their investments and physical properties by some petty dictator. This is especially true in Latin America and in Black Africa. Indeed, it does seem that the monopoly capitalists are eagerly selling the rope with which they are to be hanged.

Of course, words are spoken in an attempt to deny that Communism is being promoted by American-based interests. But here is a case where actions speak much louder than words. Witness the fact that the Rockefeller family has been very busy industrializing Russia and the Soviet Satellites, and in "developing" Latin America and Black Africa. Yet, upon returning to the United States and prior to flying to Italy to inspect earthquake devastation, Nelson Rockefeller spoke at the International Press Institute's annual convention, which was held this year in Philadelphia. There he told the 245 assembled journalists that "a continuing attempt is underway to organize the world into a new empire in which the Soviet sun never sets."

"This new form of imperialism," he said, "involves ideological, diplomatic, economic, financial, political and military structures and relationships importantly dominated and directed from Moscow," He then said "a positive and far closer partnership of the independent nations of the world would be needed to oppose the Soviet's expansionist thrust. The independent nations must work together in the common interest."

In other words, the way to defeat Communism is to promote Interdependence!

We find an echo of this same concept in the words of President Ford. He issued a Presidential Proclamation naming this week (beginning May 16, 1976) as World Trade Week. The second paragraph of that proclamation begins:

"The patriots who declared independence in 1776 set the United States on the path to leadership in the interdependent world of 1976." (Emphasis added.)

The theme of this World Trade Week might well be expressed in these words: The best way to whip the Commies is to join 'em in an interdependent world. So, promote trade with the Soviet and promote aid to all Soviet Satellites.

Controversial columnist Jack Anderson opted to echo Nelson Rockefeller in the former's mind-bending effort of May 13. Said Anderson:

"It is a grim historical fact that the Soviets, who profess to be leading a world crusade against imperialism, are spreading the imperialism they cry so loudly against. It is a new, insidious form of imperialism which imposes Soviet tyranny upon nations in the name of peoples democracies. This new imperialism is being carried into Southeast Asia, South America, Africa and the Middle East not by Soviets bearing arms but by Soviets bearing gifts."

True enough. But who supplies the Soviets with those gifts they give to others? This question Anderson and Rockefeller both choose to ignore.

But there is the other question: If the Monopoly Capitalists know that their investments are risky and apt to be appropriated by some petty black dictator, why are they so anxious to make enormous investments in such a country?

Before answering the question, let's establish the fact that such investments are being made. And here we use as our witness the business and finance section of The New York Times of Sunday, May 9:

American-based companies and investors have $3.68 billion worth of assets in Africa, and almost two-thirds of that is in the so-called "developing countries." Says the NYT: "American companies have more than $2.2 billion worth of assets in the developing nations of Africa, engage in more trade with them than with South Africa and Rhodesia combined."

Now, investments in South Africa and in Rhodesia would be called safe investments. The governments are trustworthy and stable. (At least they were before Kissinger's last visit to Darkest Africa.) This is not true of the other nations of Africa, where investments are admittedly risky. And yet:

Socialistic countries like Tanzania, Mozambique, now Angola, are hostile to foreign investors (yet we give $12.5 million to Mozambique because it borders on Rhodesia.) In Zambia and Zaire the governments are about to nationalize their mines but are willing to let foreign companies do the mining for them. Ghana and Nigeria also want government control over all foreign investments "but this has not deterred Kaiser aluminum from expanding its bauxite operation in Ghana.

"Some of the more radical countries," says the NYTimes, "are showing new interest in attracting foreign investment. Sierre Leone recently persuaded Bethlehem Steel and the Nord Resources Corporation to invest $28 million in developing titanium deposits. Mauritania is trying to attract outside investment again after taking over foreign-owned mines, while Reynolds Metals and Kaiser Aluminum continue to run their bauxite plants in highly socialistic Guinea."

And so on down the line, country after country, and multinational corporation after multinational corporation. Some 350 American-based companies have subsidiaries in Africa. "Much secrecy—both corporate and governmental—cloaks the size of individual investments," says the NYTimes.

But here's the point: Investments are safe only in South Africa and Rhodesia. Investments are apt to be confiscated at a coup's notice in any other country in Africa. And yet, investors continue to invest.

Why?

Because they can't lose. You and I—the taxpayers of America—guarantee those investments. There is the "government-backed Overseas Private Investment Corporation (OPIC)—which insures foreign investments against expropriation," says the NYTimes. Furthermore, while in Africa, Kissinger proposed the establishment of a new international resources bank, and:

"He suggested that the new bank would guarantee private companies against nationalization by radical African governments and would offer protection to developing nations against exploitation by private business interests." In other words, the American taxpayer will guarantee the developer against expropriation and will at the same time guarantee the developing nation against business exploitation!

So, you see, the Monopoly Capitalist is insured against loss, by little old you and me, the taxpayers. Furthermore, when we speak of Monopoly Capitalism, we should understand that Soviet Russia is the product of Monopoly Capitalism, and its largest and best operated institution.

DON BELL REPORTS Weekly, accenting the Christian American point of view. Two copies of each issue are mailed first class to each subscriber, except overseas airmail. Subscription rate: $24 per year. Extra copies 10¢ each. Please address all orders to:
DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

THE INTERLOCKING NETWORK OF WORLD AUTHORITIES

A NEW WORLD ECONOMIC ORDER

It is significant that Philadelphia, "the city of brotherly love," has become the focal point of the drive to create a New World Order. Meeting place of the first Continental Congress in 1774, site of the signing of the Declaration of Independence in 1776, birthplace of the Constitution in 1787, Capital of the United States from 1790 to 1800, Philadelphia was chosen in this generation to become the site of the signing of a Declaration of INTERdependence. It was here that John F. Kennedy, the 35th President of the United States and fourth to be assassinated, first enunciated the principles of interdependence as the basis of the foreign policy which would be pursued by the "New Frontier." When the text of a "Declaration of Interdependence" was written by Henry Steele Commager and signed by the 124 "Members of Congress for Peace Through Law," in person or by proxy, Philadelphia was chosen as the place for the ceremony. And taking the place of the Continental Congress of 1776 was the World Affairs Council of Philadelphia.

This spurious, copyrighted document declared that "now we must join others to bring forth a new world order" because, among other reasons, "all people are part of one global community, dependent on one body of resources, bound together by the ties of a common humanity and associated in a common adventure on the planet Earth."

Here is a significant historical repetition: The French government of 1776 aided the new United States greatly in the struggle for independence. And now, 200 years later, the French government seeks to aid those who are striving for interdependence. French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing, who came to the United States for the primary purpose of selling an airplane and a travel service, addressed the Congress of the United States and then went to Philadelphia as guest of the World Affairs Council and there "proposed creation of 'a new world economic order' which he said would help open the way to a more stable, more peaceful world."

"It is imperative for us to strive to stand together," he said. "The countries of the world today are interdependent." ...

We are now being told by the professional opinion molders that an economic one world must precede or supersede a political one world. This "new world economic order" is the dominant theme. And how this economic world order would be married to the political world order was the subject of an article recently published in a number of metropolitan dailies.

David W. Ewing is a member of the faculty of the Harvard Business School, which is a kind of recruiting depot for the Rockefeller interests. And Ewing is one of those professional opinion molders whose chief assignment is the winning of friends and the influencing of people in behalf of the multinational corporations. And Ewing's latest article may be a prediction of things to come. It should be recalled that the Rockefellers bought and paid for the land and the buildings which house the United Nations Organization in New York City. Bearing this in mind, please read the following article; we are quoting from the San Francisco Examiner of April 23, 1976:

WHY NOT OPEN THE UNITED NATIONS TO MULTINATIONAL CORPORATIONS?

By David W. Ewing

When the United Nations was conceived in San Francisco 31 years ago, it was the hope of the world. Today it is the world's greatest disappointment. Many people regard it as an ineffectual debating society. What is the trouble with the UN? The main trouble with the UN is that it doesn't represent many powerful people who know how to meet the world's economic needs. It represents the politicians of the world, and that is important—but politics is not where all the action is today. Much of the action now is industrial. The world is being transformed not so much by diplomats, legislators, and solons as by businessmen and technologists. And if ignorance paid dividends, most delegates to the UN would be wealthy because of what they don't know about business and technology.

To breathe new life into the UN why not admit delegates from the great economic powers of the world? Delegations from multinational corporations like Exxon, General Motors, IBM, Unilever, Hitachi, and Bayer should sit with delegations from Washington, London, Berlin, and Tokyo. In short, the UN should represent the world's business honchos as well as the political honchos.

When the UN charter was drawn up after World War II, the term "multinational corporation" was unknown. Multinational corporations as we know them today had not been born. But today the first generation of economic prodigies has grown up. Multinationals like Exxon and General Motors have greater annual sales than the gross national products of Austria, Turkey, Norway, Portugal, Peru, Egypt, Algeria, and scores of other nations. Among the world's 100 biggest economic units, multinational firms outnumber nations 54 to 46. Multinational companies account for more than one-fifth of the world's trade. The top 500 U.S. industrial corporations and the 300 largest foreign companies have assets of $1.26 trillion, and they employ well in excess of 30 million employees. They are everywhere. Holiday Inns and Pepsi-Cola bottling plants in Moscow. A Singer sewing machine plant in Poland. Avis and Hertz competing in Frankfurt. Sears Roebuck in many Latin American countries. Fairchild Camera, Texas Instruments, and Motorola in Hong Kong. Sony in San Diego.

In contrast to the fast-growing multinationals, nations seem to be losing their grip. They are giving up control over important international flows of people, material, money, and technological ideas. According to Professor C.P. Kindleberger of Massachusetts Institute of Technology, "The nation-state is just about through as an economic unit."

But the multinationals don't have geographical territories, as nations do. Doesn't this rule them out in a body like the UN?

It should be remembered that other organizations don't always insist that delegates represent territories. Political conventions have delegates-at-large in addition to those who represent certain states, districts, or counties. The reasoning is that it is good for some delegates to consider the interests of the party as a whole and not be tied down to local interests and constituencies. This for the United Nations, too. In fact, delegations from multinational corporations might counteract a severe failing of the United Nations. Because of their worldwide 'constituencies,' multinationals would be more interested in the global economy than in the selfish interests of particular nations.

For example, Unilever, a giant manufacturer of food and chemical products has headquarters in London and Amsterdam. But it must be concerned about peaceful trade and development throughout the world rather with the interests of the English and Dutch alone. It manufactures and sells in nearly 60 countries.

Delegates from multinationals would not be interested in killing people — their companies' customers. They would be concerned instead with everyday things like food, fuel, fashion, and appliances. The multinationals wouldn't see much point in the world spending $200 billion a year in armaments to "protect" a global population much of which earns less than $100 per year per person.

Critics of multinational corporations say the corpocrats are in cahoots with the military and will sell armaments to any country where they can make a profit. But for some time now only businessmen in defense contracting, a tiny portion of the whole, have had any interest in military adventures. Multinational firms have played little or no part in the 65 armed conflicts that occurred since World War II.

Are businessmen too mercenary for a great body like the UN? Numerous diplomats say business types don't have the smarts for government work. In reality, a large corporation is a "minigovernment" of its own. It does not just pump oil or mine copper or sell toiletries. Kaiser, Eastman Kodak, and many other companies created and manage imaginative medical programs. IBM runs country clubs. Reynolds Tobacco has chaplains on its staff.

But the main point is that the world's problems are not what they used to be. The big issues are no longer the British Empire, white supremacy, religion, national alliances, or even communism.

The burning questions are:

How many people in the world will eat tomorrow? Where will our energy come from? Can inflation be contained? Can whole countries be saved from bankruptcy?

If the UN is going to come to grips with problems like these, it should consider opening its doors to the multinationals.

(end of article)

This is neither the time nor the place to point out the glaring inconsistencies or to refute the erroneous statements contained in this propaganda piece. It is sufficient to simplify by declaring that this is an appeal for the establishment of Corporate Socialism on a worldwide scale.

More importantly: This is the kind of a New World Order that the Rockefeller-Rothschild Monopoly Capitalists are seeking to establish in our generation. And they haven't far to go before they will have reached their goal. Already there are established certain international organizations that function as world authorities in their particular spheres of activity. Some are attached to the UN, as are the International Monetary Fund and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank). Other organizations act as power blocs functioning in specialized areas of the world. There is the Bilderberger Group which is financed by the Rockefellers and the Rothschilds and run in their behalf by Prince Bernhard of The Netherlands. This organization determines policies for the Western Nations that are associated with NATO. Currently under a cloud because Prince Bernhard was accused of taking a bribe in the Lockheed disclosures, the Bilderbergers cancelled their last meeting and we have not heard of any arrangements for a future meeting. What may be serving as a temporary substitute: Henry Kissinger flew to Oslo on May 19th for a special briefing session with NATO chiefs. He assured them that detente may have been killed as a word, but its spirit lives on and will prevail regardless of who wins in the November election. Which is tantamount to saying that no matter who is President, the CFR-based cabal will still be running the country, especially in its conduct with other countries.

Then there is the seldom mentioned but extremely important Dartmouth Conference, so named because its first meeting ten years ago was held at Dartmouth University. This year's semi-secret meeting was held at Rio Rico, a small community south of Tucson, Arizona. The Dartmouth Conference is a very restricted affair, only American and Russian VIPs are permitted to attend, and working journalists are barred. The Arizona Republic did its best to cover the meeting, learned that Americans attending the conference included David Rockefeller; Harold Agnew of the Los Alamos Scientific Laboratory; Paul Doty, director of Programs for Science and International Affairs at Harvard University; Barry Blechman of Brookings Institute; and Norman Cousins of Saturday Review. The Soviet delegation was headed by Georgi Zhukov, deputy of the Supreme Soviet of the USSR. Also attending were Stanislav Borrisov, deputy minister of finance; Georgi Arbatov, director of the Institute for the study of the USA and Canada; Evgenii Primakov, deputy director of the Institute of World Economics and International Relations; and Nil Zoubkov of the Soviet Peace Committee.

What these unofficial representatives of the United States and official representatives of the Soviet Union actually discussed is known only to the delegates attending and to the higher echelon to whom they will have reported. They did, however, issue a statement for "public perusal" which said very little in many words. "The conferees discussed a wide range of urgent problems relating to the improvement of US-USSR relations and the constructive role both should play in consolidating world peace and in promoting international cooperation," said the joint communique of the 10th Dartmouth Conference. And "the conferees expressed their great appreciation for the warm and gracious hospitality of their Arizona hosts."

Latest to be created but probably the most important and most powerful of all these international organizations that have been set up to control certain regions of the world, is the Trilateral Commission. This cabal is composed of chosen delegates who represent the financial, commercial, industrial, political and social interests of the United States, Japan, and the countries that are members of the European Common Market. Created by David Rockefeller, all of the American members of this Trilateral Commission were hand-picked by Rockefeller or his assistants.

Important in this connection is the fact that a charter member of the Trilateral Commission is Jimmy Carter, the peanut planter who aspires to become President of the United States. Carter was selected by Rockefeller before Carter decided to run for the Presidency. He has been carefully groomed and trained by Rockefeller henchmen, especially by Zbigniew Brzezinski, director of the Trilateral Commission, professor at Columbia University, chief speechwriter for Jimmy Carter, and slated to replace Henry Kissinger if and when Carter becomes President.

Carter has been so precisely programmed that he reminds one of a computerized zombie. When asked a question there is a pronounced pause, as though the pre-recorded tape were whirring to the point where that particular answer was recorded; then out comes the programmed response, in a low-keyed monotone. But it is a precise answer, or, if no such answer has been taped, then comes the pat response: "That is a question I would rather not answer until I have examined it more closely." The voice of Carter, but the hand of Brzezinski who is the right hand of David Rockefeller.

That there is an intensive effort to win, if not the Presidential election, at least the Democratic nomination, for Jimmy Carter, is evidenced by a carefully conducted interview of Carter in the May issue of Fortune, and a front-page picture plus a similar interview in the conservative U.S. News & World Report.

Stop Press: In regard to the article by David Ewing concerning the future role of multinational corporations in world government, Nelson Rockefeller's approval of Ewing's suggestion is confirmed in a dispatch from Reuters, the British news agency. Rockefeller spoke to the International Press Institute on May 10, in Philadelphia. The Vice President defended the role of big business in helping to develop the Third World, and quoting the Reuters dispatch:

"Rockefeller said that the economic progress from the activities of one multinational company was worth 'at least three divisions' in the struggle against "subversion, terrorism and disruption in the lives of the peoples of these countries." He admitted that there had been 'abuses and problems' with the multinationals, which he said needed to be corrected and the individuals responsible rooted out. 'However,' he said, 'the answer to the correction of such abuses does not lie in hasty attempts to chop such corporations into pieces or to tax them into paralysis'."

Meanwhile, the Democratic Platform panel got underway, elected as its chairman Gov. Wendell Anderson of Minnesota. Anderson had just won a major victory for the forces of interdependence. According to the Borger (Texas) News-Herald of May 6:

"Minnesota observed Law Day Saturday by becoming the first state to endorse the Declaration of Interdependence....Minnesota's endorsement was signed by Gov. Wendell Anderson...."

the active Democratic candidates reflect the stand on Interdependence taken by Gov. Anderson in behalf of the people of Minnesota. Jimmy Carter favors Interdependence because David Rockefeller promotes the idea of Interdependence. Moe Udall favors Interdependence because it is one of the prime planks of international socialism. According to the Los Angeles Times of May 11: "Gov. (Jerry) Brown, speaking to a predominantly black group of Los Angeles ministers, said Monday that voters were ready to accept the concept of interdependence in American society and with other nations.... "We are living on a small planet—we are interdependent," Brown said, adding that his foreign policy, if he were President, would 'evolve' out of his domestic policies."

As for the Republican candidates, Incumbent Ford favors interdependence, Reagan has spoken against it. As for the dark horse who hoped to win without running: it would seem that Nelson's politics had begun to hamper brother David's plans for developing multinational world power. And David is the boss in the Rockefeller family. Nelson's recent speeches and actions indicate that he is now helping David build a world government and is concentrating on international rather than national politics. David is in control of the National Republican Party (or at least so he thinks) and Ford is his man; while David also controls the National Democratic Party and Carter is his man.

And at the world level, if David can save that Rockefeller investment by turning the UN into a Corporate Socialist World Government, there'll be a big job open for brother Nelson at the top of the world.

But these are the plans of men. And we recall that saying: "Man proposes, but God disposes."

