CHASE MANHATTAN is in deep trouble but we have no accurate estimate. In addition to these, in the first three quarters of 1982, 27 banks have failed, 24 mergers of failing S&LS have been arranged by the government, the Comptroller of the Currency says there are 277 "problem banks", and the FDIC hasn't enough to protect depositors. So the domestic situation caused by the Megabankers' overindulgence to other countries and their bureaucratic dictators could become serious indeed.

Meanwhile, to find a solution to their international problems the representatives of the 146 member nations of the IMF have been holding a conference in Toronto. Latest available information comes from AP, which says the United States is the "lone holdout" among the 146 nations on how to avoid an international credit crisis. The other nations, especially those that have no money and already owe the IMF on loans they'll never repay, want the wealthier nations to pour billions upon billions into the IMF vaults so more loans can be stretched or even defaulted. Donald Regan, the U.S. Treasury Secretary, wants to go slow with more money for the IMF. In the lexicon of the financial chieftains, says AP, "the United States has shifted gradually from favoring a 'small' increase and now an 'adequate' increase. It must still move up to a 'significant' increase before it gets to 'substantial'." Regan has told the group that "In previous times of prosperity, we could afford to be generous. But now we don't have as much available and naturally, the rest of the world is dismayed." In this instance at least, most Americans will side with Regan. Ever since the days of Lend-Lease and the Marshall Plan, the United States has been financing the world, with special emphasis on the USSR and its satellites, and on Israel. Now that the other "Trilateral" Nations are doing as well or better than we are, surely they can spend more if they insist on feeding foreign bureaucrats and oligarchs. Foreign aid seldom helps the people of a country, only those at the top. So, why not let the United States think of its own first for a change?

In an excellent summary of the overall situation, Donald McAlvany gives this conclusion, and we quote him directly:

"The cracks are beginning to spread throughout the international and domestic (US) banking system. The speculation, greed and outright incompetence that characterized the Penn Square collapse and the incredible loans bought by Continental Illinois, Chase Manhattan and Seattle First, is a tiny illustration of the modus operandi of the international banking system. But instead of speculative loans to risky oil and gas operators, the U.S. money center banks, their foreign branches and other foreign international banks have loaned hundreds of billions to Third World or Soviet Bloc basketcases or criminal borrowers, many of whom don't have the slightest intention (or capacity) of paying off these loans. According to Federal Reserve figures, the nine largest U.S. banks have a debt exposure to developing countries and Eastern Europe equal to 227% of their capital. With defaults and bankruptcies multiplying both in this country and abroad, confidence in the banking system is beginning to erode. It is unlikely that a wholesale collapse of U.S. banks, such as in the 1930s, will take place. The Fed would simply resort to the printing press as it has already done with Penn Square, Drysdale, and other recent failures. However, if the international financial dominoes begin to tumble, the Fed and its sister central banks could have a difficult time containing the avalanche (Quoted from The McAlvany Intelligence Advisor, September, 1982. Monthly, $75 per year. Subscription office: P.O.Box 39810, Phoenix AZ 85069).

If the International Bankers are in something of a self-created muddle, it must follow that any number of Multinational Corporations are also "biting the bullet" and looking for ways to keep from going broke. And this situation seems to have brought about a most extraordinary development. A selected team of Trilateral Commissioners has formed a kind of rescue squad for beleaguered Multinationals. Headed by none other than Henry Kissinger, this bids to be a most powerful group in the developing of the New World Order. Perhaps you've seen the article, but we feel it must be published anyway. So, here is the article as it appeared in the August 24th issue of The Washington Post:

KISSINGER FORMS GOLD-PLATED CONSULTING FIRM

By Don Oberdorfer

The Washington Post

Washington - Former Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger has lined up a team of diplomatic and economic superstars, including former British Foreign Secretary Lord

Carrington, to support "Kissinger Associates Inc." an international consulting firm that is offering its services to blue-chip clients. ¶ The Kissinger firm, for a retainer reported in economic circles to be $250,000 per client, plans to provide 'strategic planning' advice to a small number of large clients in the corporate world. ¶ Kissinger is chairman of the new firm, which was formed last month. Its president is Gen. Brent Scowcroft, who succeeded Kissinger in November 1975 as White House national security adviser to President Ford. ¶ Scowcroft said Monday that the firm plans to supply expert advice on making international business decisions. He said it expects to work more closely with its clients than risk assessment groups, which advise firms on the political and financial policies of foreign nations. ¶ Some clients have already been signed up for the service, according to Scowcroft, but he declined to name them or to disclose the fees being charged. Among the members of the board of directors signed up for Kissinger Associates, according to Scowcroft:

Lord Carrington, who resigned as Britain's foreign secretary in April, taking responsibility for the Argentine invasion of the Falkland Islands.

Robert O. Anderson, chairman of Atlantic Richfield Co.

Per Gyllenhammer, president of Volvo, the Swedish automobile manufacturing firm.

William D. Rogers, who served as assistant secretary of state for Latin American affairs and undersecretary of state for economic affairs while Kissinger was secretary of state. Rogers is now an attorney in Washington.

Scowcroft said Kissinger Associates, with offices in New York and Washington, will have a small staff of about eight persons. Jess Cunningham, formerly with a Chase Manhattan Bank-affiliated firm in the Eurocurrency market, is to be its secretary, according to Scowcroft. Kissinger, since leaving office as secretary of state in early 1977, has served on the international advisory committee of Chase and of Goldman Sachs, a New York investment firm, as well as associating himself with other business ventures. He has also been affiliated with Georgetown University's Center of Strategic and International Studies and has written two lengthy volumes of his memoirs of government service.

Kissinger was among the first persons to be consulted by George P. Shultz after Shultz was named secretary of state by President Reagan in late June. Kissinger was called in to advise Shultz on the Middle East and subsequently joined Shultz, West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and Singapore Prime Minister Lee Kwan Yew at Shultz's California home.

At his news conference last Friday, Shultz, answering a question, called Kissinger "a wonderful person and a great friend (with) tremendous comprehension of what is going on." He said he expects to 'continue to benefit from his (Kissinger's) advice'."

These New World Order elitists are specialists, each in his own field. Kissinger acts as secretary of state to David Rockefeller, in the last year has been to South America, Asia, the Middle East, Europe, plans trips to Southern Africa and China. Robert Anderson is a Chase Manhattan director, heads the important Aspen Institute, hopes to make "Rational Humanism" the one world religion. William Rogers is a top-notch international lawyer, Cunningham a specialist in world economies, Carrington is prominent in European politics, Gyllenhammer is a financial expert. The purpose of Kissinger Associates is to provide "strategic planning" for multinationals. Here is an outfit as dangerous as the Trilateral Commission itself.

WE'RE BAILING OUT THE WORLD WITH FEDERAL RESERVE NOTES

"Dear Editor:

"The imminent or present bankruptcies of Mexico, Argentina, Bolivia, and Poland ought to direct our attention to the Monetary Control Act once again.

"By the end of August, the Federal Reserve had purchased debts of West Germany, Switzerland, Italy, Canada, France, and England, and used those debts as collateral for printing and issuing, on 70 different occasions, about $2 billion worth of Federal Reserve notes from four different Reserve Banks.

"There is no legal impediment that would prevent the Federal Reserve from buying the debts of Mexico, Argentina, Bolivia, or Poland and using them for the same purpose. With the nationalization of the banks in Mexico, virtually all Mexican debt becomes eligible for Fed purchase, for the Monetary Control Act empowers the Fed to buy the debts issued or guaranteed by foreign governments or their agents.

"Mexico's external debt is between $80-85 billion, $27 billion of which comes due this year. Mexico has already announced its inability to pay, and Argentina has requested a standby IMF loan. The Federal Reserve, which prides itself on its lender-or-last-resort position, will be bailing out the world.

"The total Communist and Third World external debt is now about $850 billion. In the next few weeks, the Monetary Control Act will become more and more important.

Sincerely,

Ron Paul
Member of Congress."

Congressman Paul's reference is to the first Title of Public Law 96-221, which became a law on March 31, 1980. It already has become justly notorious because of its potential for causing economic and financial havoc. Among other things, it (1) gives the Federal Reserve control over all depository institutions; (2) lowers bank reserve requirements, potentially to zero; (3) enables the Fed to print unlimited quantities of Federal Reserve notes by abolishing all collateral requirements on cash held in vaults; (4) allows expansion of circulating notes by permitting the Fed to use virtually any of its assets as collateral for Federal Reserve notes; and (5) allows the Fed to monetize debts of foreign governments and their agencies by issuing Federal Reserve notes collateralized by foreign government obligations.

Although the Federal Reserve can pride itself in being in the lender-of-last-resort position, there is one other major method by which American taxpayers are bilked into covering the debts of overextended megabanks and bankrupt countries. This is through the IMF and its associated international financing agencies. In our last DBR, we mentioned the IMF conference that was taking place in Toronto. But it was too soon to know how we fared in that giveaway contest. Human Events of September 18 has some information. We quote:

". . . officials from nearly 150 countries were engaged in an effort to gang up on the American taxpayer. They were demanding, urging, cajoling and begging the United States to hand out huge new helpings of dollars to such institutions as the IMF and the World Bank for the purpose of bailing out the debtor nations and supposedly, lifting the underdeveloped countries to a state of Nirvana. On September 4, it was learned the U.S. (had agreed) with nine other leading industrial democracies to increase IMF funds by at least 25 per cent, which would give this institution some $85 billion in lending authority. With a fresh supply of dollars, the IMF would then be able to continue rescuing the dead-beat nations of the world, thus ensuring that their profligate ways of the past would not come to a halt. (Also important, so the overextended International Banks would not come to a halt). After considerable discussion of how International Development Association (IDA) is going to have its giveaways to "poor nations" increased by 50 per cent, the article concludes: "The time has come, as the Administration well knows, to put an end to giveaways and the fueling of our enemies through the multilateral lending institutions. But it was less than clear from the Toronto meeting as to just how firm the United States was going to be in resisting the Third World pressures for lavish new handouts, largely paid for with taxes from American citizens." Actually, it should be very clear: the U.S. government is not going to stop its giveaways to enemy nations, because this would ruin such institutions as Chase Manhattan, Citibank, BankAmerica, Morgan Guarantee, etc. And, nothing serious is going to happen to them in this decade because of their sins. The world's ruling clique has so spoken.

One of the interesting (and maddening to this reporter) incidents that will develop is the transfer of Cuba's debts from the USSR to the USA. The London Daily Telegraph reported recently, "Senior Cuban officials have told the Reagan Administration they would like to reduce Cuba's economic dependence on the Soviet Union. So far Washington has not responded, but American officials confirmed privately yesterday that some weeks ago the Cuban approach was made. The Cubans indicated their country needed an economic relationship with the United States and would be prepared to guarantee an end to the Cuban political interference in Central America to which the Reagan Administration has so strongly objected. Cuba's economy is in dire straits, and the Kremlin, which has repeatedly balled her out, appears to be saying 'no more'."

DBR readers should not be surprised at this development. Our DBR #31, August 8, 1982, dealt in depth with this slow but sure takeover by the United States of the financial burdens of Cuba, under the title "Cuba, Our Dependent Ally?" We noted that Larry Patterson had mentioned the upcoming event. And Globescan in its current issue (10 Sept. 1982) carries a full report of the developments. We quote: "Way back on August 30, 1981 Globescan warned, 'The IMF and America will, in the not too distant future, take over Russia's subsidy of the Cuban Operation.' On October 10, 1981, Globescan said that 'Cuban Marxists are to be laundered to become clean Socialists like France and the rest of the European Community.' On April 22, 1982, Globescan said to start watching Cuba very carefully, that the Presidential Determination No. 82-19 of August 30, 1982.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE HONORABLE GEORGE P. SHULTZ, THE SECRETARY OF STATE

Pursuant to Section 2(b)(2) of the Export-Import Bank Act of 1945, as amended, I determine that it is in the national interest for the Export-Import Bank of the United States to extend a credit and guarantee in the aggregate amount of $68,425,000 to the People's Republic of China in connection with its purchase of steel making equipment and related services.

On my behalf, please transmit this determination to the Speaker of the House and the President of the Senate.

This determination shall be published in the Federal Register.

operation to cleanse Castro was getting underway. Before he quit, Alexander Haig met secretly with Cuba's Vice-President Rodriguez, and top roving ambassador from the CIA, General Vernon Walters, has had lengthy meetings with Castro. And from Globescan, July 5, 1982: 'A June 5th editorial in The Economist of London represents Cuba as the U.S.'s battered sparring partner, tired of the fight and ready to talk. The article states that '20 years of trying to isolate Cuba have got rid of neither Mr. Castro, nor the Russians in his country.' This is absurd. No one ever intended to rid Cuba of Castro or the Russians. Cuba was developed and maintained as an 'enemy' to frighten U.S. taxpayers into financing foreign schemes - undertakings such as the wealth transfers in Central America, or the use of Cuban soldiers to guard supranational monopolies like Gulf Oil against sabotage by patriotic freedom fighters in Angola. On June 19th, The Economist again poured on the soft soap, saying that Russia can no longer afford Cuba. They cried that the Soviets pump in roughly $4 billion a year - $11 million a day. Obviously Russia cannot continue to finance Cuba. Russia doesn't even produce enough wealth to feed herself - no socialist country does. They must borrow continually from countries where freedom to produce and keep the earnings creates surplus capital. If Socialism in Cuba or Russia were allowed to fall, the game would be over for the International Bankers who love to lend to socialists who can never repay - and thus are hooked on loans forever. So what must be done to keep things going?

"The International Monetary Fund has lots of money, thanks to U.S. taxpayers, and so does the World Bank, thanks again to Americans who put their money in banks that buy World Bank bonds. So, in order to spring loose all that money for Fidel, simply soft soap Americans to change the way they think about Cuba and Dr. Castro. Make Cuba out as struggling to obtain the good life, but is misunderstood and driven into the Russian camp only because of America's twenty-year-long cold shoulder. The operation is underway. The IMF, as the emerging World Central Bank and lender of the last resort, will take the Cuban financial burden, using American money, as usual. The IMF is already doing this in Eastern Europe. Soon all of Russia's satellites and socialist regional governments will be re-financed. Then, as banker to one-world government and the New International Economic Order, the IMF will take over the financing of Russia as well ." (Globescan, 10 September, 1982. 1 year (24 issues) $125. U.S. subscription center: 1545 New York Avenue, N.E., Washington, D.C. 20002).

That the USSR is willing and eager to let the United States support Cuba does not mean that there will be any lessening of Soviet pressure in the Caribbean, in Central and South America. In the first place, there is an inviolable Communist command: Once any country has adopted a Socialist form of government with the approval of or aid from the Soviet Union, that country will never be allowed to change its mind. It will remain a Socialist country, even if the Soviets have to fight to keep it that way; as once in Hungary, now in Afghanistan, perhaps later in Poland. And in the second place, the elitists and International Bankers must maintain an "enemy" to frighten people and governments into supporting the elitists. That's why the International Bankers supported Lenin and his few followers in the beginning, why they have continued to support the USSR ever since. There must be that "threat" to scare people into agreement. That 'threat' has become so real in the 1980s that even the International Bankers must often feel that their monster might rise up to destroy them.

So the "enemy" must remain a threat in the Caribbean, in Central and South America. It's just that, with the US financing Cuba, now the USSR can adopt new strategies and take new directions. In fact, according to Mike Blair in The Spotlight for September 20, the new Soviet strategy has been announced. "In an effort to block the Reagan administration's so-called 'Caribbean Basin initiative,'" says Blair, "a plan to pump up the economies of Eastern Caribbean nations with $60 million this year alone, the Soviet empire has initiated its own massive plan of aid, generously laced with massive military efforts. . . Soon from bases being built in Nicaragua, Grenada and Guyana, Soviet MiG jet aircraft will be able to strike vital oil tankers anywhere in the Caribbean." Reporter Blair is of the opinion that Cuba will be involved in these future operations. But we don't think so. If all the signs of the times are right, now begins a period of cleansing for Cuba and Castro. They need our money. More Russian aid has become problematical.

So, except for their troubles with Afghanistan and Poland, the Soviets are doing very well, thanks to Megabankers' aid. The same can be said for the Megabankers, we aren't really worried about unpaid loans so long as those lenders-of-last-resort, the IMF and the Fed, are there to keep them lending, and their operations chieftain, David Rockefeller, whether he is in his office at 1 Chase Manhattan or his branch office at 1 Karl Marx Square, or visiting heads of state, continues to dominate the American government. Congress has the power to change all this, but doesn't dare to exercise its power in killing the Fed and establishing a gold standard.

In the final analysis, it seems to be up to we, the people, who are helpless without the support of their King of Kings.

TRILATERALISTS IN DISARRAY?

The following observation comes to us from the British-based Intelligence Digest. We quote without comment:

The Trilateralists and their one-world government elitist associates in a variety of organizations are in some confusion as a result of recent foreign policy developments. The departure of Secretary Haig is but an outward sign of deeper cross-currents. ¶ The strains began not in Europe but in Japan where there is an organization dedicated to training the leaders of the 21st century to shoulder the responsibility which some Japanese believe will fall on their shoulder as a result of the change in world power patterns following political and economic changes.

The strength of the Japanese economy is well known inasmuch as it has had a considerable impact on the United States and Europe. But the Japanese have also had a less well-publicized impact in Asia. ¶ A number of American Trilateralists have found themselves in disagreement with their Japanese counterparts. But as if that were not bad enough, there is now a division between the European and US Trilateralists which involves a number of Bilderbergers and members of the US Council on Foreign Relations (CFR). ¶ Now all this is supposed to be confidential; indeed it is not supposed to be happening at all. And of course it is quite above our heads, secrecy and elitism being two key factors in the entire international set up.

The European divisions have come about because of conflicting foreign policies concerning the Middle East. A well known Bilderberger is reported to have accused a well known US Trilateralist of being a Zionist before anything else. The argument that there was no conflict was soundly rejected by the Europeans. ¶ However, the elitist power brokers of these organizations are determined to repair the divisions and continue the development of the powerful international network of top people who are convinced that they know what is best for the rest of us. THE LEBANESE POWDERKEG

Commenting on the terrorism which has been sweeping through the world, most of it inspired and directed by Communist leaders, Hilaire du Berrier recently remarked that "World War III, now in the phase of destabilization by terrorism, has already started." This statement seems to have been confirmed by the Pyrrhic victory that has heaped such universal criticism upon the political state of Israel, and has caused such a loss of respect and trust among nations, as well as so much expense, upon the part of the United States. Prior to September 1, 1982, it was true that virtually every nation in the world, Western, Eastern, Mideastern, Nonaligned and Third World Nations, was critical of the actions of the Begin-controlled government of the political state of Israel. This was evidenced by numerous UN sanctions against Israel, the votes being unanimous because Israel's only friends among nations; the United States and the Republic of South Africa; chose not to vote.

However, after September 1, 1982, and especially after September 15, 1982, there were no abstentions. The whole world was unanimously and openly criticizing or condemning Israel for its actions in Beirut. Even a sizeable number, perhaps a majority of Israeli citizens were joining in the criticism and the condemnation. This because the Israeli troops had violated its promises, had re-entered West Beirut, and then had permitted members of the Lebanese Phalangist Party and members of the private army of renegade Lebanese Major Saad Haddad to pass through the Israeli lines and enter two refugee camps where they then proceeded to murder in cold blood still uncounted hundreds of Palestinian men, women and children. President Reagan was one of the first to denounce Israel. And he did it in unusually harsh terms. "All people must share the outrage and revulsion at the murders, which included women and children. We strongly opposed Israel's move into West Beirut . . . both because it was wrong in principle and for fear that it would provoke further fighting."

The American communications media, usually emphatically pro-Israel, turned against its former admirer and promoter. For example, The New York Times of September 21, remarked in a lead editorial that "There are Lebanese precedents for the barbarity in Beirut last week. But there are no Israeli precedents for . . . the mass slaughter of Palestinians whom Israel had undertaken to protect. In the presence of such horror, who speaks for Israel? Surely not the Government of Prime Minister Begin. His Cabinet failed an essential test of humanity as the shocking news and pictures spread among its people. Instead of remorse, it could find only a passing phrase of 'deep grief and regret.' Instead of doubt about the performance or assigned mission of its army, it uttered shameless self-praise. Instead of rage against the criminals who made Israel an accomplice in a pogrom, it spouted defiance: 'No one will preach to us ethics and respect for human life'."

In a most surprising and unusual editorial and reportorial about-face, Newsweek almost told the "story like it was." Save for the use of the unqualified word Christian, the story seemed objective and without the usual liberal slant. With a picture of a cluster of dead bodies of Palestinian victims crumpled in the streets of the refugee camp of Sabra, and under the heading "Massacre in West Beirut," Newsweek declared unequivocally that "The Massacre in West Beirut was the work of Lebanese Christian militiamen supported and armed by Israel. The Israelis invaded Muslim West Beirut last week on the pretext of preventing bloodshed after the murder of their principal ally, President-elect Bashir Gemayel, 34. If peacekeeping was their aim, they made a horrible mistake when they put their bloodthirsty friends in charge of the Sabra and Shatille refugee camps, which housed the families of evacuated Palestinian fighting men. As the Israelis stood by, Christian gunmen rampaged through the two camps, executing hundreds of Palestinians. The exact number may never be known, but estimates ran as high as 1,000 - including some who died with their hands and feet bound. . . . When Newsweek's James Pringle attempted to get into the Sabra camp while the killing was still going on, his way was blocked by Israeli troops and members of Haddad's army. As rifle fire crackled inside the camp, Pringle asked one of Haddad's men what was going on. 'We are slaughtering them,' the militiaman replied cheerfully. Nearby, an Israeli colonel who identified himself only as 'Eli,' said his own troops would not interfere to 'purify the area'."

Days later, after heated debates and name-calling in the Israeli Knesset (parliament) Defense Minister Ariel Sharon admitted that Israel had a direct hand in plotting and arranging for the Phalagists to enter the two refugee camps. But a direct investigation of the mass murders was rejected. A few cabinet ministers and other officials resigned in protest, but in the long run Begin had a vote of confidence from the Knesset members. Meanwhile President Reagan sought some way of restoring America's lost credibility. American officials had promised that if the PLO terrorists would depart, with their sidearms and ammunition, leaving their families behind in Lebanon, the members of those families would be protected. Those were the people who were murdered in the two refugee camps. Shocked and outraged, the Reagan administration decided that the multinational force composed of U.S. Marines, French Foreign Legionnaires, and Italian troops, must return to Lebanon and see to it that all "foreign troops" leave the country and let the Lebanese Army take full responsibility for restoring order. These arrangements were predicated upon the agreement of the Israeli government. Begin agreed, but decided that the Israeli troops would not all leave Lebanon immediately, that some elements of the Israeli troops would remain and work with the multinational forces in the "purification" of Lebanon. So, Begin is still in charge of "Operation Lebanon."

And now comes the really dangerous part. U.S. Marines were to land and re-enter Lebanon, but this time in a different area, under different circumstances, and with different orders. Those orders were never publicized, but it seems that our Marines, although this time supplied with ammunition with which to defend themselves, were not to use it when fired upon. Only if they were fired upon or attacked for a second time were they to fire back and defend themselves. It makes for a situation seething with danger. As Senator Goldwater remarked, if any one of those U.S. Marines is lost, we could be mixed up in another foreign war.

There are two sets of circumstances that should cause great worry to the American people. First, whenever the economy becomes shaky on a worldwide scale, the age-old answer has been the creation of a war. This puts millions of people to work, causes factories and plants to operate at full capacity, and improves the economy by pouring billions into conventional weapons that have no resale value, and uses foodstuffs, pharmaceutical products, etc. Time after time, International Bankers have saved themselves from disaster by financing wars. And there is a second consideration: The same forces that engineered the United States into participation in World Wars I and II, the Korean no-win war and the Vietnamese no-win disaster, also are promoting a World War III, and direct American involvement in a war in the Middle East could be the start of something too big and too horrible to contemplate. One thing is sure: Lebanon is no place for U.S. Marines. The powers that be created the UN and has used UN peacekeeping forces to restore order in other parts of the world. Why not in Lebanon when the situation became so serious?

In order to better understand the background of this potentially disastrous affair, perhaps we should recall the events of the past which brought about such a situation. Following, as briefly as possible and as objectively as is possible for this reporter, here is the historical development:

Palestine has never been a land of peace. Its location as the meeting place for Asia, Africa, and Europe is too strategic, militarily, politically, and economically, for the world to leave it alone. Perhaps because it was the meeting place of three continents that the Prince of Peace chose to be born there in the flesh, that His message of Salvation might more easily be spread throughout the world. But only through Him was there ever any real peace, and that of a peace that passes understanding on the part of the people of this world. The only National Israel of which the Bible speaks was born in war as Joshua conquered the land; died in war as the Roman General Titus destroyed the Temple in 70 a.d. The Jews (a sobriquet of the tribal name Judah) who had rejected the Messiah and escaped the slaughter in Jerusalem and Judea, were scattered abroad, many of them settling in Rome. They tried to re-establish themselves in Jerusalem but were driven out permanently by the Romans in 135 a.d. Ever since that time, there has been the dream of a homeland for this people. But not until the nineteenth century was there any real opportunity for such a development. In 1837 Sir Moses Montefiore, an International Banker, visited Palestine and was impressed with the possibilities of the land. Montefiore began promoting among the Jews in Europe the idea of emigrating to Palestine and creating a kind of homeland. There was a little response from Jews living under extreme conditions in Russia and Germany. But the idea never really caught fire until Theodore Hertzl came on the scene. In the 1880's this assimilated and secular Jew decided to devote his life to the aid of his people. This has been suppressed, but Hertzl's first idea was that all Jews be converted to Christianity so they might be accepted in European society "as social equals." But Rabbis and leaders of Judaism rejected the idea with scorn. So Hertzl then created an organization of political Zionists, and proposed the mass migration of Jews to some spot where a homeland could be created. Hertzl assembled the first congress of Zionists in 1897, in Basle, Switzerland. At that time they decided that they should try to establish a homeland in Palestine.

It is noteworthy that at this time the thought was of a "Jewish Homeland," rather than a "Jewish Nation." The Zionists were very emphatic about the difference. At the tenth Zionist Congress, held in Basle in 1911, the president opened the congress with these words:

"Only those suffering from gross ignorance, or actuated by malice, could accuse us of the desire of establishing an Independent Jewish Kingdom. . . Not a Jewish state but a home in the ancient land of our forefathers." (Emphasis added).

The Balfour Declaration of 1917 repeated this sentiment: "His Majesty's Government view with favour the establishment in Palestine of a national home for the Jewish people. . . it being clearly understood that nothing shall be done to prejudice the civil and religious rights of existing non-Jewish communities in Palestine or the rights and political status enjoyed by Jews in any other country." (Again, emphasis is added.)

To repeat: In establishing a national home for the Jewish people there was to be no change in government, no creation of a State of Israel, just a place where Jews could reside under the protection of the existing government which was at that time British, since Palestine had been mandated to Britain after the land had been taken in war from the Turks. But what a change when the Jews started implementing the Balfour Declaration in 1946! Suddenly the demand changed from that of a Jewish homeland to that of an independent Jewish nation. Terrorist gangs were formed to enforce the demands. One of the leaders of such a gang was Menachem Begin. At that time he was a terrorist fighting for a "return" of land in exactly the same sense that Yasir Arafat of the PLO is now a terrorist fighting for the return of a land that has been taken from the Palestinians unfairly.

The situation became intolerable to the British Government, which decided to relinquish its Mandate over Palestine and let the newly created United Nations Organization settle the issue as best it could. Count Folke Bernadotte of Sweden who had helped arrange for the German surrender at the end of World War II was asked to act as UN mediator in Palestine. He was assassinated by Jewish terrorists headed by Begin. The British placed a price on Begin's head, but he managed to live and eventually to become the Prime Minister of Israel, and to conduct the invasion of Lebanon and its capital city, Beirut.

We haven't the space to fill in the details of how, the moment Israel declared itself to be an independent state, President Harry Truman immediately accorded official recognition; and how Israel has been our dependent and our protectorate ever since. This has made it more difficult to deal with the oil-rich Arab states, and Carter's Camp David pact between Egypt and Israel was supposed to be a giant step in reconciling a complicated situation. The extremist Palestinian nationalists, under the leadership of such organizations as the PLO, began to accept aid from the USSR, thus making the entire situation even more dangerous to the United States.

But to fill in the years within a little space, we'll quote A.C. Forest, a Christian reporter and author of the book "The UnHoly Land," who wrote some ten years ago: "In 1947 the UN decided to partition Palestine. . . The Jews who had less than 6 per cent of the total (area) were given 56 per cent of it. . . . Between the UN decision of November 20th, 1947 and the actual close of the Mandate and withdrawal on May 15th, 1948, Jewish regular and irregular (terrorist) forces seized most of the Arab cities of Palestine and scores of Arab villages. They not only forcefully overran territory lying within the proposed Jewish state . . . but also cities and scores of localities assigned to the Arab states, including Jaffa and Acre as well as the new City of Jerusalem. This process continued through the Arab-Israeli war with the result . . . the total area which fell under Israel control rose to almost 80 per cent of the country." (Quoted from "The UnHoly Land, by A.C. Forest. Devin-Adair Co., Old Greenwich, Conn. 1972).

After that came the Gaza Strip, Sinai, all of the rest of Palestine, part of Syria, the presently contested West Bank, and probably parts of Lebanon. Ten years ago, Forest wrote: "So the struggle goes on. The homeless (Palestinians) have tripled in number and the territory occupied by Israel has been increased many times. Three wars have been fought and skirmishing continues. The whole Middle East dangles on the edge of war."

And now, with this Pyrrhic victory for which we are going to pay, that "edge of war" will appear narrower than ever. The PLO has not been eliminated. It has just been made an international force which will command more and more aid from the USSR and its Communist Friends in Asia and Africa, especially Syria and Libya. The future role of the oil-rich Arab states becomes more and more questionable. And, most serious of all, now there are United States Marines on the spot in a foreign country where a Lebanese powderkeg might ignite a total war. Let us pray those boys over there will soon be getting back over here, where they belong.

WHAT HAPPENED TO OUR CONSTITUTION?

At the proper time in this Year of our Lord 1982, Ronald Reagan duly honored and observed a tradition that had been established by a previous President. He issued a proclamation declaring that September 15th was the 195th birthday of that great document, the Constitution of the United States of America. And he called upon Americans to rightly honor and observe the day as Constitution Day. Whereupon, we can be assured that many Americans honored the day in their own particular ways. But, we can be just as sure that no officer of the United States, either elected or appointed, actually observed the letter and the spirit of that document which they had sworn to uphold and protect as the Law of the Land and the source of our civil liberties. We have the feeling that few of our federal officers have even read it. Some who have read it have declared it to be a relic of the horse and buggy days, unfit to be regarded as law in this technetronic era. Others have said "Damn the Constitution, full speed ahead toward Social Democracy." Still others have sought that it be replaced by a new Constitution. And still others would smother it with unnecessary amendments.

We were pleasantly surprised by the way Joseph Sobran handled the subject. Sobran is a syndicated columnist with the Los Angeles Times, a daily newspaper often referred to as the West Coast Washington Post. That's a part of what made his column so unusual on this particular occasion. On the opinions page of our local five-days-a-weeker, under the heading "Not the Way the Constitution Was Written," were the words, and we quote:

"It is a favorite principle of mine that before you set out to amend the Constitution you should read it once or twice. You might even have a gander at The Federalist. The pending amendment to limit taxes and require a balanced budget is said to be a carefully weighed measure by no less an authority than Milton Friedman. Contrary to some charges, it is not at all a slap-dash attempt to apply the techniques of Procrustes to the handiwork of Publius. Even so, there is a melancholy air of second-bestness about it. One senses that the amendment tries to do by crude quantitative methods what the original Constitution did by subtle, qualitative, structural methods.

"I say 'did' because I am not at all sure we live under the same Constitution. After studying The Federalist papers, my conclusion is that we have turned the old system completely around. This is to be sure, a non-scholarly view, but I think it meets the test of common sense. In that spirit I offer my findings. The Federalist was of course a series of articles written mostly by Alexander Hamilton and James Madison under the penname 'Publius, to urge ratification and to promote understanding of the Constitution. Its basic argument is that the 13 states now (as of 1789) form a nation, and need a national government with appropriate powers: army, navy, postal system, power to conclude treaties, and so forth. Publius made his argument carefully specific. He knows he faces strong anti-federalist sentiment among people who fear a strong central government, and he wants to calm them down. He does not argue for a national government of unlimited power, but one with strong powers for carefully defined purposes - and no others. Federal jurisdiction, he says in the 39th paper, 'extends to certain enumerated objects only, and leaves to the several states a residuary and inviolable sovereignty over all other objects.' In the 45th he repeats the point that the federal powers are to be 'few and defined,' whereas state powers will remain 'numerous and indefinite.'

"The 10th Amendment was intended to confirm this point: it says that the powers not delegated to the federal government are reserved to the states and the people. Whatever the federal government is not empowered to do, it is forbidden to do. This Amendment . . . represents the whole philosophy of the Constitution in a nutshell. We have forgotten that philosophy. Federal powers have been so vastly expanded as to defy any enumeration, specification, or definition. One pretext for this has been the 'general welfare' clause of Article I. Publius, in the 41st paper, discusses this clause. He is contemptuously incredulous that anyone could ever take it to imply unlimited federal power, and he decisively refutes any such interpretation. Unfortunately, his argument, though irrefutable, has been ignored. The worst anti-federalist fears have come true.

"By the way, where was the Supreme Court all this time? Publius expected the Court to stand guard against 'encroachments' by the federal government, as he says in the 78th paper. . . So Publius' vision is of a strong but limited federal government, in which any attempt to enlarge its powers beyond those enumerated in the body of the Constitution would be checked by the Court (as well as by the vigilance of the people).

"This certainly does not describe the system we live under now. The proposed amendment, presently bottled up in the House Judiciary Committee, is an attempt to limit the federal government not by defining its scope, as the framers of the Constitution tried to do, but simply by retarding the pace of its growth. Is this the best the descendants of Publius can do?" (End of article by Joseph Sobran of the Los Angeles Times Syndicate).

The argument Sobran uses against the proposed budget balancing amendment could also be applied to a batch of other proposed Constitutional Amendments that are loitering in Congressional Committees or are being considered by State Legislatures. There are amendments to curb abortion, one to stop the forced busing of school children for racist purposes, another to return prayer to government (public) schools. There's a proposed amendment to abolish reverse racism (Affirmative Action). There is the long-pending Liberty Amendment. And to top them all is a call for a Constitutional Convention which might add or delete amendments or even throw out our present Constitution and introduce a new, socialist Constitution that has been hovering in the background for several years. But, if our elected representatives were conversant with the terms of our present Constitution, they would learn that amendments such as these are totally unnecessary; that there are legislative cures for every one of these evils. Most of the proposed and pending amendments are for the purpose of halting the unconstitutional and illegal "lawmaking" proclivities of the Supreme Court or its lesser circuit and district judges. Such judicial actions can always be abolished by the proper legislative action. Or, in case of extremes, there is the Constitutional provision for impeachment. Impeachment of judges has been virtually ignored; but so have so many other duties and obligations imposed upon the U.S. Congress by the Constitution, which in the final analysis is the only supreme law of the land.

Where the Federal Judiciary is not directly involved in matters that cause people or their representatives to call for some Constitutional Amendment, the second cause usually has to do with illegal and unconstitutional actions by some part of the entrenched Federal Bureaucracy. The Constitution established a federal government with just three branches: Legislative, Executive, and Judicial. Our Founding Fathers understood that concentrations of political power are fatal to liberty. They knew that if they formed a government in which it was possible ever to concentrate the legislative, executive and judicial functions in one branch, such a concentration of power could lead to tyranny and dictatorship. But they did not expect that, under bureaucratic agencies of the executive branch, all of these powers could be merged, so that a bureaucratic agency may act as its own prosecutor, judge, jury and executor of punishment in the case of hapless individuals or companies that might run afoul of their so-called administrative law.

How did this happen? Dan Smoot has explained that "Congress makes broad grants of power to the administrative agencies, enabling them to make whatever rules and regulations they may deem necessary to carry out the purposes of the laws they administer and enforce. Their administrative rules and regulations have the force of law; and the administrators can change this 'law' any time they wish, without consulting anyone. All they have to do is promulgate a new rule or regulation and publish it in the Federal Register. Thirty days after publication, it becomes a binding 'law'." (From "The Business End of Government," by Dan Smoot, Western Islands publisher, Belmont, Massachusetts 02178).

In order to make these so-called administrative laws even more binding, there has been established in the United States a Regional Government system whereby these bureaucratic agencies can operate out of any one of the ten Federal Regional Capitals and apply these rules and regulations at their regional level. And here again, the original fault was with the Congress itself, which didn't bother to lay down specific and limited rules and regulations, but passed "loose" laws that could be interpreted by these bureaucratic commissars as they desired, and without recourse either to the President or the Congress. In such events, if a case ever gets into a federal court (it seldom does) the federal judge will almost always back up the bureaucratic ruling. Like a case Lowell Mason, a former Federal Trade Commissioner, told about a deputy fire marshal in Ohio some years ago, who held his own inquisitorial trial of the man, wouldn't even allow the man's lawyer to be present, and sentenced the man to jail. An appeal went all the way to the Supreme Court, which upheld the sentence "because the trial was not a criminal trial, but was an administrative investigation of incidents damaging to the economy"!

That ruling is important because, as has been pointed out by investigators, since the establishment of the Regional Government System in the United States there has begun to evolve the same kind of jurisprudence that exists in the Communist-controlled countries, especially during the period when Communists are solidifying their control. At that stage in particular Communist Commissars are tolerant with criminals who commit crimes of violence or moral depravity; but they brutally punish economic and political offenses. As Dan Smoot (op. cit.) noted: "It is not common criminals who are sent to slave camps in Siberia, but persons accused of disobeying the economic and political commands of the Communist State." The process has been so slow that few have recognized the trend, but here in our own country, as those who control our government fashion our economy into the likeness of Communism (or Socialism, if you prefer the carrot word), businessmen and others who violate the commands of the regulatory agencies are considered more dangerous than criminals. "Our courts and other branches of government are becoming so permissive about crime and so concerned about the rights of criminals that the right of society to be protected is sometimes ignored; but businessmen accused of economic offenses are punished without due process of law." This, of course, is in line with the Communist command to do away with the bourgeois, or the middle man; so that finally there is a small group of The Society of the Elect at the top, and a great mass of obedient slaves at the bottom, with no-one in between.

In defending his Trilateral-CFR-controlled Administration in the face of the social, moral, economic and political crises which beset us just one month before a crucial national election, President Reagan likes to point out that our present difficulties all began to develop and grow to their present proportions because of the many years of continuous Democratic control of Congress. Actually, our crucial situation can be traced back much farther for its beginnings. It might be said that our difficulties as a Nation really began with a change in an attitude toward our form of government, both on the part of the people and the federal congress. We can spot the beginning when people began to accept the false notion that ours is not a Constitutional, Representative Republic, but a Democracy. The eminent Constitutional authority Harry F. Atwood noticed how this was being taught in the government (public) schools, and he wrote as early as 1921: "There is much talk of democracy in our schools, and yet there is not a democratic thing in the Constitution, nor the faintest hint of a suggestion that anything under the Constitution would ever be done in a democratic way, even in the Constitution itself, or its adoption, or its amendments, or its plan of administration. And we still require our public officials to take an oath to uphold, protect and defend the Constitution, and that is the only thing they are sworn to do. The Constitution provided for a representative government, and the founders called it a Republic. It guarantees to each of the States a republican form of government. Those who are talking democracy . . . should turn to the Federalist, and ask themselves what Madison meant by the following language: 'Hence it is that democracies have ever been spectacles of turbulence and contention, have ever been found incompatible with personal security or the rights of property, and have in general been as short in their lives as they have been violent in their deaths'."

This trend toward democracy, which led to the ratification of the 17th Amendment among other evils, also led to a statement made in 1953 which, unfortunately seems to have come true 29 years later. Arthur S. Miller, of the Law School of Emory University, made this statement: "The advent of a 'new society' has created the need to re-evaluate traditional formulations of American Constitutional law and theory. . . The United States can be thought of as a combination of a Social Service or Welfare State, which we have become during the past two decades, and a Garrison State, which we have in some measure approximated since the end of World War II. An approximate label for this combination is the 'Security State,' a name derived from the apparent character of Americans today, which reflects the demands of the individual for economic and psychic security subsumed under the notion of the social-service or welfare principle of government and the demands of people generally for national security or self-preservation." (Published by the now defunct Center for the Study of Democratic Institutions in November, 1953).

The other trend, the Congressional attitude, which has led to our present difficulties, has been Congress's habit of shirking the duties imposed upon it by the Constitution, and relegating those duties to agencies over which they have little or no control, such as turning the control of money over to the Federal Reserve Corporation, the distribution of mail to a "Service," the collection of taxes to an Internal Revenue 'Service,' and the delegation of full powers to the many regulatory agencies of the federal administration, now governed almost exclusively by non-elected administrators (Commissars). This unelected and controlling "Society of the Elect" knows that the most effective way peaceful totalitarianism can be achieved in the United States is through complete control of the common everyday acts of all the people. This is the aim of the Bureaucratic Dictatorship which they seek to install. No President or "buyable" Senator will stop it, but with next month's election of Representatives there's a chance because not all of them can be bought or bullied by the Trilats and Labor Goons. Forget party labels and idle campaign promises. Just try to be sure your next Representative will try to live up to every jot and tittle of the Constitution he must swear to uphold, protect and defend. Then watch him, warn him if he goes wrong, praise if he the votes right; and pray, for him and for us all. For, as Franklin insisted, "The longer I live the more convincing proof I see of this truth, that God governs in the affairs of men."

THE LEGALIZED CRIME OF BLACKMAILING UNCLE SAM

Most of us have known it for years. But it's always important to have more proof, because this often serves to awaken more sleepers and lethargics in our society. We refer to a dispatch out of Munich via UPI which states that U.S. bankers aided Hitler in his rise to power and in the establishment of Nazism in Germany. There has been much convincing evidence to prove that Bolshevism would never have succeeded had it not been for the lavish financial aid given Lenin and Trotsky by German, English and American based International Bankers, when those two with their handfuls of followers were able to invade Russia and gain control of its government. Nor would Stalin and his despotic successors have been able to keep Communism alive in the USSR and spread its evil system over a third of the world, had it not been for the financial aid given them (and is still being given them) by those same International Bankers. As for the rise of Hitler and Nazism, the following UPI dispatch was published in a few U.S. newspapers on or about September 25, 1982. We quote from the dispatch as published in the San Jose (CA) Mercury News of that date:

U.S. Bankers Aided Hitler, Book Claims

Munich, West Germany (UPI) - A publishing firm claimed Friday to have discovered a book that alleges American bankers supplied Adolf Hitler with millions of dollars to help build up his Nazi party. Droemer Knaur publishers said they received a copy of the book from a Dutch doctor and were convinced that it was authentic. They said the book, written by the late U.S. banker Sidney Warburg, disappeared during the war. Warburg, a joint owner of the New York bank Kuhn Loeb and Cie, described in the book three conversations he held with Hitler at the request of American financiers, the Bank of England and oil firms to facilitate payments to the Nazi party, the publishers said.

The book alleged that Hitler received $1 million from Kuhn Loeb and Cie during 1929, further payments of $15 million in 1931, and $7 million when Hitler took power in 1933, the publishers said. They said Warburg described himself in the book as the "Cowardly instrument" of his American banking colleagues for having arranged deals with Hitler.

The book was originally published in Holland in 1933, shortly before Warburg's death, but disappeared during the war after its translator and publisher were murdered, the publishers' spokesman said. He said it was thought the Nazis carried out the murders and destroyed the copies of the book to avoid being discredited. The book will be republished Dec. 1 under the title "How Hitler Was Financed," he said. (End of dispatch)

It should be understood that the Megabankers did not finance Hitler because of their love, either of Hitler or of the kind of National Socialism he was promoting. It was necessary that there be a World War II. Hitler and his followers in Germany which still writhed under the awful reparations demanded as a result of its loss of World War I, were the perfect instrument for starting such a war. This would be a war that would destroy all the former Empires, especially the British Empire, and create in their place two strong antagonists: Capitalist USA and Communist USSR. Between the cold wars, containments, detentes, nuclear freezes and other controversial issues that could be manufactured, the New World Order would slowly emerge, with the two giants - USA and USSR - finally merging into the desired One World Government. Or so the World Power Brokers hoped. And so they seem to be accomplishing. And the term "Capitalist USA" has been uniquely appropriate. As Communism has advanced, America has provided the capital to make such advancement possible. Lately some of this "capitalization of communism" has become quite evident.

Lately there has been voiced considerable fear of the possibility that some foreign governments which are heavily indebted to the Megabankers as well as to the "Trilateral" Nations, might go bankrupt, default on their debts and thus cause a potential worldwide economic crisis that might seriously endanger the Megabanks as well as the "Trilateral" governments. There was the case of Communist Poland, which came close to such an act and was rescued at the last minute by the Central Banks of the "Trilateral" Nations. Then came the case of Mexico, also on the verge of default. David Rockefeller explained how such a thing would never happen. In an interview published in the current (10/11/82), U.S. News, the U.S. Chairman of the Trilateral Commission, Chairman of the Board of the Council on Foreign Relations, economic adviser to the Reagan Administration, head of the Chase Manhattan Bank International Advisory Committee, etc., admits that foreign governments might default on their debts and create certain difficulties, but this would be very unlikely. Because "the nations being mentioned today (as being bankrupt) are different from those mentioned a few years ago. Then people were talking about Zaire and Peru and Turkey. Banks didn't lose money on loans to these countries, as was expected. Actually, in all three cases, the banks are making out reasonably well. Today, we

THE UPRIGHT OSTRICH ON THE UPCOMING ELECTIONS

Truck or Treat? The for-real question for all of us comes two days late this year, at the voting booths November 2. And many of the figures demanding your decision are more artfully masked and shrouded in a symbolic sense than the troops of little ones begging handouts at Hallowe'en. October must be a month of heavy homework for all UPRIGHT Patriots wishing freedom and justice for their posterity. A Big Spenders sweep at the polls will consolidate the Welfare Fascism that has brought us to the present crisis, and perhaps doom a free market and our Constitutional Republic for uncountable ages. Reaganomics, never implemented as promoted during electioneering two years ago, has been exposed as a monetarist boon for the megabank monopolists. A more urgent question is has Reagan-Ethics (that of campaign rhetoric and TV speeches) failed? Was it a sham? Essentially, the Trick or Treat problem facing you at the polls is the following:

Are the United States still a federated Republic under a constitution granted by WE THE PEOPLE for Rule of LAW? Or has this nation become a Totalitarian State under the arbitrary Rule of Despotic Men?

All victorious candidates, whatever their speechifying, must take an Oath to UPHOLD OUR CONSTITUTION. For decades, however, our tax-paid Servants, elected as well as appointed, have been in wanton violation of that oath. . . We are convinced that Retortation and Enforcement of our Constitution is the key to ALL of our problems.. .

Beyond determining who are the sincere Constitutionalists among candidates, our voting suggestions are mostly negative. Above all, vote against all those treacherous Turkeys who voted for the latest Tax Swindle, which Rep. Ron Paul rightly called a "bummer." (Vote for Ron Paul). . . Vote against those Turkeys who betrayed us with the Panama Payaway . . . If it's a choice between the lesser of two evils, or questionables, vote against lawyers. VAL000! (Vote All Lawyers Out Of Office!) The Ostrich would like to see lawyers barred from serving in legislatures, state and federal; it's conflict of interest. If the choice is between incumbent and newcomer, vote against the incumbent. No matter how initially UPRIGHT, most of our elected public servants seem to become afflicted with Potomac corruption, and the longer in Washington, the worse the disease. And many catch contagion in state capitals. If both choices are so evil you gag, write in a vote. For Thomas Jefferson, or Benjamin Franklin, or Donald Duck, or the Upright Ostrich. Such a vote at least does register protest.

State level, as well as congressional candidates should be pinned down on the Liberty Amendment and on the spreading initiative for abolishing the Federal Reserve. . . . Candidates at all levels should be queried about their position on Gun Control. (From The Upright Ostrich, Vol. 1, Number 9, October 1982. P.O.Box 100787, Ft. Lauderdale, Florida 33310. Yearly: $25. Article slightly edited for purpose of continuity).

are talking about different names. Mexico is one. But I don't see any likelihood of default. I think that what will happen there, just as it did in Turkey, is that the banks that extend credit will get together with Mexican officials, the international Monetary Fund and the World Bank and work out a program. It may be a stretchout of the debt rather than paying it exactly as planned. Nobody likes to be paid later than was planned. But that isn't the end of the world." (Unquote).

In other words, the International Agencies and the Central Banks will "work out a program" so that Megabankers have little worry about lending and lending to governments that can never repay; there are "banks of last resort" that will pick up the burden. In most cases, those "banks of last resort" are the ones that are being financed by the U.S. Government, through its Central Bank (the Federal Reserve) or through one of the government's regionalized Import-Export Banks.

What actually happened in the case of Mexico was mentioned by David Rockefeller, but he didn't tell how it was done. Or exactly why. As one advisor noted: "In Mexico, seventy years of socialism is finally bearing its fruit, as the world's largest debtor nation moves to bankruptcy, exchange controls, nationalization of its banking system, and economic and social upheaval. Looking very much like pre-revolutionary Iran in 1977, Mexico could experience a revolution and communist dictatorship before the end of 1983." So, the time was ripe to take control over Mexico and at the same time allow the country to go socialist, or communist if that's the way the ball bounced. As David Rockefeller said, there's nothing wrong with trading with Communist Nations. After all, the Chase Manhattan's most important branch bank outside the United States is located in Red Square in Moscow.

But back to the Mexican caper. The first thing was a demand on the part of the Federal Reserve that the Mexican banks be nationalized. The reason for this goes back to that Monetary Control Act of 1980 which gave the Fed the power to print money with which to purchase debts from foreign countries, so long as the debts were guaranteed by the respective government. This had been the case with Poland, which had to prove itself to be a government in its own right (sans Soviet occupation), and then had to guarantee its national banks. After that, loans were extended, new loans arranged. Much the same had to happen in the case of Mexico. However, in this settlement, which was mentioned by David Rockefeller in his interview with U.S. News, something new and unprecedented in world banking circles was added. Among the various deals concluded, an emergency loan was made to Mexico by the Basel-based Bank for International Settlements (BIS). BIS is older than the UN, the IMF, or the World Bank. It was established by the Central Bankers in 1930 to take care of the upcoming German reparations settlements that were made during and after World War II. BIS later became a kind of superexclusive headquarters and meeting place for representatives of some 30 of the world's major Central Banks, including all of the Trilateral Nations. Just about any country can become a member of IMF, and a few of the Soviet satellite countries have done so, in order to qualify for special loans and grants (grants are loans that are not expected to be repaid). But the BIS is a more exclusive Big Bankers' Club, and those marked as debtor nations don't belong. The unprecedented action: a financial package was put together by the Central Banks of twelve BIS member nations: Belgium, Britain, Canada, France, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands, Sweden, West Germany, Switzerland, Spain and the United States - with the United States providing half of the total amount. This pooled loan was then made, by the BIS, to Mexico. This kind of a world pool may be the way in which the Central Banks will organize to form their upcoming World Bank, thus by-passing the IMF which, like the UN, has sort of been taken over by the so-called Third World debtor nations. The "Society of the Elect" doesn't relish large memberships and non-productive hangers-on.

Anyway, now that Mexico has been re-financed and is well on the way toward becoming a totalitarian socialist state (with the aid of the Trilats), now comes the question of Cuba, which is anxious to be supported by the United States, while still serving the Communist cause. As we have indicated in previous reports, there have been conferences between Cuban and American officials, and much groundwork has been laid toward relieving the USSR of another of its financial burdens (as we did with Poland) and having us take on the job of financing Cuba directly. Ambler H. Moss, Jr. who just resigned in August after four years as a ranking U.S. Ambassador to Panama, previously served as a diplomat in Havana, Cuba. Presently an adjunct professor at the University of Miami's Center for Advanced International Studies, Moss wrote the following, which appeared in the Miami Herald of Oct. 3:

"Should the United States change its relations with Fidel Castro's Cuba? We are once again hearing expressions of what could be called, depending upon one's point of view, exhortations to creative thinking or dangerously naive misconceptions concerning U.S. policy toward Cuba. In a recent article, Wayne Smith, former ranking U.S. diplomat in Havana, is reported as scoring the Reagan Administration for rejecting serious peace overtures by Castro (Sept. 5). In another article, syndicated columnist Gary Wills goes so far as to suggest that the United States could detach Cuba from the Soviet Union if our government merely chose to do so (Sept. 22)."

Ambassador Moss is totally against any idea of accepting Cuba as a dependent and ally of the United States. His reasons are sound. But Moss is just a retired ambassador, not an agent of the communications media, and so far as we know is in no way connected with the Eastern Establishment. And the media power has been turned on. Columns and articles are to be written to soften up the American attitude toward Castro and Cuba, so that Cuba can be "saved from default" by the Federal Reserve or some affiliate of our Central Bank.

In an article appearing in the September 1982 issue of Speak Up, a conservative Canadian monthly, "The Mortgaging of a Revolution" is discussed by Ernesto F. Betancourt and Wilson P. Dizard III. They point out that: "The dependency of Fidel Castro's government on Western banks is fast approaching a crisis state. In 1982 Cuba's debt is 58 times what it was in 1959. If the Soviet debt were added, Cuba's debt of almost $10 billion is more than 200 times what it was in 1959. . . The financial difficulties of the Castro government are highlighted by two political factors. First, Poland's large rescheduled debt has recently focused attention on the overall Soviet bloc commercial debt. Yet, Cuba's debt situation is one of the worst within the Soviet bloc. . . Second, Cuba's bank debt grew largely during the latter half of the 1970's - a time of renewed Cuban support for international violence and actual deployment of thousands of troops and civilians abroad. . . Cuba has launched an aggressive campaign to refinance its debt and promote foreign investment. Central to this campaign is a public relations blitz to lift the U.S. trade embargo. . . In summary, present funding sources for Cuba's failing economy are drying up. The well orchestrated propaganda campaign on rapprochement with Havana seems to be an effort to have U.S. banks and investors close the gap left by other Western banks. The ultimate goal of this effort is to secure government insured U.S. investment in Cuba, thereby saddling the U.S. taxpayer with the responsibility for the Cuban debt - as in the recent Polish rescheduling. Cuba may even try to rejoin the IMF and the World Bank as part of a package deal." (Unquote). So, if the Power Brokers have their way, we'll be financing the upkeep of that Soviet military base in the Caribbean.

COMRADE ARMAND HAMMER HOSTS A ROYAL RECEPTION, DEDICATES A WORLD COLLEGE, PLANS A SOVIET PIPELINE.

"When self-appointed saviors of humanity set about their task of trying to change the world to meet their desires, they usually find that schools are essential to their program. . . . Rhodes sought to unite the United States with the British Empire or vice versa. As a means to that end he provided scholarships for students he hoped would become future leaders of the world. Eighty years after Hammer seeks to unite the United States with the Soviet Union or vice versa. As a means to that end he endows colleges and provides scholarships for his future leaders of the world." So quoted Gary Allen in the September 1982 issue of American Opinion, from our Don Bell reports of June 11, 1982, in which we spoke of the plans of Comrade Hammer and the Prince of Wales who were building a United World College in Monetzuma, New Mexico. Four months later 73 students from around the world have settled into a new way of life at Armand Hammer's United World College of the West. There are prospective world leaders recruited from Soviet Russia, Arabs and Israelis, blacks and whites, "people from various cultures who can get along with each other," according to Comrade Hammer.

On Oct. 28, this United World College will be formally dedicated. According to Jody Jacobs of The Los Angeles Times, "In typical Hammer grand style the dedication will be just the beginning for a weekend of socializing and celebrating. The Prince of Wales will be attending . . . and such stalwarts as the Marques de Portago, the Duke and Duchess of Bedford, Mr. and Mrs. Maxie Anderson, Houston's Mrs. Oscar Wyatt, Jr., Sharman Douglas, Baroness Vittorio de Nora de Bavier, Mrs. Ralph Levy, Dr. Aldo Gucci, Yasmin Aga Khan (the lovely daughter of Rita Hayworth and the late Aly Khan), L.A.'s Mr. and Mrs. Guilford Glazer, Mrs. Joseph Lauder (Estee Lauder), and quite a few more titled and untitled folk are all involved in the social side of the three day events. . . Among those serving on the American West college's board with Dr. Hammer are William J. McGill, Theodore D. Lockwood, Anna Bing Arnold, Helen M. Boehm, John Kluge of Metromedia, Sherry Lansing of 20th Century Fox, and James Pugash, who serves as board secretary. Frank Sinatra, Bob Hope, Merv Griffin, Phyllis George Brown (wife of the governor of Kentucky), Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., Arthur Gilbert (the art collector), and A. Robert Abboud are just a few of the honorary trustees," (Unquote).

But don't get any idea that this 84-year-old Monopoly Capitalist that Lenin called "Comrade Armand Hammer" is going to settle down and run a college. This is just one of a veritable multitude of activities engaged in by the man who would like to see the US and the USSR merged into one Socialist World Government. His most important activity at present is the promotion of a coal slurry pipeline running from Siberia to Moscow. And this tricky scheme requires some explaining:

You'll remember that when the Soviet Union offered to sell natural gas to the Nations of Western Europe, those Nations agreed to supply the technology (American technology, of course) and the materials necessary, if the Soviets would build the pipeline. That slave labor would be used to do the Soviet's part of the job wasn't even considered by the Western governments, nor was the possibility that becoming dependent upon Soviet energy would make them economic captives of the USSR. President Reagan promptly spoke out against the proposition, properly, and ordered economic sanctions against any government or multinational company that supplied any kind of US technology or materials for the building of the pipeline.

Here is one case where President Reagan spoke out against the Trilateral Commissioners and Foreign Relations Councilors in his Administration. But, silently and without fanfare, Reagan's orders were simply ignored, and plans to build the pipeline went ahead just as if Reagan hadn't spoken. Furthermore, shortly after Reagan gave his orders, he appointed George P. Shultz as his Secretary of State; and the Bechtel Multinational Corporation which Shultz formerly headed, was one of the principals in the building of any project of this size and extent. As would be expected, Shultz has said not a word about the pipeline controversy, has remained discreetly silent. It might be interesting to notice the "P" which stands for Shultz's middle name. His full name, almost never published, is George Pratt Shultz. Back in 1939 Mrs. Harold Pratt gave The Pratt House in New York City to the Council on Foreign Relations as a memorial to her husband Harold, who was a member of the CFR and was intimately associated with John Dr. Rockefeller while a partner in Standard Oil. So George Pratt Shultz is bigger than Henry Kissinger, Zbigniew Brzezinski, or Alexander Haig. Shultz is not just a hireling; he's virtually a member of the Rockefeller family. So, that gas pipeline is going to be built, Russian gas will be delivered to Europe. And, it might be said that, when Reagan objected, the first team was sent in to replace such men as Haig. And with Shultz, formerly of Bechtel; Weinberger, formerly of Bechtel, and Deputy Energy Secretary E. Kenneth Davis, formerly vice president of Bechtel Power Co.; running the show, Reagan can impose sanctions to his heart's content against companies using U.S. technology to send gas pipeline equipment to the Soviet Union, and he'll simply be ignored.

All of which is important in the case of the newest project of Comrade Armand Hammer. About two weeks ago, Hammer was in Moscow, discussing the building of a coal pipeline from Siberia to Moscow. This would be somewhat similar to the gas pipeline, except that coal would be crushed and converted into slurry, and pumped to Moscow, where the mudlike mess would be dried out and the coal used to provide energy and heat to a very cold city. When Hammer went to Moscow to talk over the proposition, along with him went at least two representatives of Bechtel, which would be responsible for providing the technology and equipment necessary for the building of the coal slurry pipeline.

Commenting on the project, Peter Almond of the Washington Times staff said that when "asked whether Occidental or Bechtel officials had contacted the administration for its views about the pipeline, a Commerce Department spokesman said, 'Private industry contracts with us must remain confidential. In the whole realm of export controls, we deal in confidentiality.' The pipeline, running some 3,000 miles from Siberia to Moscow, was suggested in Moscow on Wednesday by Armand Hammer, chairman of Occidental Petroleum, who was in the Soviet Union along with two Bechtel officials. He said Bechtel, 'a leader in the field of building slurry,' would be joined by the Italian firm of ENI in doing the engineering work for the pipeline. . . A Bechtel Corp. spokesman in San Francisco confirmed yesterday that Peter Behr, a vice president of Bechtel, and Richard Hill, head of the company's slurry division, were in Moscow at the invitation of Occidental Petroleum. Gordon Reese, an Occidental spokesman in Los Angeles, told the Washington Times that Bechtel and ENI have together been considering the pipeline with the Soviets for some years. He said Occidental came along later as overseer of the project. However, a Bechtel spokesman said the company first was contacted about the project less than a month ago. He declined to say what alternatives Occidental had for such a project other than to team up with Bechtel and ENI, adding any inquiry about Bechtel's possible influence with high-ranking members of the Reagan administration was not worthy of an answer. 'We know where to turn (for a project of this kind),' said Reese." (Unquote).

Ever since the 1920s when Armand Hammer was commissioned to "handle" Imperial Russian art treasures on behalf of the Bolshevik government, and he and his brother Victor opened the Hammer Galleries in New York City for the "handling" of same, Comrade Armand has been quite a "culture buff." Accordingly, while engaged in Communist deals in oil, gas, coal, phosphate, educational activities, and various other industrial and commercial projects with the Communist countries, Hammer also is presently engaged in plans for the importation and showing of motion pictures, television programs, and other "cultural events" from the Soviet Union and Communist China.

It all began with his father, Julius Hammer, who was of Russian origin, came to the United States and helped to organize the Communist Labor Party. When Ludwig C.A. Martens was named official representative of the U.S. party in January 1919, Julius Hammer financed the operation, established its national headquarters at 108 East 12th Street, NYC, in a house purchased for the Party by Dr. Julius Hammer. In 1921 father Julius and son Armand were granted the first concession in the Soviet Union: the Allied American Corporation. This was a fifty-fifty company; half American, half Soviet, with Armand serving alongside a Soviet director.

Trouble arose when Julius, still practicing as a doctor, was sentenced to 3½ years in Sing Sing for criminal abortion. So son Armand took charge of the entire operation. In 1921 Lenin granted a monopoly asbestos concession to Armand, who had moved to Russia and lived there for the next ten years. During this time Hammer's Allied American Corporation acted as the Russian agent of 32 major U.S. firms, including Ford Motor Co., U.S. Rubber, Allis-Chalmers, and Oliver Plow. During this same time, Armand was granted the monopoly operation of a pencil factory in Russia. He is said to have made $1.25 million on this operation, as did the Soviet Union because of the fifty-fifty split. In 1929 Hammer tired of the pencil business, sold his half of the concession to the Soviet government, and went seeking other fields of operation. Among his other acts of "charity" Hammer bought the Franklin D. Roosevelt estate at Campobello and offered it as a shrine in FDR's memory. Then in 1955 Hammer bought Occidental Petroleum for about $100,000. And that was when Comrade Hammer really became important to the USSR. Occidental became a "vast tunnel for the transfer of U.S. technology and know how to the USSR, from the 60s on through the 70s to today, when Occidental ties in with ENI of Italy to build the coal slurry pipeline from Siberia to Moscow.

In 1979 Hammer was able to join up with the British royal family. The late Lord Mountbatten had this dream of, after the manner of Cecil Rhodes, establishing a series of United World Colleges to train future world leaders. But, even as the extremely wealthy Rhodes still sought additional financial help from Lord Rothschild, Mountbatten also sought outside assistance for the development of his project. It was Mountbatten's nephew, Prince Charles, who suggested Hammer as the proper man to help develop the World Colleges idea.

A brief comparison of two powerful and unrivaled monopoly capitalists who have extensive dealings with communist countries should be made. The Rockefeller family established oil relationships with the Bolshevik Government almost as soon as there was a Bolshevik Government. The association has expanded until the second largest branch of Chase Manhattan Bank is in Red Square in Moscow. But there is a certain formalism between the Rockefellers and the Communist leaders. On the other hand, Julius Hammer was born in Russia, was a Communist leader as well as a businessman throughout his life. While Armand was born in New York City, he lived in Communist Russia for at least ten years, spoke Russian fluently, and was looked upon by all Communist leaders, from Lenin to Brezhnev, as a Comrade. In fact, in Hammer's office in the Occidental Petroleum headquarters building in Los Angeles, there hangs a large, framed photograph of Lenin, autographed with the words, "To Comrade Armand Hammer." In short, David Rockefeller remains an Eastern Establishment Ivy League elitist; while Armand Hammer is one of them, not only speaking Russian, but understanding Russian. This gives him a decided advantage over Rockefeller, and we may expect that Hammer will always have more influence than even Rockefeller in developing this "movement for merging."

This makes Hammer's influence in Washington a dangerous situation. While Hammer has never had the control over Washington that Rockefeller maintains, Hammer has had access to and considerable influence over every U.S. President from Roosevelt to Carter, beginning with the Campobello purchase. It is said that in the Reagan administration, certain precautions are taken to ensure that Hammer is never alone with any high level official. Witnesses are always present. However, the Reagan administration has done what no previous administration has ever done: Hammer was given an official position with the administration. Not an important position, merely chairman of the President's Cancer Panel. Still, this gives him the necessary standing and credibility so that he can hob-nob with White House aides on a social basis. However, there is another connection. David Gergen is assistant to the President for communications. This function includes supervision of press operations, of the Office of Communications, of the presidential speech writing staff and of some press briefings. And this communications assistant is a friend and associate of Armand Hammer. This could mean that everything that passes from the President to the American public is filtered through a friend of Armand Hammer. Guilt by association? Perhaps.

One thing is sure: Hammer boasts that Lenin was one of the finest men he ever met. In a book by the late Bob Conscience praising Hammer, Hammer is quoted as describing Lenin in this manner: "To talk with Lenin was like talking with a friend one knew and trusted, a friend who understood. His infectious smile and use of colloquial expressions, even slang, his sincerity and natural ways, put me completely at my ease. He has been called ruthless and fanatical, cruel and cold. I refused to believe it. It was his intense human sympathy, his warm personal magnetism and utter lack of self assertion or self-interest that made him great and enabled him successfully to hold together and produce the best from the strong and conflicting wills of his associates."

But the American Legion Magazine for April 1970 tells a different story: "Once in power he founded the oppressive dictatorship of the workers and peasants, the Cheka or secret police, the Revolutionary Tribunals, the four year civil war, the concentration camps, the cult of the modern dictator and the International Communist revolutionary apparatus. All of these deeds were accomplished by Lenin in the short space of six years, from 1917 until 1924 when he died. . . . The toll of lives stemming from those six Lenin years was a staggering twelve million victims. The brutal suppression of the Russian people, from which Armand Hammer has profited so handsomely, even being paid at one point in art objects stolen by the Bolsheviks from the murdered aristocracy, has continued to the present day. The Senate Internal Security Subcommittee reported in 1971 that 'Bolshevik policy has been responsible for the deaths of 45 million as a probable estimate,' . . . all at the hands of Dr. Hammer's good friends."

Aleksander Solzenitsyn told an audience in Washington, D.C., on June 30, 1975, that there is an "alliance between our Communist leaders and your capitalists. This alliance is not new. The very famous Armand Hammer, who is flourishing here today, laid the basis for this when he made the first exploratory trip into Russia, still in Lenin's time, (providing) Western capital (that was) used to crush our movement for freedom in the Soviet Union. . . ."

BUT WHERE WAS THE UNITED NATIONS?

There must be millions of Americans who, if they thought it over seriously, would agree that our government missed a golden opportunity to help this Nation, when it failed to take advantage of a threat to stop funding the UN, get out of the UN, even get the UN out of the US. That golden opportunity came about when the UN's International Telecommunications Agency, about to meet in Nairobi, Kenya, decided to exclude Israel from the meeting because of that Nation's wanton invasion of Lebanon and Beirut, destroying property and killing innocent people as it did. The Nations of the Arab League and all the other habitually anti-Zionist countries took advantage of the situation and were about to vote to expel Israel out of the UN itself at the General Assembly meeting of October 25th. As would be expected, Secretary of State George Pratt Shultz, still treating Israel as our fifty-first State, immediately stepped in to stop the move, warned that "the United States will suspend participation in the International Telecommunications Union - and halt financial support - if Israel is excluded at the group's conference in Nairobi. He said U.S. payments will also be cut off if Israel's credentials are rejected later this month by the UN General Assembly." There was the hint that the US would even get out of the UN if Israel were kicked out. To base our retirement from the UN on Israel's rejection of the UN may seem somewhat childish, but any excuse would be justified in the opinion of this reporter. Of course, figures representing money are so astronomical these days that no ordinary person can understand what the figures really mean. But we the People of the United States pay a little more than 25 percent of the UN's budget every fiscal year. Since most other nations are usually in arrears in their payments of that other 75 percent, the loss of the U.S. donation would be a real blow to the world organization. And lack of US participation in the UN would assure the slow and meaningless death of that great "hope of mankind," even as lack of U.S. participation assured the slow death of its predecessor, the League of Nations.

But, think how wonderful it would have been if Shultz had gone all the way, setting the wheels in motion to actually get us out of the UN! That 25 percent would have gone a long way toward wiping out some of the deficit that our federal government keeps building onto every fiscal year. Or, if our government insists that it must take on Lebanon as a second "client state" in the Middle East, just imagine how many homes could have been built for those homeless Lebanese with that 25 percent. Furthermore, since we the People of the United States are going to be forced to pay Israel's military expenses that were incurred in its occupation of Lebanon, and since we also will have to pay the costs of repairing all the damage done by that invasion; it would have been nice to have that 25 percent we've been paying to keep the UN solvent, used instead to keep our two (yes, now there are two) client states alive in the Middle East.

There would be much justification in relinquishing our habit of maintaining the UN, since that organization hasn't lived up to a single one of its purposes or promises since being created in the Cow Palace in San Francisco in 1945. We were there for a spell, a foreign correspondent for Mutual Broadcasting System, waiting for State Department clearance to rejoin General MacArthur in Manila. We met acting secretary general Alger Hiss who headed some 45-odd other members of the Council on Foreign Relations, who were there to collaborate with the Soviet delegation in framing and approving an organization that gave one vote to every member nation, regardless of its size and importance, except to the USSR, which was given three votes. Also, and this was so very important that it was never made public: there was a tacit agreement between the American and the Russian delegations to the UN, that future Secretaries-General (replacing the temporary Alger Hiss) would be elected by the Security Council; but the post of Undersecretary for Political and Security Affairs would always be a Communist! More about this later.

As we suggested, the United Nations was born officially in the Cow Palace in San Francisco. Somewhat reminiscent of George Orwell's other book, The Animal Farm. This idea of the UN as a beast was carried to an allegorical extreme in a recent "Letter to the Editor" by Linda Hoskinson of Lake Park, Florida. She wrote (or perhaps we should say, the newspaper printed this as what she wrote. Letters to the editor are often edited before being presented to the reading public), and we quote:

"Time is always on the side of truth. Today the United Nations is regarded not as a sacred cow, but as a trolka composed of a white elephant, a Trojan horse, and a Judas goat. White elephants are rare albino pachyderms traditionally belonging to Slamese kings, who would present them to courtiers they did not like. White elephants were not allowed to work, could not be disposed of without offending the King, had enormous appetites, which would eventually reduce the courtier to ruin. The UN, a gift to our contry from its founders, has had the same destructive impact. The decline of our national honor, influence and independence since 1945 has resulted in part from the manner in which our foreign policy and much of our domestic policy has been molded to meet UN specifications.

"The Trojan horse was presented as an offering of peace filled with Athenian warriors bent on Troy's destruction. However, the Trojans didn't know the horse contained their enemies; while the UN, with the full knowledge of our country's leaders, allowed key posts to be controlled by communists who have been given diplomatic immunity for their operations within our borders.

"Judas goats are animals trained to lead other animals peacefully to slaughter. They keep the victims deluded about actual situations until it is too late to do anything. Propagandists for the UN have misled the American people regarding the true nature of this world body. Deception has always been the feature of the UN's operations and (the UN) could not survive without it. Because Americans are finally catching on to the UN subterfuge, they are now in hot water. The UN is not the road to peace but the path toward a Marxist-oriented government." (Unquote).

As we wandered from stall to stall in the Cow Palace in April, 1945, we were greatly impressed with the opening words of the Charter that had been drawn up to deceive us all. It began: "The purposes of the United Nations are: To maintain international peace and security, and to that end: to take effective collective measures for the prevention and removal of threats to the peace and for the suppression of acts of aggression or other breaches of the peace, and to bring about by peaceful means, and in conformity with the principles of justice and international law, adjustment or settlement of international disputes or situations which might lead to a breach of the peace. . . ."

These stated purposes of the UN were meant to deceive. For the UN has never maintained "International peace and security," has never prevented a war. In fact, it has been the promoter of wars. The UN itself made one such admission. In its UNESCO Courier for 1970 there was published the report that "More than 100 wars or other international conflicts have occurred since the end of the Second World War." It listed some of the major conflicts, none of which the UN was able to stop or prevent: Vietnam, Cambodia, Laos, Uganda, Angola, Mozambique, Rhodesia, Southwest Africa, Ethiopia, Somalia, South Yemen, Israel, Egypt, Nicaragua, Morocco, Northern Ireland, Poland, El Salvador, the Falklands, Iran, Iraq, Afghan-stan, and most especially the Korean Police Action which was a UN War, one which American and allied troops were not allowed to win, one which is not settled even today.

But, more to the point at this time is the UN involvement in Israel and Lebanon. It was decided by the powers that be that the UN should recruit a "peace keeping force" in Lebanon, to form a buffer between the PLO and Israel. This "peace keeping" action began in 1978. But what happened? Whenever the PLO made a raid into Israel-held territory, or whenever Israeli forces invaded Lebanon to attack PLO positions in that country, where was this UN force? All we ever heard about it was that about seventy of them were killed by sniper action. When Israeli forces invaded Lebanon in strength, destroying cities, towns and villages, and finally moving into Beirut itself, where was this UN peace keeping force? Where were they when there was the murder of Palestinians in those two refugee camps? There was one item which we know was published: an American officer attached to the UN force was killed, supposedly when his Jeep ran over a mine.

"Why this failure of the UN to keep the peace?" asks one intelligence source. Its answer: "An examination of its actions reveals that the United Nations is not a peace-keeping, but a revolutionary and destabilizing organization. It delivers one nation after another to Marxism and the Soviets - for the profit of the internationalists who lend money, then sell their products to these now economically unviable countries. The UN has been, since the beginning, financed and structured for this purpose."

This charge becomes more believable when we recall what we wrote about the second most important office in the UN: that of the Undersecretary-General for Political and Security Council Affairs. This person has the job of controlling all military and police functions of the UN's "peace keeping" forces, and supervises all UN-led disarmament programs. Since the UN was created in 1945, nine men have occupied that position, and all of them have been Communists: Arkady Sobolev, USSR; Konstantin Zinchenko, USSR; Ilya Tchernychev, USSR; Dragoslav Protich, Yugoslavia; Anatoly Dobrynin, USSR; Georgi Arkadev, USSR; Eugeny Kiselev, USSR; Vladimir Suslov, USSR; Mikhail Systenco, USSR. It was Trygve Lie, the first Secretary-General of the UN who revealed that through a secret agreement between the US and the USSR, this position would always be held by a Soviet general.

We mention all of this because, in spite of the UN's total ineffectiveness in "maintaining international peace and security" for the past 37 years of its existence, this attempt at world government is suddenly coming into prominence because of the Middle East situation. Much has been made by our State Department over the attempt of the Arab and Third World Nations to drive Israel out of the UN. More importantly, when the new Lebanese President seemed assured of a longer life than he might have expected, and when he made the usual world tour to seek financial and military aid, his first stop was at the United Nations. There among other appeals, he asked that the totally ineffective UN "peace keeping" force be maintained and strengthened in Lebanon. After the UN delegates voted to extend the life of that UN force which was supposed to act as a buffer between Israel and Lebanon, then Amin Gemayel went to Washington. There he made the usual appeal for financial aid (there is a rumor that the amount of $ 10 billion was mentioned). And he also made a strange request: that all foreign troops be withdrawn from Lebanon, but that more U.S. Marines be sent to Lebanon. Then he went to Paris and conferred with that Socialist government, asking that all foreign troops be withdrawn from Lebanon, but that more French troops be sent to his country. From there he went to Rome for an audience with the Pope and a further request was made, that all foreign troops be evicted, but that more Italian troops be sent into Lebanon. The request for more troops is to be expected, because what there is of a Lebanese army is just as Ineffective as was that UN force. The Lebanese army can't even maintain security in Beirut, not considering the rest of the country. Also, despite all promises to the contrary, there are still units of the Syrian army in Lebanon, and tens of thousands of Israeli troops that have never left the country. But, the semantics is all mixed up. Gemayel wants all foreign troops to be kicked out of Lebanon, but he wants more American troops sent into Lebanon. Likewise with the French and Italian troops, as well as the UN forces. This would lead one to believe that this American-French-Italian multinational force is looked upon, not as foreign troops, but as an international army, perhaps a UN army, as our forces were looked upon in Korea when a five-star American general, Douglas MacArthur, was reduced to being a United Nations Commander under the supervision of Konstantin Zinchenko of the USSR, who at that time was UN Undersecretary-general for Political and Security Council Affairs. What we're suggesting is that a situation similar to that in which we found ourselves in Korea in the 1950 could be repeated in the Middle East in the 1980s.

Rather disturbing is a highly regarded British intelligence system which has contacts in all of the European capitals. It points to the Islam-Israel controversy as the most dangerous development of the 1980s, this especially so because of USSR interest in that part of the world. We quote from that intelligence report which we cannot identify by name:

"Whatever one's opinion may be about the rival merits of the Palestinian and Zionist causes, had the Soviet Union not armed the Palestinians, the Syrians, etc., Israel would not have been anything like so nervous nor the United States so pushed and pressed between the two causes.

"Within the context of a perplexing muddle only the following things have become clear during the dangerous summer months of 1982:

- (1) Islam can never successfully contain Israel without direct Soviet military intervention on its behalf.
- (2) Israel will never concede whether the U.S. supports her or not. She now possesses a military and scientific outfit Islam cannot possibly overcome without Russia.
- (3) The U.S. may be extremely vexed with Israel, but will not permit the creation of a new Palestinian state which would become a Soviet military base.
- (4) Washington pretends to believe that a deal with Palestinians short of that would be possible if Israel would stop making the West Bank and Gaza part of a greater Israel. The trouble is that the PLO will not agree to less than a virtual Palestinian state and Israel will not in any way abandon (an alleged) Biblical area.
- (5) If Russia withdrew from its plans in the Middle East and conceded to Solidarity demands to Poland it would spell the beginning of the end of the present Soviet Empire. So the Politburo feels it cannot do either. Instead of concession Russia is becoming more hawkish. A sign has been the cutting of some automatic telephone links with the West."

So, this is the multifaceted dilemma: Islam is on the offensive, has declared Jihad, or religious war against Israel. Meanwhile, Israel is determined to take over all the lands once ruled by King Solomon. At the same time, the atheistic Soviet aims to complete its push to the Indian Ocean, while also taking over the oil-rich Middle East. And situated in the middle as a peace-keeping force, and at the same time a protector of Multinational Oil interests, is the United States government. And yet they cry peace when there is no peace, even in little Lebanon.

"IF I WERE A RICH MAN"

Gleaned from "The Reaper"*

If I were a rich man, long ago I would have established a central bank to help me consolidate financial and following political power in the country; many years ago I would have established a graduated income tax to make it difficult for other men to obtain my elevated position of wealth and power; long ago I would have had abolished the states' selection of senators so that I could better consolidate power at the federal/empire level through their "popular" election; many years ago I would have seen to it that there were convenient world wars to destroy the wealth of hard-working and productive people, so that I could finance not only the war effort, but also the reconstruction effort and further increase and concentrate my wealth and power internationally; long ago I would have established a boom-bust inflationary and deflationary cycle triggered by my central bank, whereby I could profit from the extremes of inflation and deflation, further increasing my wealth and power; many years ago I would have seen to it that democracy was established, allowing people to vote for their own economic self-interest out of the federal treasury through spineless politicians, so that not only could the people be controlled, which is the case with all democracies, but so that also it would be easy for me to buy political power by making poor politicians rich; long ago, in my scheme to establish a one-world empire and condition the last free country on earth to slavery and poverty. I would have established the public school system, fought two no-win wars to demoralize the youth of the country, financed the drug trade to blow the minds of the nation's youth so that my socialistic one-world empire could be established and make leisure time and entertainment the focus of common folks' activities.

Now, my master plan is almost complete. My boys over at the Central Bank engineered an inflation in the 1970s that hooked nearly everyone in the private sector, both businesses and consumers, into excessive debt. Then my cronies at the Central Bank changed the game and brought about the devastating money crunch that crippled all the borrowers in the 1980s. And now, finally, when it's becoming obvious to all of us that we are headed for a tremendous crash and depression, the soothsayers of the day are pointing to me and my fellow cronies with financial and oil empires, saying that we are about to collapse. Sure, they know that there were two problems with my bank: 1. A devastated bond portfolio, and 2. Disastrous Third World loans. However, I'm not stupid. I've already solved my bond portfolio problem. Thanks to my friends at the Central Bank and cooperating economists, I loaded up on bonds long ago at the beginning of this year and made a killing as the price of bonds rose. Furthermore, I was able to unload the losers that I had in my bond portfolio on this rally. So much for that problem. Now, all I have to be concerned about is the loans that I have made to the Third World deadbeats. Approximately $200 billion of them are in trouble. Does this bother me? Not at all. Sure, I knew these loans would eventually be deadbeats long before I made them. But, the Third World is stupid. And by making loans to these Third World low lifes, I was able to make a killing in profits establishing my banks there, not to mention the tremendous increase in my wealth acquired by financing the development of these Third World countries which in turn gave me control over their political leaders. To back me up, I had my political cronies establish laws which forced the American taxpayers to use their hard-earned productivity to make contributions to the world development banks that I established, that both guaranteed my loans, bailed out my bad loans, and subsidized my investments.

Frankly, I hope these Third World losers default. The tulip mania panic upside in gold has convinced almost everyone that this engineered, worldwide depression will bankrupt my international financial network, that my banks will fail, that there will be a run on the dollar, that the system will collapse, and we will have a revolution. Hogwash. I have already hedged against such a loss and a default on these loans. The American consumer will again pick up the tab. But am I glad that he was educated years ago in the public school to turn over all his hard-earned productivity, his money, to me and my banking cronies. By so doing, the American consumer has allowed us to wheel and deal with a ruthlessness seldom seen in human history. Little does the American taxpayer understand the price he has paid for being irresponsible with something as basic as his productivity, his earnings. But, that's another story. . . .

A quick aside. Mexico was a real coup. I loaned them billions of dollars, bought off their corrupt politicians, saw to it that the country with its reckless spending and incompetence went bankrupt, so Mexico would default on its loans. Now, Mexico, my largest oil supplier, is forever in debt to me, providing me with effectively $8-a-barrel oil when the world market price is $32 a barrel. Pretty slick, eh? And, for icing on the cake, we'll have a socialist revolution in Mexico (socialist or communist, what's the difference?), leaving only this country as the final plum to be picked. But, back to my discussion on this depression.

One million jobs have vanished permanently since 1978. Dun and Bradstreet now declares that we are experiencing the highest number of bankruptcies for the last 50 years. The F.D.I.C. has 227 banks on its problem list. Office vacancies are the highest since the 1930s. The farmers are in the worst shape since the 1930s. The new tax bill, 60% of which hit business, will further ensure this depression. Effectively 80% of the new tax bill was a tax increase, but we sold it as a tax reform. My man on the Dole did a tremendous job. What suckers the American public are. We even let it out that nine of our largest banks in this country have a debt exposure to developing countries, Eastern Europe, and the Soviet Union equal to 220% of our capital. Little do they know how quickly we'll make this up on the downside of this stock and bond market, at their expense, as interest rates soar. Long ago I learned that all it takes is rumors and well-placed bits of information to achieve my desired purposes.

Having 20,000 Mexicans a day cross the southern U.S. border now has ensured social unrest in the independent and wealthy Southwestern United States, which will allow us, in time, to further centralize power and control, as hostilities between the races increase in that area of the country. Yes, my boys at Rand, Brookings, the Aspen Institute and at the Hudson Institute have served me well. . . .

Can something go wrong? Well, yes, there are two things that are troublesome. This gold move up has started to get out of hand. Gold has retraced to its latest bear leg down by 50%. Gold has rallied to the $500 level of natural resistance. If gold blows fast and hard on through $500 an ounce, it could test the old high of $800 an ounce which, if this happens and is exceeded, could lead to a full blown panic out of the dollar (hyperinflation) and into all tangibles, including commodities, real estate, stocks, etc., in which case, higher interest rates and a belated attempt to salvage the dollar would not work. Then, we'd have to use Executive Orders to seize control of the country, as well as the Monetary Control Act of 1980. So, you can see why I can't cut this coming spike in interest rates too close. The public is almost at the panic stage now, and the defaults by these Third World deadbeats (I loaned them your money) are forcing me to play my trump card more quickly than I would have liked.

My next problem? This concerns my old friend Israel. Now, you know that a lot of my cronies in these high placed financial circles are of the same religious persuasion as the folks in Israel. And, they have had a bias toward supporting Israel with U.S. taxpayers' money to the tune of $6 million a day. However, just as in the free market, where race and religion are not issues when it comes to money, so is it particularly true in the games we play at this epitome of the humanistic/evolutionary financial spiral. When it comes to power, control and money, religion be damned. If necessary, we'll cut Israel's throat. And it looks like we may just have to do that. I have already had my boys over at the largest New York daily newspaper turn aggressively against Israel, and thus begin conditioning American opinion to become pro Arab. The Saudi Arabian threat to withdraw $100 billion out of my banks unless my president called off the Israelis from slaughtering the PLO in Lebanon scared the dickens out of me. We put out that fire just in time. The President got on the phone to the Prime Minister of Israel and told him to call off his military dogs, which he did. Whew!

Now, I've heard rumors and, in fact have some intelligence to back it up, that suggests that Israel may have developed military technology that is superior, not only to that produced by my American military/Industrial complex, but also to that of my military surrogate in the Soviet Union, which I have financed industrially and militarily for years and years. This could prove to be a problem. The PLO terrorists that I financed through my Soviet surrogate were causing so much trouble world-wide that my plan for the centralization of power was going along nicely. Terrorism always leads to increased government control. The Israeli move into Lebanon has disrupted that PLO operation significantly, throwing off my timetable to have my Russian surrogate, the Soviet military, move in to take over and control the Middle East, in the process possibly destroying Israel, and then establish iron-fisted control over Middle East oil. Once this is done, once the Soviet Union controls the Middle East and Middle East oil, I can ration the world's oil supply, set the world's oil price, shore up and increase the wealth of my financial empire, and effectively operate a one-world financial slave empire. I'll own everything in sight and bust the Libertarians, Right Wing and Christians, too. This has been the dream of men since the beginning of time. I am just on the verge of accomplishing it. Greedy, you say? "The love of money is the root of all evil." The Arabs can't stand against the Soviets. We financed the Arabs and put them in business in the first place with all our oil technology. The oil cartel we formed for them took the bad press for the skyward streaking oil prices in the 1970s when, in fact, it was me and my oil company sisters who profited the most from that Middle East oil concession. So, to sum it up, my only worries now are gold and Israel. Gold I hope to take care of in short order. Israel comes next spring and that could prove to be troublesome. But, then again, no one ever said you establish a one-world empire easily, and this one has taken nearly all this century.

In the foregoing treatise by R.E. McMaster, Jr., in reference to defaulting loans by Third World and Communist satellite countries, the writer says: ". . . I had my political cronies establish laws which forced the American taxpayers to use their hard-earned productivity to make contributions . . . that both guaranteed my loans, bailed out my bad loans, and subsidized my investments." As though it were in direct confirmation of this statement comes the report of October 25, 1982, that "President Reagan will be asked today to sign an executive order authorizing the Commodity Credit Corp. to pay a further $346 million to 12 U.S. commercial creditors for defaulted government-backed loans to Poland." The article by George Archibald in the Washington Times continues:

"Despite the recent outlawing of Solidarity by Poland's Communist rulers, the State Department seeks the authority for the CCC to continue paying off the Polish loans. (In February) the CCC made its first $2 million payment on a defaulted Polish loan to the Bank of Boston International. . . . Poland has been in technical default on its $26 billion debt to Western countries since 1981. . . . From February to August the CCC made 110 payments totaling more than $259 to 10 banks and the two export companies that had made government-backed loans to pay for U.S. exports to Poland. Those receiving payments include: Bank of America, Chicago; First National Bank of Chicago; Girard Bank, Philadelphia; Marine Midland Bank, New York; European American Bank & Trust Co., New York; Chemical Bank, New York; Irving Trust Co. International, New York; Riggs National Bank, Washington; Morgan Guarantee Trust Co., New York; Bank of Boston International; Continental Grain Export Corp., New York; and Nissho-Iwai American Corp., New York. CCC plans to make $346 million in further payments to these lenders in fiscal year 1983, $225 million in 1984 and $9 million in 1985. . . . Reagan delegated Secretary of State George Pratt Shultz to provide Congress with the necessary explanation. So Shultz wrote to Congress that "A declaration of default would reduce the likelihood that the U.S. government would recover these amounts from Poland." (So, the amounts will be recovered for the banks from U.S. taxpayers-Ed.)

There was opposition. Dan M. Burt, president of the Capital Legal Foundation, filed suit in federal court against the CCC payments to the U.S. banks. He said: "These loan guarantees are the sleaziest thing going. The taxpayers are getting raped by this system. This administration didn't invent-it, but they have no business promoting it. We (U.S. taxpayers) are paying for the soldiers who are sitting on the heads of the Polish workers."

There are some of us who are old enough to remember that about 50 years ago there was a Great Worldwide Depression. Community banks were closed never to reopen. Industries failed. Businesses went bankrupt. Farm mortgages were foreclosed. There were breadlines, wholesale unemployment. People suffered horribly. But not all of the people. . . .

Today the situation is uncomfortably similar. Industries are shutting down. U.S. steel operates at 40% capacity. Farmers are in hock. The construction industry is comatose. Unemployment and bankruptcy figures have reached rates not seen since that Great Depression. From Brussels to Buenos Aires, from Vienna to Washington, things are about the same. A West German business weekly reports: "Except for Japan and a few countries in Southeast Asia, the world has plunged into an economic depression comparable to the Great Depression of the 1930s." There is yet another important comparison. Now, as then, there exists a ruling class, a self-chosen elite connected by family or associated interests to certain major banking and industrial firms. While others suffer, they will make billions. Read the biography of Bernard Baruch for confirmation of what happens to the few at the expense of the many. Today, with conditions so very similar to those of the 1930s, we can almost hear that Wall Street banker, super-politician and Permanent President, Franklin Delano Roosevelt, voicing that victory cry of the Conspirators: "We planned it that way." In the hope that McMaster's allegorical treatise, "If I Were a Rich Man," will alert many more to the dangers we face, we hope for the largest possible distribution of this Plan of the Conspiracy.

HAS HARRIMAN EMULATED HAMMER?

Could it be that Averell Harriman, monopoly capitalist and elder statesman to the liberal Democrats, didn't want to be outdone by monopoly capitalist and Comrade to the Kremlin Politburo, Armand Hammer? Hammer contributed some $4 million - to date - to establish the Armand Hammer United World College for the American West. So Averell Harriman has matched and even exceeded Hammer's contribution to the cause of the creation of future leaders of the New World Order. The 91-year-old friend of the Fabians has given $11.5 million to Columbia University's Russian Studies Research Institute. In case the title escapes you, this is the institute that was headed for years by Zbigniew Brzezinski, until he was called by the Trilateral Commission to become President Jimmy Carter's National Security Adviser. The institute seems to have been suffering from a kind of political stagnation and economic anemia after Brzezinski deserted the post for his higher calling. So now W. Averell Harriman has brought the Columbia University's Russian Studies Research Institute back to life with his gift; and with the appointment of former Secretary of State Cyrus Vance to be its head. Assisting Vance will be another Council on Foreign Relations activist, Marshall D. Shulman, who will be director of the Institute under Vance's chairmanship.

This university think tank supposedly deals with a study of the Russian language, "to provide a tool which will enable future Soviet specialists to deal better with the Russians." It would be the height of asininity to believe that Harriman would donate $11.5 million just so a few scholars could study the Russian language. But Marx Lewis, writing quite seriously in the Washington Inquirer of October 29, 1982, remarks that "There can be no objection to having a better understanding of the Russian language, just as there can be no objection to knowing any other language (but) its use as a tool in dealing with the Russians on the issues facing the world is of doubtful value. . . . Those who are students of the Soviet Union know that the Soviets speak in two languages. One of them is native Russian which the Soviet leaders use in talking to their people. Another is the one they use for those whom they seek to entice by their propaganda and which has been called by present authorities Communes, or Aesopian. The Aesopian language is derived from Aesop, a writer of animal fables, who fooled the censors of his day by the use of words which meant the opposite of what they meant in common usage. Lenin and his associates adopted the Aesopian art to fool the Czar censors." The double-talk was further developed in later years to deceive all opponents of the communist program of world conquest.

The author gives some examples: The word revolution was replaced by the word liberation. Violence became dissent. Any Western leader was an imperialist. A dictatorship became a workers democracy or a peoples democracy. When World War Two broke out and the Stalin-Hitler pact was still in effect, the war was called a war to defeat the democracies. But when Hitler dissolved the pact and ordered the invasion of Russia, the war then became a war for democracy. There are hundreds of other words the Communists use in their manipulation of language in order to deceive their opponents. But a serious study, at the university level, of such Aesopian manipulations of language, sometimes called double-talk, hardly justifies the expenditure of $11.5 million on the part of Averell Harriman, or anyone else. There are, of course, many studies of a different sort that would justify such an expenditure, if one were trying to help the Communists and promote a New World Order. And the fact that Harriman would contribute such a sum for fellow CFR activists to allegedly promote a "knowledge of the use of the Russian language" justifies a review of the past and present activities of this monopoly capitalist, former Governor of New York, former ambassador to the USSR and the United Kingdom, former Secretary of Commerce, etc., who has for some three-quarters of a century been at the center of a company of elitists that has been manipulating national and international affairs to the detriment of American interests and for the advancement of communist interests, and to the ultimate expense of those millions of people who have been exterminated or enslaved behind the Iron Curtain.

Before the turn of the 20th century in America there existed a gang of "economic royalists" who made or were making their fortunes by exploiting the developing resources and industries of the United States, a Nation then on its way to becoming a world power. There was, to name a few, J.P. Morgan and his pro-communist partner, Thomas Lamont, who were international bankers. There was Andrew Carnegie who wanted to "educate" the people of the United States into becoming once again a part of the British Empire. There was John D. Rockefeller who had been in on the ground floor of the oil industry. There were the Vanderbilts, the Vanderlips, the Aldriches, the Baruchs, the Schiffs, etc. And there was Edward Henry Harriman who became a prominent stock broker, then a railroad magnate, and in 1891 the father of one William Averell Harriman. So, young Harriman, like the sons of Rockefeller, Hammer, and others of that ilk, inherited millions and then proceeded to expand those millions into billions. Young Harriman graduated from Yale University in 1913 and immediately went into the shipbuilding business, which was to become a very important industry during World War One. In 1920 Harriman founded the banking firm of W.A. Harriman & Company, later to become in 1931 the powerful Brown Brothers Harriman. While Armand Hammer was busy developing industries in and trading with the Soviet Union, John D. Rockefeller was making oil deals with Russia, Harriman was making money granting loans to the Soviet Union. Harriman & Company is said to have been the organizers and financiers in 1928 of the Western engineering effort that created heavy Soviet industry. Harriman's bank "furnished the securities for all the Soviet purchases in the United States and collected all the commissions." So, while Rockefeller made deals in oil, while Hammer developed industries and trading arrangements, Averell Harriman was financing the deals.

Harriman began his governmental career with Franklin Roosevelt. He headed the National Recovery Administration from 1934 to 1935, was also a member of the Commerce Department's Business Advisory Council. In 1940 he served with FDR's Office of Production Management (OPA), a year later was appointed special Presidential envoy to Britain, then became Ambassador to the Soviet Union through the war years until 1946. In 1941, before Pearl Harbor, FDR and Churchill decided to send a full-scale economic mission to Moscow to determine Russia's wartime needs. The mission was headed by Averell Harriman, who was in Moscow for three days and, we repeat, before Pearl Harbor, signed an agreement for aid to the Soviet Union from October 1 to June 30, 1942. The agreement included the sending of 300 fighter planes, 100 bombers, and 500 tanks every month for those nine months, after which the Lend-Lease arrangement took over and even more supplies were sent each month. Harriman insisted that Stalin was not a revolutionary Communist, but a Russian nationalist. In June 1944 Ambassador Harriman wrote to the State Department, saying that Stalin had paid "tribute to the assistance rendered by the United States to Soviet industry before and during the war (over $11 billion in direct aid during the war). Stalin admitted that about two-thirds of all the large industrial enterprises in the Soviet Union had been built with United States help or technical assistance. Harriman insisted that U.S. policy toward the Soviet Union was "to give and give, with no expectation of return, with no thought of a quid pro quo." Harriman's spirit of giving to the Soviet Union was carried over into the Yalta Conference in 1945, where he played a key role in the betrayal of Poland to Soviet imperialism. In Tragedy and Hope, that important "history of the world in our times," by the late Carroll Quigley, the author reports (pages 892-3) that at the end of World War Two, while Harriman was still Ambassador, it was decided that demobilization of the Allied Forces should be carried out. "This," wrote Quigley, "destroyed the combat efficiency of all (U.S.) units by the end of 1945, when almost half the men had been demobilized and every unit, as a result, was at 50 percent. The army's 8 million men in August 1945 was at 4½ million by the end of the year and reached 1.9 million by June 1946. The air force fell from 218 combat units to 109 groups in the last four months of 1945. The navy fell from 3-4 million men in August 1945 to 1.6 million in March 1947." But the Soviet refused to cooperate in the disarmament program, instead relapsed "into isolation, secrecy, and terrorism. The most critical example of the Soviet refusal to cooperate . . . is to be found in its refusal to join in American efforts to harness the dangerous powers of nuclear fission." (Anti-nuke freezers, please note the Soviet attitude toward nuclear freezers in 1945. That same attitude exists today.)

After the war, Harriman became Ambassador to Britain briefly, was appointed Secretary of Commerce in 1946 until 1948, when he then became President Truman's special representative to the Economic Cooperation Administration in Europe. In 1951 he became director of the Mutual Security Agency. Then he decided to run for an elective office, became Governor of New York (1955-1958). There was a brief hiatus from public office but in 1962 Harriman was back in government service as Assistant Secretary of State for Far Eastern Affairs, "in which capacity he forced the nation of Laos to accept a Coalition Government with the Reds, and was architect of the disastrous nuclear testban treaty with the Soviets which they repeatedly broke." (Quoted from "The Insiders," an article by Gary Allen appearing in the September 1982 issue of American Opinion, 395 Concord Avenue, Belmont, Mass. 02178).

Harriman continued to occupy a government post in the Johnson Administration, as Under Secretary of State for Political Affairs and as an Ambassador-at-large. He remains quite active as a member of the Council on Foreign Relations, which he served as its director from 1950 to 1960. And this gift of $11.5 million to Columbia University is not the first of its kind. One of his major "donations" was the gift of Arden House, a tax exempt estate associated with Columbia University and given in the name of Dwight David Eisenhower who at that time was serving as president of Columbia University. Arden House became the home of the American Assembly, a place where the "elite" would meet to discuss controversial programs, a kind of miniature but more grandiose Aspen Institute. Billed as a "nonpartisan educational forum," Rose Martin reported that "The Assembly initiates at least two programs a year on controversial public issues, and conducts seminars where specially prepared 'background' papers are submitted for discussion and 'recommendations.' Meefing for several days at a time in luxurious seclusion, its sixty or so guests are in every case carefully culled from business corporations, the media, the universities, the United Nations, the State Department, the foundations, the military and the clergy. They appear to contain a substantial caucus of CFR members, who are also conspicuously represented on the American Assembly's Board of Directors. A session held April 13-16, 1972, for example, urged still greater United States participation in financing the United Nations. These findings would presumably be echoed in regional, state and local assemblies to be held elsewhere in the United States, as well as in England, Canada, and other areas of the world." (From The Selling Of America, by Rose L. Martin. Copyright 1973. Fidelis Publishers, P.O. Box 1338, Santa Monica, CA 90406).

In the New Deal days, Harriman's sister, Mary Harriman Rumsey, was extremely active. With Tugwell (author of the proposed new Socialist Constitution of the United States), and Fred Howe (a Fabian Socialist), Mrs. Rumsey (one of the wealthiest women in America at the time) helped push through the scheme for giving consumer's groups the decisive vote in fixing wages and prices under the old National Recovery Act (NRA). Harriman's wife Pamela is also very active in the liberal wing of the Democratic Party. First married to Randolph Churchill (Winston's son), then to theatrical producer Leland Hayward, and now to Averell Harriman, last November she used the occasion of her present husband's ninetieth birthday to hold a "unity dinner" to raise money for radical members of the Democratic Party. She has her own political action committee, Democrats For The 80's, known among her friends as "Pam's P.A.C."

In Ferdinand Lundberg's important reference book, The Rich And The Super-Rich, (copyright 1968), there is an interesting sidelight concerning Averell Harriman's entry into partisan politics, and the similarities between his career and that of Nelson Rockefeller. Concerning the Presidential election of 1928, Lundberg wrote: "Hoover, the republican, was a J.P.Morgan puppet. Al Smith, his democratic opponent, was in the pocket of John Jacob Raskob, who was the prime minister of Du Pont, for whom J.P.Morgan was the banker. So, the victory of either man put J.P.Morgan and the Du Ponts into the presidential driver's seat. W. Averell Harriman was one of the leading wealthy republicans who crossed the line to the democrats in 1928, and has been a democrat, and a high government official in all subsequent democratic administrations." In the next presidential election (1932), Hoover was replaced by Franklin Delano Roosevelt, a democrat. At that time Nelson Rockefeller, the republican, was given the same choice as Harriman had, of "crossing the line" and becoming a registered democrat. But he refused, although his heart seemed to be with the radical democrats. Lundberg remarked: "FDR gave Nelson A. Rockefeller his first leg up in political office by making him Coordinator of Latin-American Affairs."

So, come plans for the New Deal takeover, Republican Harriman became a Democrat. But Nelson Rockefeller, presented with the same opportunity, remained a Republican. Coincidentally, thirty years later Averell Harriman quit his post as Governor of the State of New York, to be succeeded in that post by Nelson Rockefeller. Though Harriman never became a Vice President, as Nelson did by appointment, there seems a strange political parallelism existing between the political careers of these two monopoly capitalists; one choosing to be a Democrat, one choosing to remain a Republican. David Williams, onetime Director of the London Bureau of ADA, former Rhodes Scholar, Fabian Socialist, etc., wrote in an ADA publication that Nelson Rockefeller while working with the New Deal "worked serenely . . . but was unhappy under the Eisenhower Administration." Williams suggested that Nelson should have been a liberal Democrat but seemed fated to become Harriman's "opposite number" partywise. Williams suggested this reason: "Liberal Republicans and Liberal Democrats often advocate the same programs, but the Republicans have the advantage that they can execute them without destroying the confidence of business. . . ."

THE SUPRA-GOVERNMENT STILL GOVERNS

Now that the national election is concluded and thoroughly analyzed by the politicians, media editors and commentators, etc., we are led to agree with Howard Ruff and David Brinkley who probably told the story best in the fewest words: "The net effect is probably 'no change'." The same might be said concerning the expected and yet shock-laden death of President Leonid Brezhnev of the Soviet Union. Sunday, Nov. 7th marked the 65th anniversary of the Bolshevik Revolution and Brezhnev took part in the celebration. He stood on the reviewing stand in Red Square for over two hours, in 21 degree (fahrenheit) temperature, returning the salutes of the passing marchers. And that probably "did him in." His signature appeared on no official documents after that date, nor was he seen in public. The death will cause a stir in Communist controlled countries. But, insofar as world affairs are concerned, his passing probably will mark little or no change. And whoever follows him as titular head of the Communist Party will probably make little or no change in Soviet foreign policy. Because, since the death of Stalin, who really did rule like a dictator, there has been no one-man rule in Russia. There is, instead, a consensus of peers, most of its members being as old or even older than Brezhnev. The removal of one of them, by vote as with Khrushchev after the Cuban missile crisis, or by death as with Brezhnev, will simply mean that this ruling elite will choose another of its members to be called President. This, however, will not change Russia's attitude or action toward its current problems: Poland, Afghanistan, unrest among the Soviet subjects of the Muslim faith, working class unrest because of the shortage of food and consumer goods and reactions to Polish Solidarity.

In this connection and concerning "Who Dominates the Soviet Union?" there is a book, recently published in Europe, titled Nomenklatura, by Professor Michael S. Voslensky, who was an interpreter at the Nuremberg trials, a professor at Lumumba University in Moscow, once a member of the "Nomenklatura" about which he writes, was in close contact with the Central Committee of the Communist Party in Moscow, left Russia in 1972 and presently works as a researcher at the Max-Planck Institute in Hungary. The title of his book, Nomenklatura, refers to the nomenclature of the 70,000 to 80,000 who form the privileged classes of the USSR and treat the rest of the people as slaves. The book is reviewed by Allen Keyte, editor of World Affairs Review, who comments: "The book opens with Lenin's cynical device of creating the 'professional revolutionaries'. . . who seize power once the idealistic revolutionaries have done the dirty work and can be eliminated physically. . . Russian socialism today is known as 'real-socialism', a realistic socialism where the socialists who have seized power are only interested in maintaining and expanding that power, while extracting from it the maximum personal benefits. . . The many perquisites of power, the special stores, restaurants, clubs, dachas, that they have access to in proportion to their positions on the Nomenklatura ladder, are all given in detail." (Quoted from "World Affairs Review," published by the Centre for International Studies, Ltd., 98 Malleon Road, Gotherington, Cheltenham, Glos GL-52, 4EY, United Kingdom. 24 issues per year, $175.00).

This "real-socialism" system as the Nomenklaturistas call it in Russia, also accounts for the peculiar economic situation which exists in the Soviet Union. They have developed the finest of military weapons, have conquered space, have quite possibly outdone the United States in the field of military technology. But, on the other hand, they cannot feed themselves, cannot clothes themselves, cannot build a gas pipeline from Siberia to Western Europe without American technology and West European help. As has been pointed out, "A magnificent computer can be built in a Soviet laboratory, but to find one that can be used for practical purposes in a factory it has to be imported from the West." It is the socialist economy which makes it this way. As mentioned in a world report by Intelligence Digest from the United Kingdom, "In the West, scientific and technological progress is closely harnessed to industrial - and, yes, commercial and therefore profit - needs. In the Soviet Union the divorce between practical needs and scientific and technological development is absolute. In other words, unless linked to the armament or to the space programme, the practical application of scientific and technological work is overlooked. It could be put in a different way. The marketing of products devised, developed or invented in the Soviet Union does not have a market-oriented economy. Conversely, the managerial skills needed for a market economy have never been developed. . . ." So, the Digest continues: "In a project such as the natural gas pipeline the Soviet Union therefore, stands to gain immensely. Because of the size of the undertaking the Soviet engineers, scientists and technicians will see the practical application of a combination of Western technology, management, coordination - all functioning in harmony. . . . It is possible that this practical demonstration of managerial know-how will be the bigger gain for the Soviet Union, because there are already in Soviet research institutes many items of Western science and technology imported during the years of detente, the mysteries of which have not yet been unravelled." (Intelligence Digest World Report, 1 November 1982. 17 Rodney Road, Cheltenham, Glos. GL50 1HX, United Kingdom. Subscription rates on request).

But, to return to our original theme, just as there can be expected no important change in the USSR due to the death of Brezhnev; there also can be expected no appreciable change in the United States as a result of the recent elections. In both power spheres, the Supra-Governments will continue to govern, with minimum regard for the governed. These two basic power spheres sometimes compete, sometimes cooperate, sometimes collaborate; the final goal being the creation of a New World Order, with the Western Monopoly Capitalists hoping to rule, with the Eastern Monopoly Capitalists intending to rule. There is the Communist Council for Mutual Economic Assistance (SMEA) composed of the USSR, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Poland and Rumania. The Western power sphere is composed of the Trilateral countries which "are often equated with the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD)." An example of the way in which they operate is provided by an article that appeared in the London Daily Telegraph: "The Kremlin was recently urged by Mr. George P. Shultz, American Secretary of State, to alter its behavior and develop a relationship with the United States. Mr. Shultz, in an interview published in U.S. News and World Report, said: "If you change your behavior, Mr. Soviet Union, you can get a good response from us. But in the meantime you have an adversary which is strong and determined to take care of itself." In an interview, Mr. Shultz added "there are many ways in which a different relationship can develop, depending on their (the Kremlin's) behavior towards military might, towards aggression, towards human values'." To which Globsecan commented: "The words sound great! But look carefully at what Mr. Shultz is really saying. ¶ First of all he's not talking to the representatives of the people of Russia, but to their dictators in the Kremlin - those who decide everything, including how every one of their Russian captive subjects will live out the rest of their days. ¶ So what does he tell the slaveholders? That they can get a good response from us (repeat: us) if they'll just slightly modify their policy toward aggression and military might, and make a gesture toward 'human values.' Who is us? Certainly not the American people. They're not inclined to give a good response to those who subvert and terrorize the world and who incited North Korea and Vietnam to kill American youths. ¶ Nor does Mr. Shultz say anything about Russian people becoming free. He doesn't even speak to the Russian people, only to their bosses. He's telling them that it will be back to business as usual, and loans as usual – payoffs to the communist bosses as usual – if they'll ease the torment just enough to raise the people's living standards slightly above the unbearable. Their agony must not become so acute that it interferes with their work. ¶ Mr. Shultz and his International Establishment financiers and friends see that the communist bosses, due to growing fear, are applying too much pressure on their subjects at this time. The Russian people are now being starved for food as well as freedom. If they were to revolt massively, the armed forces would undoubtedly join in to liquidate the tiny Communist Party and its rulers that dominate Russia. ¶ That can't be allowed to happen. What would happen to the loans-to-socialism business that provides money to captive customers to purchase their industrial products? What would happen to the International Establishment if newly-liberated Russians once again became competitors in supplying food and goods to the world? What would happen to their munitions profits for 'defending America' and the 'free world' and 'foreign aid' loans to keep nations from 'going communist' – if the created and financed Russian 'enemy' were to disappear? They can't let that happen! ¶ Thanks, Mr. Shultz, for giving the Kremlin its guidelines. And thanks for spelling it out so clearly for all of us." A hint as to the manner in which this Supra-Government operates was supplied by a picture appearing on page 28 of the November 28th issue of The Spotlight. The caption under the picture read: "Mexico has been in the throes of economic chaos, so it came as no surprise that among the first official visitors received by the Mexican President-elect Miguel de la Madrid (right) were David Rockefeller (left) and Henry Kissinger (center). The two Americans also met with outgoing President Jose Lopez Portillo. The specifics of their talks were not revealed." It is noteworthy that Henry Kissinger is back on the job acting as a secretary of state to Supra-Government President David Rockefeller. The following, which appeared in the Sunday, October 31, 1982 edition of The New York Times should prove informative. The article is somewhat abridged due to lack of space.

Reins of Power Belong to Kissinger Once Again

By Lynn Rosellini, New York Times

Henry Kissinger is bending over his November calendar. "Now on Nov. 6 Shultz wants to see me again," he says. . . "I'm seeing Niarchos at 10:30 in Paris. . . Giscard wants to see me on Wednesday morning. . . I want to go to the Bunker dinner after the Fulbright dinner." Outside, the Yugoslav ambassador is pacing in the waiting room. The French ambassador is holding lunch. An ABC camera crew is waiting to tape an interview. "Tell ABC I Can't waste time," Kissinger snaps at his secretary. Then on his way out the door, he addresses another staff member. "Next time," he shouts at the stricken woman, who apparently failed to do sufficient research for a recent campaign appearance, "let me know what the . . . candidate has done." Accompanied by his chauffeur and bodyguard, Henry A. Kissinger, who is back at the center of things these days, hurries out the door.

This is a story of power: how one man got it, lost it and got it again, without ever re-joining the government. When the phones stopped ringing in early 1977, it was a sobering day for Kissinger, who was national security adviser before becoming secretary of state in the Nixon and Ford administrations. Like other former public officials, he signed on as a professor (at Georgetown University), hit the lecture circuit and wrote his memoirs. But Kissinger wanted a bigger role. In the Carter administration, nobody seemed to follow his advice. When Ronald Reagan appointed Alexander Haig as secretary of state, things weren't much better. But then Haig resigned. And Shultz was appointed. And once again, Kissinger, who praised Shultz in public but, according to former aides, spoke derisively of his "limitations" in private, was in the limelight again. Now he meets "at length" with Shultz about foreign policy every two weeks. "And we talk on the phone in between," he volunteered the other day. "And I see Clark, too," he added, referring to William Clark, the national security adviser.

How Kissinger has used this new access to nurture his influence in Washington is a textbook lesson in power. First, he gives advice. For instance, Kissinger is widely regarded as an architect of Reagan's Middle East peace proposals. Second, he lets people know that his advice was followed, and that the resulting plan was his idea. "I certainly participated in the strategy that it embodied," Kissinger said. Then he writes articles and gives speeches praising his suggested plan. In a speech to a conference of international investors last week, Kissinger praised it three times. Next, he travels abroad saying, "I have no official role." But of course everyone suspects he does, and that he gets access to the highest officials. Finally, when he returns, top American officials listen to him because they know he has talked to the key players. Take, for instance, Kissinger's recent "private visit" to China. In an 11-day trip earlier this month, he met with Deng Xiaoping, China's most powerful leader, as well as with the Chinese prime minister, the two deputy foreign ministers, the chief economic minister and the governors and vice governors of all the provinces. Among other topics, they discussed China's wish for a continued dialogue with the United States. Then, last Friday, shortly after he returned, Kissinger briefed Shultz on what he had been told by the Chinese. "I don't want to leave the impression that I'm a government in exile," he said.

It is 7:30 a.m. and a black, chauffeur-driven Lincoln is parked outside Kissinger's spacious Georgetown home. His first stop this morning is the Four Seasons Hotel, where he tells an American Stock Exchange conference, in a reference to the Middle East: "I favor the broad outlines of the Reagan approach." . . . At 9 a.m. on this particular morning, Kissinger hurries from the hotel to his meeting with Shultz. They talk about China and the Middle East. At 10:30, Kissinger is at his desk at the offices of his new consulting firm, Kissinger Associates. His retainer fee had been reported at $250,000, a figure that he says is "high." His product? Advice on strategic planning, offered by Kissinger and the firm's other big names, including Lord Carrington, a former British foreign secretary, and Brent Scowcroft, former national security adviser. Kissinger often leaves the details of the firm's business to Scowcroft, concentrating instead on trips like his visit this week to Mexico for talks with retiring President Jose Lopez Portillo and President-elect Miguel de la Madrid Hurtado. Next month, Kissinger will be off to France for discussions with top officials.

(End of quotes from article in New York Times).

Supra-Government official Kissinger insists he isn't a Washington Government official, even though he tells Shultz what to tell the Kremlin, and how to handle things in the Middle East. But there is one who is definitely an official in both the Rockefeller Administration and the Reagan Administration: George Bush. And like Rockefeller and Kissinger, he's usually visiting with heads of state and government. His latest jaunt: off to Africa to confer with heads of state of seven countries. Chief reason for visits: economics. Trip to be interrupted briefly as Bush goes to Brezhnev funeral, representing President Reagan, who chooses not to attend.

The captains and the kings depart. People come and people go, to and from both Washington and Moscow. But, after the dust has settled, "things are just about the same." One wonders: How Long, O Lord, How Long?

THOSE FOREIGN POLICY FACE-LIFTS

During the past few months there have been some important changes in personnel in key posts in the world's two most powerful governments. First, there was the resignation of Alexander Haig as U.S. Secretary of State, allowing this most important office to come under the control of George Pratt Shultz and Henry Alfred Kissinger both of whom are intimately associated with what has been termed, among other things, the secret government of the United States. Almost undetected and certainly unpublicized, these two have managed to alter the foreign policy of the United States in a most dangerous manner, which we shall discuss later. At the same time that this shift in policy was being accomplished in the United States, a similarly important development was occurring in the Soviet Union. In May of this year, it had become evident to the Central Committee and members of the Politburo that President Brezhnev was no longer able to conduct the affairs of state unaided, and that he might be considered to be terminally ill. In preparation for the chosen replacement if and when Brezhnev should die, it was decided that Yuri V. Andropov should be the man to take his place as President of the USSR. This meant a quick shift in the public office and in the public image of Andropov, who at that time was head of the dreaded KGB. Andropov was, accordingly, relieved of that position last May in a maneuver Soviet sources described as an attempt to portray his image and political standing. At this same time in the United States, as though it were planned that way, the communications media began to give much space to Andropov, describing him as a "closet liberal," among his other characteristics. It was on May 25th of this year that the Washington Post headlined an article: "Andropov Seen as a Closet Liberal." The Post noted that this Communist who had just been named as secretary of the Soviet Central Committee, was thought to be "a well-educated and enlightened man." On June 7, Time Magazine published the story that Andropov had become "a favorite to succeed Brezhnev" and was a skilled and experienced administrator. Helmut Sonnenfeldt, Kissinger's longtime adviser of Soviet affairs, was quoted as saying that Andropov "is the most capable guy they have," was an intellectual with an interest in rare books and modern art. It was significant that Andropov spoke English fluently. Also, noted Time: "In his 15 years as KGB chief, Andropov has prevented the secret police from terrorizing the leadership as it did during the Stalin years." In various other statements did this country's most influential opinion-makers - The Washington Post, The New York Times, Time, Newsweek, and the three Television Networks - work with the Kremlin to "improve the image and political standing" of Yuri Andropov.

But, as was the case with Mao Tse-tung the Great Agrarian Reformer and Fidel Castro the "Cuban George Washington", the media-created image of Andropov is belied by the truth. For example, after the Helsinki Agreement was signed, there arose in Russia a group of "dissidents" who took it upon themselves to investigate and see whether or not the Soviet government was living up to the human rights provisions promised in the Accord. In May 1976 Yuri Orlov, a disillusioned member of the Communist Party, announced the formation of the "Helsinki Group." Today the members of that group are dead, in prison, labor camps, psychiatric hospitals or suffering what the Soviets call "internal exile." Dr. Sakharov and his wife are in internal exile and they represent all that's left of the Helsinki Group. And its extermination was accomplished by the KGB when Yuri Andropov was its chieftain. Arkady Shevchenko, the highest ranking Soviet to ever defect to the United States, says that Andropov "relished his role as proconsul when he helped brutally crush the 1956 Hungarian uprising." He also played a key role in the crushing of the Czechoslovakian fight for freedom in 1968. He was one of the Soviet leaders who directed the genocide in Afghanistan. As head of the KGB he had to have a part in the Soviet-supported terrorist plot to assassinate the Pope. Pavel Litvinov, another escapee from Russia in 1974, says that it was Andropov who decided that government critics should be sent to mental institutions. And Alexander Solzhenitsen says that the use of drugs in these institutions to inflict permanent psychological damage on dissidents is "spiritual murder." American author John Barron describes the KGB as having four main directorates. The first runs foreign espionage, the second keeps tabs on Soviet citizens and foreigners in the Soviet Union, the third guards the borders of the Soviet Socialist Republics, and the fourth is the most secretive. It carries out assassinations, trains terrorists, and does the "violent" tasks ordered by its boss - who was Yuri Andropov until June, less than six months ago. This is the true picture of the man that the Washington Post has described to its readers as a "closet liberal."

Recently The New York Times reported that 200 "leading American businessmen" were on their way to Moscow to promote trade and have dinner with the late Brezhnev. The Times said these 200 "American businessmen" called for the United States to "rejoin the civilized world by dropping the (gas pipeline) embargo." Under the guidance of the Shultz-Kissinger team, President Reagan has done just that. It may have been another "deal," because as soon as Reagan gave in on the sanctions, Lech Walesa, the Polish Solidarity leader, was released after 11 months of arrest and allowed to return home to his wife and seven children. Walesa told reporters he felt

The Honorable _____
House Office Building
Washington, D.C. 20515

Dear Representative _____

Your immediate attention is urgently needed to kill H.R.7044 which the U.S. Postal Service is trying to ramrod through the House and Senate without time for adequate hearings or debate.

H.R.7044 is a massive 16 page bill, was introduced August 20, 1982, the day before a 2½ week congressional recess as a supposedly cleaned-up version of the infamous Postal Service Thought Police Bills, H.R.3973 and S.1407. It is twice as long as H.R.3973 (16 pages vs. 8 pages) and there is a pretense that H.R.7044 provides adequate "safeguards" against the horrendous new police powers being abused by the Postal Thought Police.

The so-called "safeguards" provided by H.R.7044 do not prohibit tyrannical authority - they simply mandate that the new tyranny be gently applied. It will still give the Postal Service incredibly broad new investigative and enforcement powers to invade the privacy of every home, church, and business in the U.S.

I don't want Congress to give the Postal Service more investigatory powers than given to CIA, FBI, IRS, OSHA, FDA and other federal agencies combined to gently invade every home, church, and business in America and demand access to and copy all their records without even alleging that a crime has been committed.

The House and Senate will be asked to vote for H.R.7044 in the "lame duck" session November 29 to December 15, 1982. This bill must not be allowed to pass. Please vote to kill H.R.7044, the Post Office Privacy-Invasive Thought Police Bill.

Sincerely,

like a "man let out on a tightrope below which is the exercise yard of a prison - and the tightrope is greased. I don't intend to fall off." It might be remembered that when Ronald Reagan ordered those sanctions, he said it was done to make the Communists end military rule in Poland and reinstate Solidarity as a free and independent force. Neither has happened, but the sanctions have been lifted. As one editor commented: "Ronald Reagan who won office on his pledge to make the Soviets pay for their misdeeds. The pipeline sanctions promised to do just that. Now, once again, the Great Communicator has retreated - from his own principles."

In considering foreign policy since our State Department was taken over by the Trilateral Commission, we are reminded of George Orwell's 1984 (which is less than 14 months away) and Kissinger's Triangular Constellation which may have been modeled after Orwell's concept but which was replaced by the more rational Trilateral Commission policies. Orwell portrayed (and Kissinger suggested) a world in which there were three superstates existing in a state of permanent war with each other in varying combinations. Orwell called them Oceania, Eurasia and Eastasia. In actuality and according to Trilateral reckoning they are the United States of America (USA), the United Soviet Socialist Republics (USSR) and the Peoples Republic of China (PRC). These three are looked upon as "existing in a state bordering upon war with each other in varying combinations." Hence Red China's foreign minister, Huang Hua, appeals to new Soviet leader Yuri Andropov to "work to restore good Sino-Soviet ties." At the same time the leaders of Red China seek cooperation from and good neighbor relations with the United States in order to protect itself from possible attack by Soviet Russia. At the same time, U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz appeals to now Soviet leader Andropov to "usher in a new era of U.S.-Soviet relations;" At the same time, the Reagan Administration is giving technological materials to Red China and encouraging its military buildup in case it is to become an ally in a potential war against the USSR. Because of its present dilemma in Afghanistan and its very troublesome relations with Poland, Yuri Andropov has indicated already that he is anxious to better relations with the United States in case there is trouble with China, and at the same time consider better relations with China in case there is resistance to Communist takeover on the part of the United States.

In our Report #18 (5/7/82) we noted that Chinese Foreign Minister Huang Hua (the same that is presently appealing to Andropov for cooperation), delivered a secret report in Peking in which he said: "We need to learn from the United States advanced technology and know-how, and advanced experience in scientific management and to buy from the U.S. equipment, sophisticated instruments, and research facilities. It is also necessary to gain from the U.S. much more information on industrial buildup. . . . The United States is an advanced capitalist country, with powerful industrial workers and great potentialities for revolution. Through mutual exchange we can disseminate among Americans Marxism-Leninism . . . which are like seeds taking root, sprouting and growing strong in the United States and will thus quicken the pace of the U.S. revolutionary movement. If the door to Sino-American relations is opened, we will open the road to revolution in the United States . . . the U.S. revolution shows promise."

In that Report we also quoted an American businessman who had gone to Red China with a party of top American business and oil men to develop trade with Communist China. He said: "I thought my traveling companions should know the true facts of the country they are visiting. . . . I know, even though I am going reluctantly, that we will give them everything we know so that they can hang us with it, just like the free world is going to help Russia build that gas pipeline which will make Free Europe vulnerable to the Communists. Be they in Moscow or Peking, they are all Communists, motivated by the same basic doctrine of revolutionary Marxism-Leninism."

Emphasizing this from words "out of the (Trojan) horse's mouth," Red China's Defense Minister, Geng Biao, recently delivered an address to the officers of China's People's Liberation Army (PLA), in which he said: "In this new historical period, we must continue to advance along the course of Marxism-Leninism and Mao Zedong Thought, speed up the building of our revolutionary armed forces as a modernized regular army. We must firmly defend and participate in the socialist construction of our Motherland. We must implement the Party's lines, principles and policies. We must intensify our efforts in military training, political work, logistic service and the scientific research for national defense."

It was shortly after Geng Biao's Peking address, that the Reagan Administration approved the export of high technology equipment to Communist China. Prior to that time, there were sanctions against the export to Red China of such equipment, for security reasons. It should be obvious that strengthening one communist dictatorship supposedly to oppose another communist dictatorship is not going to help America and the free world. This is particularly true when our administration is also busily strengthening the second communist dictatorship to oppose the first communist dictatorship. Playing the USSR against the PRC, and simultaneously playing the PRC against the USSR is utter madness - unless there is some conspiratorial scheme involved which helps promote the New World Order!

While strengthening both the USSR and the PRC so they might more easily destroy us, it is important to know that these two communist powers are getting together, making the situation even more dangerous for the U.S. and the so-called Free World. This brief item comes from Moscow: "China's Foreign Minister Huang Hua, staying over after Leonid Brezhnev's funeral, won assurances Tuesday that the new Kremlin leadership wants to normalize relations with its estranged communist neighbor. Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko declared that 'the Soviet leadership attached much significance to normalization of relations' with China." Then came this report by The New York Times of Nov. 18: "A member of the Central Committee of the Soviet Communist Party has told Japanese journalists that talks between the Soviet Union and China could result in a pullback of troops from the Soviet-Chinese border. Viktor G. Afanasayev, who is the editor of Pravda, the party newspaper, made the remarks Tuesday during a meeting at Pravda's offices. The suggestion was similar to one that a senior Chinese official was reported as having made to Western newsmen in Peking during a background discussion last month after the resumption of talks between Moscow and Peking. . . . Yuri V. Andropov signalled his attitude when he greeted the Chinese Foreign Minister, Huang Hua, with what appeared to be unusual warmth at a Kremlin reception that followed Leonid Brezhnev's funeral Monday. On Tuesday Huang met . . . Gromyko for 90 minutes in what was the highest-level discussion the two sides held since 1969. . . ."

STOP PRESS: As we prepared to publish, word came from Peking that Foreign Minister Huang Hua and Defense Minister Geng Biao (both of whom are quoted in this Report) have been retired. What this means regarding Sino-Soviet rapprochement is probably unimportant. Because of ageing leadership there has developed in China a new generation of leaders. But, at the last Chinese Communist Party Congress, it was decided to adhere to a true "Marxist-Leninist foreign policy." Since Marxism-Leninism is the political creed of both Red China and the Soviet Union, it is the creed, not the office-holder, that is important. So, we'll continue to aid our enemies, punish our friends, and, considering those who really "call the shots," the more things change, the more they will remain the same." Unless and until - - -

SHULTZ - HIS CHICAGO CONNECTIONS

Recently several very important people have been in the news because of trouble swallowing things. The two most important of them were the British Queen Mother, who had to be taken to a hospital in order to get a fish bone removed from her throat; and the U.S. Secretary of State who choked, but temporarily, on a piece of meat. Neither incident was of enduring physical moment. But in the case of George Pratt Shultz, there was certain embarrassment because of the people with whom he was lunching at the time of the incident. It was supposed to be a hush-hush meeting, and the public wasn't supposed to know with whom he was lunching, or the reason for the get-together. But inquiring reporters not of the New York Times or Washington Post stables found out that Shultz's lunchmates were David Rockefeller, bossman of the CFR and the Trilateral Commission; Peter Vaky, who was one of the architects of Jimmy Carter's disastrous Latin American policies; Sol Linowitz, who engineered the Panama Canal payaway; Abraham Lowenthal, a Latinist of leftist persuasion; and William Rogers, onetime Secretary of State who was one of the architects of John Kennedy's Alliance for Progress. Seems that they had gathered together, each sworn to secrecy, to discuss what President Ronald Reagan should do and say when he makes his official visit to the countries of Latin America in December. Credit the fast-growing Washington Inquirer for publishing the names of the Establishmentarians who will tell Reagan how to handle the Latins (it's a weekly tabloid, strictly conservative in character, $30 per year if sent by 1st class mail. P.O.Box 28526, Washington, D.C. 20005).

Ever since the U.S. decision to back Britain in the Falklands crisis, there has been growing discontent with and distrust of the U.S. on the part of Latin America. One of the ways in which this has been evident is in the drop in sales of arms by U.S. companies to the Latins. They have adopted the attitude that they are going to have to depend on themselves from now on. So, they're either placing their orders for military equipment with other countries, especially France and West Germany; or they are in the process of creating arms and munitions factories of their own. Having a domestic arms industry that cannot be cut off has become very appealing to Argentina, Brazil, Venezuela, and other South American countries. In the first place, Latin America suffers at least a dozen serious border disputes that have been going on since the Spanish were thrown out in the early 1800s. Small wars keep erupting because of these border disputes, and the need for arms seems important. Besides, Latin American countries are becoming quite worried about the continued probing of their waters by Soviet ships, especially submarines and "fishing vessels." There has been just as much Soviet spying activity in U.S. waters, but such incidents seldom are reported by the media. About 60 percent of South America's transportation system operates by sea, and a very few nuclear subs could close down the system and collapse the South American industry.

But, since the Latin governments no longer trust the United States to protect them, they feel they must go it alone. There are rumors that Brazil, thanks to West German technicians and engineers, has developed a nuclear bomb potential. Chile has developed an important armored-vehicle production ability. Sales are being made to Morocco and Colombia. According to Review of the News of November 17, Argentina is in the market for a new fleet of fighter planes, Peru finds a need to develop its air force because of its long-running border dispute with Chile. Guyana has announced that it will buy planes and armored vehicles from Brazil. Mexico is taking delivery of six Spanish-built patrol boats, capable of carrying helicopters. Ecuador is buying fighter planes from Israel. Venezuela is purchasing planes from Canada. Chile has bought fighters from Great Britain. And Bolivia is engaged in purchasing second-hand fighters from Belgium.

There was a time when the Rockefeller interests practically controlled the economic activities of most South American countries; minerals, oil, fruit, coffee etc. But since the Trilateral Commission policies were adopted, most of the attention has been on trading with the Soviet Union and its satellites, making deals with Communist China, and developing the so-called Third World countries. Now a little more attention is being paid to the loss of trade with Latin America, especially since Castro has assumed more prominence south of our border. So, when Ronald Reagan became President, he tried to create a kind of Regional Government composed of Canada, Mexico and the United States, with the South American and Caribbean countries coming in later. That fell through because Trudeau was busy selling a new socialist constitution to the Canadians, and because Portillo of Mexico was busy making friendly gestures toward Castro. Then, when the post-Falklands reactions became continentwide, the Rockefeller Group decided something had to be done to save the trade, as well as the potential bankruptcies, of Latin American Nations. Even the drug trade - cocaine, heroin, marijuana - was completely out of control and South American governments were not cooperating with U.S. authorities.

Hence, the lunchtime meeting when State Secretary Shultz choked while discussing the situation with a group of Trilateralists, CFRers, and Carter-type liberals. First step to be taken: Shultz appeared in person with a carefully prepared script before a formal meeting of the General Assembly of the Organization of American States. He was exceedingly conciliatory, was careful not to mention Communism as one of the causes of Central and South American tensions, didn't even mention Cuba or Nicaragua by name. As an unidentified State Department official said, "The speech was simply designed to be low-key, to offer reconciliation and to pave the way for the President's trip to the area." Next, step: as soon as President Reagan completes his latest vacation at his ranch in California, he'll fly down to Rio, then on to Colombia, Costa Rica and perhaps some other spots where his appearance might aid the Rockefeller Interests without embarrassing the Communist Interests.

It is expected that President Reagan will continue to promote his dream of an American Common Market, similar to the European Common Market and the Soviet Council for Mutual Economic Assistance (CMEA) which is made up of Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Poland and Romania (Cuba is not included because it is expected finally to join the prospective American Common Market). But the importance of George Shultz as a kind of catalyst in all of this needs to be explained.

Our story should begin with the establishment of the University of Chicago in 1892, made possible through the financing of John D. Rockefeller, Sr. Ever since its creation there has been at least one of the Rockefellers on the university's board of directors. David is the present director. The university became well known for its leftist activities after Robert Maynard Hutchins became its president in 1929, where he remained until 1951 when he became associate director of the Ford Foundation, in 1954 became president of the Ford Fund for the Republic and still later president of the Fund's Center for the Study of Democratic Institutions. It was at this last think-tank that Rexford Guy Tugwell completed the production of his proposed new Socialist Constitution for the United States, which was intended to - and still might - replace our officially misinterpreted, ignored and disregarded United States Constitution.

While head of the University of Chicago, that institution became a virtual Fabian training camp, and two important planning groups were formed, both of which were to have great and deleterious effect upon United States Government, free enterprise and American society. One of these was the Hutchins-Luce "Commission on Freedom of the Press." The names of that Commission will be familiar to students of The Conspiracy. Under Hutchins' leadership and Henry Luce's financing ($200,000), there were twelve: Zechariah Chafee of the Harvard law school; William Hocking of Harvard's philosophy department; John Clark, economics professor at Columbia; John Dickinson, professor of law at Pennsylvania U.; Harold Lasswell, professor of law at Yale; Archibald MacLeish, Harvard professor who became an assistant secretary of state; Charles Merriam, professor of political science at Chicago U., director of the Socialistic National Resources Planning Board, and co-founder of Terrible 1313 which we shall mention later; Reinhold Niebuhr of Union Theological Seminary; Robert Redfield, professor of anthropology at Chicago U.; Beardsley Ruml, onetime chairman of the New York Federal Reserve Bank; Arthur Schlesinger, professor of history at Harvard; and George Shuster, president of Hunter College. One of the principal works of this Commission was the creation of yet another group, a Committee to Frame a World Constitution. This outfit was similarly loaded with Fabian Socialists and Communist Fronters, including Richard McKeon, Mortimer Adler, Giuseppe Borgese, Wilbur Katz and Rexford Tugwell, all of the University of Chicago; James Landis and Charles McIlwain of Harvard, and others of like ilk. They succeeded in framing a Constitution for the World, but it never got respectable recognition, thankfully.

The second important activity while Hutchins was at the University of Chicago was the creation of what has come to be known as 1313 because of its address on University of Chicago property. This is the group of organizations responsible for development of the Metro concept, and for the installation of Regional Government. Charles Merriam (previously mentioned) headed the National Resources Planning Board and out of his efforts in this direction grew the plan to divide the United States into Ten Federal Regions, doing away with all executive, legislative and judicial authority on the part of State, County and Local Governments wherever and whenever possible.

And this brings us to George Shultz and his Chicago Connections. Born in 1920, he attended and then taught at M.I.T. until he transferred to the University of Chicago's School of Business in 1957. Five years later he had been promoted to the role of Dean of the Graduate School of Business, where he remained until 1967. At that time he was called into government service, served in various capacities under Eisenhower, Kennedy, Johnson, and Nixon. He resigned in 1974 to go into private business, became president of the multinational firm of Bechtel, Inc. When Alexander Haig resigned, Shultz was asked to return to Washington as President Reagan's Secretary of State. Shultz agreed, was quickly approved by the U.S. Senate. A comment by the editor of Le Monde of Paris is appropriate: "Everyone knows that Reagan is no expert in foreign relations. He does not claim to be. His White House inexperience seems to enhance the role of the constitutional head of foreign affairs, Secretary of State George Shultz." The editor then mentioned Shultz's "passion for consensus." It must have been that passion for consensus which caused Shultz to confer with Rockefeller, Linowitz, Lowenthal, Vaky and Rogers, in order to plan Reagan's role as he visits countries in Latin America. And we might assume that this passion for consensus also caused Shultz to call on all of his old buddies at the University of Chicago, asking them to join him in the State Department. Jim Anderson of UPI noted that just as soon as the Senate had approved his appointment, Shultz brought Kenneth Dam in as his deputy. Dam was provost at the university and a co-author with Shultz of a book on economics. As his undersecretary for economic affairs, Shultz then called on W. Allen Wallis, who had served with Shultz at the Graduate School of Business at the university. Then Shultz decided he needed an undersecretary for management, so he brought in Jerome Van Gorkom, who had been involved with the Chicago school system as head of a financial task force.

Having found Rockefeller-financed University of Chicago alumni who would work with him as deputy secretary of state, as undersecretary of state for economic affairs, and as undersecretary for management, Secretary Shultz evidently felt a need for even more assistant secretaries and undersecretaries from the Rockefeller Training Camp to complement his "passion for consensus," or maybe just to be sure his entire staff was composed of yes-men. In any case, he now sought a replacement in the post of undersecretary of state for East Asia. Paul Wolfowitz agreed to fill that post. Then came the desire for an ambassador-at-large for cultural affairs. Daniel Terra would fill that post excellently, because Terra had been on a number of boards at the university, along with David Rockefeller, especially as director of the University of Chicago's Citizens Board. Since Shultz, once a Secretary of the Treasury, would be taking an active part in government economic and fiscal affairs, he would need a compatible associate in Donald Regan's department. No special appointment was necessary, however, because Beryl Sprinkel was serving as undersecretary of the treasury for monetary affairs and Sprinkel was not only a Federal Reserve backer and a monetarist, he also got his training at the University of Chicago.

Shultz's Chicago connection even extends to Capitol Hill. When Shultz or his top aides are grilled by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, the lead-off question is always asked by Chairman Charles Percy of Illinois, a Rockefeller business intimate and, along with David, a member of the Board of Trustees of the University of Chicago. And whenever there is a call for explanations by the House Foreign Affairs Committee, there used to be Edwin Derwinski, an Illinois Republican. But Derwinski lost his bid for re-election because of re-districting (gerrymandering?) on November 2nd. However, Shultz immediately hired the defeated Derwinski as the State Department counselor, which means that he will be Shultz's right-hand man for dealing with Congress and special projects. Actually, Derwinski is a graduate of Loyola University. However, he explained: "I'm not a blood brother, but I guess you can describe me as a member of the Chicago Mafia." That seemed to be enough to qualify him as a Shultz consensus member. Also, if Shultz runs into legal problems, he can call on U.S. Solicitor General Rex Lee, another graduate of the University of Chicago. Commenting on this "gathering of a consensus" on the part of Shultz, a consensus composed of his own appointees from the Rockefeller-financed University of Chicago, a foreign service officer who did not attend the right university and who was replaced by one who did, had this to say: "It is not unusual for a secretary of state to bring in his own team. What it means is that Shultz brings in people he has worked with and trusts. But it is characteristic of this administration to brutally move people around and replace them with outsiders who pass the ideological tests." The replaced foreign service officer did not explain what was meant by "the ideological tests." But we got the impression that they have to do with a certain consensus of agreement with the policies laid down by the Council on Foreign Relations, which has controlled the State Department almost exclusively ever since Cordell Hull, who allowed the CFR to take over just before the United States entry into World War Two.

Any "Chicago Consensus" is dangerous to our national security. But even more dangerous than any consensus Shultz can command is that New World Order consensus that commands Shultz, a consensus composed of such people as David Rockefeller, Henry Kissinger, Sol Linowitz, and other Trilateral Commissioners.

FROM MILLIONS TO BILLIONS, NOW TRILLIONS

The Census Bureau and the Commerce Department have recently issued a report stating that for the first time, receipts and spending by all forms of government in the United States both exceeded $1 trillion in fiscal year 1980-81. And debt also grew to $1.4 trillion. These, remember, are figures compiled by appointed government bureaucrats, and the figures don't tell the whole story. A more accurate description of the situation is shown in the statement of account recently published by the National Taxpayers Union, and shown at the bottom of this page. The amounts boggle the mind, but they do reveal that we are in serious trouble as a nation. A private economist recently pointed out that between 1972 and 1981, the federal government had to borrow $400 billion to pay all its bills. Between 1981 and 1982, that national debt increased another $320 billion. By September 30, 1983, there will be an additional $400 billion in federal and federal-sponsored borrowing. This means that the total amount borrowed between February 1981 and September 30, 1983, will be a whopping $729 billion - and that doesn't include loans made to foreign countries nor to major private corporations. When those figures are included, says this economist, the total amount of federal, federal-sponsored and private borrowing could total over $1 trillion; most of which will be added to our present public debt of $1.4 trillion.

At a time when the government is seeking ways to find money to keep paying Social Security recipients, is talking about adding a 5¢-a-gallon tax on gasoline in order to keep roads and highways usable, at a time when the government must keep borrowing money, and paying interest on the loans, in order to keep operating; at such a time President Reagan tells the President of Brazil that the U.S. Treasury (that's your money and mine) will give $1.2 billion to Brazil to keep it from defaulting on its $80 billion debt. This as a stopgap measure until Brazil can borrow a few billions from IMF (most of which money is also yours and mine). If we give aid to Brazil, then Mexico and Argentina are next in line, since their debts are just as high as Brazil's. Just how a nation (ours) with the world's greatest national debt can continue to loan or give billions to other countries is something of a mystery to all but the international bankers and money brokers. However, it might be interesting to recall that we, as a nation, started out with a whopping public debt – whopping for that time in history, that is. The Revolutionary War had cost millions, continental paper currency had been issued to take care of the situation, and the worst period of fluctuation that America has ever seen, was experienced. We got out of that dilemma by organizing a new kind of government – a Republic – with power to levy a few limited kinds of taxes. Perhaps a return to the Representative Republican, Free Enterprise System which made us great in the eyes of the world, could revive us again. A brief review of the important events that are left out of modern history books nowadays, might offer some clues.

In the beginning, there were 13 sovereign states united in a rather loose Confederation. It is important to know that when those states were acknowledged as independent by the Treaty of Paris of 1783, King George recognized not one nation, but thirteen, individually. Thus, as a matter of historical record, the 13 original states were not created by a central U.S. government; the central U.S. government was created by those sovereign states. Those states, and those that were added prior to the War Between the States, were individual sovereign states without any inherently higher authority, except as agreed on by all for limited practical purposes, as defined in the United States Constitution.

This mandate for sovereignty and a republican form of government for each State was written into the United States Constitution, and it remained intact until Appomattox when Robert E. Lee surrendered. Medford Evans emphasizes this fact when he writes: "That is the justification for the fact that the officers of the Confederacy, though they had in many cases been graduates of West Point, were never charged with treason. According to post-Appomattox doctrine those officers were certainly traitors, for they did 'levy war' against the Northern States of the Union. . . Lee did not resign his commission in the U.S. Army in order to fight the Northern States, but in order to preclude the possibility of his having to make war against his own sovereign State of Virginia. To defend his legitimately sovereign state was his duty as a man of honor. Lee no more felt bound to support the government in Washington against Virginia than Jeane Kirkpatrick (should) support the United Nations against the United States. . . The men and women of the South were men and women of honor, as were many of those in the North. In a complex world men and women may disagree as to what constitutes honor. Today it often seems that the very concept of honor is rejected. In the nineteenth century, it appears, honor was more zealously guarded."

A tragic era of hate followed the War Between the States. It is called the Reconstruction Period and, as Dan Smoot pointed out in one of his newsletters, "Two dreadful lesions on our constitutional system were made. They are called the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments. The Fourteenth Amendment (which nationalized States' Rights) was never constitutionally ratified by the States; but the radical Reconstruction Congress had it proclaimed adopted (June 13, 1866); and it became the basis for most of the federal court decisions which have confused and corrupted the meaning of American constitutional government. The Fifteenth Amendment (ratified February 17, 1870) was intended, ostensibly, to prohibit federal and state governments from denying the vote to qualified Negroes. But it abrogates a fundamental concept of our original constitutional system – namely, that the power to establish voter qualifications, being essential to sovereignty, should remain in the States, beyond the reach of federal authority. The 19th Amendment guaranteeing the ballot to women; the 24th Amendment outlawing poll taxes in federal elections; and the 26th Amendment granting the franchise to 18-year-old persons; all could have been reached at the State level, without damaging our constitutional system. The two foremost 'democracy' Amendments to our Constitution are the 16th and 17th. Both were adopted in 1917....The 16th Amendment gave Congress unlimited taxing power. The power to tax is the power to destroy. The 17th Amendment, providing for direct election of U.S. Senators by the people, weakened the wise check-and-balance of federal power. By doing so it encourages mob rule." (Unquote).

Before the adoption of the sixteenth and seventeenth Amendments and the passage of the Federal Reserve Act, there was no provision in the Constitution for converting (or perverting) our Representative Republic into a Socialist Welfare State. The following message to Congress from President Grover Cleveland illustrates this sentiment:

* * *

I return without my approval House Bill No. 10203, entitled "An Act to enable the Commissioner of Agriculture to make a special distribution of seeds in the drought-stricken counties of Texas, and making an appropriation (of $10,000) therefore. It is represented that a long-continued and extensive drought has existed in certain portions of the State of Texas, resulting in a failure of crops and consequent distress and destitution. Though there has been some difference in statements concerning the extent of the people's needs in the localities thus affected, there seems to be no doubt that there has existed a condition calling for relief; and I am willing to believe that, notwithstanding the aid already furnished, a donation of seed grain to the farmers located in this region, to enable them to put in new crops, would serve to avert a continuance or return of an unfortunate blight.

I can find no warrant for such an appropriation in the Constitution, and I do not believe that the power and duty of the General Government ought to be extended to the relief of individual suffering which is in no manner properly related to the public service or benefit. A prevalent tendency to disregard the limited mission of this power and duty should, I think, be steadfastly resisted, to the end that the lesson should be constantly enforced that though the people support the government, the government should not support the people.

The friendliness and charity of our countrymen can always be relied upon to relieve their fellow-citizens in misfortune. This has been repeatedly and quite lately demonstrated. Federal Aid in such cases encourages the expectation of paternal care on the part of the Government and weakens the sturdiness of our national character, while it prevents the indulgence among our people of that kindly sentiment and conduct which strengthens the bonds of a common brotherhood.

We haven't the space in this Report to complete the story of how, in our affairs of government, the cost has gone from millions to billions and now to trillions. But we can mention one of the ways: The horrible cost to so many millions of people in being led, for the benefit of a few, to fight other Nation's wars. In a few days, perhaps as you read this, we shall observe the forty-first anniversary of a planned attack which led us into a Second World War. There are so many of our readers who were personally involved in one way or another in that conflict, that we should like to recall one incident which changed the course of the war and helped in bringing an end to the bloodshed and suffering of those who endured and survived.

Because of the position of the international date line, it was on the morning of December 8, 1941 that we in the Philippines learned of the attack on Pearl Harbor. At sunset that evening the attacks on Nichols Field in Manila and Clark Field north of Manila, began. As an eye witness with a microphone and a short-wave transmitter, we made what was probably history's first eye-witness radio report of enemy attacks on American military installations. Later we still had the facilities and ability to report on the Japanese bombing of what General MacArthur had declared to be an open city; this in an attempt to save the lives of millions of Filipino men, women and children, non-combatants all, and with all defense forces already evacuated to Corregidor or Bataan. We survived the bombings, survived over three years in a prison camp, and were able to broadcast over a loudspeaker system set up in St. Thomas prison camp, the words "better Leyte than never," which our fellow-prisoners understood as meaning that the forces under General MacArthur had landed on Leyte Island, were on their way to Luzon Island, bringing us freedom and food.

We mention this because we have recently received a letter from Dr. R.S. Jaggard, of Oelwein, Iowa, was at that time with the U.S. Naval forces that saved the Leyte beachhead and made the recapture of all the Philippines possible. He wrote, under date of October 25, 1982, the following account, which we quote in full.

* * *

Thirty-eight years ago today, I was aboard Destroyer Heerman, in the middle of the Battle of Leyte Gulf, which historians now call the biggest and most important naval battle of all time. Our little force of 6 escort carriers, 4 destroyer escorts with 3" guns, and 3 destroyers with 5" guns, was attacked by 4 battleships with 14" or 18.1" guns, eight cruisers with 8" guns, and 15 destroyers with 5.9" guns. That was the only time that guns bigger than 16" guns were ever fired in naval combat, for Yamato was there with her 18.1" guns that fired shells that each weighed as much as a Volkswagen bus. We lost 2 carriers, 1 destroyer escort, and 2 of the 3 destroyers. I was on the third. I am a "survivor" from an "impossible" situation. Everybody "knew" that the powerful enemy fleet could easily push us out of the way and steam right into Leyte Gulf to wipe out all the shipping and destroy the beachhead. It was "Impossible" for us to stop them. But we did stop them. We attacked. We used the weapons we had. We carried the battle to the enemy, and we fought back at them until they withdrew, and the Leyte beachhead was saved.

I am reminded of this when people tell me that it is "impossible" to prevent the downward slide of America into socialism, bankruptcy and ruin. I refuse to accept that. I refuse to surrender. I refuse to be intimidated by any "superior" force, not even the illegitimate welfare-warfare-transfer society that now imprisons us and prevents freedom-lovers from establishing a Free Enterprise System. I will continue to fight collectivism with the weapons that I have, and my three most important weapons are: (1) In medical practice, I deal directly with and only with the patient. (2) I do not accept payment from government, and have not for over 20 years. (3) I recognize that the only legitimate function of government is to defend each and every person against attack by force or fraud. Using those weapons, I will attack the collectivist tyrants. We Will Establish a Free Enterprise System based on Individual Moral Responsibility. Remembering Al Rossum of Iowa, Howard Doan of Wisconsin, Al Dahlen of Oregon and Evanowski and Warren and many, many others who died on October 25, 1944, I will carry on the fight, and win, even though victory might seem "impossible".

* * *

In his fight for the "impossible" victory Dr. Jaggard names three important weapons. He overlooks a fourth, the most powerful, most victory-assuring weapon of all, one that has kept so many of us in the battle through the years. We refer to that two-edged Sword of the Spirit "which is the Word of God."

Year Twenty-Nine Number Forty-Eight December 10, 1982

THE TRANSFER OF PRESIDENTIAL POWERS

Wrong year, wrong month, altogether the wrong time for personal politics to dominate the news. While downplaying most of the really important political news, the Media highlighted the statement from the last of the Kennedy brothers, that he would not run in the 1984 Presidential race, nor would he accept a draft. We comment briefly on the story as it began some thirty-three years ago. At that time a newly elected, junior Senator from Massachusetts told an inquiring reporter: "Just as I went into politics because Joe died, if anything happens to me tomorrow, Bobby would run for my seat in the Senate. And if Bobby died, our younger brother Teddy would take over." The words were prophetic. Papa Joe Kennedy had gamboled in the outskirts of politics by acting as an Ambassador to the Court of St. James, by securing a near monopoly on the import of Scotch and Irish whiskey during the prohibition years, and by dabbling in Hollywood productions, and had decided that his son, Joe, should be trained to make a career of being a professional politician. Joe was sent to that Fabian training center, the London School of Economics, as was second son John, just in case something happened to Joe. Something did happen. World War Two intervened and brother Joe died a hero's death as a bomber pilot. Brother John immediately took Joe's assigned place as a professional politician and eventually President of the United States. Again came death as brother John was assassinated in Houston. Brother Bobby picked up the political cape, and again came violent death as he was assassinated in San Francisco. That left Teddy, who was met headon with violence but was saved from death when he suffered a broken back in an airplane crash. Again came violence when at Chappaquiddick he drove his car off a bridge, killing a young woman companion. There are still unanswered questions. He didn't report the accident until the next day, then only after extensive consultation with a network of relatives and cronies. The inquest was held behind closed doors, Teddy refused to discuss the accident with the press. Only he knows all the answers, and he wouldn't talk, hasn't talked, won't talk. So, Chappaquiddick has been a cloud over his political and personal life ever since. Nevertheless, all through the first eleven months of 1982, Teddy acted like a candidate in 1984. He gave interviews constantly, was featured in media news stories. He spent $2.5 million on a Senate race that was a foregone conclusion, spent more money to see how well his campaign ads were working. Back in 1979 Gallup, Harris and other polls showed Teddy leading Jimmy by margins up to 3 to 1. And there was much media speculation that if Teddy ran against Ronny, Teddy might win the election. But first he had to beat Jimmy, and that proved impossible. Teddy may try again in 1988. This remaining younger brother of the trio, youngest of nine Kennedy children, who was kicked out of Harvard for sending a friend to take his Spanish exam, who didn't even have his law degree when he was 27, this womanizer who couldn't cover up his sexual escapades as could his brother John, who drove his wife to become an alcoholic, who will be 56 and a divorced Roman Catholic in 1988, may try again. But, somehow, we get the impression that Camelot has become a ghost town, and Teddy no longer has the ghost of a chance at the presidency. Which leaves the Democratic wing of the National Political Machine in a quandary. There are Mondale, Glenn, Cranston, Hart, Hollings, Askew, all of whom who think there is a chance now that Teddy has bowed out. But not one of them could mount a serious campaign against the proposed Republican team.

That Republican team, by the way, may not be Reagan and Bush, or even Bush and Reagan, but the Trilat-CFR choice, which would be Bush and Dole. The President choosers are trying hard to defeat Ronald Reagan in 1982 so they won't have him to worry about in 1984. Writing as of November 25th, Larry Patterson in his Strategy Letter headlined the fact: "Reagan Snubbed By Foreign Leaders," with the subhead saying that the "Seat of Power Lies Elsewhere." Patterson noted that "Five discount rate cuts leading up to the (November) election saved the President from a crushing defeat. However, the election is passed; and for more cut rates to follow an

CHRISTMAS, 1892 -- REVISITED IN 1982

Christmas 1892 came at the close of a year in which events put America's Christian reverence on the official public record. ¶ The Supreme Court decided unanimously in February 1982, ". . . that this nation is a Christian nation," in Holy Trinity Church vs. United States, 143 U.S. 471. ". . . these and many other matters which might be noticed, add a volume of unofficial declarations to the mass of organic utterances that this is a Christian nation." ¶ Patrick Henry's 1822-sounding statement of a century earlier follows: "There is an insidious campaign of false propaganda being waged today, to the effect that our country is not a Christian country but a religious one -- that it was not founded on Christianity but on freedom of religion. It cannot be emphasized too strongly or too often that this great nation was founded not by religionists but by Christians -- not on religions but on the gospel of Jesus Christ, for this very reason peoples of other faiths have been afforded asylum, prosperity and freedom of worship here." ¶ In October of 1892 Pastor Frances Bellamy of Rome, New York, created for use on one national occasion, the Pledge of Allegiance "to my* flag and to the Republic for which it stands." It lives on as the voluntary oath to be reaffirmed by countless millions with hand over heart, head uncovered and spine a-tingle. ¶ Recalling that God is author of Liberty in the Pledge, it is appropriate this yuletide to recreate the ceremony in which the Allegiance was first pledged. ¶ All across the land children rallied 'round their schoolyard flag poles to hear read President Benjamin Harrison's proclamation honoring the 400th anniversary of the discovery of America. Civil War veterans ran up the colors and led in cheering three times for the red, white and blue. Everyone said the Pledge of Allegiance followed by singing America, "my country 'tis of Thee." The principal read from the Scriptures before all recited the Lord's Prayer and sang another patriotic song. A short historical talk by a civic leader capped the celebration. ¶ To mandate such an exercise in 1982 would be criminally felonious. This example shows the totality of His enemies forcing upon the displaced majority their alien views even unto making them "the law of the land. ¶ However, have a Merry Christmas for private adoration of the Christ Child, for any symbol or ceremony on public property such as a cross or creche or Christ-carolling would violate the official religion-of-state, Humanism.

* * *

* In 1924 "my" weakened to "the" and in 1954 "under God" was inserted, resulting in the entire Pledge being banned from the public schools rather than to offend even one atheist-Humanist.

 The Federal Education, Justice, Treasury Dept. troika have made Humanism the U.S. religion-of-state! The Dept. of Education oversees the curriculum which indoctrinates tenets of the Humanist Manifesto; the Justice Dept. ignores this flagrant violation of the "separation of church and state" law; the Treasury grants tax deductible status as a "religion" to Humanism, the no-God-religion.

additional major tax increase must be delivered. As we go to press, the President appears helpless. The events are swirling around him, seemingly beyond his control. Already he has reversed his position on the pipeline sanctions. He has suddenly reversed his trade policy with Russia. Next, the President will publicly support at the appropriate moment massive government funding, of up to $35 billion, to the IMF, and several billion more to the World Bank. . . The IMF will lend the funds to defaulting governments, which will in turn then repay the Trilateral banks -- a four step process of bleeding America dry, which you are not supposed to know about. The President appears unable to influence events. He recently placed a call, direct to French leader Francois Mitterand, and was not even given the courtesy of a return phone call! The implication of this is clear: Ronald Reagan is no longer relevant, at least to Marxist leaders such as Francois Mitterand!"

Further indications: It was George Bush and Robert Dole who went to Moscow to attend Brezhnev's funeral and have talks with Andropov. Bob Dole is the rising star of the Trilateralists and it is he who seems to be dictating tax policies. A budget must be presented to Congress about the same time as the President's State of the Union message is delivered in January, and Dole seems to be unusually influential in the budget deals. Yet another sign that the President is losing power: on November 15th he issued the following Executive Order #12392:

"By the authority vested in me as President by the Constitution and statutes of the United States of America, including Section 301 of Title 3 of the United States Code, and in order to assign to the Secretary of the Treasury the authority to make payments to certain international financial institutions, it is hereby ordered that the functions vested in the President by Section 129 of Public Law 97-276 (October 2, 1982) are delegated to the Secretary of the Treasury." Those international financial institutions of course include IMF and the World Bank. And the authority to make payments to them has now been taken over by Donald Regan, a member of the TLC-CFR clique! Further evidence of the transfer of authority to the Trilateralists can be read in yet another Executive Order, #12395, dated November 20, which created an "International Private Industry Task Force" that "shall advise the President, the Director of the United States International Development Agency (IDA), and the Administrator of the Agency for International Development (AID) with respect to the role private enterprise can play in the implementation of programs and activities under the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961, as amended." (Unquote). It is reasonable to assume that his International Private Enterprise Task Force will be loaded with Rockefeller Klansmen. Incidentally, a sneak provision in this Executive Order directs that "the responsibilities of the President under the Federal Advisory Committee Act, as amended, except that of reporting annually to the Congress . . . shall be performed by the Administrator of the Agency for International Development (AID) in accordance with guidelines and procedures established by the Administrator of General Services." (Unquote.) Here is just one more indication of how Presidential powers are being delegated to appointed, unelected, officials who are interested in promoting the New World Order!

Further indications of how the President is being relegated to a formal but powerless position as a mere head of state without authority, can be shown by the media treatment regarding his trip to South and Central America. The gaffes he made were publicized. But, prior to his trip, Secretary of State Shultz made the official pronouncements concerning Latin American policies at a meeting of OAS. And, after Reagan returned, instead of giving him credit for anything worth while that was accomplished, it was George Bush who received the headlines, on December 6th. He "gave the keynote address to the sixth annual Miami Conference on the Caribbean." He said the "Caribbean Basin Plan" when enacted by Congress would "ensure the U.S. has stable democratic neighbors in an area through which 50 percent of its trade passes, create new markets for U.S. products, curtail the refugee flow to the U.S. create a favorable climate for U.S. investment and help fight drug smuggling." Bush had just returned from an African jaunt in which he also promoted economic relations that would be of benefit to the promoters of the New World Order. In all these matters, Moscow to Morocco to Miami, Bush was upstaging Reagan. The media even resorted to the Roosevelt-Nixon-canine ploy in promoting Bush. Newsweek's Periscope of December 13th opined that "Cats aren't the only house pets with literary appeal: Vice President George Bush's dog is doing a book. C. Fred Bush, a yellow cocker spaniel, roams freely through the vice-presidential mansion and Bush's offices at the White House. C. Fred Bush has been photographed with almost every head of state and celebrity who has met his master in Washington. Now, Bush reports, Doubleday is going to publish a collection of the man-meets-dog photos." The whole media campaign has so worried Reagan supporters that Lyn Nofziger has been called upon to start work on the President's re-election bid, and to cut down the influence of Chief of Staff James Baker who is a Bush man from way back. Nofziger said he wanted the 1984 race to "be a Reagan-Bush campaign, not a Bush-Reagan campaign."

But the most telling blow against the Reagan leadership of the Nation came when the House turned down his MX missile proposal by a one-sided vote of 254 to 176, with 80 Republican Congressmen voting with the Democratic majority. There was, of course, the strong influence of the Communist-led anti-nuke campaign that would have caused many liberal congressmen to vote against any nuclear program. And there was considerable concern about whether the MX - now called the Peacekeeper - was the right weapon for the purpose for which it was intended. Also, many Congressmen would have been concerned with the estimated $25 billion cost of the total program. But, despite all of these objections, the House probably would have gone along with Reagan's scaled-down request for just $988 million to build the first five of the desired 100 Peacekeepers that would be needed to fill the still-to-be-built reinforced silos. But, the thing that really defeated the Reagan proposal was the idea of the dense pack deployment system. Reagan had been sold on this idea, probably by Defense Secretary Weinberger, and the scheme seemed dangerous and impractical to most defense experts, including three of the five members of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. This all-eggs-in-one-basket called for the deployment of 100 MX missiles in closely spaced silos on a 14-square mile site in Wyoming. There was the expressed theory that if incoming Soviet warheads were sent in to blow up these missiles, the first Soviet missile would destroy a few of the planted MX missiles, but that so much debris and radiation would have been created that all subsequent Soviet missiles would be destroyed without harming the rest of the MX densepack. But what Reagan, Weinberger and company seem to overlook is the probability that if even one Soviet missile hit its target, detonating itself and an x-number of MX warheads, the whole area for miles and miles around could be covered with the debris and death-dealing radiation which would result. A good part of Wyoming and parts of surrounding States would be affected, millions of people could be killed and the land devastated. In the opinion of many, including three of the five of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, the densepack idea is the most ridiculous yet proposed. Besides, MX is an attack weapon, and what is needed is a defense system, one that would prevent any nuclear warhead from being detonated anywhere in America. Such a system would probably be rejected by the authorities. So, that leaves just one sure defense weapon, a very personal one, who can guide and protect and save those who depend on something greater than man-made warheads.

"FOR THE LOVE OF MONEY . . ."

On December 9th, the finance ministers of West Germany, Japan, Great Britain, France and the United States attended a hastily arranged two-day meeting in a palace near Frankfurt. It was a very secret meeting, there were armed guards to keep reporters and correspondents from finding leaks. But Newsweek reported that the meeting had been scheduled "to find a way to avert a global economic collapse." On the agenda was, according to Newsweek, a discussion regarding "Increasing the resources of the International Monetary Fund, the multinational agency that lends to countries facing temporary economic collapse." There are at least 35 such countries, from Argentina to Zaire, who are finding it impossible to pay even the interest on the debts owed various international banks. Topping the list, according to the World Bank, are Mexico with a debt of $80 billion, Brazil which owes $75 billion, Venezuela with a debt of $37.5 billion, Argentina following with a $37 billion debt, South Korea $32.5 billion and Yugoslavia $18 billion. To alleviate the more serious cases, the United States government has arranged recent loans of billions of dollars to Mexico, Brazil, Hungary, Yugoslavia, and Poland. A recent issue of U.S. News reported that total U.S. economic aid to countries around the world amounts to $130.2 billion. And that secret meeting in Frankfurt was held to arrange ways of giving more and more foreign aid to countries that might default on their national debts and cause great distress to the International Bankers. Recently, Frank Morris, President of the Federal Reserve Bank of Boston and a member of the Federal Open Market Committee, stated outright that the Fed would not permit a financial panic because of defaults on the part of any country or countries, and that the Fed would act as the "lender of last resort" to prevent any such financial panic. Here's how it works:

The Monetary Control Act of 1980 gave the Fed the power to "monetize the debt" of foreign companies or of private institutions whose debt is guaranteed by the government of a foreign country. If Brazil or Mexico can't pay their principal and interest when due to the New York banks, the Fed can literally print money or grant credits, using that foreign debt as security, then re-route the money to the lending bank to make current interest and principal payments. President Reagan applied this method when he offered Brazil that $1.2 billion in help. Howard Ruff comments: "Those powers which the Fed swore on a stack of Bibles that they would never use when challenged prior to passage of the 1980 bill, have been used to purchase the debt of 26 countries. The net effect is that your money is now backed by debt of 26 countries."

It should be understood that all of this maneuvering and money manipulation on the grand scale is designed to protect the international bankers at the taxpayer's expense. Meanwhile, at least as a partial result of all of this international aiding and loaning and "monetizing," here at home the morning paper reports that the "Recession Hits Longest Slump Since the 30's." And Congress was told on Dec. 15th that "at least two million Americans are homeless as well as jobless and stand to freeze or starve this winter unless help arrives quickly." a fit of justified anger, Jim Townsend, editor of The National Educator comments on "The audacity, the utter gall of the Federal Reserve Bankers to create a depression and throw millions of people out of work, simply to shore up the over-inflated Federal Reserve credit dollar. The actions . . . have wrecked the lives of untold numbers of people, while bankrupting the small and medium sized businessmen, nationwide."

No doubt you've heard the expression, "There are two sides to every coin." This ages-old aphorism applies equally well whether we speak of coins cast in precious metals or of promissory notes printed on paper. The obverse side represents misery, poverty, hunger, people out of work, businesses going broke or being eaten up through mergers with bigger businesses, factories closing down, families losing their homes through mortgage foreclosures, independent farmers being gobbled up by agribusiness multinationalists, people on fixed income finding it impossible to make ends meet. In short, economic slavery. But the converse side of the coin – or piece of paper – represents the amassing of amazing fortunes by a few through the acquisition of metals, industries, multinational operations, or the amassing of properties, materials and natural resources.

John Maynard Keynes expressed it in these words: "Lenin is said to have declared that the best way to destroy the Capitalist System was to debauch the currency. By a continuing process of inflation, governments can confiscate, secretly and unobserved, an important part of the wealth of their citizens. By this method they not only confiscate, but they confiscate arbitrarily, and while this impoverishes many it actually enriches some. The sight of the arbitrary rearrangement of riches strikes, not only at security, but at confidence in the equity of the existing distribution of wealth. Those who the System brings windfalls beyond their desires, and even beyond their expectations or desires, become 'profiteers', who are the object of the hatred of the bourgeoisie (middle class), whom the inflation has impoverished, not less than of the proletariat (working class). As the inflation proceeds and the real value of currency fluctuates wildly, all permanent relations between debtors and creditors, which form the ultimate foundation of capitalism, become so utterly disordered as to be almost meaningless, and the process of wealth getting degenerates into a gamble and a lottery."

Commenting on Keynes' reference to Lenin, Ben Barker in his Crisis Advisory points out that "The Money Manipulators control international wealth today because they decided to do so, and they convinced us to give them sanction. We believe in their debt/money system, and that belief is used to control us. . . . They and their endless obsession with power, control and dominance are at once pathetic, funny and evil. The saddest part of it all is that those of us who should know better continue to give them sanction to control our lives, our money and our destinies."

It was Keynes who made the blueprint which our government has followed to its present financial and economic dilemma, and as he predicted, wealth-getting has now degenerated for the most part into a gamble and a lottery, being played with our stakes. So much a gamble and a lottery that the finance ministers of the productive Nations are getting scared; scared because they may have overstepped their abilities in guaranteeing Megabanker loans to countries that can't pay even the interest on those loans. But possibly even more scared because the citizens of the productive Nations, who must pay those bills which governments have contracted, are asking questions, demanding answers, and becoming aware of how they've been robbed and victimized these many years; and because they are feeling the economic pinch personally, are seeking ways and means of unshackling themselves from the chains of the miserable debt/money system with which they are bound. True, economists are in a tizzy, not knowing what's going to happen next. But the answer to what has already happened, is becoming public knowledge. And this has the Megabankers in a tizzy, no less than the finance ministers of the industrial countries, who are agents of the former. As for the alleged "global economic collapse" which has Newsweek worried, since it is a mouthpiece of the "chosen elite," Walter Wriston, Chairman of the New York City Bank, gave an important clue recently. He said: "There are few recorded instances in history of government – any government – actually getting out of debt. Certainly in an era of $100 billion deficits, no one lending money to our government by buying a Treasury bill expects that it will be paid at maturity in any way except by our government's selling a new bill of like amount." Wriston is referring to what bankers call the rollover. It seems that debts owed to a banker by any sovereign nation (Poland is considered as such) are never paid off in cash. Only the interest is ever paid, and the principal is rolled over, that is, replaced by new loans. The banks know there is no intention to ever repay the loans. All they're interested in is being able to carry the loans as "good" assets on the balance sheet, meaning the interest is being paid. As one economist explains: Cash is just paper representing debt. Cash earns no profits, but loans do. As long as the loans pay interest, that's all that's expected. . The principle is just a book entry. But the interest represents profit! The only catch is that this rollover system is inflationary; and that is being paid by the people who pay taxes!

So much for the rollover method. The second way to take care of those debts of countries that can't pay the bankers, is to have the Federal Reserve buy up the debts of the foreign country. As we mentioned previously, this was made possible by that Monetary Control Act of 1980 which Congress passed and which President Carter signed into law. Now, if the rollover scheme doesn't seem practical; or when the act of "monetizing the debt" seems too difficult (that would be when a country could not prove itself to be a sovereign nation), then there is a third method. This involves the use of the international lending organizations, such as IMF, Export Import Banks, World Bank, AID, etc. Howard Ruff explains: "The neatest raids on the American Treasury and the purchasing power to the American consumer are the huge loans that are being made to international lending organizations. Money is appropriated by the U.S. Congress for these institutions at little or no interest. In an age of deficits every such dollar, of course, has to be printed and is inflationary. This money (created out of nothing—Ed.) is then re-loaned by the international lending organization to the deadbeat country which then makes payments (of interest) to the American banks, and those about-to-default loans are now 'good', income earning assets. Because the IMF or World Bank can sometimes be too slow in a fast moving crisis, Donald Regan, Secretary of the Treasury, has proposed the creation of a 'faster loan-disbursing agency' to keep sinking debt ships afloat while IMF loans are being approved." This was probably one of the chief items on the agenda when the finance ministers of of the five Trilateral Nations met in that secret meeting in Frankfurt.

There is a fourth way in which loans that will never be repaid are made to nations that cannot call themselves "sovereign" or don't have the trust even of the IMF. That is by loaning the money to a so-called "sovereign" nation, and then having that nation make the loans. This is a part of what journalists and diplomats keep referring to as a part of the "China Card," which is being played by the United States. An African Confidential Report states that : "Communist China is planning an overall increase in aid to African countries. The Chinese Communists give aid and loans to 22 African nations: Congo, Tanzania, Zanzibar, Uganda, Equatorial Guinea, Sierra Leone, Zambia, Kenya, Nigeria, Somalia, Upper Volta, Liberia, Cameroun, Burundi, Ethiopia, Rwanda, Niger, Benin, Mauritania, Guinea Bissau, Zaire and Algeria. Communist Chinese Prime Minister Zhao Ziyang, will shortly embark on a tour of seven African countries. " Globescan comments. and we quote:

"Wish the Communist Chinese Prime Minister a nice trip to Africa visiting American allies and enemies. Hope he enjoys the good food in Algeria and Morocco, and doesn't mind how bad it is in Egypt, Guinea, Zaire and Tanzania. As usual for dignitaries, he will rest in the finest hotels, be driven in air-conditioned Cadillacs and drink the finest champagne. And he won't even have to use a Visa or American Express card like the rest of us. His trip is paid for in advance - by you! ¶ China hasn't any money for diplomatic-vacation trips or for foreign aid - China doesn't even produce enough wealth to feed itself. China was so close to the brink of economic collapse a few years ago that it had to be rescued by the International Establishment in order to keep their world-wide monopoly games going. Thus, Taiwan was ousted and Red China was brought in to the emerging one-world socialist community. Poor Communist China - as a 'lesser developed country' - has been lent over $8 billion during the last 2 years by the IMF, World Bank and Asian Development Bank; and there's plenty more to come. But the money doesn't come from those 'Banks' (they aren't even banks, just transfer agents). The money comes from Western taxpayers, most of them Americans. ¶ So China gets the credit for helping poor Marxists of the world - with your money. How come? The American people finally had enough of supplying African Marxist dictators a few years ago, and they told Congress to STOP! But the International Establishment, ever resourceful, always finds a way of supplying the needs of their easily controlled Marxist loan junkies who do as they are told and concentrate power in order to keep national resources, land and profits from falling into the hands of the people of those countries. ¶ The money circuit goes like this: From American producers, via the U.S. Congress through the super banks, to Chinese Communists, to African Marxists, to international bankers and their related manufacturing monopolists. ¶ Next time you sign a check, before making out the stub, think about how - through taxes and inflation - you pay 50% to 60% of what you earn to the International Establishment insiders by way of 'aid' to their Marxist minions." (Underlining as in original. Quoted from Globescan, European based news and economic advisory letter "dedicated to free enterprise and individual freedom, opposed to economic intervention and collectivism. 1 year (24 Issues) $125. U.S. Subscription Center, 1545 New York Avenue, N.E., Washington, D.C. 20002).

LATER DEVELOPMENT. Just as we were completing this Report, word came via the Television Satellite Network that the first results of that secret meeting of the finance ministers of the five Trilateral Nations had been concluded. U.S. Treasury Secretary Donald Regan's plan to create a pinch-hitter program to fill in for the slower moving IMF in granting loans to nations, had been successful. Some 1400 banks, mostly foreign banks, had agreed to form a pool and loan $5 billion to Mexico "to help that country get back on its feet." IMF officials were pleased, "hoped the money would pave the way for additional credits." And the plan is to be used as a formula for negotiating Brazil's huge foreign debt of $88 billion. Then on to other governments that might threaten to repudiate their foreign debts and thus embarrass the International Bankers. The plan works two ways: It forces the private banks of the world to cooperate with the Megabankers in granting loans to countries, and it also leaves some of the IMF's billions free to be given away to other developing countries. So, with this new banker pool arrangement there is next to no chance that any foreign government or megabank will repudiate its debt by refusing to pay back interest on its debts. So, the International Bankers are safe, thanks to taxpayers' money and the smaller, independent banks.

Meanwhile, here at home with our own financial troubles, it seems that the 97th Congress which was supposed to pass into history Friday at midnight, may go on and on. No budget, appropriations bill stacked up and not passed, the MX missile program unsettled, possibility that our federal government would be closed down as this Report is being read, not even that Congressional pay raise question had been settled. In recent years Congress has been doing business on a month-to-month basis, even a week-to-week basis. Instead of okaying the necessary appropriations bills, it passes short-term funding bills for just a few weeks, or just a few days at a time. Well, as the Lord God once told Abram, "The iniquity . . . is not yet full." Things must get worse before they can get better.

MEASURES TOWARD "THE MERGING"

For most inhabitants of the Western World, 1982 was not a happy year. Mainly, the reasons were economic in nature. Some called it a recession, others called it a depression. Some blamed it on President Reagan. Others blamed it on those who opposed Reagan's program or reneged when support counted. Some said it was but a temporary cycle; others insisted that the conditions would linger on throughout 1983. Meanwhile, businesses and people declared bankruptcy in unheard of numbers. Millions lost their jobs, and lost all hope of ever regaining those jobs for which they were specially trained. Bread and soup lines began to form in the larger cities. In general, there was misery for the masses, not only here but in all parts of the world. For, where economic conditions didn't do the work, wars, revolutions, terrorism and sabotage brought fear of violent death where fear of starvation or disease did not.

But here in the United States, as the old year wended its way wearily into the Holiday Season, the chief national concern became the awful weather. Snowstorms shut down cities in the Midwest. Thousands of travelers, hoping to reach home for the holidays, found refuge in churches and schools along the way. But while Minnesota, South Dakota, Nebraska and parts of other States were suffering below zero temperatures, above gale winds, and imprisoning snowstorms, Michigan, Iowa, the New England States were experiencing unusually warm temperatures which might affect farms and forests as well as ski resorts. Meanwhile in Louisiana, Mississippi, Missouri, Arkansas, Texas and parts of other Southern States, floodwaters were forcing thousands of families out of their homes, killing at least 27 people, causing untold billions of dollars in damage to homes, factories, farmlands and whole communities. How much death and destruction won't be known until the storms have abated and the floodwaters have receded.

There is one possible reason for such unusual, devastating weather; something which governments and the communications media are careful not to mention publicly. But, you'll undoubtedly recall that in the mid-1970s there were similar weather conditions, accompanied by unusual electrical phenomena, unexplained massive fireballs along the East Coast, power plants suddenly put out of action. At that time one report leaked out of the Pentagon: a statement that scientists had revealed that the bad weather on the North American Continent and the unprecedented drought which devastated Britain at the same time in the mid-70s were artificially controlled! The report was suppressed and nothing more was heard of any such possibility. But, came the summer of 1980 and temperatures were the hottest ever recorded in many parts of the Continent. The Washington Post of Feb. 2, 1981 reported that "a single weather pattern has gripped virtually the entire United States, causing a coast-to-coast drought unique in the annals of weather recording." Then came the winter of 1980-81, with blizzards and freezing cold in Canada and the Northern part of the United States. In England and Central Europe the cold was intense. Paris was likened to Moscow in January, while in Italy Florence and Rome were flooded. And now, in this winter of 1982-83 comes a repeat performance of even greater intensity.

One statement of importance: When the strange weather occurrences first began, Professor McDonald, who had been President Johnson's science adviser, explained how hurricanes could be used to subdue opponents. He explained the techniques for increasing increasing or decreasing world heat, and a method to knock out the ozone layer of the atmosphere, which would cause massive destruction. It should be understood that wherever devastating weather occurs, disruption to the economy and to society also occurs. And it also should be understood by the people even as it is understood by governments, that If Weather Is Controllable, Then Governments Are Controllable By Weather.

In his book "Between Two Ages," Zbigniew Brzezinski, head of David Rockefeller's Trilateral Commission and later Jimmy Carter's head of the National Security Agency, wrote: Not only have new weapons been developed, but some of the basic concepts of geography and strategy have been fundamentally altered: space and weather control have replaced Suez or Gibraltar as key elements of strategy." As though in confirmation, author Stan Deyo wrote of a very small valley about twelve miles from the dead center of Australia which holds "a very secret, U.S. government-financed base and contains the world's deepest and straightest bore drilled beneath it. The bore is at least 28,000 feet (5.3 miles) deep and could be used as an underground antenna to tune a gigantic 'standing wave' field around the entire planet. The secret base has a very large nuclear facility to power its enormous 'transceiver.'" Is this America's or the Trilateral Nations' attempt to control the weather. And is our freaky weather examples of tests and trials gone wrong?

But more importantly, there is the Soviet experimentation and development of the works of that rare genius, Nikola Tesla. Weather expert Lowell Ponte wrote: "Shortly after the turn of the century, Nikola Tesla theorized that by using coordinated radio impulses, it should be possible to change the earth's magnetic field by creating giant standing waves. These waves, said Tesla, could then be manipulated to change the course of giant wind patterns that shape our weather." Among other things, Tesla received 14 doctorates from universities all over the world; patented over 900 new processes in the field of energy conversion; broadcast electricity over 25 miles without wires to light 10,000 watts of filament globes; devised the system of alternating current power generation and transmission which lights the world today; suggested a process for a charged-particle "death ray" which is now a reality, and outlined a means for electrical weather control as early as 1905. His findings were rejected at the time, but it is known that Soviet scientists have been experimenting and developing many of the theories outlined and blueprinted before his death in New York City in 1943. We haven't the necessary solid evidence to prove it, but there is every reason to believe that the Soviet experts, using Tesla's theories and America's technology, to build a weather weapon which, if and when perfected, could be used to control all the nations of the world. But, you'll hear nothing about this from official sources; because for special reasons, the people are not supposed to know about such things.

There is another current example of how there were attempts to keep the people from knowing that the Soviet KGB, while Yuri Andropov was its head, directed and financed, through its Bulgarian controlled secret police, the attempted assassination of the Pope. As early as November 9, Italian Interior Minister Virginio Rognoni told a CIA chief and a staffer from the Senate Intelligence Committee exactly how it all happened. The gunman, Agca, was a cold-blooded killer sprung from a Turkish prison, was passed into Bulgaria penniless and came out with $50,000. He was able to describe the living quarters of the Bulgarian officials who were his controls and contacts, was able to name and identify them. He told about the flurry of electronic communication that came out of the Bulgarian embassy just before the attack on the Pope. According to columnist William Safire, "The CIA man waved all that aside. 'You have no proof,' he said, and did his best to convey to the Italian government a high degree of skepticism from the American government." The CIA man especially pooh-pooed any idea that the KGB could be behind the assassination attempt. Our government and the controlled media cooperated in denying all that had been told them by Italian officials. But Readers Digest broke the silence, as it published John Barron's article "The KGB's Magical War for Peace." Then NBC, trailing both ABC and CBS in the ratings war, did a special report on the assassination plot. And neither our government nor the controlled media could hide the facts any more. Why the original blackout and suppression of the news in the United States? Safire said it was a matter of politics and economics: "We have to deal with this man Andropov, say our doves, and if the chain of circumstance is drawn too tight we might not be able to trust the Soviets on arms control." Newsweek gave a fuller answer, once it was permitted to feature the story. "If Moscow is behind Agca and the Bulgarians, most Western governments probably would rather not know about it; the effects on arms control, trade and other East-West relations could be devastating."

Perhaps this is the reason that the media, except for Readers Digest and the independent press, refuse to admit that the KGB is behind the worldwide peace drive: trade and other East-West relations would be seriously jeopardized. The matter is so important that when President Reagan said that the "U.S. nuclear-freeze movement is led by people who have been duped by foreign communists," the media led by Time insisted that his contention was "totally unsupported" and we were told that he had made up the thing out of whole cloth. John Barron was ridiculed and accused of having no facts to back up his article. Here again, people must not be told that the deceptive peace drive is "sponsored by a thing called the World Peace Council, which is bought and paid for by the Soviet Union." And even if the President says it publicly, the people must be told that the President is making up another tall story.

