Federal spending is outrageously high, and must be brought under control;
America's greatness is the product of rigid constitutional law that provides freedom from arbitrary governmental interference; and violation of that principle has resulted in thousands of federal corporate activities now competing with private enterprise of the American people. Such federal corporate activities have taken over 40% of the land area and 20% of the industrial capacity of the nation, costing billions of dollars of taxes to pay for these bureaucratic empires. Expensive giveaway programs are wasting our substance and creating new problems without solving the old ones. We do not need federal bureaucrats to solve local problems. Our nation grew great and prosperous because of individual initiative and work, not because of bureaucratic red tape"

After more comment of similar nature, there follows the actual text of HJR 23:

Sec.1. The Government of the United States shall not engage in any business, professional, commercial, financial or industrial enterprise except as specified in the Constitution.

Sec.2. The Constitution or laws of any State, or the laws of the United States shall not be subject to the terms of any foreign or domestic agreement which would abrogate this amendment.

Sec.3. The activities of the United States Government which violate the intent and purposes of this amendment shall, within a period of three years from the date of the ratification of this amendment, be liquidated and the properties and facilities affected shall be sold.

Sec.4. Three years after the ratification of this amendment the sixteenth article of amendments to the Constitution of the United States shall stand repealed and thereafter Congress shall not levy taxes on personal incomes, estates, and/or gifts. (Unquote).

FOREIGN POLICY. In "The Ledger" of Montrose, CA there appeared this item: "If you are a reader of Penthouse Magazine, you read a recent article about President Carter by James E. Lee. It's interesting fare, and ends with 'Jimmy Carter has his eye on his next job, the one that will begin in January 1985. His position then will, in all likelihood, be the President of the First World of the Global Society--or whatever they decide to call it. One thing is certain: what we are seeing in 1978 is only the beginning.'" There is little likelihood that Jimmy Carter will ever get there; but that there will be a President of the World in 1985 is quite possible; and it is certainly true that what we are seeing is only a beginning. But, we can already see a shift in foreign policy which points toward the total sacrifice of American sovereignty and U.S. integration into a New World Order. A few of the signs:

The surreptitious surrender of Africa to the Communists is highlighted by the treatment of Rhodesia's Ian Smith while visiting the U.S. under State Department protest. We are reminded that just two weeks ago Jimmy Carter told the Congressional Black Caucus that Ambassador Andrew Young is "a man who is not afraid to speak out when he sees something wrong...I don't know of anyone who has done more for our country throughout the world than Andy Young." What has he actually done? He has carried out a program which calls for the wiping out of Western civilization! On an ABC news documentary at the time of his appointment as ambassador: "Western technology and Western militarism has so interfered with the right of the possibility of, say, democracy in Latin America, or real freedom in Africa and Asia, that it may take the destruction--and this of course is Black Panther ideology--of Western civilization to allow the rest of the world to really emerge as a free and brotherly society. And if the White West is incapable of brotherhood with colored peoples then this small body of colored peoples--black people within the white West--may be the revolutionary vanguard that God ordained to destroy the whole thing."

In the Middle East, Jimmy Carter is acting as mediator in a peace conference that includes Egypt only, and the rest of the Arab World is infuriated and rejects the whole thing. One of their reasons: they have learned that as a part of the Camp David deal, the U.S. is going to build two modern air bases for the Israelis, at Eitam and Etzion in the Sinai. U.S. taxpayers will pay for them. Defense Secretary Harold Brown estimates the cost (in money) at perhaps as much as $500 million each. Besides the facilities for landing and maintaining warplanes, a vast intelligence complex is also involved, meaning more money. Here again, the U.S. policy seems to be that of pushing the Arab Nations into the Soviet camp!

In Western Europe, the same policy seems to be operating. Paul Warnke, the Trilateralist proponent of unilateral disarmament, has completed his work on the proposed SALT agreement but will stay on the job to visit the Kremlin with State Secretary Vance Oct. 22, then will remain to testify for the treaty when the Senate holds hearings next year. Meanwhile, comes word that West Germany is about to withdraw from NATO. The trouble began with Kissinger when it was revealed that if Russia should strike across the border into West Germany, the U.S. would concede one-third of West Germany before resisting! Then came all the troubles with the Trilateral dollar policy, and West Germany retaliated. Published in Europe but not in the U.S. were the details of a new Schmidt-Brezhnev treaty signed last May. According to LTP Strategy Letter, it is a 25-year treaty covering all aspects of economic development, political, cultural, and people-to-people relationships between the two countries. First important offshoot: a $500 million loan agreement was arranged, whereby the Dresdner Bank agreed to put together a consortium of European banks to lend Russia the half billion. No American banks were included in the deal.

Next came word that the nine Euromart Nations had formed a new political federation in which the European Nations will coordinate and merge their foreign policies, again ignoring the United States. This, said a spokesman, was "to combine the influence of Europe's wealthiest nations, to act with a united voice and thus compete with the United States, the Soviet Union, and the so-called Third World, in global relations." Thus is the United States being isolated by its own Invisible Government! And thus are "Regional World Governments" being formed, preparatory to their merging into a New World Order.

We spoke of unfinished business. If we are to remain a free people, there is much unfinished business. In this letter, we have but scratched the surface. But, the interlude between Congresses and before elections is a time to begin.

COMMUNISM'S PERMISSIVE INFILTRATION

Before the strange death of Pope John Paul I an even stranger death occurred at the Vatican. Archbishop Nikodim, Metropolitan of Leningrad, collapsed and died in the Pope's study. Nikodim was the ranking churchman in the USSR but was also a Major General in the Soviet Intelligence Service, the KGB. To a discerning Christian, this unusual death might have been accepted as a sign-- a sign that there should be no communion between Christianity and Communism. "For what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness?" asked Paul of the church at Corinth. "and what communion hath light with darkness? And what concord hath Christ with Belial? or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel?" Such was the conviction of the late Cardinal Mindszenty, the primate of Hungary; and of Cardinal Slipyi, primate of the Ukraine. Both suffered much at the hands of the Communists. Mindszenty was freed from a communist jail by Hungarian Freedom Fighters and took refuge in the U.S. Embassy. Slipyi, a prisoner for 18 years in Soviet labor camps, finally was freed to live in retirement in Rome, this after the late Pope John XXIII made a deal with the Soviet and adopted the policy called "Ostpolitik." Prior to John's papacy, there was no such collaboration with the Communists, nor with the hierarchy of the Russian Orthodox Church, which was dominated by the KGB.

Behind the so-called Iron Curtain churches are not permitted to function openly unless they have obtained a special license from the KGB. This means that all religious activities (including Billy Graham's crusades) are spied on and conducted under the surveillance of the KGB. How severe the persecution of religious groups has become is described by the Soviet dissident, Andrei Sakharov:

"Among those suffering for their convictions, the religious believers constitute a large group. The persecution of religion is a frightful tradition in all the socialist countries; but nowhere (except perhaps in Albania) has it attained such scope and depth as in the USSR..."

The charge is important: "The persecution of religion is a frightful tradition in all socialist countries." Poland is a socialist country, controlled by the Communist Party under the surveillance of the Secret Police. It follows then, that the former Cardinal of Krakow, Poland, the present Pope John Paul II, collaborated with the Communist governments of Poland and of the USSR; he would not have been permitted to serve openly as a church leader had he not cooperated with the Communists.

This "accomodation" of Communism by the Roman Catholic Church began under the late John XXIII, continued under Paul VI. It was expected to continue under John Paul I. But the Vatican II adherents misjudged him, Actually he was a staunch anti-Communist. It is reported that ten days before his mysterious, and unsatisfactorily explained death, John Paul I issued a papal decree backing up the traditional, pre-Vatican II, position that Christianity and Communism are diametrically opposed one to the other, and that church members who become communists should suffer excommunication. This decree, if it actually was issued, may have been the cause of his death. That the next, current Pope comes to the Vatican from behind the so-called Iron Curtain lends credence to this theory.

Lest there be any misunderstanding as to the precise difference between Communism and Christianity, we quote from the words of Pierre Courthial, translated from the original French by Janet L. Johnson, and appearing in the book "The Church in Today's Catacombs," published by Arlington House in 1975:

"Many think that Communism is only an economic or political doctrine or a scientific theory. The fact that must be grasped is that, first and essentially, Communism is a universal religious system, a general view of the world, of history, and of man, inspired by faith in Man as God. It is quite clear that Communism (systematic humanism) and Christianity (systematic theism) are rigorously antithetical. Their opposition is systematic; any true Communist is systematically anti-Christian, any faithful Christian is systematically anti-Communist.... Because Communism wears a mask whenever circumstances and tactics demand it, some do not realize the fact that it is a universal and anti-Christian religious system. As long as it is not in power, Communism more or less conceals its true character and seems to defend in the name of peace and justice--those two natural goals of many men--only political, social, or economic views. When it is in power, communism takes off its mask, completely or in part, and seeks to impose the anti-Christian system, up to them more or less camouflaged, in spirit and in fact.... Between the religion of man (the religion of revolution) and the religion of the triune God (the religion of creation and redemption) the final battle, a struggle of systems, is being waged. The outcome of this battle, of this struggle, is life eternal and temporal for men. Faithful Christians can and must oppose Communism in every sphere of human existence--conjugal, family, professional, political, and cultural..... Only a systematic Christianity can victoriously oppose a systematic Communism. Only the Word of God and the Spirit of God can conquer--first of all and every day in ourselves--the spirit of death and inhumanity that belongs to humanism, to the religion where autonomous and sovereign man is substituted for the living God." (Unquote).

Let us define our terms: to the collectivist theorist Communism is the perfect, the utopian form of Socialism; while Socialism is a synonym for Humanism; and Humanism has been defined by our own Supreme Court as a religion. This is the religion that has supplanted Christianity in the public schools, and has replaced Christian orientation in our halls of justice and in most of our churches--especially those maintaining membership in the World and National Council of Churches. Now that the Roman Catholic Church, following the dictates of the Vatican II Council and the election of a Pope from a Communist Satellite, has apparently also embraced the religion of Humanism, one more victory for Communism can be recorded.

The infiltration began much earlier in the Protestant churches. For example, in February 1960, the House Committee on Un-American Activities released a statement to the effect that "the leadership of the National Council of Churches... had hundreds or at least over 100 affiliations with communist fronts and causes... which would certainly suggest... that the statement there is infiltration of fellow travelers in churches and education institutions is a complete understatement." Bella Dodd, a former Communist, explained how the infiltration was accomplished in colleges: "... a communist who is an idealist tries to take the party line into his various organizations... and tries to find others who are sympathetic to him or he finds where the sore spots are on the campus... You choose an issue which you would bring up... If you find two or three or four or five people then you attach yourself to these two or three or four or five people, and you begin to work on them day after day after day." In short, when Communist idealists infiltrated churches and schools, they put away the bombs and the tactics of terrorism, and preached about "human rights." Or, as the same thing might be said in scriptural language, they stopped acting as roaring lions and appeared as an angel of light. Bella Dodd explained: "It is this desire to do right that has entangled more people into the Communist movement--this desire to serve mankind, this desire to help make a better world. Those are the slogans which they preach, and it is only after you are in it up to your neck that you discover that this isn't what it is."

A Roman Catholic writer explains how this affected Pope Paul's pontificate, in that Paul "served two masters, God and Man." He stood against abortion, sex without marriage, sanctity of the home, etc. But, in international politics, he supported the left-wing, arranged accommodations with the Communists in the Catholic countries of Western Europe and in Latin America. He looked for the "good in Marxism." Some of the results: Cardinal Trinnichinchi of Hanoi in Sept. 1977 was able to say, "We are Marxists and we are Catholics." Cardinals in France that same year issued a joint letter calling for collaboration with the Communists politically and economically. R. Huxtable a British Catholic, writing in "Candour", said in part: "The logical outcome of this policy would be the condemnation of millions to live under Marxism and the economic and military isolation of the United Kingdom and the United States; for, if a Pope openly permits Catholics to vote the Communist ticket, this will, in many countries, be all that is needed to push their already substantial vote over the edge at the polls."

Before Paul VI there was John XXIII, who convened the Vatican II Council. Miss Ursula Oxford, a devout traditionalist Catholic living in Lake Worth, FL. is the author of a book, "The Heresy of Pope John XXIII." At the time the recent Nicaraguan crisis was at its height, she wrote: "(This) shows the disastrous role played by the leftist Catholic church groups who, under the umbrella of Vatican Council II have defected into Marxism and have become the most effective secret ally for Marxist expansion. Such a deception was unthinkable prior to Vatican II (1962-1965), when the Catholic Church was the most outspoken monolithic church block against the evils of atheistic communism in the whole world. And everyone who knowingly adhered to communism incurred the punishment of excommunication. There are no more excommunications in the 'new order' church of Vatican II. Just as in the case of the election of Salvador Allende in Chile, which was made possible because Allende had the powerful support of the leftist Archbishop of Santiago, the Cardinal Silva Henriques in 1970, so now in Nicaragua leftist Catholic groups are supporting the leftist Sandista guerrillas, trained by Fidel Castro (who some time ago in a speech in Jamaica praised the marvelous cooperation that now exists between the Marxist Revolution and that of Vatican II)... Malachi Martin, in the book, 'The Final Conclave,' warned of an imminent alliance between the Vatican and the Communists. What is important to know is that such an alliance is already in existence.... Christian Marxism is a contradiction in terms. It is in my opinion the most dangerous phenomenon of our time." (Unquote).

This same theme is advanced in the book, "The Moscow Vatican Alliance." In a brief review of the book, Robert M. Bartell of "The Spotlight" staff writes in part: "...a Catholic Marxist alliance is now being pursued by the Vatican, this based on its assessment that free governments are retreating, Western society is collapsing, and the future will belong to the Communists. Rather than resisting this trend, the decision has been made to ride with it, to accommodate, and to survive.... In May of 1963, the 'Truth Seeker,' a strongly anti-communist free-thought periodical, carried a letter to the editor which bears strongly on the subject today: 'By far the most progress the Communist Party is making today is being made through the churches. I expect to see a complete convergence of the Catholic Church and the Party within the next 50 years. The shadow of this is clearly foreshadowed in Poland. Perhaps you have not heard of Pax? This is a Catholic lay organization run by communist priests, tolerated by both the Party and the Church.... You may yet live to see the day when the dictatorship of the proletariat will be proclaimed by the Pope." (Unquote).

The preceding comment regarding Poland is remarkable, having been written in 1963, and foreshadowing the emergence of a Polish Pope 15 years later!

As is known almost universally, when a new Pope is elected by the Cardinals, a white smoke signal is given. But, when the late John Paul I was elected, the smoke was not white, but gray. It went from gray to black. Many said this was an omen.

All seemed well at the beginning, however. The new Pope told the 110 cardinal-electors: "our program will be that of continuing Pope Paul VI's program in the path already indicated by the great heart of John XXIII." The new Pope promised to "push ahead with efforts to reunite Catholics with Anglicans, Orthodox and others." To reunite Catholics with the Communist-controlled Russian Orthodox Church may have been his desire because one of the first non-Roman-Catholic guests was the Archbishop Nikodim, Metropolitan of Leningrad and Major General in the K.G.B. But Nikodim collapsed and died in John Paul I's study. This was considered a second omen by many.

John Paul I may have accepted Nikodim's death as a sign, because he then reportedly issued his anti-communist decree. Ten days later, Pope John Paul I was found dead under mysterious circumstances. No autopsy was performed, in the midst of the ceremony, the coffin was suddenly sealed. The anti-communist Spanish Roman Catholic organization, Fuerza Nueva, insisted that he was murdered, demanded an autopsy and an investigation. Both were refused. This mysterious death of a Pope was considered by many to be a third sign.

It would appear that John Paul II is more to the liking of Vatican II officials, who now seem likely to be able to control Vatican policies without interference from conservatives and traditionalists. The 'new order' is to be established as the 'ordained' order for all Catholics. The following dispatch from the Vatican via UPI as of October 20, 1978, is indicative:

"Pope John Paul II is planning a major shakeup of the Vatican bureaucracy and will likely remove many key church officials left over from the reign of Pope Paul VI, Vatican sources said Thursday.... The sources said the main question facing Pope John Paul II is what to do about the powerful job of secretary of state, held for the past decade by France's Jean Cardinal Villot... The man most often mentioned as Villot's eventual replacement is Bishop Agostino Casaroli, the Vatican's unofficial 'foreign minister' who guided Paul VI's Ostpolitik overture to Communist governments of Eastern Europe and who has worked closely in the past with the new Pope... Casaroli would have to be elevated to the rank of cardinal before he could be appointed to the job.... Mentioned as likely candidates for replacement are the late Paul VI's personal secretary, Don Pasquali Macchi, and other members of the papal household." (Unquote). For times like these it was St. Paul who gave us the battle cry when he wrote to the saints at Ephesus: "For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places. Wherefore take unto you the whole armour of God, that ye may be able to withstand...."

THE EDUCATION MONOPOLY CONSPIRACY

There are times when citizen action can cause bureaucratic reaction, and that reaction is sometimes favorable to the defenders of life, liberty and property. The Proposed IRS Tax-Exempt School Regulations provides an example. The Internal Revenue Service has agreed to hold public hearings before going ahead with its "Proposed Revenue Procedure On Private Tax-Exempt Schools." The public hearings are scheduled for an awkward time, December 5th, and those who submitted written comment on or before October 23rd are the only ones eligible to testify. A small victory perhaps, but Mr. Kurtz of IRS must have been deeply impressed by the resistance to his proposed "law by bureaucratic decree." We are told that over 15,000 letter writers met the Oct. 23 deadline and there were additional strong protests from some Congressmen.

Rep. George Hansen (Idaho), among others, introduced a bill to force a delay until the next Congress can review the executive order. Senator Hatch (Utah) did the same in the Senate. Backing them up with similar bills, co-sponsorship of bills or letters of protest to IRS were Congressmen Miller (Ohio), McDonald (Georgia), Ashbrook (Ohio), Rhodes (Arizona), Senator Hayakawa (California), and others. Of course the introduction of bills in the final hectic days of Congress was merely a gesture: the bills could not have been acted upon. But the Congressmen also followed up their legislative proposals with direct letters of protest to IRS.

An example: Rep. Ashbrook gained permission to "address the House for one minute" on Oct. 12, and he told his colleagues that "Between 80 and 90 percent of the American people oppose both racial quotas and busing. Now the IRS is moving to require both racial quotas and minority hiring quotas throughout America... We all know what will be the next steps after racial guidelines have been imposed on private schools by the Federal Government. We have seen every vestige of local and State autonomy taken away from State and local schools in the name of fighting racism, then sexism, and then religion. The education establishment in Washington must destroy meaningful private education in this country for one reason: private education is doing too good a job. Like any other bloated monopolist, the Federal education establishment fears competition above all else. They cannot use the public school system to teach life adjustment and propaganda to the children if parents are offered an alternative. The educational bureaucrats cannot continue to turn out an ever increasing number of functional illiterates with high school diplomas if a healthy private school system continues.... For the Washington educational establishment to continue the 25-year educational disaster in this country as it wishes to do, it must destroy meaningful private education... The proposed change in law will occur before Congress is able to do a single thing to stop this agency unless we act this week.... I urge my colleagues to write letters to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue (and) I submit a copy of my own letter for the record, so that my colleagues may see the rationale upon which I base my objections."

In his letter to Mr. Kurtz, Rep. Ashbrook pointed out that "it was not the intent of Congress to structure an IRS policing system to dictate the policies for private schools... It is my suggestion that you rescind entirely these proposed regulations..." Other Congressmen wrote similar letters. There is one letter, however, to which we should like to call your special attention, because it so adequately illustrates the difference between the quality of private and public educational standards.

We received a letter on Oct. 17 from a twelfth grade history teacher at Tucson Christian Schools, Tucson, Arizona. He wrote in part: "I became informed of the new IRS proposal through your news release that you send me each week. The proposal was so significant that I introduced it to my class... One of my students... took it upon himself to write in opposition to this preposterous proposal in behalf of the entire class." Enclosed was a copy of the letter written by the twelfth grade student. Picture, if you can, how a letter of this character, with such sound presentation of facts, and such excellence in composition could have been written by a student in any public high school in these United States (where "functional illiterates" is the norm). The letter follows:

* * * * *

Dear Mr. Kurtz:

We, the students at Tucson Christian Schools are writing to you in order to inform you of our position on the Proposed Revenue Procedure On Tax-Exempt Schools. We feel that this proposal is a deliberate attempt to bankrupt the private schools, so that they will not compete with the public education monopoly.

The stated purpose of this proposal is to "determine whether certain private schools have racially discriminatory policies as to students." The guidelines set up by the IRS do not coincide with that purpose. For example, our school has no racially discriminatory policies. Shouldn't that be all you need to know? Quite the contrary. You require that we are to have twenty percent of the percentage of minority school age students in the community currently enrolled in our school, or that we are acting in good faith. Our school does not meet that minority quota. Does that mean that we are discriminatory? Definitely not! The assumption that any organization is discriminatory if it does not have a certain quota of minorities is absurd.

Now concerning the "acting in good faith" stipulations. You require that we give scholarships to minority students. Our school gives no scholarships to anyone. Does that classify us as segregationists? Definitely not! You require that we actively recruit minority students. The extent of our recruiting goes no further than a small ad in the daily newspaper which says "non-discriminatory". Our school actively recruits no one. Do we therefore become racially discriminatory? No! If we were to begin to actively recruit minority students, give them scholarships, and not do the same for whites, then we would be guilty of discrimination, which is defined as "the act of distinguishing (between races)." Tucson Christian Schools makes no distinction between the various races, but the proposed IRS guidelines would make it necessary for us to do so!

Here it seems you are defeating your own purpose, or does it? Why does the IRS come up with a ruling of such significance, but does not contact the private schools? Why does the IRS declare all private schools guilty of racial discrimination until they, the schools, prove their own innocence? The answers to these questions are quite clear to us. The federal government is trying to control the youth of this nation by having a monopoly on education. Private schools have been started by parents who are alarmed at the rapid degradation of the public school system. The federal government is in turn alarmed by the threat that the private schools pose to its monopoly. For this reason the private schools have come under attack. The purpose of the Proposed Revenue Procedure On Private Tax-Exempt Schools is obviously not to "determine whether certain private schools have racially discriminatory policies as to students." Rather, it is a proposal to put out of operation all private schools unless they are racially discriminatory, or pro-minority.

We could continue with arguments involving the First Amendment, the fact that our parents have to support the public schools besides paying our tuition, or some of the very vague language written into this proposal, but let the above be sufficient argument for us to rest our case upon.

Sincerely, the students, Tucson Christian Schools.

* * * * *

This Federal plan to bankrupt all private schools that can't be controlled by the Federal bureaucracy is but one part of the conspiracy. There is another part to the plot: The change-agents have determined that, during the course of this Carter Administration, there shall be established a Cabinet level Department of Education. This would give one appointed official absolute control over all education systems throughout the nation! A bill to do this was introduced in the 95th Congress, never came up for vote, but is sure to be re-introduced in the next Congress which is to convene next Jan. 15th, 1979. James J. Kilpatrick, a professional conservative, wrote a revealing column on the subject. Quotes from that column follow:

"The same arguments that resulted in the Department of Energy are being heard in support of a Department of Education. All related eggs, it is urged, should be placed in one basket... A Senate committee has put together a bill that would lump most of the government's programs of education into a single massive department with 23,000 employees and a budget of roughly $18 billion... The new department would have its own secretary, of course, plus an undersecretary, a first assistant secretary, and seven other assistant secretaries for child development, Indian education, child nutrition, elementary and secondary education, postsecondary education, occupational, adult and community education, and educational research and improvement. There would be two more assistant secretaries to assist the assistant secretaries. The bill calls for an inspector general, a general counsel and an office of civil rights... An advisory council would be composed of 22 members, carefully chosen according to the rules of tokenism... The bill goes on and on... This is one more baby behemoth... No gift of prophecy is required to see the trends that lie ahead... As resistance to high local taxes grows stronger, the financing of public education will drift steadily toward the federal treasury... Federal controls already exert heavy and often decisive pressure on local decisions. The controls will get tougher and tighter as the equalizers lobby for identical per-pupil expenditures everywhere... Once upon a time, education was wholly the responsibility of the states and the localities. The effect of the pending bill would be to accelerate the process of erosion, and to vest ever-expanding power in Washington. He who pays the piper calls the tune. This maybe a new Department of Education, but its creators are teaching old lessons." (unquote).

Make no mistake about it: the Carter Administration has its orders: The total Federal control of all education--a Federal education monopoly--is to be accomplished before Jimmy Carter ends his first (and probably his only) term in office. The Socialist Planners have waited long for such a monopoly of education. Their plans were laid down in black and white in the early thirties. They have waited nearly half a century to see the fulfillment of those plans, and it is getting closer and closer to that prophesied State of 1984!

In 1929 the American Historical Society sponsored and the Carnegie Corporation financed a "Commission on Social Studies in the Schools." Staff members and commissioners were drawn from various universities, from the Council on Foreign Relations, Rockefeller Foundation, etc. Prominent in the group were George S. Counts of Columbia University, Charles E. Merriam of Chicago U.,

Charles A. Beard, Isaiah Bowman representing the C.F.R., Edmund E. Day of the Rockefeller Foundation, and others prominent in the promotion of social studies (which might have been labeled socialist studies). These educationists conducted a five-year study of "social science instruction" and produced some 14 major and several supplementary volumes, one of them entitled "A Charter for the Social Studies in the Schools." These volumes (now said to be out of print) laid down the guidelines that were to be followed by the writers of textbooks, teachers and school administrators, and all others who had to do with the preparation of future generations for existence in the coming "new order." We have Xerox facsimiles of some of the pages from the out-of-print "Conclusions And Recommendations of the Commission" on the social studies, Charles Scribner's Sons publisher. 1934. Following are direct quotes from the book:

* * * * *

Contemporary social thought and action in the realms of government, economy, ethics, and aesthetics...reflect more and more this growing integration and interdependence, and are increasingly concerned with increasing the functional efficiency of this integrated and interdependent society.....

Under the moulding influence of socialized processes of living....leaders in public affairs, supported by a growing mass of the population, are demanding the introduction of ever-wider measures of planning and control....

cumulative evidence supports the conclusion that...the age of individualism and laissez faire in economy and government is closing and that a new age of collectivism is emerging. As to the specific form which this 'collectivism,' this integration and interdependence, is taking and will take in the future... it may involve the limiting or supplanting of private property by public property or it may entail the preservation of private property extended and distributed among the masses....

Whatever may be the exact character of life in the society now emerging, it will certainly be different in important respects from that of the past... and whether it will be better or worse will depend in large measure upon...the education of the rising generation....

The implications for education are clear and imperative:...complete and frank recognition that the old order is passing...

Organized public education in the United States, much more than ever before, is now compelled, if it is to fulfill its social obligations, to adjust its objectives, its curriculum, its methods of instruction, and its administrative procedures to the requirements of the emerging generation (and) the school... must recognize the new order and proceed to equip the rising generation to co-operate effectively in the increasingly interdependent society....

* * * * *

We are told the "Conspiracy Theory" is ridiculous, yet the preceding was published in 1934. Isn't it unmistakably evident that here are guidelines, and that these lie at the root of almost all problems of education in the U.S. today? It should be equally evident that to assure the success of these educational goals a monopoly must be established, and that monopoly must belong to the Federal Government. Target date: During the Carter Administration!

THE MONEY CONSPIRACY

November 1, 1978 was a dull and dreary day in Southern Florida, and we are not talking about the weather only, and the condition was not localized, it was a dark day for all America. The largest daily in our area flaunted a big, black, 8-column headline at top page one which read: "Market Plunges 18 Points." Under the headline was a four-part, cartoon-type illustration bearing four legends; "Stocks: Dow Jones average falls below 800. Prime Rate: Chase Manhattan raises rate to 10.5%. Inflation: AFL-CIO rejects Carter plan. Dollar: Drops in Japan..." The story accompanying this display said "a leading government economist warned that a recession 'is absolutely inevitable' unless successful steps toward controlling inflation are made... Tuesday was not the day for confidence in President Carter's voluntary anti-inflation program... We now believe the time has come for mandatory, legislated economic controls," said George Meany of AFL-CIO."

We might observe that except for those on the visible and/or subrosa government payroll, and those in Big Labor's payroll, there was hardly an economist or a financial columnist in all the land who agreed with either Carter or Meany, or who agreed with each other, for that matter. It has been said that where there are five economists, there will be six opinions. If our predicament were not so very serious, some of the answers given to questions about inflation would be downright comical. For example, Harold Finley, a financial columnist with the Chicago Tribune, recently tried to answer the question, "What would you do to control inflation?" Here is his answer: "This is a subject which has such strong political and international implications that the solution should be developed by a statesman over a period of years, rather than sketched by a financial columnist in a few hundred words."

Let the record show that Barron's financial columnist, Alan Abelson didn't try to quibble and evade. He wrote: "Halloween came early to Wall Street this year. Or maybe what really spooked investors were intimations and then the disclosure of Mr. Carter's latest anti-inflation gimcrack... Contrary to Washington's holely writ, it isn't the greed of laboring men nor the avarice of businessmen which is at the cause of our plight. The root of the evil is money, the supply of which has been expanding precipitously, as the keepers of the printing presses work overtime to paper over the difference between what Uncle Sam spends and what he takes in... Sure as night follows day, an unprecedented plunge like that of the past two weeks (up to and including Halloween-Ed.), is accompanied by wails and whispers of worse to come. Amid the thickening gloom late Friday, for example, rumors flew that the Fed would take some fierce action--boosting the discount rate once again and/or raising reserve requirements..."

Sure enough, following that dark and dreary dawn of November 1, Jimmy Carter came forth like the noonday sun to announce that the independent Federal Reserve had agreed to increase the discount rate--the Fed's lending rate to member banks--from 8.5% to 9.5%, the highest in U.S. history. The principal aim of this move was said to be "to make it more attractive for foreigners to invest in dollar-dominated securities, thus sopping up some of the $600 billion sloshing around in the Eurodollar market." At the same time Carter announced the creation of a $30 billion kitty, assembled from several pools of capital, to buy dollars "when they come under speculative pressure," those "pools of capital" being International Banks. Carter also pledged the Treasury to sell 1.5 million ounces of gold next month, with an estimated market value of $4 billion. And all the World seemed to Hail the Words of the Chief.

Immediate reaction was the temporary halting of the dollar's decline in foreign bourses, the upping of stocks in Wall Street, and a small drop in the price of gold. Expected long-range effects: 1) the Fed's discount rate won't affect the big banks and the multinationals, but will hurt small businesses and less-than-affluent individuals who may need to borrow money. 2) the sudden market recovery was like a patient reacting to the injection of a pain-killer. The cause of the sickness remains, however, and a cure still must be sought. 3) The sale of 1.5 million ounces of gold to foreigners merely helps deplete the U.S. supply, and we shall be more dependent than ever upon the mercies of those who actually own the gold. And 4) Overall effect of Carter's latest action: a recession is probably on the way!

NOW, LET'S ANALYZE: Your reporter is not an economist with a sheepskin, nor do we claim to be a financial expert. But there are free enterprise economists and persons who understand the mystery of money whom we trust and whom we can quote with little or no reservation. First, we need a definition of money, and we like the way Gary North handled this in his important book, "An Introduction to Christian Economics." On page 20, we read:

"What constitutes money? Why is money different from any other commodity? One thing which distinguishes money from all other commodities is that it is not used up through consumption. It is desired for the things which can be purchased with it, either now or at some future date.... Some commodities possess the four basic properties that all money must have. First, money must be durable. It would be hard to use ground beef as money, since it spoils too fast. Second,

IRS AND THE PRIVATE SCHOOLS

Jo Ann Gasper, editor of "The Right Woman," gives the following report in her latest letter: "Thank you for spreading the alert regarding the IRS take-over of private schools. The IRS has received over 40,000 letters and congressional offices have been deluged with constituent mail and calls. The fight is just beginning. The IRS has extended the deadline for written comment beyond the original October 23 date. The October 18 Federal Register carried a notice that oral comments will be received by the IRS on December 5th in Washington, D.C. The present deadlines as explained in IRS News Release number IR 2044 require persons wishing to present oral comment to submit a written comment by October 31. A request to present oral comment, with an outline, must be mailed by November 20. Persons chosen to speak will be allowed 10 minutes. People may comment in writing until December 5. The December 5 meeting is not a public hearing. The IRS has refused to acknowledge that the rule change is significant.

WRITE! Write the IRS and protest. (Internal Revenue Service, Attention E:EO, Washington, D.C. 20224). Write your Congressman and Senator. Since Congress is not in session, write the local district office." (Unquote).

Jo Ann will be sending out special alerts to subscribers, to keep them abreast of the progress of this fight. "The Right Woman" covers Capitol Hill, is published monthly during sessions of Congress, and provides legislative news for women and the family. It is a unique and important service, well worth its annual subscription rate of $15. Send to: The Right Woman, 919 18th St., N.W. Suite 800, Washington, D.C. 20006. (Ask for her special alerts, too.)

money must be transportable. Third, it should be divisible into equal parts for the purpose of accurate counting. Gold dust used to serve this purpose during the gold rush days in California and Alaska; bags of salt still function as money in some parts of Africa. Fourth, money must be relatively scarce. If money were as plentiful as, for example, air, it would no longer function as money. Of course, air might function as money on the airless moon or when it is 'conditioned,' but that is precisely because in these cases it is a scarce commodity that would be in heavy demand. Certain commodities have functioned historically as money better than others because they possess these four qualities; durability, transportability, divisibility, and scarcity. Gold is obviously one of these. It is very scarce, absolutely impervious to rust or decay, so divisible that in its pure state it can be cut with a knife. Silver is another such commodity, although being in greater supply, its value has generally been less than gold. In some communities, cattle or other livestock may serve as a means of exchange. There have even been cases in which women have served as money (the big defect here is clearly the divisibility factor: half a woman is worse than none at all)." (unquote).

Now, let's go from Gary North to Mr. Rees-Mogg, editor of the London Times in 1974, who wrote a book*entitled "The Reigning Error - The Crisis of the World." His theme was that "social discipline on a firm spiritual foundation requires stable money as a base. For stable money is associated with respect for laws in general and the present instability of money is the latest symptom of the loosening of behavior restraints. He declared that return to the gold standard would make the major currencies convertible at a fixed price. It would reduce the temptation of governments to print more and more money and so debase their currencies, for, he added, 'Inflation has destroyed more governments than any other force except war... It is the great divider of societies.'" (Quoted from a review of the book).

Hilaire du Berrier comments on the above: "Rees-Mogg's blind spot is that he saw no evidence of conspiracy. Never for a moment did he see that currencies were being debased deliberately and plans made for the destruction of governments through inflation, so that the new monetary system destined to be introduced in January 1979 could be born, and later a new basket of nations reduced to province status."

The new monetary system to which H. du B. refers is based on the "ecu," the European Common Market currency that is being inaugurated January 1st, and which is to replace the dollar as the accepted international medium of exchange. The sale of U.S. gold to foreigners and foreign governments is, of course, a great help to the founders of the new monetary system.

Leading question: Is our present economic and monetary plight the result of a Conspiracy? Is the manipulation of money a basic ingredient in the master plan to create a regionalized world government, with the United States to become a mere province in that New World Order? Let's see how the Conspiracy Theory can be justified with the use of historical facts.

In 1913 the Federal Reserve System was established after a pattern designed by a German-Jewish banker named Warburg who was imported for that purpose. This created a Central Bank similar to those already existing in leading European nations, and made possible the later creation of a centrally controlled International Banking System. In 1920 the Basel-based Bank for International Settlements was created "to restore the economies World War I had ruined." Similarly, in 1944 a new centrally controlled international banking mechanism was established, ostensibly "to restore the economies World War II had ruined, and to aid developing nations." In July 1944 over a thousand government offiials and bankers met at Bretton Woods, N.H. A new monetary system had been drawn up by John Maynard Keynes, alleged British homosexual and Fabian Socialist, with the aid of Harry Dexter White who conveniently died before being arrested as a Soviet spy. The new plan involved the creation of the International Monetary Fund (IMF) and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, better known as the World Bank. It was decided that the dollar would be used as the international unit of exchange, replacing the fading British pound, because at that time the U.S. "dollar was as good as gold." But, when gold was demonetized, strange things began to happen. As H. du B. comments in his latest Letter: "In the minds of those out to destroy national sovereignty and create a single government over an ever expanding package of states, acceptance of the dollar as the world's reserve currency was a temporary phase. After the demonetization of gold the dollar, with nothing behind it, would be reduced in value until its holders would happily accept a monetary system over which they would have no control....To bridge the gap from gold to paper, 'Special Drawing Rights', or SDRs, were invented. SDRs were referred to as 'paper gold' and became a sort of credit card system for nations, a step on the international scale towards the moneyless world in which individuals will carry no cash but will pay for everything through computerized drawing rights on a bank....Like it or not, Americans were on their way to the supra-national currency in which their dollar first will be merged and eventually eliminated."

There is one important aspect regarding the creation of new international currency which has not been told the American public--something which we have just learned from a European source. We have heard brief reports concerning the ECU which is to be inaugurated in Europe in January; and we have been left with the belief that the ECU will be in direct competition with the "Bancor" that the Trilateral Commission was about to establish. We have been told that Sec. Blumenthal was rebuffed when the Bancor was discussed with West European bankers and political leaders. However, this did not agree with another statement made by Blumenthal; that he welcomed the creation of the ECU. And, now we know why: On September 22, 1978 Belgium's Prime Minister Leo Tindemans was in Tokyo. There he told the Japanese that a new monetary system was about to be established, and that this new system would operate under three separate currency zones: one for the Japanese yen, one for the U.S. dollar, and one for the ECU. So, the ECU is not competitive. It is just a part of the overall plan which the Trilateral Commission has been developing ever since Jimmy Carter entered the White House!

So, if the dedicated one worlder, Leo Tindemans of Belgium is right, all that has been happening to the U.S. economy--inflation and all--is just one more step toward the New World Order! And, as H. du B. reported from Paris: Not an American editor or commentator important enough to rate news-space in the controlled media told the American public that the new three-zone system based on the dollar, the yen and the ECU bears any relation to the Trilateral Commission's plan for the New World Order. Nor would anyone dare to suggest that defeat in Vietnam and Watergate at home were parts of a conditioning process, designed to soften America for the acceptance of a New World Order; nor that our present plight is a part of the plot.

Year Twenty-Five.....Number Forty-Five.....November 10, 1978

WHILE CONGRESS SLEEPS - -

"With the election passed and the new Congress two months away from assembling, President Carter and his administration colleagues have - for the first time in two years - a kind of breathing space in which they can assess where they are and where they are going." So wrote David Broder, political analyst and columnist for The Washington Post. His syndicated column appears in daily newspapers throughout the nation. His political philosophy is that of his employer and, therefore, it is important to know what he writes, because the first rule of battle is to "know thine enemy." Therefore, Broder's listing of things Carter & Co. must do before the next Congress convenes, is important. Here is part of what David Broder wrote in his first post-election column:

"It (this two-months Congressional hiatus) is an important time for the president and for the country.... If he is able to negotiate the final terms of a strategic arms agreement with the Soviet Union between now and the end of the year the SALT treaty will be the focus of the next great foreign policy debate. If he cannot, the consequences will be felt in defense budgets for the remainder of his administration. Similarly with the Middle East talks... Most of all, the period ahead is important in the struggle to save the dollar, stem inflation, and set the domestic economy on a course which, if possible, sustains growth and, at least, avoids a severe and prolonged recession...." (unquote).

A couple of things columnist Broder didn't mention: First, the next two months may give Carter & Co. time to "explain" how the Shah of Iran fell without it being made apparent that he was pushed, and why the USSR was thus permitted to draw a military ring around the whole of the Middle East oil producing area! And secondly: The next two months may give the Carter Administration a chance to enact new administrative laws via Executive Order and Presidential Proclamation, and by adding new bureaucratic rules and regulations while Congress is not in session to--just possibly--protest or prevent. Important in this respect is the administrative attempt to obtain an absolute monopoly on education in the United States. As we have stated in previous letters, the IRS, which is sometimes referred to as the American Gestapo, is trying to close all private and Christian schools that do not hue faithfully to the Federal guidelines laid down for educational institutions in the United States. An article appearing in the current issue of Human Events (11/11/78) notes that:

"...what the IRS is trying to ram down the throats of the American people in the name of fighting racial discrimination is a wholesale blueprint for the destruction of thousands of private schools... That (IRS Commissar) Kurtz wants to work fast is understandable because the flood of opposition that is pouring into Washington has already dwarfed the response to any previous IRS administrative action, and it is growing daily. Over 100,000 letters have already been sent to the IRS alone. Mail in like amounts has been flowing to Capitol Hill. And the White House reports that it is receiving more letters denouncing the IRS action than it is getting even on the red-hot issue of inflation.... If Kurtz succeeds in his attempt to whoosh the regulations through before Congress returns, all this opposition may go for naught.... But Kurtz may yet be tripped up - in the courts. For on Oct. 30 the Foundation for Law and Society (FLS), a Washington-based public-interest firm, filed suit against the agency in the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia... The FLS is requesting that the court issue an injunction "restraining the adoption and enforcement of the said Proposal pending the completion of (public hearings and other pertinent lawful requirements). Such a delay could give Congress the time to act. In the meantime, foes of the IRS scheme, led by such groups as the American Conservative Union and the Christian Action Coalition, are urging their supporters to continue peppering Washington with their letters." (Unquote).

So, among other important issues, there are the Private School Proposal, the SALT agreement, the Iranian situation, the Israeli-Egyptian peace treaty and a host of domestic and international economic and financial problems which the Carter Administration and its behind-the-scenes controllers are most anxious to consummate or get under control before the 96th U.S. Congress convenes on January 15th, 1979. Such action becomes all the more important because of the political complexion of the new Congress. The controlled media are accenting the fact that the Republicans made fewer gains than they expected in the recent Congressional races. Therefore, they imply, this is a kind of a vote of confidence in Carter and the National Democrats. This is nonsense, because the difference between Democrats and Republicans, ideologically and promissorially, was virtually eliminated in this recent election. Platforms and promises wiped out party lines. The really important fact about the next Congress is, not that the Democrats still have a majority, but that the conservatives made real gains and threaten to overtake the liberals. This bodes ill for the Carter Administration and for the subrosa government that put Carter in the White House.

"Congress Takes Turn To The Right," was the headline on page 1 of the Nov. 9 Miami Herald. Subheads read: "Carter Faces Independent Newcomers; Hill's 92 Freshmen Ran As Outsiders." The writer (Saul Friedman) sought to minimize the effectiveness of the headlines by stating, near the end of his analysis, that "the New Rightists whose energy, unity and organization have given them influence in Congress beyond their numbers, probably will be able to bottle up some Democratic legislation... They can be expected to pressure GOP leadership into refusing to cooperate with Carter on some legislation..." (unquote).

However, it isn't the Democratic or the GOP leadership; it's the Conservative Coalition made up of Democrats, Republicans and Independents, that will refuse to cooperate. Examples: re-elected were Senator Helms and Representatives Ron Paul, Larry McDonald, Steve Symms, Philip Crane, Marjorie Holt, John Ashbrook and many other conservatives and Constitutionalists.

This makes it especially important for Carter & Co. to do their best to make the next two months count, before the next Congress meets. So, to get things started, Carter & Co., even before the election, came out promoting all of the things the people were demanding. Furthermore, the controversial Trilateral Commission, which put Carter where he is, decided that it was time to tell the people a little bit of the truth about TLC. It apparently seemed the right time to try to win friends and influence people, and engage in some public relations activity. So, on Oct. 30 there was released an article telling part of the truth about the Trilats. We wouldn't sacrifice space reporting this, except that one very peculiar "coincidence" was apparent. On the same day, but in a different set of newspapers. Associated Press and United Press International released exactly the same story, practically word-for-word, about the Trilateral Commission. That the same story would be reported on the same day by UPI and AP is to be expected. But, for their stories to be identical is unheard of. Or, it was unheard of prior to Oct. 30, 1978. Actually, the AP and the UPI items are not quite identical; there are differences in the first paragraph. The UPI release starts:

"Washington (UPI) - Five years ago a group of nearly 100 prominent Americans, Western Europeans and Japanese organized a foreign policy-oriented group seeking to establish a 'more equitable world order'."

The same leading paragraph in the AP release read:

"New York (AP) - About five years ago a group of nearly 100 prominent Americans, western Europeans and Japanese organized a foreign policy-oriented group seeking to establish a 'more equitable world order'."

Notice the differences? UPI release is datelined "Washington," while the AP release is datelined "New York." UPI release omits the first word, "About," which appears in the AP release. AP release capitalized the word "Western," UPI release has the "w" in lower case. In all other respects the two articles are identical and word-for-word. Significance: the public relations story was written by neither UPI nor AP, but was transmitted to newspapers exactly as handed to them by some Trilateralist official. If you can think in terms of free press and lack of censorship, this fact becomes important! Here is the entire article as it appeared in the Sacramento Union of Oct. 30. At the very top of the page was an 8-column headline: "CARTER'S 'WORLD ORDER'." Below and on the lower half of the page was a double headline:

New 'World Order'

19 NOW SHAPING U.S. POLICY

"New York (AP) - About five years ago a group of nearly 100 Americans, western Europeans and Japanese organized a foreign policy-oriented group seeking to establish a 'more equitable world order.' Today 19 of the 44 American members are deciding U.S. policies. One of them is Jimmy Carter. And the others in top White House positions include Vice President Walter Mondale and Carter's national security adviser, Zbigniew Brzezinski. All three were founding members of the 'Trilateral Commission,' established in July 1973. The industrial democracies in North America, western Europe and Japan are the corners of the triangle which gave the commission its name.

"The commission says its roots 'can be traced primarily to a series of strains early in the 1970s in relations among Japan, North America and western Europe.' 'The renovation of the international system is a task of global as well as trilateral dimensions,' the commission said in its pamphlet. 'In this global effort, the industrialized democratic regions remain an identifiable community and a vital core.'

"The commission's 1976 pamphlet listed the president as 'James E. Carter, Jr. former Governor of Georgia.' Mondale was listed as a senator and Brzezinski was the commission's director and coordinator at that time. Carter, Mondale, Brzezinski and the 16 other members who now hold top positions in Washington temporarily resigned from the commission while in government service.

"But the commission's aims are clearly reflected in such administration foreign policies as its emphasis on better relations with the Third World, closer political and economic ties with western Europe and Japan, the search for involvement by Communist countries in tackling global problems, and the stress on giving more economic aid to the world's poorer nations.

"In addition to Carter, Mondale and Brzezinski, the other former American members of the New York-based Trilateral Commission now in high U.S. government position are: Secretary of State Cyrus Vance, Secretary of Defense Harold Brown, Deputy Defense Secretary J. Paul Austin; Deputy Secretary of State Warren Christopher; Undersecretary of State Lucy Wilson Benson; Undersecretary of State Richard Cooper; presidential advisers Lloyd Cutler and Henry D. Owen; U.S. Ambassador to Italy Richard Gardner; Assistant Secretary of State for Far Eastern Affairs, Richard Holbrooke.

"Former Panama Canal treaty negotiator Sol Linowitz; Ambassadors-at-large Elliot Richardson and Gerard C. Smith; Undersecretary of the Treasury Anthony Solomon; arms negotiator Paul Warnke; and Leonard Woodcock, U.S. envoy to the People's Republic of China." (Unquote).

One wonders why Secretary of the Treasury W. Michael Blumenthal and U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations Andrew Young were left out of this published list of former Trilateral Commissioners now temporarily resigned because they are in public service? Also Robert R. Bowie, Deputy Director of Intelligence for National Estimates? But we can hardly blame AP and/or UPI for the omissions; they simply added a dateline to a public relations release handed them by the New York-based Trilateral Commission. We suspect that, like the admonition by St. John regarding the Holy Bible, the two news agencies wouldn't dare add unto or take away from the words given them by the Foreign Affairs Department of the Subrosa Government of the United States of America.

It should not be assumed that all foreign policies are mandated by the TLC or its parent organization, the CFR. These power cliques are primarily concerned with establishing the "New World Order." The task of socializing the U.S. and preparing it for integration into this New World Order is left to the radicals. It is a double infiltration: Fascist-type Monopoly Capitalists from the top, and Communist-type radicals from the bottom, or the level of the masses. Jimmy Carter is the chosen spokesman for the Fascist-type Elitists, but he also must permit the Communist-type radicals to operate within the federal government. For example, the current issue of The Spotlight (11/13/78) headlines a story about a "Soviet Spy in the White House--Most Dangerous Traitor Since Hiss is Sought."

Actually, there are dozens of communist-type radicals working within our federal government; only now they are called the "New Left." The current Human Events (11/11/78) has an 8-page supplement in which Allan C. Brownfeld takes "A Close Look at Carter's Radical Fringe." He points out that once Carter was elected to office he "quickly proceeded to surround himself with an array of political 'insiders', most of whom had long been active... in the politics of the radical New Left." Among others Brownfeld names Brady Tyson, a close adviser to Andy Young; Sam Brown, head of ACTION; Marge Tabankin the "Axis Sally of Vietnam", now head of VISTA; Anthony Lake who heads the State Department's Policy Planning Staff; David Aaron, a deputy National Security Advisor; Robert Pastor, the Security Council's staff specialist for Latin American policy; Mark Schneider, Carter's Assistant Secretary of State for Humanitarian Affairs; Midge Costanza and her White House replacement Sarah Weddington; Bella Abzug, co-chairman of the new National Advisory Committee for Women; John Froines of the notorious "Chicago 7" who was named by Carter to serve as the first director of OSHA's Office of Toxic Substances; etc.

With Congress two months away, Carter and his colleagues will be very busy. His most dangerous colleagues and their most important activities are listed in this letter. Perhaps sounding the alarm will help "stay them in their course."

THE BETRAYAL OF RHODESIA

"So the settlers arrived and began to carve a new life from the virgin wilderness. The pagan natives, who were migratory in nature, held no actual claim to the new land....were only the recent occupants. The settlers brought new civilization, education and health. Primarily, they brought a resolve to succeed...and stay. They employed the natives, when they could, for low compensation. They built cities and brought in manufacturing for goods that had never existed in the area. Some even brought slaves. But distant England could not understand the settlers' desire for self-government, even imposed rules that were untenable...primarily because she could not, or would not, comprehend the local peculiarities and conditions. When the colony resisted, it was held in rebellion. And it declared freedom from the mother country through a declaration of independence. Britannica responded by applying force. But today, that declaration still stands and the settlers have formed a mighty nation."

So wrote the author Robert Skimin. But, about what nation was he writing? The United States? Or Rhodesia? It could have been either because the parallels are striking. The wording of the U.S. Declaration of Independence and of the Rhodesian Unilateral Declaration of Independence are both respectful statements of warranted freedom, not written in haste but after long and deliberate consideration as a last resort, and at calculated risk.

Continuing this historical comparison, Robert Skimin in his book, "The Rhodesian Sellout," points out that "These documents were not designed by a group of power-seekers, backed by an enemy power, but by right-oriented patriots. One became the greatest country in the world, and one became what could be one of the greatest in Africa. Britain attempted to bring each to its knees; the United States by war, twice, and Rhodesia by international pressure because she couldn't afford a war. Each had its racial problems. One was granted time to work most of them out along orderly lines. The other is being crushed by external forces....How soon those of us who are still proud to be Americans tend to forget. How can Americans who really care about liberty...possibly stand by and permit, even precipitate, such destruction of the very principles on which their existence was built?"

Of the same opinion is the Rev. Robert L. Sumner, contributing editor to the religious weekly "Sword of the Lord." He wrote: "The attitude and actions of President Carter, the Congress, the liberal press, and a host of American citizens with regard to the African nation of Rhodesia borders, in our judgment, on insanity. Columnist James J. Kilpatrick tells us that blacks 'attained the highest standards of health, education and personal income in Africa' under the 'white supremacy' government of Ian Smith. Also, most of the blacks in Rhodesia have excellent relationships with the whites and are utterly opposed to the actions of the Patriotic Front guerrilla alliance headed by Joshua Nkomo and Robert Mugabe. The Patriotic Front is Marxist-dominated and armed by the Communists--and funded in great measure by the World Council of Churches."

Yet President Carter has called the black-white alliance established in Rhodesia an "illegal government" and one of his first official acts was to get the Congress to repeal the Byrd Amendment authorizing this country to import much needed Rhodesian chrome; so we now purchase it from Communist sources.

Our official treatment of Rhodesia reached a new low when 27 U.S. Senators demanded that our State Department withdraw its refusal and permit Ian Smith and his party to come to the United States. Smith came, but was not permitted to make a public statement and, except for one short "smuggled" interview on KABC-TV, Los Angeles on Oct. 16th, his case was never allowed to be presented to the American public. The FBI was ordered to keep Smith and party "isolated" from the public in the interests of "public security."

In Africa the Cuban-trained, Russian-armed, WCC-financed black guerrillas have slaughtered missionaries, massacred innocent black Christians and committed acts of terrorism and vandalism for the last five years. A highlight in their fiendish atrocities came on Sept. 3, 1978 when a civilian airliner with 56 persons aboard was shot down. 38 were killed in the crash, 10 of the 18 survivors were captured by the guerrillas, lined up and shot. Eight managed to hide and escape the slaughter. The respected columnist Paul Scott reports the unusual circumstances of that incident. The Viscount Airliner was shot down with a British "rapier" missile fired by Zambian troops. These missiles were flown to Zambia by the United States, so our government was at least indirectly involved in the massacre. When the airliner crashed, on hand were Joshua Nkomo's "nationalist freedom fighters" to massacre any survivors they could find.

The aid being given these Marxist-oriented guerrillas by the World and National Councils of Churches is reprehensible, but perhaps understandable when we consider the leadership of these organizations. Major Edgar C. Bundy who is pinch-hitting for Rev. Carl McIntire while the latter is convalescing in hospital, informs us that on Nov 4th, the Rev. Moses William Howard was elected to a 3-year term as president of the National Council of Churches. Howard is a native of Americus, Georgia, near the town of Plains from which Jimmy Carter hails. Howard has served as executive director of the Black Council of the Reformed Church in America, and as a moderator of the World Council's "Program to Combat Racism." This is the section of the WCC that has financed the Marxist terrorists and guerrillas. Latest contribution amounted to $85,000.00 which went to Nkomo and Mubabe, whose terrorist forces have killed at least 32 missionaries and 1,100 black native Christians within the past few months. "The most powerful man behind the scenes in the United Presbyterian Church, the second largest contributor to the NCC and WCC, is also a black radical by the name of the Rev. Oscar McCloud," reported Major Bundy.

Rachel Tingle, writing in the November 1978 issue of the Canadian publication "Speak Up," asked: "What are we to make of the fact that the World Council of Churches, quite undeterred by the appalling massacre of white missionaries, is giving a further 45,000 pounds to the Patriotic Front, the Rhodesian guerrilla organization? When the grant was announced, a WCC spokesman defended it by saying, 'We don't even try to control how the money is spent. We have known the Patriotic Front for many years and we believe they are responsible people.'... The WCC must have a strange sort of Christian morality if it can refer to the terrorists of the Patriotic Front as 'responsible people.' We are driven to the conclusion that the WCC is a wolf in sheep's clothing, for while the policies it pursues in supporting Marxist-Leninist guerrilla groups are virtually indistinguishable from Soviet African policy, the fact that it displays a Christian profile to the world largely saves the WCC from the condemnation and criticisms which its policies could otherwise be expected to attract. In short, Communist expansionism in Africa is protected, via the policies of the WCC, from effective Christian opposition..."

The stand taken by the U.S. State Department is as odious as that of the WCC and its American affiliate, the NCC. For example, Andrew Young, U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations is a well known apologist for, and defender of, Communist aggression in Africa. In April 1970 on an NBC-TV special Young said in part: "...it may take the destruction of Western civilization to allow the rest of the world to really emerge as a free and brotherly society, and if the West is incapable of brotherhood with colored peoples, then this small body of colored peoples, black people within the West, may be the revolutionary vanguard that God has ordained to destroy the whole thing." In September 1976 Young, as a member of the Congressional Black Caucus, with some 100 other black leaders, produced a document called "The African-American Manifesto on Southern Africa." The document declared: "We totally support the liberation of Southern Africa from white minority rule by means of armed struggle where necessary, and affirm the right of the African liberation movement to seek necessary assistance from whatever source available to achieve self-determination and majority rule (accent added)." In Mobuto, Mozambique, on May 18, 1977, Young said: "People who engage in negotiated settlements hardly have the right to tell people who are engaged in armed struggle how to run their paths and determine their freedom." According to Young, the Cubans "have brought stability to Africa." Columnist Allan C. Brownfeld concludes that Andrew Young "continues in the (pro-Communist) direction he has been moving for years, and President Carter persists in supporting him."

So does Carter's Trilateral Commission-dominated State Department. In a letter dated Oct. 2, 1978, Hodding Carter III, Assistant Secretary of State for Public Affairs, wrote in part: "On behalf of President Carter, I am replying to your comments concerning U.S. policy toward Rhodesia. The principal goal of our policy is to promote a just and peaceful settlement through negotiations. We do not favor any of the contending Rhodesian parties...."

However, we learn in the next paragraph of the letter that the current government, under the Salisbury agreement "does not seem adequate to the difficult task of moving Rhodesia from minority to majority rule. The Salisbury agreement lacks the support of two of the major nationalist parties," meaning that it lacks the support of the two Marxist-Leninist parties of Nkomo and Mugabe, the murderers of the innocents in Rhodesia.

Dr. Walter Darnell Jacobs, chairman of the American African Affairs Association, Inc. does not agree with the State Department. He says: "We are told that Rhodesia's small white population, outnumbered by twenty to one or more, is engaged in a race war with its black majority. We are told that Rhodesia's government headed by Ian Smith must go and that a government more acceptable to the black states of Africa must be installed, even if the United States has to pay the cost of the change. To me, these conceptions and impressions of Rhodesia are simply incoherent. I have made frequent trips there and have talked to citizens of all races and political preference... In place of racial hatred, I have seen sacrifice by white citizens in order to improve the lot of the blacks. In place of a racial war of Black against White, I have seen Whites and Blacks inside the country fighting against terrorists sent into Rhodesia with Soviet, Chinese and Cuban backing, (and with American financing-Ed.)"

On Sunday, Sept. 3, 1978, the Viscount aircraft "Hunyani" was shot down near Kariba. A memorial service was held in the Anglican Cathedral of Saint Mary and All Saints, on Friday, Sept. 8th. The sermon was delivered by the Very Rev. J.R. Da Costa. Excerpts follow:

"Nobody who holds sacred the dignity of human life, can be anything but sickened at the events attending the crash of the Viscount 'Hunyani'... The horror of the crash was bad enough, but that this should have been compounded by murder of the most savage and treacherous kind, leaves us stunned with disbelief and brings revulsion in the mind of anyone deserving the name 'human.' This bestiality, worse than anything in recent history, stinks in the nostrils of heaven. But...like men in the story of the Good Samaritan, (world leaders) 'pass by on the other side'. One listens for loud condemnation by Dr. David Owen, himself a medical doctor, trained to extend mercy and help to all in need. One listens, and the silence is deafening. One listens for loud condemnation by the President of the United States, himself a man from the Bible-Baptist belt; and again the silence is deafening. One listens for loud condemnation by the Pope, by the Chief Rabbi, by the Archbishop of Canterbury, by all who love the Name of God. Again the silence is deafening....

"Who is to be blamed for this ghastly episode? Like Pontius Pilate, the world may ask 'What is Truth?' What is to be believed? That depends upon what your prejudices will allow you to believe, for then no evidence will convince you otherwise. So who is to be blamed? First, those who fired the guns. Who were they? Youths and men who, as likely as not, were until recently in Church Schools. This is the first terrible fact. Men who went over to the other side in a few months were so indoctrinated that all they had previously learned was obliterated. How could this happen if they had been given a truly Christian education? Secondly, it is common knowledge that in large parts of the world violence is paraded on TV and cinema screens as entertainment. Films about war, murder, violence, rape, devil-possession, and the like are good box-office. Peak viewing time is set aside for murderers from Belfast, Palestine, Europe, Africa, and the rest, to speak before an audience of tens of millions. Thugs are given full treatment, as if deserving of respect. Not so their victims' relations.

"Who else is to be blamed. I am sure that the United Nations and their Church equivalent, the WCC, both bear blame. Each parades a pseudo morality which, like all half-truths, is more dangerous than the lie direct. From the safety and comfort of New York and Geneva, high moral attitudes can safely be struck. For us in the sweat, the blood, the suffering, it is somewhat different.

"What else? The Churches? Oh yes. I fear so! For too long, too many people have been allowed to call themselves 'believers' when they have been nothing of the kind. Those who believe must act.... If you believe in God, you must do something about it... We are surrounded by respectable heathens who equate belief in God with the Western way of life...

"I have nothing but sympathy with those who are here today, and whose grief we share. I have nothing but revulsion for the less than human act of murder which has so horrified us all. I have nothing but amazement at the silence of so many of the political leaders of the world. I have nothing but sadness that our Churches have failed so badly to practice what we preach. May God forgive us all, and may He bring all those who died so suddenly and unprepared, into the light of His Glorious Presence. Amen." (Unquote).

They call it a racial problem; they said the same of our War Between the States. But now as then, the real root of the evil is love of money. In Rhodesia there are vast, barely tapped, treasures in platinum, gold, silver, chrome, iron, nickel, mica, antimony, asbestos, tungsten, lithium, beryllium, copper. There are those who lust after such wealth, would violate every Commandment to gain possession of such treasure. For those who permit such unGodly horror, as the preacher said, "May God forgive us all. Amen."

ELECTROMAGNETIC BATTLEFIELD REVISITED

Brief quotes from an extended, two-part report:

"At 0410Z we began our descent into Moscow...Moscow radar handed us off to Sheremetyevo radar...At 0450Z, 20 June 1977, C-5 90018 settled onto the runway at Sheremetyevo to become the first C-5 to land in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics. We were to learn later that we had also made aviation history in that this was the longest flight to carry such a load.... It took only seven minutes to get the magnet down the ramp....(After the landing), Aleksandr Y. Sheindlin, head of the institute (for High Temperatures) personally gave us a tour of the U-25 pilot plant, the largest such facility in the world. It was here that we saw the superconducting magnet already bolted into the bypass test loop that had been constructed to accommodate it.... This was the completion of our mission." (unquote). These are quotes from the second of a two-part article by Capt. John M. Zinkievich, United States Air Force. The first-hand story appeared in the January and February 1978 issues of The MAC Flyer. It is the account of the delivery to the USSR of the world's largest magnet, built in the U.S. and flown to the USSR. The supermagnet is said to be capable of generating a magnetic field 250,000 times greater than that of the earth itself. As we wrote in the DBR of 8/11/78: "It seems that such a mammoth magnet was required to continue the study of electromagnetic radiation and its application in the spheres of weather modification, space exploration (UFOs?), brainwashing of whole populations, and various killer weapons, the chiefest of which would be the Particle Beam Death Ray, the 'ultimate weapon' which can totally annihilate everything in its path."

Now let us shift the scene to a later time and a different locale. The following is an article by Tom Tiede of the Newspaper Enterprise Association (NEA). It appeared in the comparatively small-circulation, but independent, West Plains Daily Quill, West Plains MO, on Nov. 8, 1978. We reprint the entire article:

UNSEEN FORCE CAUSES STRANGE HAPPENINGS IN OREGON

Eugene Ore. (NEA) - Walter Deposki was among the first to feel it. The 48-year-old bachelor says his modest suburban home began shaking and rattling nearly three years ago. "I would lie in bed and listen to the vibrations," he says. "When I closed my eyes I sometimes thought the house would fall down." Initially, no one paid attention to Deposki's complaints. Then, last spring, other residents here began to notice that something was not quite right. Besides the vibrations in homes, dozens of people said that odd atmospheric sensations were causing headaches, dry throats, irritability and loss of sleep.

As it turned out, the sensations were found to be concentrated radio waves. Among other things, government monitors determined that a 4.75 megahertz signal was shooting through Eugene at a rate of 1,100 times per second. Deposki's home was said to be directly in the path of the frequency blast.

Case closed? Not hardly. Though the electronic sleuths uncovered the cause of the disturbance, they were unable to stop it, or even learn precisely where it originated. Today, Eugene continues to be bombarded by an unseen force of unknown origin, and, not surprisingly, nobody much enjoys it. State and federal authorities have done their best to allay fears regarding the signal barrage. They say much of the problem is probably caused by leaking power lines. At any rate, whatever the source, the government says the electronic disturbance is not sufficient to cause real harm to human beings. Actually, the government adds, the disturbance can't even be blamed for the vibrating houses. Walter Deposki has been told that his home shakes because of faulty construction. Officials say the joists are weak in the home, as is the foundation, 'and you can feel a jiggle even when you walk across the floor.'

But the government optimist is not convincing everyone. Deposki, for instance. He says he has had carpenters put additional support under his house, yet the vibrations have not ended. The force is so strong at Deposki's place, a friend says, that he can unplug the refrigerator and it will continue to operate.

The chief critic of the government optimist is Marshall Van Ert, a one-time industrial hygienist at the University of Oregon. He was the first to monitor the radio signals here, in various neighborhoods. Now living in California, Van Ert says the government is lying about the scope and implications of the Eugene bombardment. Van Ert believes the local disturbance is coming from Russia. He says he has monitored and photographed two radio signals from the Soviet Union, both of which are strong enough to cause harm. "One of the waves creates a high, exciting feeling in people; the other, which is worse, makes you feel depressed or sick." Van Ert says the Russian signals are part of that nation's 'intensive effort' to create military uses for electronic and radio impulses. He says the Kremlin is now able to send 'standing waves of energy' around the world. The waves, he insists, can shake a building, or knock it down -- whichever the Russians choose.

Though curious, Van Ert's view is apparently not invented. A spokesman for the Federal Communications Commission says the Russians have, indeed, been experimenting with powerful radio signals. At one juncture, in 1976, the Red waves were so enormous that several nations grouped together to lodge a protest in Moscow.

No one knows exactly what the Russians are doing. The speculation is they are working on the theories of Nikola Tesla, a brilliant American scientist who claimed he could destroy the world through the use of wireless electricity. Tesla died in obscurity in 1843; the Soviet Union has many of his notes and papers. In general, the U.S. government has not put much credence in talk of a Tesla-Russian connection. Other nations have, however. Last year, a consultant in Canada's state department said flatly that the Kremlin was using Tesla's genius to modify world weather. Canada continues to research that possibility.

For his part, Van Ert says the Russian signals may be modifying more than the weather. He thinks the Red waves also affect human behavior. When he visits Deposki's house, for example, Van Ert says he becomes personally disoriented. After one visit, he recalls, "I couldn't even find my way back home."

Given this explanation of Russian motives, then, Van Ert says it is not surprising that government is less than candid about what he thinks is going on in Eugene. "But it's time the people were told the truth," he believes, "and the truth is that the Russians are trying to get control of our minds."

Are they? Few in this sophisticated university town would agree with Van Ert. Nonetheless, residential concern is deep. Monitoring is continuing here, and new studies are being proposed. The bombardment is real, it is coming from somewhere, and Walter Deposki is not the only one having trouble sleeping at night." (End of article).

"It's time people were told the truth, and the truth is that the Russians are trying to get control of our minds." These were the words of Marshall Van Ert. He was referring to what the CIA calls "electromagnetic brainwashing."

It will be recalled that the art of "brainwashing" was developed by the Communists and by elitist psychiatrists who felt it was their mission in life to control the people of the world. Working along the lines first developed by the Russian scientist Pavlov in his experiments with dogs, Soviet psychiatrists and scientists began working with people. The late Edward Hunter used the word brainwashing to describe the experiments on U.S. prisoners of war during the Korean "police action." Here in the United States a group of elitist psychiatrists intimately connected with the UN World Health Organization, also began to develop plans for controlling masses of people through brainwashing. They used milder terms, of course; behavior modification, values clarification, survival games wherein students decide who will live and who will die in case of some hypothetical holocaust. Such activity is prevalent today in the public schools of America. The idea is the control of future generations of people.

Just as this type of "people control" was being developed by behavioral and social scientists, so also was the electromagnetic field being tapped for the control of whole masses of people, or even selected individuals. Just as Pavlov's theories were expanded for purposes of mental control, Tesla's theories were being tested for purposes of people control. Tesla said that the earth and its atmosphere have a magnetic field that oscillates at a resonant frequency that is identical to that of human brainwaves. Alter that frequency and humans are affected. Entire geographical areas of people can be controlled and mood-manipulated by electromagnetic energy projected into the ionosphere. This is where that gigantic 40-ton magnet made in America and airlifted to Russia comes into play. The area around Eugene, Oregon is said to be a testing ground for these experiments which are "affecting the moods, consciousness, stress and health cycles of people." The National Observer of 8/23/77 reported: "The Russians already have the capacity to create deadly mind weapons and send deadly psychic energy thousands of miles... They can infiltrate and control the minds of leaders--or drive them stark, raving mad."

Eugene, Oregon is just one of many areas where unseen things have been happening. It is suspected that the area in and around San Francisco is another such testing field, where the control of certain types of people and their charismatic leaders is being tested, as well as the ability to drive such leaders "stark, raving mad" if experiments fail and both leader and followers get out of control. There was Charles Manson and the Manson Family. There was Donald David DeFreeze and his Symbionese Liberation Army. Here is where Anton La Vey heads the Church of Satan. Then there are the black Zebras, the militant homosexuals, the Synanon group, and the allegedly religious cults such as the Sun Myung Unification Church, Hare Krishna--and this is where the Rev. Jim Jones built his People's Temple which, in the 1960s was said to be the "biggest Protestant congregation on California."

Could this shocking mass murder-suicide of over 400 men, women and children have been an experiment in "electromagnetic brainwashing"? Let us examine a few of the facts that have been revealed.

According to Jones' wife, the charismatic leader "only adopted Christianity in order to prepare the people for Marxism." This becomes obvious since he laid claim to being both Christ and Lenin. He funded the Guyana "agricultural mission" in 1973, as a place of escape for himself and his most faithful followers if and when things "got too hot for him" in the U.S. By this time, however, the People's Temple had become a church with perhaps 20,000 members, and with centers in San Francisco, Los Angeles, Bakersfield, as well as the headquarters church in Ukiah, north of San Francisco, and Jonestown in Guyana. And, he had become a power in politics in California. He and his followers had campaigned for George Moscone and when the latter became Mayor of San Francisco, Jones was appointed a member of the City Housing Authority. Jones also received praise and recommendation from California Governor Jerry Brown, Vice President Walter Mondale, the late Sen. Hubert Humphrey, HEW Secretary Joseph Califano; and there was the handwritten note from Mrs. Jimmy Carter to the Rev. Jim Jones, on White House stationery, dated April 12, 1977. It read: "Dear Jim: Thank you for your letter. I enjoyed being with you during the campaign--and do hope you can meet Ruth (Carter Stapleton, the President's sister) soon." Vice President Mondale wrote to the minister of state in Guyana recommending Jones and saying in part: "Knowing the congregation's deep involvement in the major social and constitutional issues of our country...is a great inspiration to me." The late Hubert Humphrey wrote: "The work of Rev. Jones and his congregation is testimony to the positive and truly Christian approach to dealing with the myriad problems confronting our society today." A letter from Joseph Califano to Jim Jones read: "Your commitment and compassion, your humanitarian principles and your interest in protecting individual liberty and freedom have made an outstanding contribution to furthering the cause of human dignity."

While all these complimentary things were being written about the man who adopted Christianity to promote Marxism, Jones was intent upon creating a band of slavish followers who would be faithful unto death, literally, and who would at his command murder congressmen, reporters, and all leaders who might be opposed to his brand of totalitarianism, and to the setting up of a Marxist state. If his scheme became exposed, he was prepared for that, too.

There are several possible conclusions. This bizarre affair could be seen as a kind of return-to-slavery wherein the slaveholder builds a plantation in the jungle for his own profit and security, with slaves who seem content in having gained security at the cost of freedom; so 'content' that they meet death with the master, willingly by suicide or unwillingly by murder. Or, it is understandable that a charismatic leader might hoodwink and gain control over the possessions and property of a band of ex-cons, drug addicts, misfits and lost souls. By the use of fear and persecution, dress rehearsals for mass suicide, beatings and torturings, a man like Jones might attain absolute obedience from such a band. It is also understandable that such a leader might so indoctrinate his followers that they would take up his cause and fight to the death for his brand of politicalism or social order. Hitler did it on a grander scale. So did Genghis Khan and Tamerlane, Alexander the Great and Peter the Hermit.

What is not so easily understood is how a man thinking himself both Christ and Lenin could win praise and gain character references from a Vice President, a Governor, a Senator, a Mayor, a President's wife. Were they all deceived, or were they part of a plot and would they have continued to support Jones if he had not been publicly exposed for having gotten beyond the control of his real masters? Or, were they all, from White House to jungle slave quarters, victims of some kind of mesmerism by magnetism, personal or long-range mechanical? Only one answer seems to fit all the questions; and it is a command: Thou shalt have no other gods before me. Such other gods can be man, or man-made, even a 40-ton magnet made in America and shipped to Russia.

THE PURPORTED DOLLAR RESCUE

All else having failed to halt or even slow down the speed of the inflation that was afflicting the nation, the Carter Administration came to the conclusion that confession might be good for the salvation of the dollar. So, came the official admission that in the last eleven years the U.S. dollar has lost one-half of its purchasing power. One typical headline announced: "Inflation Reaches A Cruel Milestone." The story began: "It is official!!! What consumers have known in their hearts and pockets became a formal fact Tuesday (11/28/78) courtesy of the U.S. Labor Department." We were told that Alfred (King) Kahn, President Carter's inflation adviser, heard the news and proceeded to peg the nation's current inflation rate at about 10 percent." George Meany, president of AFL-CIO, heard the report and "bellowed demands for mandatory wage and price controls." Barry Bosworth, director of the Council on Wage and Price Stability, indicated that the Carter Administration "is considering some changes in its anti-inflation standards, partly because too many companies are trying to take advantage of loopholes. He told executives from 70 corporations that a revised set of standards will be published Dec. 2." Which means that, even as you read this letter, Carter once again may have done something he said he'd never do: ordered mandatory price and wage controls via Presidential Proclamation and/or Executive Order.

Carter confessed that the only sure way to control inflation was to curb government spending, and he vowed to trim the budget; not an unexpected vow since the people are demanding less federal spending (so long as it won't affect them personally). Said Time Magazine (12/4/78): "Largely out of sight, deep in the labyrinth of the federal bureaucracy, Jimmy Carter is preparing for what may be the biggest battle of his presidency. As a keystone of his anti-inflation program he has vowed to limit the red ink in the 1980 budget, which takes effect next October, to less than $30 billion...So, department by department, determined Administration budget cutters are now looking everywhere for places to slash... Carter's political future largely depends on his success in curbing federal spending and the inflation it breeds... Says Federal Reserve Board chairman G. William Miller:... 'he can't get re-elected unless he deals with inflation.' But if Carter cuts too sharply he will alienate many of the groups.. who supported him in '76." (unquote).

Carter promises that the national health insurance program will be tabled, that the proposed $20 billion welfare-reform program will have to be curtailed, and similar spending programs will suffer. According to U.S.N.&W.R., the President is "personally selling his (austerity) program wherever he goes.. At a Nov. 20 cabinet meeting, for example, he conducted what one aide described as a 'pep rally' urging officials to pare down their budgets to help fight inflation. Everywhere Carter travels, the message will be the same... He's not going to give a speech in the next few months that doesn't hit inflation hard. That will include the President's address on Dec. 8 before the Democratic mid-term conference in Memphis."

Just playing politics? The past two years have shown that it's best to take anything Jimmy Carter says or does with the proverbial grain of salt. As an example, he went into the White House proclaiming an energy shortage and saying a fight against energy waste was "the moral equivalent of war." About two years later he got a watered down version of his energy bill and declared it to be a great moral victory for his administration. However, the official word is that the energy crisis was a hoax from the very beginning. From the Miami Herald of 11/28/78 we quote: "The notion of an impending energy crisis is bunk, energy experts from some of the world's leading think tanks said in Miami Beach Monday...Prominent energy specialists from academia and industry met in air-conditioned opulence at a Miami Beach resort hotel to say that this, at least, is the view from the University of Miami's International Scientific Forum on an Acceptable Energy Future, the second annual gathering of scientists that the university calls 'genuine heavyweights in the field'." (unquote).

Carter's previous attempts to halt inflation have been about as successful as his attempts to gain a victory in the "moral equivalent of war." If he is really serious this time, he will strive, not to limit the red ink in the budget, but to eliminate the red ink altogether and present a balanced budget. However, it is noteworthy that Carter's domestic austerity program was matched by an Administration attempt to halt the decline of the U.S. dollar internationally. The Way in which this new program came about is featured in the current (Dec. 4) issue of Fortune Magazine; and the article reads like a mystery story. Headlined, "The Inside Story of the Dollar Rescue" reporter Herman Nickel says, and we quote parts of the story, with a few parenthetical remarks:

"In the absence of any firm monetary plank to restrain the double-digit growth of the U.S. money supply, the foreign markets dismissed the president's anti-inflation program (which was announced Oct. 24th) as too feeble. The rout (of the dollar) started in Tokyo before the president had stopped speaking; even $2 billion spent by the Federal Reserve and other central banks to buy up dollars on the day after the speech was unable to halt it. This alarming reaction to the president's program suddenly got things moving in Washington. At 11:30 on the morning of Oct. 24th, Federal Reserve Chairman G. William Miller arrived at the Treasury for a working lunch with (Treasury Secretary) Blumenthal and Solomon (Undersecretary for Monetary Affairs) to discuss emergency measures. The immediate upshot was the formation of a small and top-secret working group....On Friday Oct. 27, Blumenthal met with Schultz (Chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers) and Solomon...At 10:30 on Saturday Oct. 28, Miller, Blumenthal, Schultz, Kahn (Chairman of the Council on Wage and Price Stability), and Solomon met in the Treasury Secretary's dining room to go over the options...Just before 10:00 p.m. the participants...began to assemble in the Map Room of the White House. Miller arrived from a dinner party at the house of Washington Post publisher Katherine Graham. Solomon excused himself from a dinner he was hosting at his home. Kahn, Schultz and Blumenthal arrived from their homes, the latter two having sent regrets to Mrs. Graham....Finally, at 10:01 the presidential helicopter touched down on the South Lawn....As the meeting concluded, Carter said he was in basic agreement with the proposals presented, and he authorized negotiations of technical arrangements with German and Japanese officials....On Sunday morning, Oct. 29, the four Japanese emissaries, headed by Takeshiro Sagami, were driven to Solomon's home...The talks with Leonhard Gleske, an officer of the Bundesbank, were held at the Fed. Negotiations with the Swiss were conducted by telephone, the man at the other end being Fritz Leutwiler, President of the Swiss Bank. The talks were completed on Monday, when the emissaries flew home to obtain final approval. Keeping the news from leaking out was still a dominant concern..." (unquote).

From the names of those comprising the top-secret working group, it becomes obvious that this was a Trilateral Commission project requiring the approval of the German and Japanese sections thereof. The final agreement might be called a "Monetary Declaration of Interdependence." It also seems that the Trilateral plan involves the setting up of a transitional system on a tri-monetary basis; involving the use of three currencies: the U.S. dollar, the Japanese yen, and the new European Monetary System's ECU. The final details of the ECU plan are to be announced in the European Common Market countries on Dec. 5, and the new monetary system is to become effective on January 1, 1979. The ECU will be backed by gold and the hard currencies of Europe, is expected to take the place of the dollar, IMF's "special drawing rights" and to become the accepted "international currency" at some later date. It is expected that sometime in 1979 the OPEC nations will refuse to accept U.S. dollars in payment for oil, and will insist that all future payments be made in the ECU. This will be the signal for the death of the dollar in world trade; and the civilized world will be back on the gold standard, with the exception of the United States, and the United Kingdom if the latter refuses to go along with the EEC in accepting the ECU as its monetary unit.

For a time, however, the dollar must continue to be honored internationally. That was the reason for the "dollar rescue mission" described in Fortune. It becomes necessary that the dollar maintain a reasonable value for a time, because of all those billions of Eurodollars in the hands of foreign banks, corporations and individuals. These Eurodollars have lost much of their value in foreign countries, but they can still be used to make purchases in the United States. Foreign holders of U.S. dollars are rapidly unloading them; exchanging them for U.S. banks, buildings, corporations, real estate, etc. America is being sold, at retail prices, to foreigners at a rate not even understood by our own federal government. An example is the purchase of domestic banks by foreign investors. An AP release of 11/30/78 reports: "You may not be aware of it, but it's not unlikely that when you write a check on your account at the friendly Hometown Bank & Trust Co.; you're actually playing a small role in the business of international banking. Your hometown bank may be owned by a bank from Canada, Britain, Japan or another foreign country. The number of U.S. banks owned by foreigners has grown sharply in recent years, and may grow even larger. Foreign bank assets in the U.S. as of May 1978 were said to be nearly $100 billion, according to the Federal Reserve."

In addition to banks, huge farm acreages are being purchased by absentee landlords, buildings, corporations, industrial areas, anything that can be bought is being bought, at astronomical prices. Beverly Hills is fast becoming something of a New World Mecca for oil-rich Arabs and investment-seeking Iranian families who will spend a million dollars for a home built for perhaps one-tenth as much by some movie star. All of this comes as a result of the glut of U.S. dollars that have been shipped wholesale to other parts of the world, for economic and military aid, for the purchase of oil and other imports, etc.

There was a time when Japan and Western Europe went along with the United States almost anything our subrosa government demanded or desired. The reason: the U.S.A. was their protector and defender. Commitments to NATO, Far Eastern countries, and the developing nations, were important in the rebuilding of the war-torn world, and to defense against the U.S.S.R. and Red China. Japan, for example, had no military force of any kind. In the constitution prepared by Gen. MacArthur's staff, Japan renounced war, made no arrangements whatsoever for maintaining a military establishment, depended entirely upon the U.S. for its defense. Since Vietnam, however, Japan has come to the conclusion that it can no longer depend on the Pentagon for protection; is now building its own army, navy and air force and, for additional security, has signed a long-range mutual aid and trade agreement with the Peoples Republic of China. For the same reasons, the nations of Western Europe realize that they can no longer look to the United States for peace and security. This realization came about largely as a result of the policy adopted by Henry Kissinger and his key U.S. foreign policy planner for Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union, Helmut Sonnenfeldt. The "Sonnenfeldt Doctrine" led to President Ford's signing of the Helsinki Agreement, which officially granted support and recognition to the Soviet conquest and subjugation of Poland, Hungary, Romania, Czechoslovakia, Bulgaria, Estonia, Latvia, Lithuania, and East Germany. The doctrine also stated that in the event of a Soviet attack on Western Germany, it would be necessary that at least one-third of that country would have to be sacrificed before any effective defense could be set up. Since that time NATO has become less and less respected in the eyes of Western Europe, especially so since it is now conceded that countries dominated by eurocommunist government will be allowed to be NATO members. The end of military dependence upon the U.S. has been followed by less and less economic and financial dependence, and the determination to look to themselves for survival and security. Thus, the creation of the ECU, which is backed by the Swiss-based Bank for International Settlements. As was noted in the late November issue of McKeever's Individual Strategy Letter: "One of the reasons that the BIS has been so tolerant of the floundering U.S. dollar is because they needed to rely on our military help in case of attack by Russia. I feel that Europe no longer feels they can rely on America's military. Doug Johnson, of Rauscher Pierce Securities Corporation feels that the BIS has finally run out of patience, and now has washed their hands of the U.S. dollar. 'The goal of the BIS Bisons is to have a stable currency backed by gold. This would mean that the price of gold as measured in ECUs, would not appreciate. It appears that the BIS could care less what the price of gold is as measured in U.S. dollars.'" (Unquote).

So much for this struggle between countries and monetary blocs, with ourselves as taxpayers caught in between. It must be understood, however, that above all these governments and institutions, and using them for their own purposes, are the Financial Elitists, headed by the Rothschilds of Europe, the Rockefellers of America, the Oppenheimers of Africa, the Mitsubishiis of Japan, etc. Much of their work is done through the Central Banks, such as our Fed., which is a private bank, owned by other banks. It creates money out of thin air, gives it to the Treasury, then collects interest on this "monopoly money." As pointed out by McKeever, these financial elitists aim to increase their wealth until they have all the wealth in all the world. They cannot do this if gold does nothing but go up. Since their wealth is measured in terms of gold, they would still have the same number of ounces. And they can't make money in terms of gold if all currencies were to stabilize. These men can only make money when something moves up, moves down again, moves up again, moves down again, and so on. Thus, as gold moves up, when it gets to the top level they desire, they sell enough to force it down. When it gets low enough, they buy it back, run it up again, sell, and keep doing this. They do the same with stocks and bonds, and commodities. That's how the late Bernard Baruch explained his great wealth and power over nations: buy at the right time, sell at the right time, and control the times.

So, what happens to the dollar and the price of gold probably depends on these financial monopolists. However, history is a great teacher and Patrick Henry knew when to apply its lessons. Let's pray we can do as well.

HEW AND IRS VERSUS THE CHRISTIAN SCHOOLS

The First Amendment to the U.S. Constitution to the contrary notwithstanding, the Department of Health, Education and Welfare and the Internal Revenue Service are officially engaged in the promotion of a state religion. That religion is called Humanism, which is diametrically opposed to the Christianity that was recognized, though not universally professed or practiced, by the citizens of the United States of 1776. Lest there be any misunderstanding as to definition, let it be known that in two separate decisions United States courts have stated that Humanism is a religion. Also, if we are to judge by the words of the atheistic confessional known as the Second Humanist Manifesto, this religion proclaims the following articles of faith:

Humanists believe in evolution, and will fight to prevent any other theory, especially Creation as spelled out in the Holy Bible, from being taught in public schools. Humanists believe that everyone has a full right to sexual freedom and that all perversions are permissible, even normal. Homosexuality is merely an "alternative lifestyle." Humanists have no respect for the family as a social unit. Suicide, abortion and euthanasia are approved. Humanists deny the existence of Almighty God and ignore the Ten Commandments. In the view of Humanists there is no right or wrong, evil is as good as good; and children ought never to be hampered in their development by morals, parental views, or the precepts of Christianity.

Although clothed in other phrases and bearing other titles, Humanist doctrines are worked into every course in the public schools--math, history, English, languages, sex education, environmental studies, the sciences, home economics; all are permeated with Humanism. Furthermore, it is held by Humanists that before students can adopt the "compulsory" doctrines of Humanism, they must first be weaned away from the teachings of home and church.

Of course, it hasn't always been this way. As John F. McManus recently wrote, the worst changes have come about in the past quarter century, because that was when the federal government started the program to establish a monopoly over education in the United States. He says it began with two major steps. The first was the Supreme Court's school desegregation decision. That's when federal meddling in the schools began in earnest. The second major step was the institution of federal aid for public schools, as a mechanism for establishing federal control. Dean Clarence Manion adds a third major step. He writes:

The teaching of (Christian) religion and of morality has been taking a bad beating in this country for the past 25 years. The hardest blow came in 1962 when Supreme Court Justices Black and Douglas finally prevailed in their prolonged effort to reverse the plain language and historical purpose of our First Constitutional Amendment from a protection for the reserved powers of the States into an atheistic restriction upon those same reserved powers.... These 1962 court decisions drove all worship of Almighty God out of State public schools and have thus produced a new generation of matured young Americans who have never heard our Declaration of Independence read aloud in their classrooms, nor listened to a discussion of the moral obligations imposed upon them by the Ten Commandments."

By mid-century, the Fabian members of the Intercollegiate Socialist Society, Dewey's Progressive Educationists, the "Toward World Understanding" protagonists, social scientists and assorted modernists had thoroughly undermined the foundations of basic and traditional American education. But after the three decisions previously mentioned: desegregation, federal aid, and the outlawing of God from the schoolrooms, the bottom really fell out. Then came the era of the "Blackboard Jungle." So horrible had the public schools become by 1975, that the U.S. Senate Judiciary Committee established a subcommittee to investigate the widespread barbarism that had developed. They picked the most liberal Senator of them all, Birch Baye, to head the subcommittee. But even Baye was forced to report "an alarming number of homicides, rapes, robberies and assaults on both teachers and students. Baye didn't investigate the academic side, but it was even worse. Other reports show that educational standards in public schools have been decreasing for the past 25 years. College freshmen who need to learn how to read, and who are lacking in elementary skills, are the rule rather than the exception. And the use of drugs has become epidemic. The fact that costs have increased tenfold in the past 25 years proves that more money is not the answer.

As a result of the barbarism, amorality, criminality, and functional illiteracy that had become the end products of public, state education, alarmed parents began to rebel, by establishing and financing independent and religious private schools throughout the fifty States. It is estimated by IRS that there are now at least 20,000 such schools; and it is conceded that they are providing better education at far less cost per student; to say nothing of their lack of violence and immorality, criminality and the drug-filled atmosphere that prevails in the public schools.

As one observer noted: "The most pervasive element of bureaucratic motivation is the need to snuff out competition before it demonstrates the failure of a bureaucracy's way of doing things." In short, the contrast between the students of public versus private schools was becoming so shocking and so apparent that HEW had to do something to eliminate the competition and to establish a monopoly in the field of education. HEW has tried in innumerable ways to increase its control over education: forced integration, forced busing, unisex toilet arrangements, unisex athletic programs, the new HEW demand that schools spend as much money on girls' athletic programs as on boys' programs, with the exception of football. But, HEW found it impossible to eliminate the competition that was occasioned by private and church-operated schools. Hence, IRS was called upon to do what HEW couldn't do without help:-

Came the August 22 dictum; a set of new regulations regarding the tax-exempt status of private and religious schools. The new rules provide that any school "formed or substantially expanded at or about the time of desegregation" is to be deemed racially discriminatory and no longer qualified for tax exemption. And the schools are adjudged guilty of racial discrimination unless they prove themselves innocent!

Came a storm of protest when the cloak-and-dagger tactics of IRS were made known to the people by independent news sources. Over 100,000 letters of protest were mailed to IRS, probably more than that to the President and to Congressmen. The semblance of public hearings (that are not really "public hearings" in the official sense) was agreed to; are being held as this Report is being written. But we have been told that IRS is not going to pay any attention to these protests. As Jo Ann Gasper commented in her November issue of "The Right Woman", "The meetings are not being held to weigh testimony, but to record oral comment, and are therefore not binding on IRS. The IRS will have three or four days of comment in December, and then promulgate the regulations." However, President Carter issued Executive Order 12044 which calls for certain procedures to be followed before significant regulations are promulgated. These regulations call for public hearings. Therefore, a court order could stop IRS until after legal public hearings are held. Also, the Congress could have "oversight hearings," which would delay enforcement of the regulations until after the new Congress convenes and acts. A Congressional Committee may act when Congress is not in session. So, writing to your Senators and your Congressman is important, now!

To paraphrase a great President, it is altogether fitting and proper that we should do this. But in a larger sense, it should not have been necessary to do it, if proper steps had been taken in the first place. The point being: a crisis might never have occurred if church-related schools had acted in accord with certain Christian--and legal--principles in the beginning. This, at least, is the opinion of Rev. Claire Kelly, Pastor of the Church of the Holy Spirit in North Olmstead, Ohio. He writes:

"Christians, themselves, have laid the groundwork for the current attack on Christian schools. First, they have done this by seeking 'tax exempt' numbers from the IRS, when the law gives them automatic exemption under the First Amendment and 26 U.S. Code 508 (c). The oft referred to 26 Code 501 (c) of the 1954 Internal Revenue Act does not apply to churches and thus there is no need for churches to incorporate in order to receive tax-free contributions. Second, incorporating a church really means subordinating God and His Law to the State and its law. A corporate charter is a legal privilege from the government. A corporation is a 'legal person' created by the State. By incorporating a church, one is asking that State to make God a legal person. If God exists legally by permission of the State, then He can also be denied legal existence by the same state which created His legal existence in the first place. What the State gives, the State can take away. This is a gross violation of the principle of separation of Church and State as well as of religious freedom under the First Amendment.

"Furthermore, when people fill out income tax forms, they have the First Amendment right to exercise their religious freedom by putting 'Object-1st and 4th Am., U.S. Constitution' on the lines that ask for names and addresses of persons or organizations to which tax-free charitable contributions have been made, explaining in the margin that they claim their religious freedom under the First Amendment and Matthew 6:1-4, and the Fourth Amendment privacy rights.

"Christ tells us in Matthew 6 that we are to do alms 'in secret.' IRS countermands Christ's command. Who are Christians bound to obey? The midwives in Exodus 1:15-22 had this same problem and we are told that they chose to dis-

FLORIDA SENATE STOPS ERA AGAIN

"A cloak-and-dagger strategy for ratifying the Equal Rights Amendment failed Wednesday as the Legislature turned Gov. Reuben Askew's Last Hurrah into a sedate farewell. Operating under the stern gaze of more than 40 women wearing 'Stop ERA' signs, lawmakers wrapped up in a little more than seven hours the business of a special session that Askew had called to span three days. It was Askew's last legislative session." (Miami Herald, Dec. 7, 1978).

obey the King's law and obey God's, and that 'God dealt well with the midwives.' But the midwives didn't have the First Amendment to protect them. They trusted wholly in God. American Christians today trust neither in the First Amendment nor God! Is it any wonder judgment is upon America, and the people oppressed?

"Understand this and understand it well--conditions in this country won't improve until the people improve by learning to live their faith, instead of just mouthing it." (unquote).

The foregoing statement by Rev. Claire Kelly applies, of course, to Christian schools only. But it is with these that we are dealing in this Report. When any "legal person" asks for help from the government, he has become a servant of that government when, under our Republican form, exactly the opposite should be true. Asking for tax-exemption was the fatal error!

Since this Report is concerned primarily with Christian schools, there is one cardinal point that has been overlooked by almost all administrators of Christian schools. It is the Scriptural precept that in a Christian church or school, willful or enforced desegregation is not permitted! And this is the basis upon which IRS is judging Christian schools guilty unless they can prove themselves innocent! The following by The Rev. T. Robert Ingram of St. Thomas Episcopal Church & School Houston, Texas, is self-explanatory:

"The proposed ruling of the Internal Revenue Service, which would impose sanctions on all non-government schools formed after the school desegregation activity began who cannot give satisfactory demonstration of their integration policies, is one of the most deadly acts of governmental persecution since the Fourth Century. In effect, the ruling would make it unlawful for Christians to apply the truths and teachings of the doctrines of grace which are universally accepted as central to Christianity.

"All are saved by grace. St. Peter, supporting the work of St. Paul and St. Barnabas at Antioch, voiced this to the Church Council in Jerusalem in 40 A. D. The immediate application was two-fold: first, that Gentiles converted to Christ were not required to become naturalized Jews in order to be saved, but secondly, not only were they not required so to do but they were forbidden to leave their own nations and culture. The only law imposed upon them was that derived from the Noachic Covenant forbidding idolatry and murder. The reasoning, which was unanimous and held to have the endorsement of the Holy Ghost Himself, was that any integration of Gentile converts into the Jewish nation would of necessity show to the world a condition placed upon grace or the free favor of the sovereign Lord Jesus Christ.

"There is no worldly human condition which can be either a barrier to grace or a requirement. Therefore, the Church has throughout her reign on earth not only allowed nations and languages and peoples to retain their distinctive national cultures but has encouraged them to do so. Worldly distinctions of any kind, race, language, culture, sex, or status as worker or employer, are to be maintained in justive as a glorious display of the sufficiency of grace for the salvation of all.

"To be subject to government sanctions for exercising this 'blessed liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free' is to be beset by a determined purpose of the world and the devil to destroy the Christian religion and the Church."

TAKING CHRIST OUT OF CHRISTMAS AND GOD OUT OF GOVERNMENT

The coming of the month of December is the signal for the renewal of an annual campaign on the part of the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU) and associated and like-oriented organizations to prevent the public observance of a Christian holiday that is almost universally observed in all civilized societies of the world. The first extended report on this year's campaign, adapted for public perusal, was written by one David L. Langford, and released for nationwide publication by the Associated Press. Here is that report as it appeared in the December 14, 1978 issue of the Miami Herald:

MOVE TO TAKE CHRIST OUT OF CHRISTMAS REMINISCENT OF PRAYER CONTROVERSY

A move to take Christ out of Christmas in schools and other public places is drawing protests reminiscent of the prayer controversy of another time. "I am disturbed our country is falling apart from the inside before Russia or anyone else has had a chance to come after us," says one Tulsa, Okla., teenager. He is Pat Calhoun, 16, one of about 400 people who turned out at a meeting of the Tulsa Classroom Teachers Association last week to argue over a recommendation that teachers avoid religious themes in holiday programs. Nothing was resolved at that meeting, and elsewhere the American Civil Liberties Union has gone to court to try to silence the singing of Silent Night and other carols in classrooms. In Baytown, Texas, the ACLU's actions prompted angry citizens to organize the United Legal Citizens Association (ULCA)--that's ACLU spelled backwards--to help fight the lawsuits. In other cities, the effort to ban religious symbolism has spread beyond the schools.

The city attorney of Des Moines, Iowa, has said city employees cannot depict shepherds and wise men at the annual nativity pageant at the Children's Zoo. In a seven-page opinion issued after a year-long debate, Philip Riley said the city "may not legally sponsor or endorse such a religious pageant." The debate began last year when Steven Brown, director of the Iowa Civil Liberties Union, said the pageant violates the U.S. Constitution's guarantee of the separation of church and state. He said the pageant was effectively an endorsement of a religious celebration.

The city fathers in Traverse City, Mich., decided not to display the traditional nativity scene in a town park this year after the local Human Rights Commission argued the scene could provoke a lawsuit. Similarly, the Texas State Board of Control is expected to rule this week on a proposed ban against religious displays or meetings in the state capitol. The church-state issue also surfaced in Sioux Falls, S.D., where the ACLU wants a federal judge to ban carols in schools. ACLU attorney Stephen Pevar, who filed the suit on behalf of six Sioux Falls residents, says he agrees that less than one-third of the music sung in the school has a religious content. "But if even one (religious) song was sung, it would be unconstitutional," Pevar said. "If the judge finds that singing these songs is a religious exercise, then we win, because religious exercises are prohibited in schools."

Rae Underwood, a music teacher at Salk Elementary School in Tulsa, collected 637 signatures on a petition protesting the recommendation that religious programs be avoided. The petition charged the ban could be psychologically damaging to students of the Christian faith. "Christian attorneys should be retained to uphold our wishes and letters should be written to our representatives requesting their support," the music teacher said. But Claude Dyer, president of the Tulsa teacher's association, said he fears court action. "What I'm afraid of... is that we are heading for is court action and the complete and total censorship of all programs," he said.

For almost two years, a lawsuit against the Goose Creek school district in Baytown, Texas, has been in a federal court. The suit, filed by the ACLU in behalf of a Jewish woman with two children, seeks a ban on such practices as reading the Bible over the school's public address system and praying at football games and PTA meetings. In the fall of 1977, shortly after the suit was filed, school officials sent out a directive prohibiting Christmas carols, manger scenes and any reference to Jesus or Christ in holiday programs. When the word spread through the small community east of Houston, a hymn-singing crowd of 3,000 gathered to protest the directive. The ban was lifted and the board hired a noted constitutional lawyer to lead the court fight. The case has not yet gone to trial. (End of article).

We have reprinted the preceding article because we thought you ought to know that this same old controversy returns each Christian holiday season, and that the humanists and other atheists and heathen appear slowly to be winning their fight to "keep Christ out of Christmas." However, reprinting the article does not mean that we are in sympathy with the effort to "get God back into the public schools." State schools are promoting and insisting upon adherence to their own religion--which we shall call Humanism--and this state religion is in every way completely antithetical to Christianity. Since the state presumes to take the place of Almighty God, pretending to be savior and provider for all of the people from womb to tomb, it is our personal opinion that, instead of trying to get God into the state schools, we should be trying to get all His children out of the state schools. Compulsory attendance in schools controlled by the state is exactly what Karl Marx had in mind when he and his industrialist friend and supporter Friedrich Engels had in mind when they wrote the Communist Manifesto in 1848.

We also can be sure that the founders of modern communism would be pleased to know of the steady increase in Marxist professors who are getting and keeping positions of power and influence on college campuses across the nation. It is true that communists and other radicals have occupied positions of importance in academia for years; but never have they so boldly admitted publicly that they are Marxists, and have been able to keep their jobs. National Enquirer is a weekly tabloid that has a low journalistic rating but a high reader score. It is an independent publication--is not dependent upon controlled news agencies for its information--and often carries important stories that might never make the wires or be blue-penciled by the monopolistic media. Such a story was the one appearing in the Dec. 19, 1978 issue, by Frank Levine. We quote:

Marxist college professors are boldly grabbing positions of power and influence on campuses across the nation, an Enquirer probe has revealed. This shocking development can have a devastating impact on many schools, warns a top educator. "The number of professors with Marxist or radical antiestablishment ideologies in positions of responsibility is on the rise," said Jordan Kurland, associate general secretary of the American Assn. of University Professors.

"In the past year or so, we've received a great number of complaints about the leftist professors," Kurland said. Dr. Seymour Lipset, professor of political science at Stanford University, has conducted surveys that found that 45 percent of today's college professors consider themselves left-of-center....

With undisguised glee, the Marxists themselves brag of making great progress in the U.S. academic world. "Marxists are being nominated for national offices in different disciplines," said Dr. Bertell Ollman. Dr. Ollman, Marxist professor of political science at New York University, has himself been nominated to be head of the American Political Science Assn. Another Marxist, historian Eugene D. Genovese, who proclaimed that he would welcome a Viet Cong victory in Vietnam, is today a professor of history at the University of Rochester in New York. Genovese is one of two Marxists to have served as president of the Organization of American Historians. "As compared with a decade ago, the real difference is that there is now a large number of Marxists, not merely teaching but able to run graduate seminars," he asserted....

The dramatic surge of Marxism on the university campus has alarmed Dr. Max Rafferty, the former superintendent of education in California and now dean of education at Troy State University in Alabama... "Many of these professors, particularly those of them who got their degrees during the sick 1960s, boast quite openly that they are Marxists," Dr. Rafferty said. "Now we are seeing the graduates of that era in places of responsibility to influence policy--and I am afraid that the results at many schools will be bad." (Unquote).

The following excerpts from Presidential Proclamation 4609, Thursday, November 30, 1978, are reprinted without comment.

BILL OF RIGHTS DAY, HUMAN RIGHTS DAY AND WEEK, 1978

By the President of the United States of America

Two great events in the history of human liberty will be commemorated in December: the ratification, on December 15, 1791, of the Bill of Rights of the Constitution of the United States, and the adoption, on December 10, 1948, of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights by the United Nations General Assembly.

.... This year, we mark the 30th Anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. The Declaration is the cornerstone of a developing international consensus on human rights. It is also the authoritative statement of the meaning of the United Nations Charter, through which member nations undertake to promote, respect and observe human rights and fundamental freedoms for all, without discrimination. A long and difficult road must be travelled before the reality of human rights in the world matches the words of the Declaration. The Declaration will light that road and give strength to all who follow it.

The Universal Declaration is the heart of a body of important United Nations human rights documents: the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, the Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, and the Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights. The United States signed the Genocide Convention in 1948 and the Racial Discrimination Convention in 1966. I signed the other two Covenants on October 4, 1977. I hope that the United States Senate will soon approve the Genocide Convention at last, and will undertake early hearings to permit our Nation's adherence to the three remaining instruments. There could be no more appropriate gesture to mark the anniversary of the Universal Declaration.

Federal Register, Vol. 43, No. 231 - Thursday, November 30, 1978

Protecting children from Humanist-dominated schools and Marxist-dominated colleges is vital to our Republic's survival. But there is yet another necessity: getting Law back into Government. By this we mean God's Law, as expressed in the Decalogue. The Ten Commandments are the very Foundation of our civilization, of our Constitution, of our American Way of Life. We have permitted this Foundation to be renounced and ridiculed. As one of the ten examples we might cite, think of the ninth: "Thou shalt not bear false witness..." This has to do with honesty, both individual and governmental. And honesty has become farce in governmental circles. In Arthur Haley's book "The Money-Changers," otherwise spoiled by its pornographic passages, there is an important reference to the death of honesty in our nation: "People didn't believe any more what they were told; they had become too accustomed to being deceived and lied to. In the recent past they had been lied to by their president, other government officials, politicians, business, industry. Lied to by employers, by unions. lied to in advertising. Lied to in financial transactions...Lied to...by communications media. The list was endless. Deception had been piled upon deception until lying--or, at best, distortion and failure to make a full disclosure--had become a way of life."

Example: Carter, Sadat and Begin made a great show out of bringing "Peace On Earth" when they knew in their hearts this was but a staged performance, full of sound and fury but meaning nothing, because any treaty between Israel and Egypt--if ever signed--is impossible to keep.

Another example: On November 16th President Carter said, "I do mean business" in sticking to the administration's anti-inflation program." But less than a month later, Carter had altered his anti-inflation program to appease Labor, since the Teamsters Union wouldn't go along with Administration guidelines.

But, in the larger sense, as L. Lee Layton points out, "Carter's talking about inflation is a fraud... Inflation is caused by printing worthless money to pay the deficit in the budget caused by expenditures exceeding receipts of the Federal Government. It is this deficit which must be corrected in order to stop inflation.... Carter has not only signed outrageous bills which originated in Congress, but he has also urged Congress to pass his own bills appropriating billions of dollars needlessly. So, to make a long story short, when Carter talks about fighting inflation, he is just lying. The Federal Government is not to be trusted...."

Most patriots are beginning to understand that if we are to regain our liberties it must be done at the State level. State Legislatures could reactivate Amendment Ten of that Bill of Rights which Carter has asked us to honor and remember in his Proclamation No. 4609. The Tenth Amendment could be used to limit the Federal Government to the powers assigned it by the Constitution. States could repudiate Executive Orders, unconstitutional laws.....

As one patriot said: "America cannot be saved until our social, political, and economic laws are based on the Ten Commandments. Until and unless our efforts are directed toward the correction of these evils in our lives, we are nothing but the blind, leading the blind."

In this Christmas season, as Citizens of this once free, independent, and God-honoring United States of America, it seems proper that we should think upon these things....

THE CHINA SELLOUT

Perfidy is not unusual when dealing with Nations or with national leaders. The sobriquet "Perfidious Albion" is familiar to students of English and European history. Plato said: "The rulers of states are the only ones who should have the privilege of lying, either at home or abroad. They may be allowed to lie for the good of the state." Napoleon was blunt. He said: "You must take things as you find them; promise as much as you like, but never keep promises. That's the way of the world." Lenin was bluntest of all. He said: "Promises are like pie-crusts - made to be broken." Now it seems that the rulers of our Nation have decided to join the crowd of would-be world rulers and break promises, lie, consider treaties to be mere scraps of paper that can be torn up whenever it seems convenient. On December 15, 1978, James Earl Carter told the world that he was tearing up two solemn treaties that had been made with one of our staunchest of friends and allies, the National Republic of China on Taiwan. The official text of the betrayal follows:

The United States of America and the People's Republic of China have agreed to establish diplomatic relations as of January 1, 1979. The United States of America recognizes the government of the People's Republic of China as the sole legal government of China. Within this context, the people of the United States will maintain cultural, commercial and other unofficial relations with the people of Taiwan. The United States of America and the People's Republic of China reaffirm the principles agreed on by the two sides in the Shanghai Communiqué and emphasize once again that:

- Both wish to reduce the danger of international conflict.
- Neither should seek hegemony in the Asia-Pacific region or in any other region of the world, and each is opposed to efforts by any other country or group of countries to establish such hegemony. Neither is prepared to negotiate on behalf of any third party or to enter into agreements or understandings with the other directed at other states.
- The government of the United States of America acknowledges the Chinese position that there is but one China, and Taiwan is part of China.
- Both believe that normalization of Sino-American relations is not only in the interest of the Chinese and American peoples but also contributes to the cause of peace in Asia and the world.

The United States of America and the People's Republic of China will exchange ambassadors and establish embassies on March 1, 1979.

Not all of our political leaders are perfidious and treacherous. Voices were raised in protest at this cowardly sellout. Senator Barry Goldwater said: "The President's decision on China represents one of the most cowardly acts ever performed by a President of the United States. The action stabs in the back the Nation of Taiwan, one of the most faithful and trustworthy friends our country ever had/ In doing this, the President is favoring a Communist regime on mainland China whose concept of human rights has been expressed in 50 million killings.: Said Senator Richard Stone: "It is a slap in the face to...the Republic of China on Taiwan, and to the Congress...Who will be our ally if we are so willing to dump our allies?" Said Senator Orrin Hatch: "The President has abrogated the treaty with Taiwan and thus again has indicated that the United States is unwilling to live up to its obligations...He is losing the initiative in the Middle East and he wants to make up for it with another startling but terribly depressing foreign policy move." Said Senator Jesse Helms: "No amount of sugar-coating rhetoric by the President can obscure the plain fact that he proposes to sell Taiwan down the river. I pray that there are enough Americans in and out of Congress who still place a value on honor." The American Conservative Union, which fought a valiant but losing fight against the Canal Treaties, has joined Goldwater in sponsoring a lawsuit attacking the constitutionality of Carter's termination of the mutual defense treaty with Taiwan. Even senate minority leader Howard Baker felt the wrath and urged Carter to postpone the cancellation of the treaties until after Congress can consider the matter.

Henry Kissinger gave the show away by saying that Carter's act was "the right thing to do, but it was the wrong time to do it." The New York Times then explained editorially that Carter had missed the boat because this was supposed to be part of a triple play. There was to have been the signing of the Israeli-Egyptian peace treaty by Begin and Sadat with Carter witnessing, the signing of SALT II with Carter and Brezhnev signing and the world witnessing, then the world-shaking announcement of the establishing of full diplomatic relations between the USA and the PRC. All of these happenings were supposed to occur at approximately the same time; January 1, 1979 was the target date. But plans went awry. The world began to wonder at the Israeli-Egyptian fiasco, and the SALT II agreement was bogging down. Even Paul Nitze, liberal, former deputy defense secretary and one-time arms negotiator, admitted that this new strategic arms limitation treaty "would permit the Soviet Union to achieve a military posture in the early 1980s from which it could destroy 90% of the United States' land-based intercontinental missiles."

But the immediately crucial events concerned Israel and Iran. Carter was fast losing face because of his poor handling of both; his about-face on the future of the Shah was embarrassing to Carter's Trilateral mentors. Something had to be done to get Mid-East developments off the front pages. So, the Red China deal had to be announced before its time. This was supposed to raise Carter's stock. It didn't.....

We were in China when the first attempt to communize China was in full swing, as a young Marine Corps journalist and later as a civilian reporter and foreign correspondent. We knew Chiang Kai-shek and admired him as a Christian and a true patriot. Dr. Sun Yat Sen had been trying to consolidate his hold over a number of warlords that dominated central and south China, and he thought that communism might be an aid in that effort. He sent his 36-year-old chief of staff to Russia to investigate the possibilities. Chiang Kai-shek thus spent 4 months in Moscow, returned thoroughly disillusioned. Dr. Sun accepted Chiang's report, also turned against communism, but died in 1925 and it was left to Chiang to purge the Kuomintang of its communist members. But Michael M. Borodin--real name Grusenberg--born in Russia but educated in Chicago, proved to be one of the cleverest agitators and organizers ever to promote communism. He arrived in Canton as early as 1923 and had almost succeeded in winning all of China to the communist cause. However, when Chiang began to win victory after victory and was able to establish a nationalist government, the government was recognized by the U.S. (1938) and Borodin's efforts collapsed. Boarding an American gunboat, Borodin escaped and the Chinese Communists under the leadership of Mao Tse-tung and Chou En-Lai, fled to the hills of Kiangsi and Hunan. After consolidating the rest of China, Chiang would have purged it of the remaining communists had it not been for the sudden Japanese invasion of Manchuria in 1931. Chiang had to give up his fight against the communists and return to Nanking to concentrate his forces against the Japanese invasion. The affair having been settled temporarily, Chiang again went after Mao's forces.

But once again, the Japanese invaded China in 1936, and Chiang was forced to accept Mao's troops as allied forces against the common enemy. That war with Japan in 1936 became a part of World War II, and that "united front" against a common enemy (Japan) continued, with the U.S. ostensibly aiding both Chiang and Mao. However, vital supplies were diverted to Mao and but for the heroic support of such men as General Claire Chennault of the Flying Tigers, Chiang would have lost out entirely. This was due to the fact that the Institute of Pacific Relations (IPR) was in complete command of the State Department's China section. There were Lauchlin Currie, Owen Lattimore, Harry Dexter White, John Stewart Service, John K. Fairbank, Theodore White, and many others. IPR was a satellite of the Council on Foreign Relations and received financial aid from such affluent individuals as Thomas W. Lamont, Henry R. Luce, Gerald W. Swope; from the Rockefeller, Carnegie and other foundations; and from such corporations as J.P. Morgan, IBM, Shell Oil, Matson Steamship Lines, and even The Reader's Digest. With Lauchlin Currie in the White House as the administration's special adviser on China, and with such organizations as the wartime-OSS, the Amerasia crowd, Ambassador Clarence Gauss and General Vinegar Joe Stillwell all applauding Mao and denouncing Chiang, and with military supplies going to Mao from both the US and the USSR, and nothing going to Chiang, it soon became necessary for Chiang Kai-shek and his faithful followers to forsake their homeland and establish a new government on the island of Taiwan (or Formosa). The United States, to be sure, was the first Nation to recognize the National Government on Taiwan, to pledge support for the new Republic in some 60-odd treaties and agreements, the most important of which Carter has moved to abrogate on January 1, 1978.

The "two Chinas" policy continued with diplomatic recognition accorded to the Taiwanese Government only--until Kissinger came on the scene. It will be remembered that Nixon was originally wholly anti-Communist. He caused the trial of Alger Hiss. In his campaign of 1960 he said: "When you deal with a dictator and make concessions that he doesn't deserve, whenever you appease him, you don't serve the cause of peace. You serve the cause of surrender." In a televised debate with Kennedy, Nixon defined the ambitions of the Chinese Communists as global: "They don't just want Quemoy and Matsu, they don't want just Formosa. They want the world. If Communism takes over in one country, the tremors are felt clear around the world...and the eventual target is the United States." But what a change when Nixon became President and Nelson Rockefeller was able to give him Henry Kissinger as a special advisor.

"President Nixon's scenario for Asia, as fashioned by Dr. Kissinger, envisaged a new balance of power, and the increasing tension on the Sino-Soviet border in 1969 presented some interesting possibilities," wrote Anthony Kubek in his book "The Red China Papers." Consequently, a "New American Foreign Policy" was presented in 1972; a 236 page report prepared by Kissinger. The President outlined this new policy in an article appearing in Time Magazine of January 3, 1972. He said in part:

"I believe in a world in which the United States is powerful. I think it will be a safer and a better world if we have a strong, healthy United States, Europe, Soviet Union, China, Japan, each balancing the other, not playing one against the other, an even balance." (accent supplied).