For information concerning this letter write:
DON BELL REPORTS, P.O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

BICENTENNARY OF INDEPENDENCE OR BIRTHDATE OF INTERDEPENDENCE?

STEALING THE BICENTENNIAL

On the 4th of July, 1976, the United States will begin the celebration of her 200th birthday, and the celebration is scheduled to continue for 12 full months. What has happened already in 1976 is but prologue; the real celebrating starts on the birthday of the Declaration of Independence. However, the Socialists are planning that this observance of the birth of freedom in America shall become, instead, the funeral of liberty. And the Socialists certainly have a head start. They have a new Constitution for the Newstates of America, a new Declaration of Interdependence, and a new Constitution for the World Federation of States. And, years ago, they decided upon July 4, 1976 as their target date.

But a slowly awakening citizenry has been able to cause them a few setbacks. For example: the promoters of this Declaration of Interdependence had planned a big ceremony in Washington, D.C. on May 12, at which time over a hundred U.S. Senators and Representatives would sign the document. But there were patriots to point out that the signing of such a document by anyone who had taken an oath to uphold the Constitution of the United States, would be tantamount to treason. Result: the May 12th ceremony was called off; many original signers recanted and said they had been deceived.

Also: The Senate Internal Security Subcommittee released a report titled "The Attempt to Steal the Bicentennial" which declared that "the Peoples Bicentennial Commission (PBC) is a far-left organization whose true views are far closer to those of Fidel Castro and Mao Tse-tung than they are to those of our founding fathers. Its participation in the Bicentennial is a deception and a fraud. By muscling in on the Bicentennial observance, it seeks first of all, to pervert its meaning, and secondly, to exploit it for the purpose of overthrowing our free society."

"There is widespread public confusion," said the report, "about the real nature and purpose of the PBC. Because the name is so similar, many people confuse it with the official American Revolution Bicentennial Administration."

In a preface to this official Senate report, the chairman of the subcommittee, Senator James Eastland, commented: "It is obvious that the successful national observance of our Bicentennial will require the cooperation of our schools, of our churches, of our media, and of our great national organizations. But the evidence presented in this report and in the hearing record on which it is based points to the conclusion that... the Peoples Bicentennial Commission, operating with some hundreds of thousands of dollars, has been far more successful in reaching our churches, our schools, and our media, than has the official Bicentennial organization, ARBA."

As a matter of interest to taxpayers: the very first money PBC received was a grant of $7,210 from the National Endowment for the Humanities, a government agency. The Senate subcommittee found that the grant was approved by ARBA, supposedly acting in complete ignorance of the real purposes of PBC. Such a grant is equivalent to government sponsorship of PBC activities; so the duping of foundations and liberal financial "angels" would then be greatly simplified.

Following are excerpts from this official Senate Subcommittee Report, issued on May 6, 1976:

"Within the past month it (PBC) has sent 8,000 cassette recordings, accompanied by first name cover letters, to the wives of corporation executives. The tape recordings told the wives about 'the recent wave of corporate scandals and criminal activity,' and called upon the wives in effect, to cross examine their husbands about any 'criminal and abusive policies' in which they might be involved. In recent weeks, too,

'the PBC has sent letters to some thousands of secretaries of corporation executives, offering a reward of $25,000 to any secretary who would provide information leading to the successful prosecution of her boss.

"It has announced plans for a mass demonstration... in Washington, D.C. on July 4th; and the PBC has repeatedly claimed that it plans to mobilize 250,000 people for the occasion. It is also secretly collaborating with the National July 4th Coalition, an amalgam of far-left organizations which is planning a parallel demonstration in Philadelphia....

"What is the Peoples Bicentennial Commission? (It) poses as a 'nationwide citizens organization dedicated to restoring the democratic principles that shaped the birth of this republic.' In actual fact, it is a propaganda and organizing tool of a small group of new-left political extremists whose pantheon of political heroes include such Marxist extremists as Fidel Castro, Mao Tse-tung, Che Guevara, and Regis Debray, and who seek to pervert the meaning of the American Revolution and to exploit the Bicentennial celebration in order to further their own revolutionary goals.... Under the guise of patriotic claims, and with the appearance of the most altruistic concern for the 'little guy,' they seek to promote dissatisfactions and divisions among broad segments of the population. Methodically they seek to discredit each of the traditions and institutions of the existing political and economic system, and to encourage the citizenry to demand the bit-by-bit substitution of those of a socialist state. Their program is extremely well thought out, and it is subtle. It has fooled quite a number of honest and well-meaning people and organizations, and has garnered encouragement and financial support from some most unlikely sources.... To quote an expression which was responsible for launching the PBC, the Peoples Bicentennial Commission seeks to 'radicalize Americans by Americanizing radicalism.'...

Newspaper columns and TV and radio programs have thrown open their doors to the PBC.... Even the staid Wall Street Journal has written favorably of the PBC, describing its programs as 'old fashioned egalitarianism'—this, despite the fact that the PBC literature calls for the abolition of corporate ownership and its replacement by worker and community ownership....

"PBC reports that its radio series, 'The Voices of '76' is being aired on a daily basis by 924 radio stations across the U.S.; that a television series with a similar caption is being aired on an ongoing basis by 102 TV stations in major metropolitan areas; that the PBC feature services are sent to over 14,000 general and specialized media publications and journals; and that the PBC's ambitious book publishing program includes major publishers like Bantam Books, Simon and Schuster, and McGraw Hill.... PBC reports that 'thousands of libraries, churches, fraternal clubs, schools, civic associations, etc., are currently using (educational) materials and (social action) programs especially developed by the PBC.' According to PBC, 65,000 churches are using Bicentennial material prepared by it."
(end of extended quotation)

The two leaders of the PBC are Jerry Rifkin who calls himself an economist but actually is a New Left activist; and John Rossen, a long time member of the Communist Party. This will explain why the PBC is affiliated with that other leftist group, the July 4th Coalition. The PBC pretends to be cultural and intellectual in its approach, while the July 4th Coalition is physically activist—the former attacks with words and pictures, while the latter is apt to use bombs and bullets.

J4C plans a massive counter-demonstration on July 4th in Philadelphia, hopes to have at least 80,000 out-of-town demonstrators from over 100 radical organizations, on hand to disrupt all patriotic demonstrations that are planned for the Nation's 200th birthday.

There are 102 such organizations that are cooperating with J4C. There was an organizational conference held on March 27-28, 1976 on the premises of the New York University Law School on Washington Square. There were 230 representatives from 55 towns and 27 States. Sources within the J4C provided the following information:

"The keynote address was delivered by Jose Alberto Alvarez, first secretary of the U.S. branch of the PSP (Puerto Rican Socialist Party) who said that the United States had been weakened by the 'victory of the Vietnamese people' and the results of the war in Indochina." Alvarez said that now while U.S. imperialism is on the defensive 'all progressive sectors' in the United States must unite and 'demonstrate a new and higher level of unity' so that they can 'reinforce and deepen the trend of imperialist decline and the advance of our struggles. The July 4 mobilization in Philadelphia is an opportunity to do this.'

"The 'unity' theme was central to the meeting. The various demands to be raised were discussed and different organizations debated which were priorities and how they should be phrased. Alfredo Lopez (National Coordinator of J4C) stepped in to sum up the discussions, and the majority of those present basically agreed that the issues were unimportant, what really was important was getting as many demonstrators as possible into Philadelphia.

"Three general demands were agreed to, each with many subsidiary demands to suit the large number of J4C groups:

"1. For a Bicentennial without colonies—
Freedom for all oppressed nations.
Independence for Puerto Rico.
Sovereignty for American Indian Nations.
National Independence for Colonized Black People in the U.S.
Self-Determination for Mexican People in the U.S.
Stop the CIA/Military Intervention in Other Nations.
Stop U.S. Government Aid to Repressive Regimes.

"2. For full democracy and equality. This included:
Defeat S-1 (Senate Bill 1) and All Repressive Legislation.
Equal Rights for Gay (homosexual) People.
End the Oppression of Women.

"3. For jobs and a decent standard of living. The principal demand was for 'jobs for all at living wages and a guaranteed income'."
(end of quotation)

The organizations that sent representatives to the March 27-28 J4C Conference, and are cooperating with J4C in disrupting the Nation's 200th birthday celebrations, included the following:

Action for Women in Chile
African People's Party
African People's Socialist Party
Agricultural Workers Association
Alliance for Labor and Community Action
Alternative Press Syndicate
American Friends Service Committee, Nationwide Women's Program
American Indian Movement
ARISE, NYC
Attica Now
Baltimore Chile Group
Black Economic Development Conference

Black Economic Survival, Brooklyn
Black Panther Party
Brooklyn Committee to Defeat S-1
Bryn Mawr-Haverford Social Action Caucus
Caucus for a New Political Science
Center for Autonomous Social Action (CASA)
Committee for the Freedom of the Puerto Rican Nationalists Committee to End Sterilization Abuse
Communist Party, USA
Co-op City Tenants Organization
Deacons for Defense and Justice
Delta Ministry
District 65, Boston local Ecumenical Program for Interamerican Communications and Action
El Comite
Ethiopian Women's Reparation Committee
Fightback
Friends of Indochina
Friendship
Federation of Socialist Puerto Rican University Students
Ganlenkeh Support Committee
Granite State Alliance, N.H.
Guardian
Hard Times Coalition
Hartford Federation of Teachers
Intercommunal Survival Committee
International Indian Treaty Council
International Workers Party
Jesuit Conference, Office of Social Ministries
Jihad News
Lance Yellowhand Defense Committee
Liberation Support Committee, East Coast
Local 215, District Council 1707
Manchester Food Club, Pittsburgh
Mass Party Organizing Committee
Mid Night Special
Mountain Community Union, Morgantown, W. Va.
Movimiento Popular Dominicano
National Coalition for Social Change
National Committee for the Defense of Political Prisoners
National Lawyers Guild
National Student Coalition Against Racism
Native American Solidarity Committee
New American Movement
New Unity
New World Resource Center, Chicago
New York City Unemployed Council
New York Coalition to Defeat S-1
New York Student Coalition Against Racism
New York Theological Seminary
Non Intervention in Chile
Northwest Bronx Peace Committee
Organizing Committee for a Fifth Estate
Palestine Solidarity Committee
Pardon Records
Penn State University Coalition
People Against Racism in Education
People for Economic Survival
People for Radical Action
Peoples Bicentennial, Chicago
Peoples Bicentennial Commission, Manchester, New Hampshire
Prairie Fire Organizing Committee
Progressive Socialist Workers
Puerto Rican Solidarity Committee
Puerto Rican Socialist Party
Queens Coalition for Peace and Justice RESIST
Republic of New Africa
Revolutionary Marxist Organizing Committee

Seven Days
Social Service Employees Union, Local 371
Socialist Caucus, Gay Academic Union
Socialist Party, NYC
Socialist Workers Party
Spartacist League
Stars for a New Age
Strike Support Committee
Third World Women's Alliance
Twin Cities Women's Union
Underground Tonight Show
Unemployment Council of Philadelphia
Union of Democratic Filipinos
United Black Workers
United Electrical Workers Union
United Members Committee 1199
U.S. Committee for Panamanian Sovereignty
Venceremos Brigade
War Resisters League
Wisconsin Alliance
Workers Unity, St. Louis, Mo.
Workers World
Youth Against War and Fascism
Youth International Party

Some of the organizations in this list are international in scope, some are national, while others are State and local organizations. But all of them are sending activist demonstrators to Philadelphia, or to New York City, to stage counter-demonstrations on July 4th. Plans also include Washington, D.C., Los Angeles, San Francisco, and plans are being made to include other cities where important Bicentennial events are scheduled.

A FOUR-WAY ATTACK?

So, we might summarize: Civil disruption and property destruction by the New Left and the Old Communists, anti-American propaganda and pro-Communist programs by the Peoples Bicentennial Commission, Interdependence and a New World Order promotions by World Affairs Councils, National Council of Churches, National Education Association, Aspen Institute for Humanistic Studies, and other internationalist think tanks—and, finally, certain governmental agencies are actually helping to make of the Nation's 200th birthday, a funeral instead.

The State of Pennsylvania is said to be sponsoring a constitutional convention that is being conducted by World United, Inc., of Valley Forge Park, King of Prussia, Pa. 19402. This convention, which is being held in Independence Hall in Philadelphia, is a simulation of the original Convention which wrote the Constitution of the United States. Only this convention which is now being held and which is to continue until July 4, is designed to produce a New World Constitution, complete with a Bill of Human Rights for the world, and setting up a permanent "Secretariat of Humanities" to superintend the government of the world. Said one observer: "The official proposal of the State of Pennsylvania to use Independence Hall as the place to destroy American Independence with a New World Constitution on July 4, 1976, is a calculated insult to time, place and documentation of the birth of our Nation."

In line with this One World Movement and July 4th as a focal date, there has been set up yet another front: The National Commission to Cope with Interdependence. The 32-member commission is loaded with CFR types, including the man who would replace Kissinger as Secretary of State, Zbigniew Brzezinski. Rep. John Ashbrook commented:

"It has the same old coalition. The hard core leftists and socialists, the liberal dogooders and a spattering of ideologs ranging from Ossie Davis whose Communist-front activities would fill this page, to Clare Booth Luce who on occasion is considered as a conservative by some of my colleagues. The New York, east coast liberal establishment types—the John McCloy's, the New York Times, the foundation striped suit set—they are all there. The old Kennedy-Johnson liberals like Nicholas Katzenbach, Harlan Cleveland, and consumer advocate Esther Peterson are there. Defeated political liberals like Ohio's infamous former Governor John Gilligan and William Scranton. Then, too, several solid citizens who are not ideologically tainted are thrown in for respectability, used—and I use that word deliberately—to cover the true nature of the majority of the activist-front group."

And thus are they stealing the Nation's Bicentennial Celebration. Commenting on the crisis in national affairs, one commentator said: "We need men to go to Washington and Philadelphia to... convince these people of the error of their ways. The people of the United States have a right to observe and investigate such meetings to determine the degree of Treason and/or Sellout. Also, to take any action as may be necessary to preserve the Constitution of the United States and the Declaration of Independence."

And it would help mightily if there were a man in authority to command: "Let none but Christian Americans be on guard."

For information concerning this letter write:
DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

THE DAY THE DOLLAR DIES

AN IMPENDING CRISIS?

There are indications that certain events that were "planned that way" are not working out according to plan. Storm clouds are gathering over the regions of economics, monetary affairs, political and geopolitical areas of activity. The "elitists" may find it necessary to shift from carrots to sticks. The following is brief, but perhaps ominous:

ITEM:—Control of the world's supply of surplus food and the distribution thereof is as important—possibly even more important—than the control of money and/or munitions. Consequently, while setting the scene for future wars in Africa, Henry Kissinger proposed to UNCTAD delegates that a world food bank be established, with food being doled out to needy countries by a Central World Authority. Because Kissinger was speaking for the United States Government, and because the United States is the chief supplier of food for the world, it was more or less taken for granted that UNCTAD would approve the plan, especially since the World Bank, via Robert Strange McNamara, had suggested the same plan two years ago. But, supposedly led by the Cuban delegation, UNCTAD turned down the plan for a world food bank.

ITEM:—Possibly as a result of the foregoing and also for political reasons, President Ford has called for an International Economic Summit Conference, to be held June 27-28 in Puerto Rico "to chart a course to keep the recovery moving forward." The President's explanation was significant:

"The issue at the heart of the discussion is to determine what our nations can do, working together, to create a more prosperous and secure future for all our citizens. In the past, world leaders have met to deal with crises, but today's complex problems require that we meet to avoid them."

Also significant is the fact that the six nations invited to attend this meeting (Canada, France, West Germany, Italy, the United Kingdom and Japan) are also the nations that are represented in Rockefeller's Trilateral Commission.

ITEM:—Despite attempts at censorship, the word is beginning to leak out that two of the nation's largest multinational banks are cited as "problem banks" by federal bank examiners. An article that was published in European papers but received the "censorship" treatment in the U.S., begins:

"Two of the three largest banks in the United States have been placed on the problem list by the U.S. controller of the currency. New York's First National Bank (Citibank) and Chase Manhattan Bank, with combined assets of $100 billion, were placed on the problem list after bank examinations disclosed 'inadequate' capital at both banks and sharp increases in assets of questionable value compared with previous examinations."...

And an item which we have been assured did not appear in any U.S. newspaper, but which was published in Europe, reads:

"David Rockefeller, chairman of Chase, the world's third largest bank, declined to confirm or deny that Chase was classified as a problem bank, and would not discuss the examiners' findings, saying their reports are 'privileged.' 'If you have the information you're not entitled to it,' Mr. Rockefeller said. Despite loan write-offs of $210 million in the first nine months of last year, the bank's profits for the period were 15 per cent greater than the same period in 1974, Mr. Rockefeller said."

It should be pointed out that there is no real danger of either Chase or Citibank going broke or closing their doors. It's just that these 'privileged' banks do not operate under the same rules as your local bank. The best explanation we have seen was offered by L.T. Patterson, monetary expert who publishes a "Strategy Letter" which we regard highly. He writes:

"Preliminary to an understanding of U.S. banking is the concept that the top banks

(it's impossible to be precise as to the exact number) are in a different league from the rest of the fraternity. These top banks operate not as profit-making institutions for the benefit of stockholders, as do other institutions whose stock is (likewise) publicly owned and traded. These banks operate covertly and deceptively as an arm of the Federal Government, and more particularly as an arm of the Kissinger State Department! In contravention of all law and procedure. These banks further the purposes of the State Department (by-passing the Congress and the legislative process) so as to expand foreign aid at their will on direction of certain Elitists....

"This means that normal profit motives are not underlying the decisions of the management. They must, of course, avoid bankruptcy, and avoid harassment by the public and by Regulatory Agencies. (But) ... the profit motive is not the over-riding criterion of success... It is the accomplishment of the ideological and political goals of the Elitists who are in control."

ITEM:—Because Henry Kissinger is their key agent in this operation, and in spite of the admission that he is as an albatross around the neck of candidate Ford, Mr. Ford has been forced to insist that he will not get rid of Kissinger, and if he is re-elected he will ask Kissinger to remain on the job as Secretary of State.

ITEM:—Because these Elitist banks must remain solvent, the Federal Reserve System is used to protect their operations; and because of current difficulties the International Monetary Fund is holding a restricted and carefully controlled gold auction.