The subtle art of deceiving the masses, or of hiding the truth from the majority, moral or otherwise, is a necessary part of the plan to establish a New World Order in which both the United States and the Soviet Union will be regional members. But, when to delude Americans into thinking of the Soviet Union as a deadly enemy, and when to use friendly persuasion to cause people to think of the Soviet Union as just a friendly trading partner sometimes becomes a problem to the Planners. In the first place, it is necessary to think of Russia as an enemy, because wars are still a chief stock in trade for the International Banking Community and the Multinational Industrial Monopolists. Preparing for war, waging war, and rebuilding nations after the war is fought, are very profitable ventures for those who would so venture. However, it is also important to the Planners to engage in trade, make loans, and form partnerships with the enemy. And, of even more importance is the final goal: that of a One World Government in which both of the giant nations will be a part. The Merging is the Ultimate Aim!

This was best stated in 1953 when Norman Dodd, Director of the House Committee to investigate tax-exempt foundations, was told by Rowan Galther, then head of the Ford Foundation: "We operate here under directives which emanate from the White House. . . .The substance of the directives under which we operate is that we shall use our grant-making power so to alter life in the United States that we can be comfortably merged with the Soviet Union." (Emphasis added). Now, how to treat the Soviet Union as an enemy, and at the same time extend the hand of friendship, is something of a problem. So, certain of the biggest tax-exempt foundations were given the task of making red seem blue and blue seem red. And the foundations worked through the universities and colleges of America to achieve such a goal. Zbigniew Brzezinski operated such an Institute for Russian Studies at Columbia University before being called by David Rockefeller to help set up the Trilateral Commission and later serve as Jimmy Carter's National Security Adviser. Lately there has been a number of similar institutions established with foundation money in order to teach certain selected scholars of the Rhodes type how to cause people to hate Communism or love Communism at will, whichever suits the Planners best at the time.

In the Los Angeles Times of Dec. 15, 1982, under the heading "Sovietology: Some Signs of Revival" there is an article by Anne C. Roark, who is the Times' education writer. The article begins: "After nearly two decades of serious erosion, which has left the field in practically a state of collapse, American scholarship on the Soviet Union is showing the first signs of a revival on university campuses. . . . Although the difficulties that have surrounded American study of the Soviet Union - or Sovietology as it is sometimes known - are far from over, there are indications that help is on the way. The directors at Rockefeller Foundation recently gave their final approval to a $2 million grant to support research on Soviet foreign policy at two American centers. Stanford University, the University of California, Berkeley, UCLA, the Santa Monica-based Rand Corporation and other major research institutions have been invited to submit proposals. At least two other major U.S. foundations are conducting private talks on the possibility of increasing their support of American research on the Soviet Union. Their decisions are expected to be announced soon. In October, former Ambassador W. Averell Harriman and his wife Pamela gave $10 million to Columbia University to establish an Advanced Institute of the Soviet Union. An additional $1.5 million was given to the university by the Gladys and Roland Harriman Foundation. . . . Discussions of increased federal support are also taking place in Washington. A bill before Congress would establish an endowment of $50 million, the interest from which would provide Soviet-bloc research and training programs at universities and centers such as the Kennan Institute for Advanced Russian Studies. . . . Secretary of State Shultz strongly endorsed the notion of increased government support for the study of Soviet Affairs." (Unquote). These are studies on how we can be "comfortably merged with the Soviet Union?" If there is any reason for honest study of Soviet affairs, why are such experts as Alexander Solzhenitsyn denied access to the White House and his testimony disregarded? Seven years ago he wrote: "Communism has been writing about itself in the most open way for 125 years. It is perfectly amazing. The whole world can read but somehow no one wants to understand what communism is. . . . But, what's amazing is, apart from all the books, communism has offered a multitude of examples for modern man to read." But this isn't the way the Planners want it to be read. And worst of all, while these Planners set up schools to train their apprentices in how to "comfortably merge us," Yuri Andropov and his gang are hastening that merger in their own way. A qualified expert, HduB, reports that since Andropov has taken charge "Americans and Britishers will be told that a new and enlightened Russian leadership wants only to come to terms with the West and all that is needed is a sign from President Reagan. . . . In reality, Andropov's first goal is to bring Red China into a communist-family gang-up against the West. Anyone who believes an era of peace lies ahead is as stupid as Roosevelt was on November 16, 1933, when he recognized the Red Government of Russia in return for a letter from Maxime Molotov promising "to scrupulously refrain from interfering in the internal affairs of the United States, (etc.)" Yes, Andropov wants a merger with the United States. But why should we permit our government to assist him?

"THE MORE THINGS CHANGE - - - - -"

And so it came to pass, as it must every second year, the new, 89th Congress of the United States was activated. The usual pecking order among chairmanships, committee memberships, etc. was established, a few new rules of procedure were discussed. Then the House of Representatives settled down to its first day of business. And, as it might have been expected, the very first bill to be introduced was the old once rejected, proposed Equal Rights Amendment. Representatives Peter Rodino (D-N.J.) and Patricia Schroeder (D-Colo.) said they had some 221 co-sponsors, 31 of them being Republicans. They expected that the bill would be passed by the House sometime this summer. However, they couldn't expect such an easy hatching in the Senate, where Republicans supposedly still ruled the roost. Sen. Paul Tsongas (D-Mass.) said he will introduce the proposed amendment in the Senate on Jan. 24th. But it must go to the Senate Judiciary Committee, which is chaired by Sen. Strom Thurmond (R-S.C.) who thinks the States, and not the federal government, should deal with such matters, and there's every chance that ERA will die its second death before it ever gets to a vote in the Senate. However, it can be expected that the Libs, the Socialists, the Lesbians, the misnamed Gays, the assorted minority groups, and the misguided will continue to try and try until finally they may have their way. It will be recalled that ERA was originally passed by the Congress in 1972, was given seven years for ratification by three-fourths of the States, or else forget it. But the deadline came with only 35 States having ratified and some of them rescinding their ratification. So the lobbyists cajoled the Congress into giving an unprecedented and probably illegal extension until June 30, 1982 for its ratification. But nothing happened, and ERA suffered its first illegal death. Now comes a resurrection and, hopefully, a second death.

We are reminded of a kind of precedent, one which virtually turned this Republic into a Socialist Welfare State through its utilization by enemies of the Republic. We refer to the 14th Amendment, which was never ratified legally, but was forced onto the Constitution at the point of a bayonet by the revengeful Thaddeus Stevens & Co., shortly after President Lincoln's assassination. A historical brief is necessary: At the end of the War Between the States, there was considerable question as to which of the Confederate States had federally-approved governments. When the 13th Amendment was presented for ratification, some of those federally unrecognized State Legislatures ratified the Amendment. The constitutionality and legality of those States to act was never questioned and, joining with other (Yankee) States, the necessary three-fourths of the States served to add the 13th Amendment to the Constitution. However, with the 14th Amendment, things were different, When it was circulated for ratification, enough former Confederate and Yankee States rejected the Amendment so that it was defeated. However, the South-hating Thaddeus Stevens was not so easily satisfied. With the approval of an equally vengeful Congress, Stevens insisted that the amendment be recirculated (even as ERA is to be recirculated if it passes the House and Senate). This time around, those Southern States that had voted for the 13th and had not voted for the 14th, were forced to do so, figuratively at the point of the bayonet. Even so, as with ERA, some of the Yankee States had rescinded their ratification, but this was disallowed and the 14th Amendment was forced onto the Constitution, with coercion and illegality. The 14th was supposed to give former slaves full citizenship and the right to vote. But it was so loosely drawn that it became necessary to add the 15th Amendment to the Constitution to accomplish this purpose (though the 15th was ignored in many States for many years).

The 14th Amendment ends with this statement: "The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation. The 13th, 15th, 19th and the proposed Equal Rights Amendment all contain this same provision. This means that federal law is to be supreme in all of these areas, State and local laws to the contrary notwithstanding. It also means that, by judicial interpretation, States Rights are dead, and that the 10th Amendment is to all intents and purposes null and void. Also, the 14th Amendment contains this stipulation: "...nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law, nor deny any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws" (meaning federal laws). Thus, and again by judicial interpretation, federal laws override State and local laws in any area specified by a judge or a federal court. And the Bill of Rights, which originally contained restrictions upon the federal government only, now are applicable to the States as well. Where the federal government originally had been created by the States through enactment of the Constitution, and federal power and authority limited to certain specific areas, now the servant has become the master and both the States and their citizens now are subject to the dictates of the federal government in all respects which may be designated by a federal court.

Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes wrote in 1930 in Baldwin vs. Missouri: "I have not yet adequately expressed the more than anxiety I feel at the ever-increasing scope given to the 14th Amendment in cutting down what I believe to be the constitutional rights of the States. As the decisions now stand, I see hardly any limit but the sky to the invalidating of those rights if they happen to strike a majority of this court for any reason desirable. I cannot believe that this amendment was intended to give us carte blanche to embody our economic or social beliefs in its prohibitions." Holmes was a prophet in this respect. Patrick McGuigan, director of the Free Congress Foundation's Judicial Reform Project in Washington, D.C., recently remarked that as a result of broad interpretations of the 14th Amendment "Edicts have been imposed in matters of prison facilities, the death penalty, school desegregation, zoning, school discipline, amateur athletics, affirmative action and local government organization. Of course, the most notorious example of judicial tyranny was the Roe vs Wade abortion decision of 1973, which created a national abortion policy out of whole cloth."

When the federal courts and/or their judges exceed their Constitutional authority and begin enacting laws that should clearly be the province of State and local governments as well as the Federal Legislature, it is the Constitutionally imposed duty of the United States Congress to curb such powers that are stolen by the courts and their judges. This is spelled out in the clear language of Article III, Section 2 of the Constitution. But, reforms don't just happen. It is necessary that Congress enact specific and definitive legislation to curb such abuses. In this connection, it is hopeful to know that Senator John East (R-N.C.) has introduced a Judicial Reform Act which would restore the original purpose of the Bill of Rights by "withdrawing from federal courts jurisdiction over cases claiming state abridgement of rights secured by the Bill of Rights. This jurisdiction would revert to State Courts." This would mean, for example, that murderers sentenced to death, would not have the "privilege" of delaying or escaping their execution through appeals to federal courts.

As it was in the beginning of our history as a Representative Republic, any criminal case within a State was dealt with in the County or Parish in which the alleged crime was committed. And with federal interference prohibited by the Constitution which was then the undisputed Law of the Land, a speedy and public trial by jury was possible, guilt or innocence established, judgment rendered and when guilt established, punishment executed without long delays as tax-supported lawyers filed-appeal after appeal in court after court even unto the Supreme Court. If justice is to be restored in this Nation, federal courts and judges must be forced, by appropriate legislation, to confine their judicial activities to those prescribed and clearly defined in Article III of the United States Constitution; and let the State and local courts handle the rest, as so commanded by that same Constitution. This is what Senator East's proposed Judicial Reform Act aims to accomplish.

However, it seems evident that any kind of reform legislation is going to have short shrift in this new 98th Congress, which will still be in session when the year 1984 arrives. Any reform legislation proposed by Senators John East of North Carolina, Jesse Helms of North Carolina, Gordon Humphrey of New Hampshire, or Don Nickles of Oklahoma will receive short shrift in this new Congress. For these four have been blacklisted by most of their fellow Senate colleagues and the controlled communications Media. These four were the ones who promoted and began that filibuster against the mis-named Gas Tax which was promoted by President Reagan and which proved to be the final ignominy of the late 97th Congress. These four have been labeled villians because villains control the Senate, and villiany always prospers when villiany controls. As The Spotlight noted in regard to this alleged Gas Tax Act, "The irony is that some 95 percent of the public is opposed to Mr. Reagan's bill and an even 95 percent of the senators helped push the atrocity through their body....The vote to invoke cloture (to end the filibuster), which guaranteed the passage of the legislation saw only five senators opposed out of 100."

One conservative observer wrote that "once voters know what's in the bill Congress passed, they'll also know that Helms & Co. were the only ones to emerge with integrity." It was promoted as a job-producing bill. But almost every economist who has examined the bill says it will cost almost as many jobs as it will create. Even congressional supporters seem to agree. But they voted for it anyway. Ordinarily it takes months, sometimes even years of debate between introduction and passage of an important bill. This is especially true of a measure that entails more than $5 billion in taxing and spending, as does this bill. But, it got only one days' hearing in both the House and Senate committees. It went to committee one evening, emerged approved the next day. Then only three weeks elapsed between introduction and floor consideration. It would have been approved almost immediately had not East started a filibuster, to be joined by Helms. In the beginning, President Reagan called it a "jobs bill". But when told it would never pass under that label, Reagan switched to calling it a "highways bill." Howard Baker tried to justify his backing by calling it a "highways-jobs bill." But in the House, Tip O'Neil continued to refer to it as a "jobs bill." People who have examined the bill as passed, call all of this a "pack of lies." Here's a part of the reason why: The bill is supposed to raise $5.5 billion in tax revenues over four years by raising the federal tax on gas and diesel fuel from 4¢ to 9¢ a gallon. But the revenue will depend on how much gas and diesel fuel is actually sold, and nobody can accurately predict just how much gas and diesel fuel is going to be used in the next four years. Most atrocious, since all of us must depend upon truck deliveries, especially deliveries of food products, is the raising of user fees on trucks. The fee, now at $210, is raised to $1,600, and in January of 1987, $1,900. This means the consumer price will show up in every product transported by truck. Incidentally, there's a special gimmick involved in this truck user fee. Truckers get a trade-off if they use heavier, longer and wider trucks on a nationwide basis. But the States are responsible for highway safety and the wear-and-tear on roads, and are likely to rebel. And, if they do rebel, they stand the chance of losing federal funds. So, there goes another bit of whatever may be left of States Rights. The fed controls the purse strings, after all. So, when you are paying part of that truck users fee indirectly, and 5¢ directly, you'll be forced to negotiate your way around trucks up to 80 feet long and 8½ feet wide. Not just on interstate highways, but on two-lane highways and streets that feed the interstates.

Now, here's why the alleged Gas Tax Act became law, even if 95 percent of the people opposed it. Rep. Robert Roe, New Jersey Democrat, got through an amendment allowing him $1 million which he can hand out to businesses in his district if they claim any harm from some nearby federal highway construction project. And Tip O'Neill had a special provision inserted which authorizes a most unusual $3 million study of "national public works needs" which will be done by a firm in Tip's congressional district. An extra handout of over 20 percent will go to improve mass transit systems in Washington, D.C., Baltimore, Minneapolis and Miami. This so they can hold down fare increases. This means that motorists everywhere will be forced to pay part of the fare for public transportation users in these four cities. There are special laws and Executive Orders indirectly subsidizing urban mass transit fares and there's no reason for any such special grant to four cities of money that's supposed to be used to improve highways; except that the politicians handing out such money are buying votes. There are other reasons why this Gas Tax Act, or Jobs Bill, or whatever you choose for its camouflaged name, was passed. But this should be sufficient to show how the Senators who fought for the people lost - and so we all lost.

The title of this Report reads: "The More Things Change - - -". To complete the sentence: "The More Things Remain the Same." Solomon, in Ecclesiastes, wrote it more fully: "The things that hath been it is that which shall be; and that which is done is that which shall be done; and there is no new thing under the sun." Following this theme, we wrote of the renewal of the effort to make ERA a part of the Constitution. Then we wrote of a similar happening, when evil lawmakers tried and succeeded in making the 14th Amendment a part of the Constitution of the United States. Next, we wrote of the last-minute passage of the alleged Gas Tax Act. There is nothing new about the business of conspiring lawmakers selecting a special or last-minute occasion to bring about the passage of evil legislation. The most notorious example was the conspiratorial action which caused the passage of the Federal Reserve Act. Congress was still convened in the latter part of December, its members hoping to get away in time for Christmas at home. The International Bankers and Money Monopolists chose that time to secure passage of their bill. Senator Robert Owen, Chairman of the Finance Committee, was selected to see to its passage. On December 19, the Senate approved the Glass-Owen Bill by a vote of 54 to 34, sent it to the House with a do-pass recommendation. It passed the House on December 22 by the majority vote of 282 to 60, but had to be returned to the Senate for a final vote. Late in the evening of the next day, December 23, it passed the Senate 43 to 23 with 27 absent or abstaining. The bill was rushed to the White House where President Wilson, assured that it was exactly what Wall Street desired, signed the bill within an hour after it left the Senate floor. Senator Owen wrote: that the Federal Reserve Act "gave the United States the most gigantic and masterful (money) system of the world. . . .It is the best financial system the world has ever seen. It has made this nation and this government an impregnable financial force and the strongest the mind of man has ever devised." Owen later changed his mind when he discovered, too late, that he had helped create the monster that is destroying our substance. But, as Solomon wrote under divine inspiration: "There is no new thing under the sun."

MONOPOLIZE MONEY, ENERGY, FOOD, THESE THREE, AND RULE THE WORLD!

When the world's Power Brokers plan and execute a great crisis, one such as we are presently experiencing, besides the usual effects of depression, two things usually occur: The closure of smaller, independent community banks, and the foreclosure of mortgages on family farms. It happened in the 1930s, when there was planned the transformation of our political and economic systems, and a New National Order was established. It is happening now as a New Economic World Order is being established. John T. Flynn wrote of the time when Herbert Hoover had been selected to be President as the crisis was developed, and how his successor, Franklin Delano Roosevelt, was selected to bring about the New Political and Economic Order which was given the name New Deal. In his book "The Roosevelt Myth," Flynn wrote:

"Every hour brought news of new bank closings - from Texas, Arizona, Oregon, Washington, Wisconsin - bringing to 24 the number of states which had closed their banks. . . . In cities all over the country crowds stood outside closed banks looking woefully through their grated windows. Farmers were in revolt. They had been intimidating judges, dumping wheat out of overturned trucks into ditches. The fires were out in many factory furnaces. Millions of men were idle. All over the land millions of people turned their faces toward Washington to see what the handsome, smiling new President would do to stem the tide of the disaster.

"Economic paralysis lay all about. The arch-villain in this catastrophe was discernible to most people . . . And now he was on his way out to the accompaniment of the glee of his enemies and detractors. Most of his aides and subalterns were gone or waiting to surrender to their successors. In their place came the procession of the righteous captains of the New Deal - Frankfurter and Hull and Henry Wallace and Henry Morgenthau, Moley and Tugwell and Sam Rosenman and Berle and Harry Hopkins and Eleanor Roosevelt and scores of others whose names would soon fill the ears of the nation. . . ."

We are not suggesting with certainty that, as Hoover was selected to be the Villain of the crisis whose result was to be the New Deal, Reagan has been selected as the Villain in a crisis whose result will be an established New Economic World Order. Nor that things will get as bad in the 80s as they were in the 30s. Today we have unemployment compensation, food stamps, bank deposit insurance, etc. But, those two signs which we mentioned are with us once again. There have been an unprecedented number of bank closings. In an article headlined "World Banking In Deep Trouble," editorial writer Robert Rankin belies the headline by noting that "The major international banks likely will juggle their shifting accounts without collapsing. But more than 1,500 U.S. banks own part of the syndicated debts spread throughout Latin America alone. . . . the smaller banks might fold under the strain of delayed repayments."

In addition to the bank closures, mortgage foreclosures also have begun. An AP article of Jan. 12 reports that "efforts to renegotiate Doug Dailey's debt on his 191-acre farm failed yesterday and more than 100 farmers vowed to block a sheriff's sale of the farm." Time of Jan. 17 reported that "Sheriff Eugene Coon...has refused to uphold the law. When 43 owner-occupied homes were to be auctioned last week in Allegheny County, Pa. because of delinquent mortgage and tax payments Coon, who runs the monthly auction, stopped the sales. Said the four-term sheriff, 'These are good people who have paid into their homes for years and years. I feel I'm on good legal grounds in trying to help those who can't help themselves." Newsweek headlined its cover story of Jan. 17: "Again, the Fear of Foreclosure," adding that "The sharp crack of the auctioneer's gavel is heard in the land, and with it the echoes of 1933." The newsweekly reprinted a paragraph that had appeared in its issue of Vol. 1, No. 1, Feb. 17, 1933: "The spectre of the auctioneer stalks throughout the land, haunting debtors in city, town and country....Next to life itself, a home is man's most prized possession. To save it, rugged individualism has grown gregarious, and harried citizens are banding against foreclosure." 50 years later, in January 1983 over 200 farmers had stormed the courthouse in Springfield, Colo. demanding that farm foreclosures be stopped. And in Grand Rapids, Mich., according to AP, "Members of a recently formed state farm association asked a federal judge to block the Farmers Home Administration from foreclosing delinquent farm loans....Fifty percent of the farmers in Michigan are in trouble..."

But to say that all owners of farms and all bankers are in trouble is to miss the point. It is the smaller, community bank that is in danger of closing, and the independent family farmer who fears foreclosure. In the case of bankers, an excellent description of how the megabankers have planned the present crisis, and saved themselves from its results was written by Allen Keyte, editor of World Affairs Review. He writes: "The present political situation is disastrous. Supply-side economics have been abandoned. They were never meant to succeed. How could they with an indestructible welfare state, budget deficits of $175 bn, trade deficits of $50bn and government intervention in the free market. Then there were those tax/cuts/increases. Mr. Reagan must have learned....He has a record 65 Trilateralists as advisers. ¶ Rep. Ron Paul recently said, 'our government is in a state of collapse.' He's right and let me give you the reasons. (1) The FRB, controlled by David Rockefeller's Council on Foreign Relations and his Trilateral Commission, in league with other major banks, is implementing a controlled monetary collapse. (2) the FRB has agreed to bail out the $1.7 trillion Euromarket created by the Swiss and British bankers. If this isn't staggering enough they also, through the Monetary Control Act, will bail out the major world banks' debts of $850bn to the third world and communist countries....¶ Every third world and communist country will be in default on its debt. Mexico will be followed by Argentina, Brazil, Peru, Columbia, Zaire, Zambia, Tanzania, then Poland, Romania, Yugoslavia and perhaps even Canada. There are scores of countries technically in default now. It's only a matter of taking them one at a time in order to stop the whole house of cards from collapsing. The Monetary Control Act of 1980 guarantees this! This act is the most inflationary piece of legislation ever passed. It allows the Fed to bail out the world. Not only can the Fed monetize the Eurodollar debt and the debts of other nations, but it can also monetize Municipal Bond debt. Since enactment of this legislation it has been used 70 times for foreign debt purchase. They just keep it quiet. You don't need to know.... ¶ Can you believe the Omnibus Banking Bill was passed by a voice vote at 10:30 at night? Just as the Federal Reserve Act was in 1913. This bill allows the government insuring agencies, FDIC and FSLIC, to bail out any company which controls or contemplates controlling a bank or savings and loan. Guess who supplies the cash? The FED. That means that in times of emergency the FED has the power to force mergers and takeovers of other financial institutions. This will allow the major Trilateralist-CFR banks such as Citibank, Chase Manhattan, Manufacturers Hanover, etc. to pick up all the small banks and savings and loans in the country for 25¢ on the dollar, under the guise of a financial emergency which they in fact created themselves. ¶ As if the aforementioned bills were not enough they were topped by the passage three years earlier of the International Emergency Economic Powers Act. Essentially this bill allows the President to implement foreign exchange controls over all foreign exchange transactions, assets and property. ¶ These three pieces of legislation...are highly inflationary and may not be totally implemented for some time to come. This phase we are now in is debt liquidation, partial expansion of banking activities by the majors and partial monetary control....' (Quoted from "World Affairs Review," 98 Malleson Road, Gotherington, Cheltenham, Glos GL524EY, United Kingdom. 24 issued per year, $127.00).

Monetary control is but one part of the overall conspiracy. A second basic element is the monopolistic control of energy. By energy we mean that which makes the wheels go around, lights up the world when the sun goes down, drives motors and keeps factories operating, provides for the making of clothing and other products which have become a daily convenience or necessity. And when referring to this definition of energy, oil is presently the world's key commodity. There are other and better sources of energy. When Henry Ford invented his first automobiles, they ran on alcohol, not gasoline. The oil companies convinced Ford that gasoline was cheaper, and he converted his world-changing invention. Oil has always been associated with the name of Rockefeller. John D. Sr. began his fortune by peddling "Nujol" as a cure for cancer. It was just raw petroleum in a fancy bottle. From there onward and upward did oil grease the rise of the Rockefellers. Multinational corporations whose interlocking directorates connect them with the major international banks are said to control over 40% of the world's oil flow. In his book Wealth For All, R.E. McMaster, Jr. notes that ARAMCO and Exxon (Rockefeller connected) monopolize the distribution of oil worldwide. "For example, out of the 8.5 million barrels of oil a day produced by Saudi Arabia, the Arabian American Oil Company (ARAMCO) is responsible for marketing 6.5 million barrels. ARAMCO is made up of Texaco, Exxon, Mobil, and Standard Oil of California. Now we know who really got rich on the skyrocketing price of oil in the 1970s. Back in 1970, the top eight major oil companies controlled 58.1 percent of the refining capacity domestically. ...What we find is that "Big Oil," "Big Banking," and "Big Government" all benefit from high oil prices." Mr. McMaster injects a personal observation which tells the story in few words: "When this writer was undergoing T-38 instructor pilot training at Tyndall Air Force Base, Florida, in our class were many Air Force jet fighter pilots who had just returned from the Vietnam War. They openly discussed how they were not allowed to bomb the oil supplies which came down the Ho Chi Minh Trail. They further commented on how the oil refinery located in North Vietnam was off limits as a strategic target. I found this quite strange at the time.... The refinery was/is owned by New York banking interests." (Quoted from Vol. II of "Wealth For All," A.N. Inc., P.O.Box 67, Whitefish, Montana 59937. Vol. I deals with religion, politics and war. Vol. II concentrates on economics. Both copyrighted in 1982. $14.95 per book).

So, with their monopoly of money developing apace and at our expense, and with control of oil well in hand (and the development of nuclear power stalled when not controlled by the multinationalists), the next item on the New Economic World Order planners' agenda is the control of food. This is where the foreclosure of mortgages on family owned and operated farms become important. Of course, much had gone on before this present crisis was brought to a head. Slowly but surely the multinationalists had been taking over America's agriculture production. And the independent farmers that are left are already at the mercy of the multinationalists in several ways. Multinationalists control the production of herbicides and fertilizers, seeds and motorized irrigation systems. They have been discouraged from using organic farming techniques. They are told to forget crop rotation, land terracing, minimum tillage; until recently when President Reagan took it upon himself to give farmers grain for not raising it (shades of Henry Wallace and his killing of little pigs). Multinational business dominates world grain trade. There are said to be five multinational corporations that control the grain trade: Continental Grain, Dreyfus, Andre, Bunge, and Cargill. Cargill and Continental are said to handle better than 50 percent of U.S. exported grain. So develops the monopoly. And Gary North in his Remnant Review has exposed how the multinationalists are buying up the seed businesses. Gary discovered that not only have the multinational agricultural corporations been buying up the old, small, family-operated seed companies; they have "canned" the seeds that reproduce, and replaced them with sterile hybrid seeds. The farmers can't plant what they grow, they must buy a new crop of seeds for planting each year from the multinationals. The small seed companies were put out of business through bureaucratic labeling requirements fostered by the federal government. So smothered with government regulation, they were forced to sell, and Cargill, ITT, Purex and Atlantic Richfield were eager to buy. Again quoting McMaster: "There is a battle underway for control of agricultural land now. The small farmers are losing in a big way. Two-thirds of this country's food supply is now produced by only 10 percent of this nation's farms. The actual number of farms have declined 54 percent since 1945. Approximately a third of today's U.S. farms are so small that their annual sales are less than $2,500....Over 50 percent of all farms are operated by partial owners. ...In summary, the stage is set as never before in history for the world's great 'protein gold' cartel. The big question is, Who will run this ultimate cartel? Multinational business is rapidly gaining the upper hand. But the small farmers and operators (for big agribusiness) are sleeping giants. They could be the last and best hope America has at regaining her constitutional freedoms and reestablishing 'Wealth For All'."

"It's power that's at stake here, just like power and resulting wealth is/was at issue over the control of oil. Control of food is ultimate control....The United States, Canada, Australia and Argentina control 80 to 90 percent of all the world's grain trade. If that doesn't hold the potential for a 'protein gold' cartel, what does?"... The U.S. multinationals' growing control of agriculture is similar to the large multinationals' dominance in the oil industry (which in turn are dominated by or allied with the international bankers-Ed.). ...In Australia, wheat is a primary export. The Australian Wheat Board rules supreme down there, much like the U.S.D.A. here. The noises that Chase Manhattan has been making about investment in Australia speak loud and clear....When David Rockefeller recently took his Chase Manhattan Advisory Committee to Australia...Henry Kissinger went along in the entourage. America's old Soviet ally, Armand Hammer, has also been visiting and aggressively promoting Australia recently....Guess who, in April 1981, took the directors of Chase Manhattan to Argentina? None other than David Rockefeller (was war with Britain over the Falklands a part of the game-Ed.?) Due to the social, political and economic (and militant) turmoil in recent years, multinational banking and corporate interests (multinational debt capitalism) is rapidly gaining control of Argentina. No one else has the bucks or clout to finance that critical agricultural country. And, in today's world, control of finance is political and economic control....The fourth and final domino in the CROPEC (Crop exporting countries) chain is our socialistic neighbor to the north, Canada....The incredible fight that has taken place between Trudeau and the Canadian provinces over the new Canadian constitution speaks of the classic struggle between centralization and decentralization, which is occurring worldwide. Trudeau has long been acknowledged as a wild-eyed socialist. Yes, truly, CROPEC is coming together."

Thus do the developers of the New World Order weave their web. Control of what we are taught to call money, which brings political and economic control. Then control of energy, which means industrial and even social control, and finally control of agricultural production, which is vital to life itself. We are reminded that "the love of money is the root of all evil;" that "in the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread," and the final command: "Man shall not live by bread alone." Within those three phrases from Scripture rests the real message.

MORE TAX AND TAX, SPEND AND SPEND, AND IN 1984 ELECT AND ELECT?

Would you like the Inner Circle of the Council on Foreign Relations to choose you to be President of the United States? As happened with Herbert Hoover, Dwight Eisenhower, John Kennedy, Richard Nixon, Jimmy Carter and Ronald Reagan? Although in the case of Mr. Reagan, he may not have known it until after the Eastern Establishment members of his executive staff had been selected for him from the ranks of the CFR, Trilateral Commission, Foreign Policy Association, Committee for Economic Development, or some related economic or political organism. And because he couldn't keep his promises, look at the position he's in in this last full week of the first calendar month of 1983: 1) A State of the Union Address to be delivered to a very doubting public; 2) A ballooning budget with a distended deficit to be offered to an adverse Congress; 3) A split staff of advisers that keeps his administration in continuous disarray; 4) A rebellious House and a reluctant Senate which threaten to do away with whatever authority is left him as President; 5) a plethora of information leaks which has caused him to resort to a slang term to vent his spleen; 6) Communications media that are trying their best to make him look totally inept and untrustworthy; 7) Double-digit unemployment that won't go away; 8) An economy that's getting nowhere; 9) Defense and foreign policy problems on which there is no unity; 10) The hard-line conservatives who backed him in the beginning now turning against him because of his renegeing on promises. Have we overlooked anything except the question of the 1984 elections?

Perhaps the underlying cause of most of the President's troubles lies in the fact that he promised there'd be a balanced budget in 1984. Instead, the Congressional Budget Office reports that federal deficits will rise in the next several years until they'll reach a predicted $322 billion in 1987, unless far greater tax increases and spending cuts are made. Red-ink spending is estimated for the current fiscal year at $196 billion; for the next fiscal year beginning October 1, $214 billion; $227 billion in 1985; $273 billion in 1986; $322 billion in 1987. This is why President Reagan now admits that there must be tax increases, but of the indirect kind wherever possible, so the people won't think of them as taxes, like taxes on incomes and social security withholdings. Like the gasoline tax uppage and the tax on trucks that seems sure to cause a nationwide strike beginning January 31. And the withholding tax on peoples' savings and interest which will be effective July 1, 1983. Your friendly banker (as contrasted with the megabankers) is against this one, too. William Kennedy, Jr., chairman of the board of the National Bank of Commerce in Pine Bluff, Arkansas, currently president of the American Bankers Association, has signed a number of nationally published advertisements in which he points out how savers and investors are going to lose the use of billions of dollars each year, and how the new law is going to eat up more money in expenses than it will return in revenue. How will this affect you as an individual? Mr. Kennedy says, "Let's say you are due a $200 interest payment after July, and you plan to leave it in your bank to grow through interest compounding Under the new law, you will only have to use of, or be able to access $180 of your money." More importantly, this new withholding law will force your bank to withdraw your money from your own account without your approval, and send it to the IRS. It's bad enough that your employer is forced to submit to unconstitutional involuntary servitude by withholding part of your salary or wages and giving it to the IRS. But when your banker is forced to do the same thing, there goes another bit of what's left of temporal freedom and liberty. Bank president Kennedy ends his paid advertisement with this statement: "We are actively urging Congress to reconsider and repeal this misguided and wrong attempt to impose a hidden tax on your savings. We know that we cannot be successful in our battle on this issue without the help of millions of concerned Americans. This is why we are urging our customers to write their Congressmen and Senators. The government wants a piece of your savings. Instead, give Congress a piece of your mind."

A group of Congressmen have responded by introducing H.R.500, a bill to repeal the interest and dividend withholding sections of the Tax Equity and Fiscal Responsibility Act which was enacted last summer. A co-sponsor of H.R.500, Rep. Ron Paul, explains: "Withholding will cost consumers at least $1.5 billion in lost earnings, while the banking industry will have to spend an equal amount just in staff training and computer time to implement the new procedures. These are costs that will be passed along to the consumer, resulting, when all of this is added up, in a serious disincentive for Americans to save...All savings should be tax exempt. Taxing savings itself is outrageous, but H.R.500, if passed, would offer some much-needed relief."

We mention this particularly, because in times like these millions of Americans may be dependent upon their savings for their very livelihood. And for Congressmen to vote themselves healthy salary increases while taxing savings accounts seems the height of injustice.

This, of course, is but one of the sneaky ways in which our government is trying to secure additional revenue to make it possible to give additional sums to Communist governed and other Third World countries. There is, for example, an IRS order that all waiters, waitresses and others who receive tips must give IRS 8 percent of all they receive as tips. Exactly how this is to be collected has not been spelled out, and we doubt that many people are observing the order. But, it could be enforced if the IRS decides to hire more taxmen to investigate. If columnists Evans and Novak are right, then there may be a surtax on all income in the future. It does seem that the administration is seriously proposing that there be a 10 percent surtax on all income; a tax on a tax. Faced with a $200 billion deficit this fiscal year, a near-bankrupt Social Security system, and a budget that seems to defy cutting, Congress and the Administration are looking at a number of other ways to get more money out of taxpayers. There is much discussion of that flat-rate income tax plan, which supposedly would raise more money if all the loopholes were eliminated. There's also much talk of a national sales tax on most everything but drugs and food. And once again administrators and lawmakers are considering the imposition of that European-spawned Value Added Tax (VAT), a system in which tax is added at each stage of production, distribution and sale; a scheme that has been considered and rejected a number of times by previous Congresses. But, now that planners have virtually destroyed the private enterprise system, leaders possessing some degree of power are desperate and are seeking desperate ways of preventing the results they should have foreseen.

There are, of course, a large number of Congressmen, a minority however, who believe that the first duty is to look for ways of reducing spending, rather than looking for sneaky ways of collecting more tax revenue and spending more money on unnecessary programs. But most of these sincere congressmen are looking in the wrong direction. They seem to be concentrating on eliminating loopholes in the income tax laws, instead of looking for ways to eliminate the system entirely and establishing a just and honest taxing system in its place. True, some money can be secured by the IRS by doing away with some of the tax loopholes. That Tax Equity and Fiscal Responsibility Act which we referred to previously was responsible for reducing some 13 of them, resulting in an estimated $31 billion in added revenue. It is believed that as much as $269 billion – enough to take care of the entire Pentagon budget – is lost to the Treasury each year because of the ways that many millionaires free themselves of tax responsibilities (as David Rockefeller once boasted). However, closing loopholes in tax laws is a difficult business. Moreover, if the income tax is to be continued as a graduated theft, some of those loopholes are justified and beneficial. The eyes of the lawmakers should be on total replacement rather than repair. As one critic has noted, we did very well without any income tax until 1913, and we haven't done so well since, in that the more the federal government gains in revenue the more the national debt seems to grow.

Even President Reagan is now willing to admit that reducing expenses sufficient to actually balance the federal budget is impossible for two principle reasons: Those entitlements which Congress can't eliminate without causing a revolution now that we have become a Corporate Welfare State; and the interest we are paying every year on the national debt. American taxpayers are seldom told how the interest on that national debt keeps growing. In the fiscal year ending June 30, 1976, taxpayers shelled out $40 billion in interest on that debt. In fiscal 1979 the annual payment had risen to $55 billion; in 1980 to $70 billion; in 1981 to $87 billion, and in 1982 to $115 billion. Nobody will say just who is receiving this money from the taxpayers, but usually reliable sources indicate that the money was paid out to eight international banks. They have been identified as the Rothschild Banks of London, France, Germany, Belgium and New York; Lazard Freres of Paris and New York; the Warburg Banks of Germany, London and New York; Lehman Brothers of New York and London; Kuhn, Loeb Banks of New York and London; Chase Manhattan Bank of New York; Goldman, Sachs of New York and London; and the Israel Moses Seif Banks of Italy. These banks, holders of the world money-creating monopoly, are said to control all of the money-creating powers of the principal countries of the world which have central banks. As for the Central Bank of the United States (the Fed), it is said that there are approximately three hundred people, known to each other and/or relatives of the "owners" of the banks, who hold stock or shares in the Federal Reserve System. They comprise an interlocking, international banking cartel to which American taxpayers gave $115 billion in 1982, and will give an even greater sum in fiscal 1983 as interest on the national debt. Contrary to the generally held opinion that the Federal Reserve System is a U.S. Government agency, a Federal Circuit Court has recently ruled that the twelve Federal Reserve Banks are private corporations. The Ninth Circuit Court, in "Lewis vs. United States," handed down that ruling more than four months ago, but not a peep concerning the ruling has been made by the printed or electronic media. The actual ruling is a lengthy document, but here are a few key quotations:

"Examining the organization and functions of the Federal Reserve Banks, and applying the relevant factors, we conclude that the Reserve Banks are not federal instrumentalities for purposes of the FTCA, but are independent, privately owned and locally controlled corporations. ¶ Each Federal Reserve Bank is a separate corporation owned by commercial banks in its region. The stockholding commercial banks elect two thirds of each Bank's nine member board of directors. The remaining three directors are appointed by the Federal Reserve Board. The Federal Reserve Board regulates the Reserve Banks, but direct supervision and control of each bank is exercised by its board of directors. The directors enact by-laws regulating the manner of conducting general bank business, and appoint officers to implement and supervise daily Bank activities. These activities include collecting and clearing checks, making advances to private bank commercial entities, holding reserves for member banks, discounting the notes of member banks, and buying and selling securities on the open market. ¶ Each bank is statutorially empowered to conduct these activities without day to day direction from the federal government. Thus, for example, the interest rates on advances to member banks, individuals, partnerships, and corporations are set by each Reserve Bank and their decisions regarding the purchase and sale of securities are likewise independently made. ¶ It is evident from the legislative history of the Federal Reserve Act that Congress did not intend to give the federal government direction over the daily operation of the Reserve Banks...¶ The fact that the Federal Reserve Board regulates the Reserve Banks does not make them federal agencies under the Act." (Unquote).

Just as we were writing that last paragraph, word came that Paul Volcker, head of the Fed, had just told the President, in effect, that the federal budget must be trimmed some more, or else he's going to raise interest rates again. And he can do it, because he's head of the Fed. And that will leave the President in more of a quandary because there are certain things that he simply can't cut out of the budget, and cutting down on the red-ink deficit seems just as impossible. However, as the third year of his term was just beginning, the President appeared in the White House press room to tell the assembled reporters that we are entering "a season of hope," even if economic recovery still proves elusive. At about the same time, a Harris poll announced that the President's popularity is slipping, that people don't seem to trust him any more, and that he shouldn't seek re-election. And those hardline conservatives who are chiefly responsible for getting him elected, seem to be feeling the same way. Over the weekend they were to meet in Dallas to "discuss complaints against the administration and perhaps lay some groundwork for challenging President Reagan if he seeks re-election in 1984." Howard Phillips, chairman of the Conservative Caucus, said, "We've either got to fish or cut bait." Whatever that really meant, fundraiser Richard Viguerie seemed to agree. And Clymer Wright, who was Reagan's campaign finance chairman in 1980, had written a letter to the President telling him he'd better fire White House staff chief James Baker III, or suffer total loss of conservative support. The President didn't like what Clymer said, and told him so. Which indicates that Reagan has joined the Eastern Establishment side of that divided camp in the Administration. The right-wingers who went to Washington with Reagan are outnumbered and outpowered by the Eastern Establishment appointees that now seem to run things as David and Paul decree. President Reagan also seems to have fallen in line, else how could he have nominated Margaret Heckler to become head of the multi-billion dollar Health and Human Services Department? Not because the former representative is a woman, but because she is a professional feminist who has been against Reagan policies from the very beginning. She has embraced every cause promoted by the women's liberation crowd, with one exception: she doesn't think the federal government should pay for abortions. Said "Human Events": "Beyond Heckler's activities on behalf of the ERA, the national women's conference and other feminist causes, she has consistently taken stands in entitlements spending while simultaneously backing large cuts in defense - positions she will have to completely disavow if she is now suddenly to take the lead in shaping Reagan's policies at Health and Human Services."

In summary: The Eastern Establishment seems to have conquered the Presidency, the Congress is in its power, the Welfarists its army, and its unreal money the power it needs to control us all. If we are to restore our Republic, our first task is to kill the Fed and give back to Congress the Constitutional power to "coin money (and) regulate the value thereof." A tidal surge is beginning. Eight States have introduced resolutions demanding an end to the Fed. Let's keep that tide rolling through the rest of the States.

Year Thirty Number Four January 28, 1983

TO TOUCH ALL BASES

He said George Washington's was the first, delivered in 1790, and his would be the 196th State of the Union message to be delivered to Congress. He said, "The state of our Union is strong, but our economy is troubled. . . . We have a long way to go, but . . . America is on the mend." He enumerated all the stitches and patches which, in his opinion as President, must be made before that mending is completed. But first, he took time to praise Senate Majority Leader Howard Baker and House Speaker Tip O'Neill "for a job well done" in completing a workable plan that would mean "the integrity of the Social Security system will be preserved - and no one's payments will be reduced." But neither will they receive cost-of-living increases if the plan is adopted. He seemed careful to quote Franklin Delano Roosevelt who once told a rubber-stamp Congress that there is "a need for leadership that looks forward, not backward." Later he would quote Bernard Baruch, who once remarked that "America has never forgotten the nobler things that brought her into being and that light her path." One might wonder why a Republican President would take the trouble to quote the rather irrelevant words of a New Deal President and an International financier.

Getting down to the serious business of telling the Congress and the people (and the Soviet Ambassador to the United States, who was so often spotlighted by the TV cameras) what must be done to complete the "mending" of the United States, President Reagan first spoke of the economic situation, citing four recommended measures which should be taken:

- 1) A Federal spending freeze. This included a six-month freeze on all cost-of-living adjustments to be applied to Social Security and other Government-related retirement programs; and a one-year freeze on "a broad range of domestic spending programs, and for Federal civilian and military pay and pensions programs (which wouldn't include the pay raise Congressmen voted for themselves last December).
- 2) Measures to "control the uncontrollable" spending programs, such as food stamps.
- 3) $55 billion in defense savings over the next five years, which he assured his listeners would not endanger our defense program.
- 4) A threatened stand-by tax surcharge "limited to no more than 1 percent of the gross national product to start in fiscal 1986. This would mean a tax on your income tax payments; a tax on a tax. Said the President of these measures: "I realize that this four-part plan is easier to describe than it will be to enact."

Then the President referred to the unemployment problem. "Short-term help and long-term hope," coupled to a proposed new "Employment Act of 1983" and "new Incentives for summer youth employment to help young people get a start in the job market." These items were not spelled out.

Next, on to the subject of education, with nary a mention of that original promise to get rid of the Department of Education. Instead, a four-goal proposal:

- 1) Block grants to the States for "upgrading of math and science instruction". No mention of the other two of the "three r's."
- 2) Establishment of education savings accounts. No explanation was given on how this would work or what was really meant.
- 3) Passage of tuition tax credits for parents who want to send their children to private or religious affiliated schools. In previous Reports we have shown how that would add to the desired governmental "education monopoly" which would make all schools, private, religious or otherwise, subject to government control.

4) A Constitutional amendment to permit voluntary school prayer.

In the President's 45-minute State of the Union address, there were the expected references to women's right, civil rights, fair housing laws, reform of criminal justice statutes, all-out war on big-time organized crime and the drug racketeers, more crop-swap and a promise of individual aid to farmers in debt, another comprehensive federalism program, a commitment to keep America "the technological leader of the world now and into the 21st century," and more of the safer promises that might even be kept. But then came what we view as a distinct sell-out to his mentors, the agents of the Eastern Establishment, when he said "Let us turn briefly to the international arena." Peace with freedom is the slogan as we are to pursue the "commitment of the United States to developing the infrastructure of democracy throughout the world." And "since our own economic well-being is inextricably linked to the world economy . . . we will continue to work closely with the industrial democracies of Europe and Japan (the Trilateral Commission countries), and with the International Monetary Fund (which is to become the Central Bank of the World) to ensure it has adequate resources to help bring the world economy back to strong, noninflationary growth." In this connection, on January 18th Treasury Secretary Donald Regan and Fed chairman Paul Volcker met in Paris with the finance ministers and Central Bank representatives of the ten leading nations of the IMF. There they agreed, according to UPI, "to almost triple the funds available to ease national debts." They discussed the Mexican bailout, the Brazilian bailout which is progressing as was expected, the rollovers of Poland and Romania, and the plight of a number of third world and communist world governments that are about to be prevented from declaring bankruptcy. It has not been recognized, or publicized, that there was a Soviet bailout as well, together with a Reagan surrender to the Eastern Establishment, when the Soviet gas pipeline project was approved by President Reagan. We like the way Globescan explained it:

"In essence the famous Soviet gas pipeline project is a vast foreign-aid program whereby Western banks make low-interest loans to a hostile power. They are lending the Soviets the required capital at interest rates far below what they charge Western businessmen. Why? First of all, to allow the Soviets to tap far-off Siberian gas and distribute most of it to Russia's industrial centers. Secondly, to provide the Soviets with cash with which to purchase the high technology items they themselves cannot produce, but which are essential if the USSR is to continue to function as a viable created enemy of the West. Soviet Russia - and now China as well - are supported and used by the International Establishment, the world elitist money-creators, for several purposes:

- 1) To serve as a captive consumer. To purchase, with loan money and subsidies, the goods produced by Establishment industries in the West.
- 2) To eliminate resource-rich Russia as a world competitor in the supply of industrial goods and food. This is assured by the continuance of non-productive, poverty-producing Socialism.
- 3) To provide resources and manufactured goods at below world-market prices produced by actual slave labor and by subjugated and subdued Russian and Chinese people.
- 4) To serve as an enemy of the West. To frighten Western people into continually supporting various International Establishment profit plans. These may be for military spending to 'defend America' and the 'free world,' for loans to socialist nations to keep them from 'going communist,' and for 'aid to the Third World' (the poverty-producing industry), or for the New International Economic Order plan to 'stabilize prices' - actually to control all world resources and food.

"West Europeans will not benefit from Siberian gas any more than they have benefited from membership in the European Community. The only beneficiaries in the West will be the Internationalists whose profit-producing pipeline brings nearer the day when they hope to acquire total control over the world's energy resources and the world's people. ¶ There is no shortage of gas in Western Europe. The gas shortage is in Russia. Only in Britain's North Sea has any serious attempt been made to extract gas on a large scale. And Europe has vast reserves of gas and coal that make it totally unnecessary to depend on imported natural gas. The envisaged plan for the pipeline to supply 52,000 million cubic yards of gas per year (which has already been reduced) would represent only 4 percent of Europe's foreseeable consumption and will become even more marginal as the West discovers new gasfields, develops existing ones, and perfects new methods for converting coal into gas. But gas is needed in Russia. ¶ Without the distribution of natural gas by the new Western financed and designed pipeline network, Russia's industrial production would remain stagnant - unable to produce quantities of cheap goods to be bought and sold in the West by the internationalists. So the fact that Western Europe has no need for additional supplies of gas is not important to the international schemers. . . . ¶ The pipeline will, however, certainly create 'employment' in Russia. It will 'employ' countless thousands of Soviet political prisoners, South Vietnamese internees, and large numbers of Poles, East Germans and Ukrainians who are forced to work on the pipeline in appalling permafrost conditions in Siberia, and in the inhospitable Carpathian mountains. (Globescan + Futurewatch + Spearhead, London).

As we reported previously, Armand Hammer, whose fortune was made by serving the Soviets since the time of his friend Lenin, has joined the team by proposing to use American equipment and technology to build a coal-slurry pipeline from Siberia to Moscow. According to the Wall Street Journal, Hammer's project is to be undertaken jointly with Bechtel Corporation and "would involve a pipeline at least as large as the Soviet European natural-gas pipeline." The President of Bechtel was, until named U.S. Secretary of State, George Pratt Shultz (Pratt for Pratt House which is the headquarters of the New York based Council on Foreign Relations).

But, to return to our analysis of President Reagan's State of the Union address: After his implied kowtowing to the International Establishment by way of IMF and the development of "the infrastructure of democracy throughout the world," The President then spent some time discussing arms and nuclear weapons control, reduction and deployment. Nothing new was said. He finished by praising the people of the United States for their neighborliness, adding that "The challenge for us in Government is to be worthy of them - to make Government a help, not a hindrance to our people in the challenging days ahead. . . ."

So much for Ronald Reagan's "Touch All Bases" diagnosis of the State of our Union and his prescription for mending it economically, socially, fiscally and politically. If the media are correct, nobody with public voice agreed with him. Liberals and conservatives, adversaries and friends, all are said to have panned him. Howard Baker, whom Reagan had gone beyond the call of duty to praise, called it a "real donnybrook." Tip O'Neill, also receiving unusual public plaudit, "couldn't conceive of a freeze on domestic spending, would fight to repeal this year's 10 percent tax cut, would also fight to cause further reductions in defense spending, etc. Democrats in general said Reagan's diagnosis was "insensitive to America's needy." A coalition of State and local governments declared it will fight the proposed domestic spending cuts. The National Governors Association announced it was drafting its own budget guidelines to help the federal government cut deficits in defense spending, this so the governors could get more handouts from the federal trough. The Congressional Black Caucus "accused Reagan of rhetoric on domestic programs." All of the affiliated Terrible 1313 organizations, a sort of domestic arm of the CFR, issued a statement declaring they will not tolerate domestic spending cuts. And so forth, all of them fulfilling the prediction made by a Roman senator some 2,000 years ago that, once the people found they could vote themselves money from the Treasury, they would wreck the country, as Greece, Rome, Britain, and now the United States have been or are being wrecked.

But President Reagan, to make matters even worse, choosing to emphasize his statement that we would continue to lead the world technologically, went to Boston where college and university technological training is highlighted through M.I.T., etc., and there, after hoisting a few mugs of beer at a men's bar, made the statement that taxing corporations was unjust. That immediately raised a storm of disapproval from everybody that hadn't already lambasted him because of his State of the Union diagnosis and prescription. In this one thing at least, Reagan was right. Because corporations do not pay income taxes. They just act as collecting agents for the IRS. They, legitimately, add the tax amount to the sales price of the products or services to their customers, consumers and clients. But Mr. Reagan had chosen the wrong time and the wrong place to make any such statement without adequate explanation. So now he's kicked himself because he said it three times.

But, enough of President Reagan's State of our Union; what about the state of our President? For, barring the unexpected, he will be our President for another two years. Well, we called his address a "touch all bases" effort. It was as though he was smarting from the discouraging effects of the public polls and wanted to regain his lost popularity, which would mean votes if he runs again. Or, perhaps somebody higher than he was giving him some very bad advice in order to make him look very foolish and bad as a leader. Which, we may never know, whether Reagan fell for the idea or was pushed. In any case, to placate the liberals, socialists, fabians and fascists, he took occasion to quote a rather irrelevant remark made by FDR. To assuage the banking and brokering crowd, and perhaps the Zionists as well, he cited another platitudinous comment by Baruch, calling him a very wise man. To placate the women libbers, he spoke strongly in favor of equality, this after having made a special deal out of naming two women, one of them a confirmed feminist, to two vacated Cabinet Department secretaryships. To please the blacks he had made those special trips to that school in Chicago where young black children were receiving particular training. As appeasement to the hard-line conservatives, he had fired Eugene Rostow, head of the U.S. Arms and Disarmament Agency, a communist sympathizer who should never have been hired by Jimmy Carter and who should have been fired by Ronald Reagan two years ago, except that he was a prominent member of the upper echelon of the Council on Foreign Relations. President Reagan also gave a gift to Moral Majority supporters when he spoke out for prayer in public schools. And so on, and on, touching all bases, as he seemed to be trying for a home run to the White House in 1984 - unless that higher-up was egging him on for reasons best known to the elitist cabal. Regardless of who or why, as one of our valued correspondents has written: "He (Reagan) has now been pretty much absorbed by the elitist Council on Foreign Relations and Trilateral Commission hierarchy personified by the George Bush, George Shultz and David Rockefeller followers." This has estranged him from those that backed him in the beginning. One after another, his conservative associates in the White House and in Congress have left him, leaving him surrounded by the manipulators and representatives from the CFR and TLC. Senators Helms, Humphrey, East, Nickles, Garn, Hatch and Representatives Paul, Gramm, Crane, Craig, Hansen, Kemp and others have in one way or another tried to keep Reagan to the promises he made while campaigning. But Reagan has been trying to compromise and vacillate and act the mugwump, and it's too late for that. Come to think of it, that goes for all of us. As Howard Phillips of the Conservative Caucus said, "We've either got to fish or cut bait."

Year Thirty Number Five February 4, 1983

COMMUNISM BY ANY OTHER NAME

As calendar leaves were being turned to display the month of February, 1983, certain world leaders were very busy, and certain important things were happening. Vice President George Bush was in Europe, trying to sell the leaders of the Trilateral Commission controlled countries on the wisdom of the American government's plan of selection and placement of nuclear weapons in Western Europe, Secretary of State George Shultz was in Peking, trying to appease the despots of that country who, in turn, were complaining about American-South Korean military maneuvers and the sale of arms to Taiwan, and who also were busily playing the USSR against the USA for political, military and territorial gain. President Reagan was in St. Louis trying to convince businessmen that the re-opening of a Chrysler plant was like unto the burgeoning of an economic seedling that had been underground but now was "pushing up through the recession with its attending unemployment." Yuri Andropov was in Moscow declaring that he would have nothing to do with Reagan's latest proposals in regard to nuclear weapons and their proposed elimination, placement or replacement. Andropov also issued orders for Soviet citizens to stop forming lines in front of stores seeking food and clothing, when they ought to be enjoying the "right to work" privileges promised them by the Soviet Constitution. Back home again, Congressmen were busy tearing up or down the budget proposals submitted by the Administration. Welfare Stater Alan Cranston called for an end to "the incredibly dangerous arms race" as he formally entered the 1984 presidential race. One truck driver had been killed and 27 people injured as the Independent truckers strike began to take effect. Floods in the West, blizzards and freezing weather in the Northern and Middle States, 26 tornadoes in one day in Florida, killing two people, at least 17 deaths due to weather in other States, injuring scores, rendering hundreds homeless. In contrast to the awful weather in the United States, and in the United Kingdom also, a Russian reporter in Moscow boasted of "April-like," spring weather in Russia, the warmest winter he had ever experienced in the USSR. This announcement leading this reporter to question whether the weather was man-made, due to the Soviet development of the theories of Tesla, We have written before of the potentialities of a weather war. Are we experiencing further tests by the Soviets in regard to use of weather as a weapon?

But the weather, whether man-made or act of God, is merely a complement to the dangerous economic situation in which we find our country today. Much of this is due to policies of the federal government that have been pursued ever since the end of World War Two. And there has been no improvement in the 1980s. Only greater danger has occurred since the alleged beginnings of what has been called Reaganomics. Why has Reagan failed? The noted libertarian, free economy professor, Murray Rothbard, has given an understandable answer. In an exclusive interview conducted by Cynthia V. Ward appearing in the 2/2/83 issue of The Review of the News, he said in part:

"Reaganomics was originally a coalition of four schools of economic opinion: traditional Free Market capitalism, so-called supply-side economics, monetarism, and Conservative Keynesianism. During the 1980 campaign Reagan preached the Conservative line, calling for a drastic cut in Government spending, deregulation of the economy, slashing of taxes, a balanced Budget, and a gold standard. This rhetoric did not survive the election; not one of these promises has been carried out by the Reagan Administration. Reagan also betrayed the supply-siders, who called for large cuts in the income tax to stimulate business recovery and expansion.

. . . The program he put in place has tremendously increased taxes, giving us the largest tax hike in history. Of course the Budget has also gone way up, as have deficits. In fact, the whole Reagan campaign was a monstrous hoax by which Reagan and his top aides used Conservative and supply-side rhetoric to get elected, then handed the power over fiscal policy to the Conservative Keynesians, and control over monetary policy to the Friedlanite monetarists. . . . The Friedmanites favor a steady supply of counterfeit Federal Reserve notes as the best method of controlling inflation and preventing recession. . . . What should government do to get the economy back on its feet? One top priority should be to reverse the inflationary expectations. . . . I would call for an immediate return to the gold standard, abolishing the Fed altogether. . . . The real danger is that people will see the collapse of the Reagan program as a failure of capitalism. It is therefore crucially important for Conservatives and other individualists to break with the Reagan Administration hard and fast. Otherwise, believe me, we'll all go down with it ." (Unquote).

A serious defect of the Reagan Administration that has seldom been pointed out: it has been trying to operate a Socialist Welfare State within the form of a Free Market Constitutional Republic. The two just don't go together, as Lenin understood long before the International Bankers arranged and financed him and his Bolshevik comrades to a train ride through Germany in sealed coaches into Leningrad where he was able to uproot Kerensky and set up a Communist empire, which has had to be supported ever since by capitalist countries, to keep it alive and healthy and a threat to those same capitalist countries.

Which creates our second most dangerous problem. While helping to support the world's largest military establishment for the USSR, we must at the same time spend billions to build up a comparable defense system for our own country. It is part of the plans of the International Establishment that the USSR must serve as a threat to the West, that we should walk in fear of nuclear destruction. This makes it possible for the International Establishment to control us, and make us willing to support its plans for developing the New International Economic Order. As for the USSR, it is evident that the Soviet rulers do not want an all out nuclear war. But they do want the power to fight and win such a war if it should develop or be ordered. So, we must watch our government try to operate a Welfare State within the form of a Free Enterprise Constitutional Republic, while at the same time spending billions it doesn't have for a defense system to use against a potential enemy which it rightfully fears.

In this connection, it should be noted that the USSR uses its military only when countries bordering the Russian Empire are involved. Hungary and Afghanistan are examples. In all other conflicts it uses surrogate troops, Cubans, East Germans, native revolutionaries, etc. As for the conquest of the United States, there is little desire on the part of the Communist leaders or the International Establishment clique to use military means. That would destroy America's industrial establishment, and they don't want to destroy it, just take it over. Thus, in its campaigns against the United States, and against other countries not adjacent to the USSR, a strategy of "patient gradualism" has been developed. During and after World War Two, the Communists infiltrated and attempted to take over the government of the United States through communist cells within our State Department, the administrative agencies, etc. This plan was exposed and at least slowed down through the patriotic efforts of such men as Senator Joe McCarthy, whose name is anathema to every Communist, Fabian and liberal because of his partial success in exposing the plot.

After that exposure, in the late 1940s and early 1950s the Communist leaders resorted to a new plan, which has been very successful. In his "Intelligence Advisor," Don McAlvany explained the Communist plan, that "Their goal is to conquer the world, but do it so gradually that the West barely notices the trend. Using this strategy, almost half the population of the world has fallen under Communist domination just since World War II (i.e. Eastern Europe, China, North Korea, Cuba, South East Asia, Angola, Mozambique, Ethiopia, South Yemen, Afghanistan, Nicaragua – with Central America, Mexico, and a dozen other countries on schedule for the next 2-3 years. Most Americans have never discerned the seemingly isolated revolutions in these various countries as a well coordinated, long-term global strategy." (The McAlvany Intelligence Advisor, P.O.Box 39870, Phoenix, Arizona 85069).

In the 1950s the Communists also adopted a "well coordinated, long-term" strategy for "communizing" the United States "without firing a shot if that were possible." They laid down 45 goals for undermining America and "communizing" the country. These goals were reprinted in 1958 by Dr. Cleon Skousen in his book, "The Naked Communist." It should be remarked that these goals, while supposedly laid down by the Communist hierarchy, are almost identical with the goals laid down by the Humanists in their campaign to make their secular religion the religion of the United States, where Man would sit "in the temple of God, shewing himself that he is God." (2nd Thessalonians 2:4).

Following are those 45 goals, with parenthetical remarks by this reporter to bring them up-to-date. Please note that most of these goals have already been accomplished.

1. U.S. acceptance of coexistence (now called detente, with its accompanying policy of Mutual Assured Destruction, or MAD) as the only alternative to atomic war.
2. U.S. willingness to capitulate in preference to engaging in atomic war (better red than dead).
3. Develop the illusion that total disarmament by the United States would be a demonstration of moral strength (unilateral disarmament).
4. Permit free trade between all nations regardless of Communist affiliation and regardless of whether or not items could be used for war.
5. Extension of long-term loans to Russia and Soviet Satellites.
6. Provide American aid to all nations regardless of Communist domination.
7. Grant recognition of Red China. Admit Red China to the UN.
8. Set up East and West Germany as separate states in spite of Khrushchev's promise in 1955 to settle the Germany question by free elections under supervision of the UN.
9. Prolong the conferences to ban atomic tests because the U.S. has agreed to suspend tests as long as negotiations are in progress.
10. Allow all Soviet Satellites individual representation in the UN (also in the IMF).
11. Promote the UN as the only hope for mankind. If its charter is rewritten, demand that it be set up as a one-world government with its own independent armed forces.
12. Resist any attempt to outlaw the Communist Party.
13. Do away with loyalty oaths.
14. Continue giving Russia access to the U.S. Patent Office.
15. Capture one or both of the political parties in the United States.
16. Use technical decisions of the courts to weaken basic American institutions by claiming their activities violate civil rights.
17. Get control of schools. Use them as transmission belts for socialism and current Communist propaganda. Soften the curriculum. Get control of teachers' associations. Put the party line in textbooks.
18. Gain control of all student newspapers.
19. Use student riots to foment public protests against programs or organizations which are under Communist attack.
20. Infiltrate the press. Get control of book-review assignments, editorial writing, and policy-making positions.
21. Gain control of key positions in radio, TV and motion pictures.

22. Continue discrediting American culture by degrading all forms of expression. (An American Communist cell was told to "eliminate all good sculpture from parks and buildings, substitute shapeless, awkward and meaningless forms.")
23. Control art critics and directors of art museums. "Our plan is to promote ugliness, repulsive, meaningless art."
24. Eliminate all laws governing obscenity by calling them "censorship" and a violation of free speech and free press.
25. Break down cultural standards of morality by promoting pornography and obscenity in books, magazines, motion pictures, radio and TV.
26. Present homosexuality, degeneracy and promiscuity as "normal, natural, and healthy."
27. Infiltrate the churches and replace revealed religion with "social" religion. Discredit the Bible and emphasize the need for intellectual maturity which does not need a "religious crutch."
28. Eliminate prayer or any phase of religious expression in the schools on the ground that it violates the principle of "separation of church and state."
29. Discredit the American Constitution by calling it inadequate, old-fashioned, out of step with modern needs, a hindrance to cooperation between nations on a world-wide scale.
30. Discredit the American founding fathers. Present them as selfish aristocrats who had no concern for the "common man."
31. Belittle all forms of American culture and discourage the teaching of American history on the ground that it was only a minor part of "the big picture." Give more emphasis to Russian history since the Communists took over.
32. Support any socialist movement to give centralized control over any part of the culture - education, social agencies, welfare programs, mental health clinics, etc.
33. Eliminate all laws or procedures which interfere with the operation of the Communist apparatus.
34. Eliminate the House Committee on Un-American Activities.
35. Discredit and eventually dismantle the FBI.
36. Infiltrate and gain control of more unions.
37. Infiltrate and gain control of big business.
38. Transfer some of the powers of arrest from the police to social agencies. Treat all behavioral problems as psychiatric disorders which no one but psychiatrists can understand or treat.
39. Dominate the psychiatric profession and use mental health laws as a means of gaining coercive control over those who oppose Communist goals.
40. Discredit the family as an institution. Encourage promiscuity and easy divorce.
41. Emphasize the need to raise children away from the negative influence of parents. Attribute prejudices, mental blocks and retarding of children to suppressive influence of parents.
42. Create the impression that violence and insurrection are legitimate aspects of the American tradition; that students and special-interest groups should rise up and use "united force" to solve economic, political or social problems.
43. Overthrow all dictatorships (a communist name for colonial governments) before native populations are ready for self-government.
44. Internationalize the Panama Canal.
45. Repeal the Connally Reservation so the U.S. cannot prevent the World Court from seizing jurisdiction over domestic problems. Give the World Court jurisdiction over nations and individuals alike.

THE CURSE OF JUDICIAL TYRANNY

"We have allowed the enemy to turn our Constitutional Republic into a Corporate State," said our cynical friend. "And in that Corporate State, the International Bankers have become the Board Members, the Eastern Establishment Executives have become the Directors, Lawyers have become Department, District and Regional Managers, and Judges have become the Legislators and Rule Makers." To justify his statement regarding Judges, he cited a few of the better known edicts handed down by those eight men and one woman who Professor William Forrester, former dean of Cornell Law School, has referred to as the "Legiscourt." They have ruled that females must be allowed to compete with males in athletics. They halted the construction of a dam to preserve an alleged endangered species of fish. They have banned school dress codes, blocked the suspension of students, taken over the operation of schools in Boston and of prisons in Alabama. They have told cities how they must run their governments and elect their officials. They have forced busing for racial balance on whole communities, even when Congress had rejected it. They have legalized the murder of unborn infants. They have decreed that the father has no jurisdiction over the life or death of his unborn child. They told one city (Parma, Ohio) that it must provide 300 units of low-income housing every year, regardless of whether all of them will be occupied. They have ordered the scrapping of files of those who have been engaged in un-American activities. Through their Miranda and similar decisions they have made police efforts to maintain law and order difficult and sometimes impossible. They have freed or ordered new trials for convicted murderers, rapists and arsonists. They have decided that the Constitution says what they say it says regardless of what it actually says. And so on, and on, and on.

Because they have taken upon themselves the power of making laws and ruling people, determining how they should live and be governed, defining their social customs, managing their educational facilities, etc., they find themselves swamped in their courts with cases in which they should have had no part. In a newspaper column Aaron Epstein recently asked: "Was the religious freedom of Orthodox Jewish basketball players threatened by an Illinois ruling banning skull caps during high school games because they fall off and cause injuries?" The question made it to the Supreme Court. We haven't heard how the Court may have decided. There was another question: "Did the city of Philadelphia violate the constitutional rights of two bands by limiting the number of participants in the annual Mummers Parade in order to complete the event during safe daylight hours?" This case also made it to the Supreme Court. Another case mentioned in the papers: A couple said they had reserved seats in the first-class smoking section of a New Orleans-to-Philadelphia flight, but a flight lieutenant "brusquely" directed them to a non-smoking section. This allegedly caused "extreme embarrassment, humiliation and emotional distress." So much so that the couple sued the airline. The case was dismissed in the lower courts, but finally made it anyway to the Supreme Court. Yet another case: The inmate of a Nebraska prison ordered $23.50 worth of hobby material. The parcel was lost and never delivered. So the prisoner charged that the prison officials' negligence had deprived him of his property without due process of law in violation of his rights under the 14th Amendment. On this case the Supreme Court solicited lengthy briefs, heard oral arguments and issued six separate opinions. The inmate lost the case.

In His Sermon on the Mount Jesus advised that one should "Agree with thine adversary quickly . . . lest at any time the adversary deliver thee to the officer, and thou be cast in prison." St. Paul warned the Corinthians about going to law. And throughout most of Western history since that time people have shied away from taking civil cases to court. Until this century, that is. Nowadays it has become common practice for a person to sue another person, or a corporation or a company, or the government. Certain types of lawyers openly advertise in the media, advising that if you are hurt, humiliated, embarrassed, or cheated, then see the advertising lawyer. He'll make an arrangement to split the profits. So, courts are loaded down with trivia, many such trivial cases finding their way into the onetime justice-dispensing presence of the highest court in the land. U.S.A. Today says: "The problem is a litigious society. It's easy to file suits. The country's 617,000 lawyers filed 12 million cases last year. And there were 211,964 civil and 17,671 criminal cases pending in federal district courts Sept. 30. Lawyers thrill to the trumpeting call of 'taking it all the way to the Supreme Court.' And the courts have taken on social as well as legal issues." Thus, trivia is added to the tragedy of commuted death penalties, and to the tyranny of "legiscourt" lawmaking. So much so that Supreme Court Chief Justice Burger has taken his case to the American Bar Association in convention assembled, pleading for the creation of a new kind of "shadow court" which would relieve the High Court's work load. Said Justice Burger in an interview in U.S. News:

"I have decided to be very provocative on this issue of the Supreme Court's work-load. The previous messages (to Congress) do not seem to have been heard. I am going to risk having a lot of people throw harpoons - perhaps saying I am proposing the destruction of the great majesty of the Supreme Court or something of that sort. The more discussion we have, the better it will be. But I'm going to do whatever is necessary to get the attention of Congress and the bar and start the debate over what should be done. Because something must be done, or the Supreme Court will have no choice but to handle more and more cases without oral argument. That could lead to a decline in the quality of justice. It could lead to production-line justice, and that would be very unfortunate for the country."

Methinks the Chief Justice is talking like a Saturday-night quarterback. The decline in quality began to set in when Eisenhower's friendly rival Warren Burger headed the Court and Justice added a qualifying adjective to its name and came to be known as Social Justice. And this has led to what is referred to as "judicial supremacy", but which really amounts to judicial tyranny. Because the Bill of Rights which once meant "thou shalt not" to the national government now has been applied to State and local governments as well, the State Courts have also become infected with trivia, tragedy and tyranny. Take the case concerning the Faith Baptist Church of Louisville, Nebraska and its pastor, Everett Slevin, who was jailed last September 3rd. His crime: He operated a school in his church. An October 18th sequence to that action was recorded in Temple Times of October 31st, by Robert McCurry. Here is a part of his lengthy report:

"History will record Monday, October 18, 1982, as one of the darkest and most frightening days in the annals of religious freedom in America. At 6:09 a.m. Cass County Sheriff Fred Tesch, accompanied by 5 deputies and 12 Nebraska State Patrol troopers, entered the Faith Baptist Church in Louisville, Nebraska, during a prayer meeting and dragged 85 people from the building as they knelt between the pews in prayer and worship. Ejected worshippers were dropped on the sidewalk and lawn. Many of the ejected worshippers were visiting pastors. ¶ As the last worshipper was dragged from the building 30 minutes later, chains and padlocks were placed on the doors, and armed guards were stationed inside the building to prevent worshippers from re-entering. . . . Once the building had been secured, the officers simply drove away in the 15 cruisers that they arrived in, leaving a few armed officers inside to guard the building. ¶ Do not such things as this happen only in communist countries? It couldn't happen in America? It certainly should not happen in America. But, alas! It did! I was there. I, too, was jerked up from my knees as I prayed and was dragged outside. ¶The pre-dawn raid by armed police on the prayer meeting at Faith Baptist Church has a chilling similarity to what the Germans called Kristallnacht – the night of glass – the night that Hitler's secret police smashed the windows of the homes and businesses of those considered enemies of the Nazi regime. This was the time that the German people learned to say 'yes' to totalitarianism. ¶ What is happening to religious freedom in America is not a novelty conceived by some ignorant, misguided, and over-zealous bureaucrats, judges, and politicians. America has simply been invaded by a Soviet type of 'religious freedom.' In the USSR, the church is separated from the state, and the school from the church.' (Article 52 of the Soviet Constitution). 'Our state (Russia) adheres to the principle of freedom of conscience in the direct and fullest sense of the word. In this country people are never persecuted for their beliefs. When action is brought against believers it is never on the grounds of their beliefs. It is always because they have broken the law.' (Valdimir Kuroyedon, chairman of the Council for Religious Affairs under the USSR Council of Ministers). (Emphasis added.)

"The picture should be clear to all. The Soviets say that the school (educational ministry) is separate from the church, thus under control of the state. The Soviets say that a person has 'freedom of conscience' and beliefs. It is only when they 'break the law' – that is, exercise their beliefs – that they are prosecuted.¶ This is the identical position taken by the State of Nebraska. But this mentality is not limited to the Soviet Union and the State of Nebraska. It is rampant across America. Wake up, preachers! Wake up, Christians. Wake up, America! What the government can do to one preacher and church they can – and eventually will – do to every preacher and church in America!" (Unquote).

In diametric opposition to this communist doublespeak, our Republic was founded on moral laws that were acknowledged by the Founding Fathers to be unchanging, and emanating from an immutable and eternal Godhead. This was best expressed in the Declaration of Independence: "We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men . . . are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights. . . . That to secure these rights, governments are instituted among men." (Emphasis added.) But our National Courts, especially since the Warren Court, have exercised a major role in the Nation's shift from Biblically-centered law and morality to the humanistic and/or communistic values which now have permeated our society. Congressman Robert K. Dornan, co-author of the book "Judicial Supremacy: the Supreme Court on Trial," noted the shift: "The Court began gradually . . . to assert judicial supremacy by means of an activist, policy-making posture. And the reason for this fundamental change in outlook is to be found in an ominous revolution in the philosophy of jurisprudence from one of natural law and natural rights to a philosophy based on pragmatism and legal positivism." Pragmatism is the belief that whatever works is right, that there are no absolute truths or fixed moral norms. And legal positivism accepts no law above man-made law. In other words, both pragmatism and legal positivism reject God. In a very real sense, the Supreme Court infers that its law, on whatever subject, is the highest possible law. In other words, Bible and Constitution to the contrary notwithstanding, the positively unconstitutional Supreme Court law is greater than the law of God or the Constitution! Irving Kaufman, chief judge of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit, said it in these words: "...the Court's power is not temporal. It rests on . . . 'the cult of the robe,' the concept of the judge as high priest of justice with talents for elucidation of the law, that sacred and mysterious text that is inscrutable even to the educated layman, that forms a sort of educational charisma which is bestowed on judges with their oath of office." Webster defines "cult" as "(1) a particular ritual or system of worship, or (2) devotion to a person, thing, idea, theory, or the like." Senator Ted Kennedy, at the time chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, echoed this sentiment: "Surely few offices in our government are as secure and powerful as judges. Federal judges enjoy lifetime tenure. They hold the power not only to check Federal authority but to influence State and local governments, business enterprises, and individual conduct. They literally hold sway over the life, liberty, and property of every person in the country."

Is this tremendous power authorized by the Constitution? The Founding Fathers have answered this question. Thomas Jefferson feared that in the hands of the Supreme Court the Constitution could become a "mere thing of wax." James Madison who is recognized as the father of the Constitution, said that the principal of judicial supremacy "was never intended and can never be proper." Four score and three years later Abraham Lincoln warned in his first inaugural address that "If the policy of the government, upon vital questions affecting the whole people, is to be irrevocably fixed by decisions of the Supreme Court . . . the people will have ceased to be their own rulers, having to that extent practically resigned their government into the hands of that eminent tribunal."

"The Constitution, on this hypothesis," wrote Thomas Jefferson in 1819, "is a mere thing of wax in the hands of the judiciary, which they may twist and shape into any form they please." And because such warnings have been ignored by this and preceding generations, our judiciary has become a destroyer of the very Constitution which caused its creation and prescribed its duties, and which its members have sworn to uphold and defend. "How long," asks Professor Raoul Berger (a different Berger than Warren), "can public respect for the Court (as well as all courts) on which its power ultimately depends, survive if the people become aware that the tribunal which condemns the acts of others as unconstitutional is itself acting unconstitutionally?"

We, the people, have no direct power over national judges, short of physical punishment, which would be considered unconstitutional. Because federal judges are appointed for life, not elected or subject to the people. But we do have a Congress which is elected by the people, is supposed to be subject to the people, and has the power and the duty to do something about this national injustice. In a strongly worded brochure distributed by Pro-Family Forum, P.O.Box 8907, Fort Worth, Texas 76112, there is this declaration:

National rule by bench and bar is not working; it was never intended to work. "We the people" - through our elected officials - have never decided that millions of society's most innocent and helpless members (the unborn) should sacrifice their lives simply for someone else's convenience! "We the people" (of all races) have never endorsed forbidding children to attend neighborhood schools simply because of the color of their skin! Most citizens abhor this type of racism. "We the people" - through our elected officials - have already ruled that to send our nation's women to fight our wars is unthinkable! Has our right to self-government been literally wrested from us by a legislating federal judiciary? Will justices continue to control and bind their definition of morality and social justice upon all society as "the law of the land"?

Congressmen and the President take an oath ("So help me God") to uphold the Constitution, not the Supreme Court! We must demand that they reclaim their power and duty, and resolve this issue before we have lost our Republic forever, and have become just another totalitarian state within a new world order.

Year Thirty Number Seven February 18, 1983

"TO TEACH ALL NATIONS . . ."

There is a favorite poem of our childhood which begins, "I shot an arrow into the air. It fell to earth I knew not where." In our Report of June 11, 1982, we figuratively shot a reportorial arrow into the airmail and copies of it fell into newsletter offices in several countries. The report had to do with Armand Hammer giving millions of dollars toward the establishment of a United World College for the Americas in Montezuma, New Mexico. Later, as a follow-up to the report, on October 15th, we headlined our Report: "Comrade Armand Hammer Hosts a Royal Reception, Dedicates a World College, Plans a Soviet Pipeline." Then, on November 5th, we added to the previous reports by noting that Averell Harriman had emulated Armand Hammer by donating over $11 million to a Russian Studies Research Institute at Columbia University. Among those newsletters commenting on the reports was Candour, a British Views-Letter that was "founded by A.K.Chesterton in 1953 to defend National Sovereignty against the menace of International Finance." Rosine De Bouneville, its editor, felt her readers would be interested because England's Mountbattens were and are involved in the building of these World Colleges. In fact, the Prince of Wales had suggested to his late uncle that Armand Hammer was the proper man to approach for the funding of an American school of this type. So, in its current, February, 1983, issue of Candour, Editor Rosine's lead article was titled, "Action On Academy." The following is quoted from that article.

There can be no doubt about the absolute priority given by would-be leaders of society to the establishment and maintenance of institutes dedicated to a process of indoctrination of the young euphemistically called education. Only a few weeks ago Don Bell Reports commented upon the rivalry in "educational" investment between those seemingly indestructible internationalists Harriman and Hammer. We quote: "Could it be that Averell Harriman, monopoly capitalist and elder statesman to the liberal Democrats, didn't want to be outdone by monopoly capitalist and Comrade to the Kremlin Politburo, Armand Hammer? Hammer contributed $4 million to date to establish the Armand Hammer United World College for the American West." [The same that our very own Mountbattens, uncle and nephew, were and are so heavily involved in-Ed.] "So Averell Harriman has matched and even exceeded Hammer's contribution to the cause of the creation of future leaders of the New World Order. The 91-year-old friend of the Fabians has given $11.5 million to Columbia University's Russian Studies Research Institute. This is the institute that was headed for years by Zbigniew Brzezinski until he was called by the Trilateral Commission to become President Carter's National Security Adviser." As Don Bell says, "it would be asinine to believe that Harriman would donate $11.5 million just so a few scholars could study the Russian language." He goes on to describe the banking-Communist-internationalist back-and-foregrounds of the Harrimans and Hammers along with the rest of "Our Crowd" whose dubiously begotten billions have financed the perversion of youth on a world scale.

Even such a comparatively short study of the trends of history and current events shows that the necessary imperative, "Go and teach all nations," is being successfully implemented by the forces of subversion, in precise ratio to the degree of abandonment by liberal spokesmen of the Church's divinely ordered role, in favor of sychophantic deference to heresies and opinions propounded by revolutionaries of every hue from rose madder to chrome yellow. From play-school onwards our youth us being conditioned to tolerate subversion. Even the nursery is not safe if its resident mentors are themselves products of such "toleration ethics." Initially no more than toleration is needed. . . . That all this is no news to us is, alas, all too true, but its very obviousness seems to have bred a disastrous tolerance of its own even among the alert. We have heard the fire alarm but we still hang about in the burning building waiting for someone to come and help us save some personal treasure, quite forgetting that arsonists do not usually telephone the fire brigade." (End of quotation from Candour, Candour Publishing Co., Forest House, Liss Forest, England.)

Our reportorial airmail arrow concerning Hammer's contribution toward the creation of an American based World College for the training of future world leaders, was also quoted in part by Globescan, a bi-monthly newsletter with editorial offices in Paris and Geneva, and which "selects, decodes and summarizes important international news and finance." On the subject of training world leaders, Globescan offered the following commentary:

"It's important to differentiate between schools that educate and schools that indoctrinate. . . . Schools that educate . . . graduate people who are capable of helping humanity by their creativity, discoveries, and organizational abilities. They produce the kind of people who could become great public servants and representatives of the people - not leaders. Most world problems come about because people search for leaders to solve their personal problems. Hitler was such a leader; Fuhrer means leader. Mussolini was another leader. Both were elected and acclaimed by the people. Roosevelt was another leader; and the American people felt he was sent to earth to lead them out of the Depression. Instead, he led them into war. Then there are self-appointed leaders; the Stalins, Brezhnevs and the Maos. And there are the agent provocateurs, the financed leaders like Lenin and Trotsky, and lately, Castro and the African Marxist leaders. And, of course, there are the democratically elected socialist leaders in Europe who are given a mandate by election to establish a national plan, and direct the economy and the lives of everyone in the nation..." (Also quoted in Futurewatch, a book published by Globescan, which deals with "Your Freedom and Wealth Versus The International Establishment." Can be purchased from Globescan's Subscription Center, Suite 102, 1545 New York Avenue N.E., Washington, D.C. 20002. Price $19.95.)

There was a time in these United States when leaders were respected and followed, because they honored and followed the One Leader Who is over all. Not because the followers or the leaders were necessarily Christians; but because they recognized the truth that all law, both revealed and natural, must emanate from the One Author, if there is to be any justice under law. As the greatly respected jurist, William Blackstone, said: "Upon these two foundations, the law of nature and the law of revelation (to be found only in the Holy Scriptures) depend all human laws; that is to say, no human laws should be suffered to contradict these. Yet undoubtedly the revealed law is of infinitely more authenticity than that moral system, which is framed by ethical writers, and denominated the natural law." In the past, our most respected leaders have understood this, as did Abraham Lincoln and George Washington, whose birthdays we celebrate in this month of February.

But the ink was hardly dry on the pages of our Constitution when false leaders began to arise, and people began to follow them. Until nowadays, people rely upon false teachers, liars, deceivers, ill-informed mental infants for their guidance. Movie and TV stars and their producers have become leaders. One example: An organization calling itself "People for the American Way" set up offices in Austin, Texas. Its purpose, to promote sex education in schools, and to "stop textbook censorship" of books that should rightfully be banned from schools, even government schools. The founder of this pornography-protecting organization is Norman Lear, who was the leading producer of such TV sitcoms as "Mary Hartman, Mary Hartman," "Maude," "All in the Family," etc. In these productions he observed no rules of censorship. Now he wants to eliminate all censorship of school textbooks, so sex and pornography can fill their pages as it filled his TV productions. Why set up his headquarters in Texas? Because that State has a Christian American textbook reviewing group that has kept Texas textbooks cleaner than most. If he can break up the book adoption process that has worked so well in Texas, school boards in other States will buy the books that are no longer banned. Hence, Lear locates in Austin.

It should be understood that these false leaders are not necessarily associated with people like Norman Lear. Many pose, and are accepted by millions, as Christian leaders. A pertinent example: In the current Newsweek, under its heading "Periscope," there is this item: "The National Council of Churches, under heavy attack by conservative religious and political organizations for its alleged support of left-wing causes, now faces another challenge that ultimately may undercut its authority. Some leading Protestant churchmen believe that the NCC is no longer adequate to encompass the burgeoning movement for Christian unity; they want a new ecumenical body that would include not only the main-line Protestant and Orthodox churches, but the Roman Catholic Church and conservative evangelicals as well. About 40 heads of Protestant denominations will meet with the president of the National Conference of Catholic Bishops and evangelist Billy Graham in a two-day, closed-door session in Minneapolis next month to hear a proposal for such an organization."

Christian Americans have known for years that the NCC was Communist-infiltrated and oriented. Dr. C. Gregg Singer, theologian and historian, wrote in his book, "The Unholy Alliance" that "There can be no reasonable doubt about the communist orientation of the older Federal Council and the National Council. The dominant liberal leadership of these two groups unhesitatingly sponsored and joined . . . nearly every communist front that appeared on the American scene." There have been many well documented exposures of the communist and left-wing activities of the NCC. Recently, however, and for reasons not revealed, CBS and UPI have broken a fifty-year silence and told the truth about the NCC and its parent organization, the WCC. TV correspondent Morris Safer, in the network's top-rated "60 Seconds" reported that the supposedly Christian organizations "lean toward Karl Marx when it comes to giving certain financial support." He said a percentage of each week's offering (from membership churches) . . . may be given to revolutionary groups which may use the money to purchase weapons. Among recipients Safer mentioned was the government of Vietnam which was given $2 million by the WCC to buy heavy equipment and materials for so-called "New Economic Zones," which are actually forced labor camps operated by the Communists. UPI added that "A portion of the money that American church-goers put into collection plates each week is used to finance leftist revolutions in several areas of the world."

At about the same time CBS and UPI were exposing the communist activities of the NCC and WCC, Readers Digest came out with an attack on the American Ecumenical Movement which is supported by 32 mainline Protestant and Orthodox denominations, and is sponsored by the NCC. The January 1983 issue of the magazine charges that the New York based National Council of Churches supports revolution instead of religion, criticizes anti-communist governments, and supports communist causes. As would be expected, NCC denied all the charges levelled by CBS, UPI and the Readers Digest. United Methodist Bishop James Armstrong, president of NCC insists that "Although some people seem to see nearly any compassionate gesture as a political statement, the National Council of Churches acts not from a political but from a solidly biblical motivation. . . . By the out-of-context use of highly selective rather than representative examples of the National Council's work, the Readers Digest has put a political interpretation on actions which are taken out of genuine Christian conviction." However, the NCC's actions belie the NCC president's words.

In his plans for preparing to take over a country, Lenin is reported to have said: "It will be found that powerful organizations of noncommunists can be created for this purpose." In this connection, we are immediately reminded of the work that has been done by two powerful organizations, the National Council of Churches (NCC) and the National Education Association (NEA). In the training of selected students in special schools for future positions in the governing of The New World Order; in the pollution of schools, public and private wherever possible, so that the masses of the future can be guided and controlled; in gaining control over so many churches and religious organizations for the purpose of substituting socialism and humanism for free enterprise and Christianity; these have been some of the principal goals of the NCC and the NEA. As early as 1972, Catherine Barrett, then president of NEA, said: "We are the biggest potential striking force in this country, and we are determined to control the direction of education." After Jimmy Carter's creation of the NEA-controlled Cabinet-level Department of Education, and Ronald Reagan's refusal to do away with the Department as he had promised, it seemed that Catherine Barrett's dream had become reality. But in one area things had not progressed quite as hoped: The separation of children from their homes and parents from earliest childhood and their compulsory training in government-supported nurseries and care centers - this had not been accomplished in the United States, as it had been in the Soviet Union. And this is where the NCC has decided to take a hand and aid the NEA. As reported by Newsweek, the NCC had been publicly exposed for its communist connections, and now "faces another challenge" in the possible loss of its control over the Ecumenical Movement, with Billy Graham being suggested as the new head of this "church unity" drive. Nevertheless, the NCC has gone ahead with yet another scheme. It will take charge of the creation and control of "ecumenical child care centers" to be located in or operated by the churches affiliated with the NCC.

We have a copy of the NCC's "Ecumenical Child Care Center Newsletter," Volume I, Number I, Winter 1982. The lead editorial explains how "nearly 90,000 local parishes" had been contacted and questionnaires given out. As a result, and we quote: "Today we are initiating the Ecumenical Child Care Newsletter which will be sent quarterly to nearly 15,000 of you who were identified by our questionnaire. . . . We hope that we can become a true network of church related child care providers. Our programs serve a variety of racial, and ethnic groups, as well as varying economic classes. . . . We have much potential to look forward to, as we inaugurate the ecumenical child care network. . . . Next year we face grave challenges and unless we work together to change national priorities and curb runaway military spending, deeper cuts in child care and essential programs . . . will occur. If we as child advocates do not encourage debate and action about the moral choices before the nation, the trade off between investing for children and spending for war, who will?"

If the children be our Nation's last hope, can the plunge downward into moral and spiritual anarchy be stopped before America slips over the precipice into oblivion? The answer comes clearly: We can but pledge our lives, our fortunes, and our sacred honor.

STORM CLOUDS GATHERING

". . . matters were becoming infinitely worse in the United States. The League (of States under the Articles of Confederation—Ed.) appeared to be on the verge of dissolution. The idea of forming two or three distinct confederacies took possession of the public mind. The people of Western North Carolina revolted and a new State called Frankland, formed by the insurgents, lasted several months. A portion of Southwestern Virginia sympathized in the movement. Insurrections against the authorities of Pennsylvania appeared in the Wyoming Valley. A convention at Portland discussed the propriety of making the Territory of Maine an independent State. An armed mob surrounded the New Hampshire Legislature and demanded a remission of taxes. In Massachusetts, Captain Daniel Shays led a formidable insurrection, which caused the calling out of several thousand militia under General Lincoln to suppress it. There was resistance to taxation everywhere. It was caused by the hard necessities of the people. Debt weighed down all classes; and the burden of the tax-gatherer was often the 'feather that would break the camel's back'." (From "Our Country, a Household History of the United States," Vol. Two, by Benson J. Lossing, LL.D., copyright, 1877).

"In the years following the Revolutionary War the Massachusetts legislature, dominated by Boston's mercantile and financial interests, refused to aid the debt-burdened farmers of western Massachusetts, and the young republic saw one of the first of many clashes between debtors and creditors. The farmers complained of high and inequitable taxes . . . This resulted in court-ordered sales of hundreds of farms to pay off debts or delinquent taxes. Since the dispossessed farmers lacked property qualifications for voting and hence could not use the ballot to effect changes, they began taking direct action. Armed insurgents closed the court in Northampton and in other towns to prevent further judgments against debtors. Gov. James Baldwin responded by sending militia to protect the court at Springfield, but the rebels, led by former Revolutionary War officer Daniel Shays, overawed the militia and forced the court to adjourn. Shays next raised about 1200 men at Worcester and marched back to Springfield to seize the Federal arsenal. They were pursued by another force commanded by Gen. Benjamin Lincoln, who scattered them in a surprise attack on Feb. 4, 1787, taking many prisoners. Shays fled to Vermont, but the revolution was not without effect. A new legislature, elected in the spring, reduced taxes and gave some relief to debtors. The uprising also swept the intractable Baldwin from office, and Shays and other insurgent leaders were pardoned by Gov. John Hancock ." (From The Reader's Digest "Family Encyclopedia of American History," copyright, 1975).

"The rebellion influenced Massachusetts's ratification of the Federal Constitution." (From "The New Columbia Encyclopedia," Fourth Edition, 1975).

'Patriots' Seek Income-Tax Revolution

By Michael Browning

"To understand the American Patriots Association, you have to speak the language. Taxpayers are 'sheeple,' short for sheeplike people. Bureaucrats are 'bureau-rats.' Internal Revenue Service agents are 'tyrants and despots.' Dollar bills are 'Ferns,' which stands for Federal Reserve Notes (FRNS). 'Ferns' aren't worth a plug nickel. 'That stuff in your pocket is worthless,' says Jerry Booher, one of the recruiters for the Patriots. . . . As April 15 approaches, the subject of income taxes gets sorer. These are the good weeks for the Patriots, the time of year when people are most apt to listen, the time to recruit new members. . . . The Patriots believe the income tax is unconstitutional. They believe in investing in precious metals and buying survival food with a shelf life of 25 years, to tide one over during the coming economic collapse. They believe that to fill out a 1040 form is to forfeit your rights guaranteed by the Fifth Amendment.

"What they (the 'Patriots') are marketing is civil disobedience in the eyes of most people, and a crime in the eyes of the IRS. With each succeeding year a small but growing number of so-called 'protest returns' are filed in the United States. In 1981 there were 28,000 of them. An IRS spokesman in Washington, Larry Batdorf, would only say that the current yearly total of protest returns is running between 6,000 and 40,000, out of a total of 95 million returns. A 'protest return' is a tax return left blank and mailed back to the IRS. . . . Batdorf said he did not know how many organized anti-income tax groups there are in the U.S."

Farm Group Torn by Two Philosophies

By Tom Miller

On one side of the feisty American Agriculture Movement are tough-talking farmers - like Ed Stoops - who fall just short of advocating the overthrow of government and terrorism to solve farmers' problems. 'It's not going to be too long before the Mississippi will be red with blood,' he said this week as he paced the floor of the cramped office in Puxico, Mo., that serves as the group's state headquarters.

"On the other side of the small but potent farm group are more moderate people - like Wayne Cryts - who believes the best solutions to the farmers' economic problems are through lobbying, court action and legislation. 'There's a thin line between protest and terrorism . . . I would hope they don't cross that line,' Mr. Cryts said.

"The first shots have now been fired," said Mr. Stoops, referring to the shooting of two federal marshalls in North Dakota earlier this week. 'That shooting's not the worst thing that ever happened, either. Maybe that'll make the feds a little nervous, a little apprehensive.' That kind of inflammatory talk, being heard more and more within the movement, is the predicament that the group's more moderate leaders face. Though the group maintains a Washington office and has members who buttonhole senators and representatives about farm votes, it also has members who admit to taking potshots at trucks during the recent independent truckers strike, who want a nationwide strike by everyone, and who have learned how to make pipe bombs. . . . George Foster, one of the more vocal and letter-writing members of the Puxico group, is quick with his opinions of the politicians and their ties to the Triilateral Commission, a favorite whipping boy of the right wing . . . is one of the more outspoken movement members who believe that a vague conspiracy of David Rockefeller, the Federal Reserve and the monetary system are all purposely plotting to put the farmer out of business. 'When David Rockefeller-types own the farms, they'll charge you $5 a loaf for bread, and you won't have any choice but to pay it,' he said. But that kind of talk begs the question: What will these farmers do to achieve their aims? 'We're faced with two ways to go,' Jack Turner, a member of the movement, said. 'One, we can let every farm in the country go under or we can keep raising hell until we get their attention. Nobody pays any attention to anything until it starts hurting their belly or their pocketbook.' Mr. Foster talked as many do - in seemingly veiled threats - saying: 'It's not clear what we will do, but the Americans weren't real sure what they'd do when they took on the British 200 years ago'."

In The Kansas City Star, February 17, 1983:

Confrontations a Way of Life for Militant Posse Comitatus Members

By The Associated Press

"Posse Comitatus is more than a tax-revolt group. It is a rural band of armed survivalists who fight all manner of state and federal authority, preaching 'power to the people.' . . . Posse membership numbers are not known but leaders claim to have chapters in every state except Hawaii, with up to 2,000 members in 13 Wisconsin counties. James P. Wickstrom, about 40, of Tigerton, Wis., calls himself 'the national director of counter-insurgency of the Posses of America.' On his answering machine the Vietnam veteran urges callers to leave a name and address 'so that the posse may contact and inform you concerning your safety and welfare and the safety of your family.' . . . Posse Comitatus - which means power of the county - claims legitimacy from English common law that authorized the sheriffs to seek assistance from the citizenry. In the American West the sheriff summoned posses to chase wrongdoers. . . . It takes the name from the law of 'posse comitatus,' enacted in 1878 after federal troops had been used to enforce unpopular laws and install Yankee officials in the vanquished South. When Southerners returned to Congress, one of the first things they sought was the law, (of posse comitatus) which banned military enforcement of civil laws.

"Mr. Wickstrom and other posse members in Wisconsin have had numerous legal and armed confrontations with authorities."

Paramilitary Instruction Under Fire

By John Petterson
Topeka Correspondent

"Topeka - Kansas and Missouri are among the latest additions to a growing list of states where legislation either has been passed or is being considered to curtail paramilitary training that could lead to civil disorder. But at least one opponent says that such measures could rob the paramilitary groups of certain constitutional rights. The Anti-Defamation League in New York and its regional officers are the guiding forces behind a model bill aimed at curbing the groups in various states. Ruti Teitel, an attorney in the league's national civil rights division, said Monday that the model bill has been enacted in six states since 1981 - California, Connecticut, North Carolina, Florida, Rhode Island and Pennsylvania. The bill now is before the Kansas, Missouri and Nebraska legislatures. Basically the measure is designed to give law enforcement officials a way to combat citizen groups that may be learning military tactics. . . . Rep. Robert Frey, a Republican from Liberal (Kansas), is the lone sponsor of the Anti-Defamation League's bill in Kansas. . . . Attorney General Robert t. Stephan has pinpointed . . . Western Kansas as the home of a group called Posse Comitatus, which means law of the county. 'It's going to be difficult to prove that this military training is to be used in regard to civil disturbances, but you just have to make every effort to put public focus on that activity,' the attorney general said. He noted that last spring there was 'one military training weekend' near Weskan . . . and 'we certainly need to be armed with some kind of law that shows disapproval of this type of activity by our State Legislature.'

"But Leonard Cox, on whose land the training was held, said in a telephone interview that Mr. Frey's bill represents an invasion of his constitutional rights. 'I wonder if the press would stand up and holler 'criminal government' if, by chance, a bill were introduced to restrict or limit the First Amendment,' he said." (His reference is to the Second Amendment which declares that "A well regulated militia being necessary to the security of a free State, the right of the people to keep and bear arms shall not be infringed").

In the preceding three pages of this Report we have offered no comment; unless the title and the selection of quotations from history books and articles appearing in the controlled press can be construed as editorial comment. The articles should provide sufficient evidence to prove that citizens across the Nation are becoming aroused and aware of what's happening to them. So much so that the communications media have found it necessary to acknowledge this. As Peggy Poor says in The Upright Ostrich, "Upright citizens have been striking back on so broad a scale that space does not permit a full account." Then she refers to the attack on independent farmers: "During the 1920's, even before the bankster-planned Great Depression, the first Communist cell in the U.S. Government was in the Department of Agriculture. The first targets of Babylonian takeover were independent farmers and small rural community banks. History is now repeating itself . . . Having achieved despotic power over Money and Energy, they are now rapidly acquiring the ultimate squeeze that will reduce us all to serfdom in a new dark age . . . control over food." It was Lenin who observed that "Grain is the currency of currencies." We might paraphrase the Word of the Lord and remark that those who know Him not do live by bread alone, and they attempt to secure control over Money and Energy in order to attain control over food. This is the crux of the independent farmers' problem, and our problem as well.

We have referred to a similar time in history, still remembered because of the Shaws Rebellion. There is an earlier historical parallel. When the Puritans landed at Plymouth Rock, they must have thought prayerfully of the "faith chapter" in Paul's Epistle to the Hebrews: ". . . they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth. For they that say such things declare plainly that they seek a country. And truly, if they had been mindful of that country from whence they came out, they might have had opportunity to have returned. But now they desire a better country, that is, an heavenly: wherefore God is not ashamed to be called their God: for he hath prepared for them a city" ((Hebrews 11: 13-16).

At first, these Pilgrims found themselves subjects of monopoly, or communism (the terms are very similar): shared wealth to be dispensed according to their need by a central government. And there was general want and suffering. Governor Bradford defied his London sponsors. As the historian Edward Eggleston described the events:

"After two years of labor in common had brought the colony more than once to the verge of ruin, Bradford had the courage and wisdom to cut the knot he could not untie. . . He divided the ancient Indian field . . . among the several families in proportion to their number, leaving every household to shift for itself or suffer want. 'Any general want or suffering hath not been among them since to this day,' he wrote years afterward. The assignment was a revolutionary stroke, but Bradford saw that it was a life-and-death necessity to be rid of the pernicious system, even at the cost of cutting off all support from England" (from Verna Hall's "The Christian History of the Constitution of the United States").

Like the Pilgrims of 1623 and the Patriots of 1776 and 1787, we have a government which has, in reality, absolute power. Such a state is the spawning ground for revolution. Two old adages apply: "The government which governs least governs best," and "Absolute power corrupts absolutely." But ours is a history of overcoming such power and corruption. And it can be done again if we as a people have the spiritual motivation which impelled the Pilgrims of 1623 and the Patriots of 1776 and 1787.

Year Thirty Number Nine March 4, 1983

COLD WAR COALITION WITH COMMUNISTS OR HOT WAR REPETITION OF VIETNAM?

The month called March, outdoing the legendary lion to which it is likened, roared onto America's West Coast, already drenched with a deluging downpour of water from clouds of possibly controversial man-made origin. The earth literally quaked upon the arrival of the metaphoric feline, whose tail twisted with tornadic violence. But there were signs that the roaring lion would not go out like the proverbial lamb. Rather, it might take upon itself the character of the war god Mars for which it was named. ¶ As March arrived there were serious queries as to whether the Pope would be wearing a bullet-proof robe as he made his pre-Easter pilgrimage through the terror-ridden countries of Central America. And, as he prepared for his departure from Rome, a green light was given the communications media, which immediately began writing and talking about how another Vietnamese-like confrontation may be about to occur, this time in our back yard, in a little country called El Salvador.

Under the headline "Politics Will Permeate Pope's 'Pastoral' Trip," the London Observer noted that "A bitterly divided and apprehensive Roman Catholic Church awaits Pope John Paul II when he begins his historic tour of Central America today (March 2). Although the Vatican has described the visit as 'entirely pastoral,' the expectations it has aroused are almost entirely political. Only in Belize, Costa Rica and Panama will the pope find a church at peace. In El Salvador, the church is trying to preach reconciliation in the midst of a civil war that has cost almost 40,000 lives in three years. . . . Elsewhere, the church is also embroiled in ugly fights. . . . In Nicaragua, the church marched with the Sandanistas to topple the dictatorship of General Anastasio Somoza Debayle in 1979. . . Five priests still hold positions in the (communist) Nicaraguan government. So incensed has the pope been by their refusal to resign that at one point he threatened to leave Nicaragua out of his itinerary. Under a compromise reached last week, the five will be out of the country. . . "

But the spotlight is on El Salvador, and this crisis has been years in the making. Regardless of what the media may say, and what the State Department may claim or deny, Don McAlvany's Intelligence Adviser is essentially correct when it says "Central American policies (are) essentially unchanged from Carter - in spite of the rhetoric, the Reagan State Department has changed its policy very little. The U.S. is continuing to pressure El Salvador, Guatemala, and Honduras (each fighting for their lives against communist guerrillas) on 'human rights violations'." The present situation began being planned this way from the time the Panama Canal was forfeited so Panama could be supplied with the funds needed to repay the interest on loans to 32 international banks with Eastern elitist ties. This according to Antony Sutton of The Phoenix Letter, who adds that the same thing has been happening in El Salvador "as the powerful bankers and their co-conspirators in the media once again mount an all-out assault to sacrifice that nation on the altar of communism. Why? They believe that only a stable communist regime there would be able to avert default on El Salvador's massive loans - a default that would cost Eastern bankers millions." ("The Phoenix Letter," Box 39850, Phoenix AZ 85069).

The editors of Futurewatch comment: "Except for natural catastrophes and true accidents, all crises are created. They are acts of man, engineered for profit. The technique is ancient, documented down through millenia - induce fear, create a yearning for peace, offer security in the form of a pre-planned solution, then consolidate power and wealth in the hands of the crisis-maker." This crisis-creation in the case of El Salvador has been slow and deliberate, and well camouflaged. President Reagan has been permitted, even encouraged, to continue his conservative rhetoric. But his administration has been pursuing domestic, fiscal, foreign and defense policies that often are even more liberal than Jimmy Carter's. As McAlvany states, "When Reagan made his 'detente' with David Rockefeller in 1980, 'the handwriting was on the wall.' The same liberal Eastern Establishment which dominated the Carter, Ford, Nixon, and Johnson administrations, is now dominating the Reagan administration." In the handling of the El Salvadoran situation, U.S. News observes that "For two years the United States has held to a two-pronged strategy in its effort to reduce Cuban and Russian influence in Central America. The first goal was to remove the possibility of a Communist victory in El Salvador. This was to be done by currently curtailing the flow of Communist arms through Nicaragua to the guerrillas and by making the Salvadoran Army strong enough to deny the Marxists any hope of military victory. Negotiations with the insurgents were flatly ruled out. The second was to weaken the Sandinista regime in Nicaragua. That was to be done by arming neighborhood countries like Honduras and supporting anti-Communist exile forces raiding Nicaragua from Honduras." So much for the rhetoric. To strengthen the apparent anti-Communist policy, the Reagan administration was also allowed to give some economic and military aid to El Salvador; but always after an alleged survey showing that "human rights" had been improving in the country. Also, to lay the groundwork for a possible Vietnam-like development, some 35 U.S. "advisors" were sent into El Salvador, "unarmed and defenseless." During the past two years some $781 million in economic and military aid has been given El Salvador, and just as the Pope was preparing his visit to Central America, Reagan asked for another $60 million in military aid. Echoing the President's request was Thomas Enders, assistant secretary of state for inter-American affairs, who told Congressional representatives that "we are facing a genuine emergency," that the Salvadoran Army would run out of ammunition in 20 or 30 days, and "there is never a good time to run out of ammunition," he added.

But, even as the Reagan administration seemed to be aiding the anti-Communist government of El Salvador, came rumors that we were about to insist upon "negotiations" with the Communist rebels, and create a coalition government, which would almost immediately be controlled by the Communists. On February 28th Globescan observed that "U.S. diplomats are busily denying the move afoot in the State Department to open talks on 'power-sharing' with the leftist guerrillas in El Salvador. American Ambassador to the United Nations Jeane J. Kirkpatrick, passing through El Salvador in mid-February, said opposition to such negotiations 'constitutes the official position of the U.S. government.' Secretary of State George Shultz says the same, but adds that the administration favors a 'reconciliation' approach, by which Leftist murderers would agree to accept the procedures laid down by the government. Expect talks to begin soon." U.S. News seems to agree, reports that "doubt is expressed about Reagan's willingness to stick to his policies. Some wellinformed diplomats claim that Washington is prepared to make a deal with the Sandinista regime in Nicaragua under which the U.S. would halt its campaign against Nicaragua's regime if the Sandinistas ceased aiding the guerrillas in El Salvador. Political leaders among the guerrillas are confident that the U.S. eventually will be forced to negotiate with them. Behind this optimism: a conviction that the rebels are winning the war."

So, with media cameramen travelling with the guerrillas, ignoring the Salvadoran Army, photographing rebel exploits and "good deeds," with correspondents in the boondocks with the rebels constantly extolling the leftists and leftist causes, one is reminded of similar "news" reporting and editorializing by the media regarding China in the 1940s, Cuba in the 1950s, Vietnam in the 1960, Nicaragua in the 1970s; and now El Salvador and possibly the rest of Central America in the 1980s. And so, as in other decades, there is much talk of a negotiated settlement, one which – as Chiang Kai Shek knew when General George Marshall proposed such a settlement between his forces and those of Mao Tse Tung – would mean a complete Communist takeover without firing a shot (until after the takeover was completed, at which time the anti-Communists and nationalists would be rounded up for gulag residence or out-right extermination). At the very beginning of any formal conferences regarding negotiation and coalition, that same old Cuban, Vietnam, Nicaraguan syndrome would be manifested. There would be a disintegration of morale and discipline within the Salvadoran armed forces. Military leaders and government officials would bail out to safe havens in Miami or elsewhere. Enlisted men would shed their uniforms, try to flee into Guatemala or Honduras, or proclaim fidelity to the guerrillas. And nobody could blame them after what happened to National Guardsmen in Nicaragua four years ago. And United States credibility in the other countries of Central America, after what had happened to Cuba, Nicaragua, and then El Salvador, would be reduced to zero and an open door to Communist conquest would make the Caribbean truly a Red Sea. Such a development would be quite acceptable to what Tom Anderson labels "the one-worlding organizations such as the council on Foreign Relations and the Trilateral Commission, the multinational corporations and international bankers who are dedicated not to their country but to getting the world into their own little hot hands." As David Rockefeller has stated, and as Armand Hammer has proved so conclusively, the International Establishment finds no difficulty in dealing with Communist governments. Some time ago, when asked why his Chase Manhattan Bank was lending so much money to Russia and Eastern Europe, and had established a branch of his bank on Red Square, David Rockefeller replied: "There is greater continuity of government in Socialist states than in non-Socialist states." So, dealing with a Communized Central America would be acceptable and profitable.

However, although a negotiated settlement would be acceptable, it seems likely that the money monopolists of the world would prefer a settlement by armed conflict in this particular case. There are several reasons. First, with Britain and some other countries reducing oil prices and with OPEC on the verge of disintegration, that phony oil shortage of 1979 is backfiring and any drop in oil prices is good for people but bad for international bankers. Their chickens that laid golden eggs for them then are coming home to roost now, non-productive but still demanding feed. No matter how the money monopolists have safeguarded themselves through federal legislation and otherwise, bank failures, threatened defaults by third world and communist satellites, all have a deleterious effect on international bankers. And the way to solve any such problem is to create a war, preferably a limited, contained war on a peninsula like Korea or Vietnam-Laos-Cambodia, or an isthmus like the countries of Central America.

Secondly, there is great unemployment, industry is stalled, foodlines are forming. Military draft and war-equipment production is the quickest and historically proven way of solving such situations that are conducive to undesired unrest among the masses. And international bankers, munitions-makers, and goods suppliers have no objections to the profits they make from wars (so long as their plants are protected from bombing and sabotage, as in World War II in Germany where General Motors, General Electric, Ford and others were cooperating with Krupps and other multinational industries.)

Thirdly, sometimes there are unusual coincidences, planned or otherwise, which seem to "give the show away" and act as a "sign of the times." One such coincidence may be important at this time. We have in our possession a true photo copy of a rather rare document. It is the copy of a public law passed by the United States Congress on November 21, 1941 – just seventeen days before the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor! We quote that document, in full:

[Public Law 298 - 77th Congress]
[Chapter 477 - 1st Session]
[H.R. 588]

An Act to authorize an appropriation for the purpose of establishing a national cemetery at Honolulu, Territory of Hawaii.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $50,000, to establish a national cemetery at Honolulu, Territory of Hawaii: Provided, That a suitable location for such a cemetery acceptable to the War Department, shall be made available without cost to the United States Government.

Approved, November 21, 1941.

Now for the coincidence: In a recent issue of USA TODAY, the comparatively new "National Daily," there appeared the following story, by Carolyn Pesca of that paper. Again, we quote:

If War Hits USA's Shores, Rooms Ready For Wounded

Civilian hospitals across the USA have guaranteed use of 56,015 beds in case of war. ¶ The government is developing programs to teach doctors how to treat war wounded. A symposium will be held this summer in Monterey, Calif., for 500 doctors and nurses. ¶ Other preparations are under way: In Houston, officials of the Veterans Administration Hospital are meeting with the city's Metro transportation system - which would provide bus service for victims. ¶ In Milwaukee, at Columbia Hospital a simulated arrival of war wounded is being planned for April 28. ¶ The Pentagon's goal of 50,000 beds has been exceeded - but not without resistance. Nationwide, 695 of the 1,310 hospitals asked to volunteer bed space did so. Some hospitals refused, saying it was condoning nuclear war.

CONCLUSION. El Salvador is the next victim of the "domino" syndrome that has worked so effectively for the Monopoly Capitalist-International Communist Consortium in Southeast Asia and now is working in Central America and the Caribbean. Whether the present victim will succumb to coalition with or conquest by the Communists is uncertain. The Consortium Chieftains will decide. But Socialism is the inevitable goal, because the money manipulators want it that way. And Socialism, or Communism if you prefer the term, isn't headquartered in Moscow. Marx was a German-Jew, Engels was an English Capitalist. The Third World governments learned their Socialism from the British Fabians. The Socialist European Community came about through funding of U.S. Occupation Money and Marshall Plan funds. Chinese Communism is the result of the CFR-controlled Institute of Pacific Relations which controlled the State Department. Western bankers financed the conquest of Russia, Eastern Europe and Northern Asia. And that same Capitalist-Communist-Consortium will use El Salvador as is best for its own purposes. The real weapon: the existing monopoly control over money creation. Our enemy is in our midst.

THE THIRD WORLD SUMMITS

There is this motley company of countries that call themselves nonaligned nations. They pridefully but falsely adopt the term "nonaligned" because this fosters the fiction that they are aligned with neither the Communist East nor the Socialist West; therefore when given the opportunity, their rulers can play one Superpower against the other Superpower for their own personal political gain. These 101 nation-states are of all sizes, complexions and densities, are also called the Third World. As such they are very definitely aligned within that modern Tower of Babel known as the United Nations. They are aligned with the Communists, have gained control of the General Assembly, where they can well serve the purpose of promoting the New International Economic Order, and other segments of the piecemeal formulation of the New World Order. Also, when economic and industrial matters are considered, to distinguish it from the allegedly Free Enterprise West and the Slave Economy East, this Third World is sometimes called "The South." As such they are non-developed or developing countries that are being exploited at the expense of the citizens of "The North" for the profit of the omni-directional International Establishment Elite which seeks to control the world's resources and thus own its wealth.

During this calendar week the rulers and/or officials of these nonaligned nations, allas the Third World, also known as the Developing South, have been holding a seventh summit meeting in New Delhi, India. According to on-the-spot reports, 99 of the 101 member nations were represented. Those missing were Kampuchea (Cambodia) and St. Lucia. Cambodia wasn't represented because they couldn't decide who should represent that victim of Communist-inspired genocide. 60 percent of the speakers at the summit wanted to give Cambodia's seat to the "Democratic Kampuchea" coalition of resistance forces led by Prince Norodom Sihanouk, which represents the country at the UN. The other 40 percent wanted to give the seat to the government in Phnom Penh led by Heng Samrin. They couldn't agree, so nobody sits for Cambodia. Why St. Lucia failed to attend the summit was not reported. Of the 99 nation-states that did attend, 69 of them were represented by heads of state or government, the rest by foreign ministers. The UN Secretary General, Javier Perez de Cuellar, was the most honored guest. Many non-member countries sent high-level observers who could speak but couldn't vote. Three U.S. ambassadors (not named in our reports) were present. And there was this interesting sidelight: Because the countries were seated alphabetically (Latin alphabet), warring Iran and Iraq were seated side-by-side. Iran's Khomeini was too feeble to travel even if he wanted to, and Iraq's President Saddam Hussein refused to attend under such seating arrangements. Consequently, their foreign ministers had to suffer each other's proximity.

Nicholas Hanks sent the following report to USA TODAY, which appeared in that newspaper's March 9th Issue. "New Delhi, India - 'You won't believe our last two weeks,' said Lt. Sarat Singh, the Indian army bandmaster responsible for providing music to the kings, princes, emirs, presidents and prime ministers visiting India this week for the non-aligned summit. 'To learn all the national anthems isn't, as you say, whistling Dixie.' he said. But as the last notes from his band's rendition of the Laotian anthem ended, he said with a proud waggle of his head, 'Almost all national anthems I have taught my boys.' Preparations for hosting the nonaligned movement's seventh summit meeting began six months ago. Never before had India - nor any other government - tried to accomodate so many heads of state at a single time. . . . Hindu-dominated India holds the cow as a sacred beast, and the religion prohibits eating beef. Many of the guests are from Moslem dominated countries where eating pork is forbidden. . . . 'We will serve lobster thermidor, smoked salmon and caviar,' (executive chef) Fernandez said. Hindu and Moslem rules against the consumption of alcohol however, were ignored. . . . White-washed grass mats block the visitors' view of squalid tent slums that proliferate on Delhi's outskirts and suburbs. Soldiers encourage destitute residents to stay behind the barriers. A different picture prevails in the troubled northeast state of Assam, about 1,000 miles away. 'Five hundred of us died and no one moved,' said one survivor of last month's massacre. 'Another 500 will die of starvation now if help does not come fast.'" (End of quotes).

The survivor's reports of 500 dead is far from complete. U.S. News noted that "Even as foreign leaders gathered in New Delhi, new ethnic clashes took more lives. Since rioting erupted on February 1, more than 3,000 people, most of them Bengalis, have been killed, many by bows and arrows or meat cleavers. Some 230,000 have become refugees, housed in 145 camps where shelter amounts to plastic sheets and tarpaulins." Even as a form of religious genocide was taking place in this host country, third world delegates were accusing the United States of violations of human rights in its aid to the government of El Salvador, and for "its acts of aggression against Nicaragua." But nothing was said of the Soviet aggression against one of the nonaligned country's members, Afghanistan. And the only mention of the genocidal tactics of the communists in Cambodia amounted to a quarrel over who should represent that country at the summit meeting.

A brief history of the third world movement seems in order. Back in the cold war days, the late President Abdel Nasser of Egypt, Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru of India and Dictator Josip Broz Tito of Yugoslavia were concerned because they didn't want to make any direct commitment toward either side of the USSR vs USA struggle. At this same time there had developed an Afro-Asian Bloc of 29 nations that sought ways of getting aid from the wealthier nations, especially from the United States, and these small nations, formerly colonies, felt that in union there would be strength in their demands. So the Nasser-Nehru-Tito trio got together with the Afro-Asian Bloc and formed a loose association of supposedly nonaligned nations. As more former colonies became mini-states, the membership grew until today there are 101 member states. Since they are in complete control of the UN General Assembly, there is no need for a permanent secretariat. But there is a summit meeting about every three years, with the chief of state of the hosting country automatically assuming the chairmanship. Fidel Castro was its chairman until this summit was called. Now Mrs. Gandhi becomes chairman of the organization that her father helped create. The organization traditionally has been anti-USA and pro-USSR. This anti-USA sentiment was especially pronounced while Castro headed the supposedly "nonaligned" group. In its March 14th issue, U.S. News reports that "Weary of years of Communist manipulations, the nonaligned nations are switching to a new and more moderate course." The newsweekly believes that "With Indian Prime Minister Indira Gandhi replacing Castro as head of the group for the next three years, the U.S. looks for a period of Third World moderation. Usually cool relations between India and America also have warmed considerably in recent months. 'We think,' says one U.S. authority, 'that there will be a new face to the nonaligned movement.' Moderate nations, he believes, are beginning to balance off such radicals as Cuba, Libya, Iran, North Korea and Nicaragua. Some foreign diplomats disagree."

And so does this reporter disagree. It is true that among those 101 nations there are some who are friendly, anti-communist, and not out for all the aid they can get from the United States. But the majority of the states remain pro-Soviet, and have learned, as David Rockefeller and Armand Hammer have told them and demonstrated to them, that being pro-Marxist is no deterrent when asking for loans from the International Bankers and their IMF and World Bank institutions. And as for India's "cooling off" toward the United States, that nation's government issued a draft summit declaration which :

- * Criticized the West on 11 points, including stiffened terms for aid, protectionism and arms spending.
- * Criticized the West because it was slow in adopting a nuclear freeze policy.
- * Did not blame the USSR for its invasion of Afghanistan.
- * Declared that "the continued collaboration of certain Western countries and Israel have encouraged South African intransigence."
- * Criticized "U.S. escalation of a great power military presence in the Indian Ocean, especially U.S. expansion of facilities on British-owned Diego Garcia Island."

Since India is going to speak for the Third World for the next three years, it is important to know just where Indra Gandhi stands. Globescan of February 28 provides this excellent commentary:

"Indian Prime Minister Indra Gandhi has made a lot of mileage out of straddling the fence between East and West. While the Soviet Union remains her chief trade and military partner, Gandhi is also trying to warm up her friendship with Western Europe and the United States, both to ensure the continued flow of money and technology into India and to attempt to keep a lid on U.S. help to Gandhi's neighboring rival Pakistan. Indeed, India rakes in the equivalent of $100 million each year in developing aid from the European Community, making it the largest single recipient of such aid in all of Asia and Latin America. All of this aid is of course 'non-refundable,' which means it is a taxpayer gift. And last year India signed a long term 'cooperation' agreement with the European Community calling for industrial and scientific giveaways from the West. At the same time the flow of arms and aid from Moscow has never stopped. A recent issue of Arab-Israel Affairs (11 Regency Place, London SWP 2EA, England) reports: 'The 944,000-strong Indian army is equipped with Soviet SA-6 and SA-9 missiles, and has 950 Soviet T-54 and T-55 tanks, as well as 78 T-72 tanks. The navy is equipped with two Soviet Kashin class destroyers (among the most sophisticated in the Soviet arsenal), nine ex-Soviet frigates, three ex-Soviet Nanuchka corvettes, 16 ex-Soviet Osa-1 and Osa-II craft, six ex-Soviet Natya Oclan minesweepers, six ex-Soviet Polnocny LCTS, and has two more Nanuchka corvettes and six Polnocny LCTs on order.' In the air force the story is the same; of 635 combat aircraft, India has 48 Soviet Su-7 planes, 300 MiG-21 fighters and 40 training or conversion MiG-21U fighter aircraft, with more such planes on order. Total value of weapons and equipment India has received from the Soviets would be priced commercially at an estimated $35 billion or more. Gandhi's ordinance factories also manufacture shells and other military parts for Moscow. Despite her recent smiles at Europe and the United States, Indra Gandhi is obviously not a true ally of the West." (Globescan, ; Paris, Geneva; U.S. Subscription Center, 1545 New York Ave., N.E., Washington, D.C. 20002).

As she was preparing to assume the leadership of the nonaligned nations, alas the Third World, sometimes called the South, Indra Gandhi granted an exclusive interview to Patricia J. Sethi of Newsweek, in which she admitted that emphasis will be upon getting more economic and financial aid to the poor nations from the rich nations. She said in part: "Economic development is necessary to solve the problems of poverty and backwardness and to overcome the economic and cultural consequences of colonialism. Cooperation amongst ourselves will strengthen us nationally and collectively. . . . We may not come up with a blueprint, but we will try our best to urge the economically powerful countries to start serious discussions." Then she uttered this veiled threat: "Beggars have not always remained beggars nor have choosers always been able to have their own way."

Sharing the world's wealth on an equal basis and leveling all nations economically is the intent of the promoters of the New International Economic Order. And in promoting this socialistic program they become pawns in the game being played by the International Establishment Elite, now planning to complete the creation of the political New World Order. It follows, then, that regardless of their ability to repay even the interest on loans, there will continue to be loans aplenty for the undeveloped and developing Third World nations because, along with the loans come the exploiters who are seeking big profits and cheap labor. If the poor nations can't pay their debts, all has been arranged for the taxpayers of the Western Nations, especially those of the U.S., to pay the bills. So, even as those 99 allegedly non-aligned nations meet in New Delhi, the Money Manipulators meet in New York City and Washington, D.C. to lay their own plans, which include the plans made in New Delhi. To keep the people consenting to their programs, the fear is spread that the Big Banks are about to go broke because some nations are about to default. And so, every time a nonaligned nation threatens to default, we hear of more plans being made to strengthen the monopoly hold on money that the Megabankers enjoy through their Central Bank and their Supragovernment. Example: Chairman William Roth of the Senate Permanent Investigations Subcommittee, a Trilateralist, has announced hearings on offshore banking and tax shelters to be held March 15 and 16. The plan is to prevent citizens from being able to establish bank accounts in Swiss or other foreign banks. Only the International Banks would be allowed to deal in foreign currency accounts. Also, Rep. Richard Schulze (R-PA) has reintroduced his bill (H.R. 1548) to withdraw from circulation all $100 United States notes, and to issue new $100 U.S. notes of a different color. Fed Chairman Paul Volcker's term expires in August and he wants to be re-appointed, so he's saying little these days. But State Secretary George Pratt Shultz has really gone into action. He went before a Senate committee to demand more money for the IMF and other giveaway institutions; told Congress that it must come up with $5.8 billion more for the IMF, which is the principal banker for the Third World nations that have been meeting in New Delhi. Said Shultz, "The international economy is too vulnerable to permit a continued decline in lending to the Third World. Western governments, including our own, have a stake in seeing that the developing countries have sufficient capital." Having made this demand, Shultz reappeared on Capitol Hill to ask Congress for $65 million to fund the administration's "Project Democracy." This is a scheme to "expand democracy in the Third World nations." In a fourth appearance in one week on Capitol Hill, Shultz made his pitch "to overcome fierce resistance to the $14.5 billion in foreign aid the administration is seeking." As a Director of the Rockefeller-chaired Council on Foreign Relations, as well as U.S. Secretary of State, it is becoming obvious that in all foreign policy matters he is really running, not only the visible United States government, but the less visible but more powerful Eastern Establishment government as well. To strengthen his hold, he has recently revamped a Policy Planning Council which will act as his think-tank. The five men on this council were not approved by the Senate and they are responsible only to George Shultz. Chairman is if Steven Bosworth, a long-time Shultz confidant. Other members: Peter Rodman, a senior fellow at Georgetown University Center for Strategic and International Studies; Paul Bocker, former ambassador to Bolivia; Robert Osgood, CFR member and professor at Johns Hopkins School of Advanced International Studies; and Jeremy Azrael, a Soviet affairs specialist at the University of Chicago. With this brain trust, Shultz assumes more power than any non-elected government official has ever held. And, so far as we know, only one Senator - Jesse Helms - even bothered to object. Congress has the power to restore our Republic. But when none dare call it treason - - -

THE MOSCOW – PEKING – WASHINGTON CONNECTION

General of the Army Douglas MacArthur's best remembered statement is honored by Christian Americans, ridiculed by Leftist Liberals, and ignored by today's Freezeniks. On April 19, 1951, before a Joint Session of the U.S. Congress, after President Harry S. Truman had fired him, MacArthur said: "War's very object is victory – not prolonged indecision; there can be no substitute for victory." He made yet another important statement at a later time, when we were talking with him in his apartment at the Waldorf Towers in New York City. He said that, because of the encroachment of Communism throughout the world, the world of tomorrow might be shaped, not by the restoration of Europe or the waning military and industrial dominance of the United States, but by the awakening of the sleeping hordes of Asia. He decried the onward march of Communism and believed that where Genghis Khan and Tammerlane had failed, the Communist-controlled Asiatics of the USSR and of Red China might finally succeed. For this reason he resented the restraints forced upon him by the Communist-dominated UN and the CFR-controlled State Department when he attempted to deprive the Chinese Army of its places of sanctuary beyond the Yalu River and to drive them out of North Korea.

General MacArthur's attitude toward our alleged ally, Soviet Russia, during World War II was well exemplified by several facts. He would not permit the pro-Mao OSS (Office of Strategic Services, nucleus from which the CIA was hatched) to set foot within his command area. Instead, he created his own Counter-Intelligence Corps under General Charles Willoughby. He also made it very plain this his Pacific Command had no direct connection with the China or Southeast Asia sectors, which were commanded at that time by the pro-Mao U.S. General Vinegar Joe Stillwell in China, and by British General Louis Mountbatten in Burma and the Japanese-held British colonies in Asia. He knew then that Joe Stalin was primarily interested, not in China which would eventually become Communist-dominated anyway, but in Japan, which he hoped to dominate. A few days before the surrender of Japan, the Soviet Union entered the war against Japan, captured Sakhalin and some of the Kurile Islands belonging to Japan, and Stalin sent diplomats and Generals to Tokyo in an attempt to induce MacArthur to allow the partitioning of Japan, as had been accomplished in Germany and Korea. We emceed a radio presentation in which General MacArthur rebuked the Soviet officials, told them they would have no part in the administration of post-war Japan. This ended of Stalin's dreams of possession of a part of Japan. MacArthur's action in this respect did not sit well with our CFR-controlled State Department, and the plans to undermine MacArthur must have begun at that point, before his assumption of the UN command in the Korean "police Action."

Like Patton in Europe and MacArthur in Japan, there was a time when the U.S. Navy (before integration into the Pentagon) also distrusted and kept a close watch on Communist activities. We learned about this through a surprise and unscheduled visit to "The Valley", a Naval Intelligence Center in the heart of China. Allow us to retrace our memory-pattern:

With MacArthur's promised return to the Philippines and the freeing of what the enemy had left of Manila (including your reporter), a kind of post-battle calm descended upon Manila, and we were anxious to do some on-the-spot reporting, having been reinstated as a war correspondent after more than three years of interruption while a prisoner of war. Still a little weakened through mistreatment and near-starvation diet, we didn't feel up to following the troops as they mopped up the rest of the Japanese still on the islands. But there was MacArthur's Navy, which offered a hope for some action. To prevent enemy shipping via the South Pacific and the China Sea, a fleet of long-range PB4Y2 bombers was stationed at Clark Field, just north of Manila, under the command of a friend, Captain Jones. Day and night, these bombers would comb the seas and scout the coast lines, seeking whom they might destroy. A flight on one of these missions ought to make a good story for the folks to listen to back home. There was one hitch. Captain Jones said there were very definite orders about not taking any civilian, even a correspondent, on such a flight. However, after considerable dickering, he reckoned that it might just be possible for a radar engineer attached to the Navy to make such a flight. So, after a change of identification papers and insignia, and a kind of mock swearing-in ceremony that made us at least temporarily a kind of junior grade naval officer, we were allowed to climb aboard as the 13th member of the crew. A few hours later we were shot down off the coast of Amoy, China. Seven of us survived, got ashore with the help of Chinese fishermen, and walked, rode and flew a few thousand miles, ending up in Chungking, where Chiang Kai-shek and General Chennault had made their headquarters. Since we were supposedly rated as a navy observer, it was decided by the army that we should be flown up to join the navy in a super-secret naval installation which we only remember by its nickname, "The Valley." We shocked the Commander who knew who we really were, and were informed that we were the only American civilian who had ever entered The Valley, and we'd better forget what we saw and heard while there. We were sworn to secrecy as to the place and the purpose of a naval station in the heart of China. But we can say that its principal mission was to observe and report on Communist movements, both by Mao's forces and Stalin's agents and spies. Of course, the Communists were our allies officially. But the pre-Pentagon Navy didn't trust them any more than did MacArthur in the Pacific or Patton then in Europe.

Our point is this: In the 1940s there were people in high places who distrusted and feared the advances being made by the Communist leaders, and who sought to prevent their gains. But there also was the CFR-associated Institute of Pacific Relations (IPR) which had the money and the power and which was determined to work unceasingly toward the eventual merging of the United States with the USSR, the PRC and the rest of the countries of the world into a Socialist World Government, supposedly operated for the benefit of a self-chosen elite. Carroll Quigley of Tragedy and Hope fame, wrote: The IPR was a private association of ten independent national councils in ten countries concerned with affairs in the Pacific. The American Council of the IPR . . . spent about $2.5 million of which about half came from the Carnegie Foundation and the Rockefeller Foundation (which were themselves interlocking groups controlled by an alliance of Morgan and Rockefeller interests in Wall Street). Much of the rest came from firms closely allied . . . such as Standard Oil, IT&T, International General Electric, the National City Bank and the Chase National Bank. . . . There can be little doubt that the more active members of IPR (such as Owen Lattimore, Joseph P. Chamberlain, Phillip Jessup, William Lockwood, John K. Fairbank, and others) and the administrative staff . . . developed an IPR party line. It is, furthermore, fairly clear that this IPR line had many points in common both with the Kremlin's party line on the Far East and with the State Department's policy line in the same area. . . . There were some Communists, even party members involved. . . ." (Unquote).

As Dr. Ben Barker's Crisis Advisory observes: "For generations men of great wealth who've pulled the strings of power have preferred to cloak their manipulations with stealth and secrecy. A modern-day miracle has changed all that, and the men of secret power are stepping from the shadows into the glare of public knowledge." A part of the reason: people have been brainwashed and conditioned to accept what once was looked upon as crime and treason. As that pernicious advertisement tempting women to invite cancer into their bodies reads, "You've come a long way, baby," as a people, we certainly have. Un-American activities that once were considered treasonous by the majority now are accepted as commonplace. Even a generation ago people would have rebelled at the giveaway of the Panama Canal. The idea of turning our official back on Taiwan and permitting the government of Red China to take Taiwan's place with veto powers in the UN Security Council would have been unthinkable, even to our elected Congressmen. The official act of accepting the USSR and the People's Republic of China as most favored trading partners would have been - and was - prohibited or at least legally controlled. Cyrus Eaton, Armand Hammer, David Rockefeller and such internationalists posing as Americans certainly "cloaked their manipulations with stealth and secrecy." But no longer. Hammer and Rockefeller openly boast of their deals with communist governments, and our own government permits and applauds, and also makes deals that would have been considered acts of treason a few years ago. For example, here is a letter of protest we have just received from Congressman Ron Paul:

* * * * *

On March 1, Senator Charles Percy introduced the Administration's foreign aid bills. One of these bills, S.637, would amend the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961. One provision of S.637 states, "The FAA is amended to remove the People's Republic of China and Tibet (which is administered as part of China) from the category of countries to which assistance is prohibited. As a result of this amendment, the People's Republic of China would not be considered a 'communist-bloc' country."

I'm wondering if the U.S. State Department witnessed a revolution that the rest of the world missed? The contention that the People's Republic of China is no longer Communist is ludicrous. There has been no fundamental change in the government in Communist China. It is still a totalitarian, repressive, and collectivist regime. . . . This should be an affront to freedom-loving Americans. It is bad enough that taxpayers are forced to watch billions of their hard-earned dollars flow overseas each year. This overflow of dollars is actually increasing despite record budget deficits, drastic cuts in domestic spending, and tax increases that will take an additional $214 billion out of the economy over the next five years. ¶ American taxpayers should not be forced to subsidize the economy of the People's Republic of China any further. Communist China has already received over $125 million in loans and credits since 1981. This includes a $68 million credit through the Export-Import Bank to be used to buy steel making equipment. The Administration claims that this credit was "in the national interest." It was certainly in someone's national interest, but I doubt that it was ours. It is indefensible to be pouring $68 million into the Chinese steel industry when the U.S. steel industry is in such terrible economic straits. ¶ The State Department wants to increase aid to the People's Republic of China, although the Chinese continue their open hostility to the United States. Chinese and Soviet officials are currently meeting on ways to increase their ties between the two nations. The Chinese remain belligerent about the so-called peaceful reunification of Taiwan with the mainland. Further, China is shifting its defense policies toward an emphasis on the production of nuclear weapons.

There is a saying among Communists that goes something like this: If the Communists were going to hang capitalists, the capitalists would sell them the rope. This is only a half-truth. Nowadays, we'd just give them the rope, "in the national interest." (End of Ron Paul's letter of protest).

* * * * *

In substantiation of Rep. Paul's statement regarding the developing ties between Red China and the USSR, the following excerpts from an article appearing in the October, 1982, issue of Asian Outlook is important: "There is nothing new in the prediction that Moscow and Peiping will ultimately join hands in their drive to spread Communism throughout the world. What is new is that the two Red regimes have started taking steps in that direction. . . The warning came early in September when Hu Yao-pang spoke at the 12th Congress of the Chinese Communist Party in Peiping and indicated that 'there is a possibility of normalization' with the Soviet Union if Moscow authorities 'do desire better relations in good faith and take concrete steps to retract threats against our nation'. Hu made the statement in his capacity as Chinese Communist Party chairman (the name of the post is now 'general secretary' as a result of an amendment to the CCP Constitution). No doubt the Chinese Communists have found themselves in a position where they thought they had better be close again with their Soviet counterparts. . . . the condition for 'normalization' became as simple as retraction of threats by Moscow. . . . This could become the important first step toward full Red bloc collaboration . . . But this turn of events should not be taken as unexpected. . . . After all, Moscow and Peiping are all of a gang. They may quarrel with each other, but they may just as easily gang up again, for they share the same ideology and are poised for the identical goal. What is inevitable has to come to pass sooner or later. . . . Now that Peiping is inclined toward reconciliation with Moscow, the free world should really be wide awake and on the move - in the correct direction." (Unquote).

But the direction we are taking, officially, is toward even friendlier relations with Red China, as Senator Percy's bill, S. 637, indicates. And this at the expense of our real friend, Nationalist China. Also, while these two Red regimes that have manifested their belligerence toward the United States are negotiating to join hands, our "men of great wealth who've pulled the strings of power" are taking steps to join hands with both of them; this being another step in their march toward their New World Order. In this connection, we should never forget what the president of that citadel of great wealth, the Ford Foundation, told Norman Dodd who was at that time director of research for a special House Committee set up to investigate tax-exempt foundations. In November, 1953, in his office in New York, President Roman Galthier told Norman Dodd:

"Mr. Dodd, we invited you to come because we thought that, perhaps, off the record, you would be kind enough to tell us why the Congress is interested in the operation of foundations such as ours. Mr. Dodd, we operate here under directives which emanated from the White House. The substance of the directives under which we operate is that we shall use our grant-making power so to alter life in the United States that we can be comfortably merged with the Soviet Union." (Underlining added for emphasis). Told that information such as that should not be withheld from the American people, to whom the foundation was beholden for its tax exemption, Galthier replied that they would never think of telling that to the American people."

Galthier called it "merging." Asian Outlook spoke of it as "joining hands." General George Marshall referred to it as "collaboration". President John Kennedy named it "interdependence." Henry Steele Commager wrote a "Declaration of Interdependence" to replace our Declaration of Independence. Rexford Guy Tugwell wrote a Socialist Constitution to replace our U.S. Constitution. Tugwell collaborated with Robert Hutchins' Committee to Frame a World Constitution. Meanwhile the "men of great wealth who've pulled the strings of power" finance the Communist governments and prepare all governments for "the merging." How can we stop them? It is their ability to create money out of nothing, and issue it on a monopoly basis which gives them the power - and our point of attack.

POISON DROPS IN THE EDUCATION SYSTEM

President Reagan's ratings on the rigged popularity polls were at their lowest. This may have prompted him to restate a promise he had made more than three years earlier, and had failed to keep. Among his election pledges was a determination to abolish the Department of Education. Jimmy Carter had caused its establishment in fulfillment of a campaign promise to the NEA (National Education Association). And Ronald Reagan promised to abolish it in fulfillment of a promise to the New Right bloc which had worked so hard to get him elected. But he immediately named Terrell Bell as the Department's secretary and, as Bell increased in power when he should have decreased into nothingness, people throughout the country grew more and more distressed over the state of the government (public) school system without really knowing what was wrong, and began demanding that something be done to stress the basics, eliminate the narcotics, and produce better products.

And suddenly out of the blue, as President Reagan was making his weekly radio broadcast on March 12, he publicly admitted that the Department of Education had "soured America's love affair with learning," and should be abolished. "It's time to face the truth," he declared, after three years of refusing to face the truth. Advocates of more and more government interference in education have had ample time to make their case and they've failed. Look at the record. Federal spending on education soared eightfold in the last 20 years, rising much faster than inflation. But during the same period, scholastic aptitude test scores went down and down and down." He said what most people already knew, that "better education doesn't mean a bigger Department of Education. In fact, the Department should be abolished. Instead, we must do a better job of teaching the basics, insisting on discipline and results, encouraging competition, and above all, remembering that education does not begin with Washington officials or even state and local officials. It begins in the home where it is the right and responsibility of every American."

What Reagan said was nothing new, but it was enough to anger and irritate all the liberals and lovers of public schools for whatever reason, and who think that Washington should support them, even if that support means controlling them and dictating their curricula and methods of teaching. Nor was this defense of public (government) schools anything new in American history. About 100 years ago one Zack Montgomery was nominated by President Garfield to become a U.S. Assistant Attorney General. He was turned down by the Senate because he had made some disparaging remarks concerning the growth of crime and the decrease of learning in the public schools of that time. He had the figures to prove his facts because compulsory education in public schools had been made mandatory in New England, but was not yet the policy of most other States. He was able to prove that crime was rampant in New England schools, was moderate in schools in states where the New England system had not yet been adopted. And he wrote, in 1886:

"It must be clear to every thinking mind that the chief reason why the present anti-parental and crime-producing public-school system has obtained so strong a hold upon our country is to be found in a want of united and harmonious action of the part of those who see and lament its pernicious influence over the rising generation, but differ as to the precise thing which constituted the fundamental evil of the system, and consequently they equally differ as to what ought to be the remedy for said evil. For example: Many honest and conscientious people believe that the great wrong committed by the political State, through its public-school system, consists in its prohibiting the reading of the Bible in the public schools. . . . Still another class object to the system because of the immoral or incompetent character of many of its teachers, or because of the objectionable methods of teaching in use in the schools, or because of the commingling of the sexes, or for other kindred reasons. But to our mind, the chief vice of the system lies in its usurpation of parental authority and in its attempting to do for each child, through political agencies, that which can properly be done by nobody else in the world, except by its own father and mother. We contend that this usurpation of parental authority by the political State is the main trunk out of which naturally grow the other evils just mentioned, and that, until this parent tree be rooted up, we shall never be able to rid our country of its poisonous branches, or their bitter and deadly fruits." (Emphasis added).

This statement was first published in 1886 in a book "Poison Drops in the Federal Senate," and subtitled "The School Question from a Parental and Non-Sectarian Standpoint." 100 years later, with the situation 100 times worse, President Reagan said much the same thing in softer tones. He spoke against government control over the schools in his radio talk. Speaking before the Conservative Political Action Conference last month, he renewed his 1980 pledge to get rid of the Department of Education. Again he said that education does not begin with Washington officials, or even State and local officials, but "in the home where it is the right and responsibility of every American." But his words were diametrically opposed to his actions. He sent to Congress three bills which he claimed would "improve the equity and quality of education." So, "doing for the child through political agencies what can be done by nobody else but the child's own father and mother" remains the evil tree that is being nourished instead of being rooted up. And, as Human Events asserts, "Far from phasing out his agency, (Terrel) Bell has fought hard to maintain funding for federal education programs long opposed by conservatives. . . . Bell personally intervened with the Office of Management and Budget chief David Stockman to fend off major budget cuts in his department. As a result . . . the amount requested for education in the Administration's fiscal 1984 budget skyrocketed from a planned level of $9 billion to $13.2 billion. . . . Indeed, rather than eliminating the department and its functions, Bell has sold the idea within the Administration of replacing the department with an independent education foundation that would continue to carry out many of the department's present programs."

Most controversial of the recommendations sent by Reagan to Congress concerning education is the Tuition Tax Credit plan which was turned down last year. Since the bill isn't expected to pass on its own, the plan is to attach it as a rider to a "must pass" revenue bill. Another Debt Limit Extension Bill is expected to come up in September. This is a bill that would allow the government to borrow more money and thus add to the federal debt, and is always presented as a "must pass" bill. If the Tax Tuition Credit Bill is attached as a rider, it can sneak through Congress even if Congress opposes the plan.

This Tax Tuition Credit idea is as sneaky as the way in which it is to be presented in Congress. It's one of those bills that the NEA opposes, as do most liberals. But it is also opposed by most knowledgeable conservatives. It's a case of "having a mutual enemy doesn't mean we are mutually agreed in other respects." The liberals fear the Tax Tuition plan would do further harm to the public schools; while the conservatives fear that the plan would increase government control over private schools and tend to make all children wards of the State.

Barbara Morris, author of "Change Agents in the Schools," co-author with Joan Masters of the book, "Betraying America in the Schools," editor of the "Barbara Morris Report," and a research expert in the American education system, wrote an article which dealt with the subject of tax tuition credits. It appeared in the March, 1983 issue of The National Educator (P.O.Box 333, Fullerton CA 92632). We quote:

BEWARE THE TUITION TAX CREDIT TRAP

It is difficult to understand how those who consider themselves "conservative" cannot see the pitfalls in even the most carefully drafted tuition tax credit (TTC) legislation. ¶ Inherent in any tax credit proposal is the latent mechanism for government intervention to one degree or another, sooner or later. A good example is seen in a paper prepared for a Tuition Tax Credit Seminar held in Washington, DC, October 22, 1981. The author, Joel D. Sherman explains how tax credits for private schools began in Australia and how the assistance grew and expanded. ¶ According to Sherman, "modest initiatives" for private schools began in the 1950s as tax deductions on the federal income tax. Direct federal support began in the 1960s for special purpose programs and by the end of the 1960s there was pressure for extensive funding of operating costs and a "modest" per capita grant to private schools. ¶ He also notes that the funding "evolved incrementally. . . . "This progression supports the view that public policy is incremental in nature and that policy initiatives tend to develop a momentum of their own. Once directions are set, they are often difficult to reverse. ¶ ". . . The Australian experiment suggests . . . that once policy actions have been taken, they often produce general public acceptance and decreased opposition." ¶ In other words, once the camel's nose is under the tent flap, just try to keep out the rest of the beast! ¶ Furthermore, Sherman explains that the justification for a major Commonwealth commitment to funding non-government schools was grounded on a rationale based on pupil needs. (emphasis in original).

Doesn't that sound familiar? Isn't a current argument supporting TTCs in this country based upon the premise that TTCs would not be construed to benefit schools, but to benefit students? ¶ Any "conservative" should understand the purpose of this "harmless" intervention, and therefore should also be expected to avoid like the plague any government assistance, no matter how benign in appearance. But at this point, it is doubtful that TTC supporters are capable of thinking clearly. Their determination to make parents the unsuspecting middlemen in a con game in which only the government can win has obliterated any vision beyond their noses. Perhaps they won't be able to see clearly until they are hit, smack between the eyes, with a situation such as has developed in France. ¶ According to a recent Associated Press report which appears not to have been picked up by major metropolitan newspapers, church schools in France that have been accepting government assistance will be taken over by the government in September 1983. Those schools not accepting money will not be affected. ¶ More than 9,000 private religious schools are to be "integrated" into the public system "to assure a better material, moral and social management of national education." Teachers in those schools will come under government jurisdiction and curriculum must come within the framework of national standards. ¶ The takeover has delighted the strongly leftist National Education Federation. The union which represents the majority of teachers in the public school system maintains that funds for private schools has damaged the state system. (This is the same argument, with a twist, offered in this country by the NEA. The NEA is said to be against TTCs because it would siphon off money from the public schools. But the NEA needn't worry - once TTCs are in place, sooner or later, as in France, they will have control of everything). ¶ Parents are said to have taken to the streets in major cities in protest, but they can't really complain. They were warned. During the 1981 presidential campaign socialist Francois Mitterand vowed that if elected there would be "reorganization" of schools into a "unified secular public education service." Well, the French voted socialist and they got what they were promised.

What does all of this - the Australian and French experiences - have to do with the U.S.? It should remind us, as if we needed reminding, that just as Australian government intervention in private schools began with tax credits and grew "incrementally", so it will happen here once TTCs are in place. As for the French connection, the obvious parallel is that as Americans become more demanding of government "assistance" of all kinds, politicians who are elected to Congress and the White House will become more openly socialist, which in turn will be reflected in laws, rules, regulations and executive proclamations. The potential for the French situation to be replicated here is well within the realm of the possible. But it doesn't have to happen. We just have to recognize that just as there are no free lunches, there is no such thing as string-free "tax credits" for private schools. (End of article by Barbara Morris).

When Reagan first lent his support to the Tuition Tax Credit plan, the Christian Harvest Times reported that the bill, S. 550, was introduced in the Senate by Packwood of Oregon, Moynihan of New York, and Roth of Delaware. Packwood is a Unitarian, introduced a National Abortion Act intended to legalize abortion in every State of the Union in 1970, three years before the Supreme Court acted on the matter. Moynihan has long been associated with legislation calling for government intrusion into family life. Roth was a charter member of the Trilateral Commission. We doubt that President Reagan knows what he's actually promoting. But we submit that these three undoubtedly know that a tuition tax credit plan will give the government control over private schools, sooner or later. Because the Supreme Court has said that what government subsidizes, government controls. Since the public schools are already controlled, it is relevant to know it was Charles Francis Potter, founder of the First Humanist Society of New York, signer of the first Humanist Manifesto, and author of Humanism, A New Religion, who wrote that "Education is thus a most powerful ally of humanism, and every American public school is a school of humanism. What can the theistic Sunday schools, meeting for an hour once a week, and teaching only a fraction of the children, do to stem the tide of a five-day program of humanistic teaching!" This is why private and church related schools must continue to remain free and independent from the control of a State whose religion is now Humanism!

Another reason that private schools should remain free lies in the fact that public schools have made us a democracy! In commenting editorially on the tuition tax credit plan, the Louisville (Ky.) Times said: "Our society supports (a public) school system because education is essential to a strong democracy." The Gannett chain's new USA TODAY ended a long editorial with the statement: "Public education has made American democracy possible. It should be strengthened, not assaulted."

We are told that Woodrow Wilson made the term popular, for political reasons. When running for the Presidency he said many half-illiterate immigrants were marking their ballots for the Republican candidate because most people were calling this nation a Republic. "We must stop this at once," he said, "and train oncoming school children, and especially semi-literates, to call this a democracy, for then they'll see the word Democratic on their ballots and vote for us." The seed was really planted when we went to war to "make the world safe for democracy." Textbook writers and educationists picked up the word, promoted its usage, so that nowadays even our President promotes a program at our expense to bring democracy to developing nations that we are financing. Sincere patriots unwittingly refer to our nation as a democracy! And we can credit the State (public) school system for being the vehicle which has brought our Constitutionally guaranteed Republic to the sad condition of a democracy. For this and other reasons which we haven't space to mention, we must help maintain freedom for the schools that teach our children the truth.

FROM MUTUAL ASSURED DESTRUCTION TO UNILATERAL ASSURED SURRENDER?

To think of Uncle Sam on his knees before the Bear that Walks like a Man, begging the Bear to accept a watered-down form of nuclear compromise that amounts to a kind of unilateral disarmament, must seem utterly repugnant to any self-respecting Christian American. And after listening to the appeals for compromise that have gone out over the airwaves these past weeks, one gains the impression that groveling is the word for it. Because of the Communist-promoted anti-nuke demonstrations in Europe and the United States, and the reluctance of Congress to spend for defense, President Reagan asked President Andropov to accept a proposal that he called zero-zero, which would eliminate the arsenals of medium-range nuclear missiles in Europe. Andropov refused. So Reagan modified his plea, proposed a scaled-down reduction of nuclear missiles. Again Andropov refused. Then Reagan proposed, on Wednesday, March 30th, to reduce the number of nuclear weapons the United States plans to deploy in Europe if Andropov will cut back to what is miscalled "an equal level." As this is being written, Andropov hasn't answered, but one of his chief negotiators has said, "I'm not optimistic." Of course, during all this scaling-down routine the freeze-niks have been demonstrating in all the NATO capitals of Europe, with the same thing going on in the United States but in a slightly lower key. And President Reagan seems to be, almost daily, holding some kind of controlled, secret or even public news conference, speaking to the world via television and radio, holding special meetings with special interest groups of officials, and otherwise promoting his scaled-down defense program in the hopes that the USSR will agree to some kind of a deal. All of which is an about-face on the part of the President. Because about two years ago, when addressing the Cadets at West Point, Reagan said that arms negotiations with the Soviet was the worst possible kind of way to handle our defense strategy, since the Soviets never keep their promises and any deal we might make would always be to the advantage of the USSR. However, shortly after making that statement, Reagan was confronted with the "Powers behind the Oval Office" and was forced to change his official position and work toward a new agreement with the Soviet Union.

The controlled media are full of details about President Reagan's allusion to what they call "Star War" recommendations. U.S. News wrote a rather revealing article headlined "Behind Reagan's Star-War Strategy." Newsweek was "Rethinking the Unthinkable" and outlining its conception of "A 'Star Wars' Defense." There was a kind of unacknowledged reference to General Graham's "High Frontier" project which would provide a defense against nuclear attack using conventional and already buildable weapons. And There was some reference to the revelations made – and ignored by Administrations – by General George Keegan, in regard to the Soviet development of particle beam and laser weapon technology. Beginning as long as twenty years ago, while our Defense Establishment under Robert McNamara and his CFR associates was busy disarming to please the Soviet Union, the Soviets were developing the theories originally propounded by Tesla, and had gone beyond the nuclear phase of warfare into the new realm of particle beams and lasers. It was probably former intelligence chieftain Keegan's revelations that caused President Reagan to speak of "Star War" defense systems, and ask scientists to start working on the development of new space weaponry which would prevent any enemy missile from ever reaching the United States. General Keegan maintains that in space weaponry, the Soviets are at least twenty years ahead of us, and he thoroughly approves of the President's appeal for space weaponry, though fearing that it may be too late to catch up with the Soviet advances which were made possible through American sales and gifts of technical equipment and know-how to the USSR, and through the development of theories expounded by Nikola Tesla, and rejected by the United States.

But, there is something about this extraordinary build-up of a crisis which causes us to wonder. Whenever the Conspirators want to make a change in existing conditions, they always create a crisis - this after they have prepared a plan which will bring about the change and which will be accepted, even demanded, by the people who are to be affected by the change. There has been so much high-level talk, and so much propaganda and publicity about this nuclear crisis, that we wonder if such a crisis situation is being developed deliberately for ulterior purposes?

It is true enough that we must have adequate defenses against any possible Soviet military action against either Western Europe or the Western Hemisphere. But we should also remember that such a military buildup is really a defense against blackmail. As Hilaire du Berrier reported when the Third World Conference was going on in New Delhi, "Russia is conducting the greatest crash military build-up the world has ever seen. . . . Castro and Indira Gandhi are standing before a meeting of 101 nations in New Delhi and, without batting an eye, calling themselves 'unaligned.' Holland has a hippy army, a neutralist population and a cancer in the form of Molucans made homeless by premature decolonization and sacrificial offering to Sukarno. Italy cannot cope with its mafia, much less Yuri Andropov's ambitions or networks of Bulgarians." But the internal demoralization within Holland, Italy, France, Spain, Portugal, Turkey, the United Kingdom, and the United States, should convince us that the Russian Bear has no intention of destroying the United States, or any other Industrialized Nation. But the Bear does intend to force us to surrender! The Communist formula for the conquest of the United States has never changed since it became obvious that we could never be conquered through external attack or internal uprisings. It reads: "External encirclement, plus internal demoralization, plus thermonuclear blackmail, lead to progressive surrender." And when we start begging the Bear to accept our watered-down terms of compromise, it certainly sounds like another step toward progressive surrender!

However, this does not mean that the Supranational Powers that are richer and therefore more powerful than any national government, are going to do away with the program involving the United States in planned, controlled and limited wars, such as those so skillfully arranged in Korea and Vietnam, and in one that may be developing in the Middle East. Such planned and controlled wars weaken the United States, change the political complexion of the smaller States involved, strengthen the dominance of Socialism and help promote the New World Order. In this connection, Intelligence Digest, a British weekly review with an exceptionally high ratio of reliability in its reporting of international affairs, reports in its issue of March 23rd:

"Our correspondent in San Diego, a retired American Naval Officer, reading between the lines of official documents to which he has access, reports: 'American military strategists are closely monitoring confidential intelligence records on the health of Iran's Ayatollah Khomeini. And why should the continued good health and long life of the hated Khomeini be of critical interest to the military commanders of the United States? A currently top-secret scenario provides the answer. ¶ 'Remembering the Soviet occupation of Iranian border territories at the end of World War II and the continued and obvious Soviet awareness of Iran's key geographical position close to the heart of the Persian Gulf oil reservoirs, a logical Russian invasion and ultimate control of Iran following Khomeini's death would simultaneously involve shattering the American naval power concentration in the Indian Ocean by turning the key that would begin a North Korean attack on Seoul. ¶ 'The immediate consequence would be the withdrawal of important elements of the US Naval Forces now deployed to provide support for American Persian Gulf policies, and their swift movement to defend South Korea. ." (Unquote).

We might add that the Soviet already has military and naval bases on Iranian soil, but has never actually "Invaded" because this would have caused dissention, perhaps rebellion and even revolution, among the Soviet governed Muslim people in the Asian Socialist Republics. However, if and when Khomeini dies, chaos and anarchy will develop in Iran. So, the Soviet would not need to "invade," but would be "invited" to come into the country to restore order – the same ruse that was used when the Soviet troops entered the equally necessary (to the Soviets) country of Afghanistan. To make sure that there would be no American resistance to any such move on the part of the USSR, a planned invasion of South Korea would divert the American forces to that part of the world. Now, we again quote from the Intelligence Digest report:

"North Korean bunkers are being deployed in increasing numbers in underground bunkers while the civilian population is being increasingly drilled in air raid precautions. ¶ There is some doubt as to the real purpose of the clearly warlike preparations. The obvious target – which cannot be discounted – is South Korea, but there are growing signs of a power struggle in North Korea as the aging Kim Il-sung tries to arrange for his son to succeed him against the opposition of a strong faction within the communist leadership. ¶ The North Korean style of leadership is based on that of Russia's Stalin with its cult of personality. But many communists have had enough and, any way, that to found a 'communist dynasty' is counter to all that they have ever believed in. ¶ The North Koreans have imported arms from both the Soviet Union and Communist China, including the delivery of Chinese built MIG aircraft. ¶ Intelligence sources are concerned about the apparent cooperation between Moscow and Peking over the supply of arms to North Korea. It is believed that while Peking would not welcome a Korean war at this time the Soviet Union would not object because it would distract attention from its own problems in Afghanistan and Eastern Europe. ¶ The danger is that if the situation in South Korea presents what looks like an easy target then the North Koreans will launch a war of 'liberation and unification' without consulting either Peking or Moscow. The North Koreans are confident that neither communist giant could allow the North Koreans to be defeated, although they would agree to a stalemate – again." (Quoted from Intelligence Digest, published by Intelligence International Limited, 17 Rodney Road, Cheltenham, Glos. 50 1HX, United Kingdom).

It may seem unusual that the death of an Ayatollah in Iran might precipitate another war in divided Korea. But Communist strategists are thinking of a world to conquer, not just isolated parts of that world. And to advance without committing Soviet troops in any direct engagement with U.S. troops anywhere in the world, would be continued as long as possible. Hence, the movement of American Naval Forces out of the Persian Gulf area in order to help defend the South Koreans would be looked upon as an ideal plan. We are not predicting that this is a next move on the part of the geopolitical planners. But it is a possibility which has caused American military strategists to take a close look at conditions in Iran as well as in North Korea.

In addition to the above possibility, there continues the Communist program of external encirclement of the United States. And things seem to be going according to schedule in regard to El Salvador, a country which could provide yet another spot where a limited, controlled war could be waged; one which could directly involve the U.S. military forces without the necessity of direct Soviet intervention. And here, if qualified observers are correct, is an example of the Council on Foreign Relations policy-makers working alongside the Communist policy-makers with neither of them seeming to be directly involved. In a very important article appearing in the March

30th issue of The Review of the News, Susan L.M.Huck explains "How the CFR is preparing another sellout like Vietnam in El Salvador." She points out that the U.S. State Department has long been under the control of the Council on Foreign Relations, which is "David Rockefeller's private club in New York." "It is by now commonplace," she writes, "that no one can be the American Secretary of State unless he is first a member of the CFR. We see the occasional approved groupie, but the Council really prefers outright members. Election of a new, 'conservative' President made not the slightest difference. As Secretary of State we got CFR member Alexander Haig, protege of Henry Kissinger, who was then followed by CFR member George Shultz, who also calls on Henry for advice. The Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs is Thomas Enders of the Council, and the U.S. Ambassador, 'the proconsul,' as he is known in San Salvador, is Deane Hinton (CFR)." The importance of this: "El Salvador has been the plaything of the State Department since the 'Liberal' military coup of October 1979. The coup, smiled upon by Washington, put Salvadoran military and civilian Leftists in power. . . At the same time, State Department officials were freely informing the Salvadorans that Washington had decreed a Sandinista fate for them. Remember, this was only three months after the Carter Administration had handed Nicaragua to the Communists."

"So now," says Susan Huck, "television is telling us again about a 'hearts and mind' campaign along the lines of Vietnam, and we see a Salvadoran Army band tootling away with the finest brass instruments our dollars can buy, and rolling out the sacks of American corn which El Salvador did not have to import until the Moscow-Washington Axis got to work on the country." (Emphasis added).

They call it the domino syndrome. So long as our government is being run by the CFR-Trilateral Commission Cartel, the dominoes will continue to fall. Reagan's announcement of a Soviet air base being built on Granada won't stop its construction, and piddling amounts of aid to El Salvador won't keep it from being the next domino to fall. Some of the results: the splitting of the U.S. Navy into two Navies as a result of Soviet control of the Panama Canal; America being flooded with many times the number of refugees we have absorbed up to now. Added to the few hundred thousand "boat people" from Vietnam, Cuba and Haiti could be a million or more "feet people" from El Salvador and Nicaragua, and six or eight million more "feet people" from Mexico, since that country is high on the Moscow-Washington Axis list. And that isn't all. From European intelligence sources comes word that "While the Soviet Union is capitalizing in Argentina on the combined effects of America's human rights embargo and the US backed British Falklands war, the Soviet sub-contractor, Castro, is preparing for another vast guerrilla offensive." The main targets of the campaign are South American countries; Chile, Colombia, Venezuela, Ecuador, Uruguay and, above all, Peru. Here again, this is all Rockefeller's CFR country. And Rockefeller has made it known, openly, that he prefers to deal with Socialist governments. So, once again, we can observe the application of the program: External encirclement, plus internal demoralization, plus thermonuclear blackmail, lead to progressive surrender.

Lest We Forget: In 1905 Lenin boasted, "Promises, like pie crusts, are leaven to be broken." In 1959 our government began signing arms control agreements with the Soviet government. Result: We began disarming; they began a massive military buildup that has continued to this day. In 24 years, 14 promises have been broken. Yet our government begs the Soviet Union to sign more agreements which we know will be treated as pie crusts. Do so many mistakes just happen?

THE MOONGATE CONTROVERSY

Cliff Kincaid, an associate editor of Human Events, writes the following in a Special Supplement to the conservative weekly, issue of April 9, 1983:

"The question of which conservative journalists are 'associating' with the Unification Church of Sun Myung Moon has become something of a hot topic in the Nation's Capital. ¶ The Washington Times, the Washington, D.C., newspaper launched in May 1982 by businessmen related to the Moon organization, stands at the center of the controversy. Despite the fact that the majority of its top editors and reporters are not disciples of Moon, and despite the fact that the newspaper was promised journalistic independence, critics of Moon have alleged that conservative journalists who write, work for, or contribute to the Times are somehow promoting Moon's 'doctrines.' Even those conservatives whose syndicated columns are carried by the Times [Patrick Buchanan, John Lofton, Jeffrey St. John, Don Lambro, M. Stanton Evans, Jenkin Lloyd Jones, John Chamberlain, Joseph Sobran, Allan Brownfeld and others] have been denounced as 'Moonie columnists.' ¶ In a more sinister vein, the critics have pointed out that a congressional subcommittee back in 1978 [the Fraser Committee-Ed.] investigated the subject of 'Korean-American relations,' otherwise known as the Koreagate bribery scandal, and disclosed that the Moon organization had worked closely with representatives of the South Korean government. The implication is that the conservatives who 'associate' with the Washington Times or projects of the Unification Church are working to advance the interests of a foreign government in the United States. ¶ But the controversy surrounding the Times is unusual in one major respect because many members of the news media, including some critics of the Times, have themselves associated with a controversial organization that has maintained links to unfriendly foreign governments. ¶ This organization, the Institute for Policy Studies (IPS), has been mentioned as a possible target of investigation by the Senate Committee on Security and Terrorism. The chairman of that subcommittee, Sen. Jeremiah Denton (R.-Ala.), warned his colleagues in a May 1, 1981 letter that the IPS 'has vigorously engaged in anti-American propaganda' and that they should beware of its efforts to gain influence on Capitol Hill..' (End of quotation).

Kincaid's defense of those "associating" with the Washington Times through an exposure of the activities of the IPS makes interesting and important reading. But it is hardly a defense of those writing for the Washington Times. Moreover, Kincaid's attempt to justify conservative columnists by attacking IPS activists seems controversial since the columnists Kincaid is defending are writers whose columns also appear often in Human Events. True, IPS is very definitely a leftwing organization, was formed in 1963 by Richard J. Barnett and Marcus Raskin, and even The New York Times has admitted that the IPS "is aligned with those forces, at home and abroad, who are trying to impose a 'Socialist' or Marxist system on the United States and other countries."

However, exposing the activities of the IPS hardly justifies the activities of those writing for a Moonie-controlled newspaper. In the first place, any Christian American must be aware of and be against the religious doctrines propounded by Moon. His multinational and Multiracial mass marriages smack of heathenism, and his claim that he is the express representative of Christ, and his sometime boast to his followers that he is the Christ incarnate, are repugnant to any true believer. But, in this particular Report, we should like to deal with the political, rather than the religious activities of Moon, and with the question of whether one can write articles and columns for the Washington Times and yet be separate in aims and alien to the objectives of the Moon organizations. Starting with the method adopted by Moon to gain a political foothold in the United States, we quote the following from the book Moonweb by Joseph Freed, published in 1980 by Dorset Publishing, Inc., 355 Markham Street, Toronto, Ontario, Canada:

"On a June day in 1965, a limousine pulled into the spacious Gettysburg farm of Dwight D. Eisenhower, retired president of the United States. Out of the car stepped a delegation sent by Ike's old friend Yang You Chan, former South Korean ambassador to the U.S.; the group included several young Korean dancers known as the 'Little Angels', accompanied by a rotund man introduced as a Korean minister. 'You are well armed with cameras, I see,' joshed the elderly ex-president, as shutters clicked. 'And what is the name of your movement?'

"The Unification Church,' clucked the Korean evangelist, as his handsome assistant Bo Hi Pak pulled out a glossy biography of Moon, including photos of a recent 124-couple wedding he had conducted. Eisenhower's eyes grew 'round,' according to a Unification Church magazine describing the incident.

"Never saw anything quite like this before,' said the surprised ex-president, who spent the next 45 minutes amiably chatting with his guests before the limousine disappeared down the road again. For Ike, the meeting was just another interruption in a pleasant Pennsylvania day; but for the man in the car - Sun Myung Moon - it was a crucial encounter; the first tiny wedge in a crack that would eventually open a broad passageway to some of the most powerful people in the United States.

"Soon after the meeting, Eisenhower agreed to become the 'honorary president' of the Korean Cultural Freedom Foundation (KCFF), supposedly an organization to fight communism and promote Korean-American cultural ties; in reality, a front group for the Unification Church. Using this key endorsement from Ike, Bo Hi Pak soon milked similar endorsements from former president Harry Truman, dozens of senators and congressmen including Richard Nixon and Gerald Ford, and eventually a Who's Who of American personalities such as Bob Hope, Bing Crosby, and Ed Sullivan. These sponsors in turn opened the taps to some million dollars a year in KCFF contributions from 140,000 Americans trying to fight the 'Red menace,' - a flow of money that would remain undammed until 1975, when the group's links to Moon finally became known. But by that time the cloak over KCFF was expendable; Rev. Sun Myung Moon had many more irons in the fire. . . ." (Unquote).

According to Spotlight, March 21, 1983, among those important endorsees of Moon were the Rockefeller brothers, Nelson and David. "They helped Moon's group to establish themselves as the second largest property holder in exclusive Westchester County, New York, long considered to be Rockefeller turf. Since Moon's Unification Church espoused the same idea of a new global order as did the Rockefellers, it is possible that the Rockefeller dynasty supported the UC to further the concept of globalism; when sufficiently established, they could replace Moon with their own leaders."

Meanwhile, after Eisenhower and Truman were persuaded to become honorary presidents of Moon's KCFF, it was reported that some 14 generals, 8 admirals, and a whole army of American personalities clambored onto the KCFF's "Advisory Board." Taken in were people like George Meany, Jack Nicklaus, Johnny Unitas, Rep. Carl Albert. Reader's Digest is said to have given the KCFF half a million dollars. There were many other organizations, such as the Children's Relief Fund, the "Little Angels," Radio Free Asia, the Freedom Leadership Foundation (FLF), International Conference for the Unity of the Sciences (ICUS), Victory Against Communism (VOC), etc. Of these, the Freedom Leadership Foundation (FLF) became Moon's chief political arm in the United States. Founded in the late 1960s, it caused considerable disturbance among Moon's church leaders, because Moon had decided that the FLF would be a thoroughly rightwing organization, intended to "develop leadership" in the "struggle against communism." But at that time most of Moon's early church members were leftwingers, and they protested the anti-communist program. However, they were told that Moon had received his orders from "on high," that to begin rightwing political work in the United States was a church command. Any objection to such political activity was called infidelity to the Master, was the same as being "disobedient to God." A lobby group was formed, only a top Moonie spokesman said, "We don't lobby. We educate." To "educate" the congressmen in Washington, some 20 attractive, well groomed Moonie women began distributing tea, flowers and friendship at Capitol Hill. Said New York State Senator Israel Ruiz, "They were sweet girls, they put you at your ease. They sent you flowers." Pleased at its success, Moon expanded the operation. He made a speech to his church members, saying, "Master needs many good-looking girls - three hundred. He will assign three girls to each senator. . . if our girls are superior to the senator in many ways, then the senators will just be taken by our members. If we find among the senators and congressmen no one really usable for our purpose, we can make senators and congressmen of our members. This is our dream - our project - but shut your mouth tight and have hope and go on to realize it. We must have an automatic theocracy to rule the world." a result of this effort of the womens' lobby, Moon was able to penetrate Capitol Hill, became friendly with a number of congressmen. A prayer meeting was held in his honor in the House Caucus Room by Congressmen Bill Chappell and Richard Ichord. He attended an annual Prayer Breakfast at President Nixon's invitation on Feb. 1, 1974. Later that day he met privately with Nixon for thirty minutes in the Oval Office. The lobby having gained its objectives by that time, it was discontinued in 1977.

One of Moon's most successful penetrations was that of the World Anti-Communist League (WACL) a most respected organization with affiliations in at least 40 countries. Entrance was gained through Moon's Japanese connections. Josh Freed wrote in his book Moonwebs: "Moon's three principal backers in the Orient are Ryoichi Sasagawa, Nobusuke Kishi and Yoshio Kodama - post war billionaires and political forces who share a dream of restoring the Emperor and Japan to their former glory. Some observers believe they are the real power behind Moon. Sasagawa is the godfather of the Japanese underworld and founder of the Japanese kamikaze pilot squads. He was imprisoned briefly as a Class A war criminal after the war, then released to become a billionaire political power in Indonesia and Cambodia. He actively supports the Unification Church in Japan. . . In the 1960s Sasagawa set up the World Anti-Communist League, currently the major alliance of rightwing forces in the world. Moon's Japanese Church is a member of the WACL, and sponsored its 1970 annual conference." We believe the author is slightly mistaken in one respect. WACL was organized earlier by forces supporting Chiang Kai-shek and it had become the world's major alliance of anti-communist forces before Sasagawa took charge of the Japanese section of WACL. However, Moon's affiliation with the WACL is unquestioned, although how much of this is known by the leading members of the WACL is questionable.

We say this because of such cases as that of Pat Walsh, a Canadian patriot, staunch anti-Communist, former undercover agent for the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. In this capacity he unearthed and helped expose the Communists who had infiltrated into the Canadian government after the end of WWII. He was instrumental in aiding the U.S. government in this same capacity. His credentials as a sincere and dedicated investigator are unquestionable. Yet he is on the board of the WACL and as such officially announced the Third North American Regional WACL Conference held last summer in Phoenix, Arizona. And Moon's Unification Church was represented and helped finance the conference! A second example: Major General John Singlaub, U.S. Army ret., heads the United Council for World Freedom (UCWF), which was formally established Nov. 22, 1981 in Phoenix by a group of anti-Communist leaders in the United States. UCWF aspires to "unite all anti-Communist organizations in the United States to wage an uncompromising campaign against Communist infiltration, subversion and expansion." Singlaub's UCWF sponsored the NARWACL Conference which was financed by Moon's Unification Church organization! Again: In 1975 direct-mail tycoon and New Right leader Richard Viguerie undertook a campaign for Moon's "Children's Relief Fund." A New York State audit found that while over $1.5 million was raised from Americans, less than 6.3% of that money went to the children. So, it would seem that, since Moon professes himself to be anti-Communist he is accepted and even honored despite his claim that he is the reincarnation of Jesus Christ!

After the Washington Star folded, leaving the Washington Post as the sole daily newspaper in the Nation's capital, there was a great need for a newspaper to counter the policies of the Post. But where to raise the millions needed for what would probably be a losing venture financially? Well, there was Sun Myung Moon with his newly-acquired billions, who said he was willing to underwrite the venture. Moreover, he even promised that the paper would remain independent, and that there would be no pressure on his part to promote his Unification Church aims and objectives editorially, reportorially or through advertisements. So, eleven months ago the five-days-a-week Washington Times was born. It offered an opportunity to all conservative columnists whose writings were largely rejected or edited by the controlled commercial press. And such columnists were eager to get their ideas into print, especially in a paper published in "Disneyland on the Potomac." Conservative senators and representatives also took advantage of the invitation to get into print publicly. Conservative congressmen find their views ignored or abused in the established media, and most of them resort to newsletter-type reports which they mail periodically to their constituents. To them, the Times was indeed timely and welcome.

The Washington Times has been denounced by fundamentalist Christian leaders, and from the Christian point of view they are of course right. But there is a political and national question which remains controversial. We recall a saying of our former editorial associate Upton Close. He said it was impossible to shout the Truth through a trumpet belonging to the Devil. So he retired from radio and press and wrote newsletters. Maybe over a quarter of a century later times have changed. But we know, personally, that although we write in every issue we publish that reproduction is permitted, provided nothing is taken out of context; still, we'd feel a bit uncomfortable if we saw a Don Bell Report reprinted in the Washington Times.

In 1978 a Congressional Subcommittee headed by then Rep. Donald Fraser began a lengthy investigation of Moon's activities. It found that he had used both the Korean Government and an astonishing number of prominent American personalities to further his own goal - which was "no less than to get hold of the whole world." The Committee's findings disclosed an extraordinary list of accomplishments for a fringe cult of foreign origin, and that Moon's complex religious, political and financial empire is even more murky and powerful than any had ever dreamed. He is a professed anti-Communist; but we recall an ancient maxim: Because men have a common enemy does not necessarily mean that those men are friends.

WILL WE DARE CALL IT FASCISM?

"The communist plan for the final conquest and subjection of the entire world is to slowly but surely surround the United States and have this country then fall like a ripe fruit. The evil plotting is working. Soviet dominance of the world's sea lanes, the ongoing neutralization of Europe, communist control of Asia, hegemony and inroads into Southeast Asia and the Pacific Basin, socialistic Canada, Marxist Africa, a volatile Middle East, the fires of revolution smoldering in South and Central America--all are 'on track' with the communist revolutionary vision.

"In recent years, Africa has been the intensified target for communism. With the fall of Rhodesia and the communist consolidation under way in Angola and Mozambique, too, South Africa has a breather for now from this cancerous onslaught. So, recently, American arms captured by the communists when we fled Vietnam have been put to good use in Central America. With Cuba serving as a festering communist staging area, the fires of revolution have been turned up on the burner on which the United States rests.

"Socialism/communism, financed by Western banks and aided by like-minded multinational corporations, captured by the allure of short-term profits (greed), has established Panama as an international banking center. Costa Rica is well on the road of creeping socialism. Nicaragua, despite the fact that its economy is in shambles (like communist France), has a well-entrenched communist government now. Honduras and El Salvador are fighting guerrillas for their very lives. The war drums are beating between Nicaragua and Honduras also. Tiny Belize is not a factor. Mexico, which is economically bankrupt, is clearly socialistic/communistic, and is pumping millions of illegal aliens annually into the United States. This brings us to Guatemala. . ."

So began the introduction to R.E. McMaster, Jr.'s chronicle of his official visit, by invitation of its government, to "The New Guatemala," which is "right in the middle of all this Central American turmoil. . . It is a festering thorn in the communist's red flesh . . . the constant target for vicious attacks by America's and Europe's atheistic, liberal press." McMaster tells a fascinating and important story of this country's fight against the forces of what Globescan's editor, Cynthia V. Ward, calls "communocapitalism." Guatemala's struggle for independence and freedom is told in the April 1, 1983 issue of The Reaper (P.O. Box 39026, Phoenix, AZ 85069. 1 year, $195.)

Which brings us to the economic and political situation brought about by the advances of "communocapitalism" (communism financed by megabanks and like-minded multinational corporations, and aided by what McMaster correctly labels America's and Europe's atheistic, liberal press). In a sense, to use an overworked cliché, their chickens are coming home to roost. The economic slave philosophy of John Maynard Keynes has finally failed them and in nation after nation, this debt-oriented, government-dominated system is being abandoned. Bankruptcy faces the nations, the world is floundering in an economic vacuum. And the people are beginning to understand what has been done to them by the greedy forces of evil. In the United States a tax rebellion is growing. People are beginning to understand the true nature and evil intent of the Federal Reserve System. John McLaughry, writing in Human Events, paraphrases Karl Marx: "A specter is haunting the American Establishment. . . the great Establishment institutions of our society have lost their claim to the unquestioned allegiance of the American people. Whatever their stated purposes, Big Government, Big Business, Big Banks, Big Labor, Big Media, Big Education, and other such institutions have become powers unto themselves. They have collaborated to dictate the terms of life for the citizen, the family, and the local community. They wield power, confer privilege, extort tribute, and make the rules. Their unspoken motto is 'Centralize, concentrate, and if possible, monopolize.' Their fear is a spontaneous effort by ordinary citizens to bring power back home and regain control over their own lives and their own communities. And the prime beneficiaries of every Establishment institution always seems to be the people at the top. The people who are not at the top are not willing to put up with all this any longer. (Emphasis in original).

McLaughry, once a senior policy adviser to Ronald Reagan, says "There is nothing wrong with business, or banking, or working people, or education, or defense. What is wrong is the creation of great concentrations of power that can manipulate government for their special advantage--an advantage that frequently benefits the privileged few who control those interests at the expense of the rank and file in whose name the influence is wielded." This, of course, is not a condition peculiar to the United States. It's just part of a world conspiracy. As Douglas Reed wrote in The grand Design: "The conspiracy is so old that efforts to trace its ultimate source flounder in the sands of time; the fanciful might picture it originating with the devil in council. It has reappeared periodically between the ages and between times, seemed to become dormant or defunct, but was always there." And, even as Scriptures indicate, the ultimate power of any grand conspiracy must be financial. Without the money, all such schemes, plans and ideologies are short-lived. However, through the ages, civilization after civilization, the Great Conspiracy is revived and reprogrammed. And just as the love of money (greed, land, natural resources, slave labor) is at the root of the scheme; the creation of crises has always been a part of the program. When the planners want to make a change or advance their program another step, they create a crisis. It may be a war, some kind of religious fanaticism, a desire to make the world safe for democracy, a great depression, or any other situation or condition capable of causing a crisis. And, always, before the crisis develops, a pre-planned solution has been blueprinted. Then, as the crisis develops and the rank and file are persuaded to demand a solution, the pre-planned solution is presented and carried out; and the people shout hurrahs and give praise to the planners who have deprived them of another bit of their divinely endowed freedom.

In our century, the Great Conspiracy has evolved around a plan which called for the creation of a continuing crisis, or a continuing condition wherein a crisis could be created almost at a moment's notice. This involved the building of two great opposing powers that could be, as circumstances warranted, pitted against each other and a crisis thereby programmed. The two great powers came to rest upon two ideological concepts, one to be called Capitalism, the other to be called Communism.

The force called capitalism would be headed by the United States of America; while the force called Communism would be led by the Soviet Union. In a general sense, Capitalism would provide the money, Communism the manpower. Then, in the fullness of time, the two would be merged and the money monopolists would have attained their goals: a World Economic Order, policed and made secure by a World Political Order.

Now, to carry out such a program, if honest money were used, there wouldn't be enough in the United States, not enough in the whole world, to carry out the scheme. So, a new kind of currency, debt money, had to be established and accepted by the people who previously had money backed by gold or silver. Hence the creation of Central Banks in Europe, to be followed by a Central Bank, the Federal Reserve Corporation, in the United States with the power to issue unbacked, paper notes which would replace the U.S. dollars previously in circulation. This took some time and some doing, and it was not until 1971 when then President Nixon freed the currency of the United States entirely from its former gold backing. After that, the International Bankers were free to issue unbacked loans wherever they might desire. Of course, over the decades from 1913 onward, the Fed had begun to serve as the engine of an American prosperity based on debt. As Dr. Ben Barker explained in a recent Crisis Advisory, "The debt was mistaken for true wealth, or real money, and grew at an ever-increasing rate as the years progressed. After 1933 U.S. citizens could not exchange their paper for gold; after 1964 the silver coins went underground, and after 1971 the gold window was closed to everyone. All the economic shocks we've lived through since 1971 are but consequences of debt/money creation and the subsequent repudiation of the right of the holder of that money to exchange it for gold. This repudiation of the right to exchange debt-money for gold now applied to foreigners and foreign countries as well as to U.S. citizens. The rulers of the oil-producing countries, probably advised by the Rockefeller oil cartel, decided that their oil should continue to be sold at the price of gold, so in 1973 OPEC was formed and the price, in debt-money, of oil inflated alarmingly. The result: the Arab countries were loaded with paper dollars which they fed (again at Rockefeller's suggestion?) to the Western banks to collect interest, since they couldn't collect the gold they really wanted. The International Banks, now afloat with "credits", decided they could lend that alleged money to the Lesser Developed Countries of the Third World, as well as to some of the Communist Satellites. "Those countries," explains Dr. Barker, "now called debtors, used the money they had been loaned (given?) to suck more than one-third of all U.S. exports and more than 40% of the exports of the industrial West into their nations. The method of changing short-term deposits from the oil producers into long-term loans to the LDC's was sure suicide for the bankers. In their arrogance, however, they remained convinced that no debtor nation would have the audacity to default and thereby lose access to their credit markets. As events are now proving, they were dead wrong." (Dr. Ben Barker's "Crisis Advisory," Subscription office, P.O. Box 39870, Phoenix AZ 85069. 1 year, $80.)