Thus was enunciated the "Pentagonal Balance of Power" which was to be developed: five nations (of five regional governments, if you will), all to be equal in power. However, before such a five-sided structure could be constructed, it would be necessary to increase the strength of the one, most populous but the weakest, nation: Communist China! This, then, brought about Kissinger's transitional plan which came to be known as the Trilateral Constellation. The plan called for the strengthening of China so that the USA, the USSR and the PRC could be brought into "balance of power" position so that each was equal in power and supposedly to attack each other because of that equality. So, the first step was to bring Red China into the UN, have it replace the government of Taiwan on the Security Council, with veto power equal to US and USSR.

Then came the "table tennis diplomacy" in 1971. Later that year Kissinger was on a world tour, faked a "bellyache" in Pakistan to remain incommunicado, and flew to Peking to confer with Chou En-lai. In February 1972 Nixon toured Red China, signed a communique with Mao Tse-tung. In 1973 Kissinger made two more visits to Peking, and David K.E. Bruce opened a liaison office in Peking. In 1975, after Ford had been appointed to succeed Nixon, the former followed through by holding talks in Red China. In 1977 President Carter named labor leader and CFR member Leonard Woodcock envoy to Red China. In August Cyrus Vance visited Peking. Last May Zbig Brzezinski went to Peking and completed the plans. Then on December 15, 1978 came the perfidious proclamation that a friend had been stabbed in the back and an enemy raised to a position of honor and trust.

While all this development of Kissinger's Trilateral Constellation was proceeding, however, both Japan and Western Europe were growing restive. They saw the U.S. extending favors to USSR and PRC, feared they were being treated like America's Pacific allies, and that they were being thrown to the Communist Bear that was the Soviet Union. So, plan number two had to be taken. The next step involved the creation of the Trilateral Commission which would concentrate on bringing Europe and Japan into line to complete that "Pentagonal Balance of Power" that had been announced back in 1972.

Great changes took place. Nelson Rockefeller retired from politics, and David assumed command. Kissinger was transferred to Chase and Zbig replaced him as Rockefeller's foreign affairs expert. They sought for a new kind of President, found him in Jimmy Carter, and the Trilateral Commission took control of the White House and all phases of external affairs.

As planned, Japan began building its own military machine, to provide for its own defense; Europe began merging toward a United States of Europe in which all sovereignty, and power, would be vested in a Regional Government, with a new gold-backed currency, the Ecu, to take its place alongside the Japanese yen and what remained of the U.S. dollar. Then would come time for the emergence of Red China as a full-fledged member of this family of Regional Governments, each to be equal in power. This would be the "Pentagonal Balance of Power" which was proclaimed as "the new American foreign policy" as early as January, 1972!

But now for the clincher: If these five are to be equal in power, then the United States (Canada included to make it "regional") must be weakened in order to match but not exceed the power of USSR, PRC, Europe and Japan. Note how this weakening has proceeded: There was the cancellation of the B-1 bomber, the scheduled withdrawal from Korea, the cancellation of the neutron bomb, the giveaway of the American Canal in Panama, the forced retirement of such outstanding military men as Gen. Singlaub, the collapse of the dollar, and finally the loss of prestige, power and respect in Asia, the Middle East, Europe, and Africa. It isn't just Taiwan that is being sacrificed for greed and gold!

Year Twenty-Five.....Number Fifty-Two.....December 29, 1978

THE REPUBLIC THAT WE LOST

With the death of an old year and the birth of a new one, the chroniclers of the passage of time, and the writers of newsletters, like to do one of two things: review the successes and defeats of the year that has passed, or predict the events the writer expects to occur in the coming year. But this reporter would like to take a different tack. We'd like to return to first principles and see our Nation as it was at the beginning. As years speed by and knowledge increases, we as a people are inclined to grow soft, and become indifferent to the truths that we once held to be self-evident and immutable. We tend to become tolerant toward evil, and we lower our national standards; thus we drift toward chaos and inevitable dictatorship of one type or another, often without even knowing that we are drifting to our national doom. Therefore, it seems fitting that now and then we should look back to our beginnings as a Nation and reconsider the truths we once held dear. In the beginning we held these truths to be self-evident, that all men are endowed by their Creator--not by any government or by any man or men--but by their Creator with certain unalienable rights, and that among them are Life, Liberty, and the Pursuit of Happiness. Governments are instituted among men to secure, not to endow, these rights!

That was the beginning. From these truths there developed others that should be recalled: (1) We were a Republic. (2) We were a Christian Republic. (3) We adhered to a system of free enterprise and honest money. (4) We sought no entangling alliances with any other Nation or Nations. There were other truths which our forefathers deemed self-evident; but let us examine these in the light recommended to us by Patrick Henry: the lamp of experience.

1. WE WERE A REPUBLIC. Benjamin Franklin's fears have been confirmed. We had a Republic; but we couldn't keep it. We have become a democracy; and our Founding Fathers well knew that "A democracy cannot exist as a permanent form of government. It can only exist until the voters discover that they can vote themselves largesse from the public treasury. From that moment on, the majority always votes for the candidate promising the most benefits from the public treasury, with the result that a democracy collapses over loose fiscal policy...always followed by a dictatorship." We are a democracy, our fiscal policy is certainly "loose," and we are heading toward a form of dictatorship!

Over 50 years ago a very wise constitutional authority named Harry F. Atwood notes this trend toward democracy and he wrote, in 1921: "There is much talk of democracy in our schools, and yet there is not a democratic thing in the Constitution of the United States, nor the faintest hint of a suggestion that anything under the Constitution would ever be done in a democratic way, even in the creation of the Constitution itself, or its adoption, or its amendment, or its plan of administration, and we still require our public officials to take an oath to uphold, protect and defend the Constitution of the United States, and that is the only thing they are sworn to do. The Constitution provided for a representative form of government, and the founders called it a Republic. It guarantees to each of the States a republican form of government. Those who are talking democracy in our schools should turn to the Federalist, the greatest governmental discussion in the libraries of the world, and ask themselves what Madison means in Federalist number X, by the following language: 'Hence it is that such democracies have ever been spectacles of turbulence and contention, have ever been found incompatible with personal security or the rights of property, and have in general been as short in their lives as they have been violent in their deaths...A Republic...by which I mean a government in which the scheme of representation takes place, opens a different prospect and promises the cure for which we are seeking'." (unquote).

Our Republic was a form of government under a Constitution which provided for the election of (1) an executive and (2) a legislative body who, working together in a representative capacity, have all the power of appointment, the power of legislation, all power to raise revenue and appropriate expenditures, and are required to create (3) a judiciary to pass upon the justice and legality of their governmental acts and to recognize (4) certain inherent individual rights. Take away one or more of these four elements and we would start to drift into some form of dictatorship. Add one or more to these four elements and we would be on the way to a democracy, a form of government which "collapses over loose fiscal policy and becomes a dictatorship." We have added two elements to our form of government: Regional Governance and the United Nations. Thus we are heading toward some form of dictatorship. Space permitting, we shall discuss the UN later in this letter; but lest there be any misunderstanding in regard to the dictatorial aspects of Regional Governance, observe the definition given it by Col. Arch Roberts, an acknowledged authority on the subject:

"Regional governance is a new form of government which has been covertly engineered to replace the city, county, state and school district systems. Boundary lines of these familiar political subdivisions are to be dropped and a new set of geo-political lines followed. Under regional governance there are now ten U.S. provinces, or regions. Each province has a designated 'capitol' to handle all matters within the particular province. Offices of HUD, OEO, SBA, and Labor were moved into the new capitols of each province, with more agencies added later. The objective is to establish the mechanics for controlling the lives and ambitions of the people from a central authority in Washington and to direct their efforts into channels ordered by a Bureaucratic Oligarchy. An examination of the type of government proposed under regional government shows that it is a government by appointed, rather than elected, officials. Under regional government disfranchised U.S. citizens are to be held in bondage, in perpetuity, as producers and servers for a self-appointed 'elite'." (unquote).

Our Republic has become a democracy, is destined to become a "region" in a Regional New World Order unless our Nation's drift toward destruction can be reversed and our Republic reconstructed!

2. OURS WAS A CHRISTIAN REPUBLIC. Humanists will point to the fact that there is no reference to Christianity in the U.S. Constitution, which is true except for the legal exemption of Sunday, a Christian holiday, in Article I, Section 7 and the dating "in the year of our Lord" in Article VII. But the humanists will never admit that the omission of any direct mention of Christianity in the Constitution was intentional, and for a very important reason. At the time of the writing of the Constitution, and before, there were thirteen Christian Republics. They were all free and independent states, self-governing Republics, as the Declaration of Independence clearly states. In every state there were religious requirements for holding office, and for voting. It was only in 1902 that New Hampshire dropped the suffrage requirement that one be a "Protestant" in its Bill of Rights, and changed the word to "Christian." It was as late as 1964 that the New Jersey Supreme Court struck down a state law barring testimony from atheists unless they were parties in a lawsuit. Such laws were commonplace, atheists were barred from testifying in most states until state constitutions began being changed.

However, the subject of Christianity and religion was a matter of states rights! Every state was jealous of its own Christian framework, and for the Constitution of the United States to lay down any rules concerning Christianity or religion would be a direct violation of states rights. That's what the 1st Amendment is all about when it declares that "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof." Thus, the federal government was intentionally barred from interfering with Christian laws and establishments in the thirteen Republics. Each state was free to develop its own Christian legal framework without federal interference. As Rev. R.J. Rushdoony states: "The First Amendment...was thereby underwriting the validity of every state establishment and law in every one of the states. It was not only affirming the right of the states to be Christian Republics, but it was also pledging itself against interference with those Christian orders and giving them its tacit approval. The First Amendment was thus a guarantee to Christian establishments and laws."

We must add that the doctrine of the separation of church and state is a phony issue introduced by subversives and atheists. The Bill of Rights says nothing about separation of church and state, and the idea never entered into the thinking of the Founding Fathers at the Constitutional Convention. The U.S. Constitution is based upon Christian law and Christian morality, and was designed to perpetuate a Christian order. In his "The Nature of the American System," Rev. Rushdoony writes: "No such separation of Christianity, or church, and the state existed anywhere in the United States before, and for some generations after the ratification of this (first) amendment. Second, the federal government did not secularize itself. Congress, both before and after ratification, began its sessions with divine worship (in addition to prayer—Ed.), and felt no inhibition in exercising its faith. Moreover, by re-enacting the Northwest Ordinance of July 13, 1787, after the adoption of the First Amendment, the federal government continued the policy of Article III..." This article provided for the establishment of Christian schools. Christian schools were the only schools America had, until Unitarians and Socialists worked to establish state-controlled schools.

Our Christian Republic has become a democracy incorporating the religion of democracy, which is Humanism. Unless we can return to the faith of our fathers, we cannot expect to halt the drift toward dictatorship, or hope to reconstruct a Christian Republic.

3. FREE ENTERPRISE AND HONEST MONEY. It was a remote central government's interference with trade and commerce, money and taxes, religion and citizen's rights that caused the Revolution of 1776. When the Founding Fathers met to create a new form of government, they were careful to define and limit the powers of the central government. Free enterprise meant no competition by government, no unconstitutional restrictions on free trade and commerce. A free market system meant that the individual succeeded or failed, profits or losses were his alone, he could expect no government subsidies or handouts. And as a result, a small Nation grew great and wealthy and powerful. Then came the welfare state policies that accompany democracy and socialism, and interventionism in order to "share the wealth" became the government's policy.

But since money is the lifeblood of a nation's economy, it was money that was to provide the root of the evil. The writers of the Constitution were careful to spell it out: "The Congress shall have power:...To coin (not to print) money, regulate the value thereof" etc. Unfortunately, the Constitution also says that Congress shall have power "to borrow money on the credit of the United States." This made possible the growth of a national debt that destroys the true wealth of the Nation. Then, in 1913, Congress relinquished its power to regulate the value of money, turned the job over to a group of bankers who formed the Federal Reserve Corporation. Congress also changed the very nature of what we call money. True money is more than a medium of exchange; it is real wealth that can be used as a medium of exchange; it is not merely a symbol of wealth. And when money means debt rather than wealth, a Nation is in real trouble; a government can then turn on the printing presses and feed the fires of inflation.

In a recent article by Tom Rose, distributed by The Foundation for Christian Economics (713 Cornwallis Rd., Durham, N.C. 27707), the author spelled out the problem of inflation from the Christian point of view: "Our national politicians aren't stupid...But since they are reluctant to relinquish the heady power that accrues to them as spenders of money, they purposely try to mislead the public...when (they know that) the real problem is simply too much government spending...Realizing these things, what attitude should Christians take in solving the problems of inflation? We must remove the government's deficit-creating and money-creating power...As Christians we must realize that inflating the money supply (1) is an insidious method of taxation and collective theft and is, therefore, forbidden by God's Word (Ex. 20:15,17), (2) a treacherous means which rulers can use to demoralize and buy off people, thus bending citizens to their will (Ps. 2:2,3), (3) serves to remove mothers from the home and thus weaken their moral influence on children (II Tim. 1:5), and (4) leads to the destruction of Christian institutions and weakens the 'salting influence' of Christians in society (Matt. 5:13)."

Without honest money, honestly treated by government, ours cannot be a representative Republic, certainly not a Christian Republic.

4. ENTANGLING ALLIANCES. The father of our country was very sure that permanent alliances with any other country would destroy the Republic. This was amplified in the Monroe Doctrine, which declared that we would not interfere in Old World affairs, and we would not permit Old World interference in New World affairs. We violated that doctrine, and we permitted it to be violated by other Nations. But the act that really led to the destruction of our sovereignty was the signing of the treaty that made our Nation a part of the United Nations. This led to all sorts of entangling alliances. A recent instance: last fall a conference was held to create a "new world information order." It was sponsored by Unesco and the Intergovernmental Bureau for Informatics (IBI). 75 nations including the US and the USSR "hammered out the details of a New World Order." Said the weekly Computerworld: "The rough structural outlines for a new world information order were hammered out...The keys to the proposed new order will be more self-reliance and regional cooperation on the part of developing nations and a united front vis-a-vis multinational corporations..." They agreed on a new system for making computerized data held by individual governments available to all governments. The accent was on the part to be played by multinational corporations in shaping the New World Order! This is but one example of how, through entangling alliances, we are surrendering our Nation to a World Authority which is Socialistic, Humanistic, and anti-Christian!

Think on these four things: Ours was a Republic, ours was a Christian Republic, ours was a free enterprise system with honest money, and entangling alliances were to be forbidden! In these four elements rests the key to preservation of Life, Liberty and the Pursuit of Happiness.

Year Twenty-Six.....Number One.....January 5, 1979

THE GATHERING STORM CLOUDS

The Year of Our Lord 1979 is destined to be a dangerous and crucial year for the United States of America and for its freedom-loving citizens. This is the foregone conclusion of Trilateralists, politicians, economists, monetary experts, and leaders-in-general. One respected news source says it is going to be a "blustery" year; meaning that politicians are mixed up, politics fragmented, and the future unsettled. Most of the forecasters put the blame on Jimmy Carter, citing his "stop-and-go policies" and his "gulliberal today, conservative yesterday" attitude toward important domestic issues. As for his foreign policies, to a rational citizen they seem idiotic; but to his Trilateralist mentors everything probably is happening exactly as planned--which should be the most distressing part of the plot in the mind of any Christian American.

Perhaps the most distressing inconsistency in domestic policy is this: Carter and his administration are waging a war against inflation and yet another war against unemployment and depression--and they are losing them both! This is because his war against inflation is phony; they know it, and they are lying to the people, deliberately and intentionally.

Figures no longer seem to mean much to the government, but a look at the budget is interesting. Spending is estimated at $533 billion but the federal income is estimated at only $504 billion. This means an admitted deficit of $29 billion. But there's another $16 billion needed to keep current programs funded, programs that don't show in the budget. And, when the expected recession comes later this year, more federal expenditures will be made to keep the recession from becoming a full-fledged depression. Also, Congress doesn't pay much attention to budgets when it starts making appropriations for special and pet projects. All of which adds to the galloping inflation. Which in turn will lower the purchasing value of the dollar both at home and abroad. Add to these economic and monetary woes the strange game Carter is playing with business and labor--trying to maintain wage and price controls without making them mandatory--thus causing more strikes and more violence; and the overall forecast is one of gathering storm clouds.

Just as dangerous, perhaps even more dangerous, is the muddling and meddling foreign policy pronouncements that have made us, as a Nation, untrustworthy, ineffective, hated by some and laughed at by others. Newsweek hinted at, but understated the situation, saying: "January is the month when the President traditionally turns to domestic issues. For Jimmy Carter, there is the war on inflation to be fought, and a series of messages--chiefly the State of the Union and the budget--to be presented to a Congress that returns from recess in a feisty and conservative mood. But Carter's foreign-policy troubles simply will not go away. The most urgent of them is the worsening situation in Iran. In addition, there is frustrating, unfinished business in the form of two long-sought treaties that still hang fire: a peace agreement between Egypt and Israel and a second-round strategic arms limitation pact with the Soviet Union."

Not mentioned is the coming bloody invasion of Taiwan by Red China, arranged by our subrosa government via their mouthpiece Jimmy Carter. Neither is the incipient takeover of once friendly Nicaragua by Communists mentioned, nor is the bloodbathing of Rhodesia which the "elitists" inspired. Also, there is the deliberate weakening of defenses in Korea, the publicly admitted fact that the NATO forces cannot successfully defend against potential attack of West Germany by the Warsaw Pact Satellites of Red Russia. Then there is the ongoing horror involving Cambodia and Vietnam which could develop into another war of major proportions again involving the United States. In short, storm clouds cover the whole world at a time when the President of the United States has been set up as the "manager of the free world."

We of the West are supposed to be confused and bemused, and we are told that the world situation "just developed that way," or that it is the fault of the Communists, or that our leadership is inept and apt to make mistakes. Never are we told by those in authority that it all might have been planned this way, in order to create such global chaos that, in rectifying the world disorder a New World Order could be installed--one which survivors would welcome and embrace!

The most widely circulated "voice of conservatism," the one that is accepted as such by the majority of readers is the United States News & World Report. And the diagnosis that is supposed to be accepted by conservatives is clearly stated in an editorial appearing in its current issue (1/8/79). Marvin Stone, editor, makes one solid admission, that President Carter's mentor is the Trilateralist Zbigniew Brzezinski. Otherwise, the mess we and the world are in would seem to be the fault of one Jimmy Carter--misleading and untrue. Carter is no

AN OPEN LETTER TO ANITA

Anita Bryant Green
P.O.Box 40-2608
Miami Beach, Florida 33140

Dear Mrs. Green:

This morning a friend who has been active as long as I have been active in the education battle, called to ask for my advice. In the county in which she lives, an attempt is being made to introduce a particularly offensive sex education program which will undoubtedly include consideration of homosexuality as an alternative lifestyle. She said a group of ministers, while alarmed about the proposed program, still want a "responsible" sex education program in the schools. She asked my advice on how the ministers might go about getting legislation that would result in a "responsible" sex education program. I told her she should know by now that since government schools promote only Humanist beliefs, it would be unrealistic to expect that it would be possible to have a "responsible" sex education program that would satisfy "responsible" Christians. Therefore, I told her the most "responsible" thing those ministers could do would be to start their own Christian schools, and not lose any time doing so, because all the while they are fighting to stave off offensive sex education, the schools have the children and are subjecting those children to programs that are equally bad--values clarification, drug education, death education and alienation-producing behavior modification of every description, to name just a few noxious influences.

After I spoke with my friend, your Public Opinion Survey arrived. I agree with you that we need to clean up TV and protect school children from the influence of homosexuals. We do need a lot of things, but first things first. The only way parents will be able to protect their children from the promoters of homosexuality and offensive sex education programs in the schools is for them to take their children out of government schools. "Public" education is a myth. Schools are no longer controlled by local citizens, but by the federal government, via fool, nor is he as foolish as he is painted. He was selected by the Trilateralist "elite", was carefully schooled and conditioned by the best conspiratorial brains in the business. But here is what conservatives are supposed to believe as stated editorially in U.S.N. & W.R.:

SHOOT-FROM-THE-HIP DIPLOMACY

*By Marvin Stone, Editor
U.S. News & World Report*

In the early days of the Carter administration, statesmen around the world were startled at the amount of diplomatic crockery that the new American President managed to smash in a matter of a few months. The President had come to office imbued with the idea, spawned by his Trilateralist mentor, Zbigniew Brzezinski, of "global management," with the man in the White House playing concertmaster to a disharmonious world. In his rush to manage all the world's problems immediately and simultaneously, Carter alienated allies, dismayed adversaries and spread consternation through just about every important capital. Now, the President seems to be drifting back into the bad habits that got him into so much trouble in those early months. He is trying to do too much too fast. He has just cruelly and callously abandoned a weak ally on Taiwan. He is eager to sign a strategic-arms treaty with Russia before he has decided how to deal with critical defense problems that would be aggravated by such an accord. And he has been doing some crude public arm-twisting to get an Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty signed on a timetable that he demanded, but that was unrealfunds that go for curriculum development and teacher training. Any attempt to change or improve a school situation while a child is in that situation is not only a waste of time, but downright dangerous. Children can be influenced and their morality destroyed very quickly. And often, when parents become activists, the educators single out children of such agitators for intensive "treatment." My point is that parents of school age children do not have the time to fight brush fires and get their children educated at the same time.

There are so many things that need to be done. Clean up TV? Of course. That's a priority. But an even greater priority is getting children educated, so that eventually they will be able to recognize the garbage and propaganda shown on TV for what it is. Let's start by urging parents to turn off TV. If enough parents do that, the sponsors will be hit where it hurts. This will be a greater positive influence than any amount of letter writing.

Shall we fight legislation that permits homosexuals to influence children in the schools? Of course. That, too, is a priority and must be done. But first, children must be taken off the battlefields called "public schools" and placed where they can be educated; where they can grow and mature as God intended. Where they can learn that homosexuality is not something one is born with, but a learned behavior that Christians reject.

After having fought every conceivable kind of education battle, it has become crystal clear that if we are to raise up Christian missionaries and soldiers of Jesus Christ to carry on our Christian Western civilization, we must have and must actively promote the establishment of alternatives to government "education." That is a priority of the first order.

Sincerely,

Barbara M. Morris,
Ellicott City, MD

istic from the start.

What is distressing is that the President, after two years, still persists in reverting to a discredited style and strategy in dealing with world problems. The way Carter handled the normalization of relations with Peking was both shoddy and reckless. Recognition of mainland China may have been inevitable. But is it too much to ask the President why he took it upon himself to abandon, with one sudden stroke, this country's moral commitment to the security of the anti-Communist Chinese on Taiwan? Carter rushed into an agreement with Peking on terms that previous administrations considered demeaning to America's self-respect. Even though Peking's leaders seemed to be panting for our technology and for any other means of strengthening their hand against Russia, the White House failed to exploit its strong bargaining position to extract an explicit pledge concerning the future security of Taiwan. The President speaks of the advantage of trading "with nearly 1 billion Chinese." We fear the President may find that prospect soon turning into so much hogwash.

Carter's treatment of Congress was nothing less than cavalier. He deliberately ignored a "sense of Congress" resolution enacted only a few months ago calling for "prior consultation between the Congress and executive branch on any proposed policy changes affecting the continuation in force of the Mutual Defense Treaty" with Taiwan.

The President's handling of Egyptian-Israeli negotiations raises further doubts. In his impatience to meet a December 17 target date for signing a treaty, he came close to a temper tantrum. The White House circulated the word that the President was "livid" with the Israelis for refusing to accept treaty revisions demanded by Egypt and supported by the Carter administration. Far from forcing Israel's hand, the President managed only to harden that nation's stand and compound Secretary of State Cyrus Vance's problems in attempting to mediate the dispute.

There are other examples of presidential diplomacy that give pause. In the Iranian crisis Carter equivocated in public about the fate of the Shah, which only exacerbated the monarch's already desperate predicament. His Rhodesian "policy" is foundering. OPEC has just laughed off the President's indignation at its latest act of greed in raising oil prices another 14.5 percent.

The White House would do well to consider an elementary lesson of statecraft: Impatience and indignation are no substitute for intelligent, deliberately measured diplomacy. (End of editorial in U.S.N. & W.R., 1/8/79).

As we go to press, diplomacy of some sort is being conducted, in deepest secrecy, on the French resort Island of Guadeloupe in the Caribbean, by heads of state of the Trilateralist-connected Nations, sans Canada and Japan. In these secret negotiations Carter was allowed one adviser. He took with him, not the Secretary of State, but his "Trilateralist mentor," Zbigniew Brzezinski. We are told there is much to be discussed: SALT II, Iran, entry of ECU into the monetary world, the rift between Schmidt of Germany and Carter of USA. The press secretary, Jody Powell, said the secret confab "is designed to be very informal and we plan no startling announcements or perhaps no announcements at all." In other words, a kind of Super-Bilderberger conclave where heads of state will be told what to do, how to do it, and when to do it. Schmidt of Germany and d'Estaing of France are nationalists, are apt to disagree and refuse to obey. But storm clouds are gathering. We'll do our best to keep you informed.

ANASTASIO SOMOZA: THE LAST U.S. MARINE?

"We are ruled by inferiors." So reads a rubberstamped message that appears on many of the envelopes addressed to us. The statement is true. We are ruled by inferiors because great leaders--leaders who possess the character and the qualifications required of great leaders--have virtually ceased to exist. Where today would one find another George Washington? Or another Abraham Lincoln? The price of great leadership is often high. Lincoln was assassinated. So were Garfield and McKinley. In this writer's lifetime there have been many leaders of varying political persuasions who defied accusers and assassins alike and have maintained their positions of leadership until taken away by natural death. Franco of Spain was such a leader; look at the state of his Nation now that he is gone. Salazar of Portugal held his country and its colonies together, even in his extreme illness, until his death; look at the condition of the country and its former colonies today. Churchill was a great leader, but was ousted from office by inferiors as soon as the war was ended; Britain has had no comparable leader since. De Gaulle was a great leader. His people ran him out of office then called him back because none could replace him. Douglas MacArthur was a great leader, but an inferior named Truman fired him, Syngman Rhee of South Korea was a great leader, but was banished via a political coup. Chiang Kai-shek was a great leader; now that he is gone Taiwan is about to be ruled by inferiors. We could name many names: Mihailovich of Yugo Slavia, Diem of South Vietnam, many others who were succeeded by inferiors. Even the Communists are no longer permitted to have strong leaders. Witness the banishment of Nikita Khrushchev, supposedly a dictator who was as god to the Communist faithful, ousted by a committee and sent to the suburbs.

At present there are three anti-Communist leaders, not inferiors, and whose names have become household words throughout the world: Ian Smith of Rhodesia; Mohammad Reza Pahlavi, Shah of Iran; and Anastasio Somoza, President of Nicaragua. All three are marked men, are about to be deposed or destroyed by inferiors. Of these three, little has been said of Somoza. His state provides a good study of the manner in which real anti-Communist leaders are eliminated, and why "we are ruled by inferiors."

A personal note: In the fall of 1926 we were in boot camp at the Marine base in San Diego when our basic training was cut short because of a sudden rash of train robberies in the U.S. and Marines were called out to guard the mail. But in the midst of that tour of duty, more important events cropped up. There was a civil war in progress in Nicaragua, a similar civil war in China. The military leaders in Nicaragua decided they couldn't restore order without outside help, they asked the United States to send the Marines to help them. Citizens of the United States then in China also needed protection. We can recall being rushed aboard the old transport, U.S.S. Chaumont, not knowing whether we were headed for Nicaragua or China. It so happened that our contingent sailed for China; so we never got to Nicaragua. But the record is clear:

At that meeting of the Nicaraguan military leaders when U.S. Marines were requested, one Nicaraguan general, Sandino, arrived late. When he heard about that call for the U.S. Marines, he was furious, stormed out of the meeting and vowed that he would fight the Marines, and he did. The Marines had quite a time subduing Sandino's army. The present Cuban-trained and Soviet-equipped terrorists now fighting to depose Somoza take their name from General Sandino, who fought the U.S. Marines in Nicaragua fifty years ago.

Following the Marine occupation of Nicaragua and the restoration of order, a national election was held and General Somoza's regime was brought to power. Since Somoza was a graduate of West Point Military Academy and worked with the U.S. Marines in subduing Sandini's forces, he is often referred to by compatriots as "the last U.S. Marine," a sobriquet given him by Arnold Ramirez-Eva, a well-known and successful Nicaraguan businessman who served at one time as Somoza's minister of economic affairs, industry and trade. Now, however, Ramirez-Eva opposes Somoza and heads a group called El Frente Amplio Opositor (FAO), businessmen who want to oust Somoza from office, but have no connection with the radical Sandinistas. And here we have an example of how history repeats itself:

In post-war Germany, industrialists and businessmen wanted a change in government. So did a radical named Hitler. The businessmen supported Hitler because they thought they could control him. When Hitler came to power, first to be dispossessed and their businesses "nationalized" were those industrialists and businessmen who helped Hitler gain control. In pre-Castro Cuba we have the same history lesson. Luis Tous, now a resident of Costa Rica but formerly a millionaire businessman in Cuba, recalled a meeting between the leaders of Havana and former President Fulgencio Batista. At that meeting Batista warned the participants of the consequences should Castro overthrow his government. Batista told them they might think his administration was bad, but just wait until they got Castro. Louis said that when he left that meeting he shrugged it off as being politics, and he was a businessman, not a politician. Louis says that the businessmen of Nicaragua should take a long look at the disaster in Cuba, before they help depose Somoza thinking they can control the communist-backed Sandinistas.

When Somoza became President of Nicaragua, he continued to be pro-U.S. and was supported by the U.S. For this reason he was respected and listened to by other Central American leaders--until Castro came to power, that is. Panama under Torrijos became friendly toward Castro, and unfriendly toward Somoza. President Carlos Andres Perez of oil-rich Venezuela become pro-Communist and there are reports that Venezuela has been purchasing arms and supplies from Soviet Russia and shipping them to the Sandinistas by way of Panama. A Communist takeover of little Costa Rica is planned, and Sandinista terrorists driven out of Nicaragua have taken refuge in Costa Rica, where they regroup to prepare for future invasions of Nicaragua. After the gift of the American Canal in Panama to Torrijos' dictatorship, all the nations of Latin America have begun to lose faith in the United States and are turning toward Castro and the Cuban dictator is especially hostile toward Somoza because he gave permission to the United States to train the Bay of Pigs invaders on Nicaraguan soil. So, Anastasia Somoza, "the last U.S. Marine" is in a desperate situation. And so is the United States!

Jack Cox is a former Republican candidate for Governor of Texas, has been a long-time observer of political developments in Latin America, where he also engaged in business for many years. He lived in Costa Rica from 1972 to 1976 and is familiar with the present situation in Central America. He wrote an article for the Houston Chronicle which was published Dec. 17, 1978. Much of the information contained in this letter comes from Mr. Cox, and following are direct quotes from his article:

The recent war in Nicaragua is not a matter of civil strife. It's an international war. What is happening in Nicaragua today is of more importance to the United States than the events in Iran, South Africa or any other part of the world... And the future of Nicaragua and of Central America will be decided by the United States. If it is, as President Carter and the State Department maintain, a civil matter to be decided by the people of Nicaragua, then this administration is blind to the involvement of men, weapons and supplies to the guerrillas in Nicaragua. By the same token, they are deaf to the Sandinista guerrillas' pronouncements being made in Nicaragua, Costa Rica and Cuba....

The situation in Nicaragua is critical...The United States holds the key to whatever solution may be forthcoming. Thus far, the Carter administration has been inclined to oppose Somoza, even though a neutral stance has been projected. But all military aid to Nicaragua has been cut off. This has not pleased several countries in Central America. Government leaders in Guatemala, Honduras and El Salvador also worry about developments in Nicaragua. The prevailing attitude is fear. In each of these countries there are leftists and a certain amount of guerrilla activity. The governments in each of these countries support Somoza. Their fear is that should the Sandinistas succeed in Nicaragua, it would only be a matter of time until each of these nations would fall.

In Cuba, Castro first flew false colors. Prior to his victory, he emphatically denied that he or his associates were communist. Castro maintained his revolution was as "Cuban as the palm trees." (The communications media--and especially The New York Times--supported Castro's denial--Ed.). Now, many of the concerned residents of Central America remember that it was after Castro had been in power almost two years that he felt confident enough to announce to the world that, "I am Marxist-Leninist, and I will be to the last day of my life."

Had Castro made his position known (or had the controlled press told the truth about Castro) prior to his victory in Cuba, the United States may have exerted pressure to see that a Soviet satellite was not established in the Western Hemisphere. (There is evidence that President Kennedy did try to stop Castro and that this was the real reason for his assassination. An exclusive story in the current issue of Spotlight states: "There is material--not just information, but evidence--in the top secret files of several intelligence agencies directly linking Cuba's communist leaders and the U.S. crime syndicate to the John Kennedy killing"--Ed.).

This time [Mr. Cox's article continues] the Sandinistas have announced in advance that they are Marxists. Tomas Borge Martinez, leader of the Sandinistas has said that "all of Central America is at stake." He further stated that a "revolutionary transformation in all Central America will occur in a very short historical period." And that the revolutionary transformation of Central America will change the political geography of the continent....

The plan, the ideology and the objectives are clearly stated. It's not just Nicaragua that serves as a target. It's Central America and ultimately all of Latin America (and after that, all of North America.)

Somoza has announced that he plans to serve as president until his constitutionally determined term expires in 1981. Those who seek his ouster say they will not wait until 1981. Both the business leaders who oppose Somoza and the Sandinistas want him out now. The relatively moderate FAO (businessmen) seeks to make the change in a peaceful fashion...The Sandinistas seek to gain control through an armed uprising....

The view of the capitol city of Managua from the top floor of the Hotel International results in an eerie feeling. An automobile tour of the city that was largely destroyed by an earthquake in December 1972 drives home the reality of emergency. When the scars of battle loom forth from formerly peaceful cities, the seriousness of the war in Nicaragua is revealed. Only then is the necessity of peace fully realized. The enormity of the problem transcends the borders of Nicaragua, Honduras, Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala and Panama. The entire hemisphere is involved, whether or not this realization has fully dawned upon the administration in Washington.

So far as the United States is concerned, some very important facts should be reviewed and restated:

- * Anastasio Somoza is a graduate of the U.S. Military Academy at West Point.
- * He is strongly anti-communist.
- * He is pro-United States and long has been a spokesman for U.S. policy in Latin America.

These factors have contributed greatly to the difficult position in which Somoza finds himself. What a former official of Nicaragua said may well be true: "Somoza is the last U.S. Marine, and the Sandinistas want him dead."

Again, this is not a matter of civil strife in Nicaragua. It's an International war. The United States can find a workable solution or can stand by and watch this part of the non-communist world disappear. Indeed, as Sandinista leader Tomas Borge Martinez stated, the entire continent could be at stake.

(End of extended quotations from an article by Jack Cox, appearing originally in the Houston Chronicle.)

* * * * *

Somoza, "the last U.S. Marine," still tries to be loyal to the United States, blames his troubles on an international conspiracy against Nicaragua by Costa Rica, Panama, Colombia, Venezuela and Jamaica; countries with governments that are pro-Castro and are aiding the Sandinistas. But the international conspiracy against Somoza is more widespread than the Nicaraguan President can admit publicly. A key is found in the facts that the United States has cut off all military aid to Nicaragua, and that the Soviet Union is supplying arms and ammunition to the guerrillas opposing the Nicaraguan government. Does this not have the smell of a far greater conspiracy than Somoza imagines? We might recall the U.S. State Department's action in turning Angola over to the Communists, In President Carter's remarks that the Shah of Iran had a very doubtful future as head of his country, and the U.S. "advice" to the Shah about the necessity of leaving Iran--by such action removing all obstacles to the potential takeover of oil-rich Iran by the Communists. Then there is the determination of the U.S. State Department to destroy any kind of a government that Ian Smith might establish in Rhodesia, thus turning that country over to the Communist-led-and-supplied terrorists. And, latest bit of treachery: the sellout of Taiwan and the embracing of Red China. Said Senator Goldwater, "I have no idea what motivated him (Carter) other than the Trilateral Commission -- composed of bankers in this country and others who want to expand big business."

Look at the record since the Trilateralists took over the White House. (1) B-1 Bomber rejected. (2) Neutron bomb tabled. (3) South Korean defenses reduced. (4) Communist takeover of Angola, Ethiopia, South Yemen, Afghanistan, Horn of Africa, etc. (5) Continued U.S. pressure against Rhodesia & South Africa. (6) Giveaway of U.S. Canal in Panama. (7) Betrayal of Taiwan and embracing of Communist China. (8) Arrangements for removal of Somoza and "the fall of Nicaragua into Communist hands without it being made apparent that the nation was pushed." Does this continued accomodation of Communism mean the total loss of liberty for all America and all the world? Your answer could count!

Year Twenty-Six.....Number Three.....January 19, 1979

THE OMINOUS NINETY-SIXTH

On January 15, 1979, the 96th Congress of the United States of America was convened at high noon, and Jimmy Carter's temporary and unimpeded dictatorship was ended - at least in theory if not in fact. This 96th Congress could be one of the greatest since the First, which added the Bill of Rights to the Constitution. It could reaffirm and restore that Bill of Rights. It could nullify the Canal treaty with Panama. It could refuse to confirm the illegal deal Carter made with Red China. It could demand a balanced budget. It could revoke the Federal Reserve Act and take back the power to regulate the value of money. Any one of these would make a good start.

But it seems obvious that the 96th Congress will do none of these things. At its opening session, one Congressman mildly bemoaned Carter's act of treason in defying Congressional mandate, betraying Taiwan, and embracing Red China; but he admitted these things had been done, could not be undone, and all that Congress can do now is try to protect the interests of the businessmen who still trade with Taiwan. One of the very first bills to be introduced in the House was by Mr. Murphy of New York: Panama Canal Treaty Implementation legislation. He pointed out that the treaty arrangements don't enter into force until Oct. 1, 1979; won't enter into force at all unless the implementing legislation and an appropriations bill are passed before then. We can still hope that Congress will refuse to approve the payment of billions of American tax dollars to a Marxist dictator for taking over the Canal Zone in Panama.

Further indication of what we may expect of this 96th: One of the first pieces of important legislation to be introduced in the House was H.R. 21, the Health Security Act of 1979, the new name of the nationalized medical program. Introduced by Rep. Corman of California and co-sponsored by 24 other members of the House, it is to be "financed by a combination of employer-employee payroll taxes and general revenues" and there is to be "universal and mandatory coverage." The point is made that "the health security program is not a national health service in which the Government owns the facilities and employs the personnel." Instead, it will follow the lines laid down for that peculiar style of Corporate Socialism being installed in the United States: the management will be by private citizens, privately or self-employed doctors will perform the services; but both employers and employees will be under the direct supervision and control of Federal Bureaucrats.

As for other phases of congressional action that may be expected of the 96th, Sen. Helms made a little speech on the opening day of the session and he said in part: "The new Congress will have to confront major economic problems. This Congress will almost surely be faced with the problem of a recession... will, in all likelihood, be asked to vote on the question of mandatory wage and price controls. I fear that those in Congress who would rather trust the wisdom of bureaucrats to control the marketplace will urge on this Nation, a kind of dictatorial regulation of the economy... in an attempt to control inflation... Mr. President, the American people have made it clear for a number of years now that they consider inflation to be the Nation's No. 1 domestic problem. The orthodox Keynesians in our midst have chosen ... to publicly attack the symptoms of inflation: increases in the price level, have ignored its causes; inordinate increases in the money supply caused by massive Federal deficits.

Mr. President, the 96th Congress has been given certain instructions by the American people...Americans have said that they do not want inflation, that they do want a balanced budget, that they do not want massive regulation. But I think it is that they want government to get off their backs. The 96th Congress has an opportunity for innovation in the best sense. Let the 96th Congress begin a trend toward reliance on the free market. Let the 96th Congress adopt a credo: In all that the people can individually do for themselves, government ought not to interfere. Lincoln said it in 1854. It is no less true today."

Trouble is, when Lincoln said those words there was no H.E.W. There were no Departments of Agriculture, Commerce, Labor, HUD, Transportation, or Energy. There was no Federal Reserve Corporation, and the public debt at SCHOOL LOBBY SELLOUT TO IRS!

"Certain Washington lobbyists, claiming to represent American private school education, are cooperating with the IRS to promulgate final regulations impairing the tax-exempt status of private schools. Your local private school or church may unwittingly be allowing itself to be counted in support of these lobbyists!" So says a Special Alert which Jo Ann Gasper, editor of The Right Woman, has sent her readers. She continues:

"The professional special-interest lobby group that is leading this move is the Council for American Private Education. It is my understanding, from direct conversation with the leader of this group, that they do not have any individual schools as members; instead, it is a group of organizations, each one having schools or perhaps organizations of schools as members. In short, this Council is a convenient way for the member organizations (not the schools themselves) to talk over common problems. By no stretch of the imagination has it ever been authorized to deal with the federal government on behalf of schools. Nevertheless, the Council is representing itself as speaking for 90% of all private schools in the United States. The IRS, in a classic example of divide and conquer, has agreed to enter into a separate peace with the Council and such of its members as will go along! I regret to report that, according to my information, at least three members of the organization have so agreed and are actually involved in the face-to-face bargaining for exemptions for themselves. These are the Missouri Synod of the Lutheran Church, the Hebrew Day Schools, and Christian Schools International. The Catholic schools are said to be waiting for the conclusion of this bargain to negotiate their own surrender....

...These professional special-interest lobbyists, whose one concern is to 'get along' with the Washington Establishment, must not be permitted to spread the self-serving fiction that they are authorized to negotiate on behalf of nearly all private schools. I urge you to have your own school or church write to the IRS and to your Congressional Representative and Senators to deny that the Council on American Private Education represents you, your church, or your school in these bargains. It would also be opportune for copies of such letters to be sent to Hon. Sam Gibbons and Hon. Phil Crane (respectively, Chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Ways & Means), both in care of the U.S. House of Representatives, Washington, D.C. 20515, renewing your urgent request that early Congressional oversight hearings be convened, regardless of what the IRS cooks up with professional, Washington-headquartered, special-interest lobbyists....

....It is crucially important that the legitimacy of these negotiations be put to doubt BEFORE THE FINAL DEAL IS ANNOUNCED!!"

the end of the War Between the States was less than $3 billion. And Carpet-baggers, Copperheads and Scalawags to the contrary notwithstanding, there was no Regional Governance, no Revenue Sharing, none of those things that today require millions of bureaucrats to administer. And because he acted on his beliefs, Lincoln was assassinated. We see little such dedication today.

Then there is the foreign mess that we are in today as a Nation because previous Congresses have failed to do their Constitutionally-demanded duty regarding foreign affairs, and have permitted a private cabal composed of members of private cliques such as the CFR and the TLC to do as it will in all external matters. As a result, since Trilateralist mouthpiece Carter gained the Presidency, International Communism has been aided in taking over more and more of the world, and presently is about to gain control over the producing and exporting of the oil of the Middle East. Kenneth L. Adelman was once an assistant to the Secretary of Defense, served in Africa from 1972 to 1975, is presently with the Stanford Research Institute. He wrote an article appearing in the January 4th Wall Street Journal. Here are quotes:

"A curious silence followed a most remarkable feat: the sudden, near doubling of formal Soviet treaties with Third World states. In short order, Afghanistan, Ethiopia, and Vietnam concluded 20-year 'friendship and cooperation' treaties, each adorned with a military clause. The Communist initiates of Mozambique and Angola signed up a few years back, following non-communist Iraq and India. Soviet aggrandisement in the Third World, once provoking a shrill cry of impending peril in the West, is now greeted with a collective yawn."

Mr. Adelman might have added that the U.S. State Department is even aiding in the Communist attempt to conquer Rhodesia, Southwest Africa, and the Republic of South Africa. And he might have mentioned the Carter-aided capitulation of the strategically important Nation of Iran, better known historically and Biblically by the name of Persia. Never has so much been written about a national crisis with so few of the really important facts being mentioned. Much is said of the plight of the Shah, of the violence, of American military and industrial commitments in Iran. But nobody in high place seems willing to admit that when the Communists gain control of Persia they will have closed a pincer that will cut off vital oil shipments from the Middle East to Europe, Asia, the Americas, even to Israel; and the results could be fatal to Industrial Europe, Japan and the United States.

Back when Russia and Somalia were on the best of terms, Leonid Brezhnev of Russia said to President Siad Barre of Somalia: "Persia is proving a hard nut to crack, but we are working on it and may succeed sooner than anyone suspects." Since the coup in Afghanistan, Russian tanks are within 300 miles of the Eastern bank of the Strait of Hormoz. Since the takeover of South Yemen Russians, East Germans and Cubans are within 500 miles of the Western bank of the Strait of Hormoz, the Strait which controls the entrance to the Persian Gulf, a waterway vital to the transportation of Mideast oil. With the impending coup in Iran, the Persian Gulf will be locked and the USSR will have the key. Likewise the Red Sea, where Communist-controlled Ethiopia and South Yemen can seal the Gulf of Aden, a possible alternate route via the Suez Canal.

So, while the question of whether the Shah can ever return to the throne, or whether a stable government can be established may be of great importance to the "Seven Sisters" (British Petroleum, Royal Dutch Shell, Texaco, Mobil, Standard of California, Gulf and Exxon), of far greater importance to consumers and producers of the world (sans multinationals) is whether and when the USSR and Persia will sign a "friendship and cooperation" treaty that will be "adorned with a military clause." The answer to this question lies with: The Ayatollah ("Chosen of Allah), a fanatical Moslem priest who is subsidized and supported by the Iranian Tudeh (Communist) Party, as well as by the Communist overlords of Libya, Iraq, Russia and France. It seems almost inevitable that there will be Communist domination on this crossroads between the Occident and the Orient; it also seems that the subrosa government which rules the West has given its advice and consent to such an arrangement.

Considering all of these things, unless it takes a stand, the 96th could be our last elected Congress. The moment when a stand might have been taken may have passed, unrecognized.

ERA CAMPAIGN INTENSIFIES. UPI has just announced (1/20/79) that the Equal Rights Amendment "could be ratified this year if it survives critical votes in Illinois and Florida, according to a nationwide survey of UPI bureaus in the key states. Although ERA flunked its first two tests in Nevada and Virginia, supporters now see a strategy that will bring ratification from the three states needed to make it part of the Constitution."

The UPI survey shows Florida and Illinois as hopeful targets for passage of ERA this year. Said to be hopeless are Georgia, Missouri, Mississippi, Arizona, Arkansas, Alabama and Utah. That, says UPI, leaves the four states --South Carolina, North Carolina, Louisiana and Oklahoma as possibles with "North Carolina the best shot of the four." So, pro-ERA forces are concentrating on Florida, Illinois and North Carolina.

The "strategy that will bring ratification" is a reference to President Carter's orders to all administrative departments and agencies to utilize Regional Government personnel and have them "make the most of public appearance opportunities to demonstrate the Administration's commitment to ERA...and to include in public speeches, where appropriate, language emphasizing the importance of the Equal Rights Amendment, and to assure that similar language be included in speeches made by officials of their agency or department." One Regional Director, Manuel Lopez, Jr., of the Lower Colorado Regional Office in Boulder City, Nevada, sent out this order to the 100 managers and supervisors in his region, adding that ERA is "not to be considered a partisan issue but one which federal employees are now obliged to support."

On the more optimistic side, however, the State Court of Appeal in Sacramento, California ruled that the Status of Women Commission (SOW) cannot expend tax funds to propagandize the controversial Equal Rights Amendment. "As a State Agency supported by public funds," the ruling stated, "they cannot advocate their favored position on any issue or for any candidate, as such. So long as they are an arm of the state government they must maintain a position of neutrality and impartiality." (Mr. & Mrs. Jimmy Carter, please copy).

Although this decision applies to California only it is a landmark decision that spells the end of government propaganda aimed at the public, protects citizens from government sales pitches on controversial issues, and leaves the debate of political issues to the people, without pressure from spokesmen who are subsidized with tax money. As we said, the ruling applies to only one State, but it is a landmark that could turn into a landslide.

HOW FIRM THESE FOUNDATIONS?

Lest we forget: All United States senators and representatives, all members of the State legislatures, all executive and judicial officers of these United States and of the several States are bound by oath to support the Constitution of the United States of America. This Constitution is the very foundation upon which our representative form of government was built. More precisely, our foundation was laid upon the Rock which is the Word of God; and the cornerstone of our civil foundation was laid at Plymouth Rock, where the Mayflower Compact became the forerunner of the Constitution. Upon what is signified by these two, the spiritual Rock and the natural rock, was built that foundation of government which is the Constitution, bulwarked by its Bill of Rights.

When indifference or disregard of the Constitution involves the giving of aid and comfort to an enemy of the United States, such action is called treason. In this sense, giving aid and comfort to the government of the Peoples Republic China--against which we fought directly in Korea and indirectly in Vietnam--could be called treason.

Having violated the Constitution, our government's foundation, the President of the United States now calls for the building of a new foundation; one which disregards our Constitution as the supreme law of the land and establishes in its place a New World Order, a form of World Government in which we, as a Nation, will have become equal partners with the USSR, PRC, Western Europe and Japan. In his alleged State of the Union address of January 23, 1979, Jimmy Carter said:

"We are building a new foundation for a peaceful and prosperous world. Our old foundations have served us well. But the problems we face today are different in nature from those that confronted earlier generations of Americans. They are more subtle, more complex, more interrelated....now we must build a new and firmer foundation for the future--for a sounder economy, for a more effective government, for political trust, and for a stable peace." The President itemized the units of this "New Foundation....for a government that works and that works for the people." To wit:

1. "The foundation for a stable world of both diversity and peace."
2. "The foundation for confidence in our economic system."
3. "A new and firm foundation for a stable world community."
4. "The foundation for truly global cooperation which excludes no nation."

This to include both Soviet Russia and Communist China.

This New Foundation is not merely an American foundation; it is universal in scope, a world foundation. He reiterated and emphasized: "The new foundation I have discussed tonight can help us build a nation--and a world--where every child is nurtured and can look to the future with hope--where all people have enough to eat, a decent home, and protection from disease. It can help us build a nation and a world where all people are free to seek the truth and to add to human understanding, so that all of us may live our lives in peace. Tonight I ask you to join me in building that new foundation--a better foundation--for our country and our world." (Underlining added for emphasis).

"We have no desire to be the world's policeman," said Carter. "America does want to be the world's peacemaker"...and the world's food caterer, doctor, welfare provider, educator, and in partnership with Communism, the world's Big Brother as in the late George Orwell's "1984."

In the domestic part of his message, Carter plugged for a national health program, improved labor laws, ratification of the proposed Equal Rights Amendment, etc. But he said not one word about energy or an energy crisis which, such a short time ago, he called "the moral equivalent of war." A very good reason exists for his failure to remind the world once again of an energy crisis: This is one of Carter's lies that has been thoroughly exposed. The world now knows that there never was a real energy crisis. As Taylor Caldwell said in a local interview January 22, 1979: "The energy crisis is manufactured... There's no such thing. We are selling oil to Japan. Mexico is floating in oil, and there's the Alaska pipeline that nobody talks about any more. A Texas oil man once told me the government made them cap 50 percent of their wells.... 'Shor-tee-juz,' as Mrs. Roosevelt used to call it. Shor-tee-juz! Merely an excuse for war. They're getting us ready for another war to get us out of the depression."

The author who is so adept at clothing historical facts in the cloak of fiction might have added that an oil shortage was the basis for Carter's "moral equivalent of war" fabrication. Even as he said it, and local filling stations were finding it impossible to obtain sufficient supplies, tanks and oil tankers were filled to the brim with oil. And nothing has ever been published about the fact that years before Jimmy Carter made his treasonous Dec. 15th recognition of Red China announcement, Rockefeller interests were making plans to tap the vast oil reserves off the coast of mainland China. The following article from the Stockholm Affarsvarlden (never carried by American wire services) tells the story, and we quote:

"China's offshore oil potential keeps growing, perhaps not as rapidly as that of Mexico, but quite dramatically. Recent discoveries in the Yellow Sea (Pohia Bay) and in the South China Sea (in the area of the Pearl River delta) are of such magnitude that experts in the West and in Japan now put China ahead of the Soviet Union in known oil reserves: 9 to 20 billion tons (68 to 150 billion barrels), as against 78 billion barrels of probable Soviet reserves. Furthermore, while most of the Soviet reserves are locked under the tundra of Yakutia and Northwestern Siberia and would require many thousand miles of pipeline, most Chinese oil lies under shallow, warm waters -- on tap, so to speak." (unquote).

While Carter's Dec. 15th betrayal of Taiwan took most Americans by surprise the oil cartelists (and other multinational interests such as Coca Cola), were years ahead of the announcement. An exclusive story in Spotlight of 1/22/79 reveals that before Carter's announcement a huge oil-drilling platform was on its way to China. Manufactured in May 1978, it left the U.S. Dec. 2nd on the heavy-lift motor vessel "Trifels," passed through the Panama Canal Dec. 17, arrived in Red China Jan. 12. As Spotlight declares: "The construction and transportation of an oil well drilling platform is a huge undertaking involving a great deal of time in planning as well as a great deal of money. It is evident from this incident that the Rockefeller oil companies' decision to drill for oil in China's offshore waters, has been in the works for years." The article also states that David Rockefeller visited Red China in January, 1971 .. before the infamous ping-pong diplomacy began, and before Henry Kissinger visited Peking to set up the visit of Richard Nixon to Red China. "The opening of Red China to exploitation of its oil by multinational Rockefeller interests," says Spotlight, "clearly makes Carter's statement on April 18, 1977 of an 'energy shortage' to be deliberately misleading." And finally, if there is any such oil shortage in the United States, how does one account for the U.S. State Department announcement of 1/25/79 that we are going to ship 200,000 barrels of oil to Iran because that oil-rich country's oil-field workers are on strike?

Multinationals other than Rockefeller's oil interests also were doing business with Red China long before Carter's perfidy of Dec. 15th; which proves they were violating what's left of the "trading with the enemy" act. All such multinationals boast executive officers who are members of the Council on Foreign Relations, the Trilateral Commission, the Bilderberger Group, or other internationalist organizations or think tanks. Included in this category: Coca Cola, U.S. Steel, Phillips Petroleum, Bethlehem Steel, and the Big Banks: Citibank, Chase Manhattan, Manufacturers Hanover, Chemical, Morgan Guaranty. Also, borrowing arrangements had been concluded with the Export-Import Bank, which uses taxpayers' money to make low-interest (or no-interest) loans to Red China and other industrially underdeveloped countries which the multinationals want to develop for their profit at taxpayers' expense.

The control which the subrosa government has over the U.S. communications media is exemplified by the fact that these various deals with Red China some of which began as much as eight years ago, were kept from the public all that time until after Carter's December 15th shocker. Not until December 18th did a story appear in the New York Times, datelined Hong Kong, announcing:

"China will consider a long-term trade agreement with the United States now that relations between the two countries are to be formalized... It (Red China) also plans to accept direct foreign investment from overseas." (Peking agencies have been accepting foreign investments via the Hong Kong Banking and Investment Co., Ltd. for many years-Ed.)

Senator Goldwater indicated that the Trilateral Commission was responsible for the sudden and unexpected recognition of the government of the PRC when he filed suit against President Carter because of the latter's betrayal of Taiwan. Incidentally, Goldwater is not alone in that lawsuit which has been filed against Carter. With him are Senators Jake Garn, Orrin Hatch, George Humphrey (of New Hampshire and no relation to the late Hubert Humphrey of Minnesota), Strom Thurmond, Jesse Helms; and Representatives Robert Bauman, Steve Symms, Larry McDonald, Robert Daniels, Jr., Bon Stump, Eldon Rudd, Robert Dornan, and John Ashbrook (put them all on your patriots honor role). I letter from Sen. Gordon Humphrey reads in part: "Our treaty with the Republic of China (Taiwan) was approved and voted on by more than two-thirds of the U.S. Senate. Our lawsuit says the President cannot, on his own, just tear up treaties which are approved by the Senate.... I feel ashamed.... We broke our word again. First, we abandoned the Vietnamese. Then we tell the Koreans we are pulling out. And now we break our word to the people of Taiwan, and we give their ambassador just two weeks to pack his bags and get out. All this so we can cozy up to Red China, a government that has murdered anywhere from 35 to 65 million of her own citizens. A government that brainwashed our prisoners of war in Korea. We must win this court case to preserve our defense treaty with Taiwan. If we don't, what country will ever again trust us? What country will ever again stand by us as an ally?"

For whatever it may be worth to the promoters of this "New Foundation," it is noteworthy that Thomas Jefferson and the Nation's first Senators agreed with Barry Goldwater and his Congressional backers in this Constitutional debate about whether a President has the power to nullify a treaty without the advice and consent of the Senate. When he was Vice President, Jefferson found it to be a part of his duties to draw up some rules of the Senate. One of them read:

"Treaties being declared equally with the laws of the United States to be the Supreme Law of the Land, it is understood that an act of the legislature alone can declare them infringed or rescinded." Jefferson was right then. If Goldwater is right now, and he certainly should be, then President Carter acted unlawfully and had no authority to rescind the defense treaty with Taiwan. We can only pray that the present Supreme Court still honors our old, traditional foundation.

In that part of his appeal for 'New Foundations' dealing with foreign policy, Carter spent most of his time trying to justify his actions in paying a Communist dictator to take the American Canal in Panama, in extending full diplomatic relations to Communist China, and in promoting greater "cooperation with the Soviet Union." About ten minutes of his thirty-minute address was devoted to plugging for Senate ratification of the upcoming SALT agreement. Carter suggested that we are getting along very well with Japan and Western Europe. Now we must concentrate on getting along with Soviet Russia and the Peoples Republic of China. We must strive to make them equal partners in a New World community. This is exactly the same line that the Rockefeller employee, Henry Kissinger, sold to Richard Nixon eight years ago. At that time Nixon gave the following political description of the coming New World Order (Nixon's voice, Kissinger's words, Rockefeller's plan):

"I think it will be a safer world and a better world if we have a strong, healthy United States, Europe, Soviet Union, China, Japan, each balancing the other, not playing one against the other, an even balance." (Time magazine, January 3, 1972).

Fine Nations equally balanced! No single nation ever to be stronger than any of the other four! George Orwell predicted this kind of a World Order, and Jimmy Carter is promoting it! There is this difference: Orwell writing in 1948 saw three Superpowers (Oceania, Eurasia and Eastasia) ruling the world and existing in a state of perpetual war to ensure perpetual peace. Thirty years later Kissinger gave up the Three Superpowers idea (USA, USSR, and PRC) favoring Five Superpowers (USA, USSR, PRC, Japan and Western Europe), existing in a state of perpetual war to ensure perpetual peace! That Zbigniew Brzezinski replaced Henry Kissinger and that Jimmy Carter was eventually to replace Richard Nixon (Ford was merely transitional) meant nothing, insofar as the "plan" was concerned. Just new names and new faces, new deceptions and eventually New Foundations.

We mentioned Taylor Caldwell and her comments concerning the manufactured energy crisis. Also asked for her appraisal of the State of the Union, she said: "The country is on its way to despotism. As Aristotle said, republics decline into democracies and democracies into despotism. Our government is already very despotic. The situation is not much different than the decline of Rome. Cicero tried to save Rome. It was hopeless. They'd gone too far. And we've gone too far now to ever turn back. Unfortunately, we have no Cicero event to warn us."

She may be right in that we've gone too far to turn back. However, it took the fall of Rome to construct a Christian civilization. In 1776 Americans saw but little hope because King George had gone too far. But it took such a situation to cause the construction of a sovereign, independent, representative Republic. There must be destruction before there can be Christian reconstruction. Ours not to despair, but to prepare.

WAR ON THE FAMILY

Anyone familiar with Christian Scripture will understand that the family was instituted by God to be a form of government in a world populated by fallen men. The Biblical plan provides that it is in the family that man first learns of God, of law, and of self-government. It is in the family that man receives his basic education, for the first formative years are the crucial years in the development of character. Hence, the family, according to God's plan, is the unit upon which society is built, upon which civilizations are formed and governments instituted among men.

When the authority of the father as head of the family is destroyed, when the mother assumes the role of the father or declares herself "liberated" from the role of wife and mother, or when the child is separated from the confines of the family; then the family is reduced to an institution without function, other than that of the procreation of offspring. And modern science is taking care of that through the production of "test-tube" babies. Interestingly, we are told that at a recent meeting at Illinois State University, national lesbian leaders issued a plea for 500,000 test-tube babies for female homosexuals. A reporter for the New York News Syndicate quoted a lesbian leader as saying: "All lesbians will be asked to contribute to their own salvation, and to that of those who follow, by having a test-tube baby... We are not trying to put up a master race of women; we are merely trying to win a few political elections."

When the family is destroyed, anarchy results. And where there is anarchy, totalitarianism must follow. Only absolute, dictatorial control can keep down the violence and terrorism that accompanies anarchy. Anyone reading a newspaper or listening to a newscast will know that anarchy is becoming both rampant and uncontrolled in the United States. Think of the recent cases of arson in which men, women and children have been burned to death. Think of a 17-year-old girl skynapping an airplane in an attempt to get her and her mother's lover out of prison. Consider the act of a 16-year-old girl who opens fire on young children in a school yard, killing the school principal, the janitor, and killing or wounding a number of children and a policeman...all because, she said, Monday was a dull day and she wanted to liven it up.

Alarming is the epidemic of anarchy among homosexuals who were considered to be "good citizens and community leaders" before being apprehended and exposed. A "nice man with a pleasant smile" engaged in at least 32 homosexual murders of teen-age boys before being caught. Because of the recent outrage caused by homosexual murders, an Associated Press reporter compiled, and documented, a few of the past, most bestial, homosexual murders. There was the case of Edward Gein, a Wisconsin farmer whom his neighbors remembered because of his ready smile. A pervert, he murdered 15 women before authorities caught him. There was Elmer Henley, convicted of the killing of six of the 27 whom he homosexually tortured and then slew them. There was a homo named Patrick Wayne Kearney who confessed to the killing of 32 men, many of whose dismembered remains were found dumped in trash cans along Southern California highways. In the past two weeks in our own Palm Beach area there have been at least three homosexual murders. The head, arms and legs of one victim were found in trash cans throughout the area, the torso still missing at this writing. In two other homosexual murders the victims had been tied down in their own beds and then stabbed to death. These are not isolated cases oc-curing in just this one area; similar homosexual atrocities are being reported from many parts of the Nation. Topping them all, of course, was the case of Jim Jones, recipient of flowery letters of support from many liberal leaders, including the Vice-President of the United States and the wife of the President of the United States. Jones was a Communist who pretended to be a Christian, who engaged in homosexual acts and demanded the commission of various acts of sexual perversion by his followers. Jones is said to have reached the climax of his criminality by ordering over a thousand followers to commit suicide and by murdering of all those refusing to obey him. Dr. Peter Beter insists, however, that it was not Jim Jones who died of a bullet wound in Jonestown but a "look-alike" who took his place while he, Jones, left Guyana and went to the Soviet Union where he is being prepared for further acts of wholesale violence. Whether this is true, we have no way of knowing. But it is possible.

These various and uncontrolled acts of violence on the part of homosexuals, individual and organized terrorists, teen-age criminals, perverts and devil-possessed persons are a direct result of the spirit of anarchy that takes over when the ordained role of the family "as a form of government" is weakened or destroyed. Those who would destroy the family in this respect, know that the "liberation" of women and children would "get the job done." Hence, as early as 1959 the United Nations General Assembly passed a declaration called the "Declaration of the Rights of the Child." This was a revolutionary document, stating in part that "The child needs special safeguards and care...including legal protection...social security...education which shall be free and compulsory...protection from religious and any other form of discrimination..He shall be brought up in a spirit of understanding, tolerance, friendship among peoples, peace and universal brotherhood and in full consciousness that his energy and talents should be devoted to his fellow men...."

This declaration was so revolutionary in character that it was set aside, was not acted upon for nearly two decades. Instead, the Women's Liberation Crusade was inaugurated. The UN declared 1975 to be International Women's Year and designated 1976-1985 as International Women's Decade. Then the UN followed up by declaring 1979 to be International Year of the Child, and naming UNICEF as the agency in charge of implementation. These declarations were introduced by a Communist womens group called The International Federation of Democratic Women (WIDF), which headquarters in Germany, has branches in Poland, Czechoslovakia and all other Communist-dominated countries. It is the claim of WIDF that children have already been "liberated" in Communist countries, and that children must also be "liberated" in the United States and in other Western countries. Following the lead of WIDF and UN, an executive order was signed by President Carter, designating 1979 as the International Year of the Child and appointing a 25-member Commission, the "chairperson" of which is Mrs. Andrew Young, to "coordinate its efforts with local, State, national and international organizations including the United Nations Childrens Fund (UNICEF)." The Commission shall "foster within the United States a better understanding of the special needs of the child...health, education, social environment, physical and emotional development, and legal rights and needs of children that are unique to children." At the end of the year the commission is to "make recommendations to the President on national policies for improving the well-being of children", etc.

President Carter's was not the first such commission on children, however. There was that Joint Committee on the Mental Health of Children in 1970, followed by the White House Conference on Children that same year. As a result of these conferences, a child-development bill was introduced in Congress in 1971. It passed the House and Senate but was vetoed by President Nixon, who said: "To adopt the bill would commit the vast authority of the national government to the side of communal approaches to child rearing." Then came a 1975 version of the same bill, this time known as the Mondale-Brademas Child and Family Services Act of 1975. This would have created a new federal agency within HEW, called the Office of Child and Family Services, and a nation-wide network of federally controlled day-care centers would have been established. The bill declared that as a matter of children's rights the government must exert control over the family; the child must be placed in the care of the state, not the parents; and it inferred that the "communal" forms of child-rearing (as in Soviet Russia) have an "unquestionable" superiority over all other forms. This bill was also defeated, but the Early Child Development supporters had only begun. They appealed to the White House and President Carter's executive order naming 1979 as the International Year of the Child. This was followed by another executive order calling for a 1980 White House Conference on Children. Also, the White House Conference on Families which was originally scheduled for this year, was postponed until 1981, after the Conference on Children has been concluded.

Eminent author and Christian patriot Pat Brooks, in a column dealing with the "war on the family," confirms much of what we have written and adds: "One of the more sinister socialist plots for their 'new world order' in 1979 is International Year of the Child, sponsored by the UN and its government and non-government cooperating organizations. This monster is designed to Sovietize life in the United States. President Carter signed an executive order April 4, 1978, implementing the plan. . . . Both International Year of the Child (IYC) and International Women's Year (IWY) are branches from the same root: the Women's International Democratic Federation (WIDF), a communist organization based in East Berlin. Its president, Freda Brown, stated the actual goals of IYC in the June 1978 World Marxist Review: to bring up children and youth in the spirit of internationalism. . . . In the U.S. the actual goal of IYC is the passage of the long rejected Mondale-Brademas Child and Family Services bill which would take control of children from parents, putting them into the hands of the federal bureaucracy. The American Federation of Teachers (AFL-CIO union) has published a large book to promote lobbying and enlist public support for this nightmare, which would put day care into the hands of the public school system. . . . If we do nothing to protest IYC and go along with all the propaganda we shall be fed on TV and press, we shall be nailing down the coffin on America's freedom and asking for divine judgment. Read what God says in Deuteronomy 6:4-7 about how parents should raise their children. If we allow our young ones to be captured by the humanists at age two, shall we be ready to stand before God and answer to Him for it? . . . Better get your battle plan made for the war on the family is raging. It's outcome should not be decided by those who yawn, turn up the TV, and go to sleep." (Unquote).

Note how the enemy's plan unfolds: Internal Revenue Service is taking steps to gain control over all private and church schools in the land, or close down all schools which will not agree to such bureaucratic control. Simultaneously State governments are cooperating with the Feds by insisting upon the State-licensing of all church schools. Such licensing automatically puts the school in the category of a State-controlled school. Meanwhile, via IYC, federally-controlled day care centers would be established throughout the Nation. Then the day care centers would be turned over to the federally-controlled public school system. Result: as Pat Brooks says, all children from the age of two will have been "captured by the humanists."

In regard to this licensing of church schools, it is important to know that an ad hoc group has been formed in Texas to fight this scheme. The committee is seeking legislation which will exempt church schools in that State from licensing requirements. Following is that group's "position statement":

"Our position rests on the conviction that Jesus Christ is Lord of all things. The Church is built on the authority of Jesus Christ and is accountable to Him only for the exercise of her mission. The Risen Christ commissioned the church to teach all nations; she has been commissioned to care for widows and orphans. Historically in Europe and Colonial America and early United States, the church has been recognized as the public teaching institution, and has cared for widows and orphans. Institutions and laws of our country are so formed as to acknowledge the independent jurisdiction of the Church over her institutions. The slogan 'separation of church and state' does not accurately describe our position but it is often so understood. Systematic unbelief logically and historically seeks to subject the Church and its functions to civil regulation. In conformity with the Lordship of Jesus Christ, we resist any and all attempts toward civil regulation of recognized Church activities." (Unquote).

In connection with this war on the family, it must be noted that something new has been added; something that could deceive millions of unsuspecting mothers and housewives. The women's libbers have decided to try and "clean up their act." There is a growing belief among lib leaders that their violent and radical statements and actions have shocked and repelled American women, many of whom might otherwise have been enlisted as supporters of ERA, IWY, IYC and other socialist movements. So, they're trying to take a milder approach. (We are reminded of the Bolsheviks who used bombs, arson and bullets in their earliest attempt to Communize the U.S. These actions repelled most Americans, so more modest methods were used. Now, of course, they use both.

The first real indication of a change in strategy by the libbers came with the firing of Bella Abzug by President Carter, whereupon most of the more radical and lesbian types resigned in protest. This supposed housecleaning gave the Women's Commission a more moderate image. Next step:

The publication read regularly by the largest number of shopping mothers and housewives whom the libbers hope to influence, is National Enquirer. So, in its Feb. 6 issue, page 37 is devoted to confessions on the part of lib leaders. Headlined "Women's Lib Leaders Admit They Were Wrong About Marriage, Men and Beauty," the article quotes Betty Friedan as saying that "The period of rejecting motherhood and housework" is over. Germaine Greer even rejected the title "Ms." Rep. Shirley Chisholm said "we were wrong to take the anti-male approach." And Jo-Anne Budde explained that the women's lib leadership had been wrong because it had "alienated the traditional housewife," and now "there has been a shift toward the home and the concerns of the family... and women's organizations are more interested in homemakers nowadays."

To paraphrase Scripture: Satan, who has been appearing as a roaring lesbian now will approach mothers and housewives as an angel of light. And unless women are warned of the deceit, the plan might work.

This war on the family makes one fact evident: either we will be ruled by God or we will be ruled by tyrants. And the choice should not be left to "those who yawn, turn up the TV and go to sleep."

ATTACK ON THE SECOND AMENDMENT

Recently 38 U.S. Congressmen, headed by Abner Mikva of Illinois, signed a joint letter addressed to President Carter calling upon him to back up a campaign promise he had made that there "will be significantly stronger gun control laws." At about the same time this letter was sent to the president, the Treasury Department asked for an additional $8 million to strengthen its gun registry division. Also, those regulations that Treasury tried to impose on all gun owners last year (narrowly defeated) are being rewritten and could become "administrative law" through publication as an "executive order." This is the method currently being used by IRS in its attempt to close down all private and church schools it cannot control.

It is a fact well documented in history that the disarming of the citizens of a country can be the first step in the creation of a police state. It also is true that when law-abiding citizens are denied guns, they are at the mercy of the law-breakers. Crooks and terrorists always manage to have arms since they scoff at any law or regulation which might interfere with the pursuit of their nefarious careers. As the saying goes, "Outlaw guns and only outlaws will have guns."

Owing to the increasing and insidious gun control propaganda, we have been requested to republish that classic defense of the Second Amendment given by former Los Angeles Chief of Police Edward M. Davis on April 22, 1975. This address was first published in Don Bell Reports of May 16, 1975. The original text has been slightly abridged because of space limitations. Otherwise, here is the address as originally delivered .

Our government was sired in a revolution which began on April 10, 1975, when a British expedition marched on Concord in an effort to seize colonial arms. So you see that gun control way back then started the American Revolution. . . . You have heard the voices of those who desire to limit your rights and install government control over your life. That concept has been the subject of debate ever since there was government. One of the very basic liberties that seems to raise serious conflict with some critics is the Second Amendment to the Bill of Rights. Let's digress for a moment and briefly trace the development of our Bill of Rights.

During the Constitutional Convention between 1787-89, our Founding Fathers sought to modify the Articles of Confederation. The convention was composed of two camps of political thinkers. One group, in favor of a strong centralized government, became known as the Federalists. The other group, desirous of states' rights and a loosely knit central government, were known as the Anti-federalists. About midway through the convention, a representative from the state of Virginia - a truly outstanding patriot - George Mason, recognized that the Constitution was deficient in providing for the rights of the people. He expressed a desire to preface the Constitution with a Bill of Rights. The motion was defeated. . . . Governor Randolph of Virginia, George Mason of Virginia and Elbridge Gerry of Massachusetts refused to sign the Constitution because of its serious deficiencies in freedom. They feared that its deficiencies in personal freedom would soon lead this nation to monarchy or tyranny. This great concern for liberty coupled with a desire for a Bill of Rights was nothing new to these men. Each state had its own Constitution and a majority of the states had their own Bill of Rights.

The first Bill of Rights, after considering the Magna Carta, was probably the English Bill of Rights. It was codified after the English Revolution of 1688, and after James II had fled his kingdom. Among the provisions of this bill was the right of the people to keep and bear arms...With the development of Colonial Charters and Laws in this country, many of these liberties contained in the English Bill of Rights became a part of our law... So when George Mason asked the Constitutional Convention to consider a Bill of Rights, his request was made as a result of long-standing practice for the insurance of freedom. ...When the work of the convention had concluded and the representatives left for their home states for the purpose of seeking ratification of this document, the fate of the Constitution was in serious jeopardy. The most crucial State in the ratification contest was Virginia. It was at that time the largest and most important State. The debates in Virginia's State Convention lasted a month. The most profound and most glorious oratory for individual rights was delivered by Patrick Henry and supported by such men as George Mason. Mason expressed a fear that the new government's standing army, like the British Regulars, might invade the State and keep the people under martial law. Henry thought that the new government might exercise its power "oppressively" and cautioned about enslaving the people. He asked if the other members were able to recall that France, Spain, Germany, Turkey and other countries were enslaved by their own people...The convention finally adopted 20 provisions for a Bill of Rights. These provisions were later used by Madison in the (United States) Congress. In that first Congress, the issue of a Bill of Rights was a very crucial concern...210 different amendments to the Constitution were proposed by eight States. This was finally refined to 22 amendments and 14 were included in Madison's recommendations to Congress...Ten amendments were finally adopted.

The purpose of our Bill of Rights was perhaps best summed up in the House: "These are essential and unalienable rights of the people, designed to protect them from maladministration."

Let's look at the second provision of the Bill of Rights: "A well regulated militia being necessary to the security of a free state, the right of the people to keep and bear arms shall not be infringed." When Madison presented that article it read: "The right of the people to keep and bear arms shall not be infringed; a well regulated militia being the best security of a free country; but no person religiously scrupulous of bearing arms shall be compelled to render military service in person." After some debate on the "religiously scrupulous" portion of this provision the Article came out in final form as we have it today.

Now let's tear this Article apart and try to define it. The first part says, "A well regulated militia." Does that mean an army? Does that mean a National Guard? When you read the debates on these meetings the answer is definitely no. The framers of this provision believed that standing armies were a threat to peace and liberty. Madison, Mason and Henry spoke at great lengths about the problems of a standing army ruling the people or supporting a tyrant. So, what was the militia? Well, according to the framers of the Constitution, and this is supported by the dictionaries of that era, it was individual free men, like you and me, who would leave their usual occupations to fight for the town or the State or the government. The officers of the old militia units were often prominent businessmen or statesmen. The soldiers were just workers, like you and me, lovers of liberty....Okay, we are not talking about any army. We are talking about free men willing to fight.

The second half of this amendment reads: "being necessary to the security of a free state." These amendments were designed to protect the people against the tyranny of central government. They were concerned about their ability to protect themselves, their families, and their friends from invasion both without and within. Is the danger any less today? I think not...look at the crime statistics...I can tell you that today's law enforcement cannot protect you. When you call, do the police immediately appear? I don't think that there is any town that, when you call, the policeman appears like a genie. In order to insure your protection, we would have to hire ten times as many policemen-- as they do in many foreign countries. The costs for such an increase would be prohibitive. So, if the law enforcement agencies can't insure your protection and the protection of your family from hoodlums, it becomes your responsibility. When and if we arrive at a point in time where all the criminals are properly processed through the criminal justice system - 'properly' meaning that the criminal no longer presents a threat to the community - and I (as a police chief) am able to insure your protection, then you may want to give up your gun. However, I don't see that secure existence ever presenting itself....

...I failed to mention the terrorists. Groups like the SLA and the Western Underground could pose a threat to you. If the police and the National Guard are busy battling these terrorists, who is going to protect your home and your family? Again, it comes down to the ability of the individual to provide for his own self-protection.

The final part of this (Second) Amendment states: "The right of the people to keep and bear arms shall not be infringed." According to Webster's New College Dictionary, the word "infringe" means to "defeat, frustrate, violate, or transgress." The final part of the Amendment, therefore, seems to indicate that "the right of the people to bear arms shall not be violated or frustrated or defeated..."

Mason, Henry, Jefferson and other true patriots had some specific protections in mind when they developed our Bill of Rights. The need for liberties has not become less in our brief 200 year history. The fact that this Amendment was placed second in our Bill of Rights has special significance. Members of the House of Representatives at our First Congress were asked, after debating the amendments, to arrange them in proper order. The Bill of Rights starts with Freedom of Speech, Religion, Press and Assemblage and concludes with an admonition prohibiting the Government from taking any powers not expressly granted in the Constitution. It's interesting to note that the Right to Keep and Bear Arms was placed second after the Right of Free Speech and Religion....

Let's discuss the thinking and reasoning behind those who desire to compromise our liberties. They cite the misuse of guns as a reason for their abolition. They point out that a certain percentage of all robberies, murders and assaults are accomplished with firearms. What they seem to overlook is the fact that we are talking about a very small percentage of people. Would it be fair to sanction 99-plus percent of the people in an effort to control one-tenth of one percent of the population? If such a sanction were imposed on the populace would it work? Would it be effective? Would it be a viable alternative? Most emphatically no. Tim Sullivan gave New York one of the strictest gun laws in this country and it has done little to help New York. Criminals still use guns in New York. As a matter of fact, New York and several other States with strict gun control laws have distinguished themselves with their high crime rate. ...You see, when a criminal makes up his mind to violate one law, like robbery, the violation of another law is a very small thing. A professional criminal - one who makes a living by violating the law - doesn't give a thought about violating society's rules. He has his own rules. So, gun laws like those in New York restrict the law-abiding citizen and not the criminal.

Alan S. Krug, an economist formerly with Pennsylvania State University, completed a comparison study of jurisdictions with strong gun laws compared to those with lenient laws. He found that firearms are involved in only three percent of all crimes. He found that while the number of guns purchased and owned by citizens has increased significantly during the past decade, the number of deaths resulting from firearms, per hundred thousand population, has remained fairly constant. So, the availability of firearms to the general public is not the cause of abuse. The United States Congress in 1967 involved itself in a study dealing with the hypothesis that strict firearm licensing laws resulted in a lower crime rate. The study found no correlation between firearm regulation and crime. The antagonists of our liberties appear to be utilizing a false and emotional argument as a reason for infringing upon our rights. When that is done by government, it smacks of tyranny. King George is alive and well in the United States today.

The answer to gun abuse lies not in abolishing the right of the majority, but in protecting that majority against a few. This end should be achieved by the criminal justice system, working with existing law. The proper administration of penalties against those who abuse this right will act as a proper deterrent. I have statistics on the workings of this Criminal Justice System which indicate that the criminal is more often rewarded with probation than censured by punishment. Those who would propose an endorsement for the abolition of our right to keep and bear arms must seriously consider this (are you listening ACLU?) They must seriously question their future position on the relinquishment or renunciation of other Constitutional guarantees. For to surrender and abandon one liberty might well lead to the surrender of others. When man forsakes his liberties, he becomes a slave....

In conclusion, let me say that Mason and Henry and Jefferson probably had these protections in mind when they drafted the Bill of Rights. Certainly, the value of these liberties is no less today than it was at the time of our founding. The abandonment of these guarantees will ultimately lead to the destruction of this great Nation. I am but a servant of the people and a lover of liberty and I cannot let that happen.

There is in existence... a well coordinated nation-wide effort to strip us of our personal Constitutional right to keep and bear arms. Unless we match the efforts of these would-be tyrants, we will lose these Constitutional rights. We must alert our fellow countrymen and have them stand with us. Perhaps our badge or lapel pin during the bicentennial period could be a serpent floating in a circle with a No. 2 inside. This would be similar to the Minuteman flag of the Colony of Virginia when Patrick Henry did his great work for us. That flag said: "Liberty Or Death - Don't Tread On Me."

Let this mark the beginning of a new declaration against tyrants. Let this mark an awareness of our unalienable rights. Let this mark a return to a deep reverence for the law, its principles, and our rights, and obligations.

Edward M. Davis. Delivered at San Diego April 22, 1975)

Year Twenty-Six.....Number Seven.....February 16, 1979

CRUSADE FOR THE CHILDREN

On January 15, 1979, the first day of the 96th Congress, Senators Cranston, Williams, McGovern and Javits introduced "The Child Care Act Of 1979" (S.4) a bill "to provide assistance and coordination in the provision of child-care services for children living in homes with working parents and for other purposes." This is designed to become one more step in the march toward totalitarian control over the educating, training, care, and developing of children throughout the United States. Companion moves in this Conspiracy include the I.R.S. attempt to abolish or gain absolute control over all private and church schools, President Carter's insistence upon creation of a separate Cabinet-level Department of Education, the propaganda occasioned through the naming of 1979 as "The Year of the Child," the creation of a special postage stamp to celebrate the event, announcement of a proposed 1980 White House Conference on Children, to be followed by a proposed 1981 White House Conference on Families, etc.

Some political background is required:

When David Rockefeller and Zbigniew Brzezinski decided that fellow Trilateralist Jimmy Carter was to be the next President of the United States they knew that the money and influence of the American Section of the Trilateralist Commission would not accomplish the feat without popular support. Votes are still required, both popular and electoral college votes, if one is to become President. A political campaign had to be organized, and for this purpose the most telling move was the gaining of the political backing of certain labor unions, especially the backing of the National Education Association (NEA). In order gain this necessary support of the NEA, Carter had to promise three things: First, he would name as his running mate Senator Walter Mondale. Already a spokesman for NEA, Mondale had been chief sponsor of the Mondale-Brademas "Child and Family Services Sct of 1975," which was narrowly defeated. And, Walter Mondale's brother was an NEA State president turned full time union organizer of NEA. Second, Carter had to promise that he would use every resource at his command to create a separate Cabinet-level Department of Education (taking the "E" out of "HEW"). And third, Carter would promise to increase the budget for federal aid to education. Carter is paying off: He asked for a record $12.9 billion for education this year, a 46% increase since he came to the White House.

These deeds and promises caused NEA to go all out for Carter, and after the election had been won, campaign manager Hamilton Jordan said, "The massive support from the teachers was crucial to our winning. We turned to the NEA for help and it was delivered nationwide." Few people recognize the political power that NEA has been able to develop in the last few years. In 1970 it was little more than a professional organization that engaged in some lobbying and teacher fellowship. But, in 1968 the comparatively new American Federation of Teachers had promoted a series of teacher strikes across the nation, some of which were very successful from AFT's standpoint. Some of the members of the NEA viewed with alarm, decided that if NEA was to survive it would be forced to "go and do likewise." So NEA became both militant and political. A "Young Turk" faction gained control, kicked out the "old fuddy duddy administrators," wrote a new constitution making NEA a full-fledged labor union.

Since that time, NEA has won collective bargaining privileges for 5,000 of its 12,000 locals, and has become the second largest and most powerful union in the United States (The Teamsters being first). Said NEA "Young Turk" Catharine Barrett in 1972: "We are the biggest potential political striking force in this country, and we are determined to control the direction of education." When John Ryor became president of NEA he promised that: "We will become the foremost political power in the nation." According to Eugene H. Methvin, this could be true. Writing in Reader's Digest for November 1978, he pointed out that NEA has an annual budget of $250 million, more than ten times that of the AFL-CIO; and NEA president Ryor and executive director Terry Herndon "oversee 1436 professional field organizers, keep the political and legislative machinery well oiled."

"When Herndon became NEA's executive director in 1973," wrote Methvin, "he set about building a huge political machine. One project was to beef up the Coalition of American Public Employees (CAPE), an umbrella group including the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees (AFL-CIO), and several other public-employee unions.... NEA's campaign consultant Matt Reese marveled at the potential: 'Teachers are the ideal political organization because they're in every precinct.'"

What is NEA's ultimate goal? NEA director Herndon answers bluntly: "To tap the legal, political and economic powers of the U.S. Congress. We want leaders and staff with sufficient clout that they may roam the halls of Congress and collect votes to re-order the priorities of the United States of America." He points out that "teachers are more dependent than ever on their ability to concentrate power on the federal decision-makers. One thing no school board can manufacture is money." But Congress can and does manufacture money, does not need to raise taxes, just turns on the printing presses and adds to the inflation. Furthermore, NEA would find it difficult to control fifty State Legislatures and 16,000 local school boards; while it is comparatively easy to buy a sufficient number of Federal legislators. Therefore NEA strives for federal control of education - and Carter and a great number of Senators and Representatives are aiding and abetting.

This "Child Care Act of 1979" is an example. Once again, a little background: Since 1969 the Federal government has tried to pass legislation which would directly involve federal agencies and bureaucrats in all phases of the child development process. In 1971 a bill did pass both Houses of Congress but was vetoed because President Nixon received over 100,000 letters and telegrams of protest. Again in 1975 the Mondale-Brademas bill was defeated. But the social planners did gain one victory. Senators Mondale and Cranston sponsored an obscure measure that became a part of the Education Amendments of 1976. This provision, written by the NEA, authorized a three-year grant program of up to $203 million to be used for establishing "teacher centers" that would be responsible for "local in-service teacher training and for curriculum development." This meant that appointed teachers would begin to replace the elected school board members in the selection of textbooks, development of curriculum and other statutory duties. Said an NEA official: "For the first time, federal law has cut teachers into policymaking" at the local school district level. This "teacher center" provision becomes doubly dangerous, if and when the current Child Care Act (S.4) should become law.

When Mondale became Vice President, Cranston became the prime sponsor of the Child Care Conspiracy and in his capacity as chairman of the Senate Subcommittee on Child and Human Development, his power to promote the bill is greatly enhanced. Also, Senator Williams is a sponsor of S.4, and he also is chairman of the Senate Committee on Human Resources, where the hearings on S.4 are being held. In introducing the bill in the Senate, Cranston said that the bill "is the culmination of more than 2 years of study" and he said he had heard witnesses from some 50 different organizations such as the Children's Defense Fund, the Child Welfare League, the Day Care and Child Development Council of America, the League of Women Voters, the National Council of Jewish Women, the Coalition of Labor Union Women, etc. But Cranston did not tell the Senate that studies had also been made in the child care methods employed in Soviet Russia. The Los Angeles Times of Nov. 9, 1978 carried an article headlined "U.S. Educators Study Soviet Child Care." The article noted that: "With one of the most massive and highly organized child-care programs in the world, the Soviet Union has freed millions of mothers for work, and provided their children - from 2 months to 7 years of age - with a place to stay from 7 a.m. to 7 p.m., or even overnight."

"Said Janice Gibson, a University of Pittsburgh professor who has spent a half-dozen summers here studying kindergartens, 'The U.S.S.R. is the first country with a mass centrally controlled pre-school program available to all and designed to affect personality'..." After a complimentary description regarding the benefits of a system which allows 80% of the Soviet women to work while the state "upbrings" their children, the article ends with this revealing paragraph:

"The preschoolers are encouraged to cooperate with communal games and toys and to shun children who do not conform - a small-scale structure that mirrors aspects of adult Soviet society."

When this Soviet-style Child Care Act was introduced on January 15, Senator McGovern to his colleagues: "Mr. President, I am pleased to be a cosponsor of the 'Child Care Act of 1979'. In this, the International Year of the Child, I cannot think of a better way for Congress to demonstrate its commitment to children..." Thus does Senator McGovern inform us, perhaps unintentionally,, that the Child Care Act of 1979 (S.4) is but one part of an overall Conspiracy to create totalitarian control over the "upbringing" (to use the Soviet word) of all children in the United States while, at the same time releasing American women for away-from-home jobs (as in the Soviet Union and Red China), thus effectively destroying the family as a basic and essential unit of society.

The controlling hand of the NEA also can be seen in this Child Care Act. Under the subtitle "Training and Technical Assistance," the Act reads: "Sec. 8 (a) (1) The Secretary (of HEW-Ed.) is authorized to make grants to and enter into contracts with institutions of higher education, State and local public agencies, and private organizations to provide preservice and inservice training to teachers and administrative personnel involved in child-care programs, to recruit and train low-income parents for child-care positions, to provide specialized training in early childhood education for certified elementary school teachers who are unemployed...to develop and improve teacher certification criteria for child-care programs." (emphasis added).

"It is a well known fact to those of us who have consistently opposed previous legislation of this nature," comments the Citizens for Constructive Education, "that the National Education Association (NEA) and the American Federation of Teachers (AFT), two powerful and heavily funded teachers' unions, have long planned this with the aid of certain members of Congress, to provide for all their unemployed personnel and to absorb day care and early childhood development into their realm, in most cases ultimately using the public schools as their forum...Their concerns have been, apparently, more to accomodate their own rank and file than for the children who - after all - are allegedly the ones for whom this bill would provide the most benefits." (Quoted from a fact sheet prepared by the Citizens for Constructive Education, Post Office Box 25704, Seattle. Washington 98125).

In view of the international (as well as the national) aspects of this Conspiracy involving the collectivization of children and the destruction of traditional family life, it is alarming to note the recent findings of a research scientist, published in at least one newspaper under date of February 6, 1979. We quote the article in full:

SCIENTIST SAYS ORWELL'S SCARY FICTION IS BECOMING CHILLING FACT

The day of Big Brother watching our every move, just as in George Orwell's 1984, is starting to be more fact than fiction, according to a top scientist. Orwell painted a totalitarian world controlled by three superpowers, where thoughts were government-controlled and all signs of individuality destroyed. He compiled 137 predictions when he wrote the book in 1949, and so far, according to California psychologist David Goodman, more than 100 have come true. These include mind-altering drugs' defoliants like Agent Orange, used in Vietnam to destroy huge areas of vegetation; artificial insemination; self-propelled bombs replacing bombers; think tanks for developing war tactics and weapons; and electric shock treatments for changing a person's behavior.

"Before, most people thought of a 1984 future as fantasy. But now, with our advanced technology, we are far down the road toward it," said Goodman. The scientist became interested in Orwell and his predictions after he and a colleague developed an electric sensor to detect and record the vital signs of an animal from a distance. They felt it could be helpful, not only for painfree research on animals, but on human burn victims. But when he described the device to a student, he was reminded that in 1984, Big Brother used a similar sensor, only for a much more sinister purpose - spying on the thoughts of suspect party members.

"Because I had invented a sensor device, I had unwittingly helped one or Orwell's predictions come true," added Goodman. "Many social trends of the last three decades have been towards Orwell's 1984 vision." Even more alarming, according to Goodman, is that certain "triggering incidents" could make Orwell's future probable or even perhaps preferable, with people viewing constant warfare and the loss of liberty as the price of avoiding complete destruction.

"The facts suggest a number of different types of events could bring about the abrupt appearance of a 1984-type government. One such development is the sudden appearance of terrorist groups with atomic weapons." (unquote).

"It is evident," wrote John W. Whitehead in "The Separatist Illusion", "that if this stream of insanity is not turned back soon, this country faces a demoralizing and devastating future. The way back home is clear. The nation must look to God instead of to man for answers. Christians must read their children in the way of the Lord. The place to begin is in the family, and it must continue into the classroom." But not in a public, Federally-controlled classroom.

Year Twenty-Six.....Number Eight.....February 23, 1979

THE BRAVE NEW WORLD AND 1984

If we are to believe what we read in the newspapers and what we see and hear over the airwaves, the whole world is in turmoil bordering on total chaos. A current newsmagazine heads its "world news" section with these grim words: "Guns, Death, and Chaos." Its "Nation" section is headlined: "Surprise and Confusion," with the subhead explanation: "That seems all too often the U.S. reaction to new crises abroad." Backing up headings such as these is news of serious trouble of one kind or another in almost every part of the globe. The U.S. embassy in Iran overrun by an armed mob which held the U.S. Ambassador and 70 Americans for hours. A U.S. Marine wounded in the attempt to defend the embassy abducted from a hospital and held for trial, released only after strenuous pleading on the part of Ambassador William Sullivan. Another Ambassador - Adolph Dubs - kidnapped and killed in neighboring Afghanistan. Meanwhile, Iran's revolution was spinning out of control; border skirmishes with neighboring Iraq. In Turkey, political unrest and economic chaos made diplomats recall her postwar role of "sick man of Europe." In Pakistan, the threatened and often postponed execution of a popular former Prime Minister was leading the nation toward potential rebellion. Because of events in Iran, the tiny, oil-gushing gulf states of Kuwait, Qatar, Bahrain, Abu Dabi and the United Arab Emirates fear similar revolutions. Finally, as the fanatical Ayatollah embraced the equally fanatical Arafat, the dispute between Zionist Israel and Moslem Egypt showed little hope of being resolved.

On the other side of the vast Asian continent, Red China had suddenly invaded Vietnam and Soviet warships, troopships and observation planes were watching a situation that could erupt into another world war. There was trouble in many other parts of the world. Revolution in Chad; rebellions and revolutions affecting Ethiopia, Eritrea, Uganda, Tanzania, Mauritania, Algeria. Revolutionaries and terrorists partly financed by the National Council of Churches, equipped by Soviet Russia and trained by Cuban and East German instructors were again shooting down unarmed civilian airplanes, making raids into Rhodesia from Mozambique and Zambia. Strikes were playing their part. In Spain nationwide strikes had paralyzed the country. Ditto in England. In the United States a headline-grabbing situation as the traditional Mardi Gras celebration becomes the victim of a police strike. Etc, etc.

In the face of all this worldwide distress, the attitude of some United States officials is disgusting. The U.S. ambassador to the UN, Andrew Young, who calls himself a Christian, refers to the ayatollah (chosen of Allah) as a future saint. And Zbig Brzezinski boasts of the visit to his home of Teng Hsiao-ping, saying: "It's amazing, when you think of it. The leader of a billion people - having dinner in my house just two hours after he arrived in this country! I mean, it really is rather amazing!" (Perhaps not so amazing, as we'll show later in this report).

Newsweeklies and newspapers across the nation echo the theme that in the face of what Jimmy Carter refers to as worldwide "turmoil and chaos," the world's political leaders are both incompetent and ineffective. U.S.N. & W.R.'s newsmagazine of Feb. 26 is typical: "Problems at home and abroad are piling up on a beleaguered President. Crises can be contagious, and critics find Carter anything but masterful. Inflation is heating up to fever pitch, led by soaring food and fuel prices. Abroad, the U.S. keeps finding itself pushed around. In Iran U.S. looked toothless to many; now oil shortages threaten. The President's offhand comments in Mexico are bringing ridicule. All in all, difficult days lie ahead for the President--and the U.S." (Underlining as in original).

In view of the unrest and lack of confidence in his leadership being voiced by so many, Carter tried to explain the U.S. position in "a world of turmoil and chaos." In his "New Foundations" address he said "We are looking hopefully toward a world of law and of international negotiation and consultation in which all peoples might live in peace. We will continue to help shape the forces of change...to use our great strength and influence to settle international conflicts in other parts of the world before they erupt and spread. In Iran, Nicaragua, Cyprus, Namibia and Rhodesia, our country is working on peaceful solutions to dangerous conflicts." Presently he and his favorite Ambassador, Andrew Young, are working on a peaceful solution in Vietnam by calling upon the UN Security Council to issue proclamations. But these don't bring peace. Out of all of this muddle of directed and deliberate mismanagement, there have developed two very significant sets of circumstances; one concerning the Soviet and SALT surveillance, the other concerning our new relations with Red China. First, the Soviet connection:

In Iran near the Russian border, there are some highly sophisticated and top secret radar and signal installations, located in such a way that they overlook two of the most important Soviet installations: the intercontinental ballistic missile range at Tyura Tam, and the test range for Russian anti-ballistic missile activities at Sari Shagan. Without these facilities it is impossible for the U.S. to check accurately on the nuclear missile activities of the Soviet. Making matters worse, according to Gen. Daniel Graham, former head of the Defense Intelligence Agency, a former CIA employe, William Kampiles, was recently convicted of turning over to the Soviets the KH-II manual, a technical volume describing the workings of our most advanced reconnaissance instrument, a huge photographic sky lab capable of filming missile sites in great detail from altitudes of 100 miles and more. Because of Kampile's betrayal the Soviets will now be able to devise methods to elude the U.S. spy lab. "In my view," said Gen. Graham, "the loss of facilities in Iran, coupled with loss of the manuals on our prime photographing satellite, KH-II, means you won't be able to verify SALT I, let alone SALT II."

The sequence of stories concerning the facilities in Iran is revealing. When it appeared that the Shah was about to fall without it being made apparent that he was being pushed, there was ample time to do something about those important radar installations. In fact, the first official story informed us that something had been done. We were told they had been dismantled and were being sent to Turkey to be reassembled and re-aimed. However, this was not only untrue, it was physically impossible. The whole Caucasus mountain range across from Turkey was in the way and it would take years to move those massive instruments from Iran into Turkey. Later came the official story that the revolution in Iran would not affect the facilities; they were being protected by the Iranian army and would be in use once again when the unrest in Iran had settled. However, this also proved to be untrue because the Khomeini government, on Feb. 21, made the flat statement that the United States would not be permitted to use the facilities, or to move them out of Iran. So, even as Carter & Co. lobbies feverishly to get SALT II it now is known that we won't even be able to verify SALT I, let alone Salt II. Why has our subrosa government allowed the Soviets to gain such a strategic military advantage over the United States? We'll try to answer. But first, the Red China sequence must be noted:

When Jimmy Carter played the part of a traitor and invited the Chinese leader Teng Hsiao-ping to defile the White House and further pollute the Senate, he has criticized for not having obtained from Teng a firm promise that he would not use force to take over Taiwan. If Radio Moscow is correct—and it may be in this particular instance—something even more important may have developed as a result of Teng's visit. Radio Moscow says that Teng told Carter that Red China was going to punish Red Vietnam for Red Cambodia, and that Carter at least tacitly supported the Chinese attack on Vietnam! It is significant that the first thing Teng did when he arrived in the United States was to visit Zbigniew Brzezinski in the latter's home; and the first thing Teng did when he left the United States was to order the invasion of Vietnam! Somehow, we are given the impression that Carter may not have given his approval to the attack on Vietnam – but that Brzezinski did give his approval, and that Carter merely remained silent. Dare we go a step farther, and suggest that not only was Washington advised of Peking's action, but that Moscow also knew of the attack before it was actually launched?

Pertinent to the foregoing is the recent revelation of the real purpose behind an organization calling itself the "International Peace Academy." As a cover, this is an academy where national leaders are trained to be world leaders. But in addition, its elitist leaders, from many countries, convene in secret at appointed times and places (like the Bilderbergers) to plot the next steps to be taken in the series of upcoming "changes" that are to be brought about in order to establish and maintain the New World Order. The following are excerpts from an article by Edward Schumacher of the Knight-Ridder News Service:

"A group of generals and diplomats from around the world gathered with little fanfare for two weeks last July in Vienna... Among participants were a senior Israeli military strategist, an adviser in the office of the Egyptian president and the American head of the U.S. observer force in the Sinai. At the end, they went home, leaving as quietly as they had arrived. Their Sinai solution, however, re-emerged almost intact three months later – with a large public splash. It was part of the Camp David accords, which stated the basis of a peace treaty between Israel and Egypt. What happened was but one example of how the International Peace Academy has quietly become a major participant in the quest for world peace.... The academy has come to be used for sensitive, real-life negotiations. For that reason, it has kept a low public profile, according to its president, Indarjit Rikhye, a retired Indian general and a military adviser to former UN secretary-general Dag Hammarskjöld.

"I'm a pragmatist, and I believe the human race has not reached the stage where it can eliminate violence," Rikhye said. "The UN should be doing what we do, but for political reasons, it can't."

"A group of internationalists, led by Philadelphia philanthropist Ruth Forbes Young and including such figures as Secretary of State Cyrus Vance, founded the peace academy (in 1969). The academy has been careful to be international, not just American. Its funding comes mainly from foundations and private individuals, and the Soviets now participate... The private status of the academy has turned out to be a godsend. Its seminars and off-the-record meetings are unofficial, and thus hostile sides can send top advisers, to mix on an informal level without fear of official commitment...." (Emphasis added).

When referring to itself as a "peace" academy, we are reminded of the Orwell predictions in his book 1984. There was the Ministry of Peace which actually conducted war, and of Big Brother's mottoes: "War is peace, freedom is slavery, ignorance is strength." And, as Rikhye suggests, "we have not reached the stage there we can eliminate violence." Therefore there must be a Ministry of Peace, not to end violence, but to cultivate, channel and control violence!

Since there is more than one such international agency where hostile sides can get together and plan the actions that are to be taken by the respective visible governments that are involved, it is quite possible that all interested leaders were told beforehand that an attack on Vietnam was to occur. But why such an attack? Let us not forget that a certain "Balance of Power" scheme was proposed by Henry Kissinger, promulgated by Richard Nixon, and is in process of production by Zbigniew Brzezinski and his internationalist colleagues. The scheme involves the existence of USA, USSR and PRC as equal superpowers and how better to make PRC equal in power and influence than by having her acquire American technology and know-how, appear to defy Soviet Russia by attacking a minor Soviet ally such as Vietnam, while at the same time showing the world that she can do what even the United States could not do: invade and overpower Vietnam? Meanwhile, as balm to the Soviet, let her make more inroads into the oil-rich Middle East!

In this century, since technology, discovery and invention have transformed utopian socialism into scientific socialism, there have been two political prophecies that have been surprisingly accurate: Huxley's Brave New World published in 1932, and Orwell's 1984 published in 1949. Both were written with remarkable insight. Both foretold that science would produce an elitist ruling class that would possess overwhelming power. Both predicted that man would eventually be controlled completely by this elitist group. In other words, both subscribed to the Conspiracy Theory. Humanist Albert Rosenfeld in his book, The Second Genesis, updated Huxley: "Imagine a dictator with a subject population - the dictator, a man who is sure he knows what is best for everyone: for himself, absolute power; for his subjects, happiness. He has at his command all the electrochemical techniques necessary for controlling the human brain as well as the most advanced methods for controlling human reproduction. He can have entire populations raised 'artificially' without resorting to sex or family structure. He can also, if he chooses, have electrodes planted in the brains of his subjects or begin administering 'mind drugs' routinely, at a very early age."

Huxley conceived humanity as being in five accurately controlled classes: the Alphas, Betas, Gammas, Deltas and Epsilons. The Alphas formed the highest class, a sort of ruling bureaucracy. But Huxley suspected the Alphas would or could become discontent, unrest could result and revolution could develop. And this is where Orwell supplies the answer. Since there would be unrest or even violence and war; then learn to cultivate, channel, and control that violence. Hence, Orwell sees the world divided between three regional superpowers: Eurasia (USSR?), Eastasia (PRC?) and Oceania (the Atlantic Pact Nations?). They are permanently at war, but the wars are cultivated, channeled and controlled. This takes care of the unrest (war being its ultimate form), It provides full employment, the need for private initiative, or for any form of privacy, is eliminated, because over all stands Big Brother, who is watching every person every minute of the day and the night. Everybody must love Big Brother, their redeemer; but should hate everyone else.

In the final analysis the answer to Big Brotherism lies within ourselves: Are we stewards made in the image of God, of the body of Christ, or are we mere servants of State because pleasure commends or fear demands? Are we a part of that Remnant that must remain to reconstruct when Big Brother collapses?

HUMANISM - THE COMMUNIST CONNECTION

Most dictionaries will define Humanism as "a philosophy in which man, his interests, and development are made central and dominant, tending to exalt the cultural and rational elements of man rather than the spiritual or speculative." However, the Humanist Movement is not a mere philosophy. It has been defined and recognized by the U.S. Supreme Court as a Secular (worldly) Religion. (Torcasco decision, 1961). It is promoted as "a religion for the world" by the American Humanist Association, and as such it is a secular sister to Communism which has also been referred to as a "religion for the world." This relationship is brought out quite clearly in the creed of the British Humanist Association which states in part:

"I believe in no god and no hereafter. It is immoral to indoctrinate children with such beliefs. Schools have no right to do so, nor indeed, have parents. I believe that religious education and prayers in school should be eliminated. ...I believe that denominational schools should be abolished...I believe that children should be taught religion as a matter of historical interest but should be taught about all religions including Humanism, Marxism, Maoism, Communism, and other attitudes of life..."

While declaring in some instances that Humanism is not a religion, but insisting at other times that Humanism is a religion, and should become an only religion for "one world," all such statements might be disregarded as unimportant and irrelevant, except that Humanism is the one and only religion that is being taught in the public schools in the United States, and even in some private and church-related schools. It is being taught under the guise of Values Clarification, sex education, family living and other subjects. Methods being used to teach Humanism include behavior modification, group therapy, psychotherapy, etc. It also is being inculcated into students in such courses as Literature, Social Studies, Environmental Studies, and Math. Among the allied projects being promoted by Humanists at the parental level are the drive for ratification of the proposed Equal Rights Amendment, the movement to establish an independent Federal Department of Education, the attempt by IRS to eliminate all private and church-related schools which it cannot control, the campaign to create Federally-controlled day care centers for Children and the allied movement to make all children wards of the state, promotion of the International Year of the Child, legalized abortion, euthanasia, suicide, etc.

As an example of how top Humanists work to promote their religion in schools we should take a look at the activities of Dr. Sidney Simon, the author of many books in Values Clarification: "It's OK to lie... It'd OK to steal... It's OK to have premarital sex... It's OK to cheat... It's OK to kill--if these things are part of your own value system and you have clarified these values for yourself. The important thing is not what values you choose, but that you have chosen them yourself--freely and without coercion by parents, spouse, priests, friends, ministers, or by social pressure of any kind." This is the opening paragraph of an article by Erica Carle, who goes on to describe Dr. Simon's appearance at a Wisconsin Education Association Convention. In his books, articles and public appearances, Simon insists there is no right or wrong. Evil is just as good as good. Teachers and parents must get rid of the "right answer syndrome." In an article in the Florida Pupil Quarterly he explains that Values Clarification is a method for teachers to change childrens' values "without getting caught."

Since Humanists are also interested in promoting the alleged values of Communism, it is noteworthy that Soviet Russia's top priority propaganda campaign for the United States this year is promotion of the International Year of the Child. Moscow News Weekly is a tabloid flown by air from Moscow to the United States. It sells for 25¢ and its issue for Feb. 11-18, 1979, has on its cover the picture of a very handsome couple: a little boy and, not his mother, as one would expect, but his doctor, a woman who watches over him throughout his years of development. The caption explains: "This young lad is Muscovite 'Kifill' Kushnev, 5, who has come to Dr. Valentina Melnikov for his regular checkup. This year is the International Year of the Child. Our country has done a great deal to ensure that children here grow up healthy, strong and happy. Doctors keep a close and constant watch over each child's health, not only when they fall ill, but through regular obligatory checkups..."

In the lead story in this Moscow News Weekly we are told that "in his address to the children of the world, the head of our state Leonid Brezhnev said that We in the Soviet Union strive to "teach children to be kind and to be friends with others, to teach them to live as good neighbors with people of every nationality or colour of skin, to teach them to respect work and to use their knowledge in working for the benefit of all people." Following this propaganda blast, we are told in a special interview with Professor Yelena Novikova, Deputy Minister of Public Health of the USSR, something of how children are raised and trained in the Soviet Union. Here are direct quotes from the article:

"Concern for the infant's health essentially begins long before a child is born. First of all, there is pre-natal care for the mother. We have a developed network of what we call district women's advisory clinics, where the health of mothers-to-be is kept under constant observation...all women take advantage of the services of these advisory clinics...As soon as the mother brings the baby home from the maternity hospital...a nurse comes automatically to examine the child. They keep a close eye on the child's growth and give the mother practical advice in 'mothercraft'...When the child is older (two months-Ed.) there is the creche or mindergarten, and then school. Doctors keep watch on the child's health and physical development at all these institutions as well. I am not exaggerating when I say that throughout one's entire childhood, there are a doctor and a teacher always right beside the youngster... The guiding principle behind Soviet children's medicine is the all-round human concern which is woven into the entire fabric of our social system." (unquote).

Humanists in the United States have felt that the Soviet system of child care is so very good that they have sent U.S. educators to the Soviet to study the Communist methods because we in the United States are "faced with a changing society in which more mothers are taking jobs and looking for child care."

The important thing about the Soviet system (important to the Humanists and to those who are preparing subjects to inhabit their Brave New World) is the fact that here is a way in which children can be taken over by the state before the birth of the child. Thus the state would have a way to train up the child in the way the state wished it to grow! Family and church influence would be eliminated entirely!

But such a system is possible only when Health, Education and Welfare are a state monopoly. That is why, in the words of the Center for Independent Education, "Private education in the United States is rapidly approaching a point where the government will decide whether any alternatives to the public schools will be allowed to exist. The federal government, and many state governments want to increase regulation of private schools as parents and students leave the failing public schools in increasing numbers. This struggle for control is taking place in the courts, within the bureaucracy, and within the legislative branch of government. Obviously, the recent IRS attempt to impose its rules upon private schools is only the most publicized of the skirmishes taking place. Many more battles are being fought at the state and local level."

As for that IRS attempt against private and church schools, as a result of the hearings held, IRS issued a "revised revenue procedure" that was published in the February 13 Federal Register. Hearings were held on the revised plan on February 20; the final outcome was still to be determined at this writing. But the bureaucrats at IRS are obviously very nervous because, If Rep. Ron Paul (Texas) is correct in his analysis this new "revised revenue procedure" doesn't even make good sense, even if it's intended to be "Newspeak." Among the statements made at this latest hearing, Rep. Paul's would be amusing, if the subject were not so serious. We quote:

"...The presumptuousness of the Internal Revenue Service in issuing regulations that threaten private schools is surpassed...by the Service's incompetence...Let me state my reasons (for making such a charge). On February 13, 1979 the IRS published its revised Revenue Procedure in the Federal Register. That procedure, as published in the official version is logically incoherent...On page 9452 the IRS states; 'If a school engages in any acts or practices that are racially nondiscriminatory as to students, it is not entitled to tax exemption....' One has two options at this point. First, one can conclude that the IRS is hopelessly confused and has promulgated blatant contradictions or, second, one might conclude that no private school, discriminatory or nondiscriminatory, is entitled to tax exemption. Which option is correct will become obvious as we examine the other passages in question.

"The second passage is also on page 9452: 'This Revenue Procedure sets forth guidelines to identify certain private elementary and secondary schools that are racially nondiscriminatory, even though they claim to have a racially nondiscriminatory policy as to students.' Mr. Chairman, I humbly submit that this statement is nonsense. However, for the skeptics, I call your attention to another statement on page 9452: 'A school adjudicated to be discriminatory means any school found to be racially nondiscriminatory as to students by a final decision of a federal or state court of competent jurisdiction.' The honest reader is now compelled to admit that this statement is gibberish....

"Orwell coined the term Newspeak for such linguistic and logical nonsense, and Newspeak is what appeared in the Federal Register on Feb. 13. There is of course, the possibility that these are clerical errors, not logical blunders. If so, then we can only conclude that an agency that can make errors of this magnitude is not only unfit to regulate private schools, but also incompetent to administer the tax laws....

"I would like to suggest one further consideration. Taxes are for the purpose of raising revenue needed to sustain legitimate, constitutional functions of government. They ought not be used...as a weapon to compel citizens and organizations to conform to sociological models favored by federal politicians and bureaucrats...If the IRS stubbornly refuses to admit that it has exceeded its authority, it will, I fear, learn its lesson the same way its spiritual ancestor George III did. I fervently hope that this Congress and its agencies recognize that fact before such a prospect becomes a reality." (Unquote).

As previously stated, the IRS controversy is but one of many skirmishes that are taking place in the field of education. The National Commission on the International Year of the Child (chaired by Mrs. Andrew Young) has received a sum of $1,372,000 in taxpayers' money to pay its staff for the next 19 months. On March 5, they were to go before the House Appropriations subcommittee on Education and Labor to ask for an additional $685,000 for staff salaries and program development. This IYC Commission is stacked with persons of one political point of view (the un-American point of view) and protest should be made that this Commission must be prohibited from engaging in political activity which amounts to war on the family.

There is also the Child Care Act of 1979 (S.4). Hearings are scheduled for March 20, 1979 before the Senate Human Resources Committee. Letters of opposition to S.4 should be sent to your own Senators, with a clear copy also to Senator Richard Schweiker, Ranking Minority Member, Senate Human Resources Committee, 253 Russell Office Building, Washington, D.C. 20510.

A preliminary hearing has already been held on S. 4, (Feb. 21) at which time Sen. Alan Cranston told the Committee of his pet project, which he inherited from Walter Mondale. Columnist James K. Kilpatrick called this initial hearing "greasing the skids for his Child Care Act of 1979" and "very soon now, if all goes well, his subcommittee will launch this darling little disaster." The columnist said of the bill: "...His purpose is to subsidize child-care services for all children up to the age of 15...The bill goes on to create a bureaucracy of mammoth proportions...Advisory panels would proliferate, all neatly stacked with professional bleeding hearts and weeping Wandas. We would have consultants, advisers, experts, and technicians; we would have data banks, innovations, demonstrations, pilot projects, and grants-in-aid. We would have pre-service and in-service training, reviews, evaluations, studies, and reports...What would it cost? Cranston's office says cheerfully that the senator has no idea. Back in 1971, Senator Mondale's bill was priced at $2 billion for the first year, and maybe $20 billion to $30 billion within 10 years. Double those estimates to get them in 1979 dollars, and we are talking about a bottomless budget-buster bigger than Medicare and Medicaid combined. The bill cries out for more discussion than it's had so far." (Unquote).

A final note: In this Report we have attempted to show a direct connection between Communism and Humanism; as well as a direct connection between Humanism and the schools, Humanism and Federal Child Care, Humanism and the International Year of the Child. There is one other dangerous connection: between Humanism and Jimmy Carter's bigoted and one-sided Human Rights Crusade. The American Humanist Association held its annual conference in Orlando, Florida last April 7-10. President Carter sent the following telegram to that conference:

"Those who participate in the Annual Meeting of the American Humanist Association are furthering a movement that greatly enhances our way of life. As you know, the advancement of human rights has become the cornerstone of this administration's actions at home and abroad. The work of your organization in this area is, therefore, especially gratifying to me, and I welcome this opportunity to applaud your important accomplishments. May you have a most productive and inspiring 1978 session." /S/ Jimmy Carter, President.