We have listed a few of the problems that beset the Elitists. Two domestic problems which we might add: Jimmy Carter is their choice on the Democratic slate, and he is beginning to be exposed as the phony that he really is. Which seems to mean that if he cannot secure sufficient delegates to win on the very first ballot he isn't going to win. And this would be a real set-back to the Trilateral Commissioners, the Bilderbergers, the Councilors on Foreign Relations, the 157 members of the Business Roundtable, and similar Elitist groups.

Also, a quandary is developing on the Republican side of the election picture. Ford, who is their man now that Nelson had been persuaded that he is more important out of the White House than in it, once boasted that he would win every State primary and win the nomination on the first ballot at Kansas City. But nobody is sure now and if both Carter and Ford lost out, one more big problem would demand a solution if the Elitists are to continue their steady march toward the New World Order uninterrupted and undelayed.

THE CASE FOR REPUDIATION

In addition to all the foregoing, there is yet another problem. Despite their attempts to disprove it, the national (indeed, the world) economic situation is not really improving and inflation continues and sooner or later something drastic will have to be done to save the country from total economic collapse. And more and more we are being told by more and more people who ought to know what they're talking about, that sooner or later we're all going to be forced to turn in this green paper we call money, and take in its place at reduced value, some fresh red paper that will serve as money.

The wholesale repudiation of a Nation's currency can be a traumatic experience. It has happened in a number of countries. In Germany, France, Russia, Japan, once in the United States when the Nation was young and when it began to be said that a thing of no value "wasn't worth a continental."

Your reporter witnessed the repudiation of a Nation's currency in 1945, when General Douglas MacArthur was working against awful odds brought on by our "ally" Soviet Russia and by our own State Department, to get a crushed country back on its feet. Millions of people in the defeated islands had little of convertible value but what was left of their paper yen and their savings accounts. And these they were forced to take to a central place, turn them in and accept in exchange an entirely new money with a new, reduced value. That Japan was able to overcome and recover as rapidly as she did, is a great tribute to the genius of General MacArthur as an administrator, this in addition to his having been, in the words of British Field Marshall Montgomery, "the best soldier the United States produced during World War II."

This being our Nation's Bicentennary, and there being the threat of a "repeat performance" in the matter of repudiation, it is well that we recall the circumstances that brought out that enduring phrase, "not worth a continental."

The original thirteen colonies had no lawful currency; but circulating throughout the New World was an accepted medium of exchange, the Spanish piastre, or "Spanish Milled Dollar," as it was called throughout the colonies. The word "dollar," by the way, comes from a corruption of the German word "thaler," and the "thaler" was a coin, not a piece of paper but a piece of minted metal bearing a stamp certifying its value. Remember, a dollar was a coin, not a piece of paper. However, when it became necessary for the young United States Government to raise money to prosecute a War of Independence, it also became necessary to issue paper money. This money was printed by a firm owned by Benjamin Franklin which later became a part of Prentice Hall. And this first U.S. Continental paper dollar bore the promise:

"This bill entitles the bearer to receive one Spanish Milled Dollar, or the value thereof in gold or silver, according to a resolution of Congress passed at Philadelphia, November 29, 1776."

Notice that this "Continental" was not a "dollar;" it was merely a promissory note entitling the bearer to receive in exchange a coined dollar, or the value thereof in silver or in gold. The "value thereof" was established by law: 371.25 grains of pure silver or 416 grains of standard silver, with gold established at that time at a 15-to-1 ratio (which was to cause trouble later on because of the comparative abundance of silver and the scarcity of gold. But that's another story which we needn't go into at this time.)

At the time of the signing of the Constitution, the term "lawful money" meant money in coin – a piece of metal with an official government stamp on it. And the "unit" of currency was the silver dollar.

The first "repudiation" came about because under the terms of the Articles of Confederation the Central Government could not levy and collect taxes; it had to depend on the thirteen States for its income. So it was able to print and issue those continental notes, but it was not able to redeem them at their face value when it got so bad that it took forty continentals to purchase one silver Spanish milled dollar, people started referring to anything without intrinsic value as being "not worth a Continental."

But, even when the actual coinage of the silver dollar was suspended for a number of years (our monetary history is a stormy one, thanks to the entrenched International Bankers), the dollar defined in silver continued as our "unit coin" in the measure of value in our monetary system until 1873, when gold was substituted for silver. In the meantime, between 1792 and 1873, paper currency continued to be issued. However, in this connection, the L.T. Patterson "Strategy Letter" for late April, 1976, makes this interesting comment:

"Just after the Civil War, the Supreme Courts of Indiana and Arkansas, each decided that when a statute made it a crime to steal 'lawful money' proof of the theft of bank notes would not support a conviction! Thus, to be convicted under the law, of theft of lawful money, you would have to steal coin, and not paper currency—otherwise, no guilt under the law!! (Interesting, isn't it?) My, how times have changed."

Now, to trace from the record how times have changed, the Patterson Strategy Letter for late May, 1976, has some very interesting information. It's copyrighted, so we'll paraphrase.

The "Continental" was ultimately repudiated and redeemed—at 40 Continentals for one Spanish Milled Dollar. Everybody but the International Bankers lost a lot of money when the inflation got out of control. The point being: A repudiation of currency in America in the 1970s does not set a precedent. It's been done before.

However, there would be this important difference: With the Continental repudiation the currency was converted into something of real value; at 2½% of face value, but still something of value. But this time, our currency is not convertible into anything of real value. There is nothing on the face of our currency which promises a conversion to coin, or to gold, or to silver. However, there is nothing to prevent the government from repudiating our currency by way of a forced exchange of one colored (or sized, or numbered) piece of paper for another. Or, of repudiating all currency in favor of a ledger entry in a Central Computerized Data Bank!

This repudiation is not a sudden thing; it has been a step-by-step program stretching over more than half a century. For example, in 1928 the wording on a five dollar bill read:

Redeemable in gold, on demand at the United States Treasury, or in gold or lawful money at any Federal Reserve Bank.

By 1950, the reference to gold had been totally eliminated and the legend read:

This note is legal tender for all debts, public and private, and is redeemable in lawful money at the United States Treasury or at any Federal Reserve Bank.

And today, take a bill out of your pocket and check the wording on it. Unless you are lucky and have a bill of a quite old issue, you will find the phrase:

This note is legal tender for all debts public and private.

Really different from the 1928 wording, isn't it? This amounted to slow but sure repudiation of currency, did it not? Of course, during this same time span, gold coins ceased to be minted, their use or holding save as jewelry became illegal, as did gold bullion. Then the government began taking the silver out of the coins and we now have alloy sandwich—another step in the march toward total repudiation.

Lately, you may have noticed yet another step: the withdrawal of all bills of large denomination. The thousand dollar bills disappeared; then the five hundred dollar bills. And today, if you went to your bank, handed the teller five twenties and asked for a one hundred dollar bill in exchange; the chances are that the teller wouldn't be able to find such a bill. If he did, he'd probably call it an accident and that a one hundred dollar bill is rarely seen in the bank and if one is seen, the Controller of the Currency has instructed the bank to turn it in because they are being taken out of circulation! Why?

The left-wing magazine The Washington Monthly recently ran a cover story, "Calling in the Big Bills:—Painless Way to Catch Tax Evaders and Cripple Organized Crime."

Sounds like a rational and legitimate justification for the calling in of big bills, doesn't it? However, later on in this article, we get a new reason for such action. We read: "The implication of all this detective work (regarding tax avoidance and white-collar crime) is clear: Currency Reform!"

The article then cites as a precedent for such a currency reform, the Soviet Union's repudiation of its currency in 1947 and again in 1961!

Most conservative and so-called right-wing economists and monetary experts are of the opinion that, on or before 1984—probably before since the Elitists seem to be running ahead of schedule—there will be a forced conversion of all green paper money to red paper money. Some insist that this red currency is already printed and ready for circulation whenever the signal is given.

However, they forget one thing: This will not alter the current system of using checks to buy merchandise and pay bills. Even if the federal snoopers are able to spy out all check transactions, the ability to write a check still provides some feeling of freedom on the part of the person with a checking account. And here the propaganda for a "new system" is already under way.

Members of the Federal Reserve began warning banks about five years ago that they would eventually strangle on the more than 30 billion checks Americans write each year. And they began urging the adoption of a national computer system that would automatically transfer funds between bank accounts. Now that national system is on the way to becoming global.

In a book titled "The Day the Dollar Dies," published in 1973, author William Cantelon wrote: "In America, I had talked with my banker friends. Without exception, every banker realized we were coming to the end of an old regime and the dawn of a new era. Our early ancestors had used shells, iron, cotton, or cattle as a medium of exchange. Then gold. Now, the paper currencies were becoming as antiquated as all of the obsolete systems that man has used. A new system was about to dawn over the western world and it would be the number system, made possible by the birth of the computer in 1946."

A network of computers tied together in unity over the world; a Central Computer driving Regional Computers, they in turn driving a multitude of local and terminal units; all connected by Telstar....

And the day the dollar dies, so will man's hope of freedom; unless he understands that there is a Power greater than man, and that there is a kind of freedom that mere man can never destroy.

DON BELL REPORTS Weekly, accenting the Christian American point of view. $24 per year. Extra copies: 10¢ each. Address: DON BELL REPORTS, P.O. Box 2223 Palm Beach, Florida 33480

THE PLOT TO DESTROY THE AMERICAN SYSTEM

SHOULD WE SINK THE SHIP TO RID IT OF THE RATS?

There is a mythological parable that seems to apply: Augeias, King of Elis, had innumerable herds of cattle. They were prized cattle, many were sacred white bulls, one of whom was Phaethon and was privileged to shine like a star. But, unhappily, these magnificent animals lived in foul stables, heaped high with manure of many years' accumulation.

One of the twelve labors of mighty Hercules consisted of the cleaning out of these filthy stables. Now, if Hercules had been thinking like many of our alleged great men of today, he would have burned down those stables, levelled off the land with a bulldozer, and built a new set of stables for the cattle. Instead, he breached the walls of the buildings, altered the courses of the two rivers Alpheus and Peneius, causing them to flow like twin torrents through the cowsheds, flushing out the accumulated filth. Hercules did not destroy the buildings, he cleansed them.

That is a myth. But our present situation is for real. We deal not with stables housing cattle, but with capitols and courtrooms and buildings housing agencies; structures filled with officials of doubtful integrity. And we who are often treated as magnificent cattle, to be milked and kept content, are beginning to grow restive, even as the animals who were enslaved by the pigs in George Orwell's Animal Farm.

And, like Hercules, we are faced with these alternatives: Do we act as conservatives and God-fearing men of sanity and demand that the buildings be cleansed and the rascals thrown out; or do we join the radicals and the socialist revolutionaries and demand that the very structure be destroyed and the Republic cease to be?

That there is need for a cleansing, there is little doubt. We are reminded daily of some new corruption or criminality, some treason or transgression against the Constitution by those who are charged with the responsibility of defending it against all enemies, foreign or domestic.

In these last years of our second century as a Republic, the serious assaults began with the Courts: Judges turned their backs on Law and began to adjudicate in terms of social justice. Forced integration, one-man-one-vote, Humanism ordered to replace all other religions in the schools, Miranda-type decisions, coddling of criminals at the expense of law-abiding citizens, interference with the forces charged with keeping the peace and maintaining law and order. The list seems endless when we consider the ways in which the Judiciary began to invade those areas of governmental activity that were reserved by the Constitution to the Executive and Legislative Branches. A prediction made by Thomas Jefferson about how judicial encroachments would destroy the Republic seemed about to be fulfilled. But then the Executive Branch began to step all over the Constitution. This led to the Watergate syndrome. But it also led to the establishment of a fourth branch of federal government, a branch called Regional Governance which is staffed by appointed Administrators and Regulators who have divided the Nation into ten parts with a capital city for each part, from which cities they control all services, handouts, physical improvements and developments, human resources, etc. That this entire Regional Governance layout is unconstitutional, is a fact that seems to bother them not at all. And the oppressions and restrictions that have been heaped upon the people by these Administrators and Regulators have grown so great that revolution is in the air: either the stables must be cleansed, or destroyed.

And, after the Judicial encroachments grew too onerous to endure without rebellion, and after Executive infringements became destructive of the life, liberty and pursuit of happiness which were said to be unalienable, then came the excesses of the Legislative Branch. Or, rather, then came public knowledge of the sins of the Congressmen. For sin is always rampant, is revealed only where there is Light.

In commenting on the latest of these personal exposures—the escapades of Congressman Hays—the sometime conservative columnist James J. Kilpatrick probably hit the right note when he pointed out that it is not Hays who is on trial, but the whole House. Kilpatrick's column reads, in part:

It is not Wayne Hays (D-Ohio) who stands metamorphically on trial this month. It is the whole House of Representatives. And it is imperative, or so it seems to me, that the House leadership be made to understand what is at stake in this affair. We are not dealing here with private morals. We are dealing with the public trust...the charge against Hays...is that he entangled his private life with the public business. Specifically, the charge is that he put his paramour on the public payroll at $14,000 a year, knowing that she was incapable of performing work approaching that value to the people. The question Hays must answer is: If it had not been for your "relationship," would you have employed her as a committee clerk?...

The federal government is operating this year on a budget approaching $400 billion. The Congress itself operates on a budget of $827 million. The $14,000 paid to Elizabeth Ray is thus very small. And this is how small it is: It is just small enough to be clearly understood.

Few of us can understand billions and millions, but every working man and woman in the country can understand $14,000. The widow who pays $1,500 in federal income taxes; the carpenter who pays $4,000; the school teacher who pays $2,500; the farmer who pays $3,200—each of them knows exactly what it is to labor and pay taxes. If the charge against Hays is true, every hard-earned dollar these little people pay in taxes—theirs and much more—was squandered by Wayne Hays in order "to help" Elizabeth Ray.

The last time we heard such charges was in the case of Congressman Adam Clayton Powell (D.-N.Y.). We tend now to measure time by the Watergate clock. So measured, the Powell case was a long time ago. The American people, disillusioned and disenchanted by the Watergate experience, never have held their public institutions in lower regard. The loss of confidence is pervasive. In this context, the House leadership must act on the Hays affair, and it must act promptly.

One comment concerning the Kilpatrick column. While it is true that public indignation is high because of the Hays affair, he is exonerated, forgiven, and re-nominated by the people who put him in office and kept him there throughout the years. This was also true of Adam Clayton Powell; the country-at-large condemned him, but his constituency stood by him and behind him, because "he has done us so much good." Meaning federal handouts, welfare, public works, etc. Likewise Wilbur Mills, and likewise Wayne Hays. Those who buy votes with special favors usually manage to stay in their constituents' favor, notwithstanding their sins of commission and omission, and their disregard of the oath of office they are supposed to honor.

Not so with those who take their duties seriously, honor the office they hold, uphold the Constitution, and speak up like patriots when enemies attack, both foreign and domestic enemies. We think of Senator Joe McCarthy who was censured publicly by his colleagues, of Congressman John G. Schmitz who was crucified politically by his gulliberal Republican constituents, of Judge John Rarick who was sold out by COPE and ADL. There are many others we might mention, both past and present, who have gone to Washington filled with high hopes, determined to serve their country and their countrymen honorably and honestly. Most of them surrender their standards because the road proved too rough. Many have stood against all odds, only to be rejected by the constituents for whom they fought the good fight (our friend Bruce Alger is such an example and victim.) There are a few who have managed to stand against all odds and whose constituencies have remained strong enough and vigilant enough to keep them in office; men and women who have dared to remain loyal to the Constitution and the office to which they were elected. Such representatives deserve our total and unlimited support, just as others deserve our condemnation and rejection.

Because, if we don't all help to clean out those filthy government stables, there are tens of thousands of organized and well-financed revolutionaries who are ready to burn them down whenever the word is given.

We presume that such left-leaning Eastern

Establishment publications as Newsweek are playing an esoteric role. While overtly pretending to promote a cleanup yet covertly supporting—up to a point—the forces that are dedicated to a burnup, in reality it is aiding and abetting the CFR goal, which is neither cleanup nor burnup, but a revolution within the form. This involves the scrapping of our present U.S. Constitution and replacing it with this repulsive Constitution for the Newstates of America; and the scrapping of our present free enterprise economic system and the adoption of a Corporate Socialist system which is favorable to Monopoly Capitalism.

Doing injury to none of these three differing concepts is a bill of particulars published in the June 14th issue of Newsweek. Under the title "Questions of Ethics," five pages are devoted to "a survey of the sins to which some Congressional flesh still is heir." The six sins, and brief explanations:

"Criminal Charges. Some of the men who make the nation's laws continue to break them.... Sixteen members of Congress were indicted between 1955 and 1975. Of that group, a dozen were convicted or pleaded guilty on charges ranging from tax evasion to taking kickbacks on defense contracts...

"Conflict of Interest. Below the level of outright criminal corruption there exists a wide range of questionable Congressional practices. Foremost among these are conflicts of interest that may prompt some legislators to cast votes favorable to powerful benefactors instead of their constituents.

"Perks and Junkets.... The architect of the current system, Ironically, is Rep. Wayne Hays. In 1971, Hays engineered a House vote that gave his House Administrative Committee exclusive authority over the amount of allowances granted members for almost every conceivable expense—and thus for the way such allowances are actually used.... A prime example is the stationery allowance; $7,500 a year for each House member—in addition to free envelopes... and about $7,000 for reproduction of newsletters and air-mail and special delivery stamps... Congressional travel provides even more temptation.... Each House member is allowed 26 free trips to and from his home district every year, while Senators have from 40 to 44 depending on the population of their home states.... some congressmen routinely put in for twice their actual expenses by claiming the trips were made by auto instead of air.... Still, it is the international junket that generates the most flak for congressmen.... vouchers showing the expenses of individual junketeers are not available for public inspection....

"Staffing and Nepotism. Each representative is now allowed to spend up to $204,720 per year for a maximum of 18 staffers (only a third of the members actually have that many), while the average Senator is permitted to spend about $500,000 on staff salaries.... Nepotism, strictly speaking, is prohibited.... But in both chambers members get past the restrictions by hiring each others' relatives. And with payroll vouchers almost as well-kept a secret as travel vouchers, it is difficult to figure out whose back is being scratched by whom....

"Drinking and Senility. Senility has not constituted a serious problem since 1969.... The big drinkers are also gone—or considerably constrained in their indulgence... absenteeism is also down.

"Efforts at Reform. In the wake of the Hays affair, Congressional reformers hoped that pressure would build for changes more far-reaching than simply toppling Hays from several key chairmanships. Some serious reform may indeed be in the offing...."