So, if we are to believe the Megabankers, the Media, the Eastern Establishment Elitists and most of the world's economists, we are faced with a crisis that was brought about by mistake, miscalculation, or accident, but not by intent! And if this be true, then we're all due to suffer from the effects of an unintended crisis of catastrophic proportions. We said if this be true - - -

The first step in the Marxist application of the Hegelian formula for bringing about a change: Create a Crisis! The mysterious sinking of the Battleship Maine brought about a crisis which caused the Spanish-American War. The sinking of the Lusitania brought about a crisis which led to our entry into World War One. The sinking of our battle fleet at Pearl Harbor brought about a crisis which led to our entry into World War Two. The alleged attack upon naval vessels in the Gulf of Tonkin led us into active participation in the Vietnamese War. The sinking of the U.S. Liberty by Israeli bombers -- but that's a different story. We've about run out of ships for such usage and world wars are now shunned. But a faked energy crisis brought about an increase in the price of petroleum and a change in the international economic balance which affected us all. A current and progressing nuclear ban crisis is bringing about a very dangerous change, which is leading to unilateral disarmament on the part of the Western world.

Are we faced with yet another crisis which can lead us to the completion of a New International Economic Order? Certainly there is a crisis, whether it be real or concocted is the question. The New York Times recently reported that "10 of the nation's largest banks had $43.7 billion 'at risk' at the end of 1982 - more than half again the value of their equity." The McAlvany Intelligence Advisor sums it up: "Mexico, Venezuela, Argentina, Yugoslavia, and Chile owe Citicorp $9.8 billion, Bank of America $6.8 billion, Chase Manhattan $6.1 billion, Manufacturers Hanover $6.8 billion, Morgan Guaranty $4.1 billion, Chemical $3.5 billion, Continental Illinois $2 billion, First Interstate $1.1 billion, Bankers Trust $2.2 billion, and Security Pacific $1.2 billion. Forty-four U.S. banks failed in 1982, and there is much more foreign debt coming due in 1983 than 1982. The size of the bank bailout by the IMF, the Fed, the U.S. government, the world bank, etc. is growing geometrically."

But then come a couple of clues: "The Monetary Control Act of 1980 (which in effect transfers foreign debts to the American taxpayer for payment) has been used 139 times through January 1983." And, "A behind the scenes move is under way to make the IMF the world central bank. . . . Massive new infusions are being given to the IMF which can further be expanded into loans on a 4 to 1 basis. This huge engine of international inflation will soon be orchestrating the reinforcement of all the world's central banks. The global concentration of financial power continues to accelerate." (Emphasis added). To us this situation is presented as a crisis. But to the Megabankers, it's just an excuse for shifting their debts onto the shoulders of the taxpayers of the United States and the other Trilateral Nations!

If it was all planned this way, and if the formula for change is really in progress, then something bigger than naming the IMF the world central bank (which it already is in effect) should be expected. Ben Barker, previously quoted, may have the answer. He predicts that the United States, like the Roman Republic of old, is about to cease being a Republic and become an Empire, with the Establishment Elite openly governing us all. We prefer the term Fascist (also an old Roman concept): the bundling together of Big Banks, Big Government, Big Business, Big Media, Big Labor, Big Education, and the other institutions that have become powers unto themselves. But whatever the name, here is a sketch of the Barker prediction:

"In May, 1983, at Williamsburg, Virginia a most important economic meeting will transpire. At that time international finance ministers and heads of state will go public with the solutions . . . Crisis views this as a marriage of financial institutions to government. This step could be a move into socialism, or, as in Japan, it could be a leap into a national strategy in which finance, industry, labor and government act as partners (which is this reporter's definition of fascism). The President, the Senate, the Congress and the Supreme Court have as much to say about the real issues of this era as does the Queen of England. Our fate is in the hands of the mighty Money Men and has been for years. What is different now is that the truth is finally being acknowledged. Once the fiction that the U.S. is a Republic is disposed of and appropriately grieved over, we can go on to the next step on our civilization clock. That next step, like it or not, is the Era of the Empire. The financiers will abandon their stealthy . . . maneuvers, will take open command of government and will turn the full force and power of that government toward their specific objectives in an open manner. A nation going into default could have a lot more to fear than industrial sabotage or guerrilla harassment. Chances are that the U.S. Army, Navy, Air Force and Marines will function as the collection arm of the Empire now coming out of the closet. This is the dawning of a new age. . . The upshot of these developments is that America, Inc. is going to sink or swim at the head of the pack. My advice to readers is to come out of the woods and take part. . . . Whether you support the Empire concept or wish to return to the Republic, you won't be able to do much of anything about it unless you're a part of the action." (Quoted from "Crisis Advisory," March 11, 1983. P.O.Box 39870, Phoenix AZ 85069. $80 per year).

In behalf of a false peace, we have postponed our war with evil. Now the hour is come. We must awake "and having done all, to stand."

THE THIRD TRY AT THE NINTH SUMMIT

A Ninth International Economic Summit is to be held at Williamsburg, Virginia, May 27-30. It could become a landmark, causing a complete change in the course of history. As you know, since the early 1900's, influential and powerful groups in the United States and throughout the world have worked unceasingly toward the development and implementation of a "New World Order," or "World Government." These efforts have been made by many organizations including the Council on Foreign Relations, the Royal Institute of International Affairs, the Foreign Policy Association, the World Affairs Council, the World Federalists, the Bilderbergers, the Atlantic Institute for International Affairs, the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development, the United Nations, many tax-exempt Foundations, the U.S. State Department, the Club of Rome, the Trilateral Commission, etc. Because of previous political failures, the principal and most powerful of these groups have concluded that an economic world order must come before a political world government can be established. One of the steps in that direction has been the holding, since 1975, of annual Economic Summits. This is a part of what the planners call a "third try" at their world order, and is identified by them as the "evolutionary development of international organizations," or "piecemeal functionalism." Harlan Cleveland of the Aspen Institute for Humanistic Studies has explained it best. A Rhodes Scholar in the 1930's, UN relief operator in Italy and China in the 1940's, an administrator of The Marshall Plan in the 1950's, Assistant Secretary of State and U.S. Ambassador to NATO in the 1960's, president of the University of Hawaii from 1969 to 1974, then Director of the Program in International Affairs of the Aspen Institute, and a member of the Council on Foreign Relations; with such a pedigree his suggestions were bound to be heard by the leaders of the International Establishment. So, when he wrote The Third Try at World Order, they listened. He pointed out that the first try at a New World Order, the League of Nations, was "the product of Woodrow Wilson's (and Col. House's) strong initiative . . . (but) the United States wrote most of the rules, and then decided not to join the club." And it failed. The second try, says Cleveland, was the UN. "Today, it reflects quite accurately the political turmoil and tensions of a world in deep transit. But as presently organized and used by its (Third World) members, it is ill-adapted to arrange the new bargains that are urgently needed, or for getting decisions made on a lengthening list of new global issues."

The Third Try involves, not the creation of a world government as such, but the formation of various international organizations and agencies, each having world control in its own particular area of human activity. A good start has already been made by the various agencies of the UN: the Food and Agriculture Organization, International Atomic Energy Commission, World Bank, IMF, International Civil Aviation Organization, World Court, Interdevelopment Association, International Finance Corporation, International Labor Organization, International Telecommunications Union, UNESCO, UNICEF, Universal Postal Union, World Health Organization, the Declarations on Human Rights, the Seabed Treaty, etc. In other words. The Third Try is not to create a supranational World Government as such, but to establish separate international agencies, each controlling particular aspects of all social, economic, legal and spiritual activities; each a supreme lawmaking body in its own field.

We repeat, The Third Try does not call for the elimination of nations and the creation of a World Government as such. Instead, the nations would remain, but would be subject to international laws and regulations as they are dictated by international agencies, and all jurisdiction handled by the World Court and its subsidiaries. In other words, interdependence would be the rule and regimen. All plans and programs would be discussed and laid down by such international organizations as the Trilateral Commission, Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development, etc. But such decisions would not carry the weight of officialdom and legality. Therefore, annual economic summits where the plans and programs are approved by heads of state and government, finance ministers, etc. become necessary to The Third Try programming. Hence the present procedure:

This past weekend, the annual meeting of the 320-member Trilateral Commission was held in Rome. No communiques were published and what plans were made for the heads of state to carry through were not broadcast. But it is known that the chief problems on the agenda had to do with "protectionism, international debt, restoring economic growth to increase employment, furthering East-West trade and making plans for turning the IMF into a Central World Bank, which would include discussions concerning foreign exchange markets and discussions concerning a world currency." At the same time that the annual Trilateral Commission meeting was being held, GATT talks were being conducted. In Washington, informal discussions were being held by representatives of the 88-nation General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. GATT and EEC (European Economic Community) are at loggerheads over world trading rules and Bill Brock, U.S. Trade Representative, hopes to get some kind of an agreement before the Ninth International Economic Summit begins next month. Also, Secretary of State George Pratt Shultz was in Mexico City promoting "peace and economic development in Central America" without mentioning the Mexican-American differences over Cuba, Nicaragua and El Salvador. It is hoped that things will be "better settled" in Central America and the Caribbean before the heads of state meet in Williamsburg. There also was considerable turmoil among the Big Bankers. The following quoted from the London Daily Mail of April 13 is indicative:

"The Planners are back. It is 40 years since the greatest of them all, John Maynard Keynes, gave us his plan for a prosperous world, and ten years since that system fell apart. Seeing how we have fared without it, no wonder nostalgia is breaking out all over. Now two powerful voices take up the call for more order, or for new order. The first is Lord Richardson of Duntisbourne, Governor of the Bank of England. The second is Sir Jeremy Morse, chairman of Lloyds Bank, and chairman ten years ago of the International Monetary Fund's committee which sought to bring Keynes's work up to date. The IMF and the World Bank, Keynes's brainchildren, were called into being at the Bretton Woods conference to supervise a world of stable currencies and free trade. . . . Do we need a new Bretton Woods? Yes, says Sir Jeremy Morse, we do. That is not to say that the world's money managers should suddenly converge, like a college of Cardinals, and wait for a communal inspiration. Nor will nostalgia suffice -- there is no bringing Bretton Woods back. But, says Sir Jeremy, we should be better off with more ordered systems, and now is the time to consider what those systems should be." (Unquote).

And this is where these annual international economic summits come into the picture. The money managers and the multinational executives make their plans at their exclusive meetings of Trilateralists, Bilderbergers, Foreign Policy Advisers, etc. But such plans may require official administrative, legislative or some other kind of official, governmental action. So, the heads of state and their ministers and administrators are brought together at a formal summit meeting. The government officials can then return to their countries and carry out the plans officially, and "with the consent of the governed." Henry Owen of the Brookings Institute and the Trilateral Commission explained in this manner: The world is passing through a transition period, from a system of nation-state governance into a system of global governance where economic and political decisions will be made by individuals operating at the international level. The foundations are already laid: IMF, OECD, GATT, BIS, World Bank, etc. But an important step in the building of the New World Order calls for annual Economic Summits. In a paper prepared for the Trilateral Commission by Owen of the U.S., Francois Duchene of France and Kinhide Mushakoji of Japan, entitled "The Crisis of International Cooperation," there was the call for a "permanent preparatory committee made up of individuals from the trilateral nations who can work behind the scenes in formalizing joint economic policies and programs to be implemented by the individual nation-states. Joint decisions could then be popularized and publicly promoted after they had already been reached at the economic summits." Then Owen and his Trilateral colleagues emphasized: "Of course, the final aim must be collective action by governments." Which explains the real importance of annual economic summits, the ninth of which is to be held at Williamsburg May 27-30.

The first economic summit was held in 1975 at the Chateau de Rambouillet near Paris, President Jerry Ford, Vice President Nelson Rockefeller, Secretary of State Henry Kissinger and other officials attending. One observer noted, "This was the first institutional meeting of the supranational directory of the Trilateral World. It set a precedent." Interdependence was established as a definite form of international government.

The second economic summit was held in June 1976 at Dorado Beach, Puerto Rico. When it ended the United States delegation issued this statement: "The interdependence of our destinies makes it necessary for us to approach common economic problems with a sense of common purpose and work toward mutually consistent economic strategies through better cooperation."

The third economic summit was held in May 1977 in London. This was President Carter's first important venture into world affairs, and American prestige began to sink to new lows, its claim to world leadership began to be challenged by the nations of Western Europe.

The fourth economic summit was held in July 1978 at Bonn, West Germany. For the first time a representative of a "Regional World Government," President Lloyd Jenkins of the European Community, attended the meeting. One more step toward Regional World Government had been taken.

The fifth economic summit was held in June 1979 at Tokyo. This summit was so involved with OPEC and the promotion of a worldwide energy shortage (a fake), and little else was accomplished.

The sixth economic summit was held in Venice, Italy in June 1980. Threats of the results of high inflation, severe recession and great unemployment (which the money managers and multinational executives had created) dominated the meetings.

The seventh economic summit was held in July 1981 at Ottawa, and was hosted by Socialist Trudeau. This was the new President Reagan's first group encounter with the leaders of the socialistic trilateral states of Western Europe, and his first experience with the fact that the United States is no longer an Independent Republic, but an interdependent member of a trilateral company of socialistic States. Still looked upon for security and defense, but no longer recognized as the leader; this was the new status of our Nation, tacitly recognized as such at this seventh summit.

Correction. In our Report of 4/8/1983 titled "The Moongate Controversy," we wrote that Patrick Walsh, research director of The Canadian League of Rights, attended the Third North American Regional World Anti-Communist League Conference at Phoenix, Arizona. Mr. Walsh says that he did attend the 2nd Conference, held in Toronto in 1981, but did not attend the 1982 Conference. Nor does he have any knowledge of the Unification Church having helped finance that 3rd Conference.

The eighth economic summit of the seven interdependent industrial nations was held at historic Versailles, France. Here there was said to be too much security because of the political turmoil within France itself, too much listening to statements prepared beforehand by Trilateral Commission leaders and OECD planners, too much formality and restraint. The attendants did not enjoy the conference and little of real importance was done. So, things were going to be different at the next summit meeting, declared the Trilateral Commission arrangers.

The ninth economic summit is to be held May 27-30 at Williamsburg. This colonial capitol of Virginia has been restored by the Rockefellers; it is their showplace. Here such men as Thomas Jefferson, George Washington, Patrick Henry, George Mason, James Madison, John Randolph and others of the Founding Fathers debated, called for liberty or death, framed prospective Constitutions and Bills of Rights before most of them went to Philadelphia to finish the job. In this historic spot where freedom and free enterprise were established, socialist leaders will be staying in a restored Colonial house where they can talk to each other over the back fences of restored residences. To bring an internationalist feeling to the conference, the seven principal representatives of the chiefs of state are called "sherpas." This is a Tibetan word, the name given to the mountain climbers of the Himalayas who were adept at leading parties to the summit. In the one report we have been able to find in a commercial newspaper, it is said that "The ninth economic summit of the seven industrial democracies in Williamsburg, Va., next month may go down in history as the 'back-fence summit' because of the efforts of the United States and the other powers to get rid of the grandiose and prefabricated tenor of the previous meetings. Undersecretary of State for Economic Affairs W. Allen Wallis said this is the plan of himself and the other six 'sherpas' -- the principal representatives of the chiefs of state who will lead the leaders to the summit -- in making arrangements for the Williamsburg conference. He said at a White House briefing, 'We are making a major effort to revise it for the leaders because in the past such meetings have been like conventions. We want it to be a meeting of leaders'. The agenda will be less rigid, although the leaders are certain to discuss such matters as protectionism, international debt, restoring economic growth to increase employment, East-West trade and foreign exchange markets." (Unquote).

To summarize: Policy making in this age of Trilateralism has been shifted from Congress and the Federal Administration to the supranational summits which are controlled and directed by the internationalist elite of the Western World. Ronald Reagan bears the title of President of the United States; but in reality he's the general manager of a regional subsidiary of a supranational institution. Yet one question remains. If this is a new world order, then what about the USSR whose head of empire is never invited to these summits? Trilateralist Henry Owens has this answer:

The elite which governs the USSR has not yet attained sufficient maturity to merge with the concert of powers in a system of global governance. However, they are slowly being drawn into the new international economic system through detente, trade, etc. So, it is only a matter of time and patience until the elite of the Soviet Union decide to join with the elite of the West and enter into the evolving system of global governance.

So say the Trilateralists. But isn't there someone who may challenge them, or offer a better way if we but hearken to His Voice?

"THITHER WILL THE EAGLES BE GATHERED TOGETHER"

Suddenly, after all these months, even years, the situation in Central America has become a crisis. So much of a crisis that the President must call the Congress together in joint session to plead for more money. As though money would provide a solution for a condition that began developing when money helped Castro conquer Cuba. When great crises are suddenly exposed or created, one wonders if it may not be a smoke screen to hide some other crisis situation which cannot be investigated too closely? For this is a critical time for the money monopolists of the world, the central bankers, the megabankers and the like-minded multinationalists. And never before since Bretton Woods have so many secret conferences been held by so many international elitists who are seeking ways to make the people pay their bills. Tom Anderson of Straight Talk observed that "In our banking world, it's not a question of the percentage of bank's bad loans to the bank's assets. It's a question of who the borrower is. If you're a Bert Lance or a Jake Butcher and lend big money at little interest to family and friends, that's a no-no. Big Brother busts you. But if you're a Citibank Walter Wriston or a Chase Manhattan David Rockefeller, and lend billions to bankrupt foreign friends and enemies, the billions to ball you out will be stolen from the American people. That's the scenario. Wriston's Citibank lent $5 billion to Brazil. Instead of being put out of business for this and other uncollectible, unbelievable loans, Wriston sits as chairman of President Reagan's outside economic advisers. He ought to be way outside. Rockefeller is the Mother Superior of our State Department. . . . In world affairs, Big Brother is Robin Hood in reverse. He robs the poor American taxpayer to give to the rich bankers and international corporate socialists. Big Brother, like Robin Hood, is a thief." (Unquote). Tom Anderson might have added that the original Robin Hood met with his gang in Sherwood Forest, while Big Brother Robin Hood met with his gang in Bretton Woods. The sheriff was always after the first Robin, the people are getting wise to and are getting after the second Robbing Hood. It is because the people are becoming curious and restive that the internationalists are worried. There is much talk of disbanding the Federal Reserve interest-eaters. There's a real tax rebellion brewing with an estimated twenty million people not paying their income taxes this year. And the people are getting wise to the fact that when recessions and depressions and periods of inflation and high interest rates come along, they don't just happen. And there are some patriotic American newsletter writers who are doing their best to tell the people how and why these monetary and economic crises come along.

In announcing his "last financial seminar before the 2nd Bretton Woods," Lawrence Patterson recalled that in April in Rome the Trilateral Commission held its annual meeting, and that "on May 28th the 9th Annual Economic Summit of Western governments will meet. This is the summit that will offer a bailout to the New York Banks and the Marxist governments that cannot pay. . . . the meeting called 'the kickoff to the process of a complete monetary restructuring' by New York Times columnists." One of those NYT columnists, Leonard Silk, commented: "The process of building a new and more stable world monetary system, with greater inter-dependence among nations and a wider distribution of power, will have to be evolutionary. But it must begin at some point, and the need for change is urgent. It could happen at Williamsburg [May 28th] if President Reagan and other national leaders recognize that they cannot solve their individual problems without sacrificing some of their national sovereignty." (Emphasis added). Some conservative economlsts believe that this May 28th meeting of the heads of government and their finance ministers may mark the beginning of a new kind of government for the United States. They note that there is the tendency toward a merging of Big Money, Big Business, Big Government, Big Labor, Big Education, and other Big Special Interests into a Big Union which would be very similar to the fascist type government Mussolini installed in Italy, and that FDR's New Deal Brain Trust tried to install in the United States (and would have succeeded had it not been for a Supreme Court that then looked to the Constitution for its answers.) Whatever the outcome, the Planners of their Brave New World are worried, not because of the money situation; they have all the answers for that; but because of the need to keep the "sheeple" contented and willing to be sheared every April 15th and clipped all the days between. So there has developed this plethora of top echelon, secret gatherings of the eagles of finance, politics and communications.

There was the Trilateral meeting of April 19th. A weekend later the ministers of the IMF and the World Bank began holding meetings in Washington, D.C. Over this current weekend (April 29-May 1), the Club of Rome is meeting. The Bilderbergers will gather at a secluded sanctuary during the weekend beginning May 13. Then two weeks after that comes the conference for which they all will have been preparing: the International Economic Summit of the Western Nations at Rockefellers' reconstructed Williamsburg, May 28-31. The tentative agenda for the Williamsburg

H.R.427, "THE GAY BILL OF RIGHTS."

C. Brodie Harrell, director of the American Citizenship Education Program, P.O.Box 954, Searcy, Arkansas 72143, writes:

The proponents of such bills (as H.R.427) are the first to tell us you can't legislate morals. I wonder, then, why they spend so much time in trying to legalize sin! It may be true that a law won't prevent a homosexual from being a homosexual or a drunkard from being a drunkard. But decent people have every right to expect laws to protect them from the ravages of those who do such things! Don't turn me into a criminal because I refuse to let a known homosexual teach my children or stand in the church's pulpit! How would you like for the law to tell you that you had to hire anyone who applied for a job as a babysitter, even though that person was known to be a homosexual or lesbian? That is the kind of abuse decent people will be subjected to if House Resolution 427, the "Gay Bill of Rights," should ever be turned into law. Right now it is in the Judiciary Committee of the House. It needs to die there!

Here is a suggested petition which should be signed, notarized, and sent to your Congressman:

* * * * *

WHEREAS, House Resolution 427, "the Gay Bill of Rights," will establish special laws for homosexual men and lesbian women and;

WHEREAS, these special laws will force homosexuals into my neighborhood and my business, and;

WHEREAS, I oppose any use of my taxpayer dollars to promote or assist militant homosexual causes or groups, and;

WHEREAS, if I refuse to associate with homosexuals the Federal Government can bring me into court as a criminal;

NOW AND THEREFORE, the undersigned citizen of the United States demands totally and categorically, that the United States Congress reject "the Gay Bill of Rights" and reaffirm traditional God given morality.

meeting was prepared at the Trilateral Commission meeting and, thanks to Harrison Horne who made an exclusive report to Spotlight (5/2/83) we have some information concerning what went on at that annual conference. Horne (a pseudonym?) wrote that "Heavyweights from the Bilderberg group, Council on Foreign Relations and the Club of Rome were on hand on April 17-19 here in the Eternal City [Rome] for the 14th meeting of the Trilateral Commission. It was a concerted effort to coordinate this program for a new world. . . . The Trilateralists worked feverishly behind locked and guarded doors, in the same operating style as the commission's sister groups. Overall coordination remains the responsibility of David Rockefeller." (Unquote). Horne reported that Aurelio Peccei, chairman and founder of the Club of Rome, was given "observer" status at the meetings. Winston Lord, president of the CFR, and John E. Rielly, president of the Chicago CFR, were also present. One of the main purposes of this particular meeting was to chart a new kind of monetary policy which could be presented to and approved by the heads of state and government and their finance ministers at the upcoming Williamsburg Summit. "The outlines surfaced," wrote Horne, "when Robert Strange McNamara (former president of the World Bank and now president of the Bank of America) was among three authors who delivered a report on 'Facilitating Development in a Changing Third World: Trade, Finance, and Aid.' The other two authors were Takeshi Watanabe, Japanese Trilateral chairman and former president of the Asian Development Bank; and Jacques Lesourne, former director of Interfutures Project." Paul Volcker, chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, addressed one of the sessions. Henry Kissinger participated in a discussion of "Trilateral Relations" with Raymond Barre, former prime minister of France; and Nobuhiko Ushiba, Japan's former minister for external economic affairs. Zbigniew Brzezinski discussed the Soviet Union in the post-Brezhnev era with Otto Grieg Tidemand, Norway's former defense and economic affairs minister; and Fujii Kamiya, professor of international relations at Kelo University.

Horne reported that "The Trilateralists, like their brother, the Bilderbergers, have their captive press attending as 'members' so the Establishment media will be set up to sell their tortured reasoning to a gullible American public. These media luminaries are honor-bound, under the long-settled common law of journalism, to report nothing that transpires because it was agreed in advance that all matters are 'off the record.' They are Tom Johnson, publisher of the Los Angeles Times; Joseph Kraft, a columnist in the Washington Post; Theo Sommer, editor-in-chief of Die Zeit in Hamburg, West Germany; Arrigo Levi, columnist for la Stampa of Turin, Italy; Jean-Claude Casanova, a professor of economics at the Institute of Political Science and director of Commentaire in Paris; Akira Ogata, a news commentator for the Japan Broadcasting Corp.; Flora Lewis, a columnist for the New York Times operating out of Paris; and Hobart Rowen, correspondent for the Washington Post. Internationalists with U.S. credentials speaking or otherwise participating in the Trilateral Commission meetings included Gerard C. Smith, former head of U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency and Chief Negotiator of SALT I; former Ambassador-at-large for Non-proliferation Matters and co-founder with Rockefeller and Brzezinski of the Trilateral Commission; William F. Martin, Staff Member of the U.S. National Security Council; Christopher Makins, Division Manager of the National Security Studies Systems Group, Science Application, Inc.; William F. Martin, Staff Member, U.S. National Security Council; Inc.; Charles Morrison, Scholar-in-Residence at the Japan Center for International Exchange; Russell A. Phillips, Jr., Executive Vice President of the Rockefeller Brothers Fund; Donald Rickerd, president of the William H. Donner Foundation; Gary G. Sick, Program Officer of the Ford Foundation; Richard Vine, Director General of the Atlantic Institute for International Affairs; Charles B. Heck, North American Director of the Trilateral Commission; and others, some of whom were previously mentioned.

So much for the international planners at the Trilateral Convention. Next comes the Bilderberg meetings at which time the Rockefeller and the Rothschild forces, usually competitive, will join together to complete the final instructions of the International Supranational government to be delivered to the representatives of the National governments when they meet at Williamsburg, May 27th. Still the question remains: With the Rockefeller forces and the Rothschild forces cooperating at least temporarily for their common purpose, what of the Andropov forces which share that common purpose? Some light is shed by the following report:

In our last DBR (4/22/83) we quoted Henry Owens, Trilateral Commissioner and Brookings Institute official, who explained how the merging of the USSR with the Western Nations would occur. He explained that the elite which governs the USSR is slowly being drawn into the new international economic system through detente, trade, etc., and that it is only a matter of time and patience until the elite of the Soviet Union decides to join with the elite of the West and enter into "the evolving system of global governance." Well, that merging has begun and is well underway. Panorama, a Milan publication, recently reported: "Anyone who still believes that high finance is the exclusive province of Western capitalism must reconsider. Increasingly...Red multinationals are promoting their interests within the industrialized nations and making their presence known in the new markets of developing nations." To which Editor Cynthia V. Ward (Globescan) made the following comments:

"It is well known that Western multinational corporations have set up shop in Communist slavestates. But if you've never heard of a 'Red Multinational' you are not alone. These Communist-owned enterprises have kept a very low profile, often moving into Western countries through hidden 'partnerships' with native businesses. Red Multinationals are companies set up and headquartered in the Soviet Union or other Communist nations, mainly Romania, Hungary, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Poland and East Germany. These firms operate branches in the U.S., Western Europe, Asia, the Mideast and Africa. Altogether, the Red MNC's control about 544 companies worldwide, with 272 located in the West. The Communist Multinationals have been extremely successful in penetrating Western economies, and some have become leaders in their fields. In Italy, for example, Soviet companies do business in the fishing, construction, petroleum, timber, machine parts, brokerage, and navigation industries. STAN Italy, which sells machinery, tools and stamp presses made in the USSR, is 90-percent owned by Stankolimport of Moscow. And in Rome the firm Sibicar, controlled by a giant Bulgarian Multinational, rakes in $5.8 million in profits each year.

Backstopping the Red Multinationals is a growing network of Communist-owned banks and financial institutions, whose goal is to accumulate private Western capital to support Communism. These institutions specialize in the sale of Soviet gold and in financing Communist trade in the West. Not only do the MNC's undermine Western economies and make them dependent on Communism; they are also a real threat to Western security. These firms are known to function as channels for privileged information, and they serve as bases for Communist spy operations in the West. But most dangerous of all, the Red Multinationals are an increasingly profitable way of enticing Western consumers and investors into supporting the failing economies of Communism." (Quoted from "Globescan," of Paris and Geneva, with U.S. Subscription offices at 1545 New York Ave., N.E., Washington, D.C., 20002. 1 year, $125).

So the merging of the three great Monopoly Capitalistic forces is well underway. But, in the greater sense, it is said that a "house divided against itself shall not stand."

ONCE MORE TO COERCE THE CONGRESS

Even a Rockefeller -- or any person in Rockefeller's position of power -- must have some worries and very serious doubts as to the sturdiness and life-span of the paper empire which he and his family have built. Like the house-of-cards that it is, it could come tumbling down and get blown away at any time the people's confidence and the government's support begin to falter and fade away. So, when there develops any doubt as to the ultimate success of one of his or his cohort's schemes, added precautions must be taken. And the present doubt seems to concern the Congress. In these two months, April and May of 1983, there has been scheduled a series of highly important secret conferences of members of the International Elite, all aimed at altering and reconstructing what Rockefeller himself calls the "Disarray in the International Economy." To repeat what we have written in previous Reports, there was the annual conference of the members of the Trilateral Commission held in Rome beginning April 19th. That was followed by a hush-hush huddle of the officials of the International Monetary Fund (IMF) and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank) in Washington, April 22. The next week witnessed the Club of Rome conclave, April 29th. Then the Bilderberg Group is to gather clandestinely over the weekend beginning May 13th. And finally, there was to be the all-important International Economic Summit at Williamsburg, Virginia beginning May 28th; this latter conference to be attended by the heads of state or government of the seven Trilateral Nations, along with their respective ministers of finance, treasury or exchequer.

But, due to unexpected circumstances, one more meeting has been added to this list. David Rockefeller, writing as the head of the Trilateral Commission, has called for a gigantic gathering of very selected business executives, bankers, lawyers, economists, commercial planners, academics, mediapersons and labor leaders. This gathering is to be a "brief conference" in Washington on May 16-17, composed of all those important people who are not members of the CFR or the TLC or their associated elitist organizations, but who are powerful enough to have some impact on Congress concerning a very important matter, in fact vital, to the success of the builders of the New International Economic World Order. Lawrence Patterson, publisher of "The Patterson Strategy Letter" which he now titles A Monthly Lesson in Criminal Politics, published a photocopy of Rockefeller's letter to the etceteras in his Strategy Letter dated May 31, 1983. We have reprinted Rockefeller's letter for the interest of those who do not receive Patterson's important monthly strategy letter. You'll find the letter interesting, and the reasons for Rockefeller's having written and having it mailed, even more interesting.

All the eyes of the International Elitists will be focused on the Summit meeting in Williamsburg. First, because the last annual summit was something of a flop since it came at a time when President Reagan was denouncing the proposed construction of that Soviet pipeline from the Urals to Europe. Reagan later was brought into line and was forced to recant and rescind his previous orders concerning the shipment of strategic materials to the USSR. Under pressure, he approved the construction of the pipeline, which is being built with materials supplied by the Trilateral Nations, American technology, and Euro-Asian slave labor. Also, Reagan's original pro-American stand which had disrupted the Versailles Summit has been dealt with and the International Elitists are confident that Ronald Reagan has learned his lesson, will not call his own shots, and will go along with the plans and instructions to be handed

As I believe you know, the Trilateral Commission regularly organizes programs for a somewhat wider group than its membership. Recent examples were a dinner with Phillip Habib in New York last month and a brief conference in Washington on May 16-17 concerned with the "Disarray in the International Economy." I have enclosed the program. We shall open with a dinner on the evening of May 16 for Giovanni Agnelli, who will give us a European perspective on current international economic troubles. A Japanese perspective will be provided the following morning by Yotaro Kobayashi, the rather young and articulate President of Fuji-Xerox. Tom Clausen will speak at the breakfast on the 17th; Bob Hormats in the morning; and Bill Brock at lunch, which concludes the meeting.

I do hope you will be able to be with us on May 16-17. A reply card is enclosed for your convenience.

With best wishes,

Sincerely,
(signed) David Rockefeller down at the upcoming Summit. As the London Economist of April 23 suggested, "The possibility that next month's western economic summit in Williamsburg, might turn into an ugly 'son of Versailles' is receding." The Economist also says that "Americans responsible for preparing the Williamsburg meeting (the Trilats-Ed.) now say that Mr. Reagan will not press anything on the Europeans and others (Japan and Canada make up the group) which they cannot stomach." Finally, the Economist refers back to American Revolutionary times to conclude: "Politicians have grown used to saying 'we live in an interdependent world,' but have neglected to do much about it. Williamsburg, where the Virginia convention in 1776 instructed its delegates to the continental congress to move for independence, may seem an odd place for making a declaration for interdependence. But God grant the world a Patrick Henry to cry for one" (sic; or should we say "sick"? Emphasis added.)

So, all seemed set for a Williamsburg Summit where the seven Trilateral Nations would declare for the sacrificing of their independence and the creation of a State of Togetherness where, in the interests of the "Disarray in the International Economy," the IMF would be accepted as a Central Bank for all the Nations, perhaps even superseding in financial importance the Central Banks of the seven Nations, even our own much condemned Fed. But, something happened on the way to the Summit! The IMF wasn't going to be able to act as a Central Bank unless the people of these seven Nations gave the IMF some more money. Some $20 billion more, the part of that from the American taxpayers to be reckoned at $8.5 billion as a starter. And for such a sum, even if it were only paper promises and debt money, the approval of the U.S. Congress would be necessary. The Reagan Administration had approved the giving, but Congress had demurred. And it was reckoned by the international elitists that the Williamsburg Summit would prove fruitless unless Congress could be coerced into giving that $8.5 billion of taxpayers' money to the IMF. British Fabian Socialist Dennis Healey said it in these words: "The magic of the marketplace has produced a private banking system which can survive only by lending ever more money to bad debtors and is actually bullied into doing so by the official institutions which are supposed to guarantee its prudence; for example, this year the IMF is asking the banks to provide $20 billion more to the non-developing countries, while providing only $12 billion itself."

Now, the power brokers have managed to get most any legislation they desired out of our Representatives. And this demand for another $8.5 billion to the IMF might have been approved as other such bills have been approved, except that something else happened while they were on the way to the Summit where the IMF was to be installed as the world's money manager.

At the same time that this IMF giveaway was being promoted, the Reagan Administration decided that it should have a new law demanding that there be a withholding tax on all savings and dividends. This caused a rebellion on the part of the banks (as differentiated from the Megabanks), who would be forced to spend millions to act in yet another capacity as involuntary tax collector for the federal government. The American Bankers Association decided to fight back, mounted a $300,000 advertising campaign which featured the slogan: "Congress Wants a Piece of Your Savings. What They Need is a Piece of Your Mind." An estimated 18 million cards and letters of protest flooded into the Halls of Congress. As a result, the law will be delayed for four years, maybe forever. But the campaign had done more than kill a bad law. It had aroused those millions of citizens to the fact that something was very rotten with the state of our fiscal system. Also, there had been much newsletter exposure of the Fed, and at latest count 26 of the 50 States have challenged the constitutionality of the Federal Reserve Act, and the movement is growing as more and more State Legislators are educated as to the sins of those who own the Fed and operate it for their own vast profits. At the same time, there has been much news about the federal budget, and the knowledge that higher taxes would really mean higher deficits. And while the people were becoming aroused and more informed as to the mystery of money, along came this last straw: the demand from the International Monopolists that the IMF be given an additional $8.5 billion. Otherwise the Megabanker lenders might go broke. Fortune Magazine (5/2/83) admitted that "The exposure of the lenders is almost unbelievable. The LDCs (Less Developed Countries) and Eastern Europe (the Communist Satellites) together owe Western banks some $420 billion; some $135 billion of that amount...is owed to U.S. banks. Last fall when the international financial system came close to collapse...they (the Megabanks) were bailed out temporarily by bridge loans from the Federal Reserve, the U.S. Treasury, and the Bank for International Settlements. It's not clear that these organizations will always be able to come to the rescue in time." That's why the International Elitists are plugging for a new status for the IMF, which if properly financed can help with future rescues. But the IMF itself must receive more financing, and $8.5 billion is the share U.S. taxpayers are supposed to hand over. But, the Congress must approve the handout. And that's why David Rockefeller called this special conference in Washington on May 16-17 to get more important lobbyists to pressure a reluctant Congress to pass the necessary legislation, which they are assured President Reagan will sign immediately upon receipt.

We like the way Larry Patterson explained it. He wrote: "Using his position as Chairman of the Trilateral Commission, David Rockefeller is attempting to bring pressure to bear on Congress to pass the bank bailout by offering 75,000 previously ignored corporate executives the prospect of hobnobbing with internationally known personalities. Corporate presidents of previously ignored firms are finally being recognized. ...Every individual involved will conceive of reasons why he has finally been acknowledged. Little will these unsuspecting people realize what dupes they are...Those who smell that they are being used may not be able to resist the drawing power in any event....Here is where the power-base of the CFR Trilateral Combine lies. This is the nub of it: the mouth-watering possibility of being able to tell their neighbors and business associates of "their new-found friends." They will fall over themselves to accept Rockefeller's invitation...Those in attendance May 16 & 17 will be asked to join local communities, formed for the purpose of pressuring Congress to pass the bailout! They will be told of the collapse of the financial structure if the payment (to the IMF) is not forthcoming. They will be told that their businesses and communities will be affected in a direct and personal way....The committees formed will draw in tens of thousands more, nationally. People of influence, at their local community level, will - unless something is done - force Congress to bail out the banks! Only the private newsletter industry and their subscribers can stop this from happening. We urge you to pass along the message by requesting additional copies of this newsletter....We are beginning to see that this is more effective than asking subscribers to write letters to Congress, although this is certainly encouraged." (unquote).

Then Larry Patterson has some not-so-thinly-veiled sarcasm which he addresses to those duped corporate executives who might have received Rockefeller's invitation as well as one of Patterson's newsletter. He writes: "One of the personalities whom unsuspecting Americans will be invited to rub shoulders with is A.W. Clausen, new Chairman of the World Bank. Come...meet Tom Clausen, Bob Hormats, & Bill Brock. The appeal is overwhelming! Oh, yes, you'll also have a chance to talk to Allan Greenspan and possibly even Henry Kissinger, Zbigniew Brzezinski, and Giovanni Agnelli. Just remember, many people have waited all their lives for such an opportunity. After all, one may wish to get his daughter into a prestigious eastern school - or his son. Contact made at these meetings could pave the way for otherwise unattainable goals. Who knows - new business contacts might result from these big name personalities. At the very least, one's family would benefit immensely. Remember, the chance to dine and have cocktails and to be on a 'first name basis' is absolutely critical to small minded people. The appeal is overwhelming." (Quoted from the Patterson Strategy Letter of May 31, 1983. A monthly, $149.94 per year. P.O.Box 37432, Cincinnati, Ohio 45237.)

Mr. Patterson's statement that the Rockefeller invitation will have an overwhelming appeal to "small minded people" is well said. But it would be of no appeal whatsoever to those who recall that "Then Peter opened his mouth, and said, Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons" (Acts 10:34). Patterson is also right when he says that only the independent press - the newsletters and the weekly tabloids - can spread the word and prevent this banker bailout from being passed by Congress. He cites Human Events and The Phyllis Schlafly Report which have mounted campaigns against the bailout. Among others to be commended is the chairman of the Liberty Lobby Board of Policy Robert M. Bartell, who reminds us that the legislation involved is S.695 and H.R.1907, both of which have already passed through some committees. Liberty Lobby is mounting a major campaign against this legislation, and urges all readers to immediately contact their congressmen and senators "and protest this squandering of America's national treasure."

Defeating this bailout attempt would go far toward defeating the aims of the organizers of this Williamsburg Summit, who consider it as one more big step toward the completion of their New World Order and the merging of East and West.

FRAUDS, FAKES, AND FORGERIES WHICH ARE LEGAL OR OTHERWISE

In George Orwell's description of the Three Regional World Governments which he pictures as existing in 1984, he states that in each of them there is a "Ministry of Truth" which is charged with the duty of keeping "truth" up to date. Past deeds are wiped out, past and present are rewritten to suit Big Brother. Heroes, great men and great events worth honoring or remembering are deleted from the records and washed from the people's brains. The only truth is what the Ministry of Truth declares to be truth, and what is truth today may be a lie tomorrow. Unhappily, our real world is not too different from Orwell's fictional world, except that we are still in the process of arriving at the most extreme conditions described in 1984. However, with our Department of Education, the Communications Media, including textbooks control, and our "court historians," what is real and what is fabricated is often difficult to discern. Facts are often ignored, covered up, or re-arranged so that "truth" is what our persuasion engineers declare it to be. Examples: how many really believe the official explanation of the Kennedy assassination? Or of the Lincoln assassination, for that matter. As for diaries, was the one ascribed to Anne Frank really written by a girl bearing that name? Newsweek recalls another diary episode: "It was potentially one of the great scoops of the decade; the secret diaries of the reviled dictator who led his country into World War II, bearing the promise of rewriting much of the history of the 1930s and 1940s. Small wonder that they fetched a healthy six-figure price from The Sunday Times of London. What a pity they turned out to be a hoax, and the world never got to read the innermost thoughts of Benito Mussolini. ¶ That happened in 1968, and The Sunday Times was comparatively lucky: Mussolini's son, Vittorio, quickly spotted historical and linguistic anomalies that clearly marked the diaries as bogus." Then there was the case concerning Clifford Irving, who came up with an "authentic autobiography" of the reclusive magnate Howard Hughes. The opus would have been accepted as true, except that Hughes himself came out of his seclusion long enough to denounce the "autobiography," and Clifford went to jail on charges of fraud. Now we have the allegedly authentic 62-volume set of the day-to-day thoughts of Adolph Hitler. The editors of Stern Magazine accepted the volumes as authentic, began their publication. The Sunday Times of London purchased rights to the story for publication in English. Then, historians decided they and the experts were wrong, that the diaries were a hoax. Another case of fraud, and some deluded reporter and perhaps others will probably go to jail for fraud.

But there is another side to the story concerning the political and militant activities of Hitler that can no longer be treated as hoax, fraud or forgery. Too much honest and reliable research has gone into the search for the facts concerning how Hitler came to power and who financed his rise. In this connection, we recently were handed an article first published in 1948. We quote parts of this article:

WHO LIFTED HITLER INTO THE SADDLE?

By Werner Zimmerman

In 1933 a pamphlet of 99 pages was published by the reputed publishing house of Van Holkema & Warendorfs Uitg. Mij. N.V. in Amsterdam, entitled "De Geldbronnen van het National Socialism - The Money Sources of National Socialism. Three Talks with Hitler. By Sidney Warburg. Retold by J.G. Schoup." Upon its publication the booklet was immediately bought up by agents of High Finance and the Nazi Government, and destroyed; and later replaced by a falsification. However, one copy of the original edition arrived safely in Switzerland. I held it in my own hands, and Dr. Rene Sonderegger, editor, free-economics leader and Swiss Parliamentarian, published parts of it in "Financial World History," Resverlag, Zurich, 1936. A complete reprint is in preparation.* Here we only want to refer to some outstanding facts, as stated in this booklet.

Felix Warburg was the famous organizer of the Hamburg-America Line. His brother, Paul M. Warburg, was a partner in the international banking house of Kuhn, Loeb & Co., New York. Sidney Warburg is his son. In 1929 the Wall Street firm, Guarantee Trust, asked young Sidney Warburg to take care of the American interests in Germany, because he knew the country and its language. American credits, amounting to 58 billion dollars were involved in Central Europe alone. President Carter of the Guarantee Trust had arranged a meeting with the directors of the Federal Reserve Board in conjunction with young Rockefeller of the Standard Oil Co., McBlean of the Royal Dutch Co., and five other independent bankers.

What were their aims? Warburg was to find and support a man in Germany who would be able to carry out a national revolution. The Peace Treaty of Versailles had given France tremendous advantages by means of the reparations which permitted the Bank of France to embark on a financial policy directed against the English Pound and the American Dollar. This had to be stopped, the treaty amended, France to be intimidated and her financial superiority removed. . . . The speculators of Wall Street wanted to exploit Germany by themselves. Who could help them?

Warburg went to Munich and met with Hitler and his confidant, von Heydt. Result: Hitler consented to Warburg's proposal and received via the banking house of Mendelsohn & Co., Amsterdam, a first installment of 10 million dollars in order to push his political movement forward. This was in 1929. In 1931 the trend of the rate of exchange for the dollar and pound became dangerous. France received such big deliveries of goods from Germany that she was unable to pay either for the interest or on the principal of her debts. Hitler demanded further financial support: 500 million marks for a "real revolution" or 200 million marks if a legal rise to power was feasible. Warburg transacted a further 15 million dollars to Hitler, 5 million each by the banks of Mendelsohn & Co., Amsterdam; the Rotterdam Bank Consortium, Rotterdam; and the Banca Commerciale Italia, Rome. Warburg went to Rome with von Heydt, Gregor Strasser, and Goering and then returned from Genoa to New York on the "Savoya" after having fulfilled his mission. On January 30, 1933 Hitler became Chancellor of the Reich. In February, Warburg had his last talk with Hitler in the Fasanstrasse 28. In the dawn of the morning, in the doorway, Warburg once more reminded Hitler of his job: Fight against France. Then he departed for Holland.

The Fuehrer was under heavy pressure. The burning of the Reichstag building offers the sombre background. Goebbels describes this in his book "Von Kaiserhof zur Reichshanzel." The simple fact was: The party held the office, but not the power. If they wanted to win the March elections they would again need money, and plenty of it. Then, all of a sudden, a ray of hope appears, as Goebbels reports. A big amount of money is assured. Now Hitler moves, full of hope, into his last struggle for power and confidently exclaims: "We are going to be victorious!"

* The book in question, written by Sidney Warburg and given a friend for publication in 1933, was supposedly "bookburned" immediately after its first publication. However, as Zimmerman states, one copy was not destroyed, and the book has been reprinted recently by a West German publisher. We do not, however, know how or from where a copy may be obtained.

Why has this financial support of the Hitler party never been investigated, not even at the Nuremberg War Crimes Court? There it was strictly taboo to mention the Versailles Treaty and anything connected with it. Warburg's pamphlet explains this. Also explains this last big amount, which came from New York. According to H. Sonderegger, the total costs of the lifting of the Nazis into power, in order to revive the bankrupt armaments industries and establish market monopolies, amounted to 200 million Reichmarks, namely: Wall Street paid through Warburg 126 million; Sir Henry Deterding about 50 million; von Papen received 14 million as agent of the banker Schroeder, Dusseldorf; Minister of Economics Schmitt of the Stuttgart "Alliance" about 10 million. This latter (Schmitt) was permitted to be a minister for six months, only to be replaced by Schacht, who had always been a most loyal servant of the money lords.

In the spring of 1933 the young, race conscious Jew, Sidney Warburg, became disillusioned by the Jew persecutions and the burning of the Reichstag building. He confided his disappointment to a friend and handed him his manuscript for publication. What happened to this publication was stated at the beginning of this article. But the money was given, the general purpose achieved, the Nazis were in power and the avalanche began to roll: re-armament, auto-highways, gigantic business for Shell and Standard Oil, for steel, copper, rubber. A general race for armaments began. Profits from loans, profits from armaments and related industries were made. Then came war with its immeasurable destruction of real capital wealth, a destruction which created scarcity of wealth in Europe for decades to come and insured the interest yield from new constructions. Thoughtless, with a satanic grin, they (the international bankers and multinational executives) delivered everything which yielded profit to the arming countries. While the Japanese were throwing their bombs on Pearl Harbor and annihilating most of the Pacific fleet, ships were underway from Australia and America to Japan, loaded with oil and gas, steel, rubber and so forth. . . The war-guilt investigators were silent about this also.

John Pierpont Morgan, Jr., the "uncrowned king" of the world, was in alliance with Hitler. The new German budget was ordered to be such as to maintain the mark stable until Morgan had sold his German papers. Hjalmar Schacht was his support.

High finance goes after profit. Death or life, destruction or construction, everything is viewed from the point of profit. It is international. It knows neither nation nor country. Ruthlessly the nations are incited to fight each other. The vanquished have always to carry the blame. Hatred - nationally colored - is bred and cultivated to hide the wire pullers. It blinds the eyes of almost all people. But all the while, unperturbed and ruthless, rule the powers of money, of speculation, safely gathering in their loot. (End of quotations from an article by Werner Zimmerman, first published in 1948).

This story from the past, about "who lifted Hitler into the saddle" is relevant and important today because the world is still governed by persons other than those who occupy the visible seats of power. The group which the editors of "Global Reach" call the World Managers financed the conquest of Russia by Lenin, the rise of Hitler, and the building of the USSR into a world power. The present generation of those same World Managers is meeting in various secret sessions in various places, planning the management of a meeting of the heads of seven states in an international economic summit which they will manage. There is this difference: This generation of World Managers is a more powerful, more affluent group than were their sires. And they have taken great pains in preparation for the Memorial Day weekend meeting at the Rockefeller-restored Colonial Williamsburg, onetime capital of the State of Virginia. The World Managers have projected the fear that the International Banks are about to be destroyed, and that the taxpayers of the Western industrial nations must come to their rescue. Upon this premise these World Managers Intend to establish a New Economic World Order, and lay a firmer foundation for the establishment of a New Political World Order.

We thought we had finished with stories of the preparations for this Summit. But we failed to report on what may be the most important of them all: the meeting of the finance, foreign and trade ministers at the 24-Nation ministerial conference of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development, held in Paris May 8 to 9. Because the OECD is a European creation, with its headquarters in Paris, and is controlled by the Rothschild rather than the Rockefeller interests, little is written of its importance or purposes in the American press. Perhaps we could make this distinction: The Trilateral Commission plans, The OECD organizes. Our records show that the OECD was originally founded in 1948 as the Organization for European Cooperation. But, as the European Community began to become a Regional World Government, competitive economically with America as well as the USSR, it changed its name, expanded its activities, and in 1961 became an organization for Economic Cooperation and Development, not just for Europe, but for all the world. Furthermore, where the Trilateral Commission has but seven member Nations, OECD has 24, including all of the Trilats, all of the NATO Nations, and other nations it classifies as industrial, such as Austria, Australia, Yugoslavia, Finland, etc. In the book "Global Reach - The Power of the Multinational Corporations," by Richard Barnet and Ronald Muller, the authors state that "The managers of the world's corporate giants proclaim their faith that where conquest has failed, business can succeed.... Aurelio Peccei, director of Fiat and organizer of the Club of Rome states flatly that the global corporation 'is the most powerful agent for the internationalization of human society.'... But the World Managers know that neither slogans nor 'educational campaigns' are enough to legitimize the exercise of political power. Authority must be sanctioned by law. Thus, men like George Ball (Bilderberger, Lehman Bros., CFR, etc.) have been talking about international chartering of global corporations by some world organization.... They would rather have organizations dominated by industrial countries, such as the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development do the regulating." (Emphasis added). Translation: The World Managers' ideal of a political world government would be the OECD! The International Chamber of Commerce agrees, so does the powerful Atlantic Institute. So, what OECD says is important because it is backed by the people that are called World Managers.

But, out of this OECD meeting came a hopeful sign. The American attendees, Secretaries Shultz, Regan, Baldrige, and special trade representative Brock, found themselves in a somewhat hostile camp. The host, confessing socialist Mitterand of France, took the occasion to "lecture" the American delegation, and the other socialist ministers of the European Nations seemed at odds with the American delegation. Regan and Brock gave a dinner, and only the European underlings came. The ministers declined. It may be that the competition for world control between the Rockefeller and the Rothschild interests were at the bottom of the disagreement. But The New York Times ended its May 10th report of the conference with the following paragraph: "The overall circumstances - the presence of deep ideological differences accompanied by a political need to avoid a fiasco at Williamsburg - raise a possibility that neither side likes to acknowledge: that the outcome of the summit meeting will be inoffensive formulas avoiding trouble, but bringing little practical action to accelerate an international economic recovery." Translated: Because of the rift between the Trilateral Commission and the OECD, the Williamsburg Summit may prove to be another fiasco. Because "a house divided....."

PRIDE, POMP AND CIRCUMSTANCE

A LA THE NEW WORLD ORDER

Released for publication by the U.S. Bureau of Public Affairs in October, 1962, was Department of State Publication 7432, General Foreign Policy Series 183. It described the foreign policy of the United States. It read, and we quote verbatim:

* * * * *

Our policy may be said to have five principal components:

1. To deter or defeat aggression at any level, whether of nuclear attack or limited war or subversion and guerrilla tactics; that is, Security Through Strength.
2. To bring about a closer association of the more industrialized democracies of Western Europe, North America, and Asia - specifically Japan - in promoting the prosperity and security of the entire free world; in other words, "Progress Through Partnership."
3. To help the less developed areas of the world carry through their revolution of modernization without sacrificing their independence or their pursuit of democracy; that is, "A Revolution of Freedom."
4. To assist in the gradual emergence of a genuine world community, based on co-operation and law, through the establishment and development of such organs as the United Nations, the World Court, the World Bank and Monetary Fund, and other global and regional institutions; that is, A World "Community Under Law."
5. To strive tirelessly to end the arms race and reduce the risk of war, to narrow the areas of conflict with the Communist Bloc, and to continue to spin the infinity of threads that bind peace together; that is, To Win "Peace Through Preserverance." (Emphasis added in all of the above).

* * * * *

That was our foreign policy in 1962, it remains our foreign policy in 1983. For the furtherance of the second component of that policy, the heads of government of the seven Nations of "Western Europe, North America, and Asia - specifically Japan" are meeting on Memorial Day Weekend in Rockefeller-restored Colonial Williamsburg, Virginia. In 1962, at the time of the publication of the foregoing statement of policy, the U.S. Secretary of State was Dean Rusk, longtime member of the Council on Foreign Relations, who had served as president of the Rockefeller Foundation from 1952 until chosen by President John Kennedy to serve as his Secretary of State. From that time onward there has been no important change in our U.S. foreign policy, and since that time every Secretary of State has been a member of the Council on Foreign Relations. The present Secretary of State, George Pratt Shultz, is a director of the CFR, his term expiring this year. He will, of course, be present as a chief adviser when President Ronald Reagan hosts the 9th Annual International Economic Summit at Williamsburg.

The current (5/23/83) issue of U.S. News & World Report, as it has had for a number of years, contains a special section titled "Who Runs America." Again as usual, the ten top "rulers" are elected or appointed officers of the Federal Government, starting with President Reagan as top "ruler", followed in the order of their selected importance by Fed Chairman Paul Volcker, House Speaker Tip O'Neill, Secretary of State George Shultz, Senate Majority Leader Howard Baker, Pentagon Chief Caspar Weinberger, Chief of Staff James Baker, Presidential Assistant Edwin Meese, Supreme Court Justice Warren Burger, and Treasury Secretary Donald Regan. Let us emphasize that these are all members of the legal government of the United States. They are responsible for directing the making and interpreting of laws, inserting "administrative laws" into the Federal Register, etc. They are officers of the official government of the United States. But, as Disraeli, Lord Beaconsfield, said so many years ago and so factually, "The world is governed by very different personages to what is imagined by those who are not behind the scenes..."

However, it is noteworthy that of the ten men "who run America" according to U.S. News, six of them are members of the Council on Foreign Relations. They are Paul Volcker, the man who handles the money monopoly in behalf of the money manipulators; George Pratt Shultz, who makes American foreign policy sometimes very foreign; Howard Baker, who carries the ball for the money managers in the Senate; Caspar Weinberger, who looks to the interests of those comprising what President Eisenhower called the Military-Industrial Complex; James Baker, who protects the President from conservatives and right-wing ideas; and Donald Regan, who issues the Treasury notes to the Fed so the stockholders in that corporation can create money out of nothing and collect interest on what may exist simply as computer bytes. Of the other four "who run America," the list is headed by Ronald Reagan. As President, he is allowed to say some of the right things, like how he's going to get rid of the Departments of Education and Energy, how he'll use the veto to prevent any tax increases, how the Holy Bible really is the Word of God despite suits brought against him by the ACLU. But, in general, the President just says the right things, and nothing happens. He's in a position to be an excellent propaganda tool to deceive the moral majority types. In the matter of foreign policy, his power is comparable to that of the Queen of England in that same category. As Dr. Ben Barker said of him: "Reagan, the conservative white knight, turned his Presidency over to the Imperialists. Tax cuts turned into tax hikes. Our industrial heart was gutted. A sweeping recession plunged the nation into misery. And the Money Manipulators continue to laugh at us."

When one of the gang "who runs America" happens to be a member of the Trilateral Commission and is elected or appointed to a federal office, he is required to resign from the TLC. This has never been a requirement affecting members of the CFR. However, the ten men who allegedly run America could not all be members of the CFR. There would be no apparent opposition within the ruling ranks. So, third on the list of the ten "who run America" is Tip O'Neill. He provides the supposed strong opposition to the "in" party. The World Managers have learned of the advantages, to

Don Bell:

I cannot allow the false allegations about the USCWF, which appeared in your April 8, 1983 Report to go unchallenged....As USCWF Treasurer, I know the source of the funds for the conference....Therefore, I am prepared to prove....that your allegation that 'Singlaub's UCWF sponsored the NARWACL Conference which was financed by Moon's Unification Church organization! is false -- insofar as the "financing" is concerned... I sincerely hope -- and trust -- that this letter and the letter you receive from Gen. Singlaub will be sufficient to obtain the retraction and apology Gen. Singlaub is calling for. (Signed) Albert T. Koen, Treasurer, USCWF.

Our reply: The information in question came to us from a usually reliable source. But if we and our informer were wrong, we shall be very happy to retract. One of the saddest things about the anti-Communist movement is that so many of the organizations have been infiltrated and detracted or destroyed.

them, of maintaining the "Capitalism vs. Communism" syndrome in order to further their goals. Likewise, in countries not totally totalitarian, there is need for a similar national competition. So, in the U.S., there is maintained the "Republican vs. Democrat" confrontation, although there's really "not a dime's worth of difference between them." Number eight on the list is Edwin Meese, who guards the gate to the Oval Office and lends a needed "spirit of conservatism" to the Administration. And finally comes Warren Burger, listed as number nine. As the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, he is supposed to be like Caesar's wife was supposed to be. There must be no suspicion of political preference or party bias. So much for the ten men who, according to U.S. News, run America.

It is becoming understood more and more by more and more people that there is a dual government arrangement for these United States. There is the government of men and women who are elected or appointed to positions in the visible government. But there is the more powerful shadow government (once called invisible) that tells the official government how to run America. The Newsweek's "Second 10" comes very close to naming properly the principals in this shadow government. The list is headed by David Rockefeller, who also heads the Council on Foreign Relations, the Trilateral Commission, has a controlling interest in the Bilderberg Group, is a strong partner in the Paris-based Organization for Economic and Commercial Development, and cooperates financially and otherwise with the curricula and faculty of most of the important seats of advanced learning in the United States. One might say that "what David wants, David gets" with the heads of government of most nations of the world. Then comes Dan Rather, who is supposed to be the nation's leader in promoting propaganda and misinformation through his television connection. Personally, we can't stand the man and have a strong suspicion that he is miscast by the Newsweek's selection committee. Then there is Ted Kennedy, who remains a chief spokesman for the welfare careerists and the gulliberals. Bob Dole is selected as a "runner" because of his powerful influence in handling budgets and money bills, especially in the Senate and the White House. Then comes Arthur Sulzberger who is The New York Times. He is followed by Lane Kirkland who added a touch of pure fascism to the shadow government by combining both Labor and Industrial Capital in one person. He served simultaneously as a Big Labor boss and a Corporate Director. Katherine Graham is The Washington Post as well as being one of the first women to be invited to become a member of the CFR. George Bush as Vice President and Presidential hopeful is a natural selection for the "who runs" list, since he admits that everything he is as a political leader was made possible by David Rockefeller. David Stockman, number nine on the "Second 10" list, is important because as boss of the Office of Management and Budget, he has much to do with money. And Walter Mondale who completes the list has quite a following as the "compleat socialist" and a potential though improbable President of the United States.

NOW LET'S COMPLETE THE PICTURE. Remember the fourth component of that foreign policy which was announced by our State Department in 1962? "To assist in the gradual emergence of a genuine world community, based on cooperation and law, through the establishment and development of such organs as the United Nations, the World Court, the World Bank and Monetary Fund, and other Global and Regional Institutions; that is, A World "Community Under Law.""

To continue the gradual emergence of such a genuine world community, the World Rulers and the Men Who Run America have called a conference of the heads of seven national governments, plus the president of the European Community, who is the head of a Regional World government composed of ten member states: Belgium, Denmark, Greece, Ireland, Luxembourg, and the Netherlands, in addition to France, Italy, West Germany and the United Kingdom. The admittance of a Regional World Government at a meeting of the heads of seven national governments is a giant step toward the world as pictured by Orwell in his 1984.

Remember the "bread and circus" routine ordered by the men who ran Rome in an attempt to keep the people bemused? Here we have a similar circus, to be held at a specially selected arena with hundreds of television cameras and microphones relaying by satellite the pomp and circumstance to all the nations of the world. ABC won the "pool" privilege, and 35 trailers for ABC's crews and their equipment are banked behind William and Mary University Hall, which has been converted, at an estimated cost of $1 million, to an international press center from which satellite reports can be made live, at any hour, to cities around the world. To cover the words and movements of these eight heads of government, $8 million has been spent to accommodate an estimated eight thousand people who will attend in one capacity or another. Of those 8 thousand up to three-quarters of them will be media representatives and their technicians. Remember, only eight featured performers, but 8 thousand aides, assistants and media reporters and technicians! Is this not the most extravagant circus ever performed since Christians were fed to lions to mollify Romans whose leaders were said to run the world. To add to the circus aspect, consider the site. A year ago French Socialist Mitterand sought to startle the world by staging the summit at Versailles. This year, Rockefeller hopes to go it one better by using Williamsburg as the stage. Reginald Dale of the London Financial Times wrote: "On the face of it, it would be hard to conceive of two more contrasting monuments to Western history than the palace of Versailles and the old town of colonial Williamsburg, Virginia. Versailles: for the unrivaled glories, the ultimate, extravagant symbol of an arrogant and doomed monarchy. Williamsburg: pretty, homespun, small-scale, the epitome of early Virginia. At about the same time that the mob was ransacking Versailles, bringing an old civilization crashing down in flames, the humble settlers of Williamsburg were setting out to build a new world - also born of revolution - against another monarchy. Today's Americans who are organizing this year's ninth annual world summit...are hoping the contrast will be almost as marked - at least metaphorically."

Yes, it's just a circus. The acts have been rehearsed, the lines written and learned by rote. The program was tested and perfected at meetings of Trilateralists, Bilderbergers, OECDers, Roman Clubbers, IMF and World Bankers, And now the final performance at Williamsburg, the actors ready with their prepared lines, the media standing by, the satellites in space awaiting their cues. One commentator wrote that "the place looks like a television stage set." How right he was! And in a similar vein the historian Clarence B. Carson once remarked, "If the 20th century were a play, it would have long since driven the audience mad. The incongruity between the words spoken and the action taken on the stage would be too great to be borne." Well, in this sense, Williamsburg is a microcosm. The words you'll hear will have little relationship to the action that will follow. Because Williamsburg is a play, staged just to entertain and bemuse the masses. The basic foreign policy of the United States was written in 1962. There has been no appreciable change. But any policymaking in this age of Trilateralism now has shifted from the Congress and the Administration of the United States to these supranational conferences of the Trilateral Commission, the OECD, and other supranational preparatory groups. The decisions were made before the eight headlined actors walk onto the stage at Williamsburg. And the words you will hear will have nothing to do with the actions that are to follow. Treat it as an extravaganza with your admission fee still to be paid.

Woe unto them that decree unrighteous decrees, and that write grievousness which they have prescribed: (Is. 10:1).

THE WEATHER WAR REVISITED

Spring weather in the middle of winter, winter weather in the middle of spring, torrential rains, floodings, tornadoes, earthquakes; you name it, we've had it. An AP report of May 23 was typical of one five State area that had been affected. It reported "Rivers swollen by up to 15 inches of rain rose toward record highs in Texas and Mississippi today, cutting off more than 11,000 people from their homes. The large system of thunderstorms that rolled across the Gulf Coast States . . . killing 34 people and leaving damage expected to exceed hundreds of millions of dollars, moved eastward. Tornadoes have been blamed for 11 deaths." The Red Cross disaster fund told a part of the story: millions spent to aid victims of hurricanes in Hawaii, floods in Missouri and Illinois, earthquakes in California, and a series of disasters in Texas, Georgia, Arkansas, Mississippi, Louisiana, etc." Were these disasters of the kind we call Acts of God? Or had Man interfered with nature to bring them about? Are these disasters the results of a man-created weather war? We need some answers.

It seems that February 4th, 1983, was the fateful day. That was the day when the electromagnetic engagement, the first direct encounter in the weather war, began. As a result, such havoc was caused that jet streams were diverted, the earth's natural pulsation was disturbed, time stood still, planetary chaos threatened. For February 4th, say the scientists that have studied the matter, was the day when the 15-cycle scalar waves projected by American transmitters came into contact with the 10-cycle standing waves transmitted by super-powerful Soviet transmitters; standing waves that extended from the heart of the earth to the ionosphere as much as 250 miles above the earth's surface. It is said by the scientists who have studied the matter, that these nonHertzian electromagnetic, pulsing waves of extremely low frequency, can let loose forces that lead to earthquakes, tornadoes, electric storms, heat where there should be cold and cold where there should be heat, floods where rainfall is usually normal, and dry spells where moist air usually predominates. In other words, the awful and unusual weather and the ugly manifestations of nature which we have experienced or witnessed this year, were caused by the two great worldly powers competing to find ways of moderating and controlling the weather, and perhaps using it as an instrument of war to conquer the world. It may sound like a fanciful scenario from some part of a Star War; but it is instead a Weather War, and is fact, not fiction.

Headquartered in Ottawa and having some support from the Canadian Government is an organization called the Planetary Association for Clean Energy (PACE), headed by Dr. Andrew Michrowski. PACE has been observing the Soviet attempts to convert weather control into a war weapon for the past seven years. PACE explains that by creating "an extremely low frequency magnetic field whose wavelengths are equivalent to that of the terrestrial diameters," there are developed what are called "standing waves." If these waves were visible, they would resemble gigantic oval bubbles lying on the earth's surface. Part of the bubble would penetrate deep into the earth, perhaps to the very center of the planet. The upper part of the bubble would extend upward into the ionosphere, perhaps even higher. The result: jet streams are diverted, radio signals in certain Hertzian cycles are interefered with (the hams call it woodpeckering), electrical equipment within the area affected would no longer work, transmitters might blow up, men's minds might be affected, and diseases such as leukemia could become epidemic. It seems that, since these electromagnetic emissions are transmitted and pulsed at frequencies very similar to the frequencies of human brain waves, there is this actual danger to humankind, as well as to plants and the lower animals. Just how serious this latter danger may be is not yet known. But certainly more than earthquakes, tornadoes and floods are created by these low frequency emissions. And, in a very real sense, this weather war becomes an attack against life itself, and it has come about because both the USSR and the USA are cooperating - and at the same time competing - in this race toward weather control. It is comparable to the manner in which the USSR and the USA have cooperated, and at the same time are competing, in the space race.

But, let's begin at the beginning, and restate much of what has already been written, but never published in the controlled media. Almost a century ago, before the turn of the century, there lived a great electrical genius by name of Nikola Tesla. He had startled the world with his amazing discoveries. He laid the groundwork for the development of wireless telegraphy and radio communication. He transmitted electricity without wires for some 25 miles and lighted lamps. He repeated the performance in Long Island. He invented the alternating current system by which electricity can be transported through wires for thousands of miles, then sent into industrial plants to operate machinery, into homes to provide light and heat and energy. He also wrote of a method whereby weather could be controlled so that deserts could become farmlands, where cold could be modified and heat tempered. His patents were so extensive that when IBM began producing computers it found many of its developments could not be patented because Tesla had been given the patents for them in the early 1900s. So long as he was developing and perfecting things and theories that could be used for profit by monopolists, he was well financed, toasted and honored. For a time he was a principal partner with the then budding General Electric Corporation. He received vast amounts for his experiments and creations from none other than J. Pierpont Morgan, the "man who ruled the world." But when Tesla began to develop a method whereby energy could be created on a wholesale basis and used freely and without profit to its monopolistic suppliers, then Tesla ran into trouble that literally ruined him. From that time onward Thomas Edison received all the financial assistance and all the plaudits, when they should have been shared with Nikola Tesla. Regarding Tesla's theories that have led to the present weather war, much is explained in a scientific monograph by T.E. Bearden, titled "Tesla's Secret and the Soviet Tesla Weapons." Having spent some 16 years of agonizing labor and nearly $100,000 of my own personal funds, studying Tesla's accomplishments," Bearden explains that "no orthodox university, scientific group, foundation, or government agency would support such an effort." There is the intimation that Tesla's secrets have been hidden deliberately in the United States, but promoted by Soviet scientists, so that "Tesla's lost secret will shortly affect the lives of every human being on earth." Bearden notes, and we quote:

"Before the turn of the century, Nikola Tesla had discovered and was utilizing a new type of electric wave. Tesla repeatedly stated his waves were non-Hertzian, and his wireless transmissions did not fall off as the square of the distance. His discovery was apparently so fundamental (and his intent to provide free energy to all humankind was so clear) that it was responsible for the withdrawal of his financial backing, his deliberate isolation, and the gradual removal of his name from the history books. By 1914 or so, Tesla had been successfully isolated and was already nearly a 'nonperson.' Thereafter Tesla lived in nearly total isolation, occasionally surfacing to announce the discovery of an enormous new source of energy, the perfection of wireless transmission or energy without loss, fireball weapons to destroy whole armies and thousands of airplanes at hundreds of miles distance, and a weapon (the 'Tesla Shield' I've dubbed it) that could provide an impenetrable defense and thus render war obsolete." (Copyright by T.E. Bearden, published by permission of the author by Tesla Book Co., 1580 Magnolia Ave., Millbrae, CA

While Tesla was treated as a non-person by American authorities, his secrets proved of great interest to the Soviets, whose engineers began developing and perfecting the theories that Tesla had blueprinted. Combining secrets gained from Tesla and technological materials and equipment gained from the United States, the Soviets have constructed two giant transmitting stations capable of producing extremely low frequencies of 40 megawatts, or 40 million watts. The highest radio transmission in this country for commercial broadcasting is 50,000 watts. The Voice of America uses 100,000 watts in some of its broadcasts. But this is hardly comparable to the 40 million (40,000,000) watts used by these Soviet transmitters to project their scalar waves. Another part of Tesla's secret is the use of extremely low frequencies, from 7.5 to 15 Hertz in most cases, frequencies very similar to those used by the human brain, which make them extremely dangerous to humankind. A Hertz, of course, is the unit of measurement used to classify radio signals. One Hertz means one cycle per second. And perhaps the most important secret of the Tesla "broadcast" is the fact that the waves are not projected into the air like ordinary radio waves, but are sent into the ground. These electromagnetic waves are said to be able to penetrate and pass through anything, including the very center of the planet. And, in a sense that would be difficult to visualize, the earth itself becomes a kind of receiving set; so these waves can form what Tesla called a "standing wall." There is said to be one such "standing wall" stretching from Ketchikan, Alaska across the continent to the Azores in the Atlantic Ocean. This is the culprit that is said to have caused the awful winters in the late 70s and early 80s. Then, in addition to these gigantic "standing walls," which are more or less immovable, there are the smaller bubble-like pockets of electromagnetic energy that can be moved about, placed wherever desired, and used for very eerie purposes. Dr. Michrowski of PACE explains that if the Soviets wanted to place a small standing wave on the corner of such and such a street in, say, Cincinnati, real chaos could be created. Motors and engines would stop operating, transmitters would be blown up, computers would be exploded, the entire electrical system of the area would be put out of action, people would become lethargic, subject to physical damage and psychological alterations. Moreover, says Dr. Michrowski, one of these "little pimples of magnetic energy would also create a sensing system like radar," which would be extremely useful to the receiver. Yet another adaptation of this bubble-like formation is said to be the ability to create great umbrella-like "shields" which can be placed over areas in order to prevent any attack by missiles, gas, vapor, or other weapon. There are rumors that such umbrellas, or shields, have been or are able to be placed over both Moscow and Leningrad, in case of any nuclear or any other attack. It is said that nothing can penetrate such a "shield."

But the action which brought on these latest unusual weather conditions, unnatural phenomena and physical disaster, is said to have been a result of this "battle of the waves" to which we referred earlier in this Report. To fill in some of the chronological details, the following should assist one's understanding of a rather mysterious part of the alleged weather war:

If you are "conspiracy-minded" (as we are), then perhaps you can visualize a possibly hypothetical situation where there is a power greater than both of the powers of the governments of the USSR and the USA. If this de facto power desired to equalize the powers of these two governments in order to further the aims of the New World Order, then Nikola Tesla would provide an ideal means to that end. So, Tesla could become a "non-person" in the United States while at the same time becoming a very important person in the Soviet And, So, while scientific USA ignored Tesla, scientific USSR would investigate, experiment, develop and perfect the "weather war weapon." Hypothesis or otherwise, this is exactly what happened. This plus the fact that the USA gave the USSR great generators, technological equipment and know-how, and stood by until the USSR began actually testing its weather weapons. Then, about 1977, Scientific USA was allowed to learn what had happened, and began trying to catch up. And, here is a striking similarity between space development and the development of weather modification schemes. Remember how the Russians and the Americans flew through space together as a sign of space technology "merging"? Remember how we cooperated while at the same time competing? Well, much the same thing happened in regard to weather modification. Zbigniew Brzezinski broke the ice in his book "Between Two Ages," in which he stated that "techniques of weather modification could be employed to produce prolonged drought or storm, thereby weakening a nation's capacity and forcing it to accept the demands of the competitor. . . Space and weather control have replaced Suez and Gibraltar as key elements of strategy." Then shortly after Jimmy Carter named Brzezinski as his national security director, the Trilateral Commission issued an official report titled "Collaboration with Communist Countries in Managing Global Problems." An official Trilateral publication listed nine areas of global concern, two of which were areas of weather modification and earthquake control. Among other things, the USA began the same extra low frequency style of transmission that the Soviets had already developed and put in operation. The 1980 PACE newsletter stated: "A new chapter has begun in the history of planetary irradiation of artificial Extreme Low Frequency (ELF) emissions." The newsletter reported that in 1979 the United States government had joined the Soviet Union in transmitting ELF weather modification signals. The newsletter went on to say "it appears that these new (USA) ELF emissions are already influencing the weather. Jet streams approaching the original standing wave and the secondary ones appear to be deflected, and when accompanied by moist air systems, cause substantial precipitation.

As we said, the USSR and the USA now were cooperating, but at the same time were competing, especially in that they were using different frequencies in their emissions. Dr. Michrowski stated this week (5/23/83) in a radio broadcast heard by this reporter, that "As of February 4th, the Soviets were as usual doing their experiments with these waves, with their basic hard core transmissions. And the United States has been doing counter activity since 1979 at a different frequency. The Soviets operate at around 10 cycles, while the Americans operate around 15 cycles per second. And what has happened, in some parts of the world, is that the Soviet and American cycles met and worked on each other." And that was the first engaged battle of the weather war which we mentioned at the beginning of this Report. Some results seem obvious, and devastating. Other possible results would not be so obvious. PACE scientists suggest: "The combination of high intensity ELF magnetic signals from both the US and the USSR may be significant enough to produce effects on humans as well as other living systems. Such effects...would not normally be perceived by the individuals affected."

Said biographer John J. O'Neill: "Tesla lived and labored to bring peace to the world. He dedicated his life to the lifting of the burdens from the shoulders of mankind, to bringing a new era of peace, plenty and happiness to the human race." Yet almost all of his more than 100 patents and discoveries were used in the waging of war, and he died penniless and a non-person to historians. We are reminded of the Words of the Lord: "The children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light;" and: "Behold, I send you forth as sheep in the midst of wolves: be ye therefore as wise as serpents, and harmless as doves."

THE ACTS OF THE NEW AGE PLANNERS

The exclusive, three day performance of the Annual International Economic Circus has ended. The directors have dismissed their seven star performers and their appointed assistants. Only the cleanup crews remain. And aside from the producers and the performers, plus a selected few Mediapersons - members of the Council on Foreign Relations - know what actually transpired or even what was spoken by the seven actors while in their secret, unreported sessions. But the reports the people did receive were happy reports. When the heads of government of the seven industrialized and trilateralized Nations, and the socialized and regionalized world government of the European Community, met over Memorial Day weekend at Williamsburg, all was said to be sweetness and light. Ronald Reagan emerged as a sudden authority on matters industrial, commercial, monetary, political and military. The media expressed no amazement that there were no outbursts of disagreement, as there should have been if the actors were free to speak their own lines and not those written for them. Because Mitterand the Socialist was solidly against the economic pronouncements contained in the Summit's Declaration on Economic Recovery. Yet he uttered not a word. Where there should have been at least some discussion and debate, we were told that acquiescence and approval reigned supreme. We'll never know about Margaret Thatcher because she found an honest excuse to leave the party before any decisions were made; but there must have been some disagreement from the actors on some parts of the ten-point declaration. Yet not a word of serious protest was reported, because the Summit was planned that way at other secret meetings before the heads of government ever assembled at the Summit.

As for intelligent media coverage, here is what Glenn Garvin (not a CFR member) had to say in his report of May 31: "The International Press Center here, which in an earlier, more honorable existence, was a basketball gym, has begun to resemble a laboratory rodent colony in the middle of an overcrowding experiment. The 3,000 reporters cooped up in here have turned on one another in a frenzy of journalistic cannibalism, interviewing and reinterviewing each other in an endless loop of nonsense and trivia. The only real exposure to the summit leaders themselves - outside of yesterday afternoon's brief appearance where President Reagan read a joint statement on behalf of the group - is for small groups of reporters who go out in the press pools to observe the leaders at work or (usually) play for a few minutes at a time. Watching Margaret Thatcher open her umbrella does not exactly rank up there with covering VJ Day or the first moonwalk. But at this summit it's a major scoop." Keep that phrase in mind: "It was planned that way." And let's discuss some of the planners who are seldom spotlighted.

It is said that President Franklin Roosevelt, when asked for the reasons behind some of the more revolutionary New Deal programs, would answer simply that it was planned that way. Much this same idea influenced the writings of one Hans Heymann, a refugee from Germany who, like Paul Warburg who came to write a charter for a Federal Reserve System, came to the United States to write a "Plan For Permanent Peace." The book of that name (Harper & Bros., 1941) proposed that world peace could be attained only by the creation of a "Bank of Nations," or a Central World Bank with Regional Subsidiaries, out of which would flow selected and trained bureaucrats who would rule the world in behalf of the welfare and happiness of the downtrodden masses (but really for the profit and power of the international Bankers). Many of Heymann's ideas were embodied in the blueprint of the international monetary program concocted by Communist Harry Dexter White and his Fabian Socialist colleagues at Bretton Woods. Heymann's central theme was that "The average man is necessarily preoccupied with self-advancement and the struggle for existence. He has no time to study even the fundamentals of international politics and economics, quite apart from not having the proper training. Consequently, he is not only too pleased to relegate that work to trained men in whom he has confidence. The average man is willing to accept an organization for the purpose." Heymann signified that his definition of an organization coincided with the definition given by Charles Beard in his book "Public Policy and General Welfare" (Farrar & Rinehart, 1941). Beard defined an organization of this type as "A collection of offices, bureaus, divisions and agencies - each with its special functions - designed to effect its purposes of government and so ordered in relation to one another as to achieve a certain unity of force and direction, under a controlling mechanism and a sense of responsibility." Beard may have had in mind the original 1313, so named because of its address on University of Chicago property, an organization designed to promote the concept of Regional Governance, which is now incorporated as a fifth branch of our federal government (the administrative bureaucracy being the fourth branch). This definition of an organization would also apply to Rand, Hudson, Aspen, Brookings, Bilderberg, Club of Rome, CFR, Trilateral Commission, and a host of other lesser known organizations that are "designed to effect its purposes of government". These are some of the organizations that plan things that way.

Zbigniew Brzezinski explained how this planning would finally culminate in his book "Between Two Ages." That book so influenced David Rockefeller that he had Brzezinski and other of his accomplices found the Trilateral Commission which he, Rockefeller, finances and heads. In order to carry out the purposes outlined in his book, Brzezinski remarked:

"Deliberate management of the American future will become widespread, with the planner eventually displacing the lawyer as the key social legislator and manipulator." (Emphasis added).

Social planning and manipulating would describe the continuing activities of the ACLU, NAACP, ADL, ADA, etc. But special planners and planning groups always seem to give birth to their ideas by exploring the calendar. George Orwell popularized the year 1984 in a manner seldom overlooked. As early as 1976 the American Academy of Arts and Sciences started looking "Toward the Year 2000." It published its summer edition of "Daedalus" filled with "the first materials to come out of the deliberations of the American Academy's Commission on the Year 2000." Featured are some 41 Planners, including such well known names as Daniel Bell, Zbigniew Brzezinski, Herman Kahn, Margaret Mead, Daniel Moynihan, Eugene Rostow, etc. Said the editor's introduction, "The Carnegie Corporation provided the funds that led to the creation of the Commission on the Year 2000. We are pleased to be able to record our continued indebtedness to that foundation." Years afterward, some of these same Planners were responsible for the presentation to the White House of a "Global 2000" program.

Meanwhile, the Council on Foreign Relations seemed to decide that waiting until the year 2000 was too long. It commissioned Richard Ullman to head a committee which would produce "The 1980s Project." A CFR publication informs us that "During 1975 and 1976, ten Working Groups met to explore major international issues and to subject initial drafts of 1980s Project studies to critical review. Project working groups were headed by Cyrus R. Vance (nuclear weapons), Leslie Gelb (Transnational Violence and Subversion), Rev. Theodore M. Hesburgh (Human Rights), Joseph S. Nye, Jr. (North-South Relations), Harold van B. Cleveland (International Economic and Monetary Relations), Lawrence C. McQuade (International Trade), William Diebold, Jr. (Multinational Enterprises), Eugene Skolnikoff (Environment), and Miriam Camps (Industrial Policy). These project staffers were aided by Henry Kissinger, Paul Volcker, Michael Blumenthal, and more than a score of other members of CFR and/or TLC. Together, they produced more than 20 books on the various subjects; all dealing with things that have been planned that way. The books were published by McGraw-Hill Book Co., Professional and Reference Book Division. Pardon us for not giving you the names of the books.

We said calendar references seemed to inspire the planners. 1976 was, of course, such a year. The World Future Society published a "Resources Directory for America's Third Century," which was approved and sponsored under a grant from the National Science Foundation and the Library of Congress, Congressional Research Service Grant No. 055 75-01241 AO1. This is virtually a planner's bible. Accompanying this directory is another book authorized under the same grant titled "Information Sources for the Study of the Future." This is a 350 page "guide to organizations, individuals, research projects, books and reports, periodicals, films and videotapes, audiotapes, games and simulations, educational programs and courses." It was in this tome that we obtained an official description of the Club of Rome; information that has been hard to come by. We quote:

In 1976 Aurelio Peccei, chairman of Italconsult and director of such companies as Fiat and Olivetti, conferred with the scientific director of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD), Alexander King, to discuss his belief that the world system is a 'textbook case of mismanagement.' Both were convinced that traditional politics and institutions no longer could handle the multitudes of complex global problems. Peccei and King agreed to invite 30 persons representing 10 countries to a meeting at the Accademia dei Lincei in Rome, Italy. There in April 1968, they formed the Club of Rome, an exclusive, international gathering of noted scientists, industrialists, economists, educators and statesmen. Established as a nonprofit association, limiting its membership to 100, the Club seeks to define and anticipate interrelated global problems in areas of natural environment, energy resources, maldistribution of food and wealth, control of population, et al....The real debut for The Club of Rome came with its well-publicized report, The Limits of Growth, published in March 1972. The report was the product of an international team assembled under the direction of MIT professor Dennis L. Meadows (CFR), working with a $336,000 grant from The Volkswagen Foundation. ...The second report to the Club of Rome was presented in 1974. Mankind at the Turning Point describes a regionalized world model characterized by two great gaps - one between man and nature and another between the 'North' (rich) and 'South' (poor) nations....A series of scenarios representing the projected behaviors of ten world regions on five levels or 'strata' - environment, technology, demo-economic, group and individual - are analyzed in the report.... The Club's Executive Committee feels that there is a need for an equivalent organization at a political level for senior statesmen, diplomats, and ministers to meet from time to time - to discuss their countries' experiences with respect to the common problems facing all of mankind. The Club of Rome is working towards the establishment of such an organization, termed 'The World Forum.'" (Editorial note: The Trilateral Commission supplies what the Club of Rome seeks, but on a limited basis, since the TLC involves only seven Industrial Nations, while Peccei wants all Nations represented in his World Forum. However, the Club and the TLC fully cooperate in all respects).

The scientific illuminates of the Club of Rome may have found their "World Forum" in a recent coalition of organizations calling itself "The Planetary Initiative for the World We Choose." The initiative was provided by The Club of Rome, the Association for Humanistic Psychology, the Global Education Association, the Planetary Citizens, and a United Nations Association group. They claim to have a governing body of "75 International leaders...from mainstream church and political and social action groups, new age and new consciousness organizations, from globally oriented academic research institutes and projects, and from intentional communes [New Age communes] and their networks." Still quoting from the organization's literature:

"The Planetary Initiative for the World We Choose: A program of worldwide local discussion and activities leading to a Planetary Congress in 1983....Many studies from the original 'Limits to Growth' to the 'Willy Brandt' report and 'Global 2000 Report to the President' of the US draw similar conclusions (that) during the next 2 decades there will be major world-wide crises....Maurice Strong of the UN declared that the 1980s 'will be the most dangerous decade that the human community has ever faced.'...Involved are major adjustments in global economics, ecology, population rates, food production, resource use, disarmament and maintenance of peace if disaster is to be avoided. Because so many problems are becoming acute at the same time, they blend into a 'megacrisis' in which no one problem can be dealt with singly." (Unquote). So these "75 international leaders" whom we don't know are going to give the world "New Age Values." But only after the "grass roots" of the world have spoken and a consensus has been established. Then the "Council of Wise Persons" (all 75 of them) will work, apparently through various agencies of the United Nations, to bring about this New World Order.

In this Planetary planning, first must come the establishment of the "New International Economic Order". Second "the work of monitoring and sensitizing the multinational corporations (whatever that means). In all of this, and we quote, "The United Nations is the world brain...the symbol...of emergence of humanity into the new age. It is the stage in which Shambhala and the Lord of the World (Creme's Maitreya) will begin acting directly on mankind; the time of the establishment of the seamless web of human exchange and interrelation." (Unquote). Benjamin Creme is a disciple of Alice Bailey of the Theosophical Society who, along with the Lucis Trust, is promoting a New Age Religion inspired by messages from a Tibetan demon. A report of a conference held by this Planetary Initiative Organization titled Pilgrim's Progress states that Alice A. Bailey's "material was written explicitly to set guidelines to usher in the New Age, the Omega Point, the New Man." A part of this report explains "the workings of the 'Hierarchy' and the coming of the Maitreya (Buddha). In a presentation published by The Southwest Radio Church, Oklahoma City, Constance Cumbey explains that "The Club of Rome is one of many organizations behind this movement....important because it has drawn up blueprints for the new world order." (Quoted from "Is the Antichrist in the World Today?" Southwest Radio Church, P.O. Box 1144, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma 73101)

SUMMARY, Consider a pyramid. The elitists at its peak call it the New World Order and work from the top downward. The agents at the basement or grass roots level call it the New Age Movement and work from the bottom upward. Thus the Planners hope to establish their new International Economic Order, their One World Government, and their New World Religion. Their aim is not for the USSR to take over the US and the world; but that the "Hierarchy," which is associated with the International Bankers who masterminded and funded the Bolshevik revolution in the first place, will supersede both the USSR and the US, both communism and capitalism, and bring about a one-world dictatorship similar to an Orwellian Big Brother world of 1984. Unless we wake up and prevent it. And since it is AntiChrist in concept, there is but One Way that it can be defeated. Remember Ephesians 6:12?

IS DEATH BY AIDS THE WAGES OF SIN?

In Abraham's day homosexuals, lesbians, sodomites and other sexual deviates were destroyed by fire raining down upon them from heaven. In our day the deviates may receive AIDS. Or, as columnist Patrick Buchanan remarked, "The poor homosexuals; they have declared war upon nature, and now nature is exacting an awful retribution." Not that they weren't warned before the incurable killer came upon them. Their communities had been visited by the somewhat milder and usually curable or at least controllable forms of affliction, such as genital herpes, viral hepatitis, T-cell leukemia, amoebic and other intestinal infections. And their principal health research center, the National Coalition of Gay Sexually Transmitted Diseases, located in Arlington, Virginia, did send out warnings to all the gay enclaves, along with explicit instructions on what to do in bars, baths and beds to avoid the diseases. But the gays still insisted that they were not the main target, that these diseases were common to all mankind. So the deviant practices continued and the diseases continued to spread in the homosexual subculture. And then came AIDS, for which there is no known cure.

In non-medical terms, AIDS is a mysterious disease that destroys the defense mechanisms of the body, leaving it wide open to attack by organisms that the body would naturally resist or rout. And this killing disease is spreading like bubonic plague through the homosexual enclaves of New York City, Los Angeles, San Francisco, and Miami; cities which have been likened in this respect to the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah of Abraham's time. Primarily, the disease has been active in homosexual males and, to a lesser extent, Haitians. And if the epidemic had remained in these selected circles, it would not have caused much concern with the entire populace. But lately, it has begun to show up in hemophiliacs, chronic bleeders who need regular transfusions, and to patients requiring aid (and sometimes getting AIDS) from bloodbanks. It is said that homosexual blood donors who thought they were transmitting a gift of life were actually carriers of death. The American Red Cross, under guidelines issued by the Department of Health and Human Services, has been asking (but cannot demand) that donors not give blood if they exhibit AIDS symptoms or belong to high risk groups. Even more serious, Patrick Buchanan in a June 1st column wrote: "The AIDS crisis in America is approaching critical mass, and the explosion may not be far off. In a particularly ominous paragraph last week, a New York Times report noted: 'In the last three weeks medical journals have carried reports suggesting that the disease could be sexually transmitted from men to women and be transmitted to children through routine close contact. Routine close contact! Surely, that would include the daily work of pediatricians, and custodians in day-care centers, would it not? It has long been the defiant slogan of the gay rights movement that, so long as we don't injure anyone, what we do is our own business. If promiscuous homosexuals in the urban centers of New York and San Francisco are capable of transmitting death with a casual sexual contact, their slogan, to put it mildly, would no longer seem to apply.'" (Unquote).

Shocked by the AIDS epidemic, San Francisco, where one-fourth of the cases have been reported, is issuing special masks and gloves to police who have to deal with "suspected AIDS patient." Police are fearful of contracting the disease and carrying it home to their wives and children. All of which puts the National Democratic Party in a very awkward and possibly dangerous situation. For the national political convention is to be held there! To the National Democrats, the Gay Rights movement

Mr. Tom Chorlton
National Association of Gay and Lesbian Democratic Clubs
1742 Massachusetts Avenue, S.E.
Washington, D.C. 20003

Dear Tom,

Thank you for updating me on the progress of the National Association of Gay and Lesbian Democratic Clubs.

As I said in speaking to your first conference in Philadelphia on June 24th, I consider formation of the national association an important step toward our common goal: a strong Democratic Party working to achieve full human rights and civil rights for every American.

Toward this end, I know that you share my pride that the statements adopted by the National Party Conference reflected the commitment of this party to end any discrimination based on sexual orientation. Let us work to ensure that the unanimous action of the NPC, which has been widely praised as reflecting a united Democratic Party, is an indication of further gains to be made.

Ann Lewis tells me that she is working with you on a positive, campaign-oriented program of assistance to Democratic candidates in our critical elections this year. Please continue to keep me informed.

Cordially, has become a politically powerful ally. As can be gathered from the letter from Charles Manatt, chairman of the Democratic National Committee, to Tom Chorlton of the National Association of Gay and Lesbian Democratic Clubs, which is reproduced in this Report.

Within the homosexual movement in the United States there are three truly national organizations: the Gay Rights National Lobby (GRNL), the Universal Fellowship of Metropolitan Community Churches (UFMCC), and the National Gay Task Force (NGTF), this last named being the most influential. This is not to say that there are not other gay organizations, there are hundreds of them. But they are generally regional or local in character and relate to particular issues. In the Reverend Enrique T. Rueda's The Homosexual Network, which is a virtual bible of sexual organizations and activities in the United States, the author uses the National Gay Task Force as a model organization which he describes in depth. The following is excerpted from Rev. Rueda's book:

The NGTF was founded in 1973. It was "instrumental in making the White House accessible and willing to lend a favorable ear during the Carter Administration." It also succeeded in introducing much pro-gay legislation in the Congress. Its influence was predominant in the White House Conference on Families and the International Women's Year Conferences. It was influential in the writing of the agenda for the National Democratic Convention of 1980. And "the NGTF has been influential in causing a number of U.S. agencies (e.g. Internal Revenue Service, Bureau of Prisons, Federal Communications Commission) to make regulatory decisions which favor the acceptance of homosexuality as a legitimate life style...The NGTF has secured support for the homosexual movement from dozens of organizations which could have been expected to remain 'neutral' at best, among them the YMCA, NOW, ACLU, NCC and NFPC (National Federation of Priests Councils)." Unquote.

Basically a political organization, its activities encompass three areas: 1) exertion of legal, legislative, and political pressure on the government, corporations, unions, and other organizations to 'persuade' them to institute prohomosexual policies; 2) propaganda activities on behalf of the homosexual movement and in support of its ideology, especially in, but not limited to, the media; 3) grassroots organization, on both geographical and interest bases. "The NGTF acts to initiate small groups of homosexuals within 'straight' organizations, with the specific aim of using the resources of these organizations on behalf of the goals of the homosexual movement." Out of the NGTF was spun the Gay Rights National Lobby (GRNL), created to promote the passage of prohomosexual bills in Congress. Another spinoff front is the "Fund for Human Dignity" which was endorsed by, among others, Paul Moore, Episcopal Bishop of New York; Ira Glasser of ACLU; Shirley Chisholm who was then a U.S. Representative; U.S. Senator Alan Cranston; and others. Also, there are gay organizations in most colleges and universities, guided by the Gay Academic Union. There are Gay Teachers Associations, et al. As Rev. Rueda explains: "The homosexual movement is a complex phenomenon, and the organizations through which it acts reflect the almost infinite variety of human needs and concerns...Some of the most important prohomosexual organizations are the more than 100 groups of parents and friends of homosexuals (having) their common origin in the Parents of Lesbians and Gay Men, Inc., founded in New York City in the early 1970s, which is at this writing a not-for-profit (tax-exempt) corporation." We could go on and on listing gay and lesbian organizations, and Rev. Rueda does just that. For those interested in this sinful phenomenon, we highly recommend The Homosexual Network by Enrique T. Rueda. There are 680 pages of important information. Devin-Adair, publishers, 143 Sound Beach Ave., Box A, Old Greenwich, CT 06870. Hardback: $24.95. Paperback: $11.95.

Members of the National Democratic Party should be particularly interested in the political and financial influence the gays have gained in the party. For example: Paul Kuntzler was a founder of the Gertrude Stein Democratic Club of Washington, D.C. He is also director of the Gay Rights National Lobby and a former president of the D.C. chapter of the Americans for Democratic Action (ADA). President of this Gertrude Stein Club is Tom Chorlton, who also heads the National Association of Gay and Lesbian Democratic Clubs, and who received the letter from Chairman Charles Manatt of the Democratic National Committee, which we have reproduced in this Report. In 1978 Marion Barry was elected Mayor of Washington, D.C. because of the overwhelming support given him by the D.C. homosexual community, which is said to represent 15% of the total electorate in our Nation's Capital District. In New York

WE GOOFED

Pardon us, please; we have some unfinished business to complete, and a correction to make regarding some misinformation we published. In our DBR of April 8, 1983 concerning the "Moongate Controversy," we stated that a conference held by the United States Council for World Freedom (USCWF), which is headed by Major Gen. John Singlaub, was financed by Moon's Unification Church organization, and that Moon's organization was represented at the conference. We were challenged and replied, publicly, on May 20th, that if we and our informer were wrong, we should be very happy to retract. Well, later inquiry and investigation of the source of our material proved that we were, indeed, wrong. Therefore this retraction: The USCWF conference was not financed by Moon's organization and Moon's Church has no connection whatever with the USCWF. Our apologies if this mistake has caused inconvenience or difficulty for Gen. Singlaub's organization.

City Mayor Edward Koch ran for office under the assumption that there was a bloc of some 250,000 homosexual votes in New York City. He assumed correctly and won accordingly. The homosexual-oriented Municipal Election Committee in Los Angeles raised some $200,000 for local candidates alone in the 1980 elections. In November, 1980, there was a "Gay Vote USA Gala" fundraising event which was attended by Jerry Brown, Ted Kennedy and Jimmy Carter. The political and fundraising clout of the gay community in behalf of the National Democratic Party has been impressive and important, and has not been overlooked. In fact, this is why the upcoming Democratic National Convention is being held in San Francisco, often called the homosexual capital of the U.S., and likened unto Gomorrah of Abraham's day.

Citing various authorities to the effect that "homosexuals don't belong in the food handling business," and "homosexuals should never be blood donors," Patrick Buchanan ends an article appearing in the weekly Washington Inquirer of June 3, 1983 with the following paragraph: "The Democratic Party that convenes in San Francisco may face a terrible dilemma. Does it maintain -- as Mondale, Cranston and Hart insist -- its solemn commitment to federally protected civil rights for active homosexuals, equal access to jobs, housing and public accommodations? Or will it heed citizens who claim their 'civil rights' entitle them not to have proctoring their children or handling their food active homosexuals who belong to a community that is a common carrier of dangerous, communicable and sometimes fatal diseases?"

Something far worse than a mere fatal disease is involved when the homosexual subculture invades, and is accepted, within traditionally Christian churches and institutions. The Universal Fellowship of Metropolitan Community Churches (UFMCC) is a homosexual movement founded by homosexuals with liberal support, for the purpose of getting their sexual aberrations approved as a "Christian lifestyle," as well as to secure their version of "civil rights" such as homosexual marriages, right to adopt children, teach in schools, etc. UFMCC's leader, Troy Perry, claims acceptance of its aims by the WCC, NCC, United Methodist Church, Roman Catholic Church, and all the churches having membership in the NCC. To aid in the achievement of their aims, they have re-interpreted the Bible, removing "sexist language," so that the Son of man becomes "Humanity's Child" and God the Father becomes the "Holy source of being." Such nonsexist language is expected to make acceptable their sexual abominations.

SUMMARY. In our generation there have been three interrelated social movements that cooperate under the label of liberalism, and threaten to destroy our society and our civilization, which are Bible-based and Christ-oriented. These three are 1) The civil rights movement, a present manifestation of which is the attempt to enshrine Martin Luther King as the first saint of the secular humanist religion; 2) The feminist movement, which is apparent in the continuing struggle to make ERA a part of the US Constitution; and 3) The homosexual movement. These three are part and parcel of American liberalism which is dominant in American politics, in American religion, American education, and which should be condemned and rejected by all Christian Americans. To some who may read this, we say with St. Paul: "Am I therefore become your enemy, because I tell you the truth?" (Gal. 4:16).

"AND A SOCIALIST POPE SHALL LEAD THEM"

"He is not only the first pope from a socialist country, but he may also be described as the first socialist pope." So states senior writer Kenneth Woodward in a special report titled "The Vision of a Socialist Pope," appearing in Newsweek, June 20, 1983, page 47. The newsweekly infers a merging of Christianity and Communism in the subtitle: "With faith in Christ and borrowings from Marx, John Paul II builds his own challenging gospel of work." The creep and crawl of communism into the cloistered confines of the church are well illustrated by a statement made in 1931 by Pope Pius XI:

"No one can be at the same time a sincere Catholic and a true socialist."

"No one but Pope John Paul II," says Newsweek. "Substantiating phrases taken from the same article in Newsweek follow. "...he has in the course of his five-year reign repeatedly championed the rights of workers, the virtues of planned economies and especially 'the priority of labor over capital.' In short, the pope advocates a modified socialism similar to the reforms sought by Poland's outlawed labor movement."..."What he did learn from books was how to think like a Marxist as well as like a Christian. "...The pope's preferences for democratic socialism must be seen in part as the product of his Polish experience."..."What the pope seems to be calling for is a cooperative form of socialism in which workers share in the ownership of productive means while state planners ensure a just distribution of goods and services." This, of course, is precisely what Marx meant when he spoke of the Dictatorship of the Proletariat, a state never achieved and never achievable under socialism.

If Newsweek is correct, then the pope's socialism is not confined to Poland, but is to be preached to the world. The last paragraph of Kenneth Woodward's special report is important, and we quote it in full:

"Economies. More than any of his predecessors, Pope John Paul II is now using the prerogatives of his office - encyclicals, pilgrimages abroad, even his regular homilies at the Vatican - to elaborate his vision of a just social order. In turn, he has inspired his fellow bishops around the world to prepare similar documents assessing the economies of other nations. Westerners are not accustomed to taking churchmen seriously when they speak to economic issues. They may relish the pope's challenging Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski for the socialist soul of Poland. But their own turn may not be far behind. Next year the U.S. Catholic hierarchy will see the first draft of a lengthy pastoral letter on 'Catholic Social Teaching and the American Economy.' And that particular investigation promises to become even more controversial than the bishop's recent letter on morality and the bomb." (Unquote).

This talk concerning the pope being a socialist is brought about, of course, because of his current pilgrimage to Poland where, between June 16th through June 23rd, he will have visited, held masses, and consecrated churches in six different cities in Poland. Politics will have been mixed with religion and there is considerable discussion as to just how far the pope will have gone in making his peace with Gen. Jaruzelski, the resident Communist Dictator of that country. In an article accompanying the one from which we have quoted, Newsweek comments that the pope is now a different man. "In May 1981, John Paul was wounded in what some think was a Soviet-inspired assassination attempt." Newsweek seems to assume that because of the assassination attempt John Paul "is now a totally different man than he was when he assumed the papacy." That difference may be reflected in his attempts to merge Christianity and Marxism into some new kind of worker's theology somewhat similar to the liberation theology being taught alongside Marxism by Catholic bishops in South and Central America.

But if this indicates a "merging" of two irreconcilable ideologies, it should be remembered that a political "merging" has preceded any religious merging, and that economic merging is well advanced, due to the Rockefellers, Harrimans, Hammers, and the more influential members of the Trilateral Commission, Council on Foreign Relations, etc. This process of "merging" began right after World War I, and it has continued ever since. The real founder of the CFR was Edward Mandell House, chief adviser to President Woodrow Wilson, whose aim was to socialize the United States. In his book Phillip Dru, House said he was working for "Socialism as dreamed of by Karl Marx." The House plan called for the United States to give up its independence and sovereignty to the League of Nations. Because the U.S. Senate refused to ratify the plan, the CFR was organized and initiated. It was of little real importance until about 1927, when the Rockefeller and Carnegie Foundations assumed control. In 1940, at the invitation of President Roosevelt and Secretary of State Cordell Hull, members of the CFR gained domination over the State Department, have maintained that domination ever since. As early as 1944 the Republican candidate for President, Thomas Dewey, was a member of the CFR. Later the CFR could boast that Republicans Eisenhower and Nixon were members, as were Democrats Stevenson, Kennedy, Humphrey and McGovern. And the CFR's influence had spread to other vital areas of American life. Its members have run, or are running, NBC, and CBS, The New York Times, The Washington Post, The Des Moines Register, many other important newspapers, as well as Time, Life, Newsweek, Fortune, Business Week, and other publications.

Yet, while all these things were happening, the American public knew little or nothing about it. So far as we know, the first public report on the Council on Foreign Relations did not appear in print until 1950. Col. Robert Rutherford McCormack (1880-1955), editor, publisher and until his death sole owner of The Chicago Tribune wrote a lead editorial which appeared in his newspaper on December 9, 1950. In it he wrote that "The members of the Council are persons of more than average influence in their community. They have used the prestige that their wealth, the social position, and their education have given them to lead their country toward bankruptcy and military debacle. They should look at their hands, There is blood on them - the dried blood of the last war and the fresh blood of the present one. (The Korean War)." We repeat, insofar as we know, this was the first time the CFR had ever been openly and publicly denounced. For a third of a century it had been able to work secretly until it had gained control of every "foreign affairs" phase of our federal government!

Even before the conspiratorial initiation of the political drive to merge the United States, and eventually the Soviet Empire, into a Socialist World Government, the educational movement to prepare future citizens for their New World Order had begun. As early as 1896, pro-communist John Dewey had established at the Rockefeller-supported University of Chicago, a laboratory school for progressive education. Out of an original nucleus of 23 instructors, 10 assistants, and 140 experimental students, Dewey was able to make his progressive education system the dominant control factor for elementary and high public schools throughout the United States. Dewey enlarged and transferred his activities to Columbia University in 1904, took time off for a visit to the Soviet Union in 1928, returning deeply impressed with the Marxist experiment in Russia. In 1937 he took another sabbatical and went to Mexico to confer with Leon Trotsky, then in exile. All of Dewey's Bolshevik study had much influence on his educational teachings in the United States. Then in 1902, at the suggestion of his adviser, Rev. Frederick Gates, John D. Rockefeller, Sr. organized the General Education Board, through which he spent over $65 million between 1902 and 1924 to endow some 120 colleges and universities and to "influence the character of scholarship and teaching" in the United States. Later would come the wealthy foundations, especially Rockefeller, Carnegie and Ford. The aim of these foundations was stated very clearly in 1953 by H. Rowan Gaither, a CFR member who was then President of the Ford Foundation. During a preliminary investigation of tax-exempt foundations, Gaither invited Norman Dodd, Director of Research for the Congressional Investigating Committee, to come to Ford Foundation headquarters in New York City. At that meeting Rowan brazenly told Dodd that he and others who had worked for the State Department, the United Nations, other federal agencies, and the principal foundations had for years "operated under directives issued by the White House, the substance of which was that we should make every effort to so alter life in the United States as to make possible a comfortable merger with the Soviet Union. (Emphasis added)."

And the socialization and the merging continues. Recently the Supreme Court punished some Christian schools for alleged violations of judicial "civil rights" edicts. And the presidential promise to scrap the federal Department of Education has been shelved. Also, President Reagan continues to promote the controversial Tuition Tax Credit or Voucher System for parents sending their children to private, parochial or other church schools. In a very important appraisal of this TTC which should be read by every parent, Barbara Morris has published a booklet which points out the dangers of this Tax Tuition Credit plan, especially noting the international, or socialistic merging implications of such a system. We quote:

"Internationally, the trend toward nationalization and uniformity has begun. Following the recent election of Socialist Francois Mitterand in France, the government has now announced it will 'integrate' all church schools receiving government assistance into the state system. As Americans become more dependent on the government for their needs, the legislative proclivities of those elected to public office will exhibit increasingly socialistic tendencies. Therefore it is not unrealistic to expect that the situation in France could easily be duplicated here. For if the truth is to be acknowledged, the U.S. is already very much a 'socialistic democracy.' If the goal is a totalitarian 'one world' situation (and it is, without question) then every nation of the world must educate and work toward that goal. Every nation must be able to exert absolute control over its educational system to insure there is no serious deviation that would sidetrack attainment of the goal. With the assistance of the federal government, public schools in the U.S. have been teaching toward a one world government goal for many years as have many private and church schools under the banner of 'peace and justice,' or 'global perspectives' education. But there are not enough private/church schools doing it to guarantee uniformity. There are still far too many independent educational entities (which are increasing daily, particularly in the form of fundamentalist and home schools) that are determining their own goals and objectives. If those holdouts could be enticed with TTC assistance (and in these times of economic difficulty, how many would not be tempted?) the problem would be effectively mitigated. The regulations that could be imposed regarding curriculum would set up the needed uniformity and control sooner or later. 'It wouldn't happen here with tuition tax credits?' Yes, it could. It is unwise to ignore logic, common sense and an understanding of past and present history." (Unquote. For copies of Tuition Tax Credits: A Responsible Appraisal, write to Barbara Morris Report, P.O.Box 756, Upland CA 91786. 1 to 4 copies: $5 each. Add $1 for postage on orders for less than $10.)

If the socialization and merging of nations should be promoted in the political and educational fields, should the field of religion be ignored? Obviously, no. It is just that the Catholic hierarchy has been a little slow in comparison with the organized protestant denominations. The Federal Council of Churches (now the National Council) was officially launched in 1908. Thirty-three protestant denominations were represented. Its first aim was ecumenicism - the merging of all denominations into one man-made body. Also, a merging with the aims of international communism seemed evident when in 1960 Richard Arens, then staff director for the House Committee on Un-American Activities issued a statement to the effect that "Thus far, of the leadership of the National Council of Churches of Christ in America, we have found over 100 persons in leadership capacity with either communist front records or records of service to communist causes. The aggregate affiliations of the leadership, instead of being in the hundreds, is now, according to our latest count, into the thousands and we have yet to complete our check. . . ." So, if one checks the record of its past affiliations, the more recent charges of NCC aid to Communist groups and causes that have been brought by The Readers Digest, 60 Minutes, and other media organs, should come as no surprise. Nor should the socialism of the present pope; it's just that he seems to have joined the party later than the others.

Now, if this socialization of nations and the merging of governments should be conducted in the political, educational and religious fields, what about the economic and monetary areas? Well, by now everyone in America must know that 1913 was the crucial year in that respect. In 1913, Congress approved the Federal Reserve Act, and the requisite number of States ratified the Sixteenth Amendment which read: "The Congress shall have the power to lay and collect taxes on incomes, from whatever source derived, without apportionment among the several States, and without regard to any census or enumeration." Also in that crucial year, the States approved the Seventeenth Amendment, which provided for direct election of United States Senators. Thus began the control and issue of money on a monopolistic basis by a private corporation; the placing of a federal hand into the pocket of every wage or salary earner in the United States, and the beginning of the loss of what have been called States Rights, as guaranteed by the Ninth and Tenth Amendments to the Constitution of the United States.

IN SUMMATION you'll note that nothing really new has been written into this Report. That's because the ills that beset us today are the result of seeds planted decades, even centuries ago, that were watered and fertilized by evil ones until they now are full grown evils. The "merging" of capitalism and communism to produce democratic socialism; the "merging" of representative government with Soviet totalitarianism to produce bureaucratic dictatorship; the "merging" of nationalism with regionalism to produce the "global perspective" and a New World Order; the "merging" of Christian ideals with Marxist theories to produce Secular Humanism; these are not sudden phenomena. We and our fathers just didn't get the rotten apples out of the barrel in time. More than 60 years ago Harry Atwood, a Constitutional authority, wrote words that might have been written today. He said: "After a careful survey of the tendency during the past twenty years to drift from representative government toward direct action (democracy); from individual property rights toward socialistic and paternalistic ideas; will also throw much light on the cause of the chaotic conditions that prevail at this time. . . It is high time for us to consider the sources and analyze the causes of the turbulence and confusion and to realize that American ideals are not visionary departures from the tried and true, but rather adherence and devotion to those eternal verities that should endure. High standards of individual and institutional character made America great. The perpetuity of America is dependent upon the maintenance of those high standards."

THE DEVELOPING REGIONAL NIEO

The tricky twists and turns of the debt-money manipulators are difficult to follow. They plan it that way. As we write this report, an economic recovery is said to be in the making with auto sales, housing starts, and more money for consumers to save or spend, and with inflation still under control. This upswing is also noticeable in Canada, England, West Germany, France and Italy; in all the Trilateral countries except Japan, which is currently suffering from trade restrictions on her foreign sales of autos, television sets, computers, etc. It's a new twist and another turn on the part of the International Bankers and their Megacorporate Associates. Remember how, just a few short months ago, there was this awful fear that governments were going to default and declare bankruptcy, and megabanks might fail? And how, in the midst of the created panic, the money managers got busy getting the correct kinds of legislation passed and signed into law, so that the people of the Trilateral Nations would assume the financial responsibility for all those debts? Remember how Mexico and Argentina, Poland and Romania, Brazil and Venezuela and half a dozen other countries were demanding quick relief, unless? Well, the Trilateral legislatures; congresses, parliaments, diets, bunds, et al; were talked into giving some billions of dollars worth of computer data bank entries to the IMF, so there could be the necessary rollovers and renegotiations. There really was a feeling of panic about the manufactured situation.

But, look at your business sections and your financial newsletters today. What has happened to all those stories of panic and megabank closures? Now all seems serene and everything is looking up. What really happened was a big turn on the part of the debt-money managers. The International Banks have run their course. Now it's time for the multinational megacorporations to take over for a while. We like the way it is explained by Globescan:

"In every crisis, they say, there is also opportunity. It is a lesson the International Establishment is turning to great advantage. Fresh from a deep recession in the West which exposed their wild lending to Third World deadbeats, the megabanks have used the threat that the world's monetary system will collapse under the weight of enormous loan defaults to strengthen the power of supranational institutions and bind the West ever closer to failing collectivist economies. To be sure, the banks will not soon inaugurate another round of direct loans to the Less Developed Leeches; that game is up. In the next stage the multinational corporations will move to the fore. Backed by Western taxpayers and supranational institutions like the I.M.F. and the World Bank, the megacorps are about to launch a tidal wave of new direct investments in the Third World, setting up shop in the vital sectors of agriculture, mining, oil drilling, and trade and financial services. Of course, direct investment has always been important to Third World nations, but it is becoming more so. Declining governmental aid and bank loans from the West have made LDC's desperate for new capital, and they are rolling out the red carpet for the multinationals. Since the megacorps don't go anywhere these days without taxpayer guarantees, Western governments are now putting in place programs to protect their investments and accelerate the flow of capital to the Debtor Nations.

"The goals of the new investment will be to recycle Western money into the treasuries of Third World governments, which will then be able to make loan payments to the banks. But knowledgeable observers have no illusions that such enterprises will be private or capitalistic; for some time the Establishment has been devising rules whereby multinational investment will further the One World movement by strengthening the grip on debtor countries of international financing institutions. South magazine comments elegantly that a larger role for multinationals will 'require a convergence of attitude in developing and developed countries concerning multinational enterprises. . . For two decades the role of the giant multinational companies has been one of the thorniest issues in North-South relations. Several international agencies and various inter-government bodies have attempted to hammer out codes of conduct to protect both investor and host country, and proscribe restrictive business practices'." (From Globescan, Paris, Geneva. U.S. Service Center, 1545 New York Ave., Washington, D.C. 20002).

What this seems to mean is that the megabanks will go very slow on any future loans to any government. They'll sit back and be content to collect interest on payments, which is better than writing off the debts; and the loans to governments will be made through the international agencies, especially the IMF, the World Bank, and the various regional banks. Furthermore, the exploitation and developing in the LDCs will be by the multinational corporations in cooperation with the governments. Nothing is really changed, except that the megabanks will survive, the multinational corporations will thrive, and we'll all be one step closer to absolute one world control. Communist China provides an example of how this will work out. Despite the new "Open Door" policy established by the Trilateral Commission and other international clubs, Red China has been trying to make it on its own, do its own planning and developing as it strives to become an important "industrial" nation. But its central planners seem to have discovered that Communist methods don't work so well. In recent years huge amounts of labor (slave) and other resources (bought, borrowed, developed or donated) have been plunged into heavy industrial projects throughout the mainland. But inefficiency and unwise spending have run so high that it is reported that the country is scattered with the ruins of half-finished buildings and shells of factories which can't produce anything, due to technological inferiority and general inefficiency. So, the central planners in Red China found themselves in the same situation as were Lenin and Trotsky when they conquered Russia and tried to make it a self-sufficient dictatorship. Experts of every kind - manufacturers, engineers, oil drillers, miners, agriculturalists, electricians - had to be called in from England, Germany, the United States, to keep the new bolshevik empire from dying of its own inefficiency (all the proficient and intelligent Russians had been murdered or had fled to other countries). Likewise Red China; all the efficient and capable Chinese have been murdered or were able to flee to Taiwan or other countries. So, if Red China were to catch up with the rest of the world industrially, then the multinationals would have to be invited in and asked to cooperate. In this situation, Peking had considerable advantage, because American-based megacorps had been begging for the privilege of developing industries in Red China. And there was this stumbling block: President Reagan had ordered that there be no high-technology equipment sales to Red China, because such equipment could be used for military purposes. As a result, intense pressure was put on President Reagan by the American-based megacorps, as well as by Peking. When negotiations were being made for offshore oil drilling privileges in the South China Sea, fifteen U.S. oil companies were ignored and not allowed to participate in the bidding. Also, U.S. farm product imports were cut down as much as 80 percent in the past year. And all the alleged favors Peking had to offer to developers were being handed to European-based megacorps. So, the American based International Business Establishment began putting tremendous pressure on the White House, especially through Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige (CFR), who was also acting as co-chairman of the U.S.-China Joint Commission on Commerce and Trade. So, President Reagan buckled under, and The Washington Post News Service of June 21st reported:

"President Reagan, ending his bitter two-year controversy within his administration, has decided to allow China to buy American computers and other so-called 'dual-purpose' high-technology equipment, administration officials confirmed. . . . 'Dual-purpose technology is shorthand for computers, telecommunications and other equipment that, although developed for civilians, might also be converted for military applications.' So now American business establishments will be able to sell Peking integrated circuit fabricating equipment, software for computer-aided design and manufacture, and high-speed computers, all with military applications. And, of course, the profits made by the multinationals that do the selling and installing will be protected from any financial losses (with American tax dollars) if and when Peking should decide to nationalize their operations. As Globescan commented in another but similar context, "Since the megacorps don't go anywhere these days without taxpayer guarantees, Western governments are now putting in place programs to protect their investments and accelerate the flow of capital to the Debtor Nations." This fact lies behind the reappearance of the plan to convert the North American Continent and its Caribbean Basin into one regional economic community, or Common Market, similar to the European Common Market. Such a developing Regional World Government would include Canada, Mexico, the United States, Latin America and the Caribbean countries.

This plan was first announced by the newly elected President Reagan, but after his direct consultations with the heads of state of Canada and Mexico, the plan was shelved. Then President Reagan proposed his Caribbean Basin Economic Plan, which brought the North American Common Market idea out into the open once again. At about that same time a very important but little publicized think-tank hiding behind the cover of the Smithsonian Institution and calling itself the Woodrow Wilson International Center for Scholars, began working seriously on a plan for building a Hemispheric Regional New International Economic Order. This Wilson Center has as its co-chairman one Sol M. Linowitz. Remember Mr. Linowitz? He was former U.S. Ambassador to the Organization of American States (OAS) and was chief negotiator for the deal in which we gave away the American Canal in Panama and paid Panama to take it. Linowitz is a member of the Council on Foreign Relations (CFR) and ranks high in international banking circles. Other United States members of this Wilson Center include Peter Bell (CFR), Henry Cisneros (CFR), Jorge Domínguez (CFR), Albert Fishlow (CFR), Maurice Ferre (CFR), Roberto Goizueta (CFR), Ivan Head (Canadian International Development Research Centre), Theodore Hesburgh (CFR), David Jones (CFR), Juanita Kreps (CFR), Robert McNamara (CFR, Trilateral Commission), Edmund Muskie (CFR), Ralph Pfeiffer (CFR), Donald Platten (CFR), Elliot Richardson (CFR), David Rockefeller (CFR, TLC), Cyrus Vance (CFR), and Clifton Wharton (CFR). Executive director of the Wilson Center is Abraham Lowenthal, also a member of the CFR. With this kind of a cast, it is easy to understand how important will be any plan prepared by such a group of "scholars."

But these Woodrow Wilson scholars didn't work alone. Linowitz gave credit for help to the Aspen Institute for Humanistic Studies, certain staff members of the Inter-American Development Bank, the World Bank, the UN Economic Commission of Latin America, Vice President George Bush, Secretary of State George Shultz, recently transferred Assistant Secretary of State Thomas Enders, and others. Linowitz was "especially grateful for the following sources of financial support. . . . The Ford, Gildred, William and Flora Hewlett, and Rockefeller Foundations; Rockefeller Brothers Fund; Chemical Bank; IBM-AFE; and Time, Inc." We quote all of these names in order to show that this is no fly-by-night proposition. It's just as serious, and as well supported, as Willy Brandt's North/South Dialogue that brought us the New International Economic Order (actually, a Robert S. McNamara-instigated study). This Wilson Center "Inter-American Dialogue" is just as important as the original NIEO. This preliminary report from which are are quoting, was the result of an April 7, 1983 dialogue. It reveals a blue print for the establishment of a Western Hemispheric Economic Community (Common Market), similar to common markets already established for Western Europe and the Soviet Satellites. In due course, these economic communities would become political communities (European Parliament and the Warsaw Pact); and then established Regional World Governments; these in turn to be merged into a Socialist One World Government when time is ripe and conditions are right.

The formula, proposed by Hegel and adapted by Marx, is almost always the same:

- 1) Take a created crisis, or, if one doesn't exist, create a crisis.
- 2) Present a pre-planned solution to the crisis.
- 3) Publicize, propagandize and popularize the pre-planned solution so that the people will demand that the pre-planned solution be carried out, regardless of expense.

In "The Americas at a Crossroads," Sol Linowitz presented the crisis in these opening words: "The Western Hemisphere today faces challenges more serious than any since World War II, or perhaps even the Great Depression." This "Report of the Inter-American Dialogue" then discusses and pre-plans the solution to the crisis, insofar as the Americas are concerned. When the time is ripe and the ground properly prepared, the plan will be presented and publicized and, the Media assisting, the people will agree that the creation of a Western Hemispheric Economic Community, merging Canada, Mexico, the United States, Latin America and the Nations of the Caribbean Basin into one united economic community, or Common Market, would be a good thing for all the people!

In explaining and describing the construction of this International Establishment with which we have to deal, Futurewatch, a Globescan publication, asked its readers to "visualize a lofty pyramid, definable at the base, becoming less distinct as it rises." Since this type of pyramid can be seen on every Federal Reserve note of an alleged one dollar value, such a visualization is quite appropriate for American readers. At the summit of this pyramid, separate and distinct from the rest, and bearing the imprint of the "all-seeing eye" is the invisible group that holds the international money monopolies. This is the Power Apex. Beneath them are the Power Associates, the collaborators, the organizations, the supra-national banks, the associated megacorp executives, the agents of the Power Apex. These are the types that were present when Linowitz chaired the "American Dialogue." As this pyramid widens, it includes the Power Operators, most of whom we know and can be identified for what they are: the politicians, top-level bureaucrats, lawyers, labor union leaders - all of these influential public figures controlled and subsidized from above. At a still lower level in the pyramid are the Power Persuaders, the academic research organizations, the writers, media manipulators - all of them clearly visible. Their function is twofold: to influence public opinion and to inform the rest of the blocks in the pyramid of current policy and plans.

The International Establishment plans a Socialized American Community to be merged with a Socialized European Community, later with the Communized Empires of Russia and China. But to underwrite the collectivization of the entire world requires enormous financing. That's why the Power Apex gained control of the world's central banks, which lend to their captive governments, including the U.S. Government. To prevent any such money monopoly was the aim of the writers of our U.S. Constitution. And that documents still points the way to National Independence.

THE AMERICAN EMPIRE HAS COME OF AGE

Just when does a Constitutional, Representative Republic, having degenerated into a Socialist, Welfare State Democracy, then become an Empire? Has a President so proclaimed the fact? Has the Supreme Court issued such a manifesto? Has the Congress passed such a law? Have the political foundations of the Nation quaked? Have the graves of the Founding Fathers opened? Has the Constitution torn itself asunder Article by Article? As Gareth Garrett said in his superb Rise of Empire, "You cannot make a single stroke between day and night; the precise moment does not matter....That a republic may vanish is an elementary school book fact. The Roman Republic passed into the Roman Empire, and yet never could a Roman citizen have said, 'That was yesterday'." Gareth Garrett has called it "revolution within the form!"

Yet we might say there is this evidence that the American Empire has now replaced our Republic because of an epic Supreme Court decision of June 23rd, 1983, which robbed the U.S. Congress of certain veto powers and enshrined the Federal Executive and its massive Bureaucracy as the supreme law of the land. For an Empire does not require an Emperor at its head, but it does demand that the executive power of the government shall be dominant! True, the Constitution does not permit the dominance of any one department over another. The Constitution says that there shall be a balance of power: the Legislature to make the laws, the Administration to execute those laws, and the Supreme Court to determine the Constitutionality of such laws. However, the Supreme Court has declared in the voice of former Chief Justice Charles Evans Hughes (1931-1940) that "We are under a Constitution, but the Constitution is what the judges say it is." And the judges have declared that at least 200 laws, covering everything from starting wars to vetoing the "administrative laws" of the federal bureaus and agencies, are now null and void. Any appointed bureaucrat now may invoke any rule or regulation he may please, unless the U.S. Congress passes a new law prohibiting same; a new law not vetoed by the President, for he still has the veto power.

But, as we said, it was not this one particular decree of a Court gone berserk that has made our former Republic into an Empire. There are so many other events and actions leading up to this decision of June 23rd, that we cannot say when day became night and the light left our nation. There was, for example, the way in which we became involved in a foreign war in Korea. The Constitution says very clearly that the Congress only has the power to declare war (Art. I, Sec. 8). Yet President Harry Truman, obeying the orders of the Security Council of the United Nations and ignoring both Congress and the Constitution, on June 30, 1950, ordered U.S. troops under Gen. Douglas MacArthur to engage in what was termed a "police action" in Korea. Or we might cite the same unconstitutional action on the part of President Johnson when on August 5th, 1964, he presented the Congress with a "Gulf of Tonkin Resolution" which he exercised as though it were a declaration of war, and committed U.S. troops by the hundreds of thousands to one more war which we were forbidden to win.

Or you might go back to the fall of 1950 when President Truman sent American troops to Europe to join an international defense army (NATO), did it without even consulting Congress, without a law; he even challenged Congress to stop him. As Garrett stated in his Rise of Empire: "Congress made all the necessary sounds of anger and then poulticed its dignity with a resolution saying it was all right for that one time, but that hereafter it would expect to be consulted. At that time the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate asked the State Department to set forth in writing what might be called the position of Executive Government. The State Department obligingly responded with a document entitled 'Powers of the President to Send Troops Outside of the United States, - Prepared for the use of the joint committee made up of the Committee on Foreign Relations and the Committee on the Armed Forces of the Senate, February 28, 1951.' This document, in the year circa 2950, will be a precious find for any historian who may be trying then to trace the departing footprints of the vanished American Republic. For the information of the United States Senate it said:

As this discussion of the respective powers of the President and Congress has made clear, constitutional doctrine has been largely moulded by practical necessities. Use of the congressional power to declare war, for example, has fallen into abeyance because wars are no longer declared in advance. (Emphasis added. From Congressional Record, March 20, 1951).

"Caesar might have said it to the Roman Senate. If constitutional doctrine is moulded by necessity, what is a written Constitution for? Thus an argument that seemed at first to rest upon puerile reasoning turned out to be deep and cunning. The immediate use of it was to defend the unconstitutional Korean precedent, namely, the declaration of war as an act of the President's own will. Yet it was not invented for that purpose alone. It stands as a forecast of executive intentions, a manifestation of the executive mind, a mortal challenge to the parliamentary principle. The question is: 'Whose hand shall control the instrument of war?' It is late to ask. It may be too late, for when the hand of the Republic begins to relax another hand is already putting itself forth." (From Rise of Empire by Garet Garrett, Caxton, 1953).

So, among the veto-prohibiting powers denied the Congress by the epic Supreme Court action of June 23rd there was "The War Powers Resolution of 1973" which empowered Congress to force the President to withdraw U.S. armed forces from hostilities if war has not been declared. But the Supreme Court decision simply confirmed what had already been legalized, unconstitutionally, in 1951. In short, this latest Supreme Court edict simply approves and makes lawful what has already happened - that our Republic is now an Empire because the Chief Executive has the power to act as an emperor would act, the peoples' representatives having little say in the matter!

The first requisite of Empire is: The executive power of government shall be dominant. The Supreme Court has so affirmed. Another historic feature of Empire is a system of satellite nations. That word has been used in the United States only for nations that have been captured in the Russian orbit, or in the hegemony of the Peoples Republic of China. We call our satellites allies, or members of the NATO alliance, or SEATO, and now the selected seven of the Trilateral Commission. When our officials talk of interdependence, what they really mean is that the security of Europe, or Japan, or the Philippines, is vital to the security of the United States. That fact alone makes of ours an Empire. The word "satellite" is derived from its original astronomical meaning: "An attendant body, revolving around a larger one, its primary." At the end of World War II, the Nations of the Atlantic Alliance revolved around the United States in that they sought Marshall Fund aid and other gifts and loans. Ours was the act of a primary body supporting satellite bodies. When American troops were sent by order of an American President into foreign countries to defend them from a potential enemy Soviet Empire, that was indeed an act of Empire. And we repeat: Having a system of satellites - whether it be the USSR or the USA - constitutes a feature of Empire! In invoking the Truman Doctrine, the President had said: "We must make sure that our friends and allies overseas continue to get the help they need to make their full contribution to security and progress for the whole free world. This means not only military aid - though that is vital - it also means real programs of economic and technical assistance." Such words might have been used by a Caesar!

And just as there was an Atlantic Pact, there was a Pacific Pact by which we assumed responsibility for the security of Australia, New Zealand, the Philippines, Japan, South Korea, and the satellites of the former British, French and Dutch Empires in South Asia. And now there is developing a new system of satellites as President Reagan, Secretary of State George Shultz and former Ambassador Sol Linowitz speak of the construction of an American Hemispheric Economic Community.

The media tell us that this epic Supreme Court decision of April 23rd came about because of certain executive and legislative customs that developed after President Hoover had asked the Congress for permission to revise the Executive Department, and that the Congress refrain from any form of veto until after the Hoover Commission had completed its work. The Hoover Commission can hardly be blamed, but after it had completed a report that has never been published in full, it developed that:

- 1) Congress began delegating more of its Constitutional powers to the President and the Administrative Bureaus. so that appointed officials began to make laws that were sometimes vetoed by Congress, or a Committee thereof;
- 2) Administrative power began to grow steadily by reinterpretation of the Constitution; this being done by a sympathetic Supreme Court, as in the case of the June 23rd decision.
- 3) New administrative agencies and Cabinet Departments began to grow, with the power to issue rules and regulations that have the force of law; this being accomplished mainly through use of The Federal Register and Administrative Proclamations. Before June 23rd, Congress had 60 days in which it could act to veto such administrative rules and regulations. Now that power of veto is in question. And finally,
- 4) The powers of the Executive Branch were bound to increase as the country became more and more involved in foreign affairs. It was Secretary of State John Foster Dulles who first declared publicly that there is no longer any difference between foreign and domestic policy! That again is a mark of Empire.

Our Empire is, of course, diametrically opposed to the Soviet Empire. Because ours, again quoting Garrett, "is Imperialism of Good Intent. It is Empire as Franklin Delano Roosevelt imagined it when he said, of Lend-Lease: 'What I am trying to do is to eliminate the dollar sign.' During the next ten years one hundred billion dollars' worth of American Wealth was cast upon the waters, as gifts, grants, subsidies, and unrepayable loans to foreign countries. And none of it has ever come back. Empire of the Bottomless Purse."

Garet Garrett, whom we have quoted often in this Report, was a relentless critic of The New Deal and of the efforts of its fabian and fascist planners to make of our Nation an image of the European Socialist Welfare State. Garrett was especially critical of the American Rise of Empire which had become noticeable around the turn of the century, when men began proclaiming that there was a Manifest Destiny awaiting the United States when she should become a ranking international power. Garrett wrote his masterpiece, Rise of Empire in 1952. Then he retired with his wife to a cave on a river bank at Tuckahoe, New Jersey. When he labeled our former Republic an "Empire of the Bottomless Purse," he was speaking of an empire that was still in its teens. Now, billions upon billions of dollars later, after bushels upon bushels of American blood had been spilled on foreign Asiatic shores, the Empire has become full grown. With its monopoly control of debt-money, its near monopoly control of the economy, of education, communication, and even religion; with its satellite system of nations bound to it by UN-approved Regional Treaties and Alliances, with its Trilateral Commission, its Declaration of Interdependence, its annual international economic summits, and the multitudinous entangling alliances, we have become a true Empire, with a Supranational Power directing its Executive Bureaucracy; and there seems no turning back. Garrett noted that Between governments in the republican meaning, that is, Constitutional, representative, limited government on the one hand, and Empire on the other hand, there is mortal enmity. Either one must forbid the other or one will destroy the other...The country has been committed to the course of Empire.

Let us suppose that Disraeli, Lord Beaconsfield, was correct when he wrote that "the world is governed by very different personages from what is imagined by those who are not behind the scenes." Let us assume that Roosevelt was right when he spoke of political developments and said that things had been planned that way; by those behind the scenes, of course. Further, let us also assume that the Socialist George Orwell, writer of 1984, and Garet Garrett, Constitutionalist, writer of Rise of Empire, were true political prophets. Now, let us combine, and consider:

It began with Rhodes and Ruskin, Milner and Rothschild, and like-thinking leaders who proclaimed "the white man's burden." Out of this concept grew the great British Empire, on which the sun never set. But, when the first world war was planned it was decided that the old types of Empire should be wiped out and new types created. This in the interest of promoting the World Government that was still to come. So, there would be the new Empire of the Bottomless Purse, an Empire of Good Intent, which would finance the production. And there would be created an Empire of Evil Intent, a totalitarian monster which would promise to bring peace to the world by communizing the world. Now, if Orwell's concept is to be included (and it must be) then there should be a third Empire, a Yellow Empire with Asiatic and African satellite states revolving around the supply and support of the most populous and most undeveloped state of them all: Communist China. These, in the eyes of Orwell, would survive by warring upon each other; perpetual war to insure perpetual peace. Between these three Empires there would be destroyed all representative government and the freedom it entails. And, in the eyes of "those behind the scenes," there would emerge by the merging of the three, a One World Order that had been planned but never completely realized since the time of Nimrod.

There is one historical fact that should be reckoned with whenever the talk of Empire begins. Countries may alter their allegiances and continue to exist. Some countries are ancient indeed. Nations too may, with the demand of their people, alter or abolish one form of government, institute a new government and continue to endure, even to prosper. But Empires either destroy themselves or are destroyed. Go through the list: That first empire attempted by Nimrod. Chaldee from which Abram departed. Sumeria, Babylon, Egypt, Persia, Macedonia, the Roman Empire, those brief empires of Tamerlane and Genghis Khan, the later empires of the Dutch, Spanish, French, British; the empirical dreams of Napoleon and Hitler. Name any of them, and they are gone, though the countries themselves may remain. So, to allow our leaders to trade a Constitutional, representative, limited Republic for a brief try at ruling the world as an empire, is fatal. Our founders warned us of entangling alliances, about executive domination, certainly about the dangers of permitting a money monopoly. Which brings us to the root of the evil: had they been denied the money monopoly, those persons behind the scene could never have replaced our Republic with the trappings of Empire.

The Constitution supplies all the national answers, if it is not re-interpreted by today's Federal Judges.

FINANCIAL, POLITICAL, AND SCIENTIFIC CONTROL THE THREE MECHANISMS BY WHICH WE ARE RULED

James Madison, as a member of the first United States Congress, believed with the majority of legislators that certain Amendments should be added to the Constitution. He presented a series of recommended Amendments on June 8, 1789, ten of which were adopted and became known as the Bill of Rights. Among those not adopted was one which the Congress felt to be unnecessary, because the Constitution itself so very explicitly provided for a separation of powers. Madison's proposed amendment read: "The powers delegated by the Constitution are appropriated to the departments to which they are respectively distributed: so that the Legislature Department shall never exercise the powers vested in the Executive or Judicial, nor the Executive exercise the powers vested in the Legislative or Judicial, nor the Judicial exercise the powers vested in the Legislative or Executive Departments." Perhaps it would have been better for us, nearly 200 years later, if that should have been a part of the Bill of Rights. Because there is no longer any clear separation of powers between the three departments. Some administrative agencies can make their own laws, try their own cases, and prescribe punishment to those found guilty. The Congress, which should have been the lawmaking, tax-taking, money managing, war declaring and policy-making body, has delegated its power to the Executive or to private or quasi-official corporations, and has permitted the Judicial Department to take over much of the law-making functions. Such an example of this has been demonstrated dramatically during the last two weeks of this session of the U.S. Supreme Court. Ignoring Constitutional restrictions, bypassing the legislative powers of Congress, and avoiding any possibility of a presidential veto, the eight wise men and a woman "sent thunderbolts into government" according to Gannett's The Nation's Newspaper. Murderers of men, women and children were pardoned, murderers of unborn babies were given more license to kill. The Court told employers how pension plans are to be arranged. It allowed the Reagan administration to set the restrictions on travel to Cuba, struck down the legislative veto of Congress, which affects at least 200 federal laws. It decided that police may hold a traveler's luggage for ninety minutes if a police dog has sniffed out the presence of drugs. It decided that congressional district lines must be "almost precisely equal" in order not to violate the previously court-ordained ruling concerning one man, one vote. It ruled that the Executive Department didn't have the power to permit automakers to produce cars lacking air bags or automatic seat belts. The Court decided that sellers of contraceptives can advertise their merchandise through the mails. It ruled that States have been too strict in their rulings concerning abortions, must relax and make murder easier. The Court ruled against Bob Jones University and other Christian schools that, in the opinion of the Court, "discriminate on the basis of race." The Court did a couple of commendable acts, however. It ruled that appeals courts can compress the time they take to consider death sentence appeals. There are presently 1,200 men and women sentenced to death, only seven of them have been executed, and four of them chose death rather than awaiting the results of appeals that may have taken years under the old Supreme Court ruling. This means quicker execution and an end to what has become a matter of cruel and unusual punishment. What seemed to worry the people most was that the Court failed to rule on the question of home video recorders. But the Court did settle one issue that is important to Christians: it decided that State legislative sessions can be opened with prayer. Said Chief Justice Burger in the majority opinion:

"In the light of unambiguous and unbroken history of more than 200 years, there can be no doubt that the practice of opening legislative sessions with prayer has become a part of the fabric of our society. To invoke divine guidance on a public body entrusted with making the laws is not, in these circumstances, an 'establishment' of religion or a step toward establishment; it is simply a tolerable acknowledgement of beliefs widely held among the people of this country."

There was another Supreme Court ruling which pleased President Reagan and a great number of conservatives who we hoped would know better. It had to do with tax tuition credits for parents of children in private or church schools in Minnesota. The ruling applies only to that State, but it gives other States and Congress a blueprint for fashioning such tax breaks on a nationwide basis. People generally refuse to realize that a federal tax break means federal control, even though the Supreme Court itself has so acknowledged. If this tuition tax credit becomes a national practice, then we can say goodbye to private education; the government will be able to establish an absolute monopoly, to be administered by such left wing labor unions as the National Education Association. In this connection, we recently received a letter from Barbara Morris, publisher of the Barbara M. Morris Report as well as the author of "Change Agents in the Schools" and the more recent book, "Tuition Tax Credits. A Responsible Appraisal." Without direct permission and hoping it will help sell her latest book, which should be read and studied by every parent sending children to a church or private school, we publish that letter while expressing total agreement with what Barbara Morris writes:

"Dear Mr. Bell. The other day I received an order for . . . copies of my tax credit book from someone who said you gave it a rave review. Bless you for that. For the critical issue that it is, it's not getting too much attention from 'our side.' As a matter of fact, the silence is deafening. With the exception of the support of relatively few 'hard heads', you wouldn't know it had been published. I knew, at the outset, that this issue would separate the 'conservatives' from the 'patriots' but I didn't think the division would be so severe. ¶ I didn't think I would see the day that 'our side' would blindly play 'follow the leader' on such an important issue. They are behaving like manipulated knee-jerk liberals who don't want to be confused by the facts because 'we are Republicans and we must support the president.' I wonder if the president asked them to jump in the lake because they are 'good Republicans' they would blindly follow orders, with the hope that they might not drown and perhaps get a nice job as a reward. ¶ If tuition tax credits ever become a reality, it will mean the end of private education as we know it. It will be small consolation to me to know 'I told you so'." (The book in question is "Tuition Tax Credits, A Responsible Appraisal," by Barbara M. Morris, P.O.Box 756, Upland CA 91786. Write for current price and quantity discounts).

In case you haven't heard, President Reagan is, at this writing, engaged in something of a crusade to get his tuition tax credit idea passed by Congress. On July 6, AP reported out of Los Angeles that "President Reagan appealed yesterday to the American Federation of Teachers to put aside its differences with his administration and work with him toward 'a renaissance in American education.' . . . Reagan said, 'I am fully aware that there are some major areas where we disagree - matters like tuition tax credits.' Then he explained and appealed.

Are we being unfair to Mr. Reagan, the actor who turned politician? Or is it that he has been unfair us? Any discerning patriot could have known that he compromised when he permitted his superiors to name George Bush of the Rockefeller Stable as his running mate two and a half years ago. He has sold out to the Trilateralists and the CFRers, as have what's left of his original staff. Of course, in a greater sense, we were all wrong in ever thinking that a president - any president of any party - could turn the tide. If we are Constitutionalists and depend upon the letter and spirit of that document, then we must understand that the President does not represent the people. He is not elected by the people. He is selected at a controlled and manipulated national convention where the hierarchy that controls both political parties select both candidates, or permit their selection for their own purposes. The people have no part in the choosing, and when they think they are voting for one or the other, they're really voting for a group of electors who will do the final choosing. That's representative Republicanism as it should be. Nor should the people vote for Senators. Senators should represent, not the people, but the States individually and the United States collectively, and up until 1913 they were elected by their State's Legislature. This is Representative Republicanism and is as it should be still. Only the Representatives, the members of the House of Congress, should be elected by the people; and they should truly represent the people. But we the people have turned instead to the Executive Department and its agencies for our bonuses and benefits, food stamps and social security. And when we have had grievances we have been quick to turn to the Courts for social justice and financial reward. We the people perverted the system laid down by our fathers, and where the authority once rested with the people, now it rests with executive departments and the courts.

So much for the national control that has come upon us. There also is a form of international control which should be considered. We have recently received a manuscript from the "American National News Service" which states that "Most patriots and political sensitives in general recognize that there is a financial and political control mechanism. Informed observers have long pointed to groups such as the Trilateral Commission, the Council on Foreign Relations, the Bilderberger organization along with the entire concept of reserve banking as being features of either the political or financial control mechanisms. What is not generally recognized is that there is a third element in the internationalist control structure without which the other two parts would not work; the scientific control mechanism (emphasis added).

Our informant is not referring simply to what we have come to know as psychopolitics, which is a key control mechanism. The reference is more particularly to the control of energy and of certain important discoveries which have to do with a kind of extra-dimensional character, and here we might refer to the non-vehicular transportation of power, the propulsion of flying saucers, and other scientific developments about which the people have been kept in ignorance. Our informant writes:

"Once the internationalists had achieved financial and political control in the early part of this century they quickly, and forcefully, moved to control any scientific movement which could be a threat to their control. The vehicle for this was the new tax laws which in 1913 established tax free foundations. By being the only source of any size for funding research and selectively granting funds, they installed materialistic physics and saw to it that research in nonmaterial areas was for practical purposes halted. They went further; they rewrote basic theory and the textbooks of the day in such a way that anyone seeking a nonmaterial physics or evidence of other dimensional states would in effect be led in circles. . . . Starting in the earliest days of the new century the internationalists took an even greater interest in technical development." There was the situation in regard to Nicola Tesla who was "by all measures a towering figure both in terms of public consciousness and standing in the technical community. He enjoyed backing from both patriotic and what would come to be known as internationalist sectors of the financial community. All went well until the (J.P.) Morgans and their banking associates found that Tesla was in fact working on free energy production at his Colorado research facility. He had worked out the basis of a system of transferring energy between points without a conductor and with no loss, obviating the need for distribution systems. Tesla and others who were on the verge of documenting the existence of a more fundamental physics in which our electromagnetics would play a small part. What followed would be familiar to any patriot who has at all studied their political control mechanisms, or their methodology. Tesla was promptly cut off from his principal source of funds, harrassed by a suddenly hostile press, forced to fight off hundreds of lawsuits while his name was expunged from textbooks of the time. By 1920 the greatest electrical genius the Western world had ever produced was reduced to feeding pigeons on Manhattan street corners.

"Following the Tesla scare the controls came swift and severe. Major figures had their reputations ruined, further hostile press campaigns were orchestrated and funding was cut or redirected into a new controlled brand of physics. The new controlled physics had a set of rules guaranteed to keep the Rockefellers et al in a permanent state of control. The new materialistic physics denied extradimensional existence, limited speeds to light, tied charge to mass, etc. Like the conservatives in post war politics a host of dissenters were always carefully maintained to give a show of non control. But like the conservative movement, they were either outright establishment agents or less than competent types kept on a short leash."

In addition to Tesla's discoveries, which would have ruined the oil industry among other things, there also was the Rogers radio system. It was able to transmit music and voice to Europe with none of the fading and degradation normally associated with short wave propagation. It operated in a kind of "space between dimensions" and was extremely dangerous to the Internationalist establishment. Who today has ever heard of the Rogers radio system? Then there were the Moray and Helronimus devices. The Moray device was, roughly, a system for creating enormous amounts of energy at very low cost. The name T. Henry Moray of Salt Lake City will not be found in today's textbooks. Likewise T. Galen Helronimus, an early independent researcher who was developing new, inexpensive energy sources. The Internationalists made of Helronimus a non-person.

Then there was the better known control of medicine. Rockefeller was in on this control method from the very beginning, having begun his career selling crude oil as a cure for cancer. Again we quote: "Like no other field of technology, medicine has an immediate and highly visible impact on society. Much of the workability of the whole financial and political control mechanism is directly tied to the practice of medicine." Medicine has become an "industry" and works in close relationship with government. For the past 70 years, any method of treatment or any medicine or natural curative which the "industry" disapproves, has been moved against by government. There has been the same press cooperation with the medical industry. "Again and again since about 1915 the press has initiated campaigns against other schools of medicine. These press efforts have ranged from broad advice to the public against a certain therapy, to demands for prosecution of the therapy's practitioners." Nowhere is this more apparent than in the treatment of cancer. To maintain social control by the internationalists, a control mechanism in the area of human health becomes a necessity.

Consider this important statement: "For reasons of social control it is important to recognize that productivity of a controlled society must be kept restricted. Too much productivity leads to a great degree of social independence. Too little and the society cannot maintain its necessary contribution to a reserve banking system which is the basic vehicle in all modern social control systems. More to the point, productivity must be maintained only so far as it generates the degree of financial activity and employment to maintain a controlled social atmosphere. . . As ugly as these observations may be, they are necessary in addressing the use of medicine and science in financial and thus social control mechanisms."

WHEN THE MEDIA MANUFACTURE THE NEWS

1913 was the year when the poison was implanted, the poison that would lead to the eventual death of our country as a Constitutional Republic. It was a multiple lethal dosage. It consisted of the 16th Income Tax Amendment, the 17th Amendment which called for the direct vote for United States Senators, the passage of the Federal Reserve Act, and the federal authorization for the creation of tax-exempt foundations. At that time, 70 years ago, there was no public radio, television was just a dream, movies were silent and in their impotent infancy. That left the printed page, the stage and the rostrum as the only important communications and propaganda media, with the daily press the most important of them all. Just how important was the commercial press in the conditioning of the American people into acceptance of the 16th and 17th Amendments, the Federal Reserve System and the tax-evading propaganda mills to be known as Foundations? An editor named John Swinton gave an answer to that question. In 1914, the first year after the injection of the poison into our body politic, and before America's entry into World War I, Swinton addressed the publishers, editors, journalists and reporters attending the 1914 annual dinner of the American Press Association. He said, among other things bearing similar sentiment:

"There is no such thing as an independent press in America, if we except that of little country towns. You know that and I know it. Not a man among you dares to utter his honest opinion. Were you to utter it, you know beforehand that it would never appear in print. I am paid one hundred and fifty dollars a week so that I may keep my honest opinion out of the newspaper for which I write. You too are paid similar salaries for similar services. Were I to permit that a single edition of my newspaper contained an honest opinion, my occupation - like Othello's - would be gone in less than twenty-four hours. The man who would be so foolish as to write his honest opinion would soon be on the streets in search of another job. It is the duty of a New York journalist to lie, to distort, to revile, to toady at the feet of Mammon, and to sell his country and his race for his daily bread, or what amounts to the same thing, his salary. We are the tools and the vassals of the rich behind the scenes. We are marionettes. These men pull the strings and we dance. Our time, our talents, our lives, our capacities are all the property of these men - we are intellectual prostitutes."

That's how it was in 1914, when the only really important communications medium was the press. Now we have the spoken word and the picture transmitted instantaneously by satellites to any part of America, or the world. How the list of intellectual prostitutes has grown since 1914! And something new has been added to their technique. Now they go seeking for some small, unimportant incident which they can promote to a world shaking event, such as the indiscretion of an eleven-year-old daughter of a college professor who wrote a letter to a dictator in the Kremlin. Or, on the other hand, they can lie, distort, and revile in the telling of a story so that reputations are ruined, people are misinformed as to the facts, and honest causes are portrayed as acts of evil. It has also become a habit of certain segments of the media to promote or apologize for the acts of communists and socialists, while ridiculing or condemning the pro-American attitude of those who oppose the freeze-niks, are against unilateral disarmament, and opposed to the acts of terrorists in Central and South America, etc.

Presently being promoted by both the Kremlin and the New York and Washington based media, is the current case of that misguided moppet, Samantha Smith, whose parents should be condemned for allowing their child to become a pawn in an international power play. As might have been expected, of all the leading organs of our national press, only one - U.S. News - had the honesty and decency to call the media creation what it really is, labeling the moppet as a "Pawn in (the) Propaganda War," and headlining the fact that "The U.S. schoolgirl's trip to Russia is getting wide attention. And that's exactly what the Kremlin intended." Nicholas Daniloff, writing from Moscow, noted that "Since Yuri Andropov took power eight months ago, hundreds of Americans have sent letters to the Soviet President and Communist Party leader. But experts in the Kremlin considered one to be special: A note from an 11-year-old schoolgirl from Maine, Samantha Smith, deploring nuclear war. And so Samantha received a personal invitation from Andropov to visit the Soviet Union, all expenses paid. ¶ Why Samantha and not any of the other Americans who have written letters to Andropov? The answer: Letters are carefully screened, and her opposition to nuclear war fitted into the Kremlin's war of words with the Reagan administration. So Samantha Smith and her mother and father flew to Moscow on July 8 from Manchester, Me., their arrival well covered by the Western and Russian news media. From Moscow, Samantha's itinerary, minutely planned by Soviet authorities, included visits to Leningrad, a youth camp in Crimea and, if his health makes it possible, a meeting with Andropov himself. What began last spring as the letter of a young girl . . . was transformed into a media event."

U.S. News correspondent Daniloff recalls that Lenin himself laid down the law in 1920: "Publishing enterprises (the Soviet media) must not be permitted to abuse their autonomy by pursuing a policy that is not entirely party policy." In short, the only things to be seen on Russian TV or read in Soviet newspapers and magazines must promote or at least be conformable to Kremlin policy - which is why Samantha has been seen on both American and Russian TV. However, the privilege afforded Samantha would never be offered Ronald Reagan. Yet on the other hand, Soviet dignitaries have become fixtures on U.S. TV screens - and this not by accident. U.S. News observes that "Soviet ambassador Anatoly Dobrynin is under orders to make embassy officials available for American newscasts and panel shows. Academician Georgi Arbatov often is seen with his American counterparts. Heart specialist Dr. Yevgeny Chazob, a frequent Soviet emissary to international meetings, talks more of nuclear policy than his medical specialty. . . . While restricting the flow of information inside Russia, the Soviet Union takes full advantage of Western press freedoms." And the Western press welcomes, even promotes communist causes.

As an example, earlier this year there was considerable discussion concerning the use of biological warfare weapons by the Soviets in Laos, Cambodia and Afghanistan. Our State Department issued much information, proving beyond any doubt that "yellow rain" was being used in these countries; this in violation of international agreements, which the Kremlin likes to treat as pie crusts. Yet, on June 1, The New York Times carried a long article by one Philip M. Boffey, illustrated with photos, which discussed at length the theory of a Harvard professor that this "yellow rain" that has reportedly caused thousands of deaths in Southeast Asia and Afghanistan, is nothing more than bee excrement. According to Reed Irvine of Accuracy In Media, "Prof. Matthew Meselson had reported finding bee pollen in a sample of yellow rain that had been obtained in Thailand by official Canadian observers in February 1982. . . . Meselson advanced the theory that the highly toxic ingredient in yellow rain, trychothecene mycotoxin, had developed naturally in the accumulated pollen excreted by bees. Ergo, the Soviets were innocent of any wrongdoing. The Times did not point out to its readers that Dr. Meselson has long been searching for reasons to knock down the growing evidence of Soviet use of biological or chemical agents to kill people in Southeast Asia and Afghanistan. . . . When Prof. Meselson, a biologist who is known as a 'dove' at Harvard, came out with his 'bee excrement' theory journalists who seemed to be eager to let the Soviet Union off the hook rushed to suggest that the U.S. government and all the scientists who had laboriously accumulated the evidence of Soviet perfidy and inhumanity were wrong." This New York Times story was reprinted or reported in other newspapers from coast to coast, and readers were left with the impression that the Communists were innocent, but that the bees had killed untold numbers of men, women and children in Laos, Cambodia and Afghanistan. And whenever this bee pollen dropped on people, 72.4% of them were killed, 62.06% had violent hemorrhages, there was loss of consciousness, paralysis, blurred vision, hearing loss, or other symptoms. All caused by bees, not by Communists, if The New York Times report is correct.

Just why the American media are so anxious to apologize for the USSR and blame other sources, including the USA, in regard to yellow rain, threat of nuclear war, war mongering in general, etc. can probably be answered by the Establishment that owns or controls the Communications Media. Why a majority of Americans should believe such propaganda, willingly accept such lies, distortions and toadying to the Reds, has to do with the fact that most Americans see and read and hear only what is dispensed by that controlled Media. William Bernbach, an advertising executive, upon being inducted into the Advertising Hall of Fame, said:

"The public doesn't know what goes on behind the scenes. They know only what they see and hear. What happens on the floor (of the UN, for example) is what they are exposed to, and what they are exposed to shapes their thoughts. This exposure is then abetted by the press dramatizing the conflict, and that's how a polarized public opinion is created. . . . All of us who professionally use the mass media are the shapers of society. We can vulgarize that society. We can brutalize it. Or we can help lift it onto a higher level." (Remarks made at an Advertising Hall of Fame Luncheon, Feb. 9, 1977.)

A prominent feature of the activities of today's Media is the members' mania for pursuing a vendetta against Ronald Reagan and any allegedly right-wing aide who may remain in the White House. Certainly there are any number of complaints and criticisms that can honestly, justifiably and ethically be charged against the Chief Executive and his team. But certain media members, especially some connected with TV, seem to go out of their way seeking, inventing, fabricating events that are intended to make Reagan seem incompetent, malfeasant, worthy of ridicule. There is, for example, the current case of the missing, purloined, purchased or non-existent sex tapes. Lawyer Richard Steinberg says they'd just about blow the roof off the Administration Executive Office Building. But he says they were stolen from him by a reporter. It wasn't Jack Anderson, who'd like to buy them; or Larry Flynt who'd like to publish the pictures. It's all a mystery as we go to press. But it's evident that the media promotion of the event has to do with the desire to hurt or embarrass somebody in or near the White House. Likewise the "Debategate" muddle that the media would like to expand into another Watergate. Newsweek covered its cover of July 18th with pictures of Ronald Reagan, James Baker, William Casey, and the words: "Feeling the Heat. The 'Debategate' Plot Thickens. Who's Telling the Truth - and Will Heads Roll?" Then comes five-and-a-third pages of pictures and text blowing up a political paper-snatch into a virtually treasonable theft of top secret official documents. We like the way it was treated by Accuracy In Media: "We are now seeing important elements of the media working themselves into a lather over the leak of a White House document - a political document, not a national security document. Outrage is being expressed over the fact that in 1980 someone leaked a briefing book prepared for Jimmy Carter prior to his nationally televised debate with Ronald Reagan. . . . The beneficiary of the leak was not The Washington Post or The New York Times. If one of their enterprising reporters had got his hands on the book and had written lengthy stories about it, exposing the strategy of the Carter camp, that would have been treated as a journalistic coup. There would be no demands for an investigation, no pressure on the journalist to reveal his source. (But) Since the beneficiary of the leak of the Carter debate briefing book was the Reagan campaign, not a journalist, the media see the leak in an entirely different light. . . . Now it is a question of thievery and Watergate-style dirty tricks. Those who got the leaked material and used it to their advantage - to help their candidate win the election - are vilified. This journalistic hypocrisy was brutally exposed by columnist George Will (also a victim) on ABC's 'This Week' program. Sam Donaldson, ABC's White House correspondent, and Jodie Powell, Carter's former press secretary, wanted to see the culprits brought to justice. When George Will suggested that the same standard be applied to the press, Powell said lamely that the press was different, and Sam Donaldson was momentarily speechless."

Sometimes the leaks do work the other way. In May 1982 TV Guide published an article based on leaked documents and information revealing that there had been serious violations of CBS News Standards and journalistic ethics in the production of that document that caused General Westmoreland to file a $120 million libel suit against CBS. TV Guide was vilified, Westmoreland's charges were at first laughed at. But CBS was forced to make an investigation and the findings confirmed the accuracy of the leaked information. But CBS kept the report secret for nearly a year. And the media did not demand its release, until after the General's charges began to be taken seriously. The media ox doesn't like to be gored.

"Americans, wearied by the intense struggle to make a living are soothed into comfortable lethargy by quadruple anodynes, television, radio, newspapers and the cinema. By the nobility of their tolerance they have allowed themselves to be educated into ignorance of what is actually going on in the world....What they don't know can and does hurt them" (Conrad Grieb in "Manifest Destiny." 370 pages, paper cover, $8.75 postpaid. Examiner Books, Box 783, New York, NY 10150). As an antidote to this situation, there still is a free and independent press. It is composed of some tabloids, monthlies, and a large number of newsletters such as this DBR. One of these newsletters, "Currency Competition," always carries this slogan: "Private enterprise is the kind of human endeavor that government can control, but a government monopoly is the kind of human enterprise that nobody can control.' Our elitist supragovernment is striving for a monopoly in all things, like the money monopoly that nobody can control. As yet, there is no media monopoly, but the elitists aim to establish one. It could be accomplished through the enactment of a bill: HR1342 or S450. These would greatly increase the enforcement authority and police powers of the U.S. Postal Service. They were defeated in the last Congress, but have been introduced again and are awaiting action. Passage into law could cause the end of our free and independent press, and create the media monopoly the elitists desire. It would give USPS, for the first time in history, the awesome authority to order a business, profession or publication to "cease and desist" their business or publication. Those three words, "cease and desist," would give the USPS Thought Police more Orwellian power to permanently shut down any business, profession or publication in the U.S. than is currently held by all other federal agencies combined. If you value your free and independent press, then please ask your Congressman to oppose HR1342, and your Senators to oppose S450.

THE REGIONALIZATION OF CENTRAL AMERICA

So "Henry the K" is back. Openly, not covertly as before. He's an official member of the Reagan Administration. He has a title, and an opportunity to complete at least a part of his "Grand Design" which was interrupted when he became, very mysteriously, the sole survivor of the Fall of Watergate. He is to take charge of a Commission which is to present plans for the creation of a Regional World Government and Economic Community for Central America; though this is not supposed to be known publicly. Kissinger's appointment came about as the culmination of a period when all eyes of official Washington and the trained Communications Media were focused on Central America. There was confusion and controversy, conflicting opinions and contradictory conclusions, peace-like presentations and war-like gestures; all abounding in unusual measure. And the papers were loaded with headlines and stories concerning Central America. Now, we have observed over the years that when so much government and media attention is directed to one part of the world, and when no one source seems to agree with any other source, something big is going to happen! And it's usually something that is not talked about openly, something that all the headlines and leading paragraphs are intended to camouflage, to keep the real news from the general public. How does this apply to the present situation? Let us count the ways:

1. Torn between the demands of the right for more aid to anti-communist countries in Central America on the one hand, and demands for the withdrawal of aid on the left hand, President Reagan appointed a special envoy. Former Florida Senator Richard Stone was named to go to the most troubled area in the region and try to effect a compromise. He did arrange a meeting where terrorists and patriots were scheduled to talk about voting instead of shooting. But, after all had been arranged, the guerrilla leaders simply forgot to attend the meeting. Stone was left standing at the altar. He returned to Washington to tell his boss that something else had to be tried.

2. Something else was being tried, but not by Washington. Four Latin American presidents, meeting in Cancun, Mexico, produced the Contadora Plan. It urged the demilitarization of all Central America, a ban on all foreign military bases, and the expulsion of all non-Latins, who were to get out and let the natives work out their own destiny. This plan, of course, would have ended up with Castro or his successor presiding over all of Central America, and probably the Caribbean and South America as well. It's sad to say that many of the nations down south would prefer that. But we couldn't allow it, at least not officially.

3. President Reagan tried again, probably at the insistence of the Rockefeller Crowd. There had been a modicum of success when he appointed the Greenspan Commission on Social Security. There seemed to be good results developing from the efforts of the Scowcroft Commission on MX Missiles. So, another commission might work out as well; this one to be the Kissinger Commission on Central America. Much more about this later.

4. Feeling that a show of exceptional military force might help, President Reagan followed the pattern adopted by President Theodore Roosevelt when he used the "big stick" policy to start America on the road to fulfillment of his concept of our "Manifest Destiny." Teddy sent U.S. warships to all the ports of the Western World. Reagan decided to send an eight-ship battle group led by the aircraft carrier Ranger, to the Pacific Coast off Central America, where it will back up an estimated 5,000 U.S. military force which is to hold military exercises in conjunction with the Honduran army. That country is being menaced by the leftist forces of Cuba and Nicaragua, and the "big stick" policy is expected to act as a warning. Just such a policy led to our invasion of Mexico under "Black Jack" Pershing in 1913, and to the military occupation by U.S. Marines of Nicaragua in the 1920s. The latter led to the establishment of the Somoza family as the leaders of Nicaragua, a son of that same family having been deposed in order to let the Sandinistas take over, and in order to create exactly the situation which exists today. Conspiracy or accident of history? Let's let "Henry the K" decide for us.

5. To keep things unsettled, Nicaragua's Sandinista government last week offered to stop all arms shipments to El Salvador, end all foreign military assistance to foreign rebels, sign a nonaggression pact with Honduras, end all economic discrimination against Honduras - all this if there be a ban on all foreign military bases in Central America. The clincher in this one: Cuban military bases and forces are not considered to be "foreign" even if manned by Russians and East Germans.

6. At the same time Nicaragua's Ortega was talking peace, the U.S. House of Representatives was meeting in an unusual closed-door session to discuss whether or not President Reagan should be allowed to be given more money to give to those opposing Cuban and Nicaraguan aggression.

7. To cap the tip of the iceberg that is this Central American imbroglio, it was necessary, on July 20th, for the Secretary of State to assure Congress that the government of El Salvador really is making progress in the area of Human Rights. Otherwise El Salvador would not receive its regular allowance of military aid.

Out of all this hodgepodge of activity and confusion, the one thing that stands out most clearly is the total and complete surrender of Ronald Reagan to the forces of the Supranational Government headed by David Rockefeller, and whose Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs is Henry Kissinger. The return of Kissinger to active duty in our official federal government was denounced by both rightists and leftists. Said Senator Jesse Helms, "There may be someone across this broad land lower down on my list of preferences for such a commission than Henry Kissinger, but I can't think of him." Being careful not to name names, Helms continued, "I want to talk about such things as possible conflict of interest. He is representative of a large New York Bank, for example. Also, I want to know what he knows, if anything, about the region." Senator Christopher, representing the Fabian Left, said Kissinger's appointment was "just another public relations job." That Reagan was trying to mollify critics and muster support for his failing policies in Central America by appointing a "glamorous" figure such as Kissinger to head the Commission. Rep. Clarence Long, chairman of the House foreign operations subcommittee - the panel that decides on that $80 million allotment to El Salvador - said he hoped "this business of Kissinger is only a trial balloon. As far as I'm concerned, I'd like to see it shot down."

But it won't be shot down, unless terrorists, revolutionaries or other Communist Comrades intervene; because this Kissinger Commission is the result of a carefully laid plan that just needs the Kissinger touch to make it effective. The plan has little to do with the freedom or living standards of the people of Central America, as such. But, here is an area rich with resources that has hardly been touched. The area needs to be developed, and that's the specialty of those affiliated with the Rockefeller Establishment. Furthermore, Central America is ripe for building the area into an International Economic Community, preparatory to making it a part of the New World Order. As Senator Helms suggested, Kissinger has no real knowledge of Central America, and he's primarily a representative of Rockefeller's international banking establishment. But Kissinger's background is sufficient for this special job, because international bankers Sol Linowitz and Robert Strange McNamara are not acceptable for the job. Linowitz was responsible for engineering the Panama Canal Payaway, and for the creation of Panama City as a tax-free and generally law-exempt haven for international bankers. That makes Linowitz unacceptable for promoting - at the public level - any plan for the Regional Governance of Central America. McNamara, on the other hand, has the shame of the Vietnam War in his background, having acted as Secretary of Defense during most of that planned and protracted horror that cost the lives of some 50,000 young American men. McNamara is probably good at running world banks and Banks of America, but he wouldn't be accepted as a Regionalizer of our Southern neighbors. For many of the same reasons, Kissinger also is unacceptable. But he's dependable, and David thinks he's the man to do the job. But, about this job; here is some background information that you won't read in the commercial press.

James H. Billington is an "Intellectual scholar" who, like the late Carroll Quigley, author of Tragedy and Hope, wrote a book about the origins of Communism which told far more than the "Intellectual establishment" would want written. We have reviewed Billington's Fire in the Minds of Men, Origins of the Revolutionary Faith. In previous issues, so we won't discuss it now. We just wanted to identify Billington as the Director of the very exclusive and elitist Woodrow Wilson Center for Scholars. It is here that the international elite meet to greet each other and, in secret, concoct plans and programs which will contribute toward the completion of their New World Order. The things that make this Center different from the Aspen Institute, RAND, Hudson, American Assembly, CFR, etc., is that it hides behind the cover of the well respected Smithsonian Institution and is not at all well known even to "Intellectual scholars" who are anti-Fabian, anti-New World Order, et al. Anyway, David Rockefeller, Sol Linowitz, Robert McNamara, and a group of similar "Intellectual scholars" approached James Billington and asked that his Center and its facilities be used for a series of meetings at which there would be planned a program for the creation of an International Economic Community in Central America. That wasn't the way the proposition was stated by the "scholars", but that's what was meant. So, between October 1982 and March 1983 the Center sponsored "an extensive Inter-American dialogue under the distinguished co-chairmanship of Ambassador Sol Linowitz and President Galo Plaza", former President of Ecuador and onetime Secretary General of the Organization of American States (OAS). Of the 46 "Intellectual scholars" meeting and planning for the takeover, one was a Canadian banker; 26 of the members were Latins, bankers, industrialists, former members of government; and 19 were listed as United States citizens. All but one of these 19 was a member of the Council on Foreign Relations; and all 46 were connected in one or more ways with the Rockefeller banking and multinational industrial complex. Consequently, all would go along gladly with the economic and financial, social and political issues promulgated by Linowitz and Rockefeller. These so-called "Intellectual scholars" issued a report entitled "The Americas at a Crossroads," in April 1983. Briefly, it called for the setting up of a Regional (Hemispheric) Common Market, and for the creation of separate, specialized agencies, preferably under the OAS or the UN. Each agency would deal with its particular area of control. More participation was called for by the IMF, World Bank, and other international lending agencies. If and when completed, the plan would form the nucleus of a Regional World Government, organized under the authority of the United Nations, or whatever global government that would finally be established by the international elitists. A dangerous feature of the plan: Communism would be more or less ignored. Said the report: "We all favor keeping Latin America and the Caribbean out of the East-West conflict to the greatest extent possible. It does not serve that purpose for the United States to oppose changes in the region simply because they diminish U.S. influence and hence are perceived as advantageous to Cuba and the Soviet Union, unless they are clearly related to basic security concerns. We believe that the United States can better achieve its long-term interest in regional stability, one shared by Latin Americans, by exercising measured restraint in the projection of its own power!" Referring specifically to Central America, the report said: "To deal with the hostilities in Central America, we favor dialogue: between Nicaragua and each of its neighbors; between Cuba and all the countries of Central America; and between the United States and Cuba, and the United States and Nicaragua, respectively; as well as between the United States and the Soviet Union."

In plainer words: Don't interfere with the Communists; let them do what they will, while we stand by and exercise measured restraint in the exercise of our power! So here we witness the beginning of that merging of the United States and the Soviet Union, into a Regional, Socialist World Government!

This, then, is the blueprint from which Henry Kissinger and his Commission will operate. His background fits him to the task, even though he may know nothing about the troubles that beset the countries of Central America. In his book The Troubled Partnership, published in 1965, Kissinger called for the creation of a Regional World Government composed of the NATO Nations. He wrote that "Institutions based on present concepts of national sovereignty are not enough. The West requires a larger goal: the constitution of the Atlantic Commonwealth in which all the peoples bordering the North Atlantic can fulfill their aspirations. Clearly, it will not come quickly; many intermediate stages must be traversed before it can be reached. It is not too early, however, to prepare ourselves now for this step beyond the nation-state." (Emphasis added).

After becoming Secretary of State and, at that time perhaps the most powerful politician in the land, Kissinger had another dream: His "Grand Design" was to encompass a "Triangular Constellation." Names and people may change, but the Plan carries on. Kissinger's "Triangular Constellation" became Brzezinski's "Trilateral Commission." The chief difference between the two: Kissinger's Triangle favored Mainland China as one side of his equilateral triangle; Brzezinski favored Japan as the Oriental Third Partner. After surviving the Watergate debacle, Kissinger's "Grand Design" became Brzezinski's "Technetronic Era", and the New International Economic Order came into vogue. And now that Brzezinski is resting on the sidelines, Kissinger is back on the team. With the National Democrats having little better than a Cranston or a Mondale, or even a Kennedy, to offer in the next election, Reagan will win if he runs, Bush may run and win if Reagan doesn't. This means that the "Superman" of the Nixon era will be back on the team, moving upward and onward. He'll have another chance to fashion his Grand Design, beginning on a lesser scale in the Americas instead of Atlantica. But who knows what wonders will be accomplished when "The Superman" of International Affairs again gains the opportunity, and the authority, and the power to work his will on the proletariat?

But, whether it be Kissinger or some other member of "the team," the goal is the same. And Kissinger stated it plainly: We must "prepare ourselves for this step beyond the nation-state." And "clearly it will not come quickly; many intermediate stages [like the creation of a Regional World Government for the Americas] must be traversed before it can be reached."

If we cherish our independence and our "nation-state," we must watch with care the future moves of this new Kissinger Commission, which intends to make the march toward One World Government a bi-partisan and supragovernmental effort. And we should always remember that it is the Money Monopoly which makes these things possible. St. Paul said it best.

THE COMMUNIST - CAPITALIST STRATEGY

"First of all," Ronald Reagan remarked genially, "I am a believer in delegating. There have been others in this office who did not do that and who attempted to do every thing themselves and as a result were up to their eyebrows in minutiae and detail that kept them away from what really should be done." So said the President when granting an interview to Laurence I. Barrett, senior White House correspondent for Time. And so it happened that when this Delegator went to Washington he took with him a Triumvirate that could handle details for him: William Clark, Edwin Meese, and Michael Deaver. Courtesy of George Bush and the Council on Foreign Relations, he was handed a fourth: James Baker, who had been Bush's campaign manager in his race against Reagan. These four have run things by delegation insofar as the unelected and unappointed Supragovernment that really runs things, permits the delegation of details.

Now a fifth has been added, a fifth who is a ranking member of that Supranational Government, name of Henry Kissinger. And all the diplomatic and political world wonders just why "Superman" should have been selected - and accepted - a post heading a Commission on Central America, when he admits he knows little or nothing about that part of the world. Furthermore, Philip Habib had resigned his post as mediator and peace-seeker in the Middle East, and this was a position that Kissinger had handled more or less adequately during the Nixon and Ford regimes. Even more so, most conservatives as well as most liberals would ask, why was Kissinger selected for a post of any kind in the Reagan Administration? Human events was blunt on that score: "Henry Kissinger to the rescue? Who'd a thunk it? The man candidate Reagan blistered as the architect of detente, the man who had transferred all that technology to the Soviets, who undermined Taiwan, who jeopardized our defenses with a sorry SALT agreement, who shattered more than his toe on Vietnam, who . . . the list of failures appears endless. But Kissinger is back, big as life, and in charge of shaping U.S. policy for what one high Administration official considers the most crucial area affecting American security today, Central America."

Why Kissinger was chosen is understandable, but may be unbelievable to Americans who are fed on the carefully prepared pap dished out by what we have termed "The Communist-Capitalist Alliance." The International Communist Hierarchy, the International Socialist headquarters, the International Bankers, a powerful segment of the Multinational Industrial Complex, the Liberal Left, and the controlled News Media are partners in a plan to establish a New International Economic Order, and a World Government mechanism which will make that Order secure. An essential element in this plan was the creation of two superpowers: the United States to provide the capital and the technology, and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics to provide the manpower and the necessary totalitarian control of most of the world. With Capitalism and Communism actually in alliance, but shown to the world as bitter opponents apt to go to war against each other at a moment's notice, a very careful control over the two is essential, lest they actually do try to destroy each other. Hence, when a really dangerous situation is brought about, like that of Central America today, some very careful management is necessary, lest things get out of hand and the proles turn and destroy their elitist masters.

President Reagan, at his last press conference "called to calm public fears" about U.S. Warships patrolling the Central American Pacific Coast, 4,000 U.S. troops maneuvering in Honduras, and requests for more money to strengthen anti-Sandinista rebel forces in Nicaragua, had exactly the opposite effect than was intended. Liberals and the Media saw it all as a buildup for another Vietnam, feared that the USSR might become directly involved, etc. The spreading of panic among the people seemed the aim of the International Establishment, its controlled communications media, and the Socialist and liberal groups that would rather be red than dead. But, between themselves and at the top level, the international elitists are singing a different song. Example: At the Trilateral Commission's Tenth Anniversary Plenary Meeting at Rome in April, Henry Kissinger was one of the principal speakers. Kissinger was not speaking for publication, was not trying to deceive the masses. He was speaking, seriously, to his peers and superiors who were important enough to be attending a confidential Trilateral Commission meeting. Regarding the threat of trouble from the USSR, here is what Henry Kissinger told his peers and superiors: "

"By any analysis of the Soviet situation, one would have to conclude that a negotiation on a broad front is an imperative for the Soviet Union. Here is a system that has been in power for nearly seventy years which has not solved the problem of legitimate succession, either in its top post or in its politburo. In Andropov it has its oldest leader at a comparable period in his career. He will be sixty-nine in two months, and every previous leader required six to eight years to establish himself in an unchallenged position. He does not have six to eight years. Andropov himself has described the mess in the Soviet economy more eloquently than I can. Imagine the leader of one of our countries coming into office and saying his task will be to stamp out corruption, drunkenness, hooliganism - these are hardly noble, inspiring objectives to set before the people. One could say that structurally Andropov represents a very interesting phenomenon: a coalition of the two organizations in the Soviet system that have a command structure independent of the Communist Party, namely the KGB and the military. This could be perceived as the beginning of a kind of bonapartism. I mention all of this only to indicate it is not probable that the Soviet Union is looking for confrontations with the West right now and indeed ought to be looking, on a rational analysis, for some degree of accommodation..." (Quoted from "Trialogue. 33," the Trilateral Commission's Quarterly of North American-European-Japanese Affairs. Rome, April 17-19, 1983.)

Ordinarily we would hesitate to credit any statement by Henry Kissinger. But in this case he was speaking to the men who think they run the world or hope to do so: David Rockefeller of the USA, Georges Berthoin of France, Takeshi Watanabe of Japan, Chedi Klilbi of the Arab League, Harold Lever who is Chairman of the Governing Board of the World Jewish Congress, and heads of the various international banking establishments including Robert McNamara and Paul Volcker from the United States. Before an elitist crowd such as this, Kissinger would not be speaking nonsense or words meant to deceive his immediate listeners. And if we read him aright, this is what he seems to infer: "So long as Andropov is the head of state we can keep the USSR under control; and so long as we are managing the Reagan Administration, we can keep the USA under control. So, let us keep the Americans scared of the Russians, and the Russians scared of the Americans, and we'll be free to do as we will in developing and securing our New International Economic Order."

Lest there be any misunderstanding: When we speak of capitalism in this Report, we are not talking about the traditional, free market, make-or-sell-for-profit system of economics that is struggling for its very existence in the world today. We are not talking about what Webster defines as "an economic system characterized by private or corporate ownership of capital goods, by investments that are determined by private decision rather than by state control, and by prices, production, and the distribution of goods that are determined mainly by competition in a free market." When we speak of capitalism in this Report we are talking about Monopoly Controlled Capitalism as practiced by all governments in Communist-controlled countries, by Central Banks in developed countries, by World and International Banks in dealings between countries, and by International Banks and/or some Multinational Corporations in developing and less developed countries.

That there is truth in what Kissinger said is echoed by Intelligence Digest, a weekly review published by Intelligence International Ltd. of the United Kingdom, a respectable and reliable source of authoritative information. Its issue of July 20, 1983 carried this message: "The alleged 'health' problems of the Soviet leader have a more sinister background. . . In order to realize what is happening it is imperative to realize that the Soviet Union is facing daunting problems and the leadership in Moscow is confused, divided and possibly frightened. The disturbances in Poland continue to baffle the Kremlin. It cannot understand why the usual methods of pacification have not succeeded. The growth of the Islamic population within the Soviet Union is posing worrying problems despite the 'apartheid' regulations we previously reported. After 60 years of communist rule the Soviet Union still cannot feed itself and with the growing world awareness about Third World poverty it is increasingly difficult for Moscow to buy up surplus stocks. Then there is the question of exactly what to do in Afghanistan and how far the United States should be pushed over nuclear arms. . . Then there is the question of Cuba. Here Castro is heavily involved in Latin American subversion, but the drain on the Soviet economy is enormous. . . The plain truth is dawning on some Kremlin leaders that the Soviet Union just cannot compete with the United States economically and win" (which would put the USSR in line for acceptance of a New Economic Order which would complement and not compete with the ultimate Communist goal-Ed.)

Allen Keyte, editor of World Affairs Review, whose batting average has been well above average, agrees in the case of the USSR, but adds an ominous warning in regard to Red China. In his July 15, 1983 report he said: "I have for many years advocated great care in dealing with Red China. Why should you believe that the Chinese will eventually behave any differently than the Soviets do today? After all, they have quite plainly stated their objective which is total world domination, and nothing that they have said or done alters that one little bit. The Chinese Communists are simply playing a slightly better game of poker than the Soviets at the present time, but never forget that these are just two branches of the same tree; two popes working within a single church. In the short term the Red Chinese will manipulate the West whenever and wherever possible so that they may take advantage of Western technology and financial resources. We lend them the money so that they can build the machine to destroy us. . . The Red Chinese are trying to gain influence throughout the troubled African continent, as are the Soviets. Do not confuse these two spearheads as being totally separate. They are part of one plan. In Africa the plan is to gain control of the major sea routes and vital strategic minerals. . . . Whilst the thrust of the Chinese is into Africa, the Soviets are concentrating their efforts in Central and South America. Both are equally dangerous in the short, medium and long run." (Published by Centre for International Studies, Ltd. 98 Malleson Road, Gotherington, Cheltenham, Glos GL52 4EY, United Kingdom).

If the New World Planners are anticipating any complications in regard to their conversion of Red China to another developed industrial nation and a partner in the World Economic Community, then Kissinger is their man for the job of trouble-shooting. It was he who first visited Peking and paved the way for Western industrial and financial aid for China. His boss, David Rockefeller, was allowed the privilege of opening the first branch bank in Peking. The use of Kissinger's talents in regard to Red China would, of course, be an added fillip. His real assignment as of now is the creation of a Regional American Economic Community, similar to that already created in Europe. The Linowitz-Plaza Report, which we have mentioned in the past two DBRs as the blueprint which Kissinger is expected to follow, calls for the U.S. to "negotiate" with Russia in the building of that New World Economic Market. It is also

Indicative that the European Economic Community leaders met June 17-19 in Stuttgart for their annual Council session, and released the following statement:

"The heads of state and government confirmed their close interest in developments in Central America. They are deeply concerned at the economic and social conditions in many parts of the region, at the tensions which these create, and at the widespread misery and bloodshed. They are convinced that the problems of Central America cannot be solved by military means, but only by a political solution....They, therefore, fully support the current initiative of the Contadora Group....They are ready to continue contributing to further development in the area, in order to promote progress toward stability." In the final analysis, neither Russia nor the European Community has any business interfering in Central American affairs. But, this once strictly American affair has now become a matter of international importance.

"The process of tilting free nations into Communism is simple," wrote Raymond Heaps, chairman of the American Independent Party, San Francisco Central Committee. He says this is accomplished by cooperation of the U.S. Congress, the Bankers and the USSR. He forgot to mention the influence of the Media. But his description seems otherwise complete. We quote: "The U.S. Congress allocates Foreign Aid, for example, to El Salvador - far too much for El Salvador to feasibly repay. When the government of El Salvador is about to default, the loans (which are made by big banks and guaranteed by the U.S. taxpayers), are renegotiated with stringent terms. The terms include making payments that are so steep that they force the now-beggar nation into a severe austerity program that sharply reduces the standard of living for most of the citizens - thus causing great unrest, including demonstrations and riots in the streets. Next come the terrorist guerrilla movements, inspired, trained, directed and financed by the Soviet Union and Cuba, creating a phase of destabilization. According to the relative success of the guerrilla insurgency, the non-Communist government is overthrown, OR an election is held in which Communist candidates try for election. If a sufficient number are elected, well and good. If not, the cry goes up by the International Left for a 'negotiated political solution' - a Coalition Government in which a designated number of seats are arbitrarily given to Communists. Once the Communists occupy some seats in the government, they eliminate the opposition and replace them with more of their fellow Communists - and calling off any promised free elections. This process already has cost U.S. taxpayers (any way that you look at it) more than one trillion dollars - and is bringing Communism to our border, via the All-American Highway. Lenin said that the Capitalist West would sell them the rope with which to hang us. He was mistaken - we are paying for it ourselves and presenting it to them as a free gift! Democratic or Republican administration, the game is the same. The only difference is that the Democratic administration does it more rapidly, and the Republican administration does it more efficiently. Democratic and Republican administrations, the International Bankers, the Communists - all are the enemies of our Constitutional Republic and our freedom." (Ray Heaps in "Bay Area News," San Francisco, June 1983).