THE RISE AND FALL OF THE AMERICAN EMPIRE

In mid-century America there was a political prophet who retired to a cave on a river bank at Tuckahoe, New Jersey, where he lived the rest of his life with his wife, making notes and comments on the passing show of monstrous human folly. He had already written three remarkable monographs while watching the United States convert itself from a Republic into a Democracy, from a Democracy into a Welfare State, then become an Empire. The name of the political prophet was Garet Garrett and his three essays were published in 1953 under the title "The People's Pottage," although the three were written at different times. "The Revolution Was," 1938, was a record of how "Like a hagfish, the New Deal entered the old (Constitutional) form and devoured its meaning from within." Thus the metamorphosis from Republic to Democracy. His second essay, "Ex America," 1951, chronicled the building of the Welfare State, a time during which the traditional American doctrine that "Government is the responsibility of a self-governing people" was swept away and replaced by the doctrine that "people are the responsibility of the government." In his third monograph, published in 1952, he showed how the United States had become an Empire. He listed the requisites of such an Empire:

- 1) The executive power of government must become dominant.
- 2) Domestic policy must be made subordinate to foreign policy.
- 3) The military mind (suggesting world dominance) must be ascendent over the civilian mind (accenting individual freedom and repudiating interdependence with allies). The great symbol of the military mind is the Pentagon in Washington with its 17½ miles of corridor, in which admirals and generals get lost; its 28,000 people at desks, 8,000 automobiles parked outside; the largest indoor city in the world."
- 4) Establishment of a system of nations such as "the 13 foreign countries that adhere to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization."
- 5) A complex of vaunting (we can assume unlimited political, military and financial liabilities all over the world); and fear (of the barbarian, which is the USSR). And finally:
- 6) Acceptance of the belief that:
 - a) It is our turn to assume the responsibilities of moral leadership of the world (as exemplified by Carter's Human Rights Crusade);
 - b) We must maintain a balance of power against the forces of evil (as with the USA-USSR-PRC Triangular Constellation and the USA-Europe-Japan Trilateral balancing act);
 - c) We must keep the peace of the world, to save civilization, to serve mankind (as exemplified by Jimmy Carter's Camp David Conference, and his current trip to Cairo and Jerusalem).

Finally, Garet Garrett noted how we had become a prisoner of history: "The Roman Empire's good intentions were peace, law and order. The Spanish Empire added salvation. The British Empire added the noble myth of the white man's burden. We have added freedom and democracy. Yet the more that may be added to it the more it is the same language still. A language of power."

So wrote Garrett in 1952. But his was the voice of a political prophet crying in the geopolitical wilderness; and he retired to a cave along a riverbank, in the manner of Elijah who fled in the wilderness to the bank of the brook Cherith (which proceeded to dry up to test his faith). Politicians and intellectuals dismissed Garrett's warnings and tried to kill the Saturday Evening Post because he had been its chief editorial writer before retiring to the cave. However those same politicians and intellectuals accepted as political gospel the words of a leftwing "school of prophets" gathered at The Center for the Study of Democratic Institutions. In 1959 this foundation financed brain tank produced an Occasional Paper entitled "Private Governments and the Constitution" in which its author stated:

"The advent of a 'new society' has created the need to re-evaluate traditional formulations of American constitutional law and theory. A social milieu wholly different from that of 1787 suggests that the theory must now be modified to fit present facts....(Now) the United States can be thought of as a combination of a Social Service or Welfare State, which we have become during the past two decades, and a Garrison State, which we have in some measure approximated since the end of World War II. An approximate label for this combination is the "Security State," a name derived from the apparent character of Americans today, which reflects the demands of the individual for economic and psychic security subsumed under the notion of the social-service or welfare principle of government and the demands of people generally for national security or self-preservation."

In simpler language, The Center was saying exactly the same thing that Garet Garrett had said: that the United States had become a Welfare State and "The welfare of the people is the responsibility of government." But Garrett said it as a warning in 1952, whereas The Center said it as an accomplishment seven years later!

And how has this Nation which once was a Representative Republic fared since becoming a Welfare State while at the same time assuming the rights, duties, prerogatives and responsibilities of Empire? One way of answering is to check the planks of the 1976 Platform of the victorious National Democratic Party. The platform was published in the Congressional Record of July 1, 1976, and it consumed some 13 pages. However, we have a summary, courtesy of Raymond Heaps, chairman of the San Francisco Committee of the American Independent Party. Among other things, the Platform called for:

Increased Federal spending in all areas except national defense...National Economic Planning by the Federal government...Mandatory National Health Insurance...a Federally-financed guaranteed annual income...Federalization of all welfare programs...Federally-financed Congressional elections...Intensified Federal regulation of all industry...Nationwide Federal building standards...Repeal of Section 14(b) of the Taft-Hartley Labor Law...Mandatory school busing...Federal gun control and a ban on small handguns...Ratification of ERA...Support of abortion...Full pardon for Vietnam-era draft dodgers...Banning of all nuclear weapons testing...Relinquish all control and sovereignty over Panama Canal...Recognize Red China diplomatically...Expand detente policies with Communist Nations...Increase U.S. foreign aid...End tax advantages for U.S. businesses trading with Rhodesia and South Africa...etc.

You'll notice that most of the foregoing have become law or federal policy and most of the rest are "in the works" although some will not be approved in this current session of Congress. And what has all of this leftward drift toward a New World Order actually accomplished for the United States of America and for its citizens (or should we say subjects?) Business Week is hardly a right-wing publication. Yet its editorial of March 12, 1979 begins:

WHAT HAPPENED TO OUR INDEPENDENCE?

"We, therefore, the Representatives of the United States of America, in General Congress, Assembled, appealing to the Supreme Judge of the world for the rectitude of our intentions do, in the Name and by Authority of the good people of these Colonies, solemnly publish and declare, that these United Colonies are, and of a right ought to be Free and Independent States;...And that as Free and Independent States, they have full Power to levy War, conclude Peace, contract Alliances, establish Commerce, and to do all other Acts and Things which Independent States may of right do. And for support of this Declaration, with a firm reliance on the protection of divine Providence, we mutually pledge to each other our Lives, our Fortunes, and our sacred Honor."

We have quoted from the conclusion of what we still call the Declaration of Independence, and we still honor it, in rest and recreation, if not in spirit and truth, each time the calendar shows us it is another Fourth of July. From independence to interdependence to dependence has been a sad and painful journey for discerning patriots. It comes as a shock to realize that, if all things are considered, we are in a worse state than were the original signers of the Declaration to the fulfillment of which they pledged their lives, fortunes, and sacred honor. Perhaps, if we consider the ways in which we in this century have become enslaved, we can rekindle the spirit and the dedication that made ours a Nation which once was honored, respected, and emulated.

In referring to the "Spirit of '76" historian Clarence B. Carson notes: "The ideal of independence had at least three dimensions from the outset. They were not separate dimensions but were intertwined with one another. One dimension was national independence. A second was the independence of the states. The third was personal independence. All three dimensions were believed to be the necessary condition for individual liberty." Let us examine those three intertwined dimensions of American independence.

National Independence was the principal theme in 1776, and in the formative years of our new and unique Republic. George Washington stated it clearly and directly in his Farewell Address: "The great rule of conduct for us in regard to foreign nations is, in extending our commercial relations to have with them as little political connection as possible." This was the very heart of American foreign policy for our first hundred years as a Nation. When war broke out in Europe in the wake of the French Revolution both France and England tried to involve us. But Washington proclaimed the neutrality of the U.S., and the Congress supported him. During the Napoleonic Wars we remained neutral and therefore remained independent. Even when we went to war against England in 1812, it was done independent of other warring powers. President Madison, asking Congress for a Declaration of War, added this stipulation: "Avoiding all connections which might entangle it in the contest or views of other powers." Despite wars and rumors of wars, as a Nation we remained resolutely independent in our relations with other Nations, until after the turn of the 20th century.

National Independence means the independence of the U.S. Government, from domination, control, or political influence of foreign governments. This kind of national independence began to fade when we became involved in world wars to make the world safe from this or that. By the end of the shooting phase of WWII, we were made to believe that it was our manifest destiny to replace the British Empire as the world leader among all nations on this side of the "Iron Curtain." Ours was no longer a national role. It became a global role. We became "Uncle Sugar" to the world. Our dollar became the currency of world trade. U.S. strategic forces of bombers, rockets, and submarines provided an "atomic umbrella" for a great zone that stretched from Norway to the border of Mainland China. U.S. ground troops and tactical air force units spread across the globe; defending nations as with South Korea, and fighting subversion as with Vietnam. The United States looked upon itself as the world's policeman. Presidents, beginning with Kennedy, began to deliver, not State of the Union addresses, but State of the World messages.

Then came the change in strategy and tactics. With the failure of the UN as an embryo World Government, and especially after the Bay of Pigs fiasco and the Vietnam involvement, we were told by the Elitists that we couldn't "go it alone" as world rulers, that "Interdependence" was necessary, and that instead of a "One World Government" we would have a "World Community." So, the advice and the warnings of Washington, Jefferson, Madison, Adams, Monroe and the other great Americans who spoke of and fought for national independence were shelved and forgotten. A "Declaration of Interdependence" was proclaimed by President John Kennedy on the very spot where, in 1776, John Hancock and 55 other great American Patriots had signed the original Declaration of Independence. A rewritten Declaration of Interdependence was again read at that same spot on the 200th anniversary of the original signing; this new declaration being signed by representatives who should have been tried as traitors.

We were told that, in this new "world community" composed of interdependent nations, the President of the United States would still act as the chairman and leading voice in summit meetings where world policy would be determined, in matters of trade, energy, money, defense, etc. But, let us note what actually has happened. Carter began his tour of duty acting as a very President of the World. But Giscard of France began to rebel, Schmidt of West Germany began to replace Carter as the leader of the so-called Free World. A few weeks ago the Aspen Institute which headquarters in Colorado held an important summit meeting in Berlin. It was a meeting comparable to the annual Bilderberg summits. Present were leaders of the world. But the top American representative at the meeting was not a member of Carter's administration, but that old friend of West Germany, former diplomat and CFR bigwig John J. McCloy. Reporting on the meeting, William Pfaff said that distrust of the US and its policies was the chief impression left by the meeting. The recent Venice meeting of heads of state was featured by Giscard openly criticizing Carter, and by Schmidt of West Germany actually assuming the leadership of the West at that summit. It was not Carter, but Schmidt, who reported to NATO when that meeting of the Atlantic Alliance leaders was held in Turkey. Finally, when the decisions had been reached and the policies determined, it was Schmidt, not Carter or Muskie or even Brzezinski, who went to Moscow to discuss world affairs with the leader of the Communist bloc. On June 19 and 20, there was held in London a very important summit on "The Energy Emergency: Oil & Money 1980." While it is true that Henry Kissinger was the keynote speaker, the only Americans invited to or present at the meetings were members of the Invisible Government of the United States.

Is this not indicative? The leadership of the so-called Free World is shifting from America back to Europe. No longer are we simply interdependent; we are becoming dependent. Our master in 1776 was the British Empire. Now it is to become a new Regional World Empire known as the European Economic Community (EEC). which is creating its own money to replace the dollar, which is dictating policies of trade and commerce, which has made its own decision on how to deal with the Arab-Israeli situation, in defiance and disregard of Carter's Camp David conferences.

Let us understand that it was planned that way! First, the builders of the New World Order destroyed the British leadership, made of England part of a Regional World Government called the European Community. Now the US is being reduced in power, leadership and respect; while the standard of living of her people is being reduced to the level of the rest of the world. Jimmy Carter has been a great success in this respect. Unfortunately, any man who will become President of the United States under present circumstances will continue to be an agent - willingly or otherwise - or the builders of the New World Order. So much for the loss of national independence. Let's observe what has happened to that second dimension of independence.

Independence of the States was the main reason for forming a national government. There were thirteen separate and independent States, each with its own constitution and its own republican form of government. But when dealing with foreign powers, it seemed essential to their independence that they speak with one voice. Also, there were some matters that could best be handled by a central agency. So, representatives of those thirteen independent republics got together and drew up a contract (Constitution) which would establish a central agency (Federal Government) that would act in behalf of all the States in certain carefully enumerated matters. The States did not sacrifice their independence or their legal sovereignty to a federal government, and the federal government was not to meddle in State and local affairs. But it did, and it does, to such an extent that the agent has become the master. Furthermore, through an unconstitutional method called Regional Governance, the agent of the States is in the process of destroying State, County and Community Governments. In the famed Marbury vs Madison decision the US Supreme Court held that: "The United States is entirely the creature of the Constitution. Its power and authority have no other source. It can only act in accordance with the limitations imposed by the Constitution." But our administrators, legislators, and judges overlook and ignore this basic tenet. So much so that the Tenth Amendment to the Constitution is constantly disobeyed and defied: "The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people." In short, the independence of the States has been usurped by the federal agency; and true political freedom can be regained only if and when the States rise up and bind the agent of their creation by the chains of their creation: the U.S. Constitution.

Personal Independence was the third dimension. Need we speak of the loss of personal independence to the person who is forced to spend one-third or more of his working hours every year to pay his taxes? Or of the involuntary servitude imposed upon employers who must obey reams of regulations and also act as a tax-collector without pay? Or of young men forced to register for a draft? Millions have voluntarily given up their independence to become welfare slaves and drones. Living on credit, another form of slavery, has become a way of life. Think of government guaranteed loans to business, to farmers and homeowners, relief payments, social security, government decreed minimum wages, enforced schooling, and so on almost endlessly. Through love of federal money, States, Counties and local governments have also lost their independence.

Against this loss of independence a counter-revolution is developing, one that is similar to the one which prompted the writing of the original Declaration of Independence. One such effort was the drawing up of a Petition for Redress of Grievances to be presented to the U.S. Congress. Responsible for the following is the American Heritage Crusade, P.O.Box 2308, Fullerton, CA 92633:

"The People of this Nation ordained and established this Government to secure our liberties and to protect our lives and our Property. In no way did the delegates give you any portion of our Sovereignty. We bound you with the chains of our Constitution; these chains now lay broken. Our form of Government has been altered without our knowledge or consent in violation of your oath and in contempt of our laws by you and your predecessors. A permissive Judiciary has twisted the Constitution beyond recognition. We, the People of this Nation demand an answer to our grievances:

Count I. We gave you the power to lay and collect taxes for the payment of debts and to provide for the common defense of this Nation within limitations defined. You have broken your bond and sent forth swarms of tax collectors to harass us and to eat out our substance. You have allowed them to subvert the laws. levy fines and put us in prison to enforce laws that neither you nor we understand or can comply with, all without due process of law. Count II. We gave you the power to coin Money. To this end you have allowed the plundering of our silver and gold from our treasury and our people and substituted imitation coins and dishonored notes to hide from us the theft. Count III. You have unlawfully delegated legislative powers delegated to you and placed these powers in the hands of the Executive Branch of Government and its administrative bureaucracy. Count IV. You have not paid our debts with the taxes that were collected from us. Count V. You have squandered our taxes and increased our debts to aid foreign dictators that build fortunes for themselves and enslave their people. Count VI. You have reduced this Nation's defenses to a position so inferior that the weakest dictators show no fear and attack our embassies. Count VII. You have drawn from our treasury to influence your reelection. Count VIII. You have used our tax moneys to pay abortionists to kill our unborn. Count IX. You have passed legislation which is construed to be justification to tap our telephones, confiscate our mail, drill open our safety deposit boxes, seize our bank records and steal our funds. All without due process of law. Count X. You have refused to impeach those in the Judiciary who serve from day to day on "good behavior," when they obviously conspire with the Executive to destroy the Constitutional Government they are sworn to support. Count XI. You have given away the Panama Canal in spite of our many objections. Count XII. You have robbed us of our savings and lowered our standard of living by planned inflation effected by intentional deficit spending. Count XIII. You have drafted us to be killed in wars you did not declare or intend to win. Count XIV. You have conspired with the President of the United States to overthrow the lawful, Constitutional Government, by abolishing the States which created you, and to substitute regional government so as to reduce this great Nation to a state in a one-world government.....

Year Twenty-Seven..... Number Twenty-Eight July 11, 1980

OUR QUADRENNIAL EXERCISE IN FUTILITY

Every four years We the People of the United States violate the letter and the spirit of our Constitution by pretending to vote for, and elect, a President of the United States. Nowhere in body or amendment does the U.S. Constitution provide for a direct popular vote for the President, or the Vice President, of the United States. What the Constitution does say is that once every four years each State Legislature shall appoint, in any way it pleases, electors to serve in what has come to be known as an electoral college. The number of electors is equal to the number of Senators and Representatives the State has in the U.S. Congress. The sole function of these electors is to cast two votes, one for a President and one for a Vice President. Those votes are cast within the State on a specified day. These votes are transmitted, sealed, to Congress, and then the electoral college ceases to exist. In Congress the votes from all of the 50 States are opened and counted. The person receiving a majority of electoral college votes for President is elected President. So also with regard to the Vice President. If there is no majority vote for a President, then the House of Representatives votes, one vote per State, and elects the President. If there is no majority vote for Vice President, then the Senate votes and elects a Vice President (since he also will serve as President of the Senate). Thus, the election of a President has nothing to do with the people themselves, according to the Constitution. The full power, Constitutionally, rests with the State Legislatures of the fifty States. The idea of having a popular vote for President and Vice President, is therefore unconstitutional, and has become a way of promoting the power of political parties (which also are not provided for in the Constitution) and making people believe that ours is a democracy instead of a Representative Republic.

Much the same might be said of National Political Party Conventions. They are spectacular and impressive circuses with worldwide TV coverage. The Party delegates meet to applaud selected speakers, to approve selected pre-written planks for pre-constructed platforms that will soon be forgotten, and to vote for pre-selected nominees who are chosen not on the basis of their character, integrity and loyalty to God and Country; but are chosen on the basis of their popularity, vote-getting ability, and loyalty to Party and Special Interests.

There is no Constitutional provision providing for such conventions, or even for national political parties. Many years ago we wrote something that we find quoted now and then, but never to our knowledge challenged. We wrote: "The original Constitution made no provision for the formation, organization or legislation of political parties; and the majority of the writers of the Constitution were as much against the idea of political parties as they were against democracy, since one led to the other and both led to tyranny." This was not an original observation. President George Washington, in his Farewell Address, had said: "The alternate domination of one faction (political party) over another, sharpened by the spirit of revenge natural to party dissension, which in different ages and countries has perpetuated the most horrid enormities, is itself a frightful despotism. But this leads at length to a more formal and permanent despotism..." Noah Webster, the Revolutionary War veteran and lexicographer after whom most of our dictionaries are named even today, also had something to say about political parties: "Never, my friend, degrade yourself by an unhallowed alliance with a political party that assumes the right of controlling all public affairs, to the exclusion of other citizens who have equal rights and equal property to defend, and equal claims to a share in the management of that property." And listen to Thomas Jefferson who, along with the Adams family, is often praised or blamed for the organization of political parties in the United States. He wrote to a friend: "I am not a Federalist, because I never submitted the whole system of my opinions to the creed of any party of men whatever in religion, in philosophy, in politics, or in anything else where I was capable of thinking for myself. Such an addiction is the last degradation of a free and moral agent. If I could not get to heaven but with a party, I would not go there at all."

There was some justification for the existence of National Political Parties so long as there were clear, distinct and understandable policy differences of real significance; such as States Rights vs Federal Centralism, "high tariff" vs "low tariff," etc. But in this age of bipartisan politics when party differences are merely matters of degree or amount, when Socialists can be found in the Republican, Democratic, or Communist Parties, or running as an Independent, what meaning has a party label? In this Year of our Lord 1980, the idea of running a Democrat against a Republican in an unconstitutional popular election for the Presidency of the United States, seems meaningless and even farcical, except for its entertainment and brainwashing value. We might think differently if, say, one party were known to be controlled by the Trilateralist Commissioners, and the other party were free of such control. But any such distinction is lost when we know that the Reagan inner circle includes two important Trilateralists who are likely to become members of his Cabinet, when and if he is elected President. They are former Treasury Secretary George Shultz, and former HEW Secretary Caspar Weinberger. Not only that, but as of this writing one of the three still considered as Reagan's potential running mate is former Trilateralist George Bush.

Please understand, we are talking about a Presidential election, not about the State-held elections for U.S. Senators and Representatives. They are Representatives of the people, are responsible to the people, and should be held responsible to the people and to the Constitution, and not to any political party or special interest. We should demand of them character, integrity, honesty, and true allegiance to the Constitution which they have sworn to uphold. And, if they do not meet these standards, it is our duty do everything that in within our power to kick them out. A recent analysis of major votes by the people we helped place in the Senate by affirmation or omission, revealed that:

- * An amendment to cut federal spending by $16.4 billion was defeated by only 3 votes.
- * An amendment to prohibit forced busing of school children was defeated by 3 votes.
- * The Roth amendment to stop all inter-district busing for racial balance was defeated by only 2 votes.
- * The Hayakawa amendment to terminate the Department of Education after six years was beaten by just 2 votes.
- * The McClure amendment to prohibit payment of war reparations to Viet Nam was rejected by 2 votes.
- * An amendment to restrict production of the neutron bomb was passed by a single vote.
- * Ratification of the Panama Canal Treaties passed by a single vote.

Dr. George Benson, commenting on the above, wrote: "... It is quite obvious that a very small change in the make-up of the Senate can have a profound effect on future domestic as well as foreign policies. The necessary changes in Washington can only come about if pro-Americans go to the polls and vote for pro-American candidates. Study the records of the candidates. Pay no attention to what they say; study how they voted if incumbents, A person who does not vote for pro-Americans is part of the problem. Resolve this year to be a part of the solution."

Politics once was called the science of government. Today it is considered a compliment when one refers to politics as the art of compromise. Actually, it has become a profession, a job at which a person works for a fat salary with fringe benefits unheard of in other professions. When he retires or is retired he does so on a pension that makes pensions in other professions seem like a widow's social security benefits. There are, of course, honest people's representatives who remain honest and serve their constituents and their country to the best of their ability for the duration of their public service. There are quite a few of them in Washington and in State capitals. Their lists should be much longer come next November 5th. But it must be realized that any elected representative, once he occupies a public office, especially one in Washington, D.C., is an immediate object of pressure from the so-called Eastern Establishment on the one hand, and Labor Monopolists on the other (this year, it has come especially from the NEA, the government workers and the health care workers unions). There are additional pressures on your representative from many very special Special Interests. Therefore, your elected representative - no matter how dedicated he may be - is almost sure to capitulate, unless he also receives pressure on the one hand and support on the other hand from the people who led him into temptation by sending him to that "seat of Satan" that we called our Nation's Capitol. Furthermore, it should be understood that for the anti-Americans and the advocates of the New World Order, it is comparatively easy to buy, blackmail, or otherwise enslave one man, such as a President. It is far more difficult to buy, blackmail or otherwise enslave the majority of the 100 members of the U.S. Senate. And it is yet more difficult to buy, blackmail or otherwise enslave a majority of the 435 members of the US House of Representatives. But, looking at it from our side of the arena, while it is comparatively impossible for mere voters to bring effective pressure on a President of the United States, it is certainly possible for a State constituency to control or kick out a Senator. And it is even a bit easier for a Congressional District's constituency to control or kick out a Representative, this especially in an election year, which is every other year in the case of Representatives. But, as any freedom warrior should know, the battle starts at one's own doorpost, then extends to the ward, to the County, the State and at the last to the federal level. You can't start at the top and repair a Republic. As a very astute political analyst and American historian (Clarence Carson) has written:

"There is undoubtedly much political action needed to undo much of what has been done in the last half century or so... But political action from a people whose independence has rendered them subservient would be little to the purpose. Republican government can hardly rise above its source in the people. It is the spirit of independence which produces independence. It is the habit of independence which maintains it. If we wait until the Federal Reserve system has been abolished to retire our personal debts, we will never be prepared to favor its abolition. If we wait to practice independent habits until the programs which foster dependence are abolished, we could not endure it when it happened. When we have men who have resolutely trod the path of personal independence we shall have men who are worthy of political office, because they will be men, by and large, who do not want it. Then, we will have political action to the purpose. Benjamin Franklin believed that personal independence was essential to individual morality. George Washington believed that national independence was essential to right action by nations. Thomas Jefferson believed that only men who looked up to heaven for their wellbeing would keep alive the love of liberty. Their vision of independence is surely worth recalling, and a day on which the spirit was rekindled would be worth celebrating." (unquote).

"THE GREAT AMERICAN SALON" is the deceptive name given to the Aspen Institute for Humanistic Studies by Newsweek magazine in its current (7/14) issue. Newsweek admits that "Aspen has now developed into a global forum of idea-mongering," notes that Aspen helped indoctrinate Jimmy Carter prior to his move into the White House. Newsweek quotes a few luminaries concerning Aspen, says "thanks to its vast nexus of corporate, academic and governmental names (it is able) to convene an instant conference on almost anything," but then downgrades the think-tank by concluding that "it seems to have grown on its own self-inflating momentum of designing programs to attract funds and raising funds to support programs. Along the way, it has begun to hunger for 'clout.' And in that process, Aspen seems to have lost the innocent faith with which it began."

We beg to differ. Aspen began as a kind of silent big sister of the now fading and unimportant Center for the Study of Democratic Institutions. Both had the same parentage: Rockefeller and the family's Chicago University, which also begat the Regional Governance's "1313." Aspen recently has opened new headquarters at Wye Plantation in Maryland near Washington, D.C., has offices in Berlin, Jerusalem, Tokyo and Hawaii as well as in the original Aspen, Colorado headquarters. Recently Aspen conducted a Summit in Berlin comparable to the Trilateral Commission's Summit in London. It's real "clout" in global affairs was best summarized by Michael Lord Chadwick, editor of the Freeman Digest. We quote:

"Many people have asked this question: Where do the leading officials of the Trilateral Commission, the White House, the Ford Foundation, the Rockefeller Foundation, the Exxon Corporation, the Brookings Institute, the New York Times, The Observer International, Die Zeit, The IBM Corporation, Goldman Sachs and Company, the International Institute for Strategic Studies, Xerox Corporation, the Citibank, the U.N. University, the Milbank, the Tweed, the Hadley and McCloy Firm, the World Bank, the Council on Foreign Relations, the University of Chicago, Sophio University, the Coca-Cola Co., the Chase Manhattan Bank, etc. go for advanced seminars in global ideology and humanistic studies? The not so obvious answer is Aspen, Colorado. To those who travel in high circles Aspen is not just a mountain retreat - famous for its majestic mountains and exhilarating skiing - it is a place where the world's elite gather to consider the problems of governance and to set forth possible plans for the future of humanity."

What Newsweek calls "The Great American Salon" is really The Great Global Temple to Humanism, is a companion to the Trilateral Commission, the Bilderbergers, the CFR and other edifices of The New World Order.

AGAIN, AN ECHO, NOT A CHOICE

At the recently concluded circus-type extravaganza known as the Republican Party National Convention, the Constitution of the United States actually was mentioned, even regarded in an indirect way. It happened when this Nation's one and only appointed President, Gerald Ford, was considering the offer to become Ronald Reagan's running mate. Ford and Reagan both are registered as citizens of the same State - California. And Ford recalled that the Constitution says "the electors (in the Electoral College) shall meet in their respective States and vote by ballot for President and Vice-President, one of whom, at least, shall not be an inhabitant of the same State with themselves." Ford figures this might raise quite a Constitutional hassle if he and Reagan ran on the same ticket, unless one of them suddenly moved and took up residence in another State. Ford refused the offer on other grounds, so the Constitutional question will not be raised. However, the Big Question was not Constitutional at all; it was Trilateral.

This is a personal analysis, and we could be wrong. But it is our opinion that Reagan was made to realize that, if he hoped to win in November, he would be forced to make peace with the Trilateralists. That's when the crusade to get Ford as a running mate began. Reagan and Ford don't really like each other, but the latter is not as closely identified with the Eastern Establishment as is George Bush. True, Ford had appointed Nelson Rockefeller as his Vice President, but unlike Nixon, Kissinger, Brzezinski, and others, Ford was never on Rockefeller's payroll and he was never a member of the CFR or the TLC - though he had attended a Bilderberger meeting now and then. And, even more importantly, Ford would have been acceptable to the conservative wing of the GOP, as well as to the Eastern Establishment. But Reagan and Ford couldn't come to terms, and it had to be Bush. Our local Cox-chain morning paper, the West Palm Beach Post, pointed out how unpopular Bush was with the conservative wing of the GOP, quoted Mike Thompson who said there had been a 35-minute meeting with Reagan, attended by himself, Phyllis Schlafly, Sen. Gordon Humphrey, Rev. Jerry Falwell, anti-abortion leader Nelly Gray, Conservative Caucus Director Howard Philips and others. They told Reagan: "Literally millions of Americans... would again stay at home in November if George Bush is on the ticket." Said the Post: "...the prime reason for the anti-Bush feeling is based on his membership on the Council on Foreign Relations and on the Trilateral Commission, a foreign policy study group headed by banker David Rockefeller. Many conservatives see these groups as advocating one-world government controlled by a small group of bankers and others in the power elite." Ergo, our conclusion that with Reagan's selection of George Bush as his Vice-Presidential nominee, he has surrendered to the same group that has dictated our foreign policy ever since Jimmy Carter entered the White House. So, we still have an echo, and not a choice.

What can we do about this? Well, we agree that casting a meaningless popular vote next November 4th is a waste of time and effort. But if we go back to the fundamentals of that Federal Constitution which Jerry Ford mentioned in passing, and proceed on the assumption that that Document is still the Law of the Land, some very effective work can be accomplished. Let's review a few of the fundamentals that should be remembered, and honored:

First, let's abolish the idea that this is supposed to be a democracy, or a democracy within a republic, and all the other silly notions associated with this fabrication, including the notion that a direct vote for the President and Vice-President has any importance whatsoever. An outstanding feature and a chief merit of our Federal Constitution is that it provides for a strictly representative form of government, and in Article IV, Section 4, it guarantees a representative (republican) form of government for each State. A Republic, in the sense intended and spelled out by the writers of our Constitution, is a form of government in which the political power is vested in regularly elected representatives who have the authority to act and decide public questions. A democracy, on the other hand, is a form of government in which the people speak and act directly on public questions. James Madison said it clearly:

"Democracies have ever been spectacles of turbulence and contention; have ever been found incompatible with personal security or the rights of property; and have in general been as short in their lives as they have been violent in their death.... A republic, by which I mean a government in which the scheme of representation takes place, opens a different prospect, and promises the cure for which we are seeking."

One of the very first important violations of our scheme of representative government came with the creation of direct primaries, an idea which almost died but then was revived to manifest itself mightily in this current national election. Then came the 17th Amendment which provided for the direct election of United States Senators. Now we are faced with the "democratic" demand for a direct election of United States Presidents and Vice-Presidents. Just imagine how much cheaper, less corrupt and more efficient it would be if we the people concentrated on the one task and exercised the greatest possible care, in the election of our State Representatives, and then let them select those electors who would then elect our Presidents and Vice-Presidents (as the Constitution dictates); and who would also select the United States Senators to represent the States, while the Representatives whom we elected represent the people! This would be the beginning of a return to truly representative government - that form of government which made our Nation truly great before we began to "make the world safe for democracy."

By concentrating on the proposition of restoring good and proper government at the State level, we would also be striking a blow toward reducing the federal government to the size and limited power originally intended for it. All of us seem to have forgotten that in Article I, Section 8 of the Constitution, the functions of the federal government are carefully enumerated. There is a general grant to pay and collect taxes, duties and excises (but no tax on incomes until passage of the 16th Amendment in 1913). Then, there is the careful enumeration of the only purposes for which those taxes and duties may be levied. They are to:

- * Borrow money on federal credit.
- * Regulate commerce with foreign nations and between the several States.
- * Establish uniform rules for naturalization and bankruptcies.
- * Coin money, regulate its value and the value of foreign coins, and fix the standards of weights and measures.
- * Punish counterfeiters of coin and the securities of the United States.
- * Establish post offices and post roads.
- * Establish a system of copyrights and patents.
- * Provide for courts inferior to the Supreme Court.
- * Define and punish piracies and felonies on the high seas and make rules governing captures on land and sea.
- * Raise and support armies, but appropriations for such purposes can last but two years.

- * Maintain a navy.
- * Make rules governing land and naval forces. Provide for calling the militia to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrections or repel invasion.
- * Exercise exclusive jurisdiction over the Nation's capital and places purchased in States for federal purposes.
- * Make all laws necessary and proper for carrying into effect the foregoing powers, and all other powers vested by the Constitution in the government of the United States or any department or officer thereof.

Only for these specific and enumerated purposes may the Congress raise taxes and pay out tax money. So says the Constitution. Also, there are strict bans on the Executive taking over the functions of the Legislative branch, or of the Courts proclaiming Laws of the Land via judicial decrees. The whole purpose of the framers of our Constitution was to bring into existence a new form of government; one that possessed all the powers necessary to defend the Nation from foreign enemies, and to guarantee to all citizens certain unalienable and fundamental rights of free men - and to leave to the several and independent Republics within the Union the rest of the powers that might seem to them essential to the governing of a free people. Nowhere in the Constitution is the federal government given the power to invade the States and assert authority over every county and neighborhood in the land. Commerce between the States but not within the States; this was the strict limitation.

But there were certain men and groups of men who wanted, for their own purposes, to convert this Representative Republic into a Social Democracy, like those that were being developed in Europe. And the socialist society that the subverters and perverters envisioned required powerful central government that would have control over the economic life of the people. It was the Fabian Socialist George Bernard Shaw who wrote: "Those who resist socialism fight against principalities and powers in economic places." These "principalities and powers in economic places" wanted a government that, in the words of the late John T. Flynn:

"...could own the railroads, all electric power, all the great instruments of communication. It would assert ownership (or control-Ed.) over all of the great natural resources of the nation - coal, iron, copper, oil. It would own banks, all the agencies of savings and insurance. It would own or regulate all our farms and mines, operating what it believed suited its purposes and subjecting the others to its regulations. It would assert the right to tax and tax, demanding the bulk of the profits from our industries and a heavy cut on whatever income a private citizen might have. It would be a government endowed with such vast and compulsive powers that, once any political or economic group got possession of its dread machinery, no man would dare lift his hand against it." (unquote).

As a member of the United States Congress, James Madison, later to become the fourth President of the United States, saw what was to become of the Nation if the economic power was misused. A bill was introduced to provide relief for Cape Cod fishermen who were having economic troubles. Speaking in debate against this first welfare bill, Madison said:

"If Congress can employ money indefinitely to the general welfare, and are the sole judges of the general welfare, they may take the care of religion into their own hands; they may appoint teachers in every State, County and Parish and pay them out of the public treasury; they may take into their own hands the education of children, establishing in like manner schools throughout the Union; they may assume the provision of the poor... Were the power of Congress to be established in the latitude contended for, it would subvert the very foundations, and transmute the very nature of the limited government established by the people of America."

Madison's sound argument against the misuse and misunderstanding of the general welfare clause in the Constitution caused this first attempt at a welfare bill to be defeated. Thomas Jefferson was delighted, and wrote to his friend Albert Gallatin that this "will settle forever the meaning of this phrase which, by a mere grammatical quibble, has countenanced the general government in a claim of universal power." Of course, Madison's prediction proved to be correct, but Jefferson was too optimistic. Misuse and misinterpretation of those two words, general welfare, has caused double-digit inflation, an astronomical public debt, has given the government a claim to "universal power," and has transmuted our government from a Representative Republic to a Social Democracy. What Jefferson thought was a dead issue was like a beast wounded unto death, but which lived and rose up again and again in the Halls of Congress, finally to enslave a whole people.

There were two other words in the Constitution that were also misinterpreted deliberately. They were Interstate Commerce. And these four magic words: General Welfare and Interstate Commerce, were plucked out of context, were given wholly new meanings by the collectivist revolutionaries who were subverting and perverting the meaning of our federal Constitution. But, trying to change this and restore our Republic by electing a good President is futile. If a George Washington, a James Madison or a Thomas Jefferson were elected in the Year of our Lord 1980, nothing could be done by such a President to alter the course of our destruction. However, if a few men like James Madison and our other Founders could be sent to Congress in 1980, things could happen - if the people would support a Madison, a Jefferson, or a Washington today.

What we mean is this: Action at the federal level is futile unless it is to repeal Constitutional Amendments like the 16th and 17th, instead of adding new ones; and unless it is to repeal federal laws and regulations instead of passing new ones. The real battle is local and personal, and the real war is The Struggle for State Sovereignty. In the beginning some Independent Republics had their selected representatives draw up a contract to establish a federal agent. The Principals were the States and the people, the Contract was the United States Constitution, and the contracted agent was the Federal Government. Now federal agents and regional revolutionaries have usurped the constitutional powers of the Principals. The people and the States are burdened by these illegal acts because the States have failed to challenge the violations of the Contract by their Agent. State Legislators are elected by the people in direct local elections. This is where you can make your vote really count. As Col. Arch Roberts, a national leader who is on the right track, has said: "...The people are the government. But, no amount of agonizing to a distant congressman will preserve your rights. Only you, acting through your local and State officials, can restore the Constitution. Only then may you bequeath to your children the same freedoms you have enjoyed because of the struggle and sacrifice of your ancestors." So, make your vote count where your vote can count.

HEAR HOW THE HUMANISTS HOWL AND THE SOCIALISTS SQUEAL!!

The Social Actionists have had their own way with little organized opposition ever since their founding saint Walter Rauschenbusch published his Christian Socialist Manifesto, A Technology for the Social Gospel, in 1917. Borrowing their strategy of gradualism from the Fabian Society of London and using such organizations as the World and National Councils of Churches as their headquarters, they have prospered and polluted both organized church and state. Enlisting such Fabian-type preachers and promoters as Harry Ward, George Herron, Harry Emerson Fosdick, Eugene Carson Blake, G. Bromley Oxnam, and scores of others, they proceeded to crash into the field of politics under the assumption that it was their mission to build up the Kingdom of Heaven on earth, and then invite Jesus to come down and run it for them, after they had established it, allegedly in His Name. Their social action program, being almost identical to that of all other socialist programs, naturally attracted the Humanists, Feminists, One Worlders, and Collectivists who preferred carrots over sticks.

But now, and rather suddenly, these same Social Activists, together with the Humanists, Feminists, Gays and Collectivists who flock with them, are complaining to their concept of heaven about the way these "right wing fundamentalists," "full gospel Christians," and "Moral Majority" types have decided to fight back, for God, family, morality and country. The Social Actionists are complaining because the awakening Christians are "mixing politics with religion," disregarding what they term "separation of church and state," and doing those things the social actionists have been doing for over fifty years and in general defending morality, family and country in a manner that really has the humanists howling and the socialists squealing.

The thing that sparked this unexpected Christian reaction to the actions of the Humanists and Social Christians (a contradiction in terms), probably was that Fabian-type program which was designed to eliminate independent nations, to destroy the family structure, and to make all children wards of the government. We might describe that program as "a trilogy within a trilogy within a decade." The decade refers to the UN-sponsored "International Womens Decade" which recently resulted in a riot led by feminists and lesbians in Copenhagen, Denmark, with the police jailing scores of them. Here in the United States, this UN-sponsored program was divided into three parts forming a trilogy. There was the International Womens Year (IWY), this followed by the "International Year of the Child (ITC), and finally the "White House Conference on Families" (WHCF), another trilogy that was featured by three different conferences and none of them held in the White House, but in Baltimore, Minneapolis, and Los Angeles. The Review of the News of July 23 reported accurately:

"Los Angeles, July 13 - The third phase of the White House Conference on Families concluded today with 613 delegates from 19 western states and four territories supporting resolutions endorsing abortion, the Equal Rights Amendment, teenage access to contraceptives, and housing laws to protect all 'families' regardless of sexual preference. The 57 recommendations will be sent to a National Task Force, which will collate them with recommendations from similar meetings in Baltimore and Minneapolis and forward a final report to President Carter and Congress...."

Marilyn Kreitling of Searcy, Arkansas, an elected delegate who attended the Minneapolis conference summed it up in these well chosen words: "The White House Conference on Families was not the people talking to the government about their feelings on families. It was the government talking to the government, telling the government what the government had already decided that it wanted to hear, and what it wants to be enacted into legislation, against the wishes of the grass roots. This whole conference, just like the International Womens Year and the International Year of the Child, was a fraud from start to finish."

The following background information seems important, if perhaps repetitive: In August 1978, Congress endorsed the concept of a White House Conference on the Family. The name was later changed to the White House Conference on Families, to accomodate the homosexual lifestyle. President Carter appointed a 41-member National Advisory Committee with the help of the then HEW head Califano. Humanists, feminists, pro-abortionists, and pro-ERA people comprised 40 of the 41 appointees. When the International Year of the Child was launched, national leaders said they would feel the 1979 IYC activities highly successful if they did nothing more than "raise the consciousness of the nation concerning the needs of children." Building on this foundation they then used the WHCF to gain stronger support for specific plans; for re-defining "family" to pave the way for legislation involving "gay rights" and federally-controlled child development plans.

Federal control of children "from conception to pre-birth abortion or post-life cremation" has been the aim of the social actionists from the very start of this Godless humanistic programming. Actually, the plans now being activated were formulated ten years ago at the 1970 White House Conference on Children. But the plans approved at that time were so radical that they would have been unacceptable at that time. But the activists were also gradualists. They understood that time was required to "condition" people into acceptance of the plans; and the International Womens Decade, the IWY, the IYC, and the WHCF were all parts of the conditioning process, a favorite method of Fabian conquest.

In this connection, a recent report by Barbara Morris which appears in the July 1980 issue of The National Educator is important. Co-author with Joan M. Masters of the book "Betraying America in the Schools," author and publisher of the more recent "Change Agents in the Schools," editor of the Barbara M. Morris Report and columnist for The National Educator, we consider her the best informed person in her particular and important field. Quote:

"Those who were in the education battle 10 years ago will recall with a shudder the 'dastardly duo' that kept a lot of parents in a frenzy for a long time; The Report of the Joint Commission on the Mental Health of Children and the 1970 Report of the White House Conference on Children. Between the covers of these two documents are the most putrageous plans of socialist schemers for government control of ALL children. While many of the recommendations of these two documents were relegated to the trash can (primarily for lack of funds for implementation) still many other recommendations were gradually worked into federally devised and funded programs....Dated March 1980, the California Office of State-wide Health Planning and Development prepared and published "Issues in Planning Services for California Children and Youth." Basically, this is what it recommends:

"Neighborhood schools would be turned into Children's Service Centers, open 7 days a week, all year and 24 hours a day if needed. ALL children ages 0-13 would be eligible for services which would include everything from family planning to day care to 'opportunities for community service.'...From ages 13-17 ALL children would attend Career Preparation Centers, which would replace high schools as we now know them.... These Prep Centers would provide a combination of career education and (again) the opportunity for community service. The entire community would become the classroom. (What this proposes in effect, is the 'community education' concept which would provide a 'supermarket' of state-determined services for all children). The third level of the plan would require all youth, ages 17-19, regardless of gender, and without exception, to spend two years as full time public servants. Such public service could be in nursing homes, mental hospitals, child care, environmental protection, urban renewal - the list is extensive. Of course, youths would be paid for their mandatory service - at the minimum wage. The system would be administered by local community colleges. This would become their new primary function....

"...Parents in other states may want to have a copy of this document because sooner or later, something similar will pop up where they are. For a copy, write to: Office of State-wide Health Planning and Development, 714 P Street, Room 1010, Sacramento, CA 95814. There's no guarantee the bureaucrats will give you one, but it's worth a try. (Editor's Note: Taxpayers are paying the socialists to train their children to be socialists. Yet another type of "child service" is about to be offered to the citizens of the State of Maine. The following letter-to-the-editor of the Republican - Journal of Belfast, Maine was written by Marion Tucker-Honeycutt of that city. Letter is quoted as it was published on July 3, 1980:

"Knock-Knock."

"Who's there?"

"Your home health visitor."

"Home health visitor who?"

"Home health visitor who is sent to you by the government to assess your suitability as a parent. Governor Brennan's 'Task Force on Maternal and Child Health' wants mandated reporters that will collect data regarding your children, to set standards for your child, to evaluate..."

"Wait, wait. WHO?"

"Your home health visitor, as outlined in the Preliminary Recommendations Document. You can get a copy by calling Donna Overcash at the state house, 289-2636. Hopefully, I will receive a mandate to come into every home where there is a woman of child bearing age and/or any children from birth to 18. I will assess your family function, your parent-child relationship, teach parenting skills, evaluate suspected abuse of neglect, emotional trauma, or any one of any other clues, even though no current problem may exist. The Task Force wants a mandate that will assure that 'ALL' children, including yours, will receive a designated portion of available mental health services."

"Even though my children have no current problems?"

"ALL children. These are called 'intervention programs'."

"Sounds like it. Just what is your definition of health?"

"Well, according to the Governor's Task Force...."

"FORCE seems the right word."

"The description of health will be based on a 'broad definition,' to include the psychosocial, developmental aspects and anticipatory guidance (which should cover anything we may have forgotten) in childhood behavior, etc. Most of all, we believe in intervention."

"I get the message. What's left for the parent? Why do you feel that total take-over of family, making our children wards of the state, is justified?"

"It's obvious, as we point out that families, physicians and other available services are 'inadequate,' 'inefficient,' and 'insufficient.'"

"All areas of government expertise?"

"We explain that 'the physical examination has a fairly low yield in terms of uncovering undetected diseases in well children.'"

"Would you run that by again?"

"As the Task Force states on page 22: 'The home health visitor is in a better position to assess the variety of factors involved in child health, including environmental and psychosocial factors. We're also going to get our entire program into....'"

"Your indoctrination program?"

"Ah, into the school system, with government mandate to teach sex education, values clarification, etc., into every grade, starting with kindergarten."

"Wasn't that mandate already struck down in the other health program and left up to local control, and isn't it against the Hatch Amendment?"

"Yes, that's why we're trying to sneak it in here."

"What are your credentials?"

"I just got out of high school. The home health visitor....."

"Government snoop?"

"...is a person of at least high school education but with no necessary formal health training."

"And you are going to assess what's best for my children? You know better than we parents, physicians, health nurses, etc.? This is all proposed in the Governor's Task Force on Maternal and Child Care?"

"Yes, 62 pages...."

"Have you heard of the other task force?"

"Which one?"

"The Citizen's Task Force for the Prevention of Government Intervention Programs to protect the sovereignty of family."

"No."

"It's just being formed. Anyone interested or who wants more information on the Citizen's Task Force call (or write) me. Marion Tucker-Honeycutt, P.O. Box 226, Belfast, Maine 04925." (Unquote).

The foregoing is not unusual. It's becoming typical of grass roots reaction to The Great Awakening. And because Christian Americans use the weapons that Social Actionists have used for decades, there is much weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth. May the reactions continue and grow in power and scope.

THE CO-PRESIDENCY CONCEPT

The unconstitutional plan for creating a Co-Presidency for the United States almost came to fruition at the Republican Party's National Convention held in Detroit in July, 1980. Had the proposed team of Reagan and Ford been nominated and then elected in November, the plan would have succeeded, and also would have been accepted by the people. This is a scheme that has been in the minds of the Power Brokers for decades and Henry Kissinger, acting as agent of the Trilateral Commission, came within the blink of an eyelash of selling it to Ronald Reagan. An official explained: "It would have involved making Ronald Reagan into a sort of ceremonial head of state, roughly along the lines of the British sovereign, with Gerald Ford becoming the real chief of government, more or less like a British prime minister. Then, Henry Kissinger was scheduled to serve as the administration's chief of staff, functioning somewhat like a multinational corporation's chief executive officer." Terry Dobbs, in an exclusive report to Spotlight, wrote:

"Appointed principal negotiator for a Reagan-Ford alliance, Henry Kissinger made ever-steeper demands of the Reagan camp in return for Ford's consent to join the ticket. Casting aside the Constitutional definition of the vice presidency, Kissinger urged that the office be granted unprecedented powers while Ford occupied it, including:

- * The right to make key appointments to major agencies.
- * The right to name White House personnel, including senior staffers to the National Security Council.
- * Control over the 'paperwork' of senior officials - that is, a new arrangement under which such crucial executives as the directors of the CIA and the FBI would report to the Vice President instead of the President.
- * Appointment of Kissinger as Secretary of State."

Ford was so certain that Kissinger had completed the deal that he told Walter Cronkite about it, the latter announced to the world that the "Co-Presidency" had been agreed upon; some newspapers came out with headlines announcing a Reagan-Ford ticket. But at the very last minute, Reagan decided that he was conceding too much power to a potential Vice-President, rejected the scheme. But it was essential to Reagan that he make his peace with the Power Brokers if he were to stand a chance of becoming President. So, while rejecting Ford, he named George Bush as his teammate, Bush being a TLC-man from the very beginning of the campaign. Furthermore, as an added concession to the Power Brokers, Reagan selected Anne Armstrong as a chief adviser and probably his choice for Secretary of State if he wins. Armstrong was one of the very first women invited to join the Council on Foreign Relations when that elitist club went "co-educational." To further solidify himself with Rockefeller's Trilateral Commission, Reagan has Caspar Weinberger all set for the job of secretary of Health and Human Services and George Shultz as Treasury Secretary, both men being on Rockefeller's team as well as Reagan's team. So, it seems that Reagan has been able to satisfy the so-called Eastern Establishment without accepting Ford as his Co-President. But, as we said, this scheme to have the United States managed by Co-Presidents has been a long-standing dream and, since the turn of the century, many variations on this theme have been tried.

Back in 1908 the American Historical Society authorized, edited and published the "First Draft of a Constitution for the United States of the World." In this proposed One World Constitution, the executive department was unique. It was to be "vested in one individual, whose title shall be the Peacemaker, and five associate individuals, the first of whom shall be the Co-Adjutor Peacemaker. The second associate shall be a woman, and the other three associates shall consist of one selected from each of the three great races of the world - the Caucasian, the Mongolian, and the Ethiopian. Their titles shall be respectively, First, Second, Third and Fourth Assistant Co-Adjutor Peacemaker..."

Some ten years later something new was to be added; following the creation of the League of Nations. Prior to U.S. entry into WWI a group of 'intellectuals' had been assembled by Col. House to plan the reshaping of the world when the war had ended. Known as "The Inquiry," this forerunner of what became the Council on Foreign Relations went to Paris to help write a peace treaty. They became associated with members of the Rhodes-inspired, Rothschild-financed and Milne-directed British Round Table. Together they formed the British Institute of International Affairs (now known as Chatham House) and a companion American Institute of International Affairs (now known as the Council on Foreign Relations). On June 17, 1919 there was a constituent meeting and the following report was approved:

"Until recent years it was usual to assume that in foreign affairs each government must think mainly, if not entirely, of the interests of its own people. In founding the League of Nations, the Allied Powers have now recognized that national policies ought to be framed with an eye to the welfare of Society at large...."

Need we explain the meaning, or the intent, of such a statement? Twenty-one Americans, members of "The Inquiry," voted unanimously to approve this resolution. When they returned to the United States they became the nucleus for the Council on Foreign Relations, which was pledged to carry out this pledge that U.S. foreign policy should be in the best interests of a World Community instead of the United States. To students of The Conspiracy, the names of the twenty-one should be important. They were Col. E. M. House, Commissioner of the U.S.; Gen. Tasker Bliss, Commissioner of the U.S.; Herbert Hoover, advisor to President Wilson on Relief; Thomas W. Lamont, Adviser to President Wilson on Finance; George Barr Baker, aide to Herbert Hoover; Martin Egan, Aide to Thomas Lamont; Christian Herter, Aide to Commissioner Henry White; Whitney Shepardson, Aide to Commissioner House; Captain Tracy Kitt-ridge, U.S. Naval War College; George Louis Beer, Authority on British Colonies; Archibald Coolidge, Harvard University; Clive Day, Yale University; Louis H. Gray, Editor of Learned Publications; Charles Haskins, Harvard U.; Stanley Hornbeck, U. of Wisconsin; Manley O. Hudson, Harvard Law School; Douglas Johnson, Columbia U.; Robert H. Lord, Harvard U.; James Brown Scott, Carnegie Endowment; Charles Seymour, Yale U.; and James T. Shotwell, Columbia U. These are the men who, with others of House's "The Inquiry" such as Dean Acheson and the Dulles brothers, began to place International interests above National interests on their foreign policy dealings.

This led to the concept that foreign policy should not be framed by an elected President, but by an elitist group of "intellectuals," not all of whom even need to be United States citizens! Added impetus was given to this concept when in 1923 Frank Vanderlip of the National City Bank of New York went to England for a long series of conferences with the London bankers who formed what was known as "The Empire of the City" - that is, the coterie of International Bankers who cared not who made a Nation's laws so long as they could control the Nation's money. Vanderlip returned to say that, in matters of foreign policy, "Instead of a duly elected President and his Cabinet, a Council of Foreign Relations, composed of twenty-five members elected for a long term of years, and at least thirty percent of them always abroad, should pilot the destinies of this country in relation with foreign governments." (From a report by David Hirshfield, then Commissioner of Accounts of the City of New York, dated May 25, 1923 and reprinted in the book "And Men Wept," by Catherine Palfrey Baldwin, published in 1954).

It should be noted in passing that International Banker Vanderlip's proposal has been at least partially fulfilled with the creation of International Banker David Rockefeller's Trilateral Commission, an international organization with officers and an executive committee composed of 40 members, more than 50% of whom reside permanently in Europe, England, Japan, and/or Canada, and who "pilot the destinies of this country in relation to foreign governments" by means of regularly scheduled Summit meetings in various parts of the world.

But, getting back to our report on the development of the Co-Presidency concept in the United States; a first step was taken when Woodrow Wilson became President and relegated the management of foreign affairs to his 'alter ego,' Col. E.M. House. This didn't work out as expected because Wilson went to the Paris peace conference and began interfering with House's plans for control of the post-war world. The two split, never to be reconciled. So, the idea of this kind of a Co-Presidency languished until the time of FDR. He had a whole set of Co-Presidents but "leave it to Harry (Hopkins)" became a by-word with FDR and his Braintrusters. However, something new was being added:

As the United States was being maneuvered into WWII, the Council on Foreign Relations had "come of age." The CFR had become sufficiently powerful after the Rockefellers had taken over its management and financing, that it was able to take charge of the U.S. State Department. With funds provided by Foundations, a "War and Peace Studies Group" (similar to House's "The Inquiry") was formed and made a part of the State Department, to help plan the post-war world. The group took charge, literally became the State Department. These members of the CFR - several of whom later were proved to be Communists or Fellow Travelers - created the United Nations, managed the Dumbarton Oaks conferences, organized the Bretton Woods conferences, built the IMF and the World Bank, attended all important meetings between Allied Heads of State, and saw to it that the USSR received the bulk of all lend-lease aid - did many other things which now are history, although the part the CFR played in making that history is still suppressed.

A new variation of the Co-Presidency Concept was inaugurated with creation of the National Security Council and the appointment of a special Rockefeller agent as its head. Henry Kissinger acted as Co-President to Richard Nixon. It was Kissinger who controlled NATO, directed the workings of the Atlantic Council, supervised all U.S. intelligence agencies, opened up Red China for exploitation and alliance with America's Eastern Establishment, arranged for Rockefeller's Chase National to open a bank across the street from Moscow's Red Square, etc. But, like Wilson before him, President Nixon didn't remain content with being merely a "ceremonial head" where foreign policy was concerned. He "got into the act," especially with deals involving the late Shah of Iran, and other areas where Rockefeller had special interests. Nixon began as a Rockefeller-man. But after his unprecedented "steam roller" victory in the 1972 election, he began doing things "his own way," and ran afoul of some of the Rockefeller-Eaton-Hammer & Co. plans. Thus came Watergate. It may oversimplification to say that Watergate was arranged for the purpose of getting rid of an Administration that had strayed away from control by the Eastern Establishment, and bring in a Co-Presidency that could be trusted to "do it Rocky's way." Oversimplification or not, that's what happened when Jerry Ford was appointed - not elected - President, and when he in turn appointed Nelson Rockefeller as his Co-President. Significantly, the only man on Nixon's team to come out of Watergate unscathed and unblemished was Henry Kissinger who still serves as the faithful Rockefeller-man who tried to get Jerry Ford back in service as the "operational" Co-President of the United States.

With the incoming of specially trained Jimmy Carter, a "new angle" was tried. Instead of a Co-Presidency, a Co-Staff Concept was inaugurated. Carter had two sets of staffers. One would handle all foreign affairs, and was composed of "retired" members of the Trilateral Commission and/or the Council on Foreign Relations. The other set of staffers would handle domestic affairs only, and would be composed of the "Georgia Mafia," the gang which had been with Jimmy in Georgia, some of whom have been removed by court order or otherwise. The Co-Presidency Concept also was utilized, with Zbigniew Brzezinski handling foreign affairs and Jimmy concentrating on domestic affairs. But, just like Woodrow and Richard before him, Jimmy had to get into the act. The Israeli-Egypt affair and the Camp David meetings were mishandled by Jimmy. He got involved very personally with the aborted attempt to rescue hostages in Iran. Even worse, he sent his mother off to foreign countries to act for him as a "ceremonial head." He sent his wife to South America on a series of diplomatic forays. And then brother Billy got into the act in a really big way.

Present explanations may or may not be true. The President, his brother, his wife, his Attorney General, all seem to be involved. And some kind of crime or crimes have been committed. But the important thing is not the commission of the crimes, but the time of their exposure. All could have been told to the world weeks, even months ago. But charges were held up until the Republican Convention was underway and the Democratic Convention was just weeks away. Another set of facts also were suppressed. Cyrus Vance, a long-time Rockefeller associate, quit in disgust because of the way foreign affairs were being handled. Then, according to Forbes magazine of June 9, page 53, Rockefeller seemed to be writing off Jimmy Carter, because "he hasn't learned."

So, first there was Watergate. Now there is Billygate. Both brought about for the same reasons, and for a similar purpose?

However, don't write off Jimmy yet, open convention or otherwise. Because, TLC and CFR to the contrary notwithstanding, Jimmy has some very solid support from a big portion of Big Labor. Especially from that most important labor union, the National Education Association. He made it a part of Big Government by creating the Department of Education. And all the government worker unions fear that Ronny might come in and fire a few hundred thousand alleged, but unnecessary, "servants of the people." And those who swill at the public troughs just love Jimmy. The bad thing about it all: it's such a good show it's detracting people from the important task of electing the right kind of representatives at State and local levels. Bread and circuses do work, for a time.

THE CHURCH-STATE SEPARATION SYNDROME

Have you happened to notice how so many of today's politicians seeking either election or re-election are suddenly telling their constituents that they are born-again Christians? Or, if they happen to be letter-carrying members of a so-called high church congregation, how they "had an experience" when they were baptized? It seems that, ever since Jimmy Carter used this religiosity gimmick to help him win an election in 1976, calling one's self a Christian has become quite fashionable in political circles, among both Democrats and Republicans. Except, of course, when addressing a Zionist or Communist gathering. An exception to the exceptions: Some politicians really are Christians and to them we humbly apologize and pray that their tribe increase.

But there is a certain grim irony in this current "born again fad": While most of these people who say they are Christians are promoting Socialism and the New World Order, those who act like Christians are being denounced and even persecuted for promoting Christian morality, the Christian definition of family, the Christian Way and Christian Americanism. An example: A few weeks ago hundreds of thousands of fundamentalist and evangelical Christians went to Washington, D.C., thronged the city to call, like Jonah of old, for national repentance lest our fate be like that which threatened ancient Ninevah. They issued a Christian Declaration which spelled out the warning that "Because we have turned from God, God's chastisement is upon us. We now enter a time of maximum peril. Both economic and military debacle confronts us. Resources vital to our survival lie in alien hands. We are opposed by a hostile colossus given to our destruction. The very survival of our civilization is in question."

Now, it is true that this type of protest is not every sincere Christian's "cup of tea." Some resent parade-ground demonstrations. But it cannot be denied that this "Moral Majority" was marching, singing, preaching and praying for national repentance and national righteousness, both of which befit a nation if it is to survive. And, as a result of such action there have been some spectacular successes. There was, for example, the story from Anchorage, Alaska where "under the banner of Moral Majority of Alaska, coalition members unexpectedly swamped party district caucuses last February and elected a majority of the delegates to the state Republican convention...." What could be accomplished in one State might have been accomplished in other States....

But there is this mental stumbling block that immobilizes many Christians: the National Council of Churches has joined with other humanist groups, with gay rights activists, feminists and atheists, in opposing any type of Christian political action on the grounds that this is a 'dangerous mixing of right-wing politics and fundamentalism,' which is a violation of that "sacred principal of the separation of church and state." This is a fiction that has been so firmly implanted in political jargon that it has become one of the best weapons in the armory of tyrants, despots and collectivists. If there ever were such a principal as separation of church and state, then the record will show that Social Actionists, wolves in sheep's clothing working within Christian flocks, under the aegis of the National Council of Churches, were the first to violate any such alleged principal. Then known as the Federal Council of Churches, way back before the New Deal was framed, its leaders began preaching that capitalism was evil, that the profit motive was doomed, that Collectivism and Socialism were inevitable, the "Christian" wave of the future. And if that isn't engaging in State politics under the banner of Church activity, and an outright violation of the alleged separation of church and state, then what is it?

But it is this "Separation Syndrome" which we wish to examine in the light of American history. John Davenport, Puritan clergyman, co-founder of the New Haven Colony (now a part of Connecticut), and pastor of the First Church of Boston in 1667, expressed the early American attitude regarding the relationship of church and state in his then popular "Discourse About Civil Government," first published in 1663. We quote: "...These two different Orders and States, Ecclesiastical and civil, be not set in opposition as contraries, that one should destroy the other, but as co-ordinate states, in the same place, reaching forth help mutually to each other, for the welfare of both according to God..." He went on to explain that Church and State were to cooperate in the attainment of their respective goals, for both were subject to the same God with State dealing primarily with the outward man, and Church with the inner man, both being Godly offices. To put it another way, the State was concerned primarily with Law and Justice, the Church with Grace and Charity. Cooperating with each other, State would establish civil conditions that would enable the Church to promote salvation for individuals and righteousness for the nation. Here was no separation, only cooperation. And this was the understanding of the respective roles of Church and State under God at the time of the ratification of the United States Constitution, and the adoption of the first ten amendments. It was a civil document, not a theological treatise.

And here is where the error crept in: certain corrupters began to say that the First Amendment provided for the separation of Church and State. In rebuttal let it first be understood that in 1791 those first ten amendments were merely restrictions against the federal government. It was only after the adoption of the questionable 14th amendment in 1868 that anyone even thought of them as anything else. It was then that certain jurists began trying to make them applicable to the States as well as to the federal government.

Here was the situation when the U.S. Constitution was adopted. There were thirteen separate and independent States. Each of them had laws respecting religion. Some States had laws limiting the voting privilege to male Christian landowners. Other States had more lenient laws. But there was no "one man, one vote" nonsense. Only property owners with "vested interests" might exercise the franchise. But the laws in all States were Bible-oriented and all had reference to Christianity as being the predominant religion. Therefore, if the Federal government made any law of any kind concerning religion, this would have been considered an invasion of States' Rights. It also would have tended to establish a national church; and religious freedom was a principal reason for the colonization of the Colonies in the first place. So, clergymen in the 13 States as well as others demanded the specific exclusion from religion of the federal government. That's why the first amendment says that "Congress shall make no laws respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof..." This says absolutely nothing about separation of Church and State. It merely affirms that this sphere of law must be left to the States, and the federal government must not interfere.

It should be noted that there is no separation in another sense: the God of the Holy Bible was honored by both State and Church, each according to its own office under the dominion of God. Congress, before and after the ratification of the Constitution, began sessions with divine worship. Whether humanists or atheists like it or not, our motto remains "In God We Trust." Politicians may disregard this even as they disregard the Constitution, but both remain as the standards to which we must repair. Yet another historical item: After adopting the Constitution and its Bill of Rights, Congress re-enacted the Northwest Ordinance, which reads in Article III: "Religion, morality and knowledge being necessary to good government and the happiness of mankind, schools and the means of education shall forever be encouraged." In short, as Rev. Rushdoony wrote in "The Nature of the American System": "What the 13 Christian republics had fought to maintain against a crown and parliament they refused to surrender to a federal government. The freedom of the first amendment from federal interference is not freedom from religion but freedom for religion in the constituent states."

Back in those days when the American colonists were fighting for their independence, there were no radio or television stations, no telephones or movies and few newspapers. The best educated and the most knowledgeable citizens were the clergymen. Most of them had gone to Yale or Harvard, colleges that had been established primarily to train men for the Christian ministry. Most Americans looked to their clergymen for news, for civil as well as spiritual guidance. There certainly was no thought of separation of Church and State – because the ministers before, during and after the Revolution, preached what were called "election sermons." In an election sermon promoting the Revolution of 1776, Rev. Gad Hitchcock of Massachusetts told his congregation:

"Our danger is not visionary, but real – Our contention is not about trifles, but about liberty and property; and not ours alone, but those of posterity, to the latest generation...For however some few...even from among ourselves, appear sufficiently disposed to ridicule the rights of America, and the liberty of subjects, 'tis plain St. Paul, who was a good judge, had a very different sense of them. He was on all occasions for standing not only in the liberties with which Christ had made him free...but also that liberty, with which the laws of nature, and the Roman state, had made him free from oppression and tyranny."

Rev. Samuel West of Dartmouth, in an election sermon in 1776, declared: "They are robbing us of the inalienable rights that the God of nature has given us...and has confirmed to us in his written words....Tyranny and arbitrary power are utterly inconsistent with, and subversive of the very end and design of civil government, and directly contrary to natural law, which is the true foundation of civil government and all politick law; Consequently, the authority of a tyrant is of itself null and void."

And Rev. Elisha Fish in an election sermon explained the relationship between Church and State to his congregation: "The covenant (or constitution) between prince and people most naturally represents the covenant between God and his creatures. God created his people, therefore they are bound by a sacred regard of the covenant of their creator. But the people in a political sense create the prince; therefore this covenant should be maintained with the greatest regard of any social covenant of a civil nature on earth....."

This was the way our Founding Fathers felt about cooperation (not separation) of Church and State: God made a covenant with His people, which He honors, and which he expects His people to honor. In the same manner, God's people make a covenant with their civil government which that government is expected to honor, or else (as the Declaration of Independence explains). Hence, even as with Moses and the Israelites, there is a spiritual covenant and a civil covenant, honored and observed not by separation, but by cooperation, each in its own sphere.

So much for the allegedly sacred principal of Separation of Church and State. However, this is an area where much confusion has occurred, because of the brainwashing that has been performed by social activists and various types of humanists and atheists. So, lest there be any misunderstanding, let us repeat that Church and State, in the Christian sense, are distinct and separate bodies, both ordained of the same God. As it is explained in the Holy Bible, each has its place. They should never amalgamate but they should ever cooperate. In this Report, our reference is to the individual Christian, not to Church as a whole. For the individual Christian is a citizen of "an holy nation" which is the Kingdom of God; he is also a citizen of a nation of this world. Thus, he is a Christian American. He should serve both Church and State to the fullest of his God-given abilities. But he should rightly render to each that which belongs to each. It is not for Church to tell State how to conduct civil government (Law and Justice), or for State to usurp the privileges and duties which pertain to Church. And this is where the confusion and the trend towards totalitarianism began -

Men disguised as Christians and falsely bearing the insignia of Church began to destroy both Church and State by rendering unto State the things that rightly belong to Church. They called it "social action" which rightly are affairs of Church and society, and made them affairs of State. Social Security, Welfare, unemployment compensation, minimum wages, family planning, labor relations, education, housing, mental health, abortion, all these things and more the social actionists relegated to State under the general term, human rights. In short, men falsely representing Church began to Socialize State, and this in the name of Christ! This is the whole history of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ, now known as the National Council of Churches. And they were ably assisted by others who are worse than heathens.

Naturally, people became confused, many knowing not whence came their salvation, or their unalienable rights. Government began to present itself as if it were God Himself. As Rev. Gregg Singer has noted at the conclusion of his "A Theological Interpretation of American History":

"When human government extends its powers and operations to those spheres of human life which God did not render subject to it, government then finds itself in opposition to its divinely bestowed purposes... It is this extension of power into these forbidden areas which has created the modern totalitarian state. When human government enters into the field of labor relations, education, mental and physical health, agriculture, housing, and those other areas of legislation so characteristic of the federal government of today, it leaves its proper functions and enters into those areas of life which God has either ordained that the church or the family should have as their particular sphere of responsibility.... The real problem then, is... the reduction of the scope of government... to those spheres which are already conferred upon it by the Scriptures and the surrender of those extra-biblical powers which liberal political philosophy and practice have given to it during the last hundred years or so. Only then will... freedom be restored to its former and proper place in the life of the American people."

TO MAKE MONEY GOOD AS GOLD

Did you feel slightly sickened while you listened to that surfeit of supposedly salubrious promises of economic recovery being mouthed by politicians at party conventions? The usual political promises that they know, and that we know, can never be kept so long as there is no curb on government overspending and on public trough overswilling? Promises like another twelve billion dollars to be spent to make another eight hundred thousand public jobs; Medicaid funding of abortions; no cutting down on a welfare program merely to balance the budget; panaceas for all our economic, health, housing, education, and "social" programs - a whole bag full of programs designed to spend us into prosperity both nationally and individually. What are we to expect from our present-day crop of economaniacs when, after more than fifty years of Keynesianism, and nearly four years of Trilateralism, things have simply gone from bad to terrible? What can we expect from politicians who prescribe the same old tried and found wanting cures, whether they call themselves Democrats, Republicans or Independents?

Just as a change of pace, we thought you might like to hear about a prescription for our economic sickness that may make sense and even save the dollar. We could take our text from Noah Webster, author of the First American Dictionary of the English Language (1828), and of The Blue-Backed Speller, that sold over 100 million copies in the years before John Dewey went to Bolshevik Russia to learn about "Progressive Education." Webster insisted that "God's Word, contained in the Bible, has furnished all necessary rules to direct our conduct" in individual, family, community, state and national life. That maxim was applied to economics by Dr. Gary North in his book, "An Introduction to Christian Economics" (1973, the Craig Press. This is a Chalcedon Study, but we are no longer sure of its price or availability). Dr. North explains quite simply, and Scripturally, what economics is all about:

"God has cursed the earth. (Gen. 3:17-19). This is the starting point for all economic analysis. The earth no longer gives up her fruit automatically. Man must sweat to eat. Furthermore, among the able-bodied, Paul wrote, 'If any would not work, neither should he eat.' (II Thess. 3:10). All of the speculations of Marxist economists will not find a way for the post-revolution utopian world to avoid the curse of scarcity imposed by the first principle, and none of the government welfare schemes of professional welfare economists will escape the ethical limits of the second. These are the two 'givens' in the world. All the Ph.D's in the world...will not find any escape from these limitations. The society which attempts to legislate away these limitations will 'reap the whirlwind.' But why has God cursed us? Because on the day that man alienated himself from his creator...he brought death into the world (Rom. 5:12)..... Mankind needs external restraints to restrain him in the working of evil. One of these is the division imposed by language (Gen. 11). Another is the existence of legitimate higher authorities (including, but not excluding, civil government) (Rom. 14:1-7)....By imposing cultural, linguistic and national barriers on men, God reduced their ability to cooperate in the building of the society of Satan....."

In man's attempt to "eat without sweating", and to attain wealth without producing wealth, one of his greatest efforts in helping build the society of Satan has been in the field of money manipulation. This has been raised to a science. So much so that, as Isaiah said of Israel: "Thy silver is become dross, thy wine mixed with water." (Isa. 1:22). Today we can add that our gold has become replaced by pieces of paper bearing the image of a private corporation.

One of the few Congressmen in Washington, D.C. who has even tried to restore an honest money system (we had one once, briefly) is Ron Paul of Texas. Recently we received from him a copy of H.R. 7874, a bill "to repeal the privilege of banks to create money." But the bill does much more than this title indicates and, on July 30, 1980, Rep. Paul explained his "Monetary Freedom Act" to his House colleagues. We think you'll find his explanation refreshing, and his effort worthy of support. Following is his explanation.

* * * * *

Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing the Monetary Freedom Act, a bill which, if enacted, would bring monetary order out of the present monetary chaos that threatens to bring our economy down. The bill is quite simple and straightforward, consisting of eight short titles which I would like to explain briefly.

Title I requires the Secretary of the Treasury to perform a full assay, inventory, and audit of the gold reserves of the United States. This thorough study is to be completed within 6 months of the passage of the bill and then double checked by the General Accounting Office. The results of the study are to be sent to Congress, so that the representatives of the people will learn, for the first time in almost 30 years, the true status of our gold reserves. The Congress would, in turn, release the information to the American people. Although present law requires an annual inventory of our gold reserves, the law is not being complied with, and only a small portion of the reserves are audited each year. As any businessman knows, that is no way to conduct an inventory, and this title would correct that deficiency. Such a complete audit, inventory and assay would lay to rest the persistent rumors that gold is missing from our national stockpile or that the gold we have is of inferior quality.

It would also provide the information needed in order to begin redeemability of Federal Reserve notes - the green currency we all carry in our pockets - for gold, as provided by Title V of the bill.

The Second Title would prevent the Government from selling any of our national stockpile of gold bullion while the audit required by title I is being performed. For almost 3 years the Federal Government conducted regular sales of gold bullion, most of which was purchased by large foreign bankers. American citizens, unless they were wealthy, could not buy the U.S. gold at such sales, simply because the minimum amount sold was 100 ounces. This title would prevent such sales from occurring, and would require the Treasury to keep our gold so that it can be used to redeem the greenbacks now in use.

Title III of the bill repeals two provisions of present law which give - unconstitutionally - the Federal Government the power to seize privately owned gold coins and bullion. These laws were passed in 1917 and 1934 as parts of a war-time measure to control trading with the enemy and in order to legitimize the calling in of privately held gold, by the Roosevelt administration during the depression. Whenever government wants to get more money to spend without raising taxes, they resort to a policy quite similar to counterfeiting, which is a crime if engaged in by private persons. In 1917, the Wilson administration needed money to fight World War I, yet it did not want to raise taxes for fear that the American people would not support its policies. So the administration increased the money supply - the newly created Federal Reserve System helped - so that it could spend more money without raising taxes. This new money decreased the value of the "old" money held by the people, thus raising prices throughout the economy. In 1934, the Roosevelt administration did the same thing. After commanding that all privately owned gold be turned in to the Treasury, the President decreased the value of the dollar by 40 percent. In 1932, a dollar was one-twentieth of an ounce of gold. In 1934 it became one-thirty-fifth of an ounce. The Government, in effect, shortened the monetary yardstick, thus providing itself with many more "yards" of money to spend. It is extremely important that the Government be prevented from doing this in the future, and that is why this title also recognizes and reaffirms the right of the people to own, hold, or use gold in any lawful manner, free of Government interference.

The Fourth Title of this bill repeals all legal tender laws on the lawbooks of the Federal Government. Perhaps you have never noticed it, but each dollar bill in your pocket bears the following sentence: "This note is legal tender for all debts, public and private." Even if someone wanted to make a contract in something other than these paper bills, they could not do so, for the courts would declare such a contract void. Suppose, for example, a worker wanted to work for 3 ounces of gold per week in 1970. Gold then was $35 per ounce, so he would have been making - in terms of dollars - about $105 per week. As a matter of fact, that was about the average wage in 1970. Let us further suppose that this worker had signed a contract with his employer saying that he would work for 10 years with no pay raise. In 1980 he would still be getting 3 ounces of gold per week. Of course, in 1980, that would be about $1,800 per week, 18 times as much as the worker was making in 1970 - in dollar terms. Instead of an annual income of $5,000, the worker would have had an income of $90,000. But what would his employer have done? If there were no legal tender laws, he would have to pay the worker 3 ounces of gold. But, since there are these legal tender laws - which interfere with lawful contracts - the employer would have been able to pay his employee $105 per week rather than what the contract called for. That is what legal tender laws do. They allow debtors to pay off their debts in increasingly worthless money, and since the Federal Government is the largest debtor in the country, it has a great stake in being able to force everyone to accept its paper money. The repeal of these laws will restore monetary freedom to the American people and will permit the emergence of a stable money unit, a unit that cannot be manipulated by the Government to its own advantage.

Title V of the bill establishes the program for redeeming our paper dollars for honest money, gold. Not so long ago, any American with a paper bill could go to his bank and ask for gold in exchange for the bill. Then, because it wanted to increase our money supply in order to spend more money, the Government broke its promise to pay gold for its paper money. But the people could still get silver for their paper dollars. The Government wanted to print more dollars than it could redeem in silver, so about 13 years ago it stopped paying silver for our paper dollars. Each dollar bill used to say - and you may still have some that do - that the bill was redeemable in lawful money; that is, in gold or silver. Now that is no longer on the bills. They are irredeemable. This allows the Federal Government to print as many of these paper dollars as it needs to spend on its thousands of bureaucracies. It also explains why prices are continually rising. It is not that everything is getting more and more valuable, but that the dollar bill is getting less and less valuable. Every time the Government prints more bills, their value goes down, and the cost of living goes up. Making these notes redeemable once again will stop this debasement of our money and stop the cost of living from continually rising. Under the program of redeemability, a person could take his paper money to his bank and ask for gold coins, which the Government would then give to him. The worth of a dollar bill would be determined on the market, thus insuring that the Government would have enough gold to pay everyone who asks for it, and its worth would be permanent, not changing from day to day. The title sets up requirements for the program of redemption, such as making sure the gold is of good quality. It also provides for the minting of gold coins for the first time since the early 1930's, and for the ending of the printing of paper bills. In short, it would shift our economy from a paper base to a sound, honest, monetary system.

Title VI of the bill simply provides that if any bank, or any other institution or person, makes a promise to pay a deposit or a sum of money on demand, then the bank must keep that money on hand to pay the depositor. Not many people are aware of it, but when a bank receives money on deposit, it does not keep it in its vaults, but loans it out or invests it in other ways. If everyone who had money in a bank went to the bank and asked for their money - as the bank has promised to give them - they would not get their money, for it is not there. The banks bet that they can guess how many people will come in for their money, and they keep only that much money on hand. This is dishonest, and it led to the bank runs of the 1930's and it could do so again today. Title V would prevent these disastrous runs from occurring.

The second part of this title would allow anyone who wished to get into the business of banking to do so simply by filing the legal papers. This is the same procedure that is used to form corporations at the State level and it eliminates any special privileges or advantages that some might have because of whom they know in the Government. The Government could not use its power to favor any group or person or to limit entry into the business of banking.

The Last Two Titles of the bill, VII and VIII, merely state how the courts are to interpret and apply the provisions of the Monetary Freedom Act, and state its effective date. They add nothing new to the bill.

It is clear that the double-digit inflation, nearly double-digit unemployment, record interest rates, falling productivity, and disappearing profits, cannot continue much longer without catastrophic consequences for every American. We can no longer muddle through as we have been for years. What we need is a well-thought-out solution to our economic difficulties, and I believe that the Monetary Freedom Act is that solution. (End of statement by Rep. Ron Paul).

"We cannot undo the tragic events of forty years of mismanaged currency," says financial writer Martin Larson. "But we can prevent the further erosion of the dollar. We can still save this nation from the fate that has befallen every other which has embarked on the perilous pathway of monetary irresponsibility. In short, we can still have a redeemable currency simply by obeying the Constitutional mandates concerning money established by our Founding Fathers."

It is our opinion that H.R.7874 as introduced by Rep. Paul and referred to the House Committee on Banking, Financial and Urban Affairs will meet the Constitutional mandates and is worthy of fullest support. Why not write your three representatives in Congress, asking them to co-sponsor this Monetary Freedom Act?

ALL'S FAIR IN LOVE OF ELECTION?

Tempus fugit. Personalities change. We suspect that few of our readers will remember Upton Close, our one-time co-editor and the dean of news analysts and political commentators in his generation. We became publishing partners because we had suffered similar experiences in the so-called Fourth Estate. Upton learned about Communism and the International Conspiracy as an "Old China Hand." We too, but a decade later. Returning to the U.S., Upton found it necessary to forsake radio, TV, and printed page reporting because of blue penciling and Establishment censorship. We, too. As Upton remarked, "You can't speak truth through the devil's horn." So we began the publication of our own newsletters which we wrote, printed and produced without outside help of any kind (still do), thus avoiding most interference from the power brokers. Our business address became a Palm Beach post office box (still is). But, in the mid-fifties Upton took a sabbatical leave to "write another history book." It was never finished because of a fateful collision with a railroad locomotive. Only the then upcoming Paul Harvey had the temerity to speak kind words upon announcing his death. Otherwise media silence.

We also suspect there are comparatively few current readers of this report who remember the works of Drew Pearson. He also was a dean, a dean among left-winged propagandists and character assassins. Between Upton Close and Drew Pearson there was this connection: Each morning Upton would take the morning paper, turn to the Pearson column, read it slowly and carefully. We asked him why. His reply was cast in a militant tone, as was most of his writing and speaking. "You've got to know what the enemy is saying, thinking and doing. Between the lines of Phew Drearson's column there's almost always a blueprint, if you can read it correctly."

We mention the foregoing because, like a humanist parody of the Elijah-Elisha succession, Drew Pearson's assistant, Jack Anderson, inherited the yellow journalistic mantle that had been worn by Pearson until his final call to judgment. And we mention this because this past week Jack Anderson has been in the news in a big way. He wrote in a series of five columns that Jimmy Carter is going to order an invasion of Iran to rescue the American hostages that are being held there. This without Congressional knowledge or consent, and also not merely to free the hostages, but to give Jimmy Carter a dramatic political push upward in popularity just before the November 4th election.

Upton's pronouncement remains pertinent though personalities have changed. "Read Jack Anderson to know what the enemy is saying, thinking and doing." Leading question in this case: Who is the enemy? Anderson? Carter? Or will it turn out to be the Kremlin? It's true that Anderson is a past master at taking few facts, mixing them up with a set of suppositions, and coming out with some controversial conclusion that is sometimes true, almost always left-leaning. In this case however, the fact that influential metropolitan dailies refused to print the columns, or appended disclaimers or explanatory editorials if they did print them, lends credence to the claim that Anderson is reporting accurately after three months of investigation. The distributor, the United Features Syndicate, says about 900 newspapers subscribe to Anderson's Sunday and daily columns. Perhaps half of them printed the first of the series but almost all of them appended disclaimers or editorial apologies. AP reported the Washington Post, New York Daily News and Atlanta Constitution were among the papers that refused to print the first column, then quoted the editor of the Montrose (Colo.) Daily Press, who said: "We feel that the allegations contained in the following column are the most serious ever made against any president of the United States, specifically that the president is contemplating the initiation of military action in the powderkeg Middle East solely for the purpose of his personal political gain. We believe that the allegations are true." (Unquote).

In case your local newspaper didn't carry those five Anderson columns, here briefly is what he charged. Carter plans an invasion of Iran to free the hostages, probably in the middle of October, when the action will have the most advantageous effect on Carter's popularity rating. Also, that Carter is trying to make a deal with Soviet Russia, so that the invasion will not initiate a nuclear war between the two leading powers. The White House flatly denies it all, but Anderson sticks to his story. Whether the charges are true or false, it should be pointed out that there is much from many other sources to back up the prediction that something is about to happen in that Mideast powderkeg.

A letter recently received from Robert White of the "Duck Book" contains the following information: "...My driver who worked at Dover AFB last week told me they have been shipping 400 men a day out of there to Egypt, for the past 60 days. God only knows how many are being sent out of McGuire AFB, which is the main transport base for men. That plus the fact he told me he is certain they were shipping nukes on the C5's because of the ultra high security on the flight line. To top it off, two weeks earlier he was at Blytheville AFB (a SAC base) and he told me every K35 and B52 was 'primed and cocked' with standby alert for all flight crews. Those B52's are carrying only nukes." Only a few days ago came the report that an American-manned U.S. plane had crashed in Egypt on a training flight, two men killed. Add to that the following:

A few weeks ago, over the Rock Flats of Nevada, some 2,700 Airforce pilots and crewmen began testing combat planes, ranging from A10 tank killers, to F15 fighters. A flight of 12 F4E Phantom Jets prepared to fly to Egypt for 3 months of maneuvers. Also, cargo planes began loading tanks, self-propelled howitzers, and other heavy military equipment for shipment to some unidentified location in the Indian Ocean. And 12,000 members of the Seventh Marine Amphibious Brigade were holding maneuvers in the Mohave Desert in California, getting themselves in shape for desert warfare. Meanwhile, at Texas and California ports, ships have been loaded with various types of military hardware, bound for the U.S. base at Diego Garcia.

Is this all in preparation for military action in the Middle East, to begin at a time when it will do Jimmy Carter the most good? Harry Schultz, in his International News Letter of July 14th, had a different slant to the story. He says the USSR wants Jimmy Carter re-elected and: "I've heard a secret deal has been made to release the hostages pre-election. If it happens, don't give JC credit. He will have 'made a pact with the devil'... If not hostages, watch for some other phoney 'success' the USSR will let JC appear to have achieved in order to get him reelected.... Politburo chess players wud gladly 'lose face' briefly to let JC look good, just long enuf to get him elected." (The International Harry Schultz Letter, published every 3/4 weeks in Switzerland. $258 per year. U.S. mailing address, P.O. Box 134, Princeton, N.J. 08540.)

R.E. McMaster, Jr. is of the same frame of mind, recently wrote in his newsletter "The Reaper": "Make no mistake about it, despite Jimmy Carter's incredible inconsistency and economic incompetence, he is one shrewd cookie when it comes to politics. And...if it takes a war to get re-elected, Jimmy Carter will engineer one....Another, and far more more dangerous scenario, would be if the Soviets decide now is the time to move in for the kill, prior to Election Day 1980. This possibility should not be ruled out. The Russians now have the ability to cut off our oil from the Middle East, conquer Saudi Arabia and Turkey, control Western Europe within 48 hours, cut our shipping lanes on which vital strategic materials are shipped from the African continent, and control the Caribbean sea lanes. One has to wonder if the flush-out of undesirables from Cuba is Castro's way of getting lean, preparatory to making Cuba a full-fledged Soviet military base. The long-standing Soviet strategy of isolating the United States has been carefully and successfully implemented. It is clear for all to see who are willing to look....Jimmy Carter desperately needs to be re-elected. He will stop at nothing to lock-in another four years. All the signs indicate he plans to attempt to engineer a war prior to November. We must plan accordingly..." (From "The Reaper," P.O.Box 39062, Phoenix, Arizona 85069. Weekly, $225 per year).

Please note that all of the preceding and similar analyses, were published in newsletters (your independent press) long before Jack Anderson made his announcement concerning a Carterwar. We must agree that something is being planned. Begin's takeover of all Jerusalem as Israeli property, the resulting breakdown of Carter's "Camp David Agreement" and the Arabian threats of a "holy war" about to start; these events add fuel to a fire that is apt to become a holocaust. It also is our opinion that the Soviet Union is going to act or react in some way that will convince American voters that they must not "change horses in the middle of the stream." However, an all-out nuclear confrontation is not necessary. As Research Publication's "Daily News Digest" for the week ending August 6th explains:

"Terrorism is here now....We're in for an age of terror and unconventional warfare...It has been apparent for some time that we are once again 'fighting the last war'. In WWII, for instance, the French Maginot Line was designed to stop waves of attacking soldiers...but the Nazi blitzkrieg simply went around it and over it! Now, we're apparently considering only the possibility of waves of Soviet tanks and missiles overrunning Europe, or Soviet ICBMs blanketing the U.S. Certainly these are possibilities. But consider what is already happening: country after country, with increasing rapidity, has fallen into chaos and effective control of the Soviet empire. The methods used have included subversion, arms supplies to domestic rebels, imported terrorists, sophisticated propaganda and, perhaps most important, the cooperation of Western politicians and bureaucrats indoctrinated in 'Liberal theology.'....Given that they are winning their war with such inexpensive and safe techniques, we must ask why they would launch covert attacks against well-defended bastions, risking retaliation and sudden consolidation of the West? Would you change such a winning game as they are now playing? Be prepared for it, as subversion and propaganda increase even more in the US, and as terrorism spreads throughout our urban centers." (From "Daily News Digest," compiled daily, mailed weekly by Research Publications, P.O.Box 39027, Phoenix, Arizona 85069. $125 per year).

We believe that something must be added to this last quotation to make it complete. While it is certainly true that the methods being used by the enemy to conquer America, and the world, include as a most important element the cooperation of "Western politicians and bureaucrats indoctrinated in 'Liberal' theology." But also included must be the International Bankers, the Monopoly Capitalists, and planners of The New World Order. The exposure of a possible military escapade in the Middle East, staged for purely political reasons, may effectively prevent any such pre-election occurrence. However, this will mean little more than a delay in the plans laid down by the Trilateralists and their Totalitarian allies. As C.B. Baker said in his "Youth Action News" of July, 1980: "Despite their sharp cuts in U.S. defenses, recent actions by the Rockefeller-Trilateral forces indicate that they are now preparing for a 'limited' no-win nuclear war in the Persian Gulf area." Any pre-election action of this nature may now be curtailed. But those who look to Ronald Reagan to prevent any such post-election action should note that while Jimmy Carter has some 18 fellow Trilateralists on his staff, and while John Anderson is himself a charter member, Reagan also has on his team George Bush, David Packard, Caspar Weinberger, Anne Armstrong, possibly Henry Kissinger and possibly more Trilateralists to follow if he is elected. Remember too, if Reagan dies, or is declared incompetent to lead, George Bush is just a breath away.

Therefore, Constitutional Christian Americans should take the one road left: concentrate on the Congressional elections. Presidents are selected captives, Federal judges are appointed by those captives. But legislators are elected by the people. And the Constitution says theirs is the delegated power, that has been taken from them or given by them, to administrators and bureaucrats. If we are to save this Republic, it can be done only through the Congress.

As a suggested example of how candidates should be judged, we have a man in Florida who is running against Senator Richard Stone. The man is Lewis Dinkins, and here is his platform statement:

"I believe this Republic can be restored. I believe this Nation can take on a new direction. I am taking a stand to help accomplish this goal, and I believe some of the following principles and policies will help do just that:

1. Build the strongest military offense and defense we are capable of building for the preservation of this Nation.
2. Stand up to the world threat of communism and do not permit any further aggression.
3. Abolish all Federal departments that are carrying duplicate functions, and those that conflict with the States.
4. Cut back on Federal income taxes and corporate taxes in order to stimulate incentive and job growth.
5. Set out to be independent from foreign oil imports by developing our own assets.
6. Stop giving economic, diplomatic and military aid to prop up communist governments.
7. Re-establish and develop effective security and intelligence networks.
8. Protect our allies who are standing with us.
9. Cut out Federal give-away programs, and for those that are kept, require all able-bodied persons who are receiving aid to put in a fair amount of work for what they receive.
10. Return to a Republican form of government, namely: less government, less rules, less regulations, and less taxes. Remember that this Nation was, is, and must always be One Nation Under God. For America, for Americans, it's time to stand up for our convictions and beliefs...at our jobs, in our homes and churches, and in our government. As we set our priorities in order and begin to take positive action, we will help to bring about new direction for this country. Yes, and I believe we are yet to see America's greatest hour."

If your candidate can make a similar statement, work for his or her election, and vote accordingly. But, don't vote for "the lesser of two evils." That kind of compromising has helped to ruin our Republic.

WORLD WAR III - A PROGRESS REPORT

As WWII drew to a close, the techniques that were to be employed in WWII already were being tried and developed. They were to be Limited No-Win Wars and Organized Terrorism. The Limited No-Win Wars would be employed when they seemed expedient in promoting the establishment of a New World Order. And Organized Terrorism would be utilized to prepare populations for the acceptance of the New World Order as the only alternative to total world chaos. These modern war techniques first began to be tested, and used successfully, in the Middle East in the middle forties. Highly trained, dedicated, well organized, well armed and well financed Zionist terrorists murdered occupying British troops, UN supervisors and Arab inhabitants as a way of establishing the new political state of Israel. A series of limited, no-win wars would follow as immigrating Zionists fought indigenous Arabs for portions of Palestine. These wars were limited by the intervention of the Big Powers whenever one side or the other seemed about to win. The length and magnitude of the battles were carefully controlled.

Limited No-Win Wars were to be employed in other parts of the world, notably on a peninsula called Korea, and later on a larger peninsula that was comprised of the then Nations of Vietnam, Laos, Cambodia and Thailand. The "No-Win" character of these wars is history. The "Limited" characteristics are never stressed. In Korea orders were given that all areas beyond the Yalu River were enemy sanctuaries, that the enemy was never to be attacked or pursued into Red China, that in Korea the enemy was not to be pursued beyond the 38th Parallel. General MacArthur protested, even disobeyed because he said that in war there is no substitute for victory. Therefore, he was summarily dismissed by President Truman on orders from Secretary of State Dean Acheson and generals were chosen who would see to it that it would be a Limited and a No-Win War. The "Limited" phase of the Vietnam War was characterized by orders not to advance into or bomb North Vietnam but merely to defend South Vietnam, an order that was obeyed until after Nixon became President and the "No-Win" result had been assured. The "limited" characters of both the Korean and the Southeast Asian conflicts were evidenced by the fact that, in both cases, the wars were fought on isolated peninsulas, not on a continental mainland.

The second technique of WWII, the use of Organized Terrorism, has never been given the recognition it deserves as a weapon of Total War. First used as such in Palestine, it proved to be successful. Robert Blake, writing in the British Views-Letter, Candour, August/September 1980, recalls an incident that most politicians would like us to forget. We quote:

"The Terrorist campaign began in 1944. February saw the Stern Gang kill a British police inspector and a constable...As war in Europe finished another Zionist Gang, Irgun, emerged with the slogan: 'V.E. Day for Britain is D Day for Us.'...1947 saw two young British sergeants hanged and their bodies used as booby traps. The (London) Times commented: 'They were kidnapped unarmed and defenceless. They were murdered for no offence. As a last indignity their bodies were employed to lure into a minefield the comrades who sought to give them a Christian burial.' Among those wanted by the authorities in connection with the murders was a terrorist described as having 'a longhooked nose, bad teeth and horn-rimmed spectacles.' The squalid little thug's name was Menachem Begin. He went unpunished and today is Israel's head of state."

Terrorist tactics were so successful that the Arabs adopted the technique as a counter-measure, and the PLO was born. These became organized terrorists, highly trained, dedicated, well armed and well financed. Then came re-surgent terrorism on the part of the IRA with the Irish terrorists also being well financed and well equipped. Finally, organized terrorism spread rapidly throughout the world, especially the Western industrialized world - but not in the Soviet Union or in Communist China. Allen L. Keyte, editor and publisher of the British Intelligence International comments: "The Soviet plan for world domination is based on creating the conditions, within a country or province, which makes intervention possible." Hence, organized terrorism and the resulting chaos paves the way for Communist intervention. The Red leaders can claim that they are thus "restoring peace," as in Afghanistan, Ethiopia, Salvador, Guatemala, etc.

Walter Nelson is a former special agent for U.S. Military Intelligence, and news editor for Radio Free Europe. For some years he has made his home in London, reports that "U.S. Intelligence estimates say there are at least 30 groups in the United States alone which are prepared to use terror and violence to achieve their ends. The same number has been suggested for Britain. Counting Latin America and the Middle East, there must be at least 200 world-wide." Nelson is not talking about little groups like the gang that made Patty Hearst infamous. He's referring to well organized, well trained, well equipped and well financed groups such as the German Red Army Faction, the IRA, PLO, the group financed by Billy Carter's benefactor, Muammar Qaddafi, of Libya, which has been instructed to assassinate all the enemies of the Communist dictator who fled into other countries as political hostages.

Christopher Dobson is a specialist on terrorism, authored a book titled "The Terrorists" which is said to be a guide to terrorist groups, their weapons and

RIGHT OUT OF THE FED'S MOUTH

The Federal Reserve Bank of San Francisco placed a full page advertisement in the July 17, 1979 issue of "Computerworld" Magazine, requesting computer programmers to apply for positions with the bank which operates a very large computer system. The first paragraph of that advertisement reads:

The Federal Reserve Bank of San Francisco. Some people still think we're a branch of the Government. We're not. We're the banks' Bank.

Our second item is a paragraph from a letter typed on Federal Reserve Bank of San Francisco stationery and signed by Kent O. Sims, Senior Vice President of the bank. He wrote, and again the underlining is added for emphasis:

Your second question is whether the government could repay its obligations such as Treasury bills in the face of an extreme national emergency. The answer to this question is that so long as there is a Government of the United States, it will be able to pay its financial obligations. The Federal Government is unique among the various levels of government in this respect. It possesses unlimited powers to tax and redistribute income to meet its obligations;.....

their philosophy. He says there is no "Terrorist International," as such, but there is a great deal of free-lance cooperation. "Most of this," says Dobson, "stems from a meeting of international terrorists held in Lebanon in 1972 under the auspices of the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine (P.L.O.) There have been similar meetings, especially in Ireland, of so-called freedom movements which have been covers for terrorist cooperative planning. They seem to work on a basis of doing favors for one another. German members of the Red Army Faction - the successors to the Baader Meinhof Gang - took part in the Entebbe, Uganda hijack, for example. There is also an extensive exchange of arms and expertise. It is known, for example, that the Irish bomb-makers have passed on their techniques to the Arabs and the Spaniards in exchange for arms."

A recent AP article stated that for the past five years, there has been an average of more than one incident of international terrorism each day. Some of the more sensational incidents include the 1972 seizure of the Israeli headquarters in the Olympic Village in Munich; the machine gun attack by Japanese terrorists at Lod Airport in Tel Aviv; a raid by international terrorists on the OPEC headquarters in Vienna; the kidnapping and assassination of the former Italian premier Aldo Moro by Italy's Red Brigade; the seizure last November of the American embassy in Tehran; the hijacking of a train by Molluccans in the Netherlands; various stormings of American embassies and kidnappings of American diplomats; the storming of the Moslem shrine at Mecca; the 1977 capture by Hanafi Muslims of three buildings in Washington, D.C.; the 1975 blast that killed four at the Fraunces Tavern in New York City; an unsolved explosion that killed eleven persons at New York's LaGuardia Airport; the recent aborted attempt to assassinate U.S. Ambassador John Gunther Dean in Beirut; and skijackings that recently have increased in number, etc. In all, the CIA lists 3,336 incidents in the past twelve years that are officially classified as "international terrorism."

Defined as "the use of force for political ends," international terrorism is on the increase, both in size of operation and in frequency. The CIA's National Foreign Assessment Center warns that terrorists believe "a larger number of casualties are now necessary to generate the amount of publicity that formerly was evoked by less bloody operations." This theory seemed to be borne out on August 2 when a bomb went off at Bologna, Italy railroad station packed with vacation travelers. 70 persons died. The danger of such bombs in the hands of terrorists was brought home to Americans with reports concerning the very sophisticated bomb that was planted so very easily in the hotel-casino at Lake Tahoe this past week. The bomb contained 1,100 pounds of explosives and the bomb experts found no way to defuse it. They finally resorted to remote-control efforts that detonated the bomb. But planting the bomb was so simple. It was delivered in a copying machine crate, along with a letter warning that the bomb would go off if moved. Fortunately, it was not a time-bomb, and authorities were able to evacuate a one-mile area before the blast; so there were no injuries. But the ease of emplacement, the sophistication of the mechanism and the power of the "home-made" bomb gave ominous indication of what is to be expected if and when international terrorists start engaging in what Richard C. Clark of St. John's University calls "Technological Terrorism." More on this phase of the subject will come later.

Who finances, supplies and directs these international terrorists? Most of the law enforcement officers who have studied the subject seem to agree that virtually all international terrorism is directed from Moscow, Beirut, or Libya. There are special training camps for terrorists in Libya, Czechoslovakia, in East Germany and other Soviet Satellites, but not in Soviet Russia itself. In South Yemen training camps have been set up where Cubans are training Japanese and Arab terrorists. Said Walter Nelson, whom we quoted previously: "Soviet assistance plays a part almost everywhere. It has always been in the Soviet interest to keep the pot bloody and boiling everywhere outside the Soviet bloc. Unrest is something they always hope will play into their hands. It is different inside the Soviet Union, of course. There they'll crush even the slightest manifestation of anti-state activity." Most terrorist weapons are Soviet designed but are made and supplied from Czechoslovakia. As for finances and other supplies, much money is said to come to Irish terrorists from their American sympathizers. Other international terrorists groups are known to be receiving aid from certain American foundations and the American Council of Churches (especially in South Africa). But the greatest financial support is said to come from - or is funneled through - Libya, which is newly rich and able to support such activities because of its oil production and drug traffic.

Intelligence expert Nelson notes that "Terrorism does of course attract thugs, but most left-wing terrorists are demonstrably well educated and intelligent. The thugs are second battalion, using terror for their own purposes. The more intelligent the terrorist, the more ready he is to sacrifice his life in the service of his cause, even if this involves suicide." Christopher Dobson agrees: "Terrorists are perfectly willing to die for the cause, principally because once having become a terrorist there is no going back. They must either triumph or die. Death becomes commonplace. That is what makes them so dangerous.... They kill because they are prepared to die....."

Most people fear what can happen when these intelligent, dedicated terrorists begin using nuclear weapons. Richard Clark, author of "Technological Terrorism", says there is a more immediate danger because "chemical, bacteriological and biological weapons are much easier to fabricate, are more likely to be used." Brian Jenkins, an expert for the Rand Corporation, warns that in the very near future terrorists will not be hijacking aircraft "but entire cities or even nations. Water supply systems, food supplies, transportation, communications, and energy for large metropolitan areas are highly vulnerable, and virtually unguarded." Suppose too much fluorine were dumped into a city water supply, or railroad tank cars carrying lethal gases were derailed and exploded in a highly populated area. Think how easily a power supply can be sabotaged.

But there is another great danger. Maintenance of law and order already is a problem in most areas. Police chiefs are admitting that citizens must be prepared to protect themselves. Meanwhile, citizens are being disarmed, police and sheriff's departments are being weakened and hamstrung by LEAA, other Federal and Regional agencies. So that, if terrorism becomes rampant, uncontrollable at the State and local level, here is the perfect excuse for declaring a national emergency and converting the nation into a police state "for the protection of the people." And this could happen before "1984" unless we act now to cleanse, strengthen and fortify State and local governments before Big Government Police State enslaves us to save us. In an election year, our course should be clear.

THE ART AND SCIENCE OF LEGALIZED THEFT

On September 1, 1980 the hunting season began officially. This is the time of the quadrennial period when a majority of the aspirants for public office begin to bag constituents with promises they will not or cannot keep, and this with a premeditated disregard of the oath that they must take before undertaking any Constitutional duties. That oath is expressed in the form of a question:

Do you solemnly swear that you will support and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic; that you will bear true faith and allegiance to the same; that you take this obligation freely, without any mental reservation or purpose of evasion; and that you will well and faithfully discharge the duties of the office on which you are about to enter; So help you God?

The President, Senators, Representatives, and all other elected and appointed officials will answer "I do," but how many of them really mean it? Ever since Franklin Delano Roosevelt told Harry Hopkins and his Braintrusters to disregard the Constitution whenever it interfered with the installation of the New Deal, officials have been sidestepping the Constitution. And since the United States Senate approved a treaty making the United Nations Charter the Law of the Land in many crucial respects, the oath of office has become a hollow formality to most office holders, both elected and appointed. This is not a matter of someone's biased opinion. Their public records show that most members of the administrative, legislative and judicial branches of the federal government have failed to "support and defend the Constitution of the United States" and to "bear true faith and allegiance to the same." The Constitution, our civil bible has, like our Holy Bible, been misinterpreted, abused and subverted. And for this reason our Nation has ceased to be a Republic in the sense intended by the writers of the Constitution. Instead it can best be described as a Socialist Welfare State, or a Corporate Socialist State. Take your choice of terms; in the final analysis they both become Totalitarian, Slave States.

Frederic Bastiat of France perhaps gave the best definition of Socialism, at about the same time that Karl Marx and Friedrich Engels of Germany and later of England were writing the Communist Manifesto. Bastiat wrote:

Legal plunder can be committed in an infinite number of ways; hence, there are an infinite number of plans for organizing it. Tariffs, protection, bonuses, subsidies, incentives, the progressive income tax, free education, the right to employment, the right to profit, the right to wages, the right to relief, the right to the tools of production, interest free credit, etc., etc. And it is the aggregate of all these plans, in respect to what they have in common, legal plunder, that goes under the name of SOCIALISM.

This "legal plunder" on the part of Government was noted in a recent speech by Congressman Daniel B. Crane of Illinois, one of the present office holders whose record affirms that he does try to live up to the oath he has taken to defend the Constitution. He said "government at all levels takes about 47 percent of the average person's income. When that figure exceeds 50 percent, as it no doubt will in the near future, the American taxpayer will become a slave to government, working not for himself but for the bureaucracy....The bureaucracy cannot think of enough ways to turn the screws on taxpayers...."

Richard J. Ferris, chairman and chief executive of United Airlines, made the same case in an article in the August 1980 issue of Mainliner. Asking "whose money is it, anyway?" he gave this qualified answer: "The United States government sometimes shows a novel but dangerous attitude toward people's incomes. Sometimes the government acts as though all income belongs to the government, and that the government will decide how much it'll let us taxpayers keep and why. It is as though we all work for the state, and that the state will decide what each of us can have for ourselves. That seems backwards. I always thought we worked for ourselves, and we decided (through our elected representatives) how much the government can have, and why."

Rep. Larry McDonald of Georgia is another who upholds his oath of office and speaks out against Constitutional corruption and legalized theft. Recently he appeared as a witness before the Subcommittee on Oversight of the House Ways and Means Committee. Here is a part of his testimony:

"About fifty years ago this trend of increased taxation really began to accelerate. The theory behind it was best articulated by presidential adviser Harry Hopkins when he said:

The new philosophy of government is to tax and tax, spend and spend, elect and elect, because the people are too damn dumb to understand.

Today the principal function of government in Washington is to redistribute earned income. Former Secretary of the Treasury William Simon observed:

The redistribution of wealth from the productive citizen has become the principal governmental activity.

"Every concerned American should realize that the leveling of society by the redistribution of income was clearly viewed as unconstitutional by our Founding Fathers. For example, Samuel Adams wrote:

The utopian scheme of leveling, and a community of goods are ... in our government, unconstitutional.

"The leveling of society, therefore, is what the income tax truly is all about. It is without question one of the single most destructive forces in our society today. It is not a wonder, therefore, that many basic violations occur in the implementation of this most unconstitutional practice and that the IRS is the object of hostility....If the (IRS) auditor alleges you owe more tax, you are only allowed to contest the charge at the outset before the very agency that alleged the assessment. At your own expense, without a jury trial, and with the burden of proof squarely upon the taxpayer, you must prove your innocence or suffer the seizure of your property. This is the most flagrant violation of due process that could ever exist short of a 'star chamber court.' Yet, this is the state of the law as it exists today.

"The greatest 'con' which exists in this Capital today, however, and which far surpasses the injury of both the size of the tax and the lack of due process is the concealment from the people of who, in fact, is ultimately responsible. Constant blame is put on the IRS, and much more finger-pointing is done by Congress. But the body which should stand accused is really this very entity, the Congress of the United States. The IRS only does our bidding.....There is, however, a change in the wind. Groups all across the nation are finally getting the message and starting to examine the body most responsible for their affliction. Voting records are being compiled which indicate whether a Member voted for more government and greater taxation or less government and less taxation...it is my hope that Congress will...assess the political realities of the day and act while civil tranquility and our institutions are still strong enough to effect a peaceful resolution. To do less is to continue on a course towards bankruptcy and the final destruction of our constitutional institutions."

There is a corollary to the unconstitutional philosophy of "tax and tax, spend and spend, elect and elect, because the people are too damn dumb to understand." That has to do with the transfer of Congressional duties to the Administrative branch of government and the establishment - by the Congress - of an entirely new and unconstitutional branch of government, which is known as Regional Governance. Its most outspoken, and most successful, opponent has been Col. Arch Roberts of the Committee to Restore the Constitution, Inc. A September 1980 bulletin explains, and we quote:

"Ruinous, escalating taxes and consuming inflation suffered by Americans during the past decade is the legacy of Regional Governance. Regionalism is a third level of government imposed on the people without their knowledge or consent. The enormous, unconstitutional bureaucracy - and the 'revenue-sharing' programs it foists upon local and state governments - is supported by confiscatory levels of taxation and 'printing press' money. Revenue-sharing funding is deficit financing. The 'money' is created out of thin air unbacked by assets or increased productivity. The government prints unsecured Federal Reserve Notes to cover the zooming national debt. As government inflates the money supply Federal Reserve Notes become worth less and more FRNs are needed to buy necessities. The poor and those on fixed incomes are hurt most. But, eventually the property and resources of everyone are forfeit to the perpetrators of Regional Governance.

"State legislation is the only solution to the problem of federal agencies out of control. The State, acting in its highest sovereign capacity, can terminate Regional Governance and 'revenue-sharing' blackmail. By enforcing provisions of the U.S. Constitution within the borders of the State, as they are required to do by oath of office, lawmakers can throw back the crazed mob of regional revolutionaries and resolve the core problem of Regional Governance...."

"Protest alone will not resolve the national emergency. Only knowledgeable action by conscientious men and women will preserve Life, Liberty and Property. This force, as experience shows, is capable of turning back the maddoids who seek to dismantle the U.S. Constitution and erect a socialist government on the ruins of the Republic. Tens of thousands of responsible citizens, and twenty-two State Legislatures, are involved in the struggle for survival against a tyrannical, central power. The task is not easy. But, the alternative is too depressing to contemplate." (Unquote. For full information on Regional Governance and how to assist in combatting it, write to CRC, P. O. Box 986, Fort Collins, Colorado 80522).

Everything contained in this Report up to this paragraph indicates that if we are to restore the Republic with its guarantee of Life, Liberty and Property (which is essential to the Pursuit of Happiness), then our's must be a double-barrelled attack. One barrel of our political weapon must be pointed towards our State's Legislature, the other towards our Federal Congress. The presidential campaign can be written off. The Eastern Establishment owns or controls the three major candidates. More importantly, the real fight for freedom concerns our lawmakers, not the administrators. Remember that every elected representative must swear to "support and defend the Constitution of the United States." And every elected representative must be held to that oath, or else. That's the beginning. Next, it is true that "State legislation is the only solution to the problem of federal agents out of control." That's why honest men, "good and true men" are needed in all State legislatures. This should develop major battles in every State in the Union.

Equally vital is the composition of the United States Congress. Because Congress only can force the Executive to ensure our national security. Only the Congress has the power to take back the powers delegated to it by the Constitution but given away to the Executive and the Judicial branches. And the Congress alone can restore fiscal sanity and preserve free enterprise. And this is where there are real battles to be fought and won. Because any candidate, running for a seat in the Senate or House, who dares to take a stand against Big Business, Big Banking, and Big Labor, is going to face the fight of his life. And any such candidate deserves the fullest possible support, since such a candidate is in the front ranks of our war for Life, Liberty and Property.

Here's an example. Rep. Ron Paul of the 22nd District, Texas, is running for re-election. Among other important acts, he introduced the Monetary Freedom Act (HR7874) which we covered in our DBR#33 of 8/15/80. It is essential that he be able to carry on his fight for this and similar legislation. So the fatcats have ganged up on him. They chose a Carter-type candidate on whom they spent $250,000 just to win his party's nomination. They'll spend double that amount in an attempt to defeat Dr. Paul in November. Says Rep. Paul, "I don't need to match all that special interest money, but I will need at least $350,000 to win." And he'll have to get it in small donations from people who really care about our country and its security. His Washington address: Room 1234 Longworth House Office Building, Washington, D.C. 20515. Lenin said "the way to destroy a capitalist country is to debauch its currency." That's why men like Paul are needed in Washington. Senator Goldwater says "the future of the Republic and the entire free world may well depend on the outcome of this election." He's right again, if he's referring to Congressional elections.

We keep thinking about how people remain so excited and so hopeful regarding a presidential election that has already been won by the Trilateral Commission when people should be concerned about what has been done to our Constitution and how, because of this, our freedom is being destroyed. Robert Bearce of Houston, writing in The Freeman, thinks this is a time when we should heed a warning made by Patrick Henry in 1775, not long before the opening shots of the War for Independence were fired at Lexington and Concord. Henry said: "It is natural to man to indulge in the illusions of hope. We are apt to shut our eyes against a painful truth, and listen to the song of that siren till she transforms us into beasts. Is this the part of wise men, engaged in a great and arduous struggle for liberty? Are we disposed to be of the number of those who, having eyes, see not, and having ears, hear not, the things which so nearly concern their temporal salvation? For my part, whatever anguish of spirit it may cost, I am willing to know the whole truth; to know the worst and provide for it."

OUR SOCIALISTIC DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION

In 1932 William Z. Foster, National Chairman of the Communist Party of the United States, wrote a blueprint for the Communist takeover of this country. It was contained in a book titled "Toward Soviet America." But, according to Francis E. Walter onetime Chairman of the now defunct House Committee on Un-American Activities, "Toward Soviet America is not simply a book; it is a roadmap to Terror." In fact, the book was so very frank and outspoken in its context that the Communist hierarchy in Moscow became worried about it being available publicly and all English copies of the book were ordered destroyed. The original English edition became a collector's item. But in 1961 Elgin Enterprises, an anti-Communist organization, reprinted "Toward Soviet America," adding a foreword by Rep. Walter and chapter notes by Maurice Ries, a consultant to HUAC. Ries notes that the book supplied the blueprint for Castro's takeover of Cuba.

Because of his un-American activities, Foster was indicted under the Smith Act, but pleaded illness and never appeared in court. Rep. Francis wrote of the incident: "During the trial, with Foster abed at home, United States Judge Harold Medina sent a court representative to ask certain questions. The invalid was required to answer under oath. In his replies he provided the court with a beautiful sample of Communist double talk: '...We understood (Foster said) that to propose a Socialist Government as an alternative to Capitalism would surely be met by the most extreme violence on the part of the Capitalists, and we proceeded to warn the people accordingly.'

"Translated, this Aesopian language goes something like this: 'When a Communist mob sets out to seize the government of a given country, and sheds blood in the process, this is not overthrow by force and violence. Communism always proceeds peacefully. But if the more responsible citizens are so foolish as to oppose that takeover, and people are killed and property destroyed, why, the Communists are not to blame. It's these selfish, greedy Capitalists;...They shouldn't have resisted. They employed the force and violence. Therefore, they are the guilty ones. So they are the ones who must pay'." (unquote; compare this statement with what is going on presently in Afghanistan, El Salvador, Guatemala, etc.-Ed.)

On page 316 of Foster's book "Toward Soviet America" there is the following statement, which we quote directly from the original: "Among the elementary measures the American Soviet government will adopt to further the cultural revolution are the following: the schools, colleges and universities will be coordinated and grouped under the National Department of Education and its state and local branches. The studies will be revolutionized, being cleansed of religion, patriotic and other features of the bourgeois ideology...The churches will remain free to continue their services but their special tax and other privileges will be liquidated. Their buildings will revert to the State. Religious schools will be abolished and organized religious training for minors prohibited. Freedom will be established for anti-religious propaganda." (unquote.)