(end of quotes from Newsweek)

The truth of the matter, however, is that the Congress is very busy investigating everything and everyone but itself and its own members. As one observer pointed out:

"Congress is investigating the CIA, FBI, DIA, administration practice and procedure, anti-trust and monopoly, constitutional amendments, constitutional rights, criminal laws and procedures, Federal charters, holidays and celebrations, improvements in judiciary machinery, Internal Security Act of 1950, juvenile delinquency, patents, trademarks and copyrights, the penal system, refugees and escapees and separation of powers... among other things."

"What these investigations are costing the American taxpayers totally," the observer continued, "is hard to estimate. However, the price tag for just one year, for just one Senate Committee can be established. The Committee on the Judiciary of the U.S. Senate, just one of 18 Standing Committees of that body, is authorized to spend $4,109,700 on investigations between March 1, 1976 and February 28, 1977. This does not include reimbursement to Senate members for expenses incurred personally. Over in the House of Representatives, there are 22 Standing Committees and all 40 of these Congressional Committees are funded to conduct investigations which might lead to legislation. If the appropriation for each is equal, the cost of Congressional investigations this year will be in excess of $164,388,000.00."

Our observer suggests that some of this money should be used to appoint a blue ribbon committee to investigate Congress itself.

And this is of extreme importance if we are to start a cleanup, which is probably the only way we can prevent a burnup and the total destruction of our Republic. And, we must begin the cleanup with the Congress.

There are numerous reasons for starting any Operation Cleanup with the United States Congress; but paramount is the simple fact that the Members of the Senate and the House are our only direct representatives in the Central Government, the only persons who are there because we put them there, and because we can put them out. Regardless of the show business attributes of 30 direct primaries, and all the hullabaloo surrounding the search for uncommitted delegates, Presidents and Vice Presidents are not elected by the people, nor was it ever intended that they should be. True, the system has been so corrupted that our present Chief Executive and his assistant have been appointed, and our next President and Vice President will have been chosen by what we usually call The Invisible Government (Carter is a Trilateral Commission member; Ford is a Bilderberger; and Reagan was a member of the ACIR while Governor of California). At the official level, the only agency that has any control over the Federal Administration is the United States Congress. In the Constitutional sense, only the Congress can provide the money, only the Congress can make the laws which the Executive Branch administers; and only the Congress can do anything about the excesses of the Federal Judiciary.

Example: One of the chief complaints of the responsible citizenry of the Nation has to do with "Administrative Law," that is, the multitudes of rules and regulations that are laid down by appointed administrators and regulators who operate out of the ten federal regional capitals. But it was the United States Congress which permitted these rules and regulations to be made by Executive Agencies; and it is only the Congress that can rectify the situation (short of the use of physical violence, anyway). Another example: Law by Executive Order. Presidential Edicts can attain the force of law simply by being published in the Federal Register. There is a current fear that organized terrorists (some of them funded by the Federal Government) will cause such disruption and chaos during Bicentennial Celebrations that the appointed President of the United States will declare a National Emergency and invoke Executive Order 11490, thus putting this Nation under Martial Law, and even preventing a National Election in November. We don't expect such a development, but it could happen. And it is the United States Congress which permitted such a possibility because "All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States," says the U.S. Constitution. And only the Congress can revoke and nullify Executive Orders!

One more example: As a Nation, we are broke. The Federal Budget has been increased from $100 billion in 1964 to over $400 billion in fiscal 1977. The National Debt is currently said to be $627 billion. The authority of Congress is required each time the budget is increased, and each time the national debt goes up. Regardless of the Feds, the Congress does have the purse-string powers over the Federal Government, and there is reason to suspect that the Congress is endeavoring to redistribute the wealth of the nation through taxation and inflation, spending and borrowing.

The showbiz primaries are concluded, the task of selecting Presidential Nominees is out of our hands, is now in the hands of those who will tell them what to do and what to say if they are elected. Now, perhaps, it might be possible to impel the people who are responsible citizens of the Nation to do the one thing that can be truly effective: Choose "out of all the people able men, such as fear God, men of truth, hating covetousness" (Jethro's advice to his son-in-law, Moses). And let such men (or women) be sent to the Nation's Capitol to restore righteousness, re-enthroned justice and declare the Constitution of the United States to be the Supreme Law of the Land, as it was in the beginning.

DON BELL REPORTS Weekly, accenting the Christian American point of view. $24 per year. Extra copies: 10¢ each. Address: DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223 Palm Beach, Florida 33480

MUST WE LEARN TO LIVE WITH TERRORISM?

"IT COULDN'T HAPPEN HERE"

Terrorism, like leprosy or elephantiasis, used to be thought of as some strange and exotic disease that struck only in backward or undeveloped places. It might break out in the cannibalistic areas of darkest Africa, or in banana republics in Latin America, or even in a divided Ireland. But it couldn't happen here. Or so most of us thought.

That, however, was before they started to blow up banks, break into National Guard armories, skyjack planes, kidnap people on a wholesale scale, climb to the tops of towers with rifles and shoot everyone who ventured into view. It was before letter bombs started being mailed to corporate executives. And it was before the CIA was disgraced, the FBI denigrated, and State and local law enforcement agencies rendered impotent by courts and LEAA.

Hon. Larry McDonald of Georgia referred to it as another no-win war. "Twice in recent history," he said, "American men have been sent into combat in a war they were not permitted to win. First in Korea and then in Vietnam. Restrictions placed on us and a privileged sanctuary maintained for the enemy, made victory impossible.

"The war on crime is also a no-win war. Restrictions placed on the police by the courts have enabled the enemy—the criminals—to win most of the battles. Police complain that when they apprehend a violent criminal, he is out on the streets before they can complete the paperwork."

There are times, of course, when the crime is so heinous and the evidence so overwhelming, that a criminal is actually incarcerated; but this is for "rehabilitation," not for punishment or for the protection of society. Take the case of Edward Carter, a man with a long record of arrests, who was convicted after confessing to raping and beating a 13-year-old girl (she died later as a result of the beating). Carter pleaded insanity, was sent to St. Elizabeth's hospital instead of a federal prison. There he staged a "remarkable recovery" and was set free. But a psychiatrist at the hospital said that Carter never had been insane, that he was a chronic liar, pretended to be ill to stay out of jail. "He admits to 12 rapes and says he made up the original story to look insane," said Dr. Joseph Smith. However, now legally recovered, and "sane," rapist Carter is out to rape, and murder, again.

Currently and locally, one Robert Frederick Carr, III, 32, is showing Dade County Metro police where he buried the bodies of the women and children he raped, then murdered in four different States. After leading them to four different shallow graves containing as many different bodies, the officers said they had seen enough, and Carr is awaiting trial. But here is the tragic part of the story: Carr was convicted of rape in Connecticut, was "rehabilitated" and released. Then he came south to continue his career as a self-confessed rapist and murderer.

Those are not unusual stories; they just happened to be in the headlines as we began to write this report. Also in the headlines is the action of the Illinois State Legislature, where a resolution has been introduced to prevent the parole of one Richard Speck. That heinous crime has not been forgotten: On the night of July 14, 1966, Speck stabbed and strangled eight student nurses. A ninth nurse escaped the same fate by hiding under a bed, and she positively identified Speck as the murderer. Convicted and sentenced to death, he was spared the punishment the jury said he deserved by the U.S. Supreme Court, which dug up a technicality to save him from death. So, theoretically, Speck is serving a 400 to 1,200 year sentence. However, under Illinois law, his application for parole comes up this September. Hence the resolution to keep him out of circulation.

"One of the tragic effects of the U.S. Supreme Court ban on the death penalty," commented Phyllis Schlafly in a recent article, "is the increased number of rapists and robbers who murder their victims in order to eliminate witnesses. In Illinois, murderers with good prison behavior can get a parole in about eleven years. The minimum sentence for rape or armed robbery is four years. Therefore, if the rapist or robber kills his victim and is caught, he risks only an additional seven years on his sentence. However, if the rapist or robber kills his victim, he thereby eliminates the witness and makes it probable that the criminal will not be convicted at all. . . . The grim fact is that thousands of innocent people have paid with their lives because of the Supreme Court decision that spares murderers and, after a few years, let's them return to society and prowl the streets looking for more victims.

"The 4th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution guarantees the right of all Americans "to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects." The U.S. Supreme Court infringed that constitutional right four years ago when it forbade the death penalty, thereby making depraved murderers, torturers and rapists eligible for parole after only about eleven years."

Corroborating this, the editor of a religious publication writes:

"Just recently an FBI wanted poster came to our offices which illustrates how justice in our country has deteriorated. The following is a quote from that poster. Only the names have been changed. . . ."Criminal Record: Jones has been convicted of murder and rape. Caution: Jones has previously been convicted of murder and rape and is currently being sought for murder of a woman who was fired upon at pointblank range. He is believed to be armed and should be considered very dangerous. A Federal warrant was issued June 3, 1973, at Smithville, Alaska, charging Jones with unlawful interstate flight to avoid prosecution for the crime of murder (Title 18, U.S. Code, Section 1073)." Three decades ago such a convicted felon would not have been walking the streets. . . . Our land has become a haven for dangerous convicted criminals who are released from prison—only to continue with their illegal activities. . . .

"After the disclosures that have been made over the past decade one need hardly wonder that people are cynical. Political slush funds are allocated by the major oil companies; candidates for public office receive benefits. . . . An airplane manufacturer which does a gigantic volume of business with the Federal Government is bailed out of bankruptcy through a government loan of $200 million. Later, evidence shows that this same aerospace company spent millions to bribe government officials in various parts of the world to buy their products. Look at the evidence at hand. Our leaders are unruly; they are companions with thieves and they love bribes." . . .

Obviously, the above was written before the sex scandals involving government officials were published. And in this connection it is interesting to recall that the controversial Peoples Bicentennial Commission said it was sending 10,000 letters to secretaries, offering them $25,000 in cash for reporting illegal activities of their bosses. One wonders if these Washington secretaries have been paid their reward by PBC?

But the most important point is that these, our elected and/or appointed officials are not able, and in many cases are not even willing to try, to guarantee the right of all American citizens "to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects." And they have so handicapped and virtually immobilized State and local law enforcement officials, that life, liberty and property are in jeopardy throughout the land!

It is ironic that a young Republic whose Marines stormed the shores of Tripoli to demand the release of one American diplomat who was being held for ransom, can no longer assure the safety of an American Ambassador or even demand reparations for the insult that has been perpetrated upon the once proud and respected United States of America! Think of this record, as compiled by the Associated Press:

"Francis E. Meloy, Jr., the U.S. ambassador to Lebanon, was the fourth American ambassador killed at his post since 1968. . . . Rodger P. Davies, the ambassador to Cyprus, was shot to death in his embassy in Nicosia shortly after the Turkish-Greek Cypriot clash on the Mediterranean island in the summer of 1974. . . . In March 1973, the American ambassador to Sudan, Cleo Noel, and an embassy counsel, George C. Moore, were murdered by eight Palestinian guerrillas who invaded the Saudi Arabian embassy in Khartoum during a farewell reception for Moore. . . . In 1968, Ambassador John Gordon Mein was killed during a kidnap attempt in Guatemala.

"Earlier this year, Palestinian radicals in Beirut kidnapped a black U.S. Army colonel and held him until the Lebanese government delivered free food and other supplies demanded in ransom."

And in this latest assassination in Beirut, in addition to Ambassador Meloy, Economic Counsel Robert O. Waring, and their Lebanese chauffeur were murdered "while on a mission of peace."

Are we burdened with a Central Government that cannot protect its own citizens from criminal elements in this country, and from international gangsters in other countries? With the news that Philadelphia cannot expect U.S. military aid on July 4th, and that American citizens are being evacuated from Lebanon, both would seem to be true. The Philadelphia story is especially important:

As the "founding city" where both the Declaration of Independence and the U.S. Constitution were drafted, Philadelphia becomes the center of activity on this Bicentennial Fourth of July. So, terrorist groups in the United States are concentrating on the City of Brotherly Love. An article in the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin of May 30 read: "Philadelphia has drafted a request for 15,000 federal troops to help keep order July 4 in the face of threatened disturbances by a radical coalition.... City officials fear the Rich Off Our Backs—July Fourth Coalition, made up of revolutionary and radical groups, may attempt to disrupt the official celebration. Groups comprising the coalition include the Revolutionary Communist Party, The Vietnam Veterans Against the War, the Unemployed Workers Organizing Committee, the Revolutionary Student Brigade and Prairie Fire, a splinter of the Weatherman organization...."

From unofficial sources we received word that Mayor Frank Rizzo's request for the 15,000 federal troops had to go through Gov. Milton Shapp's office before being forwarded to President Ford and the Defense Department. The request died in the governor's office. So, according to this UPI dispatch of June 17th: "A coalition of dissident organizations seeking permits for demonstrations on July 4 won a split decision. They can hold most of their activities as planned but far away from the city's scheduled Bicentennial events. The group, Rich Off Our Backs—July Fourth Coalition said Tuesday it would appeal U.S. District Court Judge Joseph McGlynn's decision, which also bars them from erecting a tent city in Fairmont Park and from holding what the judge called a 'cultural-political' event on July 3."

Adding fuel to the anticipated fire ("fire" is the password of the Weatherman Group) is a belated report from the CIA which was released by AP on June 18th, 1976:

Washington (AP)—A newly declassified CIA study contends there is a good chance that in the next few years foreign-linked terrorists increasingly will be tempted to stage major actions within the United States. 'The influx of foreign travelers and dignitaries expected in connection with such major U.S. sponsored events as the current Bicentennial celebrations and the 1980 Winter Olympics will inescapably afford a host of opportunities for dramatic terrorist action,' the study reports....

The report noted that... "we should expect to witness steadily greater and more widespread sophistication in targeting, execution and weaponry.... the danger that a fanatic few might resort to weapons of mass destruction will increase accordingly," the CIA study said. Such weapons might include nuclear bombs, the report said, but more likely would involve chemical, biological and radiological agents. 'In contrast to nuclear devices, many of these are presently relatively easy to acquire,' it said. 'Hence, the danger that they could turn up in the hands of the sort of ultraradical or psychopathic fringe group that would have the fewest compunctions about using them is very real.'

The report, dated April 1976, was made available this week after it was declassified. The report asserted that 'whether or not weapons of mass destruction are actually brought into play, the odds are that the impact of... terror will be more sharply felt in the United States in the years just ahead.'

In connection with the preceding report, note that in the current nationwide letter bomb plot, a Chicago Tribune Service dispatch reported that "an envelope containing a batch of ticks was delivered to the Denver regional office of Combined Insurance Company of America.... An accompanying letter said the ticks were accompanied by other ticks "quite small, barely visible to the eye." It suggested the ticks were infected with various bacteria, including rabies."

But, back to the Philadelphia affair: It will be noted that the Weathermen are directly involved in the July 4 activities, especially the Prairie Fire Group, a violent splinter organization. Larry Grothwohl was an FBI informer with the Weathermen and he lived to write a book about it (with the help of Frank Reagan). His conclusion is important and we quote directly from the book "Bringing Down America," pages 183-84:

"The irony of Weathermen thinking or philosophy is that they probably couldn't live in the society they would impose on the U.S. should the revolution succeed.

"Most Weathermen planning and strategy goes into implementing a revolution and not into setting up a viable government afterward. However, when they did discuss this postrevolutionary period, their plans were frightening. Their society would make George Orwell's 1984 a pleasure to live in. Weatherman doctrine calls for complete control of all individual thought and movement. Once the revolution has been won, a central committee will be appointed to run the country. Naturally, the committee will consist of Weathermen leaders. But it will also include members of other revolutionary organizations, especially black and Mexican and Indian groups. Whether some of these central committee members will be more equal than others was never made clear, but I suspect that would be the case.

"While the central committee is being formed, Weathermen will go about the necessary task of eliminating everybody who was in power before the revolution. This means killing them. Politicians and police will be the first to go... The second step in this process is to 'isolate' those citizens who were against the revolution, but were not members of the ruling class. This isolation is to be accomplished in education camps. These citizens will be herded into camps to be taught about the revolutionary government...

"Their models for our new society are China and Cuba... Russia is not considered a good model of socialism because the Weathermen believe the USSR is becoming increasingly involved in the capitalistic way of life.

"In essence, the Weathermen's government will be one of total control over each individual in the society. In Weathermen terminology, this new society will be 'one people working in total unity.' This means an elimination of all the individual freedoms we are accustomed to having... Their way of life is not mine." (Quoted from "Bringing Down America," Arlington House, New Rochelle,

New York. 10801. 190 pages, $7.95).

Some time ago, Rev. T. Robert Ingram wrote the following, which is as timely today as it was when first written in 1969:

* * * * *

Praise God there is a line of action still open to Americans that is fundamentally different (from revolutionary action). It is simply to reactivate the lawful county governments.

The county is the self-sufficient agency of law enforcement in the land. There are about 3,000 counties. Each possesses full powers to enforce the universal moral law as expressed in the criminal laws and the principles of the Common Law.

Posse Comitatus is the legal phrase describing the full power of the general public in every county to enforce the criminal law in its own domain to the point of deputizing every able bodied male citizen if necessary.

There is no need to try to organize a political movement aimed at seizing control of the government in Washington—which is the way the party system works. All that is needed is for the general public to rally around its sheriff and judges in every county and assume full responsibility for apprehending and having justly punished every criminal and every disturber of the peace.

The forces of revolution are organized. The riots and vandalism terrorizing cities like Washington and Chicago (and now Philadelphia and New York City—Ed.) are highly organized.

Right enough, nothing but organized counter force can possibly put them down.

That counter organization, however, must not be an extra-legal movement patterned after the socialist conspiracy, even if in opposition to it, but must rather be disciplined by the universal moral law and contained within existing law enforcement agencies.

There is no way to uphold law and order by an unlawful gang. On the other hand, for the general public to reassume its role in law enforcement is the path to victory for public safety and order. (End of quotation)

DON BELL REPORTS Weekly. $24 per year. Extra copies: 10¢ each. Address all orders: DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223 Palm Beach, Florida 33480

Don Bell Reports

Year Twenty-Three Number Twenty-Six June 25, 1976

A BICENTENNIAL CELEBRATION FILLED WITH VIOLENCE?