You may ask, why this desire of the Communist-Capitalist Alliance to Communize our neighbor nations South of the Border? In 1981 David Rockefeller addressed the Commonwealth Club in San Francisco. The address was later broadcast over KCBS-News Radio. In it he said: "We often find it easier to do business with Communist governments than with nations of the West." We rest our case.

AND A LITTLE COMPUTER SHALL LEAD THEM

Memory recalls that in the days of the little red schoolhouse (which was really white and served as a church on Sundays), when a pupil wished to ingratiate one's self with the teacher, it was customary to bring her an apple. Today, by an unfortunate reversal of circumstances, it is the teacher who gives the pupil an "Apple." We use the word "Apple" advisedly; a computer by any other name would serve the same purpose, but the tie-up would be missing. This is the great desire of Secretary of Education Terrel Bell, that every child in every school in America have a computer. Supporting him to the limit are the National Education Association and, of course, the manufacturers of computers. We'll discuss the pros and cons of this situation a little later in this Report.

In the July 25th issue of his Newsletter Digest Editor Al Owen quoted from our DBR of July 8th, as follows: "There was another Supreme Court ruling which pleased President Reagan and a great number of conservatives who we hoped would know better. It had to do with tax tuition credits for parents of children in private or church schools in Minnesota. The ruling applies only to that State, but it gives other States and Congress a blueprint for fashioning such tax breaks on a nationwide basis. People generally refuse to realize that a federal tax break means federal control, even though the Supreme Court itself has so acknowledged. If this tuition tax credit becomes a national practice, then we can say goodbye to private education; the government will be able to establish an absolute monopoly, to be administered by such left wing labor unions as the National Education Association." Editor Owen then added his own words: "Many teachers for years have had to fight the left-wing trends in education. There is now growing public disenchantment with liberal ideology and growing support for a return to traditional values and teaching methods. We hope that those who teach values and responsibility will regain control of the NEA and the educational system. We urge the public to support them." (Newsletter Digest, 2335 Pansy Street, Huntsville AL 35801. 24 issues per year; $75).

Mr. Owen is certainly right about the campaign to better our deplorable statist system of education. Ronald Reagan, who campaigned for the presidency with a pledge to do away with the federal Department of Education, now seems likely to urge the strengthening of that same department as a part of his next presidential campaign. Wherever he goes and has the opportunity, he speaks out for better schools, more money, bigger salaries for teachers, a return to the basics, etc. And the governors of the many States have launched their own campaigns on the same subject. David Broder, very liberal columnist for the very liberal Washington Post wrote from the National Governor's Association meeting in Portland, Oregon that "there seemed to be striking evidence that the states are moving ahead on their own to meet the challenge to improve their high schools and elementary schools of this country. Almost every governor I interviewed or heard speak during the three days of meetings had a story to tell about his plans to improve teacher pay, stiffen educational standards and increase financial support for the schools in his state. . . . None of these governors believes the federal government should abandon its role in education. But they are not waiting for Uncle Sam - let alone Ronald Reagan." Unquote. Columnists Jack Germond and Jules Witcover of the Tribune Company Syndicate also wrote from the Portland meeting that when Education Secretary Terrel Bell addressed the meeting "he urged the nation's governors to ask their legislators to ante up more money to support master-teacher programs." Congress did cut down on Terrel Bell's education budget, so he's asking the States to come up with more money to help him put through his federal programs, such as merit pay for exceptional teachers, a computer for every child, etc.

We were attracted by an AP dispatch out of Washington quoting Bell on "A World Without Books." The article states: "Education Secretary Terrel H. Bell is predicting that future U.S. school children will consult dictionaries on computer chips and wonder what it was like to learn from printed textbooks. 'We're soon going to be moving away from putting the printed word on paper,' Bell told 300 school superintendents. 'It will soon be too expensive to print your materials that you're using to teach your children in your schools on paper. Youngsters are going to be looking at books that their grandparents used and wonder what school was really like when you studied from books rather than from their cathode ray tube unit that they carry around under their arm,' he said. 'Now that may sound like silly nonsense from a federal bureaucrat. But I'm telling you that era is upon us. It's moving here, day by day and month by month,' he said. Bell predicted that educators would buy silicon chip capsules the size of a quarter 'that will contain Webster's dictionary'." Yes, 1984 is just around the corner of your calendar, and this supposed wonder of the age may become the most dangerous of them all. We reserve comment until later.

As was noted by a leader of the Pro Family Forum, "President Reagan has succeeded in making education the number one campaign issue for the present. Education has become what the media has termed 'a political football'." But, as usual, President Reagan and Secretary Bell, the NEA and other Teacher's Unions and Educational Associations, are looking for symptom treatments that will not interfere with the growth of the disease itself; symptoms that will please parents and voters in general, but that really will just create a more expensive program. Back in that little white schoolhouse we were taught that getting to the root of a problem was the quickest way to solve it. In the case of U.S. government-controlled education, most people will think that it all began with men like Humanist John Dewey, from whom so many of our educational fallacies do stem. But the real beginning of our sorrows had to do with our federal and state governments accepting and legalizing - unconsciously or otherwise - the last plank of Karl Marx's Communist Manifesto: Free (mandatory) education for all children in public schools. So long as education was a voluntary matter, provided by communities and families getting together to do for their children what they could not do for their children themselves, ours was said to be the finest elementary and high school system in the world at that time. Certainly without coercion of any kind, save perhaps from parents or guardians, out of that school system came such statesmen as Washington and the Adams, and later Lincoln, literary giants such as Irving and Hawthorne, great preachers galore, the signers of the Declaration of Independence and the authors of the Constitution. But when governments stepped in and politics entered into the educational picture, things began to change rapidly. By the time John Dewey came along with his religion of relativity and belief "there are no eternal truths," there came into being special schools to teach the teachers how to teach Dewey's humanistic and anti-Christian ideas. And there arose among many of the leading educationists a belief that through the public school the "Great Community" or the New World Order, could be attained. John Dewey's friend, educational administrator Francis Wayland Parker cried, "I await the regeneration of the world from the teaching of the common schools of America." The dying Emma Marwedel declared, "I believe in the power of the kindergarten to reform the world." But the religion of these educationists had become secular humanism. Ruth Denison, a former high school teacher, said it very clearly: "Belief in man or man's mind as the highest good is, from all appearances, the state or national religion today. And the tax-supported public school system is by far the most powerful and all pervasive 'state church' through which that religion is being propagated." Keith Beggs, when director of the American Humanist Association said, "Humanists are concerned with breaking loose from all angles and aspects of traditional morality, from the old concepts of what is moral behavior." Humanists endorse a "world community" and believe that "the best option is to transcend the limits of national sovereignty." Charles Francis Potter in his book "Humanism, a New Religion," wrote: "Education is thus a most powerful ally of Humanism, and every American public school is a school of Humanism. What can the theistic Sunday-schools, meeting for an hour one a week, and teaching only a fraction of the children, do to stem the tide of a five-day program of humanistic teaching?" That we do have a state church (alleged separation of church and state to the contrary notwithstanding), and that this establishment of religion has come by way of the public school system is explained by Opal Moore in her book "Why Johnny Can't Learn." We quote:

"A religion is a set of beliefs held by a group of people. It need not be a set of beliefs about God. (Taoism, Buddhism, and Secular Humanism, for example, have been recognized in a United States Supreme Court decision, as religions that do not teach a belief in God.) A church is an institution through which religious beliefs are propagated. An establishment of religion or a state church is one which is financially supported by the state or one at which the state requires attendance. Our founding fathers took special care to avoid the tyranny of a state church. Have we proceeded in the twentieth century to permit the very despotism they sought to avoid?" Unquote.

After the establishment of a statist religion and the churches (public schools) from which it would be propagated, the next step was the creation of a control mechanism. This was supplied by PPBS, which stands for Planning, Programming, and Budgeting System. This is a system of fiscal accountability which requires cost effective budgeting, and is a system to identify programs that are making the desired changes in students. PPBS is seldom seen under that name nowadays; it has a number of new names: Financial Accountability, Management by Objectives, Management Information System, Performance Based Education, Needs Assessment, Competency Based Education, Uniform Accounting System, Program Analysis, Information System, and so on. It works like this:

Planning. Experts determine the final goal or end product to be achieved.
Programming. Steps taken to reach the final goal or to produce the end product.
Budgeting. Programs found ineffective in reaching the final goal or in forming the desired end product will be denied budget approval. i.e. Sound educational programs which do not fit into the experts' plans will be killed by withholding the necessary money.

When applied to education the product is the child with attitudes, feelings and behaviors. If these do not measure up to the pre-planned goals and objectives, the child will be re-cycled or re-programmed until his attitudes, feelings and behavior match the government's goals and objectives. A student is rated as to 1) what he knows (cognitive learning); 2) How he feels (affective learning); and 3) What he does. If the student doesn't match up, re-programming is in order.

A key element in this management system: Computers are essential, and are at the heart of the system. A student's test scores expressed in symbols are computerized to a Regional Data Collection and Processing Center where a student profile is developed; then sent on to a multi-state-national center (bank) for permanent storage. To complete this PPBS operation, State Boards of Education are expected to "develop a state plan to insure the effective utilization of computerized automated data processing systems" and each school must be provided with the required type of computer. This operation is not yet accomplished, more money is needed in some States. Next step: provide each student with a computer. Incidentally, we are told that all the Trilateral Nations are hurriedly acquiring computers for classroom use, the ultimate goal could be total control of the mind of every child. When the student's computer is linked to a central data bank programmed to insure that the child receives "pre-determined lessons and information," each child will be programmed exactly as "Big Brother" dictates. Barbara Morris recently reported that "The U.S. government stands poised for computerization of education with its worst kept secret of the year: Terrel Bell's 'technology initiative' known as Project Best which will support development of standardized computer software (programs). Legislation now before Congress would set up national research centers to develop teacher-training materials and educational software." In addition to the matter of pre-determined programs for classroom computers, there are satellite and teleconferencing capabilities which offer the greatest potential for the total internationalization and international control of education. Examples: At the University of Maryland, students in a Spanish class exchange views on everything from weather to politics with patrons of a restaurant in Miami's Little Havana. This experimental satellite teaching program was developed by a Philadelphia based group called the National Committee for Internationalizing Education Through Satellites, Inc. In California a group has called for the establishment of a Western Hemisphere World Data Bank which would provide programs designed to meet "particular needs" in schools in participating countries. With such controlled data banks and every student tied to a pre-planned computerized program, there is the possibility of a type of totalitarian control of minds that outdoes George Orwell at his worst. Such an internationalized educational system could totally destroy personal freedom and make of all persons so programmed highly educated, but contented and obedient zombies.

All of the foregoing is a developing program for state controlled schools, that is, public schools and those private and church-supported schools that have volunteered or been induced or coerced into abiding by rules and regulations laid down by the Department of Education and the Internal Revenue Service. There are now thousands of small, independent and church-connected schools, as well as home teaching citizens that are in no way affected by this education-by-computer scheme. And this is where the tuition tax credit plan becomes important. As Rousas Rushdoony observed in his "The Messianic Character of American Education," "There is no hope left for individual freedom in this or any other country, if the Statist octopus is allowed to also swallow the private and parochial schools." And this is exactly what is intended with the offer of tax tuition credits for those sending their children to private schools. Chester Finn, Professor of Education at Vanderbilt University, put the issue in sharp focus when he wrote: "Some to be sure, like to think they can have it both ways; i.e., can obtain aid without saddling themselves with unacceptable forms of regulation. But most acknowledged the general applicability of the old adage that he who pays the piper calls the tune, and are more or less resigned to amalgamating or choosing between assistance and autonomy." To put it another way: private and church schools can't have their cake and eat it too, particularly in a world that increasingly will be so easily controlled by an elite cadre of managers at the helm of global data banks and computers linked by satellites.

This tuition tax credit scheme is a trap, and many of our most important leaders, beginning with Ronald Reagan, are falling into the trap. We repeat what we firmly believe, if this tuition tax credit plan becomes a national practice, then we can say goodbye to private education, goodbye to personal freedom, and be prepared to live in a world where the control of education has become an absolute monopoly in the hands of the One World Elitists.

THE FEAR OF FUTURE VIETNAMS

We had hoped that his tenure in political office could have lasted much longer and would have had a happier ending. He was an unusual man of unusual character, but perhaps of the type to be martyred. A general in the army, he had also been a Sunday School teacher in the Protestant group to which he belonged: the 1,000-member Church of the Word, a missionary group founded in 1976 by Gospel Outreach. Devoutly religious, when he became president, he sought to inculcate into the heart of the Nation which he loved the same moral standards by which he lived. A disciplinarian, the oath of office that was imposed on all government employes might have been extracted from The Ten Commandments: "I don't steal, I don't lie, I don't abuse." He sought in every way he felt it possible, to eliminate the corruption and the cruelty that existed in high places by seeing that none but Christians were on guard. He had invited R.E. McMaster, Jr., a Christian freedom fighter, to visit, investigate, and advise. McMaster is a registered commodity adviser who edits the newsletter The Reaper and is the author of several books, the latest a two-book set titled Wealth For All, one volume of which deals with economics, the second with religion, politics and war (A.N., Inc., P.O.Box 67, Whitefish, Montana 59937. $14.95 each). McMaster had gone to Guatemala, had returned with glowing reports of the improvements that were being accomplished under the administration of President Efraim Rios Montt, General, Sunday School teacher, President, but now reported to be a political prisoner under house arrest in Guatemala City. A confirmed anti-Communist and a Protestant, these were two strikes against him in a country beset by Communist-led insurgents and terrorists, and a country where the vast majority was composed of Roman Catholics. Because he waged relentless war against leftist insurgents and condemned the "liberation theology" being promoted by the leftist Catholic clergy of Central America there were, as we said, two strikes against him. The third strike was his habit of ignoring the rules of military seniority which exists in all Latin countries that follow the old Spanish tradition of being ruled by the military. He would pass over the older officers and promote younger men who were eager to join his crusade against corruption and other evils.

But, we believe there was an even greater reason for his ouster in a political coup at the time it occurred. Just days before the coup, Montt had been visited by Tom Wicker, associate editor of The New York Times. And in what he said to Wicker, he may have been delivering his own political epitaph. Appearing in The Times of Sunday, August 7th was a report from which we quote.

AMERICAN INTENTIONS QUESTIONED

Guatemalan President Criticizes U.S. Actions

Guatemala City - Guatemalan President Efraim Rios Montt says he does not believe the United States or the Soviet Union is interested in the overall welfare of Central America. Rios Montt, in an interview Friday, said the two countries "want geographical positions, strategic positions, positions for combat," adding they "do not want to help us." He later referred to the two countries in bitter terms, calling them "mother" and "father." He did not say which was which. Rios Montt likened the Central American Nations to "the children" in that sense. In that sense, he said, military maneuvers that have begun in Honduras represent the presence of a father who keeps squabbling children from hitting each other. . . .

The interview continues for a full column, but the "father - mother" connection was the highlight of Montt's interview with the associate editor of The New York Times. The interview was published Sunday. The very next day the bloody political coup ousting President Montt from office occurred. His "father-mother" description might have been too close to the truth for the Internationalists (the Communist-Capitalist Alliance) to take. Here was too much discernment on the part of a Christian who was also a political leader in a strategic part of the world. Montt's statement becomes more ominous when compared with the statement made by General Gustavo Alvarez, commander of the Honduran Armed Forces now conducting war games with American troops in Honduras. The Miami Herald reported that in an interview, Gen. Alvarez predicted Monday (8/7/83) that U.S. military forces would defend Honduras in a conflict with Nicaragua. "I believe that they (American troops) would help us, that they would be at our side...I have the impression that the will exists, that the decision has been made not to abandon Honduras, El Salvador or Guatemala in case of a serious conflict. But you will understand that the definitive reply can only be given by the government of the United States." Then speaking not in behalf of the people, but rather in behalf of foreign trade, when asked whether he would ever be comfortable with the Sandinista regime, Alvarez said "definitely not." The Marxist presence in the region, he added, has made it "a high risk zone for foreign investment. As long as that cancer is located in Central America...our economies are going to fall into permanent deterioration and in three to five years, violence is going to be generalized in all of Central America, not because the people become Communists but because of desperation, hunger and unemployment." Gen. Alvarez was frank indeed: this is not an idealistic war, it's a trade war, he infers. And we should remember that the Rockefeller interests find it easier to do business with the Communists than with other developing countries! So, with Richard Stone negotiating compromises with various governments, and with Henry Kissinger's special commission being sworn in (one of them being a friend of Castro), look for something of a slowdown in "crisis building" South of the Border, and a shift of the danger area to Africa, where Chad is the current hot spot.

Something to remember: Once upon a time France had a group of colonies in South-east Asia that were lost to them during World War II but then returned to them when Japan surrendered. There was a developing war affecting those French Colonies because of the activities of a Communist named Ho Chi-minh. By some clever hidden maneuvering on the part of the Council on Foreign Policy and what remained of its Institute of Pacific Relations, that French burden was transferred to the should-

HOW $8 BILLION BECOMES $25 BILLION IN ONE BILL

That I.M.F. bill has been passed by both Senate and House, but awaits agreement by a joint committee and then appropriation of the money. This will probably be done sometime in September. But, note how we have been hoodwinked by the media, as Rep. Ron Paul explains:

"HR 2957 is far more than an I.M.F. bill. It has five titles, and the I.M.F. is only one of the five. Title I concerns the Export-Import Bank, extending its life for two years. During the two year extension, the Bank is expected to issue $9.4 billion in new direct loans, and make $20 billion of loan guarantee commitments. Title II states Congress's beliefs about international economic recovery and requires the President to take unspecified 'actions' to carry out Congress's beliefs. Title III authorizes $8.4 billion for the I.M.F. and the General Arrangements to Borrow. Title IV deals with international lending supervision, increasing the powers of domestic bank regulatory agencies. Title V authorizes U.S. 'contributions' to the Inter-American Development Bank ($5.5 billion), the Asian Development Bank and Fund ($1.8 billion), and the African Development Fund ($150 million). The total commitment in H.R. 2957 is about $25 billion, not merely the $8.4 billion for the I.M.F. as one might be led to believe by the press. . . .The battle is not over, and if readers will write to their Representatives and Senators, the measure can still be stopped. Since the House version of the bill was passed on August 3 by a 217-211 vote, only four votes in the House could kill the bill."

ers of Uncle Sam, and the devastating, blood-letting, power-losing Vietnam War was the result. Twenty years later and on a different continent history could repeat, and at an even more horrible cost, if we become too deeply involved in Chad!

With the organization of the United Nations, Western Governments were forced to give up their territorial possessions in Africa. This was supposed to bring independence and a sense of security and advancement to the people of the former colonies. Actually, it provided openings for Communist conquest, Megabank investments, and Multinational Corporation exploitation.

In simple justice, something should be said about Multinationals. There are two kinds. The Rockefeller-Rothschild type Multinational owes its allegiance to no particular country. It shifts its assets and facilities with the sole purpose of making the biggest possible investment return. It seeks slave labor, low taxes, development on the spot at the expense of everyone else. On the other hand, there are the "national multinationals" that also invest throughout the world, but still target their investments so that "high-skill, high-pay" jobs remain in the home country. Examples: Volvo has an auto plant in Brazil, Honda has one in Ohio. But both are "low-skill" assembly facilities where workers put together the "high-skill" parts built in Sweden and Japan. The mother country accrues the most economic advantage, hence they are called "national multinationals". Most Japanese firms and many European firms are "national multinationals." But, America has no such national multinationals. Hence, the American economy suffers, unemployment soars, things are bad all over, except for the "International multinationals," and the megabanks.

But back to our discussion of Chad. As a former French colony, France remains a kind of "godfather" to Chad. But it also has great economic and financial interests in Libya, also a former French colony. Hence, while France is sympathetic toward Chad's plight, it doesn't want to offend Libya. So, as in Vietnam twenty years ago, Socialist France wants Uncle Sam to shoulder the burden that is Chad. France has been shamed into sending a few technicians and instructors to Chad, but wants no real involvement. Whereas, Libya's Qaddafi seems eager to get Uncle Sam deeply involved in the North African affair - all of which is very pleasing to Qaddafi's chief supplier of materiel and encouragement, the USSR. Chances of a war involving United States troops and Soviet surrogates are a real and present danger. So, to our presence of U.S. Marines in Lebanon; soldiers, sailors and airmen in Central America; add the danger involved when U.S. troops are now in North-Central Africa!

It should be understood that Chad is just a kind of powder keg of little importance otherwise in this involvement. True, it has some rich uranium and oil resources that have been undeveloped, and the multinationals are interested. But Chad is mostly a part of the Sahara Desert. Its towns and cities are really oases. And it, like Lebanon, is far from a united country because of its religious divisions. In Northern Chad there are the Muslims, 45% of the population. In Southern Chad there are the Animists and the minority Christians: 45% animist, 10% Christian. The Muslims and the Animists are always warring against each other. But Chad is important to Libya's Qaddafi in one respect: It is the landlocked gateway to Sudan. Qaddafi has dreams of creating an Arab Empire which would control the Mediterranean and all the lands on its southern and eastern shores, as well as all shipping around the Horn of Africa, a route essential to the supplying of oil to Western Europe. Chad simply stands in the way of the conquest of Sudan, and the Soviet Union is encouraging the Libyan dictator to get control of Sudan as soon as possible. Globescan of 28 March, 1983 noted that "The Soviet Union considers Sudan a key part of its plan to encircle the Persian Gulf States with puppets of Moscow, and shut off the West from Arab oil. And the instability and discontent created by the Sudanese government provides a perfect atmosphere for Soviet 'crisis-creation.'" The largest nation in Africa, Sudan should be the breadbasket of the continent. One-third of its land is cultivatable, and the discovery of substantial oil reserves has made it possible for Sudan to obtain the low-cost energy necessary for domestic industrial development. Yet less than 5 percent of Sudan's land is actually being farmed, and industry is virtually non-existent. The nation depends for its economic survival on loans from the I.M.F. and giveaways from its Middle Eastern neighbors and the U.S. taxpayers, who shelled out $260 million in 1982 to keep the Numeiri regime afloat. Colonel Numeiri is a puppet of the International Establishment. The Sudanese government is run by and for a notoriously corrupt bureaucracy and the oil companies and financiers who operate there. For example, these manipulators have decreed that domestically-produced oil will not be used to develop Sudanese agriculture but must be exported through a new oil pipeline now being built to transport it to the Red Sea. For its domestic needs Sudan will then be forced to buy the oil back from the Western megacorps! The story is the same for agriculture. Huge sugar projects were built in Sudan with the promise that giant surpluses would be available for export. Now it appears that the projects will not generate enough sugar even to satisfy local demand, yet international backers insist that Sudan must export its sugar at a loss, and then buy it back! The Numeiri regime faces constant political threats from dissident tribes in the South and a strengthening opposition which includes the vocal Communist Party. The Soviets, who backed an unsuccessful attempt to unseat Numeiri in 1971, would love to take advantage of Sudan's political and economic crises to install a pro-Moscow regime in the strategically-located nation." (Globescan, Paris, Geneva, Washington, D.C. Emphasis as in the original).

We repeat: Chad is on the road to Sudan, Sudan is the real target. It is a haven for corrupt multinationalist mismanagement, and there are already more than 5,000 American troops in the area prepared to stop Qaddafi from fulfilling Moscow's plan and his own hopes of building an Arab Empire! Three weeks ago word was received that major arms shipments to Moscow's front-line client states in Africa had been received. Fighter planes, tanks, armored cars, personnel carriers and heavy artillery pieces, thousands of machine guns and hundreds of thousands of rifles, sub-machine guns and pistols had been delivered to key positions in Angola, Mozambique and Libya. Thousands of Russian, East German, and Cuban military "advisers" had also been sent. If Qaddafi and his backers are successful, after Chad comes Sudan, then Nigeria, and finally Morocco, which would provide for the complete control of the Mediterranean, as well as the Red Sea and the Persian Gulf!

John Foster Dulles had a word for it: brinkmanship, "The art or practice of pushing a dangerous situation to the brink of safety before stopping." U.S. Marines patrol in Lebanon, war games are being played in Central America, U.S. Servicemen are acting as observers, instructors and advisers in North-Central Africa. It is not probable, but it is possible, that a spark could ignite a conflagration involving U.S. Troops in any one of these areas. President Reagan has promised we shall not become involved. But President Wilson said the same about World War I. As men were being drafted for World War II, F.D.R. said: "Let no man or woman thoughtlessly talk of sending armies to European fields. This nation will remain a neutral nation." President Kennedy said as much in regard to Vietnam. Yet in all cases Americans died in foreign wars to no apparent avail to anyone save the internationalists. It was Col. Charles Lindbergh who said, and was dishonored for saying it: "America should concentrate on defending America with all the might, skill and resources that make the United States the greatest nation on earth." If only we had listened and acted then, we wouldn't be so worried today.

SOCIALISM'S SECRET WEAPON

In our last Report titled "The Fear of Future Vietnams," we mentioned three areas where a spark could ignite a conflagration. We named Lebanon, Central America and North-Central Africa. Our keenest observers in Europe, fellow newsletter publishers whose reputation for accuracy has been established and who comprise the sole remaining independent press, are of the opinion that it is the Middle Eastern situation which presents the greatest danger. Hilaire du Berrier, writing from Paris (he resides in Monaco), sums up the thoughts of most of these independent publishers when he states: "Your correspondent's world contacts are unanimous. The chances of war within two years are 2 to 1. When a spark may touch off a conflict, there is no fixed timetable, but a fact remains: Our missiles are on drawing boards and Russia's are in place. Russia was building new Tupolev bombers while Washington politicians blocked construction of B1s that were not as large. And the new doublehulled submarine twice as long as the Ohio is a Russian threat to the world's sealanes. The temptation to strike before the balance changes sides is not to be discounted. Worse, there are other factors than weapons which decide the balance. On May 9, 1983 the Soviet ambassador to Lebanon put the families of Russian diplomats on a plane for Moscow. There must have been a reason. On Tuesday, May 17 U.S. secretary of State George Shultz pressured Israel's Menachem Begin and Lebanon's President Amin Gemayel into putting their names to a treaty calling for withdrawal of Israel and Syrian forces from Lebanon. Without America's secret promise to Begin and Moscow's promise to Syrian President Hafez al Assad neither would have bought it. Lebanon could become World War III's Sarajevo. George Shultz promised Begin that if Israel is ever attacked from Lebanon, by Syria or anyone else, Israel may hit back with everything she has and the full support of America's armed forces will be behind her. The catch is, Syria hopes to keep the Middle East aflame by sending Palestinian suicide squads against the Israelis without involving herself. This the Israelis are not likely to tolerate and Syria has the same promise from Moscow that Begin has from the Americans. Let's think of it the way Patrick Seale of the London Observer of May 29, 1983 put it: 'A worrying feature is that Israel and Syria each has its super power patron by the tail and can therefore to some extent avoid restraint'." (Quoted from H du B Report, Vol. XXVI, Letter 4. Monthly, $75 per year. American address: P.O.Box 786, St. George, Utah 84770).

It is our personal belief that The USSR and the USA will never engage in war against each other directly. It isn't planned that way. That's why, whenever U.S. troops are directly involved, it's always against Surrogates; North Koreans, Red Chinese, the forces of Ho Chi-minh, possibly Syrians, Libyans or Cubans. But not Russians. However, war is war and it has been decreed that America is never to win another war. The only winners are to be the financial backers and the weapons suppliers. And, of course, the post-war rebuilders. There's a real killing in after-war rebuilding, and megabanks get in on the ground floor.

One may ask, why does our government, our elected government, go along with such schemes in which we are placed in positions where we the people of the United States must fight someone else's war in someone else's country, a war in which we have no direct interest whatsoever, and a war in which nobody ever wins except this group of International Elitists? Well, let's assume that these leaders of what we call The Conspiracy have become so powerful that the governments of mere Nations must do their will. The conservative London Daily Express used political terms and referred to this controlling group as a lobby operating within a democracy. It said that "no country under a lobby system can be called a democracy. The system itself permits a minority to exercise power out of all proportion to its numbers. The moment a wealthy few with control of the press have the power to elect Presidents and make or blackmail legislators, the theory of one man one vote is meaningless. Under such circumstances, with a 2 to 1 chance of war staring them in the face, loyal Americans are powerless to eliminate the moles who are undermining their defenses." We might answer by saying that ours was never supposed to be a democracy, and the idea of one man one vote was repugnant to the founding fathers who detested the very idea, insisted upon ours beginning as a representative republic in which the only direct vote exercised by the people was for their Representative in the House. Senators were elected by State Legislators and Presidents were elected by the members of an electoral college who were not publicly committed to any particular candidate. So, the very first need of the Elitists was to make of our Republic a democracy. They were so very successful that today even the most sincere conservative speaks of our country as a democracy.

Anyway, after our federal government was remade in the image desired by the Elitists through the passage of the Federal Reserve Act, the ratification of the Sixteenth and Seventeenth Amendments, the authorization for the establishment of tax-exempt foundations, and the election of Presidential Electors already committed to a particular Presidential Candidate before voting; after all these things the Elitists were ready to really go to work developing their New World Order. During a First World War which failed to create a World Government, they did manage to finance a revolution in a far country and establish a Bolshevik Regime. During a Second World War which gave birth to the United Nations, and the Cold War which followed, the Elitists were able to build that Communized country into a military monster. This in order that the United States would have an apparent militaristic enemy at our collective throats. This would keep all the people worried, grateful for whatever military protection they might obtain from either power, and all the people willing to do the will of those Elitists who have proclaimed their New World Order. So, the threat of nuclear war hangs heavy, heavy over our heads, while limited wars may involve us at their bidding, in their time, at places selected by them, the outcome being predetermined by them.

But how were the people themselves conditioned in such a way that they would allow themselves to be treated as pawns in a game? Well, as Adam Weishaupt, one of the first of the "conditioners" insisted, Christianity must be destroyed, or at least watered down so that Christians would think only of the sweet bye and bye and never of the challenging here and now. The rest could be left to education: destruction of families, morals, national loyalties, etc. Archibald B. Roosevelt, one of the conservative Roosevelts, explained "Socialism's Secret Weapon" in a book comparatively few have ever seen: The Great Deceit, an expose of the Social Pseudo-Sciences. In the introduction to this Veritas Foundation Staff Study, Archibald Roosevelt wrote:

"The emperor Callgula is said to have wished that the Roman people had only one neck, which he could sever at a single stroke. This sentiment was also ascribed to several of his bloodthirsty successors, and the socialists applied it to education. They wanted one overall category into which all subjects could be bundled. About 1825 Saint Simon - the father of modern socialism - accomplished this end by calling his teachings 'social sciences', and since that time the socialists have been wrapping together all the arts and sciences until today anthropology, sociology, history, geography, economics and jurisprudence are all grouped under the heading of 'social sciences.' Then by clever semantic inventions they 'prove' in all these subjects that socialism is, has been and always will be the inevitable answer to all the problems of the world. Their scientific 'proofs' of this evident fallacy are of the same value as the mouthings of an African witch-doctor, and are in truth the emotional outpourings of a debased religion (Secular Humanism-Ed.) But by their insidious corruption of the academic world they succeeded in imposing their dogma on two generations of teachers and students. (Emphasis added)."

Writers have traced the importance of John Dewey, the influence of the Change Agents, the introduction of P.P.B.S., the denial of prayer in the schools, and other inimical persons and influences that have perverted public (State) education. But few have noted the extreme importance of deceitfully linking together all possible subjects under the one heading of "Social Science". The field of anthropology was one of the first of these "social sciences" to be used as a weapon by the socialists. They considered Negroes the greatest single American problem. How they have used that theme! A "civil war," A student of Mohandus Ghandi named Martin Luther King made into a Christian saint, the promotion of a prepared book by the foreign socialist Gunnar Myrdal into a textbook on the deceptive term "social engineering" which was to convert our Supreme Court from a mediator on Constitutional Law into a body to create "socialized law," and on and on.

"The socialists early realized," wrote Archy Roosevelt, "that they must change the teaching of history. History, if accurately narrated has a nasty way of exposing the evils of tyranny and its inevitable downfall; and socialism is a form of tyranny. The story of the decline and fall of the Athenian and Roman republics, truthfully told, has unpleasant analogies to the schemes of modern demagogues. The factual lessons of history had to be hidden under a fog of socialist mythology." So, any truthful comments about the words and actions of such men as Washington, the Adams, Patrick Henry, and on through time to Douglas MacArthur and other patriots and heroes, are seldom found in the history textbooks used in government schools since history became a "social science." Sometimes socialists use the word sociology to make social science sound less socialistic, but under whatever name it is "the pseudo-science used to pound into the minds of men that they are not individuals" and not created in the image of God. They are just members of an economic class, or of a group suffering from some sort of prejudice (Ralph Nader has promoted this sociological theory into a veritable science). As individuals, unless supported by the ACLU or some other socialistic organization or lawyer, people are told that they are unable to do anything about these prejudices. They have no personality and are simply part of a faceless crowd, unless some socialist leader calls on them for some special service, like a woman reporter gaining the right to enter a male athlete's dressing room, or being discriminated against on some charge that promotes the common herd instinct. John Dewey said it this way: Independent thinkers are deviates, or queers, and the only people that are normal are the ones that are entirely dependent on socialist leaders.

If they can take children when they are young, educate them to be technically proficient, but condition them to act contrary to their own self-interest in the areas of economics, politics, religion, morals, ethics and history, how much better can the socialist leaders have it? And this they have in the government, once called public schools of the United States. And if it is possible also to establish a stranglehold in religion, forbid the teaching of the Christian religion of their parents and substitute the religion of Secular Humanism (which has been done), then just how is a nation to recover its independence and its integrity unless first, the schools are cleaned out even as Jesus cleaned out the Temple; and second, the people's representatives are forced to act upon those words of our first President, read to them once each year but heard by so very few of them: "Of all the dispositions and habits which lead to political prosperity, religion and morality are indispensable supports. In vain would that man claim the tribute of patriotism who should labor to subvert these great pillars of human happiness, these firmest props of the duties of men and citizens....Where is the security for property, for reputation, for life, if the sense of religious obligation desert the oaths which are the instruments of investigation in courts of justice? And let us with caution indulge the supposition that morality can be maintained without religion. Whatever may be conceded to the influence of refined education on minds of peculiar structure, reason and experience both forbid us to expect that national morality can prevail in exclusion of religious principle." (From Washington's Farewell Address, September 19, 1796).

When Washington spoke of religion and religious principle, there was no doubt in anyone's mind that he was referring to the God of our fathers to Whom he had prayed at Valley Forge, and throughout his lifetime as farmer, surveyor, general and president. This was the faith that was taught in the public schools until the social scientists began to supplant Biblical principles and install their religion of Secular Humanism. In contrast to the words of George Washington, note the following words which are the conclusion of an article written by one John Dunphy appearing in the January-February 1983 edition of The Humanist:

"I am convinced that the battle for humankind's future must be waged and won in the public school classroom by teachers who correctly perceive their role as the proselytizers of a new faith: a religion of humanity that recognizes and respects the spark of what theologians call divinity in every human being. These teachers must embody the same selfless dedication as the most rabid fundamentalist preachers, for they will be ministers of another sort, utilizing a classroom instead of a pulpit to convey humanist values in whatever subject they teach, regardless of the educational level - preschool day care or large state university. The classroom must and will become an arena of conflict between the old and the new - the rotting corpse of Christianity, together with all its adjacent evils and misery, and the new faith of humanism, resplendent in its promise of a world in which the never-realized Christian ideal of 'love thy neighbor' will finally be achieved. Then, perhaps, we will be able to say with Tom Paine that 'the world is my country, all (hu)mankind are my brethren, and to do good is my religion.' It will undoubtedly be a long, arduous, painful struggle replete with much sorrow and many tears, but humanism will emerge triumphant. It must if the family of humankind is to survive."

SUMMATION. A group of very wealthy men without loyalty to any Nation desired to become very much wealthier and gain control over all the Nations. Through wars and peace settlements they arranged for the dismemberment of all Western empires, then financed the establishment and continued maintenance of a new militaristic and totalitarian empire which challenges the rest of the world and causes a constant fear of war between the USA representing Capitalism, and the USSR representing Communism. But these greedy men, to secure their own position, also gained control over the Nation's currencies, over the communications media, bought its way with tax-exempt money into control of public education, created a new humanistic religion to replace the Christ-centered faith which had made this a great Nation. And, in a very real sense, we became economic slaves to a government no longer under our control.

Ours is a double danger: wars from abroad, and socialist takeover from within. In the final analysis, we must come to realize that this is a spiritual war. We have slept and let the enemy take our land. In our own particular ways we must work while there still is some light; for soon the darkness may come when no man can work.

WOULD ORWELL SAY "I TOLD YOU SO" ?

Because of the worldwide publicity and notoriety given the year, there is a certain apprehension as "1984" approaches. There is reason for the dread. As R. E. McMaster, Jr., comments: "The good times of this brief economic respite are all but behind us. It's time to again board the battleships or arks, depending on whether your preference is to fight or flee." He reasons: "Given the fact that rebellion against government and taxes is becoming socially acceptable; given the fact that the American public is naive and illiterate with regard to economic and political matters; given the fact that the American public is spoiled but paradoxically looks to the government to take care of them; given the fact that the American public has little self-discipline and is spending for good times like there is no tomorrow; given the fact that the politicians don't want to inflict any economic pain by way of higher taxes or budget cuts on these unstable Americans for the next year and a half, who believes we're not going to have a national crisis where economic/military/political events explode shortly?" (The Reaper, 8/12/83. Published 44 times a year, $195. Foreign Air Mail, add 40%. P.O.Box 39026, Phoenix, Arizona 85069).

One note on the above concerning taxes. They must not be raised in any way that the public will notice them as tax raises. However, the Administration and Congress are searching for $12 billion in tax increases for 1984. So, some government employees will be laid off, various deductions, credit, exclusions and allowances may be eliminated. Don McAlvany suggests that "One example is a proposal to tax the insurance benefits of employees to pay for insurance benefits for the unemployed. In typical Washington 'doublespeak,' this will be called 'tax reform', not 'tax increase.' A national sales tax is quite possible after 1984. So, to a greater and greater extent, honest American taxpayers will be driven to become tax evaders in order to survive, and all of this to feed 'Big Brother's' giant welfare monster." Adding to the pressures are the "natural" things that have plagued many Americans. Alicia was a natural event, but the death-dealing desert dryness and heat that has killed crops, stock and some people in the South and Central States, still bears a question mark. Both the USSR and the USA have been experimenting on ways to "control the weather" and make of it a potential weapon of war, and it causes one to wonder if the awful weather of the past few years is "natural" or in part man-made. Knowledgeable weather authorities believe that tragic storms have been caused by Soviet, and now U.S. experiments with exceedingly low frequency (ELF) electromagnetic waves that have altered the jet streams that usually cause the regular changes of season in various parts of the world. This weather experimentation is said to have brought on the unusual weather of the past several years. The "experts" can cause changes in the weather but they can't control the changes. Hence the suffering.

Among the other "natural" happenings that bring jitters to Americans is the sudden prevalence of deadly diseases that, at this point in time, know no cure. Herpes has become epidemic. That deadly disease that is transmitted by homosexual and bisexual men, AIDS, is on the way to becoming epidemic in some cities. And at least 18 people have died of the "black death" in New Mexico alone. This is the plague that wiped out one quarter of Europe's population in the Middle Ages. To add to the horrors of the times, crime is rampant and "computer crimes" threaten the very defense system of the United States. Add to the other things we have mentioned, the government itself continues its attack upon certain very important areas of freedom: the private and church related schools, gun ownership, precious metal ownership, mail censorship, etc. Add to all of these the strikes against large and important industries, the demonstrations against the use of nuclear weapons or nuclear power, the women's lib revolt against the White House, and the recently concluded mass march on the Nation's Capital supposedly to glorify the name of a fellow traveler named Martin Luther King. John Rees, in The Review of the News of August 24, 1983, gives documented details of how Moscow took the lead in promoting this "March on Washington for Jobs, Peace and Freedom" held in conjunction with the 20th anniversary of King's 1963 mass demonstration in our National Capitol. Rees reports that Dr. Joseph Lowery, president of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, addressed a major Soviet-controlled meeting of the World Assembly of Peace (organized by the World Peace Council which is run by the Soviet Communist Party Central Committee) and asked for, and received, Moscow's support in the August 27th demonstration. Whenever there is any kind of important controversy in the United States (or any other Nation, for that matter), there is always a Communist organization ready to lend support. Overall effect: our vaunted state of "peace and freedom" are questionable factors as we near "1984".

So much for the domestic scene. Things are perhaps even worse in our foreign affairs. One thing of importance which certain African States helped our Administration to accomplish: France has stepped in and will handle the Chad affair, and it has been reported that our AWACS, and many of our troops and military equipment are being withdrawn from nearby areas. But there is no hope of any kind of a conclusion of our involvement in the Middle East. And, while Congressmen dawdle and Kissinger's Commission confers and hopes to make a report to Washington sometime in December, the USSR is stepping up its activity in Central America and Cuba is building up for something bigger than it has ever attempted in its own home area. Intelligence Digest, a British publication, in its issue of August 17th, has some important information concerning the Honduran-Nicaraguan situation: "As the weeks go by it is becoming more and more evident that a war between Honduras and Nicaragua is inevitable; there is general conviction that hostilities will break out before the end of the year. The Soviets are rushing boatloads of arms to Nicaragua and the major TV networks are documenting the transits through the Panama Canal. The US is undertaking highly publicized maneuvers among the Caribbean and Pacific coasts but more significant indications are less evident such as a rush construction job by the US Army in Panama to build 600 officers' residences. The Latin American countries in and around Central America are deeply concerned about the danger of a probable expansion of the conflict. The arms that Nicaragua is receiving are far in excess of what it can use, so that an injection of competent and well-trained Cuban troops must be within the Soviet's plans." In this same connection and concerning the Panama Canal, William P. Hoar in answer to the question, "Did we really help a Soviet ship deliver arms to Nicaraguan Communists?" gave this answer: "President Reagan publicly asserted that the 460-foot Soviet freighter Alexander Ulyanov was carrying helicopters and other military equipment from the Soviet Union to Nicaragua. Indeed, the manifest of the ship's cargo confirms that. Yet U.S. technicians helped the Ulyanov through the Panama Canal, and will apparently assist other Soviet shipping of this kind in the future. As one Pentagon official put it: 'First we give the canal away. Then we let the Russians through with arms.' Once the arms reach Nicaragua they become available for the Sandinistas there to help overthrow the American-backed government in El Salvador, and advisors on how to resist the Reds." (The Review of the News, 8/24/83).

The practice seems consistent. With one hand we assist the Communists. With the other we give aid to those who resist the Communists. An official whom we shall not name explains: "The strategy is to continue to build Russia into a 'tool' for the point-and-counterpoint economic conquest of the world by a handful of international financiers. Without a continuing infusion of Western tax money, loan capital, and undercover aid, the Soviet Union would be unable to play the role assigned to her. Communism by itself doesn't work very well; it must be propped up." This appears to explain the strategy that is being used in Central America. The plan is not to help the people of Central America, or to promote either capitalism or communism directly; but to take over the resources of the area by creating a Regional Economic Union controlled by what Richard Robbins of The Robbins Report calls the "International Trading Cartel" which has existed ever since the first Central Bank was established in England.

On the surface, the Administration seems to be making all the right gestures. A battle fleet patrolling the Atlantic coastline, another battle fleet holding war games in the Caribbean, and at least 5,000 U.S. troops engaged in war maneuvers in Honduras. This plus a modicum of aid to the government of El Salvador, and any number of nice speeches about how we are going to save Central America from the grip of Communism. But, the same Cabal has been in charge of our Administration ever since our entry into World War II. And we remember how Batista was made to fall so that Castro could take over in Cuba. We recall how Somoza was made to fall so the Sandinistas could take over in Nicaragua. And we doubt that there has been any change, because these International Cabalists find it easier to deal with Communist Governments!

The fact that this same International Cartel, now known generally as the Trilateral Commission along with its parent organization The Council on Foreign Relations, is in complete control of the US program for Central America was further proved when President Reagan appointed none other than Henry Kissinger to head a special commission dealing with solutions to the problems existing in Central America. That this commission includes at least one pro-Castro economist and several ultraliberal and Fabian Socialist types that will be sure to protect the interests of Communist Cuba, offers further proof that this is not an anti-Communist commission in any sense. In fact, the blueprint from which the Kissinger Commission will formulate its conclusions was drawn up in a series of "Inter-American Dialogues" held at the Woodrow Wilson International Center" from October 15, 1982 to April 7, 1983. Chaired by Sol Linowitz, the man who negotiated the Panama Canal payaway, was U.S. Ambassador to the OAS, etc., the report stated plainly that:

We all favor keeping Latin America and the Caribbean out of the East-West conflict to the greatest extent possible. It does not serve that purpose for the United States to oppose changes in the region simply because they diminish U.S. influence and hence are perceived as advantageous to Cuba and the Soviet Union. . . . We favor dialogue between the governments in El Salvador, Nicaragua, and Guatemala and the respective opposition movements in those countries; between Nicaragua and each of its neighbors; between Cuba and all the countries of Central America; and between the United States and Cuba, and the United States and Nicaragua, respectively; as well as between the United States and the Soviet Union.

In short, don't oppose the Communists; make deals with them. Collaborate and compromise, accommodate and agree to Communist demands! How well they know that once a Communist gets a foot in the door the house will soon be overrun with Communists. If we continue the policies toward Central America now being pursued by our Supranational Government, then let's resign ourselves to the fact that all our Southern neighbors will be controlled by Communists - or else.

There is one more part of the world where we may be losing all respect and authority and paying for the privilege. This is highlighted by the assassination of Benigno Aquino when he stepped off an airliner at the Manila airport Sunday, August 21. But first, some background is necessary.

At the conclusion of the 100-year Opium War fought between Britain and China, the English East India Company (a forerunner of today's International Elitists) forced a treaty upon Peking which included the 100-year lease of the Island of Hong Kong. The Chinese, whatever their political suasion, have always resented the forced deal; Sun Yat Sen demanded the ousting of the British from Hong Kong; the Chinese Communists honor his memory. During the course of the years Hong Kong became one of the world's most important capitalist (i.e. free enterprise) strongholds. The lease expires in 1997 and there is every reason to suspect that Hong Kong and Kowloon will be taken back by the Chinese Communists. This means that another free enterprise city in that general area must be sought and developed. Manila in the Philippines is the choice city, provided that it, too, has not fallen to the Communists by 1997. This means that Manila must remain an "open city" and maintain a friendship with the Western Industrialist Nations, especially the US. In addition, and more importantly, the Philippines remains the seat of all American defense from enemies in the East. Invaluable to the United States are Subic Bay which can house and supply an entire U.S. Navy, and Clark Field which is the center of U.S. air activity throughout the East. They must be maintained for the protection of American, as well as Philippine interests. But ever since the Communist conquest of Mainland China, there have been Communist attempts to seize the Philippines. For that reason the Western Media grasp every opportunity to denounce President Ferdinand Marcos and his alleged dictatorial rule of the Islands. As though the event were carefully planned, the assassination of Benigno Aquino serves the purpose of the Eastern Communists and the Western press. There are demonstrations, calls for the ouster of the Marcos family, a general revolt seems imminent. Also, as though the timing of the assassination were planned, the contracts for the continued U.S. occupation of Subic Bay and Clark Field are about to be renewed. They might not be if anything happened to the Marcos regime.

The present cry of Marcos' opponents is for "democracy". But, having lived in the Philippines for nearly ten years, three of them very uncomfortably in a Japanese Prisoner of War Camp, we know (as Marcos insists) that "democracy" is second only to "Communism" as the worst possible form of government for the Filipinos. There are about 7,100 Islands occupied by about 50 million people, most of whom are Malays. There is a strong layer of Catholicism over ten of the largest Islands. The eleventh and largest of them all, Mindanao, is controlled by the Moros, a Muslim sect that constantly wars against Christians and has never been completely subdued. Then, after being granted independence in 1946, there began a very serious Huk (Communist) guerilla uprising in the Islands, which took years and thousands of lives to control. But Communist uprisings remain a constant threat and for this reason Marcos declared martial law in 1972, which was not lifted until 1981. At that time, with a new Constitution and legislative power restored to the National Assembly, Marcos was re-elected President for a six year term by a margin of 88% of the vote. Marcos is hated because he is one leader who has successfully dealt with the Communist menace and, up to now, has won. But if the present agitation over the assassination of Aquino causes the downfall of the present Filipino Government, the loss will be felt by the United States in the years to come. For Subic Bay and Clark Field are essential to our own defense against International Communism. With Communists in control South of us, and no defenses West of us, then could come the falling of the ripe fruit which Lenin predicted.

WHEN CREEPING SOCIALISM BEGINS TO GALLOP

"What our educated Americans have not understood is that the Red revolutionist does not promote his cause with debate and discussion. He knows that ideas are planted in minds not by debates and discussions but by certain propaganda techniques. For one thing, neither Socialism nor Communism is to be successfully sold under these labels. They must be given other names. Second, the Communist product must be sold in pieces - not in one big package. Third, the sales job must be done by people who are not suspect - not by Communist orators and Socialist orators out on the soapbox as in the old days, but by people who deny they are Communists or Socialists and who sell their products in our schools, our conservative newspapers, in our magazines, on our radios and in our moving pictures and by every means of propaganda that is known. And I repeat, it is not to be sold in one package. You buy one little idea today, another the next day, and so on, until presently you are trapped in a Communist dilemma when you will perhaps be so far on the way to Communism that turning back will be more difficult than going forward."

So wrote the revisionist historian John T. Flynn in his book While You Slept (Devlin Adair, 1951). Flynn was one of the first to point out that the International Communists, in their campaign to conquer the United States, were giving up their former bombastic, terroristic, open confrontation style of attack, and were adopting the methods of their more successful co-conspirators, the Fabian Socialists. The "piece-by-piece, little-idea-at-a-time" scheme can be illustrated by contrasting the original "I Have a Dream" demonstration headed by Martin Luther King, Jr., in 1963, with the so-called 20th anniversary of that event held on the Mall of the Nation's Capital on August 27th, 1983. Back in 1963, when King led the parade, there was but one predominant idea being promoted: civil rights and equality for the negroes (who later were directed to call themselves Blacks, because "Black is Beautiful.") The chief propaganda items were negroes being told to move to the back of the bus, the inability of colored people to register in certain all-white colleges, and the slowness of the integration that led to disintegration in the public schools of America. Only these and little more were being publicized. Every attempt was being made to hide any hint of a Communist connection in the demonstration. Remember how the memory of FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover was excoriated because he wrote the book Masters of Deceit and kept a file on the pro-Communist activities of Martin Luther King, Jr.? And how the leaders of the "liberal" crusades of the day were always people who could deny that they were Communists or Socialists? But, after those initial victories in the civil rights field, the dams began to weaken and the flood of "one little idea today, another the next day, and so on" began to engulf the Nation. Until today, even as John Flynn predicted, we are trapped in a Communist (really a Socialist) dilemma when we are perhaps so far on the way that turning back will be more difficult than going forward" into the Socialist New World Order that is the "one big package."

Note the contrast between the single idea crusade of 1963, and the multifaceted manifestations displayed twenty years later. The leaders pretended that they were observing the anniversary of King's "Dream" speech; actually they were demonstrating their hatred of Ronald Reagan because, to them, he represents the forces of conservatism and "that is where the buck stops." Labeled as a "Call to the Nation," to form a "New Coalition of Conscience," the demonstration was featured by at least 700 different "Ideas - some little, some big - presented by some 700 different fronts and Communist-Socialist groups. Newsweek admits that this "was a different crowd from the one that walked with King to the memorial. The anniversary marchers represented more than 700 groups on the American left, and brought with them a multitude of disparate dreams - from a freeze on the production of nuclear weapons to ending U.S. involvement in El Salvador. . . .Most of the [three dozen] speakers mentioned the president almost as often as they quoted King. Everyone from feminists to environmentalists hammered away at anti-Reagan themes." In a Rockford Institute publication, Persuasion at Work, Allan C. Carlson, in an article written before the event, confirms: "In contrast to 1963, when the primary goal was to secure civil and voting rights for blacks in a still-segregated South, the policy demands of the 1983 march - Jobs, Peace and Freedom - are wide-ranging. In fact, they embrace virtually the whole left-liberal agenda, including calls for meeting 'the full employment objectives of the Humphrey-Hawkins Act,' presumably through government-created jobs; 'a new social contract between labor, industry and government to assure all Americans socially useful and dignified employment with a just wage'; an end to the arms race 'in the immediate months ahead'; turning the 'arms race into a peace race' utilizing the existent and evolving movements in the United States as its foundation'; new efforts toward the 'full and equal rights of women'; opposition to 'corporate partnership with the racist apartheid regime in South Africa'; and an end to the 'militarization of internal conflicts. . . in areas of the world such as the Middle East and Central America, while their basic human problems are neglected."

But the striking contrast between the 1963 and 1983 demonstrations: In the King performance the fact of Communist backing was concealed. However, in 1983, the Communist organizations did not bother to deny their participation and leadership. In fact, the greatest publicity given in advance of the event was supplied by Commu-

BRING THE MARINES HOME FROM LEBANON

Two United States Marines dead in Lebanon and 14 others wounded. One U.S. Navy officer slain in El Salvador. With American military personnel becoming more actively involved in helping both the Salvadoran army and the "contras" trying to overthrow the Nicaraguan government, and with the factional fighting in Lebanon growing in intensity, the casualty lists are certain to lengthen. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger's explanation - that the shells that killed and wounded our Marines were intended for Lebanese army units - may soothe what passes for official conscience in Washington, but it matters little to the next of kin.

It's the price the United States pays for being policeman to the world. We suffer the costs of maintaining an empire without deriving any of the benefits. Of course, we don't maintain a real empire; not officially, at least. But when Ronald Reagan talks about spheres of influence, as he has in regard to Chad, and when he speaks of fires in our front yard, he is talking about the same thing.

All of this is, ostensibly, to keep the Russians out of Central America, the Middle East, Africa, and for the more imaginative among us, Mexico, Alaska, Key West and Indianapolis.

In Lebanon, the American Marines are part of what was predictably misnamed a peacekeeping force. The force includes French and Italian units, which have also taken casualties. The American-Italian-French contingent faces a seemingly impossible task. It cannot keep the peace when there is no peace to keep. Lebanon is dying of terminal civil war, the most virulent kind of civil war - the kind fed by religious hatreds. The dehumanization of Lebanon, begun by warring Christian Phalangists, Moslems, Palestinian Arabs and Syrians, was completed last year by the Israelis, first with their brutal demolition of Beirut and later by their complicity in the Palestinian refugee camp slaughters.

Should American troops have been sent into that cauldron? Of course not. Should they be withdrawn? Of course they should. Given their numbers and the restrictions imposed on them, they, the French and the Italians are little more than spectators at a deadly game - a game in which the spectators sometimes die. (By David Rossie, a columnist for the Binghamton, N.Y. Evening Press.)

nist publications. M. Stanton Evans told of the Communist connections in a column which is worthy of reprinting. Evans has a tendency to whitewash such organizations as the NCC and the AFL-CIO when they should be painted yellow. But he'd probably cause his own professional death if he went all the way. We quote:

* * * * *

The untold story of this weekend's ballyhooed march for "jobs, peace and freedom" is the ominous spectacle of legitimate civic, church and labor leaders linking arms in common cause with obvious stooges of the Soviet Union and the Communist Party USA. The heavy involvement in the march of U.S. communists, front groups and notorious conduits for Soviet disinformation is not a secret. It simply isn't being talked about. Their participation may be discovered readily by examining the official list of march endorsers. The communist press has been promoting the event for months, while the foreign policy issues being hammered - converging on the theme of weakened U.S. defenses - are a far cry from the "civil rights" concern alleged as the original motive for the rally. The resulting amalgam is a major triumph for the hard-core Marxists and a bitter pill for liberal anti-communists in the union movement and elsewhere who in the past have tried to steer clear of Moscow's puppet groups and fellow travelers. [Hogwash, Mr. Evans-Ed.] This time around, Lane Kirkland's AFL-CIO will be seen as moving in common phalanx with the following - all of whom are officially listed as sponsors of the march:

- * The U.S. Peace Council, American arm of a Soviet front group called the World Peace Council, bought and paid for by the Kremlin. A CIA report describes the WPC as "the Soviet Union's most important international front organization." Leadership positions in the U.S. Peace Council, according to the FBI, were given to two national leaders of the Communist Party USA - Michael Myerson and Sandra Pollock.
- * Mobilization for Survival. A self-described "peace and environmental" group that openly lists the Communist Party USA on its masthead as an affiliate, along with the Communist-controlled U.S. Peace Council, one other notorious communist front, and other groups that collaborate with the World Peace Council.
- * Women's International League for Peace and Freedom. Described by the U.S. State Department as a "well known international front" for the Soviet Union and its interests, it may be depicted more accurately as a collaborator in such interests. The WILPF has sent official representatives to the World Peace Council board and is a participant in the communist-influenced Mobilization for Survival.
- * Women Strike for Peace. Another collaborator with the World Peace Council and with MFS, this group attained prominence in the 1960s as a sympathizer with the cause of North Vietnam. A congressional study found it to be "a pro-Hanoi organization" which "enjoyed the complete support of the Communist Party."
- * Women for Racial and Economic Equality. A well known front group for the Communist Party which collaborates with the MFS and a Soviet global front group called the Women's International Democratic Federation. The CIA informs us that "no non-communist women's group of any importance has ever joined" WIDF and that it has been run by identifiable communists since its inception.
- * National Lawyers Guild. Cited years ago by the House Committee on Un-American Activities as "the foremost legal bulwark of the Communist Party, its front organizations and controlled unions." The NLG in recent years has evolved into a mixture of old and new leftists. It is a member of the Soviet front group, the International Association of Democratic Lawyers, which is a faithful mouthpiece for Soviet policy.
- * Committee on Solidarity with the People of El Salvador. According to captured rebel documents, this group was formed with the aid of members of the Communist Party USA under the supervision of Farid Handal, brother of the general secretary of the Salvadoran Communist Party, during a trip to the United States. According to the FBI, CISPES has been involved in circulating a forged "dissent paper" on El Salvador also being promoted by the Soviets.

* Assorted other front groups, including the National Alliance Against Racial and Political Repression, the Labor Research Association, and the All People's Congress, a front for the pro-Soviet Workers World Party. . . .

Question: How did the good folks from the AFL-CIO and other respectable organizations let themselves get hooked up with such people, in such a disreputable cause? (End of quotes from M. Stanton Evans).

* * * * *

Answer to that concluding question: Certain leaders in the AFL-CIO and other "respectable organizations" have been hooked up with such people for a long, long time. They are the people who deny they are Communists or Socialists and who sell their product, in pieces - not in one big package - in our schools, our media, and by every means of propaganda that is known. And we buy one little idea today, another tomorrow, until finally we all may be trapped in a Communist dilemma when turning back may be more difficult than going forward.

This is the Fabian technique that has been adopted to conquer the USA. The formula, formally stated: "External encirclement, plus internal demoralization, plus thermonuclear blackmail, leads to progressive surrender. But this formula is not for the peoples of Asia, Africa and Central America. There the old Bolshevik barbarism, law of the jungle terrorism, is still in vogue. Murder by chemical gas in Cambodia, death by horrible torture in Afghanistan; and finally an inhuman act which shocked the whole world: the murder in cold blood of 269 people, many of them children, 30 of them Americans, including Rep Larry McDonald, top man on the Soviet hit list because of his hatred of Communism. Had the plane that strayed into dangerous Soviet air been a military plane, there would have been some justification. But this was a 747, a common carrier, eye-witnessed by the pilot that did the shooting at the deliberate command of his superior, probably in Moscow. For the U.S. Congress it was a double tragedy in that Senator Scoop Jackson, upon hearing of the atrocity had a fatal heart attack. Major General Keegan is convinced that the KGB knew Larry McDonald was on that plane, and his wife and his office staff are convinced that the desire to "Get Larry" influenced the decision to shoot down the Korean passenger plane.

Perhaps one good thing may come of the horror: The cold blooded murder of men, women and children of many Nations may shock some people out of their complacency and awaken them to the real danger of living in a world controlled by feral beasts that walk like men. And perhaps people will begin to remember that our fight is "against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places. Wherefore take unto you the whole armour of God, that ye may be able to withstand in the evil day, and having done all, to stand."

THE PREMEDITATED MURDER OF THE HON. DR. LAWRENCE PATTON McDONALD

1935 - - - R. I. P. - - - 1983

To the American People: Larry McDonald died for you! Would you do the same for your country? It is obvious that the murder of Dr. Lawrence Patton McDonald was a Soviet action of such inhuman proportions that it is difficult to absorb. There is no doubt that as soon as Dr. McDonald set foot on the Korean Air Lines Jumbo 747, #007, his ultimate fate was locked in, as well as that of 268 other passengers and crew. When Dr. McDonald missed his booked flight to Seoul, South Korea, and he was offered a seat on the KAL jet, little did he realize he would never set foot on American soil again; never to touch family or friends.

Perhaps this wanton murder will finally get through to those surrounding President Reagan, as well as Reagan himself and the American people who put this actor in the White House, that the time has come for the Constitutionallists to take back our country, in any way possible.

Perhaps the untimely death of Dr. McDonald will serve a purpose, as did the words he, too, lived by: Patrick Henry's "Give Me Liberty Or Give Me Death." These are not mere words - they are An American Creed - An American Monument! They stand for the United States of America's Constitutionalist Government, as it was first devised. Are we going to put up with the traitorous trash that is ruling our Nation, or rise from our notorious apathy and kick out all who would do business with our avowed enemies? George Washington said, "Let none but Americans stand guard tonight". Well, night has fallen, so reach for all your inner strength and move!! Never forget - Larry McDonald Died For You. (Written by Peggy J. Smith, Arkansas Secretary, Women for Constitutional Government. 102 Country Club Road, Rogers, Ark. 72756).

In this time of shame and humiliation because of our Nation's leaders, Peggy Smith's letter is not unusual. The vast majority of the American people are enraged, and angry at a government that has done nothing in retaliation for the premeditated, cold blooded murder of 269 innocent victims, murdered because they happened to be present when Larry McDonand was "the target." Phillip Osborne of an Atlanta travel agency said, "We feel morally affronted. If the government doesn't take appropriate action, the citizen can." And he refunded $1,549 to each of 165 city ballet patrons after they cancelled a previously planned USSR tour. A Michigan restaurant manager poured out all of his stock of Russian vodka, saying, "This is just a statement from a small person to a large nation." Nine States took the hint and banned or restricted the sale of Russian products. Angry airline pilots have decided to halt all flights to the Soviet Union. The London-based International Federation of Airline Pilots Associations said the boycott included 57,000 members from 67 countries. But that number included the Soviet Union and Red China, both of which tried to ignore the boycott. And Tryggvi McDonald, 22, son of Larry McDonald, went to the Soviet Embassy with the family pastor, Rev. Theuhold, to protest his father's murder. Of course, he was turned away.

The Soviet hierarchy has finally admitted that the Russians did shoot down the plane. But, regardless of previous lies and evasions, this should come as no surprise to anyone. Because the Soviets have made a regular practice of shooting down planes whenever they could find or invent any reason to do so. U.S. News of September 12 carried a list of some 30 different incidents of this kind, none as serious as this one which involved the murder of 269 people. But, to name a few incidents, on April 8, 1950, an American bomber with 10 on board was shot down over the Baltic. Nov. 6, 1951 a U.S. Navy plane with 10 aboard was shot down off the Siberian coast. Next year a U.S. bomber with a crew of eight was shot down over Northern Japan. In 1953 a U.S. bomber with crew of 16 was shot down over the sea of Japan. In all of these cases, the crews were killed. And the record shows that about once every year the Soviet air force manages to shoot down a plane belonging to an "enemy" country. And the Soviet leaders have made quite a habit of murdering their own people. Alexander Solzhenitsyn, who was there and knew them first hand, said: "During the civil war of 1918-1920, and with even greater intensity after its conclusion, the Communists, seeking to have no other contenders for power within the country, set about liquidating all other political parties, as well as neutral cultural, religious, ethnic and economic organizations. They instituted relentlessly mass exterminations of all who could provide even the slightest opposition to the Communist regime. Entire social strata were destroyed en masse - the nobility, the officers, the clergy, the merchants - as well as individuals who happened to stand out from the crowd or who manifested independent thinking. . . . By the end of the allegedly peaceful 1920s, these policies had claimed several million victims. Immediately thereafter came the annihilation of some 12 to 15 million of the most diligent peasants. In its inhumanity, Communism has no historical precedent; before the 20th century no country experienced anything like it; but today more than 20 lands are oppressed by it. Communism is a trap from which no nation has ever escaped. No personal tyranny can compare with ideological Communism, since every personal tyranny attains a limit of power that satisfies him. But no single country is enough to satisfy a totalitarian Communist regime. . . . There is no nation on earth that has immunity from Communism."

In spite of this long list of atrocities against their own people and the people of other lands, including the latest premeditated murder, there'll be no real changes in U.S. policy toward the USSR. Negotiations will continue, when it is common knowledge that treaties are made just to be broken. The sale of grain, technology, products adaptable to the manufacture of weapons of war, all will continue as is. And we, the taxpayers, shall be forced to continue the financing of our own destruction. As Rep. Ron Paul says: "This aggression against innocents demonstrates once again the futility of negotiating with these people, and the senselessness of subsidizing them. The American people are forced to subsidize a Soviet government which maintains a chain of concentration camps, oppresses its own people and those of Eastern Europe and Afghanistan, and promotes to its head the former chief of the Gestapo-like KGB. Through the Export-Import Bank, the International Monetary Fund, the Overseas Private Investment Corporation, and other U.S. government supported agencies, the Soviet government receives low-interest loans, American technology, subsidies, and loan guarantees - all of which makes the American people poorer, and enriches their enemies. . . . Negotiations require trust. And we can only trust the Soviet government to do the wrong thing, and not keep its word. It's like having a treaty with the Mafia. Let's recognize the Soviets for what they are and stop treating them like a civilized, friendly power."

Words well spoken. But there remains the fact that, no matter what horrors the Soviet Union commits against other nations and against their own people, the ruling clique of this world will not allow the USSR to be defeated or destroyed. Communism is an essential element in its plans for the New World Order and its accompanying Socialist World Government, and it's admissible for President Reagan and other pseudo-conservatives to rant and rave about the atrocities and the inhuman acts of these barbarians; so long as nothing is done about it or them, Ronald Reagan has followed that procedure perfectly. And we shall continue to pay for our own destruction, unless there comes a complete about-face in American domestic and foreign policy; something that seems extremely unlikely if not totally impossible. But, if there is any change and a move toward Constitutional government, it will be the martyrs such as Larry McDonald who will have made it possible.

Concerning the martyrdom of Larry McDonald, there is one thing that irks this reporter no end. When Ronald Reagan gave his histrionic performance regarding the shooting down of the Korean 747, he went out of his way to make a glowing comment concerning Senator Jackson, who had recently died as the result of a heart attack. But he made not a single reference to Congressman Larry McDonald who was murdered on that plane. This kind of political snobbery on the part of a President is, in our eyes, unforgivable. Even the liberal media had a few nice things to say about him, however controversial he was considered because of his chairmanship of the John Birch Society. But, the fact that, officially, McDonald was ignored, seems to prove that it wasn't just the Communists who were out to liquidate him, but that the international ruling clique also was anxious to get him "out of their hair." We'll explain later.

The media have answered in varied and differing ways the "who", "what", "where", and "when" concerning this premeditated mass murder of innocents who may have died just because they were on the same plane with McDonald at the same time. But there has been little or nothing said about the "how" and the "why" of the atrocity; how the murder was planned and staged, and why the atrocity seemed important to the Communists. As to the how there is much evidence that has not been revealed by the commercial media. For example, on a map carried by every pilot flying in the area the "forbidden" Soviet zone is identified and there is a box which warns that a plane flying into this designated space could be shot down. But there also is another box which reads: "Warning: unlisted radio emissions from this area may constitute a navigational hazard, interfere with on-board navigation equipment, or result in a border overflight unless unusual precaution is exercised." This second box, which has never been mentioned by the media, would seem to mean that a plane flying near the "forbidden" space could be trapped and drawn into the area, and then shot down. This could have been the case with the Korean 747. But more likely is the fact, as experts insist, that it is very possible for an enemy computer operator to feed false navigational information into the computers which guide the 747 on its flight. There are three computerized inertial navigation systems on a 747. The route the plane is to take is locked into those computers, and pilots say it is impossible for a plane thus programmed to "get lost"; unless the flight plan is reprogrammed probably after the take-off. This, say experts, could be done in such a way that the computer would read that Vladivostok is Tokyo. That would explain why just a few minutes before the plane was shot down, the pilot reported in to Tokyo that everything was fine. His computer said he was on his way to Tokyo, when he was really on his way to Vladivostok, and therefore flying over Sakhalin Island and the danger area. At that time at least one Soviet fighter was already following the 747, reporting to his base, which could be reporting to Moscow for orders; while the 747 pilot didn't even know he had a problem; until the plane was hit and the Soviet pilot reported to his base, "target destroyed." To do this would require a special kind of American computer, but the Soviets are supplied with them. And the computer operator would have to know in advance the actual flight route. This was known, because passenger manifests and the route to be taken were already teletyped internationally. This all may sound far fetched; but remember how a young computer whiz from Seattle almost precipitated World War III by gaining access to a military computer? The Christian Science Monitor of 8/24/83 reported: "The tales of known penetrations of computers suggest that very few systems may be safe. In just recent weeks a former government employee was able to tap into the Federal Reserve Board computer system; a group of young people in Milwaukee tampered with a nuclear weapons laboratory at Los Alamos, N.M.; and there was a penetration into the Memorial Sloan-Kettering Center in New York." So why not a Soviet penetration Into computers aboard a 747, causing its re-routing?

So much for the how of the story. As for the why, most real conservatives are convinced that Larry McDonald had to be "the target" because he was becoming dangerous to the Communists and to Communism in general. He has done more than any other official to expose Communist organizations in the United States, and to thwart their efforts. In addition, he headed an intelligence organization that covered the United States and much of Europe. There were plans to make it a worldwide intelligence organization, concentrating on exposing Communists and Communist activities. In a radio interview Gary Allen, a friend and associate and author of a number of books including None Dare Call It Conspiracy, said of Larry McDonald: "He was a unifler of anti-communists, an organizer of anti-communists and I think that within two years Larry McDonald would have been a household word in the United States and Europe. Now he's well known to people who are involved in politics, but the average American probably did not know Larry McDonald a week ago. But with all the things that he was involved in I think that within two years he would have been widely recognized as the leader of the anti-communist movement around the world. And they decided to get him before he became that important." In addition, he was a strict conservative, was about to expose an oil deal that would have embarrassed many of "the Elite." So, the elimination of Larry McDonald must have seemed very important to America's enemies.

In his book We Hold These Truths, which is a reverent review of the U.S. Constitution ('76 Press, P.O.Box 2682, Seal Beach, CA 90740), Larry McDonald tells of how the Constitution has been so vilely wounded in the House of its Guardians. At the end of the book, Dr. McDonald gives his prescription for the recovery of our sick Republic. We should like his words to serve as a kind of memorial to a man who was unwept, unhonored and unsung by the highest personages in the land, but yet was willing to give his life for his country, and for you and for me. He wrote:

"For a long time constitutionalists have been wasting their time and money trying to elect a good President, or good Senators, knowing all along their efforts were doomed to failure. At the same time, they have been neglecting the one political effort that could save the Republic and restore constitutional government. That is, electing the only federal officials that the Constitution ever intended for them to elect directly: members of the House of Representatives. By concentrating time, money, thought, and physical energy in their own congressional districts, people could find, train, and elect real constitutionalists to send to the House. Within the limits of a congressional district, they could organize a campaign to bypass the media and all other forces that now exert controlling influence on statewide or nationwide elections. A House of Representatives, controlled by Constitutionalists and supported by the people, could restore constitutional government, even if the Senate, the President, and the Supreme Court fought it all the way. Restoring constitutional government would be slower if the House had to do it all, against the opposition of the Senate and the other two branches of government; but it could be done. Only the House of Representatives can initiate revenue bills....The solution to restoring the Constitution is as simple as that. It will require time, effort, and sacrifice to accomplish it. But not as much as it cost our Founding Fathers to win the blessings of liberty for us in the first place."

A CHOICE AND ITS ECHO

A political cartoon appearing in the September 9th Washington Times seems to strike at the root of our national dilemma. A corporate executive is standing, smiling, addressing his fellow directors. He tells them: "Sure, we're on the brink of war. And sure, we're behind in the arms race. And I know we're foundering about with a confused foreign policy. I also know our domestic policy is in shambles. But what the hell?" In this statement, delivered with a smile, there is no feeling of frustration, hopelessness, or surrender. The country is destroying itself. "But what the hell?"

Let us hope that this is not the attitude of the average tax-paying citizen who must feel frustrated, angry because there seems to be no strong visible leadership, that everything Washington does seems to be wrong, that something must be done about being behind in the arms race, about having a foreign policy that thinks of America first, and a domestic policy that will stop the slide toward economic slavery. These are the people who are angry because of the do-nothing attitude of our federal government toward the horrendous massacre of innocents over the Sea of Japan; killed for no justifiable reasons except to eliminate an anti-Communist Congressman, and to demonstrate to the non-aligned Third World that the USSR is Number One, that the USA is just a second class paper tiger and doesn't dare to challenge the Soviet seriously, no matter what these 20th century barbarians may do. These are the people who suspect that Paul Weyrich of the Committee for a Free Congress was right when he said Reagan was told to do nothing by the megabankers and the Multinational Corporation executives who have outstanding loans or investments in the Soviet Bloc. "It is widely known that most of the major lending institutions in this country have made bad loans to Communist countries," Weyrich said, adding that a whole raft of loans had just been renegotiated with Poland without even asking that interest be paid next year. He also noted that such loans are generally bailed out by the International Monetary Fund, which draws its funds from the Free World's tax-payers. And the official excuse given for doing nothing: We must not jeopardize our ability to negotiate with the Soviet Union. As though the administration still operates on the principle that the USSR actually honors treaties and pays debts. And so our national honor is put on the block in order not to anger the Soviets!!! From the right-thinking Globescan, a European based newsletter, comes the following commentary:

"Moscow offers neither excuse nor apology for its premeditated murder of 269 people in the Sea of Japan. So the West finds excuses for them. Suddenly Washington discovers that the Soviet pilot may have 'mistaken' a peaceful, unarmed, commercial 747 for a U.S. military plane. Suddenly certain facts are forgotten: the 2½ hour chase by Soviet fighters before they shot down the airliner -- certainly enough time to make a positive identification; that during the flight the (Soviet) pilot was, according to U.S. officials, close enough for a 'visual identification' of the plane; the fact that the Soviet pilot could fire no missile without the approval of the Defense Council, a five-member body in Moscow composed of Politburo members, including Yuri Andropov. And, tragically, that among the American passengers on that plane was Congressman Lawrence P. McDonald, leading anti-communist and lifelong enemy of the Soviet dictatorship. If the politicians want a reason for the slaughter, here is it looking them in the eye.

"How accurate were Soviet calculations of Western weakness in the face of this atrocities. How justified is their contempt for a West which sought so quickly to protect them from the consequences of their brutal act. Our politicians are horrified, they are shocked, they are 'deeply moved' -- they are galvanized into inertia and mobilized into immobility. The U.S. President calls the killings a 'terrorist act' -- then announces that Secretary of State Shultz will keep his planned appointment in Madrid to conclude a new agreement on -- you guessed it -- 'human rights.' Ronald Reagan demands to know 'what can be said about Soviet credibility' following this 'heinous act' -- but declares he will not interrupt arms negotiations with Moscow. Reagan asks, 'What can be the scope of legitimate mutual discourse with a state whose values permit such atrocities?' -- while his top aides make clear that the U.S. will take no punitive actions 'that are likely to exacerbate East-West tensions'!! And surrender becomes public policy with the approval of a mass media whose veiled apologies for the murders lament this 'tragic example' of Moscow's 'insecurity' and 'paranoia.' Small wonder that the Soviets dare to throw preposterous and criminal slanders at the U.S. -- they know Washington will do nothing. 'The deliberate provocation' of the United States, declares the Soviet dictators, 'is called upon -- to bring about a further aggravation of the international situation.' Incredibly, the American government is compared on Soviet television to Nazi Germany, for 'When the Hitlerites made an attack, they forced women and children in front of them. I do not think this comparison is too strong,' declares a Soviet newscaster. 'I think it is just right.' In a completely insane reversal of all known standards of justice, the cornered murderer enters a plea of 'Not Guilty' -- because his victim did it!!

"Will American conservatives stand for this? After three years of watching their President manipulated into betraying their economic and political principles, will they roll over and allow him to betray the value of life itself? To price the value of innocent human life below continued 'good relations' with brutes and murderers? If the U.S. and its allies are not willing to defend their values against attack, those values are worth nothing. America must serve notice to Moscow that 'business as usual' will not be our response to acts of such horror -- and public pressure is the only thing that will force the politicians to take meaningful action." (Globescan, Paris, Geneva. U.S. center, 1545 New York Ave., NE, Washington, D.C. 20002. 1 year (24 issues) $125.00).

Despite the inaction and attitude of surrender on the part of the administration, there are still Americans who also are seriously concerned about the administration's conduct in regard to our United States Marines being killed in a foreign land called Lebanon. Until some of them had actually been killed, they were not even allowed to carry ammunition or fight back in any way against their attackers. What a humiliating role for Leathernecks! As disgraceful as was this order, now things have come full circle, and the situation is even more dangerous than ever before. Not only have the Marines been told that now they can fire back and defend themselves, but the Navy has been called on to assist by shelling, and jet fighters to make air attacks. We seem to remember that once there was a kind of unwritten tradition. U.S. Marines, ever since the time of Montezuma and raids along the shores of Tripoli, have gone into foreign lands to defend Americans or American property, and right wrongs, and such action was not considered to be an act of war. But, whenever the Navy, the Army, or now the Air Force also got into the act, this did amount to an act of war. As a Marine, we went into China with General Smedley Butler in 1927, to defend Americans and American property rights, and no one looked upon this action as an act of war, even when the Fourth Marines stayed on in and around Shanghai until after Pearl Harbor. But if the Army or Navy had assisted, it would have been looked upon as an invasion. Now, in Lebanon, the Navy is shelling pro-Syrian forces, jets are conducting air strikes. And, by some nations this is considered an act of war. Farouk Chareh, Syrian Foreign Minister, told a news conference in Damascus: "The Americans opted for military escalation, and we see this as a dangerous development. This is exactly how the American involvement started in Vietnam." And the Soviet news agency Tass charged that Reagan's decision on air strikes over Lebanon would allow Marines "to broaden their combat operations, unleash a new war beginning with a direct seizure of Lebanon and military provocations against Syria." Syria, to all intents and purposes, is a Soviet satellite, has been well re-supplied with arms, ammunition and the latest in war materiel, and is ready to take on both Israeli and United States military forces at any time Moscow gives the word. Syria can be used just as North Korea was used, just as North Vietnam was used, to fight the Soviet's battles without a single Russian soldier becoming personally involved, except as advisor, instructor, or strategist. And it is significant that, although direct intervention by the Russians themselves is not to be expected, as soon as the U.S. Navy went into action, Soviet warships appeared in the area, watching, waiting, reporting. This is the kind of a war game that John Foster Dulles called Brinkmanship. But at that time we still had sufficient U.S. forces to back up the bluffs.

On the domestic scene the fact of our being on the brink of war, with a foundering and confused foreign policy, and a domestic policy in shambles, may have caused the speed-up of so much early election campaigning. When Harold Stassen calls a conference to announce that he is running again for the eighth (or ninth) time, this is a kind of signal that the race has begun. Added confirmation from George McGovern who also says he has a chance. Straw polls are proliferating and the Democratic hopefuls are crowding the field. There's Walter Mondale, Alan Cranston, Reubin Askew, John Glenn, Gary Hart, Ernest Hollings, to name the principal candidates. And they'll all spend millions, mostly other people's money, for a useless purpose. Certainly, the TV, radio, newspapers, periodicals, billboards, all will become gold mines for the mass media. But in the final analysis, there is a Power Elite that will name who is to run as a Democrat. And that same Power Elite will decide who is to run as a Republican. And after the people have been given "a choice" they will go to the polls and vote for whoever is to be a future occupant of an office for which the Constitution declares they have no right to vote. And it all will be marked down as "a good show" and another display of "democracy in action." However, there is one thing about this next election which may portend the future our country may take.

Once upon a time there was a comparative unknown save to the Rockefeller crowd, Zbigniew Brzezinski, who wrote a book that caused the formation of the Trilateral Commission, propelled him into public office as a National Security Advisor, and caused a further decay of America as a Nation. There may be another book, by a comparatively unknown author, which is being praised to the skies by the leading Democratic candidates, and looked upon as a veritable political gospel. As you might expect, the author is a Harvard professor, named Robert Reich. Its title, The Next American Frontier. Candidate Ernest Hollings says Reich's grand design is a "gifted vision" and is "one of America's prized national resources." Candidate Gary Hart confesses that Reich has captured his imagination since "nothing less than America's economic future is at stake" and Reich has the answer. Candidate Walter Mondale calls the book "one of the most important works of the decade." Cranston has emitted similar praises. But let's back up and begin again:

Back when Ronald Reagan was talking like a true conservative while campaigning for the Presidency, he made the statement that "Fascism was really the basis of the New Deal." Walter Mondale was shocked, condemned Reagan's statement and at the 1980 Democratic Convention told the delegates, "After all, what kind of person would try to wipe out every program since Roosevelt? He'd have to be a person who believes 'Fascism was really the basis for the New Deal'! Who would ever say something like that? Ronald Reagan." But Reagan didn't withdraw the charge, instead expanded it, saying: "Anyone who wants to look at the writings of the members of the Brain Trust of the New Deal will find that President Roosevelt's advisors admired the fascist system. They thought that private ownership with government management and control a la the Italian system was the way to go and that has been evident in all their writings." Thomas James Norton, constitutional authority and author of "Undermining the Constitution, a History of Lawless Government," said the same thing. And to prove it, one might read The Roosevelt I Knew by Frances Perkins, Roosevelt's Secretary of Labor. In Chapter 17 she refers to NRA official Hugh Johnson as "a member of the President's so-called 'brain trust'." and adds:

"It was no easy task to persuade General Johnson to set up advisory committees... The larger competitive problems between industries he could settle himself. He had the interests of labor at heart, too. If he hadn't just given me a copy of The Corporate State by Raffaello Viglione in which the neat Italian system of dictatorship for the benefit of the people was glowingly described, I might have felt easier about his counter-proposal to select a labor man to sit at his right and a businessman at his left, for whom he could outline the code and ask if they had any objections."

This is a precise definition of economic fascism: a labor man sitting on the right, a businessman sitting on the left, and a government official sitting in the middle and running the show. According to fascist theorists, workers and employers were to be collectivized into separate groups. The union bosses and the captains of industry were expected to bargain and reach agreements over wages, prices, hours of work, etc., and then submit their agreement to the government for final approval. Only the visible government will not be giving the final approval; that will be done by that same Power Elite which is really the government of the United States of America.

Though he is careful not to use the terms "corporate state" or "economic fascism", this is exactly what Robert Reich is proposing in his book The New American Frontier (Times Books, 1983. $16.60), and which the Democratic leaders are so wild about. They see it as a justification of Roosevelt's New Deal Program, rewritten and revised and made to appear something more than a fascist dictatorship. Says Reich: "We need a political revitalization as badly as - and in large measure because - we need a new economic one. . . . We will need leaders who are not afraid to recognize frankly the political choices that are entailed in major economic change. . . . We also need a national bargaining arena for allocating the burdens and benefits of major adjustment strategies. Such an arena would enable the nation to achieve a broad-based consensus about adjustment. It would enable government, business and labor to fashion explicit agreements to restructure American industry." (Emphasis added). This, we repeat, is the explicit language of fascism. And the liberal democrats are all for it because it also is approved by that Power Elite which is really the United States Government.

To return to our cartoon conversation with which we began this Report. Imagine the megacorporation executive saying: "Sure, we're on the brink of war. And sure, we're behind in the arms race. And I know we're foundering about with a confused foreign policy. I also know our domestic policy is in shambles. But what the hell? We're going Fascist, and that's just what's needed to complete our New International Economic Order!!!"

We often wonder what might happen if these Power Elitists could read and understand God's judgment about them as stated in the Second Psalm.

WE'VE BEEN DOWN THAT PATH BEFORE

It seems almost inevitable that governments, like most people, are inclined to make the same mistake again and again. Lebanon is a critical example. Back in 1958 there was civil war in the country, there seemed little chance of resolving the conflict outside of foreign intervention. This wasn't anything new to Lebanon. There had been civil war in the country ever since its creation as a French mandate at the end of World War I. The country was made up of some irreconcilable religions: Maronite Christians, Sunnite and Shiite Muslims, and Druses which are different from all the other kinds of Muslims. They all fought, occasionally managed to massacre each other. But Beirut managed to maintain itself as an important trading city, nevertheless. In 1958 things were not much worse than they had been previously except that President Eisenhower felt that if some country wouldn't step in and bring order and authority to the then existing Lebanese government, the Communists might do just that and take over the whole country. Accordingly, President Eisenhower sent United States Marines into the country to restore order and give aid and authority to the government. He didn't send in a mere contingent of 1200 Marines; he sent about ten times that many. And there was little real trouble for the Marines. The Syrians were not strong enough to make trouble, the various religious groups didn't want to kill U.S. Marines; they wanted to kill each other. The Soviets weren't yet ready to take a chance. Anyway, a semblance of order was restored. But, in his book "White House Years: Waging of Peace, 1956-1961," Dwight Eisenhower wrote:

If the Lebanese army were unable to subdue the rebels when we had secured their capital and protected their government, I felt we were backing up a government with so little popular support that we probably should not be there.

Sound advice then. Sounder advice now. Because much has changed in the past 25 years. The Soviet Union has become a military power that must be reckoned with for obvious reasons. Syria as Moscow's surrogate in the area had been well re-supplied with the latest in military hardware, sufficient to sink even the U.S.S. New Jersey if so ordered. Israel is now a threat to take over the whole area if the U.S. will permit, and possibly assist. And the Maronites, Sunnites, Shiites, and Druses are still killing each other and jeopardizing the American, French and Italian "multinational peace-keeping force" which is bottled up in three small pockets along the shoreline outside Beirut. Our Marines were sent into Lebanon for the official purpose of restoring order, strengthening the Lebanese Army, and helping the Gemayal government establish itself as a real government over all of Lebanon. But there is little chance of doing what the Marines were supposed to do. It would be best to prepare ourselves for the imminent collapse of the Gemayal government, along with U.S. policy for the entire Middle East, which even President Reagan admits is "on the ragged edge." Besides the Druses that are presently firing on the three elements of this "multinational force", there are some 50,000 Syrian troops anxious to humiliate the United States because of our favoritism toward Israel. Most Americans agree with Senator Barry Goldwater who said: "We have watched Israel, Lebanon and the Palestine Liberation Organization bring this mess about. If there is going to be a Middle East war in spite of every dollar we've spent and every effort we've made, then let them have a war. It is not the United States' job to prevent a war in that part of the world." An editorial in the Fort Lauderdale Sun-Sentinel of September 21 also expressed the general attitude of most Americans. Headlined "Bring the Marines

Home Now," It said, and we quote:

"Cpl. David L. Reagan, 21, of Chesapeake, Va.

"2nd Lt. Donald G. Losey, 28, of Winston-Salem, N.C.

"Staff Sgt. Alexander M. Ortega, 26, of Rochester, N.Y.

"Lance Cpl. Randy W. Clark, 19, of Minong, Wisc.

"Cpl. Pedro J. Valle, of San Juan, P.R.

"These are not just names randomly selected from some national phone book. These are United States Marines who served with a multi-national 'peacekeeping' force in Lebanon. These five Marines are dead, casualties of a conflict their nation refuses to acknowledge even exists. The man who claims these Marines were killed without entering 'situations where imminent involvement in hostilities is clearly indicated,' is Ronald W. Reagan, 72, of Santa Barbara, Calif. He is president of the United States, commander-in-chief of the nation's armed forces. He is alive and probably planning to seek re-election next year. The 535 men and women (U.S. Senators and Congressmen) who can put an end to this ghastly charade are instead debating the definition of war and other constitutional technicalities. These people, your elected representatives, are declaring their concern about the fighting while continuing to fund it. They should be told, by you, to stop it, now! Young men are dying over there for no clear purpose. Until the president and the Congress decide why the Marines are fighting, they shouldn't be asked to die. If the fighting and dying is in this nation's best interests, let's stop donkeying around. Let's send in more Marines and end this stalemate. Let's get in and get the job done - quickly, efficiently and with as little loss of American life as possible, and then let's get out. [But] if being in Lebanon is not in the national interest - if you are unwilling to see your sons die there - then let's get 'em out. Let's call them home, where they can't be shot and killed.

"The United States has been down this path before, and it wasn't a pleasant trip. We entered Vietnam to prop up a friendly but sagging government. We sent military advisers, then let the advisers defend themselves, then unleashed our own firepower to better defend the advisers. Finally, we took on the whole battle. It cost us 57,202 American lives and uncalculable national anguish. Is Lebanon worth doing Vietnam all over again? We don't think so. It certainly isn't worth the lives of our sons, nor that of any other son of South Florida. Is it worth the lives of young men from Chesapeake, VA.; Winston-Salem, N.C.; Rochester, N.Y.; San Juan, Puerto Rico; or Minong Wisconsin? These Americans died fighting somebody else's war. We think that's wrong and that it should be stopped. Now! All the constitutional questions can be decided later, after our boys stop dying. Let's not fight over words while our young men fight for their lives." (Unquote).

But President Reagan keeps insisting that his entire Middle East plan will fall if there is no cease-fire soon in Lebanon. Just how can 1200 Marines bottled up in a death trap near an airfield do anything to cause a cease-fire in Lebanon? Reagan still hopes for an end of fighting, despite opposition from Syria and the Palestine Liberation Organization. So he orders the U.S.S. New Jersey into the war because it has heavier and longer-range firepower. With about 20,000 Druse and 50,000 Syrians attacking or ready to attack, just what will the remains of 1200 Marines do to bring about a cease-fire? And what will be left of them if they are ordered to stay in their bunkers for another 18 months?

And there yet remains that other, the Central American war front which we must consider. In a bitter note columnist Patrick Henry wrote: "We Americans have been living off credibility piled up by sacrifice and valor of previous generations. Now our enemies - though still wary - are beginning to see we are not who we once were. Everywhere they are beginning to call the American bluff. In Nicaragua a combined army, militia and police force in excess of 100,000 men has been trained and equipped with Cuban and Warsaw Pact support. . . the purpose of which is expulsion from Central America of the nation identified in the Sandinista national anthem as the enemy of all mankind." So, we are faced with the possibility of two wars, one that isn't ours to fight but which we seem willing to fight; another one on our own continent which we seem unwilling to fight or prevent, and which our own government may secretly promote.

Complicating the situation is the distrust of our own government which has become more pronounced because of the do-nothing attitude regarding the Soviet shooting down of the KAL 007 over the Sea of Japan. The misinformation and disinformation that has filled news columns and air waves is a part of the reason. First reports said there was a seven hour wait before President Reagan was even informed of the tragedy. Then came the story that Reagan would not return to Washington to take command before finishing his vacation. Seems he was out riding, which is reminiscent of a former Secretary of State who was out riding when the Pearl Harbor attack occurred. Informed of the importance of the event and the necessity of his returning to Washington immediately, the President was handed brilliantly worded speeches that contained much harsh rhetoric and no real action. Then came the seeking after excuses, the near apologies for blaming the Soviets for murdering 269 persons. Then President Reagan refused to attend a memorial service for Congressman Larry McDonald, but did attend one at the Washington National Cathedral, where Bishop John T. Walker praised the President for responding to the Soviet attack with "controlled anger." So the case went to the UN where the USSR has a permanent veto. And where Ambassador Lichenstein warmed the hearts of Americans and cooled the people in the State Department by telling the Soviet delegates they could pack up and leave any time they wished, and take the UN with them. "We will put no impediment in your way" and "the members of the U.S. mission to the United Nations will be down at dockside waving you a fond farewell as you sail into the sunset." Of course, "State" said he didn't really mean it.

So, like the chemical murder of people in Cambodia, the extermination of whole communities of men, women and children in Afghanistan, the persecution of the Poles, and the promotion of terrorism throughout the world, the Korean airline incident will soon be forgotten. But not so the imminent dangers in the countries of South and Central America. There real danger is developing, much of it brought on by our own government! And by what Jesus described as wolves in sheep's clothing, preaching the gospel of liberation theology.

An item appearing on the "inside Page" of The Review of the News, 9/21/83 reads: " 'Matthew, Marx, Luke and John' is what the Institute of Policy Studies is calling its new major program on 'liberation theology' to mine activists in the religious community for recruits and influence." Not much has been published in the commercial media about the important influence this "liberation theology" has had in Latin America, as it is preached by certain leftist elements of the Catholic Church, as well as by some agencies within the World and National Councils of Churches. "Liberation theology" promotes the idea that Jesus was really a socialist and a political revolutionary, and that Christianity and Communism are quite compatible. In this connection we have recently received an unusual article from an unusual source which deals with this subject. Special Office Brief is the name of an "Early Warning System" which deals almost exclusively with political and military intelligence information of importance to Western Nations. It's rather exclusive, "fundamental subscription of 350 U.S. dollars per annum" which includes about 20 issues. Its Issue No. 234 of 8th September 1983 carries a refutation of "liberation theology" which, to most Christians who have gone beyond "the milk of the Word" will seem very simple and elemental. But since so many millions seem to be falling for this false "liberation theology", the article needs to be read and published. It is written from the British point of view, and more or less from a political point of view, but still expresses a Christian point of view. We quote from that article:

A big lie often proves effective. A very big lie is presently received even by professing Conservatives. It is that Marxism is an evolved concept of the 19th century and save for its more violent manifestations has a great deal in common with the teachings of Christ. The latter assertion has only recently been made on British Television by the wife of one of Mrs. Thatcher's leading Ministers and in writing to a reader of Special Office Brief by one of the leaders of the Salvation Army. It has also been made by a Minister of the Nicaraguan Administration who is a Jesuit Priest. But the foregoing are only three examples. What is the truth?

The writings of Karl Marx were only a voluminous rehash of ideas canvassed for centuries by persons in revolt against orthodoxy. Marx did not exist at the time of the French Revolution....The theories canvassed (then) were exactly those later propagated by Marx, many moves removed from their origins. In September 1642 Charles I addressing his troops said: "You shall meet no enemies but traitors, most of them Brownists, Anabaptists and Athelsts; such who desire to destroy both Church and State..." There was and is nothing new about Marxism whatsoever. We invite readers to send us one single quotation from the Gospels which evidences that Christ propagated Socialist, revolutionary or Marxist views.

You may not believe Christ. You may not believe in a God at all. You may believe in part, but not all of scripture. We understand that. This is not a Religious tract and we are not Evangelists by calling. What we must however say is that it is a complete lie to assert that Christ preached one single word akin to the hypothesis of Marx, that He was a social revolutionary, or that by one single word He forecast a social evolution ending with a humanistic order of society akin to modern Liberal Socialistic, or humanistic thought. He did not. Nor was He crucified on account of any anti Roman agitation. On such score Pilate expressly stated he found no fault. He was crucified to pacify a Religion's opinion which objected to His claim to be the prophesied Messiah Who would redeem from Sin in place of the redemption provided under Jewish atonement procedures. That was the charge eventually brought and accepted by Pilate with an expression of regret, disapproval and great fear on the part of Pilate's wife who was profoundly troubled. It is desirable to reject the falsity now canvassed by persons who should know better and who see fit to aid an age old revolutionary tendency by canvassing that Christ and Marx preached the same doctrine. They did not. Indeed the entire Bible from start to finish is a highly conservative library of books with repeated appeals for kindly personal liberality and charity. . . . canvassing strict family observances, the sanctity of inheritance, and as to equality (save about salvation) it speaks nowhere of equality be it on earth or in heaven.

One can disbelieve. But one cannot correctly assert that any form of Socialism is canvassed in one single line of Holy Scripture because it is not. . . . As the Leftists (such as the Rockefeller Riverside Baptist "Church" in New York) are so devoutly keen on Scriptural authority for their position, perhaps they will be good enough to tell this office upon what precise Scripture they rely to justify:

- 1) Abortion on demand?
- 2) Homosexual relationships?

It would be interesting. (End of quotes from "Special Office Brief," Published by Kilbrittain Newspapers, Ltd., 81 Merrion Square, Dublin 2, Ireland).

WHY RESURRECT THE UNITED NATIONS?

John the Revelator wrote of a beast with seven heads, one of which was "as if it were wounded unto death" but was healed and then "there was given unto him a mouth speaking great things and blasphemies." In our mind's eye we can see a resemblance between the two which makes it seem that the United Nations could be considered a rough copy of that beast of Revelation. With the UN, six of its heads are autonomous agencies: IMF, World Bank, Gatt, IFC, UNESCO, and UNICEF. All these, since their very inception, have been busily drafting declarations, conventions, treaties and in other ways writing international laws and pouring out taxpayers' money, each performing its assigned duties as a part of the "Piecemeal Functionalism" which is to create the One World Government. But the principal head, the United Nations itself, had been largely written off and declared virtually dead except for its use as a debating society. This is partly because the five-nation veto power of the Security Council renders impossible any really important action; partly because the one-nation, one-vote scheme (except in the case of the USSR which demanded three votes), is impractical when any one mini-state has the same power as a Western, civilized, industrial nation; and partly because the UN General Assembly is so loaded with have-not nations and Communist sympathizers that any worthwhile action would be impossible by a General Assembly vote.

So, the New World Planners had given up on that seventh and most important head of the UN which had been "wounded unto death", admitting that it could never serve as a World Government. And new ways were sought to fulfill their plans. That's when the program of "Piecemeal Functionalism" was adopted, using the six remaining heads of the UN as Cabinet Departments of a new World Order. However, a little life was given the UN itself when Willy Brandt's blueprint for a New International Economic Order was accepted and promoted. And now President Reagan himself has given the East River Spycamp a new life by using it as a forum to appeal for aid in matters that should be handled by the United States Government itself. This in spite of Deputy Ambassador Lichenstein's candid statement that "The United States strongly encourages member states [of the UN] to seriously consider removing themselves and this organization from the soil of the United States. We will put no impediment in your way. And we will be at dockside bidding you a fond farewell as you set off in the sunset." Fearing a national standing ovation for the Ambassador, the State Department and the White House rushed to smooth ruffled feathers and to assure the Soviet delegation that Lichenstein was speaking for himself and not for the American government. But 24 hours later President Reagan was forced to try to save future votes by saying: "I think the gentleman who spoke the other day had the hearty approval of most people in America in his suggestion that we weren't asking anyone to leave, but if they chose to leave, goodbye." Then came a second blow at the UN when it was suggested in Congress that our payments to the UN ought to be reduced. Nevertheless, President Reagan proceeded to treat the UN as though it really were a World Government, paid obeisance to its General Assembly. Result: The head that was wounded unto death, was quickly revived and, as U.S. News asserted: "The eyes of the world suddenly are focusing on big power politics at the United Nations." But, let's backtrack and fill in some details:

With the shooting down of KAL Flight 007 and the murder of 269 people, 61 of whom were Americans including a United States Congressman, there came an immediate demand from the people that our government retaliate. Among the more rational demands was that all grain sales, shipments or giveaways to the USSR be stopped. And immediately came the protests, allegedly from the farmers and the rural bankers. According to the controlled news media, the cancellation of grain shipments would "hurt Americans more than the Russians." But it seems that the protests actually came from the lobbyists for the Multinational Merchants of Grain, who had no desire to have their sales halted. Lenin said that "Grain is the currency of currencies." And there are said to be five multinational corporations that control the grain trade in this world, including all sales to the Soviet Union. According to R.E. McMaster, Jr., those five are: Continental Grain Co. (New York City), Louis Dreyfus Co. (Paris), Andre (Lausanne, Switzerland), Bunge Corporation, and Cargill, Inc. (Minneapolis). These multinationals have interests in steel, shipping, hotels, paint manufacturing, cattle ranches, glass manufacturing, real estate, banking, animal feeding, commodity brokerage, flour milling, and mining. Because grain is more important than oil, the influence of these multinationals can in no way be underestimated. These are the multinationals that manipulate the food dollar, and while these five food-controlling multinationals tend to stay in the shadows of international trade, their influence still "extends over three continents and has survived wars, famines, economic crashes, and revolutions. They have done whatever is necessary to survive, forming alliances with kings, queens, and communist rulers." (Quoted from "Wealth For All," volume on economics, by R.E. McMaster, Jr. A.N., Inc., P.O. Box 67, Whitefish, Montana 59937. $14.95). So, if you want to know why President Reagan refused to cancel sales of wheat, corn and soy beans to the Soviet Union, ask these five Multinational Merchants of Grain.

Next rational demand of the people because of the murder of innocents: impose strict economic sanctions on the Soviet Union; stop all trade and aid. But then came the refusal of the Megabankers and the Multinationals that trade with the Communist countries. The European Communist bloc countries owe the Big Banks $80 billion. If they were to default on those loans, we are told that this could bring down the entire American banking system. So, say the Rockefeller interests: "We have a vested financial interest in preventing the collapse of international communism." Whether we the people have any such vested interest is questionable; but the Trilateralists, the Megabankers and certain Multinational Corporations do have a vested interest in keeping Communism alive and well, even though this will always be at the expense of the American taxpayers. So, that's why President Reagan was careful to impose no economic sanctions on the Soviet Union. Instead, he retaliated by cancelling some Aeroflot flights. This, incidentally, caused some sympathy for the Soviets since that veteran Communist Andrei Gromyko could say he was afraid to attend the current UN General Assembly meeting because his airplane couldn't land on an American airfield.

The third important demand of the people of America, because of the Soviet murder of innocents over the Sea of Japan, called for the expulsion of Soviet diplomats and all having any connection whatsoever with the Communist governments. This demand was, of course, soundly rejected by the Administration because any such action would interfere with the making of future deals of any kind with the USSR. It might even jeopardize the continued existence of the Soviet government. And, as we said, "We have a vested interest in preventing the collapse of international communism."

But here is the point we wish to stress: Unable to act as a President of the United States should act because of certain vested interests seeking to merge the USSR and the USA into a World Government, Reagan gave up and surrendered to the United Nations! First he appealed to the UN to act as judge and jury in the case of the shooting down of KAL Flight 007. In doing so he knew full well there would be no decision and all would be forgotten, given time. Next, and worst of all, Reagan then went personally before the UN General Assembly to ask that world body to help in arranging arms deals between the United States and the Soviet Union. To treat the UN General Assembly as though it were the arbiter of problems between two governments is to make it an arbiter, and therefore having the authority, if not the power, of a World Government! We feel that Reagan actually recognized the UN as a world government because of his opening words when he addressed the 38th session of the United Nations General Assembly on September 26, 1983. We quote from his speech as published in The New York Times of September 27th:

". . . I have come to discuss how we can keep faith with the dreams that created this organization. The United Nations was founded in the aftermath of World War II to protect future generations from the scourge of war. . . . What has happened to the dreams of the UN's founders? What has happened to the spirit which created the UN? The answer is clear: Governments got in the way of the dreams of the people." Let's repeat that statement: "Governments got in the way of the dreams of the people." Does Ronald Reagan mean that governments should be gotten out of the way? That they should be eliminated, and all should submit to the higher authority of the United Nations? Is this the way peace is to be brought to the world? That's exactly what the International Communists say! But what, precisely, were the dreams of the founders of the UN? Let's take a backward look at this international organization that was supposed to end war, bring peace, and protect future generations.

By happenstance we were at the founding session of the United Nations, at the Cow Palace in San Francisco in the spring of 1945. We were a war correspondent with Mutual Broadcasting System, awaiting orders to rejoin General MacArthur's Command then in Manila. At the time we didn't understand the full implications of this Conspiracy with which we all must deal eventually. But we did recognize the American delegation as a peculiar crew. For, of about 200 Americans acting in various capacities from Secretary General to guards, approximately 50 of them were members of one secret and then little known club: The Council on Foreign Relations. Many of these CFR members were also Communists. Alger Hiss acted as Secretary General. His secretary was Dalton Trumbo, one of the Hollywood Ten. Chief moderator of the group was Leo Paslovsky who was to take the finished draft of the UN Charter, rush it to Washington and get approval of it by the United States Senate before most of the Senators even knew what that Charter contained. Then there was Harry Dexter White, who had arranged a new international money system. Other CFR delegates to the UN organizational meeting, not Communists, included Secretary of State Edward Stettinius, John Foster Dulles, John J. McCloy, Nelson Rockefeller, David Rockefeller, Adlai Stevenson, Philip Jessup, Ralph Bunche, and others. The UN Charter was written by CFR members, Alger Hiss supervising, with the Russian delegation advising and making certain changes in the Charter. Once approved, and then valued at $8 million was donated by the Rockefeller family as a permanent home for the UN. In a letter written in November 1960, at a time when the CFR was still almost unknown to all save parties to The Conspiracy, we wrote: "This whole Council on Foreign Relations crowd was interested in one thing only and that was in getting the United States into a World Government which would be ruled by their masters in New York City and in Moscow. This charter, which was to be the most portentous record in the history of the Congress, was adopted by the UN conference on June 26, 1945, brought to Washington about July 1, and prepared for presentation to the United States Senate, and pushed through the Senate in a few week's time, adopted as a treaty July 28th, 1945. . . . If the U.S. Senators had known then that Hiss, White, and Pasvolsky were to become identified as communist agents, they would never have considered a document of such dire import to the United States."

It would be unfair to say that the UN has been a total failure as a preventative of the scourge of wars. It assisted with the partitioning of Palestine when Israel was carved out of that country. It was of great help to the natives when Africa was "decolonized" and the former empires of Great Britain, France, Holland, Portugal and Spain were broken up to make new mini-states. The Korean War wasn't really a war; it was a UN Police Action, still unresolved, of course. And there was a UN peace-keeping force in Southern Lebanon for years, supposedly keeping PLO and Israeli forces from each others' throats. That peacekeeping force has been replaced by a very non-UN American-Italian-French multinational force which apparently is going to remain in and around Beirut for another 18 months, inviting further war. In the Middle East, most dangerous spot on the globe, the UN hasn't been very successful. In an excellent article in the current Reader's Digest (10/83), titled "The Broken Promises of the United Nations," we are told that "Foreign ministers and diplomats from 157 nations are convened this month in New York City for the 38th session of the General Assembly of the United Nations. Speeches resound in the huge auditorium. A thick layer of blue smoke hangs over the crowd at the bar in the Delegates Lounge. Nearby, in the spacious, dimly lit halls of the Conference Building, deputy delegates and assorted functionaries curl up in overstuffed chairs for long naps, with newspapers draped over their faces. In the Secretariat Building, soaring above the East River, extravagantly paid bureaucrats churn out a flood of memoranda, reports and propaganda. Unfortunately, all this rhetoric, diplomatic shoulder-rubbing and paper productivity will have few of the effects envisioned by the brightest minds of a war-weary world when they founded the organization in 1945. For what the UN was intended to be it is not. What it was intended to do it has not done. In the waning years of its fourth decade, it has become instead a frustrating, corrupted, profligate and . . . dangerous place." It has also become a favorite hangout for KGB agents posing as diplomats. And it has become; "An organization that sanctions the violent overthrow of sovereign governments; one of the Soviet Union's most important espionage posts in the West; a political base, a source of funds and a propaganda organ for terrorist organizations; the advocate of a new 'world order' amounting to global socialism; and a forum for anti-American, anti-Western, anti-free-enterprise activity." (Quoted from Reader's Digest Special Report which should be read by everyone).

And it was to this corrupt organization that the President of the United States appealed for support in resolving the case of the killing of 269 innocents by the Soviet murderers. It was to this forum that he paid obeisance and gave honor as though it were really a World Government. As U.S. Ambassador to the UN Jeane J. Kirkpatrick admits, "most American ignore the UN....(But) We, President Reagan and the team he appointed to the UN, have not been willing to ignore these attacks. We take seriously this organization on which our nation spends nearly $2 billion a year."

We believe that Ambassador Kirkpatrick's Deputy Ambassador is more to the point when he invites the UN and its member nations to get out of the United States, and that it would be a patriotic and honorable gesture to join him at dockside wishing them a fond farewell as they sail off in the sunset. It would have been a far greater thing if Ronald Reagan had not tried to revive that seventh head which was wounded unto death.

THEY CALLED IT A VICTORY AT MORTON GROVE

For the past fifteen years, ever since the passage of the Gun Control Act of 1968, the people that want to confiscate our handguns have been trying to get some legislation on the books that would really advance their cause. Their cause being the absolute elimination of all firearms except for police and the armed forces. But there are more than 100 million gun owners in the United States, and the U.S. Congress isn't about to lose all those votes by passing any stronger anti-gun legislation. For example, there is in the Senate at the present time a move to amend the Gun Control Act of 1968 to make it easier for citizens to own, purchase and sell handguns, and to make the sentences more severe for those using guns in the commission of federal crimes. An item in USA TODAY on Oct. 5th notes that the Reagan administration has approved the measure "to make it easier for citizens to own...handguns." In 1979 Senator Kennedy introduced a bill to outlaw the so-called Saturday night specials, but the bill couldn't even get a favorable report in the Judiciary Committee. So, at the Congressional level, the anti-gun forces haven't a chance of success. But, as Congressman Philip Crane observes:

"Having been thus thwarted in the legislative arena, gun prohibitionists are turning increasingly to local government and the federal bureaucracy as vehicles of disarmament. In light of urban attitudes toward the misuse of handguns, big-city mayors and police bureaucrats are among the most ardent supporters of gun control. The U.S. Conference of Mayors, through its handgun control staff, has been in the forefront of those advocating the confiscation of privately owned arms. . . . The Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, and Firearms, an agency of the Department of the Treasury, is charged with enforcing federal firearms laws. It is responsible for licensing and regulating the nation's gun dealers. Since the bureau's activities in the areas of alcohol and tobacco have declined in recent years, BATF has expanded its antigun operations. Congressional hearings have thoroughly documented BATF's violations of civil liberties, violations which have become standard operating procedures for the bureau. Through questionable activities, including various forms of harassment, BATF has sought to increase its prosecution of gun owners, and thereby enhance its image. Also, at various times, the agency has put forth thinly disguised plans for the national registration of handguns." (Quoted from an introduction to "The Rights of Gun Owners," by Alan M. Gottlieb. Caroline House Publishers, Inc., Aurora, Ill. Copyright by The Second Amendment Foundation, 1981. Paperback, $5.95).

That should provide the setting for the Morton Grove controversy. In 1981 the city council of Morton Grove, Illinois passed, against the strong protest of a majority of the city's 26,000 residents, an ordinance requiring that all citizens owning handguns must turn them in, or face a fine of $500 and six months in jail. At latest count, only 17 guns had been turned in, and crime had increased to such an extent that citizens were forming neighborhood watch committees and patrols. The local police could not enforce the anti-gun ordinance, nor could the police protect the citizens from the criminals that began taking advantage of the fact that citizens feared to use guns to protect themselves. To demonstrate the popular disapproval of any such anti-gun ordinance, Morton Grove's neighboring village of Skokie, Ill. was asked to pass a similar ordinance. The Skokie village board turned down the proposed ordinance upon its first reading.

Morton Grove's ordinance could have become a precedent for other communities where liberals were in control of the government, so the National Rifle Association and the Second Amendment Foundation challenged the Morton Grove ordinance in federal court. When it reached the Supreme Court, that body didn't actually uphold the Morton Grove law, as the media would have us believe. What it did was refuse to rule on the case because "The Second Amendment applies to Congress, not to states and localities." This gets down to the fundamentals of Constitutional law which have been overlooked and evaded, especially since the New Deal Administration. When the Bill of Rights was approved and added to the Constitution, the amendments were intended to apply only federally. The Second Amendment would not apply to States and localities, only to federal territories and to cases between states. For this reason, it should be noted that almost every State in the Union has its own equivalent of the Second Amendment. Twenty-two of them are written into the Constitutions of the respective States. Here are a few examples:

ALABAMA. That every citizen has a right to bear arms in defense of himself and the state. (Art. 1, sec. 26).

ARIZONA. The right of the individual citizen to bear arms in defense of himself or the state shall not be impaired. (Art. 2, sec. 26).

CALIFORNIA. Self-defense code: Penal Code 197. Homicide is justifiable when committed by any person in any of the following cases: 1. When resisting any attempt to murder any person, or to commit a felony, or to do some great bodily injury upon any person; or, 2. When committed in defense of habitation, property, or person, against one who manifestly intends or endeavors, by violence or surprise, to commit a felony, or against one who manifestly intends or endeavors, in a violent, riotous or tumultuous manner, to enter the habitation of another person for the purpose of offering violence to any person therein; or, 3. When committed in the lawful defense of such person...

COLORADO. The right of no person to keep and bear arms in defense of his home, person and property, or in aid of the civil power when thereto legally summoned, shall be called in question. (Art. 2, sec. 13).

CONNECTICUT. Every citizen has a right to bear arms in defense of himself and the state. (Art. 1, sec. 15).

FLORIDA. The right of the people to keep and bear arms in defense of themselves and of the lawful authority of the state shall not be infringed. (Art. 1, sec. 8).

INDIANA. The people shall have a right to bear arms, for the defense of themselves and the state. (Art. 1, sec. 32).

KANSAS. The people have the right to bear arms for their defense and security. (Art. 1, sec. 4).

KENTUCKY. All men are, by nature, free and equal, and have certain inherent and inalienable rights, among which may be reckoned: . . . 7. The right to bear arms in defense of themselves and of the state. (Art. 1, sec. 1).

MICHIGAN. Every person has a right to keep and bear arms for the defense of himself and the state. (Art. 1, sec. 6).

MISSISSIPPI. The right of every citizen to keep and bear arms in defense of his home, persons, or property, or in aid of the civil power when thereto legally summoned, shall not be called in question. (Art. 3, sec. 12).

Following item appeared in the Los Angeles Times, Sept. 29, 1983:

"Six former secretaries of state issued a joint statement declaring that the United Nations should keep its headquarters in the United States. The statement came in the wake of remarks last week by Charles M. Lichenstein, a U.S. delegate to the United Nations, who suggested that UN members who do not like the United States are free to go elsewhere and take the world organization with them. Signing the statement were Henry A. Kissinger, Alexander M. Haig, Jr., Cyrus R. Vance, Edmund Muskie, William P. Rogers and Dean Rusk."

All the foregoing are members of the Council on Foreign Relations.

Enough? Similar provisions for defense of himself and his property are contained in the Constitutions of Missouri, Montana, Nevada, New Mexico, Oklahoma, Oregon, Pennsylvania, South Dakota, Texas, and Vermont. Other states have provisions that are similar to the Second Amendment to the U.S. Constitution. However, instead of referring to the individual citizen specifically, these State Constitutions include the word "militia." So, let's look to its true meaning.

The Founding Fathers, for very obvious reasons, had an abiding fear of Big Government. As they were drafting the Constitution, they could still remember the horrible costs in life of that long and bloody war against one form of tyranny. They were not about to establish a new government that would permit more despotism. Their real concern was that it was necessary to create a central government, and yet that central government could so easily evolve into a dictatorship, with States' Rights crushed and people's rights liquidated. They believed that if the people themselves were well armed, at their own expense, responsible to their respective States and not to the federal government, this would form an effective barrier to any such tyranny. The Virginia Constitution of 1776 provided that "no free man shall be debarred the use of arms within his own land." Said Patrick Henry: "The great object is that every man be armed . . . everyone who is able may have a gun." After the framing of the Constitution George Washington declared: "Firearms stand next in importance to the Constitution itself. They are the American people's liberty teeth and keystone under independence. . . . From the hour the Pilgrims landed, to the present day, events, occurrences, and tendencies prove that to ensure peace, security, and happiness, the rifle and the pistol are equally indispensable." Samuel Adams authored a resolution that the "Constitution never be construed to authorize Congress to prevent the people of the United States who are peaceable citizens, from keeping their own guns."

From the quotations from the Founding Fathers, it should be obvious that when the Second Amendment speaks of the militia, it refers to every able-bodied citizen who can carry a gun. In debating the ratification of the Constitution before the Virginia Assembly, George Mason stated, "I ask who are the militia? They consist now of the whole people, except a few public officials." Patrick Henry echoed the statement. In our own time Webster's Dictionary is considered something of an authority on the subject of definitions. Its New Collegiate Dictionary of 1976, on page 730, gives this definition of "Militia": "A part of the organized forces of a country liable to call only in emergency. 2. The whole body of able-bodied male citizens declared by law as being subject to call for military service." On January 21, 1903, Congress gave a statutory definition, defined the militia as consisting of all able-bodied male citizens "more than 18 and less than 45 years of age." The US Code, 1970, Title 10 gives an equivalent definition.

However, it should be understood that when the word "militia" is used, it refers to all able-bodied men who are responsible to the State in which they reside, and responsible to the federal government only if and when all able-bodied men are called as the result of a national emergency. This is true of all armed civilians; their rights are from and their obligations are to the State of which they are a citizen. This fact is explained quite clearly by the late, lamented Larry McDonald, who recently gave his life for his country and his people. We quote him on this subject.

* * * * *

Under the principles of English common law which were grafted into the first eight amendments of the American Bill of Rights, every person has the inviolable right to certain things (freedom of speech, assembly, religion). If he illegally harms others in the exercise of any of these rights, he is subject to punishment, after fair and impartial trial, by the government to which he is answerable for his private activities. That is why the Founding Fathers directed the Bill of Rights exclusively at the federal government: people were to be answerable for their private activities only to state authority, except with regard to powers which the Constitution gives to the federal government. The phrase "separation of church and state" appears nowhere in the Constitution or Bill of Rights. But the intent of the First Amendment clearly is to build an impregnable wall between the church and the federal state, leaving the people free to permit such government-church relations as they please in their own states.

The Second Amendment says: "A well regulated Militia, being necessary to the security of a free state, the right of the people to keep and bear Arms, shall not be infringed." That is an unequivocal prohibition against federal gun-control laws. The Second Amendment left the people free, on the other hand, to have whatever gun-control laws they pleased, in their own states.

For as long as history has been recorded, there have been instances where rulers forbade their subjects to own any arms, from a broadsword to a bow and arrow. The reason for such suppression is clear: the tyrants feared their subjects might revolt. The Framers of our Constitution were well aware of the dangers of despotism: the Battles of Lexington and Concord had occurred because the British militia was trying to seize the colonials' supply of arms and gunpowder. The men who had led the revolt against England were not about to risk creating a new government that could disarm the citizenry.

Today, because of great public concern over rising crime and other dangerous social conditions, advocates of federal gun-confiscating laws are receiving more support than ever before. But confiscating arms from law-abiding citizens, in an effort to reduce crime, is like outlawing ballpoint pens to prevent spelling errors. The solution to our problem is not better gun control, but better crime control. The swift apprehension of criminals, combined with quick, sure, and firm justice, is the only approach that will work. (End of statement by the late Larry McDonald).

SUMMARY. The anti-gun lobbyists were doing quite well at the federal level until the passage of the Gun Control Act of 1968. Then they began to misfire at the national level and began aiming at local communities. In many cases they were able to catch communities and big cities off guard; were able to persuade councilmen and commissioners, mayors and other local politicians to pass anti-gun ordinances. There were temporary successes in Chicago and San Francisco, but their biggest gains have been in smaller cities. The most popularized affair was the passage of the Morton Grove anti-gun ordinance. The gun grabbers are still having some success in other communities, even though it is evident that whenever an anti-gun law is passed, crime increases in that area. And, by a strange quirk in their character, those most vigorous in seeking gun controls for law-abiding citizens are also working to reduce punishment for criminals, and make the victims the criminals. The man who uses a gun to defend his home and family can be sued by the housebreaker. And there have been court cases in which it was ruled that the local government cannot, therefore will not, protect the people; and that the police are under no obligation to protect civilians. Given these circumstances, who can blame people for deciding that they are going to have to protect themselves, and purchase guns for that purpose? One good thing: here is an evil that can be fought at the local level. No need to appeal to Washington; just make demands on your State Capitol and your local government. A housecleaning at the local level will go farther toward helping the country than working to elect some President who can do nothing to help you.

TO LIQUIDATE THE LEADERS

Sirens sounded across South Korea on a gray, rainy morning to signal a moment of silent prayer at the start of funeral rites for 17 government officials who had been killed in a terrorist bombing in Rangoon, Burma. President Chun Doo-hwan had escaped by minutes the bomb explosion on Sunday, October 9th. There were reports that at least a million mourners attended the services, including U.S. Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger. This was a second tragedy to be experienced by the South Koreans, since many were still mourning the death of friends and loved ones who were aboard the KAL 007 which was shot down by a Communist pilot, and on which there also were 31 Americans, including Congressman Larry McDonald. Looking back at certain past assassinations and mass murders, there seems to be a discernible connection between a number of such events:

- 1) The attempted assassination of President Reagan;
- 2) The near assassination of the Pope;
- 3) The murder of Larry McDonald;
- 4) The attempted murder of an entire South Korean government in Rangoon. These plus some character assassinations and attempted character assassinations on the part of the media;
- 5) The character assassination of Interior Secretary James Watt;
- 6) The continuing harassment by the media of Senators Jesse Helms and Steve Syms, and the currently building pressure against all conservative Senators and Congressmen standing for re-election. Here is a type of war against neither countries nor organizations as such, but against individuals, against present or potential leaders in certain fields of endeavor where they offer obstructions to the development of the New World Order or the expansion of the Communist Empire. It is a kind of war which seems to go beyond communism itself, beyond liberalism or Trilateralism, beyond even governments. Perhaps a review of the uses of political assassinations and mass murders in American and certain aspects of world history will be revealing and rewarding.

The word was coined in the 12th or 13th century, during the time of the Crusades. The Crusaders were of a mixed lot. According to the eminent English historian, Charles Mackay, "While religion inspired the masses, another agent was at work upon the nobility. These were fierce and lawless; tainted with every vice, endowed with no virtue, and redeemed by one good quality alone, that of courage. The only religion they felt was the religion of fear." These members of the nobility, leaders in the Crusades, were for the most part ambitious men, filled with greed for glory and gold, and many with hatred for any other of the leaders who seemed to stand in their way. It was decidedly unChristian to murder such opponents. But there was an Ismaili leader who saw it as a godly duty to destroy Christians, and who welcomed any additional reward that might come to him in the way of gold. He was religiously eager to assist certain members of the nobility. He was Hassan ibn al-Sabbah, leader of a small sect of Islam, who had gained control of certain mountain fortresses south of the Caspian Sea, and who came to be known as the Old Man of the Mountain. Under him were members organized into strict secret classes, according to their degree of initiation into the secrets of the order. In this, the Secret Order was very similar to those secret organizations which had developed throughout Europe: The Rosicrucians, Druses, the various Illuminati organizations, the Jacobins, Grand Orient Masonry, etc. However, with this particular Ismaili sect ruled by the Old Man of the Mountain, the members of the highest degree were called devotees, and they were trained to seek martyrdom. They were given drugs (hashish), treated to great sensual pleasures, and were told this was a foretaste of what they could expect when they got to heaven, if they died at their duties. So happily they went to kill and be killed, and many a Christian leader became their victim. These Ismaili devotees were called assassins, an English adaptation of the Arabic word meaning "users of hashish." The word has stuck throughout the centuries. Of course, few of today's assassins are expecting more than "eternal rest" after doing their duty. But they are given their "heaven on earth" before the event. Careful psychopolitical indoctrination, sensual pleasures, great amounts of money to spend on lavish vacation-like visits in various countries and cities, best possible accommodations, and every aid and convenience is given by accomplices up to the time of the assassination. And often they even survive the ordeal and live to a ripe old age in some convenient prison or mental hospital, like the two who were unsuccessful in their attempts to assassinate a President and a Pope.

America's first important and successful assassin was said to be an actor by name of John Wilkes Booth, who murdered President Lincoln. Most history books will say the assassination came about because of the slavery issue, some will speak of President Lincoln's determination to preserve the Republic, which antagonized the secessionist South. But the real reason for Lincoln's execution is seldom mentioned. The London Bankers had done much to precipitate the War Between the States because their chief source of great revenue consisted of the financing of wars. But President Lincoln refused to borrow money from them to prosecute the war. Instead, he issued "Greenbacks" and imposed a temporary income tax. And he was very outspoken. He said:

"As a result of the war, corporations have been enthroned and an era of corruption in high places will follow and the money power of the country will endeavor to prolong its reign by working on the prejudices of the people until wealth is aggregated in the hands of a few and the Republic is destroyed. I feel at this moment more anxiety for the safety of my country than ever before, even in the midst of war."

Soon after making that statement, the President was assassinated.

The 20th President of the United States, James Garfield, also was the victim of an assassin's bullet. History records that he met his death at the hands of an office seeker, one Charles Guiteau. But, there were a couple of money frauds at the time, one involving the collection of money at the Port of New York City, another involving the Post Office's "Star Route" fraud which involved millions of dollars. He was in the midst of prosecuting these frauds when, on July 2, 1881, he was shot, never fully recovered and died on September 19th of the same year. Here again, it was the money power which really brought about a second assassination of a President of the United States.

William McKinley was the third American President to become the victim of an assassin's bullet. For the first time, there is mention of the murderer having been an anarchist, Leo Czolgosz. And the fourth American President, John Kennedy, allegedly died as a result of a bullet fired by a Communist, his presumed assassin Lee Harvey Oswald. He died at Dallas, November 22, 1963. Four and a half years later, on June 5, 1968, presidential aspirant Robert Kennedy was assassinated in Los Angeles by a Jordanian immigrant, Sirhan B. Sirhan.

So much for presidents and presidential hopefuls. There is yet another list of deaths of government officials which is questionable. There was the case of Congressman Louis T. McFadden, 1876-1936. In an introduction to the collective speeches of Congressman McFadden, there is the following tribute:

"Few Americans today recognize the names of men like Congressman Charles Augustus Lindberg, Sr., father of the famed aviator, who fought against the passage of the Federal Reserve Act in 1913 and conducted one of the first investigations of the Banking and Money Trust in Congress; and of Congressman Louis Thomas McFadden. These men spent their lives in heroic combat, as grim and hopelessly as the winter at Valley Forge, but they never admitted the possibility of defeat. And they never lost the courage to go on. But America lost, because America did not support them in their struggle, and America is the loser today. . . . For ten years, Congressman McFadden had been Chairman of the House Banking and Currency Committee. While exercising the duties of this position he exposed some of the greatest crimes of the century, including his stinging indictment of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System in which he charged them 'with having treasonably conspired to destroy constitutional government in the United States.' Because of these exposures, he had unleashed the full power of the international criminals against him. When he made these speeches, he was alone. He had nothing to look forward to save his own political demise." (From the Collective Speeches of Congressman Louis T. McFadden, Omni Publications, Hawthorne, CA 90250. Present price unknown). We reprint the previous statement because there is every reason to believe that Congressman McFadden died as a result of poisoning. There are unproved charges that the same type of death occurred in the case of Senator Pat McCarran who, among other important acts, as Chairman of the Senate Subcommittee on Internal Security, undertook a long and productive investigation of the CFR affiliate, the Institute of Pacific Relations, proved it was a channel for pro-Soviet propaganda in the United States, and the chief instrument in preventing the reception of military aid by General Chiang Kai-shek when the latter was fighting the Chinese Communists under Mao Tse-tung. And there is considerable question as to the manner of death of the late Congressman Joseph Martin, Speaker of the House and a staunch conservative at a time when few of that ilk remained in the House or the Senate.

And now, before our pages are full, let us briefly note the last of the important assassinations, that of Larry McDonald.

Stalin is quoted as having said: "The death of one person is a tragedy, the death of millions is a statistic." If we accept this statement as spoken, then the assassination of John Kennedy was a tragedy. But it was not intended that the death of Larry McDonald should be considered a tragedy. Therefore he was one of a crowd that was murdered. A statistic, not a tragedy in the Communists' view. Likewise, the Murder of the President of South Korea by the North Koreans would have been considered merely a statistic. The Communist history is filled with such statistics. Last year a Russian who served 12 years as a prisoner in the Gulag Archipelago, Anton Antonov-Ovseyenko, was able to have smuggled out of the Soviet Union his book, "The Time of Stalin: Portrait of a Tyranny." In that book the author gives a number of "statistics" concerning the murders that were committed in order to establish a Soviet government in Russia. Much is said of a holocaust supposedly ordered by Adolph Hitler. But the figures mentioned pale in comparison with the torture and carnage committed by Communists upon their own people. The purpose behind the murders had to do with the liquidation of leaders, of Christians, people with initiative, land owners, etc. The figures the author gives for the first thirty years of Communist rule in Russia provide these statistics:

Civil War casualties, including the execution of "class enemies", 18,000,000. Casualties caused by the collectivization of agriculture (deaths by induced famine, deportations to the Gulag Archipelago, and executions): 22,000,000. Purges during the late 1930s: 19,000,000. Killed during the war through mass deportations, deaths in camps, executions: 15,000,000. Executions after the war: 9,000,000. This adds up to 83 million people killed in order to establish and maintain socialism in the Soviet Union. A terrifying statistic. The author of the book from which these statistics were taken concludes that "Terror as a means of building socialism originated in the lawlessness that prevailed even while Lenin was alive. It grew out of the system of one-party dictatorship." And with the former KGB chieftain, Andropov, now Chairman of the Communist Party and President of the Soviet Union, it is not surprising that the terror will continue wherever Communism has an opportunity to express itself, over the Sea of Japan, in the streets of Rangoon, or in the halls of congress in Washington, D.C., if the "statistics" ever extend themselves that far.

While Megabankers and some Multinational Corporations continue building up the power and industrial ability of the Soviet Union, our own government is assisting them in a similar development of Communist China. This with the strange excuse that in case of war, China can be led to side with the USA against the USSR. But even those who promote such an excuse for building the military and industrial power of Red China, know that Communists are Communists and intend to destroy any Nation that stands in their way. As for "statistics," China has a worse record for murders of their own people than do the Soviets. Even as we write this there are fresh reports of further purges of "enemies of the people" being carried out by Communists in Red China. These deaths of millions, beginning with Mao Tse-tung and continuing today are, as Stalin said, unfortunately, merely "statistics" to most Americans. But those people who know about such statistics and continue to trade with and finance these totalitarian states (with taxpayers' money) are the real enemies of our country.

In this connection and with reference to the "statistic" that is Larry McDonald, we have received a report which cannot be authenticated, but which could be true. It asserts that "Congressman McDonald opened his mouth once too often," that "he is reported to have said that when he returned from Korea he was going to blow open the Big Bank ripoff." The report continues and we quote verbatim:

"Well, he had to be stopped - quickly. Remember McFadden and some of the others who tried to stop the Federal Reserve deal?"

"Murder inside the US would cause many questions. Could word have gone to Moscow to do the job? Moscow got the word from some place, that is sure. The plane in foreign waters with many others would make a good cover. And notice how the newspapers played down the loss (murder) of Congressman McDonald."

"I guess New York still runs Moscow. The transfer of technology and trade continues, even though they murdered one of our leading American men. Yes, it looks like New York gave the order, and Moscow obeyed." (Unquote).

As we said, no such report can be authenticated. But considering the way the "statistic" was handled by the media, it could be true. And our government did nothing about it but talk. Now even the talk has died down. Knowing these things, how few there are who dare call it treason. And how few will agree with his friend and our friend, Tom Anderson who said: "Thank you, God, for giving us Larry McDonald."

"BEYOND THE NATION-STATE"

Ready for a real shocker? The British based Intelligence Digest is a respected source of information, has an international reputation. It's October 12th issue observes that: "According to a high source in Washington, Dr. Kissinger is set to be the US Secretary of State again, possibly after the presidential election. The reason is that he is regarded as being an expert at handling the media and that anyone who can come through the Watergate and Vietnam crises intact, as he did, has obviously got something which the Reagan administration could use. The key will be found in his report on Central America and how the administration and Congress respond to its findings."

Incredible? Impossible? Not if our Ship of State with Ronald Reagan at its helm continues to veer apart and sail on into uncharted socialistic seas. In view of Reagan's recent appointments, the naming of Kissinger could happen if the Reagan-Bush brace is re-selected to be re-elected. There are some straws in this leftward wind which should be frightening to any real conservatives, the people who put Reagan in the White House in the first place. With regret and reluctance, Mr. Reagan watched his Republican Partymen force James Watt to resign. Watt was one of the few remaining anti-Eastern Establishment conservatives who has tried to uphold the originally stated Reagan policies while ignoring the Reagan about-faces and retreats. Then came the surprise of surprises: President Reagan named his best friend, William Clark, National Security Adviser, to take over Watt's job with the understanding that Clark would continue with the same policies Watt had espoused - a sure way to get that best friend, William Clark, eased off the team as was Watt. Clark was important in his job as Security Adviser, because he was able to counter some of the Establishmentarian policies being promoted by Secretary of State George Shultz and Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger. But here was a stepping down that even the liberals couldn't understand. They insisted that Clark was completely unqualified for the new job, probably couldn't distinguish a killer tree from a shoe tree. Reagan countered by saying that Clark "is a God-fearing Westerner, a fourth-generation rancher, and a person I trust." But to sacrifice his range-riding buddy for sheer political expediency requires a better answer. That Reagan and Clark were like brothers is true. They were together in Sacramento. They did ride the range together in their off-days, they did talk alike and possibly think alike on important issues. And when Reagan went to Washington Clark was sure to follow. He became an Undersecretary of State when they all said he knew nothing about the job. But he learned fast under Alexander Haig and endured to become National Security Adviser. In that capacity he learned fast enough to object to many of the policies proposed by Shultz, and acted as an important buffer between Reagan and Shultz, and between Reagan and Weinberger. Which is probably the real reason Clark wanted another job. Trying to be a country-loving patriot in a camp run by members of the Council on Foreign Relations and the Trilateral Commission, and at a time when his President was turning, visibly and publicly, more and more to the left. This was more than Clark could handle. But, to finish our horsy metaphor, Clark didn't leave the range and his boss rancher. He just asked for another saddle and a new bed in the bunkhouse. his old place will be taken by Robert (Bud) McFarlane, who has been deputy national-security adviser under Clark and has recently been serving as a special mideast envoy. McFarlane has served as an assistant to Henry Kissinger, and has held posts under three Republican presidents since 1971. He is a favorite with the State Department and has the complete approval of George Shultz. Said to be a near carbon copy of Kissinger, this will be the result of these switches in saddles: Reagan will have no one qualified to advise him on foreign policy (and how he needs advice) except died-in-the-wool followers of the policies laid down by the Council on Foreign Relations and the Trilateral Commission. So, what Rockefeller wants, Rockefeller will get, compliments of Ronald Reagan. There is little question but that the Senate will approve both Clark and McFarlane in their new roles, just as President Reagan told the Senate he would sign the bill establishing a national holiday in the name of Martin Luther King.

Early this year Reagan was against the idea, and said so. His chief argument at the time: there already were nine national holidays, and public employees get paid on those holidays, approximately $18 million per holiday was the cost. A tenth national holiday in anybody's name was a bit too much. Too, if there was to be another national holiday, it should be for all the minorities, not just for one man. In January Reagan was very firm about this. But then he began making those trips around the country, drumming up voter support in case he should run again. And, slowly his resolve wavered because he feared it might cost him some votes. Finally, he about-faced, and after the House had voted 338-90 to establish a national holiday for King, the President told the Senate he'd sign the legislation when it passed in the Senate. The shame of the thing becomes apparent when it is realized that not even George Washington has a national holiday. Neither does Abraham Lincoln. They've been consolidated into a "President's Day." Senator Jesse Helms, who led the fight against the legislation, tried to get a release of King's FBI file, so the Senators would know that they were voting to honor a Communist-affiliated agitator. But that file was sealed, cannot be opened until the year 2027. But there is sufficient evidence without the FBI file, and Helms took some 200 pages of such evidence, made them into packages and placed a package on each Senator's desk before the vote was taken. But nobody bothered to read the dossier, and Senator Moynihan referred to it as a package of filth, Ted Kennedy denied that his brother John had inquired about King's communist affiliations while President, and that his brother Robert had approved FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover's close surveillance of King's meetings and public appearances in order to compile a record against King, a record that is sealed until 2027. Helms did his best to defeat the bill and he was assisted by a few Senators who would dare to call treason treason. Senator Barry Goldwater noted that such great Americans as Thomas Jefferson, Abraham Lincoln and Charles Lindberg have not been honored by any special holiday; why should King be honored above them? Some other comments which 78 of the Senators should have considered before voting for a special holiday commemorating King:

When King was in Norway to collect the Nobel "Peace" Prize, George Schuyler, the highly respected Negro columnist of the world's largest Negro newspaper, the Pittsburgh Courier, wrote: "Neither directly nor indirectly has King made any contribution to world (or even domestic) peace. Methinks the Lenin Prize would have been more appropriate for him, since it is no mean feat for one so young to acquire 60 communist front citations in government files."

The Christian News of October 17 commented: "King said that America was the greatest purveyor of violence in the world, even worse than the Communists and Nazis. King, who claimed to be a Christian, denied such basic Christian doctrines as the virgin birth and resurrection of Christ."

Julia Brown, who for many years was an undercover member of the Communist Party of the US for the FBI, testified before the Senate Judiciary Committee on declaring a national holiday for King, saying: "While I was in the Communist Party as a loyal American Negro, I knew Martin Luther King to be closely connected with the Communist Party. If this measure is passed honoring Martin Luther King, we may as well take down the Stars and Stripes that fly over this building and replace it with a red flag."

The late Congressman Larry McDonald, in the House of Representatives on August 2 declared: "I rise in strong opposition to H.R. 3706, a bill designating the third Monday in January of each year a legal holiday to commemorate the birthday of Martin Luther King, Jr., Consider the effusion from Political Affairs, official theoretical journal of the Communist Party USA, for May 1968, a month after King's assassination: "The Reverend Martin Luther King, Jr., the voice, inspiration and symbol of the Negro people's struggle for freedom and equality, is dead; the man who, more than anyone else personified the heroic determination of the black people to win their liberation now. One of humanity's great leaders has been silenced forever. We must see that his memory not be desecrated. We must not fail to do all in our power to realize the dream for which he died.' I would like to emphasize that this is not a quote from The Washington Post or The Atlanta Journal, but from an official publication of the Communist Party USA."

James J. Kilpatrick in the October 2 St. Louis Globe-Democrat: "Martin Luther King, Jr., was buddy-buddy with well-identified communists from the early 1950s to the time of his death in 1968. Bayard Rustin, a stalwart of the Young Communist League, was at one time King's secretary. Hunter Pitts Odell, who in 1954 took the Fifth Amendment on questions involving his communist activities, also served on King's staff. The record is replete with evidence linking King with the notorious Highlander Folk School, a communist training center...King was a revolutionary...King dabbled in foreign affairs...In a major address at Riverside Church in New York City a year before his assassination, King denounced the United States in a speech that might have been drafted in Hanoi. Even The Washington Post was appalled by King's excesses. I scratch the surface, and I repeat an earlier thought: Congress ought to wait 50 years before formally memorializing anyone. This month's vote in the Senate should be postponed at least to the spring of 2018."

Enough evidence, even without the sealed FBI files, to convince any Senator who is living up to his oath of office and is prompted by anything other than political expediency? At a time when treason is rampant and love of country is denounced as racism, bigotry, provincialism, ultra-conservatism, and all the really bad words that are often used, perhaps it is remarkable that 22 United States Senators had the courage and the integrity to say "NO" to this unAmerican and proCommunist bill. Those 22 are J. James Exon (D. Nebraska), Jennings Randolph (D. West Virginia), John C. Stennis (D. Mississippi), Edward Zorinski (D. Nebraska), James Abdnor (R. South Dakota), John P. East (R. North Carolina), Jake Garn (R. Utah), Barry Goldwater (R. Arizona), Charles E. Grassley (R. Iowa), Orrin G. Hatch (R. Utah), Chic Hecht (R. Nevada), Jesse A. Helms (R. North Carolina), Gordon J. Humphrey (R. New Hampshire), Roger W. Jepson (R. Iowa), James A. McClure (R. Idaho), Frank H. Murkowski (R. Alaska), Don Nickles (R. Oklahoma), Larry Pressler (R. South Dakota), Warren Rudman (R. New Hampshire), Steven D. Symms (R. Idaho), John G. Tower (R. Texas), and Malcolm Wallop (R. Wyoming).

President Reagan changed his mind, made an about face in regard to this special holiday for King for political reasons. He was not thinking of what is best for America, and he voted against his own personal beliefs when he agreed to sign this bill into law. He made the promise just as all politicians make promises in order to gain votes. One wonders if this same sin of political expediency also prompted him when he named Henry Kissinger to a post which could propel the man into the post of Secretary of State after the next election, as our British information has suggested? Back in 1976, when Reagan was campaigning against Ford (both losing to Carter), Candidate Reagan was quite outspoken when the name Kissinger was mentioned. In March of that year he said, "There is little doubt in my mind that the Soviet Union will not stop taking advantage of detente until it sees that the American people have elected a new President and appointed a new Secretary of State. . . . Henry Kissinger's stewardship has coincided precisely with the loss of United States military supremacy." Kissinger had stated quite plainly that it was his intention to accomplish the loss of US military supremacy. This was a part of his Grand Design (later to be called The New World Order). In his book The Troubled Partnership (1965) he wrote that Institutions based on present concepts of national sovereignty are not enough. The West requires a larger goal: the constitution of the Atlantic Commonwealth in which all the peoples bordering the North Atlantic can fulfil their aspirations. Clearly, it will not come quickly; many intermediate stages must be traversed before it can be reached. It is not too early, however, to prepare ourselves now for this step beyond the nation-state.

Kissinger envisioned a Regional World Government made up of the NATO Nations, this to be merged with the Communist controlled countries into a World Commonwealth. To further this aim, while serving as Secretary of State, he stated that victory in Vietnam was not possible, and he settled for a "peace" that permitted the Red takeover of all Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia. He negotiated the ouster of Nationalist China from the UN, with Communist China taking its place. He pushed for the sale of sophisticated ball-bearings to the Soviet Union enabling them to put multiple warheads on intercontinental missiles. He initiated the give-away of the Panama Canal, arranged for the Helsinki Accords which formally ratified the Communist takeover of Eastern Europe; he pressed for SALT I which enabled the USSR to pass the US in several military categories, he backed the Marxist terrorists in their takeover of Rhodesia. He encouraged the fall of Portugal into socialist control. He is responsible for much of the present chaos in the Middle East.

The goal of the International Communist Conspiracy is to surround the United States, so that surrender and merger into a Socialist One World Government will be the only hope of survival. While Secretary of State Henry Kissinger was able to accomplish much of that goal. Now he has become an official member of the Reagan administration, has taken charge of a commission whose role is to complete plans for the creation of a Regional World Government and Economic Community for Central America. This would complete the encirclement of the United States if Leninist-Marxist forces are allowed to continue their takeover of the Nations south of our border. Then, there is the rumor that Kissinger may return as Secretary of State to complete the job which he began while serving the Rockefellers under Nixon.

When Sol Linowitz completed the committee blueprint which Henry Kissinger uses as a text for his task force commission, Linowitz labeled it "The Americas at a Crossroads." The title is appropriate. And we know that the right road will not be chosen by a President who as a candidate denounced Kissinger but as a President made Kissinger a part of his administration. Nor would the US Senate choose the right road. The expedient sellout of 78 of them in the King count puts that body beyond redemption. That leaves but one political hope. It lies in the House of Representatives. These are the direct representatives of the people. In this coming election, let's ignore the presidency, vote to defeat treasonous Senators, and concentrate on the election of United States Representatives who will truly represent the United States and its people. And "with a firm reliance on the protection of Divine Providence" we may still save our Nation.

THE AGONY OF EMPIRE UPKEEP

She was just one of the hundreds of grieving parents who had been visited by United States Marines bearing fateful messages concerning the death of a son on foreign soil. In her anguish she cried out, "Why should my son have died in Lebanon?" And who, short of the hopeful consolation contained in the phrase "Thy Will be done," can give her any kind of satisfying answer? That son, one of more than 220 young Americans and over 60 young French soldiers, was murdered on Sunday morning, October 23, 1983. He had been confined in a perimeter which formed a target area for terrorists. These young Americans were like sitting ducks awaiting death which might come they knew not when. They did not die in defense of their country. They did not die in defense of any Christian, moral or ethical principal that would account for or justify any such massacre. They did not die in combat. They couldn't even defend themselves when fired upon except when the word was given by a superior officer. They were told they were the peacekeepers, this in a land where there is no peace, and there can be no peace because of the very nature of the populace.

Disregarding for the moment the purposes and goals of the powers and the super powers involved in Lebanon, it should be noted that those calling themselves Lebanese could, and well may, destroy all the multinational forces committed to the land, at any time and without appreciable outside aid. This because the warring factions in Lebanon have been and are engaged in a civil war among themselves, and are in agreement on just one point: They want to get rid of all the foreign troops so they can fight things out among themselves. Back in 1932 when Lebanon was released from foreign supervision and allowed to declare itself an independent nation, a Constitution was drawn up and signed by the leaders of the various parties and religious sects in the land. At the time the Maronite Christians formed a majority, so effective control of the government was given them. But in the half century since that time the Moslem population has become the majority, and they are demanding a new Constitution, a new government, and Moslem control of the country. But there is this problem: Which of the Moslem denominations should be given the control? In addition to the Christian Maronites there are four principal Moslem groups, each fighting each other and vying for power. These four principal Moslem denominations are in turn divided into dozens of splinter sects, each claiming power and eager to die to attain it. There are the Druze, an extremely devout and militant group whose brand of Islam is unlike any other. There are about 200,000 of them, mostly living in Lebanon and Syria, and are led and financed by Communist agents. The Druze are said to have about 4,000 men under arms, and they are told it is their duty to accept no converts, and to kill all who are not of their faith, especially all Christians and foreigners. Then there are the Sunni Moslems, the most orthodox of the Moslem faith. An orthodox Moslem is sure of a good place in his concept of heaven if he dies fighting for his faith and takes one or more unbelievers with him when he departs this life. The Sunni are said to have about 4,000 armed men in Lebanon, any one of whom would smilingly drive a dynamite-filled truck into a U.S. Marine compound and die with the detonation. The Shiites are even more militant, more numerous, have connections with leaders in Iran. They have a militia said to number about 10,000 men, are directed to kill as many foreigners as possible. Even more dangerous to "peacekeepers" and the small Lebanese army, are the terrorist sects, said to be aided and abetted by the Syrians.

As for the powers and the super powers involved in the Lebanese tragedy, at first the powers involved were Israel and Syria. Less than two years ago Israeli troops were mauling Syrian forces and Israeli guns were within range of Damascus. But since that time Syria has been massively rearmed by the USSR, Syrian troops have moved back into their former positions in Lebanon and, since Syrian President Hafez Assad is convinced that Lebanon is really a part of Syria, he has no intention of removing his troops, or of allowing any multinational force to assist the regular Lebanese army in bringing peace to the country. Not that Syrian troops are directly involved in the massacre of young American and French "peacekeepers." But there is every reason to believe that the plans, the dynamite and the synchronization of the bombing attacks were provided by Syrians. The double operation was too well carried out, and too complicated to be carried out by a mere terrorist clique giving itself a name never before heard of by the authorities. Like Kaddafi of Lybia who has evidently failed in his attempt, Assad of Syria has a desire to become the head of a United Arab Empire which would oppose and possibly attempt to destroy Israel, making all of the Middle East an Arab dominated, Russian supported empire. Meanwhile, Israeli forces continue to hold onto the Southern portion of Lebanon and Israeli officials have every intention of hanging onto that area and making it a part of Israel.

But over and above the activities of the terrorist groups and the hopes and aspirations of Syria and Israeli, there remain the plans of the super powers, specifically the American Empire and the Russian Empire; plus the Internationalist Elite which has little thought for the death of Americans, and great thought concerning control of the oil rich Middle East. Long range negotiations have been going on ever since Henry Kissinger first began his shuttle service between Egypt and Israel. The Israelis and the Syrians are in a state of temporary truce; Iran, which could have been a disturbing factor, is busily engaged in a prolonged war with Iraq. And, as President Reagan was forced to try to explain, there is a hope that the presence of a multinational "peacekeeping" force in Lebanon will be sufficient to ward off any major war until such time as all has been settled to the satisfaction of the Rockefeller and the Rothschilds and their financial and industrial associates who are interested in two things: controlling the flow and sale of oil, and maintaining Israel as a homeland for those of the Jewish culture who wish to emigrate.

Then came Grenada. With a world on edge already, suddenly and without prior warning, U.S. Marines and Army Paratroopers began landing in and securing the tiny Caribbean Island of Grenada. The background to the invasion may be important. With the replacements that have been flown in, there are some 1,600 Marines in Lebanon and an unknown number of more Marines and Sailors standing by in warships off the coast. There are other U.S. forces standing by near the Persian Gulf, in case Iran carries out its threat to close the Straits of Hormuz while waging war against Iraq. There are some 4,000 U.S. troops in Honduras, engaged in Big Pine II exercises, a threat to Nicaragua. In all, according to Pentagon reports, there are more than 75,000 U.S. military personnel in various parts of the world. Thus the United States can be described as an Empire, protecting all the areas of the world that are not already taken over by that second Empire, the USSR. This was the global situation when the invasion of Grenada began. Now for the chronology.

As early as four years ago developments in Grenada began to arouse concern in Washington. The Carter administration noted that a Marxist government had been established and that a 9,500-foot airstrip was being planned. Nothing happened until President Reagan, at a news conference, showed aerial photographs depicting the start of the runway and some buildings which made it appear to be a military installation. Bishop's so-called New Jewel Movement government insisted that the airfield was necessary for the tourist trade and for the export of fresh vegetables and fruits. But the administration saw the building of the airstrip as a plot to set up a base in case of war to block sea lanes and destroy Venezuela's oil fields. Also, the airstrip would complete the setting up of a strategic naval triangle which could block all traffic in that part of the Caribbean; the three points of the triangle being Grenada, Nicaragua, and Cuba. This plus the ability of an enemy to block all traffic via the Canal in Panama comprised a real danger in the United States in case of war. The U.S. stopped a movement to have the airstrip financed by the IMF and other multilateral lending institutions. But the Soviet bloc of nations financed the construction with the money they borrowed at reduced rates from the same institutions. Bishop was in charge of a Marxist-oriented government but at the same time he continued to welcome students who were attending the St. George's University School of Medicine on Grande Anse Beach near the proposed airstrip. Bishop also began playing up to Washington while at the same time receiving support from Cuba. Hard-line Communists became upset, decided to depose Bishop and place him under house arrest. A few days thereafter Bishop's followers stormed the residence, freed Bishop and staged a parade which ended up at up Fort Rupert where Grenadian troops again arrested Bishop, marched him and some of his cabinet members along with two labor leaders who supported them into a building, lined them all up along a wall, and shot them down. Just who was running the government after that is not clear. Either Deputy Prime Minister Coard or General Hudson Austin, both described as Communist thugs, gave the command that there should be a 24-hour curfew and that anyone violating the curfew should be shot on the spot.

Meanwhile, the Reagan administration reacted by diverting some warships. Some 1900 Marines were being sent to Beirut to replace the Marines still "peacekeeping" there (the massacre had not yet occurred). The ships and the escort vessels carrying those fresh Marines were sent through the Caribbean and toward Grenada. But there was still no plan to actually invade the island.

A very nervous Secretary of State, George Shultz, filled in further details in a press conference. He explained that while he and President Reagan were still in Augusta, Georgia on Saturday morning, October 22, at 2:45 a.m. he was given a cable from representatives of the Organization of Eastern Caribbean States (OECS) then meeting in Barbados. The cable asked that the U.S. help them to restore order in Grenada. After conferring with new National Security Adviser McFarlane they decided to wake up the President and brief him. Shultz then phoned Vice President Bush in Washington. Apparently the affair was then turned over to Pentagon officials and Shultz, McFarlane and Reagan went back to bed. But it wasn't a long sleep because at 2:27 a.m. McFarlane awakened Reagan to tell him of the bombing attacks against American and French forces in Beirut. They all decided to return to Washington where, at 9 a.m. Reagan and all policy advisers involved met to discuss the situations both in Lebanon and Grenada. They all met again at 4 p.m. for three hours, at which time a tentative decision was made to intervene in Granada. But just what form of intervention this would entail was not clear at the time. However, the Pentagon was instructed to begin secret preparations, perhaps to invade. Again on Monday afternoon another meeting was held, but no decision made. Preparations went ahead, however. Then, at 6 p.m. President Reagan signed the directive ordering the invasion; and at 5:30 a.m. on Tuesday, October 25, the landings began.

By the time you read this Report, we can assume that Grenada has been secured. It is probable that some new and exciting story has replaced Grenada on the front pages of the world's newspapers, just as Grenada served to replace the story of the tragic massacre of men at Beirut. But there seems to remain that usual unanswered question: Why? Why has Grenada been treated so differently than was Cuba, or Nicaragua, or El Salvador, all of them important nations within our defense perimeter? Why, when the story of the invasion of Lebanon broke, did someone come up with tapes revealing more of the thoughts and words of President John Kennedy at the time of the nuclear missile crisis in 1962? Or why is it that when we allowed, even assisted in the Communization of Cuba in 1958, we now act so positively in the destruction of Communism in Grenada in 1983? Again, why the thwarting of the Bay of Pigs operation 25 years ago, and then the carrying through of a similar operation in Grenada? Why did our government help with the overthrow of Somoza and the establishment of a Communist government in Nicaragua if there is to be such an about face in 1983? Or why the great controversy over aid to El Salvador when suddenly such positive action is taken in regard to Grenada?

There is usually a pattern to these affairs; and Grenada doesn't quite fit. Let us consider a few historical examples. December 7, 1941 began as just another pleasant Sunday morning in Honolulu. And while people slept, the Pearl Harbor massacre occurred; a prelude to our entry into World War II. Similarly, October 23, 1983 was just another pleasant Sunday morning in Beirut. And while people slept, the awful massacre of young American and French "peacekeepers" occurred. Another prelude to war? Or, just as a truck was used to destroy the American Embassy in Beirut last April, a truck was used to destroy the American and French compounds in Beirut in October. There could be a strange, awful, and meaningful aftermath to these very similar tragedies. When they are so alike, they are so often preludes to war.

But Grenada is different. It seems to forecast a new policy on the part of the United States government. When President Reagan spoke of the Grenadian invasion, he spoke as a new man; a man with authority and conviction. Was he just acting a part? And is Grenada just something to insure the protection of the oil wells in Venezuela or the delivery of oil to the United States? That is the "bottom line" in regard to the Middle East, perhaps that's all it means in regard to Grenada. But people are beginning to understand, we hope and believe, that this "Spirit of Empire" which makes us act like the world's police force, is a form of national suicide. So that Grenada is right, but Beirut is wrong. We have tried for 40 years to police the world and make the "world safe for democracy". And this has brought on two undeclared wars, hundreds of thousand of America's young men dead or wounded. It has brought on massive debt, and no real peace anywhere. Certainly a token handful of 1600 Marines told to keep the peace at an airport in Lebanon can only bring more deaths, and no real peace. On the other hand, the action at Grenada, if sincere, could be the signal for a new foreign policy, one which thinks of America first and presents to the world an example of the kind of leadership our Founding Fathers intended our Nation to give to the world. The honored Monroe Doctrine which once served us so well has been forgotten. It worked two ways: Foreign governments were not to interfere with governments in the Americas; and our government was not to interfere with governments in other parts of the world. We have violated both parts of the Doctrine. We allowed Communist governments to interfere in the Americas, and we interfered acting as world policemen in other parts of the world.

We need a new foreign policy based upon the tenets of the Monroe Doctrine. When our government stood alone against the governments of the world and its rulers and did what had to be done in Grenada, that could form the beginning of the first part of that Doctrine. Completing the initiation of the second part could be the bringing home of our Marines from Lebanon, and the insistence that our armed forces are for the purpose of defending our country, and not the interests of the International Elitists.

Year Thirty Number Forty-Four November 4, 1983

NOT "IF", BUT "WHEN" ?

"It may well be that September 1, 1983, will be remembered as the date of the beginning of World War III, just as the assassination of Archduke Francis Ferdinand at Sarajevo in 1914 marked the commencement of World War I. At the very least, September 1983 will be recognized as the month that the 'Cold War' ended." So stated Julia Ferguson in The Review of the News of November 2, 1983. You'll recall that September 1 was the day when Soviet fighters intercepted and destroyed Korean Air Lines Flight Seven, murdering 269 passengers, one of them being a "marked man" in the eyes of the rulers in the Kremlin. Julia Ferguson may be right, because that atrocity seemed to mark the beginning of a series of pre-planned atrocities, including the murder of eight senior officials of the government of South Korea while attending a conference in Rangoon, Burma; the massacre of 238 United States Marines and 58 French soldiers when suicidal truck drivers almost simultaneously plunged their vehicles into the American and French military compounds in Beirut; and a little noticed attempt to assassinate a South Korean Ambassador in India. Seemingly timed to retaliate for and block out the shock of the Beirut atrocity, President Reagan suddenly ordered the raid on the Marxist-held island of Grenada. Meanwhile, other ominous happenings were occurring in other parts of the world. Iran threatened to blockade the Straits of Hormuz, which would prevent the shipment of vital oil to Japan and the Nations of Western Europe. The Soviets began to increase their already substantial number of troops along the Iranian border. And things were still heating up in Europe because of the controversy over the placement of nuclear missiles and the well orchestrated anti-nuke demonstrations throughout England and Western Europe. Wherever one might look on a world map it seemed that U.S. troops were stationed at or near that spot, guarding other Nations or multinational interests. It began to appear that, in acting as a global police force, there just were not enough U.S. policemen to cover the beats. And a new element in this series of global confrontations had been presented by the threat of a renewal of the never ended war between North and South Korea, a war in which U.S. troops remain very much involved.

For those who do not subscribe to the theory of Conspiracy, it will be hard to explain the fact that, even as it appeared that the "Cold War" was fast developing into a potential "Hot War," a strange kind of camaraderie was still being displayed between these supposed enemies in the threatening war. Ever since the Trilateral Commission members gained ascendancy over the original Reagan appointees to positions in the Cabinet and in the White House Office Building, there has been a constant series of planned, programmed, sometimes even financed trips of American businessmen, manufacturers, and industrialists of all sorts, to Moscow where they are wined and dined and allowed to negotiate deals, make arrangements for cooperative manufacturing and distributing of products, etc. Even as American Marines were pinned down and being killed by snipers in Beirut, Agriculture Secretary Block was said to be in Moscow, heading a group of agribusinessmen and farm equipment manufacturers who were attending a convention where deals were being made to improve agriculture in the Soviet Union and arrange for the sale of farm machinery to the Soviet communes. Where direct sales of combines, reapers and other farm equipment couldn't be arranged, plans were being made for the construction of plants and factories in the Soviet Union where the equipment would be manufactured and distributed cooperatively. In addition to the commercial multinational and financial cooperation, American officials are treating their enemies as friends in other ways. Five days after the destruction of KAL 007, UNESCO held a conference on freedom of communications in Tashkent, USSR; and the United States delegation was present, chatting amicably with Communist delegates. They agreed that they wouldn't talk about the Soviet destruction of the Korean plane. Otherwise, all was sweetness and light as they talked about how to curb what's left of freedom of the press in some parts of the world. Also, immediately after the Beirut massacre Secretary of State George Shultz was off to Lisbon to discuss the problem of human rights with Russia's Andrei Gromyko. One concession: They were careful not to have dinner together.

As we remarked, the contrast must seem strange to those who deny there is a Conspiracy which is bigger than either of the Big Power opponents. Both the USSR and the PRC are sworn to destroy the United States and all others who stand in the way of their goal to Communize the whole world. Yet, knowing this, Americans, both government officials and megacorporation executives, continue to make deals, exchange ideas, engage in trade, make loans that may never be repaid, give the enemies tools and the power to destroy us. And prior to Grenada, we had been asleep when so many other incidents and atrocities occurred, that the enemy has gained sufficient strength to defeat us whenever it may choose. Which makes it frightening if the report issued by Jack Anderson is true: That Fidel Castro has declared that "they (we) will be sorry for their (our) actions in Grenada; and that he has ordered his armed forces, terrorist and otherwise, to "kill Gringos" wherever they may be found.

As for being asleep, there is the confirmed report that American officials had been informed at least three days before it happened, that there would be a planned attack on the Marines at Beirut. Yet no additional precautions were taken, one of the men on guard didn't even have ammunition in his weapon when the loaded truck passed him by and crashed into the compound. The first real morale boost most Americans had had in years came when it was announced that American troops had invaded Grenada. Even then, the rest of the governments of the world, save Australia and the six Island Nations involved in the invasion, protested and most of them voted against the US in the UN. And the communications media were even more vicious in their condemnations because it had been decided that the Pentagon could handle the invasion without the aid of the media. The reply given by Ray Cline was unusual. Former CIA deputy director for intelligence, now teaching international relations at Georgetown University, Cline wrote a guest column which appeared in USA Today of November 2. He stated:

"The clear-cut approval of the majority of the American people for President Reagan's military rescue operation in Grenada took the imperial American news media by surprise. TV instant analysts of international events and the aristocrats of the printed press, especially the Washington Post and the New York Times, went into a shrill frenzy of protest. Their target was not Andropov or Castro or the bloodyhanded Grenadian dictator, Gen. Hudson Austin, but Reagan. His sin, evidently, was in ignoring the fixed view of media moguls that the USA ought never again, after Vietnam, to use military force for a political purpose, however worthy. The media's assault on President Reagan was automatic, arrogant and self-righteous. But for the first time since Watergate, they discovered that neither the president nor the American people cared much about what they said. The media emperors appear to have no clothes. . . . Defeat in Vietnam cast so many doubts in the minds of many academics, news analysts and congressmen that American national will has virtually been paralyzed. Looking at the press corps today reveals where a lot of those alienated peace demonstrators of the late 1960s ended up. But the enthusiastic response from the American public today shows how fed up people are with those defeatist, guilt-ridden years. . . . A turn of the tide in American strategic outlook took place in the last week in October. The news pundits, however, have missed the boat." (Unquote).

Defense Secretary Weinberger says it's all over in Grenada and American troops are either being sent on to Lebanon or brought back home. One could have wished that, instead of raiding that little island of Carriacou looking for more Cubans and Soviets, the troops would have gone over to the mainland and done something about the Soviet buildup in Guyana. This South American Marxist-governed State is Grenada's twin. As Virginia Prewitt noted in a special article appearing in the October 28 issue of The Washington times, "In Guyana's backlands, unknown to its people, the Soviet-Cuban axis has developed a hidden hornet's nest that could be used in Moscow's present nuclear threat against 'U.S. territory.'...When (Grenada's) Bishop took power (in March 1979) Cubans and the Guyanese military were already building up in Guyana's desolate Essequibo backlands up to ten 5,000 to 8,000-foot asphalted airstrips - for which Guyana has no economic use, never mind that it doesn't have an air force. Aerial photos taken in July 1981 and December 1981, and closely studied by this writer, show the rapid improvement of the airstrips, and the mushrooming of Cuban military-type buildings near them. And the installation of at least nine strange metallic boxes on tall towers that intelligence experts believe are part of a sophisticated communications system. In September 1982, the Soviet four-star Deputy Minister of Defense, Gennadiy I. Sazhenev, arrived in Guyana as ambassador - and the significance of the Grenada-Guyana twinship began to emerge." (Unquote). The twin military installations in Grenada and Guyana, with air support from Cuba and Nicaragua, could cut off all supplies to and from the NATO countries, and with the Canal in Panama closed to traffic, the Caribbean could have truly become a Red Sea, with all the countries within the area falling one by one, like dominos, to the Communists. The neutralizing of Grenada was of far more importance than most people will ever realize. We repeat, too bad the same couldn't have been done in that land known mostly to Americans because that's where Jim Jones triggered a mass suicide-execution of 911 cultists four years ago.

With Grenada allegedly rid of Cuban, Soviet, East German and Hungarian Communists and with the Marines at Beirut condemned to more months of continued attack (one was repulsed on the night of November 2), the upcoming flashpoint in this so-called World War III probably will be Korea. There is no question but that the Rangoon atrocity was planned by the North Korean regime. Since that time activity on both sides of that guarded border that separates the two Koreas has been increased dangerously. In an article headed "The Koreas Are Moving Toward War", Globescan of October 24, 1983, reports: "Disaster circles Korea like a hungry vulture. ...And South Korea's political troubles are being worsened by economic ones: Though the ROC [Republic of Korea] has enjoyed high economic growth for some years, it remains among the top five most indebted nations in the world, and debt-servicing claims a large part of its GNP. The increased military expenses necessary to defend the ROC against the Communists in Pyongyang, can only add to this problem. To South Koreans, war with the Communists is not a matter of doubt; it is a matter of time. At the convergence point of the three biggest powers in Asia - Japan, Russia, and China - Korea awaits only a spark to ignite into a major conflict. The war between Pyongyang and Seoul is continuous; across the DMZ zone which divides North from South, two of the largest armies in the world take potshots at each other, and hundreds on both sides have died in recent years. The Communist North Koreans have been preparing for war since the armistice with the South was signed in 1953, and by 1970 they could declare: 'Our war preparations are now complete.' North Korea spends some 18% of its GNP on its military, compared to 4 percent by the South. Indeed, without American aid South Korea would be lost. In addition to its troops stationed in the country, the U.S. has supplied Seoul with everything from artillery pieces to anti-aircraft and communications equipment. South Koreans worry about what will happen if the Americans decide to leave. One U.S. general in Korea told Soldier of Fortune magazine recently: '[North Korean President] Kim Il-Sung will not attack as long as the United States is committed to South Korean defense, and as long as the political and economic atmosphere remains stable in the South and we are not tied down in a major conflict elsewhere.' South Koreans remember well that the North did not attack in 1950 until most American advisers had left the ROK. 'Just as soon as the American soldiers leave,' said one ROK colonel, 'the communists will attack in force. They know that once the Americans go they will not return to help us.' Pyongyang wants to claim the South both for political and economic reasons. Following the Second World War the North was the most developed part of Korea, while the South was largely agricultural and backward. But so vigorously has the ROK progressed thanks to its reliance on private industry and self-development, that 40 years later that situation has been reversed. The Northern Communists are now hard put to keep their struggling economy above water, and they look with jealousy and greed at the prosperity of their southern brothers. U.S. President Reagan is planning to visit South Korea before the end of this year. The visit will serve notice to Pyongyang that the United States is vitally concerned with the welfare of its ally in Seoul. But for more than a decade Korea has been a volatile scene for international incidents; each time an ultimate faceoff between North and South becomes more probable. Keep this divided nation high on your Watch List." (End of quotation from Globescan, Paris, Geneva, U.S. Service Center, 1545 New York Avenue, N.E. Washington, D.C. 20002. STOP PRESS!! On Friday, November 4, 1983, an Israeli military compound became the third victim of a car-bomb attack. The Israelis immediately retaliated with air strikes. With Israeli forces back in the war actively, the future of Lebanon and those within the country seems more uncertain than ever before. But the Korean and the Lebanese situations present a microcosm of the American dilemma. More than half of our armed forces are scattered throughout the non-communized world. Flashpoints exist in Korea, Beirut, the Persian Gulf, Europe, Central America and the Caribbean. If we withdraw from any of these flashpoints, the enemy could move in and start a conflagration. Likewise, if any one of the flashpoints develops into a conflagration it will be necessary to withdraw forces from other points to contain the blaze. That would give the enemy the opportunity it awaits, to spark yet another major conflagration, as in Korea where the question is not if but when.

Furthermore, The New World Order is the ultimate goal not only of the International Elitists, but of the United Nations, the Secular Humanists, the International Communists the Socialist International, and any number of occultist groups. Details may differ, but all these groups are committed to the one ultimate goal. We the people of the so-called free world present the only human resistance to this dream of a New World Order. The Internationalists have their financial and economic power. The Communists have their military power and unnumbered surrogates and terrorists. The Secular Humanists and the Occultists have Satan on their side. But, when we are properly prepared and truly understand, we have a Power greater than all of them combined. For, "If God be for us, who can be against us?"

ENEMIES WITHIN THE GATES

"Is the White House terrorproof?" asks Newsweek, then answers its own question. "Despite the alarming success of recent terrorist attacks in the Middle East, U.S. security officials are confident that the White House is well protected against similar assaults. After a man crashed his car into the northwest gate of the White House on Christmas Day, 1974, all entrances were heavily reinforced. Security sources say that the seven-foot high iron fence, anchored in reinforced concrete, can hold its own against speeding tractor-trailers—and tanks. A large explosion could blow open a gate. But no gate is closer than 150 yards to the Oval Office and the president's living quarters, so the blast would not immediately endanger the president and there would be dozens of guards available to handle any intruders taking advantage of the opening. To defend against airborne attack, the White House is protected by ground-to-air missiles. There is a command and control system for the missiles in the Executive Office Building adjacent to the White House. Sources report that someone tries to enter the White House grounds illegally about once a month; no one has come close to breaking in."

So, the terrorists decided to plant a bomb in the U.S. Capitol, the building the Security officials forgot to secure against terrorists. Fortunately, no one was near the blast when it occurred and there wasn't serious damage. The attack seemed to be just a token of what the terrorists could do if they really wanted to do more than give a warning. "Terrorism is an American reality as well as an international reality," said Sen. Orrin Hatch, a member of the Senate Subcommittee on Security and Terrorism. The chairman of that subcommittee, Sen. Jeremiah Denton, who spent years in a prison camp during the Vietnam War and therefore knows all about terror first hand, awaited an FBI report before calling the subcommittee into special session. Since the Capitol accommodates about five million visitors every year and must be kept open to the public, absolute security is impossible. But all possible measures are being taken, says the press. One is reminded of the Marines in Beirut where sufficient security measures were never taken. One guard had a chance to shoot the driver of that truck-bomb which crashed into the Marine compound and killed 238 men. But his gun wasn't loaded, this by order of the Pentagon which insists that the Marines are a "peacekeeping force." As L.T. Patterson noted: "The Marines are not a 'peacekeeping force,' they are a battle winning force! In Lebanon their hands are tied behind their backs in a disgraceful manner! The barracks attack was an exact duplicate of the April attack on the U.S. Embassy. There is no excuse for a reoccurrence of the same tactics and their being successful twice!!" To double the shame of the situation; when a similar attack occurred on an Israeli compound, a guard did shoot the truck-bomb driver but the truck kept rolling until it exploded. However, the Israeli air force was in the air almost immediately, retaliating. The best we can do is send a reconnaissance plane or two over the area to see what manner of death and destruction is being prepared for our Marines next time the enemy attacks.

Speaking of the Marines having their hands tied behind their backs, this applies to all of us in one sense: Marxism's most vital allies are in our midst, and our hands are tied. In his Remnant Review of November 4, Gary North concluded: "We 'defend' Lebanon -- without loaded weapons -- but attack South African economy. We refuse to acknowledge that we're at war with the Soviets and the Cubans, but invade Granada. We allow the export of weapons to Nicaragua, and debate about whether to support Guatemala and Honduras, since they are facing only 'internal problems' that aren't our concern. About ten percent of all citizens of El Salvador are already living in the U.S. (most illegally), but we cannot get our politicians to face the realities of Communism's protracted conflict. We specialize in a high standard of living and fun, and the Communists specialize in power." In addition to those El Salvador immigrants, we might add that during the first three months of this year immigration authorities estimate that over half a million illegal immigrants entered the United States from Mexico. Mexico is on the list to fall to Communism. And the tide of immigrants will swell as more countries fall to Communism. The act of cleaning out little Grenada was a good start, but was it also the end of the act? Can we expect any more solid action in cleaning the communists out of the Caribbean?

ABOUT THAT NEW "MONEY"

Yes, it's official. In 1985 the Federal Reserve System, with the advice and consent of the U.S. Government, is going to call in all the green pieces of paper which we have been forced to use as money, and reissue all paper currency. This will be the first time there has been any change since nearly two decades ago when the Fed. suddenly decided that the paper notes could no longer be redeemed in silver to anyone who presented them to the U.S. Treasury for payment. From that time on our Federal Reserve notes have been valueless except for the fact that they'll still be accepted (unconstitutionally in most cases) in payment of taxes, and for the confidence still placed in the bills because they are supposedly issued as "money" and accepted as such by the people. Those unredeemable pieces of green paper looked very much like the old silver certificates, because the Fed wanted to avoid alarming the public. The Fed isn't worrying about what the public thinks or does this time, however, because the new unredeemable notes are going to be printed in fancy colors; in reds and yellows, no less. There's probably no connection, but red is the color associated with communism, while yellow is the color associated with socialism. The authorities say that these colors will make counterfeiting by any person or agency other than the Fed, very difficult. Another change in the new redbacks and yellowbacks reflects the technological age. Magnetic strips will be imbedded in the new bills. They're called "security threads" and also help prevent second party counterfeiting. In regard to these changes, Congressman Ron Paul observed:

"All these proposed changes, and especially the last, pose a threat to the financial freedom of the American people. Ever since 1933 the federal government has been gradually removing the gold and silver backing for our paper money; the last step was taken in 1971. What followed was the Great Inflation (which is still not over) when the money supply tripled, and double-digit price increases and interest rates became common. Never before in our history had interest rates gone over 10%, let alone all the way up to 21%. Now, arbitrary political control of our money is being solidified by the Federal Reserve rather than steps being taken to provide what the Constitution mandates, gold and silver coins.

"We do need a new money - money similar to that used early in this century which guaranteed longterm interest rates of 4% and 0% price inflation. That kind of money - gold and silver coins - is required by the Constitution. We cannot solve our problem by printing red paper instead of green paper; it's not the color of the paper, but the fact that the paper stands for nothing, that has caused the highest interest and inflation rates in history. That's why I have introduced H.R. 1663, a bill to mint new American Gold Eagles, as provided for in Article I of the Constitution. In the near future, we will be forced to decide whether we want real money - gold and silver - or play money - red, green and yellow paper bills. Our entire economic future may depend on the choice we make." (Unquote)

There is a reason why so little is being done: there is an enemy within our own ranks which makes us all mere "peacekeepers" when we should be winning battles, winning battles in this psychological war that is being waged against us. Angola might supply us with an answer as to why we are not winning even in our own back yard.

When Ronald Reagan became President in 1981 both he and then Secretary of State Alexander Haig denounced the Angolan government as a "Soviet surrogate" and both Reagan and Haig said they would push for the repeal of the Clark Amendment. This is an amendment which prevents the CIA from using covert assistance to the anti-communist forces in Angola without the explicit approval of Congress. Yet, even as Reagan and Haig were denouncing the Angolan government, the Export-Import Bank was signing an agreement to lend $85 million to that government's national oil company, Sonagol, and to Cabinda Gulf, which is Angola's branch of Gulf Oil. This year the Export-Import Bank has given another $51 million to support the Angolan (Communist) government. And that Clark Amendment still stopped the CIA from action, the proposal to repeal the amendment is still collecting dust in Congress. "Why this tremendous conflict between rhetoric and action?" asks Globescan. The answer: "Angola has some very, very powerful corporate allies in the United States, who have not hesitated to support Angola's interests." In addition to oil contracts that have been signed between Angola and Gulf, Texaco, Mobil, Cities Service, and various West European oil companies, Angola has made deals with such powerful multinationals as General Electric, Boeing, Morgan Guarantee Trust, and Chase Manhattan Bank. Angola ranks fourth among U.S. trading partners in Africa. So, since all these powerful multinational interests have made agreements with the communist government of Angola, they are not about to let the official and elected government of the United States do anything to jeopardize their deals by supporting anti-communist forces in Angola!

Globescan comments: "Angola has not scrupled to milk the Western oil companies for all they're worth. Explained the country's petroleum minister Jorge Morais: 'We accept these companies because they have great financial and technical resources which will primarily benefit the Angolan state. We are aware of our power as an oil producer....' One of the largest petroleum producers in southern Africa, Angola is counting on an even more important role in world oil markets if petroleum demand recovers following an economic recovery in the West. The Marxist government in Luanda (Angola) reaps tremendous profits from its agreements with Western oil companies. A law passed in 1978 declared all oil and gas deposits in the country to be government property (and) gave Sonangol control over their exploitation. The law forced foreign partners to bear the total risk of new oil ventures, with Sonangol owning a minimum of 51% in all such agreements. These economic arrangements have been converted into timely political leverage for Angola. Gulf Oil Executive Melvin Hill, president of Gulf's Exploration and Production Company, met with Vice President George Bush to discuss Reagan's Africa policies. Hill also testified repeatedly against repeal of the Clark Amendment at Congressional hearings in 1980 and 1981. And David Rockefeller, chairman of Chase Manhattan in 1981 wrote a letter to President Reagan voicing his views on the Administration's Angolan policy, while a Chase official confirmed that repeal of the Clark Amendment 'is of some concern' to the bank. Chase was among a consortium of banks which lent $50 million to Angola in 1981 for gas reinjection equipment. If oil prices recover with increased demand from the West [or if the Persian Gulf were closed at least temporarily-Ed.], the Angolan Socialists will be able to funnel more and more oil revenues into their campaign to terrorize southern Africa. And Western multinationals, backed by public lenders like the Exim Bank, will continue to be the most important financial backers of the Angolan regime." (Globescan, 11/7/83).

This is what we meant when we stated that our hands are tied in our fight against Communism. There are multinational executives and megabankers who like to do business with Communist governments; and as with governments in Africa and Asia, so also with governments in Central America and the Caribbean. Our government has not taken a more positive attitude against the advances of Communism in countries South of our Border because there are multinational executives and megabankers who like to do business with Communist governments. Financially and economically, these are the top echelon of the enemies within our gates.

Another enemy group has had considerable exposure in recent months. We refer to that allegedly Christian coalition calling itself the World Council of Churches (WCC) and its United States affiliate, the National Council of Churches (NCC). The Reader's Digest and "60 Minutes" exposures did much to acquaint Americans with the true Marxist nature of these organizations, which are truly headed by "false prophets, which come to you in sheep's clothing, but inwardly they are ravaging wolves." The most notorious terrorist-supporting WCC operation is its "Program to Combat Racism" (PCR) which since 1970 has raised over $5 million to help Marxist terrorists in Mozambique, Rhodesia (now Zimbabwe), and SWAPO, the terrorist organization which keeps trying to take over Namibia from bases in Angola. WCC also aids politicians and left wing political organizations that promote Soviet interests. In 1981, $65,000 went to the African National Congress (ANC) for its murderous activities in southern Africa. ANC is run by the USSR through the South African Communist Party. WCC and its national affiliates also help support such organizations as the Ecumenical Council for Humanitarian Assistance in El Salvador (half a million dollars), here at home the pro-Communist National Congress of Black Lawyers, the American Indian Movement, and similar organizations.

Then there is the religion of Secular Humanism which has invaded the government (public) schools and made of itself the national religion in the United States. To expose its anti-American and anti-Christian articles of faith, one needs only to read its Humanist Manifesto II, brought up to date in 1973. Excerpts follow.

"We believe...that traditional dogmatic or authoritarian religions that place revelation, God, ritual or creed above human needs and experience do a disservice to the human species...As non-theists, we begin with humans, not God..." "Promises of immortals salvation or fear of damnation are both illusory and harmful...There is no credible evidence that life survives the death of the body. . . ." "The right to birth control, abortion and divorce should be recognized...neither do we wish to prohibit by law or social sanction, sexual behavior between consenting adults...Individuals should be permitted to express their sexual proclivities and pursue their life-styles as they desire. . . ." "The best option is to transcend the limits of national sovereignty...commitment to all humankind is the highest commitment...it transcends the narrow allegiances to church, state, party, class or race. . . ." "The world community must engage in cooperative planning concerning the use of rapidly depleting resources. The planet earth must be considered a single ecosystem ...Excessive population growth must be checked." (Unquote). While denying God, this enemy within our gates busily promotes the goal to end all national governments, and to create a Humanist/Socialist World Dictatorship.

International Elitists, Wolves in sheep's clothing, Secular Humanists; these three are more dangerous than Communism, because they are accepted within our gates while promoting the same goal that is the aim of International Communism.

THE TROUBLE WITH THE "THIRD POLE"

In the autumn of 1945 Hirohito, Emperor of Japan, made a formal call upon General of the Army Douglas MacArthur, seeking favors. In the autumn of 1983, thirty-eight years later, President Ronald Reagan made a formal call upon Emperor Hirohito, seeking favors. The turnabout is significant in that our former enemies have become our friends, and a former friend is called an enemy. In the 1940s our declared enemies were Japan, Germany and Italy; and our official friend was the Soviet Union. The ranks of those who led those nations have dwindled. Tojo was executed as a war criminal. Hitler disposed of himself by committing suicide. Mussolini was murdered and hanged by his heels by a mob. Stalin is stilled. Churchill, Chiang Kai-shek, Roosevelt, Truman, MacArthur, all have gone to their rest. There remains the Japanese head of State, Emperor Hirohito, no longer a defeated enemy seeking favors, but the head of state whose government that, in 1983 is in a position to grant favors to that government from which it sought favors in 1945.

For those of us who were on the scene and remember, the ways in which the rulers of governments change sides and choose enemies, is remarkable. When it was decided that a dictatorship of the proletariat should be established in Russia, a World War made this possible; the Bolshevik invaders being financed by the Merchant Bankers as they were called in those days. When it was decided that an economic force called Capitalism was to be opposed by an economic force called Communism, another World War made it possible. Chief in the maneuverings to bring that about was the plan for goading Japan into making an attack on Pearl Harbor. Those of you who are in our age bracket will remember how there was clamor over the U.S. shipment of scrap iron to Japan which would be used to make battleships, guns and shells with which to destroy American men. You will remember how F.D. Roosevelt and George Marshall knew what was happening, but how the American Commanders in Hawaii were never told of the disaster that had been planned. The vision of Marshall riding a horse in Rock Creek Park when the attack began, still comes to mind. We were in Manila at the time, were there to give an eye-witness radio account of the bombing of Nichols Field, just outside Manila. We were also there when the Japanese stormed into the open city, bringing about the Bataan Death March (which we were fortunate in missing, since we were already confined in Santo Tomas Prison Camp No. 1 in Manila). Here was an enemy as brutal and ruthless as those oppressing and murdering innocents in the Middle East, Africa, East Asia and other parts of the world today. The difference being this: When the atomic bombs hit Hiroshima and Nagasaki and the Japanese surrendered, there was a total change in the attitude of those who had been our brutal enemies. As we flew into Japan with MacArthur and his staff, the Japanese who had previously tortured us now were the most pleasant, obliging people in all the world. As a measure of that new attitude, the Emperor who was yet considered divine and had never left his palace to greet anyone, went to the American Consular Building where MacArthur had established his headquarters, shed his assumed divinity, and became servant to an American general.