If we observe America's schools and churches as they exist today, we will be forced to admit that most of what Foster predicted has come to pass, but this has not produced a "Soviet America" as he hoped. Rather, it has developed a "Socialist America." Perhaps we should explain.

In the supposedly "inevitable" evolution of the Socialist One World, there are two basic techniques that have been employed at the "people's level." Usually referred to as the "carrot and stick" techniques, they serve as a kind of pincer against the people. "Stick" is a pseudonym for violence: war, revolution, invasion, insurrection, military coup, terror, etc. It has been used successfully in Imperial Russia, Nationalist China, Poland, Cuba, Hungary, etc. It is presently being used in Afghanistan, in certain of the Caribbean and central American countries, and in Africa. Its terroristic manifestation has become worldwide. The "carrot" technique, on the other hand, refers to the use of education and legislation, propaganda and friendly persuasion. It has many names: Fabianism, Social Democracy, Christian Socialism, Participatory Democracy, Welfare Statism, Progressivism, Corporate Socialism, etc. A new name for the same technique has been adopted by the Jane Fonda-Tom Hayden team; they call it Economic Democracy. This "carrot" approach has been used largely where the "stick" has proved unsatisfactory or insufficient: England, Western Europe, North America, are examples. The "carrot" technique is a slower route toward the final goal of the Socialist One World. Hence, to use Foster's words, "coordinating the schools, colleges and universities" took a longer time than the plotters might have expected. However, with the help of the tax-exempt foundations and the "educationists," coordination of curricula, methods of teaching, etc. was accomplished. The "cleansing of the schools of religious, patriotic and other features of the bourgeois ideology" was accomplished by the "change agents". Currently there is a concerted effort on the part of the federal bureaucracy (a synonym for soviet) to abolish, or control, all private and religious schools. So-called public schools have surrendered to the federal government as a result of subsidies, tuitions, the realignment of school districts, forced bussing, etc.

But only in 1979 - nearly fifty years after Foster wrote a blueprint calling for it - did the anti-Americans manage to establish a National Department of Education, with a professing and professional Humanist as its head (Shirly M. Hufstedler) formerly an official of the Aspen Institute for Humanistic Studies. Regarding the political aspects surrounding the establishment of this Socialistic department, American Way Features (Tom Anderson) recently commented: "President Carter has bought the public school teacher vote by setting up a Cabinet-level Department of Education, increasing Federal Aid to Education by 73%, and opposing tuition tax credits to parents sending their children to private schools. The National Education Association, one of the Nation's most powerful unions, is dedicated to re-electing Carter to repay him 'for everything he has done for us.' One White House aide has confessed: 'If it weren't for the teachers and the mayors, Carter would be on his way back to Plains.' The mayors were also bought with your tax money, in the form of increased federal aid. Teachers should not be allowed to belong to unions (1.4 million belong to NEA) and federal aid should be ended." (unquote).

In the educational arena the Planners used the "carrot" technique for decades and it ended in failure. Instead of complacent, compliant citizens they created young monsters; self-centered, drug habituated, anarchistic, functional illiterates who became looters, arsonists, murderers, rapists, terrorists to the teachers, to authorities, to parents. With few exceptions, products of public schools were unfit for any kind of society save that of brute beasts. "Carrot" treatment having failed, the Planners then turned to the "stick," and coercive measures such as forced bussing, attacks of private and church schools, and through it all, billions upon billions of your tax money was spent in an attempt to make their false theories work.

But now comes a positive and purposeful reaction from millions of Americans. Despite federal efforts to close or control them, private and church schools are multiplying throughout the Nation. Christian Americans are aroused and are fighting back. Rev. Jerry Falwell of Moral Majority mentions three battles that must be won: 1) Authority must rest in law, not men; the absolute law of God's Word. 2) This New Code of Ethics which must be abolished and the Ten Commandments re-established as the true ethical code. 3) The New World Order which would abolish national sovereignty must be defeated.

An excellent historical brief on this subject was published by Marshall Foster in the July 1980 issue of his Newsletter, "Foundation for Christian Self-Government," (21020 Victory Blvd., Woodland Hills, CA. 91367. The following is quoted from his article, titled, "Public Schools: The Ruin of Our Nation!"

* * * * *

How have we as American Christians failed and lost whole generations of our children? Many factors can be pointed to, but none more damning than the fact that the vast majority of us have given our children to the State for 12 to 16 years to be destroyed mentally, spiritually and morally! The above statement may seem harsh, but before you judge, consider the following facts concerning this pervasive institution that molds 47 million of our prodigy every day - the American Public School. If we are to come to grips with our failure in education - and the way to restoration - we must destroy the "messianic myth of universal public education." Our Nation was founded by individuals who knew nothing of public education; and yet, they were able to reason and relate principles from God's Word that gave us institutions that are the wonder of the world. The Pilgrims and Puritans were greatly interested in education - but they saw it as a personal, family and church responsibility. They founded literally hundreds of our finest schools and colleges during the colonial period...At the time of the Declaration of Independence the quality of education had enabled the colonies to achieve a degree of literacy from 70% to virtually 100%. This was not education restricted to the few. Modern scholarship reports "the prevalence of schooling and its accessibility to most segments of the population." Moses Coit Tyler, historian of American literature, indicates the colonists' "familiarity with history...extensive legal learning...lucid exposition of constitutional principles, showing, indeed, that somehow, out into that American wilderness had been carried the very accent of cosmopolitan thought and speech." When the American State Papers arrived in Europe they were found to contain "nearly every quality indicative of personal and national greatness."

Mr. Lawrence A. Cremin, in his study of American education from 1607 to 1789 credits the high quality of American education to the Bible, "the single most important cultural influence in the lives of Anglo-Americans." The Bible contained "the means to salvation, the keys to good and evil, the rules by which to live, and the standards against which to measure the conduct of prince and pastor. Our greatness was founded upon private schools, personal tutelage, and self-governing, principled study and reasoning done in the home by rich and poor alike. This heritage of American Christian Education was carried on by Noah Webster who said, "the Christian religion is the most important and one of the first things in which all children under a free government ought to be instructed." He knew that a populace that reasoned from the only infallible political textbook, the Bible, would not be easily enslaved.

In 1838, Horace Mann became the Secretary of the Massachusetts Board of Education. He promoted:

- 1) State funded government schools founded on the philosophy of democratic socialism as opposed to free enterprise, private schools;

- 2) The removal of the Biblical doctrine of salvation as the basis of character and replacing it with psychological atheism, which found men basically good and perfectable through education and environmental control;
- 3) Group thinking and study rather than individual initiative, and creativity.
- 4) Nationally standardized teacher training, textbooks, and school accreditation founded on humanistic principles; replacing the philosophy of education as taught by Webster.

As the 20th century dawned, John Dewey, with his Progressive method of education, derived partially from his exposure to the "fine Communistic education system in Russia," carried on this death march toward federal secularism. Soon every subject in the curriculum was being perverted. In history, for example, Charles Beard wrote 47 books (which sold over 11 million copies), all giving a socialist slant to American history and debunking our founders and our Christian heritage.

Today as public education collapses before our eyes mangling millions of young lives in the process, we are witnessing an inevitable consequence that cannot be corrected by putting voluntary prayer back in the schools. Barbara Morris, in her book, Change Agents in the Schools, summarized the conflict: "Gradually, as social standards and religious beliefs were allowed to be cast aside to satisfy the demands of 'pluralism,' non-Theists made great strides. We are in open conflict. We now have nothing less than a revolution taking place. Schools have become open agents of social change, working steadily to enthrone the 'articles of faith' of humanism."

We as Christians must reason Biblically from cause to effect and from content to form and not be sentimental about our alma maters, football games, and a few good teachers. Public schools are rotten because they are controlled by the government humanists who are not neutral but are against God and His Word. Jesus said: "A good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit, neither can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit." So it is with education.

We, as American Christians, must stop disobeying God and take back from the State the responsibility He has given us to educate our children - Prov. 22:6. To send our little ones into public schools is to send them to worship at the altar of Humanism. "Beward lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit, after the traditions of men, after the rudiments of the world, and not after Christ" - Colossians 2:8. How can we read the harsh condemnation of false teaching and still send our children to public schools?... We have neglected our basic legacy from the Lord - our children... The Christian School, which is the fastest growing institution in America, must purge itself from the philosophy of Progressive education. A Christian philosophy of education must replace progressivism both in course content, teaching methods, and teacher training... We can win the war if we invest our time, our money, and our lives in a long-run strategy to rebuild character and the Christian foundations of education. I am very encouraged about the future. Christians are realizing that the Christian School movement will play a great role in the revival that can save our Nation! (Unquote and Amen).

AMERICA - THE HOME OF THE FEARFUL?

The other day Candidate Jimmy Carter was busy stirring up anger and hostility among his listeners because he said that Candidate Ronald Reagan had been busy "stirring up hatred and racism" in Mississippi. The occasion: a campaign speech in Atlanta. The location: Ebenezer Baptist Church where Martin Luther King, Jr. used to preach, and where "Daddy" King still preaches. The congregation: Black leaders, with Andy Young sitting cross-legged in the front pew. The speaker: "Georgia boy" Jimmy (as he was introduced by the mayor of Atlanta, Maynard Jackson). In the middle of his speech (as taped for TV), the Georgia boy departed from his prepared script to say that his main Republican opponent was "stirring up hatred and racism" and "creating a cloud on the political horizon." Packing his words with emotion, he went on to say: "You've seen in this campaign the stirrings of hate and the rebirth of code words like 'states rights' in a speech in Mississippi...."

Reagan really had said, in a speech at the Neshoba County fair in Mississippi that he was "a consistent believer in states rights." But just how use of that term - which was familiar to Patrick Henry, Thomas Jefferson, and even to Abraham Lincoln - could stir up hatred and racism, wasn't clear to us. But it was "explained" by reporter Tom Fielder, who covered Carter's campaign in Georgia for the Knight-Ridder newspaper chain. Fielder wrote: "States rights is a phrase that has long been a code word for some in the Deep South for segregation." States rights is something of a code word, but it refers to Federal interference in matters that are reserved by the Constitution to the States. It means, in effect and in loose translation, "You Feds, keep your hands off the things that can best be handled by State and County Governments. "We remember when we were a kid in Kansas, about the only federal official in the whole State would be the United States Marshall, and he stuck exclusively and carefully to Uncle Sam's business and let the Jayhawks take care of themselves. If a man was accused of a crime, he was tried by a jury of his peers in a court where a County judge presided. If convicted, punishment was quick. Two or three years of appeals to higher courts with eventual freedom on some technicality was unheard of. And the idea of prisoners suing prison officials for the alleged violation of their "rights" was equally unheard of. It was understood that a convicted felon was automatically deprived of his civil rights and stayed that way until his rights were restored by a qualified official. So long as the Counties handled their own problems of crime and punishment, with occasional help from the State, there was comparative peace and order and a reasonable amount of justice prevailed. But when federal appointees - judges and bureaucrats - moved in and started telling local officials how they must treat criminals as though they were VIPs, how their "rights" must be read to them, how they must be treated while in custody lest the officials be sued for mistreatment of their "guests" etc., etc.; these are the things that stir up hatred and fear.

Recently Allan C. Brownfeld wrote a column on this subject. He noted that: "Crime in the U.S. is at an all-time high. Yet, all too often, criminals are back on the street in record time - to kill, rape, and rob again. More and more our court system appears not to be one to provide justice but to protect those who have infringed, often violently, on the rights of others. This sad state of affairs has come about, in part, as the result of a philosophy which holds that criminals are not, in fact, responsible for their actions. This deterministic philosophy places all blame upon society which means, in the end, that none of us is responsible for what he does - whether it is good or bad. This is perhaps the final dehumanization of man."

"Once those few criminals who do find themselves sentenced to prison arrive in their place of incarceration," says Brownfeld, "they discover very quickly that they are not there for either punishment or for rehabilitation. They are simply being warehoused for a short period of time and they learn it is possible, even from within prison walls, to take advantage of our soft and gullible system. . . . The federal judges - a non-elected group - have more and more replaced state legislatures in setting forth day-to-day rules for running State prison systems. Their interpretation of what constitutes 'cruel and unusual punishment' has become so broad that many critics doubt that they support the concept of any kind of 'punishment' for criminals. Prisoners are encouraged to become amateur lawyers and to harass prison officials - knowing that the taxpayers will pay the bill." Some examples:

*There was the recent decision of a U.S. District Court judge who awarded $600,000 to the 380 inmates of the Lorton maximum-security facility in Washington, D.C. because the jail wasn't a safe place for them. It seems that the prisoners suffered the "emotional distress of being in fear for their safety." But this fear was brought about because they were terrorizing and attacking each other. They created their own reign of terror, and then collected about $1,500 each of taxpayers' money. Rep. J. Kenneth Robinson, Virginia Republican, was furious at the decision (which has been appealed), and said that "no maximum security area of a prison can be expected to resemble a Holiday Inn." But prisoners do expect it, because here are other examples:

- * An inmate sued because prison officials wouldn't supply him with silk sheets and silk underclothes.
- * Another sued because the prison supplied him with a brand of toothpaste different from the kind he had been using before incarceration.
- * A prisoner claimed his rights were being violated because he wasn't allowed to wear his toupee.
- * Last Christmas, an inmate sued the state for not permitting Santa Claus to visit the prison.
- * In a costly suit that went all the way to the U.S. Supreme Court, a prisoner claimed that a guard violated his rights by improperly taking from him a handful of cigarettes.
- * Here in Palm Beach County, jail inmates sued the Sheriff because he didn't reduce the jail population, didn't liberalize visiting policies, didn't build for them a basketball and volleyball court, and didn't provide for them an up-to-date law library.
- * Since the U.S. Supreme Court gave federal and state prisoners direct access to the federal courts, the entire penal systems of eight States (Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Mississippi, New Hampshire, Oklahoma, Rhode Island and Tennessee) have been ruled unconstitutional because of overcrowding.
- * Last year 23,001 petitions were filed by prisoners, more than one for every ten inmates.

These suits are paid for by taxpayers. While most of them are dismissed, or settled before going to trial, they still cost millions. But far more important, of course, is the fact that criminals just don't stay in jail. As Brownfeld said in his report, felons are neither punished nor rehabilitated; they are merely warehoused for a while, then released to kill, rob and rape again. The land is filled with "repeaters" and with shyster lawyers who got them out of prison.

All too common are the stories of "loopholes" in the law that prevent lawmen from maintaining order and protecting citizens. As a result, the land is filled with fear. And many - too many - officials are increasing this fear with their attempts to disarm the citizenry.

David Finn lives in the affluent Riverdale section of the Bronx. About a year ago his 60-year-old brother was murdered by a gunman. Since guns are outlawed in New York, only outlaws have guns. Shocked by his brother's death, Finn promoted a study, a Report on Fear of Crime. The study, based on telephone interviews with adults nationwide, concluded that the "fear of crime is slowly paralyzing American society." We have no way of knowing just how accurate a report of this kind may be, but here are some of the results, as published in the New York Daily News:

- * Four of every 10 Americans are afraid they will become victims of murder, rape, robbery or assault, and they feel unsafe in their environment.
- * One of four said they are afraid even to venture into familiar neighborhood places.
- * Eight of 10 believe that the prison system does not rehabilitate criminals.
- * Just over six of 10 support the death penalty for murderers.
- * More than half of those surveyed support sterilization for habitual sex offenders and the hopelessly insane.
- * Just over half said that they own guns....
- * Six of 10 said they dress plainly to avoid drawing attention to themselves.

The newspaper article concludes with this paragraph: "The study made no recommendations for fighting crime. The researchers said only that they hope that a clearer awareness of the extent of the fear of crime and its effect on the nation could aid in finding solutions."

Well, the people in Miami are finding solutions; as are the citizens of several other cities. Because of the influx of "124,445 Cuban refugees and 6,727 Haitian refugees" during the last five months, and the black unrest in Miami and its suburbs, Dade County has become "the crime capitol of the United States." But fear has not paralyzed everyone. Instead, people are taking the law into their own hands; and the law enforcement officials are encouraging the action. Here are excerpts from an article which appeared in the Sept. 6, 1980, issue of the Miami Herald:

"Armed and angry Miamians, taking the law into their own hands, killed more robbers, burglars and rapists than have been slain by police this year... Embattled civilians confronted and killed more than twice as many criminals as did police during the first eight months of 1980... The chief of Dade County's police union approves of residents arming themselves. "There are just not enough of us (policemen) to go around... People who have a perfect right to be armed in their homes or their businesses should absolutely arm themselves. Police are spread so thin... People will say, 'But you're going to have a bunch of lunatics running around with guns' - but we have that now." said the Police Association President Hugh Peebles.

"The whole judicial system is failing," says Miami Homicide Sgt. Mike Gonzalez. "People are going back to Wild West says, back to the days where there was one marshal in the whole territory and one judge who rode the circuit. People couldn't depend on the police or the courts, so they took the law into their own hands. They took care of themselves. That diminished through the years. Now it's picking up again."

How it's picking up is illustrated by an article released by the Chicago Tribune Service, which reports on the resurrection of the old Posse Comitatus system of justice in North Central Wisconsin. Posse Comitatus is legal Latin for "power of the county." In the Wild West posses were often formed by the Sheriff or Marshal to ride after outlaws. But the system had almost died out. Following are excerpts from article, together with its eight column headline:

* * * * *

MODERN POSSE: DEFIANCE, ANGER, FEAR

Tigerton Dells, Wis. - Land is sacred around here. Residents, most of them farmers, want no intrusions from government agencies that may want to tap their streams, use them for public waterways, or deposit nuclear wastes in the valleys of their verdant rolling hills... In 1974 Ray Omerick and 6 friends decided that they had had enough of bureaucracy. In the name of God, patriotism, and law and order, they chartered the first Wisconsin chapter of posse comitatus. Usually a posse is called together by a sheriff in an emergency, to help keep the peace. But this posse waits for no summons. Wisconsin posse members have stopped citizens for speeding; 'indicted' public officials and subpoenaed them before the posse's own 'citizen's grand jury'; guarded trailer homes that authorities said violated local zoning ordinances; filed a spate of nuisance lawsuits, such as liens against the property of "corrupt" officials; ...inspected civil defense shelters and accused the state attorney general of treason after they found the shelters empty....

James Wickstrom (a posse member) understands the significance of a man's property and what it symbolizes. "This land is the birthplace of our freedom. If someone comes and threatens a man's sweat and toil...he's gonna go inside, and get a shotgun, and blow their heads off." To him the family farm is the backbone of the nation. Saying it is in grave danger, he speaks of the corrupt forces "that have brought a once great nation to the brink of destruction." The posse believes that law enforcement officials generally are on the take and incompetent. In the posse's handbook, hanging is the punishment prescribed for those who would subvert the law. So far there have been no hangings, but reportedly there has been a tarring and feathering. Women cannot belong to the posse - it is only for men over 15. "The Bible states man is over woman," it was explained, "though we do train them in combat - we think it's their right to be able to defend themselves when no one's around."...

Common law is the posse base. Posse rhetoric is laced with quotes from the Declaration of Independence, Magna Carta, Black's Law Dictionary, and the Bible... The posse charges that the Federal Reserve System is fraudulent and illegal "because it is not backed by gold and silver."... Judges and lawyers are held in contempt. "The biggest crime is going on in the courts," Wickstrom said. "Repeated felons are slapped on the hands, and put back on the streets to commit more crimes, but if you and I go five miles an hour over 55, they throw the book at us." (End of quotations from Chicago Tribune article.)

The posse organization claims to be a nationwide movement, but membership figures are vague because charters are not registered. Spokesmen claim membership of 2.5 million ("growing daily"), with chapters in every State. If you are interested, our advice is to see your sheriff. If he isn't interested, then see what you can do about it next November 4th.

THE "TOLSTOY CONTROVERSY"

The problems were mounting: double-digit inflation, increasing unemployment, decline in morale and morality, growing distrust of Big Brother government - and then came war. This is an election year. There is an incumbent determined to do anything necessary to stay in power. The war involves Iran, who might be willing to trade American hostages for much needed war supplies. And this set of circumstances gives rise to the lurking suspicion that the war may have been planned by someone bigger than Iraqi President Saddam Hussein. There is the fact that a war between Iraq (with Soviet-made weapons) and Iran (with U.S.-made weapons) which threatens the world's oil supply, places President Jimmy Carter in the role of "peacemaker" and has upped his poll-rating in an election year. Jimmy made great gains in his role as peacemaker between Israel and Egypt. As peacemaker between the Arabians of Iraq and the Persians of Iran (both being Muslim) should do even better for Jimmy.

Are we being too unfair to Jimmy? If so, it is not to promote his opponents in the race. There are minor party candidates who would make far better presidents than Carter, Reagan or Anderson. Due to media and money control they haven't a chance, of course. But our efforts concern survival of the Nation, not of any political party. So, let's reason together:

A few weeks ago controversial columnist Jack Anderson wrote a series of articles in which he charged, with considerable documentation that backed up the charge, that Jimmy Carter was preparing for war in Iran "to give Jimmy Carter a dramatic political push upward in popularity just before the November 4 election." In reporting this, we quoted several newsletters in which their editors also predicted that a Carterwar was being planned. For example, R.E. McMaster, Jr. wrote in his "The Reaper": "Make no mistake about it, despite Jimmy Carter's incredible inconsistency and economic incompetence, he is one shrewd cookie when it comes to politics. And if it takes a war to get re-elected, Jimmy Carter will engineer one." Well, a war has been engineered, and there are many who believe that "it was planned that way."

Let's begin with that assumption that Carter will do anything to get re-elected. Human Events, slavishly pro-Reagan but otherwise leaning toward objectivity, headlined its September 27th lead story, "Carter's Politics of Hate," and the article began: "The formal general election campaign was barely two weeks old last week, and already the mean, vindictive tactics that many, including this publication, had predicted Jimmy Carter would unleash against Ronald Reagan were everywhere manifest. Whether it involved leaking sensitive national security information to the press for political advantage, politicizing such traditionally non-political agencies as the State and Defense departments to help in his own re-election, or characterizing his opponent as a friend of the rich and an enemy of the poor, there seemed little that this president would not do or say to maintain his tenuous lease on the White House. But for sheer gutter politics, perhaps nothing in the Georgian's previous record can match his assertion last week (later partially retracted) that Ronald Reagan...has been practicing the politics of 'racism' and 'hatred'." (unquote).

That was written and published before Carter topped his "racism and hatred" essay by telling the California AFL-CIO conference in Los Angeles that, "Six weeks from now the American people will make a very profound choice..... whether we have peace or war." Carter said in effect that if he is elected the nation will "go forward and have peace." But if Reagan is elected, the nation will "go backward and have war." A storm of protest was raised and Carter's White House spokesman, Jody Powell offered a partial apology by saying that Carter was "guilty of an overstatement of the case."

There is here a strange kind of historical repetition which was brought out by a constituent writing to his congressman, Robert Lagomarsino, of California. The letter was inserted in the Congressional Record of Sept. 18 (p. E 4461). We quote: "I remember when President Wilson was re-elected, after he promised to keep the U.S. out of World War I. The United States was at war within a month of when he began his second term after being re-elected. When President Roosevelt was re-elected in 1940, after promising to keep us out of World War II, he asked and got the right to send the anti-German allies war supplies under the 'Lend-Lease' act. In order to get these supplies through, Roosevelt had U.S. destroyers escorting convoys of allied ships part way across the Atlantic and pinpointing German submarines, which the allied warships attacked. When a German submarine fired a torpedo at the American destroyer Greer, Roosevelt, who had not told the people what he was doing, feigned surprise and outrage and ordered U.S. warships to shoot on sight at hostile German ships. The destroyer Greer was torpedoed in September 1941 before the U.S. was at a declared war. Roosevelt got us into World War II by his actions (the writer doesn't mention the Pearl Harbor ploy-Ed.). President Truman pulled our troops out of South Korea and North Korea invaded South Korea. President Johnson got us into war in South Vietnam after claiming that Goldwater, if elected, would get us involved in a war in South Vietnam! And-now Carter is claiming Reagan is a war monger! What's new?" (Unquote).

What's new is that the other presidents kept us out of war just long enough to get re-elected; Carter could be getting us into war just to get elected! But it is the same con game, worked backward to win re-election.

However, let us assume (and this is an assumption) that all was coincidence, and that there was no outside pressure involved, that this dispute between the two countries of the oil-rich Middle East is, as Anwar Sadat of Egypt hinted, an argument between "two adolescents who shouldn't have been given guns to play with." Here is the way the Iraq-Iran war can be explained in such case: There has been a long-standing argument about some territory that was taken, or leased, from Iraq by Iran, and never returned. The territory in question includes some strategically placed islands that could control the passage of all vessels through the Strait of Hormuz. After the Shah of Iran was deposed and exiled, to die in Egypt, the Iranian military fell on bad times. Officers were executed, troops deserted, equipment was hardly kept at combat-ready. The internal situation in Iran was so chaotic that President Hussein of Iraq felt it would be an excellent time to reclaim that disputed territory. There also was a personal political reason: the ruling clique in Iraq belong to the Sunni Muslim sect, while the majority of Iraqis are Shiites (as are most Iranians). The unrest in Iran, was causing unrest in Iraq, and it was necessary for Hussein and his party to demonstrate strength if they were to remain in office. There is nothing like a war to unite people behind their leaders (as Carter knows). So, a little war was advantageous to President Hussein of Iraq. And the same thing can be said of the Ayatollah and President Abol Hassan Bani-Sadr, who also head a chaotic populace that was becoming uncontrollable. Hence, a little war was just what the doctor would have ordered, for both Iraq and Iran. If both countries benefit politically from the war, it will be difficult to settle the conflict. And if the conflict gets out of hand, and the Strait of Hormuz closed to ships, World War III might get into the shooting stages.

But now let's look from yet another angle at this affair that is being called the "Tolstoy Controversy" because it involves "War and Peace." This requires a historical background and we are oversimplifying in the interests of space. A struggle for a "Jewish State" was begun by the Zionists in the latter part of the 19th century. Through clever manipulations, at the end of World War I the whole of Palestine was awarded to Great Britain as a mandate from the League of Nations. The Zionists settled on Palestine as the site of a "Jewish State," but the inhabitants of Palestine opposed and the problem remained unanswered until after the end of World War II, when Britain threw the whole controversy into the hands of the newly established United Nations. In 1947 the UN established a special committee which, in August of that year reported on a plan to divide Palestine into three parts: a Jewish State, an Arab State, and a small internationally administered zone which would include the city of Jerusalem. The U.S. and the U.S.S.R. adopted the plan, Britain abstained, Arab States resisted, and still resist. All might have been settled after nearly forty years of wars and rumors of wars, save for two chief reasons: no place to call home was ever found for the displaced Arabs, and the "Jewish State" kept expanding and driving more Arabs off more land.

Then came a change in the state of the States of Araby. Oil became "as good as gold" and despite foreign (Rockefeller and Rothschild) control of their oil production and marketing, the ruling families of Araby found untold wealth at their command. And the Soviet Union, the United States and the Common Market Nations of Europe have been anxious to supply them with arms and to train their military personnel. At the same time there is this "religious imperative" which calls for the protection of Israel at all costs. Simultaneously, a "Holy War" is being promoted by the Moslem Brotherhood. The seriousness of this situation was brought out by Hilaire du Berrier, a qualified and respected observer who reports from Monte Carlo. He wrote just before the Iraqi-Iranian undeclared war began:

"In the Arab world, nationality has nothing to do with a man's place of birth. Any Arab who is willing to join the Holy War against Israel and carry out missions for one of the arms of the Palestine Liberation Organization is considered a Palestinian. And the war against the United States is about to be stepped up (because of continued U.S. aid to and support of Israel-Ed.). The invisible body behind this war which has already started is known as Ikhwan al-Islam, the Moslem Brotherhood. It was founded in 1928 by an Egyptian professor whose dream was a world-wide Moslem empire, powerful enough to hold the infidels to ransom. Today the resurgence of Moslem fanaticism and Israel's intransigence in colonizing the West Bank of the Jordan, plus her out-and-out annexation of Jerusalem, containing Islam's second holy place, have combined to make the Moslem Brotherhood a power to be reckoned with from Morocco to the Philippines. The Moslem Brotherhood has spread through all of the Arab countries and into central Asia. It has become a government above governments, a sort of counter-culture with its own social structures, religious framework, social aid organization, and all the agencies of empire. It supplies support for Moslems wherever they are, and they are just about everywhere....What they preach with fanatic fervor is creation of a world-wide Moslem state....America has yet to take the Moslem threat seriously, .. though thousands of them are already installed here (in the U.S.-Ed.) - many illegally. And, recognized as the leader of the Brotherhood's revolutionary movement is Yasir Arafat, who is supported by Moscow's secret services."

Although both Jimmy Carter and Leonid Brezhnev are said to be observing a strict hands-off policy (as of September 25, that is), this is certainly not true of Ikhwan el-Islam, the Moslem Brotherhood, which is doing everything within its power to bring this intra-Islam conflict to a quick conclusion. Yasir Arafat has paid official visits to Bagdad and Tehran. To maintain whatever standing he yet may have in the Brotherhood, Anwar Sadat of Egypt has condemned both belligerents and called upon the U.S. to intervene. And the very influential "Islamic Group" which is composed of the leadership of all Moslem States has met under the auspices of the UN and named a three-man delegation to go to the two warring governments and demand a cessation of hostilities. So it is quite possible that, as you read this Report, the shooting phase of this first battle of a new war will have ended. But it may be a mere lull before a greater storm.

Analyzing the situation as Carter must have seen it, there was one imperative: He had to have the "Jewish vote" if he expected to win re-election. There had been that costly gaffe at the UN when the US voted anti-Israel. Apologies had followed, but damage was done. Carter tried fence mending by approving more aid to Israel - $2.9 billion this time - and he revived lagging interest in that lagging peace offensive between Israel and Egypt. But there was great danger that Carter would lose New York State to Anderson, which wouldn't help Anderson much, but it would kill Carter politically. Also, Carter was seeking legitimate ways to utilize the advantage of incumbency, to keep his face before the people in papers and on TV screens. He was criticized, not applauded, when he opened a televised press conference with a five-minute statement that was a political advertisement for himself. Reagan should have had equal time. And Carter was criticized when he used the stealth aircraft announcement for political gain. He lost ground by calling Reagan a racist and hatemonger, added to the damage when he implied that the choice between Reagan and Carter was the choice between war and peace. He was checkmated from using another military operation involving U.S. troops in an attempt to gain freedom for the 52 hostages and re-election for himself because that ploy had been exposed. So, there remained a way: have agents promote a war against Iran by a third party and then hope for a trade of spare parts for hostages, and a win for Carter?

The preceding is presumption, not provable fact. The Trilats may have done it all without regard to Carter's re-election, since they also have Reagan and Anderson under control. But their control of the Middle East was being challenged by Islamic resurgence. Turmoil in Turkey. The uniting of pro-Soviet Libya and Syria. The now pressing problem of how to handle a Soviet Union that was about to fall into the control of younger, military-minded leaders, as Brezhnev was about to follow Mao and Tito. In such a situation, a war pitting Moslem against Moslem (divide and conquer) without allowing too much damage to the world's oil supply (presently glutted); this could seem an ideal expedient to a clique that intends to solidify a New World Order.

So, it may have been a plot to assure Carter's re-election; it may have been a way to "divide and conquer" Moslem resurgence; or it may have been merely a despot seeking control of a vital sealane. Take your choice. But regardless of the reason or the result, we are convinced that in this Tolstoy Controversy "you ain't seen nothin' yet."

THAT DIME'S WORTH OF DIFFERENCE

"Gay Religious Leaders Visit White House," was the title of a report sent out by the Fundamental News Service of the American Council of Christian Churches a few weeks ago. It read: "Dr. Robert Maddox, President Carter's special assistant for religious liaison met with some 41 representatives of gay religious caucuses in American churches. The two hour meeting covered reports of discrimination against homosexuals in churches and in society, homosexual religious ministries and political objectives. 'You have blown a number of stereotypes for me today. The kind of careful preparation you have done will carry the day for you eventually', Dr. Maddox told the group - which he cautioned against expecting a quick resolution to gay problems in every church or government. 'Still,' he continued, 'I feel at home and very comfortable with you folks today - more so - than with a delegation of fundamentalists who visited a month earlier to present anti-gay rights petitions bearing 74,000 signatures.' Asked about his previous comments to the fundamentalist group that President Carter 'was not going to do anything to hasten homosexual's acceptance into society,' Dr. Maddox said, 'I don't think I said that. The President has said he fully endorses and encourages the civil rights of homosexuals.' Allison Thomas from the staff of Anne Wexler, assistant to the President, said, 'This is an open administration. The President stands firmly for civil and human rights for all Americans, and I'm proud to say that includes homosexuals. 95 percent of gay employment discrimination was wiped off the books by the Civil Service Reform Act of 1979. A U.S. Civil Service Commission memo due in about two weeks will clarify that federal employment will not be affected by off-the-job behavior, including sexual preference.' Howard Erickson, coordinator of "Lutherans Concerned" reminded Dr, Maddox that mainline churches almost unanimously endorse gay civil rights laws." (unquote).

For purposes of comparison, we quote a mailgram sent out by Phyllis Schlafly following Ronald Reagan's September 12 announcement of appointments to his Women's Advisory Committee: "Ronald Reagan today announced his Women's Advisory Committee of 25 women, and it is predominantly women's lib. Mary Louise Smith is chairman. Committee includes bitter pre-ERAers such as Margaret Heckler, Maureen Reagan and Audrey Rowe. It includes sponsor of the Draft Women Amendment Nancy Kassebaum. It includes the leader of the move to send women into military combat Jeanne Holm. Committee includes at least three IWY Commissioners. but not a single woman identified in the Stop ERA or Pro-Life Movement." (unquote).

It so happened that at the time of Reagan's announcement of the appointments, the Women for Constitutional Government, were holding their annual National Convention in Jackson, Mississippi (Sept. 11-13). Informed of Reagan's action by mailgram, they immediately drafted and approved a resolution, from which we quote:

* * * * *

WHEREAS, on September 12, 1980, Ronald Reagan announced his Women's Advisory Committee of 25 members; and

WHEREAS, most of the appointees can be identified as leaders in the left-wing women's lib organizations, the Pro-ERA drive, the movement to draft women and send them into combat, and pushers of homosexuality and abortion; and WHEREAS, not a single appointee is representative of the pro-American, pro-family views, nor can be identified with Stop ERA, Pro-Life, nor any conservative or traditional Christian movement; and WHEREAS, these appointments represent a complete reversal and repudiation of the platform recently adopted at the Republican National Convention, as well as the betrayal of those staunch conservatives who have supported Ronald Reagan through the primaries and in the Convention itself; and WHEREAS the tactics used by proponents of ERA to force legislatures to ratify the proposed amendment have been unfair, immoral and unconstitutional, and Ronald Reagan's appointments to his Women's Advisory Committee represents an endorsement of those tactics; and, WHEREAS, the views espoused by these women-libbers are repugnant to the great majority of Americans.....therefore, be it RESOLVED, that these appointments be denounced....." (unquote).

We are taught that there are two major political parties in the United States because they promote opposing political philosophies and governing policies, and that gives us a choice. But, in the two items we have just quoted, can you detect any real difference? It is true that there are differences in the National Party Platforms presented by the Republicans and the Democrats. But it would seem that, in order to fool most of the people most of the time - and especially at election time - members of the allegedly opposing parties meet in National Convention and adopt platforms that are different. One is said to be liberal and the other is said to be conservative. But these platforms are only used to fool people into voting one way or another. Once the candidates have been elected and installed, the party platform goes into the waste basket, is replaced by a program presented by the "Invisible Government." This happens, regardless of which candidate wins, because the Power Brokers control them all. In this particular case, Reagan didn't even wait until after the election to renounce the Republican Party's Platform. It says, for example, "we express our support for legislation protecting and defending the traditional American family against the ongoing erosion of its base in our society." It says that "we affirm our support of a constitutional amendment to restore protection of the right to life for unborn children." It says that "ratification of the Equal Rights Amendment is now in the hands of state legislatures" and there should be "no federal interference or pressure." So how did Reagan react to his Party's demands? He appointed to his Women's Advisory Committee pro-ERAers, abortionists, and gays. And so, where is that "dime's worth of difference"?

So far as the candidates are concerned, platforms - and promises - are made to please and to deceive. The most flagrant example of this involved a former Governor of a great State who was running for President. His platform which he endorsed publicly and supposedly whole-heartedly, was the most conservative, the most pro-American platform ever written by a political party in this century. However, once elected, this former Governor of a great State threw away that wonderful platform and introduced instead what came to be known as the New Deal. Ever since then, people have been told that there is this great fixed gulf separating the principles espoused by the two major parties. There usually is, on paper. But that great fixed gulf simply disappears the minute a new administration is installed. On the part of the Power Brokers, it's a form of the "divide and conquer" technique.

One of the most successful uses of differences to divide and conquer people is the "label" technique applied to politics: semantic use of such words as democracy, socialism, communism, fascism, nazism, etc. We are told constantly, and most of us seem to believe, that Communism and Fascism are at opposite ends of the political spectrum. Communism is supposed to be the extreme left, while Fascism (or Nazism) is the extreme right. That supposedly places Democracy somewhere in the moderate middle of the political spectrum. But, if we bother to study history, we'll discover that Communism and Fascism are members of the same family, the family name being Socialism. They are not opposites at all, they are political relatives. Communism as practiced in Russia, is International Socialism; while Nazism, Fascism, and the kinds of Communism practiced in Yugoslavia and Albania, are forms of National Socialism.

An illustration of the international character of Soviet Communism is provided by a study of the KGB. Its present director is Yuri V. Andropov, who also is a ranking member of the all-powerful "Politburo," and is often mentioned as a possible successor to Leonid Brezhnev, if and when. The KGB is an international secret police. It is divided into five General "Directorships," the first of which is in charge of all foreign operations: spying, sabotaging, terrorizing, directing revolutions, wars, etc. This "General Directorship" is composed of various "departments" according to geographical zones. Department No. 1 takes care of the United States and Canada; Department Two operates in Latin America. The Third Department looks after Great Britain, Australia, New Zealand and Scandinavia. And so on with some 15 Departments dedicated to the proposition of Communizing the world. (This information is culled from an article entitled "The KGB: The Monster With Tentacles," by the recognized authority on Communism Anton Moor. The article appeared in the June, 1980 issue of Replica, Guadalajara, Mexico.)

This is what is meant by Communism, or International Socialism, with its vast and highly developed apparatus whose aim is to create and control a One World Society by whatever means that becomes necessary: political assassinations, sabotage, acts of terrorism, revolution, war, genocide; or the gentler tactics of Fabianism where successful: legislation, education, indoctrination, drugs, and carrots.

Fascism, Nazism and other forms of National Socialism, are different in one respect. They do not rule out capitalism, but find ways of using capitalism to enforce their totalitarian methods. For this reason Fascism is also known as Corporate Socialism. Our doublespeak historians and economists were able to blot out the fact that Roosevelt's New Deal was Fascistic to the core! Ronald Reagan mentioned this fact in one of his campaign speeches, but so far as we have been able to determine, has never again mentioned this hidden truth. But a reader of The Review of the News asked that publication if Reagan was "Off base in comparing Franklin Roosevelt's New Deal with aspects of Fascism?" The question was answered in that publication's Sept. 24th issue. We quote:

* * * * *

Not at all. Mussolini's economic policies were admired by many New Dealers. In 1935, the year the Supreme Court ruled the National Industrial Recovery Act (NIRA) unconstitutional, there were shocking similarities in the economic tactics of the New Deal, Nazism, and Fascism. An observer compared the three as follows: "Through capital advances each government exercises varying powers over industry and commerce. A planned national economy is the goal. Room remains for the competitive game. The codes of the NRA and the hand of the State in their framing and operation are suggestive of the 'Corporation' patterned in Italy and that of the 'Chamber' in Germany. Just so. In fact, when General Hugh Johnson took over the NRA under Roosevelt he gave to each Cabinet member a book by an Italian Fascist. And when Johnson was leaving the NRA, reports Arthur M. Schlesinger, Jr. in The Coming of the

New Deal, "he invoked what he called the 'shining name of Mussolini...'"

Similarly, says NYU economics professor Melvyn Krauss: "Mr. Reagan's insight that Mussolini's Italian 'corporate state', and Roosevelt's short-lived 'corporate state' in the U.S. were structurally identical not only is correct, but demonstrates an intellectual sophistication that many professional economic historians would envy."

Mussolini, after all, was a long-time socialist. The socialist president of Columbia, Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, bragged of his friendship with Il Duce and called Fascism in Rome "a form of government of the first order of excellence" and advocated that "we should look to Italy to show us what its experience and insight have to teach in the crisis confronting the twentieth century."

* * * * *

Reagan's 'insight' in noting the similarities of Mussolini's corporate state and Roosevelt's 'short-lived' corporate state may be commendable. But it was not a 'short-lived' corporate state, it was an 'interrupted' corporate state, interrupted by a then Constitution-minded Supreme Court. But, ever since passage of the National Employment Act of 1946, the New World Order Planners have been moving toward a total Planned Economy. Planned Economy and Socialism are Synonyms! And here's that dime's worth of difference: In the USSR, Big Government owns everything; in the US, Big Government controls everything. Both are types of Planned Economy. And the end result is to be a wedding of the two, so that there is Planned Economy on a world-wide scale.

Indicative of our drift toward Corporate Socialism (Fascism) has been Government's bailout of Lockheed, of New York City, the takeover of railroads, Government's control of the oil industry, its loans to Chrysler, to Big Steel, and - 100% Fascistic - the naming of the head of the United Auto Workers Labor Union to a directorship in the Chrysler Corporation. A similar drift into Fascism can be noted in the creation of Ten Federal Regions, for the control of land, industry, commerce, and all human resources and services.

In the international field there has been a constant drift toward "world law," toward interdependence, the making of trade and cultural agreements, especially with Communist countries. Through such deals - by treaty, executive order, UN directive, etc. - our sovereignty is being sapped, our freedoms lost. All in the name of a New World Order, a synonym for Universal Planned Economy.

Reagan's insight will not prevent this march toward slavery. He has sold out to his Trilateral bosses. When they command he must obey. Note his backdown in the "Two China" affair; and his surrender to pro-ERAers, abortionists and gays. Reagan's rhetoric is commendable, his perseverance is deplorable. All of which means that the preservation of our freedoms, the restoration of our Republic, the salvation of our children, and the return of morality and justice depend upon our control of the one branch of government over which we still can exercise control: the Legislatures of our State and Federal Governments. There remains time to investigate, to promote, to vote for the man and not for the party label he wears or for the empty promises he'll not try to keep. If we fail, this election could be our last.

THE REVIVAL OF BRINKMANSHIP

A quarter of a century ago the Builders of the New World Order were engaged in a two-part program: To dismember the Empires of the West, and to weaken the Nations of the West - especially the United States of America - in order to create a "balance of power" between the NATO Nations and the Warsaw Pact slave states. These two Regional World Sectors were to be equal in all things including military power, diplomatic influence, economic strength, etc. This "balance of power" concept is best understood if we consider the import of our official defense policy which is known by the acronym, MAD (Mutual Assured Destruction). The completion of this part of the Planners' Program produced this result: Militarily we are inferior to the Soviet Union; but the interdependent NATO is probably equal in power to the interdependent Warsaw Pact. We say "probably;" the Middle East powder keg could prove us wrong.

The first part of the Planners' Program, the dismemberment of the Empires of the West, would rob Britain, France, the Netherlands, Portugal, Spain et al, of their colonies in Africa, Asia and Central America, so that scores of mini-states could be created for exploitation and development. Most of the selected leaders of these mini-states would have neither the character nor the ability to govern their people and resist economic exploitation. Where competent and able leaders did exist - Tshombe of the Congo, Batista of Cuba, Somoza of Nicaragua, etc. - they would be disposed of so there would be no interference with exploitation (by either the Communists or the Monopoly Capitalists, who seem to be in league with each other).

This Planners' Program - decolonization and depowering - involved the United States and France in a very special way. A resurgence of national spirit and patriotism grew in post-war France, probably because of the influence of the national hero, Charles de Gaulle. It was necessary to "punish" France and at the same time weaken the United States by creating a series of wars in French Indo-China. This brings us to the year 1954. The French stronghold at Dien Bien Phu was surrounded and about to fall to the Viet Minh forces. Gen. Ely, the French chief-of-staff, flew to Washington seeking help. Secretary of State John Foster Dulles was willing (being a ranking CFR member, he would be). According to Carroll Quigley, the "historian and stool-pigeon" who told too much about The Conspiracy in his book Tragedy and Hope, wrote (page 1044) that: "For a few days the United States, at Dulles's prodding, tottered 'on the brink' of war. Dulles proposed a 'united action policy' which he described in these terms: 'If Britain would join U.S. and France would agree to stand firm ... If the three Western states could combine with friendly Asian nations, just as the UN stepped in against North Korean aggression in 1950 ... and if the Chinese Communists intervene openly, their staging bases in South China will be destroyed by U.S. air power'." But because of British commitments to the Soviet Union, Britain refused to go along with Dulles. So Dulles had to content himself by forming SEATO, an eight-nation organization that was totally ineffective and powerless. However, President Eisenhower did send advisers and "trainers" for the South Vietnamese army in 1955, and the number of these advisers grew and grew until in 1962 President Kennedy said if the US military advisers were shot at, they had permission to shoot back. The US became even more deeply involved when it officially withdrew its support of President Ngo Dinh Diem, with US officials probably arranging for his assassination. But the total commitment to war came in August, 1964. President Johnson said two U.S. Destroyers had been sunk by North Vietnamese boats and on Aug. 7 Congress authorized the President to take whatever action he deemed necessary and advisable. That Tonkin Resolution served in the place of an official Declaration of War. Over 50,000 Americans died as a result.

We mention all this because that dreadful part of American history began with the "Brinkmanship" of John Foster Dulles. This prompted the sending of US advisers and observers to Southeast Asia. Then, with added touches by Presidents Kennedy, Johnson, and Nixon's Secretary of State Henry Kissinger, there was accomplished what the World Planners desired: the weakening of US power, prestige, and respect around the world.

And we now seem to have a repetition of the same general chain of events: US advisers and observers are in Saudi Arabia for defense purposes; a US Naval fleet lies outside the Persian Gulf awaiting possible action; Marines and much heavy equipment wait in and around the Island of Diego Garcia in the Indian Ocean, awaiting possible call to action. Any potential "Strait of Hormuz Incident" could be used exactly as the "Gulf of Tonkin Incident" was used, to get the United States involved in yet another limited and no-win war - and a war in which the forces of International Communism and Monopoly Capitalism could be the only winners.

Brinkmanship - skirting on the brink of war - is the term adopted to describe the CFR-directed policy of Secretary of State John Foster Dulles in 1954. In the year 1980, just over a quarter of a century later, Secretary of State Muskie is at odds with National Security Advisor Brzezinski. So, it is the Tri-lateralist Under Secretary of State, Warren Christopher, who has been commissioned by "the powers that be" to conduct this current revival of Dulles's Brinkmanship. Here is how media conglomerate Knight-Ridder's bureau chief in Washington James McCarthy, analyzed this latest Brinkmanship:

"The United States is being dragged ever more deeply into the Persian Gulf crisis touched off by the Iraq-Iran war. U.S. public commitments to protect the oil-rich gulf with American forces are growing stronger and more definite. The number of U.S. military personnel in the area is growing. And while professing neutrality, the United States is offering military help to several Arab countries that either actively or tacitly oppose Iran.... All this is happening while U.S. fears grow that the war could spread and lead to an unwanted confrontation with the Soviet Union in the Gulf... Deputy Secretary of State Warren Christopher, who has become something of a spokesman in the crisis, said this week, 'We have vital interests at stake in the Persian Gulf region... We will defend them.'... Christopher then specifically committed the use of U.S. military forces, if needed, to keep open the Strait of Hormuz at the mouth of the Persian Gulf. It was the first public commitment by the administration to use force...." (Unquote).

A disturbing element in this arranged Brinkmanship is Spotlight's assertion, in its Oct. 13 issue, that "Iraq Invaded Iran After Vow By Rockefeller Of U.S. Help." Spotlight is far more dependable newswise than is the controlled media, and its assertion that Trilateral Chieftain Rockefeller's hand is in the mess, is logical and believable. Adding to the tension in that area, came the declaration by King Hussein of Jordan that his country would do everything in its power to help Iraq win its war against Iran. This was countered by an announcement that terrorist-promoting Libya and pro-Communist Syria had begun to airlift war supplies to Iran. This was followed by the report from Israeli radio that Syria and the USSR had just signed a mutual assistance pact which made Syria a virtual member of the Warsaw Pact. Meanwhile, a whole series of seemingly pre-planned "anti-semitic" incidents took place in France, to be followed by Communist-inspired counter demonstrations in favor of Israel.

If we include Spotlight's exclusive report with the controlled-media reports, it would seem that of the journalist's "five little serving men" - Who, What, Where, Why, and When - all have served except Why? Why should such a war erupt in a most dangerous place at such a most dangerous time? A clue to the answer is provided in the one word "Jerusalem." This is partially explained in an editorial published by the Oct. 9 Straight Talk, which is Tom Anderson's weekly news service to conservative publications. That editorial follows.

* * * * *

Crown Prince Fahd's call for Jihad, Holy War, to save Jerusalem and liberate the other occupied lands comes because of the continued provocations of Israel and the United States' inability, or unwillingness, to control its protege. The provocations are so intense and sweeping that the Prince had no choice, as he put it, but to appeal to all Muslims in the world to unite and work toward the liberation of their holy places. For now, Israel's occupation of all Palestine complete, and its annexation of Jerusalem is a fait accompli, although illegal and denounced by the rest of the world.

Jihad need not be an immediate struggle. It should be prepared for over a period of time and include resources to resist the Zionist resources backed by the finances of Jews worldwide and the power and prestige of the United States administration, Congress, economy, armed forces and media. This the Muslims will have to take into consideration in their determination to adopt Jihad, not to commit aggression, but essentially to regain what others have wrested from them. Thus, the call also is a repudiation of past attempts that were made to negotiate a settlement. The Camp David accords, rejected by Saudi Arabia and the rest of the Arab world except their signatory, Egypt, have proved their inanity. Egypt has frozen the so-called autonomy talks, and Israel has proved to the world at large that it did not mean to go ahead with them anyway.

The Camp David framework has become glaringly inept, and Israel has shown that it could not care less for any meaningful negotiations to reach a peaceful settlement in the region. Top Western leaders are as convinced of that as the Arab ones, but they simply are unable to say it or protest against it publicly. This leaves the Arabs, whose lands are occupied, and the Muslims whose holy places are annexed, very little option but to prepare themselves for battle, sooner or later. Words and statements alone, as the Prince said, will be a waste of time and energy. The Muslims are facing a unique idea of defiance that is backed by the most powerful military machine in the world, and it is a matter of "being or not being at all," as the Prince put it. (Unquote).

* * * * *

It is important to understand that Jihad, the Muslim name for "Holy War," is concerned with religion, not with nationality, or genealogy. We might say the same of Zionism, which is concerned with a "Jewish Peoplehood," rather than with religion or nationality. So here we have the makings of a worldwide conflict that has little to do with traditional nationalism, but with people who believe the same thing, regardless of country or color.

However, aside from the ties of Islam, there has remained through the ages a time-honored sense of nationhood with one people in the Muslim Brotherhood: the Iranians, or the Persians as they were known from the beginnings of history. Lay history tells us, and the Holy Bible confirms, that the Medes and the Persians swept down from the North and occupied most of the then known world including the lands inhabited by the Israelites. The Medes and Persians established what amounted to a One World Government which was in its height in about 500 B.C., when Cyrus the Great was its Emperor. This was the Cyrus who permitted the ingathering of the Israelites and the rebuilding of the Temple as chronicled in the Books of Ezra and Nehemiah. And here is where genealogy becomes important.

The true Israelites are the descendants of Abraham's son Isaac. The Arabs are descendants of Abraham's son Ishmael. Both are Semitic. But the Medes and the Persians were Aryan. While the bulk of the Arans and Iranians are of the Islamic faith, they are genealogically different.

In the course of history the Medes disappeared, as did the ten lost tribes of Israel. But the Persians remained more or less intact. Their land was overrun by Arabs, Tamerlane's hordes, the Afghans, the Ottomans, and they regained control of their country following World War II. In 1935, the name of their country was changed from Persia to Iran.

Our apologies for the abbreviated and therefore oversimplified historical references, but it is important to understand that, aside from religion, Iranians are different from Arabs in almost every respect. Which is a fact that the Power Brokers have been able to use to their advantage. "Divide and Conquer" is the name of this game. And saving Israel is an aim of the game. So, Prince Fahd called for a Jihad, a Holy War, against the occupiers of their land and their holy places in Palestine. This would be a Muslin war against Israel and a war that could refuse to remain a "limited and no-win" war. So, the plan of pitting Muslin-and-Arab Iraq against Muslin-but-Aryan Iran, was one way to save Israel and at the same time put certain oil fields back under the control of certain "developers". That "control" has been slipping ever since the oil-rich countries began thinking for themselves and forming OPECs, and certain "unions" such as that of Libya and Syria.

POSTSCRIPT. Does the Trilateral Commission - that Power behind the Governments of North America, Western Europe and Eastern Japan - really control and direct this entire Mideast operation? Did Zionist leaders concoct the conflict to forestall a Muslim Holy War that could destroy political Israel? Is this just a fight between two States seeking to gain or retain ownership of a vital sealane? Will this conflict expand into another limited, no-win war? Or a total, nuclear war? These questions are moot. Answers are conditional. But, one thing is very certain. As Barry Goldwater said it: "If the American people do not penetrate the fog of propoganda which has led to our present position of military weakness, if we don't discard the policy of appeasement and accomodation which has controlled our foreign policy since World War II, the days of the Republic are numbered. Unless we who profess to believe in freedom wake up, the world is headed for a period of slavery...."

But national salvation really begins at home. Revival of morality and return of Christian standards of conduct, both personally and nationally, these are the keys to enduring temporal kingdoms. Our need is for leaders with Christian character and moral conviction, not with party labels and political promises.

THE REAL BATTLE BEGINS ON THE FOURTH

"A new movement is abroad in the land, sparked by an idea: that the time has come to restore morality in America," said Dr. Kenneth W. Ryker, associate to Dr. George Benson of the National Education Program. "The idea has been incubating for years," he continued, "and recently numerous new groups have sprung up, such as Moral Majority, Christian Voice, National Federation of Decency, Pro-Family Forum, Eagle Forum, and many others, including the Roundtable, a coalition of concerned national leaders who have one concern - the moral rebirth of America." The Roundtable held a successful "National Affairs Briefing" in Dallas recently, hopes to hold similar briefings in more cities in the near future. The "morality movement" is having such effect that the national news magazines are writing about "Preachers in Politics," "Born Again Politics," "Politics From The Pulpit," etc. Congressman Larry McDonald commented: "There has been a growing concern about the involvement of Christians in political affairs. This trend seems to be polarizing the Christian community. However, there is increasing realization that the moral basis of our laws is Biblical. So, if Christians elect to remain inactive, they stand not only to lose their country, but also their freedom to worship."

There are those who still believe that Christians should not involve themselves in politics. Perhaps they choose to forget that our officially adopted pledge of allegiance contains the words "one Nation under God." When that phrase was accepted by the House of Representatives, the Report added: "Those words in no way run contrary to the First Amendment but recognize only the guidance of God in our national affairs." Our national motto is "In God we trust." And further recognition is given by the adoption of the Star Spangled Banner as our national anthem, one stanza of which is as follows:

*O, thus be it ever when freemen shall stand Between their lov'd home and the war's desolation;
Blest with vict'ry and peace may the heav'n rescued land
Praise the power that hath made and preserved us a nation.
Then Conquer we must when our cause it is just,
And this be our motto - "In God is our trust."
And the Star-Spangled Banner in triumph shall wave
O'er the land of the free and the home of the brave."*

Since we officially recognize "the guidance of God in our national affairs," it stands to reason that Christians have every right to involve themselves in politics. Indeed, we might agree with Frank Capell who, in his latest Religious News Edition of his Herald of Freedom, insists that "neutrality in politics is rebellion against the Lord Christ."

Accepting the foregoing as evidence that it is in no way contrary to the First Amendment to the Constitution, Dr. Bill Bright of the Christian Roundtable is the author of a kind of "platform" for the Morality Movement, under the title: "Your Five Duties as a Christian Citizen." He wrote: "First, pray that men and women of God will be elected to public office at all levels of leadership. Second, register as a qualified voter in order to practice your citizenship with accountability to God. Third, become informed; organize and lead or parparticipate in a study group to inform yourself and others concerning the structure of government, current problems and issues. Fourth, Help Elect Godly People and support them faithfully throughout their terms of public service. And fifth, Vote, after informing yourself about the candidates and issues, and evaluating them on the basis of the Word of God."

There are those who will dispute this platform. But if the National Council of Churches could use religion to gain their political ends for over half a century how can they criticize truly Christian movements that are but following their example? Moreover, if the Bible tells us that Christ rules the nations, are we not rebelling against Him if we remain neutral toward the immorality and Godlessness which permeates our Nation?

There is, we fear, a more valid criticism of this important movement to restore morality in America. In their efforts to promote candidates and issues, they (the leaders and members of the Christian activist groups) tend to ally themselves with a particular political party or special issue. Because one political party - usually the Republican - seems the better choice' if morality and security are to be restored, otherwise well-intentioned groups are in danger of becoming semi-auxiliaries, even satellites, of a political party. This became especially apparent at the Roundtable meeting, which Ronald Reagan attended and Jimmy Carter ignored. However, permit us to draw a Scriptural parallel: The true Body of Christ transcends all denominational and sectarian bounds:

...Every one of you saith, I am of Paul; and I am of Apollos; and I am of Cephas; and I am of Christ. Is Christ divided? Was Paul crucified for you? or were you baptized in the name of Paul? (! Corinthians 1:12.13).

In the same temporal manner, national morality and security transcend all political parties and special interest groups. And, Christians engaging in political affairs have a tendency to say: I am of the Republicans; and I am of the Democrats; and I am for the Libertarians; etc. Is America divided? Is yours a Republican citizenship? Is your special interest going to preserve the union? Seek out Godly men, regardless of affiliation or lack of affiliation, and place them on guard, reminding them that however qualified they may be, this should be a government of law (based on God's law) and not of men (however Godly).

And there is a warning that should be sounded. The Christian Morality Movements presently are aiming at November 4th as their target date. But actually this is only the day of the beginning of the Restoration. For, no matter what manner of men are elected to represent the people in national, state and local offices, there are two great and powerful branches of government that will not be changed, either in personnel or purpose. These are the Body of the Bureaucracy (only the heads can be changed with a change in administration) and Federal Judges, who can be removed only by death, debility or impeachment.

When referring to workers, there is the public sector (government employees) and the private sector (all others). As you know, most public sector employees belong to the Civil Service System. That means that, no matter how good or bad they may be at their job, it is almost impossible to fire them. They are a permanent, entrenched bureaucracy that is not affected seriously by either elections or any resultant Cabinet-level appointments. The Public Service Research Council is a citizens' lobby concerned with the "abuses of public sector unions in the United States." PSRC informs us that "Government employment over the past 20 years has been one of the most expansive areas of the economy. In the period between 1956 and 1978, the private sector work force increased by 41 percent, while the public service work force increased by over 101 percent. At present, roughly one in six American workers in employed by government. " Now, the Civil Service System serves as a sort of protective shield to most of these one-in-six. But the real and dangerous control of these workers is vested in labor unions. There was a time, as is evidenced by the public record of Calvin Coolidge in Boston and Washington, D.C., when a public service (government) employee was prohibited from belonging to a labor union. There is such a vast difference between private service and public, or government service, that what might be good for one was, in the public interest, not deemed good for the other. Now that has all been changed, as all the strikes, union violence, and extortion tactics will attest. Firemen deliberately setting fires and keeping volunteers from putting them out, striking policemen encouraging crime and disorder, federal employees leaking national security secrets to the press and the enemy, teacher strikes - these all show that if morality and security are to be restored in America, the work doesn't stop on Election Day. As a very pertinent example, there is the National Education Association, one of the most powerful labor unions in the nation. It was successful in getting its own Cabinet-level Department - a political payoff by Mr. Jimmy Carter. NEA is determined to impose its grand design for America and the world upon us; and NEA is definitely preaching and promoting the religion of Sectarian Humanism as the religion that is to replace Christianity in these United States and in the United States of the World. After NEA's last national convention, the Phoenix Gazette said: "Perhaps most disturbing of all was the NEA commitment to use the classroom for ideological indoctrination of children. The union resolved to 'lead students' away from extremist groups.' The NEA made it abundantly clear that anyone who disagrees with the NEA, is in its view, an extremist group." The Washington Post, hardly right-wing in its usual comments, said: "A self-described left-wing Democrat, Herndon (NEA executive director) has taken the 1.8 million member NEA into politics at all levels, shedding the image of nonpartisanship that was imposed for decades by school boards and accepted without rebellion, by generations of docile teachers." And PSRC (op cit) reported: "At their annual convention, NEA passed resolutions on a wide range of issues; some related to education, but a large number had to do with issues such as lettuce boycott, endorsement of the Equal Rights Amendment, support of free abortions for the poor, opposition to loans to businesses in South Africa, federally imposed bargaining on all state and local government employees, opposition to right-to-work laws, and a long list of others... The NEA is making the classroom a political arena... you should be frightened when an admitted left-wing union boss is directing the nation's largest education union's operations. The objectives of the NEA can only be imposed on an uninformed or indifferent public or through totalitarian means." Here is an area that the Moral Majority and its cooperating groups will have to deal with after elections are completed; because national elections don't affect labor bosses, and don't alter the composition of the body of the bureaucracy that controls and regulates the nation's resources and its people through the Regional Governance arrangement, and its control units such as IRS, HHS, DOE, HUD, EPA, OSHA, and other unconstitutional federal agencies.

There is another extremely powerful, permanently entrenched group that has no fear of the outcome of elections: the judges of the Supreme and the inferior federal courts. According to the Constitution, once a judge is nominated, and approved by the Senate, he will hold his office "during good Behavior." There is a disregarded Constitutional limitation to his powers in domestic affairs: "The judicial power shall extend... to cases in which the United States shall be a party; to controversies between two or more States; between a State and citizens of another State; between citizens of different States; between citizens of the same State claiming lands under grants of different States; and between a State, or the citizens thereof, and foreign States, citizens or subjects." Only this and nothing more. Nowhere does the U.S. Constitution permit a federal judge to render the death penalty in the State of Alabama unconstitutional. As a way of avoiding legal jargon while at the same time showing why a politician should never be judged by his words instead of his actions, we'll quote New York Governor F.D. Roosevelt. addressing a meeting of governors on July 16, 1929. He said: "Our nation has become a successful experiment in democratic government, because the individual States have waived in only a few instances their sovereign rights...but there is a tendency, and to my mind a dangerous one, on the part of our national government to encroach, on one excuse or another, more and more upon State supremacy. The elastic theory of interstate commerce, for instance, has been stretched almost to the breaking point to cover certain regulatory powers desired by Washington." Later, in a radio address on March 2, 1930, when he was an avowed candidate for the presidency, FDR noted that the States had given the federal government the right to legislate on the subject of liquor (18th amendment). "But this is not the case in the matter of...the conduct of public utilities, of banks, of insurance, of business, of agriculture, of education, of social welfare and of a dozen other important features. In these, Washington must not be encouraged to interfere." So said FDR before election. After election he proceeded to interfere in every area he had mentioned, and a dozen more. Incidentally, it was FDR and his Fascistic Brain Trust which began the process that made our judiciary what it is today: a denier of justice to the lawkeeper; a granter of dole and criminal license to the lawbreaker.

Interestingly, since taking office in 1977, Jimmy Carter has appointed 264 of the Nation's 648 federal judges. Approximately two out of every five current federal judges are Carter appointees and, as with NEA, he has rewarded the faithful with political appointments. Not to be outdone, Reagan, when asked by a reporter if he would rule out the appointment of a pro-abortion judge, replied, "No. I have to say I would be guided by the whole broad philosophy of the individual who was under consideration."

Finally, an example of extra-curricular use of the Supreme Court was brought to our attention by Dr. Harry Walkup and an article in the American Sunbeam. It was pointed out that the ERA is meaningless except for Section two, which would allow the federal government to usurp from the States all women's rights and as a corollary all men's rights as well. "The obvious consequence," said Dr. Walker, "would be a centrally controlled totalitarian regime that would control the entire citizenry." However, it was becoming evident that ERA was not going to be ratified by three-fourths of the States. So a court case, "The State of Maine V. Thiboutot," was taken to the Supreme Court, and a decision was rendered June 25, 1980. Result in lay language: A citizen may sue State, County or Municipal officials that deny him any "rights" that are promulgated by any federal law. Now all federal laws are held to be supreme over State laws! In other words, what was to have been done by ERA now has been done by a Supreme Court ruling.

This is why the battle will just begin on November Fourth. All unconstitutional agencies must be killed by cutting off their funds, as has just happened with LEAA. And Congress must restore justice in the courts by legislative action. Our motto: If God be for us, who can be against us? (Romans 8:31.)

THE REAL ISSUES AND THE REAL WAR

There is an old French proverb: "The more it changes, the more it remains the same." This might be applied to our national election campaigns. The last time an incumbent Democrat campaigned against a Republican opponent was in 1964, when Lyndon Johnson was opposed by Barry Goldwater. Then, the real issues were surprisingly similar to those of 1980. And the real issues were being hidden by false issues raised deliberately to fool the people. This was the tenor of an editorial by Marvin Stone of U.S. News & World Report. Stone observed that, as with the 1964 campaign, this one "will be remembered by its flummery and flim-flam (humbug and deception)." He said, "Instead of policy, we are getting polemics. Instead of resolve, we get rhetoric. Instead of careful analysis, we get character assassination." Then Stone demonstrated how the real issues in 1980 are the same as the real issues in 1964, by quoting an editorial published by his predecessor, David Lawrence, sixteen years ago:

"1) Will we continue to spend and spend and thus weaken our fiscal structure by unbalanced budgets? 2) Will we continue to pay lip service to prudence and economy, but nevertheless authorize more and more federal grants of public funds on the theory that this is necessary for 'the general welfare'? 3) Will we continue the current movement toward state socialism and a massive, centralized Government that is gradually rubbing out State lines and ignoring the responsibilities of local governments? 4) Will we continue to condone special privilege and the usurpation of power by private groups, which now wield more political influence than ever before? 5) Will we continue to stifle the creative spirit of our free-enterprise system or give it the necessary opportunity to function effectively? 6) Will we continue to emphasize fear of war and unwittingly encourage acts of aggression by our potential enemies? Or will we manifest an unmistakable resoluteness to make whatever sacrifices are necessary to protect the nation's security? These are only a few of the matters of far-reaching significance which have been glossed over in a game of party politics. The people don't want opportunistic expediency. They want leadership with courage manifested in domestic and foreign policies" (unquote).

Editor Stone concludes that in 1980, as in 1964, the real issues have not only been buried, but the campaign has been pitched "not at the broad, vital future of the American people, but at the special-interest groups that today muster so much power." But there was another similarity between the campaigns of 1964 and 1980 which Editor Stone didn't mention: the "warmonger" syndrome. Goldwater was the right-wing, neo-Fascist militarist who was apt to get the country into World War III if elected, would certainly intensify the American commitment in Vietnam. So, after his election, it was Johnson who unveiled "Operation Rolling Thunder," supposedly designed to "bomb Hanoi to the conference table." Within a year after Johnson's election, there were more than 180,000 American troops in Vietnam.

In 1980, with another incumbent Democrat fighting to retain his title and his power, we are faced with a somewhat similar situation, this time in the Middle East. Already there is a fully-complimented American battle force in the area ready to go to war, ostensibly to protect oil routes. And, it is the incumbent President who laid the groundwork, directed the placement of American forces and issued the threats of war. And he calls his opponent a warmonger, and a neo-Fascist.

So much for comparisons and proof of the old saying that the more it changes, the more it remains the same. This is all "flummery and flim-flam", designed to fool the people at election time; even as is the possible release of hostages before November 4th. But, there is the double flim-flam, in that we are being mesmerized into looking at the wrong war at the wrong time. Remember the old magician's maxim about the hand being quicker than the eye? The maxim also is applicable to the art of diplomacy and the science of double-dealing in foreign and domestic policy. The eyes and ears of America have been riveted on the unusual and admittedly dangerous goings-on in the Middle East for more than a year, where Iran and Iraq occupy the center-stage at this writing. But there is the strong suspicion that this whole production was staged to keep our eyes off the real war, which is being fought in our own back yard, the Caribbean.

About sixty years ago Lenin laid down the program for Communist progress in conquering the world for Communism. He said, "First, we shall take all of Eastern Europe. Next, the masses of Asia. Then, we shall encircle that last bastion of capitalism, the United States of America. We shall not have to attack, because it will fall like overripe fruit into our hands." What has been going on in Central America since 1976 is an obvious fulfillment of that third step in Lenin's plans. And it is being accomplished, not by attack on the part of the Soviet Union, but by trickery, by terrorism and insurgency, and by the cooperation and assistance of the Carter-led Trilateral Commissioners' Administration of the United States Government! Furthermore, there is evidence that the Middle East conflict was planned and directed by that same Trilateral Commission, partly to keep our eyes off what has been happening here in our Hemisphere.

There should be little doubt in anyone's mind about how the Iranian crisis was planned. The deposing of the Shah, the surrender of his military forces, all this has been shown to have been the direct result of actions initiated by the Carter Administration, acting on advice (orders is the better word) of the American branch of the Trilateral Commission. Recently there has been revealed much evidence showing that the Iraqi attack in Iran also was plotted by these same forces. A headline in the Spotlight of Oct. 13 reads; "Iraq Invaded Iran After Vow by Rockefeller of U.S. Help." As we go to press there is another "wolf cry" story of how the U.S. has made a deal, and the hostages are to be released within days. The media is filled with stories of how the Russians are going to run short of grain and meat this winter, and of how the Red Chinese government has made a deal for U.S. grain. Also stories of how nice Castro is acting. First he ended the Mariel Bay boatlift, which was a boost for Carter. Then he nipped a dangerous new wave of skyjackings by returning the hijackers to the United States for trial. Next, he promised not to take reprisals against his own citizens who have been seeking U.S. visas. And finally, Castro promised to release 33 Americans held in Cuban jails. All good news for Candidate Carter, of course, whom Castro seems anxious to help keep in the White House. All of which recalls something said by the late Anastasio Somoza, former President of Nicaragua who, like the late Shah of Iran, was exiled by our own State Department. Somoza said:

"There is a leftist power structure that controls the news media. If an event important to the ideological Left occurs in Red China, it's immediately front-page news in the Washington Post. If Castro makes a move or gesture that can be interpreted as favorable for the Leftist cause, it's forthwith front-page news in the New York Times. If Pinochet of Chili breathes an anti-Communist word or strikes an anti-Communist blow, all three major television networks in the U.S. hit the six o'clock news with some indirect praise of Allende, the former Communist president of Chile. What a control system they have! I'm an engineer but this international communications system, controlled by that mysterious power structure, is beyond comprehension..."

Before his assassination by Marxist agents, Anastasio Somoza Debayle, with Jack Cox acting as his amanuensis, was able to complete the text of his book, "Nicaragua Betrayed." This book might be considered in the nature of a death-bed confession. In it, Somoza tells the story of that war which the media tries to hide from us, emphasizing the part played by the Carter Administration in cooperating with the Communists who are taking over Central America. Pointing to the Panama Canal Payaway is the first visible evidence of Carter's cooperation, he notes the next step was in the 1977 session of Congress when a bill was introduced to cut off all military assistance to Nicaragua, Argentina, Guatemala, El Salvador, and Chile. These were the anti-Communist nations, former friends and allies of the U.S. The Carter Administration had chosen a clever vehicle in which to hide its cooperation with Communism. That vehicle was the "Human Rights Crusade." But, said Somoza, "Mr. Carter concerned himself with human rights in only the smaller and militarily weak countries.. Generally speaking, they were anti-Communist countries such as Nicaragua, Argentina, and Paraguay. He didn't concern himself with human rights in Russia and Red China. Doesn't that seem strange?"

Somoza said he often speculated as to the reason for the tremendous success of the worldwide Marxist movement. He reckoned: "Within the diabolical movement, there is strategic intelligence, unmatched political expertise, a spy system second to none, a military machine unequalled in the world today, and the uncanny ability to reach out and take what it desired without creating a worldwide conflagration... But in the case of Nicaragua, President Carter, Secretary Vance, and their wrecking crew actually assisted the Soviets in taking the country."

The central theme of Somoza's confessional is that what was done in Central America was done by design. He said: "The betrayal of Nicaragua was not perpetrated out of ignorance, but rather by design... One could go down a long list of U.S. allies and ask why Carter turned against these anti-Communist nations. Pinochet of Chile could give you an answer - by design. And how about Korea, Taiwan, Thailand, Saudi Arabia, Rhodesia, South Africa and Argentina? No, a plea of ignorance will not suffice. Carter might be able to plead ignorance once, but not over and over again. One might ask the late Shah of Iran if he thought Carter's betrayal of Iran was by design or through ignorance... In Iran, Carter used the same pretext he used in Nicaragua, and that pretext was 'human rights'... Upon assuming office in 1976, Carter set about to dismantle the U.S. military machine. He did this while the Soviet Union went on a war production basis. That course of military action - coupled with the betrayal of steadfast anti-Communist allies - places Mr. Carter in the company of evil worldwide conspiratorial forces. I repeat, the treacherous course chartered by Mr. Carter was not through ignorance, but by design." (unquote, emphasis added. We have given you samplings from "Nicaragua Betrayed," but for those interested in facts concerning the real war we are losing by betrayal and by design, the whole book should be read and studied. It is published by Western Islands, 395 Concord Ave., Belmont, Mass. 02178. 448 pages, hard-bound; $15.).

President Somoza did not identify the "evil worldwide conspiratorial forces." Instead, he pinpointed Jimmy Carter as their spokesman. Somoza's reference is, of course, to the Trilateral Commission, the Council on Foreign Relations and their affiliates and satellite organizations which make up the conspiratorial forces that cooperate with International Communism (or vice versa) in the building of a Socialist World Order. In Somoza's case, it was easier to name the spokesmen for the conspiracy: Carter for the U.S., Brezhnev for the Soviet Union, Castro for Central America, etc. To paraphrase, Regardless of the Trilateralist hierarchy, "the buck stops at Carter."

Lenin said he would encircle that "last bastion of capitalism." The encirclement really began in 1959 with the ouster of Batista and the establishment of Fidel Castro as dictator over Cuba, an accomplishment in which the New York Times had no small part. As Castro's influence began to be felt in Central and South America, another cooperative step was taken by the U.S. Government. Torrijos, at the instigation of the World Bankers, became the Communist dictator over Panama, and the Panama Canal was given into Communist hands. Then came the betrayal of Nicaragua, and it was given into Communist hands. Presently El Salvador and Guatemala are the Communist targets and the Carter Administration is cooperating in their takeover.

Lately there has been another dangerous manifestation of the "encirclement of that last bastion." We refer to the horde of aliens that has been flooding the United States. As C.D. Baker notes in his "Youth Action News," "By bringing in millions of non-Aryan aliens, the Rockefeller-Trilateral gang will be able to grossly dilute the remaining political power of the dwindling, productive, American Aryan majority. The 'Trilateral Open Border Plot' will also add millions of people onto the welfare rolls and vastly increase competition for the rapidly decreasing number of U.S. jobs (due to Trilateral deindustrialization)...Millions of Chinese, Africans, Vietnamese, Latin Americans, Haitians, Cubans, and Mexicans are now conquering America with the full aid and support of the Trilateral Traitors who control the U.S. Government..."

Yet another element is added. Just how many of these incoming aliens are revolutionaries, terrorist trainers, and saboteurs is not known. An example: the following report comes to us from a competent and qualified observer in Hawaii: "We have received reports that about 200 Puerto Rican terrorists are training in the mountain areas of each of the Hawaiian Islands. They have been variously described as being like the Castro types prior to his takeover of Cuba. Military intelligence officers who at first scoffed at the idea, later showed the possibility of credibility by their subsequent actions. Certain members of the Honolulu Police Department encountered armed people in the mountains and at least two incidents of shootings of trail hikers have been reported. A civilian from Kauai confirms the story on that island. Why doesn't anybody do anything about the problem? 'They haven't broken the law - so far'."

Paul Scott reports that 100 Soviet-made tanks and 100 self-propelled artillery pieces have arrived in Nicaragua. And Latin American sources tell us that after El Salvador and Guatemala, Mexico is next on the Communist timetable; to gain control of Mexican oilfields, and to prepare a "land-based encirclement" of the United States. But, if enough Americans understand the real issues and the real war, there are enough real Americans to stop this Communist encirclement, ensure our national security and restore our individual freedom.

THE CHANGING OF THE GUARD

That to secure (guard, protect, insure) these rights, governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed;.....

As this Report is being written the enfranchised citizens of the United States are about to elect, or re-elect, the members of a new company of guardians of our God-given and unalienable rights. We can assume that all citizens will be hoping, and millions praying, that this new company of elected officials of our government will better serve the people, and make greater effort to secure, guard, protect and insure their rights - and do it with less robbing of their sustenance than has been experienced in the past four years. But it should be understood that new names and new faces will not automatically establish new policies, either foreign or domestic. The same problems will be with us yet, and perhaps our greatest hope should be that government itself will no longer be our greatest civil problem.

As Christians and conservatives, we should be deeply concerned because regardless of who may have been elected to legislative posts, and who may have won the title of President of the United States, there remains this vested and unelected Ruling Autocracy that will continue to govern unless the legislators reclaim and regain their authority under the Constitution, and use that authority for the good of the country and its citizens. As Gary North wrote in a recent newsletter: "Those who are elected by us have got to be constantly reminded that we are still watching, that any attempt on their part to 'join the club' in Washington is going to result in the withdrawal of our support. Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty. Eternal harassment of newly elected Congressmen is the price of power. Readers will be alerted to opportunities for political reconstruction - and not partisan reconstruction, either - over the coming months." We join Dr. North in that pledge, and here are a few reasons why vigilance - and harassment - are essential.

In this presidential election there has been much name-calling, many lies and much oratory designed not to present issues but to obtain votes. However, the differences between the two principal candidates, as expressed in debate and declamation, were differences in degree, not in substance, or in opposition. Jimmy Carter's domestic policy seemed based solely on the power of money; windfall taxes to raise money and new programs to spend or distribute money. Ronald Reagan promised to do the same things Carter would do, but with less money and more dependence upon the private sector. But neither of them said anything about the restoration or creation of a money system based on honest dollars, or of any real program that would halt our march toward total socialism. Jimmy would build new programs, Ronny would reduce the size and cost of existing programs. Differences in degree; in volume, not in value; in quantity, not in quality.

As for foreign policy, Jimmy seemed to base his entire campaign on daughter Amy's fear of nuclear bombs. He feared that nuclear weapons will fall into the hands of little nations that promote international terrorism; seldom alluding to the fact that the greatest of the international terrorists, Red China and Soviet Russia, already have nuclear arsenals. Ronald Reagan differed in that he believes that the best defense is not unilateral disarmament, but the best armament. However, neither of them touched upon the dangerous weapons that are actually being used against us at the present time: debt and surrender without violence through encirclement.

In the last, Oct. 31, issue of Herald of Freedom, written just before his untimely and regretted death, Frank A. Capell pointed out one of the great dangers we face as a nation; a danger that was never discussed in election campaigns. We quote from Mr. Capell's last, and final letter:

* * * * *

Between 1946 and 1978 the U.S. Government has loaned or given away more than $200 billion in foreign aid...The recent announcement by President Carter of the granting of a $670 million loan to Communist Poland in the form of agricultural credit guarantees is just the latest in a series of steps by which the United States and the free world is assisting the Communist bloc out of its troubles...Does anyone think the Soviet Union would do us such a favor? Absolutely not, but it appears our Government will continue to sell the rope to hang us with....Rep. McDonald placed into the Congressional Record an article by James M. Whitmire, entitled "Financing of Soviet Bloc by Western Banks is a Mistake." We quote:

"...Everyone assumes the Soviets are plotting ghastly new weapons. . . The truth is, one is already in place. But you won't find this new secret weapon in the Red Army's arsenal, because it's not a bomb or a chemical. It's worse. It could devastate the West without a shot being fired. Incredibly, it is a weapon we are not only constructing for the Russians - but paying for as well. The weapon? Debt. Quietly, assiduously, Western banks since the mid-1970's have allowed the Soviet bloc to pile up $60 billion to $80 billion in outstanding debt. The magnitude of this debt is such that a Soviet default might spark a financial panic capable of collapsing the capitalist banking system...There is growing concern within the international community that Soviet bloc countries will never be capable of generating enough hard currency to repay their debts - or, more chilling, have no intention of repaying them in the first place. The Soviets are almost certain, at some point, to use the threat of default as a lever to gain political concessions from the West..." (Unquote).

* * * * *

Translation: International bankers and monopoly capitalists have, from 1917 until the present, assisted the Communist Bloc in industrial, agricultural and technological development. Bankers and developers such as Armand Hammer, have made contracts with Communist governments and invested or loaned vast sums for the building of modern factories, etc. Certainly there was some risk involved, but the granting of military and political concessions in order to obtain financial and industrial concessions was just part of the gain. Hence, the International Bankers and Monopoly Capitalists cooperate with the Communist bloc nations and, should the predicted financial disaster come, it will come to the U.S. Government, to the free enterprise system, and to the American taxpayers; not to the International Bankers, who have been striving for decades to replace traditional capitalism with monopoly capitalism, which is merely a form of totalitarianism.

Because of this spirit of cooperation, or partnership, the following events occurred during the Trilateral-controlled Carter Administration. These events were detailed in a letter written on Congressional stationery by Congressman Larry McDonald, addressed to President Carter, dates Oct. 16, 1980. Quoted are pertinent paragraphs from that letter:

* * * * *

Dear Mr. President. Addressing you as a fellow Georgia Democrat, and after conversations with a sizable number of my Congressional colleagues, I would like to pose some questions about the course of your administration, and the prospects for our country, should you be re-elected. Could we anticipate a continuation of your present policies, since you seem to regard them as satisfactory? And if we can, than what will be the situation of the United States of America in the fateful year 1984?

* Since the growing number of Marxist governments in Latin America are automatically anti-American, why has your administration set forth to alienate every anti-Communist government remaining in the Hemisphere? Why have we demonstrated hostility toward Chile, Argentina, Brazil, Uruguay, Paraguay, Bolivia, and Guatemala? Is it because they are resisting, or have defeated, Communist bids for power?

* Why did you ask the President of Mexico for advice on how to overthrow the friendly government of Nicaragua? Why did your diplomats ask the same question of other Latin American heads of state? Why did your administration collaborate with the Communist-led forces engaged in the armed overthrow of the Nicaraguan government? Why did your State Department promise President Somoza that the Nicaraguan National Guard and the Liberal Party would not be destroyed, and that he would be permitted to live in the United States, and then promptly break all three promises? And why have you arranged to provide $155 million in aid for this hostile Marxist government, which has brought Soviet T-72 tanks to the Central American mainland?

* Why has your response to the Marxist assault upon El Salvador consisted of the installation of an American puppet junta which has confiscated farms, agricultural export crops, and financial institutions, in accordance with Communist doctrine? Why does this puppet junta consider its major mission to be that of denying any possibility of victory to the anti-Communists?

* Why did you violate your 1976 promise to oppose the Canal giveaway and once in office, devote every effort to delivering the Canal to a Marxist dictator? Why did you even pay him billions to take it? After four former Chiefs of Naval Operations testified to the great strategic value of the Canal, how does it help the United States Navy to perform its difficult worldwide mission, when it cannot even depend upon being able to use the Canal any more?

* Why have you tolerated the build-up of Soviet land, sea, and air power in Cuba, ninety miles from our shores? Why are Cuba-based Soviet bombers allowed to overfly American cities? And why has Castro nothing to worry about at home when he dispatches his armed forces around the world to serve as Soviet mercenaries?

* Why did you decide to break our treaty with a long-term ally, the Republic of China, and who are we doing everything we can to build up Red China, both economically and militarily? Do you seriously expect one Communist giant to fight another for our benefit?

* Why have you indicated to South Korea that our commitment to their defense is weakening? Why have you urged the South Koreans to engage in "reunification talks" with the aggressive, uncompromising regime in the North? Why do you constantly berate the South Korean government over alleged "human rights" violations when you know that North Korea permits no "human rights" whatsoever?

* Why does your administration support the Khmer Rouge in the United Nations, knowing that the Communist government of Pol Pot converted preteenaged children into sadistic murderers in order to carry out the massacre of perhaps thirty or forty percent of the Cambodian people? Do you do this to please Red China?

* Why did you claim credit for the imposition of a Marxist terrorist government upon pro-Western Rhodesia? And why does your administration encourage racial strife in South Africa, knowing it to be a crucial supplier of strategic raw materials to the West?

* Why have the Soviets felt free to engage openly in the armed conquest of an inoffensive neighbor? Since the Olympic boycott and a hypocritically modest slowdown in the delivery of massive economic aid to the Soviets has been ineffective, will we now resume the previous level of technology transfer which has done so much for the modernization of the Soviet armed forces?

* Why have you labored to produce such an extraordinarily poor image of the United States abroad? With respect to Iran alone, could it not be said that your initial policy decision to prefer the Ayatollah Khomeini over the Shah demonstrated stupidity? Could not our treatment of the Shah be regarded as treachery? When we twice permitted Tehran mobs to take over our Embassy, could this not be seen as cowardice? And could not the abortive hostage rescue mission be regarded as a demonstration of weakness and incompetence?

* Cui bono? Who benefits? The question was old in the days of Cicero, and it is carried down to us in his oration in defense of Milo. The question seeks the motivation for behavior otherwise hard to explain.

Reflecting upon four years of consistently patterned policy decisions, we ask, cui bono? Who, indeed, benefits? Clearly, the United States has been the victim and not the beneficiary of these policies. What of our friends, and allies? Some friendly governments have been destroyed, and their people turned over to their enemies and ours. Other friendly governments have found themselves crippled and discarded. The dwindling number of friends and allies not yet so used suffer the stunning demoralization which the Japanese call "Carter-shock."

Who, then, benefits? Perhaps the Soviet Empire, which has been enabled to spread across Asia and Africa and make new penetrations in the Americas? Perhaps the Communist government of mainland China, which has been given new status and is being given new economic and military capabilities? Has not even that master of genocide Pol Pot, benefited from the patronization of your administration?

Mr. President, either you do not know what you are doing, or you do.

Sincerely,

When you first read this Report many names and faces will have been changed but the policies will remain the same and the game will go on and on under the same illegal rules, at least until the next, 97th Congress convenes in January. Those we have elected must be watched, supported if they deserve it, or else. We repeat: Eternal vigilance is the price of victory and eternal harassment of elected Congressmen is the price of power.

HOW MUCH OF A TURN TO THE RIGHT?

Not since the death of Franklin D. Roosevelt has there been so much weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth on the part of humanists, left-wing liberals, socialists, radicals and extremists. It all began at 8:14 p.m. on November 4, 1980. when a television network projected the defeat of Jimmy Carter. Since that time there has been talk of a "modern inquisition," a setback for womens' rights, gay rights, and human rights in general, a war scare, a retreat into the dark age of the 1950's and other scare talk. The humiliating magnitude of the defeat of Jimmy Carter has left all other liberal politicians shaking in their boots, many of them looking for new jobs, and all of them looking for new political leadership. It also has left them, and the Nation, with a lame-duck president and an interim Congress than isn't sure what it ought to be doing these interim days before January 20. Yes, the liberals -both the Republicans and the Democrats - are a fear-filled crowd; and we hope their fears are justified. But after watching President-elect Ronald Reagan's first press conference, we wonder just how much of a victory this has been for conservatives.

Before the November Surprise, we wrote on a couple of occasions that it made little difference who was elected the next president, but we were wrong in one important respect. The unexpected enormity of the landslide victory of Ronald Reagan over Jimmy Carter has amounted to a virtual mandate, a command from the people to honor and abide by the Republican Party Platform. And this crushing of Carter also led the way to a takeover by conservative Republicans of the United States Senate, and for a combination conservative-Republican-Democrat takeover of the House of Representatives. This modified, of course, by the remaining presence of Tip O'Neal and Howard Baker, who will remain as leaders in their respective chambers.

These victories were due in great measure to the efforts of the so-called New Right groups that led a moral crusade and awakened Christians to their obligations and duties toward their country which their God had so richly blessed before they went to sleep and let an enemy enter into control. There were the Christian Voice, the Moral Majority, the Religious Roundtable, the Committee for the Survival of a Free Congress, the National Conservative Political Action Committee, the New Right activities of Richard Viguerie's organizational programmings, and the considerable influence of the scores of conservative, patriotic newsletters and other publications which make up America's remaining Free Press and its Committees of Correspondence. These are the forces that started to turn the political tide. And if they stay on the job, they may be able to keep Reagan faithful to his image, keep Bush from rustling, keep the Congress cognizant of its Constitutional vows, and even wrest control of the Nation's foreign and fiscal policies from that New World Order group headed by the American branch of the Trilateral Commission and its interdependent affiliates.

However, aside from important changes in the composition of the U.S. Senate and House of Representatives, there is the great danger that little has really changed at the executive level. As the election campaign progressed, P began to weaken and lean leftward. There was the selection of Ger a professing and confessing Trilateralist, as his running mate. Then came the appointment of Anne Armstrong of CFR as assistant to his campaign manager William Casey, also of CFR. As the campaign progressed, on the subjects of ERA, pro-family, pro-life, and other moral issues, his voice seemed to grow weaker and more hesitant. Then, at his first press conference as president-elect, he announced as members of his transition team such people as Henry Kissinger, John J. McCloy, Casper Weinberger, other TLC, CFR and Bilderberger agents; then topped off his team with Democrats Edward Bennett Williams, Scoop Jackson and Richard Stone, the Florida Senator who went down to defeat after his first term, partly at least because he lied about his vote for the Panama Canal Treaties. So, it begins to appear even to the party faithful that it will be the same old New World Order crowd running the show in fiscal and foreign affairs. This was noted by the New Right leaders even before the press conference, and they called a press conference of their own. Under the headline "Conservatives to Hold Reagan to Right-Wing Promises," Mark Lacter of the States News Service reported, and we quote:

"The overwhelming tide toward Republican conservatism was described Wednesday (Nov. 5) by several right-wing groups as a mandate to restructure the United States government - whether Ronald Reagan goes along with the idea or not. In fact, leaders of these groups, speaking out during an extraordinary press conference here (in Washington, D.C.) implied that the president-elect had better avoid any thoughts about veering toward a moderate political stance during the next four years. 'There is no question in my mind that Ronald Reagan must accept this as a conservative mandate,' said Terry Dolan, chairman of the National Conservative Political Action Committee (NCPAC), which for the past year, invested more than $3 million in an independent campaign to defeat a string of liberal senators. 'He has a moral obligation to do the things he says,' Dolan continued, 'he has a political obligation. If he doesn't do it, my suspicion is that he'll pay the political price for it.'

"Another ultimatum was delivered to vice president-elect George Bush, whose moderate views during last spring's primaries were heatedly opposed by these conservative factions of the party. Explained Paul Weyrich, president of the Committee for the Survival of a Free Congress: 'We extend the olive branch to George Bush to conform to the Republican platform. If he doesn't, I think it is quite clear with the sort of results we had yesterday, that Bush has something to think about in terms of our ability to challenge any presidential bid.'

"Dolan and Weyrich represent a new political force in America: the independent, conservative lobby. During the campaign they assembled a so-called 'hit list' of incumbent senators and representatives, using the mass media to present their message. Howard Phillips, director of the Conservative Caucus, said legislative priorities should include a dismantling of the Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty, increases in defense spending, a tax cut and a balancing of the federal budget... Richard Viguerie, conservative wizard of the direct-mail political contribution business, said at the press conference that the Senate upset resulted from 'the dedication and the commitment of the Christian voters. That whole scene is just now developing. The leadership is here and I think we've just seen the tip of the iceberg of the conservative Christian communities involvement'." (unquote).

In a pre-election statement, Paul Weyrich explained the importance of retiring liberal Senators who held important chairmanships, such as Frank Church of Idaho, Birch Bayh of Indiana, George McGovern of South Dakota, Gaylord Nelson of Wisconsin, Warren Magnuson of Washington and John Culver of Iowa. This Senatorial purge is important because "several times in the past couple of decades, Americans have voted to change things, and while some faces and some of the policies did indeed change, a great deal remained the same. The reason for the lack of a fundamental change is a fairly simple one. While the voters did choose a different President on certain occasions, in every case since 1954 these same voters have chosen the same kind of Congress... It is the Congress that actually makes the laws that will govern our lives. It is the Congress that has the power to tax and regulate."

But a change in Congressional leadership does not automatically do away with the power in fiscal and foreign affairs that is presently exercised by the White House Executive Office, which is under the control of selected and appointed agents of the Supragovernment that is building a New World Order. Once we referred to this conspiratorial cabal as the "Invisible Government." But now, this Supragovernment has become so powerful, and so sure of its ability to rule without opposition, that its members no longer bother to remain invisible and nameless. An example of their boastfulness was reported in International Moneyline by its editor, Julian M. Snyder. We quote: "...In New York at the Investment Seminars International Conference, Henry Kissinger was asked by Jim Dines if the Trilateral Commission, of which Kissinger admitted he was a member, was running the world. 'I am insulted,' said Henry. 'Why do I need the Trilateral Commission when I can run the world all by myself.'" We mention this because Henry Kissinger hopes to be running the Reagan administration, as he ran the Nixon administration, and as Zbigniew Brzezinski thinks he has been running the Carter administration.

We qualify that last clause because the Trilateral Commission hasn't been doing as well as it hoped and is behind schedule. This, if we are to believe Mr. David Rockefeller, is at least partly due to the belief that "Carter can't learn fast enough." This is what David said when he decided to give up on the peanut farmer his operatives had trained to act as President, and infiltrate, and take over the Reagan team, somewhat after the manner that baseball managers are replaced when the team starts losing. Actually, however, the countries of Western Europe were beginning to tire of looking to Washington for leadership and to New York City for monetary guidance. The European Common Market had begun to outproduce and outsell the United States, had established its own currency, the ecu, to replace the unstable dollar, had begun to think and act on its own, in defiance of the Rockefeller-controlled Carter administration.

If we read the signs aright, this has led to a new program on the part of the American section of the trilateral Commission. The first public intimation of this new departure came in an item that was buried on page 30 A of the Dallas Morning News of October 18, 1980. The item read, and we quote in full:

"Gov. Bill Clements (Texas), who has pioneered controversial new relations with Mexico, announced Friday he will lead a committee of governors to work on relations with Canada, too. Clements will be chairman of a National Governor's Association Task Force on "North American Cooperation." The committee, named by Governor's Association chairman George Busbee, governor of Georgia, will include Govs. Edward King of Massachusetts, Bruce King of New Mexico, Robert Ray of Iowa, Albert Quie of Minnesota, Jay Hammond of Alaska, and George Nigh of Oklahoma. New Jersey Governor Brendon Byrne, chairman of an association committee on international trade, will be an unofficial member.

"Clements said the governors will initiate discussions with leaders in Mexico and Canada to examine the feasibility of creating a North American council. Although the proposed council would have no policy-making powers, it would provide a forum for government and the private sector to discuss issues, Clements said. Northeastern governors met last June with Canada's eastern province leaders on tourism, energy and trade. Representatives from northwestern states and western provinces of Canada also met." (Unquote).

This is Regional Trilateralism, as opposed to the Geopolitical Trilateralism practices in the 1970's by that self-perpetuating group of "elites" who are in the process of building their New World Order. In the 70's the Trilateralists were trying to reshape the world by creating a "community of nations" that was comprised of the industrialized, developed nations belonging to that international association known as the OECD (Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development), a Paris-based government organization). This "community of nations" was at first to be composed of the countries of Western Europe, of Japan, Canada and the United States. The communist countries were to join up with this concert of power later. However, certain complications began to develop, as we mentioned earlier in this Report. Oceans separated the nations, ethnic, political and nationalistic differences existed. Creating a "community of nations" of this kind, at this stage of the game, was proving very difficult.

But Geographical Regionalism had been working quite well for the "elitists." The United States, the countries of Western Europe, the Soviet Union, all had been regionalized internally. Just as the U.S. had been divided into Ten Federal Regions, so had these other countries been divided. Also Interdependent Regionalism was working well. The European Common Market was developing into a full-fledged Regional World Government. Russia's COMECON (Council for Mutual Economic Assistance) also was a form of Regional World Government. Why not the same thing for the developed nations of North America? Why not create another Regional World Government by uniting Canada, Mexico and the United States? Call it the North American Common Market (NACOM). Then later, the nations of South and Central America could be "Regionalized" (perhaps under Castro?). And, eventually, all of these Geographical and Regional World Governments could be brought together to complete the goal and form a New World Government for the New World Order.

A proponent of this proposed North American Common Market (NACOM) points out that "in the light of the recent energy crisis the idea of NACOM is extremely appealing. For example, Mexico and Canada possess vast resources of oil." Then he adds: "To many Americans it appears that the current foreign policy establishment and its policies are unsuited to deal with today's new world.. Many feel that there is a desperate need for a first class overhaul of US foreign policy. Americans have begun to tire of presidents who call themselves 'leaders of the free world' and are seeking instead a man who will be satisfied with just being a President of the United States."

Was Ronald Reagan selected as just such a President? With the program of the 70's having failed, the new program of the 80's is to start with a new form of Trilateralism, and a new kind of President?

The same old crowd but a new face created detente and opened Red China for "development." The same old crowd but a new face and a new foreign policy will make it seem like "A Turn to the Right." In the words of Kipling:
Lord God of hosts, be with us yet; Lest we forget, lest we forget.

OUR LAST OPPORTUNITY?

There is a tide in the affairs of men, which, taken at the flood, leads on to fortune; omitted, all the voyage of their life is bound in shallows and in miseries; and we must take the current when it serves, or lose our ventures.

- William Shakespeare.

Despite the attempts of leftists to regain lost ground, despite the efforts of the self-appointed power elite to purchase a controlling interest in the executive branch of the federal government, and despite the tendency of the Reagan camp to weasel out on campaign promises, there still remains a Great Hope. It is as though Divine Providence had given us one more - perhaps a final - opportunity to regain our lost Republic, restore our mistreated Constitution to its place of legal supremacy in the land, and remove Man from the place where he now sits showing himself to be God.

Sometime conservative columnist James J. Kirkpatrick gloatingly wrote; "My brothers and sisters of the liberal press are having apoplexy - or deep depression, take your choice....James Reston, Tom Wicker, Carl Rowan, The Washington Post, The New York Times, The New Republic, The Nation - all of them are down with the spavins and the heaves. In the garden of liberalism they see only crabgrass and thistles. Civil liberties will vanish. Women will be relegated to the kitchen. Blacks, if permitted to speak at all, will be reduced to crying massuh, massuh massuh. It is all to awful to behold." Then, becoming more serious, Kirkpatrick is sure that "The incoming conservative tide is not likely to affect such bulwarks as Social Security or the Civil Rights Act. Neither the Department of Energy nor the Department of Education will be instantly swept away. But the beaches of liberalism will be strewn next year with legislative flotsam."

In this, he is right. We can't look for instant miracles. It took decades to convert this Nation from a Representative Republic with a Free Enterprise Economy into a Socialist Welfare State with a Planned Economy. So, inflation will not suddenly disappear, unemployment will continue, the poor will always be with us, and promises of a balanced budget may never be kept. Until there is an honest dollar as a measure of value, there cannot be a complete economic recovery. Ron Paul in the House and Jesse Helms in the Senate have bills in the hopper that would reinstitute a gold standard, might even do away with the Federal Reserve System. But such measures are still in the dream stage. And despite President-elect Reagan's promise to cut federal spending, he sees at most a 6% cut in the proposed budget and a possible reduction in the deficit of $13 billion. And it's going to take time and money to shore up our national defense establishment. The things the Carter administration did to promote unilateral disarmament will take years to repair. For example, to be certain the Navy would never launch nuclear missiles at a potential enemy, the Carter administration ordered that the missile launch tubes on all Polaris submarines be filled with concrete! To make doubly sure they could never be used, electrical and hydraulic systems which operate the launch equipment were cut off. This according to Defense Daily, a specialized publication which circulates in the defense community. Information was later confirmed by the Pentagon and Congressional sources.

Nor is it going to be easy to win back the confidence and trust of those former allies that have been so disgracefully mistreated. For example, in its policy-making and planning stages, the Reagan transitional team is depending heavily on the recommendations of a think-tank, the Heritage Foundation. This think-tank recommended doing away with the Department of Energy, reshaping EPA and letting the States set their own environmental protection standards, with no interference from the feds except where interstate matters were concerned. But when it came to foreign policy, this same Heritage Foundation published a report on Central America that, according to the reliable Review of the News, "is short on facts, but heavy on rhetoric backing former (Nicaraguan) President Somoza's enemies and advocating a leftist 'third force' regime to carry out the 'reforms' of the Sandinistas. The Heritage report makes no mention of the active measures taken by the Carter administration to betray General Somoza and his Government."

All things considered, we must conclude that recovery of the health of our Republic is going to be slow, the period of convalescence will be painful, and we can expect relapses unless those Christian conservative forces which brought about the election landslide continue to ride herd on the new administration and the 97th Congress. Good news: a 'hit list' of 20 liberal Senators has already been prepared and circulated; and under the heading "Religious Right Goes for Bigger Game," it is said that "A massive overhaul of laws - from prayer to pornography - is the goal of the conservative preachers who helped trim Congress's liberal ranks." Citing the election result as a "long-overdue victory for family and moral values," the magazine sees that as "only the beginning of a drive for the thorough overhaul of American laws." The first of such actions occurred when the lame-duck Senate on October 13 "joined the House in voting to bar the Justice Department from seeking court orders for busing to overcome school desegregation." This was a rider on the Justice Department's appropriations bill and speaking for the amendment, Senator Jesse Helms said: "How long are we going to allow the federal bureaucracy in the Justice Department to torment the little children of America?" Liberal Republican Senator Weicker of Connecticut said this was "a harbinger of what we can expect from the incoming Senate."

We hope this also is a harbinger of what we can expect from the Reagan Administration in matters concerning education. One of Reagan's first promises was that he would eliminate the newly created Department of Education and he must not be allowed to renege on that promise. One good reason has to do with the kind of education that is being dispensed to the Nation's children by these government (formerly public) schools. A report published by the College Board on October 4th revealed that the scores of nearly one million college-bound high school seniors on the Scholastic Aptitude Test (SAT) for 1979-80 showed them to have unacceptable reading and math skills. But they did have a firmly implanted belief that free enterprise capitalism is outdated, archaic and evil.

A second reason for elimination of the Department of Education has to do with its promotion of Humanism as the state-religion of the United States. When the Congress approved the creation of this new department, Carter chose as its chairman Shirley M. Hufstедler, a trustee of the Aspen Institute for Humanistic Studies. There has been much hullabaloo about how awakened Christians who decided to engage in political activity were violating a principle known as Separation of Church and State - all of which is propagandistic nonsense. But the Humanistic-oriented federal education system does violate that principle.

The First Amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America declares that "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof..." But while, by law, prohibiting a free exercise of any other religion, students in schools that are controlled by the government, are a captive audience forced to learn and to practice tenets of Humanism, which has been declared a religion by the U.S. Supreme Court! To combat this religion which placed Man where God ought to be, and to combat its effects on children, on the family, and on society, private and church-operated schools have been growing by proverbial leaps and bounds. The federal administration, through its Internal Revenue Service and Justice Department, has attempted to prevent this growth of private and church-run schools but so far have had little success, can be expected to have no success with a conservative-minded Government installed in Washington. However, there are millions of families who cannot afford to pay both school taxes and additional tuition charges that are involved in sending their children to non-government controlled schools. Therefore, the so-called public school must remain as an American institution. But, they must be community schools, not federal government schools, and they must be cleansed of the courses promoting the Religion of Humanism, which had become an established state religion. The new Christian Majority has stepped in to do something about it. So, let us identify this enemy which might be said to be endued with the spirit of the anti-christ.

The author of the book "The Assault on the Family" remarks that "Most U.S. citizens are not aware that the hard-core pornography, Humanistic sex education, the 'gay' rights movement, feminism, the Equal Rights Amendment, sensitivity training in schools and industry, the promotion of drug abuse, the God-is-Dead movement, free abortion on demand, euthanasia as a national promotion - to mention a few highly publicized movements - have been sparked by Humanism. As a religion, Humanism demands the end of all religions that are God-oriented, and the abolition of profit-motivated society, so that a world utopian state may be established which will dictate the distribution of the means of life for everyone."

A Great World Temple to Humanism is located in Aspen, Colorado. "Freeman Digest" for November 1980 deals with Aspen Institute for Humanistic Studies. The opening paragraph reads: "Many people have asked this question: Where do the leading officials of the Trilateral Commission, the White House, the Ford Foundation, the Rockefeller Institute, the Exxon Corporation, the Brookings Institute, The New York Times, the Observer International, the Die Zeit, the IBM Corporation, Goldman Sachs and Company, the International Institute for Strategic Studies, the Xerox Corporation, the Citibank, the UN University, the Milbank, the Tweed, the Hadley and McCloy Firm, the World Bank, the Council on Foreign Relations, the University of Chicago, Sohio University, the Coca-Cola Corporation, the Chase Manhattan Bank, etc go for advanced seminars in global ideology and humanistic studies? The not-so-obvious answer is Aspen, Colorado."

While Aspen Institute is the Great World Temple of Humanism, its proselytizing of the youth of America is now supervised by the Federal Department of Education, and every so-called public school in America serves as a Sunday School for children - except that Humanism is not taught on Sunday; it's taught five days a week, from Monday through Friday. And every student who goes to a public school in the United States is forced to study Humanism. The November 1980 issue of the publication "Private Property-Free Enterprise" printed an excellent treatise on Humanism. We quote.

HUMANISM:

- * Denies the deity of God, the inspiration of the Bible, the divinity of Christ.
- * Denies the existence of the soul, life after death, salvation, heaven, damnation and hell.
- * Denies the biblical account of creation.
- * Believes that there are no absolutes, no right, no wrong - that moral values are self-determined and situational. Do your own thing, as long as it does not harm anyone else.
- * Believes in removal of the distinctive roles of male and female.
- * Believes in sexual freedom between consenting individuals, regardless of age, including premarital sex, homosexuality, lesbianism, and incest.
- * Believes in the right to abortion, euthanasia, and suicide.
- * Believes in equal distribution of America's wealth to reduce poverty and bring about equality.
- * Believes in control of the environment, control of energy and its limitation.
- * Believes in removal of American patriotism and the free enterprise system, disarmament, and creation of a one-world socialistic government....

How could such complex issues of Humanism possibly be indoctrinated into your child in elementary or high school?... Humanist psychologists and behavioral scientists have successfully developed techniques which can gradually change your child's conscience, personality, values, and behavior. An extensively used technique is Values Clarification which can be used to convince the child that he has the right to develop his own personal values, free from parental influence and authority, free from the influence of religions other than Humanism. It can further convince the child that there are no absolutes, no right, no wrong. The child is told that whatever value he chooses is right for him.. Other Humanistic strategies for behavioral change are role playing, whereby the child acts out emotional situations such as conflicts with parents. Methods also include magic circles, value appraisal scales, questionnaires, diaries, journals, games, survival games, open-ended situations such as "What would you do if....? and so forth.

Whatever the strategy, the object is basically the same - to get your child to reveal his very heart, soul, mind, and even his subconscious thoughts before his peers and teacher. Isn't it time for parents to demand that Humanism be removed from our schools? Isn't it time for parents to demand that the schools educate our children in academic skills instead of Humanistic values?

Determining the extent of Humanism in the school requires some detective work. Terms of designation are constantly changing. It may be called values education, valuing skills, values clarification, self-awareness, decision making, self-acceptance, interpersonal relations skills, etc. Films, textbooks, library books frequently contain Humanism. Curriculums contain courses on human sexuality and family living. Or sex education may be sandwiched in with reading, history, health, biology, etc. But textbooks and teacher's manuals are not essential for implementing Humanism. More and more teachers are being trained with our tax dollars to be effective "change agents" as the schools are rushing forward to create a new social order.

Train up a child in the way he should go; and when he is old he will not depart from it. - Proverbs 22:6.

WORDS TO REMEMBER

Our former collaborator and publishing partner, the late Upton Close, held to a theory which fits our moment in time. He expressed it in an address to the Rotary Club of Chicago on April 3, 1941, in these words: "I have been coming back from various parts of the world over the course of the last twenty years, and I have had occasion to feel the pendulum-like quality of American sentiment. I have seen how these people who are the most unconcerned about a situation today may in a year or two be the most hysterical about the same situation; how a Lindbergh Senior can be ridden on a rail, tarred and feathered, and later be admired as a martyr; and then how his son Charles can be put in the beginnings of the same cycle. And I know that, if you find American sentiment on the extreme end of the pendulum swing at one moment, you will find it at the extreme other end of the pendulum swing later." The same can be said of Upton. He was a political truth-teller at a time when the pendulum was on a leftward sweep. But now American sentiment is swinging to the right. And it seems fitting to us that the political truths he expressed thirty years ago, be recalled and reconsidered.

Thirty years ago we met Upton for the first time. He was on a lecture tour and came through Tulsa where we were broadcasting. Later we would form a partnership and move to the Palm Beach, Florida area. He had just concluded an address before the Capitol Hill Chamber of Commerce in Oklahoma City. One of Upton's friends had a transcript of that lecture which Upton Close gave on October 10, 1950. The following is taken from that lecture, which was titled: "The Treachery in Our Government."

* * * * *

I want to talk to you today on the subject of the men who want to rule the world. Uncle Joe (Stalin) and his crew aren't the only people who are out to rule the world, to rob your pocketbook, to get all of the wealth of the world into their hands and establish a one world economy under their control. That is the basic aim of the Marxist movement, which is a good deal older than Marx. I think we need a historical sketch of that movement which very few people in the United States know. It is surely something that should be put in every textbook that is studied in every American school...

The movement to put the police force with the economic production - that is essentially what the Marxist movement is: putting police power and production control in the same hands; establishing a double control over the human being. Not only control of the policeman's club or the militiaman's bayonet, but job control, wage control, and control of the raw materials that the producer and processor have to use to stay in business. In other words, the Marxist system provides to a ruling group, control of man's food, control of his shelter, control of the very essentials of living for every man, his wife and his family -- this in addition to the police control that has always been known in the world.

The Marxist system started in organized form the very same year that the Declaration of Independence was written. It was organized in a German University by a man named Adam Weishaupt, one of the professors. It spread first through Bavaria with special headquarters in Munich. The Society of the Illuminati, it was called in European tongues. Illuminati in the Latin they used, means the illuminated ones, the self-styled enlightened ones; in other words, The Society of the Wise Guys, if you want to put it in just ordinary language. They were the wise guys who were going to take over the world. They began with a basic principle - that the world was going into a machine age and whoever would control the machines could control human life and human thoughts, by adding to that police power; state power plus economic power.

The first success of this movement was the French commune - and there's that name Communism way back then. That was terminated by Napoleon. The second attempt of the group was the series of revolutions in Europe in 1848, which almost succeeded in Germany. One of the members of this group, named Karl Marx, fled out of Germany to England, established himself in the London Museum Library and set to work to become the scribe of the movement. He wrote its "bible" and gave the movement its name. He became the great teacher of the movement because he "perfected" it for our age - The Machine Age. Marx taught in his books called "Das Kapital" that all production for men's needs would be by machines, in quantity; that whoever controlled the machines, plus the state power, would control all life and thought; and that the control of the machines could be obtained (for the "wise ones") by organizing and controlling the working man. The organized workers would dispossess the private employers, called "capitalist" owners of machines, by vote and force. All ownership would reside in the "state" - meaning at last resort, of course, in the self-promoted "wise ones." This perfection of the conspiracy was named by Marx "The Class War," which became the sacred war to Socialist devotees. Marx was supported by his confederate in Germany, Frederick Engels. There were very many more of them, of course. These men were the forerunners of the Lenin-Stalin movement, and also of the Fabian Socialist movement in Britain and America.

From the very inception of the movement it has been in direct antithetical contrast with, and struggle with, the American system. These two systems were started in organized form within the space of twelve months, in 1776. Today, you and I are living to see the ultimate showdown between these two systems. If the Marxist system were confined to Europe as it once was, if it were confined to Russia, even if it were confined to Europe and Asia, the United States would be only remotely threatened. It is because the Marxist movement has wormed its way into the United States, and is today actually in control of the present administration of the United States in many respects, that we in America are in supreme danger.

Now, of course, you are all aware of the fact that the Marxist system, from its very inception, has been noted for its schisms, for its internal quarrels, for the violence of those internal quarrels, for the fact that the winning group in an internal quarrel never has any tolerance for the losing group. This began in the days of the French Commune. There were Danton, Robespierre and a whole succession; one killed the other to assume control. Many of you are old enough to recall the "internationals." Each one claimed it was the International Organization. The First International grew up around Marx himself. The Second International around Marx's daughter in England, and it spread to the United States. There were Third and Fourth Internationals. There was a row between the Mensheviks and the Bolsheviks in Russia. Then came the split between the Trotskyites and the Stalinites, and the later Vishinsky purges, when Stalin purges his old comrades. Purges have gone on and on as there are sects, schisms, and break-offs in the Marxist fraternity (there was a split between Hitler's National Socialism and Stalin's International Socialism, the later split between Tito and Stalin, then the split between Communist China and Soviet Russia, now the current purge of the Maoist "Gang of Four," and other purges and splits to add to Upton's list of splits and purges-Ed.)

Now, the importance of this is that today we Americans are in danger of being misled completely; misled as to the interpretation of events because of these sectarian differences in the Marxist faith. We have two branches of that marxist faith. Together they are destroying the free people of the world. One branch has its headquarters in London. It is the branch which grew out of the British Fabian Society and which planned so cleverly because of the shrewd brains that were in it - the brains of George Bernhard Shaw, H.G. Wells, the Webbs, Ramsay MacDonald, Herbert Morrison, Harold Laski, John Strachey, and the rest of the younger ones: Atlee, Shinwell, etc. Then they dragged in labor leaders, such as Ernest Bevan, just as our Socialists in America have dragged in the top labor leaders. The Fabians (British Marxists) planned so shrewdly to seize and acquire power that today, in 1950, they are the government of the British Empire.

The other branch of the Marxist faith is the one that has had the big publicity among us - the branch in Moscow - the one that our government propagandists out of Washington spent so much time adulating, building up, praising "good old Joe," creating friendship, preparing us to become brothers to the Russians.