A HOT TIME IS PROMISED

July 4, 1976 is not just another holiday. It is not merely one more federally-assigned long weekend for workers. And it is not just another Fourth of July. It is the 200th anniversary of the signing of that great charter of civil liberty called the Declaration of Independence. Elaborate plans have been made for appropriate observance of the day, especially in the Nation's Capital and in Philadelphia, the "Cradle of Liberty" and the site of Independence Hall and the Liberty Bell. Over a million people are expected to turn out for the festivities at each city. At Washington, some 33 tons of fireworks were imported from France at a cost of $200,000, and are to be set off in celebration of our Nation's 200th birthday.

However, while millions are observing the 200th anniversary of the American Revolution, others are busy starting what they call The Second American Revolution, in making official their spurious Declaration of Independence, and in installing as the Law of the Land, that document which they call the Constitution for the Newstates of America. And officials are preparing for potential disorder, violence, tragedy. Philadelphia Mayor Frank Rizzo finally won the endorsement of Pennsylvania Governor Milton Schapp to his request that President Ford send 15,000 federal troops to the city to "help deter and defuse the violence which may occur" and to "avoid ugly incidents that may lead to tragedy." Ford did not reply officially to Rizzo's request, but it is reported that National Guard troops have been activated and the 82nd Airborne Division at Ft. Bragg, N.C., has been alerted.

Washington, D.C. police have received a crash course on how to deal with bombers, snipers and terrorists, but nothing has been said of using federal troops in the defense of the Nation's Capital.

Why all this concern? Well, a group that calls itself The July 4th Coalition (J4C) claims that 60,000 of its followers from all over the country will take part in what it labels "the people's alternative" to the official celebration. J4C is a coalition of over 100 Communist, Castroite, Maoist and New Left groups which was formed last January for the specific purpose of staging protest demonstrations. Its affiliates include such outfits as the Communist Party, the New American Movement, the National Lawyers Guild, the Socialist Workers Party, the War Resisters League, the American Indian Movement, the Puerto Rican Socialist Party, the Prairie Fire Organizing Committee, and others with records of violence, subversion and terrorist activity.

Also involved is the so-called People's Bicentennial Commission (PBC), which has an enormous operating budget and has contracted for buses to transport its supporters from 60 different cities, and expects that 250,000 of its supporters will travel to Washington for its counter-celebration there. Its rally speakers include Tom Hayden, Jane Fonda, John Henry Faulk, Dr. Benjamin Spock, Samuel Lovejoy and others of like persuasion.

This information, which appeared in an article in the June 26, 1976 Human Events, is significant:

The FBI, under its new Levi-imposed guidelines, cannot investigate any civil disorder dangers "except upon the specific request" of the attorney general or his designee. No such request was ever made concerning the Bicentennial counter demonstrations.

Finally, on May 11, the FBI asked the attorney general for permission to make a "narrow" inquiry (though the guidelines do not authorize it to take such initiative). Emerging gradually from an apparent deep sleep, Levi finally acceded to the request during the last week in May (when Rizzo's plea for troops was made). That gave the FBI less than five weeks to conduct an investigation which, if thorough, would cover not only the parent J4C but each of its more than 100 associated groups and any plots they had in the making.

Levi, moreover, emphasized in his approval letter the limitations his guidelines placed on all FBI investigations, making it clear they were to be strictly observed.

What are the restrictions on a civil disorder investigation? All data collected must be strictly limited to that which will aid the President in deciding whether federal troops are needed and, if so, how they should be committed. To gather this information the FBI can do no more than check its own files, other government records and government officials, public records and sources and established informants and information sources. The FBI cannot conduct any physical or photographic surveillances, use wire-taps or mail covers, or employ new informants or undercover agents. It cannot even interview anyone other than established sources without specific approval of the attorney general. In sum: Unless someone else already knows about terrorist bomb plots, etc., the FBI cannot do anything to uncover them.

Levi went so far in his letter as to direct that no information about the "political plans or political philosophy" of those involved should be collected. (If they're a bunch of terrorists, so what? We want to remain ignorant of such things.)

It is worth noting that the guidelines also contain a provision imposing much duplicative (wasted) work on the Bureau in any civil disorder investigation. They specify that any information collected "may not be indexed in a manner which permits retrieval ... by reference to a specific individual" unless he is the subject of criminal investigation. This means that if terrorists or other subversives involved in one disorder later become active in planning another, their past record will not be available except by hours of poring through un-indexed FBI files.

Even more important, it is a repudiation of the fact, upheld by the Supreme Court, that the FBI has an ongoing intelligence duty to perform in relation to such matters, as well as to others in the security field....

(end of extended quotation)

In reference to the preceding, would it be unfair to suspect that the attorney general's office is "weighing justice" very much in favor of the terrorists and against the law-abiding citizens who might become the victims of such activity? And, could there be a reason why some appointed officials in high places actually want civil disturbances to break out, in order that they may declare a national emergency?

There is nothing new in the following news item. But this is new: It is most unusual that such an article would ever appear in print in a nationally-circulated newspaper, even in a tabloid which is regarded as a "gossip sheet." However, the following did appear in the June 8, 1976 issue of the National Enquirer:

Suspend radio and TV broadcasting ... freeze bank accounts ... institute martial law ... seize and control all property, commodities, transportation and communication facilities. This is just a partial list of the incredible powers available to the President of the United States during national emergencies.

To exercise these dictatorial powers, the President declares by signed proclamation that a national emergency exists. From the moment that proclamation is published in the Federal Register it has the force of law.

"The President has virtually unlimited powers to affect the lives of American citizens in a host of all-encompassing ways," charged Sen. Charles Mathias, Jr. (R.-Md.). "He can rule the country without reference to normal constitutional processes. Through its own actions, Congress has transferred this awesome power to the executive branch."

Here are some more of the staggering 470 Presidential emergency powers on the books: the power to close the stock exchange, assign military forces abroad, control private enterprise and greatly restrict the right to travel. They were enacted to meet earlier emergencies in U.S. history.

"Aggressive Presidents, permissive Congresses and a long series of successive crises have all contributed to the erosion of divided powers, the bedrock of our system of government," Mathias declared.

"There is no present need for the U.S. to continue to function under emergency conditions."

A National Emergencies Act has passed the House, and is currently before the Government Operations Committee in the Senate. Sen. Mathias said this bill would end the present states of national emergency and put controls on future use of emergency powers by the executive branch. "The bill provides specific mechanisms for future declarations of emergency, including the requirement that the President state specifically what emergency powers he intends to use. It provides for a two-year period between enactment and termination of a state of emergency. It would allow Congressional review of future emergencies at regular intervals, to decide if they should be continued. (end of article).

Little has been said about this National Emergencies Act. But it is known that the unelected officials in the executive branch of our Central Government are very jealous of their ability to make law—including the establishment of a bureaucratic dictatorship—by the simple process of publishing a declaration in the Federal Register. And if any attempt were made by Congress to take away such power (which is patently unconstitutional, anyway), then a violent reaction on the part of the federal executive could be expected.

Could this be why Attorney General Levi is hamstringing the FBI in regard to the control of terrorists and subversives?

It should be understood that the actual establishment of a dictatorship in these United States has never been possible—in the past, that is—because the U.S. Military Establishment would have to lend its support to any such coup. Political coups in Latin America, for example, have always been military in character. There is every reason to believe that if Richard Nixon had been backed up, actively, by U.S. Armed Forces, he would never have resigned.

Generally unnoticed, little publicized but an integral part of the International Regional Governance Conspiracy is the plan to merge the military forces of the Nation with the police forces of the States, Counties, Cities and Communities, in such a way that all would become component parts of a centrally commanded national peacekeeping agency. Finally, if the scheme works, all such national police organizations would be merged into an International Security Agency, or a World Police Force which would replace all national defense forces of all nations, including the United States.

This scheme, already highly developed in the collectivized, "Police States" of the world, is more or less in its infancy in the United States, and is being "wetnursed" by the Regionalized Law Enforcement Assistance Administration (LEAA). The State of California has been selected as the chief testing ground for the scheme, and the current program calls for the integration of the National Guard with the police units of the State. Under Governor Edmund Brown there is a State Military Department which is commanded by Maj. Gen. Frank Schober, Jr. and a special training camp has been set up at Camp San Luis Obispo. Financed through a special grant of one quarter of a million dollars supplied from federal funds made available to LEAA, the training program is called the California Civil Disorder Management Course (CCDMC) and is a "highly intensified and coordinated learning exercise in all phases of civil disorder management."

In charge of the training course is Col. L.O. Guiffrida, who is quoted as saying, "We are already getting inquiries from other states on how to set one up."

At this training camp, trainees are supposed to be learning how to assist the police and how to replace the police on a temporary basis if the police should happen to go out on strike. Actually, however, this seems to be a course on what to do in case martial law is declared!

The "Civil Emergency Management Course Manual" which is used at the Camp San Luis Obispo Training Institute is a shocker. Here are direct quotes:

"The legal means available to control people during a civil disorder extends from the replacement of all civil government by the military—under Martial Rule at one end—to the application of criminal statutes and local regulatory ordinances, by the solitary policeman on his beat, at the other....

Perhaps the most misunderstood concept in the area of civil disorders is that of Martial Rule. It is commonly called Martial Law which is itself a misnomer. The invocation of Martial Rule is the result of the absence of law and its concomitant 'order' and is purely and simply ruling by the military. It comes into existence when civil government can no longer maintain law and order, even with the assistance of the military. It requires no proclamation, though one is generally made, and it exists so long as it is necessary to restore conditions to where civil government can again function with or without the aid of the military.

"Martial Rule occurs upon a determination by the highest military commander in the jurisdiction that civil government has ceased to exist and must be replaced with force necessary to restore its existence. A proclamation then normally follows declaring that the military is now in complete control of government and delineating which agencies of civil government will continue to function and which will not be replaced with elements of the military forces.

"What must be remembered is that the common law tradition that a society may avail itself of what means are at hand, and this at the moment of complete chaos and anarchy is usually only military forces, to preserve itself is the basis for Martial Rule. No constitution, statute or ordinance can authorize Martial Rule. It is there and recognized by the courts as a final resort when all else has failed.

"The misuse of Martial Rule by governors in this country throughout its history has led to general misunderstanding of the concept. The following are some elements of the concept, essential to a proper understanding:

"a. Martial Rule comes into existence upon a determination (not a declaration) by the senior military commander that civil government must be replaced because it is no longer functioning anyway.

"b. Martial Rule is justified by the existence of facts which must involve violence, destruction and the inability of civil government to enforce the laws of the jurisdictions and protect the people and their property from further destruction and general disaster....

"f. Martial Rule need not replace all civil governmental functions but may leave some functioning under military control either completely or partially. Thus, the courts may be closed and military tribunals put in their place or they may remain open if there are personnel and facilities available....

"The significance of Martial Rule in civil disorders is that it shifts control from civilians to the military, completely and without the necessity of a declaration, proclamation or other form of public manifestation. It must not be confused with the powers of the Governor of the State under sections of the California Government Code which authorizes the Governor to declare a state of emergency and thereby assume legislative rule, making power over the area set forth in the declaration. There are severe statutory limitations and procedural requirements imposed by the Government Code which are not present in a Martial Rule situation. As stated above, Martial Rule is limited only by the principle of necessary force to restore civil government."

(end of extended quotation)

We have been quoting from the "Civil Emergency Management Course" manual, which is used at the California Specialized Training Institute, Camp San Luis Obispo.

Although this training for the potential imposition of "Martial Rule" is applicable to California only, officials of other States are asking for information on how to implement the same kind of a setup in their respective States—and there is the Regionalized LEAA able, ready and anxious to extend the program to all the other forty-nine States.

Now, let us assume that such a program for "Martial Rule" could be established not only at State level, but at the Federal level—as is the case in the totalitarian States of the world at the present time. This would mean that the President of the United States—whatever he might be and however he might have attained the position—would not need to sign any Executive Order and have it published in the Federal Register, and thus impose a state of emergency. He would not need to use legal methods of any kind. As Commander-in-Chief of the Armed Forces of the United States, he could simply "determine" that civil law has broken down, and that Martial Rule has been invoked, all government departments have ceased to function, all courts have been closed down, and all arguments and disputes will be settled by military tribunals!

The United States Constitution says that Congress has power "to raise and support Armies, but no appropriation of Money to that use shall be for a longer Term than two Years." This was to prevent the creation of standing armies, and thus prevent any President from ever having the power to invoke Martial Law. We've bypassed this restriction, have become as a "banana republic" in this respect, where Martial Rule is a commonplace. However, there remains one legal safeguard. Let us place the police power where it belongs: at the County level and with the posse comitatus. Let the State and the Federal Governments have only those powers which have been delegated to them from the people at the County level. Isn't attempted restoration better than permissive destruction?

For information concerning this report write:
DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

PREPARING TO "CARTERIZE" THE NATION'S WOUNDS

RETURN OF THE NEW DEAL

"They Act As If Carter Were President," said the headline atop a feature article by Robert Boyd, the Miami Herald Washington Bureau Chief. "He hasn't even been nominated, much less elected," Boyd wrote... "But Jimmy Carter is already being treated in many quarters as the next President... many congressmen, governors, mayors, economists, opinion makers, foreign diplomats, Republicans and Democrats are starting to take a Carter administration for granted."

It also seems that most of the people are starting to take it for granted. While Ford and Reagan are still beating the bushes seeking delegates in order to win a nomination, Carter is busy trying to win a Congress that will treat him with brotherly love. As the July 5th issue of Business Week observed: "Jimmy Carter—his Presidential nomination safely in hand—is mapping a campaign aimed at producing a big, friendly majority in Congress as well as capturing the White House."

Carter has been well coached. He realizes that the real power resides in the Congress, not in the White House, and whatever program he is supposed to put across must have the approval of—or at least no interference from—Capitol Hill. So, as we went to press, Carter was on an eight-city fundraising swing, seeking money that would be used to help elect friendly Democrats to the House and the Senate. He was also busy trying to win friends and influence opinion-makers at The New York Times and The Washington Post. Those two publications have been busy for some time immolating living political leaders and denigrating dead heroes. Jimmy Carter desires neither immolation nor denigration and, as William Buckley noted in his column of June 30: "When Jimmy Carter came to New York the other day to give a foreign policy speech, one might put it that his objective was to win grudging praise from The New York Times, which has always been rather disdainful of Jimmy Carter, suspecting that under that smooth, calm exterior lies a Georgia cracker. Until very recently, James Reston could not refer to Jimmy Carter except as 'Wee Jimmy'."

Buckley asked the question, "How do you go about appealing to The New York Times in a foreign policy speech?" His answer:

"1. You say something on the theme of interdependence — we all live on one planet, that kind of thing.

"2. You say something on the theme of our natural allies — our great postwar alliances with Europe, and Japan — and the need to revive them.

"3. You say something about the international problems of poverty and population control — and the creative role the United States can play in helping people help themselves.

"4. You say something about the emerging nations of Africa — encouraging those 'trends' within Africa that point the democratic way, and you deplore the racist policies of South Africa.

"5. You deplore, in an age of endemic poverty, the amount of money spent on arms throughout the world, but you make moderate references to the need for a U.S. military capable of serving essential American interests.

"6. You deplore the continuing aggressiveness of the Soviet Union — but you stress that we live for patience and understanding, which however is not to be confused with weakness."

"And what will you get from the Times?" asks Buckley. In answer to that question, he quotes directly from the Times:

"It is unreasonable to expect a candidate for high office to spell out exactly how he might respond to future contingencies. But in his carefully reasoned statements so far — particularly his impromptu responses to questions—the former Georgia Governor has gone a long way toward dulling charges of unfamiliarity with foreign policy challenges that would confront him as president."

One of those "carefully reasoned statements" that the Times approved was Carter's assertion that the United States must "guarantee the right of Israel to exist, and exist in peace." The Times also applauded Carter's view that "the time has come for basic changes in world relationships," and felt that Carter's "New International Order" is just as apt a slogan as was Kissinger's "World Community."

Now that Jimmy Carter has been accepted by The New York Times, tolerated by The Washington Post, approved by the Eastern Establishment, adopted by the Rockefellers and has demonstrated his ability to be all things to all men that he might gain the White House, the time has come when we should examine this man who is going to be our next president, unless there occurs some fortuitous slip twixt the cup and the lip.

JIMMY WHO?

The story is told that some 23 years ago a younger James Carter made a great and life-changing decision: Should he remain in the U.S. Navy and become its Chief of Staff or return to civilian life and become the biggest frog that ever jumped out of that little pond known as Plains, Georgia? This story may be an exaggeration, but Jimmy Carter's life is filled with exaggerations. In any case, he has always lived in Plains. True, he was in Atlanta for four years, but he never pulled up stakes, and Plains was always given as his home address. There he has a peanut farm, runs a warehouse that stores and markets peanuts. His youngest daughter goes to a fully integrated school in Plains—which should have been a tip-off to George Wallace and Lester Maddox, both of whom backed him politically thinking he was a segregationist, as he said he was.

The political bug bit Carter in 1962 and he ran successfully for the State Senate that year. After two terms he made a strong but unsuccessful bid for the Governorship of Georgia. He was stunned by this, his only political defeat and he began, in 1966, to campaign for the Governorship in 1970. He won, but his tactics were questionable. In order to win, he associated himself with Wallace and Maddox, voiced strong resistance to the civil rights movement. Just before the election he visited a private segregated school, promised that when elected he would help all such schools.

But, on inauguration day he stunned Wallace and Maddox and most of his supporters by declaring that "the time for racial discrimination is over."

One of his most successful gimmicks was a television commercial showing him working in the fields of his peanut plantation under a hot August sun at harvest time. The thrust of the ad: Carter could be trusted to understand the problems of the working man because he was one of them. Not a lie, but his brother and business partner later admitted that Jimmy did most of his work at the warehouse, where he weighed and checked in the truckloads of peanuts that came in for storage; and he worked in an air-conditioned office, not out in the midday sun.

In that gubernatorial campaign, Carter's chief opponent was Carl Sanders, a popular incumbent. One Carter television commercial suggested that special interests were shelling out large sums of money to Sanders in expectation of receiving favors after he had won the election. Sanders released a financial statement which allegedly disproved Carter's charges; and there the matter was dropped, probably because a pot was calling a kettle black in a segregationist State. But one allegation against Carter was never denied: There was a third man in the race for Governor, a black man named C. B. King. King didn't have a chance, but any vote for King was a vote against Sanders. So, just before the election, Carter's advertising agency prepared and paid for several thousand dollars worth of radio and television advertising for King; hurting Sanders by helping King.