This is where a still existing difficulty began to take shape. MacArthur refused to depose the Emperor, sent him back to the palace, still head of state, but of course subject to the conditions laid down by SCAP (the military command). There was a long period of discussions about just what kind of a new Constitution should be written for Japan. John Foster Dulles as Secretary of State completed the document which was accepted and signed by the Japanese representative and the representatives of 48 other states at the San Francisco Opera House in 1951. Article Nine of this Constitution renounces war and forbids Japan to maintain an army, navy, or air force. General MacArthur argued against this provision from the very beginning and a compromise was reached. When a Mutual Defense Alliance between the United States and Japan was signed in March 1954, the pact prevented Japan from having an offense force of any kind, but declared that Japan should create and maintain a defense force of 275,000 men. Trouble is, when is a fighter plane or bomber a defense plane but not a weapon of offense? Furthermore, even though this Defense Alliance called for a Japanese defense force, it was still unconstitutional, and the communists and socialists in Japan seized upon this fact and have hampered the Japanese government in its every attempt to live up to its promises to the United States. The Japanese Diet, or House of Representatives, is composed of 467 members and any amendment to the Constitution requires a two-thirds majority. However, more than one-third of the members are usually socialists or liberals, so a Japanese Prime Minister finds it almost impossible to help the United States in its defense of Japan, South Korea and Okinawa and other important islands. This need for Japanese help is particularly important because the Soviet Union has been building up its sea and air forces in that area at an amazing speed. The U.S. maintains 48,500 American military people in Japan (including Okinawa) and an additional 39,000 in South Korea. Against a possible attack by North Korean or Soviet Union forces, there would be a desperate need for Japan to at least be able to help defend itself. That's one of the reasons why President Reagan went to Japan, to try to get some defensive help if and when such might be needed. But Japan seems content to let the U.S. worry about defending Japan. So, at a time when there is Communist inspired unrest in the Philippines, where Clark Field and the Subic Bay, our chief defense bases in the Pacific, are in danger of being lost to us, Japan offers no appreciable help. It becomes more and more difficult for the United States to provide a Police Force for what's left of a so-called free world.

Yet another still existing difficulty began when it was decided that the Japanese Emperor should remain on his throne as head of state. It has to do with trade and economic balances. Back in 1853 Commander Matthew C. Perry led a fleet of U.S. warships into Edo (now Tokyo) Bay. Japan had been a country completely isolated and closed to Western trade, and Perry had a letter from President Millard Fillmore addressed to the Emperor of Japan, demanding that Japan end its isolation and commence trading with the United States - or else. A year later Japan agreed and the Treaty of Kanagawa was signed in 1854. Japan then joined the rest of the world as a trading partner. This new era for Japan demanded a new Constitution and what is known as the Meiji Restoration began in 1868. In a Trilateral Commission Meeting held in Tokyo in the spring of 1982, Toshio Komoto, Japanese Minister of State for Economic Planning and a member of the TLC explained:

Since the Meiji Restoration in 1868, Japan has moved forward always striving to catch up with Europe and the United States. Now, that process is over and Japan has achieved its own important place in the international economy. Having entered a new era of internationalization, Japan is determined to "live for and with the world." We can create a brighter future for our economy, if the three poles of the West -- Europe, North America, and Japan, can cooperate. (Emphasis added).

Regarding that Meiji Restoration, most instrumental in fashioning this open door policy was Baron Ito who, at the beginning of the occupation in 1945, was still looked upon much as George Washington is looked upon in the United States. Shortly after arriving in Japan with the occupation forces, we were privileged to spend a weekend at the home of the grandson of Baron Ito, who told us much of how Japan had been "reawakened" and a spirit of manifest destiny had been ignited when Japan joined the world. A new economy was established and there was the beginning of an industrial age. When Japan defeated Russia in 1905, Japan became a world power, but there were already established a number of great "merchant houses" which controlled industry, had developed a new banking system and operated in much the same manner as do the Multinational Corporations and Central Banks of today. When Japan was occupied at the end of World War II, a new agricultural policy was installed, a new currency was issued, but those "great merchant houses" were allowed to continue their control of Japanese trade, industrial development, and banking.

The Meiji Restoration derives its name from the fact that the young emperor, Meiji, was restored to power in 1868, and those Samurai clan leaders who supported Meiji were the creators of the "great merchant houses" which were commissioned by Imperial edict. And the descendants of those Samurai leaders are the heads of the merchant houses of Japan which now flood the world with cameras, television sets, computers, motor cars, etc. Known as zaibatsu in Japanese, these Imperial multinationals are Mitsubishi, Mitsui, Sumitomo, Fuyo, Dai-ichi, Kangyo, and Sanwa. Their trade names include Toyota, Datsun, Minolta, Panasonic, Sony, etc., etc.

When President Reagan went to Japan his publicized purpose was to get better trade relations with Japan, get Japan to ship fewer cars into the United States, and so on. There is much concern about foreign imports destroying American industries and putting people out of work in the United States in steel, textiles, technological industries, and such. But what is not generally known is that when Trilateral Commissioner Toshio Komoto spoke of Japan "living for and with the world," he was speaking of the internationalization of the multinationals of which Japan's zaibatsu are a part. Take Mitsubishi as an example. It's the largest and most powerful of the Japanese "merchant houses". It also has been most aggressive about courting foreign multinationals. Its foreign partners and shareholders include Caterpillar Tractor, Westinghouse Electric, Getty Oil, and the Reynolds Industries. Mitsui is partly owned by Du Pont, Kimberly-Clark, Continental Carbon, Dow Corning, Mobil, Exxon, and Sperry Rand. Sumitomo has partnerships with ITT and AT&T. With so many American based Multinationals having partnerships with the Japanese zaibatsu, is it any wonder that Ronald Reagan's trip to Japan was little more than a publicity stunt having nothing to do with the development of better trade relations between the two countries? Marvin Stone, now editor of U.S. News, had been a foreign correspondent in Japan for six years; so he chose to cover the Reagan visit to Tokyo personally. And his reactions were bitter. He wrote:

"A flow of comforting words -- and many kampel -- about 'mutual interests' passed the lips of President Reagan and Prime Minister Nakasone here in recent days, but it takes more than a toast to the obvious to make a state visit worthwhile. Since the realities of U.S.-Japanese differences were again glossed over, the President would have been better off to have stayed at home grappling with problems of the Mideast, Euromissiles and Central America. The realities have to do with Tokyo's stingy contribution to the common defense of Asia and with Japan's protectionist trade practices, which have led to a mountainous surplus in trade with the United States. . . Taken together, these measures have enabled Japan to shelter its domestic firms from American competition, in the meantime doing damage to our own smokestack industries. . . . The defense and trade issues will confront our next President, the one after that, and the one after that, and so on into the far future. Why are we afraid to speak up?" (Unquote).

Well, Mr. Stone, officials are afraid to speak up because those realities of which we speak are just the symptoms that have developed as a result of the supranational policies of the American based multinationals and the Japanese based zaibatsu who are interested in profit making regardless of its effect on domestic trade, on smokestack industries, or on the middle class of either the United States or Japan. That the Japanese people are suffering even more than we are because of this multinationalist and monopolistic control of industry, trade and commerce, was pointed out by the editor of Globescan: "The Japanese government's encouragement and fostering of Big Business means that commercial competition in Japan, except among government-sanctioned participants, is often crushed. How can small companies survive in an economy where five huge corporations control 72 percent of steel production, 92 percent of the auto industry, 96 percent of the production of desk calculators, 82 percent of television production, 100 percent of the beer market and 100 percent of the toothpaste industry? They can't." (Unquote).

This Japanese economic system is not a free enterprise system. It's corporate fascism. When a legalized corporate partnership is developed between Big Government, Big Business and Big Labor; the free enterpriser, the entrepreneur, hasn't a chance. We should remember that it has been the initiative and the creativity of its small businesses and its individual enterprisers which have accounted for the dynamism and productivity of American capitalism (as opposed to monopoly capitalism).

Here is the clear and present danger: The Trilateral Commission, especially its North American and Japanese sections, have become enamored of the Japanese system. As the editor of Globescan notes: "All the praise for harmony between government and business in Japan, its wonderful labor-management relations, and the marvelous cooperation between industrial competitors there, has been turned by American political charlatans and inefficient Big Business into a mandate for handing the American economy over to the politicians and bureaucrats. Thus, proposals to put U.S. exports under the control of a new Trade Department, to promote export subsidies and import quotas, and to introduce in the U.S. a fascist 'Industrial Policy,' derive much of their justification from the Japanese case." Incidentally, it was President Reagan who proposed the creation of an extremely powerful "Department of Trade" which would establish absolute government control over American business. These corporate fascists (although they'll use another name) argue that a conglomerate of a few huge corporations, big labor unions, and politicians would be able to choose better than American consumers and producers which businesses should survive and how to make American industry competitive in the world markets. This is what farmers would call hogwash. Government protection of business and labor only encourages business to be inefficient and uncompetitive, labor to be dictatorial and destructive, and government to be totalitarian.

The American economy was healthy until the idea of centralized economic planning began to influence politicians. FDR's New Deal began it. Years later President Nixon created the Council on International Economic Policy. Then President Ford appointed an Economic Planning Board. Next, President Carter had his Economic Planning Group. And now President Reagan proposes a Department of Trade. Make no mistake about it; any Government "Industrial Policy" is corporate statism, and corporate statism is Fascism. Which ought to give you a good idea of where the politicians are headed. And they defend their policies by pointing to Japan. What we need is not a "Bigger Japan," but a "Freer America" and that means getting our government out from under the control of a Central Bank and a Trilateral Commission. It's never too late for those who still keep trying.

"LIKE RIPE FRUIT"

Never before has the Communist plan for the Conquest of the United States been so obvious to those who have eyes to see, ears to hear, and minds to comprehend:

External encirclement, plus internal demoralization, plus nuclear blackmail, lead to progressive surrender.

Nuclear blackmail has been the recent objective of the Communists who have been aided greatly by the U.S. communications media, communist and socialist organizations, freezeniks and peaceniks. Especially noteworthy is the ABC Television Network which spent an alleged seven million dollars to produce a propaganda movie called "The Day After." Previews of the production were held well in advance of its public showing in order to gain special publicity for the propaganda piece. Leaders of communist, socialist, pacifist and anti-nuclear weapons groups were given preview showings. It is alleged that the movie also was shown to leaders in the Kremlin, with an offer that the movie be televised on the Soviet network. The offer was refused supposedly because it was fitting propaganda to be shown to Americans but not to Russians. Commercial sponsors were not revealed beforehand, but the commercials were sold at bargain rates. Newspapers and newsmagazines gave rave reviews to the production before it was televised to an alleged 100 million viewers, but not after it was seen by them. Because in spite of all the nuclear bombs that seemed to explode and rain death and destruction Lawrence, Kansas and its environs, the real bomb was the movie itself. Too Hollywoodish, overly dramatic at the wrong times, inaccurate in many of its details, tending toward pomography at times, it was just another expensive television movie. As for its effect on viewers, William Adams of George Washington University conducted the first "Day After" poll. He said, "Those who predicted the movie would produce at least a short-term bonanza in additional anti-nuclear sentiment among the general public were completely wrong. . . . After all the hype before the movie was shown, I was surprised to see such a consistent lack of change in opinion on policy questions." Other polls revealed that the production changed almost nobody's mind regarding the nuclear problem. Those who were for, were still for; those who were against were still against; and those who were neutral were still neutral.

So, despite the hopes of the left-wingers, this expensive propaganda ploy didn't aid the Communists as its producers may have hoped. This in spite of the fact that the Soviet World Peace Council was 100 percent behind the effort which was supported not only by communists and socialists, but also by some seventy-odd pacifist and anti-nuclear groups that lent themselves to the communist plan. A list of those seventy-odd organizations appears on the next page of this Report. These are the "better red than dead" people that are the first to be killed off if and when the Communists conquer.

This nuclear disarmament campaign really centers in Western Europe, where the Communists don't need "The Day After" movies to influence the peaceniks. But the same parent organization is this World Peace Council. Hilaire du Berrier, writing from Paris, reported: "As 'the Hot Autumn' approached . . . eight new pacifist organizations sprang up in France in one week. There was nothing spontaneous about them. The parent organization behind the hundreds of pacifist and neutralist fronts pretending to have autonomy is the World Peace Council which was founded on Stalin's orders after the 1939-45 war, just before the Prague coup d'etat and murder of Jan Masaryk which brought the take-over of Czechoslovakia. To conceal the fact that the WPC was a Soviet arm for lulling the West, its headquarters was established in Paris. Expelled from France, it moved to Vienna, was again expelled and is now established in Finland. It was in 1977 that the Soviets began installing their SS-20s bracketed on Central Europe and not until two years later that America, at the request of Western Germany and with the approval of her NATO allies, agreed to counter the SS-20s with Cruise missiles and Pershing-2s. Then Soviet Russia's new form of warfare began. In June 1983, step one reached its peak with over 3,000 international delegates in Prague to attend the 'World Assembly for Peace and Life Against Nuclear War.' Mr. Gordon Brook-Shepherd, of the London Sunday Telegraph, denounced it as 'the abuse of an admirable aim to suit Russia's purposes.' A Daily Telegram editorialist saw the meeting as 'a collection of dupes composed of communists, sneaking regarders, useful idiots and profile-proud clergymen.' It was the culmination of a campaign that started on November 16, 1980, when West Germans carrying out Soviet orders launched what was known as the Krefeld Petition, calling for refusal to permit the installation of nuclear arms in Europe. . . . Over a million West Germans signed their names and General Gert Bastlon, commander of the 12th armored division of the Bundeswehr, threw his weight behind them. Pastor Neimoller, the submarine commander of World War II, inspired thousands of others to follow, and America's Daniel Ellsberg, who gave his stolen Pentagon papers to both Hanoi's agent, Vu van Thai, and the Russians before he put them in the hands of an eager New York Times, became technical advisor to the German pacifists. "(Unquote).

H du B Reports that it was when the decision was made to counter the Soviet SS-20 missiles with Cruise missiles and Pershing-2s that "Soviet Russia's new form of warfare began." That new form of warfare is a three-phase operation: 1) terrorists are to destabilize all nations from within. 2) Pacifists are to demonstrate, propagandize, show television movies such as "The Day After," and otherwise destroy the West's will to fight. 3) Brush-fires too numerous to extinguish are to be started, this instead of a single battle line between the two great powers. Hence the "little wars" in Lebanon, the Iran-Iraq war, the troubles being fomented in the Caribbean, Central and South America, etc. And, as du Berrier notes: "Pacifists and communists - and often they are the latter pretending to be the former - are filling the streets of Europe, distracting attention from a terrorist army that does not parade. A war of communists and dupes above ground and terrorists below has already started. The enemy is America and her allies, and the psychological conditioning of the forces opposing us follows a classic pattern."

As for brush-fires, Beirut immediately comes to mind. From European sources we have received information not published in American commercial dailies. We are informed that at least two weeks before those explosive-packed trucks crashed into the American and French barracks, Israeli intelligence services warned the "peace-keeper" headquarters that something like this was going to happen, but the report was disregarded. From French sources comes the report that American agents watching the Damascus airport photographed two men descending from a Soviet plane on Saturday, October 15. They were whisked away in a black limousine with a military escort. Three other cars loaded with KGB agents and members of the Syrian secret police followed. Their destination was a terrorist training camp on the outskirts of Damascus. It was later learned that the two mysterious arrivals were members of the Bulgarian secret service. As with the attempted assassination of the Pope, The Russians were using Bulgarians to plot the massacres, so that the KGB could claim ignorance of anything that might happen. American authorities were notified of the arrival of the two top Bulgarians at the Damascus terrorist training camp. But no steps were taken to defend the American post. Marines were ordered not to carry loaded arms, and defenses were left to the Lebanese militia which had not a single guard on duty when the trucks crashed into the buildings where the "peacekeepers" were sleeping. Hilaire du Berrier reports:

"French and Mossad [Israeli] agents working together have reconstructed the crime. They are convinced that the two truck drivers were not 'kamikaze' patriots willing to kill themselves. As far as they have been able to ascertain, the trucks were driven by two Shi'ite fanatics; Abou Mazin, 26 years old; and Abou Sijan, 24. Both had worked in the area they were hired to hit and knew the terrain. Members of the 'Free Islamic Movement,' to which they are said to have belonged, claim that Syrians offered them $100,000 each and told them they had three minutes in which to get away from the trucks before the explosion. The truth was, the materiel used was highly volatile and designed to explode on impact. Agents still delving into the atrocity have no doubt that Syrians are manipulating the Shia fanatics and base their claim that Russia was manipulating the Syrians on the fact that President Hafiz el-Assad made a secret trip to Moscow for a meeting with Yuri Andropov in early October. What they planned during their talk, which lasted several hours, we shall probably never know, but there is a suspicious clue: Andropov was due to visit Bulgaria on October 25. Instead of going to Sofia, he got as far away as possible and established an alibi freeing him from any knowledge of what was happening by giving publicity to the fact that he was taking a cure in the city of Mineralnye Vody, in the Caucasus." (H du B Reports, American business address, P.O.Box 786, St. George, Utah 84770. Monthly, $75 per year).

On Tuesday, November 22, the Commander of the Marine "peacekeeping" force in Beirut received the warning that another truck-bomb attack like the one which had murdered 239 Americans and 58 French soldiers was being planned. This time the warning was taken seriously. The Marines were placed on maximum alert which, we hope, meant they were permitted to load their weapons. They ate a tense Thanksgiving dinner Wednesday night, in the midst of the heaviest shelling in weeks in their area.

Meanwhile, during a temporary lull in the fighting in and around Tripoli, plans were being made to save Tripoli and rescue Yasir Arafat. Between Saudi Arabia, France, Israel and possibly the USSR, a deal was made. First, an unusual exchange of prisoners in which 5,900 Palestinian and Lebanese were exchanged for six Israelis. In case there might be any trouble, Israel imposed a curfew Wednesday night in southern Lebanon and began moving troops and tanks toward the port city of Sidon. French ships were standing by off Tripoli apparently waiting to transport Arafat and his loyal followers to another location, apparently to Algiers where those 5,900 ex-POWs were being flown.

In the case of Arafat, we are reminded of the fate of Bishop of Grenada. Bishop was a favorite of Castro. Had Castro known in time, he probably would have saved Bishop. Instead Bishop was assassinated by another communist faction. This could happen to Arafat in Lebanon, being assassinated by another PLO faction. Now, Arafat is a favorite of the Kremlin, but it would be to the advantage of the Soviet to have what's left of the PLO in Lebanon under the control of the Syrians, who are in turn under the control of the USSR. The presence of a strong leader like Arafat would hinder any such arrangement, a matter of double loyalty being involved. So when it seemed that Arafat was about to meet the same fate as did Bishop, he would be rescued and he and his loyal followers would be transported via those French ships to Algiers to join the 5,900 ex-POWs awaiting him. There Arafat would be free to continue his leadership of terrorists in Africa, while leaving the fate of Lebanon to the Syrians, as surrogates of the USSR.

This is where we stand as the curtain drops on what H du B calls "a new kind of war," remarking that the pacifists and terrorists are going to have great effect on a disunited world during America's coming election year.

THE MYSTIQUE OF 1984 ANNO DOMINI

It was the 20th year after his death. So the media dedicated the month of November 1983 to the memory of John Fitzgerald Kennedy, 35th President of the United States. He was a womanizer of the first rank. He advocated unilateral disarmament. He was the first president to make an open declaration for interdependence. He can hardly be praised for his involvement in the failure at the Bay of Pigs. Yet none of these things were mentioned by the media and he was declared to be perhaps the finest president the Nation ever had, surpassing even the accomplishments of George Washington and Abraham Lincoln. The November memorial bespeaks much for the memory of Americans.

Now on our temporal doorstep there is another name and another year which is much on the minds of many Americans. Next month will mark the 50th anniversary of this man's writing career. He was born an English citizen in India in 1903, India then being under British colonial rule. At the age of 30 he published his first book, "Down and Out in Paris and London." Mildly successful as an author, Eric Arthur Blair adopted the pseudonym George Orwell. Several books followed, but his most celebrated work was not published until 1949, just a few months before his death. He had written the book in 1948 and, in an interplay of numbers, he titled the book 1984. He was a socialist to the end, but Orwell had fought in the Spanish Civil War and, in 1937, when the Stalinists massacred the Catalonian anarchists he became considerably disenchanted. He began to believe that the one basic characteristic of socialism had to be authoritarianism, or dictatorship. He chose 1984 as the time when all people would be ruled by dictators, would be dehumanized by electronic surveillance, and in a permanent state of war. Perpetual war for perpetual peace seemed inevitable to Orwell. In this he has been right, for ever since the creation of the United Nations, perpetual war for perpetual peace has been a world affliction. Since perpetual war required more than one world power, Orwell envisioned a world in which there would be three totalitarian states that would control four fifths of the globe. The remaining fifth would be the subject of endless dispute among the Big Three, and an excuse for maintaining perpetual war. If Erich Fromme, Orwell's biographer, is correct, Orwell saw these three totalitarian states as being the Anglo-Saxon Union, the Soviet Union, and Communist China. We might add that Henry Kissinger, in his vision of a "Trilateral Constellation," saw the world similarly divided and dominated. The only present difficulty in this thesis is that Red China has not yet attained to the power envisioned by Orwell and Kissinger, and a "Third World" presently exists, a Third World that, like a gigantic jigsaw puzzle, has not yet experienced the dictator who will fit them into their proper places as a third world power.

In these totalitarian states about which Orwell wrote, 85 percent of the people, which he called "proles," a diminutive of proletariat, were little more than slaves, living in poverty and playing no part in government or politics. The remaining 15 percent were members of the all-powerful ruling Party, had all the wealth and the accompanying luxuries. But in return for this they must accept the absolute control of an omnipresent, invisible government without permanent laws, under Big Brother, from whose dictates there was no appeal. In George Orwell's version Big Brother's absolute control of individuals was maintained through the use of telescreens, television sets which could transmit and receive at the same time. Installed in public places, offices, bathrooms, bedrooms, and other places where people might meet and talk, these telescreens could not be turned off, and they kept watch over people day and night, making privacy impossible and also insuring uniformity of public opinion, an important item in a totalitarian state. In our actual year of 1984 no such telescreens have been set up for public usage; but this only because such a spy system would be very costly, and the use of computers and data banks can serve the same purpose at less expense both in money and manpower. Such Orwellian telescreens do exist, however. Janet Morgan, special adviser to the Director General of the British Broadcasting Corporation, writing in the London Sunday Times Magazine observes that, "The computer is ubiquitous and awesome, but it is nonetheless odd that it should be the device most closely identified with 1984. Orwell's telescreen is similar to a community television service tried out in Japan where members of one household or office can watch and hear their neighbors. And it is similar to the teleconference system being developed by several British companies, with two cameras mounted on a television, automatically focusing on whoever is speaking and beaming a picture by satellite to participants thousands of miles away. And systems designers are still struggling with the next stage in this process: the invention of fifth-generation computers, which will be sufficiently intelligent not just to transmit human speech but also to understand concepts. . . . Orwell's hardware and software are the means -- fast, efficient, ever present -- to support a cruel totalitarianism."

"Machines That Think," is the title of an article in U.S. News of Dec. 5, 1983. It describes a robot called Epistle that "scans the boss's mail, culls out important letters and highlights significant facts before the executive arrives." The article states that "technology is changing the computer from a fantastically fast calculating machine to a device that can see, touch, smell, recognize spoken commands and answer in plain English. . . . In time, experts say, electronic circuitry will dispense legal, financial and medical advice, forecast the weather, design buildings, prepare tax returns, teach school children and monitor complex industrial processes." Here technology has outstripped the dreams of Orwell and there are indications that tomorrow's Big Brother will be a Machine. In the actual time of our own 1984, however, the computer's Central Data Bank is the chief instrument of the elitists to control citizens and govern the policies of such organizations as the Council on Foreign Relations, the Trilateral Commission, the Club of Rome and similar groups, the federal bureaucracy, the commercial communications media and to a great extent insure uniformity of public opinion.

Orwell's 1984 assures us his governments are socialist governments. This means that Big Brother must own or at least control all the material wealth of the state and its citizens. In an article by Henry Mark Holzer titled "Countdown to 1984," the author observes that "given the nature of statism and its antithesis to individual rights, it is necessary (and thus inevitable) that the government confiscate material wealth and violate financial privacy." He says "The government's persistent attempt to confiscate material wealth, which began over a century ago with the legal tender laws, continues apace with current overt acts directed against gold, silver, collectibles, and against the government's own depreciated currency. Overall, whether through conventional taxation, inflation, legal tender, outright confiscation, or any other scheme, the government is hell-bent to confiscate material wealth. This brings us to a related point: to accomplish certain goals of its confiscation (be it through taxation, property seizure, or prosecution) the government must invade your financial privacy so and it is doing just that. For example, federal wiretaps rose 23 percent in 1982. A Senate subcommittee recently published a study entitled 'Crime and Secrecy: the use of Offshore Banks and Companies,' which identifies who's doing what, and where. The report advocates 20-year prison sentences and $50,000 fines for persons taking just $5,000 or more abroad, without reporting it. . . . The Bank Security Act was held to be constitutional by two Supreme Court decisions, and even the liberal Washington Post was moved to observe that 'the Supreme Court is continuing to interpret the right of (financial) privacy so narrowly as to give citizens little or no protection against government intrusion into many aspects of their everyday personal affairs.'" A current local case involving a woman owing Social Security for overpayment is illustrative. She owed $11.00. The Social Security representative took, without previous notice, $200.00 from her bank account. She discovered the fact when her checks for groceries and utilities bounced. No comment from the Social Security representative.

In his book 1984 Orwell dealt primarily with politics and psychopolitics, saying little of the economic situation that must exist in a totalitarian socialist state, other than to point out the necessity for waging perpetual war in order to maintain the economy. But had the author dealt at length with the subject, we can presume that he would have described an economic gestapo similar to our IRS. In an article titled "The IRS Counts Down to 1984", Wealth, a new quarterly magazine in its issue for Fall 1983, describes what Orwell omitted. We quote.

* * * * *

THE IRS COUNTS DOWN TO 1984

* March 24, 1983. The internal Revenue Service announces it will use a new computerized phone system to dial-a-delinquent. Anyone with an overdue tax bill will begin receiving phone calls every 15 minutes until they answer, at which time an agent will come on the line to discuss his tax 'problem'.

* May 24, 1983. The Supreme Court rules that the IRS has 'administrative authority' to deny tax-exempt status to private church schools whose beliefs are in conflict with 'public policy', as defined by the government, and not by the people. This decision offers great latitude for further 'administrative' decisions by the IRS about questions such as 'what is a church?', 'what beliefs are acceptable?', and 'who is sincere?'

* June 15, 1983. The IRS begins hiring 4,000 new collection agents, despite personnel cutbacks in other departments, in an attempt to track delinquent taxpayers and confiscate their wealth, forcefully if necessary.

* July 1, 1983. New regulations, written by the IRS and passed quietly by Congress in the winter session, go into effect, requiring all stock, bond, commodity and bullion dealers to divulge the Social Security number and full financial information on each single transaction they make. This must be recorded on IRS form 1099 and reported on a timely basis to the IRS.

* Sept. 15, 1983. Several top marketing firms agree to provide their private mailing lists to the IRS, to help construct a 'lifestyle profile' of most U.S. taxpayers.

These are just a few of the factors that provide an ominous countdown to the predictions of 1984. In addition to the growth of government power and size in the last half-century, there has been an increasing trend toward centralization of information about people, far beyond the prudent exercise of law enforcement and records. Your 1040 form, for instance, not only describes your income, profession, family size, address, and so forth, but also intimate details, such as your church affiliation (for verification of charitable contributions), your medical problems, the age of your children, the location of your overseas and domestic bank account (by the coding on your check). There isn't much the government does not know about you.

The Social Security card, which says "not for identification" on it, has in effect become our identification number nationwide. The Social Security Number has become your driver's license number in 33 out of 50 states and your college identification number on most campuses. It's on your Army "dog tag". It's most likely your health plan number. It's on most library cards. And it's the key to voter registration. Worst of all, your Social Security Number is the key to all federal information files on you, bank records, investment information, and personal secrets (think of all the information, for instance, which you put on a loan application or a job application -- both of which are tied to your Social Security Number). As Paul Chitlik wrote in the Los Angeles Times, "There would be nothing about you -- your likes and dislikes, goals and desires, intelligence and abilities, mental health, preferred reading, eye color and vision, religion and political beliefs, work and leisure routines, debts and duties, honors and punishments, vacations and escape, diet, dress, income, education, lovers and/or spouse, children, bad debts, and more likely than not, thumbprint -- that couldn't be discovered by using that magical nine digit number."

Minor inconveniences, once accepted dutifully, have a way of becoming severe intrusions of privacy, which, if patiently tolerated long enough, invite police state authority. If "Little Brother" grows up unruly, beyond his constituted limits, he has a way of gradually becoming Orwell's Big Brother. How "big" he becomes depends on us: Where will we draw the line? (Quoted from "Wealth, the Personal Guide to Investment Planning", a quarterly magazine, $20 per year. Subscription address: 4425 W. Napoleon Ave., Metairie, LA 70001).

There are, of course, methods of spying on citizens and invading their privacy other than the IRS, Social Security, Data Banks and Regional Government Bureaucrats. Supposedly designed to prevent crime but often inflicting distress on law-abiding citizens are the electric eyes watching airports, bus and train terminals, banks, luxury hotels, department stores, etc. The telephone has lost its confidentiality through widespread wire-tapping. Espionage flourishes in government, in defense establishments, in business, politics, marital affairs. Spying paraphernalia ranges from space satellites to cameras that photograph in the dark, to directional microphones that can pick up a whisper from blocks away. Then there are the commercial communications media that engage in Orwellian Newspeak and Doublethink, helping Big Brother to insure public opinion. We repeat: Where will we draw the line?

Let's take another look at Orwell's 1984 for purposes of comparison - and warning. In the totalitarian state of Oceania, the people's greatest fear came from the Thought Police which were active day and night checking on the words and actions of those 15% of the population that were Members of the Party. The Party had three slogans: WAR IS PEACE - FREEDOM IS SLAVERY - IGNORANCE IS STRENGTH. In Big Brother's government there were the Ministry of Truth, which concerned itself with news, entertainment, education and the fine arts; the Ministry of Peace, which concerned itself with war; the Ministry of Love, which maintained law and order; and the Ministry of Plenty, which was responsible for economic affairs. The chief character in Orwell's book, Winston Smith, worked in the Ministry of Truth, where he rewrote history so it wouldn't contradict Big Brother's directives of the present. If states allied against a common enemy decided to fight one another, then articles and books that testify to the former alliance must cease to exist. If the economy did not achieve its three-year-plan goals, then the goals were never established. Winston Smith tried to rebel against the system, but was defeated, imprisoned and tortured. The closing lines of the book: "The struggle was finished. He had won the victory over himself. He loved Big Brother."

And we repeat: Where will we draw the line?

WHY WE FEED, FINANCE AND ARM OUR ENEMIES

On the same day that the U.S. Marines were rescuing American citizens trapped by the Communist regime in Grenada the U.S. Congress was passing a bill giving over $8 billion to the International Monetary Fund, money that can be loaned to the USSR or any of its Satellites. On the same day that Marines were being killed in Lebanon arrangements were being made to assure the continuance of trade and aid to Soviet Russia and Red China on a most favored nation basis. On the same day that American air losses were being counted in Lebanon and a Syrian official was saying that America's most recent POW, Airman Robert Goodman, would be returned "when the war is over", a deal was being made for the shipment of bullet-proof vests to Syria. Of course, there's nothing new about this business of financing the regimes that have killed and are killing American servicemen and civilians. This dialogue has been going on ever since a man calling himself Leon Trotsky boarded a ship in New York Harbor bound for St. Petersburg, Russia to join a man calling himself Nikolai Lenin for the purpose of Bolshevizing Tsarist Russia. Both of them were amply supplied with money from New York and German banks. As soon as these Bolshevik leaders had gained a foothold and marched to Moscow, the International Bankers pressured the United States and British governments into supporting the Bolshevik conquest. Trade with Soviet Russia began as early as 1920 when Armand Hammer received his first concession contract from Lenin. As Antony Sutton and Patrick Wood stated in Volume II of Trilaterals Over Washington, "What could not be done legally was done illegally -- even to the export of military aircraft engines. By the late 1920's Wall Street and German bankers had put the infant Soviet Russia on its feet. In 1925, a complete program to finance imports of Soviet raw materials to the United States and to export vital machinery and technology to the Soviets was agreed upon by Chase National [now Chase Manhattan] and Prombank (a German bank). In 1930 Chase National was one of four American banks that financed construction of the Five-Year Plans. These plans have been hailed in history books as a triumph of Soviet engineering. In fact, the plans were entirely packaged and implemented by non-Russian companies -- mostly American -- for the profit of Wall Street....The Soviet Union was the recipient of the latest in U.S. military technology during World War II....The buildup of Soviet economic and military power has continued from 1945 down to the present day under the guise of peaceful trade." Well known by readers of DBR is the story of the building of the Kama River Truck Plant, largest in the world, from which trucks were built to transport arms and equipment to Ho Chi-Minh's forces during the Vietnam War, and to transport and supply Russian troops now killing innocents in Afghanistan. Also familiar to our readers is the shipping of the world's largest electrical transformer to Russia, and the sale of American ball bearing grinders without which the USSR could not have deployed those warhead missiles that are now in the news and threatening both Western Europe and the USA today. It is no longer any secret that 95% of the technology used by the Soviet military-industrial complex is of Western origin; or that billions upon billions of dollars have been funneled into the Soviet Union and its Satellites through the World Bank, the IMF, and affiliated American-financed Regional Banks. That the Soviet Union has depended from the very beginning upon the United States for its survival is a well known fact. But what is difficult to answer is the question WHY? Why have we nurtured and raised up an enemy that has promised to destroy us?

This question is especially poignant to your reporter because of the day when we began this Report: December 7, 1983, 42nd anniversary of the attack upon Pearl Harbor. Overlooked by the commercial media, probably because of what was going on at an airport in Beirut on December 7, 1983, where U.S. Marines were again being shelled, fortunately without casualties this time. But we were in Manila, the Philippines, on Pearl Harbor Day. We were still in Manila three years and three months later when we were liberated by American forces under the command of General MacArthur. And we remember that we were told the rescue would have been much sooner, except that our then ally the USSR was at the top of the list for materiel and supplies, that American troops in both the Atlantic and Pacific Commands had to play second fiddle to the Communists. We were told of how General Patton was ordered to halt his advance toward Berlin so the Russians could get there first. We were told how occupation currency was distributed to the Russian troops at American expense so they could buy up whatever goodies remained in occupied Germany. Granted that a Cold War period followed the assumed peace, but as Antony Sutton said, "What could not be done legally was done illegally." What the USSR was not given, agents were able to steal, so that the nuclear secrets soon were shared by the Soviet; and "the buildup of Soviet economic and military power by the United States has continued to this day; insofar that now we are now second to the USSR in military power. And again comes the question, WHY? There is an answer; it's just been hidden, like the mystery of money, and the conversion of this former Representative Republic into a Democracy and then a Corporate Socialist Welfare State. To understand the answers to all of these, it is necessary to go back in time to the 18th century when things were happening in Germany at the same time that the United States was being born as an independent Republic.

The seeds were planted in the universities; planted by certain professors who were able to preach a philosophy concerned with dialectics. First there was Immanuel Kant, (1724-1804), German metaphysician who lectured at the University of Konigsberg (now Kalliningrad, USSR) in 1755. He coined the term "Transcendental Dialectic". Then came Johan Gottlieb Fichte (1762-1814), a German philosopher who followed Kant, served as rector of the then new University of Berlin (1810-12) and developed what was termed "Dialectic Idealism." Next came Georg Wilhelm Friedrich Hegel (1770-1831). A professor at the University of Jena (1805), he readapted Kant's "Transcendental Dialectics" and Fichte's "Dialectic Idealism" and called it "Dialectical Materialism." Hegel was the most influential of them all, in that his logic inspired the existentialism of Kierkegaard and Sartre, the socialism of Lasalle, the Instrumentalism of Dewey, and the Communism of Marx. James Billington in "Fire in the Minds of Men" comments: "Hegel had contended that beyond subjective 'civil society' lay a higher and more universal social objective: the state." Hegel identified the state as "the march of God through history". In other words, the State was God, or God was the State, whichever way you prefer to say it; and since the state is supreme and omnipotent in Hegel's theory of dialectical materialism, individuals can find their freedom only in obedience and service to the rulers of the state, rulers who are usually unidentified and often referred to as Big Brother. Alongside Hegel's concept of "the march of God through history", he has outlined the manner of that march in a theory adopted by Karl Marx and the rulers of the world state which has come to be known as the historical dialectic or the Hegelian Theory. In the late Carroll Quigley's important work, "Tragedy and Hope", on page 378, the author gives this explanation:

"The Ideas of Karl Marx (1818-1883) and of his associate Friedrich Engels (1820-1895) were published in the Communist Manifesto of 1848 and in their three-volume opus, Das Kapital (1867-1894). Although they were aroused by the deplorable conditions of the European working classes under industrialism, the chief sources of the ideas themselves were to be found in the Idealism of Hegel, the materialism of the ancient Greek atomists (especially Democritus), and the theories of the English classical economists (especially Ricardo). Marx derived from Hegel what has come to be known as the 'historical dialectic'. This theory maintained that all historical events were the result of a struggle between opposite forces which ultimately merged to create a situation which was different from either. Any existing organization of society or of ideas (thesis) calls forth, in time, an opposition (anti-thesis). These two struggle with each other and give rise to the events of history, until finally the two fuse into a new organization (synthesis). This synthesis in turn becomes established as a new thesis to a new opposition or antithesis and the struggle continues as history continues." (Unquote).

In this utopian "march of God through history", the theory adopted by Karl Marx, by the builders of the New World Order, and by the rulers of this world, there must be a conflict of opposites, a thesis which is challenged by an antithesis; they merge to develop a synthesis; and then the conflict of opposites starts, or is developed, all over again. Hence, a clash of political left and political right brings about another political system, a synthesis of the two which is neither left nor right, but a new political order! So, when this Hegelian Theory was adopted by the chosen elite who rule the world, the dream was made fact by the creation of two competing systems. There was Capitalism as the thesis. Developed as the opposite, or antithesis was Socialism, or Communism in its extremist form. These two are to clash and contend one with the other until finally they merge and develop a synthesis, which is called The New World Order.

This is the ultimate, the grand "march of God through history," the New Age, the Technetronic Era as described by Brzezinski, the New International Economic Order as described by Willy Brandt, head of the Socialist International, and so on with other names used by other groups. It is the clash described as Capitalism versus Communism, which is to bring about the merging and a New World Order. The thesis, Capitalism, grew out of the writings of a Scottish economist and professor (University of Glasgow), Adam Smith, who wrote "The Wealth of Nations". The antithesis, Communism, grew out of the writings of Marx and Lenin. The clash of these two to create a synthesis was the work of an elite group which, once again, grew out of the soil planted in certain universities. In a remarkable new book by Antony Sutton, "An Introduction to the Order", three sources are identified: "The Order", which began at Yale University in the United States, "The Group", which was hatched at Oxford University in England, and "The Order of the Illuminati" which had its birth at Ingolstadt University, sired by Adam Weishaupt. Antony Sutton writes:

"So who or what is the State? Obviously it's a self-appointed elite. It is interesting that Fichte, who developed these ideas before Hegel, was a freemason, almost certainly Illuminati, and certainly was promoted by the Illuminati...Furthermore, the Illuminati principle that the end justifies the means,...and used by both The Group and The Order, is rooted in Hegel." (Quoted from "An Introduction to the Order," Volume one of a series. For further information write to Research Publications, P.O.Box 39027, Phoenix Arizona 85069).

This self-appointed elite is said to control such semisecret organizations as the CFR, Trilateral Commission, Bilderbergers, the Royal Institute of International Affairs, the Club of Rome, OECD, and similar international groups. Acting under the instructions of this self-appointed elite, there was developed a clash of forces known as World War I, out of which Communism was established in Russia. Then there was promoted World War II, which saw the beginning of the development of a Communist controlled empire into a world power. So today, to use Hegel's terms, there is the thesis, Capitalist United States and its Trilateral allies; there is the antithesis, Communist-controlled Soviet Russia and its satellites and allies. And, even as the great American tax-exempt foundations are told to promote it, there is to be the merging of the two into what Hegel called the synthesis, and what the self-chosen elite calls The New World Order.

This is the Grand, the Ultimate Aim. But at a lower historical level, there is the continuing conflict of opposites, which are essential to bring about the final change. These are "changing times" and it's interesting to note how often that phrase is used in the publications of the Trilateral Commission. Presently there is being developed an important conflict of opposites in the Middle East. To bring about a desired change, it was necessary to create what we'll call a right and a left. Lebanon presented a conglomeration of opposing forces of almost every political and religious order. To bring about the desired change, a clear right and left must be established. So, President Reagan of the United States met with Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir and President Chaim Herzog of Israel, and an "unswerving commitment to Israel's security" was established and what amounts to a firm military alliance was announced by the heads of state of the two countries. Thus was created the right (Thesis); and almost immediately thereafter U.S. planes became engaged in activity over the Syrian controlled parts of Lebanon. Two or more U.S. planes were shot down. Quickly the military commander of USSR forces announced its "unswerving commitment to security", and promised that a firm military alliance would assure Syria of everything needed to fight and win a war, short of the actual use of Russian troops. So, in Lebanon, since December 1, 1983, the right and the left (thesis and antithesis) have been established and made public. Now will come the most intensive conflict of opposites, designed to bring about the preplanned change (synthesis) desired by the elite. This conflict of opposites may take the form of full-scale war or limited brushfire action, or the change may be brought about through some political or diplomatic maneuvering. But, with the self-chosen elite in command, one thing is sure: Regardless of the cost in loss of life and human suffering, there will be the preplanned change!!

Lebanon is but one example of the use of this Hegelian logic to bring about a desired change, this change having to do with the control of oil. But we should understand that this Hegelian program is not confined to international affairs. Indeed, the principal use of this instrumentality is to bring about social change. There are change agents in the schools, the pulpits, in every phase of human activity. In speaking of "The Order", the third of the ruling elite that is of strictly American origin ("The Group" is of English origin and "The Order of the Illuminati" is basically of German origin), Author Sutton writes: "The activities of The Order are directed towards changing our society, changing the world, to bring about a New World Order. This will be a planned order with heavily restricted individual freedom, without Constitutional protection, without national boundaries or cultural distinction." Also without belief in or knowledge of God, if The Order is successful in this respect. This is the one element in their plan where the elitists have not been successful. In totalitarian Russia and Communized China the risen Christ still lives in the hearts of millions. There will always be a remnant and though we may seem to be losing, we can always remember that promise of the Psalmist that although "...the rulers take counsel together, against the Lord, and against his anointed...He that sitteth in the heavens shall laugh: the Lord shall have them in derision...Be wise now therefore, O ye kings: be instructed, ye judges of the earth. Serve the Lord with fear, and rejoice with trembling...Blessed are all they that put their trust in him."

AND SO TO WAR FOR PEACE

The Chosen Opponent.

Damascus is said to be the world's oldest city with a continuous history, reaching from the time of Uz (Noah's grandson) to Hafez Assad, its present ruler. Once known as "The Pearl of the East" Damascus is "the Head of Syria" which in the 7th and 8th centuries A.D. was a vast empire stretching from Spain to India. Through the millenia, however, Syria has been overrun by conquerors including the Canaanites, Phoenicians, Hebrews, Arameans, Assyrians, Babylonians, Medes and Persians, Greeks, Romans, Turks, French, and is now under the aegis of the USSR, independent yet subservient. In the world's oldest city there still exists "The Street Called Straight". The natives may point out "the House of Ananias", still standing. Ananias was led to the blinded Saul who was converted, became Paul, and an Apostle born out of time. There also is a bricked-up window in a wall, said to be the window through which Paul was let down in a basket. During the time of the Crusades Damascus was the capital city of Saladin, the chief opponent of the Christian Crusaders who sought to retake Jerusalem. After Saladin's death the city was plundered by Tamerlane, the Turkic conqueror, successor to Genghis Khan, whose empire stretched from Delhi in India to the shores of the Black Sea in what is now Soviet Turkestan. After the collapse of Tamerlane's try at the creation of a World Government, Syria became a part of the Ottoman Empire. At the end of World War I France claimed Syria under a League of Nations mandate, chopped off a part of Greater Syria and made a coastal state called Lebanon. After World War II in concert with the United Nations Charter, France relinquished its mandate and Syria and Lebanon became independent nations. In 1958 the ambitious Gamal Nasser of Egypt merged his nation and Syria into the United Arab Republic, which lasted less than four years. Following various outbreaks of violence, in a daring coup Hafez Assad became the ruler of Syria, and dreamed of making Lebanon again a part of Greater Syria, a move opposed strenuously and militarily by the new nation called Israel. Lebanon was continually wracked by civil war and in 1976 the government of Lebanon asked the government of Syria to send in troops to keep the country from being taken over by the PLO. Since Assad considers Lebanon a part of Syria by historical right, he has no intention of ever removing Syrian troops from Lebanon, regardless of agreements and treaties he may sign to please bigger powers. And Assad has a greater dream, that of becoming the head of a new Mohammedan Empire covering all of the Middle East and a part of North Africa. He has friendship affiliations with Khomeini's Iran and Kaddafi's Libya; all of them being considerably influenced and aided by the Soviet Union. The USSR contains a vast Moslem population that has never been divorced from the Islamic religion, and the atheistic USSR must permit the Moslems to remain Moslems, while at the same time aiding and abetting the militant aims of Syria, Iran and Libya, while also catering to the other Arab and oil-rich nations of the Middle East.

As for Lebanon, since the time when Hiram, King of Tyre, assisted Solomon, King of Israel in the building of the first Temple, there has been little peace in the area. As a part of Greater Syria, Lebanon has suffered conquest after conquest. Because of their position as seaports and their conjuncture with the trade lanes of three continents, the cities of Lebanon -- Tyre, Sidon, Tripoli, Beirut -- have been important shipping and trading centers. But the region itself has known little peace. And since there is a number of very militant religious cults and groups, there has been constant warfare between them. As one commentator noted, since the Lebanese have been fighting each other without outside help for the past 300 years, there is little hope of any multinational peacekeeping force bringing peace to Lebanon even if the Syrian and Israeli troops left the country.

As for the military situation, the USSR has supplied Syria and the militant Druse and Shi'ite militiamen and terrorists with the latest equipment: SAM missiles, ZSU-23-4 and ZSU-57-2 anti-aircraft guns, artillery and smaller arms, and the latest in combat planes. There are said to be 40,000 Syrian troops occupying 60 percent of Lebanese territory, 222,000 Syrian troops ready to back them up, and an estimated 7,000 Soviet experts and advisers on hand to help. In addition, Moscow is said to be pouring thousands of Soviet troops into positions along the Iranian border. To counter these military forces, not including Israeli troops since they are not presently actively involved in the "peacekeeping" effort, there are 1,800 U.S. Marines, 2,100 Italian troops, 2,000 French troops, and 100 British troops. Offshore is an armada which can supply some additional Marines if required, and the Aircraft Carriers Independence and John F. Kennedy carry 140 aircraft, some of them of old vintage and not equal to the planes being flown by Syrian aviators.

The Peacekeepers' Dilemma.

Columnist Sandy Grady in the Pasadena Star-News of December 8, wrote and we quote: "When you're Barry Goldwater's age and know you'll never run for anything again, you're free to unload the truth....This was on a day after more Marines had been killed in Lebanon and Ronald Reagan's air raids had upped the stakes in the Middle East - a day on which most U.S. politicians were hiding or fudging their words. Sen. Goldwater, who is 73 and was a hawk's hawk when Reagan was still an unemployed actor, unleashed some tough advice: 'I think the president ought to bring back everybody that's in an American uniform (from Lebanon) and do it now, because we're headed for war. There's no sense in the United States becoming involved in a war in that part of the world'....Columnist Grady was in Washington when he made this report, and he remarked: "I wish Goldwater, who values candor so highly, could have been with me on rounds of the White House and State Department to listen to the gobbleygook about the latest air strikes. A translation into straight English would read something like this:

" 'Relax, folks. There's not going to be any war. Sure, we've got almost 2,000 Marines getting shelled in Lebanon. And we've got a couple of aircraft carriers and the New Jersey offshore. And now we're bombing the other guys. And Syria's got about 7,000 Soviets involved. But war talk is silly. Hey, we're peacekeepers, remember? So everybody stay cool. We've got everything under control.' That's the condensed version of the officialese I heard from the president's flack, Larry Speakes, and Secretary of State George Shultz. If he had been there, I suspect Barry Goldwater would....recall how things escalated in Vietnam. One of our destroyers on patrol was supposedly attacked. LBJ called in air strikes. The tit-for-tat game built to a half a million U.S. troops. The Lebanon script has weird similarities. They blow up a Marine compound. We send over patrol planes. They fire at our planes. We bomb their anti-aircraft bunkers, losing two planes. They shell the Marines, killing eight. Our ships shell them. So it goes. And the president's men keep reciting their Lebanon peace policy: If they shoot at us, we'll shoot back." (Unquote). Which seems to be another definition of war, so very much like the no-win war we were forced to lose in Vietnam.

There is another weird similarity. In Vietnam, our State and Defense Departments kept our troops from winning. Don McAlvany wrote in the December issue of his Intelligence Adviser about "The growing record of State Department betrayal." He stated, "It appears that the U.S. State Department (which helped contrive the overthrow of the Shah of Iran, the overthrow of Somoza, the installation of the Sandanistas in Nicaragua, and the installation of a communist government in Zimbabwe), alerted the Castro government several hours (possibly days) in advance of the U.S. invasion of Grenada. American attack planners were amazed at the well organized and heavy resistance put up by the Cubans, which took a higher than expected toll in American lives. The Washington Times reported on November 9 that the State Department had leaked advance information on the invasion to the Cubans. In all likelihood, it was also the State Department which had ordered the U.S. Marines' guns to be unloaded in Beirut (prior to the bloody October 23 terrorist attack), just as they had ordered the Marines guarding our Embassy in Teheran to be without ammunition in their weapons prior to the taking of the U.S. hostages. (Article III, Section 3 of the U.S. Constitution says that treason against the U.S. shall include 'giving aid and comfort to our enemies'). This same State Department is helping to formulate our current disastrous foreign policy in the Middle East and Africa." (Unquote). It also has been reported that warnings were given prior to the bombing of the U.S. Embassy in Beirut last April, before the bombing of the Marine compound in October, and before the bombing of the U.S. Embassy in Kuwait. But nothing was done after the warnings were given.

Not until after a whole series of generally unreported bombings of government and military installations in the United States, was anything done to guard against further terrorist attacks. Here are some of the previous bombings:

- * Dec. 16, 1982: IBM office at Harrison, N.Y., and South African Airways at Elmont, N.Y.
- * Jan. 28, 1983: Federal Building on Staten Island, N.Y.
- * April 26: Fort McNair, Washington, D.C.
- * May 12: Army Reserve Center, Nassau, N.Y.
- * May 13: Naval Reserve Center, Queens, N.Y.
- * Aug. 21: Army Reserve Center, Bronx, N.Y.
- * Nov. 7: U.S. Capitol Building.
- * Dec. 13: Navy Recruiting Station, East Meadows, N.Y.

We haven't a complete list, but this is just seven of the 30 terrorist incidents that have been reported this year in the United States. One of the more serious incidents that was never reported involved a man who was apprehended in the House of Representatives spectator gallery a few weeks before the November 7 bombing of the Capitol. The man had hidden under his coat a plastic explosive and some nitroglycerine. The bomb didn't explode, otherwise any number of Representatives and spectators would have been killed.

In our Report of Nov. 25, we wrote of the new kind of warfare that was being waged by the USSR. It is a three-phase operation: 1) Terrorists are to destabilize all nations, including the United States, from within. 2) Pacifists are to demonstrate, propagandize, show television movies such as "The Day After," and otherwise destroy the West's willingness to fight. 3) Brush-fires too numerous to extinguish are to be started, instead of a single battle line between the two great powers. Hence the "little wars" in Lebanon, the Iran-Iraq war, the troubles being fomented in the Caribbean, Central and South America, etc. The wave of terrorist attacks on U.S. Embassies, federal buildings in Washington, Army and Navy Reserve and Recruiting Centers, and industries involved in nuclear and military production, are all a part of this new kind of warfare. Utilizing Cubans, Iranians, Shi'ite Moslems from Iraq and Lebanon, Bulgarian and other agents from the satellite countries, the KGB has orchestrated a worldwide terrorist warfare in which terrorists supplied by Khomeini of Iran and Kaddafi of Libya are allied. The Soviet KGB is said to have half a million operatives worldwide, over 25,000 of them in the United States. They direct the attacks from behind the scenes. A recent proven example: British Intelligence Digest reports that "The shooting down of American aircraft last Sunday (in Lebanon) by Soviet-supplied, Syrian missiles was done on the direct orders of Moscow." Don McAlvany (op. cit.) reports: "In the wake of the U.S. pre-emptive strike in Grenada, Colonel Kaddafi has threatened to 'attack U.S. interests around the world.'" Such threats should not be taken lightly. He has the operatives and the wherewithal to carry them out. It is also reported that Fidel Castro, who has some 3,000 DGI (Cuban intelligence) operatives positioned around the United States, has ordered an escalation in terrorist attacks in the U.S. and throughout the Caribbean. (It should be remembered that Castro's Cuban underground in the U.S. -- along with the KGB and 'others' -- was probably involved in the assassination of John F. Kennedy twenty years ago. Terrorist attacks are expected to escalate especially in the English speaking islands which comprise the Organization of Eastern Caribbean States, in order to frighten off tourism and the hard currency spending which it brings. Terrorist attacks against U.S. installations and personnel in Puerto Rico are anticipated. So serious is the terrorist threat, that a 'Red Alert' interagency Washington task force has been set up to anticipate, monitor, survey and/or infiltrate terrorist groups operating in or out of the Caribbean Basin. With hundreds of terrorist groups circling the globe (including dozens of them within the U.S., quietly awaiting orders from on high), the prognosis for terrorist assassinations or attacks against U.S. officials (military and diplomatic) and interests, commencing immediately is extremely high. (Quoted from "The McAlvany Intelligence Adviser," P.O.Box 39810, Phoenix, Arizona 85069. Monthly, $77 per year).

In this stepped-up terrorist war, there are indications that more than military and diplomatic officials may be attacked. On December 7, FBI director William Webster told about how the FBI had foiled a bombing attack on a downtown theater in Seattle. Mark Mayfield of USA Today reported: "Webster's revelation came during a talk with reporters in which he said concern over terrorism in the United States is rising." Secretary of State George Shultz also had something to say about terrorism, although he carefully omitted naming the KGB or the Soviet Union in his statement. Just returned from a trip to Europe, Shultz said Dec. 14, that "Individual acts of terrorism are being replaced in the world with a more systematic, organized and more ominous, trend toward governments deliberately using terrorism as an instrument of national policy". Shultz hinted that he was talking about Iran and Syria. But, when Embassies and Marine compounds have been attacked when warnings were given in advance and nothing done about the warnings, someone in the State Department may be guilty of giving "aid and comfort to the enemy." While steps are being taken to protect government buildings in Washington, D.C., where the big brass sits, Marines and Embassies, Army and Navy establishments are left open to attack. And thinking of attacks against whole groups of people, it should be remembered that this has been done before and it could happen again. A terrorist attack against the U.S. Olympic games being held next year in Los Angeles would be televised to over a billion viewers worldwide, and would be quite a propaganda scoop for the KGB. Referring to possible comfort and aid to enemies, Alice Widener in her U.S.A. Magazine for October-November 1983, recalled a conversation she had with General McArthur in May 1951, after his dismissal as commander in Korea. He said: "Always in war when I visited my wounded in the hospital, I could look them in the eye, no matter what their condition or how tragic their wounds, knowing that our country had backed them to the hilt. But when I went to see my Korean War wounded, I just couldn't look them in the eye, knowing they had been forced to fight with one hand tied behind their backs. . . . I am convinced I was restrained in Korea by some secret Administration policy directive on strategy about which I was not informed." Did General MacArthur know then what we know now?

THE COMING OF THE NEW BLUE CURRENCY

Seven months ago, May 27-30, representatives of the industrialized Nations of the West plus Japan (the "Trilateral Commission" Nations) met at an International Economic Summit in Williamsburg, Virginia. Because of the place where the Summit was held -- The Rockefeller Restoration of 18th century Williamsburg -- there was much fanfare and publicity. But very little information as to the plans adopted and conclusions made at that conference was ever revealed, until recently. In our Report of April 22, 1983, we wrote that "A Ninth International Economic Summit is to be held at Williamsburg....It could become a landmark, causing a complete change in the course of history." In that and succeeding Reports we explained how all the important elitist organizations had conferred secretly in preparation for the event, and how the heads of state and government at the Williamsburg Summit would be mouthing previously prepared statements. Then on June 3, after the Summit had concluded, we wrote: "The exclusive, three day performance of the Annual International Economic Circus has ended. The directors have dismissed their seven star performers [heads of state and/or government] and their appointed assistants [financial advisers]. Only the cleanup crews remain. And only the producers and performers, plus a selected few Mediapersons -- members of the Council on Foreign Relations in the United States -- knew what actually transpired or even what was spoken by the seven actors while in their secret, unreported sessions."

That's the way things stood, until recently. It was Al Owen, editor and publisher of Newsletter Digest, who discovered and published the first inklings of what was planned at that secret summit held seven months ago. Referring to the May Economic Summit, he wrote that "Information as to their conclusions and plans released after the meeting was meaningless. So we have been watching for clues to what really transpired. Now we have the first clue -- the announcement of a new currency, the exchange probably to take place early in 1985. The reason offered is that counterfeiting has now become a serious problem. We can think of several other reasons. Black market dollars, involved in drug traffic and other illicit activities, are probably fully as important. But undoubtedly of far greater concern is the huge largely untaxed world-wide underground economy." How this currency exchange is tied in with the Economic Summit of last May can be understood because other Trilateral Nations are planning a similar currency exchange. It has been reported that all of the Western Nations having Central Banks are planning a new issue of currency, supposedly for the same reasons expressed by U.S. monetary authorities (meaning the Federal Reserve System officials).

Speaking of the U.S. currency exchange to take place in 1985, Al Owen observes that the purpose is "first to mobilize the billions of dollars in fifty and one hundred dollar bills around the globe. Once a date for the exchange is announced, they will have to be spent -- and taxed. Second, this massive infusion of new money may be being timed to abort the next downturn in the business cycle and keep the economic recovery going. Third, to provide an opportunity to gain greater control over the underground economy in the future. Why? The sudden increase in tax revenue could permit a reduction in the income tax, encouraging many who have been evading taxes to come back into the fold; next, change of emphasis to a new 'value-added' tax (a nation-wide sales tax) would also effectively increase the tax take from the remaining underground economy as all retail purchases are taxed."

The federal money changers say the new national trading stamps will be differently colored, metallic threads will be implanted in the paper to make counterfeiting difficult and computer identification possible. And the district bank seals indicating which of the twelve federal reserve banks issued the paper notes will be removed, to be replaced by the seal of the federal reserve itself. But the money changers say there will be no devaluation. That is, a new twenty dollar bill will have the same alleged value of the old twenty dollar bill, etc. But this even exchange of old for new is highly questionable. As Lawrence Patterson observed: "The announcement of this planned new currency...indicates that the government expects the resumption of double-dip inflation at some time in the not-too-distant future (say the next 12 to 24 months)." We can therefore expect the establishment of a new exchange rate at the time the present currency must be exchanged for the new. Al Owen comments:

"What will the exchange rate be? A one-for-one could prove to be insufficient, with a result of exponential inflation a few years from now making a 1 to 100 exchange necessary. From the point of view of those who will make the decision, we think a 1 to 10 (one new dollar for ten old dollars) would be favored. The psychological effect would be far ranging. It will appear possible to pay a debt denominated in billions rather than trillions. This will encourage people to spend again. There will result a boom in the economy. There will be a substantial drop in interest rates. The budget will be balanced, the national debt reduced. The stock market will soar to Dow 200 (not 2,000 if the rate is 1 to 10). Who will benefit? The U.S. Treasury, the international bankers. It will appear possible to retain the huge international debt structure and the great banks' enormous interest income. And it will work, but only for a time. The effects? At first it will appear that at one stroke stability has been restored. 10¢ hamburgers and 5¢ cokes will be very reassuring. But there will be many who will recognize the con when it is announced. They will slip in increases in prices wherever possible. A new round of inflation will be under way immediately, although briefly a deflation will appear to be in effect...it cannot work for long, and the next round of inflation will be even more powerful for having been delayed.

"While we're speculating, let's consider one more possibility. Already there is conjecture that 'The Currency Reform Act of 1985' could abolish the Federal Reserve System, and create one central bank -- a role most likely to be taken by the New York Federal Reserve Bank. It is intriguing to postulate that an even bolder step toward an international currency is being considered, the initiation of an international central bank unit. After all, we've already been told that all ten nations (the "Trilateral Commission Nations") will be cooperating. How does it sound? A new World Peace Dollar! The Eurodollar problem would disappear. All international trade -- not just oil and gold and debt -- would be denominated in the new dollar. The potential for people control is limitless. Metallic threads in the currency would register on airport scanning devices [thereby allowing the instant discovery of large amounts of bills being carried out of the country]. An international serial identification number on each bill would permit tracing movements. It has been fashionable lately to write articles saying George Orwell was off the mark with his visions of Big Brother government. But it appears 1984 is arriving on schedule." (Quoted from "Newsletter Digest", Dec. 12, 1983. 2335 Pansy Street, Huntsville, AL 35801. $75 per year).

* * * * *

A prominent feature of Orwell's 1984 was the policy of the three totalitarian empires to wage perpetual war against each other for the purpose of maintaining a stabilized economy. This same Orwellian attitude was expressed in a Freedom Report by Congressman Ron Paul titled "The Economics of Foreign Policy." He wrote: "It is generally believed that the foreign policy of a nation is separate from its economic policy. Yet when we dig a little deeper, we find that our economy, our monetary system, and our foreign policy are all intertwined. Every decision our government makes with regard to foreign policy directly or indirectly affects our economy." Since war is the extreme form of foreign policy, we could rephrase: "our economy, our monetary system, and our wars are all intertwined. James McCartney, Washington bureau chief for the Knight-Ridder newspaper chain, came very close to reporting the truth about the Middle East in an article concerning our Middle East foreign policy and the "brink of war" situation into which it has developed. He spoke of the connection between the Marines and the oil in the Middle East; the intertwining of economy, finance, foreign policy, and potential war. McCartney wrote:

"Behind President Reagan's high-risk policy in Lebanon and the Middle East lies the administration's fear that the United States and its allies will be cut off from the Persian Gulf's oil supplies. The Middle East, Reagan said in an Oct. 25 address to the nation, is 'the key to the economic and political life of the West.' Oil is a major reason why the President believes it is necessary to keep 1,900 U.S. Marines in Lebanon....Oil is the principal part of the 'vital interest' that the President has said is at stake in Lebanon, even though U.S. dependence on the oil has lessened in recent years. The essence of administration policy is that the United States must not let the Middle East and its oil fall under Communist control. And in the battle for control of the Middle East, the complex struggle in Lebanon is crucial. But Reagan is having trouble selling his argument in Congress. The connection between the Marines and the oil is so indirect and so difficult to demonstrate that some members doubt there is a significant connection."

We can think of a similar situation in which we were personally involved. As a U.S. Marine and a part of its 4th Regiment, we were sent to China in 1927 for the purpose of protecting American interests, since a civil war was going on between Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek's forces and the forces of Communist Mao Tse-tung. A youth and filled with the esprit de corps that has made the Marine Corps the incomparable fighting unit that it still is when permitted to fight without its hands being tied behind its back, we really believed ours was a patriotic and pro-American duty. It came as quite a shock when General Smedley Butler pointed out that the real reason for being in China at that time was not to protect Americans, and American interests generally, but to protect the interests of the Texas and Standard Oil Companies. History repeats with the Marines in Lebanon, but with this important difference: We were not a peace-keeping force of less than 2,000 men. We were part of a fully equipped division, adequately armed and ready to attack as well as defend if the situation arose. Another difference due to time and circumstance: In 1927 Chiang of China was sure to win; in 1984 Gemayel of Lebanon hasn't a chance. Nor have our Marines if they remain where they are in Beirut.

"Every decision our government makes with regard to foreign policy directly or indirectly affects our economy", said Ron Paul. "And our monetary situation", added Don Bell. That's why the issue of a new currency is assured and a new exchange rate probable. In this Hegelian program adopted by the "chosen elite" prior to World War I, the USA was elected to supply the capital and the USSR to supply the power. If we become too powerful then we must disarm rapidly and/or a war is opted to destroy thousands of our finest young men. If the USSR becomes too hungry and financially insecure, then we must supply their needs. Otherwise dialectical materialism will be shown to be a lie. So, with trillions owed, $210 billion in deficits staring us in the face, $120 billion due every year to pay interest on the national debt, plus an astronomical budget, we still must feed and supply the world; and something must be done to "preserve our economy." Thus there has developed a series of paradoxes. Congressman Paul listed some of them:

"It doesn't make much sense to sacrifice our genuine defense needs to those of our prosperous allies or to a nation involved in conflicts that span the centuries, such as Lebanon. The following are but a few of the examples of foreign policy gone awry. They should provide a sense of frustration and anger.

1. We finance both sides in conflicts. For example, in the Mideast we have given billions of dollars in aid to both Israel and Arab nations.

2. We encourage Red China to buy our military technology with our credit, and yet we keep troops in South Korea in case China and North Korea invade once again.
3. We build air bases in Japan at great expense and station our aircraft there, while simultaneously tearing down air bases in Texas. This allows them to tax their automobile manufacturers at lower rates and undersell U.S. companies.
4. We insist West Germany take our Pershing missiles at our expense, generating anti-American sentiment among their people. Since the Gross National Product of our European allies exceeds ours, why don't we allow them to provide for their own defenses?
5. Subsidized loans to Soviet bloc nations continue to escalate. During the first two years of the Reagan Administration the Export-Import Bank made 45 percent more loans to communist countries than it did during the last two years of the Carter Administration. Over $100 billion has already been loaned to communist nations from the West. These funds can be used indirectly to finance revolution in the Caribbean and Central America.
6. Ignoring High Frontier and space defense systems while building vulnerable offensive systems and relying on military activity is expensive and unwise.
7. We sign treaties with the Soviets, despite the fact that they rarely abide by any of the terms in the agreements. We negotiate with the communists while they are murdering our citizens and suppressing rights.
8. We promote programs which bail out the bankers and Third World government leaders, while our own young people cannot get mortgages to purchase homes. Recently, the Congress increased the U.S. 'contribution' to the International Monetary Fund by $8 billion, bringing our total 'contributions' to over $25 billion.
9. We pay rent and taxes to several nations where our military bases are located, even though these bases provide protection for their nations. Furthermore, in a space age, the presence of troops throughout the world generates more anti-American sentiment than it is worth.

"I suggest we ask some serious questions about the status quo....Our goal must be strategic independence with national security. Only with such a foreign policy can we promote peaceful cooperation and prevail over the forces of communism and internationalism."

We must also ask some serious questions about our domestic policies, which were formulated by LBJ in his January, 1965, State-of-the-Union address. To a willing Congress he said: "We are only at the beginning of the road to the Great Society. I propose we begin a program in education to insure every American child the fullest development of his mind and skills....begin a massive attack on crippling and killing diseases....launch a national effort to make the American city a better and more stimulating place to live. I propose we increase the beauty of America and end the poisoning of our rivers and the air we breathe....carry out a new program to develop regions of our country now suffering from distress and depression....make new efforts to control and prevent crime and delinquency....honor and support the achievements of thought and the creations of art." Our Founding Fathers warned that such programs by the federal government would be clearly UNConstitutional, even as they warned against interfering in the affairs of other nations. The results of this disregard has given us Big Brother government and a New Blue Currency.

THE WAR OVER CONTROL OF THE SCHOOLS

There were ten good things that happened in 1983, according to Foy Valentine who is executive director of the Christian Life Commission of the Southern Baptist Convention. Writing as a guest columnist in the Jan. 3 issue of USA TODAY, this professional churchman observed that one of the ten good things was that "the crisis in public education began to be recognized. Governors, legislatures, task forces and local communities finally started coming to grips with one of the gravest social concerns of our times." This professional churchman made no mention of the "Nebraska seven" who are in jail, of their wives and children who are in hiding to avoid being jailed, and of their pastor who has fled to another state in order to keep from being jailed again. All this because they had put their children in a non-state-certified Christian school. More about this later, but to give substance to Foy Valentine's statement regarding "coming to grips" with a dangerous social problem, Parade, the nationally circulated "Sunday Newspaper Magazine", had as its January 1 cover story "The Good News About American Education". Marguerite Mitchell mentioned that two years ago Secretary of Education Terrell Bell had appointed a National Commission on Excellence in Education to "assess the quality of education in America". Belying the article's headline, the report of this commission stated: "Our nation is at risk. The educational foundations of our society are presently being eroded by a rising tide of mediocrity.... Public education is today at the breaking point. Student achievement and discipline are dangerously low. Teacher qualifications and morale are in decay. And the hopes and expectations of parents are frustrated as never before....If an unfriendly foreign power had attempted to impose on America the mediocre educational performance that exists today, we might well have viewed it as an act of war." This report from which we have quoted is by a government sponsored commission, please remember.

What has been done to our American education system certainly does constitute "an act of war". But it is a war that was declared, not by any foreign power, but by an educational elite that controls American education. It is a war that has not only produced an admittedly deplorable and chaotic educational system, it also is a war to determine who shall control American education: the state or the parents. By the advice of this elitist educationist minority and the tacit consent of the parental majority, there is a plan to impose upon this nation a totalitarian system of education that will prepare future citizens to assume their prearranged places willingly and contentedly in a Planned Society in a New World Order governed by a Fascistic Elite! Disregarding for the moment the individuals responsible and the methods adopted to achieve their purpose, let us note what we mean by a totalitarian system of education. Back in 1965, nineteen years ago, Rev. Rousas Rushdoony, author of "The Messianic Character of American Education", in a radio address which was later published under the title "Politics and Education", declared that:

"State supported education is totalitarian education. The essence of totalitarianism is simply this, that it maintains that the state has all the answers to life, and virtually every sphere of human activity should be governed by the state. The totalitarian believes that education, economics and trade, the family, child welfare, old age welfare, medicine, science, and all things else need the controlling and guiding hand of the state. There are different kinds of totalitarianism -- Marxist, democratic, Fascistic, Fabian, and the like -- but their differences are not basic, whereas their agreements are. Common to all forms of totalitarianism is a belief in the state control of education. From Plato's blueprint for a communist state to the present, totalitarian planning has counted heavily on the control of education."

To show that this state control of education was contrary to the American concept, the author referred to a 1925 U.S. Supreme Court decision in the Oregon Case, when the Court ruled that "The fundamental theory of liberty upon which all governments in the Union repose exclude any general power of the state to standardize its children by forcing them to accept instruction from public teachers only." This decision was rendered nearly 60 years ago. That was before, by the advice of a minority and the consent of the majority, this Constitutional Republic became known as a Democracy; so much so that today our staunchest conservatives speak of "our democracy" and our "democratic way of life." Along with this deterioration and destruction of American values, came also the disregard of Christian values and the acceptance of Humanism as the one religion that is permitted to be taught in the public (state) schools. Coincident with this advance of Humanism as a state religion, came also the teachings of the disciples of John Dewey and other anti-Christian educationists. That the methods employed by these Humanists has resulted in the total failure of statist (totalitarian) education is of little consequence to these educationists. They admit their failures and simply apply more of the same and ask for more money to continue to promote ignorance and immorality.

When Christian parents resisted, Cass County, Nebraska became a battle ground. But the general public knew nothing about it. As Larry Patterson wrote in his Patterson Strategy Letter, "Dan Rather hasn't mentioned this war. Neither has NBC....The New York Times and the Washington Post have avoided it like the plague! You must be kept dumb! And why are parents of school children being jailed? Make no mistake -- this is a key test case for the education of America's children. The National Education Association (NEA) is watching carefully. The NEA is not a union of teachers mind you, but a political operation of the Trilateral Party designed to control the future -- through the control of your children's education." The story briefly, as reported in The Review of the News of December 28:

"Some 2,000 pastors and Christian laypeople rally across from the White House today (Dec. 15) seeking President Reagan's assistance in obtaining the release from jail of seven Nebraska men whose children attend the Faith Christian School in Louisville, Neb. The school has been harassed for several years for refusing to have its teachers certified by the state. 'The basic issue', says a spokesman for the school, 'is does the state have the right to control the church? It's not a question of education, since the children in the school score higher than students in the Nebraska public schools on national tests. It's a question of domination of the church by the state.'" The seven men were jailed on November 23rd for failing to have their wives appear in court and have them denied their right of counsel by Judge Ronald Reagan. Some members of the group met today with Secretary of Education Terrell Bell, who told them that if they filed a formal complaint with him, and a subsequent investigation proved that religious liberties were being violated, Nebraska's eligibility for Federal funds could be in jeopardy. Congressman George Hansen (R.Idaho) who has been trying to help the Faith Baptist Church keep its religious freedom, says that "I've been to Iran under the Ayatollah to visit Americans held hostage. It was a sad experience to see Americans in prison there. I never believed I would go to the heartland of America and see families broken up, husbands in jail, and wives as fugitives -- and all over a teacher's certificate."

When the seven men were jailed for what could be life imprisonment without possibility of parole, the word was spread among pastors and hundreds of them flew or drove into the little town of Louisville, Nebraska, to take charge and keep the school open. Ellen Craswell, a Washington State Senator, visited Louisville, reported in The Washington Times of Dec. 27 (the only daily newspaper to report the story), saying that "°Last year 700 or 800 pastors from all over the nation packed the little church in support of Pastor Sileven and in concern for his, and their own, right to exercise freedom of religion.

"Pastor Sileven spent 120 days in jail....It was nearly midnight when I arrived in Louisville and it already looked like a rerun of last year's video tape. Twelve days earlier seven of the fathers of Faith Baptist students were arrested and jailed for having their children in an unlicensed Christian school and refusing to testify against themselves and their wives. There is a bench warrant for their wives, for Pastor Sileven and for his daughter, the school's learning center supervisor, all of whom are reportedly out of the state. Already 450 men had come to Nebraska to help and more were on their way. Many were sleeping at the church, some were meeting quietly over coffee, and others were bedded down in motels several miles away. Warm but solemn greetings were quietly exchanged as we and others trickled in and out of the church that night. In the morning I met with some of the pastors who had organized as a steering committee. From there I went to the Cass County jail in Plattsmouth. Sheriff Tesch would not let me see the seven men in jail but promised I could do so after their 9 a.m. court hearing. After the hearing, however, he told me my identification was not good enough, refused to look at any other identification, or to discuss the matter further. The court hearing was even more amazing. The seven defendants were not allowed to attend nor was there anyone to represent them....The judge ruled that all seven men were to remain in jail until such time as they chose to testify in court. They are still in jail at this writing.

"The First Amendment of our federal Constitution guarantees the right to exercise freedom of religion. The people of Faith Baptist Church (and many other churches) hold deeply the religious conviction that their Christian schools are, and must be, an integral part of their church ministry. They believe that government control (licensure, certification, approval, etc.) of the church or any part of the church ministry violates both their First Amendment rights and their Christian belief that Christ alone is Head of the church. The State of Nebraska appears to be saying that there is an exception to our right to exercise freedom of religion when it comes to education. This kind of thinking closed down all Christian schools in the Soviet Union 60 years ago, and in Germany during Hitler's dictatorship. It's frightening to realize that this is happening in the United States. It's of even more concern to realize that it might not be stopped....I suggest that the goings on in Louisville, Neb. should make us all think about some serious questions. Do we really want government controlling all the education in this country?" (End of extended quotation from a report by Ellen Crasswell, Washington State Senator).

This war against Christian schools, with the present battle being waged in Louisville, Nebraska, involves much more than the certification of teachers and licensing of schools. For example, in Nebraska high schools must have libraries with at least 3,000 books, with only 2% of them religious and philosophical. The school must buy at least 150 new books each year, and subscribe to the "professional" educational periodicals. This means that only the large, well-financed churches would be able to create a high school. The teaching staffs of schools must be certified by the State, But this means not only a college degree, it also means a set number of courses in State-approved courses in education which are humanistic in intent (Gary North reminds us that Nebraska was John Dewey's original experimental state). It seems that about 20 small Christian schools in Nebraska have refused to comply with the state regulations, but Pastor Sileven's school was the most prominent. So last year the sheriff entered the school and arrested Pastor Sileven, who spent 120 days in jail before being released. He is, at this writing, across the state border in Iowa. If he re-enters Nebraska he's subject to arrest again. In an interview he said, "I have never been charged with a crime. I have only been charged with contempt of court. I have found that the worst 'crime' in Nebraska is to be in contempt of court. I have seen murderers and thieves set free, while I remained in jail. If your faith prevents you from obeying an order of the court, what else can you be but in contempt of court? Of course, I feel that the court is in contempt of God. There is a massive, growing resistance. We're fed up; we're tired of writing letters. If they are going to pass these laws, then let them arrest all of us. We're just not going to go along. What we have proven by this stand is that God has not yet given us up, if we will stand. We have proven that you can shake the foundations of a state government. You can even move the immovable federal government." (Quoted from a tape recording featuring an interview of Paster Sileven conducted by Gary North. The full interview is available from Dominion Tapes, Inc., P.O.Box 8175, Tyler Tx 75711. $7.50 ($7.88 in Texas).

This is a war; and the engagement in Nebraska is but one battle in that war. Nor is it a localized war confined to just one State in the Union. The powerful, communist oriented NEA is watching the outcome of this battle closely. If the statists win over the Christians, then the same kind of totalitarian, Godless State control over education will be promoted in all the other States. The federal administration, until very recently, has held that the Nebraska battle "is a state issue and it's in the courts," therefore the federal administration should not intervene. But there has been much pressure. 2,000 pastors and believers rallied in Washington. Congressman Ron Paul wrote letters to President Reagan and Attorney General Smith, urging the Administration to investigate the "outrageous travesty of justice". Gary North dedicated his entire Dec. 16 issue of Remnant Review to the subject of "The Nebraska School War" (P.O.Box 8204, Fort Worth, TX 76112. $95 per year. Single issue: $5.) Many Congressmen joined Ron Paul, made urgent demands that the federal administration investigate. And, reportedly at the request of Rep. George Hansen, a federal civil rights panel on Jan. 4 began "looking into the possible civil rights violations at an unaccredited (Faith Christian) school, subject of a protracted church-state battle." This, of course, is no real victory; but it will bring the issue out in the open and more people will know about this battle to determine Who is the Lord, the State or God?

What does constitute a victory occurred in the State of Maine. Religious News Service Correspondent Ginny Pitt reported from Bangor, Maine that "U.S. District Judge Conrad K. Cyr has ruled that the State of Maine has no authority to regulate church-affiliated schools. The Rev. Herman C. Frankland, pastor of the Bangor Baptist Church...called the ruling 'a tremendous Christmas present'."

The battle still joined in Nebraska. A battle won in Maine. And the war continues. In the final analysis, it's a war over sovereignty. Who is responsible for the education of children: the state or the parents? The case for the State was outlined by Plato in his scheme for a communist commonwealth. He insisted that a monopoly over instruction was essential: "We'll tell the appointed tales to the children and shape their souls with tales...It's likely that our rulers will have to use a throng of lies and deceptions for the benefit of the ruled," (Plato's Republic). The position of the parents is Biblical: "And these words which I command thee this day, shall be in thine heart. And thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up." (Deuteronomy 6:6-7). That the parents have a right to delegate certain aspects of this task to professional instructors is fundamental, and is the justification for church and independent schools.

THE "WALL OF SEPARATION" COMES TUMBLING DOWN

The Vatican statement came first: "The Holy See and the United States, wishing to develop their already existing mutual, friendly relations, have decided in common accord to establish between them diplomatic relations." About two hours later U.S. State Department spokesman John Hughes repeated the announcement. Thus, on Monday, January 9, 1984, that alleged "wall of separation of Church and State" was destroyed by the Catholic Church and the American State, and an outright violation of the First Amendment to the United States Constitution was committed. Proponents of this violation insist that the Vatican is a state, not a religious establishment, therefore official diplomatic recognition is Constitutional. However, this world's smallest state, said to be one-sixth the size of President Reagan's 688-acre mountaintop Rancho del Cielo northwest of Santa Barbara, California, has a population of about 1,000 citizens, has its own postage stamps, a standing army of 104 Swiss Guards, a Central Bank, and a civil government, all of whose officials are appointed by the Pope and are responsible to the Pope. The Vatican is the seat of the central government of the Roman Catholic Church and is designated a city-state only because of an agreement made in 1929 between Benito Mussolini acting for King Victor Emmanuel III of Italy, and Cardinal Pacelli who later became Pope Pius XII. A very brief history will set the record straight:

After Constantine accepted Christianity as a State religion, he moved the capital of the Roman Empire to Byzantium renamed Constantinople, now Istanbul, in Turkey. There soon occurred what was to become a permanent cleavage between the Roman and the Eastern Catholic Churches, and the Bishops of Rome had a difficult time adhering to terms of the Ecumenical Council which had been established by Constantine. After the fall of Rome to the Huns, came developing Church and State relationships with Clovis (466-511), Charlemagne (742-814) and Otto I (912-973) under whom there emerged the Holy Roman Empire. This was composed of the various kings as temporal rulers of respective kingdoms, and the Pope as spiritual head over them all. But the arrangement didn't work too well and in 1806 Francis II of the Hapsburgs abdicated as the Holy Roman Emperor and assumed the title of Francis I, Emperor of Austria. Meanwhile, the various little states in what is now known as Italy were slowly evolving into a kingdom, and relationships with the Holy See and the kings, princes and dukes were such that many of the temporal rulers gave certain lands to the church establishment. These became known as Papal States and existed from about 1848 until 1867. At this time the then young United States recognized the Papal States and there were formal diplomatic relations. However, these Papal States began being taken over by the expanding Italian kingdom, and diplomatic recognition ended in 1867 when a bill was passed in Congress stating that no money should be spent to maintain a diplomatic relationship with the Vatican.

The diplomatic relationship was ended because there were no more Papal States. Italy had taken them over, restricted the Holy See to a few buildings in Rome and awarded an annual indemnity to the Church for the taking of the Papal States. The Popes never accepted this arrangement, called themselves prisoners in the Vatican. When Mussolini became head of government in Italy a council was called to solve "The Roman Question" and the Lateran Treaty was signed in 1929. This states that Roman Catholicism is the only state religion of Italy and that Italy recognizes the Vatican City as an independent State. Religion was to be taught in primary and secondary schools, and the Holy See guaranteed that Roman Catholic Organizations would abstain from politics. According to this Lateran Treaty "the Italian government guarantees the inviolability of the pope. The Holy See, pursuant to its perpetual mission of peace, will remain apart from temporal competitions of other states and from international congresses for peace, unless a unanimous appeal is made to its mission." The Lateran Council remained in effect after the Italian monarchy was abolished at the end of World War II, but has been violated by the present pope, even as has our United States Constitution been violated by establishing diplomatic relations with the Vatican, since it is the head of the Roman Catholic Church and the First Amendment to the U.S. Constitution declares that "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof." The Vatican may have its own bank, postage stamps, and be called a City-State, but it still remains the head of "an establishment of religion."

After Mussolini granted civil independence to the Vatican, President Franklin Roosevelt in 1939 started informal relations, and such informal relations have continued since that time. In 1951 President Truman tried to establish formal relations with the Vatican, but there was such a storm of protest from Protestants, other religions, and from many Catholics, that he was forced to back down. Then, this summer, Senator Richard Lugar (R-Indiana) thought we ought to have an Embassy in the Vatican. He did not propose a bill calling for this, but rather surreptitiously (as is the nature of many of our federal legislators) attached a rider to a bill that was sure to be passed. The rider, which drew no attention at the time, called for the repeal of the 1867 law that prohibited the federal government from spending any money to maintain a diplomatic mission to the Vatican. The bill, with its rider, passed without debate or attention. And this paved the way for the establishment of such a diplomatic mission, with the present informal representative, William Wilson, becoming an Ambassador to what we insist is "an establishment of religion." William Wilson, by the way, is a Catholic, a very wealthy man who suggested to his friend Ronald Reagan that he should buy the ranch where the President rides and vacations. President Reagan bought the ranch for $527,000. It's now valued at about $2 million. William Wilson for the past 20 years has provided a birthday barbecue for Nancy Reagan and when it became necessary for Ronald Reagan to appoint a blind trust to manage his personal affairs while in office, William Wilson was named as one of the three trustees. Whether this would involve a "conflict of interests" is for someone wiser than we to decide.

There was immediate reaction and Kenneth Briggs wrote in The New York Times that "President Reagan's establishment of full diplomatic relations with the Vatican drew swift criticism Tuesday from a broad range of Protestant groups and some civil liberties organizations. Roman Catholic reaction was restrained and cautious. The action also touched off political discussion on Capitol Hill....Some church spokesmen said the protest seemed somewhat weaker than the clamor that led the withdrawal of a similar move by President Truman in 1951 to name former Gen. Mark Clark as ambassador to the Vatican. But the spokesmen predicted a groundswell of protest and a similar fight to establish diplomatic ties and name William A. Wilson as U.S. ambassador to the Vatican....'A bad precedent is being set,' said the Rev. Jerry Falwell, head of the Moral Majority, who had told White House officials that he disapproved of such a move. 'I wonder when Mecca will want one. I told the White House if they gave one to the Pope, I may ask for one'." (End of quote from NYT).

Writing before President Reagan announced the plan, Smith Hempstone observed in Human Events: "If diplomatic recognition were to be extended to the Vatican, it would not be because the Holy See issues its own postage stamps, but because the pope is the spiritual leader of 580 million Catholics. And if that is not giving preference not only to one religion but to one denomination over all others, in contravention of the 1st Amendment, I'll eat my copy of the Federalist papers....There are those rude enough to suggest the White House is pushing the issue in an election year in quest of Catholic votes. But it is far from clear (that) most American Catholics would welcome the move...." Those who ignore the Constitutional issue and assume that the end justifies the means argue that sending an ambassador to the Vatican is going to give to the United States "a lot of very sophisticated information that the Vatican has through its diplomatic contacts throughout the world, since it has established diplomatic relations with most other countries of the world, except the USSR." But this information is already available to our government through the informal representative who, while unpaid, still maintains a diplomatic aide and four secretaries in his office in Rome. However, the greatest danger of all to those who fear the pope's political interventionism in the affairs of other countries, was contained in a statement made on ABC by its Vatican correspondent, Bill Blakemore, who said: "The pope wants to serve as a go-between for the U.S. and the Soviet Union, and even though there are no formal relations with the Soviets, he believes that establishing them with the U.S. will help his peace efforts." Those who understand that the aim of the New World Orderers is to eventually merge the United States with the Soviet Union will also understand that the pope could serve as a very active merger!

Since all of this controversy has to do with that first phrase of the First Amendment to the Constitution which reads, "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof;" and since we have said all that really needs to be said about establishing full diplomatic relations with the Vatican; let's note a few facts about the planned confusion that has been planted by liberals, humanists, atheists and other types of socialists and communists concerning this 1st Amendment.

On July 4, 1776, nine of the original thirteen colonies had official state churches. When the First Amendment was adopted in 1791 four States still recognized an official state church. Despite the adoption of the First Amendment those four state churches remained in existence for many years before being abolished by voluntary state legislative action. In other words, the 1st Amendment had nothing whatsoever to do with laws respecting religion in the States themselves. The fear was that the federal government might adopt a national religion, or favor one denomination over another, or might interfere with the existing state churches. Therefore, many of the States petitioned the First United States Congress to enact a Constitutional Amendment which would protect their right to manage their own religious affairs, without hindrance from the national government. Congressman James Madison, chief author of the First Amendment, explained this to his Congressional colleagues, told them he was responding to the wishes of the State Conventions who wanted to prevent the establishment of a national religion, or any law whereby one "religious sect might obtain a pre-eminence" over others. But this had nothing whatsoever to do with any separation of church and state at the national level, and in the recorded debates in the First Congress over the Bill of Rights, not a single word was said by any Congressman about any "wall of separation between church and state." In fact, shortly after passage of the First Amendment, that First Congress petitioned the First President of the United States to proclaim a national day of prayer and thanksgiving. Furthermore, in the first decades of the new American Republic, Christianity was promoted by the national government in any number of ways. Re-enactment of the now almost forgotten Northwest Ordinance provided in part that "Religion, morality, and knowledge, being necessary to good government and the happiness of mankind, schools and the means of education shall forever be encouraged." President John Quincy Adams declared in a message to Congress in 1828 that it was his administration's policy as well as "our duty to use our influence to convert the Indians to Christianity." Presidents Washington, Monroe, John Quincy Adams, Jackson and Van Buren all negotiated Indian treaties by which the U.S. Government built churches in Indian Reservations and provided aid in Christianizing the Indians. Supreme Court Justice Joseph Story, described by historians as "the greatest scholar" of all the Justices, wrote that "...the whole power over the subject of religion is left exclusively to the state governments." He also said the real object of the First Amendment was not "to countenance, much less to advance, mohametanism, or Judalsm, or Infidelity, by prostrating Christianity, but to exclude all rivalry among Christian sects, and to prevent any national ecclesiastical establishment, which should give to an hierarchy the exclusive patronage of the national government." This, of course, is exactly what our federal government proposes doing by giving the Catholic hierarchy, the exclusive patronage of the national government!!

We still observe many of the old Christian traditions which formed the foundation of our Constitution and its Bill of Rights. "In God we trust" remains our national motto. Chaplains still serve in Congress and in the Armed Forces. There is prayer at the start of every session of the Senate and the House of Representatives. There is prayer at the beginning of most athletic games. However, in the government (public) schools the religion of Secular Humanism has replaced the religion of Christ, the theory of evolution is taught as fact, the Ten Commandments have been banned from reading or hearing. And there is a group, formed by the atheistic communist Madalyn Murray O'hair which, and we quote: "wants to remove the words 'under God' from the Pledge of Allegiance and to challenge legislative prayers at all levels of government, religious services in the White House, prayers at athletic games and commencements in tax-supported schools, distribution of Gideon Bibles in schools, and Easter and Christmas holidays from schools....Also, it wants to challenge the swearing in of public officials, court witnesses, Civil Service employees, armed forces personnel, jury members, and others in government situations by 'so help me God' and the setting aside of days of prayer by presidents and governors...(direct quote)." All these things would be done by the federal government. Yet, according to both the letter and the spirit of the U.S. Constitution, the federal government has no right to impose any national laws or restrictions regarding religion. Said James Madison: "The whole power over the subject of religion is left exclusively to the state governments."

How, then, did the real wall, "the wall of separation between the federal and State governments" come tumbling down? It came about through amendments and Supreme Court "legislation." There is a statement in the controversial Fourteenth Amendment, never officially ratified by the States, which reads: "No state shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law." The amendment was meant to insure citizenship and full rights to former slaves. But the amendment has been interpreted to mean that the Bill of Rights, which is a restriction upon the federal government only, now applies to the States as well! Then, in 1947 the Supreme Court decision of "Everson v. Board of Education" stated that "The establishment of religion clause of the First Amendment means at least this: Neither a state nor the Federal Government can set up a church. Neither can pass laws which aid one religion, aid all religions, or prefer one religion over another..." So, by Supreme Court legislative action, what Constitutionally applies only to the National Government also applies to State Governments as well!

Witness the heresy: Replacing Christianity with Humanism domestically. And the hypocrisys: "Granting special regard for one religious establishment internationally. Our national hope: With faith in the God we trust, let us seek to restore the Letter and the Spirit of the Holy Bible and the Constitution based upon its foundation.

THEY RE-WROTE THE ACTOR'S LINES

George Orwell's script to the contrary notwithstanding, 1984 is still an election year in the United States of America; a time when incumbent politicians make new and different promises to the people while still standing on their past performances. It is a time when new planks are added to political platforms, a time when figurative horses are often changed in midstream. And this being a particularly important election year to the New World Orderers, it is a time when Ronald Reagan would change roles to play a diametrically opposite part on the world stage. While erroneously pretending that President Reagan writes his own lines, CFR-oriented Newsweek gave the signal beforehand, loud and clear, perhaps so that opposite numbers in Moscow might sense the Newspeak direction, and react accordingly. Said Newsweek:

Forget the Reagan rhetoric about "the evil empire" and the Soviets being liars and cheats. Forget administration promises to exact retribution for the Russian downing of Korean Air Lines Flight 007. And forget all the insults Washington has hurled at the Soviet system over the last three years. Why? Because Ronald Reagan has decided that he has much to gain and almost nothing to lose by extending a hand toward the adversaries whom he formerly termed "the focus of evil in the modern world." Beginning this week with a special address from the East Room, Reagan will execute what one aide describes as a "theoretical shift."

As thus predicted, President Reagan delivered his new lines at an hour when they could be heard most conveniently in Europe and Russia; a complete about-face. And, as though those opposite numbers in Moscow had heard and were ready to respond; to Reagan's words of appeasement and ready-to-forgiveness, Andrei Gromyko answered with one of the toughest, most bellicose, most violent addresses delivered since the time when Nikita Khrushchev pounded the table with his shoe to emphasize the fact that they would bury us. The Washington Post, itself most adept at Newspeak, reported from Stockholm that "Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko assailed the 'aggressive foreign policy' of the Reagan Administration in one of his most vitriolic speeches in decades....Gromyko stressed in his address to the 35-nation meeting on European security and disarmament that the deployment of new U.S. nuclear missiles in Western Europe has rendered negotiations on arms limitation 'pointless.'...depicted deployment of the missiles as arising from 'maniacal plans'....(gave) a flat rejection of Reagan's appeal for improvement in U.S.-Soviet relations - an appeal that was treated with sarcasm by the Soviet minister."

One might say that Reagan's new role portrayed appeasement, while Gromyko's role was one of intensified attack. President Reagan also appeared in his new role on the South Lawn of the White House where Chinese Communist Prime Minister Zhao Ziyang was being entertained royally. Said President Reagan, "Is it not delightful to have friends come from afar?" In his previous role President Reagan's "friends from afar" came from the National Republic of China on Taiwan. He had no "friendly" words to speak of the most brutal of all of the Communist totalitarian States. We are indebted to columnist John Lofton for reminding his readers of some of the statements Ronald Reagan had made in past years regarding Red China and Republican Taiwan. Examples:

* In one of his nationally syndicated radio commentaries in May 1978, Mr. Reagan said: "Hong Kong could, of course, be swallowed up by Communist China in a second, but it is a necessary window to the outside world. You can't help but wonder how the Communist leaders can look through that window at the miracle of free enterprise without realizing how stupid they are to stick with the idiocy of Karl Marx."

* In another radio commentary in December 1978, Mr. Reagan declared that the regime of Mao Tse-tung's successors "is still authoritarian and repressive, a statist monopoly founded on violence and propaganda and destructive of the humane tradition of the Chinese people themselves."

* In another radio commentary in January 1979, Mr. Reagan observed: "I've talked of our betrayal of the 17 million Chinese on Taiwan -- haven't we also betrayed millions and millions of Chinese on the mainland who lived a dream of one day regaining freedom? We have legitimized the denial of their human rights." After quoting a series of such statements by Reagan regarding the two Chinas, Mr. Lofton ended his column with a quote from the 1970 book, "How Communists Negotiate," by retired Navy Admiral C. Turner Joy who for 10 months headed the U.S. negotiating team during the Korean War truce talks. Said Lofton, "The President would be wise to remember what Adm. Joy said: 'Never concede anything to the communists for nothing, merely to make progress'."

But conceding things to the Communists seems to be the order of the day; to Red China, to Red Russia, and to Red Cuba if the Kissinger Report is to be analyzed carefully. While Zhao was in Washington the Reagan Administration made deals with Zhao in transfers of technology, deals to enhance Red China's industrial development which automatically enhanced China's military development (at the cost to American taxpayers). Zhao and Reagan "saw eye to eye on a number of foreign policy issues." In short, as with other visits of other Communist leaders to the White House, Zhao got what he came to get, Reagan gave things that betray the national interest. And Secretary of State George Pratt Shultz was prepared to make the same kind of concessions to the USSR, and may have done so since he and Gromyko talked for seven hours and no report was made concerning what they talked about.

In one sense, this all has to do with the fact that this is an election year. For three years President Reagan has been permitted to say truthful things about the Communist Hierarchies. But all the Soviets did was quit talking and keep growing. A change in Republican tactics seemed called for since it isn't time to put another Democrat in the White House, and it's best if Reagan is re-elected by an honest majority vote, since the Ruling Elite seems determined that he's going to be re-elected, honestly or otherwise. So, now these real rulers must get the USSR back into the act "as antithesis to capitalism's thesis," and the best way to accomplish this in the short run is to offer an American-Communist thaw, have it rejected (antithesis), and go on to the next step in the "merging of the nations" (ultimate synthesis). But permit us to emphasize this is a short run policy. For, regardless of how things seem to have changed at the global level, there's really nothing new. This was evidenced in President Reagan's "theoretical shift" as expressed in his speech to Europe and Eurasia. After much professionally delivered rhetoric, President Reagan summed it all up in these words:

A SUBSCRIBER WRITES:

Dear DON BELL-ers:

You are getting worse. I have told you often, that your REPORTS upset me; but it makes no impression. The one of January 6th, "The War Over Control of the Schools," shows no improvement. Enclosed is a check for $40 for 200 of them. At least other people will share my discomfort. . . .

Our policy toward the Soviet Union, a policy of credible deterrence, peaceful competition and constructive cooperation, will serve our two nations and people everywhere. It is a policy not just for this year, but for the long term."

There had been the popularized Cold War, Containment, Detente, Mutual Assured Destruction (MAD), and other terms, titles and acronyms to explain U.S. policy toward the Soviet Union. But deterrence was presented as something spanking new. Note the appeal of the trilogy: credible deterrence, peaceful competition and constructive cooperation. It has a ring to it. A ring that rang this Bell (sorry, sometimes we can't resist punning); because what Reagan was offering as something new in foreign policy toward the Soviet Union was something that Henry Kissinger had promoted when he headed the National Security Council under Richard Nixon. We looked it up, and there it was on page 12 of Kissinger's book, "The Necessity for Choice":

"Deterrence seeks to prevent a given course by making it seem less attractive than all possible alternatives."

Kissinger broke this down into three parts: minimum deterrence, nuclear deterrence, and strategic deterrence. Reagan's sole contribution is to combine all three into one category which he calls credible deterrence; which is as vague in real meaning as are most of Kissinger's books. But Phyllis Schlafly and Chester Ward gave a somewhat clearer definition while including, unknowingly, references to Reagan's "peaceful competition" and "constructive cooperation". Beginning on page 363 of "Kissinger on the Couch," the co-authors explain:

Dr. Kissinger and Richard Nixon apparently convinced themselves that the new and revolutionary theory of deterrence, i.e., making "the rewards of restraint" outweigh the gains of aggression, has persuaded Soviet rulers that their self-interest will best be served by not using against the United States whatever margin of strategic superiority they enjoy now or in the future. Dr. Kissinger purported to believe that he has convinced the Soviet policymakers and planners that the fastest and surest road by which the USSR can attain the status of the outstanding economic superpower is only by active partnership with the United States, that is, by accepting a "vested interest" in sharing all our "economic growth" resources, especially our industrial, agricultural, electronic, fuel-production, and space technologies. This type of tangible assistance can be skimmed off only from a "going-concern" partner-nation -- not from a nation of nuclear rubble or from a nation disrupted by military occupation."

Still confused? Well, in plainer American we think it means if we deter the use of nuclear bombs and military aggression, and instead compete against each other peaceably, while at the same time cooperating in economic and industrial growth instead of military and geographical growth, we can live together on the same planet without blowing each other up. "Merging" the two superpowers is what Kissinger really meant, and what Reagan implies, without using the key word or exposing the bottom line. In any case it didn't work as Kissinger and Nixon planned, or as Reagan plans, because the Kissinger-Nixon deterrence evolved (or devolved) into the policy of Mutual Assured Destruction (MAD). And with the Reagan revival of the Kissinger proposal, nothing is new; only the names have been changed to protect the Ruling Elite.

And how those names have been changed! Research expert Antony Sutton refers back to the 1950s when the first of the series was written by CFR-member George Kennan at the request of "The Order" member Dean Acheson, which became National Security Council Document 68, and which came to be known as the "Containment Policy." Mr. Sutton quotes from page 22 of NSC/68:

In "containment" it is desirable to exert pressure in a fashion which will avoid so far as possible directly challenging Soviet prestige, to keep open the possibility for the USSR to retreat before pressure with a minimum loss of face and to secure political advantage from the failure of the Kremlin to yield or take advantage of the openings we leave it.

NSC/68 has been "replaced by still higher classified directives" but the basic no-win policy continues, and it can only be seen as a top level plan to force the United States into ultimate surrender." Surrender to World Authority and the planned "merging" of the US and the USSR. For example, Department of State Publication 7432 of October 1972 states: "Our (foreign) policy is:

*To bring about a closer association of the more Industrialized democracies of Western Europe, North America, and Asia - specifically Japan - in promoting the prosperity and security of the entire free world; in other words, "Progress Through Partnership." (Hence the creation of the Trilateral Commission).

* To help the less developed areas of the world carry through their revolution of modernization without sacrificing their independence or their pursuit of democracy; that is, "A Revolution of Freedom."

* To assist in the gradual emergence of a genuine world community, based on co-operation and law, through the establishment and development of such organs as the United Nations, the World Court, the World Bank and Monetary Fund, and other global and regional institutions; that is, "A World Community Under Law."

* To strive tirelessly to end the arms race and reduce the risk of war, to narrow the areas of conflict with the communist bloc, and to continue to spin the infinity of threads that bind peace together; that is, to win "Peace Through Perseverance."

We could continue through the years until today when we revert back to Henry Kissinger's deterrence policy as polished by President Reagan: Credible Deterrence, peaceful competition and constructive cooperation; which is just another way of defining total surrender to the New World Order, with the hope of the Elite that the USSR will agree to the merger.

And there is nothing new; only the names have been changed. Thirty years ago, when we first began this weekly report, the editor of the now defunct The Southern Conservative, wrote to us words that are as true today as they were when written in 1953. The statement began: "Under the strange and bewildering concept of governing processes prevailing today, it makes little difference whether the successful candidate for the post of Chief Executive carries the standard of the Republican Party or wears the Democratic label. And no matter how sound the program on which he runs; no matter how rosy or appealing the campaign promises he makes to the people and no matter how sincerely he subscribes to his inaugural oath to uphold the American Constitution, he finds that his authority to make major decisions involving the destiny of his country, is surrendered at the White House door. From that day forward, an invisible master stands beside him and until he takes his final departure from the Mansion on Pennsylvania Avenue, he is never free from this menacing shadow....The Unseen Power that is fast closing in over our own and other so-called free nations, is constituted of many men in many lands and was born of the innate hatred of regimented minds for any system of government based on Christian principles, the dignity of the individual and the incentive of profit in a free and competitive economy."

THE "HUDDLED MASSES" AND "WRETCHED REFUSE"

They're building a scaffold. But not, as of old, on Court House grounds for the execution of some guilty person. This one is being erected on Bedloe Island, for the restoration and beautifying of that copper clad gift from revolutionary France, the Statue of Liberty. As they refurbish this symbolic figure one could wish that they might find a new sonnet to replace the one on the bronze plaque at the foot of the statue's pedestal. It may have seemed fit and proper when first written by the Russian Jewish immigrant, Emma Lazarus (1849-87), which concludes: "Give me your tired, your poor,/ Your huddled masses yearning to breathe free,/ The wretched refuse of your teeming shore./ Send these, the homeless, tempest-tost to me,/ I lift my lamp beside the golden door!" In 1885 there was room for the huddled masses and the wretched refuse. But today there are problems not thought-of a century ago. The latest official count shows that in 1982, 819,919 Mexicans crossed illegally into the United States, and 833,200 of other unclassified nationalities crossed into this country. Boat people from Vietnam and Southeast Asia, from Cuba and Haiti, from other countries. But few from Western Europe and the British Isles, Australia and New Zealand, The Republic of South Africa and other lands where Caucasians live and govern. Certainly many, perhaps most of these immigrants are worthy and welcome. But others; terrorists, criminals, spies, saboteurs, diseased wretches smuggled in and sent with the better class Cubans who came to escape the hells of Communism; these have begun to make of American cities what the earlier influx of aliens made of the cities of Britain.

More of this matter later. But, while recalling the scaffolding on Bedloe, or Liberty Island as it now is called, there is yet another type of construction made necessary by this influx of undesirables. Alice, a political insider who must remain anonymous in order to tell tales out of school about things in Potomac Land, writes a column for The Washington Times. In her January 17th column she wrote: "What with all the strange constructions going on at the entrances to government buildings, Alice feels an obligation to say something about terrorism....The folks who put up the stone urns at the entrance to the White House are the same ones who would have you believe that Maj. Gen. Robert G. Ownby pinned a note to his chest, bloodied his face, tied his hands behind his back, and then hanged himself. Come to think of it, the same Senate minds who said there was no longer a need for the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee are the ones installing all of those screening devices at the entrances to the the Senate Office Buildings. And in the House of Representatives, the same people who got rid of the House Un-American Activities Committee -- oh, well, you get the picture...."

So far there have been no Beirut-type massacres in the United States. Only detonations of bombs of lesser force have occurred, and an occasional assassination has been successful. But there have been attempts. Washington Inquirer of January 20 carried a UPI dispatch, datelined Phoenix, Arizona, which stated: "Palestinian terrorists stored enough explosives near Washington, D.C. to level a city block in an apparent plot to kill President Reagan and Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin in 1981, a newspaper reports. Terrorists secretly acquired the explosives and remote-control detonation devices in Arizona and California, the Arizona Republic reported last week. Federal authorities refused to discuss the bombing conspiracy publicly, citing national security. The newspaper said components for two bombs were stored in a locker near Washington by a Palestinian sympathizer the day before Begin arrived for talks with Reagan. The plot may have been abandoned because security at the White House was increased that month after intelligence reports indicated a Libyan-trained hit squad was en route to the United States to kill Reagan. The explosives were found eight months later by an executive of Alexandria, Va., who opened a storage facility because the rent was overdue. Palestinian terrorists worked through intermediaries in Phoenix and San Diego to gather bomb components, including 100 pounds of explosives, blasting caps and two-way radios, according to Federal records. Palestinian activist Abdul-Hafiz Mohammed Nassar placed the explosives in the Alexandria locker Sept. 8, 1981, the records said....Nassar, 31, is a Jordanian who operated an Indian jewelry store in Albuquerque, N.M. until his arrest in 1982." (From Washington Inquirer, weekly tabloid published by Council for the Defense of Freedom, P.O.Box 28526, Washington, D.C. 20038. $30 per year).

The above is but one of many similar incidents, mostly unpublished, in which terrorist attacks are planned, sometimes carried out, on government buildings and establishments. Hence the precautions now taken, especially in Washington, D.C. But in addition to terrorist threats, there also is an invasion going on, both by sea in the Gulf States, and by land in Texas, California, Arizona and New Mexico. These States are to a great extent dependent upon Mexican migrant labor, and these immigrants are being influenced and used for purposes inimical to the security of the United States. The economic conditions of life in Mexico and the political conditions of life in many Central American and Caribbean States are so pressing that an exodus from the sea and across the Mexican border has reached a stage at which it might be compared with the great migrations of peoples who swept across Europe and throughout the old Roman Empire -- such as the Goths, Visigoths and Vandals who destroyed a civilization. Columnist Georgie Ann Geyer investigated, reported:

"The (Mexican) border is becoming more and more a jurisdictional figment...it is dissolving...We are being thrown into the midst of all kinds of problems that are simply incapable of resolution in any traditional manner...People have got to understand border cities...You've got a San Isidro area in San Diego called 'the combat zone' where two million aliens are jammed against San Diego...Arizona, Texas, Colorado and even California have begun their own policy discussions with Mexico...It is increasingly wild in the new wild West...The big issues here as elsewhere are not the old power political-geopolitical issues. What we are seeing is a clear example of one of the new soft geopolitical issues that are going to consume our attention in the future...population pressure, the massive movements of peoples all over the world across uncontrolled borders...Our own Southwest (and Southeast-Ed.) becomes ever more fragmented and incoherent...we could and will have our very own Lebanon here."

Here is a problem for which our government has found no solution; and fanning the flames of revolution are Cuba and the USSR and the Liberation Theology that is being preached by the New Catholic Church. Speaking to the 50th Annual Convention of the Texas Farm Labor Conference in Houston, Texas last Nov. 28th, Mrs. Genevieve H. Coonly of El Paso said: "I was born and reared a Roman Catholic. I was, and am deeply, devoted to the Catholic faith. Let me quote former Congresswoman, former Ambassador, and convert to Catholicism Clare Booth Luce. who said, "...I am afraid the Church has as little knowledge of the economic system as it does of high technology...because there is a distinct belief within the Church that the answer to all of our problems is socialism." The entire thrust of this New Church is aimed at the Hispanic and it is decidedly revolutionary...I first became aware of the problem...in the 1960's when our parish priest had involved himself in some of the Civil Rights marches in Washington. At that time he gave a sermon comparing Dr. Martin Luther King to Christ. A number of our flock took exception to this concept, and the priest who considered himself a liberal and a progressive, angrily told us 'Just you wait until every Mexican American across Texas, New Mexico, Colorado, Arizona and California, turns against you. It will make a black man look white to you."

Accompanying this Liberation Theology drive among Hispanics is the "Industrial Areas Foundation" which is headed by the pro-communist agitator Saul Alinsky. He heads a War For Change program which has as its theme the idea that "the community must change." In recruiting organizers and agents, he tells them, "...First rub raw the resentments of the people in the community...search out controversies and issues...people must be made to feel frustrated, defeated, lost and fruitless..The job of the organizer is to maneuver and bait the establishment so that it will publicly attack him as a dangerous enemy. A revolutionary organizer must shake up the prevailing patterns of the people's lives...agitate...create disenchantment and discontent with the current values to produce a passion for change." Here can be seen the direct application of the Marxian adaptation of the Hegelian Principle: 1, Find or create a problem (thesis); 2, Generate opposition to the problem (antithesis); 3, Offer a pre-arranged solution to the problem (synthesis). On pro-communist agitator Saul Alinsky's board of directors in his "Industrial Areas Foundation" are such personalities as Archbishop Patricio Flores of the Archdiocese of San Antonio who also is a director of the radical Mexican American Cultural Center; Barry Munoz, Coordinator Lay Ministries, Executive Counsel of the Episcopal Church, New York City; Bishop John H. Alms, Second Episcopal District of the American Church, Washington, D.C.; Rev. Claude Black, Pastor, Mount Zion Baptist Church, San Antonio; Marvin Worth, Burlington, Mass. (listed as President); Gordon Sherman, Mill Valley, California (Vice President!); and others in similar positions of leadership in the radical movement.

The heretical doctrine called Liberation Theology seems to stem from the "Mexican American Cultural Center," founded about eleven years ago, has a yearly budget of one million dollars supplied by The National Council of Catholic Bishops, The National Endowment for the Arts, National Endowment for the Humanities, The National Council of Churches, a long list of other contributors including the Rockefeller Foundation. According to the 1979 publication called MACC NEWS (now renamed (VISION), "Catholics and Protestants met at the Mexican American Cultural Center...to re-examine their faith...summoned to a new communion in the spirit of Jesus Christ... (for) a new commitment to the poor among our people. The participants included Mexican Americans, Puerto Ricans, Latin Americans, Cubans...The conference was sponsored by the Commission on Faith and Order of the National Council of Churches of Christ in U.S.A., the Hispanic Task Force of J.S.A.C., the Theology of the Americas and the Spanish-Speaking Secretariat of the U.S. National Council of Catholic Bishops." The real reason for such conferences: to promote this Liberation Theology, which is spreading like a festering disease throughout Latin America and the United States. It is Communism in Christian clothing.

Father Gustavo Gutierrez of Lima, Peru is the most important of the Latin American priests teaching at MACC. He perverts The Word shamelessly to promote revolution. He says if we are to achieve salvation we must "liberate the oppressed from the Oppressor (sic)", and if by violent means, then so be it. He says the goal is the creation of the 'new man' (a Soviet phrase); and "We are witness to the birth of a new humanism...By working, transforming the world, breaking out of servitude, building a just society, man forges himself." Gutierrez preaches that the world will become a complete Utopia when it is created by the revolution. "Group think" is to replace the concept of each of us being individually accountable to God. And "Only Socialism can enable Latin America to achieve true development...The subordination of private property to the social good has been stressed...for private ownership of capital leads to the dichotomy of capital and labor, to the superiority of the capitalist over the laborer, to the exploitation of man by man (this being the gospel according to Marx)."

The war hero, Senator Jeremiah Denton, heads the Senate Subcommittee on Terrorism. He lashed out at liberation theology in a recent article in The Washington Times. After conducting a series of hearings on the subject, Sen. Denton concluded that liberation theologians have "expropriated traditional Christian beliefs and doctrines, added a strong dose of Cuban-style Marxist teaching, and produced an effective but camouflaged army of religious-cum-revolutionaries." "To the liberation theologian," said the Senator, "spreading the gospel means establishing a messianic solidarity with the oppressed and providing active assistance to all forms of class struggle. In practice, it means molding culture in the image of Cuba, Zimbabwe, and (former) Grenada." Sen. Denton told how a baptism performed by Fr. Cardenal, a liberation theologian in Nicaragua, "provides a startling example of just how far the syncretism of Christianity and Marxism has gone....Instead of saying, 'Do you renounce Satan and his works,' Cardenal said, 'Do you renounce Somoza imperialism and capitalism?'"

SUMMATION. 100 years ago when "Liberty Enlightening the World" was unveiled on Bedloe Island, there was room and a fair degree of toleration for those "huddled masses" and "wretched refuse". Immigrants for the most part came seeking a better way, not bringing revolutionary doctrines that would "upset the world". Into States bordering the Gulf and Mexico, farm and ranch hands came, worked, took their pay home to families and homeland. Now they come to stay, organized, unionized, socialized. Before Castro traditional Catholicism prevailed generally. But Communism and pre-Vatican II Catholicism wouldn't mix. So a new theology was devised to make the marriage possible. Then, when the "God Is Dead" syndrome of the 60's died of itself, the World Council of Churches sought a new way to synthesize Marxism and Christianity; and Liberation Theology became a world-wide weapon for Satanic purpose. Salvation was transformed into political liberation. Repentance became denunciation of the status quo. The Holy Spirit was replaced by the human spirit. The Church became the World Community. Conversion was translated into social action. So that, as Dr. William LeRoy of Faith Theological Seminary in Philadelphia said: "The challenge of liberation theology is the greatest challenge to freedom that the world has ever witnessed. It is a challenge to the survival, not only of all the free nations of the world, but of the true Christian Church and the fulfillment of its mission upon the earth". And where are the watchmen to guard our gates?

RE: BLOATED BUDGETS & FLOATING DEFICITS

The worst kept secret of the year is now public knowledge. Ronald Reagan and George Bush are going to run for re-election. Shortly after that public admission came another one, this time to the Congress. This election-year federal budget is going to be the highest in U.S. history; $925 billion. And since the government expects to collect only about $670 billion, there'll be an estimated deficit of about $180 billion-plus. Estimated because this is a spendthrift Congress and the President doesn't want any general tax increase to cover deficits. Higher taxes would just add fire to the present tax revolution. Incidentally, one of the biggest bills will be that $164.7 billion tab in interest on the public debt. By way of comparison, just 20 years ago President John Kennedy managed our first $100 billion budget. Now our budget deficit is nearly twice the amount of the whole budget in 1964. And the budget itself is nine times higher. Overleaf is a statement of your personal debt to the federal government, as computed before the new budget proposal was announced, by the National Taxpayers Union, 325 Pennsylvania Avenue, S.E., Washington, D.C. 20003.

We keep hearing politicians and even well-meaning citizens crying out for a balanced budget, even a Constitutional Amendment demanding a balanced budget. But our one-time Constitutional Republic has become a Welfare State on the way to becoming a Corporate Socialist (Fascist) State within a New World Order, and a balanced budget is simply impossible. Donald Lambro, in an article published in the January 28th Human Events, explained this in a manner that may hit all of us. Under the title "We All Play a Part in the Federal Deficit," he wrote and we quote:

* * * * *

If you want to discover the real reason for the continuing growth of government, write a column that challenges some federal benefit or program and wait for the response. Invariably, the special interests will beat a path to your door. These special interests, however, are not just the lobbying behemoths -- the teachers, unions, business, etc. -- that so heavily influence the spending decisions in this city. They also include all Americans who receive some special subsidy, benefit, service or goody from government that they deem vital to their personal interests. Since beginning this column, which has sought to investigate and expose what Washington is doing with our money, nothing has made a greater impact on this reporter than the intensity with which people will defend that part of government from which they derive some benefit.

I'm not talking about vital and necessary services and benefits for the poor, the elderly, the ill or the handicapped. On the contrary, I mean all the others who write in to complain that if you take away any government service or benefit they receive, their world will collapse.

Question the need for federally subsidized public radio and the letters pour in from people who would be left without a good classical music station in their area. "It's the only station in my area that plays music I enjoy," says a reader. "Don't take it away from us." Challenge the continuing need for tourist industry subsidies, and a lobbyist is on the phone with a raft of arguments about the jobs that tourism provides and the need for continuing federal support. "It's such a small amount," he says of the $16 million taxpayer subsidy. Complain that the military commissaries provide subsidized cut-rate groceries to young, pensioned military people in second career jobs, and be prepared for a flood of angry letters saying that taxpayers owe them this food for the rest of their lives -- no matter what their income. Hit the Export-Import Bank and its unconscionable subsidized loans to big multinational corporations and usually moderate and intelligent businessmen will argue that our economy will not survive without such subsidies. Attack federal grants to well-endowed art institutions and orchestras backed by wealthy patrons, and you are accused of being against the arts. Never mind that the arts thrived long before government got into the act. If you dare to pick on loan guarantees or direct loans to a select group of small businesses favored by the Small Business Administration, it's tantamount to attacking motherhood. "We depend on these programs," one irate small businessman complained. The fact that SBA helps less than two percent of the nation's small business enterprises is apparently irrelevant.

On and on it goes, from special interest to special interest. There is no program or benefit too small that some interest group somewhere will not fight for its continuation and steady expansion. The truth, of course, is that all of us are special interests to one degree or another. Few among us want to give up that subsidy or goody once it is enacted. Yes, there are those who write in to say, "Keep after them, Lambro. We're with you." But for every supporter there are dozens of others who aren't willing to give up their treasured benefits -- whether it's revenue sharing for the rich of Grosse Point, Mich., or federally provided overseas insurance protection for Fortune 500 companies that invest abroad.

This is the sad and frustrating reality behind the budgetary impasse we now see between Congress and the White House. Despite a string of yearly $200 billion deficits as far as the eye can see, our lawmakers fear the special interests among their constituencies more than they fear economy-weakening deficits. We can blame our lawmakers, and they surely are very much to blame because they approve each and every appropriation. But if we want to see the real culprit for rising federal spending, we need only to look in the mirror.

* * * * *

This being an election year, during the next few months, there'll be much said and written about the need for budget cutting and deficit elimination. But, because of those special interest groups, as well as the failure of politicians to look in the mirror, there'll be much proposing but little disposing. One of the more serious efforts has been prepared by the Heritage Foundation, a conservative think tank that has access to the White House -- so long as Republicans live in the White House, that is. President Reagan is said to be taking the Heritage Report seriously and has asked his aides and associates to study and recommend. The report optimistically predicts that as much as $100 billion could be saved if its proposals are carried out. Among its major recommendations are the following:

- * Eliminate the $4.5 billion revenue sharing program, and the $440 million assigned to various urban development programs. The study says States probably will be showing a budget surplus while the U.S. Treasury is deeply in debt. Therefore, "Washington should not be fixing potholes in the backstreets of the nation's cities."
- * Defense spending could be cut down about $7 billion simply by restructuring military pensions and benefits, "reforming procurement, and closing or consolidating unnecessary or low-priority bases and facilities."
- * Reduce U.S. contributions to the United Nations.
- * Restructure federal pensions so they match private pensions.
- * Eliminate mass-transit subsidies.
- * Abolish agricultural price support payments.
- * Eliminate interstate highway construction and shift highway maintenance responsibility to the States.
- * Cut down on Army Corps of Engineers and Environment Protection Agency programs.
- * Close down inefficient Amtrak lines.

The report says: "Needed...is a complete reassessment of the proper role of federal spending, and a multiyear strategic plan to restructure programs to fit that role." After all these recommendations there still remains the fact that federal planning is a

INSTRUCTIONS TO A JURY

A bill has been brought before the Arizona State Legislature which would bring the traditional rights of jurors "out of the closet." State Senator Wayne Stump introduced the measure, which aims at informing jurors of their right to judge both the facts and the law in criminal cases. It is general practice in today's courts not to instruct jurors of this traditional, and in some States Constitutionally guaranteed, right of jurors. Key provisions of the proposed legislation include:

The Jury Commission Shall Provide to Each Person Selected for a Criminal Trial Jury Panel a Copy of the Following Statement:

1. The judge assigned to your case is a public employee.
 2. You, the jury, are the highest ranking officer in this court.
 3. In our country the people are sovereign and the government is the servant of the people. The government derives its powers from the consent of the governed.
 4. Our form of government is not a democracy but a Constitutional Republic.
 5. The Constitution of the United States is a law which was written and ratified by the people to limit the power of the government.
 6. As a member of the jury you are a check against the government so that our system of checks and balances can function.
 7. The law explained to you by the judge was enacted and is administered by public servants, and as a member of the jury you have the right and duty to nullify this law if you find it unjust.
 8. Each juror by himself has more power than the president, the congress or the total judiciary of this nation.
 9. If you, as the highest officer of this court, feel that the government servants involved in your case have committed any violations of the United States or Arizona Constitution you should bring this violation to the attention of the judge.
 10. You, as a member of the jury, are judge of all law and all facts in your case.

form of socialism, and we'll still have the Welfare State.

Even more optimistic and perhaps better planned than the Heritage Foundation Report is the Grace Report, named after J. Peter Grace, the New York industrialist who chaired the President's Private Sector Survey on Cost Control, spent 18 months preparing the report, questioned 161 corporate executives and more than 2,000 other volunteers in making 2,500 recommendations; a $75 million survey which was financed by the private sector, not with government funds. The main theme of the Grace Report, says its author, is that "the government is run horribly." According to The Review of the News of February 1, Mr. Grace gave a commencement address at Cardinal Newman College in May 1981, in which he said that "a lot of unpleasant things happen to a nation -- and its economy -- when it tries to substitute the paternalism of government for the judgment and hard work of its citizens." Grace blames Congress for much of the mess the Nation is in. "I blame them because we have 160 committees in Congress and Congress has been codified basically along special-interest lines. It's a club. The city people vote for food stamps; the farm people vote for farm spending. These things are all traded off." Noting that appeals for congressional restraint in spending bring forth cries for compassion for the less fortunate, Mr. Grace says "there is a great deal of difference between real compassion and Washington's brand of compassion by proxy. Compassion by proxy -- taking what's yours, giving it to someone else, then asking for more -- works only in two places. In heaven, where it is not needed; and in hell, where they already have it." And Peter Grace begins to hit home when he speaks of how we got where we are. He says: "One hundred years ago in this country the majority of people wanted clean lives, clean communities, and to be able to give their children a proper education, which meant discipline. You can't be educated without discipline. Now a lot of people don't want proper discipline; they don't even want to read things that discourage permissiveness. The more you become undisciplined, the more you become selfish. The more selfish you become, the more envious you become. The more envious you become, the more hatred you have; and the more hatred you have, the more vicious you become. That's what it is; a vicious circle." Which sounds like one way of saying that our Nation got into the mess it's in because of we, the people. When we apply all of this to our bloating budget and floating deficit, we need to refer back to that statement in the middle of Donald Lambro's article which we quoted. He wrote:

"I'm not talking about vital and necessary services and benefits for the poor, the elderly, the ill or the handicapped. On the contrary, I mean all the others who write in to complain that if you take away any government service or benefit they receive, the world will collapse."

But that's where Lambro, and all of us, are wrong. Because, in a Constitutional Republic it is not the duty of, indeed it is forbidden government, to feed the poor, care for the elderly, the ill and the handicapped. Both the Bible and the Constitution make it plain just where the care of these people should lay. And yet we all, beginning with Social Security and continuing onward into other socialistic practices, must plead guilty. If we want to stop this march toward Socialism and into the New World Order, as a first step let us look in the mirror and say to ourselves: "And why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye, but considerest not the beam that is in thine own eye? Or how wilt thou say to thy brother, Let me pull out the mote out of thine eye; and behold, a beam is in thine own eye?"

DROWNING IN DEBT . . . AND BLOOD

Some anniversaries are hard to overlook. It was exactly thirty-nine years ago, to the very day, that an Army tank battered down the gate, roared onto the compound, with hundreds of GIs pouring in behind the tank, to kill or capture our jailors and liberate us after three years, two months, and ten days of dangerous existence in Santo Tomas, the Japanese Prisoner of War Camp Number One, in Manila, the Philippines. A war then winding to an end in the Far East reminds us of a war now smouldering and ready to become a full-scale conflagration in the Middle East; one that could involve more Americans dead or wounded, in yet another no-win war. An incident that occurred around the first of March in 1945 reminds us of another similarity. Instead of going to a hospital for recuperation and recovery, we had gone back to work as a war correspondent and, since battles were still raging in the North of Luzon Island, we and Bill Hearst, Jr. - and we think the late Bob Considine - was the third member of the party - had commandeered a Jeep and were driving north out of Manila to observe and report. The road ran alongside a railroad track and we suddenly came upon a spot where two freight trains coming from opposite directions on the same track, had run headlong into each other. The locomotives were buckled to form a verticle triangle, and empty freight cars were scattered for rods and rods in both directions. Bill Hearst (you'll excuse his expression) looked at the wreckage, shook his head and said somberly, "What a helluva way to run a railroad." In a similar vein, we might look at the Lebanese horror and think, "What a way to run a war." We're not speaking of the Lebanese. The people living in that part of the world have been fighting each other even before Joshua conquered the land and brought a very temporary peace some 3,500 years ago. It has been the interference of foreigners that has made it all so horribly ridiculous. Lebanon was created by France, was made up of various sects of Islam, Druze, Parsees, Christians, Bahal followers, etc., all different religions bound together politically. It has never worked. And when economics was added to the religions and the politics, all within one geographical area, it couldn't work. But the rulers of the world kept trying, and are still trying. The present result is another civil war with the Maronite Christians backed by Israell and multinational forces, warring against Shi-ite and Druze Militias backed by Syria which in turn is backed by the USSR. Presently a civil war, potentially a war like those of Korea and Vietnam may be in prospect.

Our direct involvement is also similar. In Vietnam we went into the war replacing the French. In Korea we went into the war under the command of the UN. In Lebanon we entered the war to relieve the Israells. Results in figures written in blood in this third horror: on April 18 last year a suicide truck bomber attacked the U.S. Embassy in Beirut, killing 63 people. Six months later, early Sunday morning, October 23, two horrifying explosions took place, one killing 241 U.S. Marines, the other taking the lives of 59 French paratroopers. Two weeks later, on November 4, a suicide bomber struck at an Israeli military post in Tyre, Lebanon, killing 61. A little over a month later, on December 12, a dump truck packed with explosives was driven into the U.S. Embassy compound in Kuwait City, killing 5 and wounding 37. Other targets in Kuwait were the French Embassy, the airport, an American housing complex, and a water control and power station. During all these months, U.S. Marines were pinned down in almost defenseless positions, and the death and wounded toll kept climbing. And since President Reagan's order is for a "phased" removal of Marines, we suspect the toll of dead and wounded is still mounting as this is being written, and as it is being read. Furthermore, this slow, months-long deployment of Marines to the ships offshore will offer little added protection, since kamikaze attacks are a clear and present danger. After that naval bombardment, biggest since Vietnam, not to protect the Marines but to assist a Lebanese army no longer in control because of wholesale desertions to the Shi-ite militia, similar retaliation might be expected. Other Nations may consider that eight-hour shelling an act of war.

This once had the cover of being a "multinational force." But the British contingent has departed, the Italians are leaving, the French are demanding replacement by a non-existent UN force. Now it's dwindled down to what many will call a budding war between the United States and Syria, the latter acting as a surrogate of the USSR. Complicating the situation is the general unrest and violence that permeates the whole Middle East. The Camp David Agreement between Egypt, Israel and the U.S. has managed to keep Egypt neutral but nothing more; other noncommunist Arab states have rejected the pact and made of Egypt something of a pariah among nations. The PLO has changed its locations but remains active, and is recognized as a legal negotiating agency by Jordan. For more than three years a bloody war has raged between Iran and Iraq. Syria supports Iran in the struggle while France is Iraq's main Western support. France sent five Super Etendard fighter-bombers to Iraq to be added to some 30 long-distance bombers Iraq has already been using in an attempt to destroy Iran's ability to deliver oil to tankers that dare to approach Iran's oil terminal complex. In retaliation, Iran still threatens to block the Strait of Hormuz should its oil facilities be wiped out.

Behind all this apparent terrorism and open warfare lies the fact that here is a religious war in which foreign governments, especially the United States directly and the Soviet Union indirectly, have interfered politically and economically. To the militant Shi-ites, this is a Jihad, a Holy War. As Gene H. Hogberg observed in an article in Plain Truth Magazine: "The revolutionary government of Iran is intent on propelling its 'holy war' throughout the largely Sunni Arab world. Whether the Shi-ite revolution overthrows the states and tiny sheikhdoms of the Gulf largely depends on the outcome of the Iran-Iraq war. Throughout the Arab world, governments adhering to the more moderate Sunni branch of Islam are becoming more strict in enforcing religious observances, all in an attempt to insulate themselves from the radical fundamentalist Shi-ite influence. The Sunni Arab states may not succeed. Otto von Habsburg told The Plain Truth that 'the Shi-ites are a revolutionary element right now...they believe that (the) Mahdi (their messiah) is about to approach, that there will be a united world directed by the Shi-ites, that Khomeini is the prophet of the approaching Mahdi; and consequently, we have here a fanatical reaction...If the Iranians win against the Iraqis, you can't stop it anymore...I don't say that the Shia will rule all the way to Morocco, but there will be explosions everywhere and there will be another unsettling element entering into the (world) picture'." Even more unsettling is the fact that the USSR is deeply involved, in that most of its subjects in that part of the Soviet Union are of the Islamic faith; this despite the Communist attempts to destroy all religions within their borders.

But why is the United States government so deeply and so dangerously involved in all of this? Because, in the first place, there is oil and other resources that an Inner Circle of Internationalists wants to own, or at least to exploit and control for profit. This Inner Circle (called the "Circle of Initiates" by Carroll Quigley) utilizes the Hegelian Principle in its dealings with Nations: pits the United States (the thesis, representing Capitalism) against the Soviet Union (the antithesis representing Communism) to produce something planned (the synthesis) by the "Circle of Initiates," later known as "The Round Table", of which the Council on Foreign Relations is an integral part. A second reason for the mess in which the United States government finds itself in the Middle East might be a desire on the part of the Inner Circle to permit no changes in personnel in the White House and the federal Administration in the November election. But a more important and more probable reason for the current crisis has to do with the financial and economic situation that has been created by the policies of the Federal Reserve System, and the federal adherence for too long to the theories promoted by John Maynard Keynes, a Fabian Socialist. Two things have brought about a near revolution on the part of United States citizens: The size of the federal budget and its dangerous deficit, coupled with high interest rates, unemployment, fear of future inflation, etc.; and secondly: the growing demand that something be done about the Federal Reserve System which has become, in the hands of that Inner Circle, a secret government of the United States, a power structure over which President Reagan has said publicly that he has no control; and a power over which the U.S. Congress fears to assume any control.

Drowning In Debt is the title of a very important article beginning on page 18 of the Feb. 13 U.S. News & World Report. Headlining the fact that "The Impact of a 180-billion-dollar deficit for 1985 already is hitting the stock market, jobs, interest rates -- with more headaches to come," the article notes that interest rates won't go down much if at all; the stock market will drift aimlessly until after the election; plant expansion and new construction will be inhibited by high borrowing costs; job losses will occur in aircraft, heavy equipment, machine tool and other industries; taxes will mount after the November elections; and cheaper imports will continue to hurt sales and employment in U.S. auto, steel, textile and other industries. As we head for a $2 trillion public debt, U.S. News says that "at that rate: Uncle Sam's IOU's will total $6,768 for each man, woman and child at the end of this year and some $8,300 at the end of 1986." For a truer figure concerning the individual's debt, refer to our previous DBR (2/3/84). This "Drowning in Debt" situation, plus a desire on the part of that Inner Circle to have taxpayers take upon themselves the debts occasioned by loans to less developed nations, et al, is to be solved by a new issue of Federal Reserve notes (called currency). This will not happen, of course, until after the November elections; the changeover is expected to occur sometime in 1985, date unannounced but there has been a statement that the new "currency" will be issued and all old "currency" traded in, regardless of what Congress may say or do about it. (Further evidence that the Money Masters are the real rulers of the country (as are the central bankers the real rulers of other industrial nations).

We have written previously (DBR, 12/23/83) about this coming new blue currency. Congressman Ron Paul commented: "I believe the most important reform that can be carried out is not to move from greenbacks to bluebacks, but from green to gold." Dr. Paul, who has long advocated the establishment of the gold standard here in the United States because "it is only the establishment of such a standard that will eliminate the serious problems we have with our monetary system and our economy generally." There's little hope for this in the foreseeable future. But there's every reason that Ron Paul be in a position to continue to present correct solutions, even if they are scoffed at and defeated as has happened so often before. Which means that it is vitally important that Ron Paul be successful in his campaign to take over the Senate seat being vacated by Senator Tower of Texas. If we are to maintain some sanity in the Senate, the election of Ron Paul and the re-election of Jesse Helms are far more important than the election of whomever is to occupy the White House in 1985. In a special background report concerning this new "currency" Ron Paul wrote:

"On November 2, a closed door briefing was held for four members of Congress and interested staff by representatives of the Secret Service, Bureau of Engraving and Printing, the Federal Reserve, and the Treasury....At that meeting...I requested to see samples of the new currency being considered by Treasury and the Federal Reserve. On November 18, Mr. Robert Leuver, the Director of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, and two assistants from Treasury Department showed samples of the new type of currency to me in my office. Among the samples were ten, twenty, and fifty dollar bills and a one dollar bill that displayed the various devices that were under serious consideration, including a security thread, a water mark, a background tint of blue or brown, and a thin film device incorporating a redesigned Federal Reserve System seal which displayed a latent image when the paper bill was tilted at a certain angle....The stated reason for the release of the new currency is anti-counterfeiting. The Treasury discovered in its consumer surveys that the American people would accept such a new currency only for the reason of deterring counterfeiting, not for any other reason. There are, however, possible other considerations involved. Historically, security threads have been used by nations which intend to control the flow of their currency across borders...Another possible consideration is the collection of taxes. If the introduction of new currency were done in an appropriate fashion, there is a possibility that it could be used to flush out the underground economy, which some economists estimate as being 25% of the size of the official economy. The Commissioner of the Internal Revenue Service says that the IRS lost $81 billion in taxes due in 1982, and presumably that figure is growing and is a world-wide problem among advanced industrial nations - precisely those nations that are considering currency exchanges within the next two or three years. "

We mentioned the present revolution against the Federal Reserve System, with the attack being concentrated in the various State Legislatures. Because of the fear of success in such an attack, provision is being considered for certain changes in the Fed. This ties in with the change in currency. Rep. Paul mentioned that new redesigned FRS seal on the sample of the new $1 note. This new seal omits the name of the FRS bank of issue. Which would indicate that the plan is to eliminate the FRS as it presently exists, and set up instead one Central Bank. Of course, it would be the present Federal Reserve Bank of New York. This is the way the Inner Circle wanted it to be in the first place. Writing of the establishment of the FRS, Ferdinand Lundberg in America's Sixty Families noted: "In practice the Federal Reserve Bank of New York became the fountainhead of the system of twelve regional banks....The other eleven banks were so many mausoleums erected to salve the local pride and quell the Jacksonian fears of the hinterland." So, what will be hailed by the Media as a cleanup and a better monetary system will really mean more concentrated control by the Inner Circle which already controls the Nation's money supply and thereby rules the country!

CONCLUSION. Historically, whenever these secret rulers find themselves in any trouble, or want to bring about a "synthesis," they arrange a war. The sinking of the U.S.S. Maine, of the Lusitania, of a whole fleet in Pearl Harbor, the alleged attack on destroyers in the Gulf of Tonkin; the only one not included in that list is the Korean Police Action; and it was arranged through the United Nations. If history repeats, let the USSR-supplied Syrian Air Force launch an attack on the U.S.S. New Jersey or any ship of the U.S. fleet in that area, and - God forbid - we may be at it again; drowning in debt - and blood - for the benefit of that Inner Circle!

THE QUADRENNIAL QUEST TO QUALIFY

Something happens every fourth year in these United States and in many respects this happening has been much the same each time since the founding of political parties in America - something which happened after the ratification of the Constitution and at about same time that the corrosion of our new system of laws first began. To illustrate: Back in 1831 when this was still a Constitutional Republic in fact as well as name, a French statesman and writer came to visit this new land. Fascinated, he traveled for ten months from coast to coast, savoring the spirit of this new kind of government that was unknown to Europe. He went home to France, began to write of what he had seen and heard, experienced and felt in America. It took some four fat volumes to contain all that he wrote; but there was one particular paragraph which remains germane to the situation existing in the United States in 1984. He wrote:

As the American election draws near the activity of intrigue and the agitation of the populace increase; the citizens are divided into hostile camps, each of which assumes the name of its candidate; the whole nation glows with feverish excitement; the election is the daily theme of the Press, the subject of conversation, the end of every thought and every action, the sole interest of the present. It is true that as soon as the choice is determined, the ardour is dispelled, calm returns, and the river, which had nearly broken its banks, sinks to the usual level; but who can refrain from astonishment that such a storm should have risen? (Emphasis added).

At the time when de Tocqueville was in the United States there was reason for excitement and storm over the upcoming presidential election. General Jackson was running against Henry Clay and the issue was the so-called Bank of the United States, a sort of first try at a Central Bank which the Merchant Bankers of Europe had promoted and which was something of a forerunner of the present Federal Reserve Banking system. Jackson was against the bank, promised not to renew its charter if elected. He was and he did not. Which was one of the events leading to the War Between the States. But that's a different story. Anyway, there was reason for excitement and storm in that election of 1832. But in this election of 1984 there seems little reason for excitement. Sadness and resignation are more appropriate words. The Eastern Establishment has obviously decided that Reagan is to be re-elected, so barring total collapse of our system or some unexpected Act of God, Reagan will be re-elected. But look at the record, and sigh. The biggest budget and deficit in our history. Perhaps that's not all President Reagan's fault since he admits he can do nothing to control Volcker's actions as head of the Fed. But as Commander-in-Chief of the Armed Forces, Reagan must assume the responsibility for the awful mess in which Servicemen find themselves in Lebanon. And it was President Reagan who named Henry Kissinger to head a report on Central America and the Caribbean countries, a report which has helped the Communist conquest of our neighboring States, by inaction if for no other reason. Then there was the promise to end the continuing murders in the name of abortion. There was the pledge to do something about school prayer which the Christian right demanded. There was the matter of busing which was a problem that was to be solved, and wasn't. There was the pledge to support Taiwan, and the support has gone to Red China instead. There was the promise to do away with the Department of Education and it remains to control a near monopoly in education. There was Reagan's adherence to Salt I and Salt II in spite of the many Soviet violations. There was his support of the "big bank bailout" and the increase in trade and high technology sales to the Soviet Union. And perhaps worst of all, there was the shifting of his conservative aides and assistants into positions of lesser importance or back to civilian life; this accompanied by the increase in power of the liberal eastern establishment types such as Bush, Baker, Kissinger, Rockefeller, Shultz, and so on and on. There is every reason for the defeat of Ronald Reagan, if for no other reason, because he has become a tool in the hands of the Trilateralist Elite which really runs our country. His one big plus was Grenada. But his inaction in the case of the shooting down of a Korean Airline and the murder of men in Lebanon offset and neutralize whatever Grenada might have done to quell the anti-Reagan feelings on the part of the Christian right and the party conservatives whom he has deceived, much in the manner that FDR deceived the conservatives when he inaugurated the New Deal. But, FDR was re-elected, and so shall Reagan be re-elected if all goes as planned. This not only because he is backed by the Inner Circle that selects the presidents we are to elect, but also because his apparent opponent is so much worse. This ultra-liberal Mondale (Don McAlvany says he makes George McGovern look like a moderate) seems sure of winning the Democratic nomination. To promote an opponent to the Republican nominee, the Democrats are engaged in a nationwide campaign to register several million Blacks, Chicanos, homosexuals and liberationists. So it could be a close popular vote, even though, as McAlvany says, "Middle America will find Walter Mondale's entourage of pacifist, leftwing, feminist, and welfare supporters repugnant and highly unattractive."

In the final analysis, however, as we have written before, it makes little difference who wins or is selected by the Inner Circle, because: "Under the strange and bewildering concept of governing processes prevailing today, it makes little difference whether the successful candidate for the post of Chief Executive carries the standard of the Republican Party or wears the Democratic label. And no matter how sound the platform on which he runs; no matter how rosy or appealing the campaign promises he makes to the people, and no matter how sincerely he subscribes to his inaugural oath to uphold the American Constitution, he finds that his authority to make major decisions involving the destiny of his country, is surrendered at the White House door. From that day forward, an invisible master stands beside him and until he takes his final departure from the Mansion on Pennsylvania Avenue, he is never free from this menacing shadow. Call the Unseen Masters by any name you will but International Conspirators is as fitting as any and it is in this manner that we shall continue to regard them until and unless some red-blooded American patriot in the White House dares to reject and repudiate this vicious alien control." And when any patriot does this he stands the chance of joining that long line of martyrs who have shed their blood at the tree of liberty.

FROM AMERICAN ELECTION TO SOVIET SELECTION is an important consideration since the creation of the New World Order involves the eventual merging of these two in a Socialist World Government. With the death of Andropov and the selection of Chernenko to succeed him, there is a kind of pattern which may be difficult to comprehend. For years Brezhnev was known to be an ailing man. He seemed unable to attend important conferences, or conduct the tiring affairs which must accompany the duties associated with being president of a totalitarian empire and chairman of a revolutionary party. There must have been, even as in the United States, some "Unseen Master" that actually ran the government as well as the party. When Brezhnev finally gave up the ghost, an ailing man was selected to replace him. Strangely, when Yuri Andropov was selected to head the Oligarchic Politburo, this beast of a man who had accounted for the murder of millions and for the torture of other hundreds of thousands as head of the feared and hated KGB, was hailed by our own resident Sovietologists as a "closet liberal" and a "well educated and enlightened man." He was, of course, exactly the opposite of what we were first told by such men as Kissinger, Brzezinski, Harriman, Hammer, Rockefeller, and others who have had access and welcome admittance to the Kremlin offices at any given time. And so, the Soviet presidential succession went from a sick and dying Brezhnev who couldn't possibly have carried out the duties of his office in the last few months of his life; to a sick and dying Andropov who had neither the strength nor the time to carry out the sweeping new programs he had initiated to a satisfactory conclusion; and now to a sick and "incompetent" Konstantin Chernenko who is said to have nearly died of pneumonia a few years ago, who dropped out of sight for several months due to prolonged illness, and who is said to be plagued with diabetes. Such men may be considered to be dictators, but their respective conditions also would make them more easily controlled by some "Unseen Master;" even as our own Chief Executives are controlled.

There is yet another strange parallel that may have hidden meaning. Those who know the inner workings of the Kremlin Bureaucracy best, told us a year and a half ago that Yuri Andropov was not to be feared because he was just a "closet liberal." Now these same people tell us that Chernenko is "incompetent." It seems that Americans who have met him "regard him as having little talent or experience." Jonathan Sanders, a Columbia University Sovietologist, tells the press that "If you want to put it nicely, Chernenko was Brezhnev's chief of staff. Not so nicely, he was his butler and maidservant." Sander's Columbia colleague, Zbigniew Brzezinski, is the one who said Chernenko "is incompetent." But we might look at it another way: Any man who has been associated with the Communist Party in Russia from the time of World War II until today, who has risen to the top of the heap and still lives, is hardly incompetent. Also, when Brezhnev died Chernenko was the man most likely to succeed his boss as Chairman of the Politburo. It took some fast and tricky maneuvering on the part of Andropov to beat Chernenko to the post. His is a kind of rags to riches tale and incompetents aren't that capable. A farm boy, he left school to join the party, later to latch onto Brezhnev's coat tail when the latter was a Commissar in Moldavia, a Soviet Socialist Republic lying between the Ukraine and Romania, whose chief attraction is the Black Sea resort city of Odessa. When Brezhnev was called to Moscow for a higher post in 1956, Chernenko went along with him. Brezhnev was kind to him, made him a party propaganda boss. Chernenko rose in power by remaining faithful to Brezhnev and when the latter was about to die, he expressed the wish that Chernenko might take his place as president and party boss. But the wily Andropov had enough on his politburo colleagues to have them name him as the new chief. And Chernenko allegedly went into partial eclipse, still served as chief party ideologist but made little impact; just voted with the crowd of twelve.

Meanwhile, if the information we receive is correct, the USSR was getting deeper and deeper into trouble, especially economically and agriculturally. The invasion of Afghanistan was telling on the Union; crops were not meeting their quotas; production in everything except armaments and space technology was far below par. It is said that Andropov had a lot of plans for improving these conditions. But he was a sick man, not able to carry through. So, that made things even worse. Meanwhile, there was this alleged battle between the entrenched bureaucrats and the military leaders, as well as the development of a group of younger men who sought top posts in the party and in the politburo. So, we are told that Chernenko's selection was a kind of compromise. It should be understood that, since the time of Stalin there has been no dictator in control of the party or the Soviet Union. Khrushchev made an attempt to be absolute ruler, but his Politburo colleagues fired him and sent him into retirement at his dacha (that's like President Reagan's ranch). Since that time the Soviet Union has been ruled by an oligarchy, composed of the twelve members of the Politburo. They selected Chernenko as the new general secretary, then the Central Committee of about 300 obediently approved, unanimously. Walter Friedenberq of the Scripps-Howard News Service was probably right when he wrote that Chernenko's Politburo colleagues "apparently wanted only an Interim leader who would make no waves." While Chernenko is an Ideologue and probably can quote Lenin from beginning to end, he has had little experience with foreign affairs or economics, is more a disciplinarian than a planner. There is Dmltry Ustlnov, a proteqe of Stalin, who probably ran things while Brezhnev and Andropov were allng. Then there is Marshall Nikolai Ogarkov, Chief of the General Staff of the Military. It was he who so belligerently defended the shooting down of the KAL 747. He's regarded as capable, ruthless and brilliant, and was, like Ustlnov, a chief contender for the post vacated by Andropov. Also there are two younger members of the Politburo who were in the running. Grigory Romanov, 61; and Mikhail Gorbachev, 52; are the youngsters who may be running things in a few years. But, they all gave up their chances, at least temporarily, because, as Sovietologist Sanders of Columbia University thinks: "The Soviets took the safe and cautious way out. They aren't ready yet to turn the reins of power over to the younger generation. And conservative factlons didn't want to make way for others." Also, to use Friedenberq's terminology, the Soviet Ollgarchy doesn't want to make waves until after the presidential election in the United States on November 6th.

* * * * *

Patience and persistence have always been marked characteristics of the international coterie which aims to establish a socialist world government. Once they decided that promotion of the theme of Capitalism (thesis) versus Communism (antithesis) was the way to gain their ends (synthesis) they have varied little from that plan. In 1917 when it had been arranged for the United States to enter World War I it was also decided that Russia should be Communized. Jacob Schlf of Kuhn Loeb gave Leon Trotsky (Bronstein) twenty million dollars and arranged for his safe passage from Brooklyn to St. Petersburg (Leningrad) where he met Nikolai Lenin (Ulyanov). Lenin had also been lavishly supplied with money by Olaf Aschberg of the Nye Banken of Stockholm, the Rhine Westphalian Syndicate, the Morgan-Rothschild confederacy, and Max Warburg, whose brother Paul had come to the United States to help establish the Federal Reserve Banking System. From that time (1917) onward, the international cartelists have been careful to keep the USSR alive and active, since its continued existence is essential to their goals. Currently, with the selection of a new general secretary in Moscow, the word is being given that "the Soviets are insecure," they are in trouble economically, their food supplies are meager and their consumer goods almost non-existent. It seems that the fiction will be broadcast that while Shernenko is in charge there will be no "waves," that detente will be re-established, and that the USSR simply must have more aid and trade, loans and technological development. So, unless we are reading the signals wrongly, diplomats and negotiators will speak of "light at the end of the tunnel," of new treaties that will create more security, etc., etc. All sweetness and light, until a United States President is elected in November and/or another Politburo member is selected to replace a dead or missing Chernenko. For, as King Solomon so truthfully wrote: "The thing that hath been, it is that which shall be; and that which is done is that which shall be done: and there is no new thing under the sun." (Eccl. 1:9).

ANOTHER NATIONAL HOLIDAY ?

"I am a feminist," said Walter Mondale to the listening world while on the way to his expected nomination as Democratic Party candidate for the presidency of the United States. There is a vast difference between being a feminist and being female, and Mondale knew that in making such an announcement he was publicly allying himself with the Communists, Socialists, other kinds of Marxists, Gays, Women's Liberationists, and the National Education Association which is cooperating with the Socialists in supplying materials for use in colleges and universities in the promotion of the feminist movement. Perhaps the best way of showing the danger and the importance of this movement is to publish a resolution prepared by The National Association of Pro America, a patriotic women's organization which was founded in 1933 as an "educational organization pledged to preserve both the letter and spirit of the American form of government as set forth in the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States." Under date of February 7, 1984, the resolution reads and we quote:

INTERNATIONAL WOMEN'S DAY: AN HISTORIC VEHICLE FOR MARXISM, SOCIALISM AND FEMINISM

Whereas Americans, as individuals and as members of large, prominent governmental and non-governmental organizations, are being urged to select March 8th as the date for the yearly celebration of International Women's Day; and

Whereas the large majority of these Americans are loyal, patriotic citizens who support our representative form of government, our free enterprise system of economics, our Christian code of morality, the concept of private property, and the family as the basic unit of society, and who look with disfavor at all forms of socialist collectivism; and

Whereas documented historical information regarding International Women's Day comes from communist, socialist and feminist periodicals, conference reports and anthologies proving that International Women's Day had its beginnings in the United States women's and socialist movements as early as 1909, and that at the second Internationale, German socialist leader Clara Zetkin proclaimed an international women's holiday which was first celebrated in 1911 and is a legal holiday throughout the socialist and communist world and that with the rebirth of the women's movement in the United States, the event has been again used to agitate around women's issues; and

Whereas International Women's Day, in conjunction with Women's History Week, is only one of a long line of deceptive means of getting traditional Americans to form "networks" or "coalitions" to support seemingly reasonable proposals in behalf of women, such as the Equal Rights Amendment (written by one-world socialist Alice Paul in 1923), tax-supported Status of Women Commissions, the 5 million dollar fraud known as International Women's Year Conferences, controversial Marxist, feminist Women's Studies, etc., which have been used to expand socialist goals; and

Whereas Americans joining together in support of reasonable and necessary rights for women is to be applauded, allowing one's time, money and effort to be used in support of an alien philosophy under the deceptive banner of "Women's Rights" or "Equal Rights" is to be avoided; now, therefore, be it

Resolved that the National Association of Pro America go on record as opposed to this socialist, feminist celebration and that copies of this resolution be sent to all individuals, organizations, and government officials who need this information in order to judge the wisdom of lending their support to International Women's Day.

When International Women's Day was observed last year in Long Beach, California, some 40 sponsors were listed. Among them were: American Association of University Women, Long Beach Branch; Association of Women in Metal Industries; California State University at Long Beach; Church Women United; City Employees Association, Democratic Women's Study; Executive Women International; Girl Scouts; League of Women Voters; NOW; National Association of Bank Women; National Council of Jewish Women; National Council of Negro Women; National Women's Political Caucus; Soroptimist International; Teachers Association of Long Beach; UFCW Retail Clerks; United Auto & Aerospace Workers; United Nations Association; Women Doctors of Long Beach; Women Lawyers of Long Beach; Women's Council, Chamber of Commerce; YWCA of Long Beach; Zonta International; etc. But these were sponsors. The actual organizers included the Communist Party, U.S.A.; The Independent Socialist Party; The Spartacist League (Trotskyite); and other Communist and Socialist organizations. Also, the National Education Association assisted with literature and reading matter to aid in explaining "Why Celebrate National Women's History Week?" Their answer: "National Women's History Week focuses on the rich and inspiring heritage of women's contributions in the U.S. and coincides with International Women's Day, March 8....By 1981, National Women's History Week had been proclaimed by the U.S. Senate. The governors and legislatures of over half of the states proclaimed Women's History Week." A Curriculum Guide was published for teachers teaching grades 1 to 12. Also published were a Community Organization Guide, a Commemorative Poster Set, etc. In NEA Today, issue of Jan/Feb. 1984, NEA President Mary Hatwood Futrell condemns President Reagan for trying to dismantle the Department of Education, for "annihilating" student benefit programs, for placing the highest possible legislative priority on supporting private schools, etc., and therefore "The President's actions make it clear that in 1984 our professional and political responsibilities are one.... We must begin today to forge a coalition composed of all whose 'special interest' is children. Let ours be a children's coalition - a coalition of hope. And let's be sure our coalition is open - spacious enough for new friends and old adversaries. We must be ready to reach out in every direction to form a cordon of new alliances and partnerships (including Communists, Gays, feminists, and lesbians-Ed.)" It should be noted that, in addition to promoting this Women's History Week in schools and universities, along with its focal point, International Women's Day, NEA is committed professionally to "equal pay for comparable worth," for the "use of non-sexist language," and for "the right of reproductive freedom for all women."

People's World, the official paper of the Communist Party U.S.A., on March 5, 1983, in promoting the observance, noted that:

International Women's Day grew out of the struggles of women garment workers in New York City's sweatshops for the vote and for unions to win better wages and working conditions. On March 8, 1908, the Socialist Party organized a women's day demonstration on the Lower East Side to call attention to these struggles of working women, it was such a success that similar rallies were held in many cities in the U.S. and in other countries. The 1910 Socialist International Congress passed a motion by German leader Clara Zetkin to declare an international day for women. March 8 was proclaimed International Women's Day, and it has remained a day dedicated to fighting for equal rights for all women in all countries.

In Our Times is an independent socialist weekly published in Chicago by James Weinstein has a list of sponsors which includes Julian Bond, Barry Commoner, Daniel Ellsberg, Michael Harrington, Dorothy Healey, David Horowitz, Jeremy Rifkin, Herbert Marcuse until his death in 1979, Carey McWilliams until his death in 1980, etc. Contributing an article to its issue of March 2-8, 1983, was Marge Frantz who "was a Communist for 20 years, beginning in 1935, and is now a feminist activist and teaches women's history at the University of California, Santa Cruz." She calls International Women's Day a time to remember the sheroes (heroines) of the past:

From the origins of International Women's Day we have a few sheroes. First the women garment workers in Union Square on March 8, 1908....These leaders were socialist women, mostly Jewish immigrants, and they took their cause first to the Socialist Party of the U.S. in 1909....Next the women went to the Second (Socialist) International which....proclaimed an international working women's holiday in March...First celebrated in 1911, today it's a legal holiday throughout the socialist world.... It was the Communist Party and organizations it brought into being that kept alive the celebrations of International Women's Day in those years [in the U.S.-Ed.]....I think the old left has much to teach the contemporary women's movement - about how to build effective coalitions, or about the importance of working class and minority participation in the women's movement...

The 50th anniversary of IWD was held in Peking, China in March 1960 where it was hailed as "perhaps the most widely observed holiday of recent origin, and unusual among holidays originating in the U.S. to have been widely adopted and observed in other nations, including socialist countries. In the USSR and the People's Republic of China it is a national holiday and flowers or gifts are presented to women workers." From Women's Action Almanac, a complete resource guide published in 1979, we gain this additional information:

At the Conference of Socialist Women held a few days prior to the Second International Socialist Conference in Copenhagen in 1910, German socialist Clara Zetkin put forth a resolution to "internationalize" Women's Day. It passed both conferences unanimously....In the United States, it was still called just Women's Day....American women first called it International Women's Day in 1916....Eventually, observance of March 8 died out entirely. Then, following the rebirth of the women's movement in the late 1960's, International Women's Day was revived. It is now regularly celebrated with demonstrations, rallies, teach-ins and parties in cities all across the country.

Along with International Women's Day and Women's History Week there is the Women's Study program, which is the educational arm of the feminist movement and its power base. Aimed particularly at college and university students, it is a tax-supported course that "is equipping women not only to enter society...but to transform it." Promoting the program is the National Women's Studies Association, which "was formed to further the social, political, and professional development of Women's Studies throughout the country and the world, at every educational level and in every educational setting." Founded in 1977, it "draws its membership from all fifty states and associate members from abroad." It "offers networking and support for teachers, administrators, and students in the more than 400 women's studies programs in colleges and universities across the United States." The purpose, stated bluntly, is to change women morally, sexually, mentally, emotionally, so they can go out from college or university and help to change society. This change is accomplished through "consciousness raising" techniques in which "old values" are unfrozen by constant criticism, and participants are urged to experiment with "new values" and feminist lifestyles, until the "new values" have been implanted and fixed within the minds of the participants. The National Association of Pro America, which opposes International Women's Day and Women's History Week, also is attempting to expose and deprive the Women's Studies Program of tax support. Pro America points out that "a study of the textbooks, bibliographies, anthologies, conference reports and speakers utilized in Women's Studies prove that these classes:

- * attack the traditional sex-role system in an effort to bring about an androgynous, gender-free, unisex society;
- * attack the free enterprise system and promote socialism/communism;
- * attack the traditional family and encourage alternative family forms;
- * attack traditional child rearing practices and promote the concept of 'child liberation';
- * attack the representative form of government and promote 'participatory democracy';
- * attack Christian values and promote Marxist, Humanist values and esoteric religions such as Paganism, Witchcraft and Theosophy;
- * attack heterosexuality as being the basis of 'patriarchy', and encourage homosexuality, bisexuality, and autosexuality toward breaking down stereotypical sex roles in an effort to eliminate 'patriarchy';
- * attack normally accepted sexuality, and condone and/or advocate homosexuality, bestiality, sado masochism, incest, group sex, etc.;
- * reject time proven methods of promoting social change and wage 'guerrilla warfare' on all institutions and fields of endeavor."

Insisting that "It is tyranny to expect taxpayers to finance Marxism, lesbian goals and values in the name of feminism, and it is tyranny to make citizens pay for the promotion of goals and values which they oppose," Pro America, as should all Christians and conservatives, urges that federal, state and local funds be withheld from such Women's Studies, Women's Centers, and the promotion of Women's History Week."

As an indication of how widespread this evil may be, the Palm Beach edition of The Miami Herald of February 23, 1984, carries a banner headline on its front page which reads: "Group Complains of 'Feminist' Material in Schools." The article states that "School officials said they were unaware the information was being sent to schools until they received a letter of complaint from Women for Responsible Legislation (a conservative lobbying group)." "The package of information," says the article, "includes quizzes and games on key women in history, mini book reviews, and suggestions on how to teach about women's history. All of it is taken from the National Women's History Week Project....After being alerted to the material (Assistant County School Superintendent) Berryman said he sent a memo to school principals alerting them that the material was not approved and had been challenged." This National Women's History Week, with the communist/socialist International Women's Day as its focal point, is a California-based project. If its material has infiltrated into schools as far away as Palm Beach County, Florida, we suspect that this radical group has achieved its goal of making it a nation-wide project. These feminist groups are striving to bring about radical changes in our society. And, following instructions laid down by Lenin, they believe the surest way to accomplish this is to liberate children from parental control and do away with all Bible-oriented morals and beliefs. Hence, this national drive which reaches its peak in the week March 4 to 10, 1984. We trust this report will alert you to the danger of these NEA-sponsored groups that are equipping women not only to enter society, but to transform it.

THE DEVELOPING CONSTITUTIONAL CRISIS

When the Continental Congress wrote and the thirteen States accepted the first Constitution of the United States, it was called the Articles of Confederation. Many historians have called it a failure. In many respects, it was. However, while operating without any real power other than persuasion, Congress under the Articles did manage to provide national direction for the waging of war, for the establishment of peace, and for the passage of the most important Northwest Ordinances which provided for the orderly admission of new States to the Union. But it was a government without power to collect taxes and pay its bills, or to control the bickerings and jealousies between the States, which were about to disrupt the Union. Because of the cost of financing the War of Independence, there was an outstanding debt of $70 million, an enormous amount in 1781. There was an additional $200 million in "continental currency" which should be redeemed. Also there was a debt of $44 million owed by the general government and the States to foreign governments. The States were having their own troubles as well. The people of North Carolina revolted and formed a new State called Frankland. A portion of Southwestern Virginia sympathized and considered joining this new, temporary, state. There were insurrections against the government of Pennsylvania. A convention in Portland met to consider the propriety of making Maine an independent Nation. An armed mob surrounded the New Hampshire Legislature and demanded a remission of taxes. In Massachusetts, Daniel Shays led a formidable rebellion that it took an army to suppress. Because the newly formed Union was about to be destroyed by all these pressures, especially the public debt and excessive taxes on the part of the States, the Founding Fathers led by George Washington decided to call a constitutional convention "for the sole and express purpose of revising the Articles of Confederation, and reporting to Congress and the several legislatures such alterations and provisions therein as should, when agreed to in Congress and confirmed by the States, render the Federal Constitution adequate to the exigencies of the government and the preservation of the Union." So read the resolution passed by delegates from five States meeting at Annapolis, Maryland on the 11th of September, 1786.

In May, 1787, delegates from the States met in Independence Hall in Philadelphia. They met to amend the Articles of Confederation. But, once assembled, Edmund Randolph of Virginia opened the convention by pointing out that there were so many weaknesses and inadequacies in the existing Constitution that amending and revising it was almost impossible. Instead, he proposed "that a national government ought to be established, consisting of a supreme legislative, executive, and judiciary." As Benson J. Lossing wrote in "A Household History of the United States" (1877): "The great political maxim established by the Revolution was the original residence of all human sovereignty is in the people. It was left for the founders of the Republic to parcel out from the several Commonwealths of which the new Nation was composed, so much of their restricted power as the people of the several States should be willing to dismiss from their local political institutions, in making a strong and harmonious government that should be, at the same time harmless toward reserved State rights." The delegates agreed that amendments to the existing Constitution would not be effective, so they "went diligently at work to form a new constitution. . . . For many weeks the debates went on, sometimes with courtesy and at others with great acrimony, until the 10th of September (1787), when all plans and amendments adopted by the Convention were placed in the hands of a committee for revision and arrangement. . . . On the 17th, after the plan reported by the committee had been discussed clause by clause, slightly amended and adopted, and it had been neatly engrossed on parchment, it was spread before the members for their signatures. . . . Long and able debates upon the subject were held in the [State] conventions; and at public gatherings and at every fireside it was a topic for discussion and earnest conversation. Slowly the people deliberated; and it was nine months after the Constitution was adopted by the Convention before it was ratified by nine States, that number being necessary to make it the organic law of the land."

So much for a thumbnail sketch of United States history which we seem about to relive some two hundred years later, and at a very great price; perhaps the price of what's left of those unalienable rights with which we were endowed by our Creator and supposedly safeguarded by our Constitution. For some time now, there has been a movement among some conservatives to petition State Legislatures to call for a Constitutional Convention for the purpose of adding to the United States Constitution an amendment calling for a demand for a balanced budget and certain tax limitations on the part of Congress. As you know, all of the present amendments to the Constitution have first been approved by both Houses of Congress, then submitted to the State Legislatures for ratification. Congress has been slow in taking any such action, so these balanced budget advocates have determined upon the second method of amending the Constitution, which is also a Constitutionally approved method. Article V of the Constitution reads:

"The Congress, whenever two-thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose Amendments to this Constitution, or, on the Application of the Legislatures of two-thirds of the several States, shall call a Convention for proposing Amendments, which, in either case, shall be valid to all Intents and Purposes, as part of this Constitution, when ratified by the Legislatures of three-fourths of the several States, or by Conventions in three-fourths thereof, as one or the other Mode of Ratification may be proposed by the Congress." (Underlining added for emphasis).

PRESIDENTIAL DOCUMENTS

Presidential Determination No. 84-4 of January 18, 1984

Memorandum for the Honorable George P. Shultz, the Secretary of State

By virtue of the authority vested in me by the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961, as amended (the Act):

I hereby find pursuant to section 620(f) of the Act that the furnishing of assistance to Yugoslavia under chapter 5 of part II of the Act is vital to the security of the United States, that Yugoslavia is not controlled by the international Communist conspiracy, and that such assistance will further promote the independence of Yugoslavia from international communism.

Pursuant to section 614(a)(I) of the Act--

- (a) I hereby determine that the furnishing of such assistance to Yugoslavia is important to the security interests of the United States; and
- (b) I hereby authorize the furnishing of such assistance to Yugoslavia without regard to section 629(f) of the Act in the amount of $130,000 in the fiscal year 1984.

This determination shall be reported to the Congress and published in the Federal Register.

(signed) Ronald Reagan

THE WHITE HOUSE
Washington, January 18, 1984

At this time 32 State Legislatures have petitioned Congress to convene a Constitutional Convention for the purpose of adding amendments. This is just two States short of the necessary two-thirds, which would force Congress to call such a Convention. But there is an extreme danger in such action, as we shall explain. Back in the fateful year 1913, by intrigue, propaganda and political deception, the conservatives of the country were enticed into backing and promoting the passage of the Federal Reserve Act, thinking it was a good thing. They were, of course, deceived. In much the same manner, certain disillusioned conservatives have been demanding the calling of a Constitutional Convention. Seemingly unknown to them, the liberalist lackeys of the Eastern Establishment also are advocating the calling of such a Convention, but for diametrically opposed reasons. They of the left, One Worlders, Socialists, Welfare Statists, et al, want a Convention called not for the purpose of amending the present Constitution, but for the purpose of scrapping it and installing in its place a "Newstate Constitution" which has been prepared for presentation at the earliest possible time!

We are indebted to Col. Arch Roberts of the Committee to Restore the Constitution for publishing in his March Bulletin, the following information: "Fred Barbash, in a copyright article published in the Cleveland Plain Dealer, 8 January, 1984, . . . stated that a 'loosely-organized, ever-expanding committee of former government officials, members of Congress, academics, and others frustrated with the government', seek to overthrow the Constitution. Led by Washington lawyer Lloyd Cutler, former Carter Administration White House counsel, and C. Douglas Dillon, secretary of the treasury from 1961 to 1965, they want to consider whether some structural changes might make it run better,' reporter Barbash said. This 'New Age Movement' objective, to dismantle the Constitution to make way for the Orwellian 'One World Government' is scheduled for implementation during the emotion charged period when 'the nation is celebrating the bicentennial of the Constitution in 1987,' stated Barbash."

According to an article appearing in The Washington Post, among the participants in this scheme to use a Constitutional Convention as a means of introducing a new Socialist "Newstates Constitution," are Robert Strange McNamara, former Secretary of Defense; Joseph A. Califano, former Secretary of Health and Human Services; William T. Coleman, former Secretary of Transportation; Elvis Stahr, former Secretary of the Army; former Congressmen Henry S. Reuss, Robert McClory, Richard Bolling and John Rhodes; former Senator J. William Fulbright; current Members of Congress Steny H. Hoyer, Patricia Schroeder and James H. Scheuer; Glen Watts, president of the Communications Workers of America; journalists Richard Strout, Robert Klaus and Edwin Yoder; Linwood Holton, former Governor of Virginia; and James Sundquist of the Brookings Institute. As Col. Roberts notes, "Washington based change agents, members or sycophants of David Rockefeller's Council on Foreign Relations link their efforts to the 'Constitutional Convention' stampede for a 'balanced budget'." For the benefit of those well-meaning but ill-informed patriots who seek Constitutional Amendments, it should be pointed out that we don't need an amendment to achieve a balanced budget. All we need is enforcement of Public Law 95-435, Section 7, passed October 10, 1978, which reads in part: "Beginning with fiscal year 1981, the total budget outlays of the Federal Government shall not exceed its receipts." There is a problem with this law, but one that can easily be changed by an amendment to the law, not to the Constitution. The law as written does not provide penalties for failure to uphold it, nor does it specify who is responsible for enforcing it. That's why it isn't being obeyed; but neither would a Constitutional Amendment be obeyed unless penalties for failure to uphold it were specified. Note how many of the Amendments in our Bill of Rights are disobeyed now. Why add more that will be disobeyed?

But the inherent danger in holding a Constitutional Convention is that the "Newstates Constitution" developed by the Ford Foundation-financed Center for the Study of Democratic Institutions, is intended to replace our present Constitution. This "new" constitution was ready for introduction at the time of the Bicentennial Celebration in 1976. But the New World elitists felt that an "educational period" was necessary before the new constitution was presented to "we the people." So, a delay was ordered until a similar bicentennial celebration, which would be planned for 1987, the 200th anniversary of our allegedly "outworn" Constitution. The original plan was introduced on January 14, 1975 as House Concurrent Resolution No. 28, by Congressman Pettis, then a Republican representative from California. That Resolution is published along with the text of the "Newstates Constitution" beginning on page 251 of Col. Robert's book, "Emerging Struggle for State Sovereignty" (1979, $5.95 softcover, order from CRC, P.O.Box 986, Ft. Collins, CO 80522). The resolution provides that the Constitutional Convention would be held in Philadelphia, the President of the Senate (Bush) presiding. The whole affair would be in the hands of members or proselytes of the Trilateral Commission and/or the Council on Foreign Relations. With such control, what conservative is so optimistic as to believe that any good could come out of such a Convention?

Backing this plan for a Constitutional Convention are such organizations as the American Academy of Political and Social Science, the League of Women Voters, the NAACP, the UAW, the National Urban League, the National Council of Churches, Common Cause, the Aspen Institute for Humanistic Studies, Rockefeller, Ford and Carnegie Foundations, etc. Also involved in the educational programming for this Newstate Constitution have been the Center for the Study of Federalism at Temple University, the Center of International Studies at Princeton, the Center for Social and Policy Studies at Swarthmore College, the Center for the Study of the Presidency, the Institute for Social Research at Michigan U., and other foundation-sponsored academic study groups. And, in addition to these and others of similar persuasion, as Col. Roberts observes:

"Well-meaning but ill-informed patriotic groups, exploited by socialist change artists using various emotion-evoking amendments and factional issues as bait, are trapped in the Constitutional Convention plot. Some believe that such a Constitutional Convention can be limited in scope to a particular issue: i.e., tax relief, right to life, gun control, or other causes. In actual fact, the options open to a Constitutional Convention, particularly one dominated by the Rockefeller dynasty and State delegates chosen on the basis of their regional governance allegiances, are endless. Voiding the Constitution of the United States and adoption of the Newstates Constitution, to 'meet the needs of modern American society' is the real objective of those who promote a Constitutional Convention - whatever surface purposes are declared."

That first Constitutional Convention held at Philadelphia in 1787 proved a blessing to many future generations; for it created a Constitutional Republic whose government was composed of a legislative department which was never to exercise the executive and judicial powers, or either of them; the executive was never to exercise the legislative and judicial powers, or either of them; and the judicial was never to exercise the legislative and executive powers, or either of them - to the end that it would be a government of laws and not of men. We have permitted enemies within the Nation to stray us far from the course our Founding Fathers laid out for us. However, a second Constitutional Convention in 1987 would be, not a blessing, but a curse. We need no new constitution, we need but to restore the old.

Year Thirty-One Number Ten March 9, 1982

"BEWARE, MY FOOLISH HART"

The sudden amazing emergence into the limelight from political obscurity of a leftist politician named Gary Hart reminded us of something written by Charles Mackay in 1852. In the preface to his book "Extraordinary Popular Delusions and the Madness of Crowds," he observed that "In reading the history of nations, we find that, like individuals, they have their whims and their peculiarities; their seasons of excitement and recklessness, when they care not what they do. We find that whole communities suddenly fix their minds upon one object, and go mad in its pursuit; that millions of people become simultaneously impressed with one delusion and run after it, till their attention is caught by some new folly more captivating than the first. . . . Some delusions, though notorious to all the world, have subsisted for ages flourishing as widely among civilized and polished nations as among the earliest barbarians with whom they originated. . . . Men, it has been well said, think in herds; it will be seen that they go mad in herds, while they only recover their senses slowly, and one by one." Bernard Baruch, park bench philosopher and adviser to presidents, made his billions gambling on popular delusions and the madness of money seeking stock market gamblers. He commented, but not originally: "Anyone taken as an individual is tolerably sensible and reasonable -- as a member of a crowd, he at once becomes a blockhead." Then he wrote something that reminds us of this surge for Hart:

"Have you ever seen in some wood, on a sunny quiet day, a cloud of flying midges -- thousands of them -- hovering, apparently motionless, in a sunbeam? . . . Yes? . . . Well, did you ever see the whole flight -- each one apparently preserving its distance from all others -- suddenly move, say three feet, to one side or the other? Well, what made them do that? A breeze? I said a quiet day. But try to recall -- did you ever see them move back again in the same unison? Well, what made them do that? Great human mass movements are slower of inception but much more effective."

We are writing this Report after Hart's overwhelming primary endorsement in Maine, but before the Wyoming primary and Super Tuesday Primaries of March 16 involving the democratic party delegates from nine States: Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Oklahoma, Washington, Hawaii, Nevada, Florida, Georgia and Alabama. It is not our intention to predict, possibly wrongly, what you as a reader may already know as you read this Report. But when a mass movement, among midges or men, begins, there is a tendency for madness to follow. And we are reminded of a similar situation which existed in the Spring of 1976. A politician generally unknown outside his home State of Georgia received the unexpected backing of the then barely known Trilateral Commission, and a mass movement landed him in the White House. A few weeks ago Gary Hart was virtually unknown outside the State of Colorado which he had been elected to represent in the U.S. Senate. In the Senate itself he was known mostly for his voting record which the Conservative Index lists as minus four, to the left of Ted Kennedy, far to the left of Alan Cranston and John Glenn. Hart learned his campaign techniques in 1972 when he acted as campaign manager to George McGovern. But he started his own campaign virtually broke, understaffed, ignored by the media, in ramshackle national campaign offices over a movie theater in a poor section of Washington. He traveled the cheapest way possible. But now there are 25 telephone lines, constantly in use in his national office, he has chartered his own Boeing 727 jet, money and support have been pouring in ever since his surprising win in New Hampshire. "Extraordinary Popular Delusions and the Madness of Crowds" was the name of that book from which we quoted.

When any idea, plan, scheme, campaign or mass movement becomes a popular delusion or creates what Mackay calls "The Madness of Crowds," usually there will be found some person or group of persons behind the scheme at its birth and in its development. Peter the Hermit inspired a Holy War which became a series of Crusades to recover the Holy Land. The Earl of Oxford in 1711 organized the South Sea Company, supposedly to restore public credit in England. John Law originated in 1719 what came to be known as the Louisiana, or Mississippi Scheme, ostensibly to restore public credit in France. The Rothschilds, father and sons, created banks to finance governments; Meyer Amschel Rothschild is still remembered by his statement, "Permit me to issue and control the money of a nation, and I care not who makes its laws." William Paterson, organizer of the Bank of England, the parent of modern banks of issue, might be credited with having laid the groundwork for all the central banks (ours is the Fed) which control the governments of the industrial nations of the world. We could go on and on, citing individuals or groups who were responsible for creating "Popular Delusions and the Madness of Crowds," or mass movements. But in the case of Gary Hart, there seems no known reason for his sudden popularity. Now, however, the Media have taken Hart to heart and are promoting him in every possible way. The power brokers and inner circle elitists will undoubtedly take charge, or have already done so. It is a logical guess that this party game will develop a log jam at the San Francisco Convention, and some third party will be named to break the tie between Hart and Mondale. One might also guess that the name of Ted Kennedy will be considered most seriously at that time.

But so much for the domestic political excitement, which is really meaningless. The man in the White House will not run the country, although the men in Congress could if the right men were elected. More important at this time is the foreign intrigue that has been developing. And here we can be sure that certain dangerous situations were planned that way. Around the turn of the century a conspiratorial group decided to take the economic, political and ethical theories that had been collected by Marx and Engels and use them for its own purposes. R.E. McMaster, Jr. said it best in the March 1 issue of The Reaper. He wrote:

The goal of international communism is not to destroy Western international debt capitalism. The goal of international communism is to enslave mankind at the behest of Western international debt capitalism. Western international debt capitalism financed the Russian Communist Revolution, and has provided the Soviet Union with 95% of its technology. The number one recipient of U.S. foreign aid in this century has been the Soviet Union. Chase Manhattan Bank has a branch office at One Karl Marx Square. ¶ Power always aligns with power. Always look for who benefits economically behind political and military action. ¶ In keeping with Hegel's dialectic of conflict, thesis and antithesis yield to synthesis. The thesis, Western international debt capitalism, created the antithesis, international communism, which is being merged into a synthesis, a One World Order. ("The Reaper," P.O.Box 39026, Phoenix, Arizona, 85069. Published weekly, $195 per year. Foreign air mail, add 40%.)

As this synthesis, A One World Order, is slowly being developed (slowly lest the masses become aware and rebel) we have been led through the horrors of two world wars, a police action in Korea, a war that gave communism the conquest of Southeast Asia, and presently there are serious confrontations in Central America and the Middle East. Now that the United States has relaxed its pressure on Lebanon and made way for the Arabs, Syrians and Israelis to settle their own affairs (if possible, and at the danger of going totally Communist), the spotlight now shifts to what Newsweek calls "The Holy War in the Persian Gulf." That war which has been going on for two-and-a-half years, has suddenly picked up in intensity. Columnist Georgie Anne Geyer, reporting from a point east of Basra in Iraq, says that the Iranians were sending "human waves, very often school children, to die by the tens of thousands in this strange war." Said Zia Hassan, Iraqi military correspondent:

"Some came running as in the 16th century, in the white robes of the dead, shouting 'Allah Akhbar; (God is good). Most are killed in no-man's land well before they even reach our front. Teen-agers were told that if they made it they would meet Imam Ali (the ancient founder of the Shi-ite faith). I talked with some of the surviving children afterward. They were 14 and 15, even 12. They sent old men, too." The strategy is said to include the death of what's left of the old regular Iranian army that existed while the Shah ruled. They are sent with the children into no-man's land in human waves, where the only recourse the Iraqi defenders know is to kill them by the thousands. But Iraq is virtually land-locked, is running low on food and military supplies. So there are charges that mustard gas is being used by the Iraqi forces. As Shireen T. Hunter, deputy director of the Middle East Project at Georgetown U's Center for Strategic and International Studies observes: "Iran's strategy of attrition has failed and, thanks to Arab generosity and Western credits, Iraq has survived. In fact, if Iraq can hold on until the end of this year, its economic situation will improve as its new oil pipelines through Saudi Arabia become operational." That word "oil" is the key, even though the belligerents think of it as a "holy war." And the Strait of Hormuz through which oil tankers must flow, is the focal point of the conflict, along with Iran's Kharg Island where the oil installations are located. Mr. McMaster (op. cit.) comments, and we quote at length:

"How about oil? Does Western debt capitalistic banking and multinational oil have something to gain from an oil war in the Middle East? Most certainly. Based upon the marginal cost of production, oil should be priced at around $15 per barrel. . . But $25 per barrel oil at least is the price needed to keep the Western multinational banking system from flying apart. There are only two ways to maintain a high price for oil: 1. Increase demand. (This is not happening. In fact demand has continued to decline even in the face of the United States and global economic recovery.) 2. Eliminate supply (This second option is active again now). Just look at how clever the United States, Great Britain, France and Saudi Arabia have been in the war between Iran and Iraq. Saudi Arabia has over 40 oil tankers floating around the world loaded with millions of barrels of petroleum that no one wants to purchase. Saudi Arabia is literally begging the Western world to buy its oil, despite the fact that production has been slashed time and time again by the Saudis. So what does Saudi Arabia do? It joins the United States, Great Britain and France in backing Iraq against Iran. In this convenient war, which The Reaper has consistently predicted, Iraq outfitted with French fighters and missiles, recently attacked Iran's key oil terminal and tankers at Kharg Island.

Thus, Iran again takes it in the ear in oil production, just like it did under the Shah. . . Talk about gunboat diplomacy and economics. Look how shrewd the West was/is. First, we let Iran almost wipe out Iraq (whom we backed), until all Iraq could do to try to survive was launch a desperate strike against Iran's oil resources. Iraq will be weak and wounded for some time to come, assuming it stands. Perhaps the multinational banks will now be able to finance Iraq's postwar reconstruction, a very profitable activity. Iraq did its job. It again took Iran's oil production off stream, eliminating the growing economic oil power of Iran. Two birds with one stone. Neat? Recall what the Shah of Iran stated on January 17, 1980, in an interview with David Frost on ABC's 20/20:

"Two years before the changes in my country, we heard from two different sources connected with the oil companies that the regime in Iran would change. And for the last year the (multinational oil) consortium never seriously discussed their plans to purchase our oil. We believe that there was a plan that there must be less oil offered to the world market. In order to make the price of oil go up, our country should have been the one chosen for the sacrifice. Iran was producing 5,600,000 barrels a day. So, in order to have a shortage of oil, in order to make the prices go up, with what I have heard about these two people, connected to two oil companies and the oil consortium never really starting serious talk about placing an order to buy our oil -- so it seems that the chosen country to drop its production of oil would have been mine. They happen to be American companies.' (End of the late Shah's statement).