In two ways, Marxism is closing in on Americans. One is through foreign policy. The other is through the Social Welfare State policy. You're all aware, through the attempts made by Senator McCarthy and others to expose what happened in China, that a group of pro-Russian young men got control of the State Department and put through the amazing policy of destroying our Number One ally in Asia, the one we went to war to protect, the Nationalist China of Chiang Kai-shek, the most natural ally we had in the whole world. The members of this junior group finally succeeded in making themselves felt through an organization. It was called the Institute of Pacific Relations (a satellite of the Council on Foreign Relations-Ed.). It proved out eventually (some of us tried to reveal it for years and just got slapped around everytime we mentioned it) that the Institute of Pacific Relations was a Communist Front...

The English Socialist movement had meanwhile been spreading over the United States. The great apostle of English Socialism (Fabianism) here in the United States was Harold Joseph Laski, a small dark, taciturn person of non-Anglo-Saxon appearance and said to have an almost hypnotic influence over those he chose as disciples. At the age of 21 he arrived from Oxford to lecture at Canada's McGill University. After two years there he spent four years as a lecturer at Harvard, also giving guest lectures at Amherst and Yale. Laski then returned to England to become a pundit of the London School of Economics. He had a formative influence on American students, particularly those chosen for Rhodes scholarships. Laski's influence on one man in America, eleven years his senior, is making history - bad history for free enterprise! That man is Felix Frankfurter. From 1910 until he was made a Supreme Court Justice by F.D. Roosevelt, Frankfurter was Laski's host on a number of the Englishman's visits when he counseled with New Deal and Social Welfare politicians. Harvard Law School became permeated with his thinking. Graduate after graduate from Harvard Law School was sent down into government offices in Washington with Frankfurter's endorsement to help him. Alger Hiss, Philip Jessup, Dean Acheson, the Service boys, Owen Lattimore - any number of young fellows came down to Washington with the same credentials, And that is where the China group tied in with the British Socialist group. Not only into government, but into dominating influence in journalism, publishing, education and religious fields, and in some states into politics, went this stream of Fabian Socialists to change American thinking and life. While Americans were totally oblivious of what was going on, were trusting the fate of the nation and the world to the Administration in Washington, this Administration was being taken over in its policies, foreign and domestic, by this British-Socialist-China-Frankfurter group. Today, you're getting the fruits of it. They ripened in the Yalta and Potsdam agreements.

What happened in Yalta and Potsdam was the attempt by the two branches of the Marxist faith to make a deal to divide up the world, and destroy capitalism. Each one had its assignment. The Moscow-based group of Socialists was to be given the world from Japan west to Berlin. The Anglo-American group of Socialists was entrusted with the job of destroying capitalism from Berlin west to Japan. Japan would have gone into Moscow's share - but there was one man in the whole world these young Marxists couldn't manage - MacArthur. So, here we are today. Joe Stalin took what was given him. Then he began encroaching on the part of the world designated to come under "reform" by his Anglo-American pals.

I hope you see through this stuff! I hope you see what the objective is. I hope you see it isn't just bungling. No! It's damnably shrewd and conniving. Western Marxists have got to keep the spectre of this Communist menace alive - in order to keep the American people in a state of emergency so they'll be willing to sacrifice, to vote, to give to the Socialists in Washington so they can carry on, continue their plan. What they hope is, come the crisis with Russia, they will be firmly in the seats of power in the United States. Then, although they know the Kremlin's agents here are going to make all the trouble they can, they think they can beat the Kremlin's agents to it when the time comes, and they're willing to take that risk. This group of Anglo-American Socialists is just as thoroughly and ruthlessly 100 percent Marxist as the group in Moscow. America will never be safe until good Americans who believe in the American and Individualist system get this through their heads, and take back their government.

And I repeat - it may be very late right now! If the Anglo-American Socialists have their way, we are going to be part of a World Federalist State, in which you and I will have no say at all; which will draft our sons to fight anywhere the official policy dictates, or where any accident happens or whim directs: which will bleed the United States of billions and billions of dollars more of our wealth, and which will eventually use us as slaves and minions in the final showdown of power between the two groups of Marxists who want to rule the earth.

I think it's time for everyone of us to do what he can: to wit, to pause in this drift, to take enough time out from this current to study where we are, to find measures to re-establish America on the basis of the Declaration of Independence of 1776. As I say, the two systems began their organized resistance in the year 1776. I think the answer as to which will survive will come soon.

PERZONAL

SAM -

Sam was very large and fierce. His father was a traveling shepherd and his mother was a wolf. That's what I said.

One morning a few weeks ago, I looked out the front window to the street and saw a police car.

I went out and followed it five houses down where it stopped at Sam's.

Sam was missing from his back yard. The policeman said that he had been hit up on the highway and dragged underneath the car. That they had to jack up the car to release him and when they did, "He jumped up and ran away on three legs."

We presumed one leg was broken, though it turned out to be his pelvis.

Most of his skin was scattered along the highway.

We searched for about twenty minutes and then circled back to the house.

There was Sam. He had come home, no doubt to die.

I ran back and called Nancy from work, and she came with all speed and took him to the veterinarian.

I ministered to her every day until they brought the dog home. (Against my wishes).

One day later all the stitches had broken because there was so little skin left for purchase.

Nancy continued desperately, alternating between tears and hysteria.

"But Sam and Benji go everywhere with me in the car!"

"No more!" I said.

She called me later that day.

"I put sheets down and they are all bloody. I always faint at the sight of blood."

"Nancy, a man ought always to pray and not to faint and if you faint I'll kill you!"

"Well, I have to have some rest. Will you help me?"

Himself went and got us some sleeping pills and I went trembling to the back door and knocked.

I even thought to bring some meat for coaxing.

Remember, I had not been required to handle Sam at close quarters, but I walked in bravely, laid the bottle and the meat on the table and called, "Sam!"

He struggled up on his feet and came to me. I held out both hands, palms up.

Sam gently laid his massive head upon my hands.

I was not afraid.

Sam's yellow wolf's eyes were trusting.

I said, "Sam, I want you to eat this," And with that I thrust his mouth open and popped in one pill, wrapped in hamburger.

Then the second. And the third. I prayed for them both and left. Little Benji was yapping in the background.

Early Monday morning, Nancy called for help again.

"Sam is worse. He finally went to sleep and now I can't get him into the car. The veterinarian will take him back if we can get him there. I've called everyone for help, but no-one will touch Sam. They are all afraid!"

I said wearily, "I HERE."

A nice young policeman finally answered our call and Nancy, awash with tears, greeted him gratefully.

We decided to bind Sam's mouth for safety's sake so we tore off a strip of sheet and then we stared at each other blankly, waiting to see which of us had the fortitude to bind the wolf-dog's mouth.

He was finally awake now.

Suddenly, the policeman reached down authoritatively and seized the strip. Nancy and I sighed in unison. The minion of the law was there - a M-A-N. He would bind Sam's mouth. He would carry Sam to the car.

As we sat on the floor at the dog's head, the policeman stood behind us and twirled the strip until it was taut, then quickly reached down and handed it to me, saying, "IF YOU THINK I'M GOING TO TOUCH THAT DOG, YOU'RE CRAZY."

Nancy began to cry again, but I got mad. Real mad.

I got up and stamped my foot. "Police brutality!" I snapped.

Nancy and I did the job then, slowly binding Sam's muzzle and securing it with girl's knots.

Sam looked on in pained amazement that we did not trust him.

Then came the tricky part.

"Now Nancy," I said, "we have only one objective and that's to get this dog in your car. We must somehow get this dying dog up on his feet and he must walk and you must not doubt or let him lie down. If you do, we're finished."

While the law stood by sturdily, I prayed Sam up on his feet, across the room, the porch, down the steps and to the car, where we quickly lifted the poor skinless shanks into the back seat.

I gasped, "Go Nancy and don't faint 'till you get there!"

* * * * *

The young policeman sat down and started his endless paper work while I cleaned up the mess.

Suddenly we both stopped. Our eyes met with tears.

I wiped mine away with the back of my hand.

"You'll do, young man," I said. "Thank you."

* * * * *

Sam died on the operating table a few hours later.

When Nancy came to tell me that Sam had gone, she wrote his epitaph:

"He was my friend," she said.

Year Twenty-Seven.....Number Forty-Eight.....November 28, 1980

THAT TIRED OLD EASTERN ESTABLISHMENT

In November of 1976, President-elect Jimmy Carter was preparing to name his Cabinet heads, Staffmen, and other ranking members of his administration. At that same time his future Chief of Staff, Hamilton Jordan, told the press that "If after the inauguration you find a Cy Vance as Secretary of State and Zbigniew Brzezinski as head of National Security, then I would say we failed... and I would quit. You're going to see new faces and new ideas." Of course, he didn't quit; we did see Vance and Brzezinski in the positions he named and the only new faces were those of the Georgia Gang that Carter brought with him to serve as a kind of personal mafia, and the only new ideas were those presented by the Trilateral Commissioners who were promoting interdependence as a step on the road toward the achievement of economic control over the whole world.

Four years later, in November of 1980, President-elect Ronald Reagan also was preparing to name his Cabinet heads, Staffmen, and other ranking members of his administration. Once again, we were told that we were going to see new faces and new ideas. But it begins to appear that the only new faces we will see will be those of Reagan's California colleagues who will come to Washington to form his personal security force. All other faces will be the same old faces we saw when Nixon and Ford occupied the White House. And the new ideas may be those presented by the same old Eastern Establishment: Members of the Council on Foreign Relations, the Trilateral Commission, the secretive Bilderberger Group, and their satellite organizations.

As of this publishing date, the only official list of prospective appointees was the one issued by Reagan himself on November 6. This list contains the names of 58 people, 26 of whom are or have been members of one or more of the three power-broking organizations we have mentioned: CFR, TLC, or BG. On page 2 of this Report you will find those names, with their organizational connections. While it is true that some of them, like George Bush, have "resigned" from the groups, but they have never renounced the groups or their activities. So, we can assume that their "resignations" were simply acts of expediency to take the heat off. As Johnson's Daily News Digest noted: "Reagan has surrounded himself with the same old Establishment faces that have put this country in our present dangerous position. Imagine, of 59 people thus far named (including VP-elect George Bush-Ed.), 26 are CFR members, 10 are Trilateralists, 10 are Bilderbergers! More than Carter started with! It was disgust of this ideologically bankrupt group that inspired American voters to send Carter packing."

As the transition period progresses, shocked "new rightists" are beginning to come out of their euphoric daze and to realize that the hero they viewed as the "man on the white horse" galloping out of the West into Washington to save the Nation, was not the political purist they had hoped him to be. He is not above compromise with the enemy, he is willing to sacrifice principle in order to get along with liberals and moderate Republicans. He was, in fact, the lesser of two evils. Typical of the slow-dawning reaction of his ardent supporters, was a letter written by a citizen of Texas to his Senator, John Tower. The letter-writer warned of the future administration's already apparent drift toward control by "the treasonous Trilateral Commission element." He observed that the "transition team is filled with TC agents." He told his Senator that "we have put up with this Rockefeller disloyalty to the U.S. far too long." There was a fear that "we will see for the next four years the same variety of faces we have felt were so inadequate and disloyal, dishonest and unAmerican" that we have seen for the past four years. And he ended his letter to his Senator with this plea: "If you have any influence over Reagan, please point out to him the error of his way and see if he can't come up with honest Christian Americans for his Cabinet. We've had enough of traitors."

Paul Weyrich, director of the important Committee for the Survival of a Free Congress, was never fooled by the "worship of Reagan" syndrome. Yet he did campaign vigorously for, and help elect, our next President, because a Reagan victory would also mean a "turn to the right" on the part of the Congress. Also because "I have been persuaded by military experts of the caliber of General Dan Graham, the former director of the Defense Intelligence Agency, that if we have four additional years of disarmament and military weakness, as has been the case under President Carter, the United States will be beyond the point of no return. The Soviet Union will, in effect, be dictating our internal policies, because it will have such a hammer lock on military superiority and strategic materials by then that we will have to cooperate. Four more years of Carter will mean the Finlandization of the United States." Weyrich wrote this for the Conservative Digest last July. He pointed out that Reagan was "no man on a white horse," and that if he won, Reagan would be just "a slightly better-than-average Republican who will, unfortunately, bring many of the tired old Eastern Establishment Republicans back to Washington to compromise principle."

Quoting Weyrich does not necessarily mean that we are in agreement with all of his views, but his pre-election picture of Ronald Reagan may help us to understand what we may expect during the next four years: "The picture of Reagan is midway between those on the right who claim that Reagan is a wolf in sheep's clothing who deliberately seeks to achieve liberal objectives by pretending to be a conservative, and those for whom Reagan is a hero first-class who is going to do all of those things which conservatives have longed for but have been denied us by the few modern Republican Presidents who have occupied the White House. In this composite picture, Reagan emerges...as a man who dislikes conflict and believes that his greatest contribution is the fusion of opposing ideas in such a way that neither side loses. Reagan appears as a man loyal to principle and to his friends, but not ultimately loyal - so that if the opposition causes enough trouble, he will be willing to find a graceful way out of sticking either to principle or friends."

So, at best, Reagan is a compromiser who could be persuaded to forget all of his campaign promises and - except for national defense measures - could become just another Carter. Therefore, and again we quote Weyrich:.. "We must fight inside a Reagan administration for what we believe in. We cannot just expect him to do the right thing and then be angry and disappointed when he does not. We must be prepared with a better case than the liberals have to offer. We must present it more forcefully and with greater conviction than they are willing to do. And in those instances when we do not prevail, we must continue to fight for what is right, even when it means disagreeing publicly with our friends. One of Reagan's people in whom I have the most confidence who contributed to my composite picture, said of his years in Sacramento: "It was a do-it-yourself administration. Whoever got in there and fought the hardest and presented the best case was generally able to prevail." That says it all. Let us not expect miracles from a Reagan Presidency. Let us not expect him to fight for our causes just because he gave us lip service during the campaign or because we are 'right.' Let us expect to have to fight hard for what we get, and let's do it"" (Unquote).

Weyrich's prediction is coming to pass. It appears that the "tired old Eastern Establishment Republicans" are gaining control of the upcoming administration and, unless a political miracle occurs before next January 20th, we are going to have "more of the same" that we have endured for the past four years. That means the "fighting hard for what we get" - and for what we must get if this is to remain a Sovereign Republic - means concentrating our efforts on the new Congress. We have this going for us: we know that the next Congress is going to be conservatively inclined, with far less left-leaning. Many of the tired old chairmen of the important House committees have been sent to pasture, and we can be assured that their replacements can't be as bad as their predecessors. Even Tip O'Neill has promised to cooperate for at least six months. As for the Senate, all of those tired old Democratic chairmen will be replaced, since the Republicans now will chair all committees. Here again, such "moderates" as Howard Baker and Charles Percy are going to try to talk and act like conservatives. So, the strategy will be: put pressure on your three elected representatives in Washington, and let them put pressure on the Reagan administration, and see to it that Reagan's "lip service" is converted into actual service.

Already there are rumors that the promised tax relief may not be as promised. There is talk of shelving the Kemp-Roth plan. According to Congressman John Ashbrook of Ohio, if things remain as they are taxwise, "Federal income taxes will increase in 1981 by 53.2 percent over last year's taxes. Social Security taxes will increase in 1981 by 35.2 percent over last year's taxes." And, because of inflation which keeps placing people in higher tax brackets, Ashbrook says: "The median income family this year will pay 22.9 percent more in Federal income and social security taxes than last year, even though income and social security tax rates are unchanged." For these reasons, seeing to it that the Reagan administration sticks to its promises concerning taxes and budget balancing, is a first priority.

Another priority action has to do with reducing unemployment and finding ways of getting people off the various welfare roles. One quick way to help do this, and at the same time help the economy in general, is to do away with the minimum wage monstrosity. It has been estimated that there are at least a million unemployed and on welfare because they are untrained and unable to get work, because they simply are not worth the wages that Big Brother says they must receive from their employer. The Biblical injunction, "The labourer is worth his hire," works two ways. A laborer should be paid what he is worth to his employer; but he also should be worth what he is paid by his employer. That is why perhaps a million, chiefly minority workers, are on the welfare roles. A minimum wage law is the beginning of the destruction of free enterprise. This also could be said of what is referred to as "Affirmative Action." In a recent misinterpretation of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, the Supreme Court ruled that whenever a federal revenue sharing grant is given a community for local public works, ten percent of that money must be spent with businesses owned by minority groups. It's reverse discrimination, discrimination against Caucasians or racism in reverse, based on quotas for minorities. Said Senator Hatch, in a recent speech to the lame-duck Senate: "Essentially, the Supreme Court appears to be re-instating the power of the government to distinguish between citizens on the basis of race. The only proviso is that these distinctions must be approved by the leaders of the minority groups . . . and acquiesced to by the apathetic leaders of the majority of Americans at whose expense they are enacted." Note that this Affirmative Action regulation is exactly the opposite of what was intended by Congress when it passed the Civil Rights Act of 1964. But this has become something of a "rule" in a democracy: Congress passes a "blanket law" which is handed to a regulatory agency for administering. The agency makes up a set of regulations using the blanket bill as a basis. The regulations are published in the Federal Register and, after a certain length of time - usually 60 days - the regulations become effective. If challenged by a citizen or a group, a federal court usually upholds the regulation. That makes the regulation "the Law of the Land," unless or until Congress does something about it. That seldom happens and we are one step closer to dictatorship. Reagan has promised to do something about regulatory agencies, beginning with the elimination of the Departments of Education and Energy. But, since those "tired old Eastern Establishment Republicans" are to be in charge, Reagan probably will do nothing about anything like this, unless Congress insists. And Congress may not insist unless we first insist that congress insist. There is this great advantage with with new, 97th Congress: There are some people there who will really listen, and who have the courage to act - so long as we back them up. A great American poet, James Russell Lowell, summed it up in these words:

*Once to every man and nation comes the moment to decide
In the strife with truth and falsehood, for the good or evil side;
Then it is the brave man chooses, while the coward stands aside.*

THE ART AND SCIENCE OF CAUSING WARS

The calendar indicates that this will have been the first December 7th to fall on a Sunday since Pearl Harbor Day in 1941 - 39 years ago. Spotlight rightly predicted that "the Establishment media will be filled with remembrances of the Japanese 'sneak attack' on Pearl Harbor. And during the first week of December the teachers of America will tell their students how the Japanese, 'without warning or provocation,' attacked the U.S. Pacific Fleet in the Hawaiian Islands. But what you will not be told is that...Franklin D. Roosevelt in concert with Winston Churchill and other internationalists, engineered the U.S. entry into World War II. You will not be told that Roosevelt knew in advance of the attack, as did the U.S. intelligence community.'

Spotlight is correct. The Power Brokers in Washington and London knew that Pearl Harbor was going to be attacked because they planned it that way. In the January 1974 issue of Foreign Affairs, the house organ of the Council on Foreign Relations, John Lewis Gaddis wrote: "...Japan's attack on Pearl Harbor actually thrust the United States into World War II, but the Roosevelt administration had decided a year and a half earlier to risk war in order to prevent the totalitarian domination of all Europe." On June 24, 1944, the Rt. Hon. Oliver Littleton, a member of Churchill's war cabinet, told the American Chamber of Commerce in London: "America provoked Japan to such an extent that the Japanese were forced to attack Pearl Harbor. it is a travesty of history to say that America was forced into the war." In January 1941 - almost a year before Pearl Harbor - Harry Hopkins took to 10 Downing Street this pledge from the White House: "The President is determined that we shall win the war together. ...He has sent me here to tell you that at all costs he will carry you through." This was a confirmation of what Roosevelt had earlier promised Churchill when they met to agree to the formation of a United Nations Organization that was to be the foundation for a New World Government. They also agreed on the words of "The Four Essential Human Freedoms," which Roosevelt proclaimed on Jan. 6, 1941:

1. Freedom of speech and expression - everywhere in the world.
2. Freedom of worship - everywhere in the world.
3. Freedom from want - everywhere in the world.
4. Freedom from fear - everywhere in the world.

To create this utopian state, not only did the Power Brokers plan the war and America's entry into it; they also knew when Pearl Harbor was to be attacked, and deliberately withheld that information from the military commanders in the Hawaiian and Philippine Islands. Japan's "Purple Code" had been broken and the U.S. intelligence community knew beforehand of every move the Japanese Navy made. But General George Catlitt Marshall withheld that information from General Short and Admiral Kimmel, the Pearl Harbor Commanders, and from General MacArthur, the Philippine Commander. This was done deliberately to shock the American people into demanding that war be declared against Japan, Nazi Germany and Fascist Italy. And, to add treason upon treason, after the bombing of Pearl Harbor and American bases in the Philippines, the war in the Pacific still could have been shortened by months, perhaps years, except that war supplies were withheld from MacArthur and sent to Stalin instead. Result of this was horrible for us in the Philippines: 53,644 Americans listed as dead. 36,272 of the bodies were never found or identified. We escaped that fate, by being captured alive in Manila instead of dead in Bataan. Col. Warren J. Clear, an intelligence officer with MacArthur on Corregidor, lived to tell the story:

"This was the story of men who fought the most dismal, bloody, and hopeless campaign in the history of warfare. They were the only Americans in the world at this time who were fighting the enemy, yet the flood of weapons from their country's arsenals was being rushed to every other battlefield but theirs. Anyway, they fought on, with the machine gun, the hand grenade, the rifle and the bayonet against massed troops and massed artillery, fleets of bombing and strafing planes. Only the sheer weight of Japanese manpower finally overwhelmed the defenders of Bataan. Then the full fury of the enemy was turned upon Corregidor. Besides round-the-clock bombing from the air, 5,000 artillery shells a day pulverized the surface of the Rock. The day came when there was no more room to bury the dead, and what was the use when the great shells churned the tortured bodies up again to rot in the tropic sun? American soldiers, sailors, and marines, with their pride and spirit drowning in misery and mud, were obliged to eat, drink and sleep among their putrefactions. In the moments of the final agony before the surrender, the last bandage had been used up, the last shot of morphine gone, almost all food gone, and no more ammunition for the last anti-aircraft gun. In all the thousands of years of human warfare, here was the only known example of a besieged army written off and deserted by fellow countrymen."

The foregoing statement by Col. Clear was quoted by George T. Eggleston in the book, "Roosevelt, Churchill and the World War II Opposition," The Devin-Adair Company, 143 Sound Beach Ave., Old Greenwich, Conn. 06870. Hardcover, 256 pages; $12.95. Eggleston was a senior editor of "Reader's Digest" who writes of how he, Charles Lindbergh and others tried to stop FDR's war plot and what happened to him and the others as a result. Eggleston notes that after MacArthur's ordered departure to Australia via PTboat, General Jonathan Wainwright was left in command, "had no choice but to surrender his starving troops... The Japanese took 45,000 Filipino and American prisoners. The Death March of Bataan claimed 25,000 casualties. Wainwright and his men who survived the march looked like so many skeletons." To this we can attest personally. When we met on the deck of the U.S.S. Missouri when MacArthur accepted the Japanese surrender, Skinny Wainwright scarcely had the strength to stand at attention beside his old Commander who was now the Supreme Commander over Japan and all its remaining possessions.

Yes, we remember Pearl Harbor Day and the day of surrender. It began on a Battleship, the U.S.S. Arizona; and it ended on a Battleship, the U.S.S. Missouri. Now our Battleships are mostly in mothballs as another provoked war seems to be threatening. There was a time when warships were the sparks that ignited our wars. The mysterious sinking of the Maine was the pretext for our first expansion into other hemispheres. The sinking of the Lusitania, actually a warship, sparked the sentiment for our entry into World War I. The sinking of the Arizona and its fleet took us into World War II. But warships began to take a secondary role in the creation of war hysteria after the founding of the United Nations. Before that, it was necessary for the Congress to declare war before American troops could be committed to any major action. The sinking of an American warship by the chosen enemy was the catalyst that would cause the American people to demand that their representatives in Washington issue immediately a Declaration committing them to all out war. But the Power Brokers wanted to get around this Constitutional procedure, so they created a new method: Instead of a Congressional Declaration, they would use a Treaty!

Alan Stang, in an excellent article in the current issue of American Opinion, titled "It's Time to Expose the Conspiracy!" explains how the new method was established. He refers to a Council on Foreign Relations study, "American Interests in the War and the Peace," which was prepared for the State Department in 1944. The confidential study stated that "the sovereignty fetish is still so strong in the public mind, that there would appear to be little chance of winning popular assent to American membership in anything approaching a super-state organization. Much will depend on the kind of approach which is used in further popular education." This CFR study then mentioned a possible further difficulty "arising from the Constitutional provision that only the Congress may declare war." This argument was countered with the contention that "a treaty would override this barrier, let alone the fact that our participation in such police action as might be recommended by the international security organization need not necessarily be construed as war." (Emphasis added). Alan Stang gives this explanation of the foregoing:

"Remember that this confidential document was prepared for the State Department by the Council itself. Notice that the CFR is recommending ways to circumvent our Constitution. From now on, says the Conspiracy, wars will not be declared by the people through their Congressmen, as the Constitution specifies. The implication of the fact that the people can declare, or not declare, war is that the United States Government still exists. And, the Conspirators want to destroy the United States Government. So the CFR study shows that their plan was to trick us into war under the control of their 'super-state organization' simply by calling the war something else. The phrase the Council suggested was 'police action.' The Constitution says Congress declares war. Congress does not declare police action!" (Emphasis as in original).

Stang points out that in 1946, at the first London conference on the UN, the U.S. delegation agreed that the Soviets would always run UN military affairs, while the Americans would always run UN financial activities. In short, "the Soviets won the right to run the UN, and the Americans won the right to pay for it." So, we entered the Korean "police action" under the sponsorship of the UN, and its Undersecretary for Political and Security Council Affairs was Konstantin E. Zinchenko, a Communist. And Zinchenko was General MacArthur's boss. When with the Inchon Landing, MacArthur acted independently to bypass his UN superiors, President Truman, upon the urging of Dean Acheson of the Council on Foreign Relations, recalled MacArthur. A returning hero, he ended his defiance of UN-CFR instructions by insisting that in war there is no substitute for victory (but it wasn't a war, it was a "police action," the Conspirators said). Incidentally, at that time there had been no serious break in the relationship between Soviet Russia and Red China. As a result, during the Korean police action, the Reds were running their side through Mao Tse-tung, and running our side through Zinchenko. No wonder it was a no-win war! And Alan Stang reports: "The traitors did the same thing again in Vietnam. Again we entered the war under the auspices of the UN, through our membership in SEATO, a UN subsidiary. Again we couldn't win because our own CFR leaders wouldn't let us."

The point of all this reminiscing is that it could happen again, and we must try to prevent it. The bad side of the situation reads like this: As Carter bows out and Reagan assumes supposed command, the cards are being stacked in such a way that armed conflict - which is not to be called war - could become inevitable. Once again, as in Korea and Vietnam, there would be no Declaration of War ratified by the representatives of the people of the United States. For, it would not be a war; it would be a "police action" or a "security measure" that would be taken through some Treaty: NATO, CENTO, SEATO, OAS, one of a series of U.S.-Israeli Treaties, or whatever multi-, bi- or unilateral Treaty that might seem to fit the circumstances. Our commitments are world-wide, we are officially pledged to defend - and apparently finance as well - almost every nation and mini-nation in the world, even including some of them that are part of the "Soviet Hegemony" of which the Chinese Communist "friends" speak. In short, through hundreds of those entangling alliances that our first President warned us against, we seem to be at the mercy of this Conspiracy that is busy setting up its New World Order.

Here, as the year of our Lord 1980 and the rule of Jimmy Carter near the end, is a world in turmoil. Marxist-initiated and U.S. Government-sponsored revolutions and terrorist activities in Central America are becoming so serious that - as our government has done before - it may be found necessary to step in militarily. U.S. military units have been training in Egypt, getting accustomed to desert warfare. A fully complemented U.S. Naval Fleet is stationed in the Indian Ocean, awaiting possible action in defense of oil interests. American-manned airplanes are patrolling the skies from air bases in Saudi Arabia. The ever-present shame and disgrace of a great Nation being unable to do anything constructive about 52 hostages in little Iran could cause armed action on the part of a new administration in Washington. There are commitments to the Afghan resistance movement. There are commitments both to Iran and Iraq in a war that was provoked to "divide and conquer" against the possible resurgence of a Muslim "holy war" that would work to Soviet Russia's extreme disadvantage. There is the threat of war between Syria and Jordan, another crisis that was evoked to put Arab against Arab and thus ease the pressure upon Israel. There is our firm pledge to defend Israel against all enemies and at all costs. In Europe there is the unsettling situation in Poland, where Polish members of the International Conspiracy are about to ask Soviet troops to invade Poland, to keep it safe for International Communism. And there is the constant threat that a weakened NATO is an easy victim of Soviet strength if and whenever the Reds change their minds and go South instead of East. Wherever we may look, there are what militarists refer to as powder-kegs, ready to be ignited whenever it may seem necessary or expedient in order to complete the establishment of the Conspirators' New world Order.

But here's the other side of the coin: The Conspirators are beginning to run scared. The peoples' reaction on election day shook them. The railings of the CFR-controlled Media against christians in politics and Moralists in the Majority are strengthening our side. The smears of Reagan's real conservative team members isn't going as agents Ford and Kissinger expected. Richard V. Allen, Ed. Meese, William Smith, other non-Establishment men are still on the team. But Anne Armstrong went home to Texas; Walter Wriston back to Citicorp, and George Schultz decided Bechtel needed him more than Reagan. Eastern Establishment Power Brokers are still in charge, but their hold is shaky. And our partial victory could be the beginning of a real reconstruction period. We must understand that four years is not enough time to remedy forty years of destruction. But there must be a beginning; and if we remember that God is for us and if we act accordingly, get the "lukewarms" to reconsider their attitude toward Government, and their duty to God, Family, and Country, who can deny us?

THIS AGE OF THE ANTI-HEROES

James Fenimore Cooper (1789-1851) was America's first great novelist, author of the famous Leatherstocking Tales and a score of other works about America and Americans. Like his equally famous contemporary, Washington Irving, he served his country as an American Consul. Returning to the U.S. after a tour of duty in Lyons, he was shocked upon discovering that his country had begun to turn towards liberalism and democracy. A strict Constitutionalist and conservative by nature, he spoke out, and wrote, against this leftward trend. As a result - even as today - he was ridiculed, berated and libeled by the liberal press of the Nation. Ired by such treatment, he wrote:

"If newspapers are useful in overthrowing tyrants, it is only to establish a tyranny of their own. The press tyrannizes over public men, letters, the arts, the state and even over private life. Under the pretense of protecting public morals it is corrupting them to the core and under the semblance of maintaining liberty, it is gradually establishing despotism as ruthless, as grasping and one that is quite as vulgar as that of any (state ever known). With loud professions of freedom of opinion, there is no tolerance; with a parade of patriotism, no sacrifice of interests; and with full panegyrics on propriety, too frequently no decency."

Congressman Larry McDonald quoted Consul James Fenimore Cooper, and then launched his own complaints against the more expanded, faster, and therefore more effective communications media of today. He wrote, and we quote from his statement as it appeared in the Congressional Record of Dec. 4, 1980:

"These comments by the famous author are not a general indictment on my part of the press across America. In fact, most local weekly newspapers, the medium-sized daily newspapers, the smaller radio and television stations...generally do a rather good job in news coverage and they attempt to be fair and honest in their reporting and on their editorial pages. This is true, too, of some larger daily newspapers...My following comments are aimed primarily at the three national television networks, some national columnists, the major wire services and such newspapers as the Washington Post, The New York Times, the Atlanta Constitution, the Chicago Sun-Times, the Boston Globe and others. In other words, the so-called establishment press.

"Generalizations are perhaps risky - but that has never stopped the national press. With that in mind, it seems to be a valid view that virtually all of the establishment news-media seem to be clones of each other. Almost without exception, the clones have a liberal philosophical outlook regarding the role of the Federal Government. Usually, they favor more and more spending for various social programs and uniformly condemn what they call the military-industrial complex or the Pentagon for all of society's ills. Those who believe in a classical interpretation of our Constitution are almost invariably referred to by this segment of the press as extremists, ultraconservatives, rightwingers, reactionaries, radicals, or mossbacks - usually with not so subtle hints that neo-Nazism is really behind the motives of those who seek to restore limited Federal government operations, restore a sound economy and attain a superior defense for our Nation. On the other hand, liberals are usually referred to by this same press as moderates or middle-of-the-roaders. Raving Socialists are usually the only ones referred to as liberals by the establishment press .

"All of us in public life, at one time or another, have been the victims of vicious, false attacks by biased reporters and editors. Only an immature, insecure individual would object to honest, constructive criticism by the press or the public. We are well aware of and deeply appreciate our freedom of speech and the press as guaranteed by the Constitution. However, I am concerned by the lack of concern and responsibility on the part of some segments of the national news media in regard to the rest of the Constitution - notably the 9th and 10th amendments to that noble document - and (the lack of concern) for common fairness and decency. While in theory, public servants and individuals who are maliciously and falsely attacked can write a letter to the editor as a complaint in the case of the printed media; demand equal time to scurrilous assaults by the electronic media; insist on retractions or file civil lawsuits charging libel or slander; these are rarely sufficient to correct the sometimes incredible damage to a person's reputation by an irresponsible segment of the news media.

"Regarding letters to the editor: Many times they are not printed at all. If pub-

At a time when the U.S. Postal Service is planning another rate increase and the coercive imposition of a ridiculous and unnecessary nine-digit zip code, we receive the following advisory from the American Board of Trade:

In recent issues of our exchange-affiliated publications, we have called attention to the extraordinary mail delivery delays that seriously hinder market transactions and cause great harm to investors and to financial organizations, such as The American Board of Trade. We have pointed out that if you were to mail an order or check to the ABT at its new address at 9 South William St. in New York's Wall Street area, especially if you used a postpaid business reply envelope, there's a strong likelihood that it would not reach ABT offices in less than 9 or 10 days, even if you live as close to New York as Connecticut, New Jersey or Pennsylvania. These delays are the direct result of the Post Office personnel allowing incoming mail, first class mail, mind you, to accumulate on work tables, benches and shelves within the processing areas, without any attempt, even by Post Office supervisors and managers, to arrange for prompt delivery of the accumulation. To induce an outflow of the accumulation of our mail, we have found it necessary in recent months to follow-up Post Office supervisors with protest phone calls and in-person inquiry, after which huge bundles of mail become available, containing letters clearly postmarked to reveal inordinate and even shocking delays in arrival. The previously reported actual delivery delays of 9 to 10 days may now be accurately revised into a much broader range of delay of 10 to 43 days... That is the delay range involved in a huge bundle of first class mail that had accumulated from hundreds of customers and was made available to the ABT on Oct. 28, following strong protests on our part that something has obviously gone awry in U.S. Post Office operations... That huge Oct. 28 bundle of accumulated first class mail contained customer market orders and actual remittances of check and money orders totalling $370,000, postmarked 10 to 43 days earlier.

We say that delays of 10 to 43 days on the part of the U.S. Post Office in delivery of first class mail... are evidence of complete breakdown of mail service in our country... The time has arrived to vigorously publicize the inadequacy of the present U.S. postal system so that remedial action can begin through the new Congress that will assemble in Washington in January.

(Please note that remedial action does not require increased rates or digits.)

lished, they are often buried and seldom noticed. And in any case, as many of us know from experience, it is virtually impossible for the truth or a correction to ever catch up with a falsehood. The equal time provisions as I understand them do not apply to so-called news programs presented by the electronic news media, so that approach is not feasible. Retractions are as difficult to extract from newspapers as an impacted tooth from a wounded lion. While the so-called clarification and amplification or correction columns published by a few newspapers may appear to offer a solution to this problem, they are usually inconspicuous and rarely touch the audience that a large front page story or lead editorial reaches. And although libel or slander laws are perhaps theoretically possible for nonpublic individuals - if one does not consider the cost for initiating such action - this avenue is a virtual dead end insofar as public figures are concerned because of various court rulings.

"Of course, some newsmen, when faced with these arguments in favor of more responsibility on the part of the press, will loftily assert, 'Well, you can buy a printing press, too.' This ignores the reality that individuals, in particular, and most public figures, in general, have neither the time nor the resources to compete on a weekly or daily basis with already established news media outlets. It is easy for governmental officials and Members of Congress, in particular, to fold under the pressure of relentless attacks from the liberal news media. But when officials with public trust toss their principles behind them for a public relations advantage, they betray both the U.S. Constitution and the people they represent. . . ." (Unquote).

Congressman McDonald concludes that, where the nefarious and dishonest actions of the Establishment Media concern him personally, he will fight back by recording the facts in The Congressional Record. Unfortunately, The Record is not widely or carefully read by most of us, and with its price increasing to $135 per year, it will be costly reading for those on its free list.

In his discussion of the Establishment Media, Rep. McDonald might have mentioned that it published only what it wants the public to know and promotes only those issues and personalities that seem good in its eyes, because it is under the control of its exclusive club, the Council on Foreign Relations. William S. Paley, Frank Stanton, Dan Rather, Harry Reasoner and others of CBS belong to the Council. John Chancellor, David Brinkley, Thornton Bradshaw, Herbert Schlosser and others of NBC belong to CFR. Likewise there are Barbara Walters, John Connor, other of ABC who belong. Cyrus Vance of the Council on Foreign Relations and the Trilateral commission is a director of The New York Times. Paul Austin of Coca-Cola, Carter's Cabinet and CFR is a director of Dow Jones which publishes the Wall Street Journal. Kathrine Graham of Newsweek and The Washington Post belongs to the CFR. Daniel Schorr of Ted Turner's Cable News Service is a member. So are Joseph Kraft, George Will, William Buckley, James Reston, Marquis Childs, Charles Collingwood, Marvin Kalb, Bill Moyers, Theodore White, Robert McNeil, etc., etc. There are more than 75 members of the Council on Foreign Relations who are associated with the Establishment Communications Media as directors, publishers, editors or anchormen, correspondents, columnists, commentators, and such. All this plus the relentless pressure that can be brought by the national advertisers, most of whom are directed by members of the Establishment or are influenced by the Big Bankers who keep them alive at twenty per cent on indispensable loans.

A most noticeable Establishment Media activity during this presidential transitional period, is the pressure that has been applied to the Reagan team. When a non-Establishment conservative has been mentioned as a possible member of the Regan Cabinet, questions are immediately raised as to conflict of interests, ethics, past associations with Nixon, questionable business deals, etc. Prime target was Richard Allen. William Smith, John Tower, and other Congressmen have been given "the treatment." The Establishment Media has done its utmost to actually name the members of Reagan's Cabinet, with some success.

But the most bizarre promotion of the Establishment Media has been the presentation to the world of the late John Lennon as a lily-white hero, worthy of some sort of sanctification. Not since the mysterious assassination of President John Kennedy (with which it is being compared) has such a hullabaloo been raised because of a shooting. The anti-gun crowd is out in force. Pages after pages have been devoted to the death of Lennon. Networks ran special features and a ten-minute period of silent mourning was arranged for all television and radio stations on Sunday, December 14. Suddenly a total blackout was dropped over the former activities of the man who told the world that "The Beatles are bigger than Jesus!" Censored is the news that the Beatles promoted the drug culture that has virtually destroyed a whole generation of Americans. Blacked out is the news of how he and wife Yoko denounced the traditional and Christian family unit as a part of "the God trip, or father-figure trip," which has to be dissolved in favor of "facing up to reality instead of always looking for some kind of heaven." When John Lennon spoke of the pleasure of being without parents, wife Yoko explained in an article in Ramparts, vol. 10, no. 1, July 1971, page 45: "Perhaps one feels more pain when parents are there. It's like when we're hungry, you know it's worse to get the symbol of a cheeseburger than no cheeseburger at all. It doesn't do you any good, you know. I often wish my mother had died so that at least I could get some people's sympathy. But there she was, a perfectly beautiful mother."

Suddenly because of the premeditated action of a "Jesus freak," a man who was the antithesis of everything considered respectable by Christians is presented by the Establishment Media as a Christlike martyr! The Age of the Anti-Hero it might be called. Morality is scorned, sinfulness is sanctified. Patriotism is called treason while treason prospers. Joseph McCarthy is vilified, John Lennon is glorified. Even when the majority of Americans would wish it otherwise the Establishment Media blacks out truth, keeps their eyes and ears turned and tuned to invented crises, created catastrophes, and the actions of murderers. Like pages upon newspaper pages and hours upon electronic hours, bemoaning the condition of 52 hostages in Iran, while hundreds of MIAs and prisoners of war and known to be alive, but are officially forgotten, in enemy lands. Columnist William P. Hoar says that 389 Americans known to have been prisoners of war were simply written off after the Korean Police Action; that there are 2500 unresolved cases of American Serviceman missing from the Vietnam War; that there have been more than 4,000 individual sightings since 1973, of U.S. Servicemen in Indochina, many still alive and in miserable condition. But what Establishment Medium will mention this? Instead, they'll lament the 52 in Iran and tell us to wear yellow ribbons in remembrance - the color of cowardice.

We have a federal government that is out of our control, partly because of the communications network that is under the control of a self-chosen Elitist Company which uses it "under the semblance of maintaining liberty (to) Gradually establish despotism." To defeat that monopoly is our purpose.

THE DEVELOPING COMMUNITY OF NATIONS

In today's vernacular, have we blown it? Are we allowing political retreats from former administrations to foul up a golden opportunity to save our Republic? Has a beast we thought wounded unto death risen up again to complete the destruction of a once proud and independent Nation? Millions of Americans - a voters' landslide that implied a mandate - had hoped and prayed for a clear and positive turn to the right on the part of the newly elected federal administration. But, after their loss of November 4th, the enemy regrouped and is recouping its losses. His supporters reluctantly accepted Reagan's choice of George Bush as a running mate. But as the President-elect began to announce the names of his selected advisers and assistants, shocked backers began to realize that the same old Eastern Establishment Elitists were still in command and that mere variations on the same old political themes could be expected. Reagan was proposing for Senate approval even more members of the Council on Foreign Relations, Trilateral Commission and Bilderbergers than Carter had on his starting team four years earlier. Those who had led the campaign to get Reagan elected were being bypassed, ignored. Their advice rejected. A December 22 Newsweek item was headed, "The Reverend Jerry Who?" It read: "Fund raiser Richard Viguerie, a leading light of the New Right, is complaining to anyone who will listen in Washington that the Reagan Administration has already abandoned its archconservative friends - the very folks who put the California governor in the White House. It's gotten so bad, Viguerie says, that the Rev. Jerry Falwell, leader of the militant Moral Majority, hasn't been able to get a phone call returned by the Reagan camp since the election... Unless things improve, Viguerie predicts, Reagan and the New Right leadership will be estranged completely in six months to a year."

Sensing that Reagan was starting to turn his back on those who put him in the White House, one of our subscribers wrote, protesting the trend, to Senator Paul Laxalt, who was supposedly a firm supporter of the New Right. The Senator answered, saying in part: "While I am not at liberty to discuss specific appointments, I can say that Ronald Reagan is now President-elect of all the people. To govern effectively, he will reach out, as he should, to a wide spectrum of Americans to assist him in his awesome task...." Our correspondent replied, stated in part:

"I have your letter telling me that Mr. Reagan is going to become 'President of all the people,' presumably implying that I have to expect a number of Trilateralists and CFR members (in addition to Mr. Bush) in Mr. Reagan's administration. The memberships of these two organizations constitute only about 0.001 of one percent of the population of the United States. The recent election expressed in large part the resentment of the majority that these elitists have been allowed to exercise many times more than 0.001 of one percent of the government's power. Their abuse of this power generated the November 4th landslide.... Mr. Somoza also considered himself the 'President of all his people', and it cost him the Republic of Nicaragua and, later, his own life. If anything should happen to Mr. Reagan, will Mr. Bush expect to become President of all the people." (Underlining added in preceding paragraphs.)

We don't know how, or if, Senator Laxalt answered this latter letter. But it is known that similar letters of protest have had no effect. The President-elect's most important appointments, which will probably be approved by the new Republican-controlled Senate in due time, show that the self-chosen Elitists are not merely represented, they are in control. William Casey of the CFR and of the pro-Soviet wartime Office of Strategic Services, is to direct the CIA, an organization that will become of crucial importance if there is to be any real change in our Nation's foreign policy. Malcolm Baldrige of the CFR, nominee for Commerce Secretary, was Connecticut chairman for Bush in the primaries and then followed Bush into the Reagan camp after the latter's win in the primaries. Caspar Weinberger is a Trilateralist, CFR member, and a Nixon re-tread who seems dangerously misplaced as a Defense Secretary. But the real shocker to those who are concerned about 20-plus percent prime rates, about double-digit inflation and increasing taxation, was the selection of the Merrill Lynch manager, Donald Regan to be Secretary of the Treasury. Human Events has been a strong supporter of Ronald Reagan ever since he began campaigning for national office. But it spoke out sharply against Regan, wrote:

"Conservatives can probably live with most of the President-elect's nominees, but the one name they still seriously question is the choice of Donald Regan for secretary of the treasury...What particularly bothers them about Regan, who was apparently pushed through at the last minute by...William Casey, is that he has never been much of a conservative supporter, had made few public pronouncements of significance and has allowed Merrill Lynch's six-man political action committee - of which he is a member - to back leading liberal Democrats....The number of liberals underwritten by Merrill Lynch for the 1980 election seems awesome...Sen. Alan Cranston (ADA rating 79%), Sen. Gaylord Nelson (ADA rating 84%), Sen. Patrick Leahy (ADA rating 89%), Rep. Thomas Downey (ADA rating 89%) - each receiving a political care package from Donald Regan's outfit. The Merrill Lynchers, moreover, appeared to move heaven and hell to polish off the President-elect during the primaries. Thus, on Feb. 14, they donated $1,000 (legal maximum) to George Bush.... So, the question is, how did he get his job? Bill Casey...secured his appointment before any thorough check was done on his background." (unquote).

It isn't just his appointments, but his change of direction, which causes consternation, frustration and even anger, among true conservatives. No longer is there hope of a quick liquidation of the Department of Education. There is a growing question about the Department of Energy which was slated for almost instant dismantling. A straw-in-the-wind that would seem to indicate the way the political wind is really blowing, was Reagan's voiced support of a salary increase for Congressmen and top-level bureaucrats, a measure that was defeated by the retiring 96th Senate. And "iron butterfly" Nancy's impatience at not being able to start immediately in White House refurbishing - at considerable taxpayers' expense at a time when all expenses are supposedly being curtailed - has not set well with conservatives. Also, there is growing talk of a great need for the declaration of a national emergency as soon as the inauguration ceremonies are concluded; this because of the state of the Nation's economy. We keep remembering a statement made by one of the self-chosen Elite (we can't remember which one), that when a really important new and radical policy is to be put into effect, the Republicans are allowed to take over and do the job, because the Republicans can do what the Democrats wouldn't dare to do (like the recognition of Red China and the removal of strategic trade bans with the Soviet; which Nixon and Kissinger arranged because LBJ could never have gotten away with such moves).

But, more importantly, we keep remembering Executive Order 12148, of July 20, 1979, regarding "Federal Emergency Management." This EO provides for the take-over of government operations by a bureaucratic dictatorship. whenever a President of the United States gives the word. A "Federal Emergency Management Agency" would become the governing body and it "shall establish Federal policies for, and coordinate, all civil defense and civil emergency planning, management, mitigation, and assistance functions of Executive agencies" (Section 2-1 of Executive Order 12148). Under this order - which is the "law of the land" whenever a President so declares, since Congress has approved it by inaction - each Federal agency has its particular part in the bureaucratic dictatorship which will operate through the Ten Federal Regional Councils that already are established and operating from the Ten Capitol Cities of the Ten Federal Regions. We are not saying that this will happen if and when President Reagan might declare a national emergency; but we say that it could happen. And, if the new Reagan administration is to be composed of the same old Eastern Establishment crowd that has been running things at the federal level - especially at the level of foreign and economic affairs - for some fifty-odd years, then the declaration of a state of emergency could be far more disastrous to the Nation than was FDR's infamous "100 Days" when all banks were closed, mortgages foreclosed, and the New Deal installed.

Moreover, if the Reagan administration is to be controlled by the same crowd of the in-again-out-again civil servants of the Unelected Supregovernment, it is important that we understand what the real program of the Trilateral-CFR-Elitists amounts to. The reason for the founding of the Trilateral Commission was stated quite clearly in Zbigniew Brzezinski's book, "Between Two Ages - America's Role in the Technetronic Era," published in 1971. He wrote:

"A community of the developed nations must eventually be formed if the world is to respond effectively to the increasingly serious crisis that in different ways now threatens both the advanced world and the Third World. Persistent divisions among the developed states, particularly those based on outmoded ideological concepts, will negate the efforts of individual states to aid the Third World; in the more advanced world they could even contribute to a resurgence of nationalism. Accordingly, an effort must be made to forge a community of developed nations that would embrace the Atlantic states, the more advanced European communist states, and Japan... Movement toward such a community will, in all probability, require two broad overlapping phases. The first of these would involve the forging of community links among the United States, Western Europe and Japan... The second phase would include the extension of these links to the communist countries."

If this were nothing more than a One World plan blueprinted by Brzezinski and financed by the Rockefeller Clubs, and since it seemed to fail with Carter, we might hope that a new administration could mean the end to any such plan. But what Brzezinski wrote was really an updated restatement of a policy that had been pursued by the Supragovernment, through both Democrat and Republican administrations for many years. For example, Dwight Eisenhower was President of the United States in 1953. In that year Rep. Carrol Reese was head of a House Committee investigating the operations of tax-exempt foundations, and Dr. Norman Dodd was research director for the committee. Dodd was invited to visit the New York Office of the Ford Foundation by Roman Gaither, president of the foundation at the time. As Dodd tells the story, Gaither opened the conversation:

"Mr. Dodd, we invited you to come because we thought that, perhaps, off the record, you would be kind enough to tell us why the Congress is interested in the operation of foundations such as ourselves.' Before I could think of how best to reply, he volunteered this: 'Mr. Dodd, we operate here on directives.

...which emanate from the White House. Would you like to know what the substance of their directives is?' My answer was, 'Yes, Mr. Gaither. I would like very much to know.' Whereupon he said: 'The substance of the directives under which we operate is that we shall use our grant-making power to alter life in the United States so that we can be comfortably merged with the Soviet Union.' Needless to say, I nearly fell off the chair....

"I said, 'Mr. Gaither, legally you are entitled to use your grant-making power for this purpose but I do not think you are entitled to withhold this information from the American people to whom you are beholden for your tax exemption. So why do you not tell the American people what you have just told me?' His answer was, 'Mr. Dodd, we would not think of doing that'."

This directive, "so to change the political, economic, and social structure of the United States in order to gain a comfortable merger with the USSR," also was the guiding principle when Henry Kissinger propounded the concept of the Triangular Constellation, which proposed to bring Red China into the equilateral power triangle with the USSR and the USA. The same theme was made a principal policy of the Carter administration by Henry Owen of the Brookings Institute and the Trilateral Commission who became Carter's Special Representative for Economic Summits with the title of Ambassador at Large. Owen wrote in 1973: "The United States should persist in the effort to find and act on interests that it shares with the Soviet Union and (Communist) China. Success will hinge on our ability to keep at it over a long period of time, despite the tendency to vacillate between extremes of hostility and euphoria. Progress in building a working community of developed nations, in which the USSR could eventually play some role, may hasten success in this effort if we do not allow ups and downs in East-West relations to divert attention from this central task."

Such has been the policy of the CFR-controlled White House and State Department for the past four decades. The possibility of its continuance is strengthened by the fact that Trilat-CFR operators still control the next administration, and especially by the fact that Alexander Haig who is about to become the Secretary of State, is a disciple and proselyte of Henry Kissinger. In "Kissinger on the Couch," by Phyllis Schlafly and Chester Ward, page 550, we are informed that "neither Khrushchev, at the pinnacle of his power, nor Brezhnev, after his total consolidation of power, could have gotten away with the appointments accomplished by Kissinger: appointments he carried out without even a ripple of congressional interest or public concern. Neither Khrushchev nor Brezhnev could have promoted an inexperienced Army Colonel (such as Alexander Haig) to the rank of four-star general, and then appointed him Vice Chief of Staff on the Army over the heads of scores of far more experienced and proven general officers (parenthesized phrase is in the original-Ed,)"

The existence of this policy of "seeking a comfortable merger with the USSR" is a matter of record, but few Americans know about it. Nor do they know that we have been weakened economically and militarily so that we will not be able to resist the final compromise of our liberty and sovereignty when it is time to merge us into this new "Community of Nations." Reagan was given a landslide victory because he was expected to alter the course of our Ship of State. And he promised to do just that. Can we force him onto the new course?

PERZONAL

THE SIGN

I looked up and saw the butterfly bumping against the back screen. Gently, I opened the door, reached down and cupped my hands around the great yellow and black monarch.

As I freed him he soared upward, high into the sun, and my memory went back to that Christmas over fifty years ago.

I was twelve that year and my mother and I lived in my Granddaddy's gray Victorian house on Locust Avenue. We were alone in one of the upper bedrooms and it was COLD. Only as a West Virginia winter can be.

It was already dark at four o'clock and as we huddled around the old gas stove, my mother suddenly looked up at me and said, "Chicken Little, the sky is falling."

I ran to the window, just as the rushing flakes began to tick-tock against the glass.

* * * * *

Those of little faith can stop reading right here. For others - the rest of the story.

I had the chilling habit of raising the window from the bottom during a snowfall and placing my face there so that I could open my mouth and let the flakes melt on my tongue. I am a snow baby, born and bred.

My mother shivered in the background and pointed to the gas stove, which was flickering in the draft, so I reluctantly pushed the sash down again.

Standing and pressing my face to the white darkness, I gasped, drawing in my breath sharply. Amid the wildly blowing snow, I had caught a glimpse of color - yellow and black - a somehow different flight. Excitedly I called to my mother - It's a butterfly!"

My mother quickly got up and joined me at the window.

THUD. THUD. THUD. The freezing monarch pled to be let in.

My mother said dazedly, "No butterfly could live in this cold."

"Where has it lived during the cold before this?" I demanded.

Gently then, I raised the window, reached out and cupped my hands around the great yellow and black monarch, now clinging desperately to the sill.

He was trembling as I slowly drew him inside, but no more than we, his captors.

His wings were very ragged and he was exceedingly weak. If only he could have communicated, telling us how this miracle came to be.

* * * * *

My mother fixed our friend a saucer of sugar water and he sucked up a little during the night. He swayed dangerously as he drank and I steadied him as his threadlike feet sought a resting place. I noticed that his wings were nicked along the edges just like the saucer. I placed him back on the dresser scarf and continued my all night vigil.

By sunrise our little guest was feebler than ever and my mother said sternly, "Virginia, you'll have to put him out. You know that we don't have the courage to kill him. We must open the door and let God decide."

Obediently, I picked up the monarch and laid him gently on my palm. I could see that he was nearly gone. My childish tears dropped upon his soft body like snowflakes. He signalled by the fluttering of his tattered wings for the last time.

Then raising the window with one hand and thrusting him out with the other, I let him go back into that cold white world.

My mother and I cried together.

* * * * *

When I was a child, I thought as a child. I thought of this experience as a sad and bitter one.

Later on, when I myself was raised from worm to butterfly, I understood that this miracle was an early sign from God alone - that I was His child and that He would be waiting to receive me and give me wings.

*Merry Christmas

Year Twenty-Seven.....Number Fifty-Two.....December 26, 1980

NORMAL BIRTHPAINS, OR MANAGED MISCARRIAGE?

The statesman said: "It doesn't matter what politicians say, but rather what they do." As proof of the statement, let it be noted that the politicians who are to take over on January 20th couldn't wait. They chose Christmas Eve to leak the story to the media that Henry Kissinger is already acting as a special ambassador for President-elect Ronald Reagan. The author of detente is said to be on his way to Jerusalem to confer with Begin, then on his way to counsel with Sadat. His mission: to replace Sol Linowitz of Panama Canal payaway infamy, and to revive Carter's Camp David Compact. Those who were still hoping that President Reagan would live up to Candidate Reagan's promises must have been greatly disheartened by this latest proof that nothing has changed - at least in foreign policy - and that the same old promoters of Interdependence and World Community are still at the helm of our floundering Ship of State.

There were, of course, previous indications that there would be little change in administrative policy. Despite his conservative talk, he chose George Bush as his running mate. But his apologists said that perhaps an alliance with the powerful Eastern Establishment was necessary. Otherwise Reagan would have been hacked to pieces as was Barry Goldwater in 1964. Without this compromise with evil, said the apologists, Reagan might never have been elected, so the old "lesser of two evils" argument prevailed.

Then, shortly after Reagan's election - and this has been all but blacked out by the media - a special womens' committee was chosen to advise Mr. Reagan on womens' issues. All 25 of them are promoters of abortion and ERA. Then came the announcement of his transition team and it was discovered that of the 59 special advisers 26 were members of the Council on Foreign Relations, 10 were Trilateral Commissioners, 10 were Bilderbergers. Long time advisers, like Jack Kemp, Art Laffer, Jesse Helms and Barry Goldwater began to move to the sidelines and the people who got him elected began to be ignored. When Cabinet nominees began to be presented to the public via TV appearances that resembled police lineups, with Reagan not even there to identify his chosen Cabinet heads, even the media seemed a little surprised. Surprised because it appeared that Reagan wasn't choosing his teammates, but that someone else or some other agency was selecting his Cabinet heads for him! The nominees concerned with defense and foreign policy, economics and finance, were predominantly Rockefeller men: Weinberger, Regan, Schultz, Greenspan, Stein, Burns. Then, with Kissinger back in an advisory position with his protegee Al Haig ready to head the State Department, it would appear that the relentless drive toward One World Government wasn't even going to be slowed down. As added evidence, it suddenly developed that the new Senate Foreign Relations Committee was going to be little better than the old Committee. Conservatives struggled hard to defeat Frank Church, George McGovern, Jacob Javits, and Richard Stone of the former Foreign Relations Committee. But, their places are to be taken on the important Foreign Relations Committee by Larry Pressler of South Dakota with a Conservative Index score of 52, Charles Mathias of Maryland with a score of 11, Nancy Kassebaum of Kansas with a score of 53, and Rudy Boschwitz of Minnesota with a rating of 57.

In the field of recent conservative landslides, there are certain comparisons that are noteworthy. The election of Mr. Clark in Canada was hardly a landslide, but it was an emphatic demand on the part of the people for a turn to the right. The election of Mrs. Thatcher in Great Britain was overwhelming, and these two political events gave cause to hope that the English-speaking Nations were giving up their enthusiasm for utopianism and Interdependence. But, the media quickly got rid of Mr. Clark in Canada, and Mrs. Thatcher veers more and more to the left as time goes by. And here could be a parallel: The "Iron Lady" won her election in a surprising landslide. So did Reagan. Her program called for a return to free enterprise, control of monetary growth, cutting of taxes, and boosting of defense spending. So does Reagan's promised program. She was given a solid parliamentary majority. Reagan received a Senate majority. But after Mrs. Thatcher had been in office eighteen months, according to Donald S. McAlvany of The Gold and Monetary Report:

"...government spending is up by some 26% from a year ago. The money supply is rising rapidly with aggregates expanding at a 20% clip. Mrs. Thatcher is about to go back on her promise to increase defense spending by 3% in real terms and tax increases are now being implemented by her conservative government. Inflation is rising and her political position is eroding... In the area of foreign policy the 'iron lady' selected David Carrington, a European member of David Rockefeller's Trilateral Commission, as her Foreign Minister. Carrington promptly sold out the pro-Western government of Rhodesia to the communists, completing the job which was begun by his predecessor, the Labor Government's Foreign Minister, Dr. David Owen... So today, Mrs. Thatcher is back-peddling... learning the hard way that it is very difficult to dismantle 30 years of socialist mismanagement... Nothing has really changed in England. Ronald Reagan's experience could be very similar." (Quoted from the Gold and Monetary Report, a monthly analysis. $75 per year. P.O. Box 39810, Phoenix, AZ 85069). In summary: Mrs. Thatcher compromised, made a political bargain with David Rockefeller's Trilateral Commission, and as a consequence nothing has really changed in England." Ronald Reagan also made a political bargain with David Rockefeller's Trilateral Commission, will things really change in the United States?

In defense, foreign policy, budget balancing, inflation control, tax cutting, de-regulation of business and commerce, etc., the leading question will be: Will - or can - President Reagan keep the campaign promises made by Candidate Reagan? And there remains another area of government which should be of great concern to Christian and conservative fathers and mothers of America. Because this area of government concerns the children of America. David Denholm, president of The Public Service Council, gave this forewarning:

"One of my worst fears has been realized. Some people who are working to help form the new Reagan administration are beginning to talk about delaying any effort to abolish the Department of Education... As you know, according to a report in Newsweek magazine, an unnamed source in the militant left wing National Education Association union bragged that the NEA was the only union that had its OWN Federal Department... President Reagan should keep faith with the American people and appoint a Secretary of Education who is committed to abolition of the Department at the earliest possible moment. Abolition will provide the federal government with a unique opportunity to examine the propriety of many of its education programs. It would not be surprising if, in the process of abolishing (this department) many costly and meddlesome federal programs should be abolished at the same time."

The NEA is a teacher's union currently with monopolistic control of American public education. In order to understand the future of such education in these

United States, please read carefully the following excerpts from a statement by Catharine Barrett, past president of NEA:

"At this critical moment no one can say with certainty whether we are at the brink of a colossal disaster or whether this is indeed mankind's shining hour. But it is certain that dramatic changes in the way we will raise our children in the year 2000 are indicated, particularly in terms of schooling, and that these changes will require new ways of thinking. Let me propose three.

"First, we will help all of our people understand that school is a concept and not a place. We will not confuse 'schooling' with 'education'. The school will be the community; the community, the school. Students, parents, and teachers will make certain that John Dewey's sound advice about schooling the whole child is not confused with nonsense about the school's providing the child's whole education. We will need to recognize that the so-called 'basic skills', which currently represent nearly the total effort in elementary schools, will be taught in only one quarter of the present school day. The remaining time will be devoted to what is truly fundamental and basic - time for academic inquiry, time for students to develop their own interests, time for a dialogue between students and teachers. When this happens - and it's near - the teacher can rise to his true calling. More than a dispenser of information, the teacher will be a conveyor of values, a philosopher. Students will learn to love letters and lab notes. We will help each child to build his own rocket to the moon.

"Finally, if our children are to be human beings who think clearly, feel deeply and act wisely, we will answer definitely the question 'Who should make what decisions?' Teachers will no longer be victims of change; we will be agents of change."

As an example of how the preceding is put into effect in the classroom, please note the following description of a classroom scene as described by Frances Adeney, a change agent, in an article entitled "Educators Look East":

"Twenty-five first graders lie in motionless silence on the classroom floor. The teacher intones soothing phrases to aid relaxation. Within moments, the meditative journey begins. The children imagine the sun, shining its brightest, radiating intense light toward them. They gaze directly into it and despite its strength the sun's brightness doesn't hurt them. Then, in their mind's eye the children are told to bring the sun down, down from the sky and into their own body. Its light pulses from head, down into chest regions, further and further until their body is ablaze with light. Now picture yourself doing something perfectly, says the teacher. Keep watching yourself being perfect. Fill yourself with the knowledge of being perfect. This is your light, your intelligence, your sun... The teacher tells them to see themselves full of light. Now they contain all of the light of the universe. With that light, the teacher says, they now feel at peace - they are perfect... they contain all of the wisdom of the universe within themselves.

"Imagine this incident taking place in a Los Angeles public school classroom, for that is exactly what is happening, among other places. This guided imagery lesson is one of the techniques used by Dr. Beverly Galyean in her system of confluent education... Her 'expanded view of learning' is linked inextricably to a set of Eastern/occult assumptions. That kind of thinking is based on the following premises: 1) In essence we are not individuals but part of the universal consciousness, God, or spirit which has manifested itself in the material world. 2) Because each person is a part of the universal consciousness which is love, each child contains all the wisdom of the universe... 3) Each person creates his or her own reality by choosing what to perceive and how to perceive it...

Galyean sums up her beliefs by saying, 'Once we begin to see that we are all God, that we have all the attributes of God, then I think the whole purpose of human life is to regain the Godliness within us;..' Those assumptions are religious in nature, instructing children about the nature of God and the solution to the human predicament. Intuition becomes a spiritual tool, a way to tap one's 'higher self,' a way to touch the universal consciousness of which we are all a part, Galyean claims." (Unquote).

Here is situation ethics, Oriental mysticism, and secular Humanism all rolled into one sun-drenched package and offered to elementary classes in the public school system as education! The author of this article asks her readers: "How did such an approach arise and in what way did it come to be offered in public schools which purportedly do not allow religious practices as part of the curriculum?" Her answer is evasive: "The public schools are in distress. Confluent education is one new approach that is getting exposure among teachers across the country. A balance of thinking and feeling and a stress on the whole person may do children who are taught this way some good."

Summary: Under NEA's control and Humanist Hufstedler's management, religion is being taught and practiced in the public schools, but is prohibited if it is Christ-centered or Bible-based religion! IRS cooperates by trying to close or control all Christian schools. And the welfare executive of a major State recently told a Christian pastor in the presence of witnesses that it is the intention of that State to license, in due time, all Sunday Schools as child care facilities, and thus control them! Moreover, in a secret hearing to consider a motion to place the Worldwide Church of God into receivership held on Jan. 2, 1979, attorney Hillel Chodos argued before a court of the State of California: "All of these corporations (tax-exempt churches-Ed.) are organized and existing under California law exclusively for charitable, religious and educational purposes. It is our position that a shorthand way of describing the law applicable to the corporations (churches-Ed) of this type is that their property always and ultimately rests in the court's custody, and that they are always and ultimately subject to the supervision of the court on the application of the Attorney General. In effect, there are no private interests."

We are not discussing the orthodoxy of the church in question. But, as a precedent that can become applicable to all churches, Breshnev couldn't have argued it better. Church property is ultimately State property, and its officers serve at the court's pleasure and "may be replaced with a more trustworthy trustee" at State's pleasure! In May, 1979, the U.S. Supreme Court upheld the State court's decision. As a result, by this precedent, Christian clergymen can be subject to licensing by the State, exactly as in Soviet Russia!

America has renounced her spiritual heritage. Her people follow after strange gods. They turn their children over to Humanists to educate and they offer up their infants in blood sacrifice to Moloch. Her cities have become as Sodom. America's allies don't trust her, her enemies jeer at her and taunt her, and renegade nations demand ransom of her. America is dying and there is little time to save her. But there is hope if we place our faith in God and not in men. God will again bless America when America again blesses God.

Year Twenty-Eight.....Number One.....January 2, 1981

"UNION NOW" FOR THE AMERICAS

A new Year, a new Congress, soon to be a new Administration, new hopes and old fears for the future of our beloved Country; and with these comes a new plan drawn from the minds of our Supra-Government leaders, those same self-chosen elitists who brought on the old fears. It is a plan which calls for the creation of a "Republican Federation" composed of all of the Nations of North, Central and South America. Like the existing Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, and the developing Union of United Socialist States of Europe, ours will become a Union of the Socialist States of the Americas!

Too far fetched and fantastic to believe? Not so, say those self-chosen elitists who met in secret sessions to develop "The 1980s Project" and those who now are meeting as "The Committee of the Year 2000." Furthermore, like Jimmy Carter in the late 70s, Ronald Reagan in the early 80s is to be their front man and their "mark" in gangster jargon.

On Monday, January 5, 1980, even as the 97th Congress of the United States is convening in Washington, D.C., the President-elect of the United States is conferring in Juarez, Mexico with Jose Lopez Portillo, President of Mexico. As cover and camouflage, they are discussing trade problems, fishing rights, oil and gas flow, and the possibility of freer immigration rights, to be similar to those existing between Canada and the United States. But behind all this is a feeling out of the proposition to create a "North American Common Market" (NACOM), which would eventually be expanded to include the developing Central American Common Market (CACOM) and the embryo South American Common Market (SACOM). When Reagan has concluded his first talks with Portillo of Mexico, then he is to confer with Prime Minister Trudeau of Canada. First step, as in Europe, would be the establishment of an economic union, later to become a political union. Thus, the USA would become but a State within the Regional World Government made up of all the States of North, Central, and South America. As Michael Lord Chadwick, Director of the Center for Global Studies, explains the plan:

"The nations of North and South America are ideally suited for implementation of the concept of republican government. It would involve a re-evolution process. The countries of North and South America would evolve from nationhood to statehood in a constitutionally federated republic. This process could occur in three major phases. The first phase would include the linkage of the provinces of Canada, Mexico and the states of the United States. The second phase would include linkage of the U.S., Canada, and Mexico with the nations of Central America. The final phase would include linkage of the above areas with the nations of South America...Because state sovereignty is a vital precept of republicanism, the former nations would enjoy greater status and prestige as their Senators, Governors and Representatives, assumed their pre-eminent positions of honorable service in the new federation." (unquote).

In other words, The Nations of North, Central and South America now would become Federal Regional Districts within a Regional World Government similar to that of the USSR and the European Federation of States! This alteration in plans for the creation of the New World Order apparently is being sponsored and promoted by the Paris-based Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD), the Trilateral Commission (TLC), the Council on Foreign Relations, the Aspen Institute, and similar international elitist cabals. And the change in plans has been adopted, presumably, because of the failure of the original Trilateralist program that was initiated by Henry Kissinger in Nixon's administration, which ended in ignoble resignation; and then developed by Zbigniew Brzezinski in Carter's administration, which culminated with its humiliating rejection by the American people. This after the program had almost wrecked this country's economy, as well as that of the rest of the Industrialized Western World - all of this obviously promoting the power and the influence of the Communist bloc of nations, perhaps deliberately. But to understand this fresh attack on the sovereignty and independence of the USA as well as that of Canada, Mexico and the other Nations of the Americas, a historical background must be presented. We'll try to be brief.

On Sept. 3, 1783 a peace treaty was signed in Paris, marking the end of the revolutionary war and affirming to the world the existence of a new free and independent Nation in North America. For the next 150-odd years, until the breakup of empires began, succeeding generations of Anglophiles and International Bankers kept dreaming and working toward a time when that Republic would become re-united with the British Empire. These London-based power brokers and Lombard Street bankers of the late 19th century also dreamed of a world composed wholly of an English-speaking Commonwealth of Nations that would be governed from London. The first important promoter of this concept was John Ruskin. As Carroll Quigley, author of Tragedy and Hope explained: "Ruskin spoke to the Oxford undergraduates as members of the privileged, ruling classes. He told them that they were the possessors of a magnificent tradition...but that this tradition could not be saved, and did not deserve to be saved, unless it could be extended...to the non-English masses throughout the world...Ruskin's message had a sensational impact. His inaugural message was copied by one undergraduate, Cecil Rhodes, who kept it with him for thirty years...In the middle of the 1890s he had a personal income of at least a million pounds sterling a year (then about five million dollars) which was spent so freely for his mysterious purposes that he was usually overdrawn on his account. These purposes centered on his desire to federate the English-speaking peoples and to bring all the habitable portions of the world under their control." Rhodes founded the Rhodes Scholarships and, with William T. Stead, Lord Rothschild, Alfred Milner and other bankers, politicians, journalists and power brokers, he created a secret society, which later came to be known as the Round Table. It had (and still has) branches in English-speaking and English-dominated countries throughout the world, including the U.S. In the U.S. the principle proponents and financial promoters of this particular form of World Government were the banker J.P. Morgan, and the steel magnate, Andrew Carnegie.

In 1919 the Royal Institute of International Affairs (Chatham House) was established in London and, when the U.S. failed to ratify the treaty which would have made the U.S. a part of the old League of Nations, a similar organization was founded in the U.S., and became known as the Council on Foreign Relations. This American branch of the "English Establishment" began to dominate universities, determine the editorial policies of such newspapers as The New York Times, the late New York Herald Tribune, the Christian Science Monitor, the Washington Post, the late Boston Evening Transcript, etc. Now, the Communications media are almost exclusively controlled by this Eastern Establishment. Also, to advance the aims of the Establishment, the Federal Reserve System was created, the Income Tax Amendment was ratified, and tax-exempt foundations were established.

While this Pan-Britannica idea was being developed yet another powerful One World scheme was gaining ground: a concept called Socialism. Stated simply, the Internationalist Elitists began to understand that the economic control of resources and peoples could be more effective than mere political control. It was decided, therefore, that competitive capitalism, and the free enterprise system should be liquidated and replaced by monopoly capitalism, and a Socialist economic system. Various forms of socialism were developed, all being financed by the international cabal: Communism for the least industrially developed countries such as Russia, China, Eastern Europe, etc.; National Socialism for Germany; Fascism for Italy; Welfare Statism for Scandinavia; Fabian Socialism for Great Britain, Christian Socialism for much of Europe. In the United States, as in much of the Western World, about every variety of Socialism has been tried, then the best form financed and promoted by the Internationalists. In the U.S. there were bomb-throwing Nihilists, sabotaging Syndicalists, enterprise destructing Workers of the World, Trotskyists, Maoists, Moscow-directed Communists. Fascism was introduced by FDR's Brain Trusters through NRA, TVA, RFC, other public corporations that competed with private enterprise. Lately federal financing of private corporations such as Lockheed and Chrysler; and the amalgamation of government, Big Labor and private management into one corporate controlling board of directors, is one current manifestation of Fascism. As early as 1950 Thomas James Norton observed in "Undermining the Constitution, a History of Lawless Government": "As big a thing as the great American Republic could not have been put on the skids without years of steady work. Beginning with 1933, Socialism (control by government of production, distribution and exchange), Fascism (Socialism by corporations), and Communism (confiscation by government of private property through graduated taxes and by abolition of inheritance), all forbidden by the Constitution because in no way authorized, and in many ways condemned by implication, spread with the rapidity of a fire on the prairie. But the seizure by them of the liberty and property of Americans began before 1933."

While many forms of Socialism have existed, and thrived, in the United States the form that conquered was a combination of Fabianism (which embraced and approved of Fascism) and Welfare Statism. As Carroll Quigley pointed out in "Tragedy and Hope": "It must be recognized that the power of these energetic Left-wingers was never their own power or communist power, but was ultimately the power of the international financial coterie." And why this wedding of monopoly capitalism and multi-faced Socialism? Developing the New World Order has been likened to the progress of a bird flying toward its nesting area. There must be a left wing and a right wing, and a central control to see to it that they work together in order to reach the final destination. In the global sense, it has been Western financing (the right wing), and eastern manpower (the left wing) which is being used to Socialize and gain the world.

However, in order to utilize both capitalism and communism, it was necessary to create the popular belief in a gigantic struggle between the two, even to the making of limited and controlled wars against each other; as in Korea, in Viet Nam, in the Middle East - wars in which some form of socialism would always be the winner! In the final analysis, however, there is to be a World Community, then eventually East and West must meet and marry. So, the concept of Regional World Governments was adopted by the Planners; these to be united into a World Government when the time was ripe. At the National level the plan involves dividing a Nation into federally controlled Regions with appointed administrators; this for the purpose of developing and maintaining Socialistic control over property, resources, and all areas of life. At the International level, this Regional concept involves the forming of Regional Governments in which, as Chadwick explained, "countries evolve from nationhood to statehood." The development of Regionalism at the global level can be seen in the progress from economic control to political amalgamation in the Soviet Comecon, the European Common Market, the Southeast Asian Common Market, the ASEAN Bloc that is dominated by Japan, the three-nation Common Market in South America, Etc. Since the Planners believe economic control is more effective than political control, and less likely to cause public rebellion, these Regional Blocs are begun as Common Markets, later are to be converted into Regional Socialist Governments.

From the end of World War II until recently, the U.S. was considered to be a part of an Atlantic Community. But Europe began to think otherwise. A break became evident when our supposed European partners refused to aid us in the Vietnam War. Then came arguments over trade, finance, status of the dollar as an international currency, detente, NATO, etc. The European Community began to discriminate against U.S. goods, especially agriculture, created a separate monetary system aimed at replacing the dollar, denounced Carter's Israeli-Egyptian Treaty and designed a plan of their own to deal with Mideast problems. meanwhile, Carter was making himself more unpopular in Germany, England, Japan, as well as the U.S. Finally, even the CFR-TLC Elitist began to realize that any Regional Government arrangement composed of Europe on the far side of the Atlantic and Japan on the far side of the Pacific would not work. Especially when the U.S. was cultivating European-Japanese-American Trilateralism with one hand, and USSR-PRC-USA Trilateralism with the other hand.

So, with Rockefeller's Trilateralism appearing to fail, two important conferences were called. First was the CFR-sponsored "1980's Project," called to redesign Power Broker's plans for the future. Assembled were Henry Kissinger, Cyrus Vance, Theodore Hesburgh, Paul Volcker, Miriam Camp, Richard Ullman and other CFR-TLC dignitaries. With money supplied by the Ford, Lilly, Mellon and Rockefeller Foundations, they released a 25-volume series of books published by McGraw-Hill and enumerating all the conclusions they had arrived at concerning plans for the 1980s. Later, Harold Brown, Defense Secretary in Carter's Cabinet, addressed a Trilateral Commission conclave in Washington, D.C., pointing out that new leadership and new plans were required "for transition to the world of the year 2000." As a result, Robert O. Anderson of Atlantic Richfield Oil, Aspen Institute, CFR, etc., took the lead in forming a "Committee on the Year 2000," which is designed to provide that new leadership and new plans. Assisting him will be Russell Train, Walter Cronkite, Marian Heiskell of the New York Times, Elliot Richardson, Cyrus Vance and others of CFR. Out of all this apparently comes approval of the plan to create this Regional World Government of the Americas. So, the same old goal of World Government remains intact, but the strategy has been changed to include another Regional World Government. Hence, Reagan visits Portillo of Mexico, then Trudeau of Canada, immigration law are to be changed, the Department of Education decrees multi-lingual teaching in schools to accommodate other cultures and other customs soon to be amalgamated with us into a great Regional Government of the Western Hemisphere! Unless we move to stop it!

THE NEW NATURE OF OUR FOREIGN POLICY

Domestic factors include incredible market fluctuations, oscillating interest rates, discoveries that "things are much worse than we thought they were," confrontations between Federal and State Judges with victimized parents and their children in the middle, warnings that tax cuts will be delayed, hints that neither the Energy nor the Education Departments are to be liquidated, inflation still inflating, cost of living still climbing, unemployment figures still increasing, attitude toward industrial handouts still unanswered, haggling over hostages still dominating front pages. With all these indefinites hanging over our heads as this letter goes to press, who can say just what the Reagan Administration's domestic policies are going to be?

However, with Kissinger already serving as a roving Ambassador, with Haig about to assume command, with Mike Manfield to remain as U.S. Ambassador to Japan, with CFR-faithfuls and retreads from the Nixon and Ford Administrations about to assume appointive positions in State, Defense, Treasury and foreign policy posts, and with former liberal and Democrat Jeane J. Kirkpatrick to become U.S. Ambassador to the U.N., Reagan's foreign policy shapes up as more of the same, but with an accent on Regionalism. A historical parallel may be interesting.

Louis Blanc (1811-82) was a Socialist revolutionary, a contemporary of Karl Marx. It was Blanc who coined the phrase "from each according to his abilities, to each according to his needs." Like Marx who fled from Germany to London, Blanc fled from France to London, where both wrote volumes of communist literature and propaganda. One of Blanc's best known books, "Organisation du Travail," written in 1840, was translated and published in English in 1911 under the title "Organization of Work." This becomes important since Charles Seymour, biographer and compiler of the Intimate Papers of Colonel House, wrote that it was the revolutionary social and political principles of Louis Blanc which Edward Mandell House had incorporated in his controversial political novel, Philip Dru: Administrator. Seymour explained:

"Whatever the literary merits of 'Philip Dru,' it gives us an insight into the main political and social principles that actuated House in his companionship with President Wilson. Through it runs the note of social democracy reminiscent of Louis Blanc and the revolutionaries of 1848."

In line with these Blanc-inspired principles, House engineered tariff laws for which Wilson received credit, managed the introduction of the graduated income tax, aided Paul Warburg, J.P. Morgan and other international bankers in the creation of the Federal Reserve System, was instrumental in developing the League of Nations, and was a founding member of that organization which later came to be known as the Council on Foreign Relations. So powerful was the influence of House in bringing about the principles enunciated in the book Philip Dru that Seymour wrote: "...Dru's plans shortly found actual life in Wilsonian legislation. No wonder that Cabinet members like Mr. (Franklin K.) Lane and Mr. (William Jennings) Bryan commented upon the influence of Dru with the President. 'All that book has said shall be, comes about.' Said Lane. '... the President comes to Philip Dru in the end'." And this marked the start of the actual destruction of Constitutional government in the United States. In the book, Philip Dru wrote a new American Constitution "better fitted than the old for the spirit and conditions of the twentieth century." However, instead of installing a new Constitution, the House-type revolutionaries merely began to subvert, and to provide new interpretations for the original document.

House intended to assist in the creation of a World Government by way of the old League of Nations Covenant and as a prototype he caused the writing of a Pan-American Pact which would have united the Nations of North and South America. On Nov. 30, 1914, House, then in New York City, wrote a letter to President Wilson in which he said: "Dear Governor, as I said to you when you were here, I feel that the wise thing for you to do is to make your foreign policy the feature of your administration during the next two years. The opportunity to weld North and South America together in closer union is at your hand...." Seymour commented: "Given a free hand, Colonel House proceeded with surprising rapidity. On December 29, he saw the three Ambassadors of the A.B.C. powers (Argentina, Brazil and Chile-Ed.) and was much encouraged by their attitude. What he planned was obviously to the advantage of the

AMERICAN LEGION RESOLUTION 773

CONCERNING THE TRILATERAL COMMISSION AND THE COUNCIL ON FOREIGN RELATIONS

WHEREAS international friendship depends on trust, mutual respect and integrity; and

WHEREAS the present Administration has placed the United States in a position where our friends now question our will and our determination; and

WHEREAS the present Administration has strongly promoted the giveaway of our Panama Canal; and

WHEREAS President Carter in strong support of the SALT treaty appointed Paul Warnke to be our chief negotiator of a second SALT treaty which would perpetuate the military superiority of the Soviets; and

WHEREAS the present Administration is dominated by a disproportionate number of elitist members of the Council on Foreign Relations and its offspring, the Trilateral Commission; and

WHEREAS the Council on Foreign Relations and Trilateral Commission have espoused and promulgated domestic and foreign policies which are judged to be inimical to America's best interests; now be it

RESOLVED, by the American Legion in National Convention assembled in Boston, Massachusetts, August 19, 20, 21, 1980, that we demand in the best interests of our country that the Congress of the United States launch a comprehensive investigation into the Trilateral Commission and its parent organization, the Council on Foreign Relations, to determine what influence has been and is being exerted over the foreign and domestic policies of the United States.

(Like the Carter Administration, the Reagan Administration also will be dominated by members of the Council on Foreign Relations and the Trilateral Commission. Therefore, this American Legion Resolution remains pertinent and applicable.)

South American States, in that it would bring them into equal partnership with the United States."

But House was drawn into the bigger game before the Pan-American Pact was negotiated. Seymour wrote: "Even before the war (WWI-Ed.), House realized that the time had come when political events of moment in Europe must inevitably prove of direct importance to the United States. It was this realization that led him to give over the active direction of the Pan-American scheme when his chief interest was caught in the European situation. It led him to visit the Kaiser in June, 1914, and thus to enter upon an adventure that determined the course of his main activities during the following six years." Thus, the Pan-American Pact became the prototype of the League of Nations Covenant, both of which were rejected by the United States Senate. However, possibly as a result of House's several conversations with German authorities, before and during World War I, Vladimir Lenin and his Bolshevik company rode in sealed railway cars from Switzerland through Germany to St. Petersburg, Russia, where they were joined by Leon Trotsky who had been transported from New York City...all this at the expense of, and with the approval of International Bankers who have continued to finance Communism in Russia, and throughout the world.

We have called attention to House's desire to "weld North and South America together" because, nearly 70 years later, that same scheme is resurfacing in the minds of Reagan's foreign policy planners. Though seldom mentioned in the communications media, reference was made in U.S. News & World Report of January 12. Describing Reagan's trip to Mexico to confer with President Lopez ortillo, the article notes: "Aides said that by making the pre-inauguration trip to Mexico, Reagan hoped to lay the groundwork for 'a very productive partnership relationship' between the two countries....As President-elect, he also wanted to press his proposal for formation of a North American economic association with Mexico as well as Canada." Newsweek of the same date and reporting on the same trip, said: "It was Reagan who sought the meeting. There was no official agenda, but the occasion underscored his preoccupation with forming a North American economic community of the United States, Mexico, and Canada." As we reported in our last DBR, the formation of an economic community, or common market, presages the forming of a political community, in this case a "Republican Government of the Western Hemisphere." In other words, a Regional World Government in which the present Nations of North and South America would "evolve from nationhood to statehood in a constitutionally federated republic."

It should be noted that Ronald Reagan has never been averse to the Concept of Regionalism. During the course of his thespian and political careers, he has evolved from a flaming liberal Democrat and labor leader to a so-called right-wing Republican. But that swing from left to right has not altered his affinity toward Regionalism. In 1975, a powerful political group calling themselves the United Republicans of California opposed the candidacy of Ronald Reagan because, among other reasons, during his 1966 gubernatorial race in California he had "selected liberal Rockefeller men to run his campaign, and upon election, his appointments continued in the same pattern," and also because while Governor 'he actively promoted Regional Government, this contrary to his expressed philosophy of local government.'" Documenting this latter charge, the L.A. Times of Nov. 16, 1972 is quoted as stating that Governor Reagan had called for "streamlining local government by merging cities and counties.... saying, 'California shouldn't be saddled with a horse and buggy system of local government'." More importantly, Governor Reagan was a member of the National Advisory Committee on Intergovernmental Relations (ACIR). As such, he appointed a California Council on Intergovernmental Relations, which held hearings on reform (spell that Regionalization) of local government structure in California. He also proposed revision of the California State Constitution, to permit the State's taxing power to be delegated to a non-government agency - this being a step that forms the groundwork for Regional Government. There would, therefore, be no change in policy or attitude on the part of Reagan as he promotes Regionalism at the Global level, since he has already promoted it at the National level (through ACIR) and at the State level (through CCIR).

However, there is considerable question as to Reagan's ability to succeed in forming a Common Market with Mexico and Canada, which would be the first step toward the creation of a Regional world Government in this Hemisphere. Prior to Reagan's recent visit south of the border to confer with the President of Mexico, U.S. News & World Report commented: "Officials here (in Mexico City-Ed.) were pessimistic over his chances of promoting this new arrangement." The reason: U.S. mistreatment of Mexico and other countries of Latin America, especially during the Carter years. Latin governments took it as an affront when a woman - even the wife of the President - was sent as an official envoy to their capitols, instead of an elected or appointed official of the U.S. Government. Jimmy's slip regarding Montezuma's revenge turned many Latin stomachs. And when David Rockefeller - who is said to own or control most of Latin America - visited the heads of state and chiefs of central banks of South America on a recent good will tour, he was booed more than he was cheered.

More importantly, however, has been the attitude of our trilateralist Government toward countries that have needed help in their struggles against International Communism. Carter's "human rights crusade" hurt the anti-communist governments while aiding Communist-armed insurgents. It seemed that whenever an anti-communist and pro-American government was attacked, the U.S. attitude became pro-insurgent and anti-government. Examples: Iran and Nicaragua had stable, pro-American governments. They were supported as such - until they were attacked, and then U.S. aid ceased! Then came the proposal: if these governments would observe human rights and collaborate and cooperate with their Communist-supported attackers, then U.S. aid could be resumed. They refused to collaborate, so they fell, and were destroyed; and it can be said that the U.S. government aided and abetted in their fall. This has been the C.F.R. attitude ever since one of its members said of China: Let her fall, but let it not be known that she was pushed.

This happened with China when Chiang Kai-shek was "pushed" off the Mainland onto Taiwan. It happened when Matthews and The New York Times assisted in Castro's triumph in Cuba. It happened in crucial periods of the Vietnam War. It happened in Angola. It happened in Iran. It happened in Nicaragua. It is happening in El Salvador.

If Reagan can make a complete about-face, restore the Monroe Doctrine as the official policy in our relations with our American neighbors, then he will have the blessings of millions of Americans. But if he uses his "interdependence" scheme to promote the Planners' dream of a Regional World Government, then his landslide victory will be no more a victory than was Nixon's in 1972.

Year Twenty-Eight.....Number Three.....January 16, 1981

THE SAME CROWD CONTROLS OUR COUNTRY

Jimmy Carter in his farewell address as President of the United States, spoke as "a citizen of the world." In referring to those inalienable rights that are endowed by our Creator, he translated them into terms attuned to the tenets of Secular Humanism: "For this generation, life is nuclear survival; liberty is human rights; the pursuit of happiness is a planet whose resources are devoted to the physical and spiritual nourishment of its inhabitants." This "citizen of the world" then warned, incongruously, that "because of the fragmented pressures of special interests, it is very important that the office of the president be a strong one, and that its constitutional authority be preserved." In such a reference to "special interests," one wonders if he might have been warning against those "special interests" that selected him, schooled him, elected him, and used him to promote their special interests for a long and costly four years? If such a warning were intended, then the warning came too late. This was made evident early by the selection and election of George Bush to be the Vice President of the United States. Bush was a member of that "very special interest" known as the Trilateral Commission. He resigned when his membership became a campaign issue. However, to make it plain that he had not renounced his allegiance to the "special interest," he issued a special memo to his Texas constituents regarding the Trilateral Commission. A copy is on file with the Federal Election Commission, and a copy was sent us by a Texan who was the recipient of a copy. It is an interesting document. We quote from it:

* * * * *

The Trilateral Commission is a private group formed to promote better understanding among the peoples of Japan, North America and Western Europe, all staunch allies. Its major activity has been to sponsor conferences in which public policy issues of concern to these three areas of the free world are discussed candidly among the participants. The Trilateral Commission takes no position on any issues and its membership is not secret.

Many outstanding leaders from government, business, academia and labor have been invited to attend these conferences and be a member. Though I am no longer a member, I did attend one overseas conference, in Bonn, Germany. Other outstanding Republicans like Anne Armstrong of Texas, Bill Brock, Chairman of the Republican National Committee, Senator Bill Roth of Kemp-Roth tax bill fame, Congressman Robert A. Taft of Ohio, Governor Jim Thompson of Illinois, and Casper Weinberger, member of Ronald Reagan's inner circle, have also participated.

To spread the rumor, through surreptitious mailings, as supporters of some other candidates are doing, that those who belong to this organization are involved in a "communist or socialist conspiracy" or an effort to bring about "one world government" is absurd....To gossip, as some supporters of some other candidates are doing, that I am a "tool or puppet of David Rockefeller" is utter nonsense....This sort of campaigning by rumor, innuendo and falsehood is a throwback to the worst days of American politics and is spawned by hate and fear. Though some people might be gullible enough to be taken in by such rubbish, I am confident that the overwhelming majority of voters will give this junk literature the attention it so rightly deserves - by filing it in the trash can. (End of George Bush's Special Memo re the Trilateral Commission.)

One respected Republican Congressman who was "gullible enough to be taken by such rubbish" was George Hansen of Idaho. In an interview by John Rees which was published in the January 7th issue of The Review of the News, Rep. Hansen was asked: "Congressman, you are one of the experts in Congress on the Trilateral Commission which supplied the Carter Administration with so many high officials. What is the Trilateral Commission, and how did it manipulate Carter policies?" Rep. Hansen answered:

"The Trilateral Commission could be called the economic arm of the Council on Foreign Relations, and one wit described it as a group of people assembled to make the world safe for big bankers. I am a member of the House Banking Committee and am the senior Republican on the Domestic Monetary Subcommittee which monitors the Federal Reserve System. So I get to learn about things few members of the public, even in the banking profession, ever see. For instance, I have noticed how a certain small group of people contrives foreign policy for the United States that serves their personal benefit, and for which the people of the United States end up paying the bill in terms both of national security and money. (An example) was the Panama Canal Treaties. The founder of the Trilateral Commission was David Rockefeller, chairman of the Chase Manhattan Bank. As it happens, the Rockefeller interests were setting up a sweetheart banking arrangement in Panama when General Omar Torrijos took control there. This was a deal in which the big banks were given the benefits of less-than-normal supervision, a good tax situation and so forth. So a banking community developed in Panama, similar to that in the Bahamas, with 80 or 90 banks there. Now what happened was that General Torrijos was allowed to borrow huge sums of money - much more than he could repay. He had some $2 billion in debts and the interest payments were coming due. So to avoid a default, the big U.S. banks with interests in Panama decided to create a cash flow that would allow Torrijos to reservice or roll his debts."

Rep. Hansen went on to explain how this cash flow would be the tolls from the Canal. By turning over the vast assets of the U.S. Canal and the Canal Zone, the Big Bankers in Panama would continue to receive their payments. So, Sol Linowitz of Time, Pan American World Airways and the Marine Midland Bank, which was one of the banks that had loaned millions to the Panamanian government, was delegated to head a commission which would look into the advisability of giving the Canal to Panama so Panama could pay the interest on its bills to the Big Bankers.

"The Linowitz Commission hired several young radicals," said Rep. Hansen, "and produced two reports that claimed our Canal and the Canal Zone bases were of no importance to the U.S., that Cuba had long ago ceased to promote revolution in the region, that Torrijos wasn't really pro-Castro, and all sorts of other nonsense to justify giving this American property to Panama." Then, the Trilateralists trained Jimmy Carter, got him into office, along with other Trilateralists: the Vice President, chief National Security Adviser, Secretary of State, etc., and this same Sol Linowitz was brought in to be the government's chief negotiator of the Canal giveaway. Rep. Hansen continued:

"The transfer costs to the U.S. taxpayer will be over $4 billion. That is the price American taxpayers are paying for the Carter Administration's decision to bail out the big Trilateralist banks that had loaned just under $2 billion to a bankrupt regime ruled by a Leftist military dictator."

Congressman Hansen pointed out how the Trilateralist bankers also were involved in the overthrow of President Somoza of Nicaragua and of the Shah of Iran. Among other things, when the U.S. Canal was given to Panama so the Trilateralist Bankers be paid, there was much talk of building an alternate and more modern and efficient canal across Nicaragua. That would have interfered with their arrangements with Torrijos. The Communist conquest of Nicaragua effectively ended any such plans. Regarding Iran, Hansen said: "If there is a big story of financial manipulations that has never been told it is that of Iran. Only hints and indications have been made public." This has been made particularly evident during the final attempts to settle the hostage problem before Carter is retired. The public has been kept completely in the dark concerning the details of whatever arrangements are being, or have been made. Financial dealings are involved and it is known that loans by America's Big Banks are being "protected" and that all arrangements are being made with Algeria's Central Bank handling the negotiations. It can be expected that if and when all is consummated and the Hostages have come home, U.S. taxpayers will have been committed to the payment of possibly as much as $24 billion, and the International Bankers' loans will have been "guaranteed."

Another respected Republican who is "gullible enough to be taken in by such rubbish" about the Trilateral Commission which George Bush defends is Sen. Barry Goldwater, the man who "discovered" politician Ronald Reagan. In his book With No Apologies, Goldwater wrote: "I believe that the Council on Foreign Relations and its ancillary elitist groups (one of them being the Trilateral Commission—Ed) are indifferent to communism. They have no ideological anchors. In their pursuit of a new world order, they are prepared to deal without prejudice with a communist state, a socialist state, a democratic state, a monarchy, an oligarchy - it's all the same to them. Their goal is to impose a benign stability on the quarreling family of nations through merger and consolidation. They see the elimination of national boundaries, the suppression of racial and ethnic loyalties, as the most expeditious avenue to world peace. They believe economic competition is the root cause of international tension. . . .The Trilateral Commission even selects and elevates its candidates to positions of political power. . . .It was no accident that Brzezinski and Rockefeller invited Carter to join the commission in 1973. But they weren't ready to bet all their chips on Carter. They made him a founding member of the commission but kept their options open, they also brought in Walter Mondale and Elliot Richardson. . . .after his nomination Carter chose Mondale. . . Brzezinski. . .Cyrus Vance. . ."

With a very slight variation, the same pattern was repeated with the election of Ronald Reagan. Victory was snatched from the Moral Majority and the New Right by the same manipulations that were employed to keep Carter in line and subservient. The power elitists let an outsider win; but they also forced him to name George Bush as his vice president. And they saw to it that Kissinger would be on the foreign policy advisory staff. Furthermore, because Reagan hadn't attended rehearsals at their Brookings Institution, and wasn't as well indoctrinated for their star role in the Big Show, the prompters and stand-ins had to be increased. So, there are more members of the CFR and its auxiliary groups in the Reagan Administration than there were in 1977 in the Carter Administration.

Another respected individual who is "gullible enough to be taken in by such rubbish" as was thrown at George Bush, is Donald McAlvany, editor of Gold and Monetary Report. In his January issue, McAlvany remarks that when Kissinger's attempts to create a "dual presidency" with Reagan and Ford sharing the job of the presidency, an alternate deal was made between Reagan and the power brokers. "Reagan would make Bush the Vice President and give the foreign policy mechanism back to the Eastern Establishment. The results showed up quickly in overt campaign support from Rockefeller, Ford and Kissinger, and the instant rise in popularity of the Bush people in the campaign. In mid-to-late December the fruit of this 'arrangement' became known. Caspar Weinberger, a liberal, a former Nixon Cabinet member, a Rockefeller confidante, a member of the Trilateral Commission, was appointed Secretary of Defense. William Casey, Kissinger confidante of the SEC, member of the CFR, close Rockefeller and Kissinger confidante is to head the CIA. And, just to keep it 'all in the family,' Alexander Haig, protege and former military attache to Henry Kissinger, was named Secretary of State. This writer believes that by far the most important, far reaching and potentially dangerous appointment Reagan has made is that of Alexander Haig...."

Haig's "qualifications": He was born into a mainline Philadelphia family, and attended West Point, graduating 214th in a class of 310 in 1947. In 1962 Cyrus Vance, then Secretary of the Army, spotted Haig, made him his military assistant. When Vance became Deputy Defense secretary in 1964 Haig went with him, then became special assistant to Robert McNamara. In 1966 Haig served in Vietnam, was spotted by Kissinger, became the latter's most trusted aide. For services to Nixon and Kissinger, he was promoted over 250 senior officers to become a four star general. When the Establishment Media moved in to wreck the Nixon Administration, Kissinger moved Haig in as the White House Chief of Staff where he presided over the transition to Ford. Ford rewarded Haig by appointing him NATO commander, on Kissinger's recommendation. He retired from military service, took a temporary position as president of United Technologies Corporation (Norden Systems, Otis Elevator, Sikorsky aircraft, Pratt & Whitney Aircraft, etc.). Then was called to become a member of Reagan's transition team, later to be designated Secretary of State.

"A truly "political" general," McAlviny writes, "Haig was strongly pushed to become secretary of state by Ford, Nixon, Kissinger, Rockefeller, and Lord Carrington, the British Foreign Minister, who incidentally happens to be a member of the Trilateral Commission and 'father' of the current Marxist government in Zimbabwe (Rhodesia). On December 27, Haig was also endorsed by Zbigniew Brzezinski...It is interesting that Haig is being described by the establishment media (Time, Newsweek, The New York Times, Washington Post, etc.) in glowing terms as a 'hawk' who will 'stand up to the Russians', in much the same terms they used to describe Brzezinski four years ago. (He was no hawk)...Haig's first act as secretary of state designate was to fire Reagan's entire (mostly conservative) foreign policy transition team, leaving Haig (along with George Bush - according to the Wall Street Journal) as the chief architect and implementer of U.S. foreign policy."

Sign of the times: After five days of dramatic, emotional and selectively televised hearings (a good show) Alexander Haig was confirmed as Secretary of State by the supposedly conservative Senate Foreign Relations Committee. All questions concerning Watergate were tabled, the final vote was 15 for, and 2 against confirmation. Opposing were two of the most liberal Democrats in the Chamber: Sarbanes of Maryland and Tsongas of Massachusetts. Other confirmations of other Establishment lackeys followed in due course in other Senate Committees. So, the same old crowd still controls the country; and our work has but begun.

A PRESIDENT WHO SAID NO

He didn't say "The United States is confronted." He said, correctly, "These United States are confronted with an economic affliction of great proportions." He said "Government is not the solution. It is the problem." He said "We are a nation that has a government - not the other way around." He reminded his listeners that "The federal government did not create the states, the states created the federal government." And he pledged: "It is my intention to curb the size and influence of the federal establishment and to demand recognition of the distinction between the powers granted to the federal government and those reserved to the states or to the people." As we listened to him on the boob tube, we kept anticipating that he'd use some other slogans that conservatives have made popular, like "Governments have no money, they just spend ours; only people have money." Or "If a government is big enough to give you everything you want, it is also big enough to take everything you have." Or there's the saying that the Supreme Court made into a kind of law of the land: "Federal Aid always results in Federal Control."

Nevertheless, conservatives certainly could find little fault with the inaugural address of the fortieth President of the United States of America. By way of contrast, four years ago Jimmy Carter gave us the impression that he had just been elected president of the world. Ronald Reagan gave the impression that he had become the servant of the people of the United States - not the other way around. If his future actions complement his inaugural words, then there is hope that the political timeclock's pendulum that has swung so far to the left may at last have begun to start a swing to the right. There is an adage about hope springing eternal, but there also is a maxim about eternal vigilance being the price of liberty. Surrounded as he is by an "elite group" (Reagan's words) which chooses to govern us, one wonders if we should take the words of our new President seriously - or even if he takes them seriously.

Some time ago (4/25/80) we had occasion to refer to Grover Cleveland, 22nd and 24th President of the United States. His statements regarding foreign and domestic policy should be considered and copied by any true conservative. He served split terms, was defeated because he opposed that initial move toward a new world order then called Manifest Destiny. In an address to Congress on the State of the Union he said:

"The genius of our institutions, the needs of our people in their home life, and the attention which is demanded for the settlement and development of the resources of our vast territory, dictate the scrupulous avoidance of any departure from that foreign policy commended by the history, the traditions and the prosperity of our republic. It is the policy of independence, favored by our position and defended by our known love of justice and by our power. It is the policy of neutrality, rejecting any share in foreign broils and ambitions upon other continents, and repelling their intrusion here. It is the policy of Monroe and of Washington and Jefferson: Peace, commerce, and honest friendship with all nations; entangling alliances with none....."

In matters of domestic policy, Cleveland also was a strict Constitutionalist. In our previous DBR, we referred to his veto of a bill that would have granted money for a special distribution of seeds to some drought-stricken farmers in Texas. An essay was written recently on this same subject, by Leonard Read of The Foundation for Economic Education, Inc. (FEE). Mr. Read observed that "Grover Cleveland, while serving two terms as President, vetoed, I suspect, more interventionist or anti-freedom bills than any other President before or after his time. He understood the limited role of government and had the courage to stand by his convictions, a rare quality..." Then Mr. Leonard quotes the entire veto message which we quoted only in part in our previous DBR. Here is the complete veto message, which we wish that every elected representative of the people in our land would read, and consider:

* * * * *

I return without my approval House Bill No. 10203, entitled "An act to enable the Commissioner of Agriculture to make a special distribution of seeds in the drought-stricken counties of Texas, and making an appropriation [of $10,000] therefor.

It is represented that a long-continued and extensive drought has existed in certain portions of the State of Texas, resulting in a failure of crops and consequent distress and destitution.

Though there has been some difference in statements concerning the extent of the people's needs in the localities thus affected, there seems to be no doubt that there has existed a condition calling for relief; and I am willing to believe that, notwithstanding the aid already furnished, a donation of seed grain to the farmers located in this region, to enable them to put in new crops would serve to avert a continuance or return of an unfortunate blight.

And yet I feel obliged to withhold my approval of the plan, as proposed by this bill, to indulge a benevolent and charitable sentiment through the appropriation of public funds for that purpose.

I can find no warrant for such an appropriation in the Constitution, and I do not believe that the power and duty of the General Government ought to be extended to the relief of individual suffering which is in no manner properly related to the public service or benefit. A prevalent tendency to disregard the limited mission of this power and duty should, I think, be steadfastly resisted, to the end that the lesson should be constantly enforced that though the people support the Government the Government should not support the people.

The friendliness and charity of our countrymen can always be relied upon to relieve their fellow citizens in misfortune. This has been repeatedly and quite lately demonstrated. Federal aid in such cases encourages the expectation of paternal care on the part of the Government and weakens the sturdiness of our national character, while it prevents the indulgence among our people of that kindly sentiment and conduct which strengthens the bonds of a common brotherhood.

* * * * *

"All of the above as related to a mere pittance - $10,000," writes Mr. Read. "Today, politicians approve hundreds of billions for ever so many 'salvations', and for no more reason than political popularity - a means of staying in office." Then the author shows how this tendency to "feed at the public trough" brought in a new form of slavery - "in the form of subsidies and controls." He quotes the Supreme Court: "It is hardly lack of due process for the government to regulate that which it subsidizes" (Wickard vs. Filburn, 1942). Now we shall quote Leonard Read at length:

* * * * *

"He who pays the fiddler calls the tune." That certainly applies to the relationship between government and the citizens. When government subsidizes - pays - it regulates; it calls the tune which determines the extent of our enslavement...Based on the authority of the Supreme Court...it should be obvious that all who ask for subsidies are inviting regulations that diminish self-benefits. Such persons are asking for slavery - no less!

The same can be said of those who ask government for a monopolistic position in the market - seeking to gain by the coercive elimination of would-be competitors. When successful in such depredations, they gain by denying others the opportunity to gain. Their gain is someone else's loss, a form of subsidy-slavery. Reflect upon the countless subsidies being sought, not merely by the socialists but even by those who call themselves "free enterprisers." Each subsidy, when granted, gives birth to numerous regulations. Almost all of these regulations limit creative action, and they go far to explain our country's rapid decline into the Command Society - enslavement! Along with the enslavement occurs the deadening of private ownership, a fundamental feature of the free society.

The government type of enslavement grows out of at least three hallucinations: (1) I am wise! With few exceptions, those wielding power over others are corrupted. Such authority tends to intoxicate them; they see others as fallible, but never themselves.

(2) I am it! Government controls what it subsidizes. Most of the 16,000,000 elected and appointed government officeholders think of themselves as the state. They come to believe that the dollars they use to subsidize are the government's dollars, and that they are the government.

(3) I am omniscient! This is the little-god syndrome. Be like me, do as I say, obey my edicts, and thou shalt be graced with the good life.

The truth? Not a one of them is any more competent to direct our mortal moments than to direct our spirits in the Hereafter! This is to say that they can no more effectively direct creativity at the earthly level than they can direct Creation. Managing the creative lives of others is beyond any man's competence. But the wiseacres do not know this.

How then, are we to rid ourselves of these enslavements? There is only one answer. To be blessed with citizens - in office and out - who understand the limited role of government as did Grover Cleveland, and who will not deviate from their convictions. (Signed by Leonard E. Read, President of FEE, Irvington-on-Hudson, New York 10533).

In his essay, Mr. Read is referring primarily to the big subsidy-receivers. But there are others. The dictionary defines subsidy as "financial aid directly granted by government to a person or commercial enterprise whose work is deemed beneficial to the public." In this sense a Socialist, or Welfare State government wants everybody to receive a subsidy: "To each according to his needs." So, in addition to the scores of different kinds of welfare programs, all of which are admittedly abused, there are many, many other ways in which the government subsidizes individuals. For example, we have received in the mail what purports to be a "Government Cash Report." This "Special Report #354" tells us that "there are 171 Surprise ways to get money from Washington, D.C." We are informed that "there is a very good chance you have some money coming from the U.S. Government. There is an even better chance you don't know why the government owes you this money or exactly how you will get it." In a broadside accompanying the special report we are given more details. Here are a few quotes:

"Actually the U.S. Government gives away so much money every year it can't even keep track of it all. Much of this money gets lost in the shuffle. Some of this money probably belongs to you. It doesn't matter if you are young or old, male or female, employed or unemployed, black or white, rich or poor, married or single or whatever. To make a long story short, the chances are very good you have tax-free cash coming from Washington that is just waiting for you... Guess who pays all this? The answer, of course, is you. You have paid for it with your taxes all these years. You deserve this money coming back to you so don't be bashful about going after what is rightfully yours... As you know, inflation is now a serious problem... But one thing is sure: the U.S. Government is never going to stop spending money and part of this money belongs to you. Please don't cheat yourself. It is really quite simple to get your share."

Granted that this is a "come-on" to sell a "How to sponge off the government" book. But the statements are literally true. In fact, the Federal Government itself issues a catalogue describing all the subsidies that are available to the people. And it also is true that millions of Americans believe that the government owes them a living. It's all summed up in something Alexander Tyler said about 400 years ago:

"A democracy cannot exist as a permanent form of government. It can exist only until the voters discover that they can vote themselves largess out of the public treasury. From that moment on, the majority always votes for the candidate promising the most benefits from the public treasury - with the result that democracy always collapses over a loose fiscal policy, always to be followed by dictatorship."

There was a time when this was a Republic. This meant, among other things, that only a responsible citizenry voted. In most States only property owners could vote, in some States only Christians could vote. Those on welfare, in prisons, receiving largess from the government in any form, were denied the privilege of the franchise. But when this became a democracy, then everybody of legal age could vote. Men in penitentiaries can run for public office while receiving subsidies! The interim result is mob rule, which brings about the necessity of a dictatorship in order to restore a semblance of law and order.

We were not too far from the mob rule stage prior to November 4. People were being told the police no longer had the manpower to protect them; they'd have to protect themselves and their property. Experts were predicting the coming of terrorist gangs like those in Italy, West Germany, Ireland. Corruption had set in in high places. Justice was departed. Economic collapse threatened. As a reaction to such danger, the responsible citizens of these United States rose up in sufficient numbers to elect what they hoped would be men with the moral character and the intestinal fortitude to reverse the direction in which the Nation was headed. As Leonard Read said, there was only one answer: "To be blessed with citizens - in office and out - who understand the limited role of government as did Grover Cleveland, and who will not deviate from their convictions." If such men will curtail the spending-for-votes spree, eliminate the regulations that strangle free enterprise, restore a gold standard and get rid of the Federal Reserve, then there is real hope for the future of America.

A NEW BEGINNING

The President's Men

Each new President of the United States of America adopts, or has thrust upon him, a slogan which is supposed to reflect the general policies that are to be promoted by his administration. Best remembered are Woodrow Wilson's "New Freedom," Franklin Roosevelt's "New Deal," John Kennedy's "New Frontier," Lyndon Johnson's "Great Society," and now we have Ronald Reagan's "New Beginning." The slogan was sounded in, and became the theme of the inaugural address when he said, "All must share in the productive work of this New Beginning." The slogan was picked up by Newsweek, headlined its reports on the inaugural proceedings and the first days of Reagan's reign - as is proved by the title of this DBR, which was "borrowed" from the newsmagazine. Alan Abelson of Barron's featured the slogan in his front page column, "Up & Down Wall Street." He objected to the semantics and wrote somewhat jokingly:

"New Beginnings? Ah, Ronny, say it isn't so! Say that you are misquoted, that you're really not going to hang that awful name on your Administration. For gosh sakes, if the American people in their infinite wisdom had wanted something new, they'd have chosen Joe Schmoe... .Remember, Ronny, you promised ends (not beginnings) - the end of government on their backs, the end of high taxes, the end of freeloading at their expense, the end of speed limits, the end of social experiments, the end of do-goodism, the end of clear air. Why, you even promised them to make ends meet. So, Let's stow the New Beginnings nonsense....."

Barron's needn't fear, we fear. For, it seems that "A New Beginning," is not being taken very seriously, even by the man who said it. For example, in The President's Men there isn't much evidence of New Beginnings, or even of new faces. Which reminds us that back in B.C. (before Carter), there was a most amazing sequence of events: the landslide victory of Nixon and Agnew, the resignation of Agnew and the appointment of Ford to replace him, the resignation of Nixon and the ascension of Ford to replace him, and then the appointment of Nelson Rockefeller as Vice President. Then came Ronny's defeat in the primary and Ford's defeat in the national, so the selection and election of Jimmy Carter and Walter Mondale could be brought about. In all of these unusual goings-on, the hands of the Rockefellers could clearly be discerned. It became public knowledge with the admission and publication of the fact that all of President Carter's men in the foreign service field were graduates from the Rockefeller founded and funded Trilateral Commission. Ronny mentioned this "Rockefeller Connection" in more than one of his newspaper columns. A correspondent and friend recently sent us a copy of Ronny's newspaper column of February 6, 1977. Ronny wrote:

"Though the presidency eluded him every time he reached for it, Nelson Rockefeller has been near the center of power for a long time. Wielding power seems to be something he just accepts as a natural state of things, much like getting dressed in the morning. . . . Conspiracy theorists are fond of thinking that Rockefeller, his family and its institutions are bent on taking over the world. What's more to the point though, is the fact that a good many influential scholars and administrators owe their patronage to Rockefeller resources. And they are turning out to be as much a part of a Carter "Establishment" as they were of previous administrations, both Republican and Democrat. Two of President Carter's Cabinet members (Blumenthal & Vance) were members of the executive committee and the board of the Rockefeller Foundation. . . . Carter. . . . drew much of his foreign policy advice from Trilateralites and more of them ended up in his cabinet. . . .

"A couple of enterprising University of California professors testified before the Senate committee that considered Nelson Rockefeller's vice presidential nomination that the Rockefeller family was 'actively involved' in seven companies in which they hold large amounts of stock. . . . Nelson, even in retirement, your magic spell is everywhere." (Unquote).

Now we quote extensively from the testimony of those two UC professors that were mentioned in Ronald Reagan's column.

. . . . For example, the first entry in the table reads "General Motors (2)." This means that we have found two cases of a director of General Motors Corp. who also is a director of a company that has a Rockefeller Family representative on its board. . . . Another entry in the table reads "Chrysler (RF&A+1)." This means that Chrysler Corp. is one of the companies that has a Rockefeller Family representative on its board of directors (J.R. Dilworth) and there is also one other interlock between Chrysler's board and the board of directors of another company with a Rockefeller Family representative on its board. (In this case this additional interlock is provided by William R. Hewlitt, who is a director of both Chrysler and Chase Manhattan Bank.