After becoming Governor, Carter says he took some 300 State agencies and consolidated them into 20 super agencies, at an alleged savings of $50,000,000 a year. But the State Auditor's Office in Atlanta says it can find no way to document such savings. Instead, the number of State employees went up 25% and the budget went up 50% while Carter was Governor. Furthermore, there were, not 300, but 65 agencies which Carter consolidated into 20 super agencies.

But there Carter's political history might have come to an end, had it not been for his desire to find new markets in Europe for Georgia-grown peanuts. And there he met the Elitists.

Hilaire Du Berrier, an international political analyst who resides in Monaco, recently wrote a letter to Col. Arch Roberts of the Committee to Restore the Constitution, Inc., in which he said:

“Milton Katz was an OSS officer in Caserta (Italy). When OSS was phased out, Katz became the administrator for Marshall Plan funds, the funds which were strengthening the leftist unions and propping up the socialist Common Market movement....Katz is now at Harvard. In late 1972 Averell Harriman took a man named Jimmy Carter to meet him. Then they took Carter to Nelson Rockefeller and Nelson Rockefeller took him into the Trilateral Commission to be educated by Zbigniew Brzezinski. The rest you know.”

Laurence Stern of The Washington Post told the story a bit differently (this was before the Post was told to tolerate Carter and not publish any truth that might hurt him). In the May 8, 1976, Post Stern wrote:

“Until 1973 Carter’s credentials in foreign policy matters were limited, except for the overseas trade missions he had organized to sell Georgia products abroad. Late in the fall of 1973 he was invited to dine in London with David Rockefeller of the Chase Manhattan Bank during one of his trade promotion visits. Rockefeller, with the help of Brzezinski, was then establishing the Trilateral Commission, which has become a prestigious forum that has included in its membership the leading businessmen, political leaders and foreign policy intellectuals of North America, Western Europe and Japan.

“‘David Rockefeller and Zbig (Brzezinski) felt he would be the ideal person to join the Trilateral Commission,’ related Carter’s long-standing supporter, Dr. Peter Bourne of Washington....When Rockefeller, Brzezinski and other recruiters were looking for a southerner to round out the ranks of the commission in 1973 they were also considering Florida Governor Reuben Askew. But they settled on Carter....”

“Through the medium of the Trilateral Commission Carter extended his range of contacts in the foreign policy establishment. In July of last year he also forged an association with the Brookings Institution, a factory of expertise on foreign and domestic policy issues central to a presidential campaign....At Brookings, Carter was squired from expert to expert in the building that serves as one of the nation’s leading public policy centers....”

Whether Katz introduced Carter to David or to Nelson Rockefeller first in London seems immaterial; he was introduced to them both, and they both agreed that he would become, with proper training and indoctrination, the perfect puppet for the Elitists. This need for a puppet became apparent when Nelson began to understand that he could never gain the Presidency by fair means. Having observed the results to his having gained the Vice Presidency by trickster methods, it must have been easy for David to talk brother Nelson into relinquishing the title, if not the power, associated with the Presidency. So, Carter was recruited in 1973 and has received intensive training since that time in how to conduct himself as a candidate, and as a chief executive.

There is this one thing that may be worrying the Rockefellers and the Eastern Establishment: Carter is a supreme egoist and he may start getting the idea that he is not a puppet but a personality in his own right. And he may start doing things on his own authority, without waiting for instructions from his puppeteers. Like Eisenhower, who may have been chastened through attacks of ileitis, or the Kennedys who were assassinated, or LBJ who was too scared to run again, or Nixon who was led to resign so Nelson could test the waters of the Potomac. The Eastern Establishmentarians haven’t had too much good luck with political puppets. Nelson did much better for them while Governor of New York than did any of their chosen representatives. Even Kissinger grows petulant and threatens to resign now and then. And this next time they may just let him resign and put Brzezinski in his place.

Brzezinski, by the way, like Kissinger, has foreign leanings. His father was a Polish diplomat, and he is married to Emilie Ann Benes, a niece of Eduard Benes of Czechoslovakia who was forced to capitulate to Hitler in 1938. While Kissinger came up by way of Harvard, Brzezinski is associated with Columbia University.

But back to Carter, who may be pushing too fast to suit his tutors and handlers. An article in the news of Friday, July 2, may provide a clue. It notes that:

“Jimmy Carter doesn’t have the Democratic presidential nomination yet, but his mind is racing ahead to the fall campaign and the transition period between the election and the inauguration. In fact, he told reporters he is already trying to decide which of his campaign promises he will try to carry out first, and which will have to wait until he's been in the White House a year or more.

"We are starting to assess the elements of the Democratic platform... to establish an order of priority for the consummation of our goals." Carter said. The platform has not even been officially adopted by the party convention, of course, and Carter says he is aware of the dangers of being overconfident... Nevertheless... he has set up a task force headed by Jack Watson... to work on problems of the 'transition' to a Carter Administration... As a mark of his eagerness to get going, Carter said he is considering asking Congress, before he is inaugurated, to give him standby authority to reorganize government agencies—one of his major campaign pledges....

"When it was pointed out to Carter that he might be jumping the gun to, in effect, send a message to Congress before he had taken the constitutional oath of office, he backed off a bit and said he would seek the advice of Congressional leaders before making such a request." (end of quotation).

The dilemma: Jimmy Carter has admitted his intimate ties with the Rockefellers, and neither of the two Republican candidates can deny their party's close ties when Nelson Rockefeller is serving somebody as the Republican Vice President of the United States. So, no matter which candidate wins, the Rockefellers are sure to be the real winners.

This means that, unless the "dispossessed majority" can regain control of the legislative branches of government at State and Federal level, this Nation is due for a descent into total Socialism!

And this applies not just to the United States but to the entire world. This "World Plan" which Kissinger calls the "World Community" and which Brzezinski calls the "New International Order" is not intended to be a Monolithic World Government such as currently exists in the Soviet Union. Instead, it is to be a "New International Economic Order" with the various Nations free to choose their own type of political order, so long as the economic order is socialistic. That means monopoly capitalism and monopolistic control of all basic means of production, distribution, and exchange on a worldwide scale!

A clue to what we may expect on the world scene has been supplied us as a result of that meeting of 29 European Communist parties in East Berlin. There the monolithic concept was laid to rest and each party leader was set free to develop the particular type of socialism which would work best in his particular country. Tito of Yugoslavia—once called a fascist beast by Stalin—was an honored guest at the meeting. And the French, Italian, Spanish, Yugoslavian, Rumanian, and other Communist parties challenged Moscow's right to rule and demand obedience. What emerged, in official language, was "a declaration of mutual respect for noninterference in each party's domestic affairs and respect for the different paths taken in the fight for socialism." (unquote).

In line with the above: The current issue of Business Week (July 5) has an article titled "Narodny Bank: Following a Capitalist Line." The article explains that the Soviet banks are operating exactly like the Chase Manhattan, Bank of England, etc.

And note also that Brezhnev of Moscow is calling for the disbanding of military blocs such as NATO and the Warsaw Pact, "to defuse the powder keg, the atomic keg into which Europe has been turned."

The editorial in the July 2 Miami Herald may have said more than was intended. It said "There are hard reasons for Russia's new mood. Detente is proving important to her in the wake of persistent agricultural failures and economic troubles. Even if she were inclined to show military muscle, it would be a costly gesture. Many of the old hard-line leadership have passed from the scene... It has become safe for small Communist nations to tweak the Russian bear's tail, probably because it finds that cooperation is now more profitable than domination. This is a new reality that must be programmed into future United States policy."

And that is exactly what is being done. The much talked about integration of Communist Russia and Socialist America is what Jimmy Carter means when he parrots the slogan: the New International Order.

We repeat: our political hope lies with the County and the Congress. Presidents are political puppets; and puppets can never set even themselves free.

DON BELL REPORTS Weekly, presenting the Christian American point of view. $24 per year. Extra copies: 10¢ each. Address: DON BELL REPORTS, P.O. Box 2223 Palm Beach, Florida 33480

REGIONALISM, FEDERALISM, AND PAROCHIALISM

A NEW ORDER ADVOCATE SPELLS IT OUT FOR NARC

Recently an organization known as the National Association of Regional Councils (NARC) held its annual conference at Hollywood, Florida. Addressing the conference, Senator Charles McC. Mathias, Jr. said:

"There are going to be a lot of important meetings in 1976, including the national political conventions. But it is no exaggeration to say that this meeting may have a greater impact than any other—including the political conventions."

In the final analysis, historians probably will agree that Mathias was right. Political conventions are exciting, and they may seem to be important. But of far greater, and lasting importance to the United States—and to the world, since Regionalism is worldwide in scope—is the progress of that silent revolution called Regional Governance.

In order that any new readers of this Report will understand what "Regionalism" is all about, we quote from the July 12, 1976 issue of The Spotlight, which contains an excellent definition:

"Regional government was first advocated in the early 1900s by Socialists eager to collectivize society. Later, President Franklin Roosevelt laid the initial groundwork for regionalism, which President Nixon implemented by executive order in 1969. According to foes of regional government, the plan centralizes all decision making into the executive branch. Jo Hindman, regional government authority, says in The Metrocrats: 'Virtually every facet of the lives of American citizens has been brought under the hand of a single man. The pattern is simple: The President divided the United States into ten regions, named the States to comprise each region, designated ten cities as regional capitals, moved into them skeletal forces of five federal agencies—HUD, HEW, OEO, SBA and Labor.... Executive Order No. 11647 (Feb. 10, 1972) added EPA, DOT, LEAA and staffed each region with a ruling council composed of appointees.'

"Promoters of regionalism have sought to hide their true purpose by camouflaging their plans with rhetoric about 'efficiency,' and 'economy,' but Franklin Roosevelt dispelled that long ago by declaring, 'The purpose of reorganization is not economy. The purpose of reorganization is management!'"

(end of quote, italics added)

Two recent examples of how regionalism promotes efficiency and economy involve LEAA, which aims to become the United States National Police Force. First, AP released the following story on July 7, 1976: "The Law Enforcement Assistance Administration is threatening to cut off funds to South Carolina's highway patrol because state officials refuse to hire women troopers.

... In Columbia, S.C., the commander of the state's Highway Patrol said Monday that... 'females have a certain right to perform jobs in law enforcement, but not as uniformed line officers. The type of work a patrolman has to do would put a female in dangerous situations. I don't want to be blamed if something happens to them. I've been with the patrol for 35 years, and I've had to fight for my life with unruly drunks. Now, what would a 100-pound female do in that situation?' he asked.

"In a statement, LEAA officials said they are preparing 'a comprehensive analysis of women as state troopers in all 50 states.'... LEAA said 11 states use women as state patrol officers and other states 'have undertaken intensified efforts to recruit women.'... A Justice Department official said LEAA has referred previous cases of alleged discrimination to the department's civil rights division for possible legal action. The department has filed civil suits against state police departments in Maryland, New Jersey, Michigan and Delaware.... In the South Carolina case, LEAA officials chose to initiate proceedings to withhold funds, instead of referring the case immediately to the department, and the Justice Department official said this may signal 'a tougher compliance policy' at LEAA...." (unquote).

An even tougher policy—one involving direct police action—is evidenced in the treatment received on June 2, 1976, by a church congregation in Nevada, Missouri. At a Wednesday night prayer meeting, the preacher was in the middle of a prayer when "the national police force stormed in, bloodied some heads, and carted eleven of the worshippers off to jail." There were 40 worshippers—29 of them women and children—and 60 heavily armed police, acting on orders from LEAA, broke in, clubbed some of the men, spilled blood on the church floor, arrested all the men including the preacher, and left the church in a shambles.

According to the victims of the raid, they were opposed to their community's participation in various regional government schemes and it all came to a head when LEAA conducted a "training program" for county and community lawmen at Camp Clark, which is near the small town of Nevada. As has already occurred in California and some other States, the lawmen were being trained in "riot control." But local citizens took strong exception to the "regionalization" of their local police forces, especially since riots were unknown in this rural area. The opposition was led by some of the members of this particular church. This, the victims of the raid believe, prodded the "national police" into staging a crackdown in order to suppress opposition to regional planning by the Kaysinger Basin Regional Planning Commission.

It should be noted that among the principal objectives which its proponents hope to attain through the establishment of Regional Governance are a New World Order, the elimination of all love of country (which they call "jingoism"), the eradication of the concept of States Rights (which they refer to as "provincialism"), and getting people to think in terms of Regions instead of Counties, Parishes or Communities (which they deride as "parochialism"). The Regionalist's concept: There is only one community; The World Community; and it must be divided into Regions and Sub-Regions for purposes of administration and policing.

The application of this concept on the international scale was explained quite clearly by a foreign correspondent who referred to the advance of Communism in Italy, and commented on the fact that Regionalism was one of the factors responsible for that situation. He wrote:

"The pattern is interesting as a case study. Demoralization over defeat in the war was channeled into an attack on the (Italian) monarchy. Destruction of the monarchy was the first assault on tradition. When tradition was sufficiently nibbled away, Italy was led into the European Economic Community, softened for the surrender of national sovereignty....

"With Italy in the Common Market, the country was promptly divided into twenty regions. Through the traditions rooted in centuries, the provinces were loyal to Rome. But the regions owed their loyalty to the EEC in Brussels. Brussels was soon able to play the 20 regions against the national government in Rome by instilling a fear that if the regions did not stick with the European Community they would be left out of the decisions taken in Brussels (the spirit of interdependence at work—Ed.)

"The old framework collapsed and communists now win regional and local elections. Repeat the same process in other countries marked for membership in the Common Market (Canada being the next—Ed.), which will become the Atlantic Community when America is brought in.

"Note the carefully planned fragmentation of nations: 'independence' movements among the Basques, the Scots, the Welsh; break-away movements in Corsica, Brittany and the area of France once known as Occitania. The plan is to split the individual nations until none can afford an army of its own or exist outside of the federalist super-state. Once fragmented, national loyalty will cease to exist." (unquote. Extracted from a letter written by Hilaire Du Berrier to Arch Roberts of the Committee to Restore the Constitution, and first published by Col. Roberts).

Because this is an election year as well as a Bicentennial Year in the United States, there has been much speculation as to the current plans of those who are promoting Regionalism here in the United States. Most of those questions can be answered by referring to an address delivered by Sen. Mathias (R-Md), from which we quoted at the beginning of this Report. The Senator spells out the program in this speech which he gave before the annual conference of the National Association of Regional Councils at Hollywood, Florida. That speech was published in the June 26 Congressional Record, and we shall now quote extensively from that speech. Please note that the following is considered by your reporter to be in the nature of enemy propaganda and, had we the time and facilities, we might have used red ink.

It is a rare pleasure to be invited to address a group of people who are in the vanguard of their times. The impressive growth of regional organizations over the past ten years, the fact that there are now more than 600 regional councils in operation representing almost 30 percent of the nation's population, attests to the truth of Victor Hugo's famous observation: "There is one thing stronger than all the armies in the world and that is an idea whose time has come."

...Almost 40 years have passed since Lewis Mumford identified regions as the bedrock of civilization. He saw the region as a natural organism combining the most important elements of human culture and he saw the nation, the state and even the city as artificial units described by arbitrary boundaries. Mumford defined the regionalist as someone who tries to find out "how the population and civil facilities can be distributed so as to promote and stimulate a vivid and creative life throughout any geographic area that possesses a certain unity of climate, soil, vegetation, industry and culture." The regionalist's objective, as Mumford foresaw it, is a noble one. But noble objectives are not necessarily the easiest to accomplish. There are often unforeseen obstacles in the path of the most laudable goals. For example... (the people) want their local interests protected and they want you to do it. On election day a regional spokesman may find himself out in the cold if he has let his enthusiasm for regional issues overshadow local concerns. This is a problem I am familiar with.

The need for regional approaches during the past ten years has transformed regional councils...into major policy planning organizations. But participation is still voluntary and the council, if it is to stay in business, has to keep everyone reasonably happy. This too is an obstacle to regional accomplishment, for as long as local government can withdraw, or even just threaten to withdraw, the scope and nature of the issues a council of governments (COG) can reasonably attempt to address will be severely limited. When your energy is largely devoted to maintaining a consensus, so that no one will pick up their marbles and go home, there isn't much left over for finding cooperative solutions to the really difficult problems... The fact that each of you must walk a tightrope between local pressures pushing parochial concerns and your own conviction that regional approaches are necessary to solve our most critical problems exposes a fundamental dilemma in contemporary government. In the past 200 years we have grown from a loose rural alliance of thirteen states to a vast nation of metropolitan areas. The ability of our basic governmental institutions to adapt themselves to serve the needs of people living in these new circumstances deserves serious examination.

Our Constitution created a government system and institutions designed to address the problems of those thirteen original states... In 1787 the states that were the primary components of the new experiment with a democratic federal system of government, were appropriate units for addressing the problems of the day. But over the next two centuries the rivers that had initially provided such convenient state boundaries also attracted urban centers. As these urban areas grew across state lines, so did the problems of the metropolis, without any reference to what the Founding Fathers had in mind when they wrote the Constitution...

But instead of dwelling on the negative aspect of the situation, I would like to take a look at what might be done to give regionalism the push it so clearly needs... For my part, I intend to make a systematic review of Federal programs to see how they can be revised to stimulate problem-handling on a regional basis. I know from previous experience that this won't be easy. Several years ago I decided that provision should be made for LEAA funding on an area-wide basis. Because criminals show no respect for state and local boundaries I felt that a "beltway" conference could help address the metropolitan crime problem. But, from the reaction at the Justice Department to this proposal, you would have thought that I was trying to abolish the Constitution. Fortunately, I managed to overcome this one.

I intend to overcome resistance to the regional concept in other areas as well. Generally, I prefer initiatives to come from below, from the grassroots level. But this is one area where the political facts of life and experience dictate that action come from above.

When a city and its suburbs lie in different States, their diverging priorities obviously will stand in the way of regional programs. How many people who have fled a city for the relative security of the suburbs would willingly help pay the costs for supporting that city? Or how many members of a State legislature, who represent rural areas, will vote in favor of the State tax money going to help a city located in another State? Not very many, I think.

It is for these reasons that I believe Congress must take the lead in encouraging new efforts at regional cooperation and in sustaining regional programs that are already underway. Federal incentives have promoted the nationwide growth of activities on a regional scale. Making a regional planning process a precondition in getting certain types of Federal grants has certainly encouraged local governments to join regional councils...