"Dr. Assad Homayoun, former Minister Counselor for Foreign Affairs for the Shah, discussed this matter with me in 1978. . . . We couldn't have made it past this spring and/or summer without a sharp break in the price of oil, which would/could have destroyed our multinational banking/oil/government empire. Thus the necessity of an oil war and/or inflation. But, what concerns me most is the probable terrorist backlash yet to come. As we are well aware (because this is the one thing our press tells us truthfully about the Muslims), there are brutal, conflict-oriented Muslim terrorists and assassins who will blow up and assassinate anyone and everyone in the name of Islam. Thus, because of what we have done to Lebanon and now to Iran, I expect legions of Muslim terrorists to be unleashed on the Western world -- Europe and the United States. Between Iran, Libya and Lebanon, there are enough life-sacrificing terrorists to strike fear in the hearts of millions of Americans and Europeans. I will be extremely surprised if we don't see this violent terrorist backlash in 1984. These fanatic Muslims are looking for a reason to unleash their vehemence on the West. We just gave them two good reasons (from their frame of reference) -- Lebanon and Iran." (End of quotes from "The Reaper," March 1, 1984).

SUMMATION. This Report seems to have divided itself into two parts, one dealing with electioneering, the other with foreign entanglements in a Holy War that is fast becoming an Oil War in the Persian Gulf. However, the two parts do hang together in that the national economy lies at the heart of both parts. At the heart of Hart's campaign is his war against the Reagan Administration's economic policies. At the same time he criticizes the policies pronounced by his Democratic rivals and by his own Party. He offers "something new," but finds it difficult to define what he means by "something new." Most of the Nation's economists are just as confused. All agree that business is good right now, but that some kind of economic upheaval lies just around the corner. Which corner, when we will reach it, and whether it will mean astronomical inflation or greatly increased interest rates, seem unanswerable by the court economists. As for the multinational bankers and oil tycoons, mergers are not enough. When they get into real trouble their historical answer is to cause a war, one which helps them and hurts the people. The excitement of a presidential election year gives them a little time to decide.

In 1981 there was a brief Reagan Revolution. It lasted a few weeks then surrendered to an entrenched Washington Establishment that sat tight and refused to deviate from the old time religion of spend and spend, then hike taxes to cover deficits, or threaten to start a war if that didn't work. Who sits in the White House in 1985 won't change that. But who sits in the Halls of Congress could. A Democratic victory in that area could spell greater havoc.

We are reminded of what Jesus said to another nation at an earlier time: "Therefore say I unto you, The Kingdom of God shall be taken from you, and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof." What God expects of us is what really counts, nationally as well as individually.

THE TOWER OF BASEL AND THE BANK THAT RULES THE BANKS

First-hand inside information concerning the inner circle of the international banking establishment is hard to come by. Occasionally a member of the commercial communications media publishes an article concerning the real power in the world. The following article, by Jay Edward Epstein, originally appeared in Harper's Magazine, was reprinted in The Australian of January 9, and again in New Times, Canadian edition of February 1984. It does not explain how banks create money out of nothing in the form of bank credit, but does shed considerable light on the machinations of international finance. The following is a condensation of that article.

Ten times a year - once a month except in August and October - a small group of well-dressed men arrive in Basel, Switzerland. They have come to this sleepy city from places as disparate as Tokyo, London and Washington, D.C. for the regular meeting of the most exclusive, secretive and powerful supranational club in the world. The membership of this club is restricted to a handful of powerful men who determine daily the interest rates, the availability of credit and the money supply of the banks in their own countries. They include the governors of the U.S. Federal Reserve, the Bank of England, the Bank of Japan, the Swiss National Bank and the German Bundesbank. The club controls a bank with a $40 billion kitty in cash, government securities, and gold that constitutes about one-tenth of the world's available foreign exchange. The profits earned out of its hoard of gold are more than sufficient to pay for the entire expense of the entire organization. And the unabashed purpose of its elite, monthly meetings is to coordinate and, if possible, to control all monetary activities in the industrialized world. The place where this club meets in Basel is a unique financial institution called the Bank for International Settlements - or more simply, and appropriately, the Bis.

The BIS was originally established in May 1930 by bankers and diplomats of Europe and the United States to collect and disburse Germany's World War I reparation payments. It was truly an extraordinary arrangement. Although the BIS was organized as a commercial bank with publicly-held shares, its immunity from government interference - and taxes - in both peace and war was guaranteed by an international treaty signed in The Hague in 1930. Although all its depositors are central banks, the BIS has made a profit out of every transaction. And because it has been highly profitable, it has required no subsidy or aid from any government. Since it also provided, in Basel, a safe and convenient repository for the gold holdings of the European central banks, it quickly evolved into the bank for central banks. Originally, the central bankers sought complete anonymity for their activities. In May 1977, however, the BIS gave up its anonymity, against the better judgment of some of its members, in exchange for more efficient headquarters. The new building, an 18-story-high circular skyscraper that rises over the medieval city like some misplaced nuclear reactor, quickly became known as the Tower of Basel.

Why do the central banks transfer some $40 billion of deposits to the BIS and thereby permit it to make such a profit? One answer is of course secrecy. By commingling part of their reserves in what amounts to a gigantic mutual fund of short-term investments, the central banks create a convenient screen behind which they can hide their own deposits and withdrawals in financial circles around the world. For example, if the BIS places funds in Hungary, the individual central banks do not have to answer to their governments for investing in a communist country. And the central banks are apparently willing to pay a high fee to use the cloak of the BIS. There is, however, a far more important reason why the central banks transfer deposits to the BIS; they want to provide it with a large profit to support the other services it provides. Despite its name, the BIS is far more than a bank. From the outside, it seems to be a small, technical organization. Just 86 of its 298 employees are ranked as professional staff. But the BIS is not a monolithic institution; artfully concealed within the shell of an international bank, like a series of Chinese boxes one inside another, are the real groups and services the central banks need - and pay to support. The first box inside the bank is the board of directors, drawn from the eight European central banks (England, Switzerland, Germany, Italy, Belgium, Sweden and the Netherlands), which meets on the Tuesday morning of each "Basel weekend." The board also meets twice a year in Basel with the central banks of Yugoslavia, Hungary and other Eastern bloc nations. It provides a formal apparatus for dealing with European governments and international bureaucracies like the IMF or the European Economic Community (the Common Market). The board defines the rules and territories of the central banks with the goal of preventing governments from meddling in their purview. For example, a few years ago, when the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) in Paris appointed a low-level committee to study the adequacy of bank reserves, the central bankers regarded it as poaching on their monetary turf and turned to the BIS for assistance. The board then arranged for a high level committee, under the head of Banking Supervision at the Bank of England, to pre-empt the issue. The OECD got the message and abandoned its effort. To deal with the world at large, there is another Chinese box called the Group of Ten, or simply the "G-10". It actually has eleven full-time members, representing the eight European central banks, the US Fed, the Bank of Canada, and the Bank of Japan. It also has one unofficial member: the governor of the Saudi Arabian Monetary Authority. This powerful group, which controls most of the transferable money in the world, meets for long sessions on the Monday afternoon of the "Basel weekend". It is here that broader policy issues, such as interest rates, money-supply growth, economic stimulation (or suppression), and currency rates are discussed - if not always resolved. Directly under the G-10 and catering to all its special needs is a small unit called the "Monetary and Economic Development Department" which is, in effect, its private think tank. The head of this unit, the Belgian economist Alexandre Lamfalussy, sits in on all the G-10 meetings, then assigns the appropriate research and analysis to the half dozen economists on his staff. This unit also produces the occasional blue-bound "economic papers" that provide central bankers from Singapore to Rio de Janeiro, even though they are not BIS members, with a convenient party line. For example, last May, just before the Williamsburg conference, the unit released a blue book on currency intervention by central banks that laid down the boundaries and circumstances for such actions. When there are internal disagreements, these blue books can express positions sharply contrary to those held by some BIS members; but generally they reflect a consensus of the G-10.

Over a bratwurst-and-beer lunch on the top floor of the Bundesbank, which is located in a huge concrete building outside Frankfurt, Karl Otto Pohl, its president and a ranking governor of the BIS, complained to me about the repetitiousness of the meetings during the "Basel weekend." First, there is the meeting on the Gold Pool, then, after lunch, the same faces show up at the G-10, and the next day there is the board (which excludes the US, Japan and Canada), and the European Community meetings (which excludes Sweden and Switzerland from the previous group). He concluded: "They are long and strenuous - and they are not where the real business gets done." This occurs, as Pohl explained over our leisurely lunch, at still another level of the BIS: "a sort of inner club," as he put it. The inner club is made up of the half dozen or so powerful central bankers who find themselves more or less in the same monetary boat. Along with Pohl are Volcker and Wallich from the Fed, Leutwiler from the Swiss National Bank, Lamberto Dini of the Bank of Italy, Harou Mayekawa of the Bank of Japan, and the retired governor of the Bank of England, Lord Gordon Richardson (who had presided over the G-10 meetings for the past ten years).

The prime value, which also seems to demarcate the inner club from the rest of the BIS members, is the firm belief that central banks should act independently of their home governments. This is an easy position for Leutwiler to hold, since the Swiss National Bank is privately owned and completely autonomous. Almost as independent is the Bundesbank; as its president, Pohl, is not required to consult the government officials or to answer the questions of Parliament - even about such critical issues as raising interest rates. The Fed is only a shade less independent than the Bundesbank; Volcker is expected to make periodic visits to Congress and at least to take calls from the White House - but he need not follow their counsel. While in theory the Bank of Italy is under government control, in practice it is an elite institution that acts autonomously and often resists the government. Although the exact relationship between the Bank of Japan and the Japanese Government remains inscrutable, even to the BIS governors, its chairman, Mayekawa, at least espouses the principal of autonomy. Finally, though the Bank of England is under the thumb of the British Government, Lord Richardson was accepted by the inner club because of his personal adherence to this defining principle. But his successor, Robin Leigh-Pemberton, lacking the years of business and personal contact, probably won't be admitted to the inner circle. In any case, the line is drawn at the Bank of England. The Bank of France is seen as a puppet of the French Government; to a lesser degree, the remaining European banks are also perceived by the inner club as extensions of their respective governments, and this remain on the outside.

A second and closely related belief of the inner club is that politicians should not be trusted to decide the fate of the international monetary system. When Leutwiler became president of the BIS in 1982, he insisted that no government official be allowed to visit during a "Basel weekend." "To be frank," he told me, "I have no use for politicians. They lack the judgment of central bankers." For this reason there was considerable apprehension last spring that Paul Volcker would be replaced by a supply-side ideologue like Beryl Sprinkel, and considerable relief when Volcker was reappointed for another term.

Rather than resorting to rhetoric and invoking principles, the inner club seeks any remedy that will relieve a crisis. For example, earlier this year, when Brazil failed to pay back on time a BIS loan that was guaranteed by the central banks, the inner club quietly decided to extend the deadline instead of collecting the money from the guarantors. "We are constantly engaged in a balancing act - without a safety net," Leutwiler explained.

The final and by far the most important belief of the inner club is the conviction that when the bell tolls for any single central bank, it tolls for them all. When Mexico faced a bankruptcy last year, for instance, the issue for the inner club was not the welfare of that country, but as Dini puts it, "the stability of the entire banking system." For months Mexico had been borrowing overnight funds from the interbank market in New York - as every bank recognized by the Fed is permitted to do - to pay the interest on its $80 billion external debt. Each night it had to borrow more money to repay the interest on the previous night's transactions, and, according to Dini, by August Mexico had borrowed nearly one quarter of all the "Fed's Funds," as these overnight loans between banks are called. The Fed was caught in a dilemma: if it suddenly stepped in and forbade Mexico from further using the interbank market, Mexico would be unable to repay its enormous debt the next day, and 25 per cent of the entire banking system's ready funds might be frozen. But if the Fed permitted Mexico to continue borrowing in New York, in a matter of months it would suck in most of the interbank funds, forcing the Fed to expand drastically the supply of money. It was clearly an emergency for the inner club. After speaking to Miguel Mancera, director of the Banco de Mexico, Volcker immediately called Leutwiler, who was vacationing in the Swiss mountain village of Grison. Leutwiler realized that the entire system was confronted by a financial time bomb; even though the IMF was prepared to extend $4.5 billion to Mexico to relieve the pressure on its long-term debt, it would require months of paperwork to get approval for the loan. And Mexico needed an immediate fix of $1.85 billion to get out of the interbank market, which Mancera had agreed to do. But in less than forty-eight hours, Leutwiler had called the members of the inner club and arranged the temporary bridging loan. While this $1.85 billion appeared - at least in the financial press - to have come from the BIS, virtually all the funds came from the central banks in the inner club. Half came directly from the United States - $600 million from the Treasury's exchange-equalization fund, and $325 million from the Fed's coffers; the remaining $925 million mainly from deposits of the Bundesbank, Swiss National Bank, Bank of England, Bank of Italy, and Bank of Japan, deposits that were specifically guaranteed by these central banks, though advanced pro forma by the BIS. The BIS took virtually no risk in this rescue operation; it merely provided a convenient cloak for the inner club. Otherwise, its members, especially Volcker, would have to take the political heat individually for what appeared to be the rescue of an undeveloped country. In fact, they were - true to their paramount values - rescuing the banking system itself. On August 31 of this year, Mexico repaid the BIS loan. But the bailout was only temporary, if not pyrrhic, victory. With the multibillion dollar debts of a score of other countries - including Argentina, Chile, Venezuela, Brazil, Zaire, the Philippines, Poland, Yugoslavia, Hungary, and even Israel - hanging like so many swords of Damocles over its sacred monetary system, the inner club has "no choice", as Leutwiler has concluded, but to remain a crisis manager.

This new role has created a considerable concern among the outer circle, and even in the Bank of England, since the members who don't entirely share the mentality of the inner club want the BIS to remain primarily a European institution. "Let the Fed worry about Brazil and the rest of Latin America - that is not the job of the BIS," a blunt representative of the Bank of England, definitely not part of the inner club, told me. Others at the BIS have argued that it does not have the experience or facilities to become "a mini-IMF - putting out fires around the world," as one staffer described it. To mollify such dissent on the periphery, inner club members publicly pay lip service to the ideal of preserving the character of the BIS and not turning it into a lender of last resorts for the world at large. Privately, however, they will undoubtedly continue their maneuvers to protect the banking system at whatever point in the world it seems most vulnerable. After all, it is ultimately the central bank's money at risk, not the BIS's. And the inner club will also keep using the BIS as its public mask - and pay the requisite price for the disguise. (End of reprinted article).

"Because money is the lifeline of commerce in the exchange of goods and services in an economy, control of money is control of society. It is thus the control of life because basic economic necessities are fundamental to life. The Federal Reserve of the United States, as well as the central banks of Europe, by controlling the debt money, the medium of exchange, control not only the economic global marketplace, but also the political arena.(R.E. McMaster)."

THE ABC's OF "FORCE X"

Several years ago, before there existed a Bilderberg Group or a Trilateral Commission and before there was any general knowledge of the aims and purposes of the Round Table Groups or the Council on Foreign Relations, an article titled "Force X" was published by the British Intelligence Digest, which began:

"We have reached the conclusion that there is a non-communist group at work which is more influential than hitherto supposed. This group seems to use Communism, but not to be Communist. Our investigations disclose a diversified group which has worldwide links. This group seeks to believe that it is strong enough that it can afford to use Communism without danger that the Communists will, in consequence, eliminate it; and that it can afford to use the homosexual movement (which is very powerful) without rotting civilization. It seems to think that it can use the drug rings as a means to an end without its own personnel becoming involved; that it can exploit sexual aberrations without consequences to itself; and that it can run the main vice rackets of the big cities without any long range danger to the structure it wishes to govern. All these methods are used by this group or force . . .

"Over the years this group has enlisted disgruntled intellectuals, those with a grudge against the old order of society, those in financial need, and those with vices. It has bought up large interests in powerful publishing concerns, in the film industry, in financial houses, and in other institutions. It has devoted immense attention to detail, so that it now controls vital things in every sphere. It has quietly led underpaid servants into ventures which required cash. It has made itself popular by taking a prominent place in public sport, in the arts, and in charity. It has endeared itself to statesmen by lavish hospitality and financial tips. It has infiltrated the very best society as well as being engaged in the very worst vices. No major vice racket now exists of which it is not in direct control. The objective is to achieve absolute power; and Communism has been used as a weapon to destroy the old order which stood in the way. Indeed, those who financed Lenin and Trotsky were not, of course, Communists - far from it.

"It is because we always look for a Communist that we fail to discover the answer. The influences at work upon our policy-making are sometimes, but very often not, Communist. This force, which we call 'X', is closely co-ordinated. It is of one mind; it is in control of immense resources; it is convinced, passionate, efficient, and deadly. It fears only one thing: public opinion. It tries to control this and to stop anyone from arousing it. . . . The leaders of this force occupy positions of the highest respectability and the ordinary person would find it hard to believe that the cultured and charming person they meet at the White House or Admiralty House has direct connections with control of the vilest vice rackets of San Francisco, Marseilles, or Glasgow. This group is not recognized by authority because authority is afraid to investigate too closely. The rot has gone too deep; too many are involved. No government will ever investigate. A legal action to track down and destroy the group itself would now be impossible. No government which attempted such a task would survive. Every device of propaganda would be laid on to destroy it. But as the results of the work of this group become plain, then a public opinion objecting to those results can destroy the design and, with it, those responsible for it. There is no other way. . . . It would be unwise to say too much about this at present. . . ." (End of quotation).

This article from which we have quoted refers to a group called "Force X" which uses and controls Communism. We have often written of an elite group of internationalists which finances and uses Communism for its own purposes, and seems certain that it also controls Communism. We are reminded of Mary Shelley's fictionalized German scientist named Frankenstein who also created a monster which he was sure that he could control. The monster destroyed him. And we wonder if these supranational elitists which use Communism for their own ends can, in the end, control the monster they have financed and fed. As H du B Reports in his Letter 10, March, 1984: "Over all hangs a great unknown." Then he goes on to state that:

"No one knows what Constantln Ustinov Chemenko thinks. He was born in 1911 and is alive today because he never expressed an opinion. Everything that has been written about him is based on speculation. Andropov could never have entered the Kremlin without the support of the army, and without that support, Chemenko would not be there today. The army is no longer a docile instrument in the hands of a party leader. It has become more than a partner. Never in the history of Soviet Russia has the army held such power as it holds at present with an old man as a front. It took Andropov eight months to make himself President after he assumed leadership of the party. Many doubt that Chemenko has the power to get the Soviet Supreme to make him president when it convenes in late March. In the meantime, Vice-President Kuznetsov fills the office.

"All of Europe's leading sovietologists have observed that never have so many in uniform appeared in public office as since a Soviet pursuit plane downed the South Korean Boeing on September 1st. This suggests that Marshal Dimitri Ustinov, one of the most powerful figures in the 12-man politburo, may move into the presidency. As minister of Defense, head of the armed forces and president of the highly secret Defense Council, Ustinov is now second only to the Head of State in the politburo. He controls the Russian armament industry which consumes 14% of Russia's gross national income, against the 6% appropriated for defense in America, and if Ustinov rises to the presidency his present place will be filled by the hard-liner chief of staff, Nikolai Ogarkov, with his nine rows of decorations, the man who ordered the shooting down of KAL flight 007, after almost two hours of deliberations over the airwaves.

"Whatever TV pivot men and newspaper columnists may say about Chemenko, the future bodes ill for the world, threatened as it is by the rising military in Russia, religious wars in the non-Shia Moslem states and terrorist warfare wherever there are leaders not to the Ayatollah Khomeini's liking. Were it not for the war with Iraq, Iranians by the thousands would be flocking to join the liberation army in which some young officer, perhaps at colonel level, will eventually rise to replace the martyred Gholam Ali Oveissi [assassinated in Paris February 7th]. Iranians are fighting for their country, not the Ayatollah Khomeini, and that war is proving fatal to the liberation movements. The ultimate tragedy may be that Russia and the Ayatollah Khomeini, already surrounded by Russian advisers, may form a union. Moscow could not ask for better hit teams whose actions she can disavow." (H. du B. Reports, P.O.Box 786, St. George, Utah 84770. Monthly, $75 per year. Extra copies, $1.00).

From all the information we have been able to gather, supposedly reliable information, that is; it seems that the Kremlin has as its present goal advancement southward to the Persian Gulf and the Indian Ocean. This was the reason for the invasion of Afghanistan and the currying of favor with Iran's Khomeini and Syria's Hafez el-Assad. If the military is really in charge now, the Soviet's current campaign will be the furtherance of the plan Yuri Andropov hadn't time to complete. The idea of warm water ports has been a dream of "Mother Russia" ever since the time of Peter the Great. The Soviet leaders hope to make the dream come true. And the plan seems to involve the following steps: Visible support will continue to be given Castro, such as the recent sending of a helicopter-laden carrier and a missile-carrying destroyer to the Caribbean; submarines will continue to be sent into the seven seas to linger off the coast lines of America and her allies; pressure will continue in Africa, as well as continued attempts to patch up the quarrel with Communist China. As for Europe, "Finlandization" seems to be the word. The plan calls for the neutralization of Europe, not for armed attack or invasion. The "weaning of Europe from America's role as protector and guardian" is the way one observer put it. Openly, of course, the Soviet will seem to concentrate all its activities toward the socialization of what's left of unsocialized Europe. But the real drive will be a "quiet as possible" move through Iran, the Emirates, along Saudi Arabia's border, and on to the Arabian Sea. Intelligence Digest of 14 March observes:

"Finland will once again serve as the model for all Europe, and it will be stressed that Finlandization on the pattern of Finland's neutrality does not mean isolation or a withdrawal from active participation in international issues. It will be pointed out, according to the draft (of the Andropov plan), that Finland is pursuing a policy of active commitment to the cause of peace, international understanding and cooperation. The draft plan calls for concerted attempts to persuade Europe's existing neutrals - Finland, Sweden, Switzerland and Austria - and non-aligned Yugoslavia to form the nucleus of a new grouping, collectively rejecting 'Atlanticism' and the stationing of U.S. missiles in Europe. Czechoslovakia is then to call for a widening of the group and to offer to join if there is reciprocation from one or more West European countries, Greece being mentioned as an early possible. If this happens as the draft plans foresee, a new momentum will be given to the West European 'peace movement' which will gain the support of a number of political parties which have not so far openly backed the 'peace movement.' If all goes well, even if it takes time, one by one trusted East European countries, members of the Warsaw Pact, will be allowed to support the call of the neutrals for a wider neutral Europe. The stress will be upon a new kind of neutrality, 'actively engaging in the search for peace and cooperation.' Supporting the movement and nudging it along will be Moscow's unremitting drive to 'expose' Washington's aim 'to attempt to deal with any nuclear conflict exclusively on European soil'. It is considered likely that before long a strong voice within West Germany will call for support for the neutralist concept, at least long enough for it no longer to be possible for Bonn to ignore. . . . It is, of course, a long-term plan, looking beyond the coming U.S. election to the next elections in Britain and West Germany, and perhaps Italy and France. According to Soviet sources Andropov gave the original orders for the drafting of such long-term plans. . . . Chernenko is unlikely to command enough power simply to ignore something set in motion by his predecessor." (Quoted from "Intelligence Digest," 14 March, 1984. A weekly review, 17 Rodney Road, Cheltenham, Glos. GL50 1HX. U.K. Subscription rates available on request).

Unfortunately for those of us who would rather be dead than Red, the soil of Europe has been well plowed and readied for the planting of the seeds of neutrality and the growing of Soviet-style peace. There have been months of Communist inspired anti-nuke demonstrations and peace parades in the major cities of Europe, as well as terrorist attacks on American installations, especially in West Germany. Also, considerable confusion has been caused in leadership circles by the virtual collapse of the European Common Market. Socialist French President Francois Mitterand, who flew from the Brussels Summit to red carpet treatment by President Reagan, blames Margaret Thatcher for the Economic Community collapse. But it all seemed to begin when Irish Prime Minister Garrett FitzGerald walked out of the Summit in a huff over farm policies. While it would be good if the Common Market should die, it is unfortunate that it should happen at a time that aids the Soviet Union more than the nations of Western Europe. Aside from the Communist-led demonstrations that have plagued Europe, there also is much confusion because of economic and labor troubles. As Allen Keyte observes in his March 15th World Affairs Review, "The whole situation of Europe looks a mess. The mismanagement of its financial affairs by our conservative politicians (how I hate to say that being a lifelong conservative) leads me to the conclusion that we shall before long see a substantial swing to the left. If this is to be avoided the conservatives must get their house in order, and quickly. But the signs are that socialism is gaining ground." And if socialism is gaining ground in an already socialized Europe, so also are the plans of the Kremlin gaining ground. The Finlandization of Western Europe would mean that the Kremlin Twelve could let the psychopoliticians and civilian commissars handle Europe while the military would be free to devote full time to the communization or conquest of the Middle East, and Central and South America. Not much could be done by the United States to prevent the neutralization and eventual takeover of Europe if Andropov's plans should succeed. And the peaceniks and nukenuts in the United States, the "disgruntled intellectuals, those with a grudge against the old order of society, those in financial need, and those with vices" would be ready and willing to aid in the name of Humanism. Editorial pages are filled with voices urging a halt to all truth-telling about the USSR. The same people who find it easy to call for denunciation of South Africa, of aid to El Salvador, of support for the government of the Philippines, are vehemently opposed to any similar policy of denunciation against any Communist state. These proponents of conciliation and merging with the Soviet Union may ultimately suffer the fate of Mary Shelley's Dr. Frankenstein.

The very possible Finlandization (neutralizing) of Western Europe would make it feasible for the Kremlin Twelve to have a free hand in the Middle East, where we are so very definitely committed, and where those Marines are still standing by in ships off the coast of Lebanon, just in case they're called upon to put out a fire with fire. As Anthony Harrigan recently wrote: "The war between Iran and Iraq, which began in 1980, has received only minimal coverage in the United States, but it could explode at any time with ominous results. The fanatical Ayatollah Khomeini could carry through on his threat to close the Strait of Hormuz. Both President Reagan and Prime Minister Thatcher have warned that they might use force to keep the Strait open. . . . If Iraq is overwhelmed by Iran, the fanatical hordes of the Ayatollah will turn their attention elsewhere, against Saudi Arabia, the oil rich Gulf states, or Israel - or all three at once, with grave consequences for the United States. The problems the United States has experienced in Lebanon since 1982 may be only a small taste of what is to come." That last sentence could prove to be the understatement of the year, considering the problems we experienced in Korea and Vietnam, and what a next similar planned conflict might bring.

Behind all of this muddle are two imponderables: who is to own, control and distribute the oil of the Middle East; and what is to be the future of the political state known as Israel? That internationalist group we have referred to as "Force X" undoubtedly planned it all, and must seem certain that the Communist Monster it will use can be controlled. But, when Hegel's dialectic of conflict is utilized to gain a goal, it sometimes happens that the creator (thesis) cannot control the created (antithesis), and the result (synthesis) is far different from that which was planned. We are reminded of the man who planned, without God being willing, to build more barns to store his harvested grain. But his soul was required of him and his plans died with him. To be sure God wills what we do is the only ultimate guarantee of victory.

THE NATURE OF EDUCATION FOR THE NEW WORLD ORDER

In a privately circulated document dealing with aspects of The New Age Movement, sometimes called The Aquarian Conspiracy and identified with the Rainbow Cult, there is a series of definitions of the word "Illuminati". We quote:

- "1) Members of a French sect which arose in 1623 under the name of Illumine's. Members in the South of France surfaced in 1722-1794.
- 2) Members of a secret rationalistic anti-clerical sect founded in 1776 by Adam Weishaupt.
- 3) Those who claim special illumination -- spiritual or intellectual -- mental enlightenment."

Then there follows this more detailed explanation: "In Bavaria, on May 1, 1776, the brilliant but degenerate Adam Weishaupt founded 'The Illuminati'. The Illuminati . . . was dedicated to the promotion of One World Government. After playing a major role in the French Revolution, the Illuminati went underground in 1795 and appeared again as 'The League of the Just' in 1848. This is the group which hired Karl Marx to write The Communist Manifesto. The poisonous legacy handed down by the Illuminati was revised in 1929 by the Soviet Secret Police for use on Russian citizens. Edward Hunter, in his book 'Brainwashing -- From Pavlov to Power', noted that Sensitivity Training is used in every communist country every day to control the people, to mold their thinking into the 'correct' patterns and to make sure that each person acts as the fearful and submissive member of the group, or collective".

In this same document there also is a set of definitions of Secular Humanism:

- "1) Man is god and there is no God -- no rights or wrongs. Man is master of his own destiny.
- 2) A system, mode or attitude of thought or action centering upon distinctively human interests or ideals; to replace the conception of man as the subject of a Heavenly King.
- 3) Humanism takes as its dominant pattern the progress of the individual from help-less infancy to self-governing maturity.
- 4) A contemporary cult or belief calling itself a religion but substituting faith in man for faith in God. Humanists envision a new religion -- with the state as the church and education as its savior".

In a now rare book, "Toward Soviet America," by William Z. Foster, written in 1932 when the author was National Chairman of the Communist Party of the United States of America (later bookburned by the Communists themselves because Foster told too much), there is reference to the nature of education when the United States becomes a Socialist State. Beginning on page 316 of this hard-to-find book, Foster wrote:

"Among the elementary measures the American Soviet government will adopt to further the cultural revolution are the following: the schools, colleges and universities will be coordinated and grouped under the National Department of Education and its state and local branches. The studies will be revolutionized, being cleansed of religious, patriotic and other features of the bourgeois ideology. The students will be taught on the basis of Marxian dialectic materialism, internationalism and the general ethics of the new Socialist society. Present obsolete methods of teaching will be superseded by a scientific pedagogy. The churches will remain free to continue their services, but their special tax and other privileges will be liquidated. Their buildings will revert to the State. Religious schools will be abolished and organized religious training for minors prohibited. Freedom will be established for anti-religious propaganda. The whole basis and organization of capitalist science will be revolutionized. Science will become materialistic, hence truly scientific; God will be banished from the laboratories as well as from the schools. . . . "

John J. Dunphy, writing in a 1983 issue of The Humanist tells his readers: "I am convinced that the battle for humankind's future must be waged and won in the public school classrooms by teachers who correctly perceive their role as the proselytizers of a new faith: a religion of humanity that recognizes and respects the spark of what theologians call divinity in every human being. These teachers must embody the same selfless dedication as the most rabid fundamentalist preachers, for they will be ministers of another sort, utilizing a classroom instead of a pulpit to convey humanist values in whatever subject they teach, regardless of the educational level -- preschool day care or large state university. The classroom must be and will become an arena of conflict between the old and the new -- the rotting corpse of Christianity, together with all its adjacent evils and misery, and the new faith of humanism, resplendent in its promise of a world in which the never-realized Christian Ideal of 'love thy neighbor' will finally be achieved."

To complete this documentation, G. Richard Bozarth, in The American Atheist, says: "And how does a god die? Quite simply because all his religionists have been converted to another religion, and there is no one left to make children believe they need him. . . . We need only to insure that our schools teach only secular knowledge. . . . If we could achieve this, god would indeed be shortly due for a funeral service."

The Illuminist, the Communist, the Humanist, the Atheist, all seem to have the same goal in regard to education: the school is to become a laboratory for sensitivity training wherein a new humanist religion is to be taught all children of all ages. The plan for achieving that goal seems to have been stated most simply and forcefully by William Z. Foster. It is noteworthy that in his book "Toward Soviet America" from which we have quoted, Foster referred to a National Department of Education. There was no such department until the coming of Jimmy Carter to the White House. Ronald Reagan promised to eliminate the department, but this has remained one of his unfulfilled campaign promises. In all respects, it may be said that the plan laid down by Foster has already been carried out or is in the process of being carried out. Religion and patriotism have been barred from government (formerly public) schools. Internationalism has been a standard part of teaching ever since it was introduced by UNESCO, which is controlled by the Communists. There are textbooks being used that teach children that "only with a world government is there a chance for saving the earth for humankind." Students are encouraged to write their concepts of a new world constitution, and there is much discussion about the need for a new United States Constitution. The principles of humanism permeate every area of the school curriculum. In short, the government schools have been taken over by humanists promoting an alien, Godless philosophy with the intention of creating a new kind of person for a new kind of world order. For this reason there has developed a rapid growth of private and church affiliated schools where children can be protected from the Marxist and amoral humanistic principles that are being forced upon children who are forced to go to school until they have reached a certain age.

Because of this exodus from government to private schools, there has been a doubling of efforts to gain control over schools of every description. Elimination of tax exemption, as mentioned by the Communist, Foster, has been one of the methods used. Enforced state certification of teachers in private schools also has been effective. And actual force and imprisonment has not been overlooked. The most publicized of these actions has been the State of Nebraska's actions against the Faith Baptist Church in Louisville, Nebraska. When government assumes the power to padlock a church, jail pastor and parents of the children attending its school, then as Foster predicted, control of the building and its activities has reverted to the state. There has been something of a compromise worked out in this particular case. But there are other cases which have not been so publicized, where the power of government, Marxist style, has been displayed. And more of such action can be expected. However, as Shirley Correll explains in an article appearing in the Pro-Family Forum Alert of January, 1984:

"The plan to abolish religious schools will not be accomplished through a frontal attack. The people of America would never tolerate such open abuses of Constitutional freedom. It will be skillfully done, as in Russia, where religious freedoms are regulated out of any meaningful existence. Cases will be carefully chosen, selecting small churches which haven't the funds to defend themselves -- in jurisdictions where judges have shown themselves to be inclined to render decisions establishing the right of the state to regulate education and where there is a sheriff who will carry out the judge's orders. In this manner, the churches will be forced to spend exorbitant funds to defend their rights, or lose them. As the courts are used to establish state control, the church schools will be forced to meet state licensing standards. These may include such areas as teacher certification or curriculum. This will force them to use state-trained or approved teachers, constantly eliminating or watering down biblical standards and influence in education." (Pro-Family Forum, P.O.Box 8907, 3601 E. Lancaster, Fort Worth, Texas 76112).

Even if private and religious schools maintain the ability to teach without state interference, there remains one handicap for many parents: sending their children to any school other than a designated government school means the payment of tuition. There are many, many parents who deplore the treatment and the teaching their children receive in government schools; but they simply cannot afford to send them to a religious or private school. And for such parents, there has developed yet another plan: Home education. This method of teaching is growing by leaps and bounds. It isn't always easy, and each State may have its special regulations and restrictions which must be overcome. But they can be overcome if parents are determined and persistent. An interesting example of how the difficulties were overcome by parents in Palm Beach, County, Florida. This article appeared, rather surprisingly, in our local daily, the very liberal Palm Beach Post, and was written by a staff writer. The article follows.

MORE PARENTS TAKE HOME SCHOOL ROUTE

By Jean Dubail, Staff Writer

For a growing number of American parents, school is no place to educate a child. Sending a child to school, especially a public one, puts his body, mind and spirit in genuine danger, some parents believe. Knife-wielding toughs and paddle-happy principals threaten the body. Teacher incompetence makes the mind go soft. "Values clarification" transforms the spirit into a moral swamp. The ordinary alternative, private school, is beyond some families' financial means. The increasingly popular solution is teaching at home. No one knows for sure how many families have taken this route. Thousands, perhaps, are hiding from authorities trying to enforce compulsory attendance laws. In Georgia, Wisconsin, and half a dozen other states, bolder parents are battling to have home education recognized as one of the basic civil rights. John Holt, author of Teach Your Own and editor of the Boston-based bimonthly newsletter, "Growing Without Schooling," estimates there are between 10,000 and 20,000 people teaching at home throughout the United States. About 4,700 of them subscribe to his publication. "The numbers are certainly growing," Holt said. He added, however, that there may be a natural limit to the number of families teaching at home. "Some people don't want to spend that much time with their kids," Holt said. "We're not going to see a mass exodus from the public schools." Buttrressing this natural limit is a legal one. Attendance at a public or private school is the law in every state and families who violate it often are subject to prosecution. But those who teach at home are becoming increasingly adept at changing laws in their favor. They appear to be winning legislative battles in Georgia, Virginia, Washington State and Arizona, said Ed Nagle, coordinator of the National Association for the Legal Support of Alternative Schools, based in Santa Fe, N.M. Where necessary, parents learn to hide from the law or work through its seams, Nagle said. "It really doesn't matter what the law says, because people do what they want to do," he said. Florida law, for example, requires that home tutors be certified teachers. Private schools, however, are almost wholly unregulated. By incorporating as a private school, "enrolling" other students -- even if they live halfway across the state -- and charging tuition, no matter how nominal, the truant officer is effectively thwarted.

Five years ago, Patricia Ann Mordes of Marianna became alarmed by the rough handling her young son received from other students. . . . Mrs. Mordes now heads the Mordes Academy Inc. She teaches two sons herself and enrolls 21 other students around the state in "extension branches." Parents pay $50 a year for book catalogs, lists of bookstores and a suggested curriculum. The state requires nothing from her but presentation upon request of records showing that all 23 students have "attended" school five hours a day for 180 days. . . .The recent experience of two West Palm Beach families, threatened with prosecution by Palm Beach County school officials, shows that home teachers cannot be clubbed with Florida law. One family formed a private school and the other family enrolled in it and officials were forced to drop the case. "They're not succeeding in stamping it out," Mrs. Mordes said. "They are succeeding in harrassing people. If one wishes to do something, one can usually do it."

In regard to home schooling, what applies in Florida does not necessarily apply in any other State. Different States have different rules and regulations . Also, what's left out of the article quoted above is the Christian perspective. Many of the better-known spokesmen for the home education movement are libertarians or non-Christians, But Christian parents seeking to find another means of educating their children because of the humanistic teaching in government schools, would want to get their advice from a Christian source. We don't make a habit of recommending one source of information over another. In this case, we make an exception. The exception is Ginny (Mrs. Chet) Baker, who has written a book, Teaching Your Children At Home, which emphasizes the Christian American point of view. It's a book for Christian parents who have decided to teach their own children but don't know how to begin. It is packed with information and resources for material and textbooks to help parents set up their own home school. It also contains an analysis of the relative statutes in the various States, and how to avoid legal entanglements. For those seriously interested, write to Virginia Birt Baker, 2911 East 42nd Street, Minneapolis, MN. 55406. $7.00 plus $ 1.75 for postage and handling.

WHILE WE SLEPT

While the American public is being bemused by the media-sustained Hart attack, and being lulled into lethargy by a temporary stability in economic matters, events are progressing in the rest of the world much as the New World Order Elite and the Communist Hierarchy have planned them. As we have written previously, the plan involves the Finlandization of Europe, and communist concentration upon gaining control of Middle East Oil and Indian Ocean water. In step with the plan, the media has begun reporting on the weakening of Europe, economically, in morale, and in the desire for peace on communist terms. Most obvious example of this program was Newsweek's April 9 report on "The Decline of Europe." Readers are told that "Economic stagnation and political malaise darken the future of a once proud and powerful continent." Exactly what the Politburo wanted to happen. Luigi Barzini, an Italian author, is quoted as saying: "We Europeans have been reduced to the role of the Greeks in the Roman Empire. The most useful function an Italian or a Frenchman can perform these days is to teach an American or a Japanese the proper temperature at which to drink his red wine." Olivier Wormser, former president of the Bank of France asks via Newsweek: "Is the old continent in temporary decline or is it in definitive decadence?" Then Scott Sullivan, the newsweekly's European regional director, reports: "Western Europe, the proud old continent that dominated world history for two milleniums, is stagnating economically and faltering politically. After 30 years of nearly uninterrupted growth, the postwar European economic miracle has spluttered and died out." This same attitude is echoed in the European press. J. Jurgen Jeske, who writes for the conservative West German Frankfurter Allgemeine said, "The evidence stares the world in the face. We are buying cars and electronic equipment from Japan, ships from South Korea, underwear from the Philippines, watches and cameras from Hong Kong, clothing from Taiwan, and calculators from Malaysia. By offering lower freight rates, Asian shipping lines have won new market shares from their European counterparts. . . . There is one thing that all Asian countries (especially Japan and South Korea) have: a drive to conquer world markets. It is this spirit, along with the courage to take big risks and gambles, that represents the real challenge of Asia to a tired and timorous Europe."

Much of Europe's troubles came about because the socialist leaders of the continent insisted upon establishing a Regional World Government via the European Economic Community. They failed to reckon with the spirit of nationalism which has always dominated that continent. Too many balance of power plays by the bigger nations, too many wars between France and Germany, England and Spain, too much of the spirits of Napoleon and Hitler, too much control by Merchant Bankers; too much past history to make a European Regional Government easy to establish. So, contributing to the decline of Europe is the failure of the European Community. The German Information Center on March 30, relayed from Bonn the information that "Opening a parliamentary debate on the crisis facing the European Community, Chancellor Helmut Kohl emphasized before the Bundestag Wednesday (March 28) his continued readiness to participate in a special EC summit conference that would take place before the scheduled June conference of the European Council. Despite the failure of the March 19-20 summit in Brussels . . . the Chancellor reaffirmed his determination to pursue a policy of European unity." And the British Intelligence Digest reported in March that "The European Monetary System (EMS) is five years old

Rev. Henry Mitchell is black, is president and founder of the North Star Mission in Chicago, a tax free foundation which helps the needy in that area, gets people off welfare rolls by finding jobs for them, and in general is a credit to the community. Rev. Mitchell also publishes Star News, a newsletter which he mails every month if funds are available. His letter for April dealt with politics and politicians. It was so simple, so direct, so forceful that we thought you might like to know how he is advising his friends to vote. Here is his message to his readers, exactly as he wrote them.

* * * * *

Gentlemen and ladies, we are in an election year where many promises are being made of politicians; 99% of the politicians are promising what they are going to do, if he or she is elected. One thing they failed to tell the American people is that whatever is going to be done, it will be done at the expense of the taxpayer's money. They failed to tell the people that Big Government must take from you and I, (sic) before they can give. A great percentage of what they take will end up in their pockets. ¶ Beware of those politicians who say they will stop wars, when Jesus said, "There will be wars and rumors of wars." ¶ Beware of those politicians who say they will eliminate poverty, when Jesus said, "The poor will always be with us." ¶ Beware of those politicians who are constantly crying for disarmament, when the Bible teaches to prepare for wars in the time of peace. ¶ Beware of those politicians who are fighting to destroy the American System of liberties and justice for all. ¶ Beware of those politicians who speak and demonstrate the Communist philosophy that destroys the freedom of all people. ¶ Beware of those politicians who fight to pass legislation to take the lives of unborn babies. ¶ Beware of those politicians who say that they can eliminate famine and depression, when Jesus said, "There will be famine in the land." ¶ Beware of those politicians who preach Big Governments and Big Unions. Big Government has created the image in the hearts of millions of Americans that Big Government is the answer to all of our problems, but it is false. Less government and more individual responsibility is the answer to 90% of the American problems. Big Unions, along with Big Governments, passed a child labor law that prohibited young people from working. This has caused millions of young people to lobby from one place to another, gang affiliation, use of drugs and committing crimes. Big Unions with the help of Big Governments, have passed a minimum wage law that has caused many companies to go out of business or relocate. Americans do not need too much government and union involvement in their lives. ¶ Beware of politicians who preach that the answer to our racial and educational problem is bussing our children from here to there. ¶ Beware of those politicians and individuals who support terrorists, such as Arafat (reference is to Jesse Jackson-Ed.). ¶ We need politicians who are going to represent the needs of the people regardless of race, creed and color. ¶ We need politicians who will strengthen our defense against our enemies, such as the Communists. ¶ We need politicians who will make efforts to create more jobs in America through private enterprises and not by government involvement. ¶ We need politicians who will encourage companies to stay in America. We need politicians who will work with the private sector of our country to improve the educational system, without bussing the children. ¶ We need politicians who will work with the private enterprises to replace the welfare systems with jobs for millions of able bodied men and women. ¶ We need politicians who will fight for death sentences for the suppliers of drugs to drug dealers, pushers and/or peddlers. My friends, the Star News speaks the truth and facts about the condition and problems that exist in America. The Star News needs to be published at least once a month. All donations are tax exempt. this month. It has seen five years of mixed fortunes . . . has not produced the sort of co-ordination of economic policies by member countries that was originally intended. Nor has the European Currency Unit achieved the wide degree of acceptance that had been hoped for. The proposed European central bank has not yet been established either. " A possible explanation: The European socialists hoped to establish a Regional World Government which would operate on its own in competition with IMF-World Bank "Special Drawing Rights" monetary arrangement. This did not sit well with the Trilateral Commission or with the Atlantic Council. Mrs. Thatcher refused to permit the British sterling to be a part of the exchange-rate mechanism. She is a pro-Trilateralist, not a convinced European. And, perhaps as planned, this has all worked out to the benefit of the communist hierarchy, which aims to neutralize Europe, economically, politically, militarily, and spiritually. To further the goal, the Kremlin continues to promote "peace" demonstrations, sends submarines into other country's waters, holds war games in the Atlantic, etc. One of its tricks: it promised Holland that Soviet missiles would never land on Dutch soil if the Netherlands would refuse to permit the placing of nuclear weapons by NATO in Holland.

With Europe declining and on the way to total Finlandization, the Kremlin is free to work toward fulfillment of that centuries-old creation of a land corridor through the Middle East and Pakistan to the Indian Ocean. As Allen Keyte reported in his March 30 World Affairs Review: "Earlier this month, Soviet Defense Minister Marshal Ustinov visited India accompanied not only by his deputy, Mr. Shabanov, but perhaps more significantly also by the Navy commander-in-chief, Admiral Gorshkov. A number of very large arms deals have been agreed upon, which provide the Indian army and air force with modern equipment for at least the next five years. Now it appears to be the turn of the navy for re-equipment. The Soviet contingent visited India's main naval HQ at Visakhapatnam, on the east coast. The Indian navy is apparently considering the purchase of a second aircraft carrier and more coastal vessels, and also improvements in anti-submarine capabilities. The Soviets, who already place great importance on their Indian Ocean fleet, believe that a deal is vital to improving their own capability -- when linked to a modernized Indian navy. The above aims for the navy become even more significant when linked to the arrangements of March 1983 to manufacture MIG-21 and 23 fighter aircraft in India, and in addition being offered the MIG-29 Fulcrum and the MIG-31 Fixbound fighter. These latter two models are highly sophisticated and are only just going into service in the Soviet air force. Additionally, the army is being supplied with Soviet T-72 tanks and also the T-80 model which is only just being introduced in Warsaw Pact countries." (World Affairs Review, 98 Malleson Road, Gotherington, Cheltenham, Glos GL52 4EY, U.K. $127 per year).

Now add this information: "The recent Soviet-Indian arms deal is the latest stage in an ominous build-up of weapons in this part of Asia. Pakistan has just received a further six long-range F-16 fighters from the US; these aircraft are fitted with sophisticated ALR69 radar. Mrs. Gandhi deeply resented the American decision to supply these aircraft. (In addition to the Soviet arms deal) India is buying French Mirage 2000 fighter aircraft. To help counter what India and the USSR regard as the US naval threat in the Indian Ocean, the Soviets have agreed to supply electronic surveillance equipment for some Indian ships. Although India continues to buy arms from Western sources as well as from the USSR, the Soviets have a vested interest in tension between India and Pakistan. Their ultimate aim is to precipitate war between the two countries. If they are successful, fighting will break out in a matter of months rather than of years. A war between India and Pakistan could bring five immediate benefits to the Soviet Union -- though four would depend upon an Indian victory. Pakistan supports the anti-Soviet resistance movement in Afghanistan. Irrespective of the outcome, armed conflict between India and Pakistan would direct Pakistani attention away from events in Afghanistan and would ease the Soviet position there.

Secondly, a defeated Pakistan would lie at the mercy of the Soviet Union in territorial terms. Thirdly, the Soviet Union is still suffering from the effects of its humiliating failure in Southern Africa. Angola and Mozambique were forced to negotiate with South Africa because Moscow was unable to deliver on its promises to the two countries. A military success by a Soviet-backed India would, the Russians feel, help to reinstate the USSR in the eyes of the Third World. At the very moment when the arms deal between India and the Soviet Union was being concluded, (Red) China was promising further arms aid to Pakistan and was supporting Pakistan's condemnation of the Soviet occupation of Afghanistan. The US, along with China, backed Pakistan in its previous conflict with India. A military defeat for Pakistan would lower the prestige of the US and of China, Moscow believes. Finally, in the event of victory, a grateful Mrs. Gandhi could help the Soviets to achieve their ambitions in South Asia." (Intelligence Digest Weekly Review, 17 Rodney Road, Cheltenham, Glos. GL50 1HX, U.K. Rates available on request).

Pakistan is vital to the security of that region, stands in the way of Soviet control of the oil-rich Middle East, and of Soviet access to the Indian Ocean through Baluchistan, which is a province of Pakistan. Freed from worries about Europe through its neutralization and weakened condition, the Kremlin gang can concentrate on catering to the belligerent Shi-ites of Iran, on arming both Syria and India; and if events developed as planned, Saudi Arabia, the United Arab Emirates, Oman and other oil-producing States bordering the Persian Gulf would be at the mercy of the USSR as its forces pushed through Baluchistan to the Indian Ocean. The danger to the United States: we are pledged to keep open the Persian Gulf, which stands in the way of the Red Bear's trek to the sea. Having lost credibility in the Lebanese adventure, we could lose far more than credibility if the Persian powder keg is ignited.

FINALLY: While we slept the world's debt money manipulators and their multinational affiliates created for their own profit the Communist Menace that presently plagues the alleged Free World. Those same New World Order Elitists created the Persian Gulf Peril that threatens to engulf us in yet another foreign war, this time to save oil for the factories of Europe and Japan. But there is yet another danger which they are developing for their own gain, one which Frankfurter J. Jurgen Jeske calls "The Pacific Power Shift"; a Yellow Peril being created by the promotion of Chinese Communist power, industrially and militarily. President Reagan is preparing for a visit to Peking. He says, "We know it is within our grasp to reap enormous rewards from the courage and foresight of those who opened the doors of Chinese-American friendship." It was Kissinger and Nixon, Rockefeller and Hammer and their ilk, who opened those doors not for friendship but for personal profit. Having created the Soviet Menace, having paved the way for the Communist takeover of Mainland China, having engineered the conquest of Southeast Asia at horrible cost in the blood of young Americans, having created the present Persian Gulf Peril, now they create yet another Communist Menace in the Pacific! As the Lord said of the leaders of ancient Israel, so He must be saying of today's leaders of America: "Yea, they are greedy dogs, which can never have enough, and they are shepherds that cannot understand; they all look their own way, every one for his gain..." (Isaiah 56:11).

PREPARING FOR A NATIONAL EMERGENCY

In the last week of March members of the Trilateral Commission began pouring into Washington, D.C. from Western Europe, Japan, Canada and the United States. They took over the principal facilities of the Mayflower Hotel, held their secret meetings during the first week of April. First, however, at President Reagan's mandated invitation, they met at the White House. What happened at that meeting is known only to those who were privileged to attend as members. At the formal meetings at the Mayflower Hotel, President Reagan was not asked to speak or even attend, but Vice-President George Bush was permitted to deliver the final address at the last meeting. It is said that David Rockefeller chaired all the meetings, as North American chairman of the Trilats, although Takeshi Watanabe, Japanese chairman and former President of the Asian Development Bank; and Georges Berthoin, European chairman, assisted in the chairing. There were what they called "press conferences" but no news of what was happening in the meetings was given out, except that the business of propping up the international banks and finding ways to give more aid to Third World Nations (including the Communist Satellites) were discussed. This brought out one press release which appeared in the Washington Post of April 2, and was reprinted in a few other dailies. We quote that article:

"TRILATERALISTS ASK JAPAN FOR AID COMMITMENTS"

"Members of the private and prestigious Trilateral Commission, who were received by President Reagan at the White House yesterday as part of a three-day meeting here, are debating a task force report that calls on Japan to make new multibillion dollar commitments to the western world's military defense and economic aid. The report said Japan should make up the entire $3 billion shortfall in the World Bank's aid program for Third World countries, managed by the International Development Association. Recently, IDA announced that the three-year program scheduled to start this year would have to be held to $9 billion instead of the recommended $12 billion because of limits the United States had placed on its contribution. The task force document, which painted an exceedingly grim picture of economic and political disarray in Europe states that Japan is wealthy enough to export more capital and to help Europe modernize its 'backward' industries by investing more money there. The strong implication is that by failing to do so, Japan is certain to face even stronger protectionist measures than those that are already keeping Japanese goods out of European markets. The commission's 200 members attended a 30-minute White House reception at which news coverage was prohibited. Reagan's more conservative supporters have long been suspicious of the Trilateral Commission and have identified it as being part of an international power elite. A central recommendation of the task force report is that Japan should use its growing economic power to take over part of the global defense burden now assumed by the United States, and some of the economic commitments now made by Europe. But the report focused its main attention on economic issues and on upcoming summits of the seven major industrial nations as a way of coping with them. Its suggestions on Japan were part of a six-point 'package deal' it said should be adopted at the next summit, scheduled June 7-9 in London." (Unquote).

While nothing was said about what was said at that White House meeting of the Trilateral Commission, things began to happen after the meeting had ended. For example, President Reagan suddenly took the offensive against Congress, in speech after speech he blamed Congress, especially for the loss of credibility and lives in Lebanon. Also, the attacks on Edwin Meese were intensified and the President continued to defend that "last of the Reaganites" remaining among his aides. There had been Richard Allen, William Clark, Lyn Nofziger, and now Ed Meese, all gone or going and James Baker, the Bush disciple, rising to the top. And there were indications that, if the Megabankers had their way, Reagan himself would be the next to go. So, to reassert himself, the president came out swinging against the congressmen led by Tip O'Neill. But this strategy backfired. And the Senate fired the first shot. On April 5 the Senate had approved a request for more money to be spent in aid to the anti-government guerillas in Nicaragua, this at a time when most of the Senators must have known that the CIA was behind the mining of Nicaraguan waters. But in a sudden shift of attitude, on April 10 the Senate approved a resolution which reads, "It is the sense of Congress that no funds heretofore or hereafter appropriated in any act of Congress shall be obligated or expended for the purpose of planning, executing or supporting the mining of the ports or territorial waters of Nicaragua." This was merely a non-binding resolution, but as the heat grew, a House committee approved exactly the same resolution that had been passed by the Senate. And, since all money bills are supposed to originate in the House, there was a rumor that funds for the entire project might be cut off, thus leaving the ground -- and the water -- clear for more communist expansion.

There were indications that in all he did, the President was trying to avoid incurring the displeasure of the Trilateralists. His upcoming trip to Red China is very definitely a Trilateral assignment. And there was another Trilat project that the President has been promoting. On April 3, immediately after that White House meeting with the Trilats, President Reagan signed and issued Executive Order 12472, a national emergency order dealing with the taking over of all communications facilities in case of a declared national crisis or emergency. This in line with a classified "National Security Decision Directive" prepared by the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA), by order of the National Security Council. Some background is needed:

On October 30, 1969 President Nixon signed Executive Order 11490 "assigning emergency preparedness functions to federal departments and agencies." This Executive Order provided that, whenever a president declares a national emergency, a bureaucratic dictatorship is automatically empowered to exercise dictatorial powers over every phase of life. Transportation, food, water, utilities, etc. would be commandeered. Banks would be taken over. Whole communities could be moved to other locations. Manpower would be managed by the appropriate federal department. A total dictatorship if and when a President declares a National Emergency! As we know, Executive Order 11490 was never invoked, but it was "the law of the land" if needed. Since the original Executive Order 11490 of 1969, there have been a few alterations and amendments, but the Order has remained, waiting for use in case of declared crisis.

ADDRESS CORRECTION, PLEASE. In our DBR of 3/30/84, "The Nature of Education for the New World Order," we referred to the book "Teaching Your Children at Home," by Ginny (Mrs. Chet) Baker ($7.00 plus $1.75 for postage and handling.) Inadvertently, we gave the address of a distributor for those who might wish to purchase the book. No harm done, except that Mrs. Baker would prefer that all requests be addressed to her home: Rt. 1, Box 25, Fairfield MT 59436. Orders may also be sent to Mrs. Baker at P.O.Box 58800, Dallas TX 75248. Because of the humanism being preached in government schools, and the high cost of tuition for private and Christian schools, many young Christian parents are seriously considering the home education method of teaching their children. We especially recommend the work being done by Ginny Baker.

As conservatives were moved out of the White House and the Executive Office Building, the Trilateral Commission, its parent the Council on Foreign Relations, and the Inner Core that controls them both ("The Order"), gained control of the Reagan Administration and decided that the original executive emergency order issued by President Nixon was out of date, that a new program for dictatorship should be written. So there was issued last year the secret "National Security Decision Directive," and FEMA was ordered to prepare a new Emergency Preparedness Plan. It will be recalled that before President Nixon issued E.O. 11490, there had been issued previously some 23 different executive orders, all dealing with a bureaucratic takeover when the word was given. Those 23 E.O.s were cancelled and became 30 different sections in Nixon's overall Executive Order. It contained specific instructions for every executive department and agency, to be carried out when the word was given. Similarly, it is to be expected that this time a number of executive orders will be issued before the final, all inclusive program is made law through publication in the Federal Register. Now, this EO12472 is, therefore, just one of many that will follow; this particular order dealing only with communications, and more specifically with all telecommunication systems in the country, commercial, government, and private. And execution of this first of many emergency orders involves 18 departments and agencies, as well as four "independent" agencies: The Federal Communications System, the Federal Reserve System, the Nuclear Regulatory Commission, and the United States Postal Service. The Executive Branch entities include the Departments of Agriculture, Commerce, Defense, Energy, Interior, Justice, State, Transportation, and Treasury. Other agencies involved include CIA, FEMA, NASA, NSA and USIA; these plus the General Services Administration, the National Telecommunications and Information Administration, National Aeronautics and Space Administration, and the Veterans Administration. We should like to quote the entire Executive Order 12472 of April 3, 1984, dealing with "Assignment of National Security and Emergency Preparedness Telecommunications Functions," but the order covers more than seven pages of the Federal Register, Vol. 49, No. 67, April 5, 1984. However, Rep. Ron Paul (soon to be Senator Paul, we hope) has supplied us with a fact sheet, which is dull but important reading. We quote from same:

* * * * *

The domestic and international telecommunications resources of the United States, including commercial, government and privately owned services and facilities, are essential elements in support of national security policy and are vital to emergency preparedness. A survivable domestic and international telecommunications infrastructure with the necessary combination of hardness, redundancy, mobility, connectivity, interoperability, restorability and security is essential to national security and emergency preparedness requirements in all circumstances, including those of crisis or emergency.

The Executive Order establishes a framework for (1) the planning, development and exercise of the capability to satisfy the national security and emergency preparedness telecommunications needs of the Federal government; and (2) providing advice and assistance to State and local governments, private industry, and volunteer organizations, upon request, regarding their national security and emergency preparedness telecommunications requirements. The Order establishes a planning and management framework for all conditions of crisis or emergency, including international crises, attack, recovery and reconstitution, and the entire range of civil preparedness emergencies, such as earthquakes and hurricanes. The Order also specifies the national security and emergency preparedness telecommunications roles and relationships among the Executive Office of the President and the various Federal departments and agencies.

The Order establishes the National Communications System (NCS) to assist the President, the National Security Council, the Director of the Office of Science and Technology Policy and the Director of the Office of Management and Budget, in the discharge of their national security and emergency preparedness telecommunications functions. . . . The NCS is intended to assist in the coordination of the planning for and provision of national security and emergency preparedness communications for the Federal government under all circumstances. . . . The Executive Order consolidates and replaces prior assignments on national security and emergency preparedness telecommunications functions in various Executive Orders and a Presidential Memorandum of August 21, 1963, which originally established the NCS. Nothing in the Order alters existing responsibilities for telecommunications or automated data processing procurement, such as those contained in the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act, as amended, or the Paperwork Reduction Act of 1980. (End of quotes from official fact sheet re E.O. 12472).

Sorry for the torture. Bureaucratic gobbledegook always seems to bring pain to anyone well versed in the American language. One consolation: we were quoting from the fact sheet. The actual Executive Order is much worse, in both readability and in actuality. But the reading is important because it is the first of a series of EOs which, if implemented can impose a dictatorship on the people of the United States. Since this first EO deals with telecommunications, it would follow that the Trilats are not expecting war or a domestic crisis, but an economic crisis if things get out of hand. As was indicated in the Washington Post article we quoted, the Trilats are trying to get an additional $3 billion out of the people of Japan, because they're afraid to rip off the people of Europe or pick completely clean the pockets of Americans. There has been quite a hubbub over the recent bail out of the Big Banks when Argentina refused to pay the interest on its latest loans. The banks were bailed out through the Exchange Stabilization Fund which was created by congress for an entirely different purpose. So, to put it plainly, American taxpayers paid the bill that Argentina refused to pay, a supposedly vital Big Bank bailout. Just to make matters more unpredictable, there's this currency call-in scheduled for after the elections in November. Franklin Sanders, who calls himself a Moneychanger, wonders if the purpose of it is "to prepare the way for a completely new financial system, a debit card type system under which all your purchases are charged directly to your bank account. . . . The end of cash is the end of freedom." Gary North believes that the new currency may mean "a new social and political order." Now, since the technology of data storage is exploding, and if all transfers are tied to an electronic data bank, you can begin to understand how the federal control of all telecommunications, commercial, government and private, becomes important enough to issue a special executive order. Said Gary "As far as privacy is concerned, the credit card is worse than checks, which in turn are worse than paper currency, which in turn was worse than gold coins." So, when the banks start calling those outdoor machines "tellers," and when all transactions are tied up in an electronic data bank, freedom will have departed from the land. And the total lack of freedom could bring on a real crisis. Hence, Executive Order 12472, just in case.

Year Thirty-One Number Sixteen April 20, 1984

TARGET DATE: 1987

When it was decided by the Nation's political leaders that the United States should enter World War I in 1917, there was created a Committee on Public Information. Headed by George Creel, a close friend of President Wilson and his alter ego Col. House, the committee included as members the secretaries of War, Navy, and State, and the eminent public relations expert Edward L. Bernays. The object of the committee: to sell the American public on the need for the United States of America to lend its fullest support to the war effort. Writing of the activities of the committee, Bernays said: "I joined the Committee on Public Information in 1917 and, like my colleagues, found new public relations horizons being opened by the requirements of war. There were few airplanes in those days, no radios, no talking movies, no television, no transatlantic telephones, and no flying across oceans. No literature on mass communications, social psychology, anthropology, sociology, or social psychology provided us with background principles. We had no precedents to go by. But every existing channel of mass communications was used to the full -- posters, billboards, advertising, exhibits, pamphlets, newspapers, and envelope stuffers. New methods were tried, too. . . . Critics charged that sometimes the Committee's volunteers got hysterical, but, after all, hysteria was generally prevalent at the time. Reports that the Germans were beasts and Huns were generally accepted. The most fantastic atrocity stories were believed. After the war there was widespread disillusion with and reaction against propaganda. The American people resented their own wartime gullibility." ("Public Relations," by Edward L. Bernays. University of Oklahoma Press, 1952).

With the coming of World War II what had been called propaganda now was known as "psychological Warfare" on our part, and "Brainwashing" if the same was used by the enemy. Bernays wrote: "In June of that year (1941) I addressed the Industrial College of Armed Forces on public relations during World War I and the changes in psychological approach and technical developments since 1917. At that time I suggested a public relations program for the United States designed to maintain high morale, proposing a United States government Morale Commission of expert advisers to draw up a master plan for morale and psychological warfare. . . . Six months later came Pearl Harbor, and coincident with war a new stage in the development of public relations began."

We mention these events because there is presently in the United States a very similar campaign to create, with or without the wholesale shedding of blood, a New World Order. The propaganda and brainwashing experts have been at their tasks ever since the year 1917, but a special intensity has developed in the crusade since the time that President John Kennedy spoke in Liberty Hall in Philadelphia and called for a new Declaration of Interdependence between the Nations of the world. The chronological pattern adopted provides for the psychological preparation of the people for the events that would follow. In 1776 there was the Declaration of Independence, in 1976 there was the Declaration of Interdependence, approved by a minority of U.S. Congressmen and Senators. The Declaration of 1776 was followed by the Nation's first constitution, called the Articles of Confederation. The Declaration of 1976 found the present Constitution a "horse and buggy" document in a jet age. In the 1780s, the Articles of Confederation were found to be inadequate, so the present Constitution was ratified in 1787. Similarly, the liberals hope to have adopted in 1987 the "Newstates Constitution" which was written by Fabian New Dealer Rexford Guy Tugwell and associates at the Center for the Study of Democratic Institutions (now the Aspen Institute for Humanistic Studies). It is this "Newstates Constitution" that its proponents expect to have adopted at a Constitutional Convention in 1987, the bicentennial anniversary of the current Constitution. Backing this Newstates Constitution are, among other organizations, the American Academy of Political and Social Science, the League of Women Voters, the NAACP, the UAW, the National Council of Churches, the Urban League, Common Cause, the Aspen Institute, the Rockefeller, Ford and Carnegie Foundations, the CFR and the Trilateral Commission, and a great number of deluded conservatives who have fallen into a trap, thinking that they can control the proceedings at such a convention, and can limit its action to the passage of a "balance-the-Budget" Amendment.

The original plan for this Constitutional Convention was introduced on January 14, 1975 by Congressman Pettis of California, as Resolution No. 28. That resolution called for the convention to be held in Philadelphia, with the President of the Senate presiding (currently that would be Vice President Bush). However, this original resolution seems to have been shelved and a new bill, S.119, was introduced in the Senate on January 26, 1983 by Senator Hatch of Utah, and is currently in the Committee on the Judiciary awaiting action by that committee. This bill is different in that it provides that the delegates to such a constitutional convention shall be appointed by the State Legislatures! Also, the State chief justice who is senior in years of service shall convene the convention, and shall preside until the delegates elect a presiding officer from among their membership. Two-thirds of the States must have called for the convention, and then three-fourths of the States must ratify any proposed amendment, whereupon the Administrator of General Services "shall issue a proclamation that the amendment is a part of the Constitution of the United States." This bill limits the proposal of amendments only to those amendments proposed by the States. However, if the delegates decided to scrap the present Constitution and propose an entirely new one (as happened in the original constitutional convention) we can see no way this could be prohibited by S. 119.

Under the heading "Toward a New Currency, a New Constitution, a New Political Order," Don McAlvany writes: "Several major historical changes are coming in the U.S. over the next 3-4 years. First, a new currency will be issued in 1985 or '86, replete with built-in metal wires for easy electronic detection. (Exchange controls are also coming). The last time there was a major currency change in the U.S. was in 1934, and that change launched a new social order (i.e., the New Deal and fifty years of socialism which were to follow). Shifts in major national symbols usually precede major shifts in the political order -- they psychologically prepare the people for these changes." The "shifts in major symbols" to which the author refers involves the change in currency, since currency is a "major national symbol." In 1935, the reverse of the Great Seal of the United States began to appear on the one dollar bills being issued by the Federal Reserve System. That reverse seal depicts a pyramid topped by an all-seeing eye. They are occultist symbols, and are surrounded by the words "Annuit Coeptus . . . Novus Ordo Seclorum." According to the liberal historian Arthur M. Schlesinger, Jr., Henry Wallace, Roosevelt's secretary of the Department of Agriculture, induced the secretary of the Treasury to put the Great Pyramid on the new dollar bill because he thought "Novus Ordo" was Latin for New Deal. As McAlvany notes, this change in the appearance of currency psychologically prepared the people for acceptance of the political change, which was the New Deal. McAlvany wrote: "What changes in the political order are the American people about to be prepared for via the new currency? The answer is a new constitution. For years liberals have advocated that the United States needs a new constitution 'more in line with modern, technological, space age realities'. . . . This is a trap!

"In summary, a constitutional crisis of epic proportions is approaching in the U.S.

over the next two to three years. The freedom and future sovereignty of the U.S. and its citizens are at stake. The liberal eastern establishment will try to steamroller this one by the American people much as they did the Panama Canal treaties ('78), the overthrow of the Shah ('79), and Somoza ('80). The Reagan Administration (or Bush, if Reagan resigns or dies), or the Mondale or Hart Administration, can be expected to support the new constitution. This new constitution would be a gargantuan jump toward the 'new world order' dreamed of for so long by the liberal establishment. The American people will oppose it, if they understand it. However, as with the Panama Canal treaties, such public opposition does not always guarantee that the liberals will fail. The immediate danger is the calling of the Constitutional Convention, ostensibly for the purpose of passing the 'Balanced Budget Amendment.' It is unnecessary. A law was already passed (Public Law 95-435, Section 7) on October 10, 1978, which mandates: 'Beginning with fiscal year 1981, the total budget outlays of the Federal Government shall not exceed its receipts.' The Administration and the Congress are obviously in violation of this law. It needs to be enforced. The Constitutional Convention is a trap. The American people must be warned of this giant emerging political power play. Remember what Patrick Henry said: 'Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty'." (The McAlvany Intelligence Advisor," P.O.Box 39810, Phoenix AZ 85069. 12 months, $77. Foreign airmail, $107).

We quoted Edward Bernays regarding the false and hysterical propaganda which was published to influence people when the U.S. entered World Wars I and II. This same kind of false and misleading propaganda is being used to promote a Constitutional Convention. For example, in The Miami Herald Viewpoint Section of April 8, 1984, the full page headline reads "It's Time for Constitutional Change." Subhead: "As we near the 200th anniversary of our basic document, we should seriously think about altering it to deal with modern crises." There follows an article by Arthur S. Miller, professor emeritus of law at George Washington University, and adjunct professor of law, Novus University. Miller begins with fact, then resorts to falsification in his propaganda promotion. He writes:

"Whoever wins the Democratic nomination next July, already one lesson is utterly clear: Presidential campaigns have become exercises in systematic boredom. We are overwhelmed with fervent speeches and breathless analysis. The campaigns, going on for months and even years, are a remarkably silly way of determining presidential candidates. No other nation so indulges itself. They have become latterday Roman circuses, designed more to titillate than to stimulate informed discussion. That alone is a major failure of the constitutional order. . . ." And right there is where fact becomes fabrication on the part of Professor Miller. The Constitution does not provide for political campaigns, party primaries, national conventions or other types of Roman circuses. Indeed, the Constitution provides an entirely different method for electing presidents. Miller either doesn't know what the Constitution says, or he is deliberately ignoring it, as did President F.D.R. when he told his brain trusters, "Forget the constitution. If it gets in the way, ignore it." And they did. But the then honorable Supreme Court didn't, hence the New Deal's National Industrial Recovery Act (NIRA) was held to be invalid (May, 1935), the Agricultural Adjustment Act (AAA) was declared unconstitutional (January, 1936), the Bituminous Coal Act (BCA) was held to be in conflict with the Constitution (May, 1936), and other New Deal Corporate State Acts were disallowed by a still "unpacked" Supreme Court.

But, getting back to this matter of election campaigns; since none of us now living were there to witness the procedure, we must rely on historians and constitutional authorities for our information. Thomas James Norton is considered to be one of the best in this regard. He wrote: "Over and over the Constitutional Convention debated the question of how the President should be elected. It was proposed that he should be chosen by Congress; by 'electors chosen by the people in election districts'; by the governors of the States; by the Senate; and by the votes of all the people. The suggestion that the people could choose a President was described as 'vicious'. . . . the Convention, after full discussion of a question 'the most difficult of all which we have had to decide', concluded to choose by the electors. . . . It was the intention of the Constitutional Convention that the electors, chosen as each State might think the best way, should meet and vote their individual preferences, thus excluding the influence of Congress, and also the influence of the voters at large and that was the way Washington was elected twice and Adams once. But during the administration of Adams friends of Jefferson in Congress held a conference or caucus and announced him as their candidate. This became the settled method of announcement. Later the caucus was superseded by the party convention, which adopted a platform and nominated candidates, a method which still prevails." In 1804 the Twelfth Amendment was promulgated and electors voted for a President and a Vice President. Previously they voted for a person, not for a candidate nominated by a faction or political party; and the person receiving the highest number of electoral votes became President, the person receiving the second highest number of electoral votes became Vice President. In case of a tie, as occurred between Thomas Jefferson and Aaron Burr in 1800, the House of Representatives, on the 36th ballot, chose Jefferson for President, Burr for Vice President.

From the foregoing it is evident that the Constitution is in no way responsible for, or favoring presidential campaigns, party primaries, or nominating conventions. In fact, if the Constitution were obeyed, we might still have honorable and able Chief Executives who owe no allegiance to party politicians, eastern establishments or organizations that blackmail or besmirch worthy candidates and buy votes.

Arthur Miller (op cit) remarks that "In addition to single-issue zealots, a growing number of more thoughtful people are seriously concerned with a wide range of possible constitutional revisions. Most prominent, perhaps, is the newly formed Committee on the Constitutional System, which has headquarters in Washington, D.C., and is headed by two eminent members of the Establishment -- former Secretary of the Treasury Douglas Dillon and Washington lawyer (and counsellor to President Jimmy Carter) Lloyd Cutler. The committee is made up of well-known academics, lawyers, political scientists, economists and other students of politics and government. . . . The committee, furthermore, is far from alone in its concern about the viability of the Constitution. Several groups of scholars, including historians and political scientists, are developing special studies and conferences to be held in 1987. Constitutional change will be high on their agendas. . . . The Constitution, as written, is essentially an instrument for internal governance -- within the United States. As the world grows even smaller through technological advances, the ability of the nation to deal with multilateral organizations, such as NATO and the United Nations, has been diminished." (Unquote). In other words, our present Constitution is not suited to our merging with the USSR or entering into the New World Order. Our "instrument for internal governance" must be replaced by an instrument fitted to the Plan for World Governance! The only things wrong with our present Constitution have been caused by violations and disregard of its law and spirit. We need no new Socialistic Law of the Land but a return to the Republican form which our original Constitution provided. Truly, "Eternal vigilance remains the price of liberty." We need no new amendments, there are already too many that distort the law and the spirit of the Constitution. What we do need is for people to read and study the Document, and learn of the great values we once enjoyed before the perversions began.

THE COMMUNIST-CAPITALIST COALITION ACT TWO: PEOPLES REPUBLIC OF CHINA

The Chinese quote Confucius as having first said that "the journey of a thousand miles begins with just one step." Interpreting that saying in terms of time instead of space, the Chinese of today might say that the first step was taken by the British East India Company in 1839. Engaged in the drug trade, the company officials insisted upon importing opium into China. The Chinese Emperor objected, his border patrols confiscated and burned whatever drugs they could discover. This precipitated the Opium War of 1839-42. Prior to that time the Western World had known little about Cathay. The only authentic information had been supplied by Marco Polo who had written of his journey, told of "paper currency, asbestos, coal" and other phenonema and splendors of the Asian Kingdom which had inspired the East India Company cartelists to seek to control the wealth of old Cathay. Step by step, decade by decade, the journey continued through the dissolution of the empire, rule by warlords, Boxer uprisings, creation of foreign concessions and international settlements accompanied by extraterritorial privileges, unification by Chiang Kai-shek, opposition by Mao Tse-Tung, invasion by Japan, conquest by Communism with the aid of the Rockefeller-financed Institute of Pacific Relations, new Open Door Policies established by Kissinger and Nixon. On and on, step by step, decade by decade, with too many events to list in one small limited report. And now, nearing the end of the long journey that began with a single step, President Ronald Reagan has openly surrendered to the Trailateralists and Multinational Bankers and Traders who have followed in the footsteps of the original East India Cabal, and to the coalescing leaders of Communist China. The media would have us believe that Reagan's surrender was a complete about-face on his part. Under the ironic title "The Terms of Endearment," Newsweek began its lesson in subtle persuasion with the opening statement that "For the past 30 years he has squinted across the Bamboo Curtain, his suspicions growing deeper with everything he saw. But this week Ronald Reagan will put his reservations behind him and hit the high road to China. The trip represents a personal turnabout if not quite a conversion. Who could imagine such a Taiwan Firster offering mao-tai toasts in the Great Hall of the People? But there he will be, gamely huffing up the Great Wall, peering at the clay soldiers guarding the tomb of Shih Huang Ti in dusty Xi'an and circulating the Bund in Shanghai. . . ."

U.S. News is more prosaic, but confirms the surrender of President Reagan. En route to China with the President, Joseph Fromm and James M. Hildreth wrote: "Ronald Reagan's pilgrimage to China marks the final stage of a remarkable political conversion. When he entered the White House in January, 1981, the Chief Executive gave overriding priority to strengthening diplomatic and military ties with the Nationalist government on Taiwan. Now, he is bent on consolidating a close and stable relationship with the Communist regime in Peking. . . . The President hopes to return to Washington from Peking on May 2 with three things--

- * Expanded Sino-American cooperation in trade, investment, nuclear power, cultural relations and defense.
- * Strengthened strategic collaboration in the form of an understanding on the Soviet threat in Afghanistan and Southeast Asia and on the need to reduce tensions in a divided Korea.
- * Most important: A tacit agreement to manage amicably Chinese and American differences over Taiwan. The aim is to minimize the danger of a future blowup over this issue."

And there you have it: total surrender of the President to the builders of the New World Order who aim to merge all nations within a socialist global authority. We have labeled this as "Act Two" because the first act involved the use of the USSR to achieve a planned synthesis. Now comes Communist China to play its part in the ever expanding dialectic. If this seems incredible, then consider the fact that while Ronald Reagan is meeting with China's top Communists, other members of his entourage -- particularly Secretary of State George Shultz and National Security Adviser Robert McFarland, are meeting with their opposite numbers in Peking, in what might well be described as the selling of America's birthright for a mess of cheap textiles and illicit drugs; for there is every evidence that instead of banning the import of drugs as in 1840, China now promotes the export of drugs, even as it tries to prevent its own indigenous slaves from partaking of the fruit of the poppy. If the sellout to New World Order Planners is still doubted, then consider that even as Reagan, Shultz, McFarland and other administration bigwigs are making deals in Peking, other top level administration appointees are proudly displaying the riches of our Nation to Chinese Communist agents seeking the secrets of our military and technological superiority, that they may use the knowledge to conquer the world, either alone or with the cooperation of the USSR. For a Communist is a Communist, regardless of the color of his skin or the place of his residence. There is a precedent:

In the days of Isaiah, who was an adviser to kings as well as a prophet of God, King Hezekiah was visited by the son of the king of Babylon. Hezekiah was taken in by the royal visitor and his troupe "And Hezekiah hearkened unto them, and shewed them all the house of his precious things, the silver, and the gold, and the spices, and the precious ointment, and all the house of his armour, and all that was found in his treasures; there was nothing in his house, nor in all his dominion, that Hezekiah shewed them not." When Isaiah heard how the king had displayed all his wealth and national defense secrets to an enemy, Isaiah said unto Hezekiah, "Hear the word of the Lord. Behold the days come, that all that is in thine house, and that which thy fathers have laid up in store unto this day, shall be carried into Babylon: nothing shall be left, saith the Lord. And of thy sons . . . they shall be eunuchs in the palace of the king of Babylon." (II Kings, 20: 13, 17, 18.) Now compare the following article which appeared in the Christian Science Monitor on April 23rd, the day that Ronald Reagan and company began the journey to Peking:

"What can Song Ping learn from Martin Feldstein? It's an intriguing question. Song Ping is head of the State Planning Commission and a member of the State Council of the People's Republic of China. Martin Feldstein is chairman of the White House Council of Economic Advisers. One is a communist planner. The other is a capitalist economist. Right? Right. The amazing thing is that Mr. Song and other Chinese communist planners are now in the United States meeting not only with Mr. Feldstein but many other government, academic, and industrial leaders. Their purpose is to look at American planning and management methods and see what might be adapted to the experience of China as it struggles to lift its backward economy into the 20th century. 'I'm intrigued by the notion of planners from a communist, developing country coming to an unplanned, advanced capitalist country,' says Harry Harding, a China scholar at Brookings Institution. . . This is not the first highlevel Chinese delegation to touch base in the land of big capitalism. Ever since party leader Deng Xiaoping helped overthrow the old Maoist order and set his nation on the pragmatic path to modernization, hundreds of Chinese specialists -- from engineers and educators to defense experts -- have come to the US to look and learn. The very fact that some 12,000 Chinese now are studying in American universities bears witness to China's reach outward to the West. The 10-man planning delegation arrived April 11. Since then, it has visited the Port Authority of New York and the university 'research triangle' in North Carolina. In Washington, meetings are planned with Vice President George Bush; economist Charles Schultz and other scholars at Brookings; lawmakers in Congress; and officials in the Cabinet and Office of Management and Budget. By the time they leave the country April 29, the Chinese will also have visited the Hoover Dam in Nevada, Fluor Corporation, Rand Corporation, Bechtel Corporation, and SRI International, a California think tank.

". . . The changes to date astonish US experts observing the China of only a few years ago. There are now joint ventures with foreign firms, and Chinese enterprises in some cities are allowed to do their own negotiating for the projects. Foreign corporations in China are being returned to private ownership. . . . Recently another Chinese delegation was in the US visiting such places as Rand, the Heritage Foundation, Columbia University, Harvard's Kennedy School of Government and Fairbanks Institute, and the American Enterprise Institute. American Sinologists stress the value of such visits. 'It's important for the Chinese to know how we operate and to give them a feel for the alternatives to whatever they have had in the past,' comments a China specialist." (Unquote).

The Christian Science Monitor ranks in importance alongside The Washington Post and The New York Times in the promotion of Eastern Establishment propaganda as it is to be fed to the general public. Hence the optimistic tone of the article from which we have quoted. Hence, also, the publication in The Monitor of the opinions of CFR member Joseph C. Harsch in regard to the Reagan visit to Red China. Echoing the Monopoly Capitalist-International Communism attitude, Harsch wrote: "The important question about President Reagan's trip to China is not what he will do to China, but what China will do to him. He will do almost nothing to China. The agreements he will sign have been prenegotiated. The only effect his actual visit can have on Chinese policy and on the attitude of Chinese leaders toward him and his country is whether they conclude that they can count on him to pursue a consistent attitude toward them [that is, can they trust him to follow the policies laid down by leaders of the Capitalist-Communist Coalition?-Ed.). . . Those who of late have heard him talk about China report that he now waxes as eloquent about the chances for increasing American sales to China as he ever waxed in olden times about the superior virtues of those Chinese who live on Taiwan. . . . The most solid reason yet for the theory that Mr. Reagan can and does change his mind and that he is educable about the big outside world is that as late as 1982 this trip would not have been conceivable. Today it is not only conceivable, it is actually happening. The question is whether what Mr. Reagan will see and hear there will have a further impact on his thinking." (Unquote).

Throughout the Joseph Harsch article there is the feeling that the Eastern Establishment considers this trip of Reagan's to China is a kind of test, which will decide whether the Trilateral-CFR party will trust him for another term in the White House; or whether they should throw him out in favor of a Democrat of the Carter-McGovern type. Another Establishment query as to the trustworthiness (to them) of Reagan is expressed in the latest Dialogue 35, official quarterly of the Trilateral Commission. Titled "Sovereignty and Intervention", the entire publication features comment and criticism of President Reagan's action in ordering the "invasion" and temporary occupation of Grenada. The leading article is by Richard N. Gardner, a member of the Trilateral Commission and the Council on Foreign Relations, a former Assistant Secretary of State, a former Ambassador to Italy, presently teaching international law at Columbia University and practicing same in the law firm of Coudert Brothers. It was Gardner who, along with fellow Trilat-CFR members Zbigniew Brzezinski and Richard H. Ullman, coined the term "Piecemeal Functionalism", to describe the new approach to world government that was adopted by the Trilateral Commission in 1975. The Gardner-Ullman-Brzezinski trio reckoned that since the League of Nations had failed, and since the UN was failing, a new approach was needed. The "New World Order," they decided, must be built upon the creation of a series of international treaties and organizations, working piecemeal in various areas, rather than relying upon a single, all-inclusive, centralized world government. All of this explanation is to show that when Gardner says it, the Trilateral Commission means it. And in Dialogue 35 of March, 1984, Gardner criticizes the Grenada action, writing among other things, that: "The controversy over the U.S. military action in Grenada is of the deepest significance for the trilateral countries. . . for two reasons. One is obvious; the other has been almost totally ignored. The obvious reason is the political cost of the unprecedented isolation of the United States from its allies and friends on a military action deemed in the national interest. . . When the U.N. General Assembly voted by 108 to 9 with 27 abstentions on November 2, 1983, to 'deplore' the occupation of Granada as a 'flagrant violation of international law,' the United States could not muster a negative vote from a single trilateral country. . . . The less obvious significance of Grenada is the confusion it revealed among trilateral governments and leaders of public opinion over a question of central importance to the solidarity and survival of the trilateral countries." In plainer words, while the American people and the Caribbean countries approved of the Grenada action, the Communist-controlled UN General Assembly did not approve. The Trilateral Commission did not approve. In short, the directors of the Capitalist-Communist Coalition did not approve. And those directors seem to be questioning the ability of Ronald Reagan to steer the Ship of State along the lanes charted by them. Reagan is on trial, seems to know it, and is, therefore, carefully reading the lines written by the Trilateralist planners, omitting ad libs and unexpected orders. Evidence: the total change in public attitude of President Reagan in regard to the Nationalist Republic on Taiwan and the People's Republic on Mainland China.

* * * * *

"A successful capitalist and a revolutionary Marxist should be deadly enemies," wrote Harold Pease, Professor of History at Palo Verde College. He explained that "It is only when we identify the goals of a 'monopoly' capitalist and a Red revolutionary that we recognize their common denominators. Both seek to destroy competition and control the total market. Both seek to accomplish their goals through the powers of strong, centralized governments. . . . As Dr. (Antony) Sutton explains it, 'the totalitarian socialist state is a perfect captive market for monopoly capitalists if an alliance can be made with the socialist power brokers.'" That alliance having been made with the USSR and its Satellites, the alliance is not being contracted with Communist China, which is to be another "perfect captive market for monopoly capitalists." That's why President Reagan's attitude toward Red China had to be changed before he could go to Peking.

The monopoly capitalists have consistently rescued the Communists from oblivion each time their system has threatened to collapse. They made the Communization of Mainland China possible. Now the time has come to make of it a "captive market." Both the monopoly capitalists and the international communists share the strong mutual conviction that the human race must be molded into a single monolithic system of worldwide economic and political control. If they succeed, one wonders which would really rule? And just how long would an angry God permit such rule?

GIVING THE SECOND HALF TO CHINA

The communications media were ecstatic. President Reagan and his entourage flew into Red China, performed exactly as directed, the President signed or initialed all the previously prepared treaties, accords, agreements and declarations; Nancy so enchanted the Communist oligarchs that she was invited to come back and visit them without her husband, this according to her husband. All was sweetness and light, promises of peace and friendship, on the surface at least. In order to impress the leaders of the slave empire, the President took with him over 600 other Americans -- government officials, secret service personnel, journalists, 35,000 pounds of gear for the electronic media extravaganza. The Red rulers had asked that the number be limited to no more than 200. There weren't the kind of facilities to easily accommodate more than the 200 in the style expected by capitalists. But the White House trip managers pointed out that the Chinese would "risk creating the impression that China is still a 'closed' China, if only 200 were permitted to make the trip. Besides, the media members alone numbered 260 -- reporters, cameramen, radio and television technicians; these plus over 100 officials from the White House, State Department, National Security Council; and Mrs. Reagan's staff of five including her personal secretary and Julius, the official hairdresser who went along to keep Nancy carefully coiffed.

Given the chance to speak to the masses, President Reagan said that "As China moves forward on this new path [toward modernization], America welcomes the opportunity to walk by your side." He spoke of a new friendship being developed, he hinted at a new ally, he had come to build bridges for a vigorous and stable relationship. Etc., etc. He talked, by taped speech, to the Chinese. But what they actually heard was questionable. What he said was not interpreted, but was interpolated, or censored. What he said of faith and freedom, of trust in God, when he quoted Abraham Lincoln who had said, "No man is good enough to govern another man without that other's consent," when he spoke against Russia and North Korea, and of free markets and such; all these were deleted from the tape and nobody heard him talk of "our passion for freedom." To say such things in a slave state would have been quite a gaffe. But the producers of the show were alert, and if no one heard what he said, what Chinese can ask "did he really say it?"

At about the time that Ronald Reagan was beginning his third year in office, the Trilateralists began demanding that aid to Taiwan be cut off, and that friendship with Communist China be developed. Here was a virtually unexplored land mass that was just waiting for the Megabankers to invest and the Multinational Corporations to develop for their own gain. At that time, under public protest but unwilling agreement by the President, it was decided that the United States should arm Communist China because, so they argued, if there was ever any trouble with Red Russia, Red China would be an important ally. At that time, Rep. LeBoutillier, a New York Republican, asked the exiled Russian writer, Alexander Solzhenitsyn, whether the United States was repeating the same mistake it had made when it cozied up to the Soviet Union. Asked the former Congressman, "Do you see China, and our moves in the last 10 years toward opening relations with Red China, as a mistake on the same level as what Roosevelt did with Stalin?" Solzhenitsyn responded:

"Yes. At the same level . . . China is now comparable to the Soviet Union in the 30's. It needs American know-how, American help. . . . But if you arm China, you will give China the second half of the earth, the very half where America is situated, and there nothing will help you. . . . You know even less about China than about the Soviet Union, and therefore this myth of a good Communist, of good Communism in China. In 30 or 40 years, you will read the Chinese 'Gulag Archipelago,' and you will be stunned, and you will say, well, we didn't know; but you must know, you must find out, you must know what's going on. It might be fraught with consequences, jeopardizing the very existence of the United States of America. . . . When the Chinese government states that it allegedly is concerned over the development of their people -- no Communist government ever takes care of the development of its people. The Communist governments are like a cancer growth. They grow senselessly, only for two reasons. First of all, to strengthen their power, and as soon as they have done so, to expand it, and occupy other parts. This has always been the goal of the Soviet government. Such a goal is inherent in the Chinese government. By trusting China you will yield the other half of the earth, because the main threat is now of the present administration's trust in China. This is impossible. They are the same Communists, they use the same methods, and they use the same annihilation policy."

With a general increase in the knowledge of how Debt Capitalism has nourished International Communism until it has become a world power, there also has been the beginning of understanding that this is an economic struggle in which we are

TERRORISTS AT THE OLYMPICS

An enormous task faces those responsible for security at the 1984 Summer Olympic Games scheduled to commence in Los Angeles, California on 28 July. On 12 April we reported that an attempt is to be made on the life of President Reagan when he performs the opening ceremony. But there will be other problems, too. An Olympic Games 'welcoming committee' consisting of a force of 100,000 to 200,000 violence prone demonstrators is in the final planning stages. It is being organized by leaders of over 30 Marxist groups working under pro-Soviet control. President Reagan is relying on FBI Director William H. Webster to take overall responsibility should a major crisis occur during the games. Due to the wide dispersion of Olympic Games sites in Southern California, covering 135 miles from north to south, with 41 events being held at 25 different locations, anti-terrorist security problems will be intensified.

The University of California at Los Angeles (UCLA), the location of previous terrorist killings, is a hot-bed of radical activity, with organized groups of Armenian, black, Hispanic, Iranian, Marxist, Palestinian, and Zionist militants. For anti-terrorist security reasons, UCLA has already shut down its research nuclear reactor. UCLA security chief John Barber expects to face numerous security problems, including the safety of Olympic athletes housed at the university. An early confidential report states that left-wing ASALA (Armenian Secret Army for the Liberation of Armenia) terrorists have planned action against Turkish participants in scheduled Olympic gymnastics at UCLA's Pauley Pavillion.

In addition to two Savama-directed Iranian hit teams already in the US, according to French intelligence, another three Libyan assassination squads are believed to be heading for the US for Colonel Gaddafi's brand of participation in the XXIII Olympiad. Iran, Syria, and Libya, with Soviet guidance and support, are operating their terrorist forces in liaison, under centralized co-ordination. US security officials are also considering the possibilities that IRA (Provisional) and INLA (Irish National Liberation Army) death squads may enter America and stalk British officials and athletes during the games. Detecting and countering these foreign terrorist threats is the FBI's foreign counter-intelligence responsibility.

engaged. Despite wars and rumors of wars, the industrial growth of the Multinationals has continued. Mainland China is yet to be developed. So Armand Hammer steps in to take over for the Communists what Herbert Hoover once began to develop under the name of the Kailan Mining Administration; coal mines are still to be expropriated and expanded. Into China rushes other corporations, through the open door policies first unlocked by Kissinger and Nixon, and now being thrown open by Shultz and Reagan at the behest of the Trilateral Commission. In the greater sense, this is not political battling or physical warring, but economic promotion. Use of slave labor means greater profits. On site construction saves transportation costs and reduces taxes. National restrictions can be avoided, and so on.

* * * * *

But behind all this diplomatic, political, belligerent activity, there is the spiritual battle, which is so often overlooked. It is important to understand that although Communism professes atheism as its religion, there has had to be a certain compromise. The Bolsheviks found that even after murdering millions of Christians, they still had to at least pretend to permit Christian worship within their Soviet Socialist States. When a new constitution was written it contained an article which seemed to permit Christian worship. Under KGB supervision, a few churches were permitted to exist. A ranking officer of the KGB became a member of the board of the World Council of Churches. Some Christian evangelists, notably Billy Graham, were allowed to conduct services in the USSR. The Catholic Churches in Poland were permitted to continue their services. Islam, Judaism and other religions were permitted to exist in the USSR and the Satellites. It seemed to the Communist leaders and their superiors that a semblance of compromise must be allowed.

We find the same situation in Red China. Although the first years under the dictatorship of Mao Tse-tung witnessed the murder of millions of priests and Chinese Christians, when the new "open door" policy began to develop, the Chinese hierarchy found that it also had to pretend to permit Christian worship within its atheist country. So, as had happened in the Soviet Union, the Fifth National People's Congress of the People's Republic of China in 1978 adopted a new constitution. In it was an article which seemed to permit the worship of Christianity. That constitution states: "Citizens enjoy freedom to believe in religion and freedom not to believe in religion and to propagate atheism." Dr. Fred Schwarz of the Christian Anti-Communist Crusade immediately observed that "the precise wording is significant: religion may be believed, whereas atheism may be propagated." In an excellent commentary comparing the Chinese and Soviet actions, he wrote:

"The (new Chinese) constitution grants no freedom to evangelize even though it is an essential element of the Christian faith. Christians are not free to attempt to win others to Christ. They are not free to obey the commands of Christ, 'Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature.' The Chinese Communists have not yet granted the minimal freedom proclaimed in this constitution, but the Soviet Union has a similar clause, 'Freedom of religious worship and freedom of anti-religious propaganda,' in their constitution for many years and it has been applied as follows: 1) Every child is taught atheism systematically in school. 2) Worship services for established believers are permitted under supervision and control. 3) Church schools are prohibited. 4) Youth groups are prohibited. 5) Evangelistic services and campaigns are prohibited. 6) Hospitals and charitable organizations are prohibited. 7) It is a criminal offense to persuade a child to believe in Christ. This is a caricature of true Freedom of Religion. Those individuals and churches who desire to be true to Christ are compelled to operate unofficially. As a consequence many of the Christian leaders are condemned to prison or to the living death of a Psychiatric Institute. The Communists believe there is no God and that religion is the opiate of the masses. Their ultimate objective is to destroy religion. However, their immediate objective is to use it scientifically to aid their program of world conquest. They believe a religion can be used as a tool to disarm those chosen for conquest and enslavement. They seek to mesmerize religious leaders of western nations by showing visitors packed worship services to gladden their hearts and to cause them to overlook the strenuous efforts to convert all children to atheism. It is amazing that Christians can observe the spiritual infanticide that is so characteristic of Communism with complacency. It shows scorn for the Christ who said that it was better to die than to cause one child to stumble. It is tragic that many church leaders can be drugged with a few crumbs of freedom so that they are indifferent and inactive while the destruction of the faith of the younger generation proceeds."

Regardless of the words in Communist constitutions, persecutions continue. In the USSR Christians obeying God instead of the KGB are "treated" in psychological institutions or are committed to slow death in some concentration camp. In Red China Christians refusing to join the "Three-Self Patriotic Movement", which is a government-controlled church established for propaganda purposes, are accused of using "feudalistic superstitions to incite anti-government activities." This is a criminal offense worthy of torture, even death. According to the Rev. Jeffrey A. Collins, executive director of Christian Response International, more than 300 practicing Christians have been arrested in China's current "purification campaign." There is a Communist-controlled "Three-Self Patriotic Movement" for Protestants and a "Catholic Patriotic Church" for Catholics, established to consolidate all denominations and place all Christians under the control of the appropriate government agency, while discouraging the distribution of Bibles or Christian literature from outside China. Nevertheless, under KGB supervision, Billy Graham plans another crusade in the USSR next year. And Pat Boone is organizing a "Mission to China," in accordance with the rules laid down by the respective Chinese Communist agency. Also, the leader of the "Three-Self Patriotic Movement" is planning a campaign in Australia this fall, in an attempt to convince the faithful down under that Communism and Christianity are compatible.

In their development of their New World Order the builders have relied upon the use of Marxist-Hegelian dialectics in all of their works, including religion. This involves bringing about a conflict between -- or a merging of -- two opposites in order to create something new. Webster's dictionary explains it as "development through the stages of thesis, antithesis, and synthesis in accordance with the laws of dialectical materialism." Example: The builders of the New World Order accepted Capitalism as their thesis, developed Communism as their antithesis, and through created conflicts between and attempted mergings of the two, they intend to bring about their synthesis, which is a Socialist One World Government. Nor have they neglected the use of religion. Looking upon Christianity as the thesis, they took atheism as the antithesis, and they hope to bring about a new one world religion which will be similar to the Secular Humanism now being taught in government schools throughout the United States. Hence, through conflict (murder of Christians in the USSR and PRC) and the attempts at merging (making Christianity and athelism compatible through the preaching of Humanism), they hope to create a world religion to accompany their world government, world currency, New International Economic Order, etc. "And this is that spirit of antichrist, whereof you have heard that it should come; and even now is it in the world."

Year Thirty-One Number Nineteen May 11, 1984

AS TIMING MARCHES ON

As the late Jack Benny proved with comedy, careful timing also amplifies the drama of events. The Kremlin administration waited until the Olympic Torch began its dramatic odyssey across America before announcing that it would not allow its Soviet athletes to compete in the first privately financed Olympic Games to be played in Los Angeles. Perhaps coincidentally the Washington administration waited until it felt certain that Jose Napoleon Duarte had won the election in El Salvador before taking time on the networks to present President Reagan's impassioned plea for aid to that stricken country. Also perhaps coincidentally, in an election year in the United States, the political ghost of Harry S. Truman was exhumed from the files of history on what would have been the ex-president's 100th birthday, in order to add drama to the Democratic race for a presidential nomination. As we explain, let the last come first --

Some months ago, seeking ways to restore a semblance of Constitutionality and government-by-law to the country, Liberty Lobby, Spotlight and associates began promoting the political philosophy of Populism. Books were published, articles written, speeches made, and the movement caught fire amongst a part of what has sometimes been called "The Dispossessed Majority." A political party was formed, Chairman Robert H. Weems has a national campaign staff and the party is doing as well as a new third party could be expected to do. Then the New Right began promoting the philosophy of Populism as a part of its program, and the concept of Populism is being added to the already established concept of Reaganomics. For example, in a yet-to-be-published book praising the successes of Ronald Reagan we find Populism being extolled. In our publisher's proof copy of "Reagan: A President Succeeds" by Terry Dolan and Greg Fossedal, we find Chapter VI of the book headed "Reagan's Populist Foreign Policy." The authors refer to a speech made by Reagan in the British Parliament on June 9, 1982, when he said what the authors seem to accept as a definition of Populism:

"The objective I propose is quite simple to state. It is to foster the very infrastructure of democracy - the system of free press, unions, political parties, universities - which allows a people to choose their own way, to develop their own culture, to reconcile their own differences through peaceful means."

So, a Populist Political Party has been established, the New Right infers that President Reagan extols Populism; now come the Democrats to latch onto the same philosophy. They resurrected the memory of Harry Truman and claimed that he deserved to be among the great, alongside Washington, Lincoln, Jefferson, and Jackson. The principal claim seems to be the fact that he promoted the idea of "the common man," which lies at the root of the philosophy of Populism. One dictionary definition calls Populism "A political philosophy directed to the needs of the common people and advocating a more equitable distribution of wealth and power." Webster's Collegiate Dictionary defines Populist as "A member of a political party claiming to represent the common people." None of those groups clutching populism to their political breasts would like to be reminded of the platform adopted by the first and original Populist Party at a convention in Omaha in 1892, which called for among other things, "a graduated income tax, plenty of paper money, government ownership of all forms of transportation and communication, election of Senators by direct vote of the people . . ." (New Columbia Encyclopedia).

In tune with the timings, President Reagan in his plea for aid to El Salvador also referred to Harry Truman who said something about how important it was to save Greece from the Communists. All we can remember about Truman was that he ordered the dropping of atomic bombs on Hiroshima and Nagasaki unnecessarily because Japan had already sued for peace; that he fired MacArthur because the General wanted to win a war; that he approved the Marshall Plan which began the loans to foreign countries now totaling $98 billion according to the Treasury Department, and that he tried to nationalize the steel industry. However, he spoke for "the common man," and that makes him a kind of model which Mondale, Hart and Jackson will imitate, and which even President Reagan will honor in reference. The three Democratic hopefuls don't go all the way with Truman, however. He wasn't against a strong defense, against mandating a balanced budget, for abortion, forced busing, and letting Central America go Communist.

More seriously, it was unfortunate that President Reagan waited until he was sure Duarte, the Socialist, had won the election in El Salvador before he made his plea for aid to Central America. As Senator Helms noted, Duarte is ten miles to the left of George McGovern. In promoting him against the Rightist Roberto D'Aubuisson, Reagan is assured of help from the Democrats and El Salvador is assured of more torture, because along with aid to Duarte's government also goes the Kissinger Report and its program for aid to Central America. In his speech on Wednesday (5/9/84) President Reagan praised the "Bipartisan Commission on Central America" but he did not name Kissinger as its chairman. Said the President: "Last January the commission presented positive recommendations to support democratic development, improve living conditions and bring the long-sought dream for peace to this troubled MISSED ANY LETTERS LATELY?

Don Bell Reports, God willing, is printed every Friday, mailed every Saturday morning and should be delivered to our continental subscribers on Tuesday at the latest. But during the past few weeks we've discovered that, each week, a few letters are not received at all. It was something of a mystery until we found that we have an enemy in the Postal Service. They've recently installed some new machinery in the larger Post Offices. These new machines seem to delight in eating up addresses. A letter will go through the machine for whatever purpose the P.O. thinks necessary. But instead of reading the address and passing the letter on for delivery, the machine will select some particular letter, apparently at random, and literally rip the address off the envelope, making it impossible for a postman or anyone else to deliver the letter. The letter eventually comes back to us, stamped "insufficient address." No apologies for eating up the address; just the notice "insufficient address." A few days ago we received a letter from the Denver Postmaster, who sent us a 20¢ stamp and the following explanation:

"Dear Postal Customer. Please accept our apologies. Your letter was damaged by our high speed processing equipment. Occasionally, oversize letters, letters with open ends, and those of odd dimensions, jam the equipment causing damage to other mail. While we realize it is little comfort to one who has had his mail damaged, we anticipate that further refinements of equipment and reduction in non-machine-able mail will result in less damage. (Signed) Gary L. Parker, MSC Manager/Postmaster, Denver CO 80202-9998."

So, we can only hope that the P.O.'s high speed equipment can be improved without the mailing costs being raised again. Meanwhile, if you don't receive your weekly copies of DBR when you should, please let us know and we'll repair the damage the Postal Service has caused to both of us, by remailing your DBRs.

region so close to home. The recommendations reinforce the spirit of our Administration's policies that help to our neighbors should be primarily economic and humanitarian but must also include sufficient military aid." Those priorities are reversed. The military aid should come first. As Senator Helms said:

"There is a war on in Central America. As long as there is a war on, there will be economic disruptions and social suffering. We cannot expect that the Salvadorans can divide their energies between social and political reforms while trying to win a war at the same time. The first step should be eradication of the guerrilla movement. Only after that can we expect progress toward a stable society. The people of El Salvador showed through the electoral process that they would support a government that is less than perfect in order to restore peace and order. We must give the people of El Salvador the military means to win the guerrilla conflict, without making it conditional upon achieving sweeping social reforms as a precondition. The Kissinger Commission report, therefore, totally misses the mark. If its recommendations are adopted, they will contribute to the further disintegration of social structure in Central America and hasten the spread of Marxism. The Kissinger Commission recommendations will result in a disappointment of the legitimate aspirations of the people of the region for freedom. The more money that is poured into the statist structures promoted by the Kissinger Commission report, the greater will be the corruption, the inefficiency, the cynicism, and the suffering of the people. If we wish to protect our own interests and to give the people of Central America a chance to win their freedom, we must reject these recommendations."

But the recommendations were not rejected. They form the basis of President Reagan's program of aid for El Salvador and to the other countries of Central America and the Caribbean. Senator Helms made the statement we have quoted before the last election. It is alleged that the National Security Council, through its secret agency the CIA, "bought" the election of Duarte, who will continue to implement socialist policies as an alternative to the Marxist program (except for the guerrilla and military activity, the Kissinger and Marxist programs are almost identical). Shortly before he was murdered by the Soviets in the Korean airline massacre, Congressman Larry McDonald gave an excellent summary of what our program should be in regard to Central America. We quote:

- 1) Cuba, the Soviets and Nicaragua are in charge of the attack on El Salvador and the rest of Central America.
- 2) The current conflict is not a "civil war."
- 3) If El Salvador falls to the Cuban-Nicaraguan assault, the next targets will be Honduras, Costa Rica, Belize, Panama and Mexico.
- 4) The events in Central America are not mere unconnected "squabbles" but rather a crucial part of Soviet strategy to isolate the United States.
- 5) If the Soviets and their surrogates, Cuba and Nicaragua, aren't halted now in Central America, we will face a Marxist state on our borders within a few years.
- 6) A Marxist takeover of Central America would generate up to 20 million refugees - with virtually all seeking haven in our country.
- 7) "Negotiations" with the Marxist terrorists in Central America should not be sought; one does not "negotiate" with a criminal over how much of your property he may steal or how many members of your family he may murder.
- 8) The only solution is to seek removal of all Marxist forces from the Western hemisphere. U.S. troops are not needed now but U.S. leadership and arms are needed.
- 9) "Land reform" has not meant "land to the peasants" but rather socialist confiscation of private property by the state, with said property to be kept by the state.
- 10) Georgia is seven times bigger than El Salvador but the full might of the Soviet Union is behind the Nicaraguan-Cuban attack on that tiny country.
- 11) The "human rights" issue exploited by the previous Administration and kept alive by segments of the national liberal news media and various leftist organizations is primarily a smokescreen to excuse communist attacks on pro-Western nations.
- 12) If the Marxists aren't stopped at the Rio Coco (between Nicaragua and Honduras) we will face them at the Rio Grande (between Mexico and the U.S.) in future years. (Unquote).

Now let's get serious about the situation in El Salvador. The May 6th election was a double-cross of the Salvadoran people. And President Reagan's emotional appeal was little more than campaign propaganda. Everything hinged upon the assured victory of Duarte, and the assured defeat of D'Aubuisson. Duarte was the darling of the American "Liberal" Establishment, a protege of the Reverend Theodore Hesburgh, who handled affairs as chairman of the board of trustees of the Rockefeller Foundation. In 1972 a coalition ticket combining Duarte for President and the Socialist International's Guillermo Ungo for Vice President supposedly won the election, but the military refused to permit their taking office and ran them out of the country. Duarte then joined Socialist International leaders Willy Brandt and Olaf Palme in Europe. The Carter administration; Hesburg, the Peace Corps, and the AFL-CIO assisting; got Duarte back into El Salvador in 1979. With Duarte in charge a massive "land reform" program was begun, the alleged purpose of which was, according to Susan L.M. Huck, "to create a just, equitable, and democratic society and, to make the (peasants) so happy they would not join the Communists. (But) the real purpose was to break the power of the local Salvadoran elite and hand that power to the new international socialist elite." That's when the real troubles began in El Salvador, have continued ever since. And now that Duarte is officially President of the country, things will get worse, not better as President Reagan opines. The Rockefeller financed Establishment insisted upon this election, insisted upon the victory of Duarte and the carrying out of the socialistic program recommended by the Kissinger Commission. There was, again according to Susan Huck: "1) Bountiful American propaganda in favor of the leftist candidate, and American tax money (passed through A.I.D.) used to run mass rallies in favor of Duarte. 2) Ceaseless global propaganda against the Conservative candidate (D'Aubuisson), based upon the accusations of a cowardly, drunken liar fronting for the Communists (former ambassador Robert White). 3) Constant threats to the Salvadoran people that they will be deprived of food and ammunition and fed to the Reds by congressional Leftists if they do not vote for Duarte. 4) Threats of some type of illegal action against a Conservative Government if D'Aubuisson is elected." (Susan Huck in The Review of the News, May 2, 1984).

BULLETIN: The House has approved more money for El Salvador. The apparent victory of Duarte was the key element. But no aid for the contras who try to contain the Nicaraguan-based guerrillas. Meanwhile defenseless Costa Rica has asked for emergency military aid to help fend off Nicaraguan invaders. Also, in response to that World Court ruling ordering a halt to any aggressive U.S. action against Nicaragua comes word that the order may be obeyed, thus an official acknowledgment of the supremacy of the World Court!

Now that the Liberal (synonym for International Socialist) Establishment has bought another victory, what will follow? A "negotiated settlement" with the Communists and total defeat for the Salvadorans. This after more bloody "no win" war. When El Salvador falls those things listed by Congressman McDonald can be expected; especially millions upon millions of immigrants pouring in, and an eventual confrontation at the Rio Grande where it flows between Mexico and the U.S. Unless Communism is stopped in Central America, all America is in great danger.

". . . BY ANY OTHER NAME WOULD SMELL . . ."

In October 1981 Ralph Nader was chairing a meeting of "The Exploratory Project for Economic Alternatives," a spinoff from the Marxist think-tank "Institute for Policy Studies," and one of the 25 groups Nader had already organized by that time, for the purpose of destroying free enterprise and installing a Socialist economy in the United States. At that meeting was Derek Shearer, a member of the steering committee of IPS's "National Conference on State and Local Public Policies." Shearer was the husband of Ruth Yanatta Goldway, who was to become mayor of Santa Monica, California, which she then renamed "The People's Republic of Santa Monica." Goldway and her husband Shearer, as well as Nader, were also associated with Tom Hayden, husband of "Hanoi Jane" Fonda, and who has become an important Marxist political leader in the West. This particular meeting was called to bring together representatives of all the Marxist and left-wing groups associated with Nader, and to develop a national program called "Taking Charge -- the Next 10 Years." At that meeting Derek Shearer gained the floor, proposed what he termed "The Great Euphemism." He said:

While we can't use the "S" word [Socialism] too effectively in American politics, we have found that in the greatest tradition of American advertising the word "Economic Democracy" sells. You can take it door to door like Fuller brushes and the doors will not be slammed in your face. So I commend it to you, for those who are willing to compromise on the use of the "S" word.

The new label caught on quickly, and it was decided by Nader's organizations and the IPS spinoffs that they would "sell" socialism to the American public under the name "economic democracy." In California, Tom Hayden was fascinated by the new synonym for socialism, called his political movement the "Campaign for Economic Democracy." Under that label Marxist Goldway became mayor of Santa Monica for one term, and Hayden himself went into politics in a big way. The socialist battle cry "Taking Charge -- the Next 10 Years" began to be heard among Marxists from coast to coast. Among other places where the Campaign for Economic Democracy was promoted, on a kind of tryout basis, was Berkeley, California, which had been a hot spot for terrorist student activity for a number of years. Fighting against such activity, also for a number of years, has been a patriotic group known as the "Berkeley Citizens United." BCU publishes a bulletin each month, informing its members of the "Radicals and Redicals" who are active in their city. The April 1984 issue of that Bulletin contains an article which should be read by community leaders in all parts of the United States. We quote:

TOM HAYDEN, CAMPAIGN FOR ECONOMIC DEMOCRACY, AND CITIZEN ACTION:

Tom Hayden's Marxist "Campaign for Economic Democracy" (CED) has affiliated with the national Citizen Action network, a move of considerable significance to leftwing politics in Berkeley, and also to the rest of us who are fighting to prevent Marxism/Socialism from completely taking over our city. CED's executive director, Jack Nicholl, finds the affiliation with Citizen Action (CA) important "because of their campaigns on energy, toxics, El Salvador, the economy. On all these issues, we become the California group responsible for advancing Citizen Action." (Jack Nicholl has been one of Berkeley's most radical leftists, involved in the Radical Student Union, People's Park "Liberation," and Berkeley Tenants Union. One of his memorable quotes was, "We must seize every open space that exists . . . land and houses are for the use of the People. We are in the process of taking the houses, now we must free the land.") CED-CA will also be active in organizing opposition to official U.S. policy in Central America, as well as being involved in state and local electoral campaigns and voter registration.

Citizen Action groups on the left first appeared in the 1970s, working at the state and local level to counteract the nation's move toward conservatism. The groups and coalitions share a heritage of Saul Alinsky-type agitational community organizing which stresses the development of neighborhood organizations. (We are well aware of the neighborhood organizations in Berkeley, and their tactics of protest, demonstrations and blocking business and real economic progress.) The movement started with Saul Alinsky, Marxist agitator who trained hundreds of radicals in confrontational politics, community and neighborhood organization, and general mayhem. The San Francisco Chronicle reported on Oct. 5, 1983, that Citizen Action is a "federation claiming to speak for 3 million people in Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Connecticut, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Wisconsin, Illinois, Ohio, Virginia, Indiana, Minnesota and Oregon. . . All (of the organizations in the federation) emphasize community organizing and grass-roots leadership development as the key for social change. . . ." (Social change is a euphemism for Marxist/Socialism. The New Program of the Communist Party U.S.A. on page 113 states that "Marxism/Leninism is the science of social change"-Ed.)

The kind of training which Saul Alinsky, who died in 1972, gave his followers is epitomized by a statement made by one of his trained agitator-organizers: "We teach our people to be rude. Power is rude. Power is not polite. There is no nice way to get change. All change comes about as a result of a threat or pressure." Alinsky bragged that "The only way to upset the power structure of your communities is to shock them, confuse them, irritate them. . ." i.e., to shock them by what he called the "tactics of social revolution," in which Alinsky was a past master. Alinsky left a legacy of Marxist, anti-American, anti-capitalist revolutionary agitators who are at the center of the nationwide movement for socialist change and a grab for power at the local, state, and federal levels, using the "have-nots" to take from the "haves."

Berkeley's mayor Gus Newport was associated with Marxist Saul Alinsky. The Berkeley Gazette revealed on Jan. 22, 1979, that "Newport's political activity began in his native Rochester, N.Y., in 1961 as president of a local civil rights organization. From 1963 to 1966 he worked on community projects with black leader Malcolm X, returning to Rochester after the riots there to work with activist Saul Alinsky." Newport is a member of Tom Hayden's Campaign for Economic Democracy and a luminary in Berkeley's own Marxist/Socialist gang -- Berkeley Citizen Action, a name which is self-explanatory. Tom Hayden has announced that CED, through the Citizen Action network, "will work actively in targeted voter registration drives in California as well as 'swing states,' to help the Democratic nominee in November." All of this spells big trouble for beleaguered Berkeley, already threatened by a socialist takeover of city government by Berkeley Citizen Action in November. (End of article from BCU Bulletin, Box 44, Berkeley, CA 94701).

* * * * *

Like Tom Hayden's Campaign for Economic Democracy, the Citizen Action network that "captured" Berkeley and installed its own mayor, Gus Newport, and which claims 3 million operatives in a dozen States, is but a comparatively small cell in a vast Marxist/Socialist network that is international in scope and intends to destroy free enterprise (which it calls capitalism) and establish Socialism (also called Communism) as the New International Economic Order in a New One World Government. In the United States this Marxist/Socialist network is financed largely by tax exempt foundations. Rockefeller, Ford, Carnegie, Marshall, Rubin and Stern are among the tax exempt foundations often cited as supporters and sponsors of these Marxist-organizations and its think tanks. These think tanks provide the "brains" of the beast that is devouring life, liberty and property in the United States. There is, for example, the Institute for Policy Studies (IPS) which is the brain center of a vast network of project groups that promote unilateral disarmament, attack free enterprise, and are active in the "Communizing" of Central America, with particular accent on El Salvador at the present time. Many of these groups working with IPS are themselves tax exempt, which means that American taxpayers are financing the destruction of their own country as well as all of the Americas. Among these tax exempt groups are the North American Congress on Latin America (NACLA), the Council on Hemispheric Affairs (WOLA), the Center for Cuban Studies and the Cuba Center. These tax exempt Marxist outfits "in turn work together with a host of committees in solidarity with the 'national liberation' struggles of countries ranging from Chile in the south to El Salvador and Guatemala in the north." This according to the authors of "The Coercive Utopians, Social Deception by America's Power Players," published by Regnery Gateway, Inc., 360 W. Superior Street, Chicago, IL 60610). Among the other important think tanks and affiliates of IPS are the National Priorities Project which concentrates on the theme that the U.S. military power is a threat to world peace (but the Soviet military power isn't), and the money spent on U.S. defense projects should be expended for "more productive social goals" (meaning socialist goals). There also is the Government Accountability Project that infiltrates the U.S. intelligence agencies, encourages government employees to "blow the whistle" on all projects the Marxists oppose. The Bay Area Institute is a San Francisco based project that specializes in propaganda, sponsors the Pacific News Service and other Marxist publications. The Transnational Institute concerns itself with international politics. Women Strike for Peace is an important anti-nuclear, unilateral disarmament movement among women, is closely tied to the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom. Affiliated but not directly connected with the IPS and the other Marxist/Socialist networks are the older organizations: American Civil Liberties Union, American Friends Service Committee, National Lawyers Guild, the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace and many, many other organizations too numerous to list in one letter.

That American taxpayers are financing their own destruction through these Marxist enterprises is bad enough. But even worse, we find our own government doing the work of the Marxists in so many areas. Through the control of the International Bankers and the multilateral lending and expropriating agencies of the Eastern Establishment, our government financed and helped build the Soviet Union into a world power. Now, at the command of the Trilateral Commission, the CFR and similar elitist cabals, the U.S. government is doing the same thing in regard to the People's Republic of China which is "modernizing," needs billions upon billions of dollars to develop itself into a world power, like the one we built for the U.S.S.R. And, in the long run, taxpayers in the Western Industrial nations, especially American taxpayers, will foot the bill. But there's another part of the world which we are helping to communize, and not enough is being said about it. We refer to Central and South America. The so-called "Invisible Government" of the United States arranged the ouster of Fulgencio Batista from Cuba, on the grounds that his government had become corrupt and dictatorial. As soon as Batista moved out, Castro and the Communists moved in and took over. (Rockefeller likes to deal with socialist governments). Years later, the United States government, through control by the Trilateral Commission, managed the ouster of Anastasio Somoza in Nicaragua, on the grounds that his government was inefficient and had not been giving due regard to the "human rights" standards set up by the United Nations. Repeat performance: as soon as Somoza went out, the Soviet-Cuban-Sandinista gang took charge. Not much has been written about it, but much the same thing happened in the spring of 1980 in regard to El Salvador. In 1979 Carlos Humberto Romero was President, but the promoters of Socialism found his administration to be weak and inefficient, not living up to the "human rights" standards which were the criteria by which Carter foreign policy was judged. But at this particular time there had been much criticism of outright communist action in Central America, and apparently it was decided that when Romero was moved out, the Soviet-Cuban-Sandinista bloc would not be permitted to move in directly. Instead, the supranational government of the United States would do the job itself. It was determined to force upon El Salvador the Trilateral Commission's own brand of socialism; it would out-Castro Castro. So, beginning on the morning of March 5, 1980, there occurred a nation-shaking event without precedent in New World history. A U.S.-supported and unconstitutional military-civilian junta, sent Salvadorean soldiers in battle-dress to forcibly take over the large farms and agribusinesses in El Salvador. Some 376 farms were seized, their owners ejected, and the land prepared for distribution to peasants or to be made into communes. One observer wrote:

"The detachments of soldiers were accompanied by government agronomists who had been secretly drilled for three days in a seizure plan sent from Washington by the authority of the Carter administration. . . . Everything was seized. All the crops, in the fields and in the barns. All the seed, all the farm tractors and other machinery essential to modern farming. All the owner's homes, with all their contents. "I can't even get my children's letters from a drawer at my farm," one owner said later. . . . While they were there detachments of soldiers in battle-dress, some in armored cars, surrounded the private banking and savings institutions and seized them for the state. . . . Don Bohling and Shirley Christian, staff writers for the Miami Herald on April 15, 1980, concluded an article with the statement: "The facts are that the Carter administration used the most overt intervention in Central American countries and that the intervention without fail favored the left against the free-market forces. . . . Fumblings, failures, and finally outright aid to the Marxist-led guerrillas in Nicaragua have put that nation in the power of a Marxist-dominated dictatorship close to Castro's Cuba. El Salvador's political and economic structures are wrecked . . . and stepped-up killing rages there." Wrote another correspondent: "To sum up what happened, U.S. policy-makers in 1980, using Central America's terrorist-tormented El Salvador as testing ground for a "New Diplomacy," went to the absurd length of trying to stop totalitarian socialism's onrush with a 'Made in Washington' socialism of their own." Eight months after these seizures, by November, 1980, 35,000 Salvadoreans had fled the country, most of them coming into the US. Others stayed to fight and try to reclaim their country. They are the "ultra-rightists" who support D'Aubuisson, who lost the recent election to Duarte because of Washington's support of Duarte, and who, in turn, is ready to compromise and create a coalition government with the Marxists. But the misery will continue. D'Aubuisson's party still retains a majority of members in the nation's legislative body, the Constituent Assembly. It actually abolished part of that US-backed reform program which would turn farms of more than 500 acres over to peasants (actually to peasants working for the state). The rightwing Salvadoreans find themselves fighting against the Sandanistas and opposing the U.S. government, which are supposed to be fighting against each other. And yet, "none dare call it conspiracy."

THE REGIONAL WAR THAT WANTS TO GO GLOBAL

Small events can sometimes lead to great and frightening consequences. Like the sinking of a battleship in Havana Harbor in 1898. Or the assassination of an Archduke at Sarajevo in 1914. Or the return from Munich in 1934 of a man with an umbrella speaking of "peace in our time" when there was no peace. Or more seriously, the sinking of an entire United States Battle Fleet in 1941 at Pearl Harbor. Or perhaps the sinking of oil tankers in 1984 in the Persian Gulf. As great catastrophes are judged, this last one might be called a small event, directly involving but two rather small nations, each governed by dictators who knew not how to surrender or to accept a substitute for victory. They had denominational differences, and racial differences in that one was predominantly Aryan, the other mostly Arabian. They were competitors in the oil trade, something that seemed essential to their national survival. They began to fear each other, and they went to war. It was a contained war, one that was to go on and on, neither of them able to subdue the other. Suddenly one of the dictators began to realize that he could never win a "contained" war, that the war must be "internationalized". Since there was much discontent throughout the Middle East, and because Iraqi President Saddam Hussein thought such action might rally the other Arab States to his side militarily, he decided to have his pilots use their French-supplied planes to sink oil tankers that were loading up at Iran's Kharg Island oil depot. If nothing else happened, such action would at least deprive Iran of its needed oil revenues. It might even force the Trilateral Nations to demand a halt to the war, or to join in the fighting. But what really happened was different. Iran decided to give Iraq and the Arab States a taste of the medicine that had been given them. Khomeini directed his pilots, flying U.S. planes left over when the Shah was double-crossed and deposed, to begin attacking the oil tankers that were loading in Kuwait, Bahrain and Saudi Arabia. Actually, the Iranians were more careful than the Iraqis. Having been warned that the Trilateral Nations would never permit the closing of the Straits of Hormuz, the Iranian pilots went after tankers well within the Persian Gulf, and not near the verboten straits. Both the dictators had high hopes. The Iraqis believed that sinking tankers would involve the West and the Persian Gulf States, get them actively involved so that Iran would be forced to call for a cease-fire. The Iranians on the other hand, welcomed the idea of sinking tankers as a means of spreading the revolutionary Shi'ite doctrine throughout the Arab States and, along with aid from Libya and Syria, and perhaps from the USSR as well, create a new Muslim Empire that could become earth-shaking in its power, and in its control of oil.

Since the Trilateral Nations, with the United States acting as spokesman, have promised that nothing must be done to stop the oil traffic out of the Persian Gulf, the situation becomes sticky, and dangerous. Insofar as the Reagan Administration is concerned, we might say that this potential confrontation began when the President ordered, and the Congress approved, the sending of U.S. Marines as "peacekeepers" to a nation that knew nothing of peace and had been engaged in a civil war for the past ten years. Because this is an election year there has been much controversy concerning who was to blame for that stupid and deadly mistake. President Reagan says Congress didn't back him up after the Marines had been sent to Beirut, actually done to relieve the Israelis since the invasion and occupation of Lebanon had become too costly to a country where inflation had passed the century mark and kept climbing and climbing. Congress, on the other hand, blames Reagan because he left the Marines in Beirut too long. But the argument is academic. Both were wrong and blood is on their hands.

Favoring and catering to Israel at the expense of the Arabian oil-bearing countries has come home to roost. Alan McConagha has been covering the Middle East Situation for The Washington Times, comments that the Soviets are "picking up the pieces" in that area. He wrote: "Shortly after U.S. Marines rushed from the Beirut beaches to ships lying in wait offshore last February, the Soviets landed in Lebanon and the president of that divided country made his first visit to Damascus. As elsewhere in the Middle East, the decline of American influence . . . has provided the Soviet Union with an opportunity to tread where it once was seldom seen. The Lebanese reversal and Arab disappointment at tighter U.S. bonds with Israel gave Moscow a window through which to re-enter the Mideast dialogue from which it has been excluded since Anwar Sadat's visit to Jerusalem in 1977. U.S. policymakers now hear new talk from old friends: Saudi royalty saying they are prepared to buy Soviet arms; King Hussein of Jordan publicly urging Moscow's participation in solving the Arab-Israeli conflict. Even U.S.-oriented Egypt, which banished Soviet advisers in 1972 and expelled the Russian ambassador three years ago, recently announced that full relations with Moscow will be restored soon in the wake of increasing trade. Fading American credibility and the rise of Syria and Moscow prompted the Daily Star, Beirut's English language daily, to observe: 'By far the biggest losers have been those in the Middle East who put their trust in the United States.'"

When the Trilateralist Nations; France, Italy, England and the United States; decided to send a "peacekeeping force" to Lebanon on a hopeless mission, then withdrew in inevitable surrender, the scene was set for Soviet entrance. The Marines left Lebanon on Feb. 26. Four days later President Gemayel of Lebanon made his first visit to Damascus, the Syrian capital. A couple of weeks later the Lebanese received a high-level Soviet delegation they had ignored a year earlier. The effect on the Arab Nations was pronounced. They all began to distrust the United States, and began to make gestures of friendship toward the USSR. So that, when the war

ON-CALL TERRORISM IN WASHINGTON, D.C.

An interesting development has occurred in the Washington, DC area, where pro-Khomeini Iranian Shi'ite terrorists have been placed to render 'on-call' terrorism by command from Tehran. Mechanism for this capability has been organized during the past two years. America's capital has been targeted for crippling terrorist and sabotage raids to be delivered in a highly disciplined and carefully prepared manner. Fifty thousand Iranians live in the Washington DC area, many of whom are pro-Khomeini. ¶ A Shi'ite Muslim terrorist training center has been established outside Washington DC and 1,500 pro-Khomeini followers have been identified by security officials who are powerless to act until an actual crime has been committed. President Reagan's National Security Decision Directive 138 may change that situation in the near future. A secret training center is located at a remote and guarded site known as the Islamic Education Center, a multi-acre training area at 11200 Sevenlocks Road, Maryland. Two armed guards patrol the IEC and are relieved every two hours. Seventy Iranian Shi'ite pro-Khomeini activists live on this site. Others are brought in for training and indoctrination. ¶ An efficient Iranian intelligence service has been established by pro-Khomeini Iranians in Washington DC. There, one cab driver out of every eight is an Iranian, of which a large percentage are pro-Khomeini Shi'ites. Iranian cab drivers are used for information-collection purposes, surveillance work, and 'shadowing' or tailing. Few people realize they can be deliberately followed by a taxi, and normally are off guard because of the numerous cabs in the US capital. A number of blacks have also been recruited to supplement the terrorist network, at least one of whom has already successfully carried out an assassination mission and escaped from America. (Intelligence Digest, United Kingdom).

between Iraq and Iran began to cause the sinking of neutral ships and tankers in the Persian Gulf, the United States was not called upon for aid. Instead, offers of aid were rejected. Don Kirk of USA TODAY wrote on Tuesday, May 22: "The Reagan administration Monday weighed into the widening Persian Gulf war with a new blast against Iran and an offer of support for Saudi Arabia and other friendly nations if they want it. The State Department blamed the Iran-Iraq war on 'Iranian intransigence', even though Iraqi planes have also attacked shipping. The criticism moved the USA -- officially neutral in the war -- closer to the Iraqi position, a move sought by moderate Arab states that fear the radical Iranian government. President Reagan asked King Fahd to let the USA base planes in Saudi Arabia if needed to protect gulf shipping." And King Fahd very pointedly rejected the offer! Instead, the foreign ministers of Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, the United Arab Emirates, Bahrain, Qatar and Oman, met in Riyadh to discuss means of handling the situation without the help of the United States! Said one of them (unidentified): "To seek Western help against Iran will be a last resort." The Gulf Cooperation Council (six Arabian oil-producing states formed this council in May 1981) decided to mobilize their own forces and defend themselves without outside help. Even after this blunt refusal of Western aid, President Reagan stated in his press conference of May 23 that it was not the intention of the United States to become embroiled, unless a direct request for help was made. This after offers of help had been refused.

Next came a rebuff from King Hussein of Jordan. Last January Jordan and the US were still friendly, this despite the favored nation treatment being accorded Israel by the US, and in disregard of King Hussein's friendship with Arafat and the proposed new programs of the PLO. At that time it was decided that the US Defense Department would appropriate $200-million for the building of an 8,000-man Jordan-based strike force, for use in the Persian Gulf region if and when such a strike force might be needed. Congress had been asked to appropriate the money for such action, but the bill had not yet reached the House floor. Suddenly, on May 23, State Department spokesman John Hughes asked Congress to forget about the Jordanese strike force proposal. King Hussein now wanted no part of that kind of help from the United States. But the administration was still trying to restore confidence with the Saudi Arabian government. Here again a deferred proposal was brought to light. A few months ago there was a proposal to sell Saudi Arabia some 1,200 shoulder-fired Stinger anti-aircraft missiles, which would be very good weapons to have on hand in case either Iraqi or Iranian planes started bombing oil tankers and other ships in the Persian Gulf. This deal was all set last March. But the Israelis heard about the proposed sale, objected to Washington. The power of the Israeli lobby can be evidenced by the fact that, last March, the sale was called off. Last Wednesday May 24th, however, in an attempt to restore some Saudi confidence in the US administration, the plan was revived and now Saudi Arabia is being asked once again to buy those Stinger anti-aircraft missiles. No response had been heard at the time of this writing. But since Saudi Arabian officials had said "no, thank you," when requested to allow US military aircraft to use Saudi air bases, it is likely that the Arabian government will no longer be interested in any such purchase. In fact, there is a proposal that similar weaponry be purchased from the USSR. It seems that the only State other than Israel anxious to accept US help is Iraq. US interests are financing the building of an oil pipeline leading from Iraq to the Gulf of Aqaba. This would permit oil tankers to sail through the Red Sea into the Gulf of Aden and into the Indian Ocean, thus avoiding the use of the Persian Gulf altogether. If and when this pipeline is completed, then Iraqi President Saddam Hussein swears that he will "demolish Kharg Island itself" and increase the attacks on tankers in the Persian Gulf. An Associated Press article of May 23 stated:

"President Saddam Hussein of Iraq on Wednesday threatened to step up his blockade of Iran's Kharg Island, while other Persian Gulf countries pushed diplomatic efforts to halt air strikes on oil shipping. 'The days are near when we will possess weapons capable of demolishing Kharg Island itself,' Hussein told a military audience in Baghdad as he decorated a group of Iraqi army officers for distinguished action in the 44-month war with Iran. His statement drew no immediate reaction from Gulf countries who say their oil tankers have been attacked by Iran in retaliation for the Kharg blockade. . . . (President) Reagan in Washington reiterated his commitment to freedom of navigation in the Gulf, but stressed that the United States has 'not volunteered to intervene and we have not been asked'." The last half of that statement is correct. The United States has not been asked to intervene in the oil war, but the US State Department has asked to intervene indirectly. Both Iran and Iraq seem to wish that the United States would intervene, directly. Each seems to believe that only through making a regional war a global conflagration can victory be assured. They can't both be right, but they can both be wrong.

* * * * *

As we were going to press word came that this "regional war that wants to go global" had taken a dangerous turn for the worse. The US State Department told the US Congress that Iran is planning to widen the oil war by attacking Saudi Arabian oil fields and sending suicide planes against oil tankers. House Speaker Tip O'Neil said "there is going to be an escalation of the war after June 1." He had just had a private briefing with Secretary of State George Shultz, said he could say no more on the subject, but hinted that if the US should get involved in the shooting phases of the war, we should not go it alone. We must be joined by our Trilateral partners, Britain and France. There was much the same kind of buildup just before we entered the Vietnam War, only Britain and France bowed out. It is significant that all Western sympathy is for Iraq, with Iran named as the potential enemy. However, in the early morning hours of May 25, EST, came word that the Iraqi air force had attacked a fleet of ships in the Persian Gulf, had destroyed six of the ships, presumably oil tankers. A correspondent in London reported that since Iraq is losing the war slowly but steadily, President Hussein is doing everything possible to drag the Western Powers into the conflict on his side. Whitehall believes that there'll be a call for Western help after June 1. Which, of course, is exactly what both Iraq and Iran desire; Iraq to get the US into the war on her side, Iran to get the USSR or her surrogate forces into the war on her side.

Two years ago, when this war was then almost two years old, Iraq was said to be losing, was running short of arms and military supplies. President Hussein of Iraq said at that time: "If the Soviet Union and the United States desired to stop the war they would." Obviously, neither desired to do so. Instead, Egypt sent arms to Iraq, Israel sent arms to Iran, both the USSR and the USA sent arms to both Iraq and Iran. Confusing? Soviet leaders and the US State Department's foreign oil-profit protection plan both called for a continuation of the war. Since the USSR has little money of her own, lives on US loans, it stands to reason that the oil-money monopolists who guide US foreign policy finance all sides of the Middle East conflict! But, by a kind of magic, it turns out that the people finance the oil-money monopolists! And if there is to be an escalation of this war that wants to go global, it will be these oil-money monopolists who are responsible. Because people don't want war. Only those who profit from want wars them. The blood of millions is on their hands.

THE TENTH INTERNATIONAL ECONOMIC SUMMIT

Each springtime the Elitists of the International Establishment arrange an International Economic Summit. The heads of state and government of the Industrial Nations of Western Europe, Japan and America are commanded to appear at some pre-designated spot to discuss the world's economic situation and collaborate with each other in the carrying out of the orders mandated by the International Establishment. June 7-9 will mark the tenth such Summit, to be held in London. Last year there was much fanfare accompanying the event because the Summit was held at Williamsburg, Virginia, the city rebuilt by the Rockefellers. This year, however, there has been little mention of the event in the American press. This meeting that shapes the financial and economic conditions of the coming year is overshadowed by the visit of "a first-line Irishman" to the home of one of his ancestors in the little town of Ballyporeen, County Tipperary, Ireland, population 400. Then there is an emotional D-Day commemoration on the windswept bluffs of Normandy on June 6, this to be followed by the Summit in London. In giving greater coverage to the visits to Ireland and Normandy than to the meeting in London is justified in that nothing new or newsworthy is going to happen at the Summit meeting. Everything has been prepared beforehand, including the speeches, and the only real importance of the meeting lies in the fact that the heads of state and government need to get together to talk about how they are going to cooperate with each other in carrying out the "suggestions" that have been laid before them by their real bosses, the Elitists of the International Establishment. A historical review seems in order by way of explanation.

In 1968 Henry Owen of the Brookings Institution, one of the Eastern Establishment's most important think tanks, declared that "it is becoming increasingly clear that the modern industrial nation-state is simply not adequate to the needs of the day. (It) has come to the end of the road. . . is anachronistic and a hindrance to the development of a new world order." He proposed that in the place of independent nation-states there should be created a "Trilateral Concert of Powers" including the nation-states of Western Europe, Japan and America, i.e., the United States and Canada. This new "concert of powers," said Owen, should address itself to four purposes: 1) a redistribution of the earth's wealth; 2) creation of a single international currency for the world controlled by the International Monetary Fund, which would become a world central bank similar to the Federal Reserve System, but on a global scale; 3) removal of all nationalistic economic barriers to so-called "free trade"; 4) stepped-up efforts to encourage the flow of private investment to developing countries. Owen went on to state that the eventual objective of these Trilateral Powers would be to merge with the Soviet Union and the East European Nations that are also contributing to international economic programs.

Later, Zbigniew Brzezinski, another protege of David Rockefeller, echoed exactly the same program that had been blueprinted by Henry Owen. The Rockefeller elitists accepted the program and this led to the creation of the Trilateral Commission in 1973. There already was in existence the powerful Council on Foreign Relations, of which Rockefeller was chairman of the board. But the purposes of the CFR, according to its own statement, are to "break new ground in the consideration of international issues, to help shape American foreign policy, . . . to provide continuing leadership for the conduct of our foreign relations; and to inform and stimulate the Council's membership, as well as to reach a wider audience, through publications and other means." The Trilateral Commission has a different but complimentary role:

"to foster closer cooperation among these three [Trilateral] regions on common problems. It seeks to improve public understanding of such problems, to support proposals for handling them jointly, and to nurture habits and practices of working together among these [Trilateral] regions." So they say. But in actual practice their purposes go beyond their statements. The Council on Foreign Relations is a national organization which cooperates with similar national organizations in other countries, the most important of which is the Royal Institute of International Affairs (Chatham House) in London. This global network of "national" organizations is interested in creating a World Government. In the promotion of that aim the CFR has gained control of the direction of American foreign policy, control of the issue of American currency, and works through control of education, through control of the communications media, through the churches and public agencies to train the people into acceptance of the New World Order which it is building, in cooperation with its counterparts in other countries. It has no hesitation in cooperating with international Communism whenever it suits its or their purposes.

The Trilateral Commission, on the other hand, is an international organization. It is not concerned with politics as such, but concentrates almost exclusively in the areas of international economics and international finance. Its membership was selected by invitation of David Rockefeller. Only members of the top echelon of the Power Elite were invited, save in the case of some politicians that could be used for special purposes, such as Jimmy Carter and George Bush. The Trilateral Commission has its cooperating international organizations; primarily the Rothschild influenced, Paris based Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD), the Bilderbergers, the Atlantic Council, etc. These organizations are concerned with the economic management of the world. They don't care whether a state is communist, socialist, democratic, oligarchic, monarchic, or whatever. It's all the same to them, except that, as David Rockefeller has said, it's easier for him to deal with a socialist state. Ultimately, however, the elitists in these power groups want to bring about the surrender of national independence and the merger and consolidation of all nations into one New World Order. In such an Order, the United States would become merely an administrative department taking its orders from a world government. Since these elitists also believe that economic competition (free enterprise and private property held by individuals other than themselves) is the root cause of their troubles, that New World Order must be a Socialist New World Order. In the building of this Order the CFR and its affiliates are concerned with the politics of its creation, while the Trilateral Commission and its international affiliates are concerned with the economics of the creation. So, the two compliment each other, work together, have the same boss, and use Communism as an ally in their march toward the New International Economic World Order.

In their desire for the new economic order, the elitists knew that at least for a time they would have to work with the established governments of the nation-states which they sought to destroy. Most of their programs would require legislative acts or executive orders to make them successful. Therefore, they decided that an Annual International Economic Summit was necessary, in order to keep the governments of these nation-states under control. The tenth in the series of economic summits begins in London on June 7, 1984. The reason for these summits was explained by a special report that was published in April of 1977, just before Jimmy Carter went to the third economic to be held the next month in London. This report was the work of Henry Fowler, Goldman Sachs & Co.; Mirian Camp, CFR; Emilio Collado, Exxon; Richard Gardner, former Ambassador to Italy; William McChesney Martin, Federal Reserve Board; Charles W. Robison, Kuhn, Loeb; Frank Southard, IMF; Philip Trezise, Brookings Institution; John Tuthill, Atlantic Institute; and Marina V.N. Whitman, professor of economics, University of Pittsburgh. The report they prepared begins as follows: "The economic summit meeting in London on May 7 and 8 (1977)...of the key industrial democracies...provides an opportunity to Inaugurate an orderly and far reaching process of harmonizing their economic policies....The nations represented at that meeting form the core of the International economic system." The report goes on to state that "The industrialized democratic nations should, in their efforts to harmonize their economic policies, act whenever possible within the framework of existing International Institutions, or adaptations of such Institutions....To these ends existing International economic organizations, notably OECD and IMF, should be used to play a more effective role." (Emphasis added). In order for the program laid out by this report to be carried out, each nation would have to begin transferring its economic and political sovereignty to such International bodies as the Trilateral Commission, OECD, IMF, World Bank, GATT, etc. This process of transfer began in 1977 and is still underway. So that, as we wrote just before the Ninth Summit was held at Williamsburg:

Policy making in this age of Trilateralism has been shifted from Congress and the Federal Administration to the supranational summits which are controlled and directed by the internationalist elite of the Western world. Ronald Reagan bears the title of President of the United States; but in reality he's the general manager of a regional subsidiary of a supranational institution.

How economic and political sovereignty is being transferred from national governments to a developing Regional World Authority can be illustrated by a Trilateral Commission Report (#25) issued just before the Ninth International Economic Summit held at Williamsburg last year. Titled Sharing International Responsibilities, the Report asks and then tries to answer four central questions. The questions follow. "1) Why should Japan, North America, and Western Europe share responsibilities?...In what arenas -- military, economic, political, scientific, and cultural -- can the interests of each region be advanced more effectively by collective action than by going it alone? 2) How broad or narrow a partnership should the trilateral nations strive for? 3) How should responsibilities be shared? 4) Can the trilateral partners sustain the minimum levels of cooperation necessary to achieve vital common objectives?" The answers given point to interdependence, to the transfer of economic and political authority from the nation-states to what amounts to a developing Regional World Government. As was correctly stated in Futurewatch: "The International Establishment has prepared an almost-socialized America to be merged with an already-socialized European Community -- later to be joined with communized Russia and China. The subversion of America to these aims is obvious when one examines seriously the legislation, influence and propaganda of the last forty years. Even President Kennedy, on July 4, 1962 showed his loyalty to one-world government in his 'Declaration of inter-dependence'-- not in-dependence! The International Establishment ordered a new constitution for America entitled 'New States of America' prepared by the Center for the Study of Democratic Institutions...and funded by $21 million from the Ford Foundation. A more ambitious endeavor is the 'Constitution for the World' - also prepared by the Ford Foundation in 1965. All the plans have been clearly written and explained in the conspirators' publications emanating principally from their huge tax-free foundations." ("Futurewatch," written by the editors of "Globescan," Paris, Geneva, U.S. service center, 1545 New York Ave., NE. Washington, DC 20002.)

The foregoing should explain what these annual International Economic Summits are all about. But this year the summit is presented with an unusual and greater problem than was expected. The megabankers are in trouble. They have loaned so much to nations that find it impossible to repay even the interest on their loans, that new ways must be found to get the people of the Trilateral Nations, already overburdened by taxation, to pick up the bills. Following a course previously pursued by Argentina, the Bolivian government announced on May 30 that it couldn't meet the interest payments on its debts to Western banks. Previously David Lascelles had written in the Financial Times of London: "As the latest rumblings in Argentina show, the world debt crisis is far from over....The repudiation by a major Latin American creditor of its multibillion dollar debts would deal a crippling blow because of the sheer size of the sums involved." Yet the Wall Street Journal of May 14 commented: "A group of West European banks last week brushed aside all memories of sick Polish loans and cheerfully had another go at the roulette wheel with a new $250 million loan to the Soviet Union....The latest European plunge eastward coincided with some other news....the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD) in Paris and the Bank for International Settlements (BIS) in Basel revealed that the Soviets already owed the West more than $28.7 billion as of last June....The Soviet subsidy loan level, never before acknowledged by the lending countries, raises an interesting question for Europe's political and business leaders: When did taxpayers in the lending countries ever decide to subsidize communism?" A strange question since American taxpayers have been subsidizing communism for over fifty years, without ever having agreed to do so! Some of the debts owed the West are startling, because the West's leaders are meeting in London this week to be told just how they are going to force the taxpayers of Japan, Western Europe and America to pay those bills? According to the WSJ, the six countries with the biggest bills are Brazil, nearly $67 billion; Mexico, $65 billion; USSR, nearly $29 billion; Argentina, $26 billion; Spain, $25 billion, and Venezuela, $24 billion. Then there is the domestic loss of the Continental National Bank & Trust Company in Chicago, which the federal government is going to take care of in order to keep the bank afloat. And on May 30 the bank's manager announced that the government would have to keep giving it money permanently to keep its doors open to the public. While fifteen smaller U.S. banks had failed, without federal aid; the Treasury Department underwrote the Argentine interest payments, is expected to underwrite the Bolivian interest payments, and also is bailing out the Continental Bank of Chicago because it is America's eighth largest bank and the megabanking associates can't afford to let it fail! It should be remembered that our government has no money of its own, so must borrow and use taxpayers' money to bail out governments and banks.

* * * * *

We returned to our Native Land in 1945 after 20 years of residence overseas, and began to learn of the condition into which our Republic had fallen. A friend told us, "Things must get worse before they can get better." The years have proved him a prophet. But now there appears a glimmer of hope. Paul Weyrich, as head of the bipartisan Committee for the Survival of a Free Congress, is in contact with a great number of Christian and conservative leaders. He writes in the current issue of American Opinion: "The great crises our country faces today may be more dangerous for all Americans than ever before in our history....All of the worrisome trends may continue, and we could be in for the most difficult period in our national history. And yet there are some signs, extremely important signs, that things are moving in our direction in significant ways." He discusses those signs and ends his article by quoting from a political novel written ten years ago by Allen Drury:

"Not the easy certainty. Not the painless assurance. Not the comfortable guarantee. Just - the promise. That, perhaps, was all that the American experiment, all that any experiment in human governance that sprang from essentially decent motives, could hold out - the promise of joy. A promise always elusive, always fleeting, never quite captured, never quite achieved, here today, gone tomorrow, back again next day - if you kept working and struggling and, above all, if you never gave up; if you hung on and kept trying, all of you, unto the last generation. . . ."

THE LOST LEGACY OF ROGER SHERMAN

In 1751 there were no United States, only 13 British Colonies. In one of them, the Colony of Connecticut, Roger and William Sherman operated a general store. One of their customers, James Battle, ran up a bill of 129 Pounds Sterling, quite a bill in those days. When pressed for payment, Battle paid the bill, not in stable Connecticut currency, but in depreciated Rhode Island currency. The Shermans took a financial beating and they sued. Roger Sherman wrote: ". . . to impose Rhode Island Bills of Credit In Payment for Debts In this Colony, when the creditor never agreed to take them, and that without my allowance for the depreciation, would take away Man's Estate and wrong him of his just and righteous dues without either Law or Reason." Nevertheless, the Shermans lost the case. Battle reasoned that because people commonly permitted the currencies of these other Colonies to intermingle with their own, regardless of the differences in the purchasing power of each, the Court should force the Sherman Brothers to accept his payment in Rhode Island "Reserve Notes." The Court agreed and the Sherman Brothers were defrauded. But Roger Sherman never forgot. He battled for the rest of his life against the use of paper bills of credit and other financial instruments that were not redeemable in gold and silver coin.

A quarter of a century later, Roger Sherman was one of five patriots who were appointed to write a "Declaration of Independence." They were Thomas Jefferson, John Adams, Benjamin Franklin, Robert Livingston and Roger Sherman. Jefferson wrote, the other four polished and suggested alterations, the Continental Congress approved, and the Declaration of Independence was published on July 4, 1776. Roger Sherman, in signing the document, probably remembered quite well how that Court decision had robbed him of his private property.

When the American patriots had won their personal liberty and their national independence, came the time for the writing of a constitution, called "The Articles of Confederation." Once again, Roger Sherman was called upon to represent the State of Connecticut in this work. This was in 1781. But here a trap was discovered too late. Roger Sherman as well as other signers wrote into the document the power of Congress to print paper money, and gave the States the right to compel its citizens to accept it in payment of debts. As a result there developed a kind of economic chaos. George Washington wrote to James Madison, explaining what Madison already knew, that ". . . the wheels of government are clogged, and we are descending into a vale of confusion and darkness. No day was ever more clouded than the present. We are fast verging to anarchy and confusion." These lines were written on the eve of the convening of the Constitutional Convention in 1787. Washington and other patriots had seen that in just six years, the trade and commerce of the new American Republic were floundering in a sea of fluctuating-value paper currency. But it was Roger Sherman, twice bitten by "bills of credit" and unredeemable paper currency, who knew the reasons and provided the answers. As a delegate to the Constitutional Convention representing Connecticut, it was he who insisted that two important clauses concerning money be included in the new Constitution that was being written. The first of these became a part of Article I, Section 8:

The Congress shall have the power . . . to coin money, regulate the value thereof and of foreign coin, and fix the standard of weights and measures;...

This provision has been violated by Congress, its powers regarding money having been transferred to a cabal of international bankers under the title The Federal Reserve Corporation. In every State there are patriotic groups working to repair this violation of the Constitution by forcing the U.S. Congress, through the power of State Legislatures, to rescind the unconstitutional Federal Reserve Act, and replace Federal Reserve notes with honest money. The second clause which Roger Sherman authored and had placed in the Constitution, will be found in Article I, Section 10:

No State shall . . . coin money, emit bills of credit, make anything but gold and silver coin a tender in payment of debts; . . . (emphasis added).

This provision is presently being violated by every State in the Union every time its officers accept our "managed currency" instead of "gold and silver coin" in payment of taxes, licenses, etc. ". . . the unsung hero of our American way of life, was this Roger Sherman. He had inserted into our Constitution those financial and economic safeguards and the actual American right to have gold and silver coin as our money. As important as the rights against unlawful search and seizure and the right to remain silent and not testify against yourself was the right to have a reliable medium of exchange. No longer could the States issue 'Bills of Credit' and compel its citizens to accept them as Tender for debts. More significant, if the Congress of the United States ever ceased in coining gold and silver coin, thus causing these coins to stop circulating, the States would be unable to compel their citizens to pay any debts, public or private. Do you see that? It was to be the States, through the Congress, that kept the Federal Government coining gold and silver to preserve interstate commerce and ultimately the Union itself." (Nord Davis, Jr., in "Off-the-Cuff," March, 1984. P.O.Box 129, Tipton, N.C. 28781).

One other important part of Roger Sherman's legacy to posterity concerns what historians refer to as "the Connecticut Compromise." When the Founding Fathers were writing into the Constitution provisions for the separation of powers between the executive, legislative and judicial departments, and between the National and the State Governments, the question of how to construct the legislative branch posed a serious problem. The thirteen States varied greatly in size and in population. How could they be given equal representation in the Congress? New Jersey, as a spokesman for the smaller States threatened to wreck the Convention by demanding a unicameral legislature in which all States would have equal representation. The smaller States logically feared unequal representation in the National Government otherwise. There was a stalemate because the larger States wouldn't accept any such arrangement. Roger Sherman and Oliver Ellsworth of Connecticut provided the answer. There would be two Houses; a House of Representatives whose members

As David Rockefeller recently undertook a little excursion into communist-controlled Angola, he made this noteworthy pronouncement: "Business relations with Marxists pose no difficulties at all for us." Several readers have asked us about the Economic Empire over which Rockefeller really rules. . . To the participating companies belong Chase Manhattan, First National City Bank, Chemical Bank, First National Bank of Chicago, Metropolitan Life, the Equitable, and New York Life. Besides this the Rockefeller group by way of stock ownership has a controlling interest in Standard Oil of New Jersey, Standard Oil of Indiana, Mobil Oil and Marathon Oil. Through Chase Manhattan and his other New York banks Rockefeller owns stocks worth 23 billion (sic) dollars in companies such as Pan-American Airways, Eastern Airlines, United Airlines, IBM, AT&T, Allied Chemicals, Anaconda Copper and CBS. All in all the Rockefeller Finance-group controls either through stock-ownership or in conjunction with directorships in the seven controlling financial companies 20% of the total American banking industry, 20% of all American industry, half of the American petroleum industry, and more than 25% of the private American investments in Africa, Asia, and Latin America. (F. Sanders, "The Moneychanger," P. O. Box 241203, Memphis, TN 38124. Monthly Newsletter; $32 per year.)

would be elected by the citizens of each State; the number of Members to be in proportion to the number of citizens in the State. The upper House, or Senate, would be composed of two Senators from each State, regardless of its size or number of citizens. The Senators would not be elected by the people, but would be elected by the State Legislatures. Thus there would be a House representing the States, and a House representing the people. All the States and their citizens were satisfied with this Constitutional arrangement. But at the turn of the 20th century came "The Spillers." In an effort to "make the world safe for democracy" it seemed appropriate first to make the United States itself into a democracy. So, along with the income tax amendment, the Federal Reserve Act and provisions for the establishment of tax-free foundations, came also the Seventeenth Amendment, which destroyed the House of the States by having the Senators elected directly by the people, as were the Representatives. That's how our Constitutional Representative Republic began to become a Democracy. And the Nation had taken a giant step toward becoming a Socialist State.

But, getting back to those "silver and gold" clauses which Roger Sherman caused to have written into the Constitution; it is significant that James Madison, called "the father of the Constitution," also understood the economic chaos and political danger that paper currency had brought to the new Republic. In "Federalist Paper # 44" he wrote:

The loss which America has sustained from the pestilent effects of paper money on the necessary confidence between man and man, and the necessary confidence in the public councils, on the industry and morals of the people, and on the character of republican government, constitutes an enormous debt against the States chargeable by this unadvised measure, which must long remain...an accumulation of guilt..."

Just nine months after the Constitution had been ratified, ending the issue of unredeemable paper currency, The Pennsylvania Gazette, on December 16, 1789, commented editorially:

Since the federal constitution has removed all danger of our having a paper tender, our trade is advanced fifty percent. Our monied people can trust their cash abroad, and have brought their coin into circulation.

But the International Bankers of that day didn't care for the American "silver and gold coin" system, and worked against it from the very beginning. So that, just 47 years after the ratification of the Constitution, President Andrew Jackson in his Annual Message to Congress, on December 5, 1837, found it necessary to remind Congress that:

It was the purpose of the [Constitutional] Convention to establish a currency consisting of the precious metals. These were adopted by a permanent rule excluding the use of a perishable medium of exchange, such as certain agricultural commodities recognized by the Statutes of some States as tender for debts, or the still more pernicious expedient of paper currency.

It is this "pernicious expedient of paper currency," called Federal Reserve notes, unredeemable and commanded to be used in the payment of debts, which is still with us. "Some who read this will think to themselves, 'What difference does all this make?' I am sure that Roger Sherman, when he was defrauded at age 30, wondered the same things. Why should I take time away from my business to work for a stable currency? Why not just go over to Rhode Island with some good Connecticut money and exchange it for the Rhode Island money and bring it back and make my neighbors and customers accept it in payment of debt? Why, Sherman could have made a small fortune exchanging money...The only time that Jesus was ever recorded as using violence was against those who 'changed money' for a profit."

(Nord Davis, Jr. op. cit.)

Regarding the second part of Roger Sherman's legacy to posterity, Congress was never given the power to print money, for there is no way to regulate the intrinsic value of a piece of paper, regardless of whose picture is printed on it. Right in the context of coining money, and regulating the value thereof, we have the fixing of standards of weights and measures. Trade and commerce can not increase except in the presence of a stable medium of monetary exchange, a standard by which goods and services can be "weighed and measured." Today we are hearing the prophets of doom tell us that "the wheels of government are clogged, and we are descending into a vale of confusion and darkness...and verging to anarchy and confusion."

T. Tupper Saussy wrote in The Miracle on Main Street (a book now going into it's sixth printing; 158 pages, paperback, $7.00): "Contemporary verbal sketches of Roger Sherman, the delegate from Connecticut who was the author of those monumental 17 words (No State shall make any thing but gold and silver coin a tender in payment of debts), depict him as a learned man, steeped in historical knowledge but immensely bashful due to stammering speech and a physical awkwardness. He was born in 1721 in Massachusetts and learned farming and shoemaking from his father. His formal education consisted of just two years in his youth; he filled out the rest independently. He published almanacs based on his own astronomical calculations, and included both original and classical poetry. He operated his own general store. At the age of 31 he wrote a searing indictment of paper money, A caveat Against Injustice; Or, An Enquiry into the Evil Consequences of a Fluctuating Medium of Exchange. In 1776, at the age of 45, Roger Sherman was elected Judge of the Superior Court in New Haven, Connecticut, serving the office with distinction until 1788. He was the only American to sign all four historic documents: the Continental Association of 1774, the Declaration of Independence, the Articles of Confederation, and the United States Constitution. Renowned for his high intelligence and unswerving honesty, Roger Sherman was described by John Adams 'as honest as an angel and as firm in the cause of American independence as Mount Atlas.' In 1791 he was elected to the U.S. Senate where he served until his death in 1793. This quiet, humble, awkward man who farmed, educated himself, worked with his hands and his mind making shoes and poetry, making astronomical and economic calculations, making law and justice, is completely unknown to all but a handful of early American historians. Yet, if Judge Sherman hadn't stood up that hot August afternoon in Philadelphia and uttered Article I, Section 10, America would have been an endless series of banana republics, regime after regime printing itself out of existence. Thank God we're rediscovering those 17 words at this late date, hopefully in time to avert the tragedy that is sure to envelop us if we should choose to remain blind to them." Those 17 words, plus the 25 words in Section 8 of Article I are a paraphrase of a Biblical commandment, the violation of which meant the destruction of many a Nation in those times, including Israel itself, and in our time perhaps our own Nation: "Thou shalt not have in thy bag divers weights, a great and a small. Thou shalt not have in thine house divers measures, a great and a small. But thou shalt have a perfect and just weight, a perfect and just measure shalt thou have: that thy days may be lengthened in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee." (Deuteronomy 25:13-15). Let us thank the Lord that the words have been rediscovered, and pray that it is not too late.

THE STRATEGY OF "MANAGED CONFLICT"

President Woodrow Wilson, who was one of the tools of the "Elite" through his alter ego Col. House, once made the revealing statement: "Some of the biggest men in the United States in the field of commerce and manufacturing know that there is a power so organized, so subtle, so complete, so pervasive that they had better not speak above their breath when they speak in condemnation of it." In explaining how this organized power operates to gain its ends, researcher Antony Sutton wrote: "There is no question that the so-called establishment in the U.S. uses managed conflict. The practice of managing crises to bring about a favorable outcome, that is, favorable to the elite, is freely admitted in the literature of, for example, The Trilateral Commission." This "Conflict Management" is made possible by the elite through the use of the Hegelian Dialectic. Explained in oversimplified terms, this Hegelian Dialectic is based on the idea that there is always a condition of "changing times" throughout history, that these continuing "changes" come about - or are brought about - because there is a situation or condition called the thesis, which is challenged by an opposite situation or condition called the antithesis. These come into conflict - or are brought into conflict - and the result is a new and different situation or condition called the synthesis. The idea of both the elitists and the Marxists is that the eventual synthesis will be The New World Order. If these intermediate conflicts between thesis and antithesis can be managed and controlled, then the resulting synthesis will become one step forward on the march toward the desired New World Order. This is all explained and documented clearly and irrefutably in Antony Sutton's series of booklets dealing with "The Order," which he insists, with documentation, is the real conspiracy. For those who haven't read the series, there are three already published: "An Introduction to The Order," "How The Order Controls Education," and "How The Order Creates War and Revolution." One book, $11.45. Two or more books, $8.50 each, postpaid. Order from Research Publications, P.O.Box 39850, Phoenix AZ 85069.

Dr. Sutton is one of the few researchers who has had the courage to point out that history, especially since the turn of the 20th century, can be explained fully only if the Hegelian Dialectic is understood to be the guiding light of the elitists as well as the Marxists. They both believe that managed conflict can create predetermined history. And that they therefore create and manage crises, usually to a predetermined conclusion. Examples include the financing and developing of the USSR to form an antithesis to the thesis of finance capitalism; the similar financing of Nazism to create a conflict between Communism and National Socialism, the synthesis being the establishment of the United Nations. Other major events which brought about managed conflicts: The mysterious sinking of the Battleship Maine in Havana Harbor, which laid the groundwork for the entrance of the US into the intrigues and conflicts of the Old World; The sinking of the Lusitania which was used as a weapon for bringing the US into World War I; The sinking of an entire US war fleet at Pearl Harbor to force the US into World War II, the result of which, among other things, brought about the continuing managed conflict between the USSR and the US; The created conflict between North and South Korea; the alleged firing upon US Destroyers in the Gulf of Tonkin to embroil the US in the Vietnam War; Presently the managed conflicts in the Middle East, in Central America, in Africa, and the current building up of the Peoples Republic of China in a seemingly vain attempt to create a conflict between the USSR and the PRC, and so on and on. To cite an example of how the elitists who control finance capitalism can collaborate with the

THE WEATHER WAR CONTINUES

"Spring weather in the middle of winter, winter weather in the middle of spring, torrential rains, floodings, tornadoes, earthquakes; you name it, we've had it." So we began our DBR #21 of May 27, 1983. The report seems as timely today as when we wrote it over a year ago. Weatherwise, conditions have remained the same: terrible, devastating, over much of the world and especially North America. Under the title "The Weather War Revisited," we wrote that on February 4, 1983, the first direct encounter in the weather war began. For the first time Soviet and American electromagnetic cycles met each other and as a result opened the first battle of the weather war. Our first report came from Dr. Andrew Michrovski, an expert in the Canadian State Department and head of an organization called "Planetary Association for Clean Energy" (PACE). His report was verified by Tom Bearden who had done extensive research and successful development of discoveries first suggested by Nikola Tesla. The Soviet scientists utilized Tesla's experiments with ELF (extra-low frequency) weather modification and earthquake control. They developed a magnetic field which created "standing waves". Coming late on the scene, American scientists countered with different frequencies, but still utilizing the Tesla patents. The two "standing waves" of different ELFs encountered each other, and the havoc engendered by a weather war began; has continued to this day because of disruptions in the traditional weather channels which circumnavigate the globe annually. Without any explanation of how ELF waves had started it all, USA Today of June 12 called it a "weather balancing act" and wrote: "Cool temperatures in the West and heat in the East . . . are both results of the atmosphere's efforts to balance temperatures . . . causing deep waves in the jet stream - the river of high-altitude winds that tops the boundary between cool and warm air." A better explanation might have been given if it had been recalled that Zbigniew Brzezinski, National Security Director under Carter, wrote in his book "Between Two Ages:" that "Methods of weather modification can be applied to engender extended periods of drought or storms and thereby to weaken the capacity of a nation and to force the acceptance of the demands of opponents. . . . Space and weather control have replaced Suez and Gibraltar as key elements of strategy." Possibly following Brzezinski's lead, the Trilateral Commission issued an official report titled "Collaboration with Communist Countries in Managing Global Problems." Nine areas of "collaboration" were mentioned, among them "areas of weather modification and earthquake control." As early as 1979 Dr. Michrovski's organization (PACE) had commented that the US government had joined the Soviet Union in transmitting ELF weather modification signals" and "it appears that these new ELF emissions are already influencing the weather. Jet streams approaching the original standing wave and the secondary ones appear to be deflected, and when accompanied by moist air systems, cause substantial precipitation." Also tornadoes, temperature changes, floods and droughts. That old saying about nobody ever doing anything about the weather is no longer true. While people are dreaming of star-wars, they'd better begin thinking about weather-wars before it's too late to save farms and homes.

P.S. On May 16, 1984 US Defense Secretary Weinberger officially confirmed the stationing of Soviet Tesla-type weapons in the neighborhood of Saryshagan. Thomas Bearden (op. cit.) had previously reported on the Soviet activities in Saryshagan in "Tesla's Secret and the Soviet Tesla Weapons."

P.P.S. - F. Sanders, who informed us of Weinberger's statement, comments: "It is not understandable that even physicists know hardly anything about Tesla, that they want to pass off 'Weather-war', 'energy weapons', and 'tachyon converters' etc. as science fiction." Our comment: "As FDR said during his reign, perhaps it was planned that way."

hierarchy that controls International Communism, in the creation and control of a managed conflict, let us consider the case of Angola.

Have you considered how comfortably and profitably elitist industry and revolutionary Marxism get along, living together as they do in Angola? Consider the careful buildup that preceded this marriage of convenience. Angola became a Portuguese Colony in 1575. For almost 300 years it existed, more as a province than a colony. Unlike the areas colonized by the Dutch, British, Germans, French, Belgians, and Spanish governments, Angola was a kind of Portugal away from home; somewhat like Hawaii was to the United States before it became one of the States. There was peace, little trouble, a nice place to visit and even live. That is, until the elitist planners began destroying all the colonies and extraterritorial possessions of all the empires except those to be taken over by the USSR. There was yet another strike against Angola: it bordered on the Republic of South Africa which, like the Republic of the United States, was doomed to alien expropriation because of its measureless material resources. In accordance with the program called "managed conflict" it seemed expedient to the elitists and the Communists that Angola should become a Marxist State. But the USSR didn't do the job. The elitists, through their control of the US State Department, did it for them. In the third of Antony Sutton's series on "The Order," the author publishes extracts from a memorandum recording a conversation, dated April 2, 1962, between President John Kennedy, Secretary of State Dean Acheson, and McGeorge Bundy. They were discussing US policy toward Angola and Dean Acheson said: "The President then asked me why I was so sure that there was no room for negotiations under the present conditions. I said that, as he perhaps knew, we had in fact been subsidizing Portugal's enemies [the Communists-Ed.], and that they strongly suspected this, although they could not prove it. . . ." In other words, our government, under elitist control, was officially opposing the Communist take-over of Angola, while covertly subsidizing the Communist take-over of Angola! To carry out the alleged anti-Communist policy, in 1975 the US made a military drive into Angola in conjunction with South Africa. But at a crucial point, just before the campaign might have succeeded, the US called off its assistance to South Africa. The South African forces had to retire without completing the drive to de-Communize Angola. Compare this US action with the Bay of Pigs operation, when official military support was provided at the beginning, then cut off at a crucial point, leaving the patriotic Cubans to surrender to Castro or die (or both). Compare also the mysterious dealings of Kissinger in cutting off American participation in Vietnam. Or the pullout of U.S. Marines (who should never have been there in the first place) in Lebanon. Managed conflict to create predetermined history according to utilization of the Hegelian Dialectic, is what they call it.

In the case of Angola, the resulting synthesis: Angola is a Marxist country under the control of Cuban troops who are engaged in protecting and supporting the activities of 17 Western oil companies and other multinational corporations, including Allied Chemical, Boeing Aircraft, General Electric - and Bechtel Corporation, Secretary of State Shultz and Secretary of Defense Weinberger being on loan from Bechtel. Gulf Oil Corporation heads the list of 17 oil companies operating in Marxist Angola, including Texaco, Petrofina, Mobil, Cities Service, Marathon, Union Texas, etc. All the companies cooperating with the Communists who intend to use that country as an invasion point into South Africa when the time is ripe; just another example of use of the Hegelian Dialectic to bring about managed conflict to create predetermined history, and to further the establishment of the New World Order.

We can observe the same tactics being employed in Central America and the Caribbean: a public show of cleaning out the Communists in Grenada, but undercover assistance to the Marxists in all other areas. In 1980 the Trilateral Commission controlled Carter Administration forced an American-designed brand of socialism upon El Salvador, while pretending to aid the country in fighting off the Cubans and the Sandinistas. Now a modicum of assistance is given to El Salvadore in its fight against Communism; but at the same time the CIA contrives the sure election of Socialist Duarte, who will "manage the conflict" through compromise with the Sandinistas, ending with the creation of the synthesis desired by the Rockefeller Cabal! There is open praise for the wounded Pastora, "Commander Zero", who is not a reformed Communist, but merely a disgruntled one who dislikes the way the Sandinistas are running Nicaragua. Nord Davis, Jr., a keen observer of Latin American affairs, writes: "As of January, 1984, the CIA, under direct control of Vice President (George) Bush, had ordered all funds withheld from any Nicaraguan CONTRO (anti-Communist) group that is not directly under the command of the Communist Commandante Cero (Pastore) and his organization ARDE. Of the more than $100 million spent by Reagan in Nicaragua, there has yet to be one effective military raid against the Sandinistas. (Meanwhile) Nicaragua, under the Hammer and Sickle, is exporting revolution all over the region - with the covert help of the Reagan Administration. . . ." Managed conflict to create predetermined history.

* * * * *

When dealing in terms usually associated with dialectical materialism (monopoly capitalist or international communist economics), it is best to use the terms originally coined by Hegel and improved by Marx: of a created thesis being brought into conflict with a created antithesis, these being managed in such a way as to bring about a predetermined synthesis. However, when we speak in everyday political terms, simpler words are used. We refer to the right and the left. And, just as the Elite Order controls both monopoly capitalism and international communism (thesis and antithesis), it also controls and manages what we are taught to understand as the right and the left, uses them as tools in the building of The New World Order. In his Tragedy And Hope the late Carroll Quigley commented on the situation at the time when J.P. Morgan headed the International Establishment: "To Morgan, all political parties were simply organizations to be used, and the firm always was careful to keep a foot in all camps. Dwight Morrow and other partners were allied with the Republicans; Russell C. Leffingwell was allied with the Democrats; Grayson Murphy was allied with the extreme right; and Thomas W. Lamont was allied with the Left. . . . Unfortunately, we do not have space here for this great and untold story, but it must be remembered that what we do say is part of a much larger picture."

All things have remained the same; only the names have changed and the controls have become even firmer. So that the Elite Order has absolute control of both the National Republican and the National Democratic Parties. We have recently witnessed a meaningless race between three men who call themselves Democrats. Meaningless because it is obvious that, unless there be Divine intervention, Reagan has been chosen to continue in office. He has made his deal with the Establishment. As Lawrence Patterson wrote in his June A Monthly Lesson in Criminal Politics: "They've got Reagan under their thumb...the President has already endorsed a thorough-going review of the tax system with an eye to a total revamping. This is indeed a total collapse of Presidential policy and commitments! ...The President's reelection is guaranteed - but his policies have been reversed without the public realizing it. That's why they need him." If you insist on voting, consider a write-in vote for President and Vice President, and really help those who will represent your State and your District. Politically, there's no other way we can win.

OUR TOTALITARIAN FOURTH BRANCH

". . . In the course of time the federal government built the biggest bureaucratic machine the world has ever seen. On a scale kings of England never dreamed of, it has erected multitudes of new offices and sent forth swarms of officers to harass our people and eat out our substance. We call them bureaucrats. No American today is safe from federal bureaucrats. If you eat, drink, breathe air, dress, work, play, go to school, drive, read, watch TV, listen to radio, travel, own a house, rent an apartment, operate a farm, run a business, buy, sell, advertise, publish, spend money, save money, borrow money, invest, ship goods, import and export, use the mails, have children, get sick, or grow old, you are automatically in the grasp of at least one major federal bureau, and within reach of scores or hundreds more. If you think you can escape by dying, you haven't reckoned on the ultimate bureau, the Internal Revenue Service."

So writes George Roche, President of Hillsdale College, whose latest book, America By The Throat, details and documents "The Stranglehold of Federal Bureaucracy" which that fourth branch of our federal government holds over every American. Publication date is July 5, 1984, price is $14.95, and if you want a copy you'd better write to the publisher, Devin Adair, 143 Sound Beach Avenue, Old Greenwich, Connecticut 06870. Bookstores that depend on The New York Times book review section when they order, seldom carry books that reflect the Christian American point of view. That we are being enslaved by forces of our own creation, without any effort on the part of outside forces, is the subject of this book, as it is the worry and despair of every American who understands anything of the workings of the Federal Reserve System, or of our home-grown gestapo, the Internal Revenue Service. There is, of course, nothing unique or unusual about a federal bureaucracy. It exists in every form of government, has existed whenever a government has decided that its subjects can't do things for themselves and must have the government do it for them. But no provision for any such fourth branch was ever envisioned by our Founding Fathers. And a federal bureaucracy was no real problem to the people of the United States until the turn of the century. In 1926, before the coming of the New Deal, H.L. Mencken had written: "It (the State) has taken on a vast mass of new duties and responsibilities; it has spread out its powers until they penetrate to every act of the citizen, however secret; it has begun to throw around its operations the high dignity and impeccability of a State religion; its agents become a separate and superior caste, with authority to bind and loose, and their thumbs in every pot. But it still remains, as it was in the beginning, the common enemy of all well-disposed, industrious and decent men." But the way bureaucrats grew and multiplied after the coming of the New Deal must have shocked even Mencken. As an illustration, let us consider just one of the hundreds of federal bureaus. In 1939 there was a tiny fact-finding bureau called the U.S. Office of Education. It didn't meddle with the schools, didn't prescribe curricula, didn't cater to labor unions. It just assembled facts about the progress of American education. But a new and larger bureau called the Federal Security Agency was created by the New Dealers, and the Office of Education was gobbled up as a part of Oscar Ewing's FSA (we mention Ewing because it was he who discovered a way to dispose of the American Aluminum Company's waste product, fluoride, by promoting the idea that it was good for peoples' teeth and would prevent cavities). Later the FSA was enlarged and expanded, was allowed to achieve Cabinet stature and changed its name to the U.S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare. It began life as HEW with what was then an enormous budget of $4 billion per year. Some 26 years later the budget had grown to $200 billion a year and, as George Roche says, "HEW was seen to be great with child. And like some colossal whale calving, it was delivered of a whole new Department of Education. In 40 years of gestation, the tiny education bureau had grown into a cabinet department with 152 offices of its own and a budget of $12 billion." It should be understood that federal bureaus don't create themselves or don't give birth to new agencies all by themselves. It requires the U.S. Congress to be the sire. It works something like this. Some special interest agents convince Congress that there should be a new bureau, say for example, a Department of Energy. The necessary legislation is drawn up, passed, approved by the President, money is appropriated for the new creation, a Secretary is named with the advice and consent of the Senate; and lo and behold, we have a new Department of Energy when there isn't even an energy problem to manage! President Reagan promised to do away with both the Departments of Education and Energy. But Congress created them, Congress must approve their liquidation. And the President isn't about to ask Congress to get rid of the cabinet-rank bureaus. Not in an election year.

Now, when Congress creates and the President approves a new bureau, or gives more power to an old bureau, only the general order is given in most cases. Congress says what it wants done, but neglects to tell the bureau how to do it. So, the entrenched bureaucrats set themselves down and write out a set of rules and regulations. These rules and regulations are then published in the Federal Register and, unless Congress objects officially within a given period, usually 60 days, those rules and regulations become law. Now, the bureaucrat, no matter how honest, faithful and able he may be, is not there to worry about the citizens that may come within his power. His first duty is to obey those rules and regulations. He serves the government, not the citizens! The laws are handed down from on high, his not to reason why, but to obey the rules; or else. Once upon a time a bureaucrat was a civil servant. Now the civilians have become his servants! Nowhere is this more obvious than with the Internal Revenue Service. Congressman George Hansen (Idaho Republican) has been trying to do something about the IRS for a number of years. Recently he wrote a book, "To Harass Our People, The IRS and Government Abuse of Power." It has a special section concerned with "Assault on Religion," and it's filled with facts and documentation. Shortly after the publication of his book, Congressman Hansen found himself arrested and convicted of charges of not having reported all the money he and his wife received to the proper authorities. He has appealed, is running for re-election, but he's presently labeled a criminal, and has been reprimanded by his colleagues. Leads one to wonder, because George Hansen is a true conservative who has been trying to clean up that ultimate bureau, the Internal Revenue Service.

It seems that every time Congress passes any domestic bill, the bureaucrats gain that much more power over their subjects. An extreme example is the so-called Civil Rights Act of 1984, (S. 2568 in the Senate and HR 5490 in the House, said to be identical). The bills have passed all the initial hurdles and were to be debated by both House and Senate as soon as the new immigration bill was completed. As worded when it went to the floor, using legal language to describe it, the bill "represents our legislative process at its worst. It would make major changes in the structure of our anti-discrimination laws, in the balance of responsibility between the federal government and the states, in the balance between the responsibilities and prerogatives of private institutions and bureaucratic authority over those institutions. It will greatly enlarge the scope of agency discretion, and do so in an unsystematic, haphazard and overlapping way. It will invite a monumental increase in litigation in the federal courts, while providing little basis for federal judges to discipline and restrain that legislation. And it does this without any showing of need; it does all this on the wholly spurious ground that we have here nothing more than a technical amendment to a number of statutes, a technical amendment necessitated to remedy the effect of an unfortunate, technical Supreme Court decision....this bill is like a nuclear bomb, devastating a complex and carefully patterned institutional landscape, to kill a gnat -- and it is not even clear that the gnat exists." So went a lengthy legal opinion expressed before Senator Hatch's Judiciary Subcommittee on the Constitution. Expressed in simpler terms, this bill, according to Jack Clayton of the "American Association of Christian Schools," is really "a back door ERA and will lead to a massive federal attack on private and religious schools." Clayton noted that in Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 banning discrimination in schools on the basis of sex, the bill itself contained "only 37 words" on the subject. But this led to HEW publishing 16 pages of triple-column fine print of regulations in the June 20, 1974 Federal Register. This new Civil Rights Act would make the Education Department the absolute master over every school, teacher, pupil, or administrator receiving federal funds directly or indirectly. The same applies to "any State, county or town receiving federal assistance" in any manner, directly or indirectly. Not only would the Act vest all political power in the federal bureaucracy, it also would rob every citizen of whatever is left of his so-called civil liberties. Under the terms of this bill, if enacted as presented to Congress, it would establish a bureaucratic dictatorship over the entire United States. It is a blueprint for total federal control. "Citizens for Constructive Legislation" refers to it as the "Big Brother Act of 1984."

We may be writing about something that didn't happen. We are writing "before the act" and while S. 2568 and HR 5490 (identical bills) were still being discussed as we write this, there may have been watering down, rejection, or tabling until a later date. But our point is to show how powerful the fourth branch of government has become, thanks to Congress and the Federal Register. And we wish to point out the need for control of this bureaucracy before it makes total slaves of us all, and destroys our State, County and local governments in the process.

Since we have mentioned this most dangerous "Civil Rights Bill" (or Act if it has been passed and approved), we should like to call attention to one other bill that is being proposed. It's called the School Facilities and Child Care Act and is numbered HR 4193 in the House, S.1531 in the Senate. The two bills are not identical and a conference committee would have to be called to produce a compromise bill before passage by Congress. However, the House version of the bill has already been passed. According to Judy Mann in The Washington Post of May 16, 1984, "a bill to set up and operate child care centers for school-age children passed the House by voice vote Monday -- the first significant move by Congress to directly fund child care since 1972 when the right wing creamed a bill as a plot to 'Sovietize' American children." Actually, the bill was voted on when only 10 Representatives were on the floor. No voice vote was taken, and Judy Mann's "full House" vote amounted to just 10 of the 435 Representatives. Reminds one of the way the Federal Reserve Act was passed just minutes before Christmas recess of the Senate in 1913.

The "left wing" has for years been trying to make legal the assumption that "the child belongs to the state," not to the parents. Example, a Nebraska State legislator who heads that State's PTA and lobbies for the NEA and the State School Board, and who was voicing his approval of the jailing of pastors and parents for sending their children to a Christian School, was heard to say:

We have to control church schools because fundamental, Bible-believing Christians do not have the right to indoctrinate their children in their faith, because we, the state, are preparing all children for the year 2000 when America will be part of the one-world global society, and their children won't fit in. (Emphasis supplied).

This "School Facilities Child Care Act" is a step in the direction of the "Global 2000" program which operates through schools and churches to prepare people, especially children, to "fit in" when World Government arrives in full. Toward that goal and in the name of "child care", the House version of this proposed school facilities program would "authorize $30 million for each of three years to help community groups, local government agencies and educators set up before-and-after-school child care programs, preferably in public schools, but otherwise in community centers." Elementary and secondary teachers would be used to staff the child care centers, and special programs would be prepared, obviously to "unfreeze" any beliefs gained from the parents, then "freeze" into their minds the tenets of humanism. This is that old Hegelian dialectic formula at work with children from ages 4 to 13. As a matter of fact, this proposed new bill is a replica of the bill that was so soundly defeated in 1972 because it would "Sovietize" children. The bill must be defeated again.

* * * * *

We can again defeat ERA. We can again defeat this School Facilities and Child Care Act. We can win many battles. But the war will continue, and it can never be won so long as the majority assume that State is God. William F. Rickenbacker has written, "The bureaucratic State is the very opponent and negation of human freedom and individuality. Men strive to excel, the State seeks after averages. Men covet novelty, the State extrapolates from yesterday. Men love to chaffer person to person, the State is a rule book. Men yearn to be free, the State is the sum of liberties lost." So, in the final analysis, the "bottom line" reads: Man versus the State. As George Roche (op. cit.) explains: "Half a century's experimentation with do-everything government has proven to be a monstrous, heart-breaking mistake. Instead of 'solving' social problems, it has created new and far greater ones. Its ideas and programs go forward on their own momentum despite being repeatedly discredited by practical experience. Its cost is so great as to enervate the most productive economy the world has ever seen. Its accumulated powers could emerge as totalitarianism in any severe crisis; and a crisis is sure to come if the statist trend continues. In the end, we too could face the fate that has marked every Old World State, every civilization before us: a progressive weakening of society by State exactions, leading to degeneracy, collapse, and death. No people before us who have made the same mistakes, who have chosen to put their faith in the State, have ever escaped this doom. Nor shall we.

"How do we get back on the right track? How do we bring bureaucracy back under control? How do we strip the bureaucracy of its illegitimate powers and return them to the people? I have no full or satisfying answer to these questions. . . . Historical experience offers little comfort and less advice about how to escape our dilemma. What I do know is that one election will change little, however much it is a step in the right direction. The problem can be fought in the electoral process, but it cannot be solved there. It runs much deeper than politics; it is a problem of our hearts and minds, of our values and choices. It is a moral problem. Each of us must in his own way find and restore and burnish the values that animated the American Republic at its beginning. With the wisdom of our fathers, we must respect in full the rights of life and liberty and property, for these are the cornerstones of all civilization. But more than this we must abandon the false religion of the State and renew our faith in the sovereignty of our Creator and His Law. Without this, we will not succeed. So it is ordained."