The foregoing appraisal of the interlocking Rockefeller Empire was compiled six years ago, showed combined assets of all the companies listed at that time as being $640,000,000,000. That was before the Panama Canal deal that provided the International Bankers another "sweetheart city," before the Iranian crisis in which Rockefeller was deeply involved, before trade with Red China became commonplace, before the engineered downfall of Somoza of Nicaragua. What the assets of the Rockefeller Empire may be at this date is of course unknown to outsiders. But Reagan knew all about the so-called "Rockefeller Conspiracy", wrote about it, spoke against it, based his entire election campaign on promises to get government out of the control of these special interests and into the hands of the people. Yet, all the time he was speaking out against the Rockefeller Empire, he was making deals with its agents in order to win the election. He proved once again what former CFR member Chester Ward said, that "The council on Foreign Relations does not as a group manipulate the platforms of both political parties or select their respective Presidential candidates, or control U.S. defense, economic and foreign policies. But its members, acting in concert with other individual C.F.R. members have long done exactly that." Reagan seemed to prove this when he selected George Bush as his running mate. Then, while still talking against special interests, he began to name agents of those special interests to his cabinet. Those conservatives who helped him win because of what he promised, began to fade into the background, and men "who owe their patronage to Rockefeller resources" began to emerge. As usual, ever since Stettinius, The President's Men are Rockefeller's Men. Most important of them:

ALEXANDER HAIG. We've written of him previously. Might add that it was he who Kissinger called in to arrange the resignation of Nixon. As Watergate was winding down to a conclusion Nixon's loyalists (Haldeman, Ehrlichman, etc.) went to jail; but those associated with Rockefeller (Kissinger, Haig, etc.) all went unscathed. With Kissinger's alter ego, Haig as Secretary of State, the Council on Foreign Relations will continue to be in control of U.S. foreign policy, as it has been ever since Stettinius occupied the post in 1944.

CASPAR WEINBERGER. This Trilateralist with no military experience whatever, is Secretary of Defense. In 1956 as a California Assemblyman, he won the praise of the Communist press. In 1962 as State Republican chairman, he gave no support to Barry Goldwater's Presidential candidacy. In 1966, when Reagan first ran for public office, Weinberger opposed him. Under Nixon this "erstwhile Rockefeller liberal" who the praise of Ralph Nader as chairman of the Federal Trade Commission. While at HEW he concocted a national health plan later copied in large part by Ted Kennedy. Most important: Frank Carlucci was his assistant at OMB, at HEW and now at DoD. An ultra liberal, he is accused of covering up for Billy Carter's Libyan capers while with the CIA, suppressing information about the imminent invasion of Afghanistan as well as the presence of Soviet troops in Cuba. With Weinberger and Carlucci running the Defense Department, can unilateral disarmament be in the cards?

DONALD REGAN. Here is a top level Establishment Elitist: Council on Foreign Relations, Business Roundtable, Committee for Economic Development. contributed the maximum allowable to Jimmy Carter, nothing to Reagan. Has a consistent record of contributions to the most liberal candidates: Alan Cranston, Gaylord Nelson, Christopher Dodd, etc. When informed of this, Ronald Reagan asked, "Why didn't anyone tell me?" with Regan at Treasury and Volcker (also CFR) at Federal Reserve, we may mourn the death of the dollar.

MALCOLM BALDRIGE. A Business Council Biggie. Was campaign manager for Bush in Connecticut. Represented Rockefeller's industrials as former director of AMF, IBM, Bendix, Uniroyal, etc. Columnist John Rees says Baldrige's chief occupation as Commerce Secretary will "prove to be continuing the credit export of U.S. high technology to the Soviet Union, Red China, and other profligate totalitarians." Baldrige is "another case of the conservatives getting the rhetoric and the Liberals getting the action."

No space this issue to continue the countdown of The President's Men. But of the 59 names of people mentioned by Reagan as possible members of his administration, 27 were CFR members, 10 were Trilateralists, 10 were Bilderbergers. Most of the real conservatives on the list soon were weeded out and ignored. Result: With Haig, Weinberger, Regan, Baldrige, Casey and other Eastern Establishment representatives in key posts, it's certain the Rockefeller Cabal is in complete control of United States defense, economic, financial and foreign policies. As we quoted in a previous DBR, "The more things change, the more they are the same." That the Senate confirmed these appointments is not a hopeful sign. But think how Washington felt at Valley Forge.

THE FEDERAL FISCAL CONSPIRACY

The budget should be balanced, the Treasury should be refilled, public debt should be reduced, the arrogance of officialdom should be tempered and controlled....Marcus Tullius Cicero, 106 B.C.

Before his address to Congress, cameras and microphones to spell out the final details of his cost-cutting, economic life-saving plans, President Reagan seemed to be saying all of the right things. He warned the nation that "we are threatened with an economic calamity of tremendous proportions, and the old business-as-usual treatment can't save us." There had to be a crash program that was going to hurt everybody, but that could save the nation from collapse and cure its monetary, economic, inflationary, unemployment ills. But wherever a slash was suggested, some special interest group raised cries of alarm and insisted that their spending program was essential. When a freeze on federal hiring was decreed, people began suing the government, for keeping them off the people's payroll. The plan to immediately cut income taxes (ten percent per year for three years) was deferred until later "when Congress can decide," thus letting Reagan off the hook. The promise of a balanced budget by 1982 already has been amended to 1983, then to 1984, maybe longer. Reagan's pledge to lift the embargo on sale of grain to the USSR is postponed until after "the options are studied." And finally, to make it seem that "business-as-usual" is still the rule fiscally, Reagan had been in office only 15 days when he signed a bill permitting the government to borrow another $50 billion - which raises the debt we owe to MegaBankers and Multinational Monopolists to nearly one trillion dollars.

A similar business-as-usual approach also could be detected in an otherwise commendable state-of-the-judiciary address by Chief Justice Warren Burger. He was eloquent: "Our search for justice must not be twisted into a search for technical errors" in trial procedures. "Guilt is not irrelevant"... and justice should be the goal of the courts, courts should not be simply arenas for competitive sparring matches between talented attorneys. He bore down heavily against the "exclusionary rule." That's the tool used by lawyers to bar important evidence because it was obtained under questionable circumstances, a technique that makes it extremely difficult for law officers to do their work efficiently, and lets felons go free to continue to murder, mug, rape and rob. In short, Chief Justice Burger's diagnosis of the nation's judicial illness was excellent. But his prescription for the cure was more of the same business-as-usual medicine: more money to build more modern prisons, more money to buy more modern law enforcement tools.

Sorry, we were unable to publish our usual weekly Report on Feb. 6, 1981. Former Chief Justice Harlan Stone said, "Jury service is one of the highest duties of citizenship, for by it the citizen participates in the administration of justice between man and man and between government and the individual." For jury service many are called, but few are chosen for impanelment in a murder trial; a duty that is particularly tiring and time consuming, but important and necessary.

With President Reagan we must borrow more money to stave off monetary and economic collapse. With Justice Burger we must spend more borrowed money to purchase justice, to stave off crime and construct better criminal retreats. Both overlook one basic fact: That the stuff they're talking about as a remedy isn't really money in the true sense. It's just an evidence of debt, a debt that we the people owe to the MegaBankers and Multinational Monopolists. It is a debt on which the interest we must pay is the third highest figure in the annual federal budget.

Hilarire du Berrier quotes Mr. Rees-Mogg, who puts the solution to most of our governmental problems in a nutshell in his book, "The reigning Error - The Crisis of World Inflation." He writes:

Social discipline on a firm spiritual foundation requires stable money values as a base. Stable money is associated with respect for laws in general, for moral and religious laws as well as state-decreed ones." (underscoring added).

In his first press conference as President, Reagan said one thing that really is very important. In discussing control of inflation and lowering of interest rates, he said he hoped he could rely on the Federal Reserve, that it was an "independent agency," and he implied that he had no official control over its

of the First Baptist Church in Atlanta, Georgia.*

ABOUT PRAYING FOR THE PRESIDENT

"I exhort therefore, that, first of all, supplications, prayers, intercessions, and giving of thanks be made for all men; for kings, and for all that are in authority; that we may lead a quiet and peaceful life in all godliness and honesty. For this is good and acceptable in the sight of God our Saviour." I Tim, 2:1-3

If you will accept personal responsibility as a Christian citizen of this Nation to intercede for the President of the United States, ask God to enable him to:

1. REALIZE his personal sinfulness and his daily need for the cleansing power of Jesus Christ.
 2. RECOGNIZE his personal inadequacy for the task and therefore depend upon Almighty God for wisdom, knowledge, understanding, and courage to carry out his task.
 3. REJECT all counsel that violates spiritual principles and then trust God to prove him right.
 4. RESIST the pressures of those who would have him violate his conscience.
 5. REVERSE the trends of Socialism and Humanism in our land, both of which dethrone God and deify man.
 6. READY to forsake his political career and his personal ambitions, if to do so would be in the best interest of the Nation.
 7. RELY upon prayer and the Word of God as the source of his strength and the key to his success.
 8. RESTORE dignity, honor, trustworthiness, and righteousness to the office of the Presidency.
 9. REMEMBER to be a good example in his conduct to the fathers and sons of the land.
 10. REMINDED daily that he will be accountable to Almighty God for his attitudes, actions and motives while serving as President.

policies and actions. This is a fact that few federal administrators have ever admitted. The Federal Reserve is a private and independent corporation that is owned by the Megabankers and controlled by the megabankers. Although the President of the United States is permitted to name its chairman, with the advise and consent of the Senate (this makes the people think it is a government agency), the only other actual power the federal government has over it is the ability of the United States Congress to liquidate it; which would be very difficult and costly, but very necessary if we are ever to have a stable dollar. Indeed, it can be said that there can be no stable money values so long as the Federal Reserve System exists as a bankers' trust. As R.J. Rushdoony has written in "The Nature of the American System" under the chapter heading of "The Conspiracy View of History":

"Industry, transportation, news and other centers of power rest today on the foundation of finance capitalism and are accordingly predominantly subservient to the financial powers...Through central banking nations and people are delivered into bondage through international finance. The Federal Reserve System was created ostensibly to remedy this financial situation...(But) with the Federal Reserve Act (1913), the very evils criticized were enthroned, so that it could be said, 'Banking, as it is conducted today, is actually a conspiracy against society'." The reference, of course, is not to your local bank, but to the Central Banking System, known in the United States as the Federal Reserve System. Let us review the manner in which the system works:

President Reagan said the U.S. federal government needed to borrow another fifty billion dollars to pay its debts. Congress agreed and passed an Act which the President signed. So, now the federal government prints and turns over interest-bearing bonds for that amount to the Federal Reserve. The Fed then creates (out of nothing) $50 billion, simply by asking the U.S. Bureau of Engraving to print up $50 billion in paper money. This newly created money is turned over to the U.S. Treasury, which uses it to pay the federal government's bills, a vast part of which will be the interest on those interest bearing bonds held by the Fed. With this procedure, fifty billion dollars in paper (fiat) money will have been created out of nothing. Also, a debt of fifty billion dollars will have been created out of nothing, but the interest on that debt will really be something. Now, this fifty billion dollars plus interest is not wealth. It is debt! And it's not a debt "we owe to ourselves." It's a debt that we owe to the money-lenders who are in and behind the Federal Reserve Corporation. "Thus," says Rushdoony, "although politicians may promise a balanced budget, they are likely to gain more power by increasing the debt; for in a debt-free country, the citizenry is strong and the civil government is limited. In a debt-ridden country, taxes increase, liberties decrease and the civil government, increasingly less responsive to the will of the citizenry, increases its power over the people even as it enlarges the power of the invisible government over all. All in all, it is clear that debt is the road to total slavery, and the Christian, both as a person and in his organized society, must recognize the truth of Scripture when it orders, 'Owe no man anything, but to love one another.' (Romans 13:8)"

If the preceding be true, then the Moral Majority and the Conservative Coalition should add to their hit list the Federal Reserve System; for it represents a rejection of Christianity in that it enslaves us when we are commanded to be free!

One other element in this battle to be free: "Social discipline on a firm spiritual foundation requires stable money values as a base." There can be no such thing as stable money values when there is nothing more than debt and people's confidence to back up a currency. That's why there is a demand and necessity for a return to a gold standard, which history shows to be the only way stable money values have ever been maintained for any length of time. Senator Helms has introduced a bill to provide for the reinstatement of the dollar "as a gold reserve currency, to stabilize the valuation of the dollar." Congressman Ron Paul has introduced the "Monetary Freedom Act" in the House. Since he has been named Ranking Member of the General Oversight Subcommittee, chances for the passage of Rep. Paul's bill are greatly improved. This Subcommittee is the investigative arm of the House Banking Committee, and it will "go over thoroughly the Iranian agreements, the fiscal soundness of big U.S. banks and the feasibility of instituting a gold standard."

"A gold standard," says Congressman Paul, "puts the power of the monetary system into the hands of the people and takes it away from the politicians and bankers, thus removing a potential vehicle for establishing a tyranny. Gold cannot be mined as cheaply as Federal Reserve notes can be printed. Nor can its supply be manipulated on a daily basis... This allows the people to check any monetary excesses of their governors and does not allow the governors to exploit the people by debasing the money."

"A letter from the Federal Reserve System to Chairman Proxmire (of the Senate Banking Committee) closed with a call for more faith in the System and its good intentions. For over 60 years the American people have been exercising such faith and they have suffered the worst depression and the worst inflation in their history. Let us hear no more of faith in men, but bind government with the chains of an honest monetary system - the full gold standard. In the Coinage Act of 1792 the Founding Fathers provided the death penalty for any government employee who debased the money. One wonders that if such a penalty were enforced today how many members of the Federal Open Market Committee would survive the month."

"In his 'Tract on Monetary Reform', published in 1923, the father of the age of inflation, John Maynard Keynes, wrote: 'The individualistic capitalism of today...presumes a stable measuring rod of value. It cannot be efficient - perhaps cannot survive - without one.' Lord Keynes was correct. Unless we have a stable measuring rod of value, we will evolve into the sort of fascism that resulted from the great German inflation following World War I. The choice before us is simple: Shall we have gold and political freedom or shall we have paper and political tyranny?" (Unquote).

In his February "Gold and Monetary Report," Donald McAlvany gives a grim warning: "President Reagan faces a gathering storm of rapidly deteriorating economic, financial, and budget forces that could easily create conditions for an economic 'powder keg' during his first 24 months in office, making him the Herbert Hoover of the 1980's and setting the stage for a liberal Democratic backlash in 1982 or 1984... Faced with monumental... challenges which appear to be coming to a head early in his administration after years of governmental interference and mismanagement of the economy, Reagan has about a 12 month honeymoon period to begin to bring about fundamental changes..." To create stable money values or to play the part of a 1980s Hoover, that is the question. His attitude toward gold and the Federal Reserve should give us the answer.

REGIONALISM: A CRIME OF OMISSION

President Reagan's "New Beginning" has had a slow and faulty start. The true conservatives have been bypassed in favor of used Ford and Nixon retreads. Promised programs that put Reagan in the White House have been bypassed or watered down. The very pro-Reagan Human Events comments: "The spending cuts, while by no means meager, are not quite so big when one considers them in relation to the overall budget. For fiscal 1981, it's still some $45 billion more than President Carter originally predicted the '81 budget would be... In the fiscal 1982 budget, the Administration is signalling cuts of up to $45 billion. But even assuming these slashes are implemented, the fiscal '82 budget will end up in the neighborhood of $400 billion - about $100 billion more than the original projections for the previous year's spending... More disturbing, however, was the Administration move to announce that there were seven programs that would not even be touched, including Social Security's basic retirement fund, veteran's benefits, Medicare, and the free lunch program. These Seven Sacred Cows, whose total cost is about $210 billion, are to be funded at the same level as proposed by former President Carter..." Total Welfare benefits are to be approximately one-third of a trillion dollars. Just as distressing to wage earners is the fact that the Kemp-Roth tax reduction program has been mangled, and those promised income tax reductions may - just may - become effective in July, not retroactive to January. All in all, we seem to have a case of liars figuring and figures lying. A very poor start toward the redundant "New Beginning," as conservatives view it; and yet a real shocker to those feeding at the public trough, and to those promoting special interests such as Big Labor Bosses. However, as OMB Director David Stockman said: "The President proposes, Congress disposes." And there is great doubt that even Reagan's watered-down economic package will be approved by Congress. Main reason: The Constitution contains at least one provision that's remained inviolate for over two centuries: "All bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives;..." With Tip O'Neill in charge of a Democrat dominated House, tax cuts are problematical. Another provision in the Constitution that is still honored except where Executive Orders, Administrative Law and unconstitutional Judicial Law are concerned, reads: "He (the President) shall, from time to time, give to the Congress information of the state of the Union, and recommend to their consideration such measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient." The catch: Reagan needs Congressional approval for almost all of his proposals, and the House "liberals" are intend on punishing Reagan because he dares to make any changes in their program to complete the socialization of the United States, so it can be merged with Russia and the other socialist countries of the world. Conclusion: Though Reagan was eloquent, convincing, spoke with authority and was cheered many times as he presented his "New Economic Beginnings" to Congress and the world electronically, what he proposed means nothing unless Congress approves. So we can only wait and see.

On the subject of relief from regulations, however, the President has greater power, since he is the author of most important and often onerous Executive Orders, and is the chief administrator of bureaucratic regulations. He plans to work closely with his Cabinet Secretaries and will create six special cabinet councils to help de-regulate and shape new administrative policies. In addition to the already established National Security Council, there are to be a Council on Economic Affairs, a Council on Natural Resources and Environment, a Council on Commerce and Trade, one on Food and Agriculture, and finally, a Council on Human Resources. But in all of this organization and reorganization of Cabinet functions, there is one glaring omission. There is no mention of the Ten Federal Regions and how the Cabinet Councils will fit into and complement the Regional Governance setup which has already become the fourth branch of our Federal Government. Regional Governance is unconstitutional, but it has been established, strengthened, supported and utilized by three Presidents of the United States, by Nixon, Ford and Carter, and Ronald Reagan also is a Regionalist, as we shall show later in this Report. This is a system of governance which intends to do away with the 50 existing States and to replace them with 10 "Newstates," thus preparing our Nation to take its place as a part of a Regional World Government composed of Canada, Mexico, and the United States, and eventually all of Latin America. This is a plan that Regionalist Reagan has himself proposed. Before his inauguration as President of the United States, he went to Mexico to confer with that Nation's President. In March he is to go to Canada to confer with Trudeau. In short, instead of curtailing or eliminating Regionalism in the United States, he plans to expand the Regional concept to include all of the Americas, thus preparing the Western Hemisphere for "merging" with the rest of the world in a Socialist, New World Order!

There is much confusion concerning the term "Regional Government." mostly because there are so many different kinds and variations of "Regions." Let's explore them all, as much as is possible in one short Report. In regard to the smaller, more localized Regions, Don W. Mantooth has given an excellent description in the Jan. 15, 1981 issue of his Mantooth Report. (1851 West Morris St., Indianapolis, IN. 46221. 24 issues per year, $6.) The following is adapted from Mantooth's description.

In the Regionalist's vernacular, a Region is any area that stretches across two or more political districts. If the area it encompasses should cross city, county, state or national boundary lines, then it is a Region. Thus, a Region could be a very small area, it could be a metropolitan area (Metro), composed of several communities within a County (or Parish if in Louisiana). It could be an area composed of parts of several counties, or several States, or several Nations, as with the developing Regional World Government in Europe.

Disregarding for the moment the Federal and World concepts of Regionalism, let's take a simple localized example. Suppose a city, possibly because of the desegregation backlash, has developed a large suburban area outside the city limits. An extension of sewer service becomes necessary. This means that the sewer service will cross the city limits and extend into the county. thus, the sewers will be operating in two different political domains: city and county. In today's parlance this sewer project has become a "Region," because the city can't govern the whole thing, nor can the county; their respective jurisdictions stop at the city limits. So the Regionalists have a ready answer: a new entity must be created to govern this sewer service. The city passes a resolution, the county passes an identical resolution, and this action creates a Board, an Authority, a Council, or a Commission to govern this particular situation. So, here is a Regional Government, operating where no such governing authority ever operated before, and operated by people who have been appointed - not elected - to their jobs.

There are three things to be noted: First, important governmental powers that were traditionally delegated to elected officials have been redelegated to unelected people. Secondly, once established, such a Regional Authority is generally uncontrollable by any elected authority. Thirdly, such Authorities, like the traditional Topsy, just grow and grow, assuming more and more powers over people and land. And there are such Regions on top of such Regions in a vast variety of types: regional transportation authorities, airport authorities, water districts, zoning districts, and so on; a multiplicity of regions, over which no regularly elected governmental authority seems to have any control. Now, going from a local to an interstate example, Mr. Mantooth uses this illustration, and we quote:

"Suppose you have a big river flowing as a boundary between two states, such as the Ohio River between Indiana and Kentucky, and you want to build a bridge over it. Who builds it? Who raises the money? Who maintains it? The Regionalists have the answer; declare it a "Region" and create a "Commission" to handle it. The Commission will be made up of a few Indiana citizens and a like number of Kentuckians. What they agree upon becomes law." Regionalists use all kinds of excuses to establish such regional governments: river basin commissions, multi-county park authorities, conservation districts, coastal zone management commissions, many, many others. We repeat: the important point is that these regions are governed by unelected people, no elected representatives seem to have any control over them, and what they decide becomes the law of that region. This has become an entirely new form of government in the United States. According to our National and State Constitutions, the citizens are supposed to have control over their government, at all levels, through the representatives they elect. All political power is said to be inherent in the people. But Regional Governance removes that power from the people, it becomes a power unto itself, writes its own administrative law, serves as executive, legislative and judicial authority all in one.

This new form of governance was dangerous at the local, State and interstate levels. But it became a veritable monster when it "went National." President Nixon, by Executive Order, divided the fifty States and adjacent territories of the Nation, into Ten Federal Regions, each with its own Regional Capitol. Each of these Regions is ruled by a "Council" which is made up of appointed bureaucrats from the federal departments and agencies which handle domestic affairs: officers of HUD, OEO, EPA, Labor, Transportation, Interior, Agriculture, Health and Human Services, Education, the overseeing OMB, and the all powerful Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA).

This Regional Governance setup was compounded by State Governors, or Legislatures, who divided their States into multi-county regions (usually called planning districts), with an appointed council governing each, and looking to their particular Regional Capitol for direction and federal funds. State governments are bypassed and federal money flows to cities and towns...a practice that is destroying the States (as is intended by the Regionalists). Again, we quote directly from The Mantooth Report, which was written especially for the citizens of Indiana, but is applicable to all States:

* * * * *

The other aspect of this system is that the federal agencies rule your State, using their agents who are everywhere. One of the glaring examples is how they dominate and control your medical and health delivery services. Every phase of it. Nothing is done without their review. All records are open to them and they dictate what State laws will be passed (or they threaten cutoff of federal funding).

This is "Regional Government"! You must understand what it is and the seriousness of it...and you must know who is promoting it and building it bigger. Your State and local officials may tell you they have no choice, especially if your area is to get federal aid. The primary purpose of this Report is to warn its readers of the crisis that exists because of regionalism. No solution will be found unless people understand the problem - and the facts concerning this particular problem are kept hidden as much as possible by your politicians, your planners, and most of the news media... The decision has been made by a vast network of powerful interests, that your republican system of government should be ended, that is, stolen from you and that a 'benevolent' dictatorship should be imposed upon you. No decisions will be required of you. But don't worry, they will have all kinds of planners who, being experts and professionals, will plan everything for you and attend to all your needs... None of this is speculation. It is a swift, on-going reality; which leaves only two positions available for all citizens: to be for it, or against it. (Unquote).

Unfortunately, by his record, we must concede that President Reagan is for Regional Government. A dear friend who resides in California has taken the trouble to compile excerpts from various speeches, reports, magazine articles, etc., in regard to Reagan's plans for Regionalizing California while he served as Governor. Here are a few quotes from that compilation:

Governor Reagan signed Executive Order on 11/31/69 creating the Office of Intergovernmental Management. a letter from the Council on Intergovernmental Relations, 12/1/69, states: "Regional organizations are a necessity to cope with today's complex intergovernmental needs... CIR is charged by the Governor and the Legislature with the responsibility of establishing Regional Planning Districts... Increasing emphasis on regional activity by the federal government requires that the districts established be stable and useful." From 12th Annual Report (1970) of Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations (ACIR): "Governor Ronald Reagan, California, replacing Governor Nelson Rockefeller, New York, as a member of ACIR." From statement by Governor Reagan, published 8/8/72: "Are we willing to look at traditional boundaries and county lines to see if they meet the present day needs of California? I have a dream. That perhaps California can set a standard of government reform... If there is a need to join city and county and merge services together to get the job done better and more economically, it can be done if the people decide they want it done." Report from California Journal, 1/1975: "The report of the Reagan administration task force was still-born. The action of the League of California Cities is practically forgotten, The Legislature's efforts have failed to produce a Bay Area Regional Government... The Modernization Commission report of the County Supervisor's Association endorses, in effect, the status quo."

In short, the citizens of California rejected Reagan's plans for Regionalizing the State. Citizens of Canada, Mexico and the United States should reject his plans for Hemispheric Regionalism. And the citizens of the 50 States, acting through their State Legislatures, can also outlaw Regionalism at the federal level, simply by passing a law to void it in the State. If information on how to do this is required, and if you haven't already done so, write to Committee to Restore the Constitution, Inc., P.O.Box 986, Fort Collins, Colorado 80522. And tell Col. Arch Roberts we sent you.

PERZONAL

"WHAT'S UP DOC?"

Early 19th-century surgeons would create pain in one part of the body to divert attention from the pain caused by operating on another part. If a surgeon was removing a bullet from your arm, for example, "He might hit the other arm with a hammer," said Dr. Wasco.

I never go to a doctor to find out what I have but what I don't have. After four months of Gravel Gertie, I took one hundred dollars in cash money and went for a chest x-ray. I merely wanted the doctor to tell me that I didn't have cancer.

As Couz and I sat patiently decorating the waiting room, a small window snapped smartly open on my right and a grim face appeared, thrust me a paper and said, "Fill this out."

I did so. (Almost.) I handed it back through the opening.

Snap shut.

Jump.

Snap open again.

Grim face says fiercely, "Medicaid?"

"No."

"Medicare?"

"No."

"You are 65?"

"Am I?", I ask sweetly.

"You've got 65 filled out here."

"Please," I beg, "the windows are open!"

Snap shut.

Jump.

Fortunately, I don't want to know what's not wrong with me very often.

Snap open once more. Same face only louder. It's Nurse Slam again.

"What's your social security number?"

"I don't have a social security number."

(Horrified), "WHAT, NO NUMBER?" (Scathingly) "Everyone has a NUMBER!"

"Well, I don't." (Cheering up) "But I could give you my zip code!"

Thunder and lightning.

Slam.

Jump.

* * * * *

Across the room, hidden by a newspaper, a young man's voice comes loud and clear, "LADY, I WISH THERE WERE MORE PEOPLE LIKE YOU IN THIS WORLD!"

Couz and I grin. God always has a back-up.

I am called then and go to an examination room.

Nurse Slam appears with a paper dress in one hand. "Take off your clothes," she directs, without any prelims, "and put this on."

As she holds it out to me, I laugh. (Unforgivable sin.) I hold it up against me.

I throw my own clothes delightedly into a corner and croak, "I feel just like Dotty Dimples in my paperdoll dress! Nurse, do you mind pressing down my shoulder tabs?"

She gives me a disgusted look and goes to phone her psychiatrist.

All alone again, I try to sit down but the paper dress is so stiff it crackles loudly and I jump up, thinking there is something else wrong with me.

(Much) later the doctor spends a routine ten minutes with me, loses all interest when I inform him that I don't take drugs.

My lung x-ray was normal, he said. Whew!

So I came home and prayed and asked God what was wrong with me and He told me and I got some special vitamins for croaking, and now only occasionally do I sound like Talullah Bankhead.

And God didn't charge me anything, or ask me for a number.

* * * * *

Thus I added Dr. Routine and Nurse Slam to my list of collectibles.

I thought back to my frantic call last January to the local clinic, where I had gone for years.

"I need a doctor," I gasped into the phone."

"Do you have a temperature?" Nurse Starch questioned severely.

Ashamed, I said, "No."

"Well, then, we couldn't possibly see you."

I then advised her that her attitude might raise both my temperature and blood pressure, and slammed down the receiver.

I recalled dreamily Dr. Vague, whom our daughter found for me and who offered to take me in with his Saturday noon mail.

I went to him three times and the last time I wagged my finger at him and said, "Dr. Vague, I don't think you like me."

"Why not?"

"Because I've been here three times and you still can't find me!"

Twice before he got down on the floor and looked for my file under the cabinet and once he found it there.

I was tired of being called, "Mrs. Who?"

If Dr. Vague had a nurse, I never saw her. It was dull but cozy.

One trait, though, endeared me to Dr. Vague. His love for my blood pressure was irresistible.

We would sit staring idly at each other, and then he would suddenly whip out the old bulb and tube.

Wrapping my arm and squeezing away, he would nod with satisfaction, murmuring, "Wonnerful, Wonnerful!" Just like Lawrence Welk.

One nurse I'll never forget was Nurse Tryharder. I really loved her for she was so upset when she punctured me. She used me for a human dart board and afterward would kindly try to mop up the blood and massage the lumps out before I sued.

She was sympathetic, but not talented. Several times I asked Nurse Tryharder who won, but she had no sense of humor.

It's a good thing I did.

CLOSE ENCOUNTER IN EL SALVADOR

The question on a multitude of minds: Will a confrontation in El Salvador lead to another Vietnam-type embroilment? Before we try to answer, let's analyze:

Marshall Dmitri F. Ustinov, Soviet Defense Minister, is spoken of as the man most likely to succeed Leonid I. Brezhnev if and when the latter is forced to relinquish his leadership of the Soviet Government and the Communist Party. Perhaps coincidentally, two days before Brezhnev was to open the Communist Party's 26th Congress, Ustinov issued a statement which was published in the party's paper, Pravda. He accused the United States of "conducting an offensive against detente and trying to reopen the cold war." But Brezhnev was far more moderate and condescending. In his address to the Communist Congress Brezhnev spoke of the possibility of a summit talk with President Reagan, and Soviet embassy official Valentin Kamenov followed this up in an interview with CBS, saying, "We are ready to negotiate any proposal, any agreement on the limitation of strategic arms, and to keep what was achieved, and to negotiate or renegotiate - any word that you may use - on the principle of mutual security and equality." The overture hasn't been taken too seriously in Washington, but the offer does indicate the Soviet desire for a "new beginning" in U.S.-U.S.S.R. relations. Which, in itself, is dangerous; because agreements with the Soviet are just scraps of paper to be torn up whenever they interfere with Communist plans. If our information is reliable, it is this same Ustinov, Defense Minister, who is really running things in the Kremlin, this due to failing health on the part of Brezhnev. It was Ustinov who ordered the invasion of Afghanistan, something that has caused the Kremlin great distress, to say nothing of loss of life among the Soviet's best troops, and loss of face among nations; especially among Muslim nations. Also plaguing the Defense Minister is the tense situation in Poland. To further complicate things within the "Empire," there are rumors that workers in Hungary have learned of the success of the Poles, and are about to try the same formula in Hungary.

However, to our shame as Americans, there is one place where communist expansionism, Catholic and Protestant "Social Action" have gone hand in hand in the enslavement of peoples. That place is Central America, and to a large extent, South America as well. Like proverbial dominos, country after country has gone down to defeat at the hands of Communist armed and communist led guerrillas and terrorists. We say "to our shame as Americans" since our own State Department has assisted in these takeovers, as have so-called Christian organizations. Examples: Robert White, former U.S. ambassador to El Salvador, openly aided and abetted the leftist guerrillas. And those three nuns who were killed in El Salvador were Maryknoll sisters who were working closely with Clergy and Laity Concerned, a leftwing organization that was formerly called Clergy and Laymen Concerned About Vietnam. According to Ray Heaps of the American Independent Party, the August 1981 issue of Maryknoll Magazine was devoted entirely to Cuba, so favorably that Cuban priests in exile launched a stinging protest.

With the inauguration of Ronald Reagan, came a complete reversal of our attitude toward Latin America. It began with recognition of Chile, which had been persecuted by the Carter administration because the Chilean military dared to destroy Allende and his communist regime. Then came the recall of Ambassador Robert White, to be followed by the declaration that Communist expansion in Central America would stop in El Salvador. However, before making what should have been a strictly American declaration, our State Department sent Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger's yellow shadow, Frank Carlucci, to Europe to gain approval of the U.S. plan to do something about the red menace in El Salvador. The German Information Center in New York City informs us: "On Monday (Feb. 16) American officials arrived in Bonn to present the Reagan administration's position on the civil war in El Salvador...The government in Bonn, while not openly critical of the present regime (which is supported by the Reagan administration-Ed.), has recalled its ambassador to El Salvador and halted development aid." The French government also refused to approve and said a political, not a military settlement should be sought. The same polite refusal to cooperate came from other NATO Nations, save for Prime Minister Thatcher of Great Britain who was a polite visitor in Washington. An offer to negotiate, and thus avoid military involvement, did come from Bonn, while the European Community Parliament sent a team "to investigate violations of human rights" in El Salvador.

This refusal of other Western Nations to approve of the proposed U.S. action in El Salvador might be traced to the fact that the present government which we are about to support militarily in El Salvador is itself a leftist government and hardly deserves our support. We approve of the way Review of the News (2/25/81) answered a question concerning El Salvador: "...the junta now ruling the country took power from the legally elected Government with the approval of Mr. Carter. It is accordingly of a leftist hue - though apparently not leftist enough for the Red terrorists who are waging guerrilla warfare. According to David Garet, a member of President Carter's Mission on Agricultural Development in Central America and the Caribbean, the following junta instigated reforms had the backing of the Carter White House:

" ' El Salvador's agrarian reform consisted of confiscating all lands over 100 hectares owned by any one person. The junta also nationalized banking to make credit available to finance the state and/or collective farms made from this confiscated land...and set up a state monopoly to control exports of all traditional agricultural crops. This has destroyed the private sector of the economy...There is no democratic political system...and there is no chance for economic progress. What we are supporting is a Marxist revolution.' Happily however, the Reagan Administration has recalled U.S. Ambassador Robert White, who helped impose the Carter 'reforms' of the junta." (unquote).

What it amounts to is this: We are being called upon to aid militarily, perhaps with U.S. manpower, a socialist government imposed by the Carter Administration in order to halt the actions of a communist force backed by Moscow and Havana. Two wrongs have never made a right. But, on the other hand, it has become essential to our own freedom and safety that we halt the Red terrorism and the communist takeover of the Americas. It is not a matter of simply saving El Salvador. It has become a matter of saving all the Americas; Central, South, and North America. That El Salvador was chosen as the place where this foreign invasion should be challenged, is unfortunate. The challenge that was made before the Bay of Pigs fiasco should have been fully supported then. The challenge most definitely should have been declared and backed up before the fall of the legal and elected pro-U.S. government of Nicaragua. But, our own federal government did not challenge; instead, it aided and abetted in the destruction of freedom in our then friendly neighbor. The most glaring example of our official aid to Communism was the gift of the U.S. Canal and Zone in Panama to a Communist dictator, and the use of U.S. taxpayers' money to pay that dictator to accept the gift.

Now that there has been the declaration of a reversal of policy toward Central America on the part of the Reagan Administration and however faulty the first steps in effectuating that decision, let us urge that our government think, not just of El Salvador, but of the Americas. That would mean rescuing that time honored document known as the Monroe Doctrine, drawing it out of the dusty files where it has been hidden, and reaffirming it as the official policy of our Government. For those who have forgotten - or never knew, since the history re-writers have banished it from modern versions - we shall reprint the parts of that Doctrine which should apply to today and now, even as they applied to our first years as an Independent Republic and protector of the New World. As contained in President James Monroe's Seventh Annual Message to Congress, delivered on December 2, 1823, following are pertinent paragraphs of President Monroe's address.

* * * * *

In the discussions to which this interest has given rise and in the arrangements by which they may terminate, the occasion has been judged proper for asserting, as a principle in which the rights and interests of the United States are involved, that the American continents, by the free and independent conditions which they have assumed and maintained, are henceforth not to be considered as subjects for future colonization by any European power...

It is impossible that the allied powers should extend their political system to any portion of either continent without endangering our peace and happiness; nor can anyone believe that our southern brethren, if left to themselves, will adopt it of their own accord. It is equally impossible, therefore, that we should behold such interposition in any form of indifference..... We owe it, therefore, to candor and to the amicable relations existing between the United States and these powers to declare that we should consider any attempt on their part to extend their system to any portion of this hemisphere as dangerous to our peace and safety. (underlining added).

* * * * *

The Monroe Doctrine does not imply that we should seek to impose our form of government on the other nations of America. It does not imply that we should seek to alter whatever form of government the citizens of these Nations have chosen of their own free will and determination. And it certainly does not imply that we should attempt to bind them all together with us in a Regional World Government, as President Reagan has suggested. But it does imply that we shall prevent the imposition upon them of other forms of government by other Nations and/or power-seeking organizations outside the American hemisphere. A brief look at our history will confirm this. Due to book-burners, court revisionists and Orwellian Newthinkers, it is difficult to obtain reliable historical facts. But we believe the following to be factual, though abbreviated, due to space limitations.

It was President Woodrow Wilson who announced that "The Monroe Doctrine was proclaimed by the United States on her own authority. It has always been maintained, and always will be maintained, upon her own responsibility." He said this, however, before Col. House wrote the plans for a Regional World Government of the Americas, which became a prototype of the League of Nations Covenant (both of which failed). Up to that time, 1913, through all of the twists and turns of American history, the Monroe Doctrine had been the one firm anchor of American hemispheric policy. The need for such a policy began with the breakup of Spanish rule in most of its colonies during the Napoleonic wars. As Spain lost control in the New World, other European powers began to dream of taking over the newly liberated Latin American States. Congress recognized the danger to the U.S., adopted a resolution on Jan. 15, 1811 protesting against the transfer of any former Spanish colony to any European power. When Britain had designs on Florida, President Madison said American sovereignty was endangered, sent troops to Florida. Britain refrained. Then, after the fall of Napoleon, the "Holy Alliance," composed of Britain, Russia, Prussia and Austria, proposed to take over and divide Latin America between them. President John Quincy Adams was quick to object, the British Foreign Office honored the objection, the plan was dropped. In 1821 Henry Clay suggested that the United States should support Latin American independence, at all costs short of actual war. President Adams echoed this sentiment in a 4th of July speech which sounded the keynotes of the Monroe Doctrine: Isolation from Europe's quarrels, and opposition to European meddling in any part of liberated Latin America. Two years later, in 1823, President Monroe made it official United States policy with the Monroe Doctrine.

In the 1860's, when European bankers tried to break up the United States via a Civil War, both sides of which they helped finance, it became impossible to enforce the Monroe Doctrine when France under Napoleon III invaded Mexico and placed Austrian Archduke Maximilian on the Mexican throne. But, as soon as the Civil War was ended, Secretary of State Seward demanded that France get out of Mexico, and our southern neighbor again became a republic, under Juarez. According to historian Samuel Bemis, this action "transformed the Monroe Doctrine into a major national policy, applauded in the New world and respected in the Old World as something for which the United States would fight and could do successful battle."

We'll skip the disregard of the Monroe Doctrine during the New Deal era. We often wrongly involved ourselves in Latin American affairs. But the beginning of our surrender to Communism started with Cuba, became really dangerous in the Carter-Trilateral Commission White House years. In the past four years, the Soviet Union has become a major military power within the Western hemisphere. In Cuba they have full access to the naval facilities at Cienfuegos and have nuclear submarines nesting there. There are airstrips that can accommodate nuclear-armed Backfire bombers. They fly missions off our east coast without interference. They have electronic-surveillance facilities that monitor American telephone, telegraph and cable traffic. They have a network of intelligence activities operating from embassies and legations and the UN, all under direct Soviet control. And, of course, there is that Soviet combat brigade. In addition, the Soviets finance, train and staff a Cuban military establishment which contributes to Soviet expansion in Africa, the Middle East and South Asia, as well as in Central and South America and the Caribbean. They already control the governments of Grenada, Nicaragua and Panama. El Salvador and Guatemala are currently being communized. Then are to come some Caribbean countries; especially Puerto Rico, Guadeloupe and Martinique. The communization of Guyana is well under way. Then are to come Belize, Mexico - and after that - make a guess.

With the USSR in trouble in Afghanistan and Poland, with Brezhnev enfeebled, could there be a better time, or a more urgent reason, for reaffirmation of the Monroe Doctrine as the major national policy toward our own hemisphere?

Year Twenty-Eight.....Number Nine.....March 6, 1981

BEWARE THAT "INDEPENDENT" THIRD SECTOR

"But while men slept, his enemy came and sowed tares among the wheat, and went his way." As with parables concerning the Kingdom of Heaven, so also is it, in reality, with the kingdoms of this world. The enemy never sleeps. While the Nation's concerned citizenry was occupied with a national election, then enthused by the installation of a new administration, and finally bemused by a concentration of attention on little El Salvador, the Leaders of the Left were regrouping, reorganizing, planning to defeat any attempts to halt the national march toward Corporate Collectivism and Welfare Statism. Sensing a defeat at the polls in November, as long as a year ago these leaders began developing a new strategy. They would work, not through the Democratic Party, or other patently political groups. Instead, they would work with organizations dedicated to the promotion of Secular Humanism; specifically, with the National Council on Philanthropy (NCP) and the Coalition of National Voluntary Organizations (CNVO). These organizations were like "holding companies" over the myriad philanthropic and non-profit corporations in the U.S. The Leaders on the Left would bring together all the foundations and non-profit organizations into one grouping to be known as the Independent Sector (IS). There is in American society the public sector (government) and the private sector (all enterprises, activities and associations not run by the government.) The plan involves adding a third sector, IS. The work - obviously political and therefore illegal according to IRS regulations - would be financed by the big tax-exempt foundations such as Ford, Rockefeller, Carnegie, Mellon, Sloan, Lilly and so forth. Also aiding financially in this seemingly philanthropic endeavor would be an impressive list of corporations. We don't have a complete list of such contributors, but under the letter "C", we find such donors as the Carter Hawley Stores, Inc. (which includes Bergdorf Goodman, Neiman-Marcus, The Gadget Tree Stores, Weinstock's, Sunset House Mail Order, the Walden Book Stores, Holt Renfrew of Canada, etc.); CBS, Inc.; the Chase Manhattan Bank; Chevron U.S.A., Inc.; Connecticut General Insurance Corporation; Conoco, Inc.; and more. To add to the impressiveness of IS, active leadership of the alleged Third Sector includes John W. Gardner of Common Sense, Andrew Heiskell of Time & Life, Mark Talisman of the Council of Jewish Federations, Faye Wattleton of Planned Parenthood, Kenneth N. Dayton of Dayton Hudson Corporation, and Waldemar A. Nielson of the Council on Foreign Relations.

This organizing clique met originally in March of 1980 to lay their plans. They worked at the project through the spring and summer and then, on October 22 through 24, they assembled in Washington, D.C. to outline their program to an amazingly impressive and powerful membership. Here again, we don't have the complete membership list, nor would we have the space to publish it. But "Persuasion At Work," a publication of The Rockford Institute, printed a partial list of the members of this new IS, which includes such organizations as the American Catholic Conference, the Planned Parenthood Federation of America, American Red Cross, etc. Here is a partial list of the voting members of IS that are listed under the letter "A": the Aid Association for Lutherans, the American Association of Museums, the American Red Cross, the American Association of Homes for the Aging, the American Heart Association, the American Lung Association, the American Hospital Association, the American Alliance of the Arts, the Appalachian Mountain Club, the Association of Governing Boards of Colleges and Universities, the Association of Black Foundation Executives, Inc., the Association of Junior Leagues, etc.

Not all non-profit organizations have been induced to become members of IS. The Rockford Institute is an example. Instead of joining, it is warning all the readers of its "Persuasion At Work" to be alerted as to the intentions of IS. It points out that: "Since World War II, voluntary activist groups, often with foundation support, have been at the heart of virtually every movement that has brought about the avalanche of governmental regulations, the vast increase in welfare-state activities and the governmental funding of so-called private organizations.... Given the impetus toward the welfare state provided by the non-profit sector, to what extent has corporate philanthropy in the past actually served the best interests of the business community? If IS uses its money, its power, lobbying expertise and army of constituent members in behalf of the liberal ideology which has characterized the big foundations and the most determined elements of the non-profit sector over the past quarter century, then the advent of IS is not good news." L.T. Patterson is more explicit. In his PSL Strategy Letter of February 28, he charges, and we quote in part:

"Your hometown paper won't know, but a gigantic secular humanism organization is rapidly being formed to offset the influence of the new Right!... It is composed of an unholy amalgamation... called Independent Sector (IS)... Its proclaimed purpose: to bolster private voluntary organizations. But the real purpose: to attack the new religious influence from the conservative groups that played a role in the defeat of Jimmy Carter, Frank Church, et al. Careful attention should be given to this group by Howard Phillips and the Conservative Caucus,' the 'Committee for the Survival of a Free Congress' (run by Paul Weyrich), the 'American Life Lobby (run by Judy Brown) and the National Pro Life PAC' (run by the Rev. Charles Fiore)... We'll send a special note with this information to Ed McAteer, President of the Religious Roundtable and its affiliates.... After studying the operations of the Subrosa Government in America for the past fifteen years, I can tell you that this group means real trouble for conservative Americans! The address of this formidable group (IS) is 1828 L. Street N.W., Washington, D.C. 20036." (Unquote).

That Patterson is right in his appraisal can be seen from a study of reports about that October 22-24 meeting of IS in Washington. We quote from Rockford Institute's description:

"... Noteworthy is the technical talent which IS has enlisted to generate public support for its agenda. In the Washington conference the workshop devoted to 'Increasing Public Awareness of the Sector: Through the Media,' was both inspirational and informative. The participants were advised how to take advantage of the new media technology such as the video disc and were alerted to the opportunities offered by as many as 1000 new radio stations in 1981. 20 specific tips were given on the do's and don'ts of presenting one's case to the media. The 'Workshop on Advocacy and Lobbying' was equally explicit and expert in the recommendations for obtaining favorable action in the Congress. Activism is now a high art and IS has mobilized some of its most gifted practitioners." (Unquote).

Waldemar Nielsen, CFR liaison officer, author of two books about philanthropy and voluntary organizations, and IS organizer, states the case quite plainly. We quote from a paper by Nielsen:

* * * * *

Think for a moment of the great transforming forces for change in our national life over the past forty years - the civil rights movement, the women's movements, consumerism and the antiwar movement during the Viet Nam period - and ask yourself where they came from. In every instance their origins are to be found not in the technocracy nor the bureaucracy or the political parties, but rather in the organized impulse of free groups of ordinary citizens In the world of non-profits there is constantly present a great latent righteousness because most of the inhabitants feel they are serving some high moral purpose in behalf of the commonweal. As a result educators, scientists, artists, and reformers can be readily aroused to assert the claims of their institutions in passionate and absolute terms.....Regulatory consistency, precedent, cost effectiveness, detachment, and moderation are not values they ordinarily hold to be of the highest importance...

* * * * *

Let's interpolate Nielsen's statement: Think for a moment how our national life can be changed if all these various educators, scientists, artists and reformers can be brought together under one umbrella organization; and if all their transforming power can be controlled and directed toward one great purpose: the creation of a New World Society! If all these so-called "free" groups that are represented by non-profit organizations, charitable associations, foundation-sponsored activities, and social-action minded corporations and religious groups can be amalgamated, trained, indoctrinated, outfitted and financed by IS and its moneyed angels; think of the inestimable power this alleged Third Sector of society will have. Whoever controls this power through IS will be a Modern Pied Piper, capable of leading a whole populace joyously into the New World Order!

There is this added danger regarding any consolidation of non-profit corporations and organizations: Because of their special status with the gift-giving Internal Revenue Service, they are all dependent for their survival upon the Government. As the Supreme Court has decreed, what government subsidizes government can control; and government looks upon tax-exemption as a form of subsidy. Therefore, whatever Subrosa Clique controls Government also will control this so-called Independent Sector (IS)! Which means more power into the hands of the already too powerful.

Let's take this premise a step further. In the current, March 9, 1981 issue of U.S. News & World Report, on page 73, there is a pictogram headed, 'Half of All Americans Now Depend Upon Government.' The text says, "It's no wonder that the Reagan administration is running into trouble in its attempt to scale back the size of government. A new study shows that an estimated half of the nation's population now relies on pay, pensions, welfare aid or other forms of income from federal, state or local governments. Thus, the share of the nation dependent on governments climbed by more than a third between 1960 and 1979." A New York economic consulting firm did the estimate and an economist with the firm explained: "We counted people as government beneficiaries when the income they received seemed sufficient to create a voting bloc - a group of people who would set up some serious yelling and screaming if any one tried to take their goodies away from them." The following, according to A. Gary Shilling & Company, is who they are and how they are divided into groups:

Federal military employes, 2,100,000. Federal civilian employes, 2,800,000. State and local government employes, 13,100,000. Dependents of government workers, 12,600,000. Private employes paid by government spending, 9,500,000. Their dependents, 6,600,000. Recipients of government pensions, Social Security and other transfer payments, 59,400,000. Other recipients of government benefits not counted elsewhere, 6,200,000. Their dependents, 8,700,000. Total dependent upon government: 122,400,000, or approximately 50.2% of the entire population. This creates an extremely serious situation, and as Howard Ruff points out in the March 1st issue of The Ruff Times: "There is a Titanic struggle shaping up in Washington, D.C. that reminds me of the Japanese monster movies. While Rodan and Gidzilla are locked in a death struggle, the city gets trampled. I'm afraid that the struggle that has begun in Washington between President Reagan and everybody who ever got a check, a subsidy, or regulatory protection from government is one of the epic cat fights of the century, and I'm afraid that the American people might get trampled in the process." (Underlining as in the original.)

Now, let's combine the power and influence of those who are dependent upon the government for pay, pension, welfare, subsidy or regulatory protection, with the potential power represented by a coalesced, coerced, and controlled Third, or Independent Sector of Society. Here would be a political powerhouse that could cause the entire populace to rush joyously like death-desiring lemmings, into a Sea of Socialist Enslavement from which our children might never surface.

But we're not through yet. In addition to governments' dependents and a misnamed Independent Sector (IS), there are those whom the Christ described as "false prophets, which come to you in sheep's clothing, but inwardly are ravening wolves." There is, for example, George McGovern, former U.S. Senator, onetime National Democrat Party's choice for President of the United States. He has taken upon himself a new role. He is the self-proclaimed political leader of the world Council of Churches. He has an abiding hatred for the Moral Majority which, he says, robbed him of his rights. So he is organizing a coalition against the New Right and "as a roaring lion, walketh about, seeking whom he may devour." More importantly, however, all the liberal religious leaders are getting together under the aegis of Clergy and Laity Concerned, left-wing outfit that is causing much trouble in El Salvador and other Central and South American countries. Espousing a "liberation theology" and denouncing the capitalist system, CLC has an imposing membership, including Eugene Carson Blake of the W.C.C., Theodore Hesburgh of Notre Dame, Robert Drinan of the U.S. Congress, Eugene Pickett of the Unitarian and Universalist Association, Rabbi David Saperstein of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations, Bishop Frances Mugavero of the Catholic Diocese of Brooklyn, Bishop Roy Nichols of the United Methodist Church, Lora Anne Quinonez of the Leadership Conference of Women Religious, Dr. George Weber of New York Theological Seminary, etc., etc.

So, we have the misnamed Independent Sector, the government Dependents, the McGovern types, and such organizations as Clergy and Christian Laity all waging a war to prevent Christian reconstruction and Bible-based morality. In answer, Paul Weyrich of the Committee for the Survival of a Free Congress writes: "We must work harder now than ever... Our conservatives, especially those in the Senate, are going to be under attack and the media is going to attempt to create an atmosphere within which they will be afraid to do what is right. The only remedy for this is our troops, just as our troops were the only antidote to the vicious propaganda effort against those who believe in traditional values during the election. And above all else, ask everyone to pray as hard as they can."

THE CONSPIRACY LIVES ON

The dream of creating and maintaining, for at least a millenium, a one world government has existed in the minds of men ever since the sons of Cain began to build cities. The prototype of such an undertaking is recorded in the Book of Genesis when men began to make a name for themselves by building a tower that would reach into heaven. Their work was interrupted and "The Lord did confound the language of all the earth; and from thence did the Lord scatter them abroad upon the face of the earth." Ages later, St. Paul was to explain to the Greeks assembled on Mars Hill that the Unknown God whom they worshipped ignorantly "hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on the face of the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bonds of their habitation." Disregarding this Divine condemnation of attempts to unite all nations of men under one government, men have continued to conspire to do just that. Empires have risen and empires have fallen and yet men still conspire to create the One World Utopia. Legend has it that Alfred Tennyson, not yet a lord, took his first ride on a British train and the rhythm of the rails led him to have a vision of the future of man. He wrote:

*"Men, my brothers, men the workers, ever reaping something new;
That which they had done but earnest of the things that they shall do.
For I dipt into the future, far as human eye could see, Saw the Vision of the world, and all the wonders that would be.....
'Till the war-drum throbb'd no longer, and the battle-flags were furled,*

In the Parliament of man, the Federation of the world!"

Men applauded the Vision of a Federation of the world and Tennyson was made a Baron, appointed poet laureate and given a pension for the remainder of his life. Tennyson was not the first eminent author to promote the idea of a World Government, nor would he be the last. But another British author, Herbert G. Wells of science-fiction fame, may have been the first to refer to the movement as a Conspiracy. A Fabian Socialist and admirer of the Bolshevik conquest of Russia, he traveled to Moscow to confer with Lenin, Trotsky. There he also met Frank Vanderlip, an American banker who had worked with Paul Warburg, Otto Kahn, J.P.Morgan, Colonel House, Carter Glass and others to establish the Federal Reserve System. Vanderlip was in Russia to lend financial aid to the Bolshevik cause. H.G.Wells approved, wrote that "Big business is by no means antipathetic to Communism. The larger big business grows the more it approximates to Collectivism. It is the upper road of the few instead of the lower road of the masses to Collectivism." [Right out of the horse's mouth!] H.G.Wells made this statement in a book he published, apparently at his own expense, in 1933, and titled The Open Conspiracy and Other Writings. In this book he referred to a previous book: "I published a little book called The Open Conspiracy as early as 1928, into which I put what I had in my mind at that time....The idea of reorganizing the affairs of the world on quite a big scale which was 'Utopian,' and so forth, in 1926 and 1927, and still 'bold' in 1928, has now spread about the world until nearly everybody has it. It has broken out all over the place, thanks largely to the mental stimulation of the Russian Five Year Plan...."

While Wells was openly in favor of the Bolshevik conquest, he authored a plan for the creation of a world government which was more humane than that Five Year Plan which caused the murder of millions of bourgeois Christians before the plan could be carried out (unsuccessfully, we might add.) Well's plan is so similar to the plans of the present-day promoters of the New World Order that we should like to quote:

* * * * *

At the utmost seven broad principles may be stated as defining the Open Conspiracy and holding it together....

- (1) The complete assertion, practical as well as theoretical, of the provisional nature of existing governments and of acquiescence in them;
- (2) The resolve to minimize by all available means the conflicts of these governments, their militant use of individuals and property, and their interferences with the establishment of a world economic system;
- (3) The determination to replace private, local or national ownership of at least credit, transport, and staple production by a responsible world directorate serving the common ends of the race;
- (4) The practical recognition of the necessity for world biological controls, for example, of population and disease;
- (5) The support of a minimum standard of individual freedom and welfare in the world;
- (6) The supreme duty of subordinating the personal career to the creation of a world directorate capable of these tasks and to the general advancement of human knowledge, capacity, and power;
- (7) The admission therewith that our immortality is conditional and lies in the race and not in our individual selves. (unquote).

* * * * *

It is noteworthy that Wells envisioned a Conspiracy that would succeed, not in the conquest of nations or the liquidation of existing governments, but rather in the merging of them into a union of states under the domination of a World Directorate. This World Directorate would establish a world economic system, eliminate private property, disband national military establishments, develop a worldwide human rights standard, etc. These are things that Karl Marx also called for. They are the very things that have been attempted by the various agencies of the United Nations, often with success. They also are the things that have been developed by the various economic summits and the multilateral treaties that have been promoted by the United Nations and the Trilateralists. "Piecemeal Functionalism" is the code word: the establishment of a series of limited "world directorates" dealing with the creation of "world laws" dealing with specific areas and activities. An excellent example is the proposed Law of the Seas Treaty which is being negotiated by the United Nations in behalf of 36 nations having coastlines. Although this limited "world directorate" scheme began with the Nixon administration, it became a pet project of the Carter administration and his Trilateral Commission Cabinet. CFR-member and Trilateral Commissioner Elliot Richardson was assigned the job of representing the United States as a special ambassador to LOST, most of the tricky details had been worked out and the treaty was to be signed at a special meeting this summer at Caracas, Venezuela. This was to be a "world directorate" for control of all mining rights in the world's oceans and open seas. Rep. John Breaux, Louisiana Democrat, protested, saying: "At the foundation of the Law of the Sea negotiations lies the drive of the Third World toward the establishment of the 'New International Economic Order - NIEO - which is calculated to effect a fundamental redistribution of global wealth and power from the nations of the industrialized North to the countries of the less developed South." This, of course, is in line with the Trilateral Commission's plan to create their New World Order. That the USSR is one of the 36 nations negotiating, and is said to have been controlling the negotiations, makes the plan even more hazardous to the United States. Rep. Breaux also explained that "the political model is a one-nation, one-vote democracy which conveys an equal voice, for example, to a nation of 800 million and to a nation of 350 thousand. The economic model is socialist central economic planning, which seeks to stifle free enterprise, and defeat market principles." Breaux pointed out that under the terms of the treaty (as in the UN General Assembly) the USSR would have three votes and the US would have but one vote. It should also be noted that in this and other proposed treaties favoring third world nations, those actually being favored are the International Bankers and the Multinational Developers, because it is they - not the underdeveloped nations - who will control all the resources, the mining, and the industrial development in those countries.

But here comes the good news. One of the very first things done by the Reagan administration was the firing of Elliot Richardson and all his crew, along with the announcement to the world that President Reagan would not sign the Law of the Sea Treaty as presently drafted. This LOS Treaty was an integral and important part of the overall Trilateralist plan for creating their New World Order (exactly as H.G. Wells might have envisioned it). The plan called "Piece-meal Functionalism," called for the establishment of a whole series of these limited "world directorates," which would develop "world laws" for their particular area and activity. Eventually, these limited "world directorates" were to be amalgamated into a One World Authority. With the rejection of the Law of the Sea, the plan seems to have faltered. However, there is that program for the creation of a series of Regional World Governments, these eventually to be merged into a One World Government. That program is very much alive. The following by our favorite European correspondent Hilaire du Berrier appeared in the March 4, 1981 issue of The Review Of The News.

* * * * *

The London Daily Telegraph of February 3rd carried a stunningly frank statement made by Dr. Otto von Hapsburg, the former pretender to the throne of Austria who voluntarily became a German commoner in order to run for a seat in the European Parliament. In London "for the inauguration of the British branch of the Pan-European Union of which he is president," the former arch-duke told the press that the aims of the Pan-European Union are "wider than those of the European Economic Community." Aside from working for a confederation of free European states, "it [the Pan-European Union] looks toward the day, however distant, when countries of the now-Russian-dominated East bloc will be able to join."

The Daily Telegraph account continued: "Perhaps if the Polish mood proves contagious, this may begin to sound a little less far-fetched. In the meantime, Dr. von Hapsburg is making the most of his opportunities as a German-elected member of the European Parliament and is tirelessly stumping its confines to further the ideals of Pan-Europeanism."

Otto von Hapsburg's statement deserves the closest attention. It constitutes the frankest confession of One World objectives since 1953 when Ford Foundation president H. Rowan Gaither admitted to the chief investigator for Representative Carroll Reese's House Committee investigating tax-exempt foundations that he and his associates were working for a One World government in which the United States could be "comfortably merged with the Soviet Union." Now that the One Worlders have again thrown off the mask there is no longer any question of a conspiracy. What free Europe and the U.S. face is clearly an open power grab at the expense of national identity. (Unquote).

* * * * *

This One World Conspiracy has had many names and many rules of procedure. Tennyson's "Federation of the world" was only a poet's vision. But Karl Marx saw it as historically imperative and called his plan Communism. Rhodes and the Round Table saw it as an Anglo-American Federation that would rule the world. House and The Inquiry envisioned its beginning in the fourteen points of the League of Nations. Wells penned the outline for an "Open Conspiracy" because being a Humanist he sought for immortality and felt it lay in the whole human race and not in individual man. Then came those who conspired to build their One World Collective for fame and profit. Kissinger's World Community, Brzezinski's Technetronic Order, etc. etc.

The CFR-TLC Conspiracy called "Piecemeal Functionalism" has been stalled, perhaps mostly by Carter's mishandling. But the Regional Conspiracy is alive and growing. The Conspiracy to Regionalize Europe, then Merge Regionalized Communist countries with the Regionalized Socialist countries of that continent, is part and parcel of the overall conspiracy to Merge the Regionalized Americas with the Regionalized USSR. And in this connection, there are developments that bear watching.

Russia, the leader of the Communist bloc, and West Germany, the leader of the European bloc, are involved, each in different ways, in the goings-on in Central America, especially in El Salvador at this point in time. The Soviet, via Cuba, is engaged in communizing all of the Americas South of our Border. This is a well-known fact. But a fact receiving very little publicity has to do with Russian bombers in regular reconnaissance flights along our East Coast and penetrating U.S. territory. Soviet submarines also have been sighted in U.S. waters. There is danger that El Salvador could be a planned and fused powder keg.

West German penetration is of a different sort. From Bonn, for release in the United States, comes this item: "During his visit to Bonn this week, Nicaraguan Foreign Minister Pater Miguel d'Escoto Brockman discussed the El Salvador conflict with Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher. In a three hour meeting on Tuesday (March 3), Genscher and d'Escoto agreed that 'everyone's interest' lies in finding a political solution to the country's problems; that, to this end, a dialogue between both parties to the conflict is essential.... Since the Sandinist revolution in 1979, Bonn has provided over DM 95.3 million in development aid to Nicaragua.... Bonn's recent offer to help bring together democratic forces from both sides of the El Salvador conflict has met with no response so far. President Jose Napoleon Duarte, the leader of El Salvador's Christian Democratic-military junta, cancelled a planned trip to Bonn on Wednesday (March 4). (Unquote).

That there should be such world-wide attention on such a tiny spot on the map, such extensive media coverage of activities in a country that has a standing army of just 7,000 men is, in itself, ominous. It's as though all eyes are being drawn to one spot so something far more important, and dangerous, can be carried out somewhere else, without public notice. One thing is certain: the Conspiracy is alive, and well, and still lives in Washington, D.C. And, at a time when there is a chance to expose and depose that Conspiracy, let us not be found thinking only of taxes, inflation, and El Salvador.

HAS THE TIDE REALLY TURNED?

"How did we get to be a welfare state, a wealth transfer and socialist society?" asks Tom Anderson, editor of Straight Talk, a conservative weekly, many of whose articles are regularly reprinted in other conservative weeklies. Tom's answer to his own question: "We got there by degrees. We let the federalists, the do-gooders, the one-worlders, the Marxists and the corporate socialists nibble away at our freedoms. If the demagog Franklin D. Roosevelt had tried to accomplish in one fell swoop the Big Brotherism we labor under today, he would have precipitated a revolution. The road from Freedom to Coercion is a gradual descent, like the road to hell. Barring revolution, freedom regained must also come about slowly, by degrees. If President Reagan tried to return us to the Constitution overnight, he would probably be shot. If the 'Welfare Set' were cut off the Federal teat right now, we would have a revolution. The leeches have come to think of their 'draw' as their natural right."

J. Anthony Boeckh, a Canadian credit analyst who, of course, observed the attempts of Joe Clark of Canada and Margaret Thatcher of Britain to do what Ronald Reagan is now attempting, agrees with Tom Anderson and wrote in his March 1981 analysis: "In practice, unwinding government benefits is like taking a bone from the jaws of a hungry dog. The real problem is that people want the welfare state but they don't feel they have to pay for it. That is why there is a tax revolt. But a tax revolt does not necessarily mean that a majority of people want to roll back the welfare state. Given the impressive political advantages of inflation, given the fact that the trend toward social democracy and the increasing clout of special interests groups is very much intact, and given the fact that all bureaucrats have a vested interest in expanding their power base, inflation, it would appear, has nothing much to fear but fluctuations. Politicians will, of course, denounce it harshly from time to time and will attempt to moderate its application, as is the case now, but will not easily give it up in principle." (The Bank Credit Analyst, 1010 Sherbrooke St. W., Montreal, Canada H3A 2R7. Monthly, $335 per year).

Stuart Eizenstat, Fabian Socialist and Zionist who called himself a Democrat and served his special interests as Jimmy Carter's domestic policy adviser, agrees with Tom Anderson on how we got to be a welfare state, the difference being that Eizenstat approves of our having got that way. He seems to feel that there was nothing "aberrational" about Reagan being elected. He says a conservative trend was inevitable and intimates that the Reagan Rightist Reformation Movement merely represents the "one step backward" in the dialectically predestined "two steps forward, one step backward" March toward Corporate Socialism. In fact, Eizenstat infers, the liberals were stepping too fast when they tried to put Hubert Humphrey, then George McGovern in the White House, for the purpose, says Eizenstat, of continuing the Great Society program that Lyndon Johnson had introduced. He didn't use those exact words, of course. He said it like this: "The (Democrat) party has had ideological difficulties ever since 1968, when Richard M. Nixon beat Hubert H. Humphrey..... There has been a fairly consistent conservative trend in the country since then and, except for Watergate, Republican control of the White House might have been unbroken."

Regarding that "two steps forward, one step backward" socialist marching order, note what Jerome R. Watson, a reporter for the Chicago Sun-Times Bureau, wrote after attending a press conference held by Eizenstat in February 25, 1981: "Eizenstat noted that even Republicans now accept the reforms of the New Deal and that what Reagan is seeking in part to dismantle is the Johnsonian Great Society. The New Deal, Eizenstat pointed out, provided broad-based programs such as Social Security that benefitted the middle class while the Great Society sought to go beyond that and deal with the economic, educational and other stubborn problems of the poor...."

Translation: The first forward step of the Welfare State and Fabian Socialists was the New Deal; the second step forward was the Great Society. Then must come the backward step, which was manifested in the New Right. Dialectical inevitability, reason such men as Eizenstat. Meanwhile, to start the syndrome on its next series of steps, Eizenstat is working with a group composed of Ted Kennedy, Walter Mondale, Ted Van Dyk, a Chicago broker named Dick Dennis and other leftists who are creating a Center for Democratic Policy, a kind of think tank which will make plans for the defeat of conservative Republicans in 1982 and 1984. Meanwhile, George McGovern is organizing the "mainline" Christians, the members of the NEA teachers union, and all the college students he can convert, into his "Americans for Common Sense," an organization the former Senator and Presidential nominee has created to do battle with the New Right. Speaking to a teacher's conference in California, he said the "burgeoning New Right movement poses a serious threat to public education." It seems that these New Rightists "are filled with the kind of fear and hate that is the enemy of education" and "they demand that their views be imposed upon everybody else." According to the reporter who covered the speech, "Teachers at the meeting seemed to agree with McGovern."

Tom Anderson said, "If the 'Welfare Set' were cut off the Federal teat right now, we would have a revolution." Well, President Reagan cut down on, or in some cases cut out, about 300 different programs. Not only did the senate Budget Committee approve, it added $2.3 billion in more cuts on its own. And the final vote was 20-0. There's every indication that the Senate will approve and the House might do likewise, at least on most of the budget slashes. So, just as Anderson said, a kind of revolution has begun. An example is an organization calling for the impeachment of "President Reagan before it's too late." This "Impeach Reagan Movement" is distributing bumper stickers and metal lapel buttons - top quality items - and will publish a paper called the "Reagan Watch" on April 1st (April Fool's Day). Headed by one Jim Rhodes and headquartered at P.O. Box 1604, Camden, New Jersey 08101, an appeal for financial and other kinds of support, has been sent out to a selective mailing list. The final paragraph of the appeal reads: "There are thousands of governments all across this nation who face major funding cuts from the Reagan administration. There are millions of people who will be affected by those cuts. As the New York Times reported 'the Day of Reckoning' is upon us. The bell has been rung. Let's come out fighting!"

Also ready to come out fighting are panicky liberals representing more than 150 different labor, religious, civil rights and poverty groups who met in the Nation's capitol last week to map strategy for battling the Reagan budget cuts. John Shattuck legislative director of the ACLU, said their goal is to "defend the civil rights gains of the last two decades." Among others participating in this "Leadership Conference on Civil Rights" were representatives of the National Women's Political Caucus, the AFL-CIO, the National Organization for Women (NOW), the United States Catholic Conference, the Episcopal Church's Public Affairs Office, the Children's Defense League and the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith. In addition to those organizing to defend their alleged civil rights, there also are those defenders of so-called "human rights", and Communist sympathizers who are ready to do battle against the new policies toward Latin America. One of Reagan's first official acts was to extend a hand in friendship to Chile. Then he welcomed a state visit to the White House from the future President of Argentina. And, his affiliations to the contrary notwithstanding, Secretary of State Alexander Haig has said publicly what we and others of the "Free Press" have been saying for many years: that the Communist movement is planning to take over all of Central America; that after Cuba there was Nicaragua; that now the hit list concentrates on El Salvador and that afterward will come Guatemala, Honduras, etc. What Haig did not emphasize was the fact that such religious groups as the Catholic Foreign Mission Society of America with their "liberation theology" may be doing more to communize Latin America than the Communists. For example, the following is from The Athanasian, a publication of the Traditional Catholics of America:

"The Catholic Foreign Mission Society of America, commonly known as the Maryknoll Fathers, was founded in 1911 by the bishops of this country 'to recruit, train, send and support American missionaries in areas overseas.'" For many years the Maryknoll Fathers were held in high esteem by Roman Catholics....(But) today, of course, the Maryknoll Fathers are a part of the 'ecumenical' establishment known as the Councilair or Novus Ordo Church. But it is the monthly magazine Maryknoll...which prompts this article - specifically the March 1981 issue. It well could have been published in Moscow rather than in the U.S.A. It is an excellent propaganda piece on behalf of those 'Catholic' bishops and priests throughout Latin America who, with their phony 'liberation theology' are revolutionaries masquerading in cassocks and Roman collars. They are a powerful force on the Communist side in the continuing Red take-

A FEDERAL RESERVE AUDIT?

Congressman Ron Paul of Texas has introduced legislation to audit the Federal Reserve System, and all its banks. "For years, the late Wright Patman (D-TX) fought to have the Fed audited, so the people could know what our central bankers were up to," said Congressman Paul. "I am introducing his bill, now called H.R.2322, to accomplish this in 1981. The Federal Reserve System, which inflates our dollars and causes high interest rates, operates in secrecy. Although it deals in hundreds of billions of dollars of the people's money, and wreaks terrible havoc, it is unaccountable to any outside agency. H.R.2322 would allow the Comptroller General of the United States to go over the Fed's books and transactions, and report the results to the Congress and the people. The respected General Accounting Office would also have access to all Fed papers.

"The Fed is supposed to be independent, but it always balloons the money supply in presidential election years to re-elect the incumbent. Sometimes, thank goodness, this doesn't work. But it shows just how 'independent' this government agency is. I think it is high time that the American people found out exactly what the Fed is up to in its domestic dealings, as well as in its relationship with foreign governments and international banks. The Federal Reserve System has done a disastrous job with the dollar. This institution's decisions affect the lives of all Americans. The people have a right to know exactly what the Federal Reserve is doing, and why. This bill will bring sunshine to the dark halls of the Fed's marble palace in Washington, D.C." over of Latin America, with the once-Catholic Maryknoll magazine making no small contribution to facilitate that takeover. It follows, of course, that no informed Roman Catholic would contribute a single penny to the Catholic Foreign Missionary Society of America (Maryknoll)." (Unquote).

The Protestant World and National Councils also contribute toward this "liberalization" of Latin America, and the Reagan administration must suffer the wrath of these allegedly "Christian" organizations, because of the administration's new attitude towards both Latin America and the Soviet Union. To the New Right, it should be somewhat comforting to observe that, even with Haigs and Weinbergs in charge, a stand against rather than a genuflection to Communist expansionism has become an official policy.

Please understand: The foregoing should not be taken as a statement of all out endorsement of the policies of the Reagan administration. We've merely tried to point out certain facts and draw the battle lines in this "revolution" that has been brought about because of important changes in U.S. foreign and domestic policy. The "revolutionaries" are, of course, the feeders at the public trough, the do-gooders, the Marxists, the one-worlders and the Fascist, Fabian and Corporate Socialists who have nibbled away our freedoms, But, about Reagan as the Leader of the Right, there remain serious doubts. As Governor of California he often did the opposite of what he said he would do, and he promoted Regionalism. When running for the Presidency, he made a deal with the Trilateral Commission. He promised to do away with the Energy Department and the Department of Education; he has done neither. As columnist Joseph Kraft, CFR member, observed with seeming satisfaction in his column of March 20: "After two months in office, the Reagan administration has started to lose definition and momentum. the early focus on economic recovery has been blurred by foreign-policy issues that have themselves been further obscured by disputes over small points..."

All things considered, our chief quarrel with the Reagan administration is its sellout to the Council on Foreign Relations and the Trilateral Commission. On March 29-31 the Trilateralists are meeting in Washington and Reagan will be host to the three Trilateralist leaders: David Rockefeller of North America, George Berthoin of Europe, and Takeshi Watanabe of Japan. At the meeting, Alexander Haig and Caspar Weinberger will be guests of honor and, no doubt, recipients of the newest orders for the reshaping of the world. Another, even more important Trilateral conference is to be held in Peiping, on May 20-23. It seems that Red China is to be inducted into Trilateral planning. This means that Trilateralist designs for world dictatorship will officially embrace Communism.

Meanwhile, in the past three weeks, Reagan has named four more member of the Council on Foreign Relations to important posts in the State Department: Lawrence Eagleton who has been closely associated with Henry Kissinger for years, Myer Rashish, Robert D. Hormats, and Chester Crocker. When all the appointments have been made and confirmed, Reagan will have outdone Carter in obedience to the Trilateral Commission and Council on Foreign Relations.

Year Twenty-Eight.....Number Twelve.....March 27, 1981

BEHIND THE BUSHING OF ALEXANDER HAIG

There are certain similarities between the late Carter administration and the present Reagan administration which are not conducive to comfort or a sense of security. When Carter left his peanut farm and went to Washington, he took with him his Georgia Mafia. There in Washington Carter was met by the pre-arranged contingent of Establishment characters on loan from the Council on Foreign Relations and the Trilateral Commission. Immediately there developed rivalries for favors and struggles for power between individuals representing the two competing camps. For four years there was policy confusion, resignations, exposures. All the world wondered at the vacillation and confusion which did beset the once respected government of that great Nation.

Much the same situation is beginning to surface once again. Ronald Reagan left his Western ranch and went to Washington, taking with him his California cohorts: Meese, Allen, Weinberger, Brady and many others, including the faithful Kitchen Cabinet which had financed his victory. The Kitchen Cabinet moved into the White House Executive Office Building, then was pushed out into the cold, finally disbanded, its members remaining individually loyal and accountable whenever a need is discerned. Reagan, like Carter, was met by a pre-arranged contingent of Establishment characters on loan from the Council on Foreign Relations and its chief satellite organizations and associations: The Council for Economic Development, the Business Council, Bilderbergers and the prestigious Trilateral Commission. So, by direct comparison, there was Vice President Bush replacing Vice President Mondale, State Secretary Haig replacing State Secretaries Vance and Muskie, Defense Secretary Weinberger replacing Brown, Treasury Secretary Regan instead of Blumenthal and/or Miller, Commerce Secretary Baldrige where Klutznick once commanded, and so on, save for one important difference: Allen taking the spot once occupied by Brzezinski. And, as a great poet would say, there's the rub. For Allen is of the California contingent, not the Eastern Establishment. However, making up for such as Meese, Allen, Brady, etc., there were many others from the CFR and its satellites: Casey as CIA Director, Elliot Abrams to take care of dealings with international organizations, William Brock to supervise international trade, Frank Carlucci to handle CFR's Weinberger, in case the latter forgot his allegiance to "King David" of Chase Manhattan. Then there are Arthur Burns, James Lynn, Paul McCracken, George Shultz, Walter Wriston and Murray Weidenbaum to take care of our economic policy. And so on, and on.

Hence the similarity in administrations. Reagan, like Carter before him, is experiencing the development of rivalries between his two camps; so Hedrick Smith of the CFR-affiliated New York Times could write: "During the presidential campaign, Ronald Reagan often took the Carter administration to task for alleged vacillation and confusion in its foreign policy statements. Just last month his counselor, Edwin Meese, assured a national television audience that by contrast, the Reagan administration 'will speak with one voice.' But the Republican newcomers have discovered it is easier to promise harmony and consistency than to practice it. They have been sounding an uncertain and inconsistent foreign policy trump lately." The Times reporter cited a statement by Richard Pipes of Harvard, now on the National Security Council staff. He was quoted as saying that there was no alternative to war with the Soviet Union unless the Soviets changed their system of government. Pipes also criticized the West German foreign ministry for being too friendly with the Soviet government. James Brady had to call a special press conference to say that Pipes had piped off on his own, and that his statements were not those of the State Department or the White House. Then on March 16, another administration official, John Bushnell who was acting assistant secretary for Latin American affairs, tried to play down the El Salvador involvement by telling the media: "Our impression is that this story is running about five times as big as it really is." He said 54 advisers had been sent to El Salvador, but "Judging by the press coverage of this I would have thought we had deployed a whole division." Bushnell's criticism of the press so embarrassed the rest of State that he was made to tell the media he was speaking for himself and not for the President or the State Department.

Then Haig and Weinberger got into a brouhaha about those neutron warheads. Weinberger hinted that they ought to be deployed in Western Europe, as added NATO defense against the Soviet military superiority in that area. Haig really got upset about that statement, probably because he thought he, Haig, should have been the one to make such a statement. so Haig rushed out cables to all the NATO members, saying that this was not yet U.S. policy. Next, the Navy Secretary, John F. Lehman, told reporters that we ought to scrap both the SALT I and SALT II agreements. The Soviet Union hadn't lived up to them, so why should we? That really got the State Department upset, and within hours, State was disavowing Navy's remarks and promising that the USA would live up to the SALT treaties so long as the USSR did (a most unusual statement - since the USSR never has lived up to the SALT or the Helsinki agreements).

Haig, while belying any bellicose statements made by anybody else, was saying even stronger things, especially about the Soviets. He told the press that "it does no good to pretend in our policies or our proclamations that that [Soviet activity] is not the most serious threat to world peace we're facing today." He spelled out the Soviet "hit list" in Central America: Nicaragua, El Salvador, Honduras, Guatemala. He announced that the Soviet Union had created camps to train terrorists who were then active in the Mideast as well as Latin America and Europe. In retaliation, his first front was El Salvador, and his second interest would involve the turbulent Middle East. He would visit Iraq, Israel, Pakistan, Turkey and Saudi Arabia.

Haig wanted it understood that he was in charge of foreign affairs and that he and President Reagan were the only ones who should be making public statements on foreign policy. Which might have settled the matter had it not been for the fact that Richard Allen, President Reagan's National Security Adviser, a post held formerly by Kissinger and then Brzezinski, made a foreign policy statement before the Conservative Political Action Conference, which is the heart of the New Right movement. Allen warned that our NATO allies were all growing too soft toward Communism. He spoke of "that contemptible policy of 'better red than dead' which seemed to be reviving in Western Europe. He also remarked that NATO has been seriously weakened because of "inflationary ravages that have occurred because we have lacked the will to discipline social problems." In other words, too much spent on butter for social welfare, not enough spent on guns for national welfare. Certainly the CPAC members who heard Allen agreed wholeheartedly with what he said. So do we. And it's barely possible that Haig might have agreed. But it was Allen, not Haig, who said it.

And that brought up this situation which has existed through three administrations. In the Nixon administration it was Rogers vs. Kissinger, and Rogers lost. In the Carter administration it was Vance vs. Brzezinski and Vance was the loser, being replaced by Muskie who didn't really count. And, in the Reagan administration, it is Haig vs. Allen, and Haig may lose. Only this time the contest is more serious, severe and more important. Because it isn't merely a contest between men; it's a battle between the Eastern Establishment (Haig) and the New Right (Allen). It probably was Ed. Meese who advised the President that he'd better build something similar to a Berlin Wall to separate the two contenders. So, Reagan caused to be created a new office, a crisis management office, with George Bush as its administrator. Actually, the job is a sinecure in every respect. Whenever there is a crisis, it's the President who is in charge. As Harry Truman might have said, the President of the United States is the Nation's Chief Executive and Commander-in-Chief, and in case of crisis that's where the buck stops. If the President is incapacitated, or unable to carry out his duties (God forbid that this should happen during this administration), then the Vice President takes charge automatically and Constitutionally. Even Bush pointed this out publicly, admitting that naming him to such a post is really meaningless. Except that it puts that figurative wall between Establishment Haig and NewRight Allen. Moreover, if and when any national crisis should develop or be created, there already exists a system set up by Executive Orders 12148 and 12149 of July 20, 1979, whereby the Fed-

OUR NORTHERN NEIGHBOR'S PROPOSED CONSTITUTION

In view of the attempts to foist upon the United States a Newstates Constitution which would make ours a Collectivist Regional State within a World Government, the following "Letter to the Editor" is important.

I wish to thank the (Great Falls, Montana) Tribune for publishing material concerning Canada's proposed constitution. But I was shocked to read a news item released Feb. 18 by the Associated Press at Ottawa and published by an American paper. This item would never have dared been released in Canada. It is untrue. It compared Canada's new, first constitution to your great American one and implied ours was more advanced. It said it "mirrored" yours.

It omitted mention that your Constitution guarantees individuals the right to their own property - the Canadian one does not. It failed to say ours does not provide for a strong independent court as yours does. It allows only our Ottawa government to decide that. Our constitution does not allow for regional representation with veto power on a 2/3 vote as the American Senate has. Ours denies us an elected Senate, or any true form of regional representation at all on constitutional matters that will be the "supreme law of Canada."

In fact, in Canada already, 8 out of 10 provinces have expressed rejection of this undemocratic constitution; this represents 3/4 of the entire area of Canada. It is being forced on us by the mere political majority of one political party, a party elected one year ago, and, who, when they got their mandate to govern, never even told the electors they would be bringing in a constitution. In fact, most Canadians can not even obtain a copy of it to read before it may become the "supreme law of Canada.".....

Americans have need to be concerned at what is happening to their long-time partner, which shares such a long border with them. The AP service should investigate why such an inaccurate picture is being circulated in the United States. The American people and their government should not be misinformed.

eral Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) takes charge of a Bureaucratic Dictatorship which can provide for the takeover of all communications media; electric power, gas, petroleum fuels and minerals; food resources and farms; all means of transportation and control of highways, airports and skyways; all health, education and welfare functions, etc. The migration of whole populations and the formation of enforced labor forces are also included. So, the appointment of George Bush as a crisis manager is both ludicrous and redundant; except that within the Reagan administration, as in the Carter administration, there are two camps, with divergent aims and ideologies. In spite of this, federal administrators hope to be able to form a coalescent, corporate governmental entity that will "speak with one voice." An impossibility, so long as the One World Conspirators remain in control and the New Right Conservatives continue to act like a Moral Minority.

This "Two Team Syndrome" is bound to cause contradictions and confusion in policy-making and policy-execution. An example is the Two China Syndrome. Newsweek of March 30 reports that "Taiwanese diplomats in Washington have found high-ranking U.S. officials much more accessible since the advent of the Reagan Administration. White House and State Department aides have been meeting with representatives of the Coordinating Council for North America, which is what Taiwan's unofficial diplomatic delegation has called itself since the United States ceased to recognize the Taipei government in 1979." This would seem to indicate that our governmental duplicity in turning its back on Nationalist China and extending the hand of friendship to Communist China is about to end. Not so. The Los Angeles Times of March 21 carries the headline: "U.S. Assures Peking It's 'Real' China." The leading paragraph informs us: "The Reagan Administration...has pledged to...recognize... the Communist regime as the sole legitimate government (of China)."

Example number two concerns Africa. The original Reagan promises indicated firm support for South Africa and no more support for the Communist and pro-Communist governments on that continent. However, in an AP dispatch from Salisbury, Rhodesia (Zimbabwe), we are informed that "The Reagan Administration, piecing together what it calls a 'realistic' policy in Africa, pledged an additional $75 million in aid yesterday (March 23) to Zimbabwe, a country led by Robert Mugabe, a Marxist who has warned President Reagan against embracing white-governed South Africa."

Even more serious is the possible involvement of U.S. troops, not in El Salvador, but in the defense of Israel. On March 24 came the announcement from Washington: "The Reagan Administration has notified leading members of Congress that it is seriously considering asking for special legislation to permit stationing 1,000 or more U.S. troops in the Sinai, the first permanent ground combat presence of this country in the volatile Middle East." The first, hardly the last U.S. combat presence there if Congress approves such a request.

We spoke of similarities between the Carter and Reagan Administrations. There is another set of similarities that gives more hope. Once there were two camps competing for control. One camp was led by an Eastern Establishment wanting to remain a part of the British Empire. It was the prosperous and influential camp. The other might have been called the Moral Minority. It spoke of things like "liberty and the pursuit of happiness." With God's help the latter won. And with God's help, why shouldn't we?

Year Twenty-Eight.....Number Thirteen.....April 3, 1981

GUN CONTROL AND THE TERRORIST CONSPIRACY

It began with President Abraham Lincoln, assassinated by John Wilkes Booth on April 4, 1865. Booth was the triggerman in a Conspiracy of international proportion. Then President John Garfield was shot on July 2, 1881 by Charles Guiteau, a disappointed office-seeker who proclaimed himself a Stalwart. The Stalwarts were a radical political party led by Sen. Roscoe Conkling of New York who violently opposed the election of Garfield as president. The assassination of Garfield could be listed as the result of a Conspiracy. Next came the assassination of President William McKinley, shot on Sept. 6, 1901, and died eight days later. His assassin was Leon Czolozs, an Anarchist Conspirator. President Warren Gamaliel Harding died on Aug. 2, 1923 of "food poisoning" while in San Francisco returning from a trip to Alaska. His death occurred at the height of the notorious Teapot Dome Scandal, could have been connected with that Conspiracy, but court historians have neglected to record certain of the facts connected with his death. Franklin D. Roosevelt, while campaigning for the Presidency was the subject of an assassination attempt in Miami, Florida. Harry Truman escaped an assassin's bullet on the steps of Blair House in Washington, D.C. Gunman was part of a Conspiracy. President John Kennedy was assassinated in Dallas on Nov. 22, 1963, allegedly by Lee Harvey Oswald, a Communist sympathizer. Communism is admittedly an international Conspiracy. To hide facts that might have been brought out in an open trial, Oswald was murdered by Jack Ruby. While campaigning for the Presidency, Robert Kennedy was murdered by Sirhan Sirhan, an Arabian Conspirator. In Maryland while campaigning, George Wallace was the victim of an assassination attempt on the part of Arthur H. Bremmer, suspected of being part of a Conspiracy, but facts have been hidden. There were two attempts on the life of Gerald Ford. Then there was Martin Luther King, Malcolm X, the murders of several U.S. Ambassadors while on overseas assignments. And finally the attempted assassination of President Ronald Reagan on March 30, 1981. All of these assassinations and attempts at assassination of leading American political figures raise certain questions and create demands for certain actions.

Whenever a crime of such nature occurs, immediately an issue is raised and a question is asked. The issue: Control or Confiscation of Guns. The question: Was this crime the act of one person, or were others involved? In short, was it the result of a Conspiracy? Let's consider the issue first:

It should be sufficient to remark that the Second Amendment to the Constitution of the United States states positively that "the right of the people to keep and bear arms shall not be infringed." A more prosaic and pragmatic answer could be found in the popular bumper sticker which reads: "If Guns are Outlawed, Only Outlaws Will Have Guns." For more definitive answers, Rep. Ron Paul of Texas has just published a report titled Our Right To Own Handguns. He brings out certain facts that were never published by the CFR-controlled press or carried by the CFR-influenced wire services and the electronic networks. Instead of talking about how many people have been killed by handguns, Dr. Paul cites statistics on how many people have been saved from death, or from criminal assault, and their property safeguarded because they had handguns with which to protect themselves. This is the other side of the coin that the communications media tried to overlook. Dr. Paul gives these examples:

A 1975 study, done for the California Department of Justice, found that some 1.5 million Californians had used handguns in self defense. A 1978 survey by Pat Cadell, former President Carter's pollster, showed the 4.8 million Americans had used a handgun at least once in defense of life or property. Another 1978 survey projected that 6.2 million Americans have used a handgun to protect themselves, their families, or their property. A study by two University of Toronto professors estimates that 300,000 burglaries are deterred by U.S. handgun owners each year, most of which are never reported to the police. A study by Professor Don Kates of the U. of St. Louis Law School was concerned with women who had used handguns to protect themselves from would-be rapists. 43% of the criminals were killed or wounded. 50% were captured or driven off without a shot being fired, and 7% escaped. After a long series of brutal rapes in the Orlando, Florida area, in 1968 the police gave 6,000 women training in shooting a handgun. Afterwards, Orlando was the only city of over 100,000 people in the country to have a drop in crime rates. Rapes were down 90%, and burglaries down 24%. After the murder of several store owners in a Michigan city, the police gave similar instructions to merchants. Armed robberies dropped from 20 a month to zero.

Dr. Paul also cites some cases involving individuals, cases that "would never get printed in the New York Times or the Washington Post." In Chicago a man broke into Priscilla Johnson's apartment and threatened to rape her and kill her children. When she resisted, he stabbed her with a kitchen knife. Breaking away, she ran to her bedroom, grabbed her pistol, and shot and killed the intruder. Arthur Horning, a 70-year-old retired electrician, was attacked by vandals in his rural Maryland home. Although they stabbed him 25 times, he managed to get his small pistol and open fire. Police found the wounded criminals on his front lawn, and Mr. Horning survived. A 60-year-old grandmother Gladys O'Brien, discovered a burglar in her home and with her handgun, held him until police arrived. Two robbers entered Mary Archer's small store in rural Pennsylvania and demanded, "Give us all your money or else!" The 73-year-old Mrs. Archer reached under the counter, pointed her own pistol at the men, and asked, "Or else what?" The criminals fled. Repeated burglaries had terrorized Luise Landmesser, so she bought a pistol to keep in her Bronx, New York apartment. A few days later, she was awakened by strange noises in the living room. With one shot, the 4'7" woman killed the crowbar wielding intruder. A PCP addict tore a chainlink fencepost from the ground and crashed through the door of Mr. and Mrs. Earnest Bradley's home in Los Angeles, who were caring for their three grandchildren. Mr. Bradley wounded the attacker and neighbors held him for the police.

"No decent person likes the idea of shooting even a criminal," says Dr. Paul, "but the alternative is so much worse that we can all be very glad that so many Americans own and know how to use handguns. Where handgun ownership is high, violent crimes are much less frequent... Whether the potential victim is old, sick, or frail, the handgun makes him more than a match for the strongest, healthiest criminal. 'God made men,' said the men of the Old West, 'but Colonel Colt made them equal.'"

Dr. Paul gives the historical background to the Second Amendment. We quote: "...the Founding Fathers were familiar with the common law, which as Sir William Blackstone noted in 1765, had from time immemorial in England recognized 'the right of having and using arms for self-preservation and defense.' During the debates on the Second Amendment, an amendment was offered in the Senate to insert 'for the common defense' after 'to keep and bear arms.' It was, notes Don Feder of the Second Amendment Foundation, soundly rejected.

"The Founding Fathers did not intend to restrict gun-bearing to the armed forces. They knew the historic danger of a standing army, and proposed as a counterweight, an armed militia. 'Who are the militia?' asked Patrick Henry. 'They consist of the whole people.' Thomas Jefferson, in his Virginia Constitution, guaranteed that 'no freeman shall ever be debarred the use of fire-arms.'

"Every totalitarian government, from the Russian Communists in 1917 to Hitler to Castro makes disarming the people a first priority. It was at the top of the Ayatollah's agenda as well. With old-fashioned rifles the people of Afghanistan are taking a high toll among heavily armed Soviet troops. Think how much less likely a Soviet invasion of Poland would be, if the Poles were armed and every Soviet soldier were a sniper's target. Mr. Feder says he sleeps a little better knowing that there are 150-million guns in private hands in America. So do I." (Unquote).

As for the proposed banning of the so-called Saturday Night Special, think of it this way: the well-to-do person who can afford to pay $350 for a handgun is not affected by any such ban. But the elderly man or woman living on a fixed income or Social Security - those who are so often the victims of muggers and robbers - can't afford to spend very much for a handgun. The police admit that they can't protect them, so millions of people would be left defenseless if the Saturday Night Special were banned. Moreover, for simple self-defense, the cheap handgun is just as good as the most expensive gun, and possibly better since it is easier to aim.

So much for the phony issue of gun control. It is not guns, but criminals that must be controlled. Just as an afterthought, we might look to Switzerland as an example of gun regulation. There every man must own a rifle, and in every home there is at least one handgun. And it is said that Switzerland possesses the world's lowest violent crime rate. On the other hand, no amount of regulation would have prevented the attempted assassination of Ronald Reagan, or the wounding of the three men who suffered with him. This is especially true if the attempted assassination was the result of a Conspiracy. That brings up the supposedly controversial "Conspiracy Theory of History." We should explain that to fully develop this subject, it is going to take more than one issue of this newsletter. Regarding the events of March 30th, 1981, Attorney General William French Smith told newsmen that "we have no solid information to indicate there was more than one person involved" in the attempted assassination of President Reagan. The communications media has concentrated all its editorial and reportorial energy on trying to prove that Thomas Warnock Hinckley, Jr. was nothing more than a kook infatuated with a movie starlet who, in attempting to impress her, decided to murder a President, even if he died in the attempt. But on the other hand, there is evidence that Hinckley had joined a neo-Nazi outfit, that he had been under the care of a psychiatrist and, like Arthur Bremer of the George Wallace assassination attempt, he was a wandering misfit with an obscure background. However, there is the undeniable fact that the Hinckley family was friendly with the Bush family, and that a Hinckley son was to have dinner with a son of Bush on the very night after the assassination attempt. When publicized, the engagement was cancelled. There also is the unchallenged report broadcast by Paul Harvey, which we quote:

"Inevitably this next is going to have some very discordant overtones: The Hinckley family of Colorado is acquainted with the Bush family of Texas. . . . Obviously, this is going to lead to some suspicion, if the Hinckley family was friendly with the Bush family. And a successful assassination would have made Bush president of the United States. Neil Bush said his family made contributions to the Bush campaign and that's how the families became acquainted. But there is nothing to indicate any relationship to the crime. The coincidence must be grievous to both families." (Broadcast nationwide March 31, 1981.)

There also was that triangular squabble which involves Vice President Bush, Secretary of State Haig, and National Security Adviser Allen. This was the subject of our last report (3/27/81). Later information would seem to indicate that Haig and Bush both suspected that an emergency was about to occur, and Haig was very insistent on wanting to be named administrator of a new Crisis Management Team. There also was the strange coincidence that when the attempted assassination occurred, Bush was in Dallas. This gave Haig an opportunity to take charge and make that unconstitutional declaration about the line of succession; that there was the President, the Vice President, and then the Secretary of State. So, with the President temporarily incapacitated and the Vice President in Dallas, he, Haig, was in charge. The media made much of the goof, but even before that the Megamedia was out to get Haig. Newsweek, always dancing to the Eastern Establishment's tune, made Haig's a cover story headlined "Haig Vs. the White House," listed seven ways he had "ruffled the feathers" of Reagan, Stockman, Communist Dobrynin, Weinberger, the El Salvador apologists, the West German Foreign Minister, and the Japanese Foreign Minister. Notably, in every instance Haig was placing America First instead of the Eastern Establishment. We wouldn't have thought much of it had it not been for L.T. Patterson, a keen student of Trilateralist activities, saying in his PSL letter of March 31: "I could reverse my opinion, but it does appear that for the moment Haig is no mouthpiece for Kissinger and Rockefeller.... What convinces me... is the attack in the Washington Post on Haig's belief that the press has been utilized by the Marxists to deceive the American public... I believe the Post attack can be accepted as proof that Haig is not a front man for Trilateral interests." Right or wrong, the Megapress is criticizing Haig, extolling Weinberger, catering to Bush and ignoring whenever possible Allen, Meese, Baker, Nofziger and other non-Establishment conservatives. Notable in this respect was the Wall Street Journal of April 3 which reveals that "Discord looms at the White House while Reagan recuperates," also reports that "Weinberger's star rises as Haig falters in the competition for power." And, capping the Journal's contributions is the front page story about a visitor who is standing outside David Rockefeller's office. Rockefeller aide Joseph Reed points toward David's sanctum, speaks of "the smell of power" emanating from it and says: "That man in there is the equivalent of a head of state. He is the chairman of the board of the Eastern Establishment." Whatever else that may be said of it, the Eastern Establishment with its Council on Foreign Relations, Committee for Economic Development, Business Council, Trilateral Commission, Bilderbergers, et al, and with its control of Megabanks, Communications Media, and with its multitude of agents within the offices and agencies of the Federal Government, is a Conspiracy.

Perhaps we're wrong. But it seems to us that events of the past few weeks have been "planned that way" to convince Reagan, Haig, and all the others in high places who have been marching to some other drummer, that they'd better get in step with the Eastern Establishment's Marching Band - or else! Which makes it a Conspiracy, about which we'll have more to say in our next Report.

Year Twenty-Eight.....Number Fourteen.....April 10, 1981

ROOTS OF THE GREAT CONSPIRACY

The U.S. House of Representatives met at high noon on March 31, 1981. That was the day following the attempted assassination of President Ronald Reagan and the wounding of Press Secretary Brady, Secret Service Man McCarthy, and Police Officer Delahanty. Immediately after the opening prayer by House Chaplain James David Ford, which was for the victims and their families, the voices of various Representatives were raised in wrath, in shock, sadness, sympathy, and demands for new laws; mainly for new laws to control the sale of handguns, not for laws to control the activities of outlaw gunmen. But among those voices was that of Al Swift of Washington State who said: "Mr. Speaker, anger, deep abiding anger was what I felt that November day in 1963 when I heard 'they' had shot John Kennedy...Well, it was just yesterday that they did it again. They shot my president...."

Only one man pulled the trigger. But "they" shot my president. Thus the intimation that, even if the accused was a "loner" the action was the result of a conspiracy. John W. Hinckley, Jr. may have been just a kook infatuated with an actress to the point that he dedicated an assassination attempt to her. But there also are reports that he was associated with political extremist groups, and was preoccupied with revolutionary violence. His family denies this, and the Megamedia says they were wrong in reporting such stories. Human Events points out, however, that "the ability to confirm reports that the accused assailant had links to extreme political organizations is hampered by the fact that the FBI, under the domestic security guidelines, is unable to investigate the groups that Hinckley might have been involved with." The family's denial will put a stop to any other official action, and we can expect no further published word concerning the ties and relationship between the Hinckley family and the Bush family, and George Bush remains a breath away from the Presidency.

But whether Hinckley was a loner is really irrelevant. His actions constitute another "sign of the times." In the United States, as well as in other Bible-oriented Nations, there is a great crime wave. There is a spirit of anarchy, an epidemic of revolutionary terrorism, especially in Central America, parts of Europe and the Middle East, which amounts to what Secular Humanist H.G. Wells would have labeled an Open Conspiracy. A current example of this spirit of lawlessness in the United States: On April 7 secret service agents arrested Edward Richardson who said he was told in a dream to finish the job Hinckley left undone. He was to assassinate President Reagan. Or, failing in that, he should settle for Secretary of State Haig or Senator Helms. Another current example: President Reagan had let it be known that he would reconsider lifting the Soviet grain embargo. So, federal agents were sent to check the contents of grain elevators in Corpus Christie, Texas. While on the scene six of the great silos exploded in flames. Three persons were reported killed and 26 injured, among the latter seven federal inspectors! On the same day a similar silo explosion was reported in Nebraska, details not fully disclosed. And one more current example of reaction to the crime wave: On Tuesday, April 7, the Florida Legislature convened. In opening its first session, Governor Graham "pounded his fist and told the Florida Legislature to pass a $490 million anti-crime package that would pay for more police to arrest criminals, more prosecutors to try them and more cells to house them." That this would but treat symptoms without attacking causes is another story. But because of the massive illegal immigration that has flooded Florida, the crime rate has made of Metro-Miami the most violent-crime-ridden city in the Nation. Alarming crime rate increases also are reported in other States and cities. A recently issued U.S. Justice Department survey shows that thirty percent of American households - more than 24 million families - were "touched by crime in 1980."

Most criminals, organized or otherwise, usually commit their crimes against society for gain. For them, crime pays. Even when caught their punishment is minimal and if they do happen to spend a short time in prison, they can count it something of a refresher course in higher crime. But the revolutionary terrorists, including assassins, are of a different persuasion. They do not commit acts of violence for personal gain. If they rob a bank it is to "finance the cause," like Joseph Stalin in Russia. Revolutionaries' motives are usually of an ideological nature. Their revolutionary acts are acts of religious faith. As the Eastern Establishment Insider, James H. Billington, writes in the introduction to his voluminous and important new book, "Fire in the Minds of Men-Origins of the Revolutionary Faith":

This book seeks to trace the origins of a faith -- perhaps the faith of our time. Modern revolutionaries are believers, no less committed and intense than were the Christians or Muslims of an earlier era. What is new is the belief that a perfect secular order will emerge from the forcible overthrow of traditional authority. This inherently implausible idea gave dynamism to Europe in the nineteenth century and has become the most successful ideological export of the West to the world in the twentieth."

We shall have much to say of this book later in this series. But for the moment let us simply note that here is a Great Conspiracy, not simply against the governments of this world, but against all transcendental religions and especially against God and His Christ. There are, of course, conspiracies within conspiracies, and their motives may seem to vary. A special name and category has been assigned to those who murder political leaders. They are given the name "Assassin." The word is an English adaptation of the Arabic term which means "user of hashish." Hashish, as you know, is merely a top-grade form of marijuana; same drug, same effects on the smoker, same reactions on the part of the user, but scaled up or down depending upon the strength and purity of the weed and the amount inhaled. Back in the days of the Crusaders there existed a secret order of the Ismaili sect of the Muslims. The members of the secret order were divided into classes, or degrees, as in Masonry, Illuminism, and other esoteric societies. The most important degree in this original order from which others have copied, was that of the Devotee. Devotees were trained to murder foes of the secret society, also were hired out to aspiring tyrants who wanted their political enemies murdered. Devotees were drugged with hashish, treated to great sensual pleasures as a foretaste of the paradise they were promised if they died in the performance of their assignment. Tales of the Crusaders and the writings of Marco Polo brought the Assassins, and their original leader, The Old Man of the Mountain, into European folklore and the term "assassin" came to be applied to all who murder for political motive. Modern assassins are, as their predecessors, so dedicated to their nefarious task that they also are willing, even anxious, to die in the performance of the crime. All such men, whether loners or agents, are conspirators in the final analysis.

Before proceeding, a definition is required. The dictionary gives this definition of Conspiracy: "A combination of men for an evil purpose, an agreement between two or more persons to commit a crime in concert; as treason. A plot." A liberal intellectual, Gregor Sebba, once wrote deprecatingly and in a spirit of ridicule that "In the modern world, the Devil has all the characteristics of the medieval Devil, translated into modern terms." He suggested in sarcasm, that the Devil is at the head of "a World Conspiracy aiming at nothing less than the utter destruction of its foes, followed by world domination. The Communist Conspiracy works through espionage, sabotage and revolution; the Capitalist Conspiracy through incitement to war and through 'spies, wreckers, and saboteurs'; the Jewish Conspiracy according to Hitler works through race-mixing, cultural poisoning and warmaking against German folk... The Great Conspiracy has a secret Master Plan which may accidentally become known."

This scholar wrote far more than he understood. There is a Great Conspiracy, but it has been known by discerning Christians ever since they have been able to read Scripture. The Great Conspiracy is revealed in the very first chapters of the first Book of the Bible. As Rev. R.J. Rushdoony has written: "The Bible as a whole presents a view of history as conspiracy, with Satan and man determined to assert their 'right' to be gods, knowing, or determining, good and evil for themselves (Gen. 3:5). From beginning to end, this is the perspective of Scripture, and only a wilful misreading of it can lead to any other position."

Within the context of this Great Conspiracy, history is replete with conspiracies upon conspiracies, in multiples upon multiples. But, like Sir John Harrington's oft quoted epigram:

Treason doth never prosper, what's the reason?
For if it prosper, none dare call it treason.

Conspiracy falls into the same category; for if conspiracy prosper, none dare call it conspiracy. Or, again quoting Rev. Rushdoony: "The successful and continuing conspiracies of history are never admitted to be conspiracies. Their known activities are extolled as virtues and patriotic works, never as illicit activities." There is this other fact about conspiracies: the conspirators will deny that theirs is a conspiracy. Thus, the existence of the Illuminati is bypassed or is said to have died out in the 18th century; which is manifestly untrue because it remains the model from which many present-day conspiracies are created and operated. There is the Communist Conspiracy, but Brzezinsky chose to treat it as a natural stage in evolving history. There is the Federal Reserve Conspiracy, but not one politician in a hundred will say it is a conspiracy. There are many others, all denied by their promoters to be conspiracies; the United Nations Conspiracy, the Fabian Conspiracy, the Zionist Conspiracy, the Regional Governance Conspiracy, the Cancer Treatment Conspiracy, NEA's Conspiracy to control the care and training of the children of America, NCC's Conspiracy to organize and control the churches, and on and on.

There are many organizations and associations that promote World Government under various titles: New World Order, World Federation, Atlantic Union, the World Community, etc. But the activities of many of them came to light only in the years following WWII. At the time that we first exposed the secret meeting of a cabal of world leaders at Sea Island, Georgia in 1954, no one but the "insiders" even knew of the existence of a Bilderberger Group. Few outside the "Establishment" had ever heard of the Council on Foreign Relations in the early 60's when we collaborated with the late Mary Davison to write a series of letters about it. At about the same time Dan Smoot published his book about "The Invisible Government." Then we were led to get a copy of the late Carrol Quigley's "Tragedy and Hope," and the real exposure of the Great Conspiracy began. We wrote about it, Gary Allen wrote about it, Spotlight, American Opinion, Review of the News, other newsletter writers wrote about it. Cleon Skousen completed the work with his "The Naked Capitalist." But, note this:

It was only after an "Insider," Carroll Quigley, admitted publicly that there really was such a Great Conspiracy, that any sixable number of people began to believe in the Conspiratorial View of History. Most Americans thought that things just happened, that world events were not planned. Court historians all ridiculed what they called "the conspiracy theory," and people believed them, even people who were otherwise well informed. But when an "Insider" wrote a book admitting and explaining the Conspiracy, then people began to think.

Then came a change on the part of the Conspirators. Quigley was one of them and he approved of the Conspiracy, but he said it should not be hidden, that it should have been an Open Conspiracy from the very beginning. After that the Conspirators formed the Trilateral Commission and decided that it should not be kept a secret. It proclaimed itself publicly as an assembly of politicians, megabankers, mediacrats and academicians. Since then much has been written and published - misleading information, of course - in the controlled communications media about the Trilateralists, the CFR, even the Bilderbergers... Even the very secret and exclusive CFR began to admit women to their club. The important point we wish to make: It was not until after one of their own admitted the existence of a Conspiracy that a "moral majority" started to believe and do something about it!

Now there is a similar opportunity with regard to the second leg of that Great Conspiracy: the direct rebellion against God and His Law and attempts to "set up a perfect secular order" which "will emerge from the forcible overthrow of traditional authority." Such a Conspiracy has existed since the dawn of history, was incubated in the secret societies of Europe, educated by the Encyclopedists of the Enlightenment period, received its rules of order from Adam Weishaupt's Illuminati, tried its wings in the French Revolutions of the 18th and 19th centuries, received its marching orders from Karl Marx, and gained its first open victory under Lenin and Trotsky with the fall of the Russian Empire in 1917. All this has been faithfully recorded by honest historians; John Robison, Abbe Barruel, Nesta Webster, Leon de Poncins, many others. But, the existence of this plot as a Great Conspiracy has been denied, scoffed at, barred from mention in schools and seminaries, and "None Dared Call It Conspiracy"!

But now comes confirmation of the Conspiracy from an insider! A few weeks ago we received a personal letter from Gary North, president of the Institute for Christian Economics, editor of Remnant Review, a very active Christian patriot. He wrote: "Dear Don: I fully intend to scoop you on this one, but if I delay, at least somebody will get to it. I have found the Quigley of the 80's. The boom is 'Fire in the Minds of Men' ($25, Basic Books), by James Billington, an insider (Aspen Institute, Rhodes Scholar, Harvard, Princeton, etc.). It's dynamite. What we have always said about the occult=secret society origins of 19th century revolutionism is now documented, fully, in this book..." Gary North is right, and we'll open its pages in our next Report.

THE RELIGION OF REVOLUTION

The encyclopedist Jean Jacques Rousseau (1712-1778) said: "If there were a people of gods it would govern itself democratically." But since the people of France were not gods, "they must seek elsewhere the best form of government to suit them." The occult organizations and secret societies of the day were to take him at his word, and the direct result was the French Revolution. Nesta Webster wrote in her "History Of The French Revolution - A Study In Democracy" that "it was an attempt to realize the ideal of Rousseau...The French, so far, were not gods, but they were to be made so....But could a nation of 25,000,000 be thus transformed? To the regenerators of France it seemed extremely doubtful; already the country was rent with dissensions and any scheme for universal contentment seemed impossible of attainment. Moreover, the plan of dividing things up into equal shares presented an insuperable difficulty, for it became evident that amongst a population of this size there was not enough money, not enough property, not enough employment, not even at this moment enough bread to go round; no one would be satisfied with his share and instead of universal contentment, universal dissatisfaction would result. What was to be done? The population was too large for the scheme of the leaders to be carried out successfully, therefore either the scheme must be abandoned or the population must be diminished. To this conclusion the surgeons operating the State had at last been brought. In vain they had amputated the gangrened limb of the nobility and the clergy, had paralysed the brain by attacking the intellectual classes, had turned (as in Aesop's fable) upon the stomach, that is to say, the industrial system, by which the whole body of the State was fed, and denied it sustenance - all these means to restore health of the State had failed, and they were now reduced to a last and desperate expedient: the size of the whole body must be reduced. In other words, a plan of systematic depopulation must be carried out all over France.... Thus Courtois, in his report on the papers seized at Robespierre's house after Thermidor wrote: 'These men, in order to bring us to the happiness of Sparta, wished to annihilate twelve to fifteen millions of French people'."

About a century later H.G. Wells, who quit the Fabian Socialists because, he said their methods were too slow and not sufficiently violent, was to echo the sentiments of the French revolutionaries. He wrote: "The men of the new Republic will not be squeamish either in facing or inflicting death....They will have an ideal that will make killing worthwhile; like Abraham, they will have the faith to kill, and they will have no superstitions about death....They will hold, I anticipate, that a certain portion of the population exists only on sufferance out of pity and patience, and on the understanding that they do not propagate; and I do not foresee any reason to suppose that they will hesitate to kill when the sufferance is abused....All such killings will be done with an opiate....If deterrent punishments are used at all in the code of the future, the deterrent will neither be death, nor mutilation of the body, but good scientifically caused pain."

Compare the above with Bertrand Russell's statement about the use of drugs, and George Bernard Shaw's suggested painless liquidation of those who cannot serve the Socialist State; and you will see that there is a time-chain that links this depopulation theme; from Adam Weishaupt of the German Illuminati, to Maximilien Robespierre of the French Revolution, to Vladimir Lenin, Leon Trotsky and Joseph Stalin of the Bolsheviks, to Mao Tse-tung of Red China and finally to the Communist trained and supported terrorists gangs which operate throughout the world today.

This historical and conspiratorial linkage of the approval and justification of mass murder by revolutionaries is but one example of the connections between the French Revolution of 1789 and the Russian Revolution of 1917. In our last Report we referred to James H. Billington, who has written a 650-page, well documented book, "Fire in the Minds of Men," which proves the linkage among conspirators from 1776 to 1917. His book is important because it was written by an "insider," a court historian, a man approved by the Eastern Establishment (itself a conspiracy), and one of a crowd of intellectuals that has always denied, ridiculed, scoffed at any mention of the word Conspiracy in any historical context. Billington's qualifications as a historian and scholar are unimpeachable. He is a Rhodes Scholar, taught history at Harvard and Princeton for seventeen years, has served as chairman of the Fulbright Scholarship Program, is the current director of the Woodrow Wilson Center for International Studies which is located in the Smithsonian Institute Building in Washington, D.C. When he decided to write this book, Billington was sponsored by the Aspen Institute for Humanistic Studies, received financial support from the Rockefeller and other foundations. The publisher, Basic Books, is a project affiliated with the Council on Foreign Relations, publishes many of their more important books. We have found one review of Billington's book, written by a free-lance writer, Dale LaBelle, and published in the Christian Science Monitor of February 2, 1981. The reviewer is correct and factual, when he writes that Billington "focuses on revolution which, like a subsoil forest fire, licked upward repeatedly in Europe from 1789 (France) to 1917 (Russia). Occultism, he finds, was the tinderbox in which the sparks of revolution ignited.

Freemasonry and other secret hierarchical organizations provided the model for a series of interlocking political conspiracies. The Illuminist Order, founded in Bavaria by Adam Weishaupt in 1776, went further than most in molding a conspiracy to overturn the monarchical order.... Throughout the 19th century similar organizational projects attracted intellectuals who influenced the newly literate masses through the first mass medium, journalism."

Well and good so far as the mere outline of the history of the period goes. But then reviewer LaBelle becomes "Establishmentarian" in his criticism and asserts that "Billington's argument isn't really persuasive in demonstrating uninterrupted linkage among conspirators between 1776 and 1917." We are not quite sure what LaBelle means when he tells us that "complex historical process cannot be reduced to organizational fetishism or seductively simplified as representing fragments of a Great Conspiracy." We think he means to say that Billington is right in his historical analysis, but wrong when he starts to write about any continuing Great Conspiracy linking Weishaupt to the French revolutionaries of 1789 and 1848, to Marx and finally to Lenin. You see, the conspiratorial view of history is anathema to the Socialists, the Eastern Establishmentarians, or to anyone intimately involved in any phase of The Great Conspiracy. "Things just happened that way," is what they would have us believe. And when one of their own, like F.D.R., or Carroll Quigley or James Billington, start exposing conspiracies and telling people "it was planned that way," then the Conspirators really get upset. They are discredited, silenced or their works burned. They couldn't do too much about it when F.D.R. hinted of things being "planned that way." He was too valuable to them so they said he was "just joshing the press." When Carroll Quigley exposed the "financial conspiracy" in his book "Tragedy and Hope," he was discredited, copies of the book were called back, bought up to prevent any wide distribution (we have a copy from which we often quote), and the book went out of print under highly suspect conditions. Quigley did get off one final blast before he died suddenly in 1977 in a posthumously published book titled "The Anglo American Establishment," he said "This secret society is not a childish thing...it does exist and hold secret meetings...agreeing with the group on goals, I cannot agree with them on methods...In this group were persons who must command the admiration and affection of all who know of them. On the other hand, in this group were persons whose lives have been a disaster to our way of life. Unfortunately, the influence of the latter kind has been stronger...."