But in spite of the progress that has been made, 55 million people in interstate metropolitan areas are still excluded from the benefit of many Federal programs. I think we now have to find a way to modify these programs so that State lines do not prevent large segments of the American people from participating in them.

The Federal programs I intend to review and to modify in an effort to encourage regionalism, are in the areas of: manpower, health care, social services, community action, law enforcement and economic development. Specifically, I intend to see what can be done with the health planning and resources development act to encourage local officials to establish health planning areas that will coincide with identifiable regions...I intend to see that the comprehensive employment and training act is revised to recognize the special character of interstate areas and to empower areawide agencies to sponsor employment programs in cooperation with local governments.

I intend to find a way to earmark some of the general revenue sharing funds for the use of regional councils...I intend to work for the establishment of a permanent legislative monitoring arm within the advisory commission on intergovernmental relations (ACIR)...I have already urged the select committee which is studying the Senate committee system to examine the question of how we might better organize ourselves to address the problems of interstate metropolitan areas. One recommendation that should certainly be considered is one NARC made at my district committee hearings: To establish a temporary joint committee on interstate metropolitan areas...We simply can not expect disjointed efforts by State and local governments, or even by separate committees of the Congress, to provide the kind of national approach the times demand...

The Intergovernmental Coordinating Act of 1976 was inspired by NARC President Wes Uhlman...It is designed to unify the regional planning requirements of many different Federal programs and to provide funds to support the A-95 grant review system. I think this act will provide just the kind of stimulus for regional councils we so urgently need...

As local officials and as members of regional organizations, each of you faces two basic challenges in the years ahead. First, you must work tirelessly at the grass roots level to create a regional consciousness. ...you must work to generate among the general public a sense that they are citizens of a region...that their horizons are broader and their possibilities grander than those contained within the confines of a city or even a State. You must be missionaries of regionalism and work with the zeal of missionaries if the concept is to be spread and accepted.

Second, regionalism needs a boost at the polls and boosters among the presidential candidates...In addition to your effort to get commitments to regionalism inscribed in the party platforms, I urge you individually and collectively to confront candidates for office and ask them for specifics...If their plans do not include recognition of the role for regional organizations, I suggest that you and your constituents make your pleasure known on November 2.

(end of address by Sen. Mathias)

Precis. The Regionalist program: destroy the power of State governments and induce local governments to become sub-regional councils, while converting people to the belief that they are citizens of a region instead of a city, State, or even a Nation! Is this not treason?

DON BELL REPORTS Weekly. $24 per year.
Single copies: 10¢ each. Address all orders:
DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

MANDATING THE CORPORATIVE STATE

SOCIALISM BY PLEBISCITE

The proceedings were lulling, soporific, and "peace and a new-found unity" seemed to permeate the minds of the delegates as the dullest national political convention on record saw Jimmy Carter nominated for the office of President of the United States of America.

But this "peace and new-found unity" was really a smokescreen, a carefully laid camouflage, to hide the grim fact that a new way of life is in store for America and all Americans if these people who say they are Democrats take charge of the country under the nominal leadership of the peanut king from the State of Georgia.

This fact is revealed in part by the Party Platform, which is really the same old platform that was constructed in 1972 by that melange of socialists and oddballs who tried to push George McGovern into the White House in 1972. It has been polished and refurbished by Carter's colleagues, to protect the originators. However, it's the same old socialist structure, but with this important difference: In 1972 McGovern looked upon the Party Platform as a set of suggestions from the Party VIPs; but Carter looks upon the Platform as his very own, a mandate and a promise. Platforms usually mean little to the winners. In 1932 FDR was elected on one of the most conservative platforms ever written by American politicians. But when elected, he ignored that platform entirely, and carried out the Fabian Socialist's platform to the fullest of his abilities. And this was not precedential in a President; in the past century, platforms have usually been overlooked or ignored.

Not so with Jimmy Carter. He claims this Democratic Party Platform as his very own. And he is committed to the task of carrying it out - or else...

And it is a Socialist Platform from the preamble to the final paragraph, the latter calling for repeal of the Byrd Amendment and normalizing of relations with Angola (the new country whose government executes American mercenaries and exalts Cuban mercenaries.)

Briefly stated, here is the Platform that was "dictated" by Carter's dictators:

1. Full Employment, Price Stability and Balanced Growth. This involves passage of the Humphrey-Hawkins Bill (S.50), plus standby authority to impose wage and price controls if and when the President deems this advisable.
2. Government Reform and Business Accountability. This means fewer bureaus and agencies covering wider areas of authority and spending more money than previously.
3. Government and Human Needs. This is the "socializing" platform. It calls for a "comprehensive national health insurance system with universal and mandatory coverage." Also nationalized medical care, welfare, minimum annual income, federal control of education, etc., etc.
4. Social Issues. A combination of detente and "hard bargaining" with all Communist powers, a cut of from $5 billion to $7 billion in defense spending.

While the Platform was being read, one most important addition was made at the Convention: it called for a revision of the Hatch Act so that government employees might engage openly in partisan political action! Earlier this year President Ford vetoed just such a bill, saying:

"If this bill were to become law I believe pressures can be brought to bear on Federal employees in extremely subtle ways beyond the reach of any anti-coercion statute so that they would inevitably feel compelled to engage in partisan political activity."

Which is a subtle way of saying that the Big Labor Unions would then be running the Government, and the Country!

And this is the important fact that was hidden from delegates and voters-at-large by the "peace and new-found unity" smoke-screen at the Democratic Convention: Big Labor moved in to take its place in a "new-found" corporative system that is being developed!

The Labor Coalition Clearinghouse

Jimmy Carter was nominated Wednesday night, July 14. Eleven hours later he named Sen. Walter Mondale of Minnesota as his running-mate. Before either of these events occurred, the newspaper account read:

"Carter prepped for his candidacy with a round of Wednesday meetings to solidify Democratic accord and look ahead to the fall campaign. He met with a labor coalition headed by United Auto Workers President Leonard Woodcock, which had given Carter his strongest labor support during his primary campaigns. 'We tend to favor Sen. Mondale as No. 1 (for the Vice Presidential nomination—Ed.) but would be very comfortable with Sen. Muskie,' said Woodcock after the meeting."

Thus, it might be said that Big Labor named Carter's running-mate after having assured Carter's own nomination.

To understand the importance of that statement, some background information concerning the labor movement in the United States is required:

Originally, there were two major labor organizations. There was the American Federation of Labor (AFL) which called for the organization of workers according to trade or profession (as the plumbers union which spawned George Meany). And there was the competitive Congress of Industrial Organizations (CIO) which, as the name implies, calls for the organization of workers according to industry (like the United Auto Workers Union, which is headed by Leonard Woodcock). Eventually, these two Big Labor groups got together, but the leaders—then George Meany and Walter Reuther—never did see eye-to-eye on political matters. Meany was (and is) anti-Communist, while the Reuther brothers were trained in Soviet Russia. He broke with Meany in 1968 and was at odds with the AFL at the time of his death in 1970. Leonard Woodcock inherited the UAW presidency and he patched up the quarrel with Meany—more or less. But the AFL has always favored unions by trade or profession, while the CIO calls for unions by industry. The CIO also promotes the idea of employer-employee coalitions whereby the union takes part in the actual management of the industry.

Now, bearing in mind that the CIO plan is unionization by industry, and industrial management by a kind of management-labor coalition, we now quote from a Home Library Book titled "Modern Political Philosophies and What they Mean," published in 1944 by the YMCA. Under the chapter dealing with Italian Fascism and the sub-heading "The Corporative System", we read:

"The fascist economy in Italy attempted to establish a working compromise between private capitalism and the requirements of the totalitarian state. A statement of this relationship was provided in the Labor Charter of 1927, which provided that 'the corporate state considers that private enterprise in the sphere of production is the most effective and useful instrument in the interest of the nation. In view of the fact that private organization of production is a function of national concern, the organizer of the enterprise is responsible to the state for the direction given to production.' Thus private enterprise was encouraged and protected, but its operation was bound up in a network of restrictions and regulations.... Although the profit motive remained as the incentive to production, the right of enterprisers to make independent decisions regarding the use of their capital—a vital feature of capitalism—was severely curtailed."

The foregoing is a description of the corporative system, or fascism as it was known and practiced in Italy. And it is also the very system that would be developed in the United States if the Humphrey-Hawkins Bill (S. 50 or H. 50) became Law!

Please note that this Humphrey-Hawkins Bill is, in effect, a part of the Democratic Platform, and the Bill has been approved by Jimmy Carter and by Walter Mondale. Furthermore, Leonard Woodcock is a member of the Initiative Committee for National Economic Planning which approved S. 50 at the time of its introduction on Jan. 15, 1975. At a press conference called by Sen. Humphrey to promote the Bill, Woodcock said:

"The need for long-range democratic economic planning on a national basis has never been more urgent.... Our economic well-being and our basic freedom of choice too often has been decided by the wrong people, for the wrong reasons, in the wrong time frame. ... The bill (S. 50) is distinctively American—which is Federalism in action."

Leonard Woodcock is a ranking member of the Rockefeller-controlled Council on Foreign Relations, just as Jimmy Carter is a charter member of the Rockefeller-controlled

Don Bell Reports

Year Twenty-Three - - - - - Number Thirty - - - - - July 23, 1976

"TO SEE OURSELVES AS OTHERS SEE US"

"PERFIDIOUS AMERICA"

Recently a major international newspaper, The London Daily Telegraph, ran a shocking editorial on its front page. Headlined "Is America Going Mad," the editorial recognized, and attacked, the "liberal East Coast establishment." That "something is drastically wrong in America" was conceded, and "The Europeans are appalled and disgusted by the open disarray of her (U.S.A.) public life." In certain respects The London Telegraph is either misinformed or, more likely, finds it expedient to obey certain special rules of brainwashing to which Britons are particularly subjected by the Internationalists (the rules for brainwashing differ with different subjects). Hence, The Telegraph's remarks regarding the President and the Secretary of State are glaringly remiss. However, the article does provide an insight as to how we are viewed by the British. The editorial, which confirms the existence of a Conspiracy, is reprinted in full:

IS AMERICA GOING MAD?

It is time America's friends spoke out, with some nasty questions to the so-called "liberal East Coast establishment. By that we mean sections of the press, sections of Congress, television commentators and comedians, university pundits and a lot of other people who may think there is a dollar to be made out of denigrating their country's institutions and leaders. We all know about the "trauma" of Vietnam and Watergate, but it's getting a bit boring. How long has the rest of the free world got to put up with these tender-minded people recovering from their "trauma" indefinitely?

America is accustomed to, and has merited, a good deal of deference from her allies. But deference can be a disservice. The United States should know that her European cousins are appalled and disgusted by the open disarray of her public life. The self-criticism and self-destructive tendencies are running mad, with no countervailing force in sight. She has no foreign policy any more, because Congress will not allow it. Her Intelligence arm, the CIA, is being gutted and rendered inoperative, the names of the staff being published so they can be murdered. Her President and Secretary of State are being hounded, not for what they do, but simply because they are people there to be pulled down for the fun of it.

We hope and believe that the vicious antics of the East Coast establishment, which are doing all this untold harm, do not reflect the feelings of the mass of the country. But it is a matter for wonder. Is the country as a whole being deranged? Surely not. Perhaps the presidential election later this year will clear the air. Yet that is still months away. And in the meantime there is all the campaigning to be gone through. Please, America, for God's sake, pull yourself together.

Even more shocking than the foregoing editorial from the London Telegraph was the story written by Ian G. Anderson, editor of Rhodesia & World Report. Mr. Anderson had come to the United States feeling sorry for his beleaguered Rhodesia; but he went back home feeling sorrier for the United States. "Our troubles are small and the issues clear-cut compared with the magnitude and complexity of America's problems," said the Rhodesian journalist and patriot. Here are excerpts from Editor Anderson's statement, which was published in the July 26 issue of Spotlight:

The first rule of the communists in attacking a foreign government is "divide the people."

The second is "support the dissident elements," in order to give the appearance of popular revolt to the activities of the misguided masses. Where there are natural divisions—between black and white, Catholic and Protestant, Jew and Gentile, Anglo-Saxon and Hispanic, etc., etc.—the communists' task becomes that much easier.

Every one of these natural differences can be scratched and scarified into open sores which will take a long time to heal. The divisions within America make it almost impossible for the "voice of the people" to be heard; for the voice of the people is a cacophony of bitter and strident antipathies.

No doubt these splits and divisions will be further exposed as the bitterness of electioneering moves from the primary to the general elections.

But one thing emerges quite clearly: that the internationalists at the top rule America and they are quite clear about where they are going and where they intend to take America. For all the patriotic razzmatazz which marks the Bicentennial Year for the American people, the U.S. Government is not for the American people. It is for the bankers, for the powerful cartels which have their roots in Wall Street and their branches in Moscow, Peking and in almost every country of the world which owes to the American dollar a spurious prosperity which could collapse overnight, if the credibility of the American dollar-empire were to be weighed in the balance and found wanting.

Oh, yes, I am quite aware that the poor are fed and housed and preserved from the consequences of their own inefficiency and lethargy, by the benevolence of the government and at the expense of the productive. But (as G.K. Chesterton sang), "The load of their loveless pity is worse than the ancient wrongs," and the HEW recipients are but the nether millstone on which the middle class is being ground out of existence by the upper millstone of government despotism....

You broke away from the tyranny of central despotism in 1776 and the Founding Fathers made strenuous and enlightened efforts to avoid replacing a foreign by a native despotism. Yet how much of the results of their efforts remain today? The basis of power now lies not with the people, not within public institutions, certainly not in the Law nor in the Supreme Court (which should be the custodian of the Constitution, without the inviolability of which all freedoms are meaningless), but in the hands of supranational financial despots in Wall Street—not the Capitol.

I am asked: "What can Americans do to help Rhodesia and South Africa?" Regretfully, I answer: "Nothing—except get American foreign policy off our backs." We remember how American foreign policy prevented Britain and France from defending the Suez Canal in 1956, and by its actions ensured the control of the Suez Canal falling into Israeli hands. We remember how North Korea ended up in communist hands after General MacArthur's military victory was sabotaged by America's politicians. We remember how all Vietnam passed into communist hands after the Treaty of Paris, for which Dr. Kissinger got the Nobel Peace Prize—a glaring example of semantic distortion: "Peace" in this context means "treason." Above all, we remember more recently that South Africa would never have gone into Angola without the assumption, tacit or explicit, of American support which—as usual—was immediately withdrawn.

Do you wonder that no country in the world can trust American foreign policy? The perfidy of Albion, against which your ancestors fought 200 years ago, is now the perfidy of America.

Not that there is anything wrong with the heart of America, which is worn on the sleeve as well as carried in the chest. Where else than in America could one find so many earnest, troubled, decent people searching their hearts and their Bibles for a solution to their manifold problems?...

No, there's nothing wrong with the heart of America—except that it is not allowed to influence the power-plant at the top of Capitol Hill....

No, you can't help Rhodesia—you can't really help anyone until you have helped yourselves to get out of the clutches of official corruption and despotism. We in Southern Africa will continue the fight, now nearly 13 years old, as we started it—alone.

We can cope with our enemies: God save us from our friends!

(End of excerpts from article by Ian Anderson, Editor of Rhodesia & World Report).

The editor of the London Telegraph insists that the United States "has no foreign policy any more." This is not true. We do have a foreign policy; it seems to consist of spending taxpayers' money and using the nation's waning power and prestige to win friends and influence governments for the benefit of internationalist developers who are building industries and bringing modern civilization to the world's "developing nations." And, not surprisingly, it seems that our foreign aid always helps the Communist nations more than it helps the U.S. This was shown by an editorial which appeared in the Indianapolis News on July 9, 1976. The editorial stated that:

"The Soviet Union and Communist China have made important political inroads among the developing nations even though they offer negligible amounts of foreign aid. The United States continues to lose ground in the Third World in spite of massive outlays of assistance of every conceivable kind."

The editorial cited figures to prove its point: "In 1975 all Communist nations provided only $1.2 billion in foreign aid to underdeveloped nations—approximately 7 percent of the $16.7 billion extended by Western nations and 23 percent of the $5.1 billion given by Arab nations." Furthermore, unlike Western assistance "which leaned heavily toward grants, Communist aid was entirely in the form of loans...."

A paradox; the more we aid a nation the more it turns toward Communism. A rather flagrant example was cited in a recent Paul Scott column. He charged that "Secretary of State Henry Kissinger has made a series of secret agreements with black-ruled governments in Southern Africa involving the channeling of U.S. paramilitary aid to communist-trained guerrillas and terrorists now attacking Rhodesia...the aid to be channeled through the Organization of African Unity. This is in line with the present policy of the Ford Administration to provide indirect aid to the forces working to overturn the governments in Rhodesia and South West Africa. Direct aid...has been ruled out by the White House until after the hotly contested Presidential nomination race between President Ford and former Governor Ronald Reagan. Ford is concerned that Reagan could use the issue to win the nomination-- Since Jimmy Carter, the Democratic nominee, supports the Kissinger-Ford policy in Africa the issue of U.S. aid to guerrillas and terrorists could become a major campaign issue should Reagan win the GOP nomination..."

Why all the effort to destroy the stable and independent government of Rhodesia? Here is one good reason: Rhodesia is independent and owes nary a penny to any International Banker or to any Nation with a Central Banking System. She has developed from a barren, underdeveloped territory into a modern state, and is in debt to nobody, is not only able to feed herself but is also helping to feed those surrounding black-ruled states which can't support themselves. All of this plus the fact that Rhodesia holds the world's major supply of that important metal, chromium; and the cartelists and money barons are willing to destroy that nation, or any other nation, in order to gain control of such a prized resource.

And, lest any reader still have doubts, the change of personnel in the White House from a Republican to a Democrat will make not the slightest difference in the U.S. foreign policy which is designed to aid the Internationalists by aiding the Communists.

In the first place, Jimmy Carter has signified his approval of the Kissinger foreign policy. In the second place, Kissinger would be replaced by Brzezinski or some other agent of the money monopolists. And in the third place, Carter has made his peace with the cartelists and money barons and has said that he will do nothing to hurt them or their plans. On the night of July 22, 1976, he met with representatives of the CFR, the Business Roundtable and the Establishment Press. He said, "Business leaders are concerned to some degree, but they need not be. When I get through the system will be fair, income will be treated basically the same." So the cartelists were satisfied: Carter was not going to hurt them or their plans. And Jimmy Carter is the man who "will not tell a lie."