THE PROBLEM FOR CENTRAL AMERICANS: TO COLLABORATE, OR TO BE CONQUERED?

The Black Chieftain of the Red-tainted Rainbow Brigade was at it again. He had made himself a short-lived presidential candidate by visiting pro-Communist President Assad of Syria and coming back to America with an airman who had been shot down over Lebanon. Now he had visited pro-Marxist friends in the four most troubled spots in Central America, hobnobbed for hours with Fidel Castro and was coming back with some Americans who had been held in Cuban prisons. All of which seemed a worth-while gesture, except that John Ferch, chief of the U.S. Interest Section in Havana, said 29 Americans were in prison in Cuba for various offences -- "most having to do with drug smuggling." One wonders if bringing back drug smugglers is such a good thing. To accomplish this and listen to promises of better relations between nations, 63 journalists, 27 Secret Service agents, 14 staff and family members, and 12 invited guests made up the party that Jesse Jackson took with him while acting as a sort of ex-officio Secretary of State, seeking to arrange collaboration with the Marxist leaders on the part of the anti-Communist patriots in Panama, El Salvador and Nicaragua. Lest anyone misunderstand our use of the word, according to Webster's Collegiate, "collaborate" is defined as "To cooperate with or willingly assist an enemy of one's country, and especially an occupying force." The American Heritage Dictionary gives a sterner definition: "To cooperate treasonably, as with an enemy occupying one's country." Of course, it's wrong to suggest that Jesse Jackson was the first American to invent or suggest the policy of collaboration in order to promote Communist causes. At the end of the shooting stages of World War II the Truman administration sent General, then Secretary of State, and finally Ambassador George Marshall to China, to try to induce Chiang Kai-shek to collaborate with Mao Tse-tung in setting up a new "coalition" government for all of China. Chiang refused, moved all he could to Taiwan where he established one of the few prosperous, free and successful Republics the world has ever seen. Mainland China then went totally Communist, became a public enemy and now has become a most favored trading partner. But the contrast between the two Chinas should be a lasting lesson, and should have been applied in considering dealings with the countries of Central America. However, the lesson was either unlearned or deliberately ignored. Anyway, Jesse Jackson was merely following up with a policy that had already been established in Central America by the Carter administration, was still being followed, perhaps reluctantly but necessarily, by the Reagan administration. Globescan of Paris and Geneva on June 18th reported, and we quote verbatim:

"CENTRAL AMERICA: EXPENSIVE AT ANY PRICE.

"We thought you'd like to know the total cost of the US war effort in Central America, since the Reagan administration has resolutely refused to provide the data: ¶ The tip of the iceberg: After Napoleon Duarte's election victory, the US Congress voted 212-208 to provide an additional $129 million in military aid to El Salvador in 1984. ¶ Military construction for US installations in Honduras: Perhaps $100 million in 1984, with a like amount planned for 1985. Even larger amounts may be spent in future years, particularly if the Pentagon proceeds with plans to build a complete air and naval base at Puerto Castilla on the north coast. ¶ Military exercises: Around $250 million in 1984, and perhaps twice that in 1985. This includes the ongoing series of Big Pine and Grenadier exercises in Honduras, as well as continuing naval exercises off the Caribbean and Pacific coasts of Central America. ¶ 'Covert' military operations against the Sandinistas -- such operations are reported to cost US as much as $150 million if all support costs are added in. US combat support operations: current US intelligence and logistics efforts are limited in scale so far -- costing perhaps $200 million per year -- but could prove far more expensive if US forces begin to play a more active role in the region. ¶ The grand total: $800 million, more or less. ¶ Almost none of this, of course, has been approved by Congress or the American people. Nor would it be if they knew that the US government was spending more than $2,000,000 for each 'enemy' soldier [sic], (26,000 member Sandinista army, 8,000 Salvadoran guerillas). A 'covert' operation used to mean something a government kept secret from its adversary. In our 1984 world, covert now means a war the United States government wants to keep secret from its own people." ("Globescan," US Service Center: 1545 New York Avenue, NE, Washington, D.C. 20002). So, our government is spending money secretly on those defending their country against Marxist invaders, or attempting to drive out the enemy; while also spending money secretly on the "enemy" troops and guerillas! Is this not a form of collaboration that treasonably aids our own enemies against our proven friends? For further explanation, read excerpts from this report by Dr. Susan L.M. Huck, an expert on Latin American affairs:

"President Reagan knows -- and any Member of Congress knows -- that if the Communists take El Salvador, they might well roll up further victories. Then, within a few years, the borders of the Soviet Empire could lie along the Rio Grande. The United States could be flooded with twenty or thirty or forty million refugees feeling the consequences of the Leftist policy. The US Army would have to be pulled out of Europe, leaving it to the Soviets. . . . (There is the) pro-Communist mass media, an unresponsive State Department, a Congress listening to Red songs of surrender, and a Democratic Party which does not now have a single Presidential hopeful who is willing to defend Central America.... A Duarte Government will be told to bring in Communist agents to fight against anti-Communists, nationalists and Conservatives. And the Reds will take over as they always do." And secretly, the US Government is helping to finance such a program! Again, the word treason seems appropriate. A very obvious example of this treason has to do with the financing of the election of Napoleon Duarte in El Salvador, who won by a margin of 54% -- and that only because the US Security Council ordered its agent the CIA to spend and do whatever was necessary to insure the election of Duarte. And Duarte is a known collaborationist. As Susan Huck said, he will invite Communists in to fight anti-Communists in El Salvador, and will establish a coalition government when all the anti-Communists, rightists and patriots have been killed or silenced. And our US administration, by order of the controlling Elite, will have laid the plans and footed the bill! Dare we call it treason? Now look at what has happened to Duarte's opponent, the anti-Communist patriot named Roberto d'Aubuisson: He would have wiped out the Communists and a Presidency under him would have been a good thing for America and for El Salvador's neighbors; but not for the Rockefeller interests. D'Aubuisson's political persecution began when Jimmy Carter named a Leftist Collaborator, Robert White, to become Ambassador to El Salvador. White announced immediately that he would support the Left, and that the Right leaders were responsible for all the trouble in El Salvador. D'Aubuisson was, of course, the top ranking Right leader, therefore became the principal target of White's wrath. Before the CFR/TC cabal had taken complete command of the Reagan administration, White was exposed and fired, was replaced by Ambassador Pickering, who got into the picture recently by being ordered to distribute some of the funds the CIO had been ordered to use to defeat d'Aubuisson. D'Aubuisson was very critical of Pickering's action, which had caused his defeat, and said some things about Pickering which White immediately broadcast as a threat, said that d'Aubuisson was going to kill Pickering. Before 20 US Senators, headed by Jesse Helms and John East, d'Aubuisson denied the charges; but the damage had been done. Newsweek headed the list in condemning d'Aubuisson, which caused Senator East to state that no proof of d'Aubuisson's involvement in any plot had been offered, and that d'Aubuisson had been treated most disgracefully, by the administration, the Congress and the mass media. Shades of McCarthy, and Lindberg, and Somoza, and so many other patriots who dared to stand for truth when compromise or collaboration would have been more convenient.

This entire Central American affair, disregarding the Communist conquest of Cuba with the aid of The New York Times and the State Department, began when Averell Harriman, Paul Warnke, Zbigniew Brzezinski and other Rockefeller Insiders chose Jimmy Carter to manipulate the ouster of Nicaraguan President Anastasio-Somoza-Debayle, West Point graduate and a true friend of the United States. The Carter administration selected one Eden Pastora, known as Commandante Cero, to lead a Communist force against Somoza and establish an American designed Socialist government in Nicaragua. Communist Commandante Cero won the war, but lost the fight to head the kind of government he wanted installed. So, still being paid secretly by the US, Cero organized an anti-Sandinista force which has been fighting to overthrow the Sandinistas. Cero didn't change his spots, he's still a Marxist, just doesn't like the way the Sandinistas are running things, but refuses to join with the other real Contras who are true anti-Communists. After being wounded in a bomb blast, Cero was flown to safety, still refuses to allow his forces to join the anti-Communist forces, and there is the threat that he may be deposed by his own followers.

The Carter administration had made a mess of the Central American situation in almost every respect. When Ronald Reagan became President, the Rockefeller cabal decided that new tactics should be employed. So, Sol Linowitz, the banker-industrialist-CFR Biggie, was called upon to make a study and a report. Linowitz was the man who had managed the pay-away of the Panama Canal for the benefit of the International Bankers who wanted to make Panama an International Banking Center and Currency Laundromat. Being familiar with Central American affairs, and experienced in delicate diplomatic maneuvers, Linowitz seemed the ideal person to plot the new program for the Eastern Establishment's control of Central America. Remember, Rockefeller even prefers dealing with Socialist Governments, so the influence of Communism in the region didn't really matter. Accordingly, Sol M. Linowitz assembled a group of financiers, industrialists, former finance ministers, and economists, and began a series of conferences at the "Woodrow Wilson Center for Scholars." The report, titled "The Americas at the Crossroads," was published in April, 1983, and it is our belief, though we can't prove it, that this is the plan which the insiders within the Reagan administration were ordered to adopt, adapt, and execute, secretly. It has nothing to do with the suppression of Communism or Socialism in the Americas. Instead, it is a plan for the creation of a Regional Administrative District which is to become a part of the New World Order. However, the plan could not be presented as a Linowitz Study. Linowitz was too recently associated with the scandals accompanying the false treaties made with the Panamanian government regarding the operation and future of the Panama Canal. Also, it was the desire of the elitists to get their agent, Henry Kissinger, back into an official government position. More than four years had passed, Kissinger's work as National Security Chief and Secretary of State was more or less forgotten. Since Brzezinski had gone back to private practice, there was no key agent in the proper position within the White House. So, Henry Kissinger was called upon, by President Reagan personally, to form a commission and make a study and recommendations on how to handle the Central American crises. Again we believe, but cannot prove, that Kissinger and his associates revamped the Linowitz Report, presented it as a way to "restore democracy" and improve the economy of the countries of Central America and the Caribbean. So, whether this be true or not, it is true that Herr Kissinger is back in place as an important and "respected" adviser to the President. In this connection, for the past several issues we have referred on occasion to the fact that the insiders who are constructing this New World Order base their plans on the use of the Hegelian Dialectic. The March 1, 1972 Issue of the Congressional Record, page E 1856, contains the following statement:

"Friend and foe alike agree that Henry [Kissinger] thoroughly enjoys his power and fame. Joseph Kraft [CFR] tells us Kissinger's intellectual hero is the German philosopher Hegel. This will mean nothing to those who are unaware that both Karl Marx and Adolf Hitler built their dreams on Hegel's theories of dialectical materialism and total subservience to the State. As Kissinger told Look: 'The imperatives of the individual are always in conflict with the organization of society.' He makes it clear that 'the organization of society' under the federal government comes first -- right after Henry Kissinger." This statement will go far toward explaining why the disciples of Hegel are not concerned with Communism as opposed to Capitalism, or the 'Left' as opposed to the "Right." As Antony Sutton notes in his invaluable book, "How the Order Creates War and Revolution": "The intellectual world is still locked into a phony verbal battle between 'left' and 'right,' whereas the real struggle is the battle between individual freedom and the encroaching power of the Absolute State." We are taught to think in terms of Communism versus Capitalism, of a political "left" versus a political "Right," of a Democratic Party versus a Republican Party, of liberals versus conservatives, and so on. But the framers of the New World Order do not think in such terms. In Tragedy And Hope, Carroll Quigley pointed out that J.P. Morgan used financial power to control politics of all shades. The Rockefeller interests have extended that to cover even the actions of a Jesse Jackson. So that, when we consider the present crisis in Central America, we must understand that the controlling power is not thinking of ridding the nation of the Communist menace, but of developing the region, and its people, so they will fit into the pattern of the New World Order.

In the time of Monroe there was a Doctrine that, if applied today, would solve every major problem in Latin America; except that our own government violated that Doctrine by interfering in the affairs of Europe. There was a time when there was an honored and obeyed Constitution of the United States which, if applied to today, would solve most all of our major problems, both domestic and foreign. But our own government, and its people, have violated and watered down that Document so that it isn't even referred to when a problem is presented. There was a time when, faced with a major problem, leaders turned to the Holy Book and went to prayer to seek an answer. But there has been such a spiritual weakening in our national fibre that many would laugh at such a practice. As J. Edgar Hoover wrote in his latter years, "The basic answer to communism is moral. The fight is economic, social, psychological, diplomatic. strategic -- but above all it is spiritual." Douglas MacArthur said in effect that the only thing that would save this country would be a spiritual rejuvenation. The answer remains the same: we need no New World Order, we need a return to the original American Order. We need only to respond, nationally and individually, to the words "Thus saith the Lord," and "Thus speaks the Constitution." But is spiritual rejuvenation too passe to pray for?

DO PRESIDENTS HAVE A RIGHT TO LIE?

"History shows, if we only look," says Tom Anderson, "that most politicians are bad men, not good men. The men who seek power are the men who don't deserve it. Power-hungry people who yearn to rule are the people who should be ruled. A goodly percentage of all political leaders throughout history were bad. Not bad rulers, necessarily, but bad people. In the highest echelons of our present government are crooks, perverts, traitors, philanderers, and whatever else bad there is. . . . We need clean, untainted Christians in government. We have few. There are great differences between the trees of a forest, but in over-cut land the stumps are much the same. Our government and our Congress is a vast expanse of rotted stumps with an occasional giant oak here and there." ("Straight Talk," weekly, P.O.Box 60, Pigeon Forge, TN 37862. $47 per year).

As this Nation's quadrennial race of power-hungry people who yearn to rule enters its crucial months, Walter Mondale is seeking a running-mate who will be willing to lose this year in the hope of winning four years later. And Ronald Reagan is seeking to make some kind of a deal with the Soviet Union, even as he has with Communist China. Any negotiations that seem plausible, any treaties that may seem to promote peace, are to be welcomed. The political reasoning is obvious. Mondale strategists are convinced that their only hope of defeating President Reagan is to paint him as a war-monger, to "dramatize the risk" of allowing him to remain in the White House another four years. The Mondale crowd must make people believe that there is a great danger of a nuclear war unless changes in personnel and foreign policy are made. Perhaps they've been looking at their own Democratic record: Woodrow Wilson was re-elected because he promised to keep the Nation out of World War I. FDR was re-elected because he promised he'd never send an American boy to fight on a foreign shore in World War II. There are these precedents, Reagan might become a repeater.

This being the only serious threat to a Reagan victory in November, the reaction is a flurry on the part of Reagan and his "insiders" to soften the terms when speaking of the USSR, and to double efforts toward arranging conferences, negotiations, summits, make treaties if possible; anything to convince voters that there is no real threat of war. A strong offense is the best defense and, while we have no intention whatever of attacking, we must somehow make the Soviets fear to attack. So, we must bind the enemy down with the chains of treaties and conventions. There is this stumbling bloc: If the Kremlin crowd is as shrewd as we believe, there is no chance whatever of any serious negotiations and certainly no treaties or other agreements of any kind before November 6, 1984. Any such move on the part of the Soviet would be interpreted as favoritism toward Reagan. However, if the present administration can keep the people believing that every effort is being made on the part of the United States toward arms control or disarmament, and that the Soviet is the reluctant bear, then the one hope of Democratic victory will have been quashed.

Aside from the political expediency of the effort, this business of trying to make treaties with the USSR is about the stupidest thing ever conceived in the mind of a politician -- stupid, that is, if the treaties are expected to be kept, and honored. As the poet might say, shall we count the ways that we have been deceived by treaty-makers? As Lenin remarked, treaties are like pie crusts, made to be broken whenever it seems convenient and advantageous. That, of course, does not apply to the Communists alone. Ask any remaining American Indian about our own government's ability to break treaties. Special Office Brief, "An Early Warning Intelligence System" published by Kilbriain Newspapers, Ltd., 82 Merrion Square, Dublin 2, Ireland, on June 21st 1984 contained some essential facts on how nations lie to other nations and to their own people. The following is quoted:

(1) In 1939 Britain and France guaranteed the integrity of Poland. That country was thereby led to believe that should it be attacked the guarantors would take offensive action against the aggressor on a full scale, and at once, Poland being incapable of defending herself.

SATAN SPEAKS THROUGH "ROCK"

We've all heard -- or seen on a bumper sticker -- the plaintive question: "Parents, do you know where your children are? That should be followed up with an urgent: "Parents, do you know what your children are listening to?" It is bad not to know where your children are, but sadder still the parent who is not aware that what his child is hearing is in the process of warping his mind! I have a tape of an interview of a young man named Jacob Aranza on the Satellite Radio Network and what he has to say is startling.

Apparently, for the last 25 years or so, the music scene has been one of significant "mind-changing efforts!" The entire social, psychological and moral thought process is involved. He tells of a man travelling by air who happened to sit beside the manager of a rock musical group. He says that the man was amazed with the manager's grasp of promotion, business savvy and intelligence. The manager told him, "Rock music has gone through various phases. From 1955 to the middle 60s we pushed sex, with Gene Vincent, Chuck Berry and Elvis Presley leading the way. The second step was Eastern religion and rebellion. That was from about 1965 to 1970. The Beatles, a leading group of that era, pushed it hard. Their own George Harrison wrote a song to Hare Krishna titled, 'My Sweet Lord.' The third step we pushed was addiction to the music. That ran from about 1970 to the 80s. Rock video started to become popular in the late 70s. This is what we're pushing now, because it sells! 'Thriller' by Michael Jackson, is the biggest selling record in the history of the world because you remember 95 percent of what you see and hear! We haven't been concerned with quality . . . we've been concerned with addicting the young people to our music. Now . . . we're pushing religious commitment!"

The man didn't say it, but the evidence points to a religious commitment to Satan! This is hard saying, but Aranza's interview and other proofs seem to bear this out. In the album "Highway to Hell," by a group called "AC/DC," their lyrics say, "A parttime in hell . . . we'll have a blast," and "on the way to the promised land . . . C O D . . . care of the devil." In another of their albums, "If you Want Blood You Got It," they sing, "Hell ain't no bad place to be." In their song entitled "Hell's Bells," they say, "Nobody's puttin' up a fight . . . I'm gonna get ya . . . take you to hell!" This group has consistently been at the top of the record charts! Another popular group called "KISS" sing these words in their song, "God of Thunder:" "The god of thunder, the god of rock and roll, will steal your virgin soul. The spell you're under will slowly rob you of your virgin soul." The overall picture which is being drawn by these groups is that hell is nice and heaven is bad. Consider the album "Fear of Music" by a group known as "Talking Heads," which sings -- in dirge-like tones -- "Heaven is a place where nothing happens." Of course, not all rock music has these overtones. But the most popular groups which sell the most records and are consistently at the top of the charts push sexual perversions, drugs, rebellion, depravity, devil-worship and the occult. In Portland, Oregon, "Iron Maiden's" first screaming words in a concert were, "Welcome to Satan's sanctuary," which received a screaming response by their youthful audience. At the close of a concert in Ontario, Canada, the group known as "Black Sabbath," gave an "altar call to Lucifer" and hundreds of teenagers responded to be led in a "prayer" to "commit their lives to Satan." Then they were given a slip of paper with a phone number on it if they wanted more information.

Some parents think "that's just the way kids are . . . acting like everyone else." Part of that is true. But they're playing with fire. And that is not a joke or jest, but deadly serious! A fisherman catches fish with fish bait. Satan is no fool. His hooks in this contest for eternal souls are baited with alluring music! . . . There! I said it, and I'm glad!

(By Johnnie Howell, Louisville, Ky. free-lance columnist).

(2) In the event Poland was invaded by both Germany and Russia (September 1939), neither Britain nor France declared war on Russia and neither took any offensive action against Germany. They could not. The Poles thought it a pity they had not been so warned because it had been open to them to make a deal with either Germany or Russia. In fact, the Western Powers misled the Poles.

(3) Nevertheless, as a vague compensation of sorts Britain gave asylum to the exiled Polish Government and accorded it full recognition in London. The Russians on the other hand murdered 10,000 Polish Officers at Katyn.

(4) When it paid Britain to ally herself with Russia (1941) the Polish guarantee was conveniently forgotten. But to calm Polish fears sweeping promises were made to the Poles in London -- supported by all the pretences the Establishment could lay on. However on 30 May 1945 Harry Hopkins on behalf of President Truman informed Stalin that "as far as the United States Government was concerned we had no interest in seeing anyone connected with the present Polish Government in London involved in the new Provisional Government of Poland and he did not personally believe that the British had any such idea." Mr. Hopkins was correct. The British Government had no such idea. The Polish Ambassador in London to whom solemn promises had been given, who had been flattered for six years with constant official attentions and assurances, was kicked out of his Embassy at 24 hours' notice. The Secretary General of the Polish War Cabinet was put on the street and but for a financial rescue exercise by this office (repeat, this office) would have been on the dole. Anthony Eden when applied to by this office (repeat this office) for assistance coldly replied that he would do nothing for Count Adam Romer. We financed him until he died in 1965. Romer died disillusioned and betrayed -- his country handed over by the Allies to one of the invaders of 1939. . . .

(5) However, glance at Stalin's assurances of 27 May 1945 (regarding China): "He (Stalin) made (the) categorical statement that he would do everything he could to promote unification of China under the leadership of Chiang Kai-shek. He further stated that this leadership should continue after the war . . . he proposed to back the Generalissimo". (Cable to President Truman from Harry Hopkins). In the event, Stalin did the exact opposite. "He (Stalin) said there was no intention on the part of the Soviet Union to interfere in Poland's internal affairs, that Poland would live under the Parliamentary System which is like Czechoslovakia, Belgium and Holland and that any talk of an intention to Sovietize Poland was stupid." . . . Note: The late Harry L. Hopkins (adviser to Presidents Roosevelt and Truman) not only believed Stalin but found him "charming and kindly". Possibly the Polish officers lined up for execution at Katyn thought otherwise. Mr. Hopkin's prognostications about Russo-American relationships would really be too unkind to quote."

The foregoing presents a British revisionist account of how national leaders lied to other national leaders, and to their own people, during one important epoch in world history. For further confirmation, we present an American revisionist view of the same historical period. We were in a Japanese prisoner-of-war camp at the time these things happened, so our references are drawn from "The Yalta Betrayal," by Felix Wittmer; "Operation Keelhaul," by Julius Epstein; and "Renounce Yalta," an article by Professor Z.K. Zawodny, appearing in the July 1984 issue of "Chronicles of Culture," a publication of the Rockford Institute.

On August 14, 1941, nearly four months before Pearl Harbor, when it had already been decided without the people's knowledge that the US would enter World War II officially, Winston Churchill and Franklin Roosevelt met in international waters. There they agreed on a joint resolution known as the Atlantic Charter. It was later signed by 47 countries, including Poland. Among other things, this Charter guaranteed the territorial integrity of all the States participating in the war against Germany. Six months after the Charter's signature (two months after Pearl Harbor), FDR met with the Polish Ambassadors to the US and Great Britain and assured them that the promises concerning the territorial integrity of Poland would be kept. However, two years later, on December 1, 1943, FDR and Stalin held a secret meeting at Teheran at which time FDR broke his word to the Polish Ambassadors and agreed with Stalin that there would be changes in the Polish frontier when the war was ended. FDR also disclaimed any interest in the political or territorial integrity of Lithuania, Estonia and Latvia; in effect turning those Nations and its citizens over to the tender mercies of the Soviet Union. At the time of this meeting, there were 350,000 front line and 350,000 underground Polish soldiers fighting for their homeland. After lying to four Nations and their people, FDR then lied to his own people in a Message to Congress on January 11, 1944. He stated that at Teheran "no secret treaties or political or financial commitments" were made. Again lying, FDR promised Polish Prime Minister Mikolajczyk, "I will see to it that Poland does not come out of the war injured." Thus he lied to everyone but Stalin.

Then came Yalta, February 7, 1944, when FDR told Stalin and Churchill that "I am not concerned with frontiers." In effect, at Yalta he gave to the USSR permission to do whatever it wished to the Nations and the citizens of what we now refer to as "The Captive Nations;" not captured by the Soviet, but turned over to the Soviet by the leaders of the United States and Britain, with Anthony Eden and Averell Harriman behind the deal. There were two secret agreements which did not appear in the formal text of the Yalta Agreement. One gave to the USSR Japan's Kurile Islands and southern Sakhalin Island, the latter featuring so prominently in the shooting down of KAL 007 in which Larry McDonald and 268 others were murdered. Also, certain Soviet rights to Manchuria were granted, and the Soviet takeover of Poland was confirmed. The second secret agreement at Yalta, the forcible return of Soviet citizens then in Allied zones was promised. Known as "Operation Keelhaul," Soviet citizens were forced onto ships and into cattle cars and sent to the USSR where, upon arrival, they were immediately slaughtered or sent to slave labor camps. At least two million souls were involved. Yet, having agreed to this slaughter previously, President Roosevelt in a Report to Congress on March 1, 1945 did not mention the forcible return of Soviet citizens, and he specifically denied that he had even discussed the Far East (Kurile Islands, etc.) with Stalin at Yalta.

To bring the betrayal of Poland up-to-date Dr. Zawodny gives this allegory: "Roosevelt and Churchill sold a neighbor's house to a ruthless partner, without the neighbor's knowledge. Then, common sense dictates that they were responsible for whatever action the ruthless partner undertook afterwards in the neighbor's house. To blame him is a childish excuse - they stole the house in the first place. The best postscript will be the simple fact that one of the Solidarity members arrested in Poland noticed 'Made in the U.S.A.' on his handcuffs."

As Patrick Henry said, "I know of no way of judging the future but by the past." So, this being a national election year it seemed proper to go back into the past, to the time of the lies surrounding Teheran and Yalta; lies which marked the beginning of a 40-year streak of American defeats; defeats that came about because our own leaders fed the Communist Beast and lied to us while doing so. As Solomon said: "When the righteous are in authority, the people rejoice; but when the wicked beareth the rule, the people mourn." So, be very sure of whom you endorse and for whom you vote, else the lies will continue to bring defeat after defeat, until we end as slaves of a State sitting in the place where God ought to be.

OVER GOLDEN GATE TO THE RAINBOW?

The Establishment's accountants tell us that it's going to cost over a billion dollars to convince the people that they (the people) will have elected the persons they (the Establishmentarians) have already chosen, months ago, to become President and Vice President of the United States in 1985. That's not counting the additional millions it will cost the people to elect all of the Representatives and one third of the Senators who will supposedly represent them beginning next year. Nor does it include the further millions it will cost the people to elect the State, County and Municipal officers who will be running this year. Commenting on the federal extravaganza that really has its second act beginning in San Francisco on July 16, Raymond Heaps, also of San Francisco County but a representative of the American Independent Party, not the American Democratic Party, recently commented on the principals in the campaign. Assuming that the people really do have a choice, Mr. Heaps wrote: "The choice is clear. It is a choice of being rushed pell mell into Socialism or having it done more smoothly and efficiently. President Reagan has exceeded Jimmy Carter in funding socialist programs, has greatly increased Foreign Aid and the transfer of U.S. High Technology to America's avowed Communist enemies, and has neutralized the MX (intended to be mobile) missiles by basing them in fixed silos, thus making them vulnerable to a Soviet first strike. Walter (Fritz) Mondale has an established voting record that should qualify him for the Lenin Peace Prize with special commendation, and is supported by all of the Marxist-oriented union officials. Gary Hart differs from Mondale only in one way -- he has renamed the same Socialist plans as 'new Ideas.' Jesse Jackson stands out as the darling of the Left. In a news interview, Jackson said that he is supported by the Rainbow Coalition." (unquote).

Regarding this Rainbow Coalition, on July 13-16, 1984, there was held a "Coalition for a People's Convention" at Laney College in Oakland, California. Said a flier: "The aims are to broaden the membership of the Rainbow Coalition, to influence the Democratic Convention and to support Jesse Jackson. Included in nearly 100 endorsers were chairmen or secretaries of the Peace & Freedom Party; Asian-Americans, Jesse Jackson for President Committee; Citizens Party; Gray Panthers; National Lawyers Guild, Rainbow Coalition; Mobilization for Survival; Southern Christian Leadership Conference; U.S. Out of Central America; Women's Action for Disarmament; and similar organizations. Constance Cumby, in her book: The Hidden Danger of the Rainbow -- The New Age Movement and Our Coming Age of Barbarism, writes: "It is a worldwide coalition of networking organizations. There are more than 10,000 'New Age' organizations within the U.S. and Canada alone, ranging alphabetically from Amnesty International to Zero Population Growth. It is known by many other names, including, but not limited to: The Aquarian Conspiracy, The Age of Aquarius, Humanistic Psychology, Networking Movement, New Thought Religion, The New Church, The Third Wave, The Third Force, New Consciousness, Transcendental Movement, Human Potential Movement, The New Spirituality, Secular Humanism, and Humanism. The principle aims include a New World Order, a New World Religion, a New Age Christ whose name is Maltreya, and to take the world for Lucifer who is to be worshipped as God." (Unquote). The Rainbow Coalition has tie-ins with the World Federalists, Club of Rome, Trilateral Commission, Council on Foreign Relations, and other Elitist organizations.

Jesse Jackson also has the same tie-ins with the Elitist organizations. Otherwise, he would never have been briefed by a State Department official and treated as an American Ambassador ex officio when visiting with his Communist friends in Syria, then in Panama, El Salvador, Nicaragua and Cuba. Jackson obviously also has personal tie-ins with the top brass of the Communist International. Otherwise he would never have been able to personally bring about the release of prisoners and political criminals in Cuba.

In an attempt to heal some of the wounds that have all but destroyed the National Democratic Party as a political machine, Mondale has selected the feminist Geraldine Ferraro of New York as his running mate. This will satisfy NOW and other feminist organizations, and perhaps the Gays. But the selection will cut just slightly into the increasing power of the Rainbow Coalition, which supports Jackson. So, with Jackson still active as a Superdelegate and with power to blackmail, the San Francisco Convention should be quite a show. And, of course, a show is just what the Elitists want; the old Roman Bread and Circus Act has never been surpassed, merely improved, as a bemuser of the masses.

Jackson is not running for President of the United States, never was. His great ambition is to become the President of the Third World. He knows that the way to attain his goal is by revolution, and he may set the whole world on fire to gain his ends. As Human Events of July 14 noted: "His six-nation, four-day tour of Central America and the Caribbean was an extraordinary pyrotechnic performance which riveted attention worldwide. But the underlying meaning was hard to miss: the Reverend Jesse has a burning desire to ignite revolutionary fires not only at home, but abroad, emitting passions that may consume Mondale's Democratic party in the process. Virtually everywhere he journeyed, [he] parroted the Leninist line. . . . At the University of Havana, Jackson, fist waving in the air, was shouting, 'Long live Castro,' 'Long live Che Guevara,' 'Long live Patrice Lumumba.' It is not surprising that . . . Fidel Castro has bestowed his blessings on Jackson: 'He is the most honest, courageous politician I have ever met,' a 'brilliant man with a great talent, capable of communicating with people, very persuasive, reliable, honest.' Yet it was in Managua that Jackson seemed to have found his strongest ideological roots. He waxed ecstatic about the Sandinista revolution, exclaiming upon his arrival at the Augusto Cesar Sandino Airport: 'We know how long you have fought and suffered in the battle for peace and justice . . . We know that now, even after having won your revolution, you still must defend the sovereignty and integrity of your nation against those who would invade your borders, mine your harbors, disrupt your economy and murder your citizens.' He urged the anti-Communist government of El Salvador to negotiate with the Communist rebels, but he pointedly rejected the argument that the Sandinistas should negotiate with the anti-Sandinista movement in Nicaragua, a movement, incidentally, comprised of the very kinds of minorities that Jackson insists he has in his Rainbow Coalition: Indians, creoles and blacks.' (End of quote).

There was another Black American who was possessed of the same desire that possesses Jesse Jackson. Andrew Young came up with the crowd that took over the government under Jimmy Carter. Young rose to become U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations. This was the perfect spot to fulfill his desire of becoming Leader of the Third World. But his "roots" were imbedded in the Newstates of Africa whose dictators worked deals between Capitalist governments and Communist governments to reap riches for themselves, sometimes for their subjects. While Young was at the UN control of that hoped-to-be world government, its power shifted to the Third World, the latter at that time being under the leadership of Fidel Castro. But somewhere along the way, Young slipped and fell. Jimmy Carter said Young lied to him, and Young was fired. Whereupon the aspirer to Third World leadership resigned from international and even national politics, went back to Georgia and became Mayor of Atlanta. Thus ended that dream. But, Jesse Jackson with the same dream, has greater potential for evil. His "roots" are not with the Blacks, but with the Rainbow Coalition. And he is a personal friend of the Castro brothers of Cuba, of the Ortega brothers of Nicaragua, and through his friend Farrakhan (whom he has publicly denounced for political reasons, but still regards as a friend and adviser) of Libya's Qaddafi and the "Nation of Islam." Having the Satanically-blinded "Rainbow of networking organizations," as well as the Satanically-possessed Communist hierarchy backing him, and at the same receiving help from his tie-in with the Elitist organizations, Jesse Jackson is in a far better position than Andrew Young ever was, to accomplish his "burning desire to ignite revolutionary fires not only at home, but abroad, emitting passions that may consume Mondale's Democratic party in the process," as well as endangering the United States through his association with the Communists who control so much of Central America and the Caribbean. The awful truth is that the United States government itself, has helped set the stage for its own possible downfall and destruction via Latin America.

The Leftists and professing Communists had, ever since the fall of Batista in Cuba, sought ways and means of bringing the same fate to Anastasio Somoza of Nicaragua. The real heat began when the Carter administration started to aid and encourage the Sandinistas, and refused all aid of any kind whatsoever to Somoza. Any discerning American in Washington should have understood what was happening by the very name the Marxists chose for their rebel organization. General Augusto Cesar Sandino, for whom the Sandinistas were named, was a rebel general in Nicaragua. There was civil unrest in Nicaragua at the time, and we remember the circumstances by a kind of hearsay. As a young U.S. Marine, we were pulled out of Boot Camp in San Diego to guard the mails. In 1926 there was a spate of train robberies and the Marines were called on to do something about it. We remember being stationed in Fresno, making a daily train run to Sacramento and back. Having just become accustomed to the unusual duty, there came more pressing problems: civil war in Nicaragua, and civil war in China. Marines were called in from all over the country, assembled at San Francisco and/or San Diego, one contingent to proceed immediately to Nicaragua, our contingent to sail to China. The Gyrenes who went to Nicaragua had a tougher but shorter time of it. Order was generally restored and a national election was called for. Everyone seemed to agree, except General Sandino. He said: "To hell with it. I'm going out into the bush and fight the damn U.S. Marines (sic)." But he did not discriminate between U.S. Marines and Nicaraguans. He robbed, murdered, raped and burned indiscriminantly, even as the terrorists do today. Finally captured by the Guardia Nacional, he was shot. And that's how the Sandinistas got their name, from the terrorist Augusto Cesar Sandino. Humberto Ortega, the Nicaraguan Defense Minister, publicly boasted: "Without Sandinism we cannot be Marxist-Leninist, and Sandinism without Marxism-Leninism cannot be revolutionary. That is why we are indissolubly united, and that is why our doctrine is Marxism-Leninism." We repeat, from the very name of the rebel organization, the Liberals in Washington knew what they were doing when they supported the Sandinistas, and the conservatives should have known that they were tolerating treason. The Castro brothers takeover of Cuba was simply repeated by the Ortega brother's take-over of Nicaragua, except that this time there was no Bay of Pigs; instead, aid to the Sandinistas continued until Jesse Helms and a few others finally made other Senators and Congressmen realize that they had been supporting the potential overthrow of their own government! When it was realized that the Sandinistas were trying to "Communistize" El Salvador, then aid to Nicaragua stopped completely and a trickle of aid began to be given to El Salvador defenders. But never enough aid, and now the aid to the "Contras" has been stopped by that ridiculous Congress which, we hope, has a complete change of face come November 6th. But the commercial communications media are not going to help in any way. As a matter of fact, anyone simply reading his metropolitan daily or listening to or watching radio and television, with a few exceptions, hasn't the slightest idea what's really going on in either Nicaragua or El Salvador. And what a break that is for Jesse Jackson.

As we said, there are exceptions. There are two principle churches in Nicaragua, the traditional Catholic Church, and the Socialist-permeated church that preaches Liberation Theology. Regardless of the dictatorial control of the Sandinistas, there has been real and important resistance by the traditional church. Last Good Friday, there was an anti-Sandinista demonstration in Managua involving 100,000 Managuans led by Bishop Obando y Bravo. We said there are exceptions. In this case, ABC covered the event, described it as "a passionate demonstration of solidarity with the Catholic Church and opposition to the Sandinista regime." But that story was carried by no other network and no other newspaper that is fed by AP or UPI, or the New York Times or Washington Post news services. The story was blacked out completely; until the Washington Times picked up the story and printed it with full details. But the Washington Times is still a kind of local paper, has a strike against it because it is owned by the Unification Church. However, it has been consistently conservative in its coverage and hopes to "go national" in the near future.

To complete this story; a priest, the Rev. Luis Amado Pena, was accused of gun-running and working with the CIA. He was arrested and Bishop Bravo of the original demonstration staged another one, this time showing the church's sympathy with the Rev. Pena. Whereupon, ten foreign priests were ordered out of the country: four Spaniards, two Italians, two Coast Ricans, one Panamanian, and one Canadian. However, a large percentage of the priests in Nicaragua are from other countries, so the so-called "war between the Church and the State" will probably continue and grow more heated.

Meanwhile, because of our Congress, comes another problem. The Contras are no longer being supported by the U.S. government. They will run out of funds in about a month. There are said to be about 15,000 of them, and they are stationed mainly in Honduras. Honduras has permitted them to remain so long as they can pay their way, but cannot support them. And here's another exception to our charge of little media coverage: The Miami Herald is closer than the Times or the Post to the problems of illegal immigration, the influx of political refugees, and the resulting increase in crime, problems of health, housing and feeding that such influxes bring. So the editor of the Herald asked: "What of the Contras?" Pointing out that they are running out of money, the editorial notes that "Honduran officials are asking what is going to happen to the Contras? They cannot return to Nicaragua as long as the Sandinistas are in power. Nor can Honduras afford to finance a heavily-armed foreign military force within its borders. Neither can South Florida. . . . South Floridians cannot afford to be surprised one morning by news that thousands of contras and their families are on their way here." (Unquote).

Due to inept (or deliberate?) handling of foreign affairs and the misuse of taxpayers' money, there has been created a number of continuing dangers to the survival of the United States as an independent Nation. One of those dangers, perhaps the greatest of them, emanates from South of our Border, where Communist strength is permitted to increase. And this situation gives people like Jesse Jackson a chance to fulfill that dream of a Rainbow World, which is really just a Communist World. America must look far beyond and above mere political conventions if it hopes to survive.

FIRST ROUND TO BIG BROTHER?

In the world wars may come and wars may go, but here in the United States the people will be obsessed with two chains of events. Afghan tribesmen will die, ships will be bombed in the Persian Gulf, innocents will continue to suffer in Communist-infested Cambodia, the Reds and their sympathizers will continue their marches for peace and toward the Finlandization of Europe. But here in the United States two obsessions will overshadow all the more serious world events. For this is national election year, and the Summer Olympics are being held in Los Angeles. In this latter story, the Communist bloc nations boycotted the Olympics because there was great fear of the defection of athletes by the scores. The American authorities had rightly ruled that KGB agents would not be permitted to enter the U.S. to prevent any such general defection of athletes to the West. As a result and in retaliation, the order for terrorist attacks was given. Ugly, threatening letters were sent to Olympic Committee headquarters in Zimbabwe (Rhodesia), Malaysia, Sri Lanka, South Korea, Hong Kong, and the People's Republic of China. These letters were purportedly written and signed by the Ku Klux Klan, and were postmarked in a suburb of Washington, D.C. But the KKK had nothing to do with the threats, the KGB was undoubtedly the author of them. Printed on yellow paper, the letter sent to Olympic authorities in Zimbabwe read in part: "The Olympics - for the whites only! African monkeys! . . . In Los Angeles our own Olympic flames are ready to incinerate you. The highest award for a true American patriot would be the lynching of an African monkey." Newsweek claims that U.S. officials downplayed the threats, but a State Department official did say, "The thrust of the leaflets, that a threat exists for Olympic athletes from U.S. extremists, dovetails neatly with the Soviet justifications for their withdrawal."

In Munich in 1972 there was the massacre of 11 Israeli athletes, and the fear of similar attacks have haunted Olympic games ever since. The fear has been heightened because President Reagan will open the games this year, and security is never totally secure. So every possible precaution has been taken, including 17,000 law-enforcement officers, the latest sophisticated military equipment including "Felix," a 420-pound, 4-foot-7 radio-controlled robot that can climb stairs, see in all directions, and disarm bombs. Since such precautions have been taken, probably nothing untoward will happen. Still, the Communists have made a science of terrorism, and the United States is loaded with saboteurs and enemy agents without any more of them being brought in from the USSR, Libya or Iran. As it is, the Olympics have become so hazardous, so costly, and so politicized that people are beginning to wonder if they should be continued; or if they are, whether a permanent site - perhaps in Greece where it all began - should not be selected. The games in the past have also been quite unfair to Western athletes. Only amateur athletes are allowed to compete for the Western Nations, but professional, paid athletes represent the Communist countries when they are allowed to compete. As for the cost, the people residing in and around Los Angeles are already wondering how all the bills are going to be paid. And while those 17,000 intelligence, police and security guards will be working around the clock to prevent terrorist attacks, it would be difficult to stop a suicide bomber. And the chances for terrorist attacks have certainly risen since the Soviets, who direct the global terrorist network, are not competing, and any attacks could be used to justify their decision not to attend the games.

The second great obsession that will occupy American minds for the next several months is the "bread and circuses" fascination of political conventions and election campaigns. With the first of the events having concluded and with a feminist candidate supposedly adding to the glamour, it would still appear that the National Democratic Party remains such a hodgepodge of disparate leftist groups that disunity is assured. While it seems at this time that it won't be much of a race in November, and that Ronald Reagan is sure to win, there is a factor that has not been publicized and that might bring about a win for the Mondale-Ferraro team. It is recalled that in 1948 even the all-powerful media were fooled when they published the "news" that Dewey had won the election, while Harry Truman had the last laugh on the Eastern Establishment. Then again, in 1960, there was that mysterious and still unexplained disappearance of ballots in the Chicago area, enough to just tip the scales and put Kennedy in the White House. And as for the manipulation of ballots, there has never been a case like the charges brought against the Lyndon Johnson machine when the names of people who had been dead for years suddenly appeared on the ballots, as votes for LBJ. Everts Haley of Texas exposed the whole deal that ended with Johnson in the White House when John Kennedy was assassinated. But no proper authority ever investigated and the controlled media didn't even print the charges. In other words, elections have been and can be manipulated, especially in this computer age, and charges of misconduct on the part of election officials have been made time and again, but almost never investigated or even published by the all-powerful communications media.

However, let us assume that the national elections of 1984 will be honest and beyond reproach in that respect. There is still the matter of an intensive crusade for voter registration that could change the results of the presidential election. There once was a time, when this Nation was a Constitutional Republic, that the right to vote was a privilege accorded only to citizens who had the right to help direct the affairs of the Nation. As a matter of fact, when this Nation first began as an Independent Republic, in some of the States only professing and confessing Christians were allowed to vote. That restriction later gave way to include all landowners and citizens with a property interest of some kind. But when the politicians converted our country into a democracy, then the "one-man-one vote" concept became legal and anyone born in the United States or securing citizenship, could vote, so long as the franchise had not been taken away through conviction of crime. Now let's assume that the polls have been right all along and that Reagan and Bush will win, unless some strategy is devised that will make it possible for even Mondale and Ferraro to win. Well, several months ago the liberals and leftists got together and organized a crusade they call Project Vote. Under this plan the radicals and redicals have been helping the National Democratic Party to register up to 20 million new voters, by registering people from the welfare and food stamp lines. These are people who probably have never voted before, have had no interest in voting. But they are told that if they do vote for Democrats right down the line, they will be able to cut billions from defense efforts and other sources, and all these billions can then be used to increase the funds to be spent for welfare, free housing, hospital care, food stamps, etc. Supporting this scheme and listed on the letterhead of Project Vote are:

Bella Abzug of Women USA, Nancy Amidel of Food Research and Action Center, Ira Arlook of Citizen Action, Asia Bennett of Friends Service Committee, Barbara Bode of Children's Foundation, Kenyon Burke of NCC, David Cohen of Social Development Corp., David Cortright of SANE, Rev. Robert Davidson of United Presbyterian Church, Cushing Dolbeare of National Low Income Housing Coalition, Kathleen Downey of National Student Education Foundation, Robert Drinan of ADA, Marian Edelman of Children's Defense Fund, Pablo Eisenberg of Center for Community Change, Janice Fine of U.S. Student Ass., Douglas Frazer of UAW, Lois Gibbs of Citizen Clearinghouse for Hazardous Waste, Judith Goldsmith of NOW, Sanford Gottlieb of United Campuses to Prevent Nuclear War, Robert Greenstein of Center on Budget and Policy Priorities, Norman Hill of Phillip Randolph Institute, Benjamin Hooks of NAACP, Jesse Jackson of PUSH, John Jacob of Urban League, Frederick James of AME Church, Hulbert James of Center for Third World Organizing, Henry Lacayo of Labor Council for Latin American Advancement, Lloyd McBride of United Steelworkers, Michael McCloskey of Sierra Club, Gerald McEntee of Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, Willard McGulre of NEA, Rafe Pomerance of Friends of the Earth, William Hutton of National Council for Senior Citizens, David Raphael of Rural America, Dorothy Ridings of League of Women Voters, Janice Robinson of National Association of Community Health Centers, Larry Rodgers of ACORN, Jessica Smith of Frontlash, Howard Spragg of United Church Board of Homeland Ministries, Russell Sykes of Fair Budget Action Coalition, Shel Trapp of National People's Action, William Velasquez of Southwest Voter Registration Education Project, and Glenn Watts of CWA. Can you see the Communist hand behind this Project Vote? 20 million voters from welfare and food stamp lines might be able to capture, if not the White House because of Electoral College restrictions, but at least gain control of the Senate, greater control of the House, and control of many State, County and Municipal offices.

But we're running out of space and demanding more urgent attention than even Project Vote is the "Big Brother Act of 1984" that could be passed even before Election Day on November 6th. This dangerous legislation has been explained so clearly and completely by Don McAlvany that we are going to take the liberty of reproducing the commentary which appears in his The McAlvany Intelligence Advisor of July 1984.

THE BIG BROTHER ACT OF 1984

New legislation, the "Civil Rights Act of 1984" (H.R. 5490 and S.2568) is pending, which would grant the U.S. government the most sweeping federal powers over the activities of state and local governments, private institutions, businesses and individuals in our history. This act (whose chief sponsor is Teddy Kennedy) will, if passed, go a long way toward converting the USA into the USSA (as in USSR). Hidden behind the guise of civil rights, this legislation seeks to regulate virtually every person, organization or political entity which receives federal aid, either "directly" or "indirectly".

For Example - If one department or agency of a state received federal funds, every agency of the state and political subdivision (i.e., every county, city and town) would fall under federal control. For Example - churches (or charitable organizations) which receive offerings or contributions which are tax deductible (as they all are), would be considered to be receiving government subsidies and would fall under federal control. For Example - any person having a V.A. or F.H.A. loan on their home mortgage would be considered a recipient of a government subsidy and fall under federal control. For Example - If a private school or college which refuses all federal aid (i.e., Grove City College) has even one student which has a government student loan, the entire school would fall under federal control.

For Example - any farmer, homeowner, student, business or individual which receives a government guaranteed loan, would fall under federal control. For Example - all grocery stores which accept food stamps, all doctors, dentists, hospitals or pharmacies which assist a Medicare or Medicaid patient in any way, would be said to be "indirect recipients" of government subsidies and would fall under federal control. For Example - If a farmer receives a higher price for his wheat because of agricultural price supports, he has received "an indirect government subsidy" and he and his farm fall under federal control.

These are just a few examples of how virtually all local and state governments, churches, schools, businesses, farms and individuals could be brought under "big brother's" federal control by defining them as "indirect recipients of federal aid." Even recipients of tax deductions (i.e., everyone) could be defined as "indirect recipients of government subsidies." It has long been the contention of the IRS, upheld by courts, that a tax exemption from the government is the equivalent of a government grant, carrying with it controls and guidelines to insure that recipients are properly attuned to "public policy." And what federal regulations would all these groups and individuals be subjected to? The Civil Rights Act of 1964 and three subsequent civil rights acts which purport to prohibit discrimination based on race, sex (presumed to include males, females and homosexuals), handicap or age.

Since most Americans have never read these incredible acts or been directly affected by them, the implications may be obscure. The ludicrous quota system and reverse discrimination espoused in recent years by the Democratic Party and liberal civil rights advocates, is an outgrowth of these acts (i.e., a given percentage of Blacks, Chicanos, women and other minorities and probably eventually homosexuals, must have been employed, enrolled, in membership, etc. since 1964 or that organization is said to be in civil or criminal violation of these laws). If these four civil rights acts are applied to all organizations, entities and individuals in America, virtually all of these will be in violation of numerous provisions and subject to civil or criminal penalties. A vast Soviet-style government bureaucracy along with Orwellian type "thought control police" would be necessary to enforce this new civil rights act.

Most rational readers would probably conclude at this point that the "Big Brother Act of 1984" is too ludicrous, too insane, too off the wall to ever be passed. Guess again! It was co-sponsored by 63 senators (led by Kennedy and Packwood) and passed by the House Judiciary Committees by voice vote on May 23 after only 10 minutes discussion. It passed the House Education and Labor Committee on the same day and has the support of most liberals and many moderates in both Houses who are afraid to oppose anything called "civil rights" legislation. This blueprint for total federal control could pass both the House and Senate over the next 30-60 days. Senator Orin Hatch (a strong opponent) has bottled it up temporarily in the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee and President Reagan has voiced his opposition. If you are concerned about this federal power grab, write your Congressman (re: H.R.5490) and Senators (re: S.2568) and voice your strong opposition. Refer to the "Civil Rights Act of 1984." Remember Patrick Henry's admonition, "Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty." (From The McAlvany Intelligence Advisor, P.O.Box 39810, Phoenix, AZ 85069. Monthly, $107 per year).

"We the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect union" have been taught to accept an ordained and established Constitution as our Law of the Land. We also have been taught to depend upon elected representatives to uphold that Constitution. There was a time when voters were responsible citizens and elected representatives could be trusted. But we and the world have just witnessed the spectacle of gays, feminists, rainbows, freezeniks and other weirdos naming an ultra-liberal and an ultra-feminist as potential Chief Executives of this Nation. In revulsion, patriots will vote for an actor and an agent of the "elitists" as the lesser of evils. But no elected officials can save this Nation, because we have lost our spiritual foundation, and unless we regain that lost heritage, we will have become that "last hope" of another "lost civilization."

THE GENESIS OF LIBERATION THEOLOGY

On July 2, 1984, the Central Committee of the World Council of Churches, meeting at Geneva, Switzerland, elected Emillo Castro of Uruguay to a five-year term as general secretary of the WCC. Chief competitor for the post was Dr. Arle Brouwer, former top executive of the 346,000-member Reformed Church of America. But Brouwer withdrew his name from consideration when he learned that the Russian Orthodox delegates would not support him. He had visited the Soviet Union several times and was deeply hurt because the Soviets refused to back him in his bid for the post. However, none of this is remarkable except that the Rev. Castro, now general secretary of the WCC, is a Methodist minister and a strong supporter of the heretical "liberation theology." He also is said to have "good contacts in Roman Orthodox and Roman Catholic circles" and "both liberals and conservatives in U.S. churches are impressed by the manner in which he integrates proclamation evangelism with liberation theology and social justice," according to Jean Caffey Lyles of the Religious News Service. Most members of Protestant churches in the U.S. have believed that liberation theology is a doctrine more or less confined to South and Central America where it is preached by many Catholic priests who tell their parishioners that there is no conflict between Marxism and Christianity, and that Christians should support Marxists as a means of "liberating" the people of Latin America. But the belief that only apostate Catholics preach and promote liberation theology is an error. Because the doctrine really began as the "social gospel" conceived and taught by the Baptist theologian--Walter Rauschenbusch, the Communists Harry F. Ward, Bishop Bromley Oxnam, both of whom posed as Methodists, and others who helped in the organization of the Federal Council of Churches, now the National Council of Churches (NCC). They decided their chief "Christian" duty was not to save sinners, but to save society; and they adopted the methods suggested by Georg Hegel and Karl Marx as the most "Christian" way to accomplish their ends; a method that has been adopted by the leaders of churches that have become members of the NCC and the WCC.

Walter Rauschenbusch (1861-1918) was born at Rochester, New York, but was taken to Germany at an early age where he began his studies. Returning to the United States, he graduated from Rochester Free Academy, spent four years traveling abroad, studied at the Evangelical Gymnasium of Gutersloh in Westphalia, attended lectures at the University of Berlin, then went to London where he became enamored of the gradualism of Fabian Socialism. Ordained a Baptist minister, he was greatly influenced by the historical materialism and "God is the State" philosophy of Georg Hegel, and the Communist theories of Karl Marx. Returning to the United States after some four trips abroad, he held a pastorate for two summers in a small German Baptist Church in Louisville, Kentucky. But, watering his Christian teachings with the philosophy of Hegel, the activism of Marx and the gradualism of Fabian Socialism, he spent most of his time promoting his new "social gospel" which was nothing more than socialism dressed in Christian terms. He taught that a new social order had to be created, and that this would establish a socialist Kingdom of Heaven on earth. Through his books, among them being "Prayers for the Social Awakening," "Christianity and the Social Gospel," and "A Theology for the Social Gospel," the Methodist-turned-Communist Harry Ward, George Herron, and other "wolves in sheep's clothing" who organized the Federal Council of Churches in 1908, were attracted by the heretical doctrines of Rauschenbusch. They began promoting his "social gospel." They had found that proclaiming outright Communism in Christian circles had failed, their Marxist doctrines were rejected violently. However, Rauschenbusch had devised a better approach. Instead of trying to inject socialist ideas into the churches, he termed his un-Scriptural gospel "the Kingdom of God on Earth." The poison was so diluted with Christian verbiage that many Protestant churches began to accept Marxist Socialism as though it were true Christianity, possibly without ever knowing that they were being deceived. Bishop Bromley Oxnam, a disciple of Harry Ward and also a Methodist-turned-Communist, wrote regarding Rauschenbusch: "He not only taught history, he made history. The stream of American Christianity has broken from the 'old bottom' of individualism and has channeled a new course through the social bad lands of poverty, slums, excessive wealth, industrial inequality and economic injustice. Rauschenbusch changed both the emphases and the direction of American Protestantism." "The Social Creed of the Churches," first adopted by the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1908 attests to the truth of Oxnam's statement in regard to those denominations that became members of the Federal Council and remain members of the National and World Council of Churches to this day. So, when one reads of the NCC and WCC giving money to and otherwise aiding and abetting terrorist groups and promoters of liberation theology think it not strange. These organizations have "been this way" from their very beginnings. Disregarding the need to seek one's salvation with fear and trembling, these organizations emphasize the need for social salvation, thinking the ways of Marx a better way than the ways of Christ. Theirs not to promote a spiritual Kingdom of Heaven, but a socialist kingdom of heaven on this earth.

When Rauschenbusch-the-Fabian and Ward-the-Communist decided to create a national religious organization with a Christian veneer to promote Socialism in North America, they gave Socialism a new name, calling it the "Social Gospel." Likewise, when Catholics-turned-Communist in South and Central America decided to use the established church as a weapon for the promotion of Socialism and the New Socialist World Order, they also chose a new name, calling it "Liberation Theology." And, since the times and the conditions were new, they added something: the direct use of violence and terrorism, calling it a Christian means to an end. The NCC and WCC have supported violence and terrorism, but have never publicly admitted such action. But the liberation theology proponents openly engage in terrorism and violence. If a date can be applied, it can be said to have begun when a Peruvian priest named Gustavo Gutierrez wrote a book, "The Theology of Liberation," which was released in 1973 by the Maryknoll Order's publishing house, Orbis Books. We have not read the book, but we are told on good authority that it reflects the theories expounded by Rauschenbusch, Ward & Co., while also drawing directly on the works of Kant, Hegel, Marx and Existentialism. There is the Christian veneer and the Christian verbiage, but liberation theology is totally anti-Christian and is nothing more than political and economic socialism, aiming toward totalitarian control of the people, and the building of the New International Economic Order that is being promoted by the so-called Third World, the United Nations, the International Communists, the Socialist International, the International Bankers and, yes, the National and World Councils of Churches. Father Albert J. Nevins, when editor of Our Sunday Visitor, wrote that "this change in the world order is to be accomplished by a change in the social and political structures. If it is not accomplished peacefully (which Gutierrez sees as impossible), then it must be accomplished violently. This is not Christianity, no matter how often he says it is."

To support the anti-Christ liberation theology being used as a Communist weapon in Latin America, there was established, among other such groups, a "Center of Concern," a radical religious organization based in Washington, D.C. It promotes liberation theology as "a new way of doing theology, an attempt to link Marxian analysis of class and empire with a radical interpretation of the biblical message." Also, as far back as 1975 a group of theologians, social scientists and assorted activists met in Detroit for the first ever North American Conference on Liberation Theology. The group called the movement "a process for theology and justice," and they used a new term, calling it "Process Theology." The Catholic writer Edith Myers explained: "Process theology uses Christian terms, but it gives them different meanings. When it speaks of redemption, it does not mean that man is redeemed for heaven; it merely refers to a better temporal life for mankind. Eternal life does not mean that man is called by God to an everlasting life in heaven; for process theology, eternal life means a quality of life here and now. Thus supernatural concepts are changed to have purely natural meanings." Father Enrique T. Rueda, a Cuban-born priest who was jailed by the Castro government, later exiled to the United States, wrote the invaluable research work The Homosexual Network, testified before Senator Denton's Subcommittee on Security and Terrorism, and explained that liberation theology has become widespread as a weapon for the promotion of Marxism because there is an extensive network of "centers" in the United States as well as in Central and South America, which teach and promote the movement. He said:

"In Washington, D.C. there are several centers, including Network, the Center of Concern and the Quixotic Center. All are political movements which specialize in promoting ideas that on the surface seem Christian but that are really drawn from Marxism. The language is full of references to God, the Church, the Gospel, good works, and concern for the poor, but if you read carefully you will see that what is being presented is Marxism." The "liberationists" claim that they do not use Marxist language but that theirs is only "a modern way of understanding the Christian Gospel." Not so, said Father Rueda. He quoted from a training manual for what the "liberationists" call "base communities" (communist cells), in which it is stated that Marxism has three meanings: As a 'science' for understanding society; as a 'program of action' for changing society; and as a philosophy. "The line is that a Christian not only can be, but must be a Marxist to understand society and work to change it in a proper way . . . the 'base communities' (Marxist cells) provide support for Marxism within the Church. When a bishop goes to visit a neighborhood to promote traditional Catholic teaching and practices, people from the 'base communities' have been known to stone him . . . They are functioning as a political arm of the Marxists within the Catholic Church."

Why is so little said about the dangers of liberation theology? Father Rueda says it is because there are "Justice and Peace Commissions" which are (like similar commissions within the NCC and WCC-Ed.) basically sympathetic to the movement. They do not use the old language of Marxism, but instead use such trendy phrases as "economic and social justice," "economic democracy," and "self determination" rather than the word "revolution." And too, Father Rueda points out, most Americans do not understand the concepts of Marxism and how they are re-phrased in liberation theology language.

As for the re-phrasing in liberation theology language, it might again be pointed out that, what is called "Liberation Theology" in South and Central America, is given another and softer name when spoken of in North America. Here it is taught as "Process Theology." Father Edwin Garvey has written about this perversion of the faith under the title "Process Theology and Secularization," (Stella Maris Books, P.O.Box 11483, Fort Worth, TX 76110. $1.00). He explains: "Process theology leaves us with a natural or secular world but with nothing which is sacred. The secular order exists, but there is no sharing in a divine life which is above the secular. If, in keeping with process theology, we . . . reduce the Gospel to a gospel of secular humanism, all that is left for the Church is to minister to the world in its social evolution." And this is where Father Garvey hits the key to the understanding of all such perversions of the faith: "Theirs is a theology founded on evolution rather than on the existence of a transcendent God. Thus, by making evolution, not God, the object of their faith, Christian theology is turned upside down. Evolution as the foundation of faith means the complete secularization of religion, and once this new theology makes secular work the same as religious work there is no essential difference between its principles and the messianic gospel of Marxism. Further, this new social religion must, of necessity, be a religion of social revolution." As St. Paul might say: It is belief in evolution as opposed to belief in God which is the root of the evil!!

The use of religion to promote Communism began in earnest in the United States in 1908 when Harry Ward founded the Methodist Federation for Social Service and wrote the foundation statement of the Federal, now the National, Council of Churches. He was aided by Bishop Oxnam who as Chairman of the International Round Table of Christian Leaders in 1943, wrote "A Christian Message to the World" which said: "In the case of the Russian revolution, many of its avowed objectives are those which Christians have long accepted in principle but have largely failed to achieve in practice . . . We believe as Christian people demonstrate that they can achieve such beneficent social ends as are sought by the Russian revolution - and much more besides - many differences between us will tend to disappear." This statement came after the Soviets had decided to no longer try to totally destroy religion, but to use religion as a Communist propaganda weapon. So, the Soviets took over the Russian Orthodox and other Christian denominations, placed KGB agents at their head and had those churches become members of the World Council of Churches. That was in 1948. In 1961 Patriarch Alexei, Russian Orthodox Archbishop and a member of the KGB, issued a statement which read: "At the present time we have changed our position in regard to the World Council of Churches . . . Our mission under present conditions is to show Western Christians the light of Orthodoxy." To show Western Christians "the light of Communist liberation" was what he really meant. At about this same time the USSR gained control of Cuba through Fidel Castro. Immediately thereafter Cuba, nominally a Catholic country, became a vast training ground for Cuban troops which would be used as "cannon fodder" in Communist conquests in Africa and elsewhere. Later, the USSR began to gain control of Nicaragua and it became another great training center for the production of surrogate troops to be used as cannon fodder in the conquest of the rest of Central America. Now comes the greater use of religion as a weapon of conquest for Communism: "Liberation Theology" will be used as the bait for the recruitment of yet more surrogates who will, if Communist successes continue, be used for the invasion of the United States. As Alan Stang remarked in the June 1984 issue of American Opinion: "As the Balkans were supposed to be the 'soft underbelly' of Europe in World War II, so the Southwest is America's soft underbelly in World War III. . . The situation in Central America is desperate. El Salvador could fall. If it does, the front would shortly move to Guatemala. Only one country separates Guatemala and the United States: Mexico. And its leaders represent themselves as friends of Castro. Under pressure from the south, the border is evaporating. Already, it is nothing more than an arbitrary line on a map. Texas and California feel the spray that precedes the wave of what Senator Jesse Helms calls 'feet people.' When the wave hits, perhaps millions of escapees from Communism - no doubt infiltrated by thousands of Communist-trained military personnel - will walk into the United States. By means of liberation theology, the Communists are using the churches to soften our underbelly in preparation for the invasion; and they hope to enlist Hispanic Americans as cannon fodder in the process."

FUNNY MONEY BAILOUT

"Money Made Mysterious" was the title of a series of articles that appeared in the old American Mercury magazine back in the 1950s. A quarter of a century later, the situation remains the same: Governments and those who control them still try to make money such a mysterious subject that only they can understand what it is, how it should be used, and for what purposes it should be used. For example, there has been an attempt at the Treasury and Fed level to keep people from knowing anything about this new currency that is to replace the old Federal Reserve notes, when it is to be issued, and what happens to people who must exchange the old for the new. Said Congressman Ron Paul, "The American people suffer enough from government secrecy and surprise announcements in the area of their money. When President Roosevelt in 1933 confiscated the people's gold coins, it was part of a surprise declaration. When President Nixon in 1971 closed the international gold window and broke the Bretton Woods agreement, it was part of a surprise announcement. Is there any wonder that the American people worry about this currency?" One thing was mentioned: People were told that the new money was being issued to thwart the counterfeiters. To which the Congressman replied, "The real counterfeiters are the federal government through the Treasury and the Fed. These are the criminals flooding the economy with funny money, and I am not about to accept their soothing reassurances that the federal government does not once again have something up its sleeve. My concern is that in tinkering with the currency to stave off some imagined 'threat,' the result will be to allow the real counterfeiters to run wild." Deciding to do something about the situation, as ranking member of the House Subcommittee on Consumer Affairs and Coinage, Ron Paul demanded that public meetings be held on the planned changes in United States currency. Such meetings were held, and we received this report, dated July 24, 1984, under signature of Ron Paul, Member of Congress (though a Member only until January 3rd, after which time he says he'll continue the fight from other quarters, and as a civilian). Paul wrote and we quote:

"Today the Subcommittee on Consumer Affairs and Coinage of which I am a Ranking Member, held public hearings on the planned changes in United States currency. We summoned as witnesses all the top people who have refused so far to talk to the press, including Mrs. Katherine D. Ortega, Treasurer of the United States; Robert J. Leuver, Director of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing; Joseph R. Carlon, Office of Investigations, U.S. Secret Service; and Theodore E. Allen, Staff Director for Federal Reserve Bank Activities, F.R.S.

"The members of the Subcommittee were all shown the multi-colored currency samples I had seen last November -- but we were assured these are not anything like the final designs the Treasury will adopt. Director Leuver explained that the outlandish colored currency was prepared for public opinion testing, to find out just how far they could go before people would complain. Mrs. Ortega asked the Subcommittee not to show the samples to the television cameras because, she said, people would misinterpret the reason for preparing the samples. They would assume these were final designs.

"Both Mrs. Ortega and Mr. Leuver insisted that there are no plans to use the currency change-over to monitor currency movements into and out of the country, nor to entrap tax evaders. Now that we have the Treasury officials on public record with this testimony, it will make it much more difficult for the I.R.S. or the Customs Service to seize the initiative and start an enforcement program based on the new currency.

"These hearings were an excellent opportunity to expose the problems with a system based on paper money: Professor Lawrence H. White of New York University, an expert on the gold standard and free, competitive banking systems, testified that counterfeiting is not a problem except when central bankers monopolize currency and governments suspend the gold standard. He predicted the paper money system would eventually prove untenable.

"Expert witnesses from the Battelle Laboratory in Ohio, where the detailed study of color technology was prepared that prompted the Treasury to start testing new currency designs, also testified. Their theory is that one American out of five will seize the opportunity to make counterfeit copies of currency by 1992 if the designs are not modified. This study is based on the work of criminal sociologists who believe most people would be tempted to use their office copy machines to 'get even' with the government or the Federal Reserve System. I suggested to the Treasury witnesses that most people in America are already outraged at the greatest counterfeiting rip off in history -- the Federal Reserve System.

"Copies of the hearings will be available in a few weeks. I would like to make a free offer to all of your subscribers for a copy of my statement and a summary of the testimony from the Treasury witnesses. Please let people know they can obtain these from me without charge by writing to my office for a copy: Congressman Ron Paul, 1234 Longworth House Office Building, Washington, D.C. 20515. I'm sorry that we can't also give your readers sample copies of the pink and blue money specimens we were shown again today, but I have written to Mrs. Ortega to request that these test examples be given to the numismatic collection at the Smithsonian Museum in Washington, D.C., and be placed on public exhibit." (End of statement by Congressman Ron Paul regarding the new funny money that is to be issued.

So, as we began this Report, Money is still being Made Mysterious. We still don't know what this new currency looks like, when it will be issued, how it will be exchanged, and at what rate of exchange. However, if we can trust Treasury and the Fed, we do have the public statement that the currency change-over will not be used to monitor movements of currency into and out of the country, nor to entrap tax evaders. But I.R.S. officials did not make any such promise, and the way that American Gestapo has been attacking schools and churches, and seeking other ways of entrapment makes us very doubtful. Example: Senator Bob Dole wrote the very misleading "Tax Equity and Fiscal Responsibility Act of 1982 (TEFRA)." This legislation, if passed, would give the I.R.S. authority to require brokers to report the names, addresses and social security numbers of their customers. And here's the catch: The term "broker" has been broadened to include "dealers". Under the new regulation, if adopted, your local coin dealer would be required to provide the I.R.S. with the name, address and social security number of all their customers to whom they have sold coins, bullion, or collectables. By the definition being used by the I.R.S., guns are collectables. This means that any gun owner would be required to register his guns and begin paying taxes on them as collectables. With the investigative authority the I.R.S. commands, its agents would work day and night until every gun in the country would be registered in their massive computer banks. Thus, this single regulation would accomplish what BATF, Handgun Control proponents and Ted Kennedy have been unable to do after years of fighting to disarm American civilians. Leading the fight against this new power for the I.R.S. is Senator McClure (R.ID.) who has introduced S.914, "The Firearms Owner Protection Act."

Getting back to the subject of the currency change-over, it's important to understand that this is not something which is happening just in the United States.

Every Nation associated with the Trilateral Commission is also changing its paper currency. Some have already done so. And an interesting development that seems to be tied in: The European Community is beginning to look more and more like a Regional World Government. National passports are to be done away with and a new European Community passport will be issued instead. The royal blue passport, the most Britannic of institutions, is to be exchanged for a new soft-cover passport with a plastic strip that will carry the personal history of the holder. Said The Christian Science Monitor: "The little bit of plastic is agitating Britain's civil righters. They fear it will be used to store unfavorable facts about citizens. Their concern is rather more than eccentric. Britons have always resisted identity documents of the type common in Europe. Opponents of the new passport argue that it resembles an identity card, complete with computerized features." Throughout this gradual growth of socialism, whatever happens in Britain usually precedes a similar happening in the United States.

Yet another item on the money front which seems a warning. The government of West Germany has recently granted a sizeable loan to the Communist government of East Germany. The practice of capitalist nations making loans to Communist nations is not new, but the reasons for this particular loan are different. The German Information Center seems to imply that this is a sign of West Germany slowly turning from American cooperation toward cooperation with the Communist bloc. Said West Germany Minister of the Chancellery, "Today (July 25) marks an important stage on the long journey to improvement." The Minister of State also announced "a series of humanitarian measures agreed to by the German Democratic Republic in intensive negotiations with West German government officials. Jenninger (West German minister) said the GDR has promised it will also step up the dismantling of all remaining automatic firing devices along the intra-German border and will not replace them." This news should have important meaning to our own Defense Department. NATO seems to be slowly dying, is being replaced by a United States of Europe which is friendly toward the Communist bloc of Nations! Perhaps it is the hidden power of money which makes it so mysterious.

Back here at home, the federal and multinational banking authorities have tried to make most mysterious of all the facts surrounding the nationalization of the Continental Illinois National Bank & Trust Company. In the first place, Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation's Chairman, William Isaac, tries to insist that the bailout does not constitute a nationalization of the bank. But 80% of the stock is now owned by FDIC, a government agency; and if that doesn't mean nationalization (synonym for socialist takeover), then there's something wrong with Webster's Dictionary. Besides, The Wall Street Journal comments: "Nationalizing a major corporation to 'save' it has precedents in the U.S. and elsewhere that give cause for wariness. British taxpayers have paid dearly, for example, to 'save' the nationalized portions of that country's steel and auto industries. Similarly, the congressional bailout of this country's Eastern railroads has cost American taxpayers billions." Newsweek headlines the story "The First Nationalized Bank." And when all the facts are learned, Spotlight will be closest to the truth when it calls it "a dress rehearsal on how to bail out Chase Manhattan -- without sending David Rockefeller to prison." And the cost to taxpayers will be at least $4.5 billion. Of course, as in the previous cases of the federal bailouts of Lockheed, Chrysler and New York City, the money managers insist that this $4.5 billion is not taxpayer's money. Which is a difference without distinction, because this is the equivalent of what happened: The Federal Reserve System made a computer entry, the Federal Bureau of Engraving and Printing turned on the presses and printed up $4.5 billion in new currency, handed it over to the FDIC which then paid the most pressing bills owed by the failed bank, in return took over 80% of the stock both common and preferred, and placed two old Rockefeller associates in charge of the nationalized bank! These two, at a salary of $600,000 each per year, are John E. Swearington, former chief executive officer of Standard Oil Company of Indiana (In which the Rockefellers still have much stock) who has been named board chairman and chief executive officer of Continental Illinois, the bank's holding company; and William S. Ogden, former vice-chairman of Chase Manhattan Bank, who was named board chairman and chief executive officer of the bank itself.

Now, let's back up and check on what really happened. Back In July 1982, Continental Illinois told all its banking partners that it had made some bad loans to foreign companies that couldn't meet their bills, it had purchased $1 billion in energy loans from the failed Penn Square Bank of Oklahoma, and there were indebtednesses to other Megabanks such as Chase Manhattan. So some 28 major banks and the FDIC assembled a temporary aid package of $7.5 billion to keep Continental afloat until such time as some megabank or combination of megabanks could agree to buy Continental. The money barons all agreed that the failure of a bank as large as Continental would shake up the whole banking world. But nobody could be found to take over Continental. So, illegally and without precedent, FDIC itself decided to take over the bank and keep it afloat. Now, here's where the illegality comes in: FDIC was created for the purpose of paying off depositors who would lose their money if the bank failed. But FDIC is limited to the payment of losses up to $100,000, and not a penny more. But here we find FDIC paying off bills amounting to $3 billion immediately, with newly printed money, and paying off another $1.5 billion worth of bad bills within the next year. The purpose of FDIC is to protect bank customers, not bank holding companies!

Even The Christian Science Monitor, almost always on the side of the angels of finance, agrees that "the bailout is controversial." Staff writer David Cook, in CSM of July 27, cited some officials who disagreed with the idea of FDIC going into the bank business to protect bank holding companies. He reported: "Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan says the bailout is 'bad public policy, because of the protection it indirectly offers holders of Continental bonds [such as Chase Manhattan and other megabanks].'" House Banking Committee chairman Fernand J. St. Germaine (D) of Rhode Island said the bailout 'raises the greatest array of questions in the history of the federal bank regulatory system.' He complained that the deal was completed without public debate, created large contingent liabilities for the Federal Treasury [cost to taxpayers, that is] and reshapes the banking industry without review or approval." In short the FDIC, which is a government agency created solely to protect bank customers, not bank holding companies, has gone into the banking business for itself, using money supplied by the Federal Reserve Bank of Chicago. This is corporate socialism, sometimes called Fascism. And we can at least be thankful that there are a few government officials who, like Regan and St. Germain, understand that to sin by silence would be dangerous indeed.

In addition to being a big step toward corporate socialism, this whole scheme is a rip off to protect the international banking industry at the expense of the taxpayers and future generations of taxpayers. If ever eternal vigilance were the price of freedom, this is such a time. Let it not be said of Christian Americans, "When thou sawest a thief, then thou consentedst with him..." (Psalm 50:18).

ALASKA TO RUSSIA WITH LOVE?

There is an old saying that oil and water won't mix. This is confirmed every time an oil tanker leaks its oil into waters near shorelines, resulting in the ruination of beaches, the death of birds and fishes, and the extinction of animal and vegetable life in the affected seabeds. Turning from the pragmatical to the political, when the waters of the Panama Canal are considered in context with the oil that lies deep beneath the islands and under the waters of the Bering Sea, then we can begin to suspect that such a mixture of political giveaways amounts to treason against the United States of America, being committed by officers of the United States of America! What happened in the case of the Panama Canal is well known. On September 7, 1977 President Jimmy Carter representing the United States joined General Omar Torrijos representing the Republic of Panama in signing allegedly unconstitutional treaties relinquishing United States sovereignty of the Canal to Panama. Not generally recognized is the fact that they set off a time bomb that is just waiting to explode. Writing in the authoritative "U.S. Naval Institute Proceedings" for July 1984, Timothy Ashby, in an article titled "Nicaragua: Soviet Satrapy", declared that "Nicaragua is the strategic key to the security of the U.S. southern borders as well as to the global balance of power: the Soviet 'correlation of world forces.' Decisive actions - military, diplomatic, and economic - must be taken to remove what is already a grave threat right on our doorstep. More Americans should be aware of Public Law 87-733, passed by a joint resolution of Congress on 3 October 1962, which empowers our nation to implement the foreign policy requisite for the region. This law allows the United States 'to prevent by whatever means may be necessary, including the use of arms, the Marxist-Leninist regime in Cuba from extending by force or the threat of force, its aggressive or subversive activities in any part of the hemisphere'." The extreme importance of the Panama Canal is shown by the fact that virtually all USSR and European Communist ships landing supplies in Cuba and in Nicaragua are going through the Canal.

But enough for the moment about the waters of Panama. Let's consider Alaskan oil. Remember how the laying of that Alaskan pipeline was going to be such a big thing for the United States, how it would alleviate any domestic shortages, etc.? Have you heard anything in the past several months about what has happened to that oil? There are rumors that all further exploration has been stopped, that some of the existing wells have been capped. Now comes this brief item which appeared in USA Today of August 6: "Anchorage - An unspecified number of engineers, accountants and supervisors will be laid off within 2 years because of a work slowdown, Alyeska Pipeline Service Co. announced. The company, one of the state's largest employees, operates the 800-mile Trans-Alaska oil pipeline." But what is your reaction when you learn that, while oil to the US. is being curtailed, certain parts of that area - tens of thousands of square miles of petroleum-rich seabed in the Bering Sea along with five strategic islands that have been owned by the United States and administered by Alaska are being given to Soviet Russia? There was this item in the July 1984 issue of Larry Abraham's Insider Report titled, "Return Alaska to the Soviets?" We quote: "Conservatives have long joked that liberals won't worry about the Soviet threat until the Communists land in Florida, or demand that we return Alaska to them. Howard Phillips points out that while Florida appears to be safe for the moment, the State Department is considering returning part of Alaska to the USSR! At dispute is an area in the Bering Sea known as the Navarin Basin. It includes five islands that were discovered after the 1867 treaty with Soviets (sic), but have been claimed by the US and administered by Alaska. According to Phillips, State Department officials have already agreed, during secret negotiations with the Soviets, to abandon US claims to the islands. As we approach the first anniversary of the Soviet attack on KAL flight 007, what kind of message will this send to our friends . . . and our enemies?"

A more detailed report of this State Department giveaway of petroleum-rich land and sea to Soviet Russia has been made by an organization known as "Stockholders for World Freedom," P.O.Box 7273, Alexandria, Virginia 22307. For readers unfamiliar with this organization, the following description is given: "The Stockholders for World Freedom promotes the idea that stockholders can help fight anti-capitalist forces and can support human freedoms around the world by discussing and voting on these issues at their annual meetings." In a news release of 25 July 1984, the following extended report is given, and we quote from it at length.

* * * * *

The US State Department is not only planning to give away tens of thousands of square miles of oil-rich Alaskan seabeds to the Soviet Union, but is denying this same exceptionally favorable treatment for its friend and ally Canada, it was charged by Carl Olsen of Alexandria, Virginia, Chairman of the Stockholders for World Freedom. "It is a shock to discover that the US State Department's delegation that went to Moscow this week to negotiate this oil-rich seabed boundary failed to include any representatives from the Interior, Energy, or Defense Departments who could speak up for the strategic petroleum interests of America and for the acutely adverse consequences for American workers and stockholders," Olsen complained. The delegation was headed by the State Department's Legal Adviser David Robinson, who was supported by his staff members Elizabeth Verville and Scott Hajost, and by Harry Marshall and Richard T. Scully of the State Department's Bureau of Oceans and International Environmental and Scientific Affairs, and by Robert W. Smith of the Office of the Geographer. The only other departments represented were the Department of Transportation (Lt. Cdr. Richard D. White of the Coast Guard) and the Department of Commerce's National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration.

The discriminatory treatment against the Canadians came to light in the announcement for oil and gas leases in the Diapir Field which is in the Arctic Ocean off of Alaska and adjacent to Canada. The Diapir Field, which is estimated to have petroleum reserves of 5.4 billion barrels of oil, was put up for bid on July 23 (Federal Register, p. 29726) with a warning to potential bidders about disputed areas with Canada. These disputed areas asserted a much tougher boundary stance by the US against the Canadians than is being used against the Soviets. The US position with the Canadians is to demand the equidistance principle and the 200-mile zone be applied throughout. The negotiations with the Soviets have totally ignored the equidistance principle and the 200-mile economic zone from American territory.

Negotiations over a boundary with the Soviets apparently include not only the Navarin Basin in the Bering Sea (which has 1.9 billion barrels of oil reserves), but also the Barrow Arch (1.3 billion barrels), the Hope Basin (0.1 billion barrels), the Norton Basin (0.4 billion barrels), and the Aleutian Basin (0.4 billion barrels). In addition the negotiations would surrender to the Soviets five strategically-placed Alaskan Arctic islands: Wrangel, Herald, Bennett, Henrietta, and Jeanette.

Mark Seidenberg of Arlington, Virginia, who owns 93,000 acres on Wrangel Island, has vehemently protested the potential abdication of US sovereignty over these islands. In a telegram to the State Department's delegation to Moscow, Mr. Seidenberg warned that they may be found personally guilty of violating various civil rights of the rightful American owners of the islands and condoning the forceful invasion of the islands by the Soviets. Mr. Seidenberg also pointed out the abject failure of the State Department in the past to press the valid claims against the Soviets by American victims of Soviet invasions. Such claims that the Foreign Claims Settlement Commission of the Department of Justice has granted include one in favor of the Lomen Brothers whose settlement on Wrangel Island was invaded and expropriated by the Soviet forces (claim no. SOV-40944, decision no. SOV-3155). . . . This abject failure of the State Department now to fight for the best interests of American petroleum reserves, American jobs, and American investments involving hundreds of millions of dollars and hundreds of thousands of American stockholders presents a tragic reversal of American diplomacy, and must not be allowed to proceed. We talk about defending the oil flow from the Persian Gulf. Why don't we talk about defending the oil from our own State of Alaska?" (End of extended quotation from statement by "Stockholders of World Freedom.")

* * * * *

The importance of defending the oil flow from Alaska was discussed several years ago in a book, "The Energy Non-Crisis," by Lindsey Williams. He was a Christian chaplain to the men who built the Alaskan oil pipeline, and was very critical, not of the operation itself, but of the manner in which it was conducted. He knew everything about the operation was wrong, but he didn't know exactly why. So he began to go more deeply into the background of the operation, and has written a follow-up book, "To Seduce a Nation," which tells the real story. In an article entitled "Washington Says You'll Pay More for Your Electric Power," he says, and we quote:

"In 1976 I was with a group of oil company officials on the huge Prudhoe Bay oil field in northern Alaska. I heard a top oil company official remark, 'The electric bill of every consumer in America will begin rising in 1980 and will either double, triple or quadruple by the end of the 1980s.' I asked: 'Sir, how do you know this? This is only 1976.' The reply was, 'Chaplain, do you know how much natural gas we have on the North Slope of Alaska - proven reserves? Enough to supply the entire United States for over 200 years if every other natural gas well in America were cut off tomorrow morning - and that is at the projected rate of increased consumption.' I then asked the leading question, 'Sir, surely, you as oil companies are going to get this natural gas to the consumers in the lower 48 States?' The oil official said, 'Chaplain, we have two methods of getting that natural gas to the consumer for the purpose of generating electricity, heating homes and operating businesses. The first method of transporting the gas to the States is to build a pipeline across Alaska, 800 miles, down the same corridor as the Trans-Alaska Oil Pipeline. This would not disturb the ecology in any way. And Chaplain, within six months to a year of the completion of the oil pipeline in 1977, we could flood every Western State with cheap natural gas and electric bills would start coming down beginning in 1980.'

"I asked, 'What is the second method of getting that natural gas to the people?' He replied: 'Construct a pipeline across Canada, 3,000 miles long, across a foreign country, where there is no corridor, through the Canadian wilderness - and we would be disturbing the ecology using this method, and it would cost so much no one could afford to build it.' At this point I was sure that, when I asked along which route the pipeline would be built, I would hear, 'the Alaskan route.' To my utter amazement, when I asked, the oil company official said, 'Chaplain, mark my words, whoever is president of the United States in 1977 will make the decision that the pipeline must be built across Canada and that it cannot be built across Alaska.' That oil man was correct. President Jimmy Carter's decision was that the pipeline must be built across Canada. I went back to the oil company official who had made that statement, after Carter had made his decision, and I asked, 'Why in the world did Carter make that decision?' His reply was, 'The decision was made to keep the people of America from getting the gas from the North Slope. It was done to control the economy and people of America. The president knew that no group of companies could afford to build that line through Canada and that the Canadian government would never allow it to be built. It was a calculated failure'. . . Who is this unseen government that, regardless of whether we have a Republican or Democratic administration, we get the same decisions out of Washington?"

Lindsey Williams, an ordained Baptist minister, went to Alaska as a missionary in 1971. In 1976 he volunteered to serve as Chaplain to the men building the Alaskan pipeline, without any pay from the oil companies. He often remarks, "In 1978 I was the typical head-in-the-sand, dumb, ignorant, Baptist preacher. I had never heard the words Conspiracy, World Financiers, Council on Foreign Relations, Trilateral Commission, Illuminati, and I knew nothing of the Federal Reserve System. Shortly after 10,000 copies of The Energy Non-Crisis were sold, I came to the reality that I did not know what I had written. . . . Over the next two years my readers gave me an education. Today I have not changed one Bible doctrine which I believed prior to writing my first book. I have only added to my knowledge that which every preacher and layman in America should know, namely, what is this warfare we are fighting, as described in Ephesians 6:11-12. It sure isn't, 'I don't smoke, I don't chew, I don't go with the girls that do'." So, the re-educated Lindsey Williams wrote another book: To Seduce A Nation, $4.95 plus $1.00 for postage and handling. Write to him at P.O.Box 7, Kaslof, Alaska 99610.

This plan to withhold Alaskan oil and gas from the people of the United States, while giving rich oil and gas reserves to the USSR, is a part of the Great Conspiracy. Back around the turn of the century men such as Rhodes, Milne, Carnegie, Morgan, Rothschild, and the merchant bankers of "The City" in London, learned that their original plan of creating a New World Order governed by an expanded British Empire would never work. So they altered their plans. Until such time as a "merging of the nations of the world" would become feasible, they would create two great powers; one a Capitalist power (the United States), the other a Communist power (the Soviet Union). These two great powers would be caused to balance one another in a great "balance of power" arrangement, greater than any previous "balance of powers" the Old World of Europe had ever witnessed. To create this "balance" it was necessary for the US to continually feed and strengthen the USSR, give the USSR control over all of Eastern Europe and much of Asia and Africa, to match the power and influence of the US. This "balance" brought about the spirit of "detente", of "Mutual Assured Destruction," of open competition in weather and space control, and a "balance" in industrial production if that were possible. In the 1970s the "energy balance" got out of control because of the sudden rise of OPEC and the creation of a phony energy crisis, created in order to triple and quadruple the price of oil products in the US. But in the 1980s there was an actual oil glut in the US, and if the "law of supply and demand" were to be successfully violated, petroleum products must be rationed in the US. However, the USSR was short because it was selling its gas and oil to Europe in order to obtain money to buy war materials that couldn't be obtained on credit or through bank loans. Therefore: Alaskan oil and gas to the rest of the States was curtailed, while 10,000 square miles of petroleum-rich Alaskan seabed and five strategic Alaskan islands are being given to the USSR! Merely a part of the "balance of power" that the conspirators intend to maintain until the Great Merger becomes feasible. If head-in-the-sand Christians could only learn what Lindsey Williams learned, perhaps national salvation could be added as an aid to the essential personal salvation which each of us must seek with fear and trembling.

THAT ALLEGED POPULATION EXPLOSION

Among the many gifts and donations handed out yearly by Uncle Sam, there are several which have to do with population control. $19 million goes to the United Nations Fund for Population Activities. Another $11 million is given the International Planned Parenthood Federation. Not too much as money is counted these days, but the money was being spent to promote, among other things, abortion. So, just before the UN World Population Conference began two weeks ago in Mexico City, President Reagan issued an order that no longer would the United States contribute any money to organizations, private or otherwise, which promote the murder of pre-born babies. He also named James F. Buckley to head the US delegation which went to Mexico to discuss international population policies. Buckley former Senator and a conservative, is also a member of the Roman Catholic Church, which has denounced abortion in no uncertain terms. Backing up the anti-abortion stand of the Reagan administration was the Republican Platform Committee which has written a strong anti-abortion plank into its party platform. In contrast to all of this, the National Democratic Party approves of abortion, lesbian rights, and all that goes with them. Mondale's running mate, Geraldine Ferraro, is a staunch pro-abortionist for everyone except herself. She supports federal funding of abortions on the grounds that "the cost of putting an unwanted child through the system outweighs the cost of funding those procedures." That is, abortions are cheaper than welfare. Ferraro is a co-sponsor of the "Reproductive Rights Equity Act," an organization promoting federal funding of abortion; she is the beneficiary of a $1,000 contribution from the National Abortion Rights Action League PAC, has contributed to the magazine of Catholics for a Free Choice, etc. And she is soundly condemned by her own Church to which she affirms affiliation. Archbishop John J. O'Connor commented: "I don't see how a Catholic in good conscience can vote for a candidate who supports abortion . . . I don't see how it can be justified. To me it is an issue of life and death."

Since the controlled communications media are trying to ignore all her sins and mention only her good works, we might add a few things about this feminist that Humanist Walter Mondale has chosen, or was told to choose, as his campaign partner. But lest we are challenged on that statement regarding Mondale, we note that in a speech given to the Fifth Congress of the International Humanist and Ethical Union Walter Mondale said: "Although I have never formally joined a humanist society, I think I am a member by inheritance. My preacher father was a humanist . . . and I grew up on a very rich diet of humanism from him. All of our family has been deeply influenced by this tradition, including my brother Lester, a Unitarian minister, Ethical Culture leader, and Chairman of the fellowship of Religious Humanists." But getting back to Mondale's heretical partner, Geraldine Ferraro married a very wealthy Italian named John Zaccaro. In addition to being his wife, she became the secretary-treasurer and a major stockholder in his firm. Next door to Zaccaro's real estate firm in Manhattan, in a building managed by Zaccaro, is the Star Distributing Co. which deals in hard core pornography. Two of Star's executive officers have arrest records under federal obscenity laws; at least one of them is an associate of, not one, but two, mob "families." The building is owned by Manny Lerman, is managed by the Zaccaro firm, which pays taxes on the building, rents office spaces in the building, etc. Also, Geraldine Ferraro Zaccaro has been a business associate of Manny Lerman for years. When Mrs. Zaccaro decided to run for Congress she then changed her name from Zaccaro back to Ferraro, because her maiden name sounded more persuasive to voters. Then she found that it took a lot of money to buy a seat in the House. Newsweek said her campaign cost $250,000, and she didn't have that much available cash. So, over half the amount, $130,000, came from husband John and the children's trust funds. The FCC ruled that only $1,000 of that was legal, so she had to find some way to pay back the $129,000. That's where Manny Lerman came into the picture, and that's where things become very confused. There was a fine attached to the manipulations, which was paid by husband John, and a series of real estate deals provided the money, by way of Manny. Of course, it is this same Manny who owns the building that is managed by the Zaccaro-Ferraro firm. There is an unsubstantiated report that Zaccaro-Ferraro actually own half of the seven-story building, two floors of which are leased by Zaccaro to the Star Distributors, who publish hard-core smut (that's the actual name of one of its magazines: Smut.) There is more that could be told, but the controlled media have decided to concentrate on the very least of the Ferraro sins when writing about the situation. So, there will be some publicity about her not having to, and not going to list her husband's financial affairs because he says, "You run the government and I'll run my business." And "that's the way Italian men are." The media have adopted the strategy of trying to whitewash Ferraro by blackballing and blackmailing Senators Hatfield, Dole, Ed. Meese, Representative Hansen, and by criticizing off-the-record remarks made by President Reagan when he thought the mike was turned off. But, to all Christian Americans, we have the feeling that possibly all of her other sins could be forgiven were it not for her hypocritical attitude toward the murder of infants. That subject, infanticide, was the chief point of controversy when this United Nations World Population Conference was held in Mexico City. And, when any such public discussion is made, it becomes necessary to mention the work of that exclusive, super-secret cabal which promotes the New World Order and intends to prepare the kind of people who deserve to live under that New Order. We refer to the Club of Rome which, in its way, is just as important in the overall Conspiracy as are the CFR, the TLC, the Bilderbergers, et al.

When the Club of Rome was organized in 1968 by the Italian financier and One World advocate Aurelio Peccei, its executive committee of seven decided that the Club's first task would be to scare people into believing that a population explosion was imminent, that feeding the masses would be impossible, and that, therefore, certain measures would have to be taken to limit the world's population. A series of reports was drafted and circulated to those considered to be the world's leaders. The first of these reports was titled "The Limits to Growth," dealt with mankind's expansion in a finite planet. Then came a report on "Mankind at the Turning Point," which dealt with population control. Next came "Reshaping the International Order," which was a new economic program similar to the one presently being promoted by the United Nations and the Socialist International. Another work was called "How to Feed Eight Billion People by the Beginning of the 21st Century." The sum and substance of it all: If people could be scared into believing an overpopulated, underfed world was imminent, then the people would be eager to accept whatever suggestions and rulings were promulgated by the Club of Rome and its associate promoters of the New World Order.

It may seem ironic that one section of those promoting the World Community Utopia keeps telling us that a nuclear war is going to make the world uninhabitable for anyone; while another group of Utopia Planners tries to convince us that there will be so many of us on this tiny planet that starvation will be the fate of all of us, unless we do as the self-elected leaders dictate, which would include injections, abortions, peaceful extermination of millions. Like playing both ends against the middle: either no population at all, or too much population. The group trying to scare the world into doing away with all nuclear weapons and all nuclear power plants (except those in countries controlled by the Communists) have done quite a job on the people, especially the people of Western Europe. But the group trying to scare the world because of a coming population explosion haven't been quite so successful. So, to promote the overpopulation cause, representatives from 150 different countries, including the United States, met under the auspices of the United Nations, for a week of population explosion talk in Mexico. While the people of the United States were being entertained with news of electioneering and the exploits of one Gerry Ferraro, what could develop into a far more important story was being hatched south of the border. The whole idea was given quite a push when the chairman of the World Bank, A.W. Clausen issued a special report saying that "In some countries, development may not be possible at all unless slower population growth can be achieved." Then, of course, President Carter and his administration, always eager to promote some new UN Declaration of Human Rights, also promoted the idea of a UN Declaration on Population Growth. Actually, some of the countries most concerned with too much population have been doing things on their own. For example, there was a recent study released by the Peoples Republic of China National Academy of Sciences. The study acknowledged that 27 million people died in China during that "great leap forward" in the late 1950s and early 1960s. The Chinese authorities have for the past several years limited families to just one child. Forced abortion would eliminate any violations of the rule. But overpopulation was still a problem, and more girls are born than boys. So, an estimated 60,000 baby girls are murdered every year. This is one of the programs that has been supported by US taxpayer funds. An attempt to delete these funds from our foreign aid bill was attempted in the House of Representatives. The attempt was defeated by a group of liberals led by Congressman Dante Fascell, Florida Democrat. Whether President Reagan's orders to kill all such funds included this one we are not sure, since Red China has been receiving most favorable nation treatment for the past six years. Alexander Solzhenitsyn commented: "After the United States has built China to the same strength which we have built Russia to, they will join forces with their Communist brothers in Russia and destroy us."

Several other Asian countries have adopted slightly more humane treatment of babies. In Indonesia families with no more than two children are eligible for special education scholarships. In Sri Lanka families that agree to plan their families along lines specified by the UN get a special bonus of between five and ten six-months-old chickens free of charge and are permitted to sell the eggs. According to The Christian Science Monitor some 30 African, Asian and Latin American countries "are testing programs such as these to find out if incentives in cash or kind can help lower their population growth." In all these countries where bonuses are paid not to have children, it obviously follows that abortions are common in order to meet the law and gain chickens, money or tax relief. As a result of the U.S. supported, U.N. sponsored global family planning program, population growth has actually been reduced in the past decade. The Christian Science Monitor which published a special five-part series on the "world's population explosion," in one paragraph asserts that "world growth rates fell in the decade to 1984. China, India, Thailand, Indonesia, Sri Lanka and other nations brought growth rates down with successful family planning programs." But in another paragraph in the same article the CSM states that "global population has jumped from 3.9 billion to 4.7 billion. The third world alone now contains 3.6 billion people and the United Nations says it will leap to 4.8 billion by the year 2000." So, here is a paradox: The world's population is receding, and yet it is still gaining and there will be another 1.2 billion people on the earth by the year 2000!

As delegates from 149 countries met to talk about an alleged population explosion, US Delegate Buckley insisted that there is no crisis, that the trouble is economic and that "as opportunities and the standard of living rise, the birthrate falls." But six other members of the US delegation disregarded Buckley, talked about abortion and promised to go back to Washington and work to, in effect, provide free abortions on a world-wide scale, America footing the bill. Of course, Buckley was right in saying there is no crisis. This over-population theory is a hoax designed to promote political control over the peoples of the world. A noted geographer, Dr. George F. Carter said 20 years ago that people are talking nonsense when they speak of overpopulation. He then pointed out, and the trend has continued to this day: "Men are leaving the land and pouring into the cities. Scotland is emptying out and the wild moors are wilder than ever. The Hebrides now have many uninhabited islands - islands where men have lived for more than 5,000 years. Ireland has half as many people as 100 years ago. India is not overcrowded by other nation's standards: India-300 people per square mile. England-600, and Holland-800." Why, then, if there is no population problem, is there this population explosion scare? The Club of Rome has an answer that is not revealed in its public reports. What is being presented as a great humanitarian plan to save the world for selected future generations is nothing more than a political plot. By means of legislation, force and financial lures, a state can exercise its power over the population to control their behavior, their rate of birth, their life and death.

But here is the stumbling block: These planners who seek political control are also determined to make every political state a socialist state. And a socialist state, however satisfactory it may be to the multinational expropriators and the megabankers, is a total failure insofar as the people themselves are concerned. This was shown very clearly by the example of the first Plymouth Colony in the United States. Under London-ordered socialist control people starved. When it was decided that the colonists should plant and reap for themselves, should "set come every man for his own particular, and in that regard trust to themselves;" the Colony prospered. A similar example is shown by the fate of the Ukraine, once known as the bread-basket of Europe. Today, under socialist control, the people can't even feed themselves, and millions of bushels of wheat and other grains are sold or given to the Soviet Union by the United States. This has been the fate of every state that has had some form of socialism forced upon its people. And it is socialism which these planners of the New International Economic Order and the Planned Parenthood advocates intend to force upon every country in the world, including the United States, with the ultimate goal being the merging of all the countries into their New World Order. But, because they insist upon socialism, their plan is ultimately self-defeating.

It is noteworthy that this 149-nation World Population Conference finally boiled down to an argument over the merits of abortion, and who should finance the murder of millions. Echoing the Reagan administration order, Delegate Buckley said Washington would cut off its contributions to "private agencies that perform or actively promote abortion." According to Newsweek, of the 149 states represented, only Costa Rica, Chile and the Vatican voiced their support for the American position. We keep hearing a Voice, saying:

"But whoso shall offend one of these little ones . . . it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and that he were drowned in the depth of the sea. Woe unto the world because of offences! for it must needs be that offences come; but woe to that man by whom the offence cometh!"

THE NOTHINGBERGER CONVENTION

If only the Gannett newspaper chain reporters had been telling the truth when they began their cover story on how and why those four thousand plus Republican delegates were converging to celebrate and congratulate one another. The reporters wrote: ". . . That they come to Dallas to nominate Ronald Reagan and George Bush for re-election is richly symbolic: This booming, conservative city on the North Texas prairie mirrors the shift in both politics and geography that began 20 years ago with Barry Goldwater's presidential candidacy. Once a party with moderate and conservative wings, the Republican party is 'definitely different,' says Tulsa County, Okla. chairman Casey Clugston. The eastern wing of the 'Rockefeller Republicans,' active in the 1960's, is gone, sent packing by conservatives." That last sentence is underlined to emphasize the most ridiculous political statement of the year. It is the "Rockefeller Republicans," not the conservatives that have made the big shift. Now they avoid political conventions and political gatherings wherever possible. With the exception of George Bush, that is; but he resigned from the Trilateral Commission and avoids personal public contact with the "Rockefeller Republicans" as much as possible. Ever since the late Nelson Rockefeller made an ass of himself by trying unsuccessfully to win a national political office and then got Gerald Ford appointed President so he could be appointed Vice President, the Rockefellers have avoided as much as possible all physical or visual contact with national politics or politicians. David prefers to remain a kind of perambulating potentate, avoids labels such as Republican and Democrat, Communist and Totalitarian, and lets his legates and lieutenants occupy places of importance in government, preferably appointed positions, doing the live work of making policies and giving commands. Hence, you would not expect David Rockefeller to appear at a party convention. As a matter of fact, his most important officers in the administration were ordered not to be seen in Dallas while the Republicans were parleying. So, as U.S. News reported: "Five top Reagan administration officials were exempted from political chores at the Republican convention. Left out, either because of their sensitive duties or at their own request: Secretary of State Shultz, Defense Secretary Weinberger, Attorney General Smith, CIA Director Casey, budget chief Stockman." But to say that the "Rockefeller Republicans" were sent packing by the conservatives, is ridiculous. Those Rockefeller Republicans know very well that no importance whatever can be connected with this, or any other national party convention. The nominees were selected before the conventions began, and no important decisions have ever been made at a national party convention. They're fine for partying, for making delegates feel important, for providing the world's greatest circus acts, thanks to electronic coverage. And they are ideal for making people believe that the conservatives really have overcome the moderates, the lefties and the weirdos that infest the party. They're also excellent places for building party platforms, which will be forgotten and ignored as soon as the election has been made. However, a comparison of the two party platforms before the election can be important:

By definition, a political party platform is "the statement of principles upon which the party and its candidates will stand." In theory, they stand on it both before and after the election, if elected. But there's the rub. As Treasury Secretary Regan noted, the administration will stand by the party and its platform, but there will be splinters which must be taken into consideration, like the necessity of raising taxes, for example. Furthermore, since the platform adopted by the committee is a stronger statement of principles than President Reagan preferred, as daughter Maureen stated, "This is the committee's platform, it's not the Reagan platform;" indicating that the platform isn't going to be regarded as a mandate. As for the contrast in the two party platforms, one thinks of how the alleged choice would be if McGovern were running against Goldwater. The extreme left statement of the Democrats and the far right platform of the Republicans is as day and night. While the Democrats promise to rearrange things so that gays and lesbians have more positions of authority within the party, the Republican platform makes it clear that homosexuals do not comprise a special privileged minority that deserves special breaks. Likewise the Republican platform makes no mention of the Equal Rights Amendment, and takes a strong stand against abortion. The Democratic platform promises that there will be tax increases if Mondale and his final running mate are elected; while the Republican plank strongly opposes any tax increases to balance the budget. There also is a Republican call for a move to reduce taxes on interest income, and a criticism of graduated tax rates. The Republicans still demand an abolition of the Department of Energy, but make no mention of a previous demand for elimination of the Department of Education. There also is a plug for the gold standard, which the platform described as a "useful mechanism" to foster price stability. But perhaps the sharpest statement of the differences between the two party platforms have to do with morals and religion. Reporting from Dallas, The Miami Herald political editor, Tom Fiedler, wrote and we quote:

"When some evangelical Christians traveled to San Francisco last month, they were treated by police like other protest groups - the ones with shaved heads and safety-pinned noses - and kept far away from the Democratic Party convention site. Famed San Francisco transvestite Sister Boom-Boom was cheered when he performed an 'exorcism' of evangelist Jerry Falwell. But here in Dallas, how things change. When Sister Boom-Boom came to the city, he was the one who was cordoned off. The evangelical Christians, after all, were inside the Convention Center. As delegates. As honored guests. As authors of the party platform. 'The conservative element of the Republican Party is in control,' said Colonel V. Doner, publisher of the Presidential Biblical Scorecard, 'and they welcome our involvement. Now, the liberal and moderate Republicans may not like that,' Doner continued, 'but they're not in control.' Indeed they're not. From the opening prayer (delivered by the Rev. James Robison, a fundamentalist pastor from Euless, Texas) to the closing benediction (delivered by Moral Majority founder Jerry Falwell), the religious right is, if not in command, at least in full view here. Before the convention opened, Falwell hosted a two-day conference on the family, that attracted fundamentalists. And the daily convention events calendar features prayer breakfasts and morality-issue seminars inside the hall, while well-scrubbed groups like the Christians for Reagan march outside. Their presence is unprecedented. While they participated on the periphery in Ronald Reagan's nomination and election in 1980, virtually everyone agrees they are now playing on center stage." (Unquote).

Considering the content of the Republican party platform, it is unfortunate that it will, like the Constitution itself, be ignored or violated by the incoming politicians, from the President to various Congressmen. The most notorious case in history has to do with the Democratic party platform of 1932. Considered to be the finest, most pro-American and conservative platform written in this century, there was a pledge to cut federal expenditures by 25 percent. But when FDR entered the White House, he increased them 3,000 percent. He was pledged to reduce the federal bureaucracy; he increased it tenfold. He promised to throw the money changers out of the temple; instead he gave them the sanctuary itself. He and the party platform expressed a hatred for war, and he promised never to send Americans to fight on foreign soil; even said this as he conspired with the British to drag this Nation into a world war. Contrary to the spirit of the party commitments, he closed all the banks, gave all the gold in the treasury to the Federal Reserve Bank, made it a crime for Americans to keep their gold coins, required everyone to turn in his gold at $20 an ounce, then raised the price of gold to $35 an ounce. As Martin Larson wrote: "FDR finally achieved his crowning glory as the great servant of the financiers when he lled the Nation into a war that has already cost the American people trillions of dollars, enriched the bankers beyond the dreams of Croesus, served to spread communist regimes all over the world and created the basis for a new dark age in which all the productive achievements of Western man may ultimately sink and perish in oblivion." All this regarding FDR we have repeated as a warning that people shouldn't trust politicians to live up to the principles stated in either platforms or in the Constitution itself. Vigilance is a word often mentioned but seldom used.

There are two things about these political conventions which make them types of nothingburgers even if honored and obeyed. One has to do with the real danger to our national economy. Maxwell Newton of The New York Post observes that "In the last 15 years, the number of Americans living off a government check has risen from 20 million to a hundred million. There is now one Dependent American for every working American. Fifteen years ago there were 3 working Americans for every Dependent American. There has been a social revolution in this country. It has profoundly changed the nature of society. Today, over one hundred million Dependent Americans must answer to government officials for their livelihood. They have lost their independence. They are the creatures of government functionaries. They are prisoners of the state . . . Actually, when you include those whose jobs depend on a government contract, it's 76% of all Americans" who can be considered Dependent Americans. Now, since this has become a Democracy, neither the Democrats nor the Republicans can win a national election without the votes of many of these Dependent Americans. So, regardless of platforms and elections, we shall continue to drift into Corporate Socialist Statehood which will be followed by total anarchy. And that brings up our second criticism of political conventions and platforms and elections as presently conducted. We mean the fact that officials keep insisting that this is a Democracy, when they should be seeking ways to restore it as a Republic!

At the Republican Convention, Representative Jack Kemp, who certainly should know better, kept referring to our Nation as an "American Democracy." As he presented the platform to the delegates, he called it a vision of "a world of growth, freedom, democracy and peace." That lie has been repeated so often by so many important people, that it is believed by almost everybody. Unfortunately, they may be right in that, while we slept, our politicians have gone far toward converting this Representative Republic into an Economic Democracy. This is not an exercise in semantics; we're deadly serious. While our colonies were still possessions of Great Britain, the leading historian of the day, Alexander Tytler, was writing of the fall of the Athenian Republic. He observed that "a democracy cannot exist as a permanent form of government. It can only exist until the voters discover they can vote themselves largess out of the public treasury. From that moment on, the majority always votes for the candidates promising the most benefits from the public treasury with the result that democracy always collapses over a loose fiscal policy, always to be followed by a dictatorship and then a monarchy." Reagan and Mondale both know this, and know they must appeal to the Dependent Americans for their votes. So, there goes our Republic; from Democracy to Corporate Socialism, anarchy, and then to dictatorship!

In 1765 the great William Blackstone wrote in his "Commentaries that "political writers will not allow more than three forms of government; the first, when the sovereign power is lodged in an aggregate assembly consisting of all free members of a community, which is called a democracy; the second, when it is lodged in a council, composed of select members, and then it is styled an aristocracy; the last, when it is entrusted in the hands of a single person, and then it takes the name of monarchy. . . Democracies are usually the best calculated to direct the end of a law; aristocracies to invent the means by which that end shall be obtained; and monarchies to carry those means into execution. . . " Our Founding Fathers, understanding this, created a new kind of government combining the better qualities of the three while avoiding the evils of the three, and called it a Republic! As James Madison wrote to one N.P. Trist in February, 1830: "The merit of the founders of our Republic lies in the more accurate views and the practical applications of the doctrines (of self-government). The rights of man as the foundation of just Government had been long understood; but the superstructures projected had been sadly defective." So, the Constitutional, Representative Republic became the best superstructure of them all - so long as we could keep it. The Founders were dead set against democracy as a form of government. Alexander Hamilton wrote that "The ancient democracies in which the people deliberated never possessed one good feature of government. Their very character was tyranny; their figure deformity." Samuel Adams echoed: "Remember, Democracy never lasts long. It soon wastes, exhausts and murders itself! There never was a democracy that 'did not commit suicide'." James Madison noted that "democracies have ever been spectacles of turbulence and contention; have ever been incompatible with personal security; or the rights of property; and have in general been as short in their lives as they have been violent in their deaths." George Washington agreed when he said: "The preservation of the sacred fire of liberty, and the destiny of the Republican form of government, are staked on the experiment entrusted to the hands of the American people." As Benjamin Franklin obviously feared, we have not been worthy of that trust.

To prevent this Nation from becoming a Democracy (Populists please note), the Framers of the Constitution made three important provisions. They guaranteed "to every State in this Union a republican form of government." Secondly, the people should not vote for Presidents and Vice Presidents. Art. 2, Sec. 1: "Each State (not each political party) shall appoint, in such manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a Number of Electors." Those Electors would vote in their respective States, the votes to be counted by Congress, and the President and Vice President thus chosen, not by the people but by Electors chosen by the States. Thirdly, the Constitution provided that the people should not elect Senators. Art. 2, Sec. 3: "The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, chosen by the Legislature thereof." Finally, because it was believed that the people should have a direct voice in matters pertaining to taxing and spending, it was provided that "all bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House," and that "The House of Representatives shall be composed of members chosen every second year by the people of the several States." (All underlining was added for emphasis).

By creating caucuses, primaries and conventions, political leaders have taken over the duties and made a mockery of the Electoral College. By the ratification of the 17th Amendment, the power of the State governments to have a "House of States" has been transferred to the people. By these actions the balance of powers provided by the Constitution has been destroyed, and the way was paved for our Republic to become a Democracy, always a corrupt and never-lasting form of government. If we could have kept it, there would have been no Nothingberger Conventions in San Francisco and Dallas. Patriots and Nation lovers, think it over.

BEWARE THE IDES OF OCTOBER

In October, 1962, Cuba became a sanctuary for Communists and a spawning ground for guerrillas, insurgents, terrorists, and troops to fight for the USSR. In October, 1984, the same thing may happen, with Nicaragua becoming a sanctuary for Communists on the American mainland (Cuba is an Island), and a major training camp for troops that could march through Mexico and into the United States. If we forget how it happened in Cuba, we won't understand how it can happen in Nicaragua. A brief review and comparison seem indicated.

Back in the late 1950s when President Eisenhower was trying to lead this Nation down "the middle of the road," the media began circulating stories of how Fulgencio Batista was running a corrupt government in Cuba, and something ought to be done about it. Led by William Arthur Welland of the U.S. State Department and Herbert L. Matthews of The New York Times, the word was spread that an idealistic young agrarian reformer named Fidel Castro, was the logical leader to oust Batista and set up a "democratic" government. As early as 1959 Moscow announced that Castro was a ranking Communist, but this was ignored by the State Department and the Times. So, according to all reports by the American communications media, an "agrarian reformer" had been successful and was being congratulated. However, as soon as he had marched into Havana, Castro himself announced that he was a dedicated Communist and completely loyal to the Soviet Union. This apparently shocked both the State Department and The New York Times, especially so when Cubans by the hundreds of thousands fled from the island and sought refuge in the United States. Whereupon, the State Department that had helped communize Cuba now decided that help should be given to those Cubans who sought to liberate Cuba from Communist control. It is said that President Eisenhower gave the order for the CIA to assist those Cuban patriots in their preparation for an attack via the Bay of Pigs (Cochinos Bay). But Eisenhower gave no orders for any attack. It was a hesitating and vacillating President John Kennedy who gave the order and, in the early morning hours of April 17, 1961, approximately 1500 Cuban exiles stormed ashore. But previous air strikes had been ineffective and CIA support was suddenly and mysteriously called off and the 1500 Cuban patriots were left stranded. They fought valiantly and on their own until April 19, when the 1100 who survived were forced to surrender. The following year they were ransomed for $50 million, raised by friends in the U.S.

Possibly still chagrined and smarting from his part in the aborted Bay of Pigs fiasco, President Kennedy was alerted on October 16, 1962 (the Ides of October) by his national security affairs adviser McGeorge Bundy, that the Soviet Union was constructing offensive nuclear missile bases in Cuba. That morning Kennedy met with Bundy, Defense Secretary McNamara, and his brother Attorney General Robert Kennedy. There developed what has come to be known as the Cuban Missile Crisis. Kennedy declared a blockade of Cuba. Soviet Premier Khrushchev sent a cable to Kennedy suggesting that if he would end the blockade and promise not to invade Cuba, a "soviet presence would no longer be necessary on the island and Russian arms would be withdrawn." The cable was not answered, so next day Khrushchev sent a second cable, demanding not only safety for Cuba, but that NATO bases be removed from Turkey. At brother Robert's suggestion, Kennedy ignored the second cable, answered the first, and a settlement was reached. The naval blockade was lifted and war averted, the Soviet nuclear missiles were allegedly removed, and it was understood that the United States would never invade Cuba. Thus was consolidated a Communist bastion 90 miles from U.S. shores. Furthermore, as a result of Kennedy's agreement with Khrushchev, millions of Cubans who couldn't flee were delivered into the horrors of life under a totalitarian government. As the columnist Emilio Adolfo Rivero noted: "The American hemisphere, as a result, was put in a situation where for twenty-two years it has been subject to the relentless knocking and prodding of communist sponsored subversion, terrorism and guerilla warfare. Not a single nation in the American continent has been able to avert those attacks. Billions of dollars, needed for economic and social development, have been spent in this fight without end, not to speak of the thousands of young lives destroyed or maimed."

Afterthoughts: The Cuban Missile Crisis was made possible because the missiles were brought secretly to Cuba and were not reported officially by US observers until they were being unloaded and were spotted and photographed by U.S. airmen. This was made possible through the shooting down of the U2 observation plane over USSR territory, with the arrest of the pilot, Gary Powers. As a result of that incident, Eisenhower caused the U2 flights to be suspended, and those IRBMs and MRBMs were transported across Russia, loaded onto ships and off-loaded and emplaced in position in Cuba without prior "official" detection. Incidentally, the Kremlin was not too happy about the near-war confrontation brought about by the Cuban Missile Crisis, and as a result Khrushchev was reportedly fired. There still are rumors that Kennedy was assassinated as a result of his part in the handling of the Bay of Pigs and Missile Crisis affairs - one of the many rumors that will never be proved because the Warren Commission allegedly so garbled the facts in its investigation to show that Lee Harvey Oswald, a communist dissident, acted solely on his own in the assassination - something which few Americans have ever believed. So much for the manner in which Cuba became an untouchable sanctuary for Communist guerillas, terrorists and armed forces. It all happened in October, 1962, at a time just before an important Congressional election in the United States, and at a time when the Kennedy brothers, and their chief advisers, McGeorge Bundy and Robert Strange McNamara feared, or were ordered not to stand too firmly against the USSR when those missiles were first emplaced in position in Cuba. It now appears that the Soviets may be preparing another crisis, in another October, just before a national election, in order to make of Nicaragua another Soviet military bastion and sanctuary. This possibility was revealed publicly in a speech delivered in the U.S. Senate on August 9th by, of all people, Senator Moynihan. He spoke of Defense Department photographs of the nearly completed Punta Huete air base, near Managua, which has a meter-thick runway, capable of supporting the largest bombers ever built, and especially tailored for use by the Soviet TU-142, a reconnaissance plane that has the capability of monitoring the entire American Western Coast, with its naval bases at San Diego and Long Beach, the Vandenberg Air Force Base, the Trident Nuclear Submarine Base in Puget Sound, and other important installations. Like the missiles in Cuba in October, 1962; this dangerous Soviet air force buildup in Nicaragua could occur in October, 1984, also an important election year. But, like the photographs of the nuclear missiles, these photographs of the Punta Huete air base installations were but the sparks that could light the fuses; fuses that had been implanted long before their discovery by photograph.

Does history repeat? It was an International Power Elite that, through its control over the State Department and the Media, caused the downfall of Batista and the rise of Castro and Communism in Cuba. Then, when it was publicly admitted that Castro was a Communist, that same power clique made maneuvers like trying to oust Castro. Then, with the Cuban Missile Crisis came the acknowledgement that the island would remain a Communist base whose protection would be guaranteed by our own government!! There seems to be a repeat performance occurring in Nicaragua, with the necessary "crisis" set to occur in October. First, as happened in Cuba, came the stories of how Somoza was running a corrupt government and should be replaced by a "more liberal" leadership group. So, again as in Cuba, Marxist guerillas and terrorists gained control, forced Somoza to leave the country. Then, again as in Cuba, it was announced that this group which had replaced the Somoza regime were Sandinistas, Marxists, friends of Castro. Next repeat: our administration began to aid those expatriated Nicaraguans who were trying to retake their country from the Marxists. And, since this is October and an election year, another crisis could be brought about. Not a missile crisis, but an airstrip crisis, like the one which prompted the Grenada crisis. It should be noted that the Soviet Government is in trouble and needs some kind of a crisis to renew its prestige without going to war. As Hilaire du Berrier reports from Monaco, where he can observe world affairs objectively, "Moscow's primary concern is the defeat of Reagan." So every conceivable charge against the Reagan administration is being broadcast. Much in the news is a new set of rumors concerning the Korean 007 actually being a spy ship. A British journal added its bit to the gossip. An American named John Keppel who worked in the State Department's Soviet Intelligence office in 1960 when Gary Power's U2 spy plane was shot down, connects the two incidents by claiming that Flight 007 was also on a spy mission. Some unidentified State Department official apologized for the Soviets by telling the L.A. Times that the Soviet pilot who shot down the 007 "believed it was a military spy plane and not a civilian airliner." Are all these false stories being told and published for some special reason? John Chamberlain in The Washington Times of August 20 writes of the "Unnerving Signs of a Soviet Buildup," and says that "what is going on in Nicaragua far exceeds the rate of the original Soviet buildup in Cuba." Concerning this Punta Huete airstrip which can create the crisis, Chamberlain observes: "Protective anti-aircraft batteries and surface-to-air missiles are already positioned around the airstrip. Some 80 Sandinista pilots are being trained in Bulgaria to operate Soviet MiGs. The planes these pilots will shortly be flying out of the new Nicaraguan airstrip have already been shipped to Cuba, where they are now being uncrated. Our Navy steams back and forth in the Caribbean and along the Pacific Coast littoral of Central America, but does nothing to interfere with the unloading of military cargo at Nicaraguan ports." It is reported that the Soviets have positioned 120 communist anti-aircraft guns, 700 heat-seeking missiles, more than 100 T-54 heavy tanks, 20 light trucks, 18 Soviet helicopters and an unspecified number of MiGs at strategic points in Nicaragua. Earl E.T. Smith, former U.S. ambassador to Cuba, says the Nicaraguan army now has 49,000 troops, with 50,000 more in standby reserve stations. It must be understood that Nicaragua is not an island, it is a country on the mainland of Central America. Its troops, working in behalf of Moscow, could go through friendly Mexico and into the United States to cause a crisis like nothing ever seen in that part of North America since the fall of the Alamo.

There is yet another similarity between the Cuban crisis and the developing Nicaraguan crisis; and that has to do with the influx of refugees into the United States. Under a Miami dateline, AP reported on August 27: "Eddy Ortega had feared he'd be drafted into the Nicaraguan army after authorities picked him up at his family's ranch one day, detained him for several hours and told him to return in the morning. So that night the shy teenager left his home province of Julgalpa. He eventually made his way into Mexico, where he made arrangements through a coyote (an illegal escort), to flee to Miami. Two months after arriving in Miami, Ortega has discovered that he's not alone in his journey. About 100 Nicaraguan men and boys are finding their way into Miami every month . . . refugees between the ages of 15 and 22 (who) were sent to the United States by their parents who feared the young men and boys would be killed in combat. . . . 'Kids like me are being sent to fight the contras without training. They send us ahead of the army as if we were bait,' Ortega, 15, told The Miami Herald. 'We don't want to serve in a Communist army,' he said of the 7,000 parentless youths among Miami's 30,000 Nicaraguans." This is only a sampling of what will occur when the real crisis develops and the Sandinistas will demand even more cannon fodder. On the other hand, and thinking as U.S. citizens, we have as a Nation accepted the boat people from Cuba and Southeast Asia. Now it's the turn of the feet people, who come from Nicaragua, El Salvador, Mexico - who can tell which are sincere refugees seeking freedom, and which are dedicated spies and terrorists seeking to do the work which they have been trained for and assigned to by their Moscow masters?

Believing, as we do, that a new 1984 October crisis situation is possible, Emillo Adolfo Rivera writes in the August 24th issue of Washington Inquirer. His language has a slightly Latin flavor, but hear him out: "It is important to recognize that the Soviet's present objective in that area (Central America) is that of consolidating the communist regime in Nicaragua, either by negotiations - like the ones presently being held between the State Department and the Sandinistas - or by confrontation - with a sudden upgrading of the Sandinistas' military strategic capabilities and/or a desperado charge of the Salvadorean guerillas. By guaranteeing a status quo for the Sandinistas, no matter under what conditions, the Soviets would have laid the foundations for a long-range opportunity of promoting a slow-but-sure advance of terrorism and guerilla warfare from Central America to Mexico, then to the United States. Their idea of obtaining that status quo by confrontation, followed by negotiations, could arise from the Soviet's perception that 1984 being an election year, it would be politically risky for the Reagan Administration to answer in full force to a communist breakthrough in Central America. The presence of Cuban troops and technicians in more than twenty countries, the continuous communist onslaughts against established governments throughout Latin America during the past twenty-two years, the Sandinistas coming to power mainly through Castro's support, the unrelenting violence in Central America, all coming from Cuba, an island, should be warning enough against the illusion that we can allow the presence of a communist regime in Nicaragua, in the hemisphere's mainland. A Soviet success, through Castro, in obtaining the consolidation of the Sandinistas, would decide the Kremlin to multiply its aid to communist Cuba and its newly established allies. If the United States closes its eyes to this reality, the door will be ajar to the day those eyes will be opened in fear, before a Latin America in flames and terrorism within U.S. borders. The U.S. should not allow the Nicaraguan people to succumb under communism. Thousands of Nicaraguans beg us for an opportunity to redeem their land from totalitarianism. For this task, the U.S. presence is neither necessary nor requested. All our allies need is our material help in terms of means and weapons. It is morally justifiable that we give them what they request." (Unquote).

Glinnybell, proofreading, looked up and said, "How many times before have we heard these cries for help." True, and we are the givingest Nation in the world, so much so that our national debt is the greatest the world has ever known. But our giving is suicidal, and criminal. We make token gifts to anti-Communists in El Salvador, to Contras in Nicaragua. But our biggest gifts always go to our enemies and theirs. To Communist bloc nations, to warlords in less developed States, to megabankers to cover their loans to our enemies. How to change the pattern of giving? It begins with remembering that "all bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House." We may face an October Crisis, but let's be sure there's a November Crisis, when we can change those faces in the House. Taking its control away from Tip O'Neill would be a good start.

FOR THE LOVE OF MONEY . . ."

When the Lord God commanded King Solomon to build Him a Temple, King Hiram of Tyre was awarded the building contract. Cedars of Lebanon were selected, cut and shaped before delivery. "And the house, when it was in building, was built of stone made ready before it was brought thither; so that there was neither hammer nor ax nor any tool of iron heard in the house, while it was in the building." Thus, at the Lord's command, approximately a thousand years before the physical birth of the Christ, the world's first prefabricated building was constructed. But construction work was just one of the activities of King Hiram. He was a King of the Phoenicians, who were industrialists, men of trade and commerce, and sailors. Whenever King Solomon's ships ventured out to sea, they were convoyed by units of the Phoenician navy. Phoenician ships sailed through the Straits of Gibraltar, up the coasts of Spain, France and the British Isles to Ultima Thule (probably Iceland) and even beyond. Ultima Thule was considered the end of the world, but there are legends and some proof that Phoenician ships may have visited the Americas, left their marks on Easter Island, and other parts of the supposedly unknown world. The leading industrial and commercial nation of their day, they moved their capital cities through Tyre and Sidon, other ports along the Lebanese, Israel, Egyptian, North African and coasts. Their last great capital city was Carthage, with an estimated population of about a million people. But by this time the Roman Empire was growing and expanding and came the inevitable clash between the two. Despite Carthage's control of the sea and Hannibal's historic march of elephants and troops across the Alps to attack Rome from the north to win battles, Rome won the war. Carthage was utterly destroyed, and the Phoenician people vanished.

We have recalled this bit of history because of an address by Sir James Goldsmith, publisher of L'Express Newsmagazine of Paris, delivered before a Defense Strategy Forum of the National Strategy Information Center, at George Washington University on May 22, 1984. He told a select audience: "There are lessons to be learned from the conflict between Carthage and Rome. The Carthagenians were a great semitic people. When they needed to, they knew how to fight. Their greatest general, Hannibal, led his troops to victory in battles against Rome. But the Carthagenians were a mercantile civilization. They were traders and merchants and they interpreted the motives of the Romans according to mercantile logic. Rome was different. Rome's purpose was military conquest and imperial expansion. This, the Carthagenians were never able to understand and so ultimately Carthage was destroyed.

"Today in the West we are like Carthage and Moscow like Rome. We seem incapable of understanding Moscow's way of thinking. We are mercantile and want to conduct our affairs in peace. We try to set our policies on the premise that the Soviets want to do the same. Everytime the Soviets embark on a new 'peace' offensive, too many of us are pitifully eager to forget that this is no more than a modulation of Soviet tactics, not a change in their fundamental strategy. Yet this should not be difficult for us to perceive. The 1977 Brezhnev constitution states quite officially that it is Soviet Russia's aim, indeed duty, to spread the Communist system to all countries of the world without exception. The Brezhnev Doctrine holds that once Communism is established in a country, it becomes irreversible. The USSR would use military means to intervene in any country where Communist rule is threatened. On the other hand, Communist rule must be established in non-Communist countries. To achieve this, the Soviet Union would support 'wars of national liberation' by harnessing genuine local revolutionary forces and guiding them to Marxist/Leninism. The Brezhnev Doctrine can only go one way. Nevertheless, many of us still want to believe that the problems that separate us are problems that can be resolved by negotiation and mutual good will. But unfortunately we must realize that we cannot find lasting peace through negotiation because what the Soviets really want we cannot negotiate. We cannot cede to them the right to progressive imperial conquest. We cannot negotiate away our freedom. We must face the fact that the antagonism between our two civilizations is not superficial but fundamental and that we are condemned to this state of affairs for the long term. There is no easy solution, no quick fix. . . . As a result of the West's defensive power, the Soviets recognize that their most effective current strategy is not armed conflict but instead to weaken us from within. If they can make us lose our confidence, confuse our sense of purpose, weaken our resolve to defend ourselves, then they can win without armed conflict. . . . One of their principal tools is propaganda. So they need the media. Their major propaganda thrusts have been to encourage unilateral disarmament, neutralism, increased trade with the Soviet bloc, and anti-Americanism. . . . Andrei Sakharov, the Nobel Prize winner, smuggled out of Russia what he called his testament to the West. In it he describes agents of influence working in the West for Soviet agencies. He wrote 'these include some political figures, businessmen and a great many writers and journalists, government advisers and heads of press and T.V.'" (End of extended quotation.)

In his comparison of our situation with that of Carthage and Rome, there is one area of conflict which Sir James Goldsmith did not discuss. He did not say that in Carthage there was a group of elitist organizations which felt that through the use of money power they could deal with the Romans on mutual terms, purchase their good will, and seduce the Roman leaders into working with them in the creation of an international merger of the two nations. The fact that we do face such a situation makes our struggle to preserve our freedom much more difficult. In the West there are these elitist groups that think it is possible to deal with the Communist hierarchy, use it for their own purposes, and eventually establish a New World Order in which

The elitist Council on Foreign Relations has announced its new "candidates" for membership. The CFR seems to be hedging its bets by inducting such key Mondale people as Greg Traverton, one of KGB agent Orlando Letelier's contacts on the Church Committee; Felix G. Rohatyn of Lazard Freres, a possible Mondale choice for Fed Chairman; George McGovern's finance man Max Kampelman, now with Mondale; and, President Jimmy Carter's draft-dodging speechwriter, Jim Fallows, now editor of the Atlantic Monthly. Among the key media people selected by the CFR are Elaine Sciolino and Kenneth Gilpin of the New York Times; the Wall Street Journal's managing editor Norman Perlstine and its foreign editor Karen House; ABC News Documentary Unit producer Chris Isham and ABC's State Department Correspondent Anne Garrels; and, Stephen Smith, senior editor, Nation Section of Time magazine. Diplomatic and military recruits to the CFR include Mark Robert Parris, Soviet Political/External Affairs Unit, American Embassy, Moscow; Army Captain Thomas C. Shull, Military Assistant to the President for National Security Affairs; Lieutenant General Bernard E. Trainor, Deputy Chief of Staff for Plans, Policy Operations, USMC; Lieutenant General Fred K. Mahaffey, Deputy Chief of Staff for Operations and Plans, United States Army; Captain John W. Jensen, International Political/Military Affairs Officer, Strategy Division, US Air Force Headquarters; Colonel Frank B. Horton III, Commander 321st Strategic Missile Wing, Grand Forks AFB, North Dakota; and, General James E. Dalton, USAF, Chief of Staff, Supreme Headquarters Allied Power Europe, Belgium. the Communist Nations will eagerly join in their docile submission to these Internationalist groups. Therefore they trade with the Communist bloc, grant them loans which can never be repaid, establish banks in their capital cities, and, like those buying the rope of which Lenin spoke, they proudly proclaim that it is easier to deal with the Socialist bloc of Nations than with those of the West. In this connection, Allen Keyte, editor of World Affairs Review, a British publication, in his August 30, 1984 issue has so clearly identified many of these groups and explained their mode of operation, that we quote him at length:

* * * * *

Politicians and bankers always seek to control populations by whatever means to enable them to increase their spheres of influence and power . . . The bankers control the money and work the strings of their puppet politicians who thirst for power - and wealth. If we, in the free world, do not wake up to the evil forces that are at work in our society, we shall end up in slave camps with all freedoms denied us. What use will our gold be if society breaks down completely and we end up living in caves? Perhaps that sounds a little extreme, but what I am trying to show you is that the traditional ideas of wealth are totally meaningless unless we take the trouble to stay free. Just about everybody has heard of the Trilateral Commission, the Council on Foreign Relations and the Bilderbergers. All these groups, and several which are less well known, spend their time working towards a form of world government. Although many say that they intend to set up a single government, it isn't that simple. But I believe that their intentions are plain: to set up a global economic system and from that effectively to control the action of politicians. Their aim is the total destruction of money as we know it in the form of many currencies. If they can cause the collapse of most of these currencies, what would be more logical than to replace them with a single unit. Perhaps the International Dollar would be a suitable name for it. The power brokers know that the control of money leads to the control of the people - without any form of election. These evil men know that concern about individual currencies can be overcome by the holders of hard assets: gold, silver, platinum, etc. So clearly that is why these areas are under attack, either by way of legislation to limit or prevent ownership or by political moves against certain countries (such as South Africa). The battle lines have been drawn, and more and more regulations and restrictions will be introduced to prevent you having control over your own assets. If you can be stopped from owning physical hard assets, all the controllers need to do then is to introduce exchange controls and they have restricted your movements to the country in which you live. Is this not exactly what happens in communist countries such as the Soviet Union and Red China? Is this not exactly what happens under the military dictatorships of South America and black Africa? Control of money and hard assets is THE way of controlling the population of the world. And no elections are needed.

It is too simplistic to think that you can point a finger at a group of people and say 'those are the men who meet every week to discuss our fate.' That is not the way the power-hungry manipulators operate. They aim at controlling governments (by control of the money), the media and as far as possible the natural resources. They speak of advising governments, of giving information and guidance to our rulers. This covert control is so much more difficult to detect than a group of conspirators who seek to take over a government. But, of course, the stakes are much higher and the network is much wider. To understand the areas in which this 'network' of like-minded thinkers work, just look at the following subjects which were discussed at a meeting held by one of the groups in a single year: 1) The environment for North-South trade. 2) Extra-territorial application of national laws regulating business activities. 3) NATO, its authority and future. 4) The role of the Dollar as an international currency. 5) The media and developing countries. 6) Access to Middle Eastern oil. 7) Nuclear energy: safety, development and alternate strategies. 8) The prospects for religion. 9) Higher education in the 1980s and 90s. 10) The balance of power in the Pacific. From the above, you can see the wide-ranging areas into which the network has moved. These are all areas which will directly impact your life and investments. Just think of those key areas: The media; education; religion; security; regulation of business; and the currency. Can you believe that these men just meet for the good of their health to discuss what should happen in the world unless they can have influence over the events they discuss? I can find no justification for the wide-ranging subjects which are being discussed other than working towards eventual world domination and control by covert means.

The men who are members of these groups meet regularly with the men in Peking, the Kremlin and the Vatican. They all have a common aim which is above such an ideology as communism. The men in Moscow and Peking peddle communism as a means of keeping power – not for its ideology. Communism is an evil philosophy, but the philosophy of the manipulators is a thousand times more dangerous. It uses communism; it uses religion; and now with the latest series of attacks on our basic freedoms it is starting to use capitalism. The members of this international network have not had things all their own way. Jealousies and rivalries do come to the forefront from time to time, and so the time-scale for control is stretched. The game plan was laid out more than 200 years ago, and only now is it coming to fruition. . . . It is significant that the United States, the final bastion of freedom . . . should be under the greatest attack at the present time. . . . We all know about the involvement of David Rockefeller in the Trilateral Commission. He and his Chase Manhattan Bank, together with Manufacturers Hanover, First Chicago and the Bank of America are the key financial arms of the network in the United States. The international headquarters of the financial manipulators is however based in Basel, Switzerland. Ten times a year a small group of powerful men arrive in Basel. They are board members of the exclusive money-power club known as the Bank for International Settlements (BIS). The membership of this club is limited to a small handful of men who determine daily the interest rate, the availability of credit and the money supply of the banks in their own countries. They include the governors of the US Federal Reserve, the Bank of England, the Bank of Japan, the Swiss National Bank and the German Bundesbank. . . . The purpose of the BIS is to coordinate and control all monetary activities in the industrialized world. . . . It has immunity from government interference and taxes guaranteed by an international treaty signed in the Hague in 1930. The bank states that it is not a lender of last resort to the world but rather a mechanism to make certain that the banking system survives. There appears to be only a very fine line in any definition, and there can be little doubt about the real intentions behind this faceless secret organization. . . .

In this report I have pointed to the danger areas to help you think about the enormity of the problems which we face. If you fully understand what is going on and how the manipulators and power brokers work, then you can at least try and take evasive action. The mistake that too many writers make is to concentrate on just one part or section of the conspiratorial groups, rather than realizing that all of these large financial groups (banks and multinationals) manipulate the system for their own ends. They often work with similar groups, as and when appropriate, to further their own and combined global aims which are for total power – and unlimited wealth. Let's keep in touch . . . and alert. FEARS IN THE FALL OF '84

With the upcoming national elections looming large on the political horizon, Walter Mondale is still trying to take charge of his campaign and overcome the political deficit created when Geraldine Ferraro was chosen as his running associate. With Mondale making few vote-inspiring moves and Reagan seeming to make all the right moves, each poll-taking indicates that the people questioned prefer Reagan-Bush over Mondale-Ferraro. And the Rockefeller-controlled Eastern Establishment gives every indication that it has decided the Reagan-Bush team will better serve its interests for another four years. So, barring unforeseen and unexpected developments, one might say that the presidential election is over, settled and finished before the Senate bothers to count the Electoral College votes that will confirm the choice. However, there is a growing number of solid citizens who are satisfied with neither of the offerings of the two major political parties, and wish they had a real choice. This unsettled condition on the part of a multitude of voters has been reflected within the party camps and has brought about some strange actions on the part of both parties. These actions, and the fears that caused them, are worthy of consideration. First, there were the steps taken

FOR FEAR OF THE JEWS:

Being forced to rely upon published reports, historical precedents and circumstantial evidence, we have come to the conclusion that this is the way it happened. On September 5th, 1984, President Ronald Reagan ignored the Constitution which he has pledged to preserve, and again double-crossed those conservative citizens who were led to believe they were successful in putting him in the place where he presently resides. The duplicity was necessitated by the fact that within less than 60 days there is going to be a national election. Both the Reagan-Bush combine and the Ferraro-Mondale coalition are agreed on one point: in matters of foreign policy the Zionist Lobby is one of the two most powerful forces in American politics. The other being that allied clique modestly referred to by the controlled press as the Eastern Establishment. Furthermore, it is common knowledge that the bosses of both major American political parties are pledged to do everything within their power to protect and preserve at whatever cost to America, that Middle Eastern political State called Israel. Likewise, both the Reagan-Bush and the Mondale-Ferraro (if you prefer that precedence) camps are agreed that there is a political force known as a "Jewish bloc" of voters. They also seem agreed that in order to win the popular vote (and perhaps also the electoral college vote) on November 6, they must win the votes of that alleged "Jewish bloc." In full support of such a belief, and promoting it to the hilt, is that powerful Masonic-like secret order known as the B'nai B'rith. As schedules were so arranged, B'nai B'rith was holding its national convention in Washington, D.C. on September 6. And, as expected, both incumbent Reagan and candidate Mondale were commanded to appear and present their cases before the B'nai B'rith delegates. While it is true that Jesse Jackson and his radical Moslem friends have done great harm to the Democratic cause in the eyes of the Zionist Lobby, it is also true that the Zionist Lobby is predominantly socialistic and leans toward those policies espoused by the Carter-Mondale team, and expected to be pursued by the Mondale-Ferraro coalition, if the latter should happen to win. Therefore, in order to increase his chances of winning the support of that alleged "Jewish bloc" of voters, Ronald Reagan was told that he'd better offer something spectacular and pleasing to the Zionists.

And that's where that often proposed, and as often defeated, UN-sponsored Genocide Treaty comes into the picture. We may presume that, in order to curry the favor of B'nai B'rith and the Zionist Lobby, just before making his command appearance before that convention, President Reagan sent word to the United States Senate, urging that body to reconsider and quickly ratify the Genocide Treaty, which has been debated and defeated periodically over the past 35 years. We mentioned published reports regarding the affair. We found a brief item in the Christian Science Monitor of September 7. It was mild and generally complimentary. The severest, and to us the most justified criticism of Reagan's action, appeared on the front page of The Spotlight of September 17. The most shocked and bewildered reporting appeared in Human Events of September 15. The controlled media in general ignored the event or relegated a brief announcement to some back page where ads predominated.

Many of our readers may have forgotten about this controversial Genocide Treaty. The word "genocide" was coined by one Raphael Lemkin, a Polish-born Jewish lawyer who used the word to describe the treatment accorded Jews by the Nazis in Germany prior to and during World War II. He and other like-minded individuals promoted the idea of a "Genocide Treaty" and it was discussed and approved by the UN General Assembly on December 9, 1948. In the Treaty, genocide is defined as "destruction, wholly or in part, of a racial, religious or ethnic group." It should be pointed out that genocide on political grounds is not included. So the murders of millions committed by the Soviet and the Red Chinese Governments are not considered to be "genocidal" crimes. Only racial, religious or ethnic grounds are considered. The Genocide Convention also provides that individuals, or groups, committing what is defined as genocide can be tried in world courts. Hence, the Treaty would violate national sovereignty and make individual citizens of the United States subject to the judgments of an international tribunal. For these reasons, the Genocide Treaty has been defeated time after time when presented to the Senate for ratification. The chief sponsor of the Genocide Treaty in the Senate has been William Proxmire, Wisconsin Democrat. He points out that 96 Nations have approved the Treaty and the United States should follow suit. As soon as he learned that President Reagan had urged the Senate to approve the Treaty, Proxmire gleefully told the national media that now no Senator "will dare vote against it." There is one who certainly will vote against it. Senator Jesse Helms has consistently denounced the Treaty, as did Senator Sam Ervin of North Carolina. But with President Reagan betraying his conservative backers in the Senate, who can be sure that the Treaty will again be rejected? What is known is that when Reagan and Mondale appeared before the B'nai B'rith convention, both pledged their unswerving support for Israel; and because of its "holocaust" connections, the Zionist Lobby must be extremely pleased by President Reagan's support of the Genocide Treaty.

FOR FEAR OF THE WOUNDED BEAR:

Intelligence Digest of September 5 warned that we should beware of the wounded bear. It noted that "In recent months the Soviet Union has suffered a number of humiliating reverses. Perhaps the most important of these was in Southern Africa. Here, the Soviets were totally unable to stand by the rash promises they had made to the black pro-Marxist states that ring South Africa. The result was that the leaders of those countries were forced to go crawling to the South African prime minister, begging bowls in hand, asking him to rescue them from the follies of their own socialist policies. It was an embarrassing experience for the Soviets. But it was also one that will never be forgotten by the black African leaders who were made to look such fools in the eyes of their people and the rest of the world. As a result of the episode, Soviet credibility in this part of the world has suffered a terrible blow. Then there was the farcical boycott of the Los Angeles Olympics. The Russians had hoped to wreck the elaborate American preparations and also to deal a severe setback to President Reagan's re-election hopes. As it turned out, the Olympics proved to be one of the most successful meetings ever, with a record number of countries taking part. And, since the games, President Reagan's popularity has increased sharply [in Europe-Ed.]. In the meantime, the Russians are still bogged down in Afghanistan. Their military operations there have revealed to the whole world how inefficient the Soviet armed forces are. And the fact that the war has gone on so long has ensured that Afghanistan has remained an international issue, thus damaging the Soviet Union politically as well. On top of this, within the USSR itself there has been increased tension and questioning - especially among the younger generation, including those in the armed forces. So far, then, 1984 has not been a good year for the Soviets. And therein lies the problem. Despite the indecision caused by the power-struggle within the Kremlin, it is inconceivable that Moscow will be prepared to go on suffering defeat after defeat without doing anything about it. The West must remain alert. The bear is at its most dangerous when wounded. ("Intelligence Digest," 17 Rodney Road, Cheltenham, Glos. GL50 1HX, U.K.).

Signs of further trouble in the Kremlin: East German Communist boss Erich Honecker was all set for an official visit to West Germany to discuss better trade relations between East and West when the Kremlin suddenly ordered Honecker to postpone his trip. A few days later the same word went out to Todor Zhivkov, president of Bulgaria who also was all set for an official visit to Bonn to arrange for better trade conditions with the West. No reasons were given for these postponements, but there were rumors that a certain "change of attitude" was in the offing, one not necessarily beneficial to the Nations of Western Europe, or to the United States. Adding to the speculation was the lengthy disappearance of the Soviet leader Konstantin Chernenko. He had issued an order regarding the Soviet's readiness for a resumption of talks with Washington on August 2. Then he seemed to vanish from public view until September 5th when he was back for an appearance on television. Brezhnev had disappeared from public view several times before the announcement of his death. The same routine had been observed before Andropov died. It seems that the people were getting restive and wondered just who was really running the government when Chernenko likewise disappeared. So, apparently to calm the concerned, Chernenko reappeared on a television show on September 5. However, there were reports that the appearance had so worn him out that he had to retire once more. With no one outside the Politburo knowing who was really running the government, then came the sudden removal of Nikolai Ogarkov, the country's top soldier who was widely slated to become the next Prime Minister if and when Chernenko was really gone. Ogarkov became well known in the West when he invented all those fanciful fabrications concerning the Soviet destruction of the Korean 007 airliner with 269 aboard including Congressman Larry McDonald. The Kremlin gave no reason for Ogarkov's removal, but the controlled media immediately guessed that there had been a top-level shakeup and he had been unceremoniously fired. However, there are indications that the media made a wrong guess. According to the Frankfurt Institute for Soviet Studies, a West German think tank, Ogarkov "suffered a heart attack and was taken to the Burdenko Military Hospital in Moscow," on Sept. 3 or 4. Since Ogarkov was replaced by his immediate assistant, Marshal Sergei Akhromeyev, who "thought as Ogarkov did" on military and political matters, it would seem that Ogarkov wasn't fired; his heart simply failed him.

All this Kremlin confusion and the "wounding of the bear" had its effects in Washington. In the first place, having lost out in its bid to take over the African ministates, and losing a certain amount of credibility with the Nations of Western Europe, the Kremlin evidently decided two things: it would increase its efforts in Central and South America; and it would accept the idea that it would have to "live with" a Reagan administration for another four years. This latter decision had a telling effect on the election campaigns of Reagan and Mondale. One of Mondale's most telling advantages had been his constant insistence that Reagan had done nothing to ease the situation with the USSR, that conditions between the two were the worst they had ever been since Reagan wouldn't even try to arrange a summit meeting with the top brass of the Kremlin. Mondales' running companion Ferraro went so far as to declare that if Reagan were re-elected, that war-monger would most surely lead us into a war with the USSR. However, once the Eastern Establishment and the Zionist Lobby were agreed that the Reagan-Bush team was their team, and the Kremlin had let it be known that it would not interfere with Reagan's re-election, things moved fast. Secretary of State Shultz met with the Soviet Ambassador to the United States, and it was arranged that Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko would meet with Shultz at the United Nations on September 26 and then Gromyko would accept President Reagan's formal invitation to meet with him at the White House. Chernenko wouldn't be able to attend personally because of ill health. Gromyko is the one Soviet official who has remained on the job as foreign minister through Soviet Prime Ministers from the time of Stalin to today, and he fills the bill at any summit meeting.

THE FEAR OF ECONOMIC COLLAPSE

Mondale's war scare card having been effectively trumped, the Democratic party big-wigs began demanding that their nominee stop hiding behind Ferraro's skirts and start acting like a serious campaigner. So, he retired over a weekend, came out with a new hole card - a plan to cut the federal budget by two-thirds in five years. His five-year plan includes higher income taxes, especially for the wealthy. But the presently popular Grace Commission Chairman, J. Peter Grace, noted that "even if you confiscated all taxable income above $75,000 you would only net enough to keep the government running for ten days. Even if you started at the modest level of $35,000 and confiscated all the income not already taxed from that level and above, you would net only enough to keep the government running for 41 days." So, as with every promise of every politician who has said he would reduce expenses and balance the budget, Mondale's talk is just campaign talk, only that and nothing more. As a matter of Constitutional fact, no President can do anything about taxes. Presidents can advise, but Congress can reject or ignore; Presidents can veto, but Congress can override. Any solutions of this kind must come from the Congress; both Reagan and Mondale are just engaging in campaign oratory in this respect. Reagan, of course, promises he won't stand for any tax increases, but the Rockefeller crowd, represented by Treasury Secretary Regan, Fed Chairman Volcker and Dole will push a "reluctant" President into supporting huge tax increases in 1985; just as would Mondale if he were elected. So, what's the difference and where's the choice? Furthermore, if Reagan remains, Kissinger will direct foreign policy in 1985. If Mondale should win, Brzezinski would direct foreign policy. So, as the lady in the current popular ad might have asked, "Where's the meat?"

If the U.S. Postal Service is as efficient in delivery as it is inflated in cost, this Report should reach you on the 197th birthday of that grandest civil document ever penned by the hands of men, the U.S. Constitution. But, as Dan Smoot has written: "If the Constitution does not mean what it says, even our elections become farcical, because the rulers of an all-powerful government can focus mighty forces on the job of selecting their successors or assuring their own reelection." This may not yet be true of all State and local elections, and there we can make a beginning. But our chief political goal, God willing, must be to restore, not rewrite, the Constitution and make it once again the Inviolable Law of the Land.

THEY'RE FORGING THE CHAINS

Congress is trying to adjourn. There is plenty of unfinished business still to be taken care of. Incumbents are out in the hustings campaigning for re-election. This is a time when people can expect chicanery, double-dealing, fraud, deception, and other kinds of unconstitutional and illegal action on the part of those Senators and Representatives who are in the pay of certain special interest groups who wish to get legislation passed that would never be approved by a full House, or by the people if they knew what was going on in the secret sessions that plan such duplicity. A classic example of such action has been told by Eustace Mullins in his "The Secrets of the Federal Reserve." It was December 12, 1913. Congressmen were preparing to leave Washington for the annual Christmas recess. There was a bill still being reconsidered, later to be known as the Federal Reserve Act. The House had passed a bill, the Senate had passed a bill, but there were some forty differences between the two bills. Congressmen had reason to believe that it would take weeks to iron out those differences, and the bill would not be brought up for vote until the following year. But, in a single day the agents of the money creators ironed out those 40 differences and brought the bill to a vote. On Monday, December 22, the bill was passed by the House and Senate; and the Federal Reserve System was born. Mullins noted the comment of Congressman Charles Lindbergh, father of the aviation hero of the same name, who said something that is even more pertinent today than it was in 1913: "The people must make a declaration of independence to relieve themselves from the Monetary Power. This they will be able to do by taking control of Congress. Wall Streeters could not cheat us if you Senators and Representatives did not make a humbug of Congress . . . If we had a people's Congress, there would be stability. The greatest crime of Congress is its currency system. . . . The caucus and the party bosses have again operated and prevented the people from getting the benefit of their own government." (Quoted from "The Secrets of the Federal Reserve," by Eustace Mullins.)

Down through the years the Monetary Power has schemed to enact more and more laws which will insure an absolute monopoly over the control of money, and therefore control over the lives of the people themselves. The latest action of this type was spelled out by Congressman Ron Paul who is no longer running for re-election and who has stayed on the job in the final weeks of his term, trying to restore an honest money system, and being very observant whenever the question of financial chicanery is involved. Under date of September 11, 1984, Congressman Paul wrote concerning H.R. 6031, an alleged "Money Laundering" Bill which threatens the rights of all citizens. We quote at length from Congressman Paul's report:

* * * * *

On Monday, September 10, with fewer than 10 members of the House of Representatives on the floor, a bill was passed by voice vote increasing the Treasury Department's power to monitor how citizens use their own money. If this bill passes the Senate also, the Bank Secrecy Act of 1970, which outlaws financial privacy in the U.S., will be significantly tightened by eliminating one of our Constitutional rights! This swift enactment of the new powers was handled in almost total secrecy. On Friday, September 7, the list of bills to be considered the following week was released by the Majority Leader's office, after most members had returned to their Districts to campaign. Most members are still not even aware of the action the House took on Monday. This bill is substantially the same piece of legislation that was overwhelmingly defeated four years ago. The fact that a majority of members voted it down in 1980 is probably the reason it has been stealthily managed this week, cleverly whisked by when the leadership knew most Members would be out of town. They suspended the rules of the House to ram this bill through - a procedure supposed to be reserved for noncontroversial measures, not measures defeated by a two-thirds vote in the 96th Congress.

The section of the bill that has drawn the most heated opposition is the section that says, "A customs officer may stop and search, without a search warrant . . . a person entering or departing from the United States with respect to which or whom the officer has reasonable cause to believe there is a monetary instrument being transported." The courts have upheld the right of customs officers to search people who might be smuggling or illegally importing things, but now Congress seems to have expanded their powers to warrantless searches of people who may be innocently exercising their Constitutional right to travel abroad. Moreover, this bill is not restricted to enforcing the law against criminals with suitcases full of cash, as the term "money laundering" suggests. This bill will affect anyone who carries any valuable coin or paper out of the country. Fifteen U.S. gold coins, for example, would fall under the provisions of this bill. Nothing is exempt, since anything traded on foreign markets - art objects, rare stamps, pedigreed dogs or horses - as well as stocks, bonds, and promissory notes will serve as good substitutes for cash. The person who may be victimized under this legislation is not guilty of any violation - the reporting requirement applies to someone who has a clear legal right to his "monetary instruments"! The only "crime" is a failure to tell the government before you leave.

This proposal to strengthen the Bank Secrecy Act greatly alarms me. In the modern world, virtually every part of daily life occurs with the intermediation of money. As long as the philosophy of socialism remains dominant in Washington - the common belief that government doesn't have to respect anyone's individual rights so long as it simply claims it is "regulating the economy" - you can trust the Bank Secrecy Act will be abused by some future Administration. This bill authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to set up a domestic spying and informant system to prepare for some future wave of economic repression. If this bill passes the Senate, Congress will be building an invisible "Berlin Wall" around America. For the past six years, Congress has been pushed by the Administration to increase the powers of law enforcement over the movements of money in our society. . . . To me, this is a question of civil liberties. What are the arguments in favor of this legislation? The real question we must ask is 'Why should the Administration have this power in the first place?' Drug smugglers are supposed to be the target of this bill. Its supporters argued the only new thing this bill, H.R. 6031, does is close a loophole in the Bank Secrecy Act, by making it possible to enforce the requirement to disclose financial transactions when people try to leave the United States - to prevent "money laundering" by organized crime.

This bill empowers the Secretary of Treasury to make American citizens fill out financial declarations in advance of any foreign travel. Will the Customs Service begin to require everyone to undergo an "exit interview" in the future, to make sure all required reports have been filed? What assurance do we have that the Secretary will not issue regulations to require a 48-hour advance filing of these reports? None! . . . All of the Members of Congress who spoke in favor of the bill cited drug trafficking as the target. They celebrated "this new tool" in the war against crime. . . . But this bill is not a drug-enforcement bill - it is a broad grant of power to the Secretary of the Treasury to require advance submission of financial disclosure reports and pay rewards to private citizens to spy on business associates or neighbors who may be trying to leave this country for whatever reason they may have without reporting it!

The United States does not impose any other restrictions on the freedom of citizens to travel; a passport is not even required. The Supreme Court has ruled, Kent v. Dulles, 357 US 116 (1958), that we have a 5th Amendment right to travel. We don't have to tell the government when we depart - until now.

The particular thing that makes this bill so dangerous is its complete lack of focus on any particular crime. Drug trafficking is just a plausible excuse. The "general declaration of purpose" in the Bank Secrecy Act says nothing about drugs. It gives as the reason to require banks and individuals to file reports (for all expenditures of $100 or more and cash transactions of $10,000 or more) merely the "high degree of usefulness" of such financial reports in "criminal, tax, or regulatory investigations." The government wants to know about your use of money for every conceivable regulatory use! It may not be too late to stop this unconstitutional bill in the Senate - but the sneaky tactics of surprise in the House of Representatives worked like a charm! (End of report from Congressman Ron Paul).

* * * * *

Many of our readers may say to themselves that this bill Congressman Paul discusses affects only those citizens who leave the United States on vacations, for business reasons, etc., and it is not of any great importance to those who don't intend to travel or vacation abroad. But look at it this way: This measure is just one more step in an overall movement on the part of the Money Power to control the movements of money for any purpose in our society. As Rep. Paul notes: "This bill authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to set up a domestic spying and informant system to prepare for some future wave of economic repression." The fear of real economic trouble hangs heavily over Wall Street, the bankers, and businessmen in general. And, not known to most citizens, is the fact that there is a set of Executive Orders which, if activated by the simple declaration of a National Emergency on the part of the President, will create a bureaucratic dictatorship in these United States. If and when such a dictatorship is declared, the movement of money by individuals will be strictly controlled. Every piece of legislation concerning the control or use of money on the part of individuals adds to the power of that declared dictatorship. The measure discussed by Congressman Paul is just another link in the economic chain that will bind us, if and when a certain set of emergency orders is given.

On October 30, 1969 President Nixon first issued an Executive Order (11490) establishing a Federal Dictatorship whenever the President should declare a National Emergency. Special duties were assigned to each Federal Department and Agency, the sum total amounting to absolute control over every resource and every individual in the United States. This National Emergency provision has been altered or slightly rewritten by every President since Nixon. As the order stands at present, "The Director of the Federal Emergency Management Agency shall establish Federal policies for, and coordinate, all civil defense and civil emergency planning, management, mitigation and assistance functions of the Executive agencies." The controlled media have reported little or nothing about this arrangement during the 15 years of its existence as the "Law of the Land" due to its having been published without protest by Congress in the Federal Register. So it came as quite a surprise when a subscriber sent to us the photocopy of an article by Jack Anderson of the United Feature Syndicate which appeared in the September 8, 1984 issue of The Phoenix Gazette. This article deals with the present activities of the Federal Emergency Management Agency, whose chief is one Louis Gluffride, former head of the California National Guard when Reagan was Governor of that State, and is a friend of White House counselor Edwin Meese. Anderson tells the story because there has developed a power conflict between Attorney General William French Smith and the head of FEMA. Under the heading "A Disaster: Bureaucracy Power Grab," Jack Anderson wrote, and we quote:

"Washington - The Federal Emergency Management Agency may be little known to the public, but it has succeeded in drawing serious, unwelcome attention from at least one Cabinet member. Not satisfied with its role as a mere coordinating agency in the event of some natural or man-made disaster, FEMA is clearly lusting after a far bigger job - nothing less than running the country during any situation it decides is an emergency worthy of supervision.

"FEMA's chief is Louis Giuffrida, a former California National Guard big shot, staunch law-and-order advocate and friend of White House Counselor Edwin Meese. Giuffrida likes to be called 'General,' and he favors martial law as the best way to handle national or local emergencies - with FEMA in command. FEMA's aggressive and self-aggrandizement has drawn fire privately from Attorney General William French Smith. In a recent letter to National Security Adviser Robert McFarlane, Smith expressed the Justice Department's concern over the empire Giuffrida has been trying to create for FEMA. My associate Donald Goldberg has seen a copy of the letter.

"This department and others have repeatedly raised serious policy and legal objections to the creation of an 'emergency czar' role for FEMA,' the Attorney General wrote. 'Specific policy concerns regarding recent FEMA initiatives include . . . expansion of the definition of severe emergencies to encompass "routine" domestic law enforcement emergencies.'" The broader the definition of 'severe emergencies,' of course, the easier it would be to declare martial law and put Giuffrida on the czar's throne.

"Smith wrote to McFarlane after getting hold of a draft executive order prepared by FEMA. 'I believe that the draft Executive Order raises serious substantive and public policy issues that should be further addressed before this proposal is submitted to the president,' Smith wrote. 'In short, I believe that the role assigned to FEMA in the revised Executive Order exceeds its proper function. FEMA proposes layers of FEMA operational personnel inserted between the president and all other federal agencies,' Smith complained. 'Its mobilization exercise scenarios continue to assign FEMA the responsibility of representing the Department of Justice and other Cabinet agencies at meetings with the president and the National Security Council during . . . emergencies.' The Attorney General contended that 'the draft Executive Order seems to legitimize FEMA's authority beyond that of a coordinating agency.' Smith's letter hit a nerve at FEMA, where an internal memo from general counsel George Jett noted the obvious: 'A serious difference of view apparently exists between this agency and the Department of Justice as to the FEMA's role in national security.' Jett's proposed solution to the problem? Just don't let Justice see any more documents dealing with FEMA's legal authority. 'I would strongly recommend,' Jett wrote, 'that no such documents be submitted to the inter-agency clearance process . . . until the present policy differences are resolved.' Footnote: A FEMA spokesman referred calls to the National Security Council, but spokesmen there declined comment." (Unquote).

After all these years, an Attorney General has discovered and condemned an official plan to impose a military dictatorship over these United States if and when the president might declare a national emergency. With the dictator being a comparatively unknown, appointed bureaucrat! Now that the facts are made public, perhaps some changes for the better might be made. With what Charles Lindbergh called "a people's Congress," even the Monetary Power could be defeated.

THE SOVEREIGN UNITED STATES OF EUROPE

One of the most important dreams of the One Worlders is about to become true. What today comprises the ten Sovereign States of Western Europe are to be replaced by a Regional World Government. The States themselves will disappear and be replaced by Regional Governments which will handle local affairs, similar to the Ten Regional Governments that were designed to replace the fifty Sovereign States that make up the United States of America. The soon accomplishment of this dream first came to our notice when it was announced that next January 1st the time-honored British passport will become a thing of the past, to be replaced by a European Union passport. This will be a hard thing for British patriots to stomach. As the European Community's magazine Europe admits: "Resplendent in deep oceanic blue and regally embossed with the monarch's coat of arms, the British passport is as evocative to its owners of their nationality as scarlet mailboxes or the bowler hat. Inside, the warning that 'Her Britannic Majesty's Principal Secretary of State . . . requests and requires the bearer to pass without let or hindrance' is almost as sacred to a Briton as the pursuit of happiness is to a U.S. patriot." But that symbol of British Sovereignty will pass away on New Years Day; as will the sovereignty and national passports of France, West Germany, Italy, Belgium, Luxembourg, Holland, Greece, and Spain and Portugal when the latter become a part of the European Community on January 1, 1986. The passport, the symbol of national and individual sovereignty, will then be issued by a Regional World Government.

The next thing to be brought to our attention was the news that, on February 14, 1984, the Assembly (Legislature) of the European Community had voted by a large majority for a draft treaty which will establish in fact a Sovereign United States of Europe. This treaty calls for the setting up of a new "Union of Europe" with autonomous powers to achieve monetary, economic, political and fiscal union. In other words, complete integration into a Regional World Government is to be accomplished. Of course, this will not be an immediate creation. The people of the ten Nations of Europe must be coerced gradually. So ten years are determined for the total integration. We might mention that originally this plan was to include the United States as a part of the merger. That's what the Atlantic Alliance and the plan for "Union Now" with Britain was all about. But this seemed impractical politically and the idea was replaced by the Trilateral Commission, which is primarily an economic union, rather than a political coalition. Now the plan of the One Worlders seems to call for the eventual creation of an All-the-Americas Regional World Government, to match that of Europe, of the Eurasian Communist Region, and the Eastasia Third World group (we used Orwell's names in this connection).

Because this draft treaty setting up a Regional World Government in Europe is so very similar to the plans of some One Worlders for the establishment of a Regional World Government of the Americas, it's important to note its provisions. Miss Margaret Crawford, a British patriot writing in Candour, the British Views-Letter, explains: "When one examines in detail the draft Treaty establishing European Unity, one finds that there is a close similarity with the 1977 Constitution of the USSR (which replaced all previous constitutions for the USSR). This similarity is sufficiently close to make it incompatible with any suggestion that Soviet-type activities of the executive of the European Union would be excluded. . . . According to Article 5 of the draft Treaty, 'The territory of the Union shall consist of all the territories of member states. . . That is, whoever controls the Union would control our national territories. According to Article 6, the Union 'may acquire and dispose of movable property and immovable property.' According to Article 42 'The laws of the Union shall be directly applicable to the Member States. It shall take precedence over national law.' The draft Treaty provides for the transition from national member States to a totally integrated European Union, this to take ten years. The Commissioners (of the European Union) would take over the functions previously performed by national governments and the Western European Monarchies. Instead, under the Commission, there would be Regions to handle local matters. Since the intentions spelt out in the draft Treaty include: a) Seizure of the territories of the nation; b) Seizure of national assets for use by foreign rulers; c) The establishment of alien laws, imposed by alien rulers; d) The removal of all authority from Parliament, and e) The removal of all constitutional functions from the Monarch, (and) since these are the objectives that are commonly sought in the pursuit of war, those promoting that Treaty must be considered to be conspiring to levy war directly against the Queen, albeit a cold war, for the purposes stated above." (Unquote.)

Miss Crawford calls this treason. In the same context, those who are conspiring to create a New World Order in which the United States would be one of many Regions, should also be considered traitors who are conspiring to wage war against our Nation and its Constitutional Government.

But let's go back in history and trace the development of this conspiracy against all Nations. In the same year that the Declaration of Independence was signed, and Adam Smith's "The Wealth of Nations" published, there was also produced a plan calling for the setting up of a World State. Among the most important requirements stated in this Manifesto of the Order of the Illuminati were: the abolition of the family; the abolition of countries and nationalities; the abolition of "religious liberty and freedom of conscience," and the destruction of the then existing social and political order. This plan to set up a World Government suffered something of a decline until the middle of the last century when the Communist Karl Marx and the Capitalist Frederick Engels wrote for the Communist League, a new Manifesto. Marx was a student of Weishaupt, the creator of the Order of the Illuminati. He also was a student of Hegel, the German philosopher who "shook the world" with his theories of dialectical and historical materialism, his idea that the State is God, and his Hegelian formula (thesis versus antithesis produces synthesis) which has become the golden rule of all planners of the New World Order, whether they be Marxist, Capitalist, or any other type of Internationalist. Marx, taking his theses from Weishaupt, Hegel, Saint-Simon, Feuerbach, and other socialistically inclined philosophers, he agreed with Engels in the dictum: "Philosophers have only interpreted the world in various ways. The time has come to change it." James Billington, in his book "Fire in the Minds of Men" which deals with "origins of the Revolutionary Faith," states that "The crucial new element that Marx brought to communism was dialectical materialism. Here at last was a finished revolutionary ideology with a dynamic historical outlook. . . . Karl Marx remained basically a Hegelian intellectual."

Strictly Personal. During the past few months we have received an occasional note from a new or recent subscriber reading something like this one of October 4th:

"Would you please remove my name from your mailing list that you rent out to others."

We are aware that many mailing lists are traded, given, rented, sold or otherwise made available to others (even including the Internal Revenue Service in the case of several bulk mailers). But in January, 1954, when we published our first issue of Don Bell Reports, we made a pledge to our subscribers that we would never, on any occasion, release our mailing list to any other person, organization or agency. We have never deviated from that policy. Ours is a privately circulated newsletter. We intend to keep it that way.

But Marxism, or Communism, remained a kind of underground, not yet greatly important movement until the early part of the present century when the planners of the World State envisioned Communism as a competitor to Capitalism on a worldwide scale. To state it in Hegelian terms, One Worlders saw Communism as the antithesis to the thesis Capitalism, out of which struggle would be developed the synthesis, or the New World Order in which economics would replace politics, Humanism would replace all other religions, and collectivism would replace Individualism. So, with the deliberate creation of World War I, came the emergence of a group of revolutionaries under Lenin who would be financed and encouraged to conquer Russia and make of it a base for the development of a worldwide "antithetical" force which would compete with the Capitalistic "thesis." By the year 1928, the Bolshevik invaders had successfully conquered Russia and established a Soviet Union, this through the aid of Megabankers and Internationalist monopoly capitalists such as Armand Hammer, Averell Harriman, the Rockefellers, etc. Feeling secure by this time, the Communist International then presented its three-stage plan for achieving world government: "Socialize the economies of all nations; bring about regional unions of various groupings of these socialized nations; amalgamate all of these regional groupings into a final world-wide union of socialist states." In 1936 a somewhat revised program of the Communist International was issued, which stated that "Dictatorship can be established only by a victory of socialism in different countries or groups of countries after which the proletariat republics would unite on federal lines with those already in existence and this system of federal unions would expand . . . at length forming the World Union of Socialist Soviet Republics." All of this was in line with the plans of the Master Conspirators who fed and nourished Communism and sought to use it for their own purposes.

In 1942, when Stalin was cooperating with the Master Conspirators in forming the United Nations, he defined the intermediate goals of Communism as: a) Confuse, disorganize and destroy the forces of (free enterprise) capitalism around the world; b) Bring all nations together into a single world system of economy; c) Force the advanced countries to pour prolonged financial aid into the under-developed countries; d) Divide the world into regional groups as a transitional stage to total world government. Populations will more readily abandon their national loyalties to a vague regional loyalty than to a world authority; e) Later the regional groups can be brought all the way into a world dictatorship." Stalin offers two courses: 1) Bring all nations together into a world system of economy; or 2) Divide the world into regional groups as a transitional stage to total world government. It should be noted that the Soviet plan coincides almost exactly with the Western plan. In the CFR, TLC, Bilderberger, Club of Rome, and other elitist organizations there is this same division. One group believes the creation of Regional World Governments is unnecessary; that with the proper use of pressure, power, persuasion and money, the time will come when the people of the various Nations will call for the creation of a world government "to end wars and preserve peace"; or that the making of more Declarations, Conventions, Treaties, Agencies dispensing various kinds of World Law (Seabed Treaty, Declarations of Human Rights, Genocide Conventions, New International Economic Programs, etc.), will develop a world government as a matter of what they call "piecemeal functionalism". On the other hand, there are those among the "elitists" who are convinced that the creation of Regional World Governments must come first (because "populations will more readily abandon their national loyalties to a vague regional loyalty than to a world authority."). Now notice how this "difference of opinion" among Western Planners coincides with the differences of experts in the Kremlin. Compare the following which was published in the Oct. 3 Intelligence Digest:

"There is no doubt any longer that the Kremlin is a very divided house today with its occupants at loggerheads over just about everything. It is some time since there has been any agreement on policy. Yet another example of it has come to the surface.

It concerns Moscow's attitude towards Western Europe. The fundamental poser is this: What is preferable . . . a divided Western Europe or a united Western Europe? Two draft policies have been prepared for consideration by the Politburo. One states categorically that a united Western Europe . . . is an objective to be pursued by every Soviet move towards any West European country over the next few years. The other states equally categorically that a divided Western Europe, in which one country after the other can be picked off by Moscow, should be a primary objective of Soviet policy for the next few years. . . These rival experts cannot agree. . . The declared objective of both is to separate Western Europe from the US - either Western Europe collectively as a united bloc, or the individual West European countries one by one. The one point on which they agree is that the objective is attainable, sooner or later. No West European leader should forget this. (Unquote).

Which side will win? Remember that a few weeks ago there was an intensive campaign to cajole West Germany into a more comfortable relationship with Communist East Germany. At its height, the conferences were called off, at the order from the Kremlin. So, it would seem that both the so-called Western "elitists" and the Soviet "experts" are in total agreement: Western Europe collectively - as a united bloc, a Regional World Government - is the goal to be pursued. Whether there are enough patriots and lovers of their own country to prevent such a development is moot. Certainly the patriots of Britain are opposing the potential loss of their Queen and their Kingdom. The citizens of the other nine countries comprising the European Community may resist if warned in sufficient time.

"If warned in sufficient time;" has come to be one of the great difficulties for patriots all over the world. A news item can be flashed across the globe almost instantaneously, but it may take days, even weeks, for some simple but important truth to be relayed to those most concerned. Samuel Adams helped solve a similar problem in the 1770s by creating the Committee of Correspondence. Newsletters and a scattering of independent publications attempt to serve the same purpose in the 1980s. But even when the news is given there usually remains the question, "What can I do about it?" Even as in our first War of Independence, there are those who have risked their lives, their fortunes and their sacred honor in attempts to preserve those God-given rights which have been ours and which we are rapidly losing. One thinks of the contributions of a Larry McDonald and so many others who have given their all. There are those still living and still fighting. Like Phyllis Schlafly and her Eagles in the fight to defeat ERA. Like George Hanson and others who have paid a price to combat our domestic gestapo, the IRS. Like Pastor Sileven and his band of fathers and mothers who were jailed or became fugitives in their fight to preserve freedom for their children. Like Senator Hatch who killed the odious Civil Rights Bill. There are millions of others of whom we seldom hear who are also risking their lives, fortunes and honor to preserve what our forefathers fought to establish for the benefit of their posterity. America has been a land richly blessed with liberty, opportunity, and abundance. For those who love America and strive to keep her as she was, there can be this blessing: "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for those that love him." (1 Corinthians 2:9).

A CONGRESSMAN'S SWAN SONG

Representative Ron Paul delivered his farewell address in the House of Representatives on September 19, 1984. Because of the upcoming Congressional elections, his message seems particularly important. Following are excerpts from that address.

Mr. PAUL. Mr. Speaker, I shall be soon leaving the House and have asked for this special order to make a few comments regarding the problems our Nation faces and the actions needed to correct them. . . Thousands of men and women have come and gone here in our country's history, and except for the few, most go unnoticed and remain nameless in the pages of history, as I am sure I will be. The few who are remembered are those who were able to grab the reins of power and, for the most part, use that power to the detriment of the Nation. We must remember achieving power is never the goal sought by a truly free society. Dissipation of power is the objective of those who love liberty. Others, tragically, will be remembered in a negative way for personal scandals. Yet those individuals whose shortcomings prompted the taking of bribes or involvement in illicit sexual activities have caused no more harm to society than those who used "legitimate" power to infringe upon individual liberty and expand the size of Government. Morally, the two are closely related. The acceptance of a bribe is a horrible act indeed for a public servant, but reducing liberty is an outrageous act that causes suffering for generations to come. ¶ Since the time of our founding, few who have come to the Congress have been remembered for championing the cause of freedom. This is a sign of a declining Nation and indicates that respect for freedom is on the wane. . . Sadly, I have found that individual Members, even though we represent our one-half million constituents, are much less important than most of us would like to believe. The elite few who control the strings of power are the only ones who really count in the legislative process. Votes, of course, occur routinely after heated debate by all those who want to ventilate. But as C. Northcote Parkinson pointed out, the length of debate on an issue is inversely proportional to the importance of the issue. Many times debate is done either for therapy or as a ritual to force Members to make public commitments to those who wield the power, a mere litmus test of loyalty, thus qualifying some quietly to receive largess for their particular district. More often than not, the floor debates are a charade without real issues being dealt with - a mere chance for grandstanding. . . . It's difficult for one who loves true liberty and utterly detests the power of the state to come to Washington for a period of time and not leave a cynic. Yet I am not . . . However, I do believe that if the Democrats and the Republicans played more baseball and legislated a lot less, the country would be much better off. I am convinced the annual baseball game played by the Republicans and the Democrats must be considered as one of the most productive events in which the Members of Congress participate.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to take some time to point out some of the contradictions that I have observed in my four terms in the Congress. . . . I have trouble believing that the foreign policy of the past 70 years has served the best interests of the United States. The policy of international intervention has been followed during this time, regardless of the party in power. The traditional American policy of strategic independence and neutrality based on strength has been replaced by an international policy of sacrifice - a policy that has given us nearly a century of war. The last two wars were fought without formal declaration and without the goal of victory in mind. There are many specific examples to show how irrational this interventionist policy is. We pump $40 billion a year into the Japanese economy by providing for essentially all of Japan's defense. At the same time Japan outcompetes us in the market. (We are) in effect subsidizing their exports which undermine our domestic auto and steel industries. The result: greater deficits for us, higher taxes, more inflation, higher interest rates, and a cry by our producers for protectionism. We insist that Western Europe take our Pershing missiles. We get the bill, and the hostility of the people of Western Europe, and then act surprised that the Soviets pull out of arms negotiations and send more modern nuclear submarines to our coastline. It's a sure guarantee that any conflict in Europe – even one between two socialist nations – will be our conflict. Standing by our ally Israel is in conflict with satisfying the Arab interests. . . . We arm Jordan and Egypt, rescue the PLO (on two occasions), and guarantee that the American taxpayer will be funding both sides of any armed conflict in the Middle East. This policy prompts placing Marines armed with guns without bullets between two warring factions. Our F-15's shooting down our F-5's in the Persian Gulf war is our idea of neutrality and getting others to test our equipment. America's interests are forgotten under these circumstances. . . . We allocate low-interest loans through the Export-Import Bank to build a pipeline for Iraq, giving huge profits to Shultz's Bechtel Corp., while hurting our domestic oil producers. On the day we "stood firm" against Communist aggression in this hemisphere by invading Grenada, our President apologized to those liberal House Members who were "soft on communism" and pleaded for their vote to ensure the passage of the IMF bill so the "communist dictators" can continue to receive taxpayers' dollars – dollars used to support Castro's adventurism in the Caribbean and in Central America.

Our official policy currently is to be tough on communism but promote at the same time low-interest loans allowing Red China to buy nuclear technology, F-16's and other military technology – and this by the strongest anti-Communist administration that we've had in decades. We participate in the bailout of bankrupt Argentina as she continues to loan money to Castro's Cuba, which then prompts us to send men, money and weapons to counteract the spread of communism fomented by Castro. It's doubtful if any of these loans will be repaid and the military equipment and technology will probably end up being used against us at a later date. We talk about a close alliance with Taiwan while subsidizing their hated enemy, Red China. We subsidize Red China's nuclear technology; at the same time, we allow Jane Fonda to ruin ours. We continually sacrifice ourselves to the world by assuming the role of world policemen, which precipitates international crises on a regular basis, while neglecting our own defenses. New planes go overseas while our Air National Guard is forced to use planes 20 years old. We neglect our defenses by signing treaties like Salt I and the ABM Treaty that prevents us from building a non-nuclear defense system and follow Salt II without even signing it. Result – a massive arms race based on a doctrine of mutual assured destruction. . . . There are 42 wars now going on in the world and it's reported we're involved in many of them – on both sides. We have troops in a total of 121 countries. . . . Our Export-Import Bank financed the building of the Kama River truck plant in Russia – trucks then used in the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan over a road built by our own Corps of Engineers. Our response? Draft registration and an Olympic boycott.

Our economic policy is no less contradictory. . . . Conservatives, for years, preached balanced budgets – until in charge. Then the deficits soared to $200 billion per year. Liberal big spenders who led the way to runaway spending quickly excoriate conservative deficits and nothing happens; the deficit financing continues and accelerates. . . . We learned nothing from the depression years and continue to pay farmers to raise crops not needed, and then pay them to stop planting. Our policies drive prices of commodities down, so we prop up the prices and buy up the surpluses. The consumer suffers, the farmer suffers, the country suffers. But our policies never change; we just legislate more of the same programs that caused the problems in the first place. Our steel plants are closing down, so we pursue protectionism and stupidly continue to subsidize the building of steel plants throughout the world through our foreign aid projects. We pay for bridges and harbors throughout the world and neglect our own. We build highways around the world, raise gasoline taxes here, and routinely dodge potholes on our own highways. . . . Economic intervention, a philosophy in itself and not a compromise with anything, is the cause of all these contradictions in the economy. Rejection of Government planning controlled by the powerful special interests at the expense of the general welfare is necessary, and even inevitable, for that system will fall under its own weight. . . .

Social issues are handled in a contradictory manner as well. A basic misunderstanding of the nature of rights and little respect for the Constitution has given us a hodge-podge of social problems that worsen each day. At one time we bussed our children long distances from their homes to force segregation; now we bus them, against their will, to force integration. . . . Certain individual groups, against the intent of the Constitution and the sentiments of a free society, agitate to make illegal privately owned guns used for self-defense. At the same time they increase the power of the state. Taking away the individual's right to own weapons of self-defense and giving unwarranted power to a police state can hardly be considered progress. . . . The shortcomings of South Africa's apartheid system are denounced continuously by the same politicians who ignore the fact that in Communist countries dissidents aren't segregated; they are shot or sent to concentration camps. South Africans for their defective system of civil liberties are banned from the Olympics, while we beg the murdering Communists to come. . . . The abortionist who makes a fortune dropping fetuses and infants into buckets, instead of being restrained by Government is encouraged by the courts and the law. Some show greater concern for the lives of seals than for the life of a human baby. Federal officials - IRS agents and drug enforcement agents - have been known to destroy the property and lives of totally innocent people as homes are entered mistakenly without search warrants. Confiscation of property without due process of law is becoming more commonplace every day with the tactics of the IRS.

Our Government officials continue to endorse, in general, economic interventionism, a careless disregard for our property rights, and an international foreign policy. The ideas of liberty for the individual, freedom for the markets, both domestically and internationally, sound money, and a foreign policy of strategic independence based on strength are no longer popularly endorsed by our national leaders. Careless disregard for liberty allows the Government to violate the basic premises of a free society. . . . The result is that we have neither a moral nor a free society. . . . As nations lose respect for liberty, so too do they lose respect for individual responsibility. Laws are passed proposing no-fault insurance for injuries for which someone in particular was responsible. Remote generations are required to pay a heavy price for violations of civil liberties that occurred to the blacks, to the Indians, and to Japanese-Americans. This is done only at the expense of someone else's civil liberties and in no way can be justified. Collective rights, group rights, in contrast to individual rights prompts laws based on collective guilt for parties not responsible for causing any damage. . . . Government in a free society is recognized to be nothing more than an embodiment of the people. The sovereignty is held by the people. A planned coercive society talks vaguely of how Government provides this and that, as if Government were equivalent to the Creator. . . .

The monetary system is an especially important area where the people and Congress have refused to assume their responsibility. Maintaining honest money - a proper role for Government - has been replaced by putting the counterfeiters in charge of the Government printing press. This system of funny money provides a convenient method whereby Congress' excessive spending is paid for by the creation of new money. . . . Congress assumes that it can make certain groups better off by robbing others of their wealth.

The crisis we face is clearly related to a loss of trust – trust in ourselves, in freedom, in our own Government and in our money. We are a litigious welfare society gone mad. Everyone feels compelled to grab whatever he can get from Government or by suit. The "something for nothing" obsession rules our every movement. Today the pride of self-reliance and personal achievement is buried by the ego-destroying policies of the planned interventionists of big government and replaced by the "satisfaction" of manipulating the political system to one's own special advantage. Score is kept by counting the Federal dollars allocated to the special group or the congressional district to which one belongs. This process cannot continue indefinitely. Something has to give – we must choose either freedom and prosperity or tyranny and poverty. . . . More government cannot possibly offer the solution to the problems we face. Big government is the cause; freedom is the answer. (Conclusion of quotes from a farewell address by Congressman Ron Paul upon the close of his fourth term).

Ron Paul was speaking, not to the general public, but to his fellow Congressmen. He was reminding them of their sins of commission and omission, telling them things which most of us already knew, but things which Congressmen overlook or ignore. Of such representatives of the people John Locke, an English statesman, observed that "When the legislative is changed or the legislators act contrary to the end for which they were constituted those who are guilty are guilty of rebellion." Since we have a written Constitution, we can strengthen that statement: "Those legislators who act contrary to the dictates of the Constitution are guilty of treason." However, we must remember that we are the people who put those Congressmen where they are, and allowed them to commit the treason. For the benefit of collective and collectivist groups and special interests, they have robbed us of most of our individual liberties. But we let them do it. This we should remember when and if we go to the polls on November 6th. Thomas Jefferson reminded the patriots of his time that "We are not to expect to be translated from despotism to liberty in a feather bed." He added: "What country can preserve its liberties if its rulers are not warned from time to time that the people preserve the spirit of resistance?" At another time he reminded Americans that "The tree of Liberty must be refreshed from time to time with the blood of patriots and tyrants. It is its natural manure."