Now James H. Billington has written a book in which he uses up 140 pages of fine-print documentation in his 650-page book to provide unchallengeable proof that there is a Revolutionary Conspiracy, a continuing and uninterrupted conspiracy stretching from Adam Weishaupt in 1776 to Vladimir Lenin in 1917. As his book becomes more popular we can expect more reviews discrediting it or complete silence regarding it - or a demand that Billington recant or else.

It is notable that, in LaBelle's review of the book, there is a glaring omission: There is no comment on the chief claim made by Billington, that there was and is a religious fanaticism which impels these revolutionaries to commit murder on a wholesale scale, destroy representative governments, do away with the last vestiges of Christian civilization, and wipe out all belief in a Transcendent Godhead. Billington defines this as "The Revolutionary Faith...the belief that a perfect secular order will emerge from the forcible overthrow of traditional authority." He isn't against this faith, he just explains it, and believes that "this is perhaps the faith of our time." Since this Revolutionary Faith is so very similar to the religion we know as Secular Humanism, perhaps he is right.

We should like to add a supplement to Billington's "Origins of the Revolutionary Faith," by referring again to Rousseau and his fellow "Encyclopedists." They all - Diderot, d'Alembert, Montesquieu, Turgot, Quesnay, Voltaire and Rousseau - were thoroughgoing materialists. Materialism is the belief that all existence is material, that life and consciousness both came about through an evolutionary process by accident, and that man became the highest form of life simply by accident. Any differences between people have arisen as a result of environmental conditions, individualism is just an illusion, and we are all just "cogwheels in the huge machine of nature". All transcendent power is denied, and if there is any such thing as a god, then that would be the perfected man. Having no religious belief as we would define the term, these materialists had to seek out something to replace that lack, for all men must believe in something. So, in Billington's words, "they accepted 'ideologies' as a secular surrogate to religious belief." Such "ideologies" were inspired in and promoted by the leaders of secret societies, by Weishaupt's Illuminism (Seekers of Illumination) and by a kind of worship of nature, especially of fire and alchemy. "The heart of revolutionary faith, like any faith, is fire," writes Billington. "Ordinary material transformed into extraordinary form, quantities of warmth suddenly changing the quality of substance. If we do not know what fire is, we know what it does. It burns. It destroys life; but it also supports it as a source of heat, light, and - above all - fascination....The flame of faith began when some European aristocrats transferred their lighted candles from Christian altars to Masonic lodges. The flame of occult alchemists, which had promised to turn dross into gold, reappeared at the center of new 'circles' seeking to recreate a golden age: Bavarian Illuminists conspiring against Jesuits, French Philadelphians against Napoleon, Italian charcoal burners against the Hapsburgs..."

All these, Billington indicates, were conspiracies against what he calls traditional authority. All were for the supposed purpose of creating a new world order in which – the Conspirators claimed – liberty, equality, and fraternity would prevail. But, before the New Order could be established the Old Order must be abolished. To accomplish this, Conspirators have adopted the plans prepared by a German professor and written into his Code of the Illuminati. In occult terms, this plan conformed to the six points of the kabbalistic star:

1. Abolition of all ordered governments.
2. Abolition of inheritance.
3. Abolition of private property.
4. Abolition of patriotism.
5. Abolition of family.
6. Abolition of religion.

The plan included these basis "rules for revolution":

First. "It is not the people who prepare revolutions. One has to prepare the people for revolt."

Second: "There must be systematic attempts to create grievances in order to exploit them."

Third: "Exploit these grievances not to bring about reform, but to increase popular discontent, and thus bring themselves (the Conspirators) into power."

To achieve these purposes, Weishaupt wrote to an Illuminist who was going to France to recruit Illuminists: "It is also necessary to gain the common people to our order. The great means to that end is influence in the schools.....We must acquire the direction of education, of church management, of the professional chairs and of the pulpit."

These were the aims of the Conspirators who led the Revolutions in France in 1789 and 1848. Karl Marx rewrote them into the Communist Manifesto. These aims were carried out in the first constitution published in Russia after that country was invaded by the Bolsheviks. Many of these aims have already been achieved in the United States, still constitute the "marching orders" of those Communist trained and commanded terrorist and revolutionary gangs that are oppressing and attempting to destroy traditional authority today.

But that this has been an uninterrupted conspiracy stemming from the Illuminati has been hidden because, as Illuminist Renner said when captured and put on trial in Bavaria: "The Illuminati fear nothing so much as being recognized under this name." So, the Society of the Illuminati, which had already concealed itself within the degrees of French Grand Orient Free Masonry, adopted new names, but remains a part of the uninterrupted conspiracy that James H. Billington describes in "Fires in the Minds of Men – Origins of the Revolutionary Faith." (Basic Books, 10 East 53rd St., New York, NY 10022. $25.)

What Billington writes is important because he is an "insider" exposing a conspiracy and a new "religion of our time" of which he seems to approve. As an added contribution to knowledge of this Great Conspiracy, he explains how the slogan "Liberty, Equality and Fraternity" caused a division in revolutionary ranks which exists today; and which we shall discuss in our next Report.

THE PEOPLE AND THE PLAN

Obvious to all who can see, read, or hear must be the sobering knowledge of the alarming increase - on a global scale - of the incidence of murder, arson, skyjacking, sabotage, rioting, insurrection, armed invasion, war, revolution and planned terrorism. It would be well to warn the legitimate world leaders to "beware of the first of May." Like Caesar's Ides of March, May Day is an international call of distress. It has come to mean danger, distress, violence and panic. History tells us that it all began peacefully enough. May Day was the time of the spring festival of fertility in ancient Egypt. The Romans, who were always eager to adopt other people's gods and customs because that was good foreign policy, chose May Day as the time for a spring festival honoring their goddess Flora. In medieval England the chief feature of this spring festival was a dance around a beribboned Maypole. The real trouble with Mayday began in 1889 when the delegates to the Second Socialist International named the first of May their International Labor Day. It has become a very important holiday in the USSR and other Communist-dominated countries. Supposedly to counteract such observances in the United States, May Day became known as Law Day. But it is not generally known that the Socialists adopted May Day as a great holiday in honor of the publication by Adam Weishaupt and four fellow-conspirators, of the Code of the Illuminati. That happened on May 1, 1776.

Weishaupt's Bavarian Illuminati no longer exists under that name. However, the spirit of the Code lives on, and the purposes of the secret society remain at the heart of every Communist and terrorist movement in the world of today. The original oath taken by Illuminists after three years probation is still the model for oaths taken by such groups as Manson's Family, the Weather Underground, victims of the Jonestown mass suicide, and similar cults, sects, and dedicated Communist-trained terrorist groups. Here is the original Illuminist oath, with added bracketed remarks to explain the occult meaning of some of the words and terms:

"In the name of the son crucified [the illuminized man], swear to break the bonds which still bind you to your father, mother, brothers, sisters, wife, relatives, friends, mistresses, kings, chiefs, benefactors, and all persons to whomsoever you may have promised faith, obedience, and service. Name and curse the place where you were born, so that you may dwell in another sphere, to which you will attain only after having renounced this pestilential globe, vile refuse of the heavens. From this moment you are free from the so-called oath to your country and laws. Swear to reveal to the new chief, recognized by you, what you may have seen or done, intercepted, read or heard, learned or surmised, and also seek and spy out what your eyes cannot discern. Honour and respect the aqua tofana [a deadly, undetectable poison] as a sure, prompt, and necessary means of purging the globe by death of those who seek to villify the truth and seize it from your hands. Fly from Spain, Naples, and all accursed lands [places where secret societies had been stamped out]; finally fly from the temptation to reveal what you may hear, for the thunder is no prompter than the knife which awaits you in whatever place you may be. Live in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost [this is the trinity of Illuminism: the father, the generating fire; the mother, the great mother nature, reproducing all things; the son, the manifestation, the vital fluid, the astral light of Illuminism - a direct and deliberate perversion of the Christian Holy Trinity].

An initiate and encyclopedist living at that time, Hoene Wronski, is credited with writing the following about Illuminism: "The name Illuminati... appears to have been introduced only about 1775 by the secret society which was founded by Weishaupt, and developed, it is said, by Baron Knigge. But... it must have existed from the greatest antiquity. And actually, the mystic affiliations under the Pyramids of Egypt, the esoteric sect of Pythagoras, the astrologers or mathematicians of Rome in the time of Domitian, the House of Wisdom of Cairo, the Isamilis or Assassins, Companions of the Old Man of the Mountain, the Templars, the Rose-Croix... appear to form but an uninterrupted chain of these superior affiliations... under the name of Illumines."

So much for allegations regarding this uninterrupted chain extending from the time of Babel to the time of Weishaupt. The chain also remained unbroken from Weishaupt to Lenin, Trotsky and Stalin, according to James H. Billington who documents this in his book "Fire in the Minds of Men." He wrote: "Lenin acted as if his Bolshevik faction was in fact the organ of consciousness of the Proletariat... Just as a mysterious transformation of personal identity was thought to have occurred upon entering the inner circle of the original Bavarian Illuminists, so upon entering Lenin's party 'any distinction between workers and intellectuals must be completely obliterated'." (p. 464). He also insists that "Germany, not France... gave birth to the sweeping, modern idea of revolution as a secular upheaval.... This concept was transported to France by Count Mirabeau.... In France, the publication by the Bavarian police of Weishaupt's correspondence and other documents in 1787 created more fascination than fear. The decisive book in popularizing the Illuminist idea was Count Mirabeau's 'The Prussian Monarchy Under Frederick the Great'.... Nicholas Bonneville was, however, the decisive channel of Illuminist influence (pp. 94-95-96).

Billington carefully traces the Illuminist chain through the second French Revolution which began in 1848, its influence on Marx, Blanc and other Communist leaders of that period. Finally, he devotes several pages to the career of Rosa Luxemburg, the Polish Jewess who led a revolution in Germany and was the most influential of all the women who were attracted to revolutionism. She headed an organization which she called the Spartacus League (Spartacusbund) which took its name from that adopted as an alias by Weishaupt when he created the Order of the Illuminati. He took the name from Spartacus, the gladiator-slave who led a historic revolution against Roman authorities in 73 B.C.

"Rosa Luxemburg," Billington wrote, "stood in a prophetic line of revolutionary women who renounced both home and country in search of the promised land. The list stretches from Etta Palm, a Dutch woman in Paris; through Flora Tristan, a Peruvian in Lyon; to Saint-Simonians in Egypt; to Francis Wright, the Scottish wife of a Frenchman on the American frontier; to Russians in Switzerland; on to the Polish-Jewish leader who sought to replicate the Russian Revolution in Germany." Billington also notes that "women played a major role in the Paris Commune... the 'women incendiaries', who allegedly set fire to Paris... the Union of Women and the Montmartre Women's Vigilance Committee... The final plans for the assassination of Tsar Nicholas II (March 1, 1881), were supervised by a frail, 26-year-old blonde, Sophia Perovskaya... A male revolutionary observed that 'women are more cruel than we men;' and this tended to be true in fantasy as well as in fact." A documentary reference in the book adds that "almost 30 percent of the women terrorists in the Social Revolutionary Party (in Russia) were Jewish." Also: "The March Revolution in St. Petersburg (1917) was triggered by a mass demonstration for International Women's Day. The January upheaval in Berlin (1919) was ended by the murder of the only revolutionary personality of the era to rival Lenin in stature: Rosa Luxemburg." On the broader question of what he calls "the motivation of Jews in the revolutionary tradition," Billington has little to say, other than to point out that Zionism "formed an integral part of the revolutionary movement." But he does go so far as to explain that "The German (Illuminist) virus reached Russia largely through the mass-based Social Democratic movements which developed within the western parts of the Soviet Empire.... Among the first bearers of infection were the energetic Jewish workers. Their international connections and German-like Yiddish language assured easy and early exposure to German ideas.... Some Jews turned to their own, intense form of nationalism, Zionism... Other Jews found a prophetic alternative in the General Union of Jewish Workers in Russia and Poland, better known as the Bund... and was at the turn of the century the best organized Social Democratic organization in the Russian Empire." Here lies an important link in the unbroken chain of Revolutionary movements, and even though he is an insider, it is likely that Billington will be declared anti-semitic because of his sparing mention of this historical fact.

Yet another link in the chain has been the revolutionist's eagerness to adopt geometric forms and geographical places as symbols. Their model "utopia" is almost always an island, Corsica having been a favorite. The secret meeting places of revolutionaries were often given the names of islands. Nuclear organizations were called "circles," the illuminized man was pictured as a pentagram, etc. Billington observes: "In building their nuclear organizations, early revolutionaries showed a mania for triangular forms [remember Kissinger's Triangular Constellation and Brzezinski's Trilateral Commission?—Ed.] The original Illuminist idea of a nine-man circle was soon discarded as too susceptible to police penetration and subsequent plans for reorganization broke the circles down into three-man triangles. One man from an inner group was to recruit two from an outer group for apprenticeship, and an almost indefinite chain of interconnected organizations could then be formed. Any one member need know only two others - from one group either below or above - outside his three-man cell.... This intimate and relatively secure triangular form of organization has recurred in modern times; in Vietnam, Algeria, and... in the Soviet Union... This triangular method of organization remained (and still remains—Ed.) a basic form of enforcing conspiratorial security.... One man in each large group formed the connecting triangle with one other secret representative from a group at his own level and one connecting representatives to both of them from a higher level." (Unquote). Here we can see the Communist "cell" formation used in the United States during the time of Alger Hiss, Harry Dexter White, the Ware cell, et al, best described by Whittaker Chambers in his autobiography "Witness." This conspiratorial method for maintaining both security and anonymity still prevails and prevents us from knowing just "who" are at the head, within the inner sanctum, of the Great Conspiracy. We know of the organizations that harbor and act as fronts for the Conspirators: CFR, TLC, Bilderbergers, WCC and NCC and scores of others. And we also know the names of many of the front men who act and speak for the Great Conspiracy such as Rockefeller and his agents, directors of certain tax-exempt foundations, academicians, international bankers and lawyers, etc. But the triangular form of organization and modern adaptations of it still hide many of them.

* * * * *

The rest of the story has been told many times, in many ways, by many people deriving their information from many sources: How International Finance has supported and maintained the Communist Conspiracy from its very beginning;

How the efforts toward a direct Communist takeover from within was thwarted by Senators McCarthy, McCarran and others, even Congressman Nixon playing a part; How the Conspirators then began working toward a "merger" with the Soviet Union; How the various Conspiracies aiming for the creation of a New World Order have continued; etc. But one important part of the story has been neglected, and James Billington lays the foundation for its telling in one chapter of his book, "National vs. Social Revolution." After Napoleon Bonaparte put a temporary stop to Socialism in Europe by creating a dictatorship, the remaining socialist revolutionaries began arguing about the meanings and order of importance of the three words in the slogan "Liberty, Equality, Fraternity." They were agreed on the importance of liberty, however impossible of attainment it might be under socialism. But they differed in the meaning and relative importance of equality and fraternity. Those who thought that fraternity should come first translated the word to mean "national brotherhood," or National Socialism. But the promoters of equality thought in universal terms, disdained nationalism and thought the Social (ist) Revolution should be waged on a world-wide scale, thus making all people "equal," regardless of origin, color, creed, or place of residence. Thus was developed what has been called National Socialism, and International Socialism. This was the chief point of argument between Stalin and Trotsky after the death of Lenin. Stalin insisted on Socializing the USSR first, then going after other countries, one by one. But Trotsky wanted to create a One World Dictatorship of the Proletariat, by waging an immediate world-wide revolution. This "internationalist" concept is what caused Tito of Yugoslavia, Hoxma of Albania, Mao Tse-tung of China and Ho Chi Minh of North Vietnam to establish forms of National Socialism before "going internationalist." Mussolini's Corporate Socialism and Hitler's National Socialism also were examples of the "National Brotherhood" concept. Of course, Soviet Russia became "internationalist" following WWII, but did it on a nation-by-nation basis, also trains, equips, and supplies guerrilla forces, terrorist groups, and surrogate troops to prepare nations for the takeover. This long-standing argument on National vs. Social Revolution (National Communism vs. International Communism), was what caused the development of a variety of forms of Socialism in Western Europe, including Fabian Socialism in the United Kingdom and later in the United States.

In 1879 the aging Karl Marx sent a message from London to the Socialist Internationale meeting in Geneva, in which he said the English-speaking people would never make their own revolution, that foreigners would have to make it for them. Perhaps this has been the reason for the overrunning of both Britain and America with foreigners, and for the terrorist activities which have followed. But Marx overlooked the fact that there is such a thing as a silent revolution, the undermining of a Nation's institutions from within. That is what the Fabian Socialists are out to accomplish. Persuasion, education, legislation, gradualism, these comprise their conspiratorial program. For 50 years they have been winning; final victory was almost theirs. But now has come the Great Awakening, a potential turning of the tide. So, leftists scream against Christians, protest the curtailing of give-away programs that breed Socialism and militant women's groups storm Congress pleading death for infants and life for murderers. But, if you think these Conspirators are going to win, read the Second Psalm, and be glad you're on the Lord's side.

BUDGET AND TAXES - THE GRIM REALITY

Ronald Reagan was at his histrionic best. It was his finest hour. He received, and he deserved, a standing ovation from assembled Senators and House Members, appointed officials and honored guests. It is our opinion that not since that "stab in the back" speech by Franklin Delano Roosevelt, has there been such a dramatic setting, such a polished presentation, and such an enthusiastic reception of a Presidential sales pitch. There seemed to be universal and unparalleled acceptance of President Reagan, but not of his program. Many of those in the captive audience felt Reagan's program far too radical, many felt it to be not radical enough. But the dissenters held their peace and applauded. Because his rejection of the sick society syndrome sounded exactly the right note; especially when he recalled the sacrifices to duty of Tim McCarthy, Tom Delahanty and Jim Brady, and the space-leap of the shuttling Columbia. And the President pulled no punches when he said: "It has been half a year since the election that charged all of us in this government with the task of restoring our economy. Where have we come in these six months? Inflation, as measured by the Consumer Price Index, has continued at a double-digit rate. Mortgage interest rates have averaged almost 15 percent for these six months, preventing families across America from buying homes. There are still almost eight million people unemployed."

No uneasiness in the audience so far. But when President Reagan started to insist upon the acceptance of his total program, then came some doubt and disagreement, and a look of dismay spread across the face of House Speaker Tip O'Neill, who had said previously that he didn't think the Reagan plan could be defeated in the House. Another Congressman who is as far to the right as Tip is to the left, had commented that "The momentum of government growth is like a trailer truck speeding out of control down a mountain. President Reagan has been put in the driver's seat, but the brakes don't work very well. The President has been making heroic efforts, but unfortunately the administration's new economic policy of lower taxes, decreased spending, and tight money is somewhat less than advertised."

Complaints from the right are concerned mostly with delayed or unkept promises. The New Right points out that considerable could have been saved if the Department of Energy had been abolished, as Reagan had promised. The same goes for the NEA's Department of Education, the elimination of which was to be a top priority. There also are complaints about the continual reappointment of former Nixon-Ford-Carter appointees. Latest example is Eugene Rostow to be director of the United States Arms Control and Disarmament Agency. This is one of those agencies that should have been abolished long ago. To demand billions more for defense and continue to spend millions on what is little more than planned unilateral disarmament, is ridiculous. And the appointment of one of the Rostow brothers to head such an agency should be unthinkable. Like his brother Walt, Eugene Rostow is a member of the CFR, was an undersecretary in Lyndon Johnson's State Department. Perhaps the kindest thing we can say about him is that he isn't quite as smart and well trained as his brother Walt, who received his indoctrination as a Rhodes Scholar.

There is an even more serious complaint from those who understand the danger of Regional Government. Ronald Reagan was a proponent and activist in this particular plan for creating a New World Order. As President, he hasn't changed in this regard. On April 8th the Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations (ACIR) issued the following press release: "President Ronald Reagan has named James G. Watt, Secretary of the Department of the Interior, chairman of the Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations. Secretary Watt replaces Abraham D. Beame of New York City who resigned last month. The president also named to the Commission: Samuel R. Pierce, Jr., Secretary of the Department of Housing & Urban Development; and Richard S. Williamson, Assistant to the President for Intergovernmental Affairs."

President Reagan did keep one campaign promise that has brought criticism. The lifting of the grain embargo to the Soviet Union proved unpopular, even to our NATO allies, who believed that wheat should have been used as a weapon, along with our supplying of advanced technical information and equipment. We give them the things they need to build the world's most powerful military organization, and then complain because they build it. And we give them wheat, which the Soviets use as a trade-off with their satellites who produce ships, small armaments and ammunition for that Soviet military machine. Selling the Soviets grain is an indirect way of selling them guns and bombs. Francois de Rose, France's Ambassador to NATO from 1970 to 1975, offered this opinion: "The Soviet Union occupies one sixth of the world's land mass and disposes of considerable areas that are among the most fertile in the world. In the last century Russia was the wheat reservoir of Europe. Today...the Soviet Union out of ideological obstinacy maintains an economic regime which makes it incapable of even feeding itself....The West...is morally guilty when it agrees to sell to the Soviet Union...It was shocking to see the substantial increase of some Western European countries' trade with the Soviet Union in 1980 - the very year Afghanistan was invaded!" It seemed equally shocking that the US would sell grain to the USSR while that invasion of Afghanistan continued.

Then there was a campaign promise that President Reagan wanted to keep and ran into a buzz saw of opposition from the Zionist Lobby because of it. Saudi Arabia had been promised five AWACS radar command posts plus the missiles and long-range fuel tanks for the 62 F15 fighters on order. The Saudis made it quite clear that they might use the sale of oil as a weapon against us if we failed to keep our promise, might even be forced to buy weapons from the Soviets. But when the Reagan Administration announced that the AWACS were to be delivered as promised, the Zionist Lobby was aghast, the Senate was intimidated, Haig backed down and said delivery would be delayed, Reagan made restitution by reintroducing Jimmy Carter's "human rights" theme into an impromptu talk he gave at a memorial commemoration of the alleged Holocaust. This action caused Defense Secretary Weinberger to say his boss didn't really mean it when he imitated Carter. The political fumbling is beginning to tarnish the hero image that was our President's as a result of the attempt to assassinate him. It's developing into a kind of Reagan retreat.

DAVID ROCKEFELLER SAYS GOODBYE....last week Rockefeller retired, and at his last annual meeting there was hardly a discouraging word. The 500 shareholders in attendance gave him a standing ovation, and many - including a Japanese who spoke through a translator - rose to hail Chase's Caesar. The 65-year-old chairman responded in kind....The only real surprise came from Willard C. Butcher, Rockefeller's successor as chairman. Butcher announced that Rockefeller will replace former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger as chairman of Chase's International Advisory Committee, which meets twice a year to counsel the bank on foreign affairs. Kissinger will remain on the committee and will also advise the bank independently. (Newsweek, 5/4/81.)

But the less obvious manner of the Reagan retreat concerns the very tax and spending program which he has undoubtedly sold to Congress. We are told that this is a radical departure from the practices of the last fifty years. But it is not that at all. By economists and hard money proponents who supposedly know what they are talking about, these supposed spending cuts aren't really cuts, but just "a token decrease in the proposed increase" in spending. Also, if all of Reagan's proposed tax cuts are actually approved by Congress, taxes are still going to go up about $130 billion in the next fiscal year. Please note that we're dealing here with figures and estimates, statistics and extrapolations, and such indefinites can be interpreted in any number of different ways. For example, President Reagan says the liberal Democrats are using a different method of calculation to arrive at their projections, while the Liberals insist that Reagan's figures lie. In fact, the idea of a "Balanced Budget" has been a grand deception ever since the federal government went into the insurance and fixed future payments business. The budget represents only a portion of what the government spends every year. Besides, since inflation became perpetual and overspending of income became routine, estimates are almost always off, and statistics can lie. But, the way Rep. Ron Paul diagnoses the situation is "easier and honester" than the professional economists. So, we'll quote him.

* * * * *

The (proposed) tax cut was supposed to be retroactive to January 1st, but this was changed to July 1st because the government "needs the revenues." I doubt if this need will be any less in July. In fact, it may be greater. If there is an increase in unemployment, "uncontrollable" expenditures will rise, further magnifying the "need" for more revenues. If the (proposed tax) cuts are not passed, taxes will increase by $192 billion between 1980 and 1982. A $130 billion increase is better than $192 billion, but hardly represents a significant change in direction.

Let's take the case of a family of four earning $20,000 per year. In 1980 that family paid $3,239 in federal income and Social Security taxes. With a 10% inflation rate, that family will need $30,000 just to stay even by 1984. With the cuts, this family's taxes would increase from $3,239 to $4,864. (Even worse, without the cuts, the bill would zoom to $5,927.) ... Without the proposed tax cuts, this family's taxes will increase 83%. With the cuts, their tax bill still will increase 50%.

In 1980, the federal government spent $580 billion, with a deficit of $60 billion. Under the administration's new plan - if the radical cuts are imposed - the government will spend $695 billion in 1982, with a deficit of $45 billion (which is probably underestimated). Raising expenditures by $115 billion also is no significant change in direction.

Our first substantive vote in the Congress this year was to raise the national debt limit by $50 billion, to $985 billion. In 1980 - the last time the debt limit was raised - all Republicans voted against the increase. This year only 36 of the 192 Republicans voted no, and the increase easily passed with Democratic support. We were told this vote, the largest increase in history, showed "legislative efficiency" for the new officials who requested the boost. The plan now is to raise the debt automatically as part of the budget process, so Congressmen are spared the "embarrassment" of voting for it.

ABBIE HOFFMAN, the former Yippie leader and 1960s counter-culture guru, who came out of hiding after seven years, began serving a three-year prison term in New York... He was holding only a Chinese puzzle and a copy of the recently published book, "Fire in the Minds of Men." Inside the book was a small hacksaw blade. Hoffman said he didn't think the authorities would let him keep the blade, but he felt better carrying it. (From an item in the Great Falls (Montana) Tribune, 4/22/81. We have just completed a three-part series dealing with this book and the religion of revolution which it extols.)

The off-budget deficit was $14 billion in 1980, and it will be $24 billion in 1981, with a proposed (and probably unrealistic) $18 billion in 1982. These deficits are never included in the official budget figures, but they are reflected in the increasing national debt. There is never a vote on these deficits, and there is no reduction in this dangerous area - only some nibbling at the proposed and built-in increases. This too is hardly a radical departure from the status quo of tax and tax, spend and spend, elect and elect.

Alan Greenspan maintains that the most significant cause of inflation, over and above the deficits, is the federal government's loan guarantee programs. Guaranteed and direct loans by the federal government now total $600 billion - and whether the credit is created to fund the deficit, or for an Export-Import Bank subsidy, or a student loan, the result is always more inflation. In 1980, these loans and loan guarantees increased by $131 billion. In 1981 they will go up by $140 billion, and the optimistic figure for 1982 is $128 billion - hardly a reassurance that we "have a handle on inflation."

All this talk of cuts is interrupted only by calls for increased military spending. Under the administration's plan, the 1981 military budget of $162 billion will soar to $343 billion in 1986. And in 1982 alone, military outlays will increase by $36 billion. Since cost overruns are the norm in military contracts, all these figures are probably very conservative. These expenditures are called defense, but they have little to do with what should be the major purpose of the federal government: national defense. As retired Major General John Singlaub has pointed out, we have no anti-missile systems, virtually no anti-aircraft or bomber defenses, and gaping holes in our radar. "The Soviets could bomb us with cargo planes," he notes. Instead of building the anti-missile and anti-bomber defenses we need, the government is spending even more to police the world. More than half the military budget, for example, is devoted to the protection of West Germany and Japan - countries that can certainly afford to pay their own way. If we spent our Defense Department budget on defense, we could cut expenditures and vastly strengthen our defenses....

In all the economic discussions in Washington, monetary policy is barely mentioned. And when it is, the only two alternatives are Keynesianism and monetarism. Officially sound money is not even on the agenda for discussion. (However, at a private breakfast with an extremely high Fed official, I heard him ask his assistant the first question of the day "What's the price of gold?")... Although there are gold sympathizers in the administration - Dave Stockman, for example, we hear no public discussion of the only solution to the monetary crisis. Yet we are fast approaching the time when the institution of a hard money system will be absolutely necessary to preserve our freedom.

We need drastic cuts in the budget. But these cuts will never be made while the consensus in Washington holds that government exists to intervene in our lives and redistribute wealth, rather than to protect our liberties... Our job is to generate support for these ideals, the only ones compatible with a peaceful, prosperous America."

A NEW MEGABANKER CONSPIRACY

Have you wondered why the USSR, whose actions in Afghanistan have been so vicious and inhuman, has delayed any invasion of Poland or any punishment of its citizens who are struggling not merely for workers's rights, but for actual independence from totalitarian enslavement? One possible answer: The USSR must wait until after June 1 before punishing Poland. That's the date when its debts can be assumed by the Federal Reserve System. Thus Poland's debts - some $24 billion - can be paid to the Bankers by the people of these United States! And Poland will be free and clear of the debt. Sound fantastic? Well, it's true. And it's a rather long and complicated story about an International Bankers' Conspiracy which involves, among others:

- * David Rockefeller, former president of Chase Manhattan Bank, and now that banking corporation's foreign minister;
- * A.W. Clausen, former president of Bank America, to become president of the World Bank on July 1.
- * Paul Volcker, chairman of the board of the Federal Reserve Corporation;
- * The Congress of the United States which passed legislation making the conspiracy possible and legal.

The story really begins with the end of World War II, the creation of the UN, and the Invisible Government's decision to dismember all of the empires of the world except the USSR, which has been permitted to expand, almost without restraint or hindrance. Scores of regions and territories were torn from the control of stable and humane governments, and set up as independent and supposedly self-governing mini-states and nations. This occurred particularly in Africa and Southeast Asia where there were untapped resources that could be exploited by Multinational Corporations. To assist in this development, these new governments were encouraged to borrow huge sums from Western Banks, at nominal interest rates and repayment plans. According to usually reliable sources, these "Third World" Nations borrowed some $500 billion.

However, for reasons which we shall not go into at the present time, most of these mini-states began to find it impossible to meet their obligations when the bills came due; couldn't even pay the interest on the loans. But the Megabankers were ~~not~~ about to write off $500 billion plus interest in bad debts. They devised a scheme whereby these huge loans could be bought up by the Federal Reserve Corporation, and the loans repaid by the American people through a "monetizing" of the debts! Beginning next June 1, the Fed will have the power to "buy the debts" of any U.S. Corporation or foreign government that cannot or will not pay its own debts!

This all came about by means of special amendments that were written into the Monetary Control Act of 1980 (PL.96.221). As Lawrence Patterson explains in his PSL Newsletter of April 30, 1981: "The Monetary Control Act is extremely voluminous. It covers 9 titles, 62 pages of text: and...only 2 of the titles were debated in Congress! Congressman Ron Paul was able to knock out the worst provisions - including the Fed's purchasing of foreign debt from the New York Banks..." But, and we'll let Edward Orr in his Common Sense newsletter of April 24, 1981, complete the sentence, as a sort of double witness:

When the clause permitting the Fed to monetize third world debt was objected to by Ron Paul, "the chairman of the Joint Conference Committee quickly agreed to drop it to avoid publicity. Then when no one was looking, and with no announcement, paragraphs were reinsterted into the bill. Everyone thought Ron Paul had been successful in having it removed and it wasn't until after it was passed that anyone discovered otherwise. To remove the last doubt as to what is permitted under this law here is the exact wording of the section in question:

(b) (1) The second paragraph of Section 16 of the Federal Reserve Act (12 U.S.C. 412) is amended -

(A) by inserting before the period at the end of the third sentence the following: ', or assets that Federal banks may purchase or hold under section 14 of this act'; and (B) by adding at the end thereof the following: 'collateral shall not be required for Federal Reserve notes which are held in the vaults of Federal Reserve banks.'

(2) Section 14 (b) (1) of the Federal Reserve Act (12 U.S.C. 355), as such section is in effect on the effective date of this title and as it will be in effect on June 1, 1981, is amended by inserting after 'reclamation districts,' the following: 'and obligations of, or fully guaranteed as to principle and interest by, a foreign government or agency thereof.' (From Common Sense, 6308 Woodman Ave. Suite 117, Van Nuys, CA 91401. $115).

"These amendments to the Monetary Control Act relieve the Federal Reserve of all restraints thereby permitting unrestrained inflation, and also provide a mechanism whereby the Fed can take over bad debts of third world and even communist countries from banks (thereby bailing them out) and 'monetize' them - that is, add that much more money to our inflation." (Quoted from the News-letter Digest of May 4, 1981. 2335 Pansy St., Huntsville, AL 35801. $60).

There is some danger of falling into a soft and effeminate Christianity, under the plea of a lofty and ethereal theology. Christianity was born for endurance; not an exotic, but a hardy plant, braced by the keen wind; not languid, nor childish, nor cowardly. It walks with strong and erect frame. It is kindly, but firm; it is gentle, but honest; it is calm, but not facile; obliging, but not imbecile; decided, but not churlish. It does not fear to speak the stern word of condemnation against error, nor to raise its voice against surrounding evils, under the pretext it is not of this world; it does not shrink from giving honest reproof, lest it come under the charge of displaying an unchristian spirit. It calls sin sin, on whomsoever it is found, and would rather risk the accusation of being actuated by a bad spirit than not discharge an explicit duty. Let us not misjudge strong words used in honest controversy. Out of the heat a viper may come forth; but we shake it off and feel no harm. The religion of both Old and New Testaments is marked by fervent outspoken testimonies against evil. To speak smooth things in such a case may be sentimentalism, but it is not Christianity. It is a betrayal of the cause of truth and righteousness. If anyone should be frank, manly, honest, cheerful (I do not say blunt or rude, for a Christian must be courteous and polite); it is he who has tasted that the Lord is gracious, and is looking for and hasting unto the coming of the day of God. I know that charity covereth a multitude of sins; but it does not call evil good, because a good man has done it; it does not excuse inconsistencies, because the inconsistent brother has a high name and a fervent spirit. Crookedness and worldliness are still crookedness and worldliness, though exhibited in one who seems to have reached no common height of attainment.

- Horace Bonar (1808-1889), a celebrated Scotch hymnist, who wrote more than twenty volumes on theological and religious subjects.

So you can better understand exactly what all this really means we'll produce one more expert witness: Douglas F. Lamont, dean of the Walter Heller College at Roosevelt University in Chicago. Writing in the Chicago Sun Times of March 9, 1981, Dean Lamont explains, and we quote:

* * * * *

THIRD WORLD DEBT IS OURS

The poor countries of the world are dangerously close to involuntarily defaulting on their $500 billion in debt to western banks and governments. A reminder of this grim possibility can be found in a little noticed change in the Depository Institutions and Monetary Control Act of 1980. It also gives an important glimpse of how Americans will pick up the tab for these 100 poor countries so the world's financial system will be saved from a chain of bank failures. Under the act, the Federal Reserve can purchase the debts of foreign governments, their semi-state agencies and their state enterprises. The Fed becomes the lender of last resort to countries that have temporary liquidity problems, such as Sudan and Brazil. It can mount a rescue operation of foreign governments to prevent them from going insolvent...Sudan, for example...Once the Sudanese government guarantees its debts - that is, puts its sovereign responsibility behind all principal and interest owed, the Fed will purchase Sudan's bonds. Their debt becomes America's debt. Through this financial arrangement, the Fed will monetize Sudan's debt, add it to our own money supply, and breed more inflation.

Throughout the third world, government officials are being shown America's new lender-of-last-resort law by commercial bankers. The 1980 act is the new magic formula for saving these less-developed countries from recognizing that their post-colonial dreams of grandeur are failures. Once their $500 billion in debt is monetized by the Fed - that is, brought into our money supply - we will have no hope of solving our inflation problems. The signals are grimmer than anyone in Washington has led us to believe. (End of quotes from an article by Dean Lamont of Roosevelt University).

* * * * *

AS FOR POLAND, the situation is more critical than it is in either Sudan or Brazil. This is indicated by an article datelined Munich, by John Dornberg and appearing in The Miami Herald of May 7, 1981. It is headlined "Western Banks Scramble to Keep 'Bankrupt' Poland Afloat" and says Poland's overall debt is $25 billion, $4.6 billion of which falls due this year and cannot be paid by the Polish government. The article points out that the money was lent in order to "turn Poland into one huge construction site of coal and copper mines, steel mills, chemical plants and shipbuilding facilities." But according to Dornberg there was "one possible hitch: whether Polish party leader Edward Gierik's cumbersome, bureaucratic administration could also produce enough consumer goods to keep the Polish people content and productive." Obviously, this was not possible; hence the Solidarity movement. And, concludes the author, "for all practical purposes, 'the enterprise called Poland' is bankrupt. (But), unlike any other enterprise, it can't go bankrupt: None of its creditors can afford to let it do so. If it did, there is a strong possibility that the entire Western banking structure, along with Poland's edifice of debts, would collapse - like a house of cards."

It seems that, in addition to its debts to commercial banks, Poland owes money to some 15 different governments, including the United States. And representatives of these government, meeting in Paris, made a deal whereby Poland is given a period of grace on the $2.6 billion falling due this year. Repayment to the governments involved is postponed until 1986. But, this does not apply to the banks. Information from Bonn is that "new talks with commercial banks about rescheduling payments to them are about to begin." And this is where the Monetary Control Act comes into play. So long as Poland can maintain a semblance of sovereignty - that is, not be militarily occupied by foreign troops - the Poland can sign some bonds, turn them over to the Fed and instead of paying its own bill, we the people of the United States will pay Poland's debts to the International Bankers! The leaders in the Kremlin will laugh at us for our "rope-buying" gullibility, wait until after June 1 when the Fed can take over Poland's debts, and then quite possibly invade Poland and punish its people for seeking freedom.

Lawrence Patterson explains: "Once the Poles guarantee their debt officially (that is, put their sovereign responsibility behind principal and interest), the Federal Reserve will purchase the Polish debt (at full face value) from Chase Manhattan and other banks, and place it in the Fed portfolio." Also because of the new provisions of the Monetary Control Act, says Lawrence, "the Fed is now allowed to step in where the World Bank and the IMF lack adequate funding, and support the East bloc and Third World countries who have 'borrowed' from the New York banks. Congressional control over Foreign Aid, the World Bank, and the IMF is thus effectively ended." Because of this, the following is of particular importance:

On the very same afternoon - April 21, 1981 - the three most important, most powerful bankers in America appeared before their respective shareholders. Two of them were quitting their positions as American bankers to assume International roles; the third was to assume the unofficial position as foremost American banker. David Rockefeller was to become head of the International Affairs Department of Chase Manhattan with Henry Kissinger as his assistant. A.W. Clausen of Bank America was to become president of the World Bank. Walter B. Wriston of Citibank would assume the position of foremost American banker - a post formerly accorded David Rockefeller.

Upon his advancement to a more important position in the New World Order, David Rockefeller gave an interview which we heard over Ted Turner's WTBS news network on May 4, 1981. He explained the purpose of the Trilateral Commission and its role in world government. If you read between the lines, his statement tells much. He said: "The Trilateral Commission was the result of a speech that I made in 1972 to a Chase-sponsored international forum. In the course of the speech, I pointed to the fact that we're living in a world of very rapid change, where governments have to deal with so many day-by-day crises that they really don't have a chance to think very much about the problems of the future. Therefore it seemed to me that it would be useful if a group of private citizens...coming from the industrialized nations of North America, Japan and Europe that play such an important role in the world - that such people could get together and identify what appeared to be the most serious problems facing the world in the future, and perhaps get qualified people to write papers on these subjects, and discuss them, and make them available to the governments, would be a service to humanity."

In short, the role of the Trilateral Commissioners is to tell governments how they must prepare for the future. Until recently, none would have dared to call this treason - or Conspiracy.

Year Twenty-Eight.....Number Nineteen.....May 15, 1981

MORE PROOFS OF A CONSPIRACY?

As this report is being written the "Gnomes of Bilderberg" are assembling for their twenty-eighth annual meeting, this time at Burgenstock, a small town just outside Zurich, Switzerland. The secret sessions are scheduled to last three days, May 14 to 17. Just who is attending and what subjects are on the agenda are secrets supposedly held only by those attending. But it is known that the man who is unofficial chairman of the board of world economy, David Rockefeller, always attends these meetings. So does his chief assistant for foreign affairs, Henry Kissinger. As does Henry Kissinger's chief assistant for foreign affairs, Helmut Sonnenfeldt, now with the Brookings Institution. Other regulars include William Bundy, former honorary secretary-general of the organization as well as editor of the Council on Foreign Relations quarterly organ, Foreign Affairs; George Ball, currently the senior managing director of Lehman Brothers Kuhn Loeb; McGeorge Bundy, presently "just a professor" at New York University; James Perkins, chairman of the International Council for Educational Development and a director of Chase Manhattan Corporation; Walter Levy, an important New York oil consultant; Hedley Donovan, formerly editor-in-chief of Time, who quit to join the White House staff in an attempt to bail out the Carter administration. The list of others attending usually varies depending upon their importance at the time. Prime Ministers, Chancellors, Presidents, finance ministers and leading bankers of Europe are usually invited, as is a selected list of publishers and journalists, all being sworn to secrecy. "...there is one point on which all who believe that the world secretly is ruled by somebody will agree: the ultra-elite that rules those who appear to rule us, the shining eye at the top of the pyramid on the flip side of the dollar bill, meets each year in a mysterious, tightly secured conclave known as 'Bilderberg'." So wrote Craig Karpel, a freelance journalist who says he was able to "crash the party" at the 1980 Bilderberg meeting that was held in Aachen, West Germany. Karpel says he learned "the truth about Bilderberg is much worse than anyone ever feared!"

At this year's session of the "ultra-elite", there will have been much to discuss and many decisions to be made concerning what they are to do now about re-shaping the world according to their desires and profits. Because, things seem to have been getting out of hand so far as the "rulers of the rulers" are concerned. Israel and Syria are on the verge of war and Philip Habib (CFR) hasn't been too successful at mollifying the Soviet-backed Syrians or holding back the Israelis. The Soviets may be bogged down in Afghanistan and waiting word on what to do about Poland, but they still threaten hazardous complications in the Persian Gulf area. In France the House of Giscard d'Estaing has fallen and a spasmodically successful Socialist named Mitterrand has suddenly come into power thanks to the communists, and doesn't seem to know just what he's supposed to do with the power he's been lent. Due to suicides by starvation, the Marxist-backed Irish terrorist problem has become an international problem, as have terrorist activities in Spain, West Germany, Italy and the United States. The Soviet-Libyan-Cuban terrorist drive to take over Central and South America has been stalled at least temporarily. The U.S. Congress is acting far more conservative than the "ultras" may have expected. And perhaps most confusing of all to the "ultra-elite" may have been the two unsus-successful attempts at assassination of the two most prominent men of the West - President Ronald Reagan and Pope John Paul II.

Such was the state of the world when about 100 of "the rulers of rulers" sat down to seek a consensus on priorities as they direct the construction of their New World Order. Let's consider a few important and possible interconnected events that may have a bearing on their decisions.

On the evening of Thursday, March 19, 1981, David Rockefeller hosted an important dinner at which Robert Strange McNamara was the honored guest. The occasion: a shift in command posts was in order. McNamara was to retire as head of the World Bank and become president of Bank of America, while A. W. Clausen would retire as president of Bank of America and become head of the World Bank. Present at this dinner were the Bilderbergers previously named in this report, plus others of CFR, TIC, CED, Aspen Institute, the Common Market organizations, the London Institute of Policy Studies, the Paris-based OECD, etc. Special guests included Roger Berthoin, president of the Trilateral Commission's European Division, and Takeshi Watanabe, chairman of the Trilateral Commission in Japan. What David Rockefeller told his guests at the meeting was top secret, but it is said to have leaked out through Common Market sources, and was reported by Dan Morgan of the Washington Post and was brought to our attention by Hilaire du Berrier from Monaco.

"The world which we have worked to construct is threatened," David told his guests. "The gravity of this moment when Mr. McNamara and others are about to leave their posts while a new Administration re-examines American foreign aid policy is great. If we are going to save the international institutions we have put in place, the moment is now or never, for the struggle between the old guard and the new is going far beyond the reduction of capital appropriations. It is going to endanger the new world order which we have based on an alliance between Wall Street and Washington. While we men of firms and banks organize international channels of economy and raw materials, the government is now building its own diplomatic and economic bridges between Washington and foreign governments. By our methods our governments contribute to the stability and economic growth of the world, our multi-national benefit, and when it is necessary they contribute their political support. Now radical conservatives are attempting to destroy all that in seeking first and foremost to serve the national interests of the United States." (Emphasis added).

What heresy! Our present conservative government is serving the national interests of the United States instead of the international interests of the Bilderbergers, the Trilateralists, the Common Marketeers, and their firms and banks! And David Rockefeller says this must be stopped. Just what kind of political action these New World Orderers had in mind was not recorded. But H. du B. suggests that from what Rockefeller said at this dinner, the Soviet and Cuban leaders may have received "what they took as a signal that if something were to happen to President Reagan it would be all right with the international organizations that count!"

In line with this comes a very important item published in Donald McAlvany's Gold and Monetary Report for May, 1981. We quote: "In early March, several weeks before the assassination attempt on President Reagan, the National Security Agency alerted the CIA, White House and State Department, to a Latin American newspaper report that Cuban President Fidel Castro is plotting the assassination of President Reagan. The Caracas, Venezuela newspaper, El Mundo, asserted that the assassination plot called for the slaying to be carried out by Illich Ramirez Sancho, an international terrorist known as Carlos the Jackal, who is said to have organized the massacre of the Israeli athletes at the 1972 Olympic games in Munich and to have participated in dozens of other terrorist acts. The article said the assassination plot was discussed at a meeting in Havana (which was attended) by Montonero (Argentinian) terrorists, Topamaro (Uruguayan) terrorists, Sancho, Cuban Police Minister Rafael Rodriguez and Fidel Castro; and also that PLO chief Yasser Arafat was participating in the plan. On Wednesday, March 11, at 9:47 a.m., a cable from the pro-Castro Prensa Latina (Latin Press) in Caracas sent to Prensa Latina headquarters in Havana was intercepted by the National Security Agency. The cable read: 'Everything seems to indicate that Fidel Castro is planning the assassination of U.S. President Ronald Reagan in the same way that he previously ordered the assassination of John F. Kennedy and whose participation the high ranking U.S. circles hid...' The transmission was broken. U.S. officials provided no explanation for why the transmission ended in mid-sentence.

"In early April, after the Reagan shooting by Hinckley, four people including two U.S. citizens and two Mexicans were arrested in Tijuana, Mexico with an M-1 rifle and other weapons, notebooks outlining measures taken by the U.S. authorities during and after the Reagan assassination attempt, and propaganda literature from the revolutionary Che Guevara Brigade. President Reagan, before the shooting, had been scheduled to meet with Mexican President Jose Lopez Portillo in Tijuana on April 29! (End of extended quote from Gold and Monetary Report, subscription office: P.O. Box 39810, Phoenix, AZ 85069. Monthly, $75 per year. Foreign airmail: $105.)

Was this assassination plot in Tijuana to be a "second try" after the failure of John Hinckley's attempt in Washington, D.C.? Will there be other attempts? Is there a connection between the shootings of the President and the Pope? Are other Western leaders on an international hit list? These are important questions to which we have no valid answers. But with the attempted assassination of President Reagan, and then of Pope John Paul, it should be obvious to all that terrorism is international in scope, and no part of the Western World can escape its attacks. There is an interconnected terrorist network which is financed, coordinated, and trained by the Moscow-Havana-Libya Axis. This is the real reason behind the recent expulsion of Libyan diplomats from the U.S. That Red Axis incorporates most of the world's terrorist groups, PLO, IRA, Tupamaro, Montonero, SWAPO, African National Congress, Red Brigade and dozens of others. Since assassination has become one of their chief weapons in their war against Christian societies, world leaders can expect to become targets of this international terrorist movement.

It should be understood that when these assassinations are planned, a special kind of "loner" is usually picked for the job. The Kennedy brothers, George Wallace, Ronald Reagan, the Pope - all seem to fit the same pattern. Hilaire du Berrier gives us this expert appraisal from European specialists: "...an unbalanced 'loner' named John Hinckley, 25-years-old and armed with a handgun charged with 22-calibre explosive bullets, had wounded the President... European specialists in psychological warfare rejected the 'unbalanced loner' explanation to a man. To such men every imaginable tactic of psychological warfare has been considered. Before the hard facts began coming in, they asked themselves: 'What would I do if I were Fidel Castro or KGB boss Yuri Andropov, faced with a President dedicated to the upsetting of my plans?' The answer was: 'I would find a young man, of good family, attractive enough to have photo-value. Then I would turn him over to Control. Control would build up his psychological picture. He would never by word or mouth show any connection with the left. All acts of terrorism must be attributed to the right. He must make himself conspicuous at meetings of the extreme right, drawing attention to his presence and outdoing those in command. His instability must be emotional, never criminal. The ideal would be unrequited love - leading to what Europeans call 'une crime passionelle.' In the case of John Hinckley not an element was missing. Every precaution in the psychological warfare specialists's handbook was there from the moment bare details of the assassination attempt arrived in offices abroad." (Quoted from H du B Reports, May, 1981. Domestic business address: P.O.Box 786, St. George, Utah 84770. Monthly, $75 per year).

Now, as barest details of the assassination attempt upon the Pope have been released by the media, let's compare: Here was a 23-year-old Turk, alleged to be a 'loner.' His brother was interviewed via satellite from Turkey, showing that suspect Mehmet Ali Agca was apparently "of good family." Televised shots of the suspect confirmed that he was "attractive enough to have photo-value." His right-wing connections were established; was a member of a terrorist group, had committed a 'political' murder. And the attempted assassination was 'une crime passionelle,' but it a religious passion that prompted his action. The Pope was a Christian who was out to destroy Islam. The Pope had even visited Moslem Turkey to proselytize for Christianity and to promote imperialism. And, as in the case of John Hinckley, here was a young man who was seemingly without funds who was able to travel freely, live well, and obtain weapons without difficulty, and travel freely without undue surveillance. True, Agca was a criminal according to Bible-based or Koran-based law; but according to the code of the terrorist a political murder is not a crime. It is an act of war and should be treated as such in accordance with a Geneva Convention dealing with such matters (this is the tenet of revolutionary faith that has led to suicide-by-starvation on the part of IRA terrorists). Agca escaped from a Turkish prison, traveled without official hindrance through Switzerland, West Germany, Bulgaria, Yugoslavia, Spain, and Italy. This required physical aid and financial help. He also had a set of skillfully executed passports in various names: Farouk Ostun, Ali Hussein, Ali Mussein, etc. These are costly items, difficult to secure. An escaped, moneyless convict wouldn't be able to get them without organized assistance. The evidence of his connections with organized terrorists became so obvious that it was finally admitted officially that Agca was a member of an active terrorist organization.

In short, Agca was not a 'loner', not a young disillusioned, psychotic killer. He was an agent of a conspiracy, selected and conditioned for his "moment in destiny." We have been told that this was not true of John Hinckley. But facts refute this. Minute, a Paris based conservative weekly of April 8, published this summary: "The fact remains that Reagan's new policy of firmness has upset a lot of people and touched off a panic in the Kremlin, where leaders had become accustomed to Carter's softness." After David Rockefeller's speech of March 19, a foolproof assassination would be a distinct advantage to Reagan's adversaries. And, in the case of Agca, the Pope had Polish connections that were beginning to embarrass the Kremlin; he had spoken often concerning his pro-family and anti-abortion views. He kept saying the right things. Yet, there was a good percentage of Roman Catholics who looked upon John Paul as an interloper, an anti-Pope. This could be an opportunity for making an assassination look like a right-wing action! Divide and Conquer!

THE BILLION DOLLARS A MINUTE BAILOUT

The Reagan Administration maintains that it is dedicated to the proposition that inflation must be controlled, the budget balanced, high taxes reduced and government spending curtailed. All this being necessary if we are to achieve economic stability, fiscal sanity, commercial solvency and adequate employment for all able bodied people who are willing to work. True, as of mid-May nothing had really changed except that the 97th Congress seemed to be doing most of the things and passing most of the bills required if Reaganomics were to be legalized. However, despite the weeping and wailing of Welfare Statists, America's future seemed promising. That is, until President Reagan nominated ex-Fed chairman Arthur Burns to be ambassador to West Germany. Then this reporter began to wonder if, once again, we the people were being led down that legendary garden path. Our suspicions about being conned were bolstered when something strange happened on the way to a Congressional vote on a bill giving more taxpayers' money to that international banking confraternity composed of the World Bank, the Export Import Bank, the Latin American Development Bank, the Asian Development Bank, the African Development Bank and their "soft loan" affiliate called the International Development Association.

On May 12, in accordance with the proposed Reagan budget, the House voted to reduce the amount of taxpayers' money that was to be given to the Eximbank next fiscal year. The cut was a mere $876 million - mere when one considers that we have already given over $13 billion to that corporate welfare institution. But, the minute that vote to cut Eximbank's dole was announced the word was spread to those multinational corporations that use Eximbank funds to finance their activities in the underdeveloped countries. The affected corporation executives, lawyers and lobbyists went to work immediately. The result: on the very next day, May 13, an amendment was proposed and added, and the $876 million was put right back in the budget. 71 votes had been switched in less than 24 hours! During the course of a very short discussion, Rep. Obey of Wisconsin (who didn't live up to his name on this occasion) protested, said: "Sixty-seven percent of the funding under the Eximbank goes to Boeing, Westinghouse, McDonnell-Douglas, Lockheed, Western Electric and General Electric." Obey said this meant that "if you are United Airlines, you cannot buy a Boeing aircraft on concessional interest rates; but if you are a Japanese airline, you can buy it on concessional interest rates, which means that the Japanese airline is going to be flying at a competitive advantage against American corporations....If you vote (to restore the $876 million), you are voting to say that we can cut health, education, science and transportation, and payment in lieu of taxes, but you are going to exempt several of the 'largest boys' from sharing the sacrifice...You have been getting calls from a lot of the corporations affected, and that is fine. I understand that. But, what they are really saying is: 'Don't cut me, cut that fellow behind the tree', as Senator Long used to say."

Eximbank works like this: it lends taxpayers' money at ridiculously low rates to foreign countries and companies so they can buy products or services from large U.S. corporations. This helps the buyer and the seller, but it hurts the American taxpayer. Considering the billions involved, $876 million seems an insignificant amount. But, it illustrates the fact that, while individual taxpayers are being asked to "bite the bullet," corporate welfare is on the increase. This was pointed out quite clearly in a recent report from Rep. Ron Paul, who is a member of the House Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs Committee. That is where bills like the one we've been discussing originate. We quote Dr. Paul quite often in our reports because he's on the spot, says the things we'd like to say, but says them better and makes complicated money matters easy to understand. So, we quote Ron Paul:

* * * * *

At a time when we are supposed to be cutting spending the House Banking Committee has voted $13 billion to bail out the big banks. And the Committee took only about 13 minutes to do it (hence our headline: "The Billion Dollars a Minute Bailout"-Ed.) The large banks of New York and California have loaned billions to shaky dictatorships in Latin America, Asia, and Africa. Now they want their profits guaranteed by the American taxpayers and the Banking Committee has gone along with the deal.

The mechanism of the bailout was $13 billion in funding for the World Bank; its "soft loan" affiliate, the International Development Association (IDA); and the Latin American, Asian, and African Development Banks. And the "callable capital" of the World Bank was also increased by $8 billion. This little-known procedure basically means that the World Bank will have $40 billion more to loan.

But doesn't this kind of aid help the poor countries? Far from helping the poor, it has oppressed them, and lowered their standard of living. Government-to-government aid, by its very nature, strengthens the hand of the politicians and bureaucrats in the Third World nations, while undermining free market initiatives and the growth of individual freedom. And anything that enlarges the role of government in these countries inevitably makes them poorer, since only the free market can generate economic growth that benefits the poor. (This does not even take into account the huge amounts stolen by corrupt government officials.) But "helping the poor" is only a smoke-screen. These programs exist to help the multinational banks, which are infinitely more powerful in Congress than the poor (as that overnight 71-vote-switch on the $875 million indicates-Ed.). The managers of these banks have loaned many billions to countries that cannot afford the interest, let alone the principle. In a free market, this would mean trouble for the banks and their bosses, as the loans were defaulted. But with the IRS and the Washington printing presses at their disposal, the banks have an alternative - let the U.S. taxpayer foot the bill, and keep the banks and their Third World client governments afloat.

It works like this: money goes from the American taxpayer to the World Bank, to the borrowing countries, to the big U.S. banks - all under the heading of helping the poor. In fact, this kind of program is welfare for the wealthy, and it was done on short notice with virtually no debate or questioning allowed. This giant spending bill was railroaded through the Banking Committee without a thought for the taxpayer.

It is no coincidence that the former head of the Bank of America will be running the World Bank, nor that the former head of the World Bank is moving to the Bank of America. They are just switching places, and the American taxpayer is paying for this game of musical money. Washington is supposed to have a new atmosphere. but the fresh air has yet to penetrate the foreign aid boondoggle. It's time to quit giving welfare to the powerful and the wealthy.

* * * * *

This "Billion A Minute Bailout" is companion to and part of the "New Megabankers' Conspiracy" which we explained in our DBR of May 8. This latter is a scheme by which American taxpayers would take over Poland's debts that are owed to the American-based International Banks. This is made possible by a provision in Public Law 96-221, which became a law on March 31, 1980. The first Title of that law is called the Monetary Control Act, and there are five important provisions in the Act which give The Federal Reserve Corporation virtually dictatorial power over our currency. The Act:

1. Gives the Fed control over all depository institutions;
2. Lowers bank reserve requirements, potentially to zero;
3. Permits the Fed to print unlimited quantities of Federal Reserve notes by abolishing all collateral (property guarantee) requirements on cash held in vaults;
4. Allows expansion of circulating notes by permitting the Fed to use virtually any of its assets as collateral for Federal Reserve notes; and finally,
5. Allows the Fed to monetize debts of foreign governments and their agencies by issuing Federal Reserve notes collateralized by foreign government obligations.

It is this last provision of the Monetary Control Act which would allow the Fed to take over Poland's debts to the Megabanks (or the debts of any other foreign government and its agencies), to monetize those debts and thus cause American taxpayers to assume those debts. The inflation thus caused would be horrendous, and permanent. However, there are two important stipulations in the provision:

1. It doesn't become effective as law until June 1, 1981; and
2. The foreign government involved (in this case, Poland) must collateralize the debt (give a property guarantee for the debt).

Now, in order to collateralize a government debt, that government must have at least the semblance of sovereignty. That's why we wrote that there would be no Soviet invasion of Poland before June 1; because on that date the Polish government must be able to assume that Poland is a sovereign state. Such an assumption would be impossible if the nation were overrun by Russian or Warsaw Pact troops; and the Fed wouldn't be able to monetize Poland's debts.

So much for Poland and other nations that may have the ability to collateralize their debts owed to the International Bankers. However, in the case of very unstable Third World governments which often are here today and couped out of existence tomorrow, collateralization could be a farce. Here is where the World Bank and its affiliated agencies come into the picture in a big way. What can't be done by the Fed directly can still be done through the World Bank, or the Latin American, Asian or African Development Banks, or the International Development Association. Whatever the road taken, it is the American taxpayer who finally pays for the passage.

Is there any valid reason for all this special legislation to protect Megabanks at taxpayers' expense? This was explained in an article appearing in the Wall Street Journal of March 2, 1981, by Jude Wanniska. We quote:

"The most immediate and pressing threat to the world economy which the Reagan Administration must face is the Third World debt to the international banks, a debt that now exceeds $300 billion. On the face of it, there is no prospect that this debt can be repaid, and because the amount exceeds by many times the amount of capital in the international banks, these banks would be technically bankrupt were it not for continued currency inflation. Indeed, lacking any other solution, the banks have a profound vested interest in global inflation. It preserves the illusion of solvency even as the debt mushrooms...

"For several decades, U.S. foreign policy has been waggged by this tail of global debt. The IMF and the World Bank are run by and for the money-center banks, the aim being the aversion of international financial collapse and their own bankruptcies. The World Bank's objective is to squeeze the U.S. taxpayer for resources to send to the Third World, with the avowed aim of helping nations develop so their expanding tax bases can support their debt service."

Concerning the Bailout of Poland and its political consequences, a very important report appears in the May 13th Intelligence Digest, a Weekly Review published by Intelligence International Limited. We quote:

"So while Western capitalist bankers bail out the failed socialist economy of Poland...the Soviet Union is preparing the communist world for the restoration of the absolute communist dictatorship in Poland which must be achieved if the Soviet imperial socialist system is not to disintegrate. But what of the outside world? The answer is quite simple.

1. Accuse the new American President and his friends of being simplistic war mongers or dangerous adventurers.
2. Get people worried about nuclear weapons and nuclear power.
3. Reawaken the Vietnam lobby with 'concern' about El Salvador.
4. Stoke up trouble in Africa, particularly if it distracts from the failed socialism in Tanzania and concentrates on 'fascist' South Africa.
5. Get people really worried about the Middle East by blaming Israel and Accusing Sadat. (That's why Gaddafi of Libya has been sent to Moscow.)
6. Cash in on UK colour and IRA trouble as Tass has been doing.

Then crush Poland and arrange a summit to 'resolve misunderstandings'...At such a summit the Soviet Union will be seen to be making generous concessions all over the place - where it costs Moscow nothing - in return for an understanding of its position in Poland and Afghanistan.

"The whole affair will be dressed up as being mutual agreement over non interference etc. and the right of independent nations to ask for help (the justification for Moscow's intervention in Poland and Afghanistan) and the thoroughly worried electorates of the West will be only too willing to respond and push their leaders into accepting. The results will be:-

1. President Reagan will be hailed as a 'statesman' who faced realities - if he falls for the ploy.
2. The propaganda drive about nuclear arms will slacken for a while, in response to some temporary agreement.
3. The El Salvador 'concern' will fade as the momentum slackens, until it is required again.
4. This will be fudged over with joint declarations which will mean nothing...

"...After all that, it will not seem unreasonable to 'accept' events in Poland and Afghanistan....And so the world will learn that the bottom line is that communism triumphs in the end and will be prepared for the next stage."(From Intelligence Digest, 17 Rodney Road, Cheltenham, Glos. A post-script to that bottom line: Taxpayers are to bail out the International Bankers, so the International Bankers can bail out International Communism!

NEW PILOT, SAME COURSE

The propaganda war is in full swing. In our last Report (#20) we quoted the British Intelligence Digest in regard to the Soviet reaction to the "tough on Communism" policy of the Reagan Administration. A six-point propaganda program was suggested. Two of those points: Get people really worried about the Middle East; and, Reawaken the Vietnam lobby..." We are sure you've noticed how worries about the Middle East dominate newspaper front pages, and also how radio and television talk show participants have been bringing up the old stories of veterans' complaints about their treatment in Vietnam, upon returning home, etc. In one such television program, "The Freeman Report," Daniel Ellsberg of the "Pentagon Papers" infamy was interviewed concerning his reactions to the Vietnam war while working in the Pentagon. Asked if he didn't feel that the President and other elected officials were not really in charge of things, that they seemed to be taking orders from some person or persons who were "higher up" and who were really directing the affairs of state, Ellsberg said yes. He often felt that the elected officials were just puppets who obeyed the commands of some secret power. No names were mentioned and, of course, Ellsberg knew all about it since he was an agent of the Conspiracy. The only surprising thing was that he would admit publicly that there is a secret group which controls our federal administration. In Ellsberg's time at the Pentagon it was Kissinger and McNamara who were running the Vietnamese show on behalf of the Elitist Cabal.

We mention this because on March 29 and 30 - the eve before and the day on which President Reagan was wounded by a would-be assassin - the Trilateral Commission was holding its annual plenary session in Washington, D.C. The three Trilateralist chairmen; David Rockefeller for North America, Georges Berthoin for Europe, and Takeshi Watanabe for Japan; were scheduled to visit President Reagan at the White House on the evening of the 30th. However, instead of being in the Oval Office, the President was in an operating room in a hospital. Consequently, Vice President George Bush represented the United States government at the secret meetings of that secret government. Present and also speaking at the meetings were Secretary of State Alexander Haig and Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger. It is difficult for an outsider to obtain authentic information as to the goings-on at meetings such as these. But, Kirk Kidwell, Washington correspondent for the Christian Inquirer, was on the spot and obtained considerable information, which appears under his by-line in the May issue of that publication. We quote the entire article:

* * * * *

TRILATERAL COMMISSION MOVES GOVERNMENTS

Is the Trilateral Commission part of a secretive thrust for one-world government that will ultimately lead to persecution of Christians worldwide? Its recent 'secret' meeting does little to answer this question. But were some hints dropped?

Washington - The Trilateral Commission met here for its annual plenary Conference on March 29-30. Over 170 Commission members from North America,

Western Europe and Japan assembled for the conference which was chaired by David Rockefeller, the North American Chairman for the Commission. On the agenda was discussion on current developments within the Trilateral nations and their effects on each other. Also discussed were perceived changes within the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe. Two Task Force Reports were submitted for the Commission's consideration. One dealt with "Trilateralism in the International Economy of the 1980s" and the other with "The Middle East and the Trilateral Countries."

The Commission was also addressed by several high-level Reagan administration officials, including Vice-President George Bush, Secretary of State Alexander Haig and Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger (all former members). Other government officials speaking to the Commission were: Mark MacGuigan, Canadian Secretary of State for External Affairs; David Owen, Member of the British Parliament and former Foreign Minister; and H. E. Takeo Fukuda, former Prime Minister of Japan. The Commission also met with members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

All Commission meetings are closed to non-members and all discussions are off the record. However, one reliable source described the meeting to this reporter in which Vice-President Bush spoke. He said that after Bush spoke, David Rockefeller walked up to the podium and put his arm around him and joked that the Commission will not invite him to join again. At this point Bush is reported to have said, "All that I am, I owe to this man."

After the close of the conference, a press conference was held featuring the three Commission Chairmen: . . . Rockefeller explained to the press that the reason for the creation of the Commission was 'to try to provide a non-governmental forum of leading opinion-makers in the nations of North America, Europe and Japan, to try to identify serious problems that face the world and to come up with papers, thoughts and discussions on those problems.' According to Rockefeller, the Commission has "on the whole succeeded to a degree in its original objectives and it has had some successes that perhaps were not anticipated at the beginning."

Rockefeller spent most of his time dodging questions regarding criticisms that the Commission represents a concerted effort to bring about one-world government. One of the most note-worthy critics of the Commission is Sen. Barry Goldwater, who wrote in his book, "With No Apologies:" "In my view the Trilateral Commission represents a skillful, coordinated effort to seize control and consolidate the four centers of power - political, monetary, intellectual, and ecclesiastical." Yet Rockefeller dismissed all such criticism as "perfectly absurd," having "no foundation."

Rockefeller made an interesting slip of the tongue in responding to a question regarding whether the annual world Economic Summit Meetings should include political issues as suggested by some European members of the Commission. He said: "I'm not sure that the business of the world should be run by heads of state. I think that can side-track the normal mechanisms of communication." One wonders who Mr. Rockefeller thinks should run the business of the world. Perhaps one of the most revealing questions of the briefing came when Rockefeller was asked, "To what degree has there been success by the Commission in seeing the opinions expressed in your yearly meetings, as well as in the reports themselves, implemented by governments involved in the Commission?" Rockefeller answered that by saying that some of the papers have had an impact on governmental policies. He cited two examples:

"I remember at the time of the meeting in 1974 there was a paper on the energy situation. At that time, the first energy shock had just taken place. If you recall, there was a rather sharp difference of opinion between the Ford administration and President Giscard d'Estaing. The paper was made available to both of them prior to their meeting in Martinique. I don't know specifically that it had an influence, but it is a fact that the paper recommended a position that was somewhat in between the two positions and the final outcome was one that was not unlike the paper. I remember another case where we wrote about international agencies and their aid to the poor to the developing nations and a recommendation was made for a 'third window' in the World Bank. And that, too, was adopted."

One thing at least is obvious: The commission wields considerable influence among world leaders and many of the recommendations made in Task Force Reports eventually find their way into government policy.

(End of article. Underlining was added for emphasis).

* * * * *

So who is right, Goldwater or Rockefeller? The Vice-President of the United States is a former Trilateralist who resigned to run for the Presidency and gained the Vice-Presidency, and who voices absolute dedication to the Chief-tain of the Eastern Establishment who made him what he is. The Secretaries of State and Defense, both of whom resigned from Rockefeller's Establishment to become members of the Federal Establishment, appear and report to the Trilateral Commission's Multinational Plenary Conference. And the members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee - the men who pass on all of the important Presidential appointments and who recommend Senate approval or disapproval of all treaties and international agreements - report in a body to the Multinational meeting. Is this, then, merely a discussion group that likes to hold meetings, appoint Task Forces to write papers that are mere recommendations that heads of state may take or leave? Or, is the Trilateral Commission a "skillful, coordinated effort to seize control and consolidate the four centers of power - political, monetary, intellectual, and ecclesiastical"?

It is generally understood, of course, that the control of these four centers of power is not dependent upon just one multinational organization. There is the London-based Royal Institute of International Affairs, which has been overshadowed by its New York City-based affiliate, the Council on Foreign Relations and the latter's officious offspring, the Trilateral Commission. There is the Netherlands-based Bilderberg Group, and the Paris-based Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development, the Club of Rome and the Geneva-based UNESCO, to say nothing of the Brussels-based NATO. Then there are the Aspen and Brookings Institutions, the American Assembly and a number of think-tanks, a network of world affairs councils and foreign policy associations. For monetary control there are the World Bank, IMF, the Asian, African, and Latin-American Banks, AID, IDA, and all the Central Banks, ours being called the Federal Reserve System. As for intellectual control, this is the principal purpose of the various Foundations which work at the top, while NEA and textbook publishers work at the bottom, with change agents working at all levels. For ecclesiastical control there is the WCC and its U.S. branch the National Council of Churches, along with establishment control of leading seminaries. We could go on and on. But there is one control system which has not been recognized for what it is by the general public. We speak of that control mechanism called Regional Government.

Regional Government is not just an American scheme. It is an international plot aiming at totalitarian Regional World Government. The African states are being regionalized. Red China was regionalized in 1974, the USSR in 1973, the British Commonwealth in 1974, France in 1964, Denmark in 1970, Belgium in 1971, Yugoslavia in 1974, the United States in 1969. Other countries which have been regionalized but for which we have no specific dates include India, Australia, Pakistan, Saudi Arabia, Israel, Italy, Poland, West Germany, the Netherlands, Hungary, Spain, Canada, Mexico, Brazil, Ecuador, Chile, Venezuela, and Japan. We doubt that this list is complete.

One of the most serious dangers to our Republican Union which is supposed to be composed of fifty sovereign Republics, is the fact that President Reagan is or at least has been a firm supporter of the Regional Concept. While Governor of California he promoted Regionalism at the State level, was a member of the Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations (ACIR). Upon becoming President he created, on April 8, 1981, a "Presidential Federalism Advisory Committee," with Senator Paul Laxalt as its chairman.

There is this concern about this new Presidential Federalism Advisory Committee (PFAC); while Constitutionals will find little fault with Senator Laxalt as Chairman, we are told that the rest of the roster of PFAC is filled with retreads, that is, names of members and ex-members of ACIR. Also, makeup of the new PFAC is exactly the same as that of the old ACIR, Just a new name and some new promises, but ACIR is still in existence, PFAC has been added, which hardly makes for simplification or less regulation. Furthermore, we're told that PFAC grew out of a meeting of the Governors' Association in Denver last August, and ACIR agents immediately latched onto the idea, took charge of its development. Chief new approach in Reagan's Regional Programming is a change to "block grants." Like Federal Aid to Education (which should have been abolished) is being reduced from some 39 categorical grants to one block grant. And Welfare programs (which should have been turned over to State and local governments) are merged from many into four block grants for 1. health services, 2. preventive health services, 3. social services and 4. emergency assistance. Reagan has said he is for returning power to state and local governments, that "the federal government too often has treated elected state and local officials as if they were nothing more than the administrative agents for federal authority" and he'll "look to this Advisory Committee to help me find ways to return towards a proper balance." But considering that PFAC is but a remake with retreads from ACIR of which Reagan was once an official, one wonders if the leopard has changed its spots.

First effects were destructive. Indiana was the first State to pass a law that would do away with Federal Regional Government within the State. Senate Bill No. 1 was adopted by the Senate on March 3, 29 to 18; approved by the House 75 to 23, and sent to Governor Orr for his signature. But he waited until the Legislature had recessed, then vetoed the bill, giving as his excuse: it would interfere with President Reagan's new Regional programming. Irate Indiana citizens demanded and got a special session of the State Legislature, for the purpose of overriding the Governor's veto. Session was to begin May 29, and we don't have the rest of the story as we write this Report. But action such as this must begin at the state and local level; and the fact that Indiana has led the way becomes an important step in the fight to regain, and then to maintain, a Republican form of Government in an Independent Union of Republics.

THE NINE DIGIT IDENTITY SCAM

Have you wondered why that ridiculous nine digit zip code scheme still hangs around awaiting implementation, won't die or fade away? Congress is against the thing, forced its postponement last January until further studies could be made. The people don't want to be bothered with such a complicated and difficult way of addressing letters to friends and loved ones. Business establishments don't want to spend millions revamping their billing and mailing systems just to accomodate a mandated change that will neither speed up deliveries or reduce postage costs. In fact, nobody is in favor of this proposed nine digit zip code monstrosity except that little company of elitists who manage to oversee the management of all public and quasi-public corporations, and about 150 of the largest American-based multinational corporations. These elitists have an important reason for wanting to install this nine digit zip code. But, their reason has little to do with speeding up mail service or reducing its cost, and only the insiders knew why a nine digit number had been selected. Then, L.T. Patterson of the PSL Strategy Letter, discovered the secret and published the fact that this was part of a Citizen Control System that is being installed. He came to this realization when he found out about the new passports which are being issued in Washington, D.C. They are machine-readable, their numbers are checked through a data bank, and each passport number has nine digits! We checked our last passport, held onto for sentimental reasons. It was 1945 vintage, its number contained just five digits. We understand that more recent issues contain seven digits. But the new ones, already being issued in Washington and soon to be issued at all passport offices, contain nine digits. This is the same as your social security number and the proposed new zip code. Of course, the numbers may not be the same, but, as Mr. Patterson notes: "Even if the number is not the same, the computer could effectively cross-connect these numbers in mili-seconds in any event,; and "the use of a nine digit number and the use of computer terminals to read the passport is highly objectionable, and an illegal invasion of privacy." Patterson explains one way in which this machine-readable passport number could be used:

"This passport is designed to be inserted into a computer when you enter or leave the country, at which time your number can be checked (in mili-seconds) against various data banks. Obviously, your number will be checked against one particular data bank - the list of those who filed Form 90-22.1 (the report of foreign accounts)....It is quite clear that this computer-readable passport is designed to control those who insist on exercising their rights to invest outside the U.S....Obviously, anyone who has a foreign bank account needs occasionally to bring money in and out of the country....The computer passport will offer a mechanism to make life risky for those persons. When you enter or leave the country, you will be asked to 'step aside,' if you have filed 90-22.1, and you will probably be subjected to some special search...Any cash discovered will have to be checked against the IRS data bank, and an IRS audit will surely result!" (Quoted from PSL, P.O.Box 37432, Cincinnati, Ohio 45237. Monthly financial and patriotic advise. $149.50 per year).

But there's more to come. In addition to the nine digit passports, zip codes, and Social Security numbers, there is the prospect of a new National Identity Card, which Congress is considering at the present time. This National Identity Card is supposed to concern itself with immigrants, at least in the beginning. It seems that Fidel Castro cooperated on this scheme. Like the classic utilization of Karl Marx's adaptation of the Hegelian formula, Castro let loose those hordes of Cubans who entered the United States. It has been estimated that about 100,000 of those Castro permitted to emigrate to the U.S. were alcoholics, murderers, prostitutes, or mental incompetents. Waves of incoming aliens from Haiti, Vietnam and Central American countries added to the confusion. Since they couldn't be sent back, something had to be done. While still President, Jimmy Carter named a "Select Commission" to find an answer. The 16 leftist elite members of the Commission were headed by Trilateral Commissioner and CFR-member Theodore M. Hesburgh, presently running Notre Dame University but soon to retire and become a somewhat more active agent of the Rockefeller Establishment. The National ID Card was the prepared answer, and the plan is now being discussed in the Senate Judiciary Subcommittee on Immigration and Refugee Policy, chaired by Alan Simpson, Wyoming Republican; and in the House Judiciary Subcommittee on Immigration, Refugees and International Law, chaired by Rep. R.L. Mazzoli, Kentucky Democrat. Now, here's the bottom line: If and when these National ID Cards are issued, they are going to have a machine-readable nine digit number! They are to be issued to aliens as a work permit, and if any farmer, builder or businessman is discovered employing any immigrant who doesn't have a National ID Card Number, he will be prosecuted. Here is one more piece of the Citizen Control System aimed especially at the farming and business sectors of our society.

One more piece to be added: a special ID for buyers and sellers of coins and precious metals. Since people are losing confidence in the Federal Reserve trading stamps which we call money, there has been an enormous increase in the buying and selling of coins and precious metals. There also has been an enormous increase in the theft of same. Congress has been asked to act, and soon, says a usually reliable source, "there will be a bill proposed to require Federal licensing of coin, numismatic and precious metal firms - and identification of all customers! Just as the subrosa government is using crime as an excuse to take your handgun away from you, they are using crime to control the border points, control your money, your dealings in precious metals. At the same time, liberal members of the Judiciary complain that we are putting too many people behind bars and dealing 'too harshly' with criminals. The net result: crime is being used to hogtie the average citizen so his financial assets are conveniently available for embezzlement and confiscation by the subrosa government!" We have every reason to believe that when such licensing of coin, numismatic and precious metal firms and the identification of customers occurs, those licenses will bear nine digit numbers.

Still speaking of this Citizen Control System, there is the report of a double-nine digit identification system which we cannot verify. It has to do with control of all money - which will become electronic money - on a worldwide scale. This comes from the Society for the Protection of Individual Rights and Liberties, mailing address P.O. Box 2799, Hendersonville, N.C. 28793. We quote: "In Brussels, Belgium, the ten European Common Market countries have a Main Switching Center in their International Computer hookup developed by Burroughs Corp. that will handle worldwide electronic funds transfers. This control center occupies 3 floors of the headquarters 13 story building, and in this building their Chief Computer Analyst is currently directing efforts to assign every person on earth an 18 (double nine) digit number. The first three numbers are 666, followed by 110 which is the U.S.A. control number, and followed by your area code number (3 numbers), and then your Social Security number to complete the sequence. The plan is to remove all cash from society and later remove the credit cards, all for our 'protection...the equipment for this was developed in 1974 at Washington State University and is fully operational....1984 is closer than you think."

We repeat, we cannot verify the above, except to confirm that a computer set-up of this description is in place, is operational, and is being used for some purposes relative to the operation of a Regional World Government which is to function politically through the already existent European Parliament. An article appearing in the European Community Magazine for October 1981, denied the existence of any such plan for the use of its Computer Center, or that the numbers identifying individuals "would provide a walking credit card system—an international currency of which the Community's Economic and Monetary Union is but the intermediate goal." Andrew Mulligan, then head of the EEC's Washington information service, said this was all a rumor spread by Fundamentalist Christians because the proposed double-nine number began with 666 "which is the number of a man". But, aside from Fundamentalist eschatology, here are certain "signs of the times." With so many of George Orwell's predictions coming to pass, who can be sure about the universal numbering of all men, women, and children?

A very interesting article appeared in the January/February 1981 issue of the magazine Liberty, was written by Tim Ponder and captioned: "Big Brother's Got Your Number." Ponder reminds his readers that "Anyone who has attended school, applied for a job, sent in an income tax form or used a credit card is the subject of an information file, or dossier. In fact, most adult Americans are the subject of not one but of as many as twenty dossiers. 'The individual is being informationally raped,' according to Harvard law professor Arthur R. Miller." Ponder then notes that "The retrieval ability of electronic data banks boggles the mind. With the use of the laser it would be possible to record a 5,000 word dossier on every man, woman and child in the United States upon a single tape less than 5,000 feet long." And, as might be expected, Orwell is quoted: "The invention of print...made it easier to manipulate public opinion, and the film and the radio carried the process further. With the development of television and the technical advances which made it possible to receive and transmit simultaneously on the same instrument, private life came to an end. Every citizen, or at least every citizen important enough to be worth watching, could be kept for twenty-four hours a day under the eyes of the police...The possibilities of enforcing not only complete obedience to the will of the state, but complete uniformity of opinion on all subjects now existed for the first time."

Another alarming statement was made by Tom R. Kovach, writing in the Omni magazine: "Computer scientists at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology have given an alarming analysis of the computer threat to human society..The scientists stated that computers were engulfing almost all functions of human society...computers are removing people from their work, are becoming more powerful than humans, are destroying people's self-image, and the creativity in man. Dr. Weizenbaum, computer scientist at M.I.T., added: "Once we accept that human beings are machines, merely symbolic manipulators and information processors, then the final step has been taken to replace the human species with a silicon-based intelligence."

Silicon is the "brain" of a computer. In today's electronic-technological era, silicon is more important than gold or even uranium, although far less expensive. A tiny silicon chip can control an automated corn popper, or an ICBM guidance system. And in the production of these silicon chips, the USA maintains unchallenged superiority. So, as has been reported officially, there are KGB agents swarming into our country trying to steal microcomputer technology. Christopher Simpson reported in the April 1981 issue of Omni magazine that: "Russian electronic espionage is aimed primarily at the Santa Clara Valley, a cluster of suburbs between San Francisco and San Jose. Despite some competition from Japan and Texas, the valley remains headquarters to the most sophisticated electronics manufacturing and research operations in the world. More than 40 'Top Secret' projects are under development there, according to the FBI, and 400 more require 'Secret' clearance. Silicon valley's chief products are the tiny chips used in computers...The Russians and the Japanese, the Germans and just about everybody else want to skip the billion-dollar investment in R&D it would cost to create their own chip-building methods. Instead, the Soviet bloc has concentrated on...when necessary, stealing U.S. chip-making technology." One of their schemes was masterminded by the Moscow Narodny Bank (MNB). One of its agents, a Chinese who had assumed the name of Amos Dawe, was sent to California to buy community banks in Silicon Valley. He bought a sizable interest in the Peninsula National Bank and was in the process of negotiating the purchase of two others. Fortunately, a branch of the British Intelligence Service exposed Amos Dawes, who had a record in Hongkong for a similar scam, and the deals fell through. The reason for buying community banks: "The banks would have given the KGB detailed financial records of hundreds of American scientists and engineers. Such records provide a clear picture of people's vices and weaknesses." In other words, the bank records could provide a way for "buying" top secret information.

It is sometimes asked by those in the know: "Why should the Soviet steal secrets when, sooner or later, they're going to be provided with the Top Secret information by our own subrosa elitists and monopoly capitalists? In the past, in a spirit of "merging" with the USSR, secrets have been shared: our atomic secrets, space togetherness, computers so the Soviet could perfect its Citizen Control System, technology for the world's largest truck factory, the world's biggest generator for perfecting weather war techniques, etc. All to make the USSR like the USA and vice versa, so there can be a merging of the East and the West, then the North and the South, all to become a New World Order with a Universal Citizen Control System! So, why steal things we'll give them, if they wait a little while? We're told it's like this: If we give it to them then we know what they have. But if they steal it, we can't be sure just how advanced they have become in developing laser and particle beam weapons, etc.

Finally, as we indicated, we believe that a Universal Citizen Control System is a distinct part of the blueprint for the New World Order that is being built. Now, if this evil can be contained within the borders of a free and independent Republic, so that the evil can be attacked at local, state, and national levels, then there is hope that it can be defeated (although history seems to belie that statement). But, if the One Worlders "merge" us all into one "Community" and create a Universal Control System, then what hope have we of restoring and maintaining freedom? We can begin by preventing the installation of this nine digit zip code. We can remind our elected officials of our first President's advice concerning entangling alliances. And we can pray as if it's up to God and work as if it's up to us.

BOMBSHELL IN A FIELD OF POWDERKEGS

Never before has the raw, naked political power of the Zionist Lobby in Washington, D.C. been exhibited so blatantly, or admitted so openly. Not only did the Israeli government order an unprovoked act of aggression against another country. It also violated a contract with its "sworn defender and sustainer," the United States of America. Now the rest of the world, both the Eastern and the Western parts of it, are blaming the United States as well as that favorite state which we are pledged to protect against all enemies foreign or domestic. True, there was some adverse reaction in Washington because Israelis used American-supplied F-15 and F-16 planes to destroy the Iraqi nuclear plant. President Reagan was said to be "shocked." Senator Percy, chairman of the Senate Foreign Affairs Committee, stated openly that it "was not a defensive strike." The State Department condemned the Israeli action and withheld the delivery of four F-16s temporarily. But ABC's Frank Reynolds sounded the first doubt when he said, "Now that the United States has condemned Israel's attack on a nuclear plant in Iraq, just what is this country supposed to do about it? There is a deep sense of uncertainty about what should be done."

While the delivery of four F-16s was delayed temporarily, this had nothing to do with the still-to-be-delivered $3 billion worth of other war supplies to Israel, including 22 F-15 fighter planes, 200 M-60 tanks, and a wide range of missiles, ammunition and spare parts needed to keep half of the weapons in Israel's arsenal functioning. And referring to the delay in delivery of the four F-16s, Judy Woodruff of NBC commented: "This move to chastize Israel for its air strike against Iraq was softened, however, by the President's refusal to state one way or the other, whether he believed that Israel had violated an agreement with the U.S. Instead, the letter (from Secretary Haig to Senator Percy) states that a review of the matter is underway, and that Israel's argument that the attack was necessary for its self-defense, will be taken into consideration. Mr. Reagan has acknowledged that there are limits as to how far he is willing or able to go, to punish Israel for its actions." And Senator Percy, who must chair the Senate hearings, admitted that they "could be the most politically sensitive since the Vietnam War," an ominous comparison. He added: "We would be shrinking from a very difficult task, a very sensitive, a very very delicate and a very painful task if we didn't proceed to look into the matter." Tom Lettit of NBC observed that "Many Senators don't want to have the hearings, because of the enormous political overtones and the fear of antagonizing many American Jews. The American Jewish voter and financial contributor is a big part of American politics." Sam Donaldson added: "What the Administration has done today is tread water, while it looks for a way out of a difficult dilemma, while soliciting Congress's aid in finding it. It cannot wink at an Israeli action which it itself has condemned and which many other nations announce as naked aggression. But on the other hand, it cannot bring itself to immediately cutting off aid to a state which every President since 1948 has pledged to defend." A talk show caller summed it up in these words: "If Begin is running our State Department, how come he was never confirmed by the Senate?" A qualified answer: Because Begin may also be running the Senate.

As we remarked, never before has this naked power of "the Jewish voter and financial contributor" been so openly admitted by the Establishment press. It also is true that since the Reagan Administration was installed, this power of the Zionist Lobby has been more obvious than ever before. There was, as an example, the case of Warren Richardson, who had been nominated as assistant secretary of Health and Human Services (formerly HEW). There was no doubt as to his qualifications for the job. But immediately after Reagan's announcement of the nomination, an Establishment Media blitz began. Despite Richardson's qualifications, there was one mark the Zionist Lobby had against him: he had once been associated with the Liberty Lobby. And, said the Zionist Lobby: the Liberty Lobby is anti-Semitic. Therefore, Warren Richardson was unfit to serve in any government post. Truth of the matter: Liberty Lobby is not anti-Semitic, but it is anti-Zionist Lobby. There's a big difference, but the Zionists refuse to admit it. Anyway, since "the American Jewish voter and financial contributor" is such a big part of American politics, the media blitz was so intense and vindictive, Richardson withdrew his nomination.

More recently, there was the case of Dr. Ernest E. Lefever, nominated for the post of Assistant Secretary of State for Human Rights and Humanitarian Affairs, a post that should never have been created in the first place, but that is another story, to be filed with those about the Departments of Education and Energy which never should have been established. Anyhow, if there was to be a Human Rights Secretary, Dr. Lefever was the man for the job. James Kirkpatrick, professional conservative columnist, insists that "Dr. Lefever was superbly qualified for the job. The 62-year-old scholar has been a life-long student of foreign policy and of world affairs in general...and an ordained minister." But, as Kirkpatrick noted, there was one thing against him, which made him unfit to hold public office: he was a "hard-line anti-Communist" and for this reason the Zionist Lobby, the "liberals" and the Establishment media smeared him, intimidated and/or blackmailed any number of Senators, so that Dr. Lefever was talked into withdrawing his nomination.

Then along comes Begin, who has the Zionist Lobby on his side and who wants to win an election. There was the danger that he might upset a lot of carefully laid plans of the Subrosa World Government in doing what he did. And, as our headline reads, Begin dropped a bombshell in a field of powderkegs. He ordered the destruction of a nuclear reactor in an Arab nation that was pro-Soviet, also one of the 21 nations of the Arab League, all of which are bound to react, perhaps violently, to the action of America's friend and protege.

James Scotty Reston, Establishment apologist who works with The New York Times, almost explained the situation in his column of June 11, when he wrote: "The Israeli bombing of the Iraqi installation raises some general questions about the control of nuclear weapons, and a specific question about how the Reagan administration will react to it. This will be the first real test of the administration's Middle East policy of building a barrier to Soviet influence in that area. And, in the next couple of weeks, with Secretary of State Haig in China, Undersecretary Clark in South Africa, and Vice President Bush in Paris, it will be interesting to know who will preside here on these questions and also on the ominous threat to Poland."

Reston's mention of the widespread "personal diplomacy" which is scheduled for the next few weeks is an important part of the "story behind the story". A bit of background that the Establishment media neglected to publish is important in this connection:

Last March 19th there was an important meeting at Arden House in Harriman, New York. Called by the American Assembly, co-sponsored by the Council on Foreign Relations, and subsidized by the Ford Foundation, Henry Luce Foundation and Rockefeller Foundation, the meeting had to do with the investments in and the industrialization of Red China. Present were government officials, international bankers, international lawyers, academics, and a few selected journalists who were not there as reporters. Those attending included Winston Lord, president of the CFR; William H. Sullivan, president of American Assembly; Dr. Richard H. Solomon of the Rand Corporation (a think tank); Senator John H. Glenn of Ohio (yes, the ex-astronaut); also Chai Zemin, Ambassador of the Peoples Republic of China to the United States; and Punch Coomaraswamy, Ambassador from Singapore to the United States. Alleged reason for the meeting: "Despite the remarkable progress of the past decade, there are uncertainties about the future of US-PRC relations, especially in the area of security cooperation.... The PRC is now seen as a regional rather than a global power, a developing country struggling with the problems of political instability and economic and social modernization."

Translation: Monopoly capitalists had been looking on Red China as a vast new customer field, as well as a supplier of great resources and cheap manpower. But the Megabankers and Multinationalists have learned a hard lesson because of overlending to both Communist and Third World Nations; wanted to learn if the Communist Chinese government could assure them safer passage on their way to their Utopia, the New World Order. Because of size and its population count, China is important to the "developers," but has little to give other than drugs in exchange for Western goods. Hence the need to reclassify China as a "regional" rather than a "world" power.

Next: On May 15th, the Bilderbergers met in Bergenstock, Switzerland. Many of the same U.S. citizens who attended the American Assembly meeting were also present at Bergenstock. We mentioned this Bilderberg conference in our Report of May 15, written just as the elitists were gathering. We now have a more complete list of U.S. citizens who attended the meeting, thanks to a reporter for Spotlight who tried to crash the conclave and failed, but was able to identify the arrivals. They included David Rockefeller, Jack Bennett of Exxon, William Bundy of Foreign Affairs magazine, Richard Burt of the State Department, Vernon Jordan of the National Urban League, Jeane Kirkpatrick who is U.S. Ambassador to the U.N., Henry Kissinger, Sen. Charles McC Mathias of Maryland, former Vice President Walter Mondale, George Ball of Lehman Brothers Kuhn Loeb, Inc., Bruce MacLaury of the Brookings Institute, Peter McColough of Xerox, Henry Heinz II of Heinz Co., and Murray Finley of the Amalgamated Clothing and Textile Workers Union, AFL-CIO. Also present were the usual assortment of bankers, lawyers, academics and multinational corporations from the United States, Canada, Japan and the countries of Western Europe. The reason for this meeting, according to a spokesman for Rockefeller involved "three areas of discussion: 1. What should Western policy be toward the Soviet Union in the 1980s; 2. Obstacles to effective coordination of Western policies; and 3. How can the Western economies put their house in order?" Under these headings, almost anything economic, monetary or political could be discussed. But, one important event occurred:

Immediately after the Bilderberg conference adjourned in May 18, many of the Bilderbergers immediately flew to Peking for a Trilateral Commission meeting attended by all three of the Trilateral chairmen: David Rockefeller for the North American members, European chairman Georges Berthoin, and Japanese chairman Takeshi Watanabe. According to the very reliable Review of the News of June 10: "After meetings of the Trilateralists with PRC Vice-Chairman Teng Hsiao-ping and Vice-Premier Ji Peng-fei, the Chinese Communists announced the Trilateral meetings were 'rich, varied and lively, and a complete success.' The official New China News Agency reported David Rockefeller as saying to the Communist leaders that the Trilateral countries and Red China are becoming 'more and more interdependent, and also that 'Our discussions in the last two days show that we have far more in common among the Trilateral countries and China than we have differences, and it is possible to overcome those differences'." (Unquote). It would seem that if the Rockefeller Cabal has its way, the United States shall be not only "merged" with the USSR, but with the PRC as well!

Interpretation: American Internationalists and Chinese Communists met at the American Assembly to plan how to fit Communist China into the emerging New World Society. Among other things discussed at the Bilderberg gathering, the European and Japanese members were brought up-to-date on the new plans for China (regional, not global). Then, immediately thereafter, the Trilateralists who were also at Bergenstock, went to Peking to "close the deal" with China.

A clear understanding of the Subrosa World Government's attitude toward Red China was essential to all Trilateral Commissioners because, aside from the financial investment and resource development angles, there was a clear and present fear that cozying up to Communist China might cause a serious and undesirable reaction on the part of the Soviet Union. This was explained by the Japanese Trilateralist Nagao Hyodo, in the Winter 1980/81 issue of Dialogue, The Trilateral Commission's Quarterly of North American - European - Japanese Affairs. He wrote:

"Japan-Soviet relations cannot be completely free of global power politics, particularly the quadrilateral relationship in the Far East among the United States, the Soviet Union, China and Japan. Ever since rapprochement started between Washington and Beijing (Peking), the Soviet Union seems to have been understandably uneasy, fearful of the possibility that Japan, the United States and China may form some kind of 'tripartite alliance' against her.... It seems that the Soviet Union's deep-rooted suspicions cannot be wiped away so easily.... Constructive dialogue among the United States, Western Europe and Japan is needed on this common and vital problem."

So, in summary, here is the situation. With the Trilateralist China connection not yet completed there is the delicate and unpredictable problem presented by Poland, the challenge of the Soviet military occupation of Afghanistan, the continuing Syrian-Lebanese-Israeli confrontations, the Irani-Iraqi War, the failure of the Carter-Begin-Sadat Camp David Accord, the increased activity of terrorists throughout the Western world, the installation of a Socialist government in France, the fear of more and more Arab countries turning to the USSR for supplies and sympathy, the very unsettled economic condition in the Western world; and here at home the increasing federal debt, unchecked inflation, fear of economic collapse. And with all these problems facing the world, and the United States in particular, Menachim Begin of political Israel, suddenly and without warning, apparently just to win an election, orders the obliteration of a nuclear installation in Iraq!

A final thought. If Christians could truly understand the difference between the old Jerusalem and the New Jerusalem, as explained by St. Paul to the Galatians and to the Hebrews, we'd all have less trouble in reading the signs of the times.

Year Twenty-Eight.....Number Twenty-Four.....June 19, 1981

THE PROPOSED NEW MARSHALL PLAN

While a Soviet spy ship watched unmolested and unchallenged, the USS Ohio, the first of its class and a long overdo Trident submarine, made its debut and began its trial run. It's a floating missile platform carrying 24 missiles, each of which can carry five nuclear warheads capable of hitting targets as far as 6,000 miles away. Admiral Rickover's dream ship was two years late and had cost millions more than its original estimate, $1.2 billion being its final cost, and the admiral stood tall and proud on its bridge as the 500-foot-long black sea monster moved majestically down the Thames to the open Atlantic.

Meanwhile Caspar Weinberger who presently carries the title of Secretary of Defense, was reporting to his peer-members and superiors at a meeting of the Council on Foreign Relations in New York City. According to AP, Weinberger told the elitist group that controls U.S. foreign policy that he "estimated that it could take more than six years to close the gap in military investment between the United States and the Soviet Union. Weinberger warned....that the Soviets may continue to outspend the United States in acquiring new arms even with the vitally needed larger defense budget proposed by the Reagan Administration. Weinberger told the Council on Foreign Relations that an old contention that the U.S. nuclear superiority would make it unnecessary to fight a prolonged conventional war 'has lost much of its strength', because the U.S. nuclear power margin has disappeared. We must prepare to meet Soviet military power however it might be used, Weinberger said. He cautioned that the United States and its allies face the possibility of conflicts in widely separated areas, including the Persian Gulf, Central Europe, Africa, East Asia, and Central America. 'We may have to deal with more than one conflict at a time, and we must be able to contend with a conflict in one area without opening up critical vulnerabilities elsewhere.'" (Unquote).

As Defense Secretary Weinberger was reporting to the CFR, State Secretary Alexander Haig was just leaving Communist China where he spent three days attempting to close a deal with the Communist Party leaders which would make Mainland China an unofficial ally of the United States against the Soviets. To enlist China's support and at the same time establish an Open Door Policy for Multinationals and Megabankers, Haig was given a set of promises he was to give the Communist leaders. These promises were concocted at a meeting of Subrosa Government Elitists last March 19th (see our Report #23 of 6/12/81). The promises:

1. We would give the "other China," the National Republic of China on Taiwan, no modern airplanes or newly developed offensive armaments.
2. We would eliminate all existing laws and regulations which "unfairly discriminate against the PRC."
3. We would amend those laws or regulations which inhibit the U.S. business community and financial intermediaries from participating in China's economic development, and which adversely affect the U.S. competitive position.
4. We would promote our mutual interests by a "broader utilization of existing programs, such as the Export-Import Bank and the Generalized System of Preferences."
5. We will actively promote "the licensing of high technology, including 'dual use' technologies destined for China after careful review of their end use."

6. We will "ensure that the financial resources of the International Monetary Fund and World Bank Groups are adequate to meet the needs of developing countries, including China."

By these means and promises, it was expected that the leaders of Communist China would jump at the chance to ally themselves with the forces represented by Alexander Haig, including the legitimate government of the United States. But, if The Washington Post is to be believed, the Chinese Dragon wasn't completely taken in. Michael Weisskopf of The Washington Post Service wrote, on June 18th, that China "picked up its Russia Card and in the most conciliatory move in two years, the Communist Party newspaper People's Daily published a long article proposing that both sides withdraw troops from the heavily armed border and begin talks aimed at a new treaty to define the contested boundary line... Diplomats here (in Peking) viewed the article as a warning to Washington that, despite the new U.S. decision to sell weapons to China, Peking is not ready to commit itself to an anti-Soviet alliance with the United States." It is noteworthy that this article appeared in the Chinese newspaper the very same day that Haig left Peking to fly to Manila.

Moreover, three days after Haig left Peking, the Chinese Communist government issued a stern warning about America's continuing to have friendly relations with Taiwan. AP quoted from a commentary by the official Xinhua news agency which threatened that "if the U.S. side merely pays attention to the pressure of some pro-Taiwan forces and ignores the feelings of the Chinese people, the Sino-U.S. relations cannot even be preserved as what is today, to say nothing of any development (sic)." In an attempt to refute this show of an unchanging attitude on the part of the Communist regime, news was leaked that our government had made arrangements for the setting up of two important nuclear missile tracking stations in Sinkiang Province near the Soviet border which are said to be important because they replace similar spy stations that were lost when we were kicked out of Iran. However, these spy stations have nothing to do with Haig's visit to Peking. They were installed about one year ago, and they are manned, not by American but by Chinese observers, and if they do our military defense establishment any good, it will be at the sufferance of the Chinese Communist military establishment.

In short, the media tell us that there is a military and a defensive reason for this deal that has been made with the Communists of China; but the real reason has to do with the opening up of China to the multinational, monopoly capitalist developers and the international megabankers, for exploitation; this at the expense of United States industry and labor and with the use of U.S. taxpayers' money to accomplish the exploitation. Because Mainland China has nothing to trade with the United States except the 'fruit of the poppy' which, of course, is a multi-billion dollar business. But, as for any big arms deal, the communist government officially slashed its defense spending by 20 percent for 1981 and while the Communists want arms, they can't pay for them. The Congressional Research Service reports that "The Chinese seem most eager to procure such equipment as anti-tank missiles, anti-aircraft missiles and aircraft, but... China would need many years to field modern weapons in large numbers, to establish a support structure to sustain them and to train personnel in their operation." In other words, the reason for treating an enemy like a friend has little or nothing to do with U.S. defense or security. "The U.S. China Card - Bad Poker," is the headline on an article published by Globescan, which is a Paris-Geneva-based news service which claims to publish "real news beyond the media coverage." The article follows:

"The U.S. decision to arm the Chinese Communist regime is a catastrophe to the still free nations in Asia but not a serious threat to the USSR. The relationship between the Soviet Union and Communist China is governed by the internal dynamic forces of the two regimes and is not susceptible to manipulation by a third party. Both Moscow and Peking maintain a one-party dictatorship at home and pursue a policy of world revolution abroad....The Chinese Communists' current anti-Soviet united front has two objectives: to provoke an armed conflict between the West and the Soviet Union, and to obtain Western capital and technology for their modernization programs. Communist China and the Soviet Union are not likely to start a war against each other in the near future. Improvement of the U.S. and Chinese relations, especially in military matters, will undoubtedly increase the tension between the U.S. and the Soviet Union. The U.S. - China policy should be based on the long-term interests of the United States, the free nations of Asia, and the Chinese people, not the Communist regime....The 'China Card,' like all power politics throughout history, will produce nothing but tension, war and misery for the involved nations. But it will provide profits for those who direct those policies." (Emphasis added. Quotation is from Globescan, 24 issues per year. Subscription address: 37 Quai d'Anjou, 75004, Paris, France.)

Profits for those who direct these policies. Tension and misery, and possibly war for all others involved! Let us reason this out together:

In our Report of May 8th, we quoted Dean Lamont who had observed that "The poor countries of the world are dangerously close to involuntary defaulting on their $500 billion in debt to western banks and governments. . .A reminder of of this grim possibility can be found in a little noticed change in the Depository Institutions and Monetary Control Act of 1980....It also gives an important glimpse of how Americans will pick up the tab for these 100 poor countries so the world's financial system will be saved from a chain of bank failures. Under the act, the Federal Reserve can purchase the debts of foreign governments, their semi-state agencies and their state enterprises. The Fed becomes the lender of last resort." Under a provision which became effective on June 1st, 1981, the Fed can monetize these debts, which then become America's (that is, the taxpayers') debts!

This reference to $500 billion in foreign debts involved the poor countries of the so-called Third World. But what about the debts owed by the countries of the Communist world? As early as 1976 John Dornberg, an investment consultant, wrote: "Western bankers...seem to be tripping over each other in the rush to provide (loans to Communist controlled countries) at rates and conditions still highly favorable to the borrowers." Then Dornberg listed the chief megabanks that provided such loans to the Communist bloc countries. He said "The ground was quickly broken in Moscow in 1972 by Credit Lyonnaise, then ploughed in quick succession - and in that order - by Dresdner, by Deutsche Bank, Bank of America, Citibank, Barclays, National Westminster, Commerzbank, Banca Commerciale Italiana, Melli-Iran, Banque Nationale de Paris, Paribas, Chase Manhattan, Finland's Kanselis Osaki, Societe Generale de Paris, Svenska Handelsbanken, and Banca di Napoli. The first into Budapest was Vienna's Creditanstalt Bankverein, followed by Citibank. Manufacturer's Hanover has an office in Bucharest, In Warsaw it is Chicago's First National City." The list goes on and on; banks that have poured billions into the Communist countries, and this with little or no chance of ever recovering the money from the countries, their agencies or institutions.

Dornberg gives us this supposed joke: "A prominent Rumanian trade official - so goes a story making the rounds in Communist Eastern Europe - was recently asked by a Western banker whether his country's high external indebtedness was not causing him some sleepless nights. 'Not at all,' replied the Rumanian with a dash of Balkan savoir-faire. 'I sleep quite well. Why shouldn't I? After all, I'm the debtor, not the creditor'."

Exactly how many billions of dollars or other currency equivalents, are owed to Western banks by Communist bloc countries probably is known only by the debtors and creditors. We can only guess. But here is the important fact: like the Third World nations that can't pay their debts, the Communist nations are simply not going to pay their debts. For example, our Report of May 8th dealt with how Poland's debts to the American-based banks can be repaid: The Fed monetizes the debts, and the debts thus become our debts! And the Megabanks - or the IMF or the World Bank and its affiliates - can lend money to any nation it may choose with no concern about whether that nation can ever repay the loan or even the interest on it. If the nation defaults, the American people will pick up the tab. They call it the New Marshall Plan, and Jeremiah Novak explained the situation and the gimmick in an extended article, "The Crisis in International Banking." We quote a pertinent part of the article:

"The first words of the 1980 International Monetary Fund World Economic Report are, 'The world economic picture is rather grim.' In this report (first of its kind to be made public; previous ones have been circulated only to bankers), the IMF analysts note that...in 1981 some nations, such as Brazil, The Philippines, Turkey, Zaire, India, Yugoslavia, Portugal, and Peru, simply cannot borrow any more money from the banks...This means that by 1981 some nations may have either to default on their debts or simply stop importing oil. To remedy this, bankers such as James Nash of Morgan Guarantee and Charles Frank of Salomon Brothers, are looking to U.S. taxpayers to bail them out. This author interviewed Frank and Nash...both maintained that the U.S. government must bail out the world economic system with a New Marshall Plan. This is the crisis we face today. The single international system, created in 1945 will crumble without a huge bail out by U.S. taxpayers. Without such a bail out there will be a general banking crisis. Either we keep the system alive by massive aid programs through the IMF and World Bank, based on taxpayers' money, or the system will collapse as it did in 1929."

SUMMARY. The selling or giving of weapons to Communist China has nothing to do with national defense or security against Soviet aggression. The truth of the matter is this: Third World nations owe International Bankers an estimated $500 billion; a debt these nations can never repay. So the Megabankers have devised ways and means for squeezing the money out of U.S. taxpayers. One scheme would have the World Bank provide our money for resources to send to these nations for the avowed purpose of helping them develop so their expanding tax bases can support their debt service. They call it a New Marshall Plan because that's the way the original Marshall Plan worked. But, not satisfied, the Megabankers are planning the same ploy for Communist China: sending resources for which we pay indirectly to Communist China so China can pay off their accumulating debts to the Megabankers. The nations lose and the people lose, but it will provide profits for those who direct the policies." This has been going on ever since 1945 and it will continue so long as we give foreign aid to politicians instead of people, support a World Bank, and permit a Central Bank (the Fed) to continue to dictate America's economic and financial policies. How long, Oh Lord, how long must we endure this kind of slavery?

A WHITE HOUSE DIVIDED

Every kingdom divided against itself is brought to desolation; and every city or house divided against itself shall not stand.....Matthew 12:25.

It has become a national habit. This matter of divided loyalties among members of the federal administration made the Carter Administration one of the worst in the history of our Nation. Now the evil is beginning to make itself manifest in a dangerous manner in the Reagan Administration. It has nothing to do with political parties as such. Rather, it has to do with "special interests" versus national interests. Or, one might refer to it as what is known as the Eastern Establishment versus the rest of the country. And it all began officially at the outbreak in Europe of what became World War II. The State Department under Cordell Hull found itself hardpressed to keep up with foreign affairs in such a fast-changing world. So, in September 1939, a special interest group known as the Council on Foreign Relations offered to assist the State Department in some long-range planning for war, peace and a new world order after the war was won. Five study groups were created and manned by the CFR. They dealt with Security and Armaments, Economics and Finance, Politics, Territories and Peace Aims. Over the next six years these study groups, manned by the CFR and financed by the Rockefeller Foundation, flooded the Department with advice and suggestions - 682 different memoranda during that period according to the CFR. By 1942 these CFR planning groups had become so much a part of the State Department that they were simply absorbed into and began to run the Department. From that time onward every Secretary of State has been a member of the Council on Foreign Relations. CFR members ran the UN Organizational meetings at San Francisco. Stalin's man Alger Hiss was acting Secretary General and the American delegation was headed by Secretary of State Edward Stettinius and included Nelson Rockefeller, John J. McCloy, Thomas Finletter, Hamilton Fish Armstrong, all CFR members. In fact, more than 40 CFR members helped form the UN, with much aid from the Soviet delegation. CFR members ran the U.S. occupation in Germany, organized NATO. Thanks to that CFR satellite, the Institute of Pacific Relations, Communist agents flooded into our State Department to direct U.S. foreign policy. Examples:

1. When President Franklin Roosevelt faced Joseph Stalin, Alger Hiss was at Roosevelt's side as his chief adviser.
2. When the question of the sellout of Free China arose, there was Owen Lattimore of IPR and the State Department to arrange for the takeover of the Chinese mainland by the Reds.
3. When the 40-plus members of the CFR had concluded hearings on the United Nations Charter it was Leo Pasvolsky, Russian born, Communist agent and also head of the State Department's Postwar Policy Division, who took the Charter to Washington and arranged for its approval by the U.S. Senate.

Shortly after that came the exposures by former Communist Whittaker Chambers and the campaign against Communists in government waged by Sen. Joseph McCarthy; and a careful coverup of CFR control of State and Defense Departments was carefully hidden from the public.

Years later, this "divided house" situation became apparent to everyone when Rockefeller created the Trilateral Commission and commissioned some of his agents to train one Jimmy Carter in foreign affairs so he could become President of the United States of America. So, when Carter went to Washington he took with him the more important members of his Georgia Mafia. But, he also had to name members of the CFR and/or Trilateral Commission or both for all important financial and foreign policy posts. So, there were two teams in the Carter Administration: one loyal to Jimmy Carter, another loyal to the Eastern Establishment. They couldn't get along with each other; and that's one of the main reasons for the Carter Administration being one of the worst in history; so bad that Jimmy now is treated as a pariah by both the Democrat party and the Trilateral Commission.

But now, with Ronald Reagan we have the same condition of divided loyalties. Reagan brought with him an inner circle of men loyal to him, mostly conservative and anxious to help him repair the damage done by the half a century drift into Welfare Statism and Corporate Socialism. But, as the price of victory, or what he believed to be the price of victory, Reagan felt forced to name as his Vice President George Bush and to appoint CFR/Trilateral loyalists to all posts having to do with the making of foreign and financial policy.

But a strange thing began to happen. Public opinion was so strongly in favor of the Reagan policies that it began to sway the politically-minded former Trilateralists. Haig and Weinberger, even Henry Kissinger, and others of their

A CHRISTIAN WORKER'S CREED

THE LORD has given to every man his work. It is his business to do it and the devil's business to hinder him if he can. So sure as God has given you a work to do, Satan will try to hinder you. He may present other things more promising. He may allure you by worldly prospects; he may assault you with slander, torment you with false accusations, set you to work defending your character, employ pious persons to lie about you, editors to assail you and excellent men to slander you. You may have Pilate and Herod, Ananias and Capihas all combine against you, and Judas standing by ready to sell you for thirty pieces of silver; and you may wonder why all these things came upon you. Can you not see that the whole thing is brought about through the craft of the devil -- to draw you off from your work and hinder your obedience to God?

KEEP ABOUT your work. Do not flinch because the lion roars! Do not stop to stone the devil's dogs; do not fool away your time chasing the devil's rabbits. Do your work; let liars lie, let sectarians quarrel, let editors publish. Let the devil do his worst! But see to it that nothing hinders you from fulfilling the work that God has given you. He has not sent you to make money. He has not commanded you to get rich. He has never bidden you to defend your character, nor has he bidden you to contradict falsehoods about yourself which Satan and his servants may start to peddle. If you do these things, you will do nothing else! You will be at work for yourself and not for the Lord.

KEEP ABOUT your work. Let your aim be as steady as a star. Let the world brawl and bubble. You may be assaulted, wronged, insulted, slandered, wounded and rejected; you may be abused by foes, forsaken by friends, despised and rejected of men - but see to it with steadfast determination, with unfaltering zeal, that you pursue the great purpose of your life and the object of your being, until at last you can say: "I have finished the work which Thou gavest me to do". (An old creed; author unknown).

ilk began to sound more like Reagan than Rockefeller. The distress of the Inner Circle was noticed when the CFR met and refused to name Kissinger as a member of its Board of Directors. As the political wind blows, opportunists bend and sway with the wind of public opinion. And, in the eyes of the subrosa government, Haig seemed to be too anti-Communist, Weinberger too militant, Kirkpatrick at the UN too anti-Israel. The media began to blast all of them, with the one single exception: George Bush was not criticized. The signal was given by James Reston of The New York Times. He serves as a weathervane for the Establishment. In a recent column he wrote:

"There are times in this city [Washington, D.C.] when you can feel the temperature rising and cannot avoid hearing the thunder over the Potomac, and this is one of them. The administration's misconduct of foreign policy is clearly blowing up a storm....The opposition to Reagan's casual foreign policy is building up here - in the Congress and elsewhere. John J. McCloy, the former head of the World Bank and former U.S. High Commissioner in Berlin [as well as honorary chairman of the CFR] was down here last week saying....an administration whose success he favors has gone off the track...."

So, it appears that they must have cooked up a plan and put it into operation.. The powers that be would keep President Reagan so tied up with budget, tax, and moral measures at the domestic level, that he wouldn't have the time or the chance to do anything about foreign policy for a while. Priming Tip O'Neill to engage in a personal duel with the President would be a great help. The media gave out the news that President Reagan "considers domestic policy more important than foreign policy right now" and he's going to devote all of his time and energy toward winning the battle of the budget, cutting taxes, and getting rid of unnecessary agencies and regulations. And sure enough, the President dropped all his other plans and went on an old-fashioned political barnstorming tour to drum up support for his domestic program. His tour was successful, Speaker O'Neill was publicly humiliated and it seems that the President will have clear sailing on budget and tax measures. But this isn't really important to the subrosa government leaders. If budgets are balanced and taxes reduced so that federal handout money becomes scarce, so what? So long as there are the Federal Reserve and the government printing presses, more money can be poured into the economy. This will increase the public debt and inflation, but it won't hurt the Megabankers. What they want is to, in McCloy's words, "get the foreign policy back on the tracks," because that's the way the bankers can be bailed out. Billions to Red China, three billions to Pakistan, more billions to Israel - only don't sell AWACS and sophisticated armaments to the Arabs, because they have the money to pay for what they purchase and that won't help the Megabankers. In this connection, a very interesting editorial appeared in the July 1981 issue of Reason magazine. We quote parts of the editorial:

"Last January, Office of Management and Budget Director David Stockman proposed cutting $2.6 billion in federal subsidies to farmers, aircraft manufacturers, international bankers, and multinational corporations. The proposal promptly ran into a buzz saw of opposition - not just from the interest groups themselves but from...the State Department. For the subsidies in question go by the name of foreign aid. Mention this term to the average person, and you create an image of starving children in the Sahel, CARE packages, and courageous doctors wiping out malaria. That's a very convenient image for Chase Manhattan Bank, Boeing, and General Electric to cultivate. But it's a fraud on the American taxpayer - a fraud that is long overdue for exposure...