And, should Carter be elected and should something then happen to Carter, his chosen replacement is also one of their men—he is a member of the Council on Foreign Relations and is a gilt-edged liberal to boot—a combination greatly prized by the Elitists. Appointed to the Senate to replace Hubert Humphrey when the latter became Vice President in 1964, he quickly zeroed in on urban and civil rights causes: open housing, legal services for the poor, a child care bill that would have "communized" America's children (Nixon vetoed the bill), and other socialist measures. Walter Mondale and Hubert Humphrey are political soul-mates, and of the type especially helpful to fellow CFR members. There is reason to believe that Mondale was chosen as Carter's running mate because of Humphrey's age and failing health—the younger edition seemed a better choice.

Monopoly Capitalism (as opposed to free enterprise) calls for the socialization of the working classes, the liquidation of the middle class, and the Dictatorship of the Elite. Toward this end, the Carter-Mondale team has the "perfect program." It calls for socialized medical care, a guaranteed annual income for all, the Humphrey-Hawkins bill to socialize labor, federal control of all education, expansion of trade with the Soviets, less money for defense, etc., etc.

Some call this liberalism; others call it communism. But we like the way Merritt Newby explained it in his July 15, 1976 issue of American Challenge. We take the liberty of quoting Mr. Newby at length:

Socialism, Communism, Fabianism, Fascism or any other ideology by any other name does not give you the Name of the Game. The Name of the Game is the Expansion of the Money Powers all over the World.

The National and International Elite Money Powers could care less what form of government each nation has, whether a Republic or a Dictatorship, so long as their profit motive is not interfered with in any manner Nor Their Control, Management and Rule. The only form of government that is a formidable opponent of the money powers is a constitutional representative republican form of government. The only weapon that can stop the money powers is to stop the money.

The Tax Revolt is the start and vehicle for overthrowing the yoke of the money powers. The Income Tax is where the big money comes from, which, of course, is taken from the people, not the money powers. Next is the repeal of the Federal Reserve Act of 1913, which will return control of the money system to the people and to the Nation. Then foreign aids, gifts and grants must be stopped.

Regional Government is the vehicle and tool to control, manage and rule the people under the color of a Constitutional Representative Republican form of Government. Of course, 50 sovereign and independent States must be abolished. Regional Government is the same all over the world. In reality, Regional Government is a Corporate Dictatorship with rule, control and management by one man.

Every major election year covers up a multitude of sins, omissions and commissions by the political candidates, politicians, public office holders not up for re-election, the Governors and the State Legislatures. Keep your eye on the Congress, State Legislatures, politicians and organizations.

In 1976 watch for meetings of Members of Congress for Peace Through Law, Business Roundtable, Institute for World Order, World Future Society, Trilateral Commission, Pugwash Conferences, National Association of Regional Councils (NARC), The Law Enforcement Assistance Administration, World Affairs Council of Philadelphia, Atlantic Union, European Economic Community, the Council of State Governments, Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations, American Bar Association, Organization of American States, Interparliamentary Union, American Bankers Association, Peoples Bicentennial Commission, other organizations.

The Socialists, Communists, Liberals, Republicans, Democrats, etc. haven't yet realized they are only pawns in the game, occupying different positions of "divide and conquer" as planned by the national and international elite money powers.

The ownership of this nation is being daily bought up by foreign corporations, cartels, individuals and foreign banks established in this nation. The investments by the foreign money powers in the purchase of industries, lands, coal, iron, oil, gas, natural resources, stocks, bonds, other securities and investments have reached an alarming status. Your country is being bought out from under you without your being aware of the fact. Demand an investigation by your State Grand Jury, State Legislature, and the Congress.

On February 17, 1950, speaking before the United States Senate, James Paul Warburg made this statement: "We shall have World Government, whether or not we like it. The only question is whether World Government will be achieved by conquest or consent." To date no President, Congressional Body, State Legislature or any Governor has disputed Mr. Warburg's statement. Wonder why?

(Quoted from American Challenge, semi-monthly. $15 per year. Mailed first class. 1149 14th Place, S.W., Birmingham, Alabama 35211.)

DON BELL REPORTS Weekly, presents the Christian American point of view, and is privately circulated. We reserve the right to refuse service to non-subscribers. Two copies of each issue are mailed, first class, to all save overseas subscribers. $24 per year. Extra copies: 10¢ each. Please address all correspondence and orders to:

DON BELL REPORTS, P. O. Box 2223
Palm Beach, Florida 33480

THE DANGER OF UNION CONTROL OF THE GOVERNMENT

THE SHOTGUN WEDDING OF CAPITAL AND LABOR

In 1850 there was an American statesman named Henry Clay who had a great desire to become President of the United States. But he was called upon to make a critical decision which could cause him to lose his party's nomination. However, being a statesman first and a politician secondarily, he said without hesitation: "I would rather be right than President." And he lost the nomination and never became President.

In 1976 there was an American politician named Ronald Reagan who also had a great desire to become President of the United States. He, too, was faced with a critical decision which could cause him either to win or lose his party's nomination. Being a politician and not a statesman, he decided that he would rather be President than right.

Also in 1976 there was a conservative and patriotic Governor of one of the original 13 States of the Union—Meldrim Thomson of New Hampshire—who had thought Reagan to be a true conservative and who had therefore encouraged Reagan to run against Ford. Gov. Thomson had expected to make the speech nominating Reagan at the Kansas City convention. But when the supposedly conservative Reagan named the most socialistic maverick in the entire Republican stable—Richard Schweiker of Pennsylvania—to be his running mate if he were nominated, then Governor Thomson angrily, and properly, denounced Reagan for "abandoning all that he had stood for," and said, "Now I won't go to the convention at all."

Now that Reagan has shown his true colors, as George Wallace had said before he too became a defector, "there isn't a dime's worth of difference," between the two major parties—and even the dime has turned out to be counterfeit. One conservative critic referred to Reagan's perfidy as "political prostitution," while another called it "the most blatant betrayal of a political ideology since Benedict Arnold."

But there were many dedicated conservatives who suspected from the very beginning that there might be a certain "ideological compatibility" between Reagan and arch-liberals such as Richard Schweiker. One California resident, a subscriber to Don Bell Reports, wrote a letter to Reagan several days before Schweiker surfaced as a teammate. The last four paragraphs of that letter will, we think, reflect the attitude of most subscribers to DBR:

"As you and most people know," he wrote to Reagan, "Gerald Ford and Henry Kissinger are agents of the Rockefellers.

"Jimmy Carter is also an agent of the Rockefellers although most people do not yet know this. There are several Rockefeller men on his staff including Zbigniew Brzezinski who, if Carter becomes President, is likely to become Secretary of State or Assistant Secretary of State and carry on the Rockefeller foreign policies of detente and surrender.

"Are you or are you not a Rockefeller agent? If you are, why should we bother to have an election in November?

"There is no sense in voting for the Democratic or Republican parties as they are now the same — both socialist. Both are owned, managed, controlled and financed by the same people....

"In November, I will vote for the American or Libertarian party, whichever is on the California ballot. And if neither gets on, I will write in the names of candidates.... It is better to lose a vote than to vote for socialism." (unquote).

Like the author of this letter to Reagan, your reporter is not so much concerned with who wins the election, if it must be Carter, Ford or Reagan. Our concern is with what is likely to happen after the election. Our concern is with the development of a kind of socialism which involves the union of labor syndicalism and corporate capitalism; commonly called Fascism.

As we recorded in our letter of July 16, Leonard Woodcock and the Labor Coalition Clearinghouse were instrumental in gaining the Democratic nomination for Jimmy Carter and his teammate Walter Mondale (the latter being almost as beloved by the Big Labor Bosses as his Republican rival, Richard Schweiker). The Carter Platform is a Socialist Platform, endorsed by Big Labor and by the Eastern Establishment (not publicly acknowledged, however). It involves, according to a summary prepared by Rep. Gene Snyder of Kentucky:

Increased Federal spending in all areas except defense.

National economic planning by the Federal government.

A mandatory national health insurance program.

A Federally-financed guaranteed annual income.

Federalization of all welfare programs.

Federally-financed Congressional elections.

Intensified regulation of all industry.

Nationwide Federally instituted building standards.

Divestiture of oil companies.

Continued regulation of oil and natural gas prices.

Discouragement of any reliance on nuclear power.

Elimination of tax-shelter farming.

Repeal of Section 14(b) of the Taft-Hartley Act.

Mandatory school busing for school desegregation.

Gun control and a ban on small handguns.

Ratification of the Equal Rights Amendment.

Support for abortion.

Full pardon for Vietnam-era draft-dodgers.

Reduce military aid and sales to allied nations.

Relinquishment of control and sovereignty over the Panama Canal.

Diplomatic recognition of Red China.

Expansion of detente policies with Communist nations.

Increased U.S. foreign aid.

Increased trade with Communist nations.

End of tax advantages for U.S. businesses trading and doing business with South Africa and Rhodesia.

Repeal of the Byrd Amendment allowing U.S. chrome purchases from Rhodesia.

Expansion of U.S. relations with black African nations at the expense of South Africa and Rhodesia.

So much for the Carter-Democratic Platform. You may have noticed that a number of the items listed are a part of the program of the present Ford-Republican Administration.

All of the items listed above will not be included in the upcoming Republican Party Platform, since it is important that the people be made to believe that there really is more than a counterfeit dime's worth of difference. But rest assured that regardless of any differences in the published Platforms, the actual Programs will be the same! The Ford Administration program already does much to confirm this statement. And Reagan's adoption of the "ideologically compatible" Richard Schweiker confirms that this is the time for the Unions to seem to take control of the Federal Government!

It is remarkable that Richard Schweiker—a registered Republican Senator—is the only Federal Legislator to receive a 100 percent rating from COPE, which is Big Labor's political department. When Reagan took on Schweiker, he also took on Big Labor's Political Program; otherwise Schweiker would never have agreed to become Ronald Reagan's political bedfellow.

What does it mean if Unions gain control of the Government? Robert Moss can give us an eye-witness report. Mr. Moss is a British political commentator and author who heads the National Association for Freedom in Great Britain. Earlier this year he visited the United States and, in talking to the employees of the Public Service Research Council, he said, in part:

"Let me give you a little image of how I think that the kind of trade union power that has grown up in Britain could help to bring about the final destruction of our economy, and even the overthrow of our parliamentary democracy. That will sound a little exaggerated to you, but I live with that day by day, and it is something that we do not take lightly.

"Now our trade unions are not just bargaining over wages or trying to get more into their ranks, they are trying to dictate the whole shape of economic and social policy in Britain. More than that, they are trying to build themselves into our political process.

"For example, our Trade Union Congress (TUC) has proposed that non-elected trade union delegates should sit on every local council in Britain. Our local councils—municipal councils—are elected on the principle of one man, one vote. Now we have a proposal from the TUC that they should contain non-elected union officials who will have full voting rights. That is a direct attack, if it ever becomes law, on our constitutional system. It gives you one measure of how far the challenge is going, and what is TUC policy today in our country is often enough the policy of the Labour Party and the Labour Government tomorrow.

"That recommendation has been accepted by the local government committee of our Labour Party. It has gone to the executive of the party, and I don't know, it could become a bill, and then legislation is not in the far distant future."(unquote).

Here in the United States, the union program calls for the unionization of all employees of all levels of government, Federal, State, County and Municipal; together with the power to strike and dictate policy.

The current drive is to unionize the military forces and union agents are, at this very moment, said to be actively organizing members of the National Guard and the Reserves. In Illinois the Association of Civilian Technicians is reportedly doing a very thorough job of enlisting Illinois National Guardsmen into their union.

Senator Strom Thurmond introduced a bill (S. 3079) to ban military unions, but the bill still awaits hearings in the Senate Armed Forces Committee. And Rep. Skip Bafalis (R.-Fla.) recently issued a statement pointing out that "Unions and the Military Do Not Mix." He said:

"Imagine... a company of Marines refusing to assault a beachhead because 'it's not in the contract.' Ridiculous as it sounds, such occurrences just might happen if the federal government weakens and allows the American Federation of Government Employees, an affiliate of the AFL-CIA, to go ahead with its plans to unionize servicemen.

"You can't have discipline and a union contract at the same time. And discipline is imperative in any military organization. Battles are won or lost solely on discipline—the failure of a company or a platoon to move as quickly as it should, or the failure of an artillery battery to hit its target because it didn't devote sufficient time to practicing.... As long as a standing Army, Navy, Air Force and Marine Corps are needed, we should do everything possible to insure that they are the best possible. That means no unions." (Unquote.)

We also have learned from very reliable sources that there is a serious move to unionize the Agents and all employees of the FBI. We presume that the CIA is not far behind, since all national security agencies are on the firing line and set for destruction by the One Worlders who want only World Security Forces and National—as opposed to local—Police Agencies.

THE UNIONS AND S. 50

Another aspect of the movement to unionize all federal employees involves the Humphrey-Hawkins Bill (S. 50 or H. 50). Under the provisions of this bill, an individual who says he cannot find a job in the private sector will be guaranteed employment by the federal government as an "employer of last resort." This "full employment" bill also provides that such workers will be paid "wages reflecting regional levels of compensation, statutory minimum wages, or those wages established by collective bargaining agreements, whichever is highest, and under working conditions consistent with trade union or prevailing standards, whichever is higher."

This may sound innocent enough; but let's see how it might work. A government employee strike has recently been concluded in San Francisco, so let's use that city for a possible case:

A person in San Francisco has been earning $10,000 per year, wants more money and decides to get it by quitting his job. He is unemployed for a few weeks, living on unemployment compensation and food stamps and then is hired by the government (because he claims he hasn't been able to find work in the private sector.) So he is given a job picking up trash in Golden State Park. Under the collective bargaining agreement between the city and trash collectors, the "unemployed" person will now be paid $17,000 instead of $10,000 per year, because the Humphrey-Hawkins Bill says the government must pay "those wages established by collective bargaining agreements."

As one source opposed to the Humphrey-Hawkins Bill points out: "As a guaranteed employer, the government will be forced to hire anyone who claims he can't find work. And the government will be forced to pay that person the union wage. This law could conceivably magnetize millions from lower-paying private jobs to union wage scale government jobs. These high wages, by the way, would be brought on by collective bargaining between local governments and the greedy union bosses. As a result the private sector job market would go begging, causing a decrease in production. Thus, we can see how collective bargaining can force wages up and drain that part of the economy that is the real producer. Therefore, collective bargaining forces the government to collect more taxes to pay for those artificially high wages created by the union bosses.

"What H-H will do is simply draw people from the productive (private) sector of society to the unproductive (public) sector. Not only will H-H create an employee drain on private industry, it will insure increased membership for unions. This, of course, will add money to the union's political war-chest to elect more pro-union Congressmen and Senators, causing other legislative abominations like H-H to be passed."

(unquote)

And thus will come total socialization, by way of the destruction of free enterprise and the unionization of all employees and all industries and businesses; a form of total collectivism brought about by such legislation as the Humphrey-Hawkins Bill.

Is there any way of halting the forced march into total collectivism through the union of labor syndicalism and corporate monopoly capitalism, which will bring about the complete destruction of the free enterprise system and our republican form of government?

We can expect little or no help from any future Administration. Leonard Woodstock of the Labor Coalition Clearinghouse and Zbigniew Brzezinski of the Trilateral Commission helped write Jimmy Carter's platform. Walter Mondale is a member of CFR, as is Woodstock. And George Meany of AFL-CIO publicly endorsed the Carter-Mondale team and asked organized laborpersons to follow suit. On the Republican side, Reagan's chosen "compatible," Richard Schweiker, rates 70 percent with ADA and 100 percent with Big Labor's COPE. As for Jerry Ford, he can't even control his own family, let alone any pressure from CFR or AFL-CIO.

As for the United States Congress; according to our latest available information, COPE supports and endorses 54 United States Senators—a comfortable majority when any legislation desired by Big Labor is up for vote. And in the House, COPE endorses and sponsors 263 Representatives—again a majority.

These figures suggest a course of action that should produce happy results. Every Member of the House must be elected or re-elected in November. If you work to defeat your particular Representative if he is endorsed, sponsored or financed by COPE, this will be a very effective way of turning the tide toward true conservatism!

Most important in this connection are the members of the House Education and Labor Committee, since all labor legislation must clear this committee before being presented for vote by the full House. According to the National Right to Work Committee, here are the reported Union Campaign Contributions to Members of the House Education and Labor Committee of the 94th Congress. No comment is necessary, but action is . . . :

Michael Blouin (D-Iowa)	$36,900
Paul Simon (D-Ill.)	$34,400
John Dent (D-Pa.)	$29,275
Robert Cornell (D-Wisc.)	$29,175
Frank Thompson (D-NJ)	$26,300
Ron Mottl (D-Ohio)	$23,830
Lloyd Meeds (D-Wash.)	$22,550
Peter Peyser (R-NY)	$21,555
William Clay (D-Mo.)	$18,850
John Brademas (D-Ind.)	$18,700
Ted Risenhoover (D-Ok.)	$18,600
William Lehman (D-Fla.)	$18,550
Leo Zeferetti (D-NY)	$15,062
James O'Hara (D-Mich.)	$14,300
Philip Burton (D-Cal.)	$13,050
Dominick Daniels (D-NJ)	$12,550
George Miller (D-Cal.)	$12,000
Tim Hall (D-Ill.)	$11,150
William Ford (D-Mich.)	$10,650
Mario Biaggi (D-NY)	$7,400
Joseph Gaydos (D-Pa.)	$6,450
Ike Andrews (D-NC)	$6,250
Edward Beard (D-RI)	$5,350
Patsy Mink (D-Hawaii)	$3,560
Ronald Sarasin (R-Conn.)	$2,350
Shirley Chisholm (D-NY)	$2,125
Al Quie (R-Minn.)	$2,000
Alphonzo Bell (R-Cal.)	$1,900
Marvin Esch (R-Minn.)	$1,900
Augustus Hawkins (D-Cal.)	$1,400
John Ashbrook (R-Ohio)	$500
Bill Goodling (R-Pa.)	$500
Carl Perkins (D-Ky.)	$500
John Buchanan (R-Ala.)	None
John Erlenborn (R-Ill.)	None
Edwin Eshleman (R-Pa.)	None
James Jeffords (R-Vt.)	None
Larry Pressler (R-SD)	None
Virginia Smith (R-Neb.)	None

DON BELL REPORTS Weekly. $24 per year.