We speak of "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness." We quote Patrick Henry's stirring vow: "Give me liberty or give me death." But few of us in defense of our own country and our own freedom have "resisted unto blood, striving against sin." When that kind of striving became inevitable in 1776, Thomas Jefferson spoke again: "We do most solemnly, before God and the world declare that, regardless of every consequence, at the risk of every distress, the arms we have been compelled to assume we will use with the perseverance, exerting to their utmost energies all these powers which our Creator hath given us, to preserve that liberty which He committed to us in sacred deposit and to protect from every hostile hand our lives and our property."

The solution to our present crises? Perhaps that Tree of Liberty need some manure.

THOSE CERTAIN UNALIENABLE RIGHTS

In those so-called debates between a President and a former Vice President seeking to become a President, there lurked a shadow that had been cast upon the Presidency by Jimmy Carter. Running through the arguments concerning Central America, the Soviet Union, South Africa, the Middle East, Immigration, National Defense, Taxes and Deficits, there was that ghost of a shadow cast by Jimmy Carter, called Human Rights. When Carter was President the subject of human rights became a national obsession. Nations on the political right - our side - were judged, condemned and sometimes destroyed, because of their attitude and actions concerning human rights. There was a contrary policy of course, because Nations on the left - the Communist's side - accepted the terms of the Helsinki Agreement and promptly forgot all about its human rights conditions, and so did our government. Not so those Nations on our side. South Africa, a vital friend, has been denounced and discriminated against because of its apartheid policy. Anti-Communist Nations in South and Central America were attacked, literally, especially Chile and Nicaragua, because their policies on human rights differed from ours. Iran was a staunch and important ally under the Shah. But his human rights policies were used as an excuse to dethrone him; and a total denouncer of human rights was installed in his place. Nicaragua was our best friend in Central America. But its human rights record didn't meet the standards set by the UN and the Carter Administration. So Somoza was hounded, ousted and finally assassinated; and the Marxist Sandinistas with an infinitely worse human rights record were installed. In the name of human rights for Panamanians, but really for the International Bankers, Carter promoted the giveaway of a vital American Canal. With a flourish Carter signed three United Nations Declarations concerning Human Rights, Declarations that the U.S. Senate "wouldn't touch with a ten-foot pole." We could go on about the use of human rights policies to promote Communist schemes, and total disregard of human rights.

In those debates sponsored by the League of Women Voters, there was this same recognition of human rights as a measuring rod for Nations on our side. Said Walter Mondale: "What happens in South America, where, for example, the Nobel Prize winner two days ago said this administration is seen as working with the oppressive government of that region, South Africa? That hurts this nation. We need to stand for human rights. We need to make it clear we're for human liberty." President Reagan answered, in part: "I don't think our record on human rights can be assailed. Human rights are not advanced when at the same time you then stand back and say, 'Whoops, we didn't know the gun was loaded,' and you have another totalitarian power on your hands." When another answer was being given to a question not asked, Mondale said again: "We need to stand for human rights. This administration has lost its way in this field." And Reagan responded: "I don't think our record on human rights can be assailed. I think we have done our best to see that human rights are extended throughout the world. So, here we have both the incumbent and the challenger extolling the virtues of human rights and intent on expanding them throughout the world. Please understand, liberty and justice for everyone everywhere is a condition to be desired. But when they are placed in a grab bag called human rights, and promoted universally, they become part of a trap. For human rights has no specific meaning, it could mean almost anything, depending upon the person holding the gun or the moneybag. Furthermore, the use of so-called human rights as a justification for the creation of governments that ignore the very names of liberty and justice (as in Iran and Nicaragua), has us bothered and slightly bewildered. We searched dictionaries and encyclopedias, and the history books available to us, and we could find no precise definition for the term human rights. But we did learn that human rights was used as an excuse for promoting our War Between the States. Pastor Benjamin M. Palmer of New Orleans preached a "Thanksgiving Sermon" dealing with the subject on November 29, 1860. That was back in the days when Americans were not confused by this concocted illusion called "The Separation of Church and State." The same goes for all those wonderful "Election Day" sermons preached by ministers before and during the Revolutionary War. They knew then that Church and State both had their rightful places under the Kingship of God, and they acted accordingly. So, in 1860, Pastor Palmer told his congregation:

". . . Among people so generally religious as the American, a disguise must be worn; but it is the same old threadbare disguise of the advocacy of human rights. Under this suspicious cry of reform, it demands that every evil shall be corrected, or society become a wreck - the sun must be stricken from the heavens if a spot is found upon his disk. The Most High, knowing his own power, which is infinite, and his own wisdom, which is unfathomable, can afford to be patient. But these self-constituted reformers must quicken the activity of Jehovah or compel his abdication. In their furious haste, they trample upon obligations sacred as any which can bind the conscience. It is time to reproduce the obsolete idea that Providence must govern men, and not that man shall control Providence. In the imperfect state of society, it pleases God to allow evils which check others that are greater. But what reck they of this - these fierce zealots who undertake to drive the chariot of the sun. Working out the single and false idea which rides them like a nightmare, they dash athwart the spheres, utterly disregarding the delicate mechanism of Providence, which moves on, wheels within wheels, with pivots and balances and springs, which the great Designer alone can control. This spirit of atheism, which knows no God who tolerates evil, no Bible which sanctions law, and no conscience that can be bound by oaths and covenants, has selected us for its victim, and slavery for its issue. Its banner-cry rings out already upon the air - 'liberty, equality, fraternity,' which simply interpreted means bondage, confiscation and massacre." (Quoted from "The Nature of the American System," by R.J. Rushdoony.)

Benjamin Palmer's suggestion of the association between the French Revolution and the cry of "human rights" sent us scurrying to other references. We found that Count Mirabeau, one of Weishaupt's Illuminists, was a leader in the French Revolution. "As early as May 10, 1789, he wrote to the constituents who had elected him to the Third Estate . . . called the National Assembly 'the inviolable priesthood of national policy,' and said the newly written 'Declaration of the Rights of Man' a political gospel." Then in 1794 Robespierre said words were "as the bonds of society and guardians of all our knowledge." So he ordered the production of a "Universal Dictionary of Language," which was never completed. But Jean-Francois Varlet, another Jacobin, warned that "despotism has passed from kings to committees," and wrote yet another Declaration of the Rights of Man. Meanwhile a group of Illuminists in Frankfurt thought the Paris declaration didn't go far enough, so this 830-man assembly wrote a "Declaration of the Rights of People." Then came a "Declaration of Individual Rights," A "Declaration of Property" (which said all property belongs to the people, that is, the State). Then to appease the canaille, came a "Declaration of the Rights of the Telling and Exploited People." A group of revolutionary feminists led by Olympe de Gouges, "the high priestess of feminism," drafted a "Declaration of the Rights of Women" to supplement the "Declaration of the Rights of Man." So we must conclude that these various Declarations of Human Rights had their origin with the Illuminists and Jacobins who led the French Revolution from Paris. We might add that the UN "Declaration of Human Rights" was adopted around midnight on December 10, 1948, when the UN General Assembly was meeting in Paris.

After the American Revolution was ended Lafayette returned to France and the word was spread that the principles of that revolution were "Life, Liberty and the pursuit of happiness (property)." The French revolutionaries determined to carry the idea one step further and adopted the slogan "liberty, equality and fraternity" So the Jacobins, Illuminists, and Grand Orient Masons started a revolution in 1789. Seven revolutions later, France was still revolting. Comparison is important:

"The French Revolution became a 'class struggle' based on Socialist Ideas. Therefore, it was doomed to fall from the start. And this bloody, revengeful, despairing type of revolution became the model for all subsequent revolutions. Consequently, all future revolutions - the Russian, Mexican, South American, Spanish, Chinese and African - have failed, too. Americans realized that wealth is a result of freedom and production. Poverty can only be eliminated by work. The French believed, as do all socialists, that wealth can be redistributed, thus eliminating poverty. The American Revolution promised freedom in which to work and in which to pursue one's happiness. The French Revolution promised to abolish poverty, as all revolutions since have promised. Instead of realizing that poverty is abolished by economic growth, not by economic redistribution (for there is never enough to redistribute), the French only succeeded in creating violent rebellions which, in turn, created more instability, uncertainty, and poverty, leading to further rebellions." The American Revolution set a splendid example for the world. . . . Security and property are a result of, and an effect of, freedom and liberty. There cannot be security and wealth where there is no freedom. Freedom is the ultimate, the crucial value for which to fight. That is what the American Revolution was all about; and that is what future revolutions ought to be about." (Leslie Snyder, in "Justice or Revolution," Books In Focus, Inc. Suite 31B, 160 East 38th St., New York, N.Y. 10016).

In promoting various declarations of human rights, genocide conventions, Equal Rights Amendments, and so forth, we are following the examples set by the French Revolution. By the same token we have become a Welfare State, from the same origin. Not only this, but as did the Illuminists and Jacobins, we have renounced God and adopted a state religion called Humanism. And when Humanism becomes a state religion there is no separation, but rather a kind of universally approved union of atheistic church and corporate state. As a witness, we call upon John D. Rockefeller 3rd, the father of Jay Rockefeller who is presently Governor of West Virginia and spending millions in an attempt to become Senator. John D. 3rd is proud in that his maternal grandfather, Nelson W. Aldrich, was a U.S. Senator from Rhode Island for 17 years, and his son Richard was a Congressman for 10 years. John D. 3rd's brother Nelson entered public life as an appointee under FDR in 1940, rose all the way to an appointment as Vice President under the appointed Ford. Brother Winthrop was elected Governor of Arkansas. And now Jay is on his way, if money will buy his promotion. Uncle David will help, of course. But our witness is John D. 3rd, who wrote a book titled "The Second American Revolution" in which there was a chapter on "The Politics of Humanism." We quote, beginning on page 157:

"If I am correct in the view I have expressed throughout this book, that the people want to see our society move forward in humanistic directions, then clearly we will need to create a 'politics of Humanism.' Our political processes must give expression, coherence, and leadership to the humanistic revolution, and must become the testing ground for the change that will be needed if it is to succeed. A politics of humanism will depend on maximum involvement of the people, on the ability of our political institutions to reflect their wishes as to change, and on the emergence of political leaders who see the vision of a truly humanistic society and dedicate themselves to its attainment. I believe that a politics of humanism is indeed emerging in our society today. . . . This can be seen in such broad coalitions as John Gardner's Common Cause organization. . . . Important and relevant political change can be seen as far back as 1954 in the Supreme Court's school desegregation decision, and even more directly in its historic 'one-man, one-vote' decisions in the early 1960s. . . . The most difficult areas of change - amending the Constitution - has occurred in the case of the eighteen-year-old vote and seems assured in the case of the Women's Rights Amendment. . . . I have attempted in this book to explore areas of needed change, to help identify the issues which form the agenda for the humanistic revolution. These are the issues which require a politics of humanism, and leaders who embody the qualities on which such a politics must be based. These leaders are going to have to respond to the people in bringing population and natural resources and the environment into an effective balance on 'Spaceship Earth.' They will have to help bring about a 'humanistic capitalism,' to distribute wealth more equitably. . . . It will be largely up to the political leaders of tomorrow. . . . their participation will be crucial in the attainment of a giving society, a learning society, a planning society." ("The Second American Revolution, by John D. Rockefeller 3rd. Harper & Row. Copyright 1973.)

These words written by a Rockefeller brother in 1973 may sound much like a prediction that has come true in 1984. Certainly the National Democratic Party with its consortium of gays, feminists, and abortion promoters can be accused of preaching Rockefeller's "politics of humanism," and the Republican leadership also has embraced much of this alien and atheistic religion. Lest we forget: Humanism, political or otherwise, is a man-originated and man-centered secular religion which would shove God aside and make man predominant in every sphere of life. It was formed in the minds of those Illuminist and Jacobin revolutionaries who led the first great French Revolution to its and their destruction. This happened a whole generation before Karl Marx was born. However, Marx adopted, adapted and revived the tenets of this atheistic humanism. And it now has risen like a tidal wave to engulf America. Those Declarations of various Rights that are being foisted upon us by those who would promote a "Second Revolution," are second-hand and counterfeit. Before those various declarations were proclaimed by the revolutionaries of the 1780s and 1790s, our forefathers had already, in 1776, written and published their own Declaration of Human Rights. Only they looked to God and not to Man, and called it by the right name, the Declaration of Independence. Its slogan was "Life, Liberty and Property," and it declared that all the so-called human rights were "endowed by their Creator," not by man or men; and that governments were instituted among men not to grant these rights, but to secure them.

We have traded our Godly slogan of "Life, Liberty and Property" for that of the Satanic "Liberty, Equality, Fraternity." One promises freedom, the other guarantees eventual slavery. As Pastor Palmer said, "Among a people so generally religious as the American, a disguise must be worn; but it is the same old threadbare disguise of the advocacy of human rights. . . . This spirit of atheism, which knows no God who tolerates evil, no Bible which sanctions law, and no conscience that can be bound by oaths or covenants, has selected us for its victims, and slavery for its issue."

There is a way out, but the path is narrow and it can be trod only by individuals, not by collectivist groups, and certainly not by politicians who promise something for nothing and then have nothing but more of the same insecurity to deliver. "Liberty or death." Are the words now meaningless?

THE TRAGEDY OF TEENAGE SUICIDES

The two fifteen-year-old girls, sophomores at Leonminster, Mass. High School, wrote a note with lipstick on the bedroom mirror. It read: "Don't be sad. We love you." Later their bodies were found, a 12-gauge shotgun lay near their bodies. Authorities refused to call it a double suicide. But their schoolmates said one of the girls had been talking about killing herself; and four other students of the same high school had died in the past four months, apparently suicides. The school superintendent said he didn't know why the school of 1,700 students had suffered so many deaths. . . . On Dec. 14, 1981 U.S. News reported: "A new generation of American teenagers is deeply troubled, unable to cope with the pressures of growing up in what they perceive as a world that is hostile or indifferent to them. Lack of moral standards now prevail at the point where individual lives, families, and in some cases whole communities are threatened." Nearly three years later, in its issue dated November 12, 1984, U.S. News carried a follow-up to the story: "As 'Cluster Suicides' Take Toll of Teenagers, chains of deaths among young people are devastating more and more communities and prompting action." The leading paragraphs of the story told of how six teenagers had committed suicide in or near Clear Lake City, Texas, home of the astronauts and the Johnson Space Center. No one seemed to know why the teenagers had killed themselves. . . . Westchester, Rockland, and Putnam Counties north of New York City are among the most affluent in the country. There 32 teenage deaths, many of them caused by the youths hanging themselves, had occurred in the past two years. In Plano, Texas there had been eight teenage suicides in the past 15 months. In one of the more pathetic of the suicides, two young boys were found, a revolver near them, and between the corpses lay a copy of Dungeons and Dragons. From Oregon to a publisher of Christian literature came this letter: "I work in a Christian book store. A Christian counselor called and asked if we had anything on Dungeons and Dragons. Said he was working with a 15-year-old that was suicidal. He had been playing the game. 'I gave him my last copy of the Dungeons and Dragons pamphlet. Please send 100 more pamphlets.'" The game Dungeons and Dragons is promoted, and played, in many of the public schools in all of the States. It encourages suicide, murder, incest, devil-worship, etc. . . . Indicative of the mood of young people: Brown University students approved by a 60-to-40 percent margin a referendum asking that the campus infirmary be stocked with cyanide pills, supposedly to be handed out to the students in case of a nuclear attack. . . . Pro-Family Forum recently published an article dealing with some of the causes of teenage suicides. We quote.

The escalation of suicide has become an acute national problem. It is the third most prevalent cause of death among teenagers - exceeded only by auto accidents and homicide (and more than half of the auto accidents are drug-related, primarily the drug of alcohol). A number of books have been written recently exploring the causes and solutions to the increase in suicides. Many organizations, including churches, are searching for answers. However, it seems that much of the research ignores some of the basic principles. For instance: Have they considered the fact that one basic tenet of Humanism is the "right to suicide"? (Humanist Manifesto II). Have they considered the fact that many public schools have death education classes in which the discussion of suicide plays a prominent part? . . . Teachers are not permitted to "moralize." So they cannot teach the sanctity of life, but must rather teach from the viewpoint of the "autonomous person" - that each person shall set his own guidelines, determine his own morality. According to humanistic psychologists, suicide is a prominent consideration. A personal questionnaire which appeared in Psychology Today was used in some classes. It was heavily weighted with questions concerning suicide: "How often do you think about it? How would you choose to commit suicide?" etc. Have they considered the fact that an organization has been established to promote the "right to suicide" - the Hemlock Society - and that its leaders have written books and toured the nation promoting their ideas? Have they considered the impact of the belief that man is nothing more than a sophisticated animal destined for nothing better than a dusty grave? The predictable and natural result of such a teaching is: when life becomes too tough to handle, there is no logical reason not to end it. This is the theme running through the song given, as well as through other songs and literature popular with the young.

* * * * *

Regarding that song mentioned in the foregoing, here is the background to the song, and the song itself, as published in Pro-Family Alert of May, 1984:

"Suicide Is Painless, We Are Told"

A few days ago we received a phone call from Washington, D.C. A concerned father had noted the national news report concerning the 'cluster suicides' of young people in Texas. He asked: 'Are people really aware of all the influences which are designed to promote suicide among young people?' Just to cite one, he sent us a copy of the theme song (words and music) from the Twentieth Century Fox Motion Picture M*A*S*H, stating that it has been used in schools, including Baltimore County, MD, by the Maryland State Department of Education Music Department. This dates back to 1980; we have no information on how widespread it may be now. ¶ Words and music are by Mike Altman and Johnny Mandel, with the notation that it is to be sung 'Moderately (Folk-Gospel Feeling),' the song is titled 'Suicide Is Painless'."

Through early morning fog I see/ Visions of the things to be:/ The pains that are withheld for me./ I realize and I can see,/ That suicide is painless./ It brings on many changes, and/ I can take or leave it if I please. ¶ I try to find a way to make/ All our little joys relate/ Without that ever-present hate./ But now I know that it's too late,/ And suicide is painless./ It brings on many changes, and/ I can take or leave it if I please. ¶ The game of life is hard to play,/ I'm going to lose it anyway./ The losing card I'll some day lay,/ So this is all I have to say,/ That suicide is painless./ It brings on many changes, and/ I can take or leave it as I please. ¶ The only way to win is cheat/ And lay it down before I'm beat/ And to another give a seat -/ For that's the only painless feat./ 'Cause suicide is painless./ It brings on many changes, and/ I can take or leave it if I please. ¶ The sword of time will pierce our skins./ It doesn't hurt when it begins./ But as it works its way on in,/ The pain grows stronger, watch it grin./ For suicide is painless./ It brings on many changes, and/ I can take or leave it if I please. ¶ A brave man once requested me/ To answer questions that are key./ Is it to be or not to be - / And I replied: "Oh, why ask me,"/ 'Cause suicide is painless./ It brings on many changes, and/ I can take or leave it if I please. ¶ And you can do the same thing if you please."

How did this Spirit of Suicide manage to permeate the minds and destroy the souls and bodies of an estimated 5,000 teenagers in one year, and inject itself into the very curriculum of American schools? Most of the credit can be laid to what has been called the educational Trojan Troika: The United Nations Educational, Scientific, and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), the National Education Association (NEA), and the United States Department of Education (DOE). These three, operating in conjunction with textbook publishers, tax-exempt foundations, and with psychologists, behavioral scientists and other change agents operating under their aegls, have a dream. They dream of a one-world socialist state, and they feel it is their duty, using the American educational system as their instrument, to create a new kind of society with a new kind of citizenry to inhabit this new world order. Standing in their way is the Christian social order, the private enterprise system, and the traditional American family with its implanted mores and standards of value. This is the battle; let us first appraise the enemy.

UNESCO began as the International Committee for Intellectual Cooperation, an agency of the old League of Nations, headquartered in Paris. It changed its name and became a part of the newly created United Nations in 1946. It supposedly "seeks to further world peace by removing social, religious, and racial tensions, encouraging free interchange of ideas and of cultural and scientific achievements, and improving and expanding education." In addition to its educational activities, UNESCO also backs a New World Information Order (NWIO) which seeks to license and regulate journalists throughout the world and control the press of all nations. It also sponsors the New International Economic Order (NIEO) which is designed to bring about that one-world socialist system, making the United States a socialist state in a one-world order. For these world censorship and world socialist efforts, last December 28th the U.S. representative to UNESCO, Ambassador Jean Gerard, met in Paris with Amadou Mahtar M'Bow, Secretary General of UNESCO, to deliver a letter of intent to withdraw from the organization, which will happen next December 28th unless our government changes its mind. But our chief objection to UNESCO in this particular report has to do with its influence on public education in the United States.

In 1947, William G. Carr of NEA, at a seminar in Paris conducted by UNESCO, urged his listeners to "Teach the attitudes which will ultimately result in the creation of World Government . . . and make world citizenship possible." UNESCO answered a few years later by producing a series of 10 booklets, Toward World Understanding, which were distributed throughout the American public school system. A quote from Vol. V of the series is typical: "As long as the child breathes the poisoned air of nationalism (meaning patriotism), education in world-mindedness can produce only rather precarious results. We have pointed out, it is frequently the family that infects the child with extreme nationalism. The school should therefore use the means described to combat family attitudes that favor jingoism." Joy Elmer Morgan, editor of the NEA Journal, wrote in the January, 1946, issue: "In the struggle to establish an adequate world government, the teacher has many parts to play. He must begin with his own attitude and knowledge and purpose. He can do much to prepare the hearts and minds of children for global understanding and cooperation. At the very top of all the agencies which will assure the coming of world government must stand the school, the teacher, and the organized profession. . . The organized teaching profession may well take hope and satisfaction from the achievements it has already made toward world government in its support of the United Nations and UNESCO." In 1967, NEA's executive secretary proclaimed: "NEA will become a political power

IT WAS A DOUBLE WHAMMY

There were no issues of DBR for 11/2 or 11/9. Rare but unavoidable circumstances made publication impossible. First we were attacked and felled by an army of flu bugs. The spirit was willing, but the flesh wouldn't cooperate. Then, as we started to get back into action, we had an equipment failure that prevented the publication of a November 9th issue. So, we had a forced two week vacation, spent mostly in bed. We know many of you were praying for us; we thank you and we know it helped. Now all is as well as a couple of old timers can expect and, to misquote a quote: "Here we go again."

second to no other special interest group . . . NEA will organize this profession from top to bottom into logical operational units that can move swiftly and effectively and with power unmatched by any other organized group in the nation." And NEA proved its power when it caused President Jimmy Carter to establish a Cabinet level Department of Education, one which President Reagan promised, but hasn't the power to eliminate. The resignation of Terrel Bell as its secretary will make no difference, since DOE is a servant of NEA, even as NEA is a reflection of UNESCO; the three forming education's Trojan Troika.

"The basic goal of education is change . . . human change in desirable directions . . . This issue . . . focuses attention upon the school as a change agent . . . and the specific focus is on changing people." "We need to de-emphasize tradition and the past." So say the change agents. As early as 1946 Brock Chisholm had said, "The re-interpretation and eventually eradication of the concept of right and wrong which has been the basis of child training, the substitution of intelligent and rational thinking for faith in the certainties of the old people, these are the belated objectives of all effective psychotherapy. Would they not be legitimate objectives of original education?" Humanist Manifesto II states: "Promises of immortal salvation or fear of eternal damnation are both illusory and harmful. They distract humans from present concerns, from self-actualization . . . There is no credible evidence that life survives the death of the body." And this is where the conflict developed in the minds of those teenagers who might be potential suicides.

The purpose of these humanistic change agents is to destroy all thoughts of Christian or traditional moral values, and erase all other "hangups" implanted by parents or "the old people." And their greatest handicap in the development of the "new man" for the "new world order" is the people's belief in sin and death and a final judgment. To combat this obstacle, the change agents introduced "Death Education." Dr. Daniel Leviton, author of "The Role of the Schools in Providing Death Education," warned that "We have a subject matter here which, taught improperly, can do incalculable harm. The death educator . . . can develop such fear that the student becomes an emotional cripple, afraid to live and 'feared of dying.' . . . The instructor in Death Education needs to be prepared for the eventuality of a student's suicide." In her "Change Agents in the Schools," Barbara Morris asks: "When students suffer emotional or psychological trauma (possibly leading to suicide), who bears the burden of coping with it? The school? Certainly not. Try to take them to court. The teacher? Of course not. The parents? Of course. It's always the parents who pay and they have the least to say about what happens in the government schools."

When people are led to believe that life is not sacred, that it can be eliminated whenever the "need" arises, think of the consequences. Abortion becomes legal. Euthanasia becomes acceptable. Teenage suicide becomes "normal." Murderers become victims of society. Women are beaten to death by rapists while crowds merely watch. And "survival games" are played in schools to teach children it's legitimate to kill others or themselves when the occasion requires. When people refuse to teach their children that God's laws are immutable, and must be applied in every facet of life, then there is little hope for such a society. The only remaining hope: "If my people which are called by my name . . ." II Chronicles, 7:14.

REPEATING THE CUBA SCAM

Now that the sound and fury has subsided and the fear of imminent war has waned, perhaps we can begin to understand that the Nicaraguan MIG21 Incident was a planned maneuver designed to establish and guarantee the security and permanence of Nicaragua as a Communist outpost - another Cuba. The same scam was used in the case of the Cuban Missile Crisis of 1962. When that war scare had ebbed and Kennedy and Khrushchev had concluded their confrontations, it was revealed that in exchange for no nuclear warheads in Cuba, our Government had promised never to invade or attack Cuba, and Cuban expatriots would be prevented from any attempts to regain possession of their native land. Cuba, as a Communist bastion, would be protected by the United States! We may expect that the same kind of a promise of security and permanence and U.S. protection will be extended to Nicaragua if the Sandinistas promise to cut down on the shipment of heavy weapons and warplanes from the USSR. U.S. Assistant Secretary of State Langhorne Motley, then conferencing alongside his superior, George Shultz, in Brazil, shed some light on the alleged crisis in Nicaragua when he said, "This began with Fidel Castro. Whenever times were tough in Cuba they hyped everybody to fill sandbags against the gringo invasion and not to worry about the fact that there's no soap in the stores." That's a part of the story because there is a severe economic problem in Nicaragua, made more critical when people who should have been harvesting coffee beans were ordered instead to man rifles and dig trenches and construct air raid shelters. But there's more to the story than the need to distract people from thoughts of hunger and substitute thoughts of war. Some of the real story was published beforehand in our DBR #35 of August 31, 1984. We titled that report "Beware the Ides of October" because the Cuban Missile Crisis had hit the headlines on October 16, 1962 (the Ides of October by old Roman reckoning); and we believed that October 15 (still the Ides) had been selected as the day when the Nicaraguan crisis would be announced. Sure enough, in late September Daniel Ortega, now Nicaragua's President-elect, went before the UN to say that United States troops were going to invade Nicaragua on October 15th. Nothing happened of course, except in Nicaragua, where there was the calling up of more troops, digging of trenches, parading of tanks and artillery, etc. And to add to the pandemonium, U.S. spy planes began zooming over Nicaragua, scaring people with their sonic booms, one or two small U.S. warships were seen offshore, there were announcements of more U.S. troop maneuvers and the possible buildup of U.S. battalions of Marines that might sail or fly to Nicaragua. And Sandinista leaders took every opportunity to shout that the Yankees were coming. Then came word that a Soviet supply ship had been spotted, one that could be carrying MIG21 fighter planes to Nicaragua. Statements were issued by the White House as to what might happen if any such planes were landed in Nicaragua. That was when real panic seems to have taken over. Tanks and armored cars were sent into the streets, armed forces were put on a state of alert, the civilians built air raid shelters and took military training. It seemed like the Cuban crisis of 1962 was being staged all over again. And it was.

In our DBR of August 31, 1984, we wrote: "Does history repeat? It was an international Power Elite that, through its control over the State Department and the Media, caused the downfall of Batista and the rise of Castro and Communism in Cuba. Then, with the Cuban Missile Crisis came the acknowledgement that the island would remain a Communist base whose protection would be guaranteed by our own government!! There seems to be a repeat performance occurring in Nicaragua with the necessary 'crisis' set to occur in October. . . . Not a missile crisis but an airstrip crisis, like the one which prompted the Grenada crisis." Concerning the original Cuba Scam, we quoted the columnist Emilio Adolfo Rivero who had said: "The American hemisphere, as a result, was put in a situation where for twenty-two years it has been subject to the relentless knocking and prodding of communist sponsored subversion, terrorism and guerrilla warfare. Not a single nation in the American continent has been able to avert those attacks." And if the Nicaraguan airplane crisis ends as did the Cuban missile crisis, we can expect more years of even greater "communist sponsored subversion, terrorism and guerrilla warfare." It should also be understood that Cuba's activities in the Americas have been somewhat lessened because Cuba is an island having no land contact with other countries. Nicaragua, on the other hand, is on the mainland, approximately half way between North and South America and with all of Central America within easy conquest.

U.S. News in its issue of November 26 tells us what we are to expect to happen, and probably would happen if our Administration were free to do as it wishes. But there is a controlling elite which desires to establish a socialist new world order. U.S. News is probably right when it says that "The Reagan administration is resolved to prevent creation of another Communist Cuba in Central America. [But] Despite saber rattling, pressure will grow to pursue compromise." And the compromise may well be the same kind of compromise that was made after the original Cuba Scam. AP carried the story, datelined Manzanillo, Mexico: "U.S. and Nicaraguan diplomats met at this Pacific coast resort yesterday (November 19) in their eighth round of negotiations to try to ease their angry dispute over security in Central America. Both American and Mexican officials refused to disclose details of the scheduled two days of discussions between President Reagan's special envoy for Central America, Harry Shlaudeman, and Victor Hugo Tinoco, Nicaraguan deputy foreign minister." History reveals that when U.S. diplomats hold secret meetings with the diplomats of other countries, whether the countries be friends or enemies, the U.S. always loses, and pays. The cost of discussions with the Sandinista leaders could be exceedingly high.

It should be understood that if war should be ordered by the elitist leaders who really control things, we would not be fighting the Nicaraguans. They are just as miserably situated as are the bulk of the Cubans, the Russians and all the other non-communist majorities of the "Communist controlled Nations" which include the people of the Soviet Socialist Republics, Estonia, Latvia, Lithuania, East Germany, Czechoslovakia, Poland, Bulgaria, Hungary, Cuba, Ethiopia, Afghanistan, and Nicaragua. Along with the Marxist Sandinistas who supposedly control Nicaragua, there are more than 10,000 Cuban terrorists, 3,000 Soviet "advisers," more than 2,000 East Germans, 3,000 Bulgarians, 2,000 Czechoslovakians, 1,500 Poles, 2,500 Hungarians, and 2,000 Libyans that Qaddafi sent to Nicaragua. These are the trained Communist "advisers" that are aiding the Sandinistas in Nicaragua. There are also about 800 U.S. citizens, all of them taking their orders from Moscow. The presence of Libyan terrorists in Nicaragua should be especially noteworthy, because Libya's Colonel Muammar Qaddafi is determined that President Ronald Reagan will not serve a second term. According to Hilaire du Berrier, a reliable correspondent: "Qaddafi is so determined that President Ronald Reagan will not serve another term, he is ready to sacrifice any number of assassination teams which will play the role of red herrings, covering the trails of the real killers on whom he is placing his hopes. The real killers, according to British reports, will be innocent-appearing Americans in Qaddafi's employ." Egyptian police rounded up one of Qaddafi's death squads which was supposed to kill a former Libyan leader who was living in Egypt. By faking photographs and giving out a false report, Qaddafi was tricked on this one occasion. He boasted of how his assassination team had killed their man, then was informed that it didn't really happen. Nevertheless, President Hosni Mubarak of Egypt did learn that Qaddafi might have been involved in the assassination of India's Prime Minister Indira Gandhi, and that the Libyan leader had plans to assassinate at least six other world leaders. Named as being on the death list were British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, French President Francois Mitterand, West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl, Saudi King Fahd, and the chiefs of state of Kuwait and the United Arab Emirates; these in addition to President Reagan. Referring to Libya as "the Cuba of the Mediterranean," and considering Qaddafi even more dangerous to the world than Castro, H du B Reports that "Qaddafi's pipeline into America's highest agencies had started long before (the assassination of Egyptian President Anwar El-Sadat), and when it was learned how he got his arms for his Cuba of the Mediterranean, the world was shocked. By 1976 the tip-offs pouring into Washington could no longer be ignored and security services started investigating the records of former CIA agents who had become wealthy in the services of Qaddafi. . . Edwin P. Wilson brought no fewer than three dozen CIA-trained men into Qaddafi's game, supplying him with NATO's order of battle for nuclear war, designing weapons, teaching the use of exploding plastics for terrorist bombs and all the dirty tricks of assassinations and sabotage, from exploding ashtrays to timing devices. One of Wilson's dupes, or accomplices, helped him recruit an entire team of Green Berets. No computer can ever estimate the harm Wilson did to America before his conviction in Houston in 1980. Working with Wilson . . . was Frank Terpil, who is believed to have supplied the bomb and detonating device that killed Lord Louis Mountbatten in County Sligo in 1979. Always protected by the 'old boy network,' the two bought their way into companies which provided 50,000 timing devices which passed from Qaddafi to terrorist organizations armed and directed by his Maktab Tasdir Thawra, the 'Bureau of the Exportation of Revolution,' which Palestinians, Syrians, Algerians, and East Germans direct. This is the reservoir from which Qaddafi will send diversionary teams to America, to distract the FBI if he decides to send a team recruited by Terpil and Wilson to assassinate the President. Another terrorist force trained by North Koreans and Vietnamese in the Al-Beyda camp, south of Tobrouk, is working with the Irish IRA and quite probably provided the sophisticated timing device which failed to kill Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher and most of her cabinet on the night of October 12 in Brighton. There is little doubt that the device was of American construction." (Quoted from "H du B Reports," for October, 1984. A monthly foreign affairs letter. $75 per year. Extra copies, $1.00 each. Getting back to our discussion of the Cuba-type Scam of 1962 which is now being replayed in Nicaragua in 1984, there comes the inevitable question: If the Marxist Sandinistas are permitted to maintain a Communist Dictatorship in Nicaragua, and if the U.S. Government pledges to protect and assure the continuance of such a dictatorship (as happened with Cuba), then what will happen to neighboring El Salvador, which our Administration has been trying to keep free and independent? Well, first, remember that Salvadoran President Napoleon Duarte is himself a socialist. He initiated a "dialogue" with the Farabundo Marti revolutionaries (Marxists), and it was arranged that they would hold meetings in the United States, to discuss the possibility of a "coalition" government for El Salvador. So, Duarte aides and four guerrilla chiefs are holding meetings at, of all places the resuscitated and still radical Center for the Study of Democratic Institutions in Santa Barbara, California. For Duarte to hold meetings with foreign Communists in the United States, it was necessary for the Marxist insurgents to obtain special visas. Now, get this: Those visas were approved personally by U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz! In other words, our U.S. State Department is promoting a Socialist-Communist coalition government for El Salvador. This is the same sort of trick that U.S. Secretary of State George Marshall tried to play on Chiang Kai-shek when the latter was requested to form a coalition government with Communist leader Mao Tse-tung on Mainland China. And the same trick with a few variations which U.S. Secretary of State Henry Kissinger played on the South Vietnamese government in his secret meetings with the Communists in Paris. The result was a defeat for the U.S. and the South Vietnamese and a total victory for Communism! Since this coalition ploy has become regular State Department procedure ever since the Rockefeller-controlled CFR has had one of its members as a Secretary of State, and since Shultz is to remain at his Cabinet post, look for the same solution to El Salvador's problems sometime in the future. Furthermore, just to aid in the Rockefeller desired "socialization" of Central America, note the following which appeared on "The Inside Page" of the November 21st The Review of the News: "Back in favor with the State Department and the National Security Council is Helmut Sonnenfeldt, a Henry Kissinger protege who was embarrassed several years ago when his penchant for leaking confidences to the Soviets was exposed in print."

While all this prepared crisis has been labeled as a controversy between the United States and Nicaragua, let it be understood that this controversy is not with the Nicaraguans, but with the Sandinistas, a minority group that has managed to slip in and gain control over Nicaragua, just as did a minority Bolshevik group under Lenin and Trotsky manage to gain control over all of the Russians, with the financial support of the International Bankers of London, New York and Berlin. This was brought out indirectly when F. Sanders of The Moneychanger held an exclusive interview on October 16th, with Dr. Salvador Icaza, former appeals court judge who was forced to flee when the Marxist Sandinista guerrillas issued an order for his murder. He then joined the Nicaraguan counter-revolutionary forces fighting against the Sandinistas. Mr. Sanders published an extended account of his interview with Dr. Icaza, which appears in the November, 1984, issue of The Moneychanger, 868 Mt. Moriah, Suite 205, Memphis TN 38117. A monthly newsletter, $32.00 per year. Single copy: $5.00.

In Dr. Icaza's description of how the Sandinistas came to power, we were reminded of the similar situation in the conquest of Russia. There had been a people's revolution and Alexandr Kerensky, a Menshevik, had formed a new government. But a comparative handful of Bolsheviks managed to take control of the government, and the Communization of the Russian Empire was rapid and horrible. Much the same happened in Nicaragua. A revolt of the people against Somoza, supported by the Carter Administration, might have ended the revolution, but a comparative handful of Marxist Sandinistas slipped in and gained control of the government. Dr. Icaza says that President Carter knew the Sandinistas were Communists, but nothing was done to stop them. And to maintain their power, soldiers were brought in from the Soviet-bloc countries. Said Dr. Icaza, "What happened with the people of Afghanistan is the same thing that happened to us. Do you believe that the people of Poland don't want to get rid of the Soviet regime there? If they had the chance to rebel they would, but they have no chance. The same thing has happened in Nicaragua. The people are under the control of Soviet guns. My country is an occupied country. There are about 800 U.S. citizens that are pro-Soviets training Sandinista troops, siding with the Soviets, with the PLO, with the Cubans. We have 200 U.S. Roman Catholic priests or nuns that are to me the same as Soviets. The Soviets and the Sandinistas are training terrorists to send to El Salvador, and to the United States, to wash the brains of the naive people of the United States. The people of this country are so naive, so misinformed. . . ."

"My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge; because thou hast rejected knowledge, I will also reject thee. . . Seeing thou hast forgotten the law of thy God, I will also forget thy children." (Hosea 4:6).

TAXES, BUDGETS, AND MICROCHIPS

Treasury Secretary Donald Regan presented his tax reform plan to the public via the media; OMB Director David Stockman presented his budget reduction program to Ronald Reagan and White House associates; and the great debates began. These are debates that may last well into the 99th Congress and throughout next year before any final decisions are reached. Most important to the people was the tax reform proposal because it affects everybody. Already there had been months of wrangling in the Treasury, the Fed and elsewhere and, as a couple of columnists said, "Based on popular appeal, the Treasury's mountain has labored all year - and brought forth a mouse." Ronald Reagan did not endorse Donald Regan's tax reform plan. In fact, President Reagan is reported to have hoped for a flat tax program, an equal tax for all, with perhaps a more equal tax for some special interests. Many members of the ruling oligarchy favored a values added tax. Many autocrats had other ideas. But the Treasury felt that a tax reform plan that would give an alleged 78% of taxpayers a break, and load the burden onto business and industry, would be the most popular way of raising taxes without letting the public know that taxes had been raised. Actually, however, there's little use of spending time discussing Regan's tax reform plan, because it's just a proposal to get the debate rolling. Before any tax reform bill can become law, it must be approved by both Houses of Congress. And there's the rub. The way Congress has developed, almost every congressman has at least one special interest group which he is pledged to defend. And if any tax proposal hurts a special interest group, its defenders will be up in legislative arms and rules of order strategies to keep that special interest sacred and unassailable. If there is any Congressman who has no special interest to defend, there's still his constituency and his District which must be represented. If any tax proposal seems harmful to the interests of the businesses and the people of his District, that Congressman is supposed to prevent its passage if he can. There was a time, long years ago, when Congresses assembled to "establish justice, insure domestic tranquility, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare" etc. But now "general welfare" is interpreted as meaning "special welfare for special groups," be they bankers, those making a career as welfare recipients, or any other group except the Middle Class that will support them all as long as it lasts. We are often reminded of what a constituent told Colonel Davy Crockett, who was later to die as a defender of The Alamo, but at this particular time was a Congressman. The wise old farmer told Congressman Crockett: "If you have the right to give to one, you have the right to give to all; and, as the constitution neither defines charity nor stipulates the amount, you are at liberty to give to any and everything which you may believe, or profess to believe, is a charity, and to any amount you may think proper. You will very easily perceive what a wide door this would open for fraud and corruption and favoritism, on the one hand, and for robbing the people on the other. No, Colonel, Congress has no right to give charity. Individual members may give as much of their own money as they please, but they have no right to touch a dollar of the public money for that purpose. . . . The people have delegated to Congress, by the Constitution, the power to do certain things. To do these, it is authorized to collect and pay moneys, and for nothing else. Everything beyond this is usurpation, and a violation of the Constitution."

Now that "general welfare" has become "individual or group or special interest welfare," any kind of tax reform plan is going to have rough going, especially in the House. In addition, there is a sizeable minority that wants, not tax reform, but more taxes, supposedly to help lower the budget. Finally, if any tax reform bill manages to be passed by the House and the Senate, then comes the possible veto. President Reagan is very determined as to what he'll approve or send back for revision; and the Big Brass of the CFR and the Trilateral Commission must be satisfied. All in all, tax reform and budget cutting will occupy the new 99th Congress for many a month. And what happens to the economy because of the delay is another debatable subject. Of all the economists and financial experts that make their views heard, none of them seems to agree. Some say inflation may destroy us. Others speak of recession, or depression, or stagflation. There are some who say 1985 will be a banner year. Not being an economist or an "expert" in fiscal and monetary affairs, we can apply mere common sense and state that nothing is going to be permanently satisfactory until we return to the use of honest money. And the hard money advocates, like us, know in their hearts that there's no real chance of returning to an honest money standard so long as the present money managers continue to manage. And that brings up another confusing matter. We are told that a new kind of rainbow money is being created to go along with the new Aquarian rainbow age. At the same time we are advised that all kinds of money as we know it will be done away with and there will be nothing but electronic transfers and computerized dog tags with silicon chips, or even flesh imbedded biological chips, that are likened by some to the "mark of the beast," so that none can buy or sell unless they have the computerized identification and credit status mark of approval.

As for that new kind of paper currency that is being talked about, it is important to understand that all of the Trilateral Nations are planning to introduce the new currency. Japan was the first to actually do it. And so far as we know, Gary North was the first to publish the details. He wrote in his Remnant Review of 11/16/84 that: "Japan was the first test case. There are several reasons why it was a good choice. First, the introduction of the new currency came as part of a re-shuffling of the Japanese cabinet. That way, from the point of view of local news coverage, it could be relegated to smaller headlines. Second, the Japanese are democratic, and the likelihood of them making this a major political issue just after a major election is reduced. Third, Japan is in the Far East, and events in the Far East seldom attract the kind of attention that events in a major European nation attract. This makes it a lot easier to 'spike' the story in the West. Fourth, the Japanese traditionally have been more ready to accept statist measures, especially if the area affected by these measures are perceived to be areas of traditional government responsibility. Money is one such area. . . . The central bankers of the world have now conducted a successful 'laboratory test' of the public's willingness to protest. They conducted it in a major democratic nation, and a major world trade partner -- the leader of the third leg of the Trilateral triangle. They kept the story completely sealed off from the United States, and presumably sealed off from Western Europe (though I haven't verified this). The results were positive from their point of view: no mass protests, no flood of currency into the black markets (at least not reported where other citizens might be tempted to follow suit)." (Underlining as in original. Quoted from "Remnant Review," 11/16/84. Monthly, $57 per year. Single issues $5. P.O.Box 8204, Fort Worth, Texas 76112.)

The "laboratory test" being completed satisfactorily (to the megabankers), next will come the replacement of the U.S. Federal Reserve note, the English pound, the Australian and Canadian dollars, the German mark, the French franc -- all to be replaced but not necessarily in that order. Latest report on the American turnover came to us from F. Sanders. He wrote: "We have rumors from two sources which we were at presstime unable to confirm to our satisfaction. According to one source in a large Texas city on Friday, October 26, 1984, the new currency was unloaded at a Federal Reserve Branch. According to the eyewitness the new money was in different colors with an eagle [holographed] on one side and the Mt. Rushmore scene on the other. Our source insists that the eyewitness is reliable, but we could not talk to him firsthand. The witness tried to sneak in a camera to snap some color pictures, but without success. The assembled employees of the Fed branch were threatened with a 'visit from US marshalls' if they discussed the currency with outsiders. They were also told that they would receive instructions by tape on what to do with the new currency, and that these instructions would arrive the day after the election. . . . From Georgia we hear that a bank clerk has seen the new money in her bank and that she has been instructed that the new money would not be given out for old F$100 bills. Rather the holder of the old F$100s would receive a 'credit' from the bank. We have been chasing down these rumors for two years now, and they normally evaporate the closer we get to the source. We cannot personally vouch for the reliability of these informants, and we are not notoriously credulous. The Fed, the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, and the Treasury all still maintain the introduction of the new currency is six to 18 months away, and that it will be a one-for-one exchange with no demonitization of the old currency. If no demonitization, and if the new money really is already being distributed, then why all the secrecy? Why fear the public's knowing what is happening? Is it just bureaucratic paranoia, or some other purpose?" (F. Sanders, Moneychanger, P.O.Box 241302, Memphis, TN 38124. Monthly, F$32. After Dec. 31, F$36. Single copy, F$5).

As we understand it, this new money is a transitional step on the way toward total Electronic Funds Transfer (EFT); even as the credit card is a step toward universal computerized identity cards which will carry the description and credit standing of every individual. Of course, such a final step must await the establishment of a total world government. In this connection, there are some important paragraphs in The Money Lenders, by Anthony Sampson. We quote: "The bankers still yearned for more automation, and they saw their credit cards as only one stage in the development of Electronic Funds Transfer (EFT), which could by-pass people altogether with the help of an ATM (automatic teller machine), an OLTT (one-line teller terminal), and a POS (point-of-sale) terminal). Their ambition was to build a system which would allow a customer to make his purchase through a point-of-sale terminal in a shop which would instantly debit his account in New York, or reject him if he had no money or credit. It was a thrilling prospect. There were political complications, of course about Big Brother: but President Ford appointed a national commission on Electronic Funds Transfer which reported in 1977 that the system would benefit consumers by stimulating competition, providing more outlets and reducing costs, and which was confident that there could be effective safeguards to prevent snooping. . . . Nagging doubts still remained about the threat to the freedom of the individual. Already the credit card, when used for renting cars or hotel rooms, has proved an invaluable device for discreet surveillance by authoritarian governments . . . which wish to keep track on people's movements without being seen to do so. Point-of-sale terminals, once linked up to a police computer, could tell the police where an individual was to be found at that very instant. In 1971 a group of experts on computers and surveillance were brought together in Washington and confronted with this hypothetical problem: 'Suppose you are given the assignment of designing a system for the surveillance of all citizens and visitors within the boundaries of the Soviet Union. What would be your decision?' After two days, the group of experts decided that they could not conceive of anything better than Electronic Funds Transfer." (Quoted from The Money Lenders, by Anthony Sampson. 1982. The Viking Press, 625 Madison Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10022. 336 pages with index, hard cover, $16.95).

In this step-by-step process of psychologically conditioning the people for a moneyless world society, introducing the new paper currency first in Japan was referred to as a "laboratory test" to check people's reaction to the change in currency. We are told that a different kind of laboratory test has been conducted by the Lone Star Bank of Dallas. A Cable News Network story reported that this bank would no longer accept cash for deposit nor cash a customer's check. All bank-to-business or bank-to-customer transactions were to be done by electronic funds transfer or other non-currency instruments. We have no information on how the experiment fared when the bank went totally EFT. Also, the Southwest Radio Church of Oklahoma City reported in its The Gospel Truth publication for November 1984, that U.S. soldiers are being used in experiments testing computerized dog tags. The report stated that, according to The Indianapolis Star of June 6, 1984 (page 19): "Computerized dog tags developed at Fort Benjamin Harrison are being called successful after recent tests showed 92 percent of the wearers experienced few problems . . . said Chris Occhialini, manager of the U.S. Army's soldier data tag systems program. 'We accomplished what we set out to do. We stored a fairly complete soldier's record onto a small tag that included medical and financial information . . . there was enough success locally that the tag will be tested next year by an estimated 5,000 soldiers in a 'combat situation' at Fort Lewis, Wash. About the size of a traditional metal dog tag, the plastic data tag contains a microchip with 8,000 characters of information. Information on the tag, including medical, financial and personnel records, is read through a computer. The data tags also were used at the post's hospital by soldiers who were ill. Their medical history was quickly retrievable . . . Tags were also used in personnel departments by soldiers applying for travel reimbursement and in maintaining financial records. In the personnel division, tags were used for soldiers applying for Officers Candidate School. A soldier must meet 22 requirements before applying and must ask a clerk to review his or her qualifications on each requirement, a process that can take hours. (But now, Occhialini said) 'Within 40 seconds we can take the tag, put it in the microprocessor and it will say, 'Yes, you're qualified' or 'No, you're not.' If you want a listing of why you're not qualified, it will print that out for you.'" Just think, if such an ID tag were forced upon every person, Big Brother would have absolute control over every individual wearing such a tag!

Yet another step: This same issue of The Indianapolis Star said there was always a chance that such a dog tag could be lost. To guard against this: "Fort Benjamin Harrison will soon test new automatic teller machines that use hand prints rather than personal identification numbers. It's the first system of its kind in Indiana. Designed to increase security and curb fraud, it will be watched carefully by Indiana banks. Now someone finding or stealing a soldier's wallet containing a bank card and a notation of the identification number can make withdrawals from a conventional teller machine. Hand print identification would prevent bank cards being used by anyone other than the owner, according to the Army Finance Center. Some 600 soldiers attending Soldier Support Center classes will participate in the five-month test at the fort. Other experimental identification systems use fingerprint or retina patterns from the eye to avoid fraud but are still too expensive for extensive use." And yet to come: "A bio-chip implanted just under the skin in the hand . . . would be the perfect solution to all the problems that are associated with the developing cashless society. The day is coming -- and perhaps in the not too distant future -- when all transactions will be done through the use of code marks and numbers." And total control over the actions of every individual will be possible. . . .

And yet, when authoritarian humanists tried to build that Tower of Babel . . .

THE REIGN OF TERROR CONTINUES

Indira Gandhi was assassinated six weeks ago. A gas-storage facility exploded - or was exploded - in Mexico City a month ago. A poison gas leak - with lingering suspicions of sabotage - occurred in Bhopal, India two weeks ago. The skyjacking and murder of two United States citizens occurred last week in Tehran, Iran, with every indication that the Iranian government cooperated with the terrorists. Last Monday a Puerto Rican terrorist group took responsibility for two bombs that exploded at a U.S. Army recruiting base and at the island's state university. Just before the convening of the NATO Summit this past weekend, a U.S. Army oil storage facility was set afire. Meanwhile three Americans - diplomat William Buckley, CNN newsman Jeremy Levin and the Rev. Benjamin Welr - have been held hostage since last spring in Lebanon. Another American - librarian Peter Kilburn - disappeared in Beirut two weeks ago. And indirectly connected with terrorist activity is the death by hunger of hundreds of thousands, perhaps millions, of men, women and children in Ethiopia. We classify this as terrorist activity because the Communists are using hunger as a weapon to liquidate dissidents and anti-Communists in Ethiopia and Eritrea. Berhane Gebre, a spokesman for the Tigre People's Liberation Front said the Marxist government of Ethiopia has refused to allow safe passage for relief deliveries in the northern Tigre and Eritrean regions. According to Dereje Deressa, secretary general of the Ethiopian People's Democratic Alliance, this use of hunger as a weapon began four years ago. Mr. Deressa said, "The government decided to pursue a line of thinking that if we can't win, we will starve them" in the so-called "raid campaign" launched in 1980 "to push the Eritreans into the Red Sea." He said the government poisoned wells, denied villagers access to markets, actions which are partly to blame for the present famine. While Ethiopians were starving, the Marxist government spent over $100 million celebrating their communist victory. We are being deluged with stories of the tragedy unfolding in Ethiopia. Hoboes and bums in Los Angeles donated $175 to assist the starving masses. Rock stars wrote and published a song that will raise millions. Our government as well as regular relief agencies are raising millions upon millions to assist the starving Ethiopians. No one can discredit this kind of charity. But the mass media should inform its readers and listeners that the food going to Ethiopia from the United States is being turned over to the Communists who actually distribute the food. And the food is being distributed in the towns and cities where Marxists are in control. Rural people who travel miles in an attempt to gain food for their starving children are turned away. An article in the Washington Inquirer of December 7 is headlined, "Ethiopia Shoots the Starving." The article states that persons requesting food must display government issued ID cards. The people in the areas not controlled by the Marxists have no such cards, get no food. If too insistent, they are shot. It is a strange kind of paradox in that Americans who do their best to assist starving Africans are actually assisting the Communists in their goal of destroying dissidents and relocating all others in collectivized farms - or letting them starve if they refuse to be collectivized.

The situation in India is thoroughly confusing. Before Indira Gandhi's assassination she had made deals with some 33 different banks: eight-year loans that would finance an aluminum plant in Orissa, an oil and gas refinery and storage facilities, six more air-buses for the Air-India Shipping Corporation, as well as money which probably was to be used to purchase weapons and tanks from the Soviet satellites. But the Prime Minister's assassination and the appointment of her son Rajiv as the new Prime Minister, caused great unrest among the bankers, as well as among the people of India because of Gandhi's son suddenly being named their leader. As a prelude to the horrible poison gas disaster at Bhopal, the following report, published before that event by Globescan, is important and we quote:

GANDHI AND THE ANTI-SIKH VIOLENCE: THE REAL STORY

Press reports about new Indian Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi would have us believe he is less pro-Soviet and more pro-business than his mother Indra. This attempt to engage Western sympathies, however, is partly motivated by his need to garner Western support [including bankers' support-Ed.] or at least neutralize Western hostility, in the face of powderkeg Indian instability which threatens to blow the nation apart. The tenuousness of Rajiv's grip on power is illustrated by the fact that the recent anti-Sikh violence, which claimed the lives of thousands of people, was not simply the result of Hindu outrage at the assassination of Indra Gandhi, as the media would have us believe. Our correspondent on the scene filed this report:

A group of nine Indian opposition parties and a number of national newspapers have launched an inquiry into the ruling Congress I party's possible role in encouraging a recent wave of anti-Sikh violence which followed the death of Prime Minister Indra Gandhi. Mrs. Gandhi was the founder of Congress I (which stands for Indra) and was gunned down on 31 October by two Sikh members of her own personal bodyguard. Parliamentary members of India's largest opposition party, the Baratiya Janata, maintain that in the early hours following the assassination, Congress I party officials were on the street inciting Hindu mobs to attack Sikh homes and businesses. Dozens of eyewitnesses have reported to the Indian press they saw well-known leaders of the Youth Congress I in the streets accompanied by armed gangs. At the same time, other witnesses say police often stood by, watching the killing and looting. Opposition political figures accuse Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi of having created the wave of unrest after his mother's death that would sweep him into power. He needed the chaos because of the Indian constitution: upon the death or resignation of a Prime Minister, power passes to a member of the cabinet, after a majority vote of a quorum of at least four other ministers. These rules, however, were not applied to Rajiv Gandhi when he ascended to the post of Prime Minister a few hours after the death of his mother. Only two cabinet members could be assembled to vote -- and Rajiv himself was technically barred from becoming prime minister because he wasn't, indeed had never been, a cabinet minister. (Quoted from "Globescan," Paris, Geneva. Published 24 times a year. North American Service Bureau: 2233 Wisconsin Ave, N.W. Washington D.C. 2007. $125 per year).

* * * * *

There was this chaos which covered up Rajiv's unconstitutional appointment as prime minister, followed by India-wide resentment at his having assumed the post, which led to greater unrest and the possibility that Rajiv Gandhi would not be able to maintain that position of leadership unless more chaos was created to divert the people's attention. This was the situation when an underground leak of poison gas from an installation owned by an American multinational corporation occurred. No comment.

Earlier in this report we mentioned the terrorists setting fire to an oil installation prior to the NATO Summit meeting which Secretary of State George Shultz attended. We later learned that bombs had ripped through five fuel pipelines to be used by NATO in case of crisis. Said Shultz: "One way or another, the law-abiding nations of the world will put an end to terrorism and to this barbarism that threatens the very foundations of civilized life." He said the United States would have to continue dealing with "the moral complexity of how we are to defend ourselves and achieve worthy ends in a world where evil finds safe haven and dangers abound. We will all have to wrestle with the dilemma that confronts moral people in an imperfect world." The Secretary of State said this and more, as he prepared to talk to the delegates from the other countries that are members of NATO. The principle subject on the agenda: How to deal with the Soviet Union when he and others meet to discuss arms reduction, etc. He said all these things about terrorists and terrorism as he prepared to talk to the people who sponsor and finance most of the terrorists of the world, and he will attempt to make more treaties which the Soviet Union can break whenever it is to the Communists' advantage to do so. Newsweek of December 17 reported that "The White House is gingerly exploring the possibility of warmer relations with the Soviet Union not only at the summit, but at lower levels too. In advance of next month's meeting between George Shultz and Andrei Gromyko, eight trustees of the American Council of Young Political Leaders . . . are flying to Moscow in an attempt to revive a political-exchange program suspended after the 1979 invasion of Afghanistan. The bipartisan group began lobbying for administration approval in 1982 but was denied permission after the downing of Korean Air Lines Flight 007. This time, approval came from National Security Council chieftain Robert McFarlane, and the U.S. Information Agency is putting up $19,000 to pay the emissaries' way." On the official level, according to The New York Times, President Reagan sent none other than Armand Hammer as his personal

At the time we overlooked the fact that on September 21 the United Nations welcomed its 159th member - the mini-nation of Brunei. Its official name and title is the Muslim Sultanate of Negara Brunei Darussalam. It occupies a strip of land along the northwest coast of the Island of Borneo. Because it has an excellent harbor for ships (Brunei Bay) it was annexed and made a British protectorate in 1880. The rest of it was just a jungle and sparsely inhabited. At the start of World War II it was taken over by the Japanese and its harbor was protected by the building of a landing strip for airplanes. With the defeat of Japan the British took it back, and managed its foreign affairs. Still later, the oil companies discovered that it is rich in oil and natural gas. The British were induced to turn it loose and it became an independent nation on January 1, 1984. Brunei has a population of 277,000, has roughly the land area of Delaware, is now ruled over by His Majesty the Sultan Yang Dipertuan, said to be the 29th of his exalted line. Now, as a member of the UN, Negara Brunei Darussalam joins such other world powers as Burkina Faso, Guinea-Bissau, Vanuatu, Surinam, St. Christopher, and Djibouti as countries with a UN vote equal to our own - but not equal to the USSR which has three votes.

We remember Brunei. Shortly after getting out of prison camp (three years, one month and one day), and feeling we had regained enough strength and courage to eyewitness a battle as a war correspondent, we attached ourself to an Australian contingent that was fighting under General MacArthur's command. We eagerly walked off a landing craft carrying a portable typewriter in one hand and a rifle in the other, and we promptly sank into a hole in the beach about ten feet deep. We literally walked under the water onto the Island of Borneo, to the laughter of a whole company of Aussies. Later we got to a hill overlooking the Labuan Airstrip which our troops were busy taking away from the Japanese defenders. Lying prone on the ground alongside one of the Australian troopers, we suddenly looked up and saw General MacArthur standing near us, watching the progress of the battle. The Australian stirred and shouted, "Get down, you, before you get us all killed." The General smiled, apologized, crouched down and took a more protected place behind a hillock. As we flew back to Manila to report our victory via radio to America, we began to understand that General MacArthur knew no fear simply because he knew his time had not yet come. That's a comfort to a predestinarian.

envoy to Moscow, to set the stage for the forthcoming summit talks between the US and the USSR. Hammer, it will be recalled, was a personal friend of Lenin, has made more deals with the Soviet Union than any other American with the possible exception of the Rockefellers. In this connection, we received from a friend the xerox of an article which appeared in the World Almanac of 1895. It said: "In May The World published a page article on the Standard Oil Company, giving the entire text of the secret agreement between the Standard people and the Russian Minister of Finance, who acted for the refiners of Baku, in Southern Russia. . . The agreement partitioned off the markets of the world between the Standard Company and the Russian refiners, and all opposition was to be wiped out. . . . The publication of the agreement in The World shattered the contract. William Libby and William Rockefeller, the agents of the Standard in Europe, endeavored to counter the adverse influence of The World's article, which was copied or quoted by all the leading European papers. . . . The blow to the Standard Company was a severe one, for the Russian agreement has not been carried out. . . ." Just thought you might be interested in knowing that the Rockefellers were dealing with Russia and seeking world monopolies with same as early as 1895.

But, about these present attempts to deal with a Communized Russia, CFR member Paul Nitze has been appointed to take over when Armand Hammer leaves off in the attempts to make new deals on arms. So the Rockefeller family is still in there trying to make deals for the mutual benefit of the Rockefellers and the Communists. As for these deals the Rockefeller-dominated State Department seems so anxious to make with the Kremlin, there were more words of warning. Among them, Imants Lesinski, a former KGB agent who found it possible to defect to the West in 1978, said the one thing he learned while working with the KGB was that "You can't trust the Communists. My native Latvia perished because it didn't have a strong defense. So did countless other countries. America must remain strong. Power is the only thing the Soviets will listen to and respect. Don't deal with the Soviets. The only thing you can trust them to do is lie." The British "Intelligence International" commented on a series of talks that have been going on for years, stated: "Consider the following. In October, the 34th session of the Nato-Warsaw Pact negotiations on Mutually Balanced Force Reductions in Central Europe marked the end of the 12th year of these negotiations in Vienna. During the 12 years not one millimeter of progress has been made. At every round of the talks exactly the same set-piece speeches are made by both sides. . . In these circumstances, would any harm be done if the talks were now suspended. . .?" In our opinion no harm would be done if no new talks on disarmament are ever begun again. Every treaty, agreement or convention ever made with the Soviets has been broken. Why make more to be broken? Is it because certain of the "authoritarian elite" find it profitable to continue a semblance of relationship with the Soviets? The old adage of "once bitten, twice shy" certainly doesn't apply in our dealings with a known enemy.

The Apostle Paul warned the Ephesians: "And have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them." In recalling the words of President Washington's farewell address, it seems that he and our founding fathers felt that this verse applies to nations as well as individuals. Surely, vowing to fight terrorism and at the same time seeking fellowship with the initiators and financiers of terrorism is an unfruitful work on America's part.

RESHUFFLING THE PACK

"Hear ye. We are now at the beginning of Phase II of the Reagan Revolution. You have noticed the Revolution, haven't you? David Stockman was going to 'take a meat cleaver to the federal budget' and 'cut it to the bone'; your taxes were to dwindle to negligibility; the budget was going to be balanced and deficits banished. The President spaketh this rhetoric, and it was good. And it was the morning and the evening of the First Term." Thus quoth James Bidnotto in his review of a book called "Burning Money" by J. Peter Grace. But something happened as the President acknowledged his landslide victory and began preparing for his Second Term Inaugural. He who had spoken so forcefully of disappearing deficits, lowering taxes, liquidation of Education and Energy Departments and other matters of conservative bent, began to let others speak in his stead. He continued to lead the parade, but as a man wearing a ten gallon hat and riding a white horse. He adopted the hall-fellow-well-met role and acted as the friendly father in the White House. In short, he seemed to turn all his administrative duties over to aides and secretaries. Which would have been in order if those aides and secretaries who had accompanied him from California and who were mostly conservatives were still with him. But they had slowly drifted away or had been pushed out. They had been replaced by members of the Council on Foreign Relations, or the Trilateral Commission, or both. Edwin Meese III remained in the wings, waiting possible confirmation as the new Attorney General. He had been cleared for duty by the appropriate committees and courts; but Common Cause refused to take yes for an answer and still listed the ouster of Meese as a priority. Casper Weinberger remained as one of the President's original team, but he was always a doubtful supporter of righteous causes, being a long-time member of the CFR, as is J. Peter Grace, the present budget-paring prophet. As Howard Phillips of Conservative Caucus declared, President Reagan could go far towards reducing that potential trillion dollar budget if he'd only veto the money-spending bills sent to him by the Welfare State Congress. But "Reagan dislikes vetoing, wants to be hall fellow well met with the members of Congress. So he wears the white hat and stays popular with everyone" at a time when "he must draw a line in the dirt and say, 'This Is It'. We cannot stand any more uncontrolled federal spending."

But the man in the white hat has taken upon himself the role of king, allowing his ministers to govern the people and run the country to ruin. Now in complete charge of foreign policy is George Shultz of CFR, who has made his deal with National Security Adviser Robert MaFarlane of CFR. Similarly, Donald Regan of CFR is in charge of tax programming; Paul Volcker of CFR and TC is the money manager; and so on down the line, with James Baker of CFR said to be running the White House. There was a time when the so-called invisible Government remained invisible to the public and ran things from behind the stage. But now the Oligarchic Elite has an agent in almost every department of the national government and the President is relegated to wearing a white hat and making an occasional pronouncement generally designed to placate the populace and keep the people comforted. As an example, let's take the case of Secretary of State George Shultz. He's reshuffling the entire foreign policy team, sidelining those with conservative leanings and replacing them with those faithful to the policies of George Shultz and the Oligarchic Elite of which he is a part. An article concerning the reshuffling of people in the State Department and diplomatic service appeared in the December 14th Issue of The Christian Science Monitor. The front-page headline read: "Shultz Acts to

BORN AGAIN!

By Frank Gaydosh

Historians tell us that in 1775 5% of the colonists were loyal to Great Britain and 5% were in favor of the revolutionary war, the other 90% weren't interested one way or another. Today in America we have possibly 1% of the people who are influencing and shaping the destiny of our country. But they are a very powerful group who control our government, our schools, our churches, our news media, T.V., movies, and finances. Probably 2% of the Americans are truly born again Bible believing, God honoring, law abiding Christians and they are just beginning to wake up as to what is going on in America.

Just what is a born again Bible believing Christian? I consider myself one. Being born again to me means that I acknowledge myself as a Sinner without hope here and hereafter without Jesus Christ and His saving Grace. I believe the Bible is the Word of God and it tells me that God sent His Son Jesus Christ to die on the cross to pay the penalty of my sins. God the Holy Spirit has given me the faith to believe in Jesus Christ as my LORD and SAVIOUR. Eph. 2:8 & 9 - "For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God: Not of works, lest any man should boast." Saved by faith to live by faith in obedience to God's Laws. The Bible tells me I have been regenerated into God's image and unto good works. I want to do good works not to be saved (Jesus Christ has already saved me) but to show my gratitude for God's saving grace on my behalf. I now have complete Freedom and Liberty in Jesus Christ, not to do as I please but to live in obedience to His Commandments. (Jesus said if you love me keep my Commandments.) What are these good works to be?

1. Everything I do, I do as unto the Lord.
2. By God's grace I will be honest, dependable and trustworthy in all my dealings with others.
3. I will work and be responsible for taking care of myself and my family.
4. I will be thoughtful, considerate and helpful to my neighbors. To those who want to listen I want to share with them what God has done in my life.
5. I will provide the means I need to protect myself, my family and my property, with my life if necessary.

I believe that the majority of those who are truly born again believe and try to live by the above criteria. Wouldn't you, as an employer, like to employ such people and wouldn't you, as an employee, like to be employed by such people? In my opinion there is no hope for America unless the above principle is accepted by at least 5 to 10% of our people. God says that we Christians are supposed to be the salt of the earth. 2 to 5% salt will preserve 100 lbs. of meat; 2 to 5% of real born again Christians will add enough preservative to our beloved America to keep it from being destroyed.

God gives me hope in this life that he will guide me in the path of righteousness. God gives me assurance that when I die, I will be with Him, not because of my good works but because Christ died and paid the penalty for my sins. God also tells me that if I live in obedience to His Word and Laws that I will find joy and peace in my life, and He will give me the power, strength, and wisdom to overcome any problems in my life. Without God and His Law - there can be no justice, there can be no peace, there can be no real economic prosperity, there can be no discerning of good and evil or right and wrong.

(This is the real Christmas Message: The Gift of God to His people)

Position Career Policymakers" and the subheading explained: "It Is Seen as Quiet Process of Professionalization." Not a word was mentioned as to whether President Reagan - who's supposed to be in charge - approves or disapproves of the re-ordering of the entire foreign affairs section of his administration. Full credit is given to Shultz. The article by Charlotte Salkowski of the CSM staff begins:

"As the second Reagan term gets under way, Secretary of State George Shultz appears to be working quietly to professionalize the making of foreign policy and lay the groundwork for pragmatic policies and solid achievements. Diplomatic observers see recent prospective personnel changes as a sign that Mr. Shultz is moving assertively to dominate the foreign policy scene despite continuing differences of view and bureaucratic squabbling within the administration. He is managing to put knowledgeable people in important posts and, according to State Department sources, is planning further changes of lower-level positions." We added the underlining, for emphasis. Read knowledgeable people to mean people who are conversant with and willing to help promote the One World Desires of the "Elite." Paul H. Nitze was appointed, not as a special assistant to the President, but "special assistant to the secretary on arms control." The Shultz reshuffle includes the following: Thomas Pickering is to succeed Samuel Lewis as ambassador to Israel; Harry Shlauderman is to be the principal negotiator in Central America, conducting talks with Nicaragua; Bernard Kalb, television correspondent, replaces John Hughes as State Department spokesman; etc. Still without any direct reference to the man in the white hat in the White House, the article notes that "Shultz has also established a close and effective working relationship with Robert C. McFarlane, the president's national security adviser. While both must still take account of Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger's and CIA Director William Casey's views, they now have more weight in their decisionmaking process." But it seems that the Eastern Establishment still has somewhat of a problem in that the governments of the rest of the world still look upon Ronald Reagan as America's Chief Executive and therefore the boss when dealing with other government bosses in matters relating to arms control and such. And this seems to bother Shultz and the Oligarchs, because the CSM article warns: "How the new arms control delegation will work out in Geneva, where the President will be facing his first and most important foreign policy issue, remains to be seen. Some analysts say it will be impossible to make progress on a nuclear arms agreement as long as such figures as Richard N. Perle, the hard-line expert at the Pentagon, and Edward L. Rowny, negotiator in the aborted START talks, are a part of the negotiating process. But others say . . . Rowney and Perle will fight for their positions. But they are good soldiers, and once a decision is made by the President they will not undercut him (as George Shultz might-Ed.)." It seems that, since President Reagan cannot be ignored when the arms talks begin, Shultz is trying to "re-educate" the President so he won't go against the plans of the Eastern Establishment. Or, as the Monitor puts it: "Shultz is getting directly involved in arms control and wants to keep the President up to speed so he can keep up," a State Department official says.

And so, the first big international confrontation to mark the beginning of President Reagan's Second Term will be the probably unproductive Arms Limitation Conference to be held in Geneva next month. By overcoming any and all opposition from Defense Secretary Weinberger and CIA Director Casey, and in spite of the presence of hardliners Perle and Rowney in the delegation, George Pratt Shultz will assume personal control over all that is done and said by the American delegation. He will "keep the President up to speed so he can keep up," and Paul Nitze who actually heads the American delegation, will report directly to his superior, Secretary of State George Pratt Shultz. Now, all of this political action in Washington has been countered by some clever psychopolitical reaction on the part of the competing Communists. Out of the Kremlin in Moscow to Number 10, Downing Street in London, went the Politburo's most polished con-man, Mikhail S. Gorbachev, with his attractive and English-speaking wife. Gorbachev is said to be a lawyer, the only member of the Politburo who is a college graduate, second in command at the Kremlin, and presently slated to replace the aged and ailing Konstantin Chernenko upon the latter's demise. He is said to look more like a London banker than a Moscow Communist, and he immediately called for a Rolls Royce limousine to transport him to Downing Street, for lunch and a five-hour conference with Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher; then to talk with members of the British Parliament; to visit various labor and liberal leaders; and to complete a full week making impressions in London. Matching Gorbachev's "charisma" was Raisa Maximova Gorbachev's "elegance" is the way the couple was described by the London media.

Most unusual was the way in which Prime Minister Thatcher became a part of the psychopolitical maneuvering. That the Kremlin official met with the British official for a five hour conference seemed strange enough. But it is known that Mrs. Thatcher does not approve of President Reagan's Star Wars plan to "militarize outer space" as his opponents say. After the Gorbachev-Thatcher meeting Gorbachev told the press: "I want to stress . . . it is particularly important to prevent the arms race from being extended into space." And Mrs. Thatcher replied: "One does not want to go to a higher and higher level of armaments." Neither of them seemed to admit that the Star Wars plan is totally defensive, meant to prevent nuclear missiles from reaching the United States, but in no way are they offensive weapons. However, this anti-Star Wars feeling may have made of Prime Minister Thatcher an unconscious (we hope) accomplice in Gorbachev's con-game. Anyway, immediately after her talks with the Soviet official, Margaret Thatcher flew to Peking, ostensibly for the sole purpose of signing a treaty that gives Hong Kong, the world's third largest financial center, back to the Chinese. However, in addition to signing a treaty, she talked for three hours with Premier Zhao Ziyang of China, conferred with leader Deng Xiaoping, and then with more than 100 other dignitaries from China and Hong Kong. That treaty had already been signed by the necessary parties, her signing of it was just a necessary formality and since the treaty doesn't become effective until July in 1997, the extreme hurry to meet the Chinese Communist leaders immediately after conferring with the Soviet leader, seems noteworthy. Then, after her conferences in Peking, Mrs. Thatcher flew on to Washington where she would confer with President Reagan and Secretary of State Shultz. Subject of the discussion: the upcoming Arms Limitation Conference. Just why Prime Minister Thatcher should have become so intimately involved is questionable. But there is the possibility that in future conferences concerning NATO vs. the Warsaw Pact Nations, Mrs. Thatcher may replace President Reagan as leader and spokesman for the Western Nations. And as for the first rounds of the arms control talks in Geneva, January 7-8, they will be between U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz and Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko. All that President Reagan will need to do will be to sign any treaty that the Master Planners force upon us - if anything more than talk really develops at Geneva.

In view of what is happening on the world scene as President Reagan's Second Term nears, the words found on the second page of this report should be comforting.

THE PROBLEMS WE FACE IN 1985

The Year of Big Brother has come, and gone, and most of the problems that faced us a year ago are the same problems that face us today. True, there have been great advances in science and technology. There was the artificial heart, the Discovery's crew recovering two communications satellites which marked something beyond mere "extra vehicular activity" in space, the revelations concerning a new satellite that can really do all the things Orwell's detecting devices were said to do, and other developments heralding the swallowing up of the industrial age by the new technological age. And there was what The New York Times and its companion commercial members of the media referred to in a rather derogatory manner as "The New Patriotism." They pointed to the public response to the successful invasion of Grenada, what Washington Post columnist Haynes Johnson called the "bombastic, flag-waving, Yankee-Doodle-Dandy-blare-of-bands sort of patriotism" occasioned by the public response to American victories in the Olympic Games. The Lefties of the Captive Press didn't like the way athletes were greeted by crowds chanting "U.S.A." They didn't like the fact that so many Americans made July 4 a real festival of American pride. And their hatred extended to criticism of the way in which Christians observed the birthday of their Saviour. Darrell Turner, associate editor of Religious News Service reported that "Religion, which usually attracts the interest of secular journalism only when something spectacular occurs, dominated much of the news in the U.S. during a large portion of 1984. Unlike the one-shot extravaganzas that usually accompany, say, the election of a pope or the Russia trips of Billy Graham, this year the coverage was continuous. Battles raged over the influence of religion in politics, the relationship of some fundamentalists and sects to the Jewish population, and over the implications of the U.S. Catholic bishop's statement on the economy. From intradenominational dogmatic disputes to international affairs, religion seemed to take an ever-increasing role in influencing social and political policies." And finally, there began to develop in 1984 a feeling of economic betterment, at least temporarily. But, for the most part, and we repeat, the problems that faced us a year ago are the same problems that face us today.

As December 1984 came to a close former Congressman Ron Paul wrote: "If only the President had the line item veto!" "If only we could pass a balanced budget amendment!" "If only we had a fair flat tax!" "If only we could better fine-tune the economy through fiscal and monetary policy!" "If only the Grace Commission Report could be implemented!" "If we could only win this court case against the Federal Reserve or the IRS, things would get better." With the exception of the Grace Committee Report which was published a little later, these are the same problems that were plaguing the Nation a year ago. Nothing really new has been added. The school prayer amendment still hangs over our heads. Likewise the abortion controversy, the drug traffic, child-abuse, wife-rape, teen-age suicides, drunk-driving, and on and on. The problems remain with us because we have tried to eliminate or reduce the pain of symptoms without ever going to the root of the evil. As an example of this "symptom treatment" take the case of the line item veto which Ronald Reagan could use when Governor of California, but which he has no power to use as President. If given this power to cut certain items out of an overall, omnibus spending bill, much money could be saved, says the President. However, in Reagan's first four years as President he vetoed only four spending bills. As Governor of California, with the line item veto available to him, Reagan vetoed a paltry sum of 60 million dollars in spending and did not use the veto at all in 1971.

Governor Deukmejian in contrast vetoed 1.8 billion dollars in spending in his first two years. But the most dangerous thing about the line item veto is that it could be used for political purposes, to keep Congressmen "toeing the line" by threatening to veto certain items important to their districts. It could, for example, be used to delete necessary appropriations such as defense items, while allowing subsidies to friendly dictators and international bankers to be kept in the bill. In short, the line item veto will not solve our problems of overspending, and could be a very dangerous step in the wrong direction of delivering too much power to a single individual.

Take the crusade for a balanced budget as another "symptom treatment." Because the Congress is not anxious to start a balanced budget amendment on its way toward ratification, there is a great hue and cry for a Constitutional Convention for the alleged purpose of adding such an amendment to the Constitution. In previous Reports we have pointed out the extreme danger of calling any such Convention, because it could be used for other purposes, such as rewriting the whole Constitution, or approving a new one such as the Newstates Constitution, already

THE SHULTZ PUTSCH. Last week (12/21/84) we wrote of how President Reagan was relegating himself to a sort of ceremonial presidency, a hall-fellow-well-met role in which he "wears a white hat", stays friendly with everyone, maintains his "great communicator" act; but turns over all his administrative duties to aides and cabinet secretaries. We wrote of how Secretary of State George Shultz was taking charge of the situation and was, in effect, rebuilding the national government in the image desired by the controlling Eastern Establishment. Confirming much of what we wrote is the following article which was front-paged by the Washington Inquirer in its issue of December 21, which read:

"Having obtained President Reagan's off-hand approval of his request to 'put his own people in key posts,' Secretary of State George Shultz has launched a major purge of department personnel, including as many as 14 Ambassadors, at least six of them Reagan political appointees. 'It's a counter-revolution against the Reagan Revolution,' according to one ambassador who was furious when he learned he was to be replaced by reading about it in a newspaper. The current purge list includes such staunch Reagan loyalists as Greg Newell, ambassador for international organization affairs. Newell is said to have ruffled Shultz's feathers by taking a hard line on the U.S. pullout from UNESCO. Having moved into State from a White House perch, Newell was suspected of dealing directly with former White House colleagues in holding firm against career foreign service types who wanted the U.S. to give UNESCO a 'second chance' in return for promises of good behavior. Jim Malone, another reported victim of the purge, is said to have merited the undying enmity of the FSO career types by helping to find the 'Law of the Sea' treaty another sacred cow of the Foggy Bottom 'professionals.' 'This hit list has the thumbprints of the career foreign service people written all over it,' according to one administration official. 'They are in love with detente and so is Shultz, so the old Reaganites are being cleared out.' The Inquirer learned at deadline the following political appointee ambassadors will be removed: James Theberg (Chile); Lewis Tambs (Colombia); Curtin Windsor (Costa Rica); William Hewitt (Jamaica); Arthur Davis (Paraguay); and Thomas Aranda (Uruguay). The career FSO ambassadors to Honduras, Panama, Belize, Ecuador, the Dominican Republic, and Trinidad-Tobago are also slated for removal. Also on the Shultz hit list, according to administration sources, are Reaganites Hugh Montgomery, director of intelligence and research, Daniel Terra, the popular ambassador-at-large for cultural affairs, and Richard McCormack, assistant secretary for economic affairs. 'This is Shultz's big gamble,' one Senate observer told the Inquirer, 'if he wins he has the President in his pocket for the next four years.' . . . (Washington Inquirer, P.O. Box 28526, Washington, D.C., 20038. Weekly 8-page tabloid. 1st class mail, $30 per year.)

written and prepared for such an event. Also, there is no need for any such amendment because legislation has been passed which demands a balanced budget. Congress conveniently overlooks and ignores that fact. But if called to task the Congress well might propose a Constitutional Amendment, because that would give them several years to continue their overspending before any such Amendment could be ratified! So long as such an Amendment is being debated, all kinds of financial aid can be doled out to special interests, who return the favor by securing someone's political career.

Along with this budget balancing trick is the crusade for tax reform. But most all of the tax plans floating around Washington today are designed, not to actually cut taxes, but to raise revenue in such a way that the average taxpayer will not understand that this is happening. Also, we should remember that before 1913 incomes were never taxed, and in a truly free society incomes would never be taxed. Furthermore, in the beginning this sixteenth amendment was supposed to apply to income derived from businesses and corporations, not from individuals. And wages paid for services rendered is not income in the true sense; but you'll never get the IRS to believe it. Income taxes "are the logical component of big government and are a direct method of financing socialist/welfare programs," to again quote Ron Paul. And on the subject of the Federal Reserve System, we quote from his Freedom Report for December 1984:

"For more than seventy years now, we have had a central bank manipulating money and credit with the idea that they can bring about a sound economy with sustained economic growth and stable prices. Since that time we have had massive deflation, a horrendous depression, dozens of severe recessions, devastating inflation, high interest rates and for the future - uncertainty. Over the years the Federal Reserve has significantly increased its power, and as conditions have worsened demanded more and more power over the monetary and banking system. Conservatives for the most part are good at criticizing the Keynesian notion of central planning through fiscal policy and government regulation, but fail to see the equally sinister nature of central planning through the monetary system as orchestrated by our Federal Reserve. The Federal Reserve is based on the same principles as the five year agriculture plans in Soviet Russia. . . The planners, whether they be agricultural or banking, are always too late and can only react to past history. . . Better technicians, wiser 'discretion' on the part of the money managers, or a 'monetary rule' to guide the central bankers will do nothing to solve the problem. The problem is more basic and is related to the nature of money. Political money is fiat money and demands that power to regulate it be placed in the hands of the elite few. Honest money is commodity money and places its power in the hands of the market and the consumers. . . The concept of a benevolent dictator or a wise money manager is a contradiction in terms. There is nothing benevolent about the loss of freedom." Unquote. What Paul infers is that even if the Fed were doing an honest job in every respect, it would still be a failure. Merely treating symptoms after the disease has developed has laid the Nation's economy low. And we might add that the movement to "get rid of the Fed" is important. But it's only a beginning, because if the Fed were killed today the present political Congress would simply set up, as in the past, another "Bank of the United States," and place the control of monetary planning in the hands of that same elite few. However commendable, getting rid of the Fed is another treatment of symptoms. The only cure is a return to the spirit and letter of the Constitution in respect to coining money and regulating the value thereof; only this and nothing more will do; and getting the government completely out of the banking business, except to act as referee.

Much the same must be said of the presently highly vaunted Grace Commission Report. However commendable, it's just another "treatment of symptoms." Cutting out government waste is important; word has just been received that our federal government went into the red another $28.5 billion in November alone! To stop that trend toward economic slavery of future generations is very important; but to reverse the trend is vital. Cutting the waste will not cure the disease; only a smaller and controllable government can do that. Studies made by commissions that try to remedy the present system never seem to get the job done because, and we repeat, treating symptoms will never cure the disease. The only remedy is the strict limitation of government by law, that is, the law as laid down in the Constitution. Our Founding Fathers did this job for us two centuries ago. But as a Nation we have drifted away from those clearly spelled-out restraints and prohibitions. This applies to presidents, governors, legislators, judges and all in any official position, including the appointed bureaucrats; but even more importantly, it includes the people themselves. We must reject the idea that "government owes me something," or that "it's society's fault" if someone is sick, poor, lazy, unemployed, crooked, or injured.

Ron Paul closed his report with these words: "The only way I see that we can stop the attack on personal liberty is to participate in awakening as many people as possible, and as quickly as we can. We must diligently work for a free society where the government's role is strictly limited to the preservation of freedom and serving as the guarantor of honest money and not the vehicle for its deliberate debasement. What we need to ensure freedom and provide true economic recovery is not a technical approach with some minor adjustments, but rather a fundamental change of prevailing ideas and attitudes. We don't need to fine-tune big government to make it efficient. We need to overhaul it in terms of Constitutional principles, in order to make it smaller."

Returning to Constitutional principles is a cure for Big Government. But changing the ideas and attitudes of the people is something else. We have been so nurtured on the ideas and attitudes embodied in our present state religion, called Secular Humanism, that it takes far more than obeying the Constitution to save what has been called "The American Way." We must promote that "New Patriotism" that the leftists scorn. We must aid and encourage that influence upon laws and lawmakers which has been begun so nobly by Christian Patriots. We must return to those principles and commandments spelled out for us in the Holy Bible. Nearly two hundred years ago our first President gave his farewell address to Congress. When he spoke of religion he meant the Christian religion, and he spoke words which are repeated before every new Congress, and should be remembered by us all. He said:

"Of all the dispositions and habits, which lead to political prosperity, religion and morality are indispensable supports. In vain would that man claim the tribute of patriotism, who should labor to subvert these great pillars of human happiness, these firmest props of the duties of men and citizens. The mere politician, equally with the pious man, ought to respect and cherish them. A volume could not trace all their connexions with private and public felicity. Let it simply be asked, Where is the security for prosperity, for reputation, for life, if the sense of religious obligation deserts the oaths, which are the instruments of investigation in courts of justice? And let us with caution indulge the supposition, that morality can be maintained without religion. Whatever may be conceded to the influence of refined education on minds of peculiar structure, reason and experience both forbid us to expect that national morality can prevail in exclusion of religious principle."

POWER SHIFT OR COUP D'ETAT?

This is the continuing story of the political takeover of the federal government of the United States of America by an elite group which plans to merge the United States and the Soviet Union into a New World Order. In our previous Reports we have written that President Ronald Reagan is being "kicked upstairs" to a kind of honorary kingship wherein he will wear the legendary white hat as a crown, will serve as a father image to his subjects, a hall-fellow-well-met to Senators and Members of the House; who will have a type of ex officio position while allowing appointees who are selected by and beholden to the International Elite to run the Administration in his stead. We have made special mention of what we have termed the Four Riders of the Money Express: George Shultz of State, Donald Regan of Treasury, James Baker of the White House, and David Stockman of OMB. These are nominally in command, but only nominally for there is this ruling autocracy that is bigger than all four of them. Accenting the positiveness of our statement was a sudden announcement by President Reagan of the shift in positions of Baker and Regan. Baker is to take Regan's old job as Secretary of the Treasury, thus gaining a desired seat as a member of the Cabinet while still retaining his position as a member of the National Security Council. Regan is to take Baker's old job, thus becoming a member of the National Security Council while still retaining his rank as a member of the Cabinet. The unusual part of this shift: The President knew nothing about it until Regan, Baker and Michael Deaver had made up their minds as to the shift (with Deaver resigning to get a job "where I can make more money"), had apparently received an okay from the "powers behind the throne", and then told President Reagan what they were going to do. Reagan had no choice but to approve and announce the shift.

But the power shift - or coup d'etat - began with George Shultz deciding - or being told by the "powers" - to clean house, get rid of the conservatives, and take charge. Meanwhile, President Reagan was celebrating his last vacation of the old year as one of many guests of Walter Annenberg, publisher of TV Guide, former Ambassador to the Court of St. James, and now owner of a palatial estate in Palm Springs, California. Paying an official call on the President at that time to discuss deals to be made with the Soviet Union in regard to arms and other matters, were Shultz of State, Weinberger of Defense, and McFarlane of National Security. Previously, there had been talk of appointing a special top-brass mediator to oversee our country's overseas arms policy at the Geneva meetings. Armand Hammer had paved the way, Henry Kissinger was suggested as an official ambassador without portfolio. But, as Robert Hunter of the Christian Science Monitor reported, "It will not happen, although Paul Nitze, who negotiated with the Soviets on Euromissiles, will serve as a special adviser to Secretary of State George Shultz." It was thus arranged that Shultz would, personally, handle all the arrangements and off-the-record talks with Foreign Minister Gromyko of the USSR. Meanwhile, Shultz had been moving to become top dog of the Administration pack. He began to fire all the diplomats who weren't on his and the "power's" side, and replace them with persons approved by the CFR/TLC Elite. This, incidentally, raised an uproar from the conservatives who still have some voice in such matters. Shultz temporized in some respects in his firings and hirings, and some of the Old Guard remained on guard. But the upper-level, White House purge continued, just as the CFR/TLC Elite had ordered.

U.S. News (1/14/85) referred to the takeover as a "Power Shift in the White House," commented that "Houston lawyer James Baker, 54, the outsider in Reagan's inner circle four years ago when he became chief of staff, [now finds] himself on the verge of holding nearly all of the power in the White House staff." But this was written before the Baker-Regan shift. Baker had been a target of the conservatives ever since the 1980 primary campaign, when he worked for the election of George Bush against Ronald Reagan. It was a surprise to most and a shock to conservatives when Reagan named Baker his chief of staff. In this second term, it was felt that any additional power in the White House being given to Baker would cause much questioning. Knowing this, since Baker had long coveted a Cabinet post, Donald Regan made this possible while at the same time increasing his own power in the administration. While Regan is Voelker's man just as Baker is Bush's man (both of WEATHER CONTROL. Will Rogers said that everyone talks about the weather but nobody does anything about it. Now, the Soviets are doing something about it. In 1977 Dr. Andrew Michrowski had proof that the Soviet Union had been playing havoc with Canadian and U.S. weather. His reports were supported by top scientists. The Soviets are using the theories and inventions of Nikola Tesla (1856-1943). Tesla invented the alternating current (AC) system and laid the groundwork for the development of wireless telegraphy and radio communication and transmitted electricity without wires 85 years ago. He received 14 doctorates from universities all over the world and patented over 900 processes in the field of energy conversion. Tesla invented and patented a system of utilizing the earth's natural vibrations to transmit power through the earth without wires. His system involved the use of Extremely Low Frequency (ELF) electromagnetic cycles per second. This system creates gigantic standing electromagnetic waves which can be used to modify the weather and create man-made droughts, floods, and storms. It is generally believed that the Soviets now have some of Tesla's secrets and are using his system for weather modification.

In 1974 a summit conference in Vladivostok was held with President Gerald Ford and Henry Kissinger and Soviet dictator Leonid Brezhnev in attendance. They agreed that they would work together in weather modification experiments with the Russians supplying a location and personnel while the United States supplied the technology and equipment. The result was that a giant electromagnet built near Chicago, capable of generating a magnetic field 250,000 times greater than that of the earth itself, was shipped to Russia in 1977. Later on the United States gave the Russians a $13 million sophisticated computer for "weather research." With such equipment the Soviets are able to create giant standing electromagnetic waves which cause long-distance high pressure systems that act as a blocking mechanism to prevent normal weather patterns. For the past 5 years we have experienced extreme temperatures, snow storms that have shut down cities, spring storms that have forced 52,000 people from their homes, more than 500 tornadoes in Texas alone, and record snow packs in the Rockies producing destructing mud slides and flooding. Add to this the hottest and driest summer on record in 1983 with disastrous results to production of food. These are only a few of the results of weather modification.

Why don't we read about this in the media? The answer is simple: The mass communications media in the United States are controlled by members of the CFR/Tri-lateral Conspiracy who have been seeking to find ways to control conditions whereby world government will be set up with a merger of the U.S. and the U.S.S.R. Weather control is one of the means by which total control might be attained. For more information write to Phoebe Courtney, P.O.Box 636, Littleton, Colorado. 80160. them being Rockefellers' men) it seemed better politically to let Regan make the decisions while Baker handles the money. Back in 1981 there were these Big Four on the President's staff: Deaver, Meese, Baker and Clark. Now, depending upon the giving of advice and consent by the Senate, there will be none of them at the White House. Deaver resigns to take a public relations job where he can make more money. William Clark a key adviser to Reagan since 1960, was getting fed up with Washington politics. He thought the position as Interior Secretary might be less frustrating. But apparently it was not. He has decided he's needed back at his ranch in California. Baker, the Senate willing, will go to Treasury; Meese, the Senate willing, will become Attorney General; and regardless of the Senate, Regan will go to the White House. That, in effect, leaves Donald Regan handling all the decisions, James Baker handling all the money; and George Shultz handling all other affairs, with National Security Adviser McFarlane as his chief assistant on foreign policy, and Paul Nitze his chief assistant on arms control. As for the President of the United States, U.S. News comments:

With the Californians gone, some aides believe that Ronald and Nancy Reagan will rely more on each other. "The President will be confiding more in people he's gotten to know in Washington," said one friend of the family. "In those circumstances, he inevitably will confide in Nancy more." (Underlining added for emphasis).

And the purge continues. USA TODAY (1/8/85) reported: Top conservatives gather at the White House today for a reception with President Reagan - even as the exodus of hard-line conservatives from his administration continues. On Monday (1/7/85) Faith Ryan Whittlesey, the top-ranking female staffer at the White House, joined the list of conservatives leaving Reagan's inner councils. . . . "Now we're down to a literal handful," said conservative Richard Vaguerie. "You're not going to have a Reagan revolution with the pragmatists that are left." . . . Conservative Caucus head Howard Phillips called Whittlesey's loss "just the latest in a number of purges at the White House." Meanwhile, as the purge continued, and before President Reagan had been told that Regan would now be his chief of staff, it was announced that the White House is going to begin its own "news service." This means that all news emanating from the White House will, in effect, be censored before it is released to the media to be re-censored before being released to the

We Were Interrupted. As we began our thirty-second year of publishing Don Bell Reports we were forced to miss our first date of the year. There was no issue for January 4th. You see, in producing this newsletter we do all the work ourselves; from editing and composing to plate-making and printing, and then stuffing and mailing. We are dependent upon certain pieces of equipment, one of them being a cross between an electronic typewriter and a word processor which the manufacturer calls a Text-Editing Typewriter. We're fond of it because it gives the words on the page bold, proportional spacing which allows many readable words in a small space. However, perhaps because of overwork, it has developed a habit of occasionally having a nervous breakdown. This necessitates our rushing it to the electronics health clinic for treatment by a specialist. That's what happened as the New Year dawned, and we took a brief vacation waiting for our "Addie" to be healed.

This happened to us once before, in the first weeks of last November. To solve the problem, we decided that it would be necessary to purchase a back-up processor that was new and healthy. So, if you find in future issues a mix-up of type styles, it won't be a desire for artistic display, but the fact that "Addie" has had a breakdown and "Canny" has had to fill what would have been a vacancy. If the Lord be willing, we won't need any more explanations of this kind. And may the Lord bless you for your indulgence and prayers. Don and GinnyBell.

public. Which might have been acceptable so long as there were some aides other than CFR-men, Socialists and Liberals handling affairs of state from the White House. But, as media spokesman Jack Landau, executive director of the Washington based Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press protested: "This is very dangerous. There had been a very strong tradition in this country not to have a government-controlled press service." But, if non-elected proteges of the Eastern Establishment are in charge of the administration, a form of censorship to protect the guilty could be expected.

Meanwhile, people were becoming quite restive over the President's isolation. It had been nearly six months since he had conducted a televised press conference. He seemed to be spending more time at his ranch or at Camp David than in the Oval Office. The media tried to keep his name in headlines by mentioning that the President ordered this or that, made decisions as usual. But the stories always concluded with the fact that "the administration" had done this or said that. "The administration" could mean anyone, even Nancy. So, it was decided that President Reagan simply had to hold a press conference. Which he did. But this first televised press conference of the new term, the first in six months, was an anti-climax. For the show had already been stolen by George Shultz who told the world that the USA and the USSR had agreed to hold future meetings. But it wasn't Shultz who was the star of the show. It was the media who went to bizarre and ridiculous lengths to make the meetings seem breath-taking in their importance.

Comparisons may be odious; but we can't resist. When General MacArthur flew to Tokyo to attest a victory over the Japanese, there was one plane-load of reporters and correspondents who accompanied. And planes carried fewer people in 1945. When we stood on the deck of the U.S.S. Missouri to witness the signing of the surrender terms ending World War II there were less than 200 of us. Those were the most important news events of the year, but the events were not overrun by representatives of the media. Just the working press and radio, nothing more. When we sailed with Admiral Blandy to witness the atomic bomb tests at Bikini in 1946, events that really started all this international competition in nuclear arms, there were just 36 of us. One man from each of the radio networks. True, there was no television coverage, no instantaneous photographing so the world could see at the speed of light. But the media coverage was adequate for the times. How different this event in frigid Geneva. It was reported that there were more than 3,000 members of the media in Geneva. Each of the television networks sent an estimated 70 people to cover the event. And what was there to cover? There was a total news blackout. Newsmen were not allowed at any of the meetings. Delegates were cautioned not to talk to newsmen. In short, at least 3,000 people were in Geneva at great expense, able to do nothing except perhaps learn to yodel. And when Shultz and Gromyko had settled on what was going to be fought over at some meetings in the indefinite future, each made a short speech. And they all went home. For the media, nothing accomplished, nothing gained except a lot of useless newsprint and TV time spent on trivia. The purpose of this unusual extravaganza? We suspect that it was all intended to lay the groundwork for the power shift that was to be announced at about the same time that Shultz made his report from Geneva. So, we repeat our headline: Power Shift or Coup D'Etat?

THE WAR AGAINST SOUTH AFRICA

Remember Bernard Mannes Baruch, the billionaire financier who succeeded Edward Mandell House as a perennial adviser to Presidents? During World War I while House managed Wilson, helped write the Covenant of the League of Nations, and assisted in the organization of the Council on Foreign Relations, Baruch was chairing the War Industries Board. In World War II, after House had retired, Baruch wrote the 1943 Report on Post-War Conversion. As U.S. Representative to the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission he formulated plans for the international control of atomic energy. In explaining how he became a millionaire through stock market speculation before he was thirty, Baruch quoted some unidentified contemporary who had written:

"Have you ever seen in some wood, on a sunny quiet day, a cloud of midgets - thousands of them - hovering, apparently motionless, in a sunbeam? Yes? Well, did you ever see the whole flight - each mite apparently preserving its distance from all others - suddenly move, say three feet, to one side or the other? Well, what made them do that? A breeze? I said a quiet day. But try to recall - did you ever see them move directly back again in the same unison? Well, what made them do that? Great mass human movements are slower of inception but much more effective." Then quoting Friedrich von Schiller, the German historian, Baruch added: "Anyone taken as an individual is tolerably sensible and reasonable - as a member of a crowd, he at once becomes a blockhead." And Andrew Tobias, who chronicled Baruch's quotes, wrote: "There are lynch mobs and there are crusades; there are runs on banks and there are fires where, if people hadn't panicked, they would all have escaped with their lives. There was the 'hustle,' not so long ago, where large groups of young people learned to dance in lemminglike unison. . . And there was the mass suicide at Jonestown. . . If it is not one madness, it will be another."

As we write this Report, a whole "follow-the-leader" crowd of human midges is moving in unison against a country most of them have never seen and know nothing about except what they are being told by Leftists, Liberals, Humanists and Communists. What makes them, like Baruch's midges, act in unison? Is it through ignorance, desire for excitement, or plain treachery? Are the people of the United States, as well as the people of the Nations of the European Common Market, so lacking in individual initiative that they are willing and even anxious to listen to the false propaganda of some Communist or Socialist spieler, to learn and then repeat the lines the spieler is barking, and join some picket line or mob, shouting words about something they don't even understand? Recently there has been the mad crusade against nuclear energy. Then, beginning on a prearranged date - November 21, 1984 - a series of demonstrations was staged against the "racist" government and policies of South Africa. Like Baruch's midges, but slower in inception because they were human, demonstrations quickly spread to over a dozen cities. Front page and prime time coverage by the media aided the growth of a crusade against what even the President of the United States called a "repugnant apartheid" regime. Immediately came calls for economic sanctions against the Republic of South Africa, and a boycott of all companies having investments or doing business in that country which was "like Nazi Germany" in its racist principles. Was it by coincidence that this anti-apartheid crusade was at its height just at the time those same mite-like humans were celebrating the birthday of the late Martin Luther King?

When the first "Sink South Africa" demonstration was staged in Washington, D.C., the media immediately broadcast the incident far and wide. A few "celebrities" were arrested by the Washington police for picketing a Consulate, which added spice to the news, and the "flight of the human midges" began in earnest. Congressional leaders, church leaders, civil rights activists, communists, liberals and conservatives, all joined in a united cry of moral outrage against what has been described as "the most oppressive regime since Nazi Germany." Senator Ted Kennedy added his bit to the crusade by going to South Africa to "inspect" and make speeches. The fact that he was rejected and booed and might have been attacked physically if the police had not protected him, should have alerted people to the fact that this whole movement is a communist-inspired conspiracy. Whenever Kennedy made a speech, he did it by cooperating with the Marxist organizations. But they weren't able to protect him when he was to make his final talk at the Regina Mundi Church in the black township of Soweto outside Johannesburg. The black protesters waved posters saying "Kennedy Out," and the police admitted they couldn't protect him, advised him to really get out of town. The black leaders said Jesse Jackson would receive the same treatment if he came to South Africa as he plans, next month. So, the "crusade" didn't get off the ground among the blacks in South Africa; but it's still the biggest promotion of the year in the United States. As Donald McAlvany explained in the January issue of The McAlvany Intelligence Adviser:

"American black leaders are trying to recoup their lost credibility and embarrassment from the pasting they and their candidates took in the November '84 elections. "Sink South Africa" is the issue with which they hope to regain credibility with their black American constituents. Since the Vietnam War, the left has been looking for a major issue to rally its force around. The anti-Shah and anti-Somoza issues were only mini-issues which didn't arouse much support (but on both, the left won, and Khomeini and the Sandinistas came to power). The nuclear freeze movement was much larger and was globally orchestrated out of Moscow, but it never really caught on in the United States. The 'Free South Africa Movement' is the left's new 'cause celebre.' It is a well orchestrated public relations campaign against South Africa using prominent liberal/left figures such as Ted Kennedy, Jesse Jackson, Andrew Young, Rep. Walter Fauntroy (D-D.C.), Rep. Ron Dellums (D-Cal), Rep. John Conyers (D-MI), etc. The U.S. media propaganda against South Africa is so false, so distorted, and yet so pervasive and so in synch with the pro-communist line on South Africa, that someone very high up must be orchestrating the script."

McAlvany is right. This movement did not arise spontaneously. Organizational work began as early as 1977 when TransAfrica, a pro-communist group, was formed in the United States to support the Soviet backed SWAPO and ANC terrorist groups in Southern Africa. TransAfrica also supports (or supported) the Marxist regime in Angola, Fidel Castro, the late Grenadian leader Maurice Bishop, the far left Institute for Policy Studies, the Soviet World Peace Council, and a host of other Communist groups. In January 1979 TransAfrica founded the "Southern Africa Working Group." It immediately attracted the support (and membership) of the usual far left and pro-communist organizations. To name a few: American Friends Service Committee, Americans for Democratic Action, Amnesty International, Clergy and Laity Concerned, Coalition of Black Trade Unionists, Institute for Policy Studies, Lawyers Committee for Civil Rights, National Conference of Black Lawyers, Members of Congress for Peace through Law, Women Strike for Peace, World Peacemakers, and we've probably missed some of these organizations that initiated the "Free South Africa Movement." They are active friends or fronts of the Soviet Union, but they are financed by foundations, International Bankers, some Multinational Corporations, and others of the so-called Eastern Establishment. And, if this "Free South Africa Movement" continues to be supported by alleged conservatives and capitalists, we haven't seen anything yet. John Rees, writing in the January 9 issue of The Review of the News, observes that "TransAfrica documents show that once the protests began attracting favorable media coverage, a formal Steering Committee was convened. Randall Robinson (Harvard, Ford Foundation Fellow, executive director of the Congressional Black Caucus, pro-Communist, etc.-Ed.) and District of Columbia Congressional Delegate Walter Fauntroy serve as co-chairmen of the Steering Committee. According to our sources at TransAfrica, the Free South Africa Movement will now expand the consular protests and will:

1. Demonstrate against businesses that sell Krugerrands.
2. Communicate with Congressional, state and local legislators regarding anti-apartheid legislation.
3. Put pressure on banks, insurance companies, pension funds, etc., to reassess their investment policies.
4. Urge state and local governments as well as group members to boycott products and services of companies that operate businesses in South Africa.
5. Demonstrate at the South African Embassy in Washington, D.C. or consulates in other cities.
6. Make a contribution to the 'Free South Africa Movement' fund to help finance the continuing struggle (checks payable to TransAfrica, Inc., indicating it is for the movement).
7. Spread the word in other organizations, newsletters, bulletins, etc., that this human rights struggle will continue until this abominable system of apartheid is eradicated." (Unquote).

We have mentioned most of the groups that are actively engaged in promoting and leading this movement. Then as followers, are the "human midges" that move in unison when their leaders move. In an excellent explanation of the movement which could destroy the one free country in Africa, Don McAlvany writes that there are "Over 200 Anti-Apartheid Disinvestment groups, many of which carried nuclear freeze, anti-Vietnam War, anti-Shah or anti-Somoza banners over the past 10-15 years. The Soviets mobilize the same troops for different campaigns. TransAmerica is currently the most prominent of these pro-communist, anti-apartheid groups. . . . Russia has targeted six states from the Atlantic to the Indian Ocean to dominate, thereby surrounding and isolating South Africa - the ultimate target. These states are Angola, Southwest Africa (Namibia), Zambia, Botswana, Zimbabwe (Rhodesia), and Mozambique. . . . The Soviets do not believe they can conquer South Africa militarily. Their plan is instead to surround and isolate South Africa, precipitate economic sanctions and disinvestment in the West, harass South Africa along her four country 1500-mile border, and foment internal revolution among her 16 million blacks." ("McAlvany Intelligence Adviser, P.O.Box 39810, Phoenix AZ 85069. Monthly, $77 per year. Foreign air mail, $107 per year).

Why is the fate of South Africa important to the United States and the Western World? Because South Africa is the minerals treasure of the world. There are certain minerals which the United States must import; among them are the platinum group metals, manganese, chrome, and uranium. These are found in South Africa and in Russia and certain countries dominated by the Soviet Union. The metals are essential to American industry and if the USSR dominates or even isolates South Africa, American defense and other industries would be forced to depend upon the Soviet Union, or die industrially if the USSR so decided. There are other reasons why the RSA must never become a part of the USSR, lest the USA also become a part of the USSR. Leonid Brezhnev boasted several years ago that the key to Soviet world domination was to isolate the mineral resources of the Middle East and southern Africa from the West. In this he was correct, and this is the reason for the present movement to "Free South Africa," and the catalyst causing the "flight of the human midges" who always seem to fall for any scheme that is inimical to the security of the United States.

Now, let's consider the problems of South Africa. It is a Republic occupying the southern end of the continent of Africa, one of 55 countries made up of some 500 million people and over 2,000 separate tribes, each with different languages and cultures. The tribes are always fighting each other; over 5 million blacks have died at the hands of other blacks since 1970. Most black Africans live under a dictatorial, paternalistic tribal structure. They survived fairly well so long as there was British, French, Portuguese, or other colonial rule. But when "the white man's burden" was lifted by UN and other sanctions, Black Africa became an economic basketcase. Rhodesia was the last to go, and look at it today. Over 100 million black Africans are starving; some are being fed through the charity of white governments and groups, most of them may die. We sometimes hear of the most serious cases: Ethiopia, Angola, Mozambique, Zimbabwe; but it seems that wherever there is black rule, there is starvation and economic stagnation. To make things worse in Ethiopia, which currently holds the headlines, the Soviet backed government diverts food given by the West to its own Red Army and away from areas of political opposition. Stalin and Khrushchev in the 1930s starved to death at least seven million Ukrainians who opposed Soviet rule. The same thing is going on in Ethiopia, where over 200,000 are said to have perished already, with six million more in danger of starvation. Only South Africa is a bright spot on the map of Africa; and we are not referring to its white population. Unlike the USSR, where people are trying to get out; like the USA, in the RSA people are trying to get in. They've had to build fences to keep the blacks out, because over half a million of them try to get in every year; and such hordes cannot be given work or be fed and housed. And as the new saying goes, this is the bottom line: The only charge that can be laid with honesty against the Republic of South Africa is its policy of apartheid. It was adopted in 1948, simply means "separate development," unlike the "melting pot" policy adopted in the United States. But there is a good reason for apartheid. There are some 13 different tribes and racial groups in South Africa, which can't get along with each other. If the whites departed or turned the rule over to them, constant tribal warfare would occur and it all probably would end up with one remaining dominant tribe, the rest either exterminated or made slaves. So, South Africa tries to keep the groups and tribes separated, teaches their leaders how to govern, and then when possible gives them an independent homeland of their own. The Venda, Ciskei, Transkei and Bophuthatswana have been given their independent homelands in the past nine years. More tribes are to be given their own homelands as soon as they are able to govern themselves. There is, unfortunately, another side to apartheid, known generally as petty apartheid. This is the discrimination that has occurred: job discrimination, segregation in housing, things we have known all about in the United States. But, like the USA, this is slowly disappearing, and the blacks want to handle the situation themselves, without outside help from the Kennedys, Jacksons, and TransAfrica pro-Communist groups.

If the pro-Communists, the civil rights activists, the liberal media, the State Department and the midges-moving-in-unison continue to fan the emotional flames of conflict and hatred, South Africa may suffer the same fate as was forced upon the once Republican Rhodesia, now Communist Zimbabwe. White South Africans have lived in Africa longer than whites have lived in the United States. They have built up the most powerful, modern, industrial country in Africa. They are Africans, not colonialists, and they have given more aid to black Africa technically, agriculturally, industrially, and morally, than all of the White West put together. Yet an anti-South African legislative juggernaut has begun in Washington. Writing to your Congressmen and Senators - and misinformed President Reagan - may help. Remember Edmund Burke's admonition: "All that is necessary for evil to triumph is that good men do nothing." Too many Americans have been doing too little for too long.

THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF COUNTERATTACKS

Meaning no disrespect to the parties involved, we are reminded of an old John Wayne movie. Or was it an old Ronald Reagan movie? In either case, the plot is the same. As we imagine the script, the native Americans resent the methods being used by the white immigrants in their winning of the West. There is much controversy at the highest level within the tribes concerning what should be done about the invaders. Of course, the run-of-the-mill bucks and squaws pay little heed to the squabbling among their social superiors; they just go on with the business of living off the land. But the lesser chiefs and the braver braves feel that the policies adopted by the Great Chief of their Indian Nation are not in the best interests of the tribes, and certainly not in the best interests of the lesser chiefs and braver braves. So, they organize a conspiracy and determine to take matters in their own hands, clandestinely and behind the Great Chief's back. They believe that the Great Chief is too old to make proper decisions in important matters. They spread the word that he falls asleep and takes naps in the midst of important powwows. They think he takes the advice of the wrong set of braves. And they're sure he is too much influenced by his squaw. Therefore, the conspirators arrive at a consensus: They will continue to honor and pay all due respect to their Great Chief, will listen to him and nod agreement when necessary. But then his words will go unheeded and his orders ignored. However, they overplay their hand and the Great Chief begins to realize that there is a conspiracy within his ranks and he is being played for a sucker. He therefore lets it be known in no uncertain terms that he is still the Great Chief, and that his conspiring advisers had better cease and desist, repent and obey, and smoke the peace pipe with him at his teepee; or they'll be relegated to the status of second class Indians.

In a somewhat similar manner, the personage whom the good Indians called the Great White Father, has learned of the plan to make him a kind of honorary king while one Donald Regan will act as his Prime Minister. A few days before he was to be sworn in as Commander-in-Chief for the second time, Ronald Reagan called in his favorite mediemen and told them "I'm the Boss." He said he was tired of suggestions that he is being manipulated by his aides and his wife. "I'm too old and too stubborn to put up with that. He complained of "This picture that's being created that I sit at my desk and wait to see who's going to grab this arm and pull me this way, or grab this one and pull me that way. I make up my own mind." And to emphasize the President's words, his wife Nancy issued a statement to the press saying that Ronnie does not take naps at Cabinet meetings. He's alert, he listens, and he makes his own decisions, asserted the first lady of the land. Then, to carry this message of leadership to the world, he adopted his old conservative stance after the second oath-taking. The Associated Press reported: "President Reagan, pledging a 'new boldness' in his second term, said yesterday that his presidency will be remembered as 'the golden years, when the American Revolution was reborn, when freedom gained new life, when America reached her peak.' Reagan's speech was an anthem of the conservative principles that shaped the policies of his first term. This second four years will be more of the same, he said." So said the Associated Press.

President Reagan's program that he announced at this fiftieth frigid indoor inaugural was much the same as the program he promised to carry out at his first inaugural; with one glaring difference. There was the promise that there would be no new taxes. But there also was the promise that there would be a tax reform - a contradiction in terms because any tax reform is sure to mean added (but hidden) taxes. He promised a budget freeze. But even if he were sincere, with the Congressional passion to spend and spend coupled with the Presidential reluctance to veto spending bills, this all adds up to more bulging budgets. President Reagan made the usual promise to return to State and local governments "the responsibilities better handled by them." But here the permanent and unchanging bureaucracy always rises up to prevent any return of power to the States. The big difference between the inaugural addresses of 1981 and 1985 had to do with national defense and the national attitude toward the USSR. In 1981 President Reagan called the Soviet Union an "evil empire," and he spoke of its habit of never honoring treaties. He also admitted that the Soviets were militarily superior and that we therefore must hasten to build up our defenses to maintain the MAD (Mutual Assured Destruction) policy which had been established by Henry Kissinger in the SALT I Treaty back in 1972 and which is still our national policy in 1985. Said President Reagan at his second inaugural: "We have made progress in restoring our defense capability. But much remains to be done. There must be no wavering by us, nor any doubts by others, that America will meet her responsibilities to remain free, secure, and at peace. . . For decades we and the Soviets have lived under the threat of mutual assured destruction. . . We seek another way - a far better way. I have approved a research program to see if a security shield can be developed that will destroy nuclear missiles before they reach their target. Such a shield would not kill people, but destroy weapons: it would not militarize space, but help demilitarize the arsenals of earth." So far so good. But after once inferring that treaties with the Soviet Union were not worth the paper they were written on, now he's all eagerness in his desire to meet with the Soviets and have them sign more treaties - which we can be sure they will break when it fits their plans. This impulse to make new treaties with the USSR was a part of the Presidential Counterattack. Secretary of State George Shultz had it all planned that he and National Security Adviser McFarlane would run the whole show, with Paul Nitze acting as their on-the-spot agent. But in his counterattack the President changed this plan, appointed three allegedly conservative civilians to handle the negotiations, with former Senator Power of Texas on the committee. But this gesture to show that "I'm the Boss" doesn't mitigate the danger of making treaties with the Soviet Union. Hilaire du Berrier, writing from Paris in his January H du B Reports, warned: "The most important and urgent message for every American politician, editor and TV commentator today is: Cease calling for or promising arms limitation talks, 'detente' talks, or peaceful cohabitation talks with Soviet Russia. . . Any politician who promises such talks, for the sake of votes, and any editor who calls for them, is only raising unfounded hopes in American minds and leading America into quick-sands. The implication is that arms limitations and other negotiations will be conducted between the American government and the Soviet. How can this lead to any solution for peace when the Soviet Communist Party IS the Soviet Government? The same men form both: all they do is change caps. . . In 1975 Leonid Brezhnev, speaking as head of the Soviet Government, launched a lulling drive for detente with the West. Then, speaking as secretary-general of the Soviet Communist Party, he told his countrymen: "International detente does not in any way signify the abandonment of our struggle of ideas." Read: We may promise the West peace and friendship, but this is only so we may undermine them from within. . . Politicians must not be forced to outdo each other with promises of 'talks with Russia.' The only possible talk with Russia should start: 'Have whatever form of government you want, but cease your sapping operations in countries that are free. Get out of Afghanistan and stop planning expansion. Forget the Leninist theme that the revolution of 1917 was only the first step towards a communist world. Drop the Kremlin statement of policy which holds that the existence of sovereign states is only a transitory historical phase on the way to a socialist world and that the duty of Soviet Russia is to make that transition period as short as possible.'" The still effective MAD agreement mentioned by President Reagan, was initiated by Henry Kissinger as Richard Nixon's National Security Adviser in 1982. However, a decade before that time the U.S. State Department had launched a campaign to promote unilateral disarmament for the United States. That policy was legalized with the passage of Public Law 87-297 by the 87th Congress in 1961. This was "An Act to establish a United States Arms Control and Disarmament Agency," and, as is the MAD agreement mentioned by President Reagan, this Public Law 87-297 is still in effect and is the guide which U.S. negotiators must use in its dealing with their Soviet counterparts at these upcoming arms limitations meetings. The law begins: "An ultimate goal of the United States is a world which is free from the scourge of war and the dangers and burdens of armaments; in which the use of force has been subordinated to the rule of law; and in which international adjustments to a changing world are achieved peacefully. It is the purpose of this Act to provide impetus toward this goal by creating a new agency of peace to deal with the problem of reduction and control of armaments looking toward ultimate world disarmament. . . The terms 'arms control' and 'disarmament' mean the identification, verification, inspection, limitation, control, reduction, or elimination, of armed forces and armaments of all kinds under international agreement to establish an effective system of international control, or to create and strengthen international organizations for the maintenance of peace." We have underlined certain words so you can see how this arms limitation program - nuclear weapons or otherwise - fit precisely into the idea of international control, which means the sacrifice of national sovereignty, the elimination of any National military establishment, and world control through a New World Order!

To promote this plan for what would amount to a World Police Force to control the foreign activities of all Nations, the State Department in September 1961 released its Department of State Publication 7277, titled "The United States Program for General and Complete Disarmament in a Peaceful World." This publication, and we quote, "sets forth the following specific objectives toward which nations should direct their efforts:

- * The disbanding of all national armed forces and the prohibition of their reestablishment in any form whatsoever other than those required to preserve internal order and for contributions to a United Nations Peace Force;
- * The elimination from national arsenals of all armaments, including all weapons of mass destruction and the means for their delivery, other than those required for a United Nations peace force and for maintaining internal order;
- * The institution of effective means for the settlement of disputes, and for the maintenance of peace in accordance with the principles of the United Nations;
- * The establishment and effective operation of an International Disarmament Organization within the framework of the United Nations to insure compliance at all times with all disarmament obligations."

According to this program "Disarmament must proceed as rapidly as possible, until it is completed, in stages containing balanced, phased, and safeguarded measures." The first stage provided that: 1) The nuclear threat would be reduced; 2) Strategic delivery vehicles would be reduced; 3) Arms and armed forces would be reduced; 4) Peaceful use of outer space would be strengthened; 5) An International Disarmament Organization would be established for effective verification of the disarmament program; and 6) States would be committed to other measures to reduce international tension and to protect against the chance of war by accident, miscalculation, or surprise attack. The Second Stage of the program involves the establishment of a permanent international peace force. And the final, third stage provides that "States would retain only those forces, non-nuclear armaments, and establishments required for the purpose of maintaining internal order," and countries would provide manpower for this International Peace Force, but all manufacture of armaments would be prohibited except for those to be used by this International Peace Force. Finally: "The peace-keeping capabilities of the United Nations would be sufficiently strong and the obligations of all states under such arrangements sufficiently far-reaching as to assure peace and the just settlement of differences in a disarmed world." This, of course, would include the disarming of all civilians, the confiscation of guns and other weapons, and the maintenance of internal law and order within the states in accordance with World Laws established by an International Administrative Agency!

Since the passage of Public Law 87-297 on September 26, 1961 and the publication of Department of State Publication 7277, there has been one change in the overall program, a change found advisable by the Conspiratorial Planners of the New World Order. The planners have found that the use of the United Nations as a world government and a peace-keeping authority is impractical. So, a series of International Organizations and Agencies will be established instead. The planners call it "Piecemeal Functionalism" and these various organizations and agencies would work together as a sort of Administrative Cabinet which would manage the New World Order on the part of the Elite Conspirators. As for the real purpose of these USA-USSR armaments limitation meetings, they form a necessary step in attaining the final goal of the New World Order. The Conspirators began with the creation of a situation consonant with the Hegelian Formula: A Capitalistic Thesis to be confronted with a Communistic Antithesis; out of which would eventually develop a Synthesis; that is, the merging of the United States and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics within a New World Order. The Conspirators are not greatly worried about time; the Conspiracy in its present form began on May 1, 1776 in Bavaria, and they're still working on the same general theme. They must, and have proceeded slowly and carefully, lest the people rebel and spoil their plans. Hence the making and breaking of treaties, the inciting of grass-fire wars, the seeming conflict between East and West, the economic disagreements between North and South, and all the other steps that have been and are being taken to keep the people from guessing as to what's really going on, and that one "Order" is in control of all sides Of the supposedly accidental and/or unavoidable military conflicts, diplomatic disagreements and economic crises.

Of the arms negotiations with the Soviet Union, President Reagan said: "We are bargaining in good faith. With equal willingness on the other side, real progress can be achieved quickly." But what kind of progress? Every bargaining session means more progress for Communism. Every treaty is made to be broken when doing so means progress for Communism. Then why bargain when it only aids a known enemy? Because such bargaining is a part of the overall plan of the Conspiracy which aims, as did Lenin, at a Socialized One World Order. 35 years ago John T. Flynn wrote: ". . . the nation is sliding toward the inevitable crisis. The Crisis will be our great hour of decision. It is at this point that we must arrest the course of the social disease that is destroying us. If we do not rise . . . In this fateful hour, the power to save our great heritage of freedom will have passed out of our hands. . ." 35 years later, due to the enemies within our country, that Crisis is upon us. Let us not strengthen those enemies within by aiding the enemy without.

A. HAMMER CAN MAKE ONE SICKLE

In the Book of Job we read that there was a day when the sons of God came to present themselves to the Lord, and Satan came also among them. "And the Lord said unto him, Whence comest thou? Then Satan answered the Lord, and said, From going to and fro in the earth, and from walking up and down in it." Perhaps irreverently, we are reminded of an 86-year-old multimillionaire, philanthropist and multinationalist tycoon who keeps going to and fro in the earth, and flying up and down on it. He is here today, on the other side of the globe tomorrow, somewhere else the next day. One day he'll be dining with his friend, the Prince of Wales. Next day he'll be opening another university where future world leaders are being trained. A few hours later he'll be negotiating with his friends in Moscow, or perhaps in Peking, or Washington, or Jerusalem. Or he may be honoring some museum with the showing of his art treasures, many of which he was given or obtained at cut rates from ransacked palaces, churches and galleries in Russia. Not many days ago, when it seemed to be time for the governments of the United States and Soviet Russia to resume their arms limitation talks, it was he, Armand Hammer, who visited the chief of the Communist Party who also is the head of state of the USSR, and made the arrangements for the meeting of Andrei Gromyko and George Shultz. Just before that he was in Peking making industrial deals with the Red Chinese government. On January 21st he was in Beverly Hills, one of the chairmen of a dinner committee arranged by the Yad Vashem Museum of Jerusalem, the Jewish Federation Council of Greater Los Angeles, and L.A.'s Martyr Museum of the Holocaust. The occasion; to honor Otis Chandler, publisher of the Los Angeles Times until 1980 when he became editor-in-chief of the Times Mirror. Chandler was being honored by such personages as Armand Hammer, Norman Lear, etc., etc., because of his "continuing championing of human rights through editorials appearing in the L.A. Times, and his sensitive understanding of anti-Semitism in Nazi Germany as evidenced through a paper he presented in 1950 while still a student at Stanford." Hammer helped chair this dinner on January 20 in Beverly Hills. The next day he was in Washington, D.C. where "industrialist/philanthropist/ad hoc diplomat Armand Hammer hosted a lavish reception to unveil his inaugural collection of American paintings at the National Gallery of Art." Asked to account for his indefatigability he said, "I eat a lot of vitamins," as he, "the Legion d'Honneur rosette fixed firmly on the lapel of his favorite midnight blue evening suit, received hugs and kisses from the likes of New York City Opera general director Beverly Sills and Soviet Ambassador Anatoly F. Dobrynin." (Quotations are from the Los Angeles Times). Then we read a few days later that "American oil magnate Armand Hammer is acting as go-between Moscow and Jerusalem in an effort to renew diplomatic relations severed 18 years ago, Israel Radio reported Monday (1/28/85)." Perhaps coincidentally, while Hammer was accepting another role as ad hoc ambassador, Israeli Defense Minister Yitzhak Rabin was receiving a 19-gun salute in Washington, D.C., where he had come to ask for more aid than usual for his government. Already promised was nearly two billion dollars, but Rabin was asking for more because of the costs of war, the devastations of inflation, soaring unemployment, a reported epidemic of new and uncontrollable diseases brought in by the black Jews from Ethiopia, and general unrest among the people because their Socialist government just wasn't working as a government should. Because the United States is considered to be "Israel's banker and defender," and because there has been much official talk of the possibility of allowing the Soviet Union to become a partner in the Trilateral Nations' Middle East discussions, the following article becomes important. It is a Miami Herald Wire Services report datelined Jerusalem, Tuesday, January 29, 1985, and we quote.

OIL MAGNATE HAMMER REPORTEDLY GO-BETWEEN FOR ISRAEL WITH SOVIETS

American oil magnate Armand Hammer is acting as a go-between Moscow and Jerusalem in an effort to renew diplomatic relations severed 18 years ago, Israel Radio reported Monday. The radio said that Prime Minister Shimon Peres, in a speech to high school students in Jerusalem, revealed that Hammer had contacted the Kremlin on Israel's behalf. While Peres did not elaborate on Hammer's efforts, Israel Radio said the talks dealt with possible renewal of relations between the two nations that were severed at the time of the 1967 Six Day War between Israel and its Arab neighbors. "We approached the Kremlin on the 40th anniversary of their victory over the Nazis through the American Jew, Armand Hammer, who was a friend of Lenin," Prime Minister Shimon Peres told the high school students, according to Israeli radio. "The answer we got, and I quote, 'The matter of Israel depends on the relationship of the Soviet Union and the United States'," Peres said. . . . On Sunday, Edgar Bronfman, president of the World Jewish Congress, said he had been invited by the Soviet government to visit Moscow. It would be the first such visit by a head of the international federation of Jewish organizations. In announcing the likely March trip, Bronfman said he would convey to the Soviets a message from Peres, who asked him to tell Soviet officials that the Kremlin could take part in Middle East peace talks if it agreed to recognize Israel and exchange ambassadors, and if they demonstrated 'even-handedness."

Hammer, 86, is a multimillionaire international financier. In 1957, after considering himself retired, he took the reins of Occidental Petroleum, then a small wildcat oil drilling firm worth $34,000. By 1982 it was the 10th largest oil company in the world, worth more than $8 billion. He has dealt with the Soviets since 1921 when he talked Vladimir Lenin - father of the 1917 Russian Revolution and the Soviet Union's first premier - into trading Russian furs for American wheat. Over the years, Hammer befriended Moscow leaders from Lenin to Leonid Brezhnev and helped arrange American business agreements with Moscow. . . . The Soviet Union was an early supporter of Israel and voted in November 1947 for establishment of the state. But the Soviets gradually turned their support to the Arabs, and for many years was Egypt's main arms supplier. At the time of the 1967 war, the Soviet Union and all Eastern European Communist nations, except Romania, severed ties with Israel. One major sticking point between Israel and the Soviet Union is Soviet Jewry. Moscow allowed only 896 Soviet Jews to emigrate in 1984. Nearly 265,000 Jews have left the Soviet Union since 1970, most of them settling in Israel. (Unquote).

A READER WROTE TO REMARK :

Dear Don: In your Number Fifty, I note the following passage: "If given...power to cut certain items out of an overall omnibus spending bill, much money could be saved, says the President." ¶ Now the fact is that the President has this power under the authority of his oath of office "to preserve, protect and defend the Constitution." Two-thirds of the last budget I saw consist of UNCONSTITUTIONAL items. It is the President's sworn duty to refuse to spend this money. No one is bound to obey an unconstitutional law and no courts are bound to enforce it. (16 American Jurisprudence 2d Section 177). ¶ Today there is much talk about "buying back" or otherwise eliminating the Federal Reserve. All that is necessary is for the President to stop making the annual payment of over one-hundred-billion dollars as "interest" on all that COUNTERFEIT "money" we use these days and let the Fed die on the vine.

Correction, Please. We said this article was important. But we cannot commend it for being the whole truth and nothing but the truth. First, about that Six Day War which began on June 5, 1967 when Israel launched all-out attacks against Egypt, Syria and Jordan, with emphasis on Egypt. At that time a part of the Breshnev Doctrine consisted of cultivating friendly relations with the nations of the Middle East, especially Egypt and Syria. When Israel attacked them, it seemed expedient for the USSR to show a distinct partisanship and since Lenin had remarked that treaties are like pie crusts, made to be broken, the Soviet Union broke off diplomatic relations with Israel. As a result the Soviet Union became the chief supplier of arms for both Egypt and Syria, remains so for Syria although Nasser later broke off relations and expelled the Soviets from Egypt. However, it will be noted that while all the other Communist-controlled nations broke off diplomatic relations with Israel, Romania was permitted to maintain its diplomatic relationship. Thereby President Nicolae Ceausescu of Romania became a go-between, even as Armand Hammer now acts as a go-between. It should always be remembered that Israel is a Socialist Nation, while the USSR is a Communist Empire. The only difference between Socialism and Communism is a matter of degree. There is a pertinent and current example of how this works in an article in the January 30th issue of The Christian Science Monitor, and we quote: "Despite a sharp increase in Sino-Soviet trade and other friendly exchanges, China ruled out an early restoration of Communist Party relations with the Soviet Union. Party official Wu Xingtang said China's Communist Party was willing 'to establish, restore, and develop party-to-party relations with any Communist Party in the world, on the basis of the four principles.' which he identified as 'independence, complete equality, mutual respect, and noninterference in each other's affairs'." As it is with Sino-Soviet relations, so it was with Israeli-Soviet relations. Now, however, Armand Hammer has been asked to make Israeli-Soviet relations publicly closer by re-establishing diplomatic relations between the two. And secondly, there is that manufactured story of the Soviet Union's refusal to allow Soviet Jewry to leave the country. The Soviet Union allows almost nobody, regardless of ethnic, racial or national background, to leave the USSR. However, there is the official report that "nearly 265,000 Jews have left the Soviet Union since 1970." There are roughly 170 different ethnic groups speaking some 130 different languages in the USSR. We have no figures to prove it, but we doubt that any of those other ethnic groups, or even all of them put together, can match the exodus of 265,000 Jews since 1970. If the Jews in the USSR were as persecuted as are the Christians in the USSR, they'd have something to complain about.

President Eisenhower sent American troops into Lebanon in July 1958 to prevent the Soviet Union from taking over that country. Since that time, the official policy of the United States government has been to keep the USSR out of all negotiations concerning Middle Eastern affairs, especially affairs touching the politically-created State of Israel. Now, however, Armand Hammer, at the request of Prime Minister Shimon Peres of Israel, is attempting to involve the Soviet Union in all such negotiations. And because of the awful power of the Zionist Lobby in Washington - admittedly the most powerful of them all - there is talk of breaking that rule and inviting delegates from the Soviet Union to sit in with representatives of the Western and Middle Eastern Nations in all future discussions regarding the fate of land, oil, mineral and other resources in that part of the world. We might recall that since the very beginning of the breakup of previous colonial possessions and the creation of mini-states in Africa, Asia and the Islands of the Oceans, the word "aid" has been added to our diplomatic vocabulary. As Anthony Sampson noted in his "The Money Lenders - Bankers and a World in Turmoil", ". . ." as the former colonies achieved their independence in the fifties and sixties, the richer countries became increasingly involved in what was vaguely known as 'aid.' Aid was altogether a new concept, unfamiliar to pre-war governments and bankers except in the form of missionary societies, the Red Cross, or occasional generous foreign loans; the word aid only regularly became used in the sense of foreign assistance during the second world war, as in American 'aid' to Britain. But aid was now covering a multitude of different activities and motives . . . Some of the early expectations of aid and development had tragic outcomes." Realizing that "aid" was available, rulers of mini-states began playing one country against another - especially the United States against the Soviet Union - in demanding "aid" to fill their coffers and satisfy their personal desires. Is this trick of playing the US against the USSR for "aid" now being forced upon us because of Israel's admitted economic chaos? The United States - its government and its megabankers - has for nearly forty years supported and maintained Socialist Israel, even as it has supported and maintained the Soviet Empire. But, even as the megabankers, the politicians and the economists of all stripes must admit, there has come the time when Uncle Sam must realize that he is broke, is indebted to his grandchildren or great grandchildren for the payment of his bills, and that these bills cannot be paid off in paper money or computer entries. Therefore, he must cease to provide such lavish aid to other countries, even to Israel. And is fear of American giving the reason that Israel is now making overt overtures to the Communist Juggernaut? And will the Zionist Lobby, admittedly the most powerful of them all, continue to have its way with American politicians - and with American preachers?

Sam Rittenhouse, Lt., USA, Ret., graduate of Bob Jones University and deacon in a Bible-believing Baptist church, pulled no punches. In his book "For Fear of the Jews," he based his stand on Proverbs 29:25.

The fear of man bringeth a snare; but whoso putteth his trust in the LORD shall be safe.

Then he wrote: "This fear of men and the labels they may put on individuals or the damage they may do to one's career, or the elections that will never be won is a destructive force that can affect a nation as well as an individual. Because of what men may say, not only has America been sold out but the Saviour has been denied. This has been done by preachers as well as businessmen and politicians. Many preachers have served two masters as they serve Christ and Christ-denying Israel at the same time. They don't dare speak out against Israel and the Zionists that rule it lest they be labeled 'anti-Semitic' (and for some reason, that's a fate worse than death). For fear of the Jews, they establish a contradiction! But it is impossible to be for Christ while, at the same time, being for those who oppose Him, especially those that are anti-Christ in their behavior as well as their religion. But since the Bible clearly says that it is impossible to serve two masters, whether the individual likes it or not; he will and must in fact hold to one and despise the other. In other words, if one party is for Christ and the other party is against Christ, the former will (or should) despise the latter. (Matthew 6:24.)

For fear of the Zionists preachers, businessmen and politicians establish a contradiction. Grace Haskell, journalist and author of "Journey to Jerusalem," calls them Christian Zionists. Which again is a contradiction. Zionism is a political movement, not unlike the Christian Socialist parties of West Europe. But the Zionists have found a way to make unwary Christians, or people calling themselves Christians who are not, promote "the work of the Jews for fear of the Jews." The Kingdom of God can never be destroyed, but the United States of American can be, and may be if its leaders continue to serve two masters. And, like Paul, we ask: "Am I therefore become your enemy, because I tell you the truth?"

THE PAIN OF A RETURN TO REALITY

"...If we allow all the lessons of all the decades of unchecked government spending to go unheeded, we consign ourselves and our children to the tyranny of a government that respects no boundaries and knows no limits." So said President Ronald Wilson Reagan to Congressional leaders as he handed to them the green, hardbound copies of a budget proposal prepared by OMBudgetman David Stockman and ex-Treasuryman Donald Regan, but bearing the name of President Reagan, as was proper under the circumstances. Then he walked out of the Oval Office over to the larger East Room where he addressed more than 100 members of House and Senate Committees, and where he added: "We should remember that no amount of cutting and paring will help if we at the same time add to the burden by raising taxes. All this would be doing is shifting the burden from one saddlebag to the other. Raising taxes would be an admission of failure. It would announce to the country that we didn't have the political will and courage to do what we know is right to get our economic house in order."

There is no doubt but that America is facing an economic crisis. One example: The Wall Street Journal of 1/31/85 announced that "The Treasury plans to raise about $11 billion in new cash by selling $19 billion of notes and bonds next week to redeem $8 billion of securities maturing Feb. 15. The quarterly note and bond sale, or 'refunding,' will be the largest in the Treasury's history. And Treasury Undersecretary Beryl Sprinkel said 'we can look forward to further increases in subsequent quarters until we get the federal (budget deficit) under control.' Another example: Same issue of WSJ reported that "The Federal National Mortgage Association (Fannie Mae) has launched a 50 billion yen offering of Eurobonds carrying a 6 7/8% interest rate. The sale is the government-sponsored, privately owned corporation's first offering of securities denominated in a currency other than U.S. dollars." Looking to Japan to help bail us out of an economic jam only indicates that we are part of a world-wide crisis. Bob Chapman, writing in the Gary Allen Report for February, declares: "Fear lies in the hearts of our Trilateral CFR masters; fear that international monetary arrangements, which have served their interests so well over the past 36 years, are in the latter stages of collapse. Changes, needless to say, are needed, but these alterations must be carefully and secretly orchestrated. There is little margin for error. Over the next twenty-five years, there has to be a planned evolution in world monetary policy. The Trilateral banks that control the Federal Reserve or its equivalent in every country, and which are the greatest source of non-governmental power in America and the world, are about to attempt to bring this about. It matters not that it will be a reluctant world that will be brought kicking and screaming to heel and to accept their demands. . . The economic elite of the world must continue their reign. . . They are about to embark on the creation of a common currency for all of the industrial democracies, with a common monetary policy and a joint Bank of issue to determine that monetary policy. . . This is the last nail in the monetary coffin and with it, we will totally lose our freedom." (Gary Allen Report, P.O.Box 2686, Seal Beach, CA 90740. Monthly, $63 per year in U.S. funds).

The current American crisis, and the developing world crisis, are couched in economic and monetary terms. But this is just the evidence of an even greater crisis. For, no matter how good or bad our economic and financial illnesses, the fact remains that we do not live by bread alone. Ours is a social crisis, a moral crisis, and neither money nor the production of goods will solve it. Example: Bernhard Hugo

Goetz, famed as New York City's "subway vigilante," was originally charged with attempted murder for shooting four veteran teenage criminals who tried to "shake him down" for money. He is standing trial for a lesser crime, but still a felony in New York State. But the teenage criminals were not charged with any crime. Not only that, but Goetz has been named in a $50 million civil suit brought on behalf of one of the four. It is charged that Mr. Goetz "knowingly, deliberately and maliciously violated the civil and human rights" of the teenage criminal, and that Goetz is "a danger to the community in general and black youth in particular." This is a case that has been made prominent by the media. But it is not an isolated case. In many States people are arrested and charged when they attempt to defend their homes and their property, and the criminal goes free, or faces a minor penalty. Then there is the case of Dr. Jeffrey MacDonald, whose sensational story became a bestselling book and a TV movie. Sentenced to three "life" prison terms for murdering his wife and two children, he may be eligible for parole in a few years, or may receive a new trial. And there is the case of the man sentenced for the murder of so many black youths in Atlanta. His appeal for a new trial is about to be heard. Here in Florida convicted killers have been in prison for as much as ten years, appealing their death sentences. Even though it seems that prisons must be equipped with revolving doors because criminals enter and leave with such rapidity, the jails are jammed. It is said that since 1960 the number of violent crimes in the U.S. has more than quadrupled, and property crimes have tripled. There are reportedly 450,000 people in prison, 270,000 more in jails and two million more on parole or doing some sort of communal service work. This despite all the judicial leniency - probation, delays, early parole, plea-bargaining deals. Furthermore, in cases such as rape and other crimes where the victim is more persecuted than the assailant when the case is being tried, only about half of the cases are ever reported. Out of 500 that are reported, only 100 arrests are made. If they are juveniles, they're probably placed on probation. Out of 500 reported felonies, an average of only 25 go to prison. A New York police official is quoted as saying: "The odds of actually serving three years in prison for committing a felony in Manhattan are so remote as to be meaningless." Even if a conviction sticks, the criminal usually serves only a third of his stated sentence, is released on parole - and there are estimates that 70% of those released from prison commit new crimes.

Crime is just one of the social crises. There is the apparently uncontrollable drug traffic. Government schools seem to be producing little more than illiterate hoodlums. Organized religion has failed both God and His people. Secular Humanism has become the State religion. Children are taken from parents and placed in foster homes because the parents try to teach them at home where they are taught Christian values rather than the unGodly Values Clarification heresy. We - and you - could go on and on, reciting the woes that beset our society. One author has referred to it as an "Escape from Reality." But if there can be a return to reality and a restoration of our Republic, then we must first know how we got this way as a Nation.

Do you remember reading about how the Bolsheviks, when they began to transform a God-fearing, agriculturally oriented Russia into an atheistic, collectivist military behemoth, they introduced a series of Five Year Plans? Well, when the Fabian Socialists began to transform this Republic into a Corporate Socialist Welfare State, they also adopted a somewhat similar series of Four Year Plans. The first of these was announced by Theodore Roosevelt, who was backed into the Presidency of the United States for the purpose of starting the United States on the road to socialism. President McKinley was assassinated in 1901, and Vice President Theodore Roosevelt succeeded him. Roosevelt's Four Year Plan was called the square deal. He said:

I stand for the square deal. But when I say that I am for the square deal, I mean not merely that I stand for fair play under the present rules of the game, but that I stand for having those rules changed so as to work for a more substantial equality. . . (Underlining added for emphasis).

Then came Woodrow Wilson, promoted to the Presidency by the efforts of one Texas Colonel named Edward Mandell House. He was installed for three reasons that were very important to the economic elites of 1912. He championed the establishment of the Federal Reserve System; he lent his assistance to the ratification of the 13th, Income Tax Amendment; he favored the direct election of United States Senators; and if he and House had not split their powers through arguments over the content of the Versailles Peace Treaty ending World War I, he might have succeeded in embroiling the United States in a World Government scheme through Senate ratification of the League of Nations Covenant. Wilson's Four Year Plan, stated in 1912, was hidden within these words:

And the day is at hand when it shall be realized on this consecrated soil, - a New Freedom - a Liberty widened and deepened to match the broadened life of man in modern America. . . .

And then came the man who almost turned America upside down and nearly succeeded in making it into a Fascist State. His planning and programming, or more specifically, those of a "Brains Trust" with which he surrounded himself, entailed so many new changes that it has taken volumes to describe them. But in 1932 he titled his Four Year Plan simply and enduringly:

I pledge you, I pledge myself, to a new deal for the American people.

Upon FDR's death in the midst of his fourth term as President, Harry Truman took over to continue in FDR's footsteps as well as he was able. The New Deal became the Fair Deal. He described his Four Year Plan in these words:

I hope for cooperation from farmers, from labor, and from business. Every segment of our population and every individual has a right to expect from our Government a fair deal.

There was a respite from Four Year Plans during the Eisenhower Administration because Civil Rights agitation kept the planners busy. There was the Brown vs. Board of Education of Topeka case in 1954, the invasion of Little Rock in 1955, the Civil Rights Act of 1957, all paving the way for the election of John F. Kennedy over Richard M. Nixon. Kennedy's Four Year Plan was called The New Frontier. He said:

...So that, although the United States is an old country - at least its Government is old as governments now go today - nevertheless I thought we were moving into a new period, and the new frontier phrase expressed that hope.

Upon John Kennedy's murder, Lyndon Baines Johnson, a man adept at stealing elections and controlling Congresses, came to power. He said in 1964:

Building the Great Society will require a major effort on the part of every Federal agency in two directions - First, formulating imaginative new ideas and programs; and - Second, carrying out hard-hitting, tough-minded reforms in existing programs.

Kennedy's New Frontier and Johnson's Great Society dovetail and one was more or less a continuation of the other. Johnson as a Senator had inspired the Civil Rights Act of 1957. Columnist Mary McGrory described the Johnson treatment as "an incredibly potent mixture of persuasion, badgering, flattery, threats, reminders of past favors and future advantages." Johnson aspired to be President, but Kennedy beat him out in the nomination, so LBJ was happy to accept the Vice Presidency. Thus he became President without first having been elected to the post, as in the case of Theodore Roosevelt, Harry Truman, and a few others in our national history.

Up until 1962 Presidents felt it an obligatory part of their job to try to balance the budget each year. They tried, seldom succeeded, but they tried. However, because of civil rights agitation and the demand for new welfare programs, etc., in 1962 the Kennedy Administration adopted a new and then radical policy: that of not merely overspending, but of deliberately creating budgetary deficits, even when there was no economic emergency or need for such overspending. This was called for when crossing the New Frontier, where every area of human misery was classified as a problem which the federal government - not State or community governments - should solve. In 1963 Kennedy introduced his "poverty program" along with a big batch of high-spending legislation designed to destroy poverty. But Congress was reluctant to go along with Kennedy's New Frontier overspending, and something of a deadlock developed. Until John Kennedy was murdered. When Johnson stepped up, he was able to use the emotional response to the assassination, plus his own extraordinary skills as a Congressional manager, to push through the greatest and most expensive legislative program in American history. When LBJ made his first State of the Union Address in January 1964, he said: "This Administration today, here and now, declares unconditional war on poverty." He induced Congress to pass the Equal Opportunities Act of 1964 and said: "Today, for the first time in the history of the human race, a great nation is able to make and is willing to make a commitment to eradicate poverty among its people." Then followed the Tax Reduction Act, Federal aid to education, the mass transportation program, and a vast amount of anti-poverty legislation - all of this within nine months of his taking office. If the Vietnamese troubles had not diverted his attention, there's no telling what kind of socialistic legislation might have been guided through Congress. But he then turned his attention to foreign affairs, obtained the Gulf of Tonkin Resolution from Congress in August 1964, which he proceeded to use as if it were an actual Declaration of War - a war we were directed to lose. Paul Johnson, author of "Modern Times," wrote: "The first session of the 89th Congress was the most productive in fundamental legislation since the early days of Woodrow Wilson. Johnson had a 68 percent success-rate, the highest in history, for his bills, 207 of which were made into law, 'the building blocks of a better America,' he called them...There was a Youth Corps for neighborhoods, a Job Corps for dropouts, Head Start for preschool children, Outward Bound for college students, and countless other schemes. The cost soared...for the first time, government spent more on welfare than defense."

"Chickens come home to roost," is the phrase most often used to describe such happenings. The Great Society never died, never passed away; it grew and grew until it has almost destroyed society in the process. Because of the situation created by legislation passed two decades ago, we are experiencing a crisis in the 1980s. This is why Ronald Reagan was elected to the Presidency in 1980. His first State of the Union address was a promise of "a New Beginning," meaning an end to the socialistic schemes of past Presidents. But promises are not always kept. So, in his second Inaugural Address and his State of the Union message of 1985, he changed the name of his own Four Year Plan and now calls it "A Second American Revolution." But, as have other planners, he has painted a picture of an America which exists today only in dreams. And he has promised changes that may never come about. Because a "Return to Reality" requires more than promises, or laws, or economic stability. It requires a spirit in the American people like the "Spirit of '76" if we are to win any Second American Revolution - of hope and opportunity." While we wait, and hope, we can also pray.

OIL FOR THE TANKS OF RUSSIA

This Report is a sequel to our Report of August 10, 1984, "Alaska to Russia With Love?" in which we charged that five American owned Alaskan Islands and extensive oil-rich seabeds were being given to the Soviet Union by our own State Department. Since that time there has been intensive discussion about that proposed giveaway. Among other developments, the State Department has supplied questioning Senators and Members of Congress with the story that those islands really belong to Russia, that they are small and unimportant, etc. One letter from a supposedly well-informed individual called it a "blatantly false and irresponsible piece of utter _____. Why?" he asks, and then answers: "(1) You can't give something to the Russians that they already own. They've had those islands for a good 80 years plus. (2) His (our) idea of area is flagrantly inaccurate. The five islands that he mentions - plus two more in the same group wouldn't fit into El Paso County. . . . The islands are currently a part of the Yakut USSR Republic and have been a part of Russia since just before/after the turn of the century. They were given to Russia as an addendum to the treaty by which the U.S. bought Alaska from the Russians in 1867. The seven islands have a total land area of 978 Sq Mi compared with Rhode Island 1059 Sq Mi. . . "

We decided to disregard the whole affair until such time as we could get more information on the subject. Then we would answer, either retracting or reaffirming our original charges. But it so happened that, while waiting, Carl Olsen (who gave us the original information) did the answering for us. Mr. Olsen is Executive Vice President of The Conservative Caucus Research, Analysis & Education Foundation, Inc., of Vienna, Virginia. Under the logo of that organization Olsen writes that "The State Department appears ready and willing to surrender five strategic Alaskan islands and hundreds of thousands of square miles of oil-rich Alaskan outer continental shelf to the Soviet Union without full public debate and Senate ratification of a treaty." He charges that "This giveaway of literally billions of barrels of America's oil reserves and Alaskan sovereign territory makes the Panama Canal fiasco look insignificant in comparison." The Conservative Caucus issued a press release on this subject, but we doubt that it was ever printed in any commercial publication. So, for the benefit of many of our subscribers, and others who have wondered about this strange give-away of oil to an acknowledged enemy, we quote what we believe to be the most important parts of this rather extensive release:

This giveaway was the subject of a high-level State Department delegation which went to Moscow for the week of July 23-27, headed by the department's legal adviser Davis Robinson and supported by his staff members Elizabeth Verville and Scott Hajost, and by Harry Marshall and Richard T. Scully of the department's Bureau of Oceans and International Environmental and Scientific Affairs, and by Robert W. Smith of the Office of the Geographer. Secret negotiations over this surrender of sovereignty have been conducted since at least 1981. They came to light in March of that year when the Department of the Interior announced the proposed leasing of oil-rich seabeds of the outer continental shelf in the Navarin Basin off the coast of Alaska in the Bering Sea. At the instruction of the State Department, the Department of the Interior was unable to guarantee that the successful bidders for these oil and gas leases would be able to keep their leases, since this area was being actively considered for turnover to the Soviet Union. As it turned out, four energy companies (Shell, ARCO, Amoco and UNOCAL) were so certain of rich petroleum finds that they bid $108,000,000 for leases in the seabed tracts that are currently being held hostage to the State Department's negotiations. Because of the potential giveaway, these companies have over $21 million tied up in deposits with the Department of the Interior for an indefinite time period, hundreds of jobs are imperilled, and hundreds of millions of dollars of revenues and billions of barrels of oil are at stake. . . .

The oil-rich outer continental shelf off Alaska is equal to six Californias – or three-quarters of the entire U.S. outer continental shelf. Seabeds equal to about twice the size of California lie to the east of the 1867 Convention Line, and seabeds equal to about four Californias lie to the west in the vicinity of the Alaskan islands of Wrangell, Herald, Bennett, Henrietta and Jeanette. . . . In other words, the State Department is contemplating giving away about 25 billion barrels of oil equivalent to the Soviets. . . . So far, the State Department has failed to explain how the United States has relinquished its claim to the islands and seabeds between 1965 and 1984. No treaty, agreement, or other public understanding had been cited for this surrender of American sovereignty. Even as late as 1978 the noted authority Dr. William E. Butler, Professor of Comparative Law at the University of London, wrote in the book International Straits of the World, Volume I, "Northwest Arctic Passage" as follows: "The Russo-American Convention Line of 1867 is not regarded as a state frontier, and the continental shelf in the Chukchi Sea and northward remains to be negotiated."

The five Arctic Alaskan islands – Wrangell, Herald, Bennett, Henrietta, and Jeanette – were never considered in the purchase of Alaska. Four had not yet been discovered in 1867. Americans discovered and claimed them on Arctic expeditions in following decades. Herald Island was discovered and claimed by the British in 1849, and was later acquired by the United States. Bennett, Henrietta, and Jeanette Islands were discovered and claimed by U.S.N. Commander George Washington DeLong aboard the (U.S.S.) Jeanette in the 1879–81 expedition. The islands still bear his name (the DeLong Islands), and the U.S. Naval Academy in Annapolis has a monument to that expedition. Wrangell Island, the largest of the five with an area of 2,800 square miles (the size of Rhode Island and Delaware combined), was discovered and claimed on August 12, 1881, by Captain Calvin Leighton Hooper aboard the U.S. Revenue Marine (Coast Guard) ship Thomas Corwin. Among the landing party on Wrangell Island was the famed explorer John Muir, who wrote of his trip in the book The Cruise of the Corwin. Various surveys, expeditions, and settlements were made on Wrangell Island in the next four decades by Americans. This ended when the Soviet Union invaded the island with a landing of infantry from the ship Red October on August 20, 1924, and took as prisoners the 14 Americans of the Lomen Brothers Company's fur settlement and confiscated all the gear, pelts, and other property. The 12 surviving Americans were eventually released from their imprisonment in Vladivostok. The Soviets maintain slave labor camps on the island.

It is significant to note that in the State Department's reissue of the book Digest of International Law by Green Haywood Hackworth in 1973, the unequivocal statement is made: "The United States has not relinquished its claim to Wrangell Island." Numerous efforts by various parties, including the owners of Wrangell Island, have been made over the decades to take back their property and collect damages for the unlawful occupation by the Soviet Union. Unfortunately, the State Department has not seen fit yet to honor those claims or even the decision by the Foreign Claims Settlement Commission in 1959 in favor of the Lomen Brothers.

"This impending giveaway of the five islands and the enormous tracts of oil-rich outer continental shelf to the Soviets demands the most searching public scrutiny and debate. It must be made an issue for a national decision-making," Olsen stated.

"The State Department is not empowered to surrender American real estate and seabeds. Only the Congress has that power. It must be brought up in the form of a treaty, signed by the President, and debated and ratified by the Senate in order to receive the full force of law. The Constitution cannot be ignored in this potentially massive cession of strategic American interests so close to home."

In an ironic comparison with the apparent lenient attitude that the State Department has exhibited toward the Soviets over the seabed boundaries, the State Department has adopted a hardline position toward our ally Canada over the seabed boundary between Alaska and Canada in the Arctic. This position came to light with the leasing on August 22 of the Diapir Field which borders Canada. The Federal Register announcement of July 23, 1984 (p.29726) noted a "Jurisdictional Dispute" with Canada over some of the blocks being offered. Although the notice did not say so explicitly, the U.S. position is that the seabed boundary reflects the "equidistant" theory of boundaries, while the Canadians want a more favorable drawing of the line. While this dispute continues, the three petroleum companies which bid on these leases (Union Oil Co. of California., Amoco Production Co., and Shell Western E&P Inc.) will have their bid money deposit lie in escrow. Their total winning bids for the four blocks totalled $5,105,000 - a substantial affirmation of the rich nature of the Arctic Alaskan outer continental shelf.(This concludes our quotes from the Conservative Caucus Foundation press release).

COMING: THE SMART CARD

A new computerized bank card will soon revolutionize the way the world makes its financial transactions. Such a card, the carte a memoire (commonly referred to as the Smart Card) was created in 1974 by Roland Moreno, a French journalist. What makes Smart Cards so intriguing is that they are almost impossible to forge and can only be used with a Personal Identification Number (PIN). A computer brain replaces the strip of magnetic tape found on ordinary credit or automatic teller cards, making possible expanded use. For instance, the microcomputer in each card has three sections. One contains the manufacturer's codes and is inaccessible, one is confidential and can be assessed only by the PIN of the card carrier, and one can be accessed by anyone. The latter section could hold vital information such as medical history, emergency contact numbers and, somewhat ominous, other personal information in which authorities might be interested.

Despite the cost, the cards are on the way. Experiments in France - the leader in Smart Card technology - Norway and the United States have already begun. Residents in selected areas in those nations use the cards just like they would use cash, credit cards, or even identity cards. When a person wants to buy something, the merchant places the card into a special reader and enters the amount of the purchase. The owner of the card then enters his personal identification number to complete the transaction.

Unlike credit cards, the Smart Card immediately debits the purchaser's account and credits the merchant's. In the long run, use of the cards could eliminate a great deal of paperwork and expense. The cards could carry information now carried on credit cards, bank cards, social security cards and library cards, for example.

Smart Cards are not available for general use yet, but many see them as an intelligent solution to the unsafe times in which we live. book The First Guidebook to Prisons and Concentration Camps of the Soviet Union, by Avraham Shifrin (a Bantam book). One of the more famous of the prisoners on the island was Raoul Wallenberg, a World War II hero who is now an honorary American citizen. It is also interesting to note that on Public Broadcasting's program Nova, shown on February 5, 1985, Wrangell Island was erroneously referred to as a Soviet possession.

Why should the U.S. State Department be so giving and so forgiving toward the Soviet Union and so hardlined and heartless toward neighboring Canada? Well, it isn't generally known but the records will prove that the State Department has made it a habit to show friendship toward our Nations' enemies, and antagonism toward her friends. Why? Because ever since Cordell Hull, with the exception of Jimmy Byrnes who served for a spell under Harry Truman, every Secretary of State has been a member of the New York based Council on Foreign Relations. At the beginning of World War II selected members of the CFR moved into the State Department with prepared plans for running the country both during and after that war. Selected members of the CFR have run that department ever since. In effect, Washington based State has become a subsidiary of New York based CFR. Let's check the record. During World War II lend-lease supplies (not yet paid for) were poured into Russia at the expense of Admiral Nimitz and General MacArthur and the men serving under them in the Pacific War. In Europe, General Patton and his army were stopped on their march into Berlin so the Soviet troops could enter first and capture and keep a part of the city. The Soviets were given plates so they could print occupation currency to celebrate their arranged victory at the expense of American taxpayers. As a result of the Yalta Conference, the anniversary of which has so recently been "celebrated", the USSR was given more than half of Germany, all of Poland, Lithuania, Latvia, Estonia, and almost all of Eastern Europe. At the request of the Kremlin, an estimated two million Russians who had fled from the USSR and were helping or even fighting on our side, were forcibly returned to the Soviet Union where they were hanged, shot, or sent to more painful death in what has come to be called the Gulag Archipelago - this by permission of General Eisenhower, later to become President possibly as a reward. They called this monstrous mass murdering "Operation Keelhaul." Then, thanks to the efforts of the CFR's Institute of Pacific Relations, the mass murderers were given all of Manchuria, Mongolia, Tibet, Mainland China, and the northern half of Korea. Later they were given Vietnam, Cambodia, and Laos. During all of this time, thanks to the CFR's Washington subsidiary and its Megabanker and Foundation allies, our country fed the USSR, built factories for them, even gave them the technology and equipment necessary to make for themselves weapons to control our weather. A military monster was created, all because in order to establish a New World Order according to CFR specifications, there had to be a Soviet Socialist antithesis to challenge an American free enterprise thesis, so that a Hegelian synthesis could be brought to pass. Remembering all these things, is it any wonder that friendship toward the USSR is counterbalanced by hardlining the Republics of China and the Philippines, and our northern neighbor Canada? And yet, having given the USSR so much to keep it alive and belligerent, it still comes as a shock to realize that the U.S. State Department is engaged in giving the Soviets a part of one of the Sovereign States of the United States - apparently because the USSR is running short of oil to sell to Europe. How long, oh Lord, how long before our people can be awakened?

WHEN JUSTICE HAS DEPARTED . . .

And moreover I saw under the sun the place of judgment, that wickedness was there; and the place of righteousness, that iniquity was there. I said in my heart, God shall judge the righteous and wicked: for there is a time there for every purpose and for every work. (Eccl. 3:16-17).

"By its continuous rebellion, all of us have become hardened in the past years to the violence that is quickly taking over our land. Yet, like the dreamer in a nightmare who finds himself suddenly falling off some lofty cliff into the vast black and bottomless maw of the abyss, some shocks are so filled with terror that they jolt us awake. Such is the recent violence in Nebraska which has probably passed most of you unaware." So wrote Franklin Sanders in the January 1985 issue of his newsletter The Moneychanger. After that introduction, he narrates the following which we quote:

Arthur L. Kirk was a 49 year old farmer near Grand Island, Nebraska. Late in October 1984 a Nebraska State police SWAT team gunned him down at his home. How on earth could things get to this point? Arthur L. Kirk was not too terribly different from thousands of debt-laded farmers in America today, except that in his case, his debt ended in his death. The story is so bizarre that it defies our belief, as related in the December 1984 issue of Acres, USA. In the throes of debt, Kirk had filed suit against the local Norwest National Bank. Sheriff's deputies came to serve replevin papers on Kirk in another action on behalf of Norwest National Bank, Grand Island. Kirk's side of the story reads considerably different from the official version. We quote from the Acres, USA article.

"No less than seven witnesses are willing to give Arthur Kirk's part of the story, as far as it is known. He was working on machinery in his backyard when he noted a man with a drawn gun stalking among outbuildings. Then he noticed another man, gun also drawn, stealing across the yard. Finally Kirk's roving eye discovered a third man. He had no gun in his holster, but when confronted he held out his hand, offering papers. Concealed under the papers was the officer's gun. At this point Kirk drew his own gun. He asked what they wanted, and pointed out that his land was posted. There was in fact, a sign every 600 feet. The posting had been registered and advertised, and the sheriff had a copy. Moreover, Kirk had a lawsuit filed against the Norwest National Bank, a branch part of the Norwest Bank of Minneapolis, Minnesota chain (Kirk's filing of the suit in Federal Court gave that court jurisdiction. Was the replevin suit filed in blatant violation of that jurisdiction?). For these several reasons, Kirk bluntly refused service and ordered the lawmen off his property. As the deputies left, they stuffed the papers into a picket fence. The papers, it turned out, had to do with a civil matter, and could have been mailed."

Kirk then called his wife in town with this story and she and six friends rushed out to the farm. A sheriff's car was shadowing them, and Kirk feared he would be "assassinated without a witness." Later in the afternoon Mrs. Kirk returned to town and the neighbors went home. More from Acres, USA: "By 5:00 to 5:30 Arthur Kirk could, now and then, see a small airplane flying near his place. A brown car maintained surveillance from a safe distance. At 6:00 p.m. Art Kirk became worried. His wife had failed to return. He tried to call  but was unable to make a connection. In the meantime, Mrs. Kirk had arrived at a roadblock set up to isolate the farm. She was not allowed to pass to go home, or to talk to her husband. She was told she would be arrested and jailed if she failed to obey the officer  The SWAT team moved into place, safe under cover of darkness. "At 9:00 p.m. Kirk was still alive. In the last phone call with his wife he informed her that 'they were out there.' He knew they were out to kill him and he figured he would defend himself.' Later that night Arthur L. Kirk was shot twice, and apparently was allowed to bleed to death, shot down in the dog kennel at his own home. Some of the accompanying facts and inferences are simply so bizarre they beggar our ability to believe.  Why did trained policemen allow a man to bleed to death when arterial pressure might have saved his life? For that matter, when did the refusal of service of civil papers which might have been served by mail, become grounds for calling in a SWAT team like the landing on Normandy Beach? Local persons seem to know that one Federal Marshall named Arnett was in control of the SWAT team. Was this the same Marshall Arnett who ambushed Gordon Kahl and his family near Minot, North Dakota and led finally to the Arkansas shootout that resulted in the death of Kahl and the local sheriff under circumstances that no grand jury has investigated?

Our good friend Larry Becraft, Huntsville (Alabama) attorney checked out the 1983 McNally International Bankers Directory and found that the Northwest National Bank of Grand Island, Nebraska has a very unusual owner. Although it is not unusual for a bank to be owned by a holding company, this holding company is very unusual; it's listed as the Federal Reserve System. Is this the bank that was after Arthur L. Kirk?  What has become of the rule of law? I quote from a letter from Larry Becraft to Steve von Reisen, Hall County (Nebraska) Attorney: "Today governments seem more interested in becoming the masters of the American people and desire to abuse and deprive Americans of their life, liberty and property. The recent example of Arthur L. Kirk demonstrated this most vicious trend of state government; the State of Nebraska and Hall County deliberately, intentionally and maliciously deprived Arthur L. Kirk of his life and liberty while in the course of depriving him of his property.  The banks of our nation have various tools to expand and contract their outstanding liabilities which we use as 'money'; and banks can use this ability to create credit shortages so that they can convert their book entries to real wealth. And when banks target someone for liquidation, their power is such that they can turn their victim into a criminal. This is what happened to Arthur L. Kirk." Was Arthur L. Kirk selected as a showcase example to other farmers of what happens when one crosses a bank?  If Arthur L. Kirk's case were alone we might ascribe it to an isolated lack of cool-headedness, the overzealous act of underlings too little overseen. Yet it is not alone. Only short months ago a church in Louisville, Nebraska was invaded by sheriff's deputies and peaceful men worshipping God were violently dragged out of that house of worship. It was only at the very last minute a few days later that the local judge relented and ordered the chains (!) removed from the church, avoiding a bloody confrontation with men of God determined to exercise their right of worship, whatever the personal cost. On January 24, 1984 in Winchester, Tennessee F. Tupper Saussy, songwriter, playwright, and advocate of a return to constitutional money, was to be tried on income tax charges. I talked to his wife, Frederique, on January 29th and she informed me there were police from six cities there, along with numerous FBI agents and a SWAT team.  Why must every dissent in America call forth a SWAT team as the government's response? Are peaceful citizens that dangerous? Dead citizens certainly aren't, and they're plenty peaceful. (Quoted from the January 1985 issue of Moneychanger, P.O.Box 241203, Memphis, TN 38124. Monthly, F$65 per year.

More about F. Tupper Saussy: On January 24 1985 he was sentenced to 90 days for "contempt of court." Peggy Poor's The Upright Ostrich summarizes: "Tupper had been charged with that entrapment scam being employed against Constitutionalists, 'wilful failure to file.' He had been charged on an 'information' filed by the local

Injustice Department Gauleiter without any sworn affidavit, without any supporting evidence and therefore without the probable cause fundamental to our concept of justice since before the Magna Carta. No Grand Jury had been summoned to determine whether there was sufficient probable cause of guilt for him to be brought to trial, as is required under our Constitution. Furthermore, this railroading is in violation of even the judge-devised Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure which require a preliminary hearing on probable cause and that the complaint or affidavit  'must show probable cause.' According to eyewitnesses, the marshalls used 'excessive force' in roughly separating Tupper from his wife and little children. They were dragged out of the court and behind the closed door of another room. Those outside reported hearing Freddie (Tupper's wife) crying, 'Don't hurt my little boys.' The judge cleared the court room and tried to clear the building, a large taxpaid structure housing many other public taxpaid offices in addition to the single courtroom. Eyewitnesses said the building and streets outside were thronged with an army of law enforcement types; presumed FBI who refused to identify themselves, police from six towns, sheriffs and their deputies, a SWAT team, all in addition to the beefed up contingent of U.S. Marshalls.  Tupper was hustled out a back door and transported to the county jail in Chattanooga. A few days later Tupper was hustled out in cuffs and chains and, under angry threats, loaded into a prison bus, destination unknown. He was unloaded at the Federal Prison Camp, 601 McDonough Blvd., Atlanta, GA 30315. The phone is (404) 622-6241. Everybody is urged to spread that number and call to assure that Tupper is not mistreated. Undoubtedly the next issue of Tupper's Main Street Journal will carry an updated, more detailed and more accurate account of these shocking events." One more example from a list of injustices that are becoming far too many; this one happening in Detroit. We quote from the January 24, 1985 issue of The Constitutionalist, of Dearborn, Michigan: "Gestapo IRS revenueurs held helpless toddlers till their terrified mothers would sign 'Notice of Levy' for their release from a suburban Detroit area day care center. At about 4 p.m. on November 28, 1984, 7 or 8 Internal Revenue Service agents raided the day care center, flashing their badges and claiming to have a 'court order.' They demanded 'this property is seized,' and began ordering the employees and children to 'put down your scissors and vacate immediately to room C.' When questioned about the bizarre circumstances of the seizure and kidnapping, IRS public affairs officer Walter Dunnigan said: 'There is no way we would do that. That makes absolutely no sense. The children had no liability in the case. What you had that day was nothing but a routine seizure.'

Congressman John Dingell, D. of Trenton, stated: 'If the allegations are true, some very serious wrongdoing that may constitute false imprisonment or kidnapping has occurred.' 'What we were facing was a hostage-type situation, they were using the children as collateral,' said Sue Stola, one of the shocked parents who witnessed the police state tactics of the IRS. After the goon squad had 'secured' the building, agent Turner roamed about tagging equipment for seizure. 'It was very, very intimidating,' said Ms. Derby (co-owner of the Eagle World Day Care Center). Two agents were posted at the main entrance. The parents that came to get their kids had to knock to be admitted because the locks had been changed. The parents were directed by one agent to a card table where two other agents waited for them with levy forms. The agents told me to wait in my office and as each parent arrived I had to calculate their bill. Then the agents filled in the name and amount owed and levied the parents on the spot. The parents hands were shaking as they paid what they owed. It was a very scary situation, like the Gestapo was here. Children were crying, parents were trembling,' Derby concluded. Shocked parents, thirteen in all, mostly mothers on their way home to prepare dinner, complied and signed the IRS levy. Their children were then released and they were allowed to go home. 'I told one woman whose hands were shaking that she shouldn't sign anything she didn't want to,' Derby said. 'She signed anyway.' One of the thousands of debt-ridden independent owners of family farms sues a bank which is a branch of the Federal Reserve system, is shot down and left bleeding, losing his life and liberty on his own property. A man who upholds and acts upon the command of Section 10 of Article I of the United States Constitution is imprisoned. Little children are kidnapped and held as hostages by IRS agents eking out the last penny of the assets of a child day care center; and this at a time when there is a worldwide shortage of millstones (Matthew 18:1-6, King James). Christian schools under attack; preachers jailed, churches padlocked, children wrested from parents and placed in foster homes because those parents sought to teach their own children in their own way. Many, many more of such incidents could be cited. But let us mention what, to us, is the most abominable act of all, just come to light publicly due to the Freedom of Information Act. We are told that the IRS condones and rewards the act of abortion in this manner: If it can be attested that the victim of the now legal murder was alive after delivery, even for a second, then that innocent victim can be included as a dependent upon making out one's income tax form for the year. We haven't all the details at this writing but we are told that the IRS headquarters admits this, but is studying the rule, possibly may retract.

George Hansen, former Congressman who suffered political death and was made a criminal because of his fight against the IRS said in his book To Harass Our People: "The story of the Internal Revenue Service is a history of a tax collection agency drunk with power, ruthlessly smashing dissent among its own personnel and brazenly roughing up taxpayers at will. The IRS defies and intimidates its Congressional creators to go virtually unchallenged in its blatant illegal exercise of awesome power against the American public.  The violations of the rights of American people today by their own government are ironically parallel to the injustices suffered by the Colonists in the years preceding the Revolutionary War." We must agree with F. Sanders who wrote: "I am no friend of rebellion. Providence has ordained civil government to keep the peace, to punish lawbreakers and the rebellious. Yet what is our state when civil government becomes the outlaw, the chief breaker of the peace? What is our condition when civil government allies with the powerful to oppress the weak? It is no government: it is anarchy. The tool of force belongs not only to governments, but to tyrants as well. If government's response to the attempts of the weak to make their grievances known is savage force of arms, eventually that force will call forth from the hot-headed a like answer, and God have mercy then on every one of us  I urge you to pray God to have mercy on America and to restore the rule of law."

THE TAX AND SPEND SYNDROME

"That President Reagan is a cheerful fellow - chipper and spry, too," Clarence Carson commented. "I wish I'd had half his zip when I was 53. I'll bet he could make a good living selling. Anybody who can make a Budget with a deficit close to $200 billion sound like a vast improvement could probably sell a hairpiece to a gorilla. He is the only person I know who can make the prospect of more Americans working and earning more money so they can pay more taxes sound like a windfall for the Republic. Even so, his husbandry of the great wealth that pours into Washington from taxpayers leaves something to be desired. The truth is that the mouse has struggled mightily and brought forth a Mountain of a Budget." So began an article by Mr. Carson which appeared in the February 27th Review of the News. He went on to observe that if Mr. Reagan really wanted to balance the Budget, he should consult the Constitution, not the Democrats.

But Reagan the Salesman wasn't so successful when he tried to get State Governors to stop expecting subsidies from the federal trough. According to the New York Times, "President Reagan told the nation's governors yesterday (2/25/85) that there was 'no justification, for Washington to continue aiding state and local governments when some have surpluses and the federal government has a deficit.' The 1986 budget plan as presently proposed would eliminate the revenue-sharing program, reduce or eliminate federally assisted housing, mass transit and economic development programs for states and local communities. All of which should have been accepted as a good thing by State Governors, because when the taxpayers in a State send their money to Washington and then expect to get it back in the form of subsidies and such, about half of the amount is lost in transit. But the Governors don't see it that way. Nor do they remember what the U.S. Supreme Court has said, that what government finances, government has a right to control. So, when 45 State Governors met the President at a conference in the White House, the members of the Governor's Conference protested quite vocally.

Just for the record, it ought to be understood that this idea of federal subsidies to the States started out as a way for the federal government to gain more control over the States. The War Between the States didn't entirely do away with States' Rights. The Ninth and Tenth Amendments to the Constitution were still generally observed and honored by most courts and other government bodies. So, in 1908 President Theodore Roosevelt brought about an "Organization of state governors for the purpose of considering the conservation of natural resources." According to the 1928 edition of the book "Documents and Readings in American Government," the governors have since then "maintained a continuous organization and hold annual meetings for the discussion of problems of common interest. At the second and third meetings, held in 1910, addresses were made by two of our leading statesmen, Woodrow Wilson and Charles E. Hughes." Then under the heading "Federal Subsidies," we read in this same book: "A form of the extension of national control over the states which has recently grown to be of considerable importance is that through conditional grants of money by the National Government to be spent in the for such purposes as education, good roads, and public health. In his budget message of December 8, 1925, President Coolidge called attention to this development and deprecated its further extension, both because of its drain on the National Treasury and also because it interfered with the performance by the States of properly state functions. Nevertheless, the tendency continues apace." This was published in 1928.

At about this same time (1928) the Roosevelt family had begun to finance and gain control over the then comparatively unimportant Council on Foreign Relations, for the purpose of gaining control over American foreign policy, trade and economics, and then, through other organizations such as the Bilderberger Group, the Trilateral Commission, etc., gain control over the policies, trade and economics of all other industrial nations. Along with this program there also was a need for similar exclusive national organizations that would gain control over American domestic policy at the State and local levels. So, on the grounds of the Rockefeller-financed University of Chicago there was established a network of such organizations which came to be called 1313 because of its address. Of course the Council of State Governors was one of the more important of this network. Later, the network became quasi-federal in power and authority through ACIR. This organization writes or rewrites State Constitutions, prepares laws for introduction in and enactment by State Legislatures, controls a City Managers' Union, etc., etc. But that's another and a very long story which has been told in previous DBRs back in the '60s and '70s in issues now out of print and considered by some to be collectors' items.

But getting back to our present theme, President Reagan had a good idea when he proposed that the States get off the Federal Gravy Train. But, as Governor Lamar Alexander of Tennessee, a Republican and vice chairman of the governor's association said, "The combined surpluses for all states this year would total about $5 billion and that amount wouldn't make a dent in the deficit." So, subsidies to the states will probably be considered as one of what Tom Anderson calls Big Brother's uncuttable items in the federal Budget. He lists some of the other "uncuttables" in Big Brother's Budget, which:

- * Accounts for 25% of all U.S. economic activity.
- * Owns 744 million acres of land, or one third of the U.S. landmass.
- * Employs 4.9 million people, or 4.3% of the U.S. labor force.
- * Occupies 2.6 billion square feet of office space, or four times the total office space in the ten largest U.S. cities.
- * Has an annual cash flow of $2 trillion. That's $8 billion collected and spent each workday, or about $1 billion an hour.
- * Administers more than 400,000 single and multi-family housing units.
- * Made available credit of more than three quarters of a trillion dollars in 1982, equal to the total credit provided by the nation's 70 largest commercial lenders. * Spent $3.5 billion on housekeeping and general maintenance in 1983.
- * Runs 963 subsidized programs at an annual cost of more than $400 billion.
- * Lays out nearly $50 million a year to print new food stamps and destroy old ones.
- * Provides medical care for 47 million people, or more than 20% of the population.
- * Spends about $1.8 billion on mailings a year.
- * Owns almost 437,000 non-military vehicles.
- * Has a computer work force totalling more than 250,000 people exceeding the population of St. Petersburg, Florida, to run some 17,000 computers.
- * Provides 96 million meals a day.
- * Gives hundred of thousands of ex-government employees more pension money than they earned as employees.

In general, the Congress is telling us that, aside from "Defense," the budget is uncuttable  Most of us talk a lot without saying anything - but only politicians do it on purpose, said Tom Anderson in his Straight Talk (Weekly, $47 a year, Box 60, Pigeon Fork, TN 37863).

The figures are so astronomical that it's almost impossible to comprehend them. We're on the verge of having trillion-dollar budgets, with government spending nearly $300 billion more annually than in the Carter era. Human Events put it this way: "Government is spending three-quarters of a million a day more than when Carter was President, and spending is rising faster and higher under President Reagan. Deficits are not going down; they're expanding. The $78 billion deficit the President logged in 1981 is expected to soar to nearly three times that sum by the end of this fiscal year (September 30), the highest ever recorded in United States history.  Unless the Congress is deadly serious about curbing federal spending, future budgets will be even further out of control." But, as Clarence Carson explains, it isn't just the Congress. "The truth is that a balanced Budget is not a very high priority item for Mr. Reagan. It ranks somewhere below holding monthly press conferences and only slightly higher than appointing Sam Donaldson to handle his office appointments. It would require a great deal more courage than Reagan has displayed to date, more fortitude in the face of the roar of disapproval, and the will to confront Congress with the necessary vetoes until enough Members of that body get the message. The Constitution certainly would be a proper guide in any such balancing of the federal Budget. President Reagan might well take his stand on that remarkable document, now honored so much in the breach. All he would need to do would be to read the Constitution with a view to what it prescribes as the proper business of the federal government and on what sort of activities it is authorized to spend money. If the President has trouble in construing what is written there, I would suggest that he dip into the works of Thomas Jefferson, James Madison, James Monroe, and (since Mr. Reagan appears to admire famous Democrats) he might also consult Andrew Jackson, Franklin Pierce, and Grover Cleveland, to name a few."

It all boils down to those "entitlements," some of which Tom Anderson named. These are the "fixed" expenses that are said to be uncuttable or untouchable. And almost all of them are violations of the Constitution, both in letter and in spirit. It is true that support should be given the sick and the maimed, but this is not the province of the federal government. Nor is there any Constitutional permit for giving billions in foreign aid. However, this latter didn't start with FDR's Lend-Lease Program. In a publication recently issued by Foreign Policy, an organ of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, we are informed that on March 3, 1812, the "first foreign aid act passed by Congress authorizes $50,000 for relief of Venezuelan earthquake victims." We repeat, that was in 1812. Actually, the Venezuelans were fighting for their freedom from Spain and our government was helping them out. Much as we later helped out Cuba and the Philippines against Spain around the turn of the century, the Allies against the Axis powers two decades later, Europe against Germany, Japan and Italy another two decades later, Soviet Russia against Nazi Germany, and on and on. But, we're rambling on and on away from our theme of the week.

Talk of Budget Balancing must inevitably bring on its corollary: Tax Reform. And while President Reagan may not consider a balanced budget a very high priority, he takes what appears to be a positive stand against any increase in taxation. He wants tax reform without tax increase. But that's where some carefully engineered duplicity is involved. Says U.S. News of February 25: "The specter of major tax changes for millions of Americans is beginning to stir in Washington. At the Capitol, Congress is getting ready to open hearings on tax reform  In the White House, President Reagan will start deciding on the tax-reform plan he will unveil in a few weeks. Then, he will go to the people for support  As the action accelerates, important voices in Congress are saying that - despite the President's vow not to raise taxes - they may well be boosted." That may be the understatement of the year. The megabanks are in trouble, are determined that the taxpayers are going to bail them out, deficits will soar higher and higher, and that annual interest we must pay the FED on the federal debt will go higher and higher as Congress continues to borrow more and more billions to keep a semblance of solvency; all of these make it inevitable that taxes will go up and up. But, the Trilateralists who control the Reagan Administration are determined to initiate a devious plan for tax increases that will keep the facts hidden from the public in such a way that they will, to quote Carson again, "make the prospect of more Americans working and earning more money so they can pay more taxes sound like a windfall for the Republic." It was Donald Regan, while still Treasury Secretary, who introduced the "simplified" tax plan which is so complex that it took "more than a month for private economists and tax experts to uncover the scheme's full destructive ramifications for the U.S. taxpayers and economy," this according to C.B. Baker who publishes Youth Action News. He points out some of the ways in which this supposedly tax reduction plan actually is a monstrous program of tax increases. Examples: This tax plan ends all federal deductions for state and local taxes, which means that millions of Americans who pay "hideously high local and state property taxes on their homes, farms, and businesses, will no longer be able to deduct these taxes from their federal tax returns. Even apartment renters will be hit by this proposal, because the increased tax burdens will be passed on to tenants in the form of higher rents. Independent farmers, already in great difficulty, will be hit hard by the loss of interest payment deductions that will no longer be possible if the Administration's tax proposal is adopted. One of the best proofs that this tax reform proposal is a dangerous plan was pointed out by the Wall Street Journal of December 28, 1984, which reported that "Liberals, such as Ralph Nader, former Senator George McGovern, and Harlem Congressman Charles Rangel were  quick to embrace the Treasury plan." Business Week of December 17 added: "The warmest early reaction to the tax plan came from liberal tax economists and their congressional allies. Joseph A. Pechman of the Brookings Institute, and Walter Heller of the University of Minnesota jumped in to praise it." While the usual tax loopholes which are used by ordinary businessmen and independent manufacturers will be wiped out, the multi-million dollar tax-exempt foundations will be untouched by the proposed new tax plan. Rockefeller, Ford, Carnegie and similar foundations would be protected. Even the Washington Post is said to have reported that "A growing number of the sons and daughters of corporate America  have dug into their family fortunes to fund so-called alternate foundations that promote social change, not charity. The offerings of Levi-Strauss, Knight-Ridder, ALCOA, Du Pont, and Sears Roebuck fortunes were schooled in the antiwar and civil rights protests of the 1960s and are channeling their money into socially and politically conscious organizations concerned with antinuclear action, women's equality, lesbian rights, prison reform and racial discrimination." Such foundation work is untouched by the proposed new tax reform program. Because the Reagan Administration promotes and the Liberals and Socialists approve, the plan has a good chance of becoming law.