"Aid dispensed by the IMF and the World Bank serves primarily to prevent Third World governments from defaulting on their loans from Citibank, Chase Manhattan, and Manufacturers Hanover Bank....two other components of foreign aid explicitly subsidize big business. The Export-Import Bank provides subsidized loans to foreign governments so they can buy US-made products... And the Overseas Private Investment Corporation (OPIC) provides taxpayer funded insurance against nationalization [socialization or communist takeover] for facilities constructed overseas...

"What a tremendous success story we have to sell, if only those who make US foreign policy could be brought to understand it themselves! As long as they remain the captives of the status quo of Boeing and Chase Manhattan, our policymakers will continue to promote big government in the Third World. Only a rediscovery of the principles of individualism and free enterprise will make possible a radically different foreign policy - one that offers hope for creating wealth by unleashing entrepreneurship around the world." (Unquote).

This is precisely what the Rockefeller-controlled Eastern Establishment does not want. Foreign aid must continue, even a new Marshall Plan must be instituted; for this is the way the American taxpayers can guarantee the prosperity of the International Bankers. Even if foreign aid to Communist countries can cause the destruction of free governments everywhere! And speaking of aid to the Communists, an item from the June 17th Intelligence Digest, gives us a clue concerning this sudden surge of neo-Nazism which has manifested. The World Anti-Communist League (WACL) which is quite powerful in Free China, Korea, South America and Europe and has a branch in the US, has had much trouble this year with a neo-Nazi faction which is trying to destroy the WACL. This neo-Nazi group isn't that at all. It's a phony outfit "being financed and directed to bring discredit on WACL by members of the American Council on Foreign Relations. They [the CFR] are pro-Peking and anti-Free China and hope that by discrediting WACL they will help to isolate Free China and smear South Korea where the WACL secretariat is based."

"Our [Intelligence Digest] correspondent believes that the funds come from the Rockefeller family through various channels and that this explains why certain factions seem to have unlimited funds and are prepared to press their particular point regardless of the wishes of the majority of WACL. Our correspondent quotes a prominent Mexican boasting quite openly at a WACL meeting in Hawaii of his anti-semitism and admiration for Hitler. A WACL conference in Washington was given some adverse publicity some years ago, and he believes that this was a 'set up.' We have of course criticised Vice-President George Bush - a former Trilateralist - for engineering the de-recognition of Taiwan and the recognition of Peking. Clearly WACL needs to be on its guard against a communist fifth column within its ranks." (Quoted from Intelligence Digest, a weekly review. 17 Rodney Road, Cheltenham, Glos. GL50 1HX, U.K.)

In considering internationalist control of national administrations or financing of fifth columns, one might say it's all a matter of what money can do. Except that what's being used to enslave us isn't real money. Webster defines money as "a measure of value" and anything that fluctuates in value like a federal reserve note is hardly "a measure of value." Still, it's being used to enslave us. So the way to fight back is to stop the presses, demand a return to real money, and that its value be controlled by elected officials, not by a private corporation. Back to the Constitution is our way of national escape.

REVIVAL OF THE SOCIALIST INTERNATIONAL

In 1931 Edith (Starr Miller) Queenborough, a reputable international political investigator, completed her masterwork, Occult Theocracy. Published posthumously in 1933, and printed in France, it was a two-volume study in which she identified and described over 200 organizations that were committed to the destruction of Christian civilization and the creation in its place of some version of a New World Order. On page 241 of her work she made a comment that is as true today as it was in 1933. She wrote:

"The game of politics is the pursuit of power. In [Western countries] there are two separate organizations playing the political game. The open and visible one, the members of which hold office as members of a government, and the invisible one composed of individuals who control this visible organization and in whom is vested the real power, the essence of which is finance, controlling the publicity which makes or unmakes its tools.

"This financial power may be used to promote truth or fallacies, good or evil, national prosperity or national ruin; but so long as human nature is what it is, so long as jealousy, greed, personal ambition and expediency can sway the lives of men, so long will the rule of the invisible power prevail by methods inimical to the best interests of a nation. The strength of [the government] thus lies at the mercy of invisible leaders who, being nationally irresponsible cannot be called to account for the consequences of the acts of the governments they control. This at the same time constitutes the inherent weakness of any form of government, the apotheosis of which is the control of both [political] parties in the state, right and left, radical and conservative, by the same forces. Then, only the puppets change while the rule of the individuals controlling the machine continues unhindered. Voters who wonder why their efforts have failed, wonder in vain. As the dupes of a controlled publicity, their privilege of the vote is a farce.

"If all factions in a state can be controlled from one source, why should international control be impractical?....

".. [It is an] intrigue directed against Christianity which today ravages the world, carrying in its wake a general disregard of all ideals, decency, duty, and loyalty. Liberty is corrupted into licentiousness, marital fidelity into perversion, equality into equality of low standards and fraternity into a brotherhood based on mutual slavery under the yoke of International Finance!.... And the monster grows apace! Today (1931) it bestrides the world under the name of Bolshevism, but it is the same old monster, the heresies of the first centuries of the Christian era and the Middle Ages, namely - Gnosticism."

In her voluminous documentation, Lady Queenborough identifies and describes over 200 varieties of organized intrigue (conspiracy) all of which are directed against all Christian nations and societies. These forms of conspiracy range from devil worship to International Banking, but she is able to classify all of them under one family name: Gnosticism. In other words, call it whatever you like; political, moral, ethnic, economic, financial; in the final analysis, it is spiritual warfare! It is a conspiracy started by a serpent and one that has continued through the ages in various forms, to fit the times and the circumstances. This conclusion was brought to our attention by a letter we received from The Rev. T. Robert Ingram shortly after we had published a series of Reports based on a recent book, "Fire in the Minds of Men," By James H. Billington, an "Establishment liberal" who had uncovered and published important documentary proof of the continuing spiritual revolutionary conspiracy against Christian society stretching from Adam Weishaupt (Illuminism) in 1776 Vladimir Lenin (Bolshevism) in 1917. Referring to our series of Reports, Rev. Ingram wrote:

"Dear Don. I think we have been missing the target. This is not criticism, but I want to share with you the flood of light that has come to me by dipping into modern studies on gnosticism, and through them back to the Fathers. I think the roots of the conspiracy are not to be traced in terms of time, but rather the Gnostic Movement which has been in and around Christianity from the beginning...The Gnostic Systems are not simply permissive toward scandal, lawlessness and revolution but actually demand it in their scheme of salvation....."

Rev. Ingram identifies Humanism as the current form of Gnosticism: "Gnosis means knowledge....Gnostic religion holds that 'salvation' is to be had by knowledge, usually secret and esoteric, but still knowledge...and it is amazing, almost frightening, to follow the razor-like sharpness of gnostic wit as it twists and turns through Scripture, assigning a most startling meaning to familiar phrases and sayings and words that simply turn truth upside down. The same Christian words and themes seem to be there, but as in liberal theology or dispensational teaching, they somehow have lost all their familiar content. An unbeliever might very well imagine, hearing a gnostic preacher, that he was listening to Christian Doctrine.... We know that the devil, whatever else he may be, is a liar, and the father of it...Here we have gnosticism in a nutshell. It calls the truth a lie, and then proceeds to explain how the lie can be reasonably believed....Today gnosticism appears as Humanism....Prior to the appearance of organized Humanism in 1931, however, the leading moral (or immoral) imperatives of gnosticism were at work mightily in the spirit of revolution that has gripped Christendom since before the French Revolution." (Excerpts from articles prepared on Humanism by T. Robert Ingram).

That same "spirit of revolution" which gripped Christendom at the time of the French Revolution, a form of Gnosticism, has been revived in Europe and the fact is important to all Christendom today. We'll try to explain.

Gnosis means knowledge, and the various Gnostic (anti-Christ) systems which have existed over the centuries insist that their sects have had access to certain secret and esoteric knowledge that makes of them a superior and a gifted people. The Illuminati, or "The Illuminated Ones" claimed to be possessors of this secret knowledge. Thus, we can trace the imperatives of Gnosticism to the tenets of that organization founded by Adam Weishaupt in 1776, and called in English "The Order of the Illuminati." The secret organization did not continue long under that name, due to its exposure and suppression by the government of Bavaria. However, its leaders were able to infiltrate into and gain control over the French lodges of Grand Orient Masonry, where they became the chief organizers of the French Revolution, and where Illuminism continues to thrive today. Witness the recent governmental upheaval in Italy which came about because many members of Continental (Grand Orient) Masonry had been found in important government posts. This same Gnostic-Illuminized Masonry is the guiding spirit behind the Socialist International which headquarters in Paris but has strong roots in Italy and West Germany as well. It was chiefly responsible for the recent election of Socialist President Mitterand in France.

The reliable historian Nesta Webster insists that only Grand Orient Masonry was permeated with the Illuminist doctrines. In her book, "Secret Societies and Subversive Movements," published in 1924, she wrote, pages 273-4: "In October 1887 the venerable Bro. Blanc said in a discourse which was printed for the (Grand Orient) lodges: 'You recognize with me, my brothers, the necessity for Freemasonry to become a vast and powerful political and social society having a decisive influence on the resolutions of the Republican government.' And in 1890 the Freemason Fernand Maurice declared 'that nothing should happen in France without the hidden action of Freemasonry,' and 'if the Masons choose to organize, in ten years' time no one in France will be able to move outside us.' This is the despotic power which the Grand Orient has established in opposition to both Church and Government. Moreover, Grand Orient masonry is not only political but subversive in its political aims: to bring about universal equality as formulated by Robespierre and Babeuf. The policy of the Grand Orient is thus avowedly International Socialism.... The formula of the 'United States of Europe' and of the 'Universal Republic' that was first proclaimed by the Illuminatus, Anacharsis Cloutz, has long been the slogan of the French lodges.... 'Freemasonry,' one of its modern orators declared, 'is the anti-Church... the Church of Heresy.' But the Grand Orient goes further than this and attacks all forms of religion." (Unquote).

To bring this up-to-date, let us understand that the Gnostic-Illuminist based Grand Orient is the seat of the Paris-based Socialist International. Already, it has succeeded in establishing its "United States of Europe," whose parliament meets sometimes in Strasbourg, sometimes in Luxembourg, occasionally in Brussels. Thus they have succeeded in advancing from national socialism, (which exists in some form in every European nation) to international socialism as represented by the budding United States of Europe. In this connection Walter Lippman made an important contribution back in 1971. Lippman had been a member of Col. House's "The Inquiry," a selected group which traveled to Paris in 1918 to help re-arrange the post war world and install the League of Nations as a form of World Government, which they failed to do. Lippman also was a charter member of the Council on Foreign Relations and for half a century acted as a mouthpiece for the Eastern Establishment. In 1971 (we do not have the exact date) Lippman wrote in his column in The New York Times that "in awaiting the establishment of world government universal socialism will serve as its keystone."

Of course, we know that the Gnostic-Illuminist-Oriented International Socialists have not been working alone. There has always been that essential assistance from the same quarter that also keeps Communism alive in the USSR and now in Red China, and which finances all the other Gnostic Systems, such as the World and National Councils of Churches, the "liberal theology" which is promoting terror and destruction in Central America, religion of Secular Humanism in government schools, etc., etc. As for the Socialist Regional World Government that is being built in Europe, R.S. Ball recently wrote in Spearhead, an English publication: "It should be evident... that the idea of a United Europe... did not suddenly spring into spontaneous existence at the end of the Second World War. Very Influential people had been working on these themes in the 1920s and before. These people were from the leading banking circles of the United States, Britain, Germany and France; such as the Carnegies, Morgans, Warburgs and Rothschilds. The political circles were often opposed to each other across national boundaries, but they were united behind the scenes.... As the former US President, Franklin D. Roosevelt, has often been quoted as saying (and he was well qualified to know after all the deals he had arranged in his lifetime), 'In politics, nothing happens by accident'."

Things have speeded up dangerously since a new administration was installed in Washington. Hardly happening by accident have been the attempted assassinations of a President and a Pope, political turmoil in Italy and Spain, election of a socialist government in France, more crises in the Middle East. And economic chaos everywhere....

A British analyst wrote: "There is danger to the world because of the French elections. Our concern is that...renewed hope, strength and vitality will accrue to the European Community - meaning European Socialist State. Working diligently in Brussels, Luxembourg and Strasbourg, the EEC will be regulating, legislating and organizing to erase the sovereignty of France and other members of the Socialist Internationale, heretofore centred in Europe - but spreading globally and fast. Many missed the 'key words' used by Mitterand in his acceptance speech and by his chief aide, Monsieur Rocard. ...The words (coined at the recent Congress of the Socialist Internationale), are 'militant socialism.' Each thanked their supporters for their militant socialist assistance."

And Hilaire du Berrier referred to Germany's Willy Brandt as "Mitterand's President in the borderless empire of the Socialist International." Brandt as head of the Socialist International spent three days in early July in Moscow, conferring officially with Breshnev and other Communist leaders, making undisclosed deals which could mean the destruction of adequate NATO defenses in Western Europe, and the uniting of the two Germanys on Russia's terms.

As for the Middle East, the USSR is supplying arms to both Iran and Iraq to keep that war going, is arranging joint military maneuvers with Syria, which could bring the Soviet Union directly into Middle East conflict. And one of the first things Mitterand did as President was to honor an existing contract to continue to supply Iraq with highly enriched uranium, and to deliver 60 Mirage F-1B and F-1C fighter planes to Baghdad, along with an undisclosed number of AMX-30 battle tanks.

Finally, with swamp, brush and forest fires in Florida and California adding to our national woes, we are prompted to borrow some words from John Bennet of Intercessors For America: "Have you ever tried to put out a fire that's burning in the punk that forms on the floor of a forest? Punk is crumbly, dry, decayed wood that can burn underground. A fire may be extinguished in one area, and all of a sudden it breaks out in another area. It has traveled invisibly below the surface. A fire in punk must be extinguished by digging down, removing and dousing the smoldering matter. The 'root' of the problem has to be dealt with. In the same way, physical problems must be traced to the root if we're to effect a cure. Otherwise, we're tending to symptoms. The visible problems that plague our society...are symptoms of a deeper problem. It is important that we understand these visible issues and labor diligently to correct them. But, it's absolutely essential that we get at the root. The underlying cause is spiritual. We are trying to pray away the consequences of God's judgment upon our land instead of focusing our prayers on removing the cause of that judgment."

HAVE WE LOST ANOTHER ROUND?

While sunshine conservatives celebrate and bask in the warmth of a supposed victory by President Reagan in his battle for budget and tax cuts the Monopoly Capitalists and Welfare Socialists keep right on winning the war. Gary North in his Remnant Review observed that "the eye of the hurricane has lulled the conservatives into a gentle slumber. While they are out on their lawns, frolicking in the warm glow of President Reagan's press conferences, I'm batten-ing down the hatches." Even in the case of Reagan's supposed budget and tax victories, Congress hasn't acted on the details of same, and will be tied up in proverbial knots until after the Labor Day Holiday. And Reagan says that this means his program will not become effective in 1981. And, while he is fighting his tax battle, the President's popularity is slipping at the polls. The Gallup poll is not especially accurate, but most people believe in it, and it says that at the end of his first six months in office, the President's approval rating has dropped from 68% to 59%, which is lower than Nixon's rating in 1969 and Carter's rating in 1977 after their first six months in office. Gallup says 44% of the people queried dislike Reagan's economic policies, 25% do not approve of his proposals for cutting Social Security benefits, 22% are convinced that he intends to help only big business and multi-millionaires, 8% think he has done nothing positive in six months, and 7% resent his "hawkish military position." Whatever one may think of Reagan and his program which was supposed to re-turn this Nation to a state of fiscal sanity and national security, two facts are obvious: The Corporate Socialists and Welfare Statists are getting in telling blows and are weakening whatever is left of the spirit of conservatism which swept Reagan into office; and the Reagan administration itself is beginning to compromise with and sometimes surrender to the Eastern Establishment which also controlled the Carter administration. And, while the enemy is winning, the sunshine conservatives are celebrating.

We can't resist the urge to insert a personal comparison. On March 22, 1945, six weeks after being freed from a Japanese prison camp, we were flying with a Navy PB4Y crew on a patrol mission along the China coast, then held by the Japanese. Spotting an enemy supply ship near Amoy, we dove down to bomb it and blow it out of the water. But there was a Japanese anti-aircraft installation on Quemoy Island which we didn't know was there. So instead of blowing the ship out of the water, our ship was blown out of the air. Of the 13 aboard, seven survived. But we survived only because the Japanese were so elated by having destroyed an American four-engine bomber, that they began a 'banzai' celebration instead of immediately checking to see if any of us had survived.

That gave some friendly Chinese fishermen time to fish us out of the water and get us safely ashore. When the Japanese realized their mistake, they chased us half way to Chungking but never caught us. However, you are able to read this Report only because some soldiers stopped to celebrate before the victory was completely won. Our point of comparison: The conservatives in America seem to be doing the same thing those enemy soldiers did in 1945.

Without changing the locale, our present China policy is a pertinent example. Now there are two Chinas, and the New Right had a "two China policy." Part of the Reagan program involved treating our allies as friends and our enemies as enemies. Richard Viguerie, who insisted that The New Right was Ready to Lead, said, "We seem to spend more time courting enemies like Communist China than friends like Taiwan." And the people who elected him were assured that this would all be changed when Reagan went to Washington. Instead, Secretary of State Haig went to Peking, made a deal with the Chinese Communists and promised them arms and technological equipment. The Wall Street Journal of July 2 commented: "Haig's visit is being billed as a success...but the problem of Taiwan...remains unsolved." But when White House spokesman Larry Speakes said that under the Reagan administration the U.S. has greatly improved its ties with "the government of Taiwan," Peking stretched Haig's inch into a Chinese mile and denounced the Reagan administration, saying there is no such thing as a "Government of Taiwan," that there was one government of China and only one, and it was in Peking. The rebels in Taiwan were but temporary local leaders, etc., etc. Furthermore, if the U.S. government didn't stop supplying Taiwan with military supplies, Peking would have to resort to military action against its rebellious island province. So our officials are now seeking to soothe the ruffled scales of the Red Chinese dragon. And does this sound like the Reagan administration is "treating our allies as friends and our enemies as enemies?" Furthermore, Red China is being invited to send delegates to an upcoming General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) meeting in Geneva where international trade, tariffs and bank loans will be talked over and arranged. For those who can recall the results of Neville Chamberlain's "peace in our time" pact made with Hitler at Munich, the following comment by Patrick J. Buchanan will be meaningful: "For America to lean upon Communist China is to lean upon a crutch that could be pulled from under the free world as rapidly as the Kremlin crutch was yanked out from under Britain and France, by Molotov and Von Ribbentrop, 42 years ago - with similar consequences." (Incidentally, we pray that those Chinese fishermen and their families got to Taiwan with Chiang Kai-shek, and that they and their descendants are enjoying freedom, at least temporarily.)

Another example of how the conservative cause has fallen. Had Reagan nominated anyone like Sandra O'Connor for a post on the U.S. Supreme Court six months ago, there would have been such an outcry and protest that she would have been forced to reject the nomination twice as fast as the real conservative Lefever whom the liberals persecuted so successfully. Not because Sandra O'Connor is a woman - there are many women who could qualify and serve with honor as a Supreme Court Justice - but because of her stand on abortion and ERA, her nomination would have been denounced as a monstrous double-cross six months ago. But today we have Sen. Strom Thurmond approving the choice, and Sen. Barry Goldwater resorting to vulgarities in denouncing any Christian who would oppose O'Connor's selection. This all is indicative of the fact that Reagan's own conservative advisers, as well as the conservatives in the Senate, have started to water down the original political, economic, and social programs which gained Reagan and a Senate Majority their seats of power. In speaking of what still remained of right-wing opposition to O'Connor, an unidentified White House aide is reported as having said: "The Right-wing opposition shows that this nominee is a bona fide woman who can have the respect of other women. So a little backlash from the kooks is goof politics." So if you oppose her nomination, you're a kook, which Webster defines as an unbalanced person. However, because nominating a woman was "good politics," and because nominating a woman whom even Tip O'Neil will applaud, is better politics. And, to attain better politics, we have a watering down and a defeat for true conservatives.

Most of this has come about because of the growing influence of the Trilateral

Commission and the Council on Foreign Relations. We should have known that we were defeated, in this round that is, when Candidate Ronald Reagan nominated George Bush as his running mate. Since entering the White House, the President's continuing selection of Rockefeller-connected Eastern Establishment characters has signified a total defeat - this round - for conservatism. In addition to Bush, who told David Rockefeller, "All that I am I owe to you" at the Trilateral Conference in Washington March 29th; there are on Reagan's staff the following members of the Trilateral Commission, the Council on Foreign Relations or both - and this is not necessarily a complete list of them:

Elliot Abrams, State Department
George H. Aldridge, State Department
Malcolm Baldrige, Commerce Department
Charles W. Bray, Ambassador to Senegal
William Brock, Special Trade Representative
Arthur Burns, Ambassador to West Germany
William J. Casey, Central Intelligence Agency
Chester Crocker, State Department
Richard G. Darman, White House Staff Secretary
Lawrence Eagleberger, State Department
Roscoe L. Egger, Jr., Internal Revenue Service
Thomas E. Enders, State Department
Peter M. Flanigan, Economic Policy Advisory Board
Alan Greenspan, Economic Policy Advisory Board
Alexander Haig, State Department
Robert D. Hormats, State Department
Bobby R. Inman, Central Intelligence Agency
Fred C. Ikle, Defense Department
Jacob K. Javits, Foreign Policy Advisor to State Department
Lawrence J. Korb, Defense Department
Warren T. Lindquist, Community Development Commission
James T. Lynn, Economic Policy Advisory Board
Paul McCracken, Economic Policy Advisory Board
Maxwell Raab, Ambassador to Italy
Myer Rashish, State Department
Donald Regan, Treasury Department
Eugene Rostow, Arms Control and Disarmament Agency
George Schultz, Economic Policy Advisory Board
William Simon, Economic Policy Advisory Board
Charles Walker, Economic Policy Advisory Board
Murray L. Weidenbaum, Council of Economic Advisers
Caspar Weinberger, Defense Department
Walter B. Wriston, Economic Policy Advisory Board

No doubt you've noticed that all of the Eastern Establishment retreads listed here have been appointed to strategic federal administration positions that are concerned with foreign, commercial, economic or monetary policy. Control of these policies is basic to the program for development and control of the new International Economic Order, which is the main objective of the developing New World Order. The men listed here have been appointed to national administrative offices. But, no matter how loudly they may protest publicly, they are internationalists in their hearts; and their first administrative loyalty will be, not to the federal agency or department which they supposedly represent in our behalf, but to some respective international agency or organization that is a part of the Supranational World Government. In the programming of these monopoly capitalists and international money barons, what happens to this or any other Nation in the so-called free world, will depend upon how that event contributes to the promotion of the New World Order, economically and financially. For example, consider Section 14 (b) (1) which has been added to the Federal Reserve Act. It permits the Federal Reserve to buy or sell the obligations of foreign governments! The Fed can act as the lender-of-last-resort whenever sovereignty loans come due and cannot be paid off, rescheduled, or refinanced. These foreign government obligations then become part of America's debt and money supply. Result: the Third World debts become ours, and we pay them through increased inflation and interest on the public debt. Thus do international interests supersede national interests (principles as well as interests in this case).

This is just one of a number of examples that could be offered to show how the enemies of our Constitutional Republic keep right on winning while the conservatives - who should be winning - have been "lulled into a gentle slumber" and are continuing to lose, for this round anyway. Of course, we are not the first to lose while thinking we are winning. A couple of years ago, before Reagan's election victory, conservatives began to cheer about a global political shift to the right. Here in the United States Carter's fumbblings made us happily aware of a conservative victory in our neighbor to the north. That Clark had won in Canada seemed an optimistic sign of the times. But something went wrong, and in less than a year the International Socialist Pierre Trudeau was voted back into power, and now the conservatives of Canada are fighting against attempts to saddle their Nation with a new Socialist Constitution. What seemed also to be a sign of the times was the election of Margaret Thatcher of Britain. However too many years of socialist control made it impossible for her economic policies to work. In England the marxist dominated Labor Party has recently won widespread local elections, and there is every indication that the socialists will be right back in power after the next general election. In Australia, the Fraser election seemed like a good sign of a global turn to the right. But, there seems to be something of a replay of the Thatcher sequence under way. Here in the United States, Reagan is losing popularity and his program, not as conservative as we had expected but yet a turn to the right, is beginning to be watered down and even drowned in red ink.

Writing in much the same tenor as ourselves, Donald S. McAlvany sums up the situation in the following words: "Unfortunately, though the political right was better organized and financed than ever before in 1980, the fact remains that the majority of Americans, as well as Canadians, Europeans, etc., still don't comprehend the basic economic, monetary and geopolitical problems that confront the West today. Therefore, they will not accept the painful economic and military solutions which are necessary for our survival, but will rather opt for the next leader who promises them the most with the least pain." (Quoted from Gold and Monetary Report, Box 39810, Phoenix, AZ 85069).

What's gone wrong? Well, for one thing, we've forgotten one of our first President's most serious warnings: "Of all the dispositions and habits which lead to political prosperity, religion and morality are indispensable supports. In vain would that man claim the tribute of patriotism who should labor to subvert these great pillars of happiness - the firmest props of the duties of men and citizens. The mere politician, equally with the pious man, ought to respect and to cherish them."

WORLD GOVERNMENT VIA ECONOMIC SUMMITRY

Regarding the Economic Summit, currently being held in Ottawa, Canada, the U.S. News headline of July 20 asked: "Can Reagan Keep Allies in Line?" For the sake of accuracy and honesty, the heading should have asked: "Can the Trilateral Commission Keep Reagan in Line?" And the answer, unfortunately, would have been an unqualified "yes." Because, on July 18, 1981, the President travels to Ottawa to report to a council of his peers, and to take orders from a clique of his superiors. His peers are elected heads of state: Thatcher of Britain, Schmidt of West Germany, Mitterand of France, Spadolini of Italy, Trudeau of Canada, and Suzuki of Japan. Their superiors from whom they will receive policies and programs for the coming year, are the appointed planners and directors of various supranational organizations and agencies, especially the Trilateral Commission and the OECD. The Ottawa Economic Summit is the World Government in plenary session! Back in 1979, when the various national dignitaries then in office were preparing to go to the Economic Summit being held in Tokyo that year, to receive their instructions on how the world was to be managed for the next twelve months, Jeremiah Novak, a respected political observer, wrote:

"Policy making in the age of Trilateralism has shifted from the Congress and even from the Administration of the United States to the supranational summits, where it is directly influenced by the members of the Trilateral Commission, the supranational preparatory groups and the supranational OECD. President Carter is not the President of the United States, but the general manager of a subsidiary of a supranational institution. Policy comes from the Summits to the Administration, and (that policy) is not the desire of the American people or of the Summit Countries, who are unaware that the Summits have been institutionalized into a semi-federal supranational directory."

Strike out the name Carter and insert Reagan in its place, and the foregoing statement is accurate and up-to-date. There was hope that President Reagan would resist the Trilateralists. As a candidate he promised that he would. But it was only a campaign promise, one that couldn't be kept if he were to win the election, or so he thought when he selected Bush. As for the Ottawa Summit, the people of the nations involved are not aware of the fact that this is a World Government in plenary session!

Because love of country and the spirit of nationalism die hard, the builders of the New World Order decided that the takeover of nations must be done piecemeal, by the creation of international organizations, the calling of international summits, the promotion of the idea of interdependence and the establishment - piece by piece - of World Laws. And the holding of these Economic Summits each year has been one of the most effective weapons of the New World Order builders. Every year since 1975 such a Summit meeting has been called by the Trilateral Commission and the OECD. Here the heads of state of the large industrial nations meet to receive the policies and programs drawn up by a preparatory commission composed of world planners. Those heads of state have always responded, cooperated, and obeyed. However, it is interesting to note that when the first Economic Summit was called and held at Rambouillet, near Paris, President Ford resisted the call, but was forced to attend. The chief American correspondent for The Sunday Times of London wrote: "It was not easy for President Ford to make up his mind whether to attend...because the advice he got from Secretary of State Henry Kissinger in favor of participation was unanimously opposed by his Economic Policy Board." Henry won, of course, and Ford attended the Summit, because Henry Kissinger represented a supranational government, while the Economic Policy Board represented a mere national government. After Ford gave in in 1975 no other President has dared to say no to the supranational powers.

Ottawa is the seventh in this series of Economic Summits. The first one was held two years after the Trilateral Commission was formed. The chief planner was Henry Owen, Trilateral Commissioner, Brookings Institute executive and President Carter's Special Representative for Economic Summits and Ambassador-at-Large. He prepared a paper for the Trilateral Commission entitled, "Foreign Policy Premises for the Next Administration." He explained that the "traditional notions of the power and authority of national governments no longer command the allegiance that they did in times past." And he took his text from a Communist professor. We quote: "Almost two years ago, in Warsaw, a philosopher suggested that the concept which would eventually replace past national slogans was that of 'community...I suspect we will find the philosopher's judgment sound as to what the current transitional period presages: the increasing emergence of institutions which permit like-minded people to direct their efforts to common ends, without regard to traditional limitations imposed by the sovereign prerogatives of national governments. Increasingly just such institutions are moving into areas formerly thought the province of these governments. Some widen national boundaries, as in the case of the European Community...others, like the World Bank and regional development banks, reach out beyond them; still others, like the multinational corporations, ignore these boundaries, to tap private resources....Their scope is no longer defined or limited by old concepts of the power and authority of national governments...."

Henry Owen summarizes: The world is passing through a transition period, from a system of nation-state governance into a system of global governance where economic and political decisions will be made by individuals operating at the international level. The foundations for world government had already been laid: the IMF, OECD, World Bank, GATT, BIS, etc. The next important step to be taken in building the New World Order would be the Economic Summit, to be held annually at a different location each year. Then to assist Owen in preparing the details, he was joined by Francois Duchene of France, and Kinhide Mushakoji of Japan. So this threesome, one Trilateral Commissioner from each of the three Trilateral divisions, collaborated in the writing of a report for the Trilateral Commission entitled "The Crisis of International Cooperation." In the paper they called for "a permanent preparatory committee made up of individuals from the trilateral nations who could work behind the scenes in formalizing joint economic policies and programs to be implemented by the individual nation-states. Joint decisions could then be popularized and publicly promoted after they had already been reached at the economic summits."

Translation: Trilateralist planners would work out the economic policies and programs beforehand, then present them to national heads of state at the annual Economic Summit. Then the heads of state would go back to their respective nations and start carrying out the pre-planned policies and programs. A totalitarian suggestion was added by Owen, Duchene and Mushakoji: "Of course, the final aim must be collective action by governments. It might, for instance, be possible to conceive of an International Advisory Commission of say three internationally respected statesmen with sufficient prestige to state the general interest, clarify the political stakes, and pave the way for the domestic acceptance of concession and compromise. But the time for this has not yet come...." The time for this did come, however, at the London Economic Summit in 1977.

The First Economic Summit was held November 15-17, 1975, at the Chateau de Rambouillet near Paris. Present from the United States were Jerry Ford, Nelson Rockefeller, Henry Kissinger and other Trilateralists. Representing the other Trilateral Nations were Chancellor Helmut Schmidt of the Federal Republic of Germany, President Valery Giscard d'Estaing of France, Prime Ministers Aldo Moro of Italy, Takei Miki of Japan, and Harold Wilson of the United Kingdom. Henry Kissinger seemed to be more or less in charge on behalf of the supranational government at this first meeting. He reported to the world at the end of the session: "We had a number of specific areas, specific ideas on how the interdependence of these countries could be carried out - in the field of trade, in the field of economic relations with Socialist countries, in the field of monetary affairs, in the field of energy, and in the field of development....The free countries vindicated the concept of their interdependence and laid out a program and a method for cooperation which we hope will accelerate the recovery of all of the peoples as well as their cooperation with the less developed countries for the benefit of all." This was to become the general tone of all future reports to the public at the end of an Economic Summit. Interdependence would be the slogan. And it would be made to appear that at each Summit the national leaders had discussed the issues and arrived at a consensus, never that the supranational leaders had "created a consensus" beforehand, to which the national leaders were forced to agree. Jeremiah Novak said of this first Economic Summit: "The importance of Rambouillet was that it was the first institutional meeting of the suprenational directory of the trilateral world. It set a precedent....."

The Second Economic Summit was held June 27-28, 1976 at Dorado Beach, in Puerto Rico. Canada joined the other Trilateral Nations at this Summit. When it was ended, the United States delegation issued this innocuous statement: "The interdependence of our destinies makes it necessary for us to approach common economic problems with a sense of common purpose and work toward mutually consistent economic strategies through better cooperation." One fact emerged: the heads of state and government were coerced into making a number of promises concerning trade, energy, inflation, economic problems that were never kept because they couldn't be kept. So far as real progress was concerned, the first two Economic Summits were failures.

The Third Economic Summit was held May 7-8, 1977 in London, and it became important because of the creation and installation of that "preparatory group" that Trilateralists Duchene, Mushakoji and Owen had recommended. They had insisted that "the problem is not to implement a consensus on politics, but to create one." So, from this time onward a pre-selected "Preparatory Group" would prepare all the policies and programs that the Trilateral Nations were to adopt and carry out. Then the heads of state would be called together in an Economic Summit, would be presented with the policies and programs, which they would then discuss and adopt. At this time the Trilateral Commission got quite a boost in that it was joined by the Supranational Atlantic Council - one of the most prestigious of the "private clubs" that specialized in the promotion of an Atlantic Regional World Government. The Council published a special report, "Harmonizing Economic Policy: Summit Meetings and Collective Leadership." This report carried the endorsement of some 43 dedicated One Worlders many of whom also were members of CFR, TC, Bilderberg, etc. Among them were Henry Fowler of Goldman Sachs; Miriam Camps of the CFR; Emilio Colorado of Exxon; William McChesney Martin, former Federal Reserve Chairman; Charles Robinson of Kuhn Loeb; Frank Southard of IMF; Richard Gardner who was Ambassador to Italy at the time; Myer Rashish who is currently a member of the Reagan administration's State Department, etc. This London Economic Summit was President Carter's first important venture into world affairs, and he drew unfavorable attention to himself when he suggested that Dylan Thomas should be put in the Poet's Corner at Westminster. This could have served as a harbinger: after the London Summit, American prestige began to sink to new lows. Its claim to world leadership began to pass across the Atlantic to the Nations of Western Europe, especially to Western Germany.

The Fourth Economic Summit was held July 16-17, 1978, in Bonn, West Germany. This summit was different in that in addition to the elected heads of the individual Nations, a representative of a Regional World Government also attended the "meeting of the supranational directory of the trilateral world." We refer to the European Council and the presence of the President of the European Commission, Lloyd Jenkins. De facto World Government took one more step toward becoming World Government de jure.

The Fifth Economic Summit was held June 27-28 at Tokyo, Japan. Here a new fact came to light. The Trilateral trio, Duchene, Mushakoji and Owen had insisted that a "Preparatory Committee" of Trilateral statesmen be appointed to prepare the policies and programs that were to be approved by heads of state and government when the latter met later in a Summit. Just who were members of this Preparatory Group was a secret. But just prior to the Tokyo Summit, West German Trilateralist Karl Kaiser and American Trilateralist Richard Cooper wrote a special Trilateralist Paper, "Toward a Renovated International System," in which they revealed the names of the Preparatory Group that had "created the consensus" that was to be approved and executed by heads of state and government who had attended the Summit meeting. The names of the master planners and policy makers were Bernard Clapper of France, Sir John Hunt of Great Britain, Dr. Deiter Hiss of West Germany, Hiromichi Niyasaki of Japan, Umberto Larocca of Italy, and Robert Johnstone of Canada. Trilateral Commissioners, but not one of them from the United States! Thus had the balance of power swung toward Western Europe. And the Nations of Western Europe were growing more friendly toward the Nations of Eastern Europe all the time! Incidentally, the Tokyo Summit was so involved with OPEC and the energy shortage that little of real import developed at this Tokyo gathering.

The Sixth Economic Summit was held June 22-23, 1980 in Venice, Italy. No startling information available, only a distressing report given to the media: "Successive large increases in the price of oil, bearing no relation to market conditions have produced higher inflation and the immense threat of severe recession and unemployment in the industrialized countries...."

And now the Seventh Economic Summit, July 20-21, 1981 at Ottawa, Canada, and Reagan's critical test. Will he act as the President of a Sovereign Nation or as the general manager of a Region of a World Government? There's a campaign promise concerning this. Let's pray this is one he keeps.

TOWARD A NEW ECONOMIC WORLD ORDER

The Seventh Annual Economic Summit has ended and the six visiting heads of state and their advisers have gone home to carry out as best they can the orders they received from representatives of the Elitists who are building the New Economic World Order. The controlled communications media will not tell you that these annual economic summits are arranged by and managed in behalf of the Trilateral Commission. Nor will they tell you what actually occurred at the two-day meeting. The media will tell you that seven elected heads of state convened in secret session to discuss and make plans for cooperation in meeting the world's economic problems. They will not tell you that they really met to hear of the plans already made by an International Preparatory Group, and to learn how they must execute those previously prepared plans. The American based columnists, commentators and analysts will tell you that the Summit was "a triumph for President Ronald Reagan." Joseph Kraft's report was typical. It began: "The United States has reasserted its role as peacemaker of the world economy, and the leaders of the other major industrial countries, despite some misgivings, have crossed their fingers and gone along with Ronald Reagan. That's mainly what has happened at the meeting." Had he told all of the truth, Kraft would have said that the heads of state of the other industrial countries have gone along with Reagan because he was carefully coached, and was acting as mouthpiece for the Rockefeller-dominated Trilateral Commission. How Reagan sold out to the World Government Elitists is a story that ought to be told.

On November 6, 1980, Reagan said in a speech that was broadcast nationally: "I think there is an elite in this country and they are the very ones who run an elitist government. They want a government by a handful of people because they don't believe the people themselves can run their lines....Are we going to have an elitist government that makes decisions for peoples' lives, or are we going to believe as we have for so many decades, that the people can make decisions for themselves?" In this same light, Reagan had been the only Presidential candidate to attend and speak at Rev. James Robison's Round Table Rally at Houston. There he proclaimed himself to be anti-abortion, anti-ERA, anti-evolution, and pro-God, family and country.

On the other hand, Ronald Reagan at the time had Trilateralists and members of the Council on Foreign Relations on his staff of advisers from the beginning and had been rubbing elbows with the Eastern Elite for many years as a member of the very exclusive male-only Bohemian Grove Club of Northern California. And the San Mateo (CA) Times of October 16, 1980 carried an article by Irving Stone, author of The Origin, a biographical novel based on the life of evolutionist Charles Darwin. Stone is an ardent evolutionist, and in view of what Reagan had told the members of Moral Majority, Round Table, Christian Voice and the New Right, Stone's warning is notable. He wrote:

"I've known Ronald Reagan for 35 years. He's a very warm, personable man. But Ronnie doesn't have the mind to make independent judgments....He has to have a script which he will memorize perfectly. I'm a little frightened to have a man in the Oval Office who can't make independent judgments. When he made that statement about evolution in Houston, he was talking to a large crowd of Fundamentalists. Apparently, he wants their votes very badly."

After making certain promises to millions of Christians apparently because he "wants their votes very badly," the U.S. News of November 24, 1980, noted that "Top officials of the Reagan team have sent a message to the Moral Majority. 'It isn't your administration.' These advisers are urging him (Reagan) to ignore political threats of punishment by the religious right if he does not support their policies. 'Hell with them,' Vice President-elect George Bush declared on November 10 in Houston, referring to the right-wing groups that support the President."

That Bush was not alone in his opinion concerning the right-wing supporters of Reagan, was indicated by the number of former members of the Trilateral Commission (resigned for office-holding reasons) and members of the Council on Foreign Relations were also members of the Reagan administration. It may be that Reagan was not personally responsible for all these appointments; for he didn't "make independent judgments." He just took the advice of friends and staff members. Nevertheless, as Truman would have said, "the buck stops at the desk in the Oval Office." An example is the recent nomination of Judge O'Connor to the Supreme Court. Sandra O'Connor was just a name cleared by the Justice Department and handed to Reagan by his aide Jim Baker. Said the usually reliable Rowland Evans-Robert Novak column: "The remarkable fact is that Reagan was unaware that the right-to-life movement found O'Connor unacceptable until her probable nomination leaked out just before the Fourth of July weekend.... On Monday, July 6th, the President telephoned Attorney General William French Smith, who had given Reagan the Justice Department's recommendation (of O'Connor). Reagan wanted a quick check on this abortion business. Smith turned the task over to his young counselor, Kenneth Starr, who gave O'Connor a clean bill of health on abortion by using legal gymnastics to explain her Arizona legislative record... The more plausible explanation is that Reagan shares the views of Jim Baker and his other aides, that the Moral Majority is not vital to his political coalition. He has given that signal by ignoring its sensibilities in selecting Sandra O'Connor."

Another recent example. On July 7, Henry S. Rowen was appointed chairman of the newly created National Intelligence Council at the CIA. His job will be to coordinate all national intelligence estimates before they go to the White House - a highly sensitive position. Rowen was a Deputy Assistant Secretary of Defense under Robert McNamara from 1961 to 1964; then moved to the Bureau of the Budget until 1966. From there to serve as president of the Rand Corporation (think tank) until 1971 when he resigned during the controversy over the Pentagon Papers. He is also a member of the CFR, according to The Review of the News, 7/22/81. A retreat from Democrat administrations - and further evidence of Reagan's sellout to the Eastern Elitists.

However, the state of ambivalence created by Reagan's attitude of all things to all men that he might get their votes, must have caused as much concern to these elitists as to the new rightists. Because, before being totally accepted by the Eastern Establishment he was to go through a trial by fire - literally. After the aborted assassination attempt, Reagan began to spend little time on moral issues, concentrated mostly on money and economic issues. On the subject of his sellout to the Eastern Establishment, Gary North provided another important bit of evidence. Commenting on what it might be like if Al Capone's Mob were running things from the White House, North remarks: "The Mob is in Washington today, People are slowly beginning to see this. They are hopeful that Reagan will get them out of the clutches of the Mob.... I have reproduced a document that indicates that the Mob has already made its deal with

Mr. Reagan." The document is a memorandum to the Secretary of State, signed by President Reagan. It reads:

"Pursuant to Section 2(b)(2) of the Export-Import Bank Act of 1945, as amended, I determined that it is in the national interest for the Export-Import Bank of the United States to extend a credit in the amount of $120,742,500 to the Socialist Republic of Romania in connection with its purchase of two nuclear steam turbine generators and related services and spare parts. On my behalf, please transmit this determination to the Speaker of the House and the President of the Senate. This determination shall be published in The Federal Register. (Signed) Ronald Reagan, The White House, May 20, 1981."

Gary North adds: "The winner? General Electric. Do you remember the star of the old G.E. Theater? Well, just for the record, he still is. The willingness of G.E. to trade with the U.S.S.R. and its satellites has been a company policy since the 1930's." (From Remnant Review, 7/17/81. 22 issues per year, $95. Foreign Air Mail: $133.)

It should be understood by all that Reagan has sold out and made his deal with the Trilateral Commission, 52 percent of whose American membership are directors of Big Banks. Now, the aim of the Trilateral Commission is the creation of a New Economic World Order. It is accomplishing this by means of a three-step program: 1) The merging of nation-states into regional groupings (Regional World Governments); 2) The merging of corporations into world conglomerates that will be under the control of American, European and Japanese multinationals; and 3) The merging of banks and "all depository institutions" which will be under the control of the Federal Reserve System, and creation of a New World Monetary System (an International Federal Reserve System). In regard to the merging of corporations:

Giovanni Agnelli is to Italy as is David Rockefeller to the United States. He is a Trilateralist, Bilderberger, Club of Rome member, OECD member, head of Fiat and other multinationals. When the Trilateral Commission was founded in 1973 he made a prediction: that this merging of corporations would happen first in the automobile industry. That he was right was seemingly confirmed by an article appearing in the French newspaper Le Monde, August 3, 1979. The English translation: "Today nine groups control more than 80 percent of auto production worldwide, and the trend continues. General Motors, enlarging its European network, will install a new factory in Spain. Ford recently acquired 25 percent of Japan's Toyo Mogyo, maker of Mazda. Eventually Chrysler is to be bailed out of its troubles by a European company - perhaps Volkswagen. Honda recently signed an agreement with British Leyland for a new model to be built in Great Britain and distributed in France. Peugeot-Citroen and Volkswagen are doing well, but unless they buy out competing firms they may be unable to withstand the American offensive. Fiat is said to be preparing an important merger; and the Swedish government has recommended that Volvo and Saab collaborate with foreign manufacturers to avoid financial crisis."

The continuing crisis in the automobile industry indicates that this "merging" of corporations is in full swing. This, of course, is occurring in other industries as well. Newsweek of July 27, 1981 has on its cover a depiction of one giant industry in the act of swallowing a great industry, while the great industry is in the act of gobbling up a smaller industry. The cover story, beginning on page 50, deals with "The New Urge to Merge," concentrates on the fight to gain control of Conoco, and on the activities of Wall Street investment houses (international banking agencies) in bringing about such corporation mergers.

Listed are nine investment houses and the biggest mergers they have manipulated. Fortune magazine of July 27 refers to corporations being 'Caught in a Transnational Vise.' It notes that France's Societe Nationale Elf Aquitaine and Canada Development Corporation are combining to take over Texagulf and Seagram's attempt to swallow Conoco. Also, Nippon Electric, Japan's biggest semiconductor maker is moving into California's Silicon Valley. This attempt at merger activity also is evident in the case of national - and foreign - banks moving in and establishing branch banks or buying up established state and local banks. For example: a Canadian bank is about to purchase the state bank which we use, Flagship.

This move to create an entirely new banking system in the United States - the third step in the plan to create a New Economic World Order - with the Federal Reserve System leading the parade, is most evident to the public in two ways. First, there is the current attack on the Savings & Loan Banks. These institutions hold about $1.5 trillion worth of mortgages which pay them an annual interest rate of about 9.5 percent. But their cost of funds is over 16 percent! That's a quick way to go broke. And, as these S&L Banks begin to feel the pinch there's always some Big Bank representative around who, like the old Philadelphia Lawyer types of old, are standing by to offer relief, through absorption or purchase of stock. The second public evidence of this attempt to create a New World Banking System is more personal. People are besieged by ads for Automated Teller Machines, Direct Deposit Programs, NOW Accounts, two-way television banking, expanded credit card services, and those super-market computer code marks, that could easily be tied in with your personal bank account - thus doing away with the need for cash.

"An assault on many fronts" is the way one banking analyst described the move to merge all banking facilities and services into one centrally-controlled system. It is important to know that the legal machinery to accomplish this exists in the Monetary Control Act of 1980 which became law on March 31, 1981. It is also noteworthy that 52 percent of the American members of the Trilateral Commission are directors of banks! And their final aim is the creation of a World Federal Reserve System, using electronic transfer currency, with all bank accounts, personal and otherwise, entered in and monitored by the mammoth Central Computer Control System that is already installed and functioning in Brussels, Belgium.

Of course this all spells disaster for independent local banks. An intelligence review predicts a consolidation of the nation's 14,600 banks to 100 or less in a few years. Newsweek weakens this estimate by reporting that "most experts believe that the chief victims will be weak institutions." But that's what most experts said when FDR closed all the banks during his first 100 days in order to install a new gold-weakened monetary system. And the pity of it all is that President Reagan is going along with the scheme, as is evidenced by his performance at Ottawa, to say nothing of his recent appointments.

John Adams to Thomas Jefferson in 1787: "All the perplexities, confusion and distress arise not from defects in the Constitution...so much as downright ignorance of the nature of coin, credit and circulation." The U.S. Constitution provided an answer but the Congress gave its power to an unelected Invisible Government. The remedy: Article I, Section 8, Clause 5, U.S. Constitution.

DRUG CULTURE, DEFIANCE AND CRIME

Associated Press column by Timothy Harper 5/12/81:

The Justice Department reported that one in every three households was touched by crime last year. And FBI statistics showed that the crime rate was up 13 percent in 1980, to a record level."

Item in The Chicago Tribune 6/18/81:

A former Chicago youth gang leader testified Wednesday that he formed a 200-member street gang at age 16 which was later recruited into a giant gang that today boasts "16,000 or more members" in five states. Appearing before the Attorney General's Task Force on Violent Crime...the star witness said he first organized his gang as a matter of "survival," to protect himself against existing gangs. The larger gang he joined was responsible for every conceivable kind of crime, ranging from extortion, drug trafficking, and burglary to "hits," or hire-for-murder..

Letter to the Editor from Anna Hohl of Laurel, Maryland:

What, Americans are asking themselves, has become of our nation's capital? Americans have to be bewildered by this time by the cornucopia of sin and corruption spewing out of this once proud city which now has all the earmarks of a modern day Sodom or Gomorrah. First, Americans were shocked by the heterosexual scandals of various prominent members of Congress. Then came the even more lurid homosexual liaisons of still other members of Congress. And these incredible imbroglios were so soon followed by the raft of arrests, indictments and convictions surrounding the ABSCAM affair!

And what about the D.C. government itself? Recently Mayor Marion Barry addressed thousands of homosexuals and lesbians, who had gathered in our nation's capital to march for "gay rights," to express his open support of their cause. And that was topped when the D.C. Council's Committee on the Judiciary approved a measure to decriminalize sexual relations between consenting children and teenagers. Incredibly, this measure would make it legal for children 12 years of age and older to have sexual relations if one partner is not more than 4 years older than the other, and would also allow consenting children younger than 12 to engage in sexual relations as long as there is no more than a 2 year age difference between the partners!! With such exemplary national moral leadership, is it any wonder D.C.'s crime rate is among the highest in the nation?

What has been the response of our "Pearl of the Potomac" to its burgeoning crime problem? It passed the most oppressive gun control law in the country, which makes it easier for criminals to kill, maim, and rob by preventing law-abiding citizens from purchasing handguns to protect themselves, all the while reducing its crime statistics, not by cracking down on criminals, but by simply redefining crime out of existence through decriminalization!!!...At this point in our nation's history, Americans are much more inclined to give the District of Columbia less influence in Congress, and to give Congress in turn much less influence in their daily lives. (End of Letter to the Editor).

PERSUASION AT WORK is a monthly publication of The Rockford Institute 934 North Main Street, Rockford, Illinois 61003. It discusses statements and events which its editor, John Howard, judges to be a threat to liberty and the free enterprise system. The June 1981 issue was headlined "Liberty, Nonconformity, Defiance and Crime." It contained a review of a recently published book titled "High In America" with the subtitle "The Story Behind NORML and the Politics of Marijuana." The book's author is Patrick Anderson, who has written five other books including "First Family" and "The President's Men." He also has written feature articles for The New York Times Magazine, was a speechwriter for Robert Kennedy, and then for Jimmy Carter during the 1976 campaign. His current book deals largely with the rise and decline of the man who founded the National Organization for the Reform of Marijuana Laws, or NORML. The following was drawn from the June 1981 issue of Persausion At Work, and contains much information which the media neglected to publish.

Keith Stroup grew up in a devout Baptist family in a small town in southern Illinois. As a young man he outraged his parents by hosting a beer party in his home. Expelled from the University of Illinois for "conduct unbecoming a student," he joined the Peace Corps. Finding this neither glamorous nor joyful, he quit and managed to get himself readmitted to the university. He graduated "filled with resentment against a system which put him on probation for having broken the rules." Then to law school at Georgetown where he became acquainted with Bobby Baker, the man who knew "which senator liked to drink, had a roving eye, or might be interested in a profitable business deal. Stroup was described as a smart, charming, ingratiating young man who quickly understood the realities of Washington. So he and Bobby Baker hit it off and Stroup was given a job in Baker's hotel.

CONGRESSMAN RON PAUL REPORTS

THE TRILLION DOLLAR BURDEN

Government will spend $1 trillion this year, for the first time in American history. Figures from the Tax Foundation show that the cost of federal, state and local government will top $1.07 trillion, up from $942 billion in 1980. With all the talk of austerity, as usual it's only austere for the taxpayer. Government is getting a 13.6% raise. That incredible total - two-thirds federal, one-third state and local - is $4,678 for every man, woman, and child in the country, and $18,712 for a family of four. Does any American family get $18,000 worth of "services" from government? For those not on some form of welfare, to ask the question is to answer it.

We hear lots of talk about tax cuts in Washington, but no one is proposing real cuts, only lesser increases. We need, for moral and practical reasons, vast cuts in government spending and taxes, so we can have an immediately balanced, much smaller budget. Now, not in 1984. In 1970 - no heyday of limited government - total government spending was $1,643 per person. Multiplied by our present population, that's about $378 billion, which strikes me as more than enough for government to spend. As an initial goal, we should work towards cutting spending and taxes to that level.

Since 1950, government spending has increased ten-fold, with a 280% rise just in the last 11 years. If this isn't stopped we'll become a socialist state through the back door. Government won't officially own everything, but it will control it. The political mechanisms of a free society, as well as basic morality, require that working people be allowed to spend their own money as they see fit.

We are fast approaching the day when government will spend more than the people. At this point, will we be able to call ourselves free?

Came the Vietnam War and Stroup wanted to make sure he wouldn't be drafted. He found an antiwar psychiatrist who would testify he was a homosexual (which he was not). But he also secured a government job on the National Commission on Product Safety - a type of work that his draft board recognized as grounds for a critical-skills deferment. Says author Anderson: "For Strouptwo years with the Product Safety Commission was like a graduate course in practical politics. He and the other proconsumer staff members planned their strategy sub rosa with [Ralph] Nader and Michael Pertchuk, an influential Senate aide who later become a controversial chairman of the Federal Trade Commission. Stroup learned how the commission's public hearings could be stacked, one way or the other, by the choice of witnesses. He learned how important it was to make your case with dramatic photogenic examples that would attract the media...He learned how a low-level staff member could outflank his boss by a timely leak to Jack Anderson or to some other columnist. That was the most lasting lesson he learned - the power of the media, the art of the leak - and he would make ample use of it soon, when he started his lobby for the consumers of marijuana." (unquote).

The Consumer Product Safety Commission was coming to an end, and Stroup began to think about putting his "developed talents" into use. Since he was already hooked on the drug, he thought it would be a money-making idea to form an organization to lobby for the repeal of marijuana laws. He went to Ramsey Clark, who was enthusiastic but told Stroup that lobbying for "reform" would be more palatable than "repeal". Clark got Stroup in touch with Hugh Hefner, and Playboy Foundation agreed to give the new organization (NORML) $50,000 to $100,000 a year, depending upon success and need.

So, the National Organization for the Repeal of Marijuana Laws (NORML) was launched. Among those who became actively involved were Hefner's daughter Christie, Robert Kennedy's son David, CBA's William Paley's son Billy, the Doonesbury cartoonist Garry Trudeau, Chip Carter, Peter Bourne and a number of the young staff members of Carter's administration. It was at the 1977 annual NORML bash that Carter's adviser Peter Bourne became involved in the infamous cocaine incident. Others involved in NORML were Drs. Norman Zinberg and Lester Brinspoon of Harvard, former U.S. Senator Charles Goodell, National Student Association president Margery Tabankin, and Dr. Benjamin Spock. Aryeh Neier, director of the American Civil Liberties Union provided office space for NCRML in ACLU's New York headquarters. Dr. Thomas Bryant, head of Ford Foundation's Drug Abuse Council, arranged for a donation of $200 a month to Stroup, and $30,000 a year to NORML. US Senators Jacob Javits and Philip Hart joined NORML's Advisory Staff. General Motor's heir Stewart Mott made generous donations, as did Max Palevsky, a wealthy Californian recommended to Stroup by Marcus Raskin, co-founder of the left wing Institute for Policy Studies. Another large-scale donor until his suicide was Tom Forcade, one of the most colorful characters to graduate from the revolutionary SDS. He founded an underground press, published an erotic and a radical magazine, made films, is said to have popularized the phrase, "If you throw a brick at a politician you'll be put in jail, but if you throw a pie at him you'll be put on the evening news."

The long range goal of NORML was to repeal drug laws, and to popularize the use of drugs, thus creating a new "drug culture." And things were going along smoothly after the Carter election. Stroup began to consult regularly with Dr. Peter Bourne, was even called on to help draft the statement outlining President Carter's official position on drug use. And to accent Stroup's popularity around the White House: there was a softball game between the NORML staff and the White House staff! However, as the saying goes, Stroup "got too big for his britches." He was so confident of his power and prestige that he began to smoke marijuana openly wherever he went. On a flight to Canada where he had an important speaking engagement, he took along some high-grade pot and was arrested as soon as he landed in Canada, later was found guilty and fined. Stroup's arrogance and boorishness began to strain relations with the White House, and a letter of rebuke was sent to him by the general counsel for the Office of Drug-Abuse Policy. This angered Stroup and he threatened to reveal Peter Bourne's use of cocaine if the letter of rebuke wasn't recalled. Bourne got scared, wrote Stroup a note of apology and appeal. But at about this same time the story of Bourne's falsified drug prescription hit the news and Stroup then told a member of columnist Jack Anderson's staff about Bourne's cocaine habit. Anderson published the scoop. It was Bourne's undoing; but it also was Stroup's undoing. The honor-among-thieves code had been violated by Stroup when he "ratted" on a fellow drug user. So, Stroup's effectiveness as NORML leader was damaged beyond repair; he resigned, presently heads a law firm which specializes in defending drug smugglers.

This story of Stroup and NORML was drawn from the book "High In America," by Patrick Anderson. The reviewer from whom we have quoted remarks: "The myriad incidents and details with which Patrick Anderson fleshes out the brief outline presented here brings into sharper focus a tale of skillfully orchestrated deceit, cover-up, distortion, underhanded power-brokering and crime, the principal actors in the drama being utterly amoral and taking delight in flouting the laws and conventions of society...." And, while Stroup moved into another of the drug culture, NORML continues to operate, is well financed and effective in creating a culture which is intended to replace our traditional Christian culture in America. One of NORML's current activities is promotion of the "death cult" movement. This involves the establishment of hospices (not hospitals) throughout the land where patients considered terminally ill are fed a special cocktail called the Brompton Mixture. It contains heroin, cocaine, heavy tranquilizers, alcohol and chloroform water. It is given the "patient" every three hours until death occurs in euphoric drug-induced bliss. The cult has large foundations, government officials, promoters, "experts" in psychology and psychiatry, editors and publishers, ministers, priests, and rabbis. One of its activities is the promotion of "death education" in schools. Elementary school children are made to lie in coffins in the classroom to desensitize them to the "death experience."

The important fact: NORML, death cultists and associated groups are creating a "humanistic culture" for America. Combined with abortion, pre-natal surgery, modern mental and population control devices, and death control, these criminals take the areas concerned with life, living and death out of the hands of Christian leaders, parents and practitioners, and place them in the hands of greedy, power-mad, drug-dealing humanistic witch doctors.

In the final analysis, our greatest battles are neither political nor economic, but are spiritual. There are forces of evil which must be overcome, else we lose more than a Republic.

THE LIFE-SAVING GOLD BUGS AND THE DEATH-DEALING FED

They had won the war, but they were losing the peace. On October 7, 1785, George Washington wrote to James Warren:

The wheels of government are clogged, and...we are descending into the vale of confusion and darkness...

On August 1, 1786, Washington wrote to John Jay:

Your sentiments, that our affairs are rapidly drawing to a crisis, accord with my own....What, then, is to be done?... Would to God that wise measures may be taken in time to avert the consequences we have but too much reason to apprehend....

On December 26, 1786, General Washington wrote to General Knox:

I feel, my dear General Knox, infinitely more than I can express to you, for the disorders, which have arisen in these states. Good God! Who could have foreseen, or predicted them?

Again on February 3, 1787, he wrote to General Knox:

If...any person had told me that there could have been such formidable rebellion as exists, I would have thought him a Bedlamite, a fit subject for a madhouse...

These quotations are taken from "The Constitution Explained," by Harry Atwood (probably out of print). F. Tupper Saussy described the situation as it existed in the United States in the 1780's in these words:

Blood running in the streets. Mobs of rioters and demonstrators threatening banks and legislatures. Looting of shop and home. Credit ruined. Strikes and unemployment. Trade and distribution paralyzed. Shortage of food. Bankruptcies everywhere. Court dockets overloaded. Kidnappings for heavy ransom. Sexual perversion, drunkenness, lawlessness rampant.

This is the opening paragraph of Tupper Saussy's important book, "The Miracle On Main Street," Spencer Judd publishers, Sewanee, Tenn. 37375. The conditions existing in the United States in the 1780's are ominously similar to the conditions existing in the 1980's, two hundred years later. And the chief reason is the same: paper money. "Not worth a Continental" is a phrase that still may be read in better history books. The Continental Congress, and the states' banking houses had issued so much paper currency that it could not be redeemed in gold or silver. Peletiah Webster wrote:

Paper money polluted the equity of our laws, turned them into engines of oppression, corrupted the justice of our public administration, destroyed the fortunes of thousands who had confidence in it, enervated the trade, husbandry, and manufactures of our country, and went far to destroy the morality of the people...The annihilation was so complete that barber-shops were papered in jest with the bills; and the sailors, on returning from their cruises, being paid off in bundles of this worthless money, had suits of clothes made of it, and with characteristic lightheartedness turned their losses into a frolic by parading through the streets in decayed finery which in its better days had passed for thousands of dollars.

The evil which almost destroyed our Republic in its first decade of life was inflation; paper money that had no backing save the confidence of the people. And when confidence waned, so did the life of the young Republic. But, these wise Founding Fathers of our Country found a remedy. They chose the wisest and the most respected men in their thirteen States, commissioned them to assemble and find a way to save the Nation. And these wise men wrote what can be described as a divinely inspired document, a civic bible that brought prosperity and healing to the land - so long as it was honored and obeyed. In that Constitution of the United States of America, there are two vitally important provisions concerning money:

Article 1, Section 8. The Congress shall have power:...to coin [not print] money, regulate the value thereof, and of foreign coin...

Article 1. Section 10: No State shall...make anything but gold and silver coin a tender in payment of debts...

These two provisions eliminated absolutely the use of unbacked paper money. Those worthless "continentals" would be a thing of the past and, just as soon as the Constitution had been ratified and become the supreme law of the land, things began to change for the better. George Washington, businessman, farmer, surveyor, military leader and now President of the United States, wrote to his friend the Marquis de LaFayette on June 3, 1790, less than a year after ratification of the Constitution:

You have doubtless been informed...of the happy progress of our affairs. The principal difficulties seem in a great measure to have been surmounted. Our revenues have been considerably more productive than it was imagined they would be. I mention this to show the spirit of enterprise that prevails.

The December 16, 1978 issue of "The Pennsylvania Gazette" said it best:

Since the federal constitution has removed all danger of our having a paper tender, our trade is advanced fifty percent. Our monied people can trust their cash abroad, and have brought their coin into circulation.

And finally, on July 20, 1791, President Washington wrote to his friend David Humphreys:

Tranquillity reigns among the people with that disposition towards the general government which is likely to preserve it. Our public credit stands on that high ground which three years ago it would have been considered as a species of madness to have foretold.

One of the most important things which made ours different from all other governments in the world at that time was that law which Roger Sherman is credited with having placed in our Constitution: "No State shall make anything but gold and silver coin a tender in payment of debts." That's still in the Constitution, has never been repealed, rescinded or amended. It's still the law of the land, and we all have disobeyed it! For, when has your city, county, state or federal government ever sent you a statement of your taxes or other debt, saying that it is to be paid in gold or silver?

The International Bankers, with their Central Banking schemes, have tried to destroy our Constitutional money system from its very beginning. But we don't have time, space or ability to write a monetary history of the United States. Let it suffice for our purposes to generalize and say that we got along pretty well monetarily until that fateful year 1913. That was the year the International Bankers convinced the U.S. Congress that nothing in the Constitution prevented Congress from contracting with a private corporation for the management of the Nation's currency. And that's exactly what happened with passage of the Federal Reserve Act. The history of this infamous deal has been told by several qualified reporters. Eustace Mullins on The Federal Reserve is a classic, if you can find the book. More recently the story - Jekyll Island and all - has been told by Martin A. Larsen in his "The Federal Reserve and our Manipulated Dollar" (Devin-Adair, 143 Sound Beach Ave., Old Greenwich, Connecticut 06870. 280 pages, paperback, $4.95.)

1913 was also the year when State Legislatures were cajoled into ratifying the 16th, Income Tax Amendment. According to the eminent Constitutional authority Thomas James Norton, this "put in the hands of the National Government the power of money - in any hand the worst power there is.... It enabled the Central Government, like an octopus, to thrust a tentacle into the revenue supply of each State and drain it, leaving the State helpless to perform its essential functions and making it a beggar at the Capital for a share of its own money. Thus did the 16th Amendment weaken the States economically. To weaken them politically, the State Legislatures approved the 17th Amendment - also in 1913. This Amendment destroyed that marvelously constructed Constitutional Balance of Power between the State and Federal Governments. The Founding Fathers created a "House of States" (the Senate) and a House of the People - the House of Representatives. But, when the 17th Amendment called for election of U.S. Senators by 'the people' rather than by the State Governments, the States lost their political power in Washington, and however much we may hate the term, that's when our Republic became a Democracy, and our States lost their Constitutionally endowed States Rights.

Also in 1913, to protect their money from the drain imposed by the Income Tax Amendment, the Money Barons began to set up huge tax-exempt foundations so that, instead of paying taxes as others must, they could spend their money to propagandize and educate the people toward the acceptance of their New World Order. So, in 1913, Congress gave a private corporation (the Fed) a contract to manage the Nation's currency, transferred the money power to the Federal Government via the 16th Amendment, transferred the political power to Washington via the 17th Amendment, and gave the Money Barons a "way of escape" through tax-exempt foundations. So, after 1913, things were never the same again. Wars got bigger and more costly in both money and blood. The national debt got bigger and bigger. Taxes were becoming unbearable, and revolt was in the air. That revolt caused the election of Ronald Reagan.

Reagan said exactly what the people (not the social parasites) wanted to hear: balanced budget, reduced taxes, reduced spending, fewer regulations, give government back to the people, etc. But, however serious he may be, he is trying to restore the Republic without establishing an honest money system, and without eliminating the Fed. These are the things that the Trilateral Commission is not about to let Reagan do even if he wants to. And he cannot have any "New Beginning" any other way! As the late Wright Patman, chairman of the House Banking Committee said before there was a Trilateral Commission:

In the United States today we have in effect two governments. We have the duly constituted government.... Then we have an independent, uncontrolled and uncoordinated government in the Federal Reserve System operating the money powers which are reserved to the Congress by the Constitution.

Hopefully, as a part of this try for "a New Beginning," there arose a movement calling for a return to the old ways, of honest money and no Fed. Among these "gold bugs" as they are called, is Elgin Groseclose, a financial analyst and author of two important books: "America's Money Machine" and "Money and Man." He is executive director of the respected "Institute For Monetary Research." In a copyrighted article in the current (August 1981) The Freeman, Groseclose says it's time to abolish the Fed because it has become "an economic Politbureau with power for state planning and control of the economy approaching that of totalitarian governments. As with a Politbureau this power is concentrated in a Presidium (the Open Market Committee) of twelve persons [who are] independent of any influence from the elected government." His use of the word Presidium is noteworthy. That's the name of the 14-member supreme executive and administrative committee which actually rules the USSR.

Another outspoken gold bug is Lewis Lehrman, chairman of the board of Rite Aid, a huge drug discount empire boasting 900 stores in the US and 100 more in Britain. He says "in recent years we have not had stable money. But we did have it throughout American history when we had...the gold standard...Let us resume the historic American monetary standard, a gold dollar, in order to end inflation." Two other dedicated gold bugs are Senator Jesse Helms, and Congressman Ron Paul. Together they pushed through a bill calling for a Federal Gold Commission, charged with the task of investigating the prospects for a return to the gold standard. A 16-member commission was named but, as is so often the case, only two of them are dedicated gold bugs: Lewis Lehrman and Ron Paul. The Commission had a meeting recently and columnists Evans and Novak said it all in the first paragraph of their column of Aug. 5: "The long-delayed inaugural meeting of the Federal Gold Commission had barely started when it became clear that, despite President Reagan's fascination with a possible return to the gold standard, his administration wanted to bury the issue."

Nevertheless, there have been victories and there will be more victories. Congressman Ron Paul has written: "Government's only reason for existence is to protect innocent life and property from aggression, foreign or domestic. When it deliberately destroys the money, government is acting perversely, by harming innocent life and property. Short of intentional war, inflation is the most immoral act political leaders can commit...It is no coincidence that the 19th century, a time of gold coin standards for the most part, was an era of peace. Nor is it a coincidence that the 20th century combines war with paper money. Everyone who believes in freedom must work diligently for sound money. Nothing else is compatible with the humanitarian goals of peace and prosperity." (From "Gold, Peace and Prosperity," $5 per copy. SECRET RETREATS OF THE POWER ELITE

On Friday, July 10, 1981, Associated Press released a rather unusual story. It concerned a socio-political event seldom, if ever, mentioned by the Media. Only a few newspapers actually carried the story, mostly independents in the Northwest States. Clippings were sent us recently. We quote extracts:

"Monte Rio, California (AP) - The annual summer camp at Bohemian Grove, where leaders of industry and government let their hair down at 'the greatest men's party on earth,' is under fire from activist groups, feminists, and even the government. The two-week retreat...begins today in a 2,750 acre redwood-shaded setting alongside the Russian River 80 miles north of San Francisco. A group that believes the encampment may be the scene for clandestine policy-making plans to protest when about 2,000 members and guests gather.... The all-male club's policy of not hiring women to work at the grove now is being considered by the Fair Employment Practices Commission, following charges of discrimination....

"The 109-year-old Bohemian Club, based in San Francisco, has lately drawn increased attention because of its heavy representation in the Reagan administration. Besides the president, Vice President Bush, Secretary of Defense Weinberger, and Attorney General Smith are members.... Former President Ford plans to attend...Edwin Meese, counselor to Reagan, has been invited to speak...Richard Nixon has not been at an encampment since he resigned the presidency in 1974. Alexander Haig and Henry Kissinger have been there in past years...Besides politicians, the membership is a veritable Who's Who of American corporate power....

"To the public, the Bohemians are simply enjoying a retreat from the cares of authority and responsibility, said Bohemian Grove Action Network spokesman Tom Richman. 'In reality this encampment is a location of convenience where these men...make policy decisions and sustain contacts that often have catastrophic effects on our daily lives'." (Unquote).

It was Herbert Hoover who described this annual Bohemian Grove Bacchanalia-without-women as "the greatest men's party on earth." It is the oldest and biggest of many ultra-exclusive gathering places that are financed and maintained by the Power Elite. Such retreats serve a very special purpose in the overall plans of the builders of the New World Order. We shall try to explain. Many drawings and diagrams, listings and charts have been made in attempts to show how all these ultra-exclusive clubs and organizations fit together, to make a total picture of how "The Conspiracy" operates. But we suspect that, like the original three-man cell structure of the original Communist Conspiracy, only those few at the top really know which Council is really running the whole show. But we do know that there are some 33 national organizations in almost as many different countries whose activities are interlocking, coordinated and cooperative. Best known of these "national" groups are the London-based Royal Institute of International Affairs (Chatham House), and the New York City-based Council on Foreign Affairs. There are similar interlocking institutions in the capital cities of Australia, Canada, New Zealand, France, the Netherlands, the Balkan States, Japan, India, Poland, Bulgaria, Yugoslavia, Red China, etc. Just as the National Council of Churches is an American affiliate of the greater World Council of Churches, so are these national institutes of international affairs affiliates of a greater and controlling global organization which at first was based in London, but whose headquarters now has shifted to New York City.

Then there are the multi-national organizations, made up of members representing more than one country. Chief among these are the Trilateral Commission, the Bilderberg Group, the Atlantic Council, the Paris-based Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD), Club of Rome, etc.

Beneath these there are the groups and organizations that do the planning for the Power Elite. They train agents and operatives, handle propaganda, serve as expert advisers to the greater groups. Among these are the Brookings Institute, the very important Aspen Institute, and many, many other policy planning councils and agencies. Their contributions to the overall programming of the Power Elite are very important. For example, when the American Section of the Trilateral Commission selected Jimmy Carter to become the President of the United States in 1976, it was the Brookings Institute that was assigned the task of training him for the job (a task not too well done, said David Rockefeller in 1979).

At the domestic level, there is another set of organizations which concentrate on remaking the United States so it will fit into the pattern selected by builders of the New World Order. Here we find such names as The Committee for Economic Development (CED), the Business Council, Business Round Table, that network of organizations we like to refer to as "Terrible 1313," which is intent on establishing Regional Government to replace State, County and local governments. These are policy planning organizations financed and controlled by the same Power Elite that controls the activities of the TLC, CFR, etc.

Then there is Bohemian Grove and similar "watering places" and special retreats for the power brokers and their guests. There are many of them, in all "developed" countries as well as in the United States. Bohemian Grove is the oldest and perhaps the "most useful" of them all. And these retreats serve a very special purpose. As G. William Domhoff explained:

1. They are a training ground for new leadership within the (ruling) class. It is in these organizations... that young lawyers, bankers and business men become acquainted with general issues in the areas of foreign, domestic, and municipal policy.
2. They are the place where leaders within the upper class hear the ideas and findings of their hired experts. (From "The Bohemian Grove and Other Retreats - a study in ruling-class cohesiveness," by G. William Domhoff. Published in 1974 by Harper & Row, 10 East 53rd Street, New York City, N.Y. 10022. Paperback, $3.95 at last notice).

Also, of course, Bohemian Grove and similar retreats are excellent recruiting camps for prospective leaders and civil servants for the New World Order. The prospects are invited, wined and dined, checked out as to their ability to control themselves and their tongues while inebriated, satiated, sedated, or sensually stimulated. They are talked to, are encouraged to talk freely and uninhibitedly. Finally, they are accepted or rejected for the more responsible and more lucrative post for which they were being screened by the Power Elitists. Wallace Turner, in an article in The New York Times of July 26, 1963 wrote about Nelson Rockefeller's visit to The Bohemian Grove when he was seeking the Presidency of the United States. Turner observed that the Power Elite "realize the Grove is an ideal off-the-record atmosphere for sizing up politicians....The midsummer encampments have long been a major showcase where leaders of business, industry, education, the arts, and politics, can come to examine each other." In this connection, it is rumored that it was at this same 1963 encampment that it was decided Richard Nixon should run for the Presidency instead of Nelson Rockefeller, and that Ronald Reagan would not be allowed to run against Nixon, but would be held in reserve for a future presidential race.

During this past year there has been considerable opposition to the Bohemian Grove Bacchanalia on the part of feminist groups; this because of the standing rule that women are not permitted to enter the Grove, even as hired help. Sex discrimination was charged, and is being taken up by the State Fair Employment Agency. This is not to indicate that the Bohemians are bereft of female companionship for two weeks. They call it "jumping the river," to inns, bars and motels within easy access from the Grove, where prostitutes are imported from San Francisco. Statistics have it that about 10 percent of the Bohemians "jump the river". But the feminists want to get into the Grove and their campaign was led by a feminist magazine, Mother Jones. An investigative reporter, Rick Clogher, managed to evade the guards and spend a few days within the Grove at the time of the 1980 encampment. The story was featured in the current, August 1981, issue of Mother Jones Magazine. A word about this alternative media magazine is in order.

The original Mother Jones was Mary Harris Jones. She helped found the IWW, worked as a labor agitator and anarchist from her late 40s to her mid-90s. She is quite a hero to the radicals and there is a Mother Jones collective in Madison, Wisconsin, a Mother Jones commune in Berkeley and a Mother Jones Press that published the lesbian oriented Mother Jones Gazette, and the feminist backed Mother Jones Magazine. This latter is a slick-paper publication, began in California in 1975 as a rather crude presentation, but has grown both in looks and circulation. Remember the national controversy about the Ford Pinto, the car that was supposedly built so that even a minor cash into its rear end would cause a fire and explosion and "hundreds of people were going to be burned to death because Ford wouldn't spend the money to alter it? Well, that controversy was started, not by Ralph Nader, but by Mother Jones magazine. And the circulation zoomed, and the magazine received a national award for "the journalistic coup of 1977." Then came the "Baby Bottle Scandal." It seems that these nurses would give samples of infant formula to mothers of indigent babies. The mothers would find this easier than breast-feeding, would let their breasts dry up. But then they would discover that their babies were being poisoned as a result of formula-feeding. Well, that story was started by Mother Jones in 1977. Later it would erupt into a case for the UN, and a condemnation for the United States because our government wouldn't go along with the ban on baby formula for Third World babies. Now Mother Jones has struck rich pay dirt once again through its exposure of the Bohemian Grove Encampment.

We, too, are against the Bohemian Grove Bacchanalia, but not because it has been celebrated without women for 109 years. Rather, we are against the encampment because it is a recruiting ground for leaders of the One World movement and for people who would destroy our Republic and make of it just an administrative region in a Socialistic Global Government. To paraphrase an old Arabic saying: just because we and Mother Jones are enemies of the Bohemian Grove doesn't make us friends.

Now, let's visit the Grove. On the first evening comes "Cremation of Care."

While tree fairies emerge from the Grove singing to appropriately eerie music richly robed priests appear conducting an open coffin in which lies the body of Dull Care. They death-march to a lake that lies in the center of the Grove, the coffin is placed in the Ferry of Care and it floats toward the alter under the Shrine of the Owl, which is illuminated by a gentle flame from the Lamp of Fellowship. The Bohemian audience is admonished to "burn away the sorrows of yesterday and cast your grief to the fires, and be strong with the holy trees and the spirit of the Grove." As the Body of Care is cremated, the stone owl becomes the "God of the Grove" and the high priests intones: "The owl is in his leafy temple. Let all within the Grove be reverent before him." The priest invokes the Bohemian motto: "Weaving Spiders Come Not Here!" - a line that is borrowed from Shakespeare's "A Midsummer Night's Dream." There is also a patron saint, one St. John of Nepomuk. The legend: ordered by a jealous Bohemian king to reveal his queen's confession, the monk refused, was killed by the king - a model of discretion to the Bohemians.

There is much ritualism and ceremony, a comic Low Jinks and a lavishly produced play called the High Jinks, presented on the last night of the encampment and said to cost as much as $50,000 for props lighting, etc. The actors are all visiting Bohemians and get no pay. There also are special affairs and gatherings at the 127 different camps within the great encampment. There are lectures and discussions, serious conferences interspersing the jinks and the drink-fests, and there is the end of Dull Care for two weeks!

We must not forget the prayer that is intoned by the priests of the Grove:

"Great Owl of Bohemia, we thank thee for thy adjuration.
"Well should we know our living flame of Fellowship can sear
"The grasping claws of Care, throttle his impious screams
"And send his cowering screams from this Grove.
"Begone, detested Care, begone!
"Once again Midsummer sets us free."

Nor must we forget that this annual Bohemian Grove Encampment is sponsored and organized by the Bohemian Club of San Francisco.. a club 109 years old. While the Grove encampment is the club's biggest social venture, it is by no means its only activity. The Club is an imposing six-story building only a few blocks from the financial district of downtown San Francisco. In both its layout and its activities, it is like a Western Establishment twin of the Eastern Establishment Pratt House, which is headquarters for the Council on Foreign Relations. Also similar to the CFR, membership is by invitation only. A potential Bohemian must be nominated by at least two regular members. There is a 15-man Membership Committee and he must visit them all individually. If 11 of them approve by secret ballot, he may become a good Bohemian, after waiting a few years because of a very long waiting list.

We are made aware that the high priests of false gods are very careful in their selection of acolytes. And we are reminded of a statute given to Israel by the Only True God:

"And ye shall overthrow their altars, and break their pillars, and burn their groves with fire; and ye shall hew down the graven images of their gods, and destroy the names of them out of the place." (Deut. 12:3).

REAGAN'S QUIET FEDERALIST REVOLUTION

On July 29, 1981 President Reagan was in Atlanta to speak before the annual meeting of the National Conference of State Legislators, one of the agencies of that conglomerate known as "Terrible 1313." The Congress had just handed him the twin victories: budget and tax cuts. Jubilantly, he told the assembled 2400 State legislators and friends that "the federal government takes too much taxes from the people, too much authority from the States and too much liberty with the Constitution." He said, "My administration is committed, heart and soul to the broad principles of federalism....For too long the federal government has pre-empted the States' tax base, regularity authority, and spending flexibility. It has tried to reduce the States to mere administrative districts of a government centralized in Washington." He emphasized the words:

"My administration is staging a quiet federalist revolution."

Noble words; and there was some tangible evidence to indicate that Reagan's words might be backed up with action. Vice President Bush was supposed to be seeking ways and means of reducing those federal regulations that had been choking the economy and hamstringing State governments. About 60 different kinds of federal grants were being tossed into one basket and then handed out to the States as "block grants." This was supposed to give the State and local governments more control over the way they could spend the money which was being given back to them by the federal government. Previously the President had told officials of the National Association of Counties (more Terrible 1313) that "I have a dream of my own. I think block grants are only the intermediate steps. I dream of a day when the federal government can substitute for those, the turning back to local and state governments of the tax sources that we ourselves had preempted here at the federal level, so that you would have the resources" (this according to The Washington Post, but it's probably true.)

All well said and worthy of applause. But, if President Reagan were really serious about returning to State and local governments the political and taxing power that rightfully - and Constitutionally - belongs to them, why didn't he order his administrative aides to start liquidating that fourth and unconstitutional branch of the federal establishment known as Regional Government? It is the power granted these Ten Federal Regions that has been destroying the political power of State and local governments. If Reagan really meant the things he's been saying about returning power to the States, why didn't he do something to limit the powers of ACIR? Why did he appoint yet another Presidential Federalism Advisory Committee? And why did he sign a new Executive Order prolonging the life of the Federal Regional Councils?

Regional Government was introduced by President Nixon. On March 27, 1969, he made an executive proclamation titled "Restructuring of Government Service Systems," by means of which he unconstitutionally merged the fifty Sovereign States into Ten Federal Regions." Hearing no official protest from the States, he then signed an Executive Order (No. 11674) which authorized the staffing of the Ten Federal Regional Capitols with 9 grant-making agencies of the Federal Government.

President Carter updated Nixon's order, added 5 more agencies to the staffs of each of the 10 Federal Regions. And now President Reagan has updated the Carter order with a new one: Executive Order No. 12314. Since this new Executive Order revokes Carter's Executive Order, which in turn revoked Nixon's Executive Order, it seems important that we reproduce for all to read, the full contents of President Reagan's Executive Order No. 12314:

RONALD REAGAN

The White House, July 22, 1981.

* * * * *

It will be noted that President Reagan deleted from President Carter's Executive Order No. 12149 the following agencies: Community Services Administration, Office of Personnel Management, Regional Action Planning Commission, General Services Administration, ACTION, Small Business Administration, U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, and Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA). He did not do away with these agencies; Reagan just removed them from positions of authority in the Ten Regional Councils. What he did was remove those that were chiefly regulatory agencies, and retain those that were grant-giving agencies. However, in case any important matter comes up that involves any agency not now represented on a Regional Commission, this can be taken care of as provided in paragraph (d) of Section 1 of Reagan's Executive Order 12314: "The Regional Director of the Council will represent the non-member agency." So, nothing has really changed.

Since this Report is primarily documentary in content, we should note that the Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations (ACIR), of which Reagan was a member when Governor of California, still exists, and still has the same administrative, legislative and regulatory powers. Its membership now includes Interior Secretary James Watts as chairman. HUD Secretary Samuel Pierce also is a member, as is Richard Williamson, the President's Assistant for Intergovernmental Affairs. These three represent the Administration and representing the Senate are David Durenberger of Minnesota, William Roth of Delaware, and James Sasser of Tennessee. Representing the House are Clarence Brown of Ohio, L.H. Fountain of North Carolina, and Charles Rangel of New York. Four State Governors are members of ACIR: Bruce Babbitt of Arizona, John Dalton of Virginia, Richard Riley of South Carolina, and Richard Snelling of Vermont. There are four Mayors: Richard Carver of Peoria, Ill., Richard Hatcher of Gary, Ind., Tom Moody of Columbus, Ohio and John Rousakis of Savannah, Ga. Also three State legislators: Fred Anderson of the Colorado State Senate, Richard Hodes of the Florida House, and Leo McCarthy of the California Assembly. Then there are three County officials: Lynn Cutler of Black Hawk County, Iowa; Doris Dealaman of Somerset County, New Jersey; and Roy Orr of Dallas County, Texas. Rounding out the "representative" ACIR membership are three private citizens: Eugene Eidenberg of Washington, D.C.; Mary Wall of Elmhurst, Illinois; plus one vacancy as of May 20th.

For his "quiet federalist revolution" Reagan has ACIR, the White House Office of Policy Development, and the White House Office of Intergovernmental Affairs, all of which are concerned with Regional Government. But this was not enough. On April 8 the White House announced the formation of the Presidential Federalism Advisory Committee, a 40-member group chaired by Senator Paul Laxalt of Nevada. Then there was named yet another group, a Federalism Task Force composed of Laxalt, White House aides Baker, Meese, Anderson, and Robert Carlson, five cabinet officers, David Stockman of OMB, and President Reagan's Intergovernmental Relations Assistant Richard Williamson--with such a line-up of committees, commissions and task forces, no wonder he refers to the program as a quiet federalist revolution! But what is needed is a counter-revolution; like that one that started in 1776.

There is a grim warning concerning this quiet federalist revolution that should be considered carefully. In issuing his E.O. 12314, Reagan revoked Carter's E.O. 12149, both of which dealt with the composition and functions of the Ten Federal Regional Councils. However, when Carter issued E.O. 12149 he also issued a companion E.O. 12148. So far as we can determine, 12148 is still in effect! This is an Executive Order which sets up the mechanism for operation of a Federal Bureaucratic Dictatorship whenever the President of the United States should declare a National Emergency. We repeat: E.O. 12148 when invoked by presidential proclamation, automatically establishes a Federal Dictatorship! The Order reads in part: "The Director of the Federal Emergency Management Agency [George Bush?] shall establish Federal policies for, and coordinate, all civil defense and civil emergency planning, management, mitigation and assistance functions of the Executive agencies." This threat of potential dictatorship depends for its success upon that unconstitutional concept called Regional Governance. It can be eliminated only through action taken by the State Governments! Have your State legislators been told?

COSMOS: "A FRACTURED FINANCIAL FAIRY TALE"

The following bit of "fiction" by R.E. McMaster, Jr. appeared in the August 14, 1981 issue of The Reaper, and is reprinted by permission of the author. We may pretend that the character portrayed in the story is fictitious, and any resemblance to any actual person living or dead, could be coincidental.

Once upon a time, on a planet far, far away, lived a rich man. Now, this was no ordinary rich man. This rich man had accumulated, through trusts, foundations and his family's clandestine business operations down through several generations, about all the wealth and power any sane man could want. When heads of state came to visit the president of his country, who he helped install in office, they always took time to drop by and visit, recognizing the true power behind the throne. Being hated by the few little people who took the time to review his activities, who couldn't appreciate his right to use and abuse wealth and power, this rich man desired to multiply his wealth many times. It was a greedy game for him. He already owned and controlled one of the biggest banks in the country. And, his family was notorious for their ruthlessness in the early development, monopolizing, and continued control of the oil business. The problem came with the attempt to expand his banking empire. The 50 states in his country all had separate banking rules and regulations, which made it difficult, actually impossible, for him to set up interstate banking. It made this rich man very, very sad that the people who ran the 50 States thought he should not control all the money in the country. So, he devised a brilliant scheme to increase and combine all his oil and banking empires.

Now, in a separate part of the world, a historically unstable people had stumbled onto a literal ocean of oil reserves. In fact, the reserves of these unruly groups were the largest in the world. Knowing a great deal about the oil business, this rich man surveyed his world's situation and saw that if the 13 unstable countries which produced this tremendous amount of oil would simply get together, they could form an oil cartel. Then, they could raise the price of oil significantly to the financial benefit of all concerned. Of course, this new cartel would have to deal with our rich man's oil enterprises, since he already had significant control of oil companies, refineries and tankers, which would bring the oil from these underdeveloped countries to world markets. So, he set out to execute his plan.

In one of those wild and woolly oil-rich countries, he found a monarch, somewhat of a proud peacock, who our rich man thought could be established as the military power in the area, who would bring all the other unstable tribesmen into line. With his tremendous political power in his own country, this banker/oil magnate convinced high-level officials to sell this peacock puppet all the military equipment needed to stabilize the rowdy oil-rich area. After a period of time, thanks to the peacock, the "wild and woollies" settled down and then were educated regarding their "common" economic self-interest. Greed, being what it is in other worlds, as in this world, the leaders of all these oil-rich countries agreed to form a cartel and jack up the price of their oil. Who knows? From under $2.00 a barrel the price of oil could double to $4.00, and then double again to $8.00, rise to $16.00, or maybe even to the staggering sum of $32.00 a barrel. Who knows? The sky's the limit. In any case, with any oil price increases, our rich man knew he would profit tremendously. After all, then he could raise the price of his own oil too, which he owned in vast quantities at locations all over the globe. He would have to "Compete in world markets." The value of his oil companies, tankers, refineries, and service stations would likewise appreciate. It was a win-win deal for our rich man. But there was an added bonus, a real plus that made his master plan one gem of a deal. In one fast sweep, he effectively established 50-State branch banking. All the people in all 50 States now made their deposits in his new branch bank - the new oil cartel. So clean, so neat. No fuss. No mess. And, of course, as he had previously arranged, his big branch bank, the oil cartel, agreed to make all their financial deposits derived from oil income in overseas branches of our rich man's bank or even directly to the home bank, located in his nation's financial center.

Being always one step ahead of the crowd, our financial mastermind knew exactly what he would do with all the money. He would loan it to the poor countries of his world, those nations headed by aspiring political leaders who fretted every day, with sweaty palms, about whether or not their leadership and nation would hold together. The loans to these deadbeat countries allowed our banking and oil financier to call the shots not only in the political and economic arenas of these poor countries, but also in the world commodity markets.

Our rich man rejoiced as he contemplated the tremendous profits he would reap from inside information about the world's commodity markets which he now had the power to effectively manipulate and control. He already knew how to control the "powers" in the poor countries. All he had to do was to finance some guerrillas out in the bush to overthrow the newly established, green political leaders in these underdeveloped countries if they got out of line. So, effectively, his financial power assured a balance of power (terror) whereby he could pull the political puppet strings in these backward countries. A little financial clout goes a long way when it comes to intimidation of the "world's weakies."

The only problem that remained was how to ensure the repayment of these loans from these young struggling countries. Our rich man needed some type of insurance. Thankfully, again, through his manipulative efforts, and the efforts of some of his fellow bankers, he had the political leaders of his country establish international development banks, subsidized by his country's ordinary taxpayers. These international development banks, as they were called, effectively guaranteed our rich man's loans and cashed him out of any deals which went sour. It was a no-risk, win-win situation again. This was truly the lazy man's way to riches.

Through a complex maze of international corporations, offshore trusts and foundations, our rich man never worried about paying any taxes either. He had seen to it, in the meantime, that laws were passed, preventing the ordinary folks from getting rich. This way no one could challenge his empire. If an ordinary person was talented, worked hard and did well in business without accumulating any debt, he was still prevented from getting rich because the graduated income tax swept away the majority of the fruits of his labor each and every year. And, after a few years, business failure, setbacks or discouragement would set in, as it always does, and this talented, common man would fall back into the masses, where he belonged. So clean, so neat. No mess or fuss. And other ordinary men who aspired to become wealthy by using debt, not realizing that throughout history long-term debt has been detrimental to all business enterprises, would fall into a different snare. Sure, these debt-heavy folks could avoid the tax trap for a while and appear to get rich. However, they were always on a debt treadmill, with payments coming due month after month. And every now and then the piper came by when they didn't have enough to pay. All it took to wipe out these debt dudes was for our rich man to exercise his political clout and have the central bank keep money tight so that these aspiring common folks' cash flow would dry up. Then they would go belly up. To our rich man, these recessions or depressions every so often were great. They provided him with a tremendous opportunity to buy up for a song resources, plants and equipment created by the sweat of the brows of other men who had slaved long hours.

Was our financial and oil magnate concerned about the word getting out to the common folk, and triggering a revolution that would result in him being hung from a lamp post? Not at all. He knew his history too well, that human nature was a constant. He knew that the masses were first and foremost concerned with security, that they would not brave the risk and responsibility necessary for freedom. Thus, all he had to do was promote the development of social programs in government that provided cradle-to-grave security to not only keep the masses happy and his competitors paying outrageous taxes, but also to guarantee that the politicians who supported his programs would be elected and reelected to office by those on the dole.

He even financed a revolution in a distant foreign country, about which the common folk knew very little, so that a militaristic enemy could arise. This way the little people would always be preoccupied with, and overly concerned about, their safety. This foreign military concern not only did his dirty work around the globe, it also helped consolidate his political influence in a strong central government in his own country, where key government officials did his bidding. The little people were grateful for the military protection.

He was able to finance the military expenditures and wars, too. Oh, the money he made from financing those glorious wars. Knowing that the general public would never go to war if they knew how much it cost and had to pay for it at the time of the war, our rich man always conveniently arranged for the central government to borrow money from his bank to finance the military escapades. Sure, there was inconvenient inflation for the masses, but for the most part, it was lost in the fervor of war. He had learned long ago that it was important for nations to be constantly at odds with each other, not only so that he could finance military expenditures on both sides, but also so that the common people would maintain enemies. After all, if people all over this world got to know each other too well and traded among themselves freely, without any government restrictions or hostilities, then he would be out of a job. Who would need to borrow money from his bank? He wouldn't be able to loan nearly as much, and his profits would drop off sharply. Our rich man also made a real financial killing from post-war reconstruction. There are few financial endeavors more profitable than the after-war reconstruction efforts, and banks get in on the ground floor.

Our rich man had even taken out additional insurance against a public backlash. Long ago, his father and grandfather had established, at the highest political levels, an educational game plan, whereby the public would be educated in the public schools, and taught to do his bidding. He rejoiced in the brilliance of his family's foresight. It's a lot more difficult to convince a man to work against his own self-interest when he realizes where his own best interest really lies. But when you can take children while they are young, and educate them to be technically proficient, but brainwash them to act contrary to their own self-interest in the areas of economics, politics, religion, morals, ethics and history, well, now, how much better can you have it? People do your bidding to their own detriment and smile.

By being rich and powerful, our rich man also was able to establish a monopoly in the media, and effectively control what the "big gun" newspapers, radio and television networks had to say. This reinforced the educational propaganda put out according to his master plan in the public schools. He also established a stranglehold on religion. By having religious leaders teach the people to spend all their time worrying about the "sweet by and by," our rich man was left to run wild in the "here and now."

Finally, knowing that the common folk liked naturally to be entertained, rather than responsible, our rich man sponsored all types of entertainments and sporting events to capture their interest. Being constantly enthralled and occupied with having a good time, the common folk, thus, never saw any reason, and never had any time to think about what was really important, what was really going on in their world controlled by our rich man even though, day in and day out, he slowly but surely accumulated the assets of the common folk as they whistled and laughed on their way to the economic graveyard.

Setting The Record Straight. In our Report of July 10, 1981, we published a list of members of President Reagan's staff who also were members of the Trilateral Commission or the Council on Foreign Relations or both. This list was reprinted by a number of right wing and conservative newsletters and economic advisory services. Unfortunately, they stated that the list consisted of members of the Trilateral Commission. Hardly an earth-shattering error, since both the TLC and the CFR are controlled by the same elitist cabal. But many purists complained that most of those listed were CFR members, that only 3 were Trilateralists. So, to set the record straight, here is the opening, and overlooked, sentence preceding the list of names, exactly as published in our Report of July 10, 1981:

"In addition to Bush, who told David Rockefeller, "All that I am I owe to you," at the Trilateral Conference in Washington March 29th; there are on Reagan's staff the following members of the Trilateral Commission, the Council on Foreign Relations or both - and this is not necessarily a complete list of them." The list of 33 names, with the positions held in the Reagan administration, followed.

IF REAGONOMICS SHOULD FAIL....

Indicative of a political trend are the following excerpts from a letter sent to Mr. Paul Weyrich of the Committee for the Survival of a Free Congress:

"I'm sick to the teeth of receiving yours and other organizations' well-meaning pleas to support the President. Reagan is selling us out step by step. One example is U.S. News quote of Bush regarding 'right-wing groups' who complain of the trend: 'Hell with them.' First sell-out, picking George Bush. Second, he's been loading his administration with far more CFR and TC members than the abysmal Carter ever did. Third, I understand the wise and hard-headed Lyn Nofziger is planning to leave. And if this happens there'll be a flood more of TC and CFR elitists nesting in Washington. Fourth, Reagan's May 20 Executive Order for the Ex-Im Bank to lend Romania $142 million, 85% to be financed by the American taxpayer, for nuclear generators, at 8½%. Will your bank give you a home loan at 15% down, and at 8½%, beginning in 1989??? And on and on....I've supported Reagan every step of the way, but no more...As Gary North has been saying (but I didn't want to hear it), 'The fix is on'."

That the Reagan sell-out continues can be shown by his recent nominations and appointments. Pro-abortionist Sandra O'Connor for the Supreme Court. CFR member Arthur A. Hartman to be Ambassador to the Soviet Union. He held a variety of economic posts before becoming special assistant (1961) to George Ball, then Under Secretary of State. Hartman later served under a number of State Department characters: Nicholas Katzenbach, Elliot Richardson, William Rogers, Henry Kissinger. In 1977 Carter named him U.S. Ambassador to France. Another CFR member, Harry G. Barnes, Jr., Ambassador to Communist Romania under Carter, is nominated by Reagan to become Ambassador to India.

Clarence B. Carson, one of America's greatest living historians, placed the Washington political scene in proper perspective when he wrote:

"Wherever did President Reagan get those people around him - his administrative assistants, department heads, official spokesmen, and so forth. They are smooth. Take Donald Regan and Drew Lewis. But why discriminate? Take just about everyone I have seen, except maybe David Stockman. They are so smooth they could probably milk the yolk out of an egg without cracking the shell. And calm. When he is interviewed by the press Secretary of State Haig looks as if he is settling down for a nap between questions. These people look and act for all the world like bank vice presidents trained by librarians.

"Such administrators might be well suited to a caretaker government, one that would hold the fort until the real government could get organized, but not to one committed to turning things around!" (Emphasis added. Quoted from The Review of the News, September 2, 1981. Weekly, $20 per year. 395 Concord Ave., Belmont Mass. 02178)

That Reagan's is merely a caretaker government waiting for the real government to take over, is an ominous suggestion. But there is much circumstantial evidence to back up that suggestion. And there is a double danger. First, the so-called "New Right" has lost confidence in Reagan because he has failed to keep so very many promises. There is still a Department of Education, and a Department of Energy. There is this compromise with the promoters of infant-icide through the nomination of a "person for all seasons" to the highest court in the land. Now he's talking about cutting down on the Defense budget, which was the one thing that should never be done because of that much talked about "window of vulnerability" which is the Soviet Union's superiority in military capability. In fact, Reagan has backed down on just about every promise that he made, except for those programs which can be classified as Reaganomics, and even in these he keeps making deals with the so-called opposition.

In the second place, The Eastern Establishment has also begun to turn the big guns of the controlled Media against Reagan. It's as though the "real government" is about to take over from Reagan's "caretaker government," and they are preparing the way for the transition. The Media has begun to promote the idea that "Reagan is poorly prepared to make vital decisions" when it comes to foreign policy. Much was made of the statement that when those two U.S. air-men shot down two Libyan planes, they didn't bother to tell the Commander-in-chief about it, just let him sleep. As for Reagan's economic program, the AP wrote as of September 3: "Despite his success in the political arena President Reagan has been a dismal failure in selling his economic program to the powerful financial community that can make or break it. Wall Street and other money centers keep sending signals of no confidence in Reagan's plan for economic revival even though he is constantly trying to placate them with promises of deeper and deeper budget cuts...." And a wire report from Chicago where Reagan was addressing the carpenters union convention noted that :The AFL-CIO has been in the vanguard of protest over Reagan's economic policies and is planning a huge Solidarity Day demonstration in the nation's capital September 19..."

So here is a paradox: The "New Right" which supported him and its opponent the CFR-TC elitist clique which controls him, are both against him; the first because he has deceived them; the latter because he hasn't done it fast enough! All of which leads to a danger that is seldom recognized.

Ronald Reagan came into national political prominence because of a speech he made when Barry Goldwater was nominated for President. "Ronald Reagan has been my friend for many years," said the Arizona Senator. "His strong support for me in 1964 is something I will always cherish." Dr. Carson wrote: "Ronald Reagan made a famous speech in 1964. It was the speech...It had a large and enduring impact. It led eventually to his election as President of the United States." As President, Reagan is still delivering well rendered variations on the theme of that speech. But there has always been at least one discordant note: Reagan has always been in tune with the aims of what Clarence Carson calls the "real government." Reagan has always been in favor of Regional Government, which is an essential stepping stone on the road to World Government. As Governor of California he was an active participant, and as President he is perfecting the Concept of Regional Governance.

In our Report of August 21 we pointed out that President Reagan had revoked President Carter's Executive Order No. 12149, and had issued his own Executive Order No. 12314, which is merely an updating and restructuring of the Carter Executive Order. We also pointed out that Reagan did not revoke Carter's companion Executive Order - 12148 - which is an order providing for a Federal Dictatorship whenever a National Emergency is declared!

According to Section 3 of this Executive Order of July 20, 1979:
"There is hereby established the Emergency Management Council. The Council shall be composed of the Director of the Federal Emergency Management Agency, who shall be the Chairman, the Director of the Office of Management and Budget, and such others as the President may designate....The Council shall assist the President in the oversight and direction of Federal emergency programs and policies....The heads of Executive agencies shall cooperate in the performance of functions vested in him (the Director of FEMA-Ed.)."

We repeat: Executive Order 12148 provides for the establishment of a Federal Dictatorship whenever the President (or whoever may be acting in his stead) may declare a National Emergency and order that E.O. 12148 has become effective. In such case, Federal Departments and Agencies operating under the direction of the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) could:

- Take over all communications facilities;
- Seize all sources of power (electric, nuclear, petroleum, gas, etc.);
- Control all food resources;
- Seize all forms of transportation;
- Control all highways and seaports;
- Seize railroads, inland waterways, and storage facilities;
- Commandeer all civilians and put them to work under federal supervision;
- Control all activities relating to education;
- Register every man, woman and child in the United States;
- Shift any segment of the population from one locality to another;
- Control all devices capable of emitting electro-magnetic radiation;
- Take over farms, ranches and timberlands;
- Freeze all wages and prices;
- Demand emergency welfare services (food, clothing, lodging) in private homes for those said to be in need;
- Regulate the amount of your own money you may withdraw from your bank or savings and loan institution, or freeze your account;
- Close all banks, stock exchanges, etc. and freeze stock and bond prices;
- Institute extraordinary measures with respect to any facility, system, or service said to be essential to national survival.

This plan for a federal dictatorship first appeared as Executive Order 11490, signed by President Nixon in October, 1969. President Carter amended it in on July 20, 1979, adding the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) as the control agency, and renumbering it to become Executive Order 12148. We repeat: President Reagan has not altered or amended this Executive Order in any way. But he has appointed new directors for FEMA. And this fact may become very important. First, we shall reprint a Presidential Document concerning the appointment of a new Director, issued February 23, 1981:

"The President announced today his intention to nominate Louis O. Giuffrida to be Director of the Federal Emergency Management Agency. General Guiff-rida is president of the Specialized Management Services Co. and director of the California Specialized Training Institute. He has had a lengthy career as a military and civilian expert in crime prevention and investigation; industrial defense; physical security; civil disturbances and disasters; confinement and rehabilitation responsibilities....In 1971 he left the army and, at the request of Gov. Ronald Reagan, organized the California Specialized Training Institute and has directed it since its inception. In addition, he served as an adviser on terrorism, emergency management, and other special topics for the office of the Governor of California. He was recently promoted to the rank of general in the California National Guard...."

This document states that the President announced his intention to nominate Giuffrida to be Director of FEMA. Obviously there was no opposition to that nomination because on July 7, the same day Reagan nominated Sandra Day O' Connor to be an Associate Justice, he also "announced the appointment of the following officials to serve on the board of governors of the American National Red Cross Corporation for a term of 3 years: Secretary of State Alexander Haig, Jr., Secretary of Health and Human Services Richard S. Schweiker, Secretary of Education Terrel H. Bell, Assistant Secretary of HHS Edward N. Brandt, Jr., Louis O. Giuffrida, Director, Federal Emergency Management Agency, and Gen. David C. Jones, USAF, Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff."

More about Giuffrida. Back in the early 70's, when LEAA was feeling its oats and seeking ways to take over and control Americans in case a National Emergency was declared and martial law imposed, its leaders chose the State of California as a training camp for "highly trained specialists capable of controlling the civilian population until the military can take over" and institute "martial rule" in America. One phase of that highly controversial operation was called the "California Civil Disorder Management Course." We quote one paragraph from the "1974 Report to the California Senate by the Subcommittee on Civil Disorder," January 31, 1974: "The California Civil Disorder Management Course (CCDMC) is a one-week, highly intensified and coordinated learning exercise in all phases of civil disorder management. Both consultants recommend, and the Subcommittee members concur, that Colonel L.O. Giuffrida, MPC, CAL ARNG, Commandant of the California Specialized Training Institute, and the instructors of the CCDMC be commended for their enthusiasm, expertise and professionalism in developing and conducting their CCDMC."

Explanation: If a National Emergency were declared and E.O. 11490 put into effect, such a federal dictatorship would require the imposition of martial law. Specialized "SWAT Teams" would have to take control until the military could move in and enforce "martial rule." This same L.O. Giuffrida was the man selected by Governor Reagan to train such a team of experts, under LEAA. Well LEAA has now been dethroned and FEMA has taken its place; and Luis Giuffrida has been selected by President Reagan to act as Director of FEMA!

According to the training manual used by the Specialized Training Institute operated by the man who now directs FEMA, martial law "comes into existence when civil government can no longer maintain law and order, and it exists so long as it is necessary to restore conditions where civil government can again function." And "Martial law cannot be invoked by an elected official, or by a civilian officer of any stature. Rather, it occurs upon a determination by the highest military commander in the jurisdiction." Of course, this is a kind of double talk, since the President wears two hats. He's a civilian executive but he's also commander-in-chief of the armed forces. Therefore, he can declare a national emergency, invoke the standby Executive Order establishing a bureaucratic dictatorship, and at the same time invoke martial law and call out the military to enforce the bureaucrats' decisions.

Of course, any such action on the part of our present "caretaker government" or even the "real government" which may be standing by to take over totally, is most unlikely. But - if the Reagan economic program should fail and a real crash occur, if medfly manipulation and weather control should destroy crops in California, Florida and Texas and starvation should threaten, and if people should become unduly restive, a National Emergency might be declared. Best answer: If ours is a Constitutional Republic, what are we doing with a FEMA or with the Regional Governance system that gave it birth?

THE COMMUNIST-CAPITALIST CONNECTION

"Communism-Socialism is an economic failure, but doing business with Communist regimes and doing their business for them can be most profitable, so there is no contradiction in wealthy men supporting Communists. People like the Rockefellers, Eatons and Hammers [Rothschilds and Oppenheimers], and others have made no secret of their profits from helping Communism; and many of the big corporations likewise have made obscene profits in the Red business they're engaged in. The U.S. government taxes us to guarantee their payments....It's said that we built the Soviet's military-industrial complex, and now we're doing as much for Red China, but we aren't told how big were the obscene profits taken by those who carried on this business, and they were huge. So it's not at all surprising that some super-wealthy Americans, individuals and businesses, are anything but anti-Communist or pro-American." So wrote J. Kessner Kahn of Chicago, in a recent column.

Corroborating that statement was one made by the Russian political refugee Alexander I. Solzhenitsyn shortly after his arrival in the United States. He spoke to a packed and select audience in the ballroom of the Washington Hilton Hotel, advised his listeners of the existence of an amazing and mysterious alliance "at first glance a strange one, a surprising one - but if you think about it, one which is well grounded and easy to understand. This is the alliance between our Communist leaders and your Capitalists." Unfortunately, he was wrong in one respect: it is not easy for the average American to understand, and know, that there is this Communist-Capitalist Connection, that it was the so-called Free World which built and maintained this Communist slave world from the very beginning. Most Americans are shocked and just can't believe it upon hearing a statement such as that made by Senator Steve Symms of Idaho: "History has proven that the Soviet Union's planned industry feeds on the industrial freedom of the West. It would long ago have died a natural death, had it not been for the repeated injections of lifeblood that are still being pumped into it today." And Congressman Larry McDonald of Georgia offers us figures that the average American never heard of: "...the United States has provided $1,033,400,000 in foreign aid and assistance to the Soviet Union from 1946 through 1974. When you also consider the so-called lend-lease program (outright charity to the tune of nearly $12 billion)...the true figure of aid to the heartland of totalitarian communism would be somewhere between $30 and $40 billion. Most Americans are staggered upon learning that USSR has been the Number One beneficiary of U.S. aid in this century.... All of this certainly destroys the accepted view that the United States has an anti-Communist foreign policy."

So, there exists this unbroken alliance between Monopoly Capitalism and Communism, an alliance that also exists between our own federal government and the totalitarian governments of the Communist world. But - the people of the United States are taught that Communism is our greatest enemy, that we must resist its advances at every turn as in Korea and Vietnam and the Middle East and in Europe, and everywhere; that we must build the world's greatest war machine to protect our country - and the rest of the world - from the ravages of Communist conquest.

Of course, the people living in countries dominated by Communists are told the same things about us, those "imperialistic Americans." But, even as we are told that Communism is our enemy, we witness our governments and our corporations trading with each other, establishing cultural, and educational, and scientific exchanges with each other. All of this while we are told that we can not trust the Communists, and we must always fear them. So is it any wonder that people are confused?

Take Libya, for instance. There's a global terrorist axis existing between the USSR, Cuba and Libya. Dictator Qaddafi has determined that his worst enemy is the United States. When two of his planes challenged two American fighters and promptly got shot down, Qaddafi raved and ranted. And he told the world once again that his country was going to build power dominance in the nuclear weapon field, and that his chief targets would be American installations in and around the Persian Gulf area. But even as he denounced the United States and talked of retaliation, the United States continued to purchase some two-thirds of Libya's oil production. They speak of war, but crude oil from Libya is our third largest foreign supply.

The techniques developed and applied by the Communist-Capitalist Connection have confused people from their very beginning. They were intended to confuse and bemuse all but the "insiders." Stated very simply: Bolshevism, or Hard Socialism - later to be called Communism - was established and financed, and has been maintained in the Soviet Union, to be used as the "stick" that would force people and governments into acceptance of the economic, ideological and political confederacy that was planned for the whole world by the Communist-Capitalist Connection, or Alliance. At the same time and in other parts of the world, various types of Soft Socialism were promoted. These were designed to serve as "the carrot" to Communism's "stick" in deceiving peoples and governments into acceptance of the One World Alliance. Thus we have Fabianism, Welfare Statism, Social Democracy, etc., in those parts of the world where people were too alert to accept the Hard Socialism that had been forced upon the Russians, the Red Chinese and the people of their satellites.

Later on, in addition to the Hard Socialism of the USSR and the Soft Socialism of the so-called free world, a third technique had to be adopted. This was to force the people and governments of the so-called Third World into accepting the economic, ideological and political framework desired by the Communist-Capitalist Connection. Instead of using "the stick," of direct invasion and conquest, or "the carrot" of persuasion, education and legislation; it was decided that terrorism and infiltration should be used. For example, While the Western World was worrying about SALT and the potential invasion of Europe by the method of the Communist "stick," Brezhnev was telling his Politbureau members in Moscow:

"Our aim is to gain control of the two great treasure houses on which the West depends: The energy treasure house of the Persian Gulf and the mineral treasure house of central and southern Africa." But the "stick" method seemed too dangerous because the plan was not to destroy those treasure houses, but to take them over intact. And the "carrot" method seemed impractical. So, this third method, "infiltration and terrorism," which had proved so very effective in Central America, would be used in the Persian Gulf and in southern Africa. This third method was shown to be more satisfactory when the direct invasion of Afghanistan "came a cropper," and when the Polish problem created such a dilemma within the Communist hierarchy. Thus, the Soviet did not move in and occupy Iran, it supports and advises Marxist terrorists instead, who will do the job through terror tactics. There is also the softer Communist control of Iraq, Syria, Yemen, etc. And now the same technique is being used in southern Africa, where the Soviets have been shown to have a direct connection. U.S. News (9/14/81) provides some interesting facts and figures concerning this use of terrorism. We quote:

"Russia' first military casualties in southern Africa spotlight the growing involvement of Communist-bloc troops in local conflicts around the globe.. Two Soviet colonels were reported killed and a sergeant major was captured when South African troops raided Angola in late August to hit guerrilla bases of SWAPO - the South-West Africa People's Organization. The Russians were part of a contingent of 1,000 Soviet and 400 East German military men advising the Angolan Army. Also in service in Angola are 15,000 to 19,000 combat troops from Cuba. The heavy Marxist role in southern Africa prompted a rare U.S. veto of a United Nations resolution condemning South Africa's thrust into Angola..... According to U.S. officials, at least 135,000 Russian, Cuban and East German military personnel are playing combat or advisory roles in some 20 countries outside the Soviet bloc. The biggest force by far is Moscow's 85,000-man army in Afghanistan, target of a 1979 Russian invasion. Afghan guerrillas have killed or wounded at least 5,000 Soviet soldiers. In Ethiopia, 11,000 to 13,000 Cubans and 1,250 Russian advisers are helping the local forces against Somalian and Eritrean guerrillas, reportedly with considerable success. In the Mideast, 1,500 Soviet, East German and Cuban military advisers are supporting South Yemen's pro-Marxist regime in sporadic fighting with North Yemen. Moscow's reward: Access to strategically valuable bases. Nearly 2,500 Russian advisers are helping Syria's army, which is caught up in the Lebanon war - a conflict which threatens to escalate into wider hostilities embroiling Israel. Strategy analysts view the Communist bloc's deepening involvement in conflicts around the world as a major potential source of superpower confrontation. Many, in fact, believe a showdown is far more likely in a Third World country than in Europe." (Unquote).

The belief that a showdown is more likely in a Third World country than in Europe is bolstered by the fact that the old Socialist International has been reactivated and, since the failure of "Eurocommunism," is to be tried out as a method of "conquering Western Europe without a shot being fired." Chairman of this Socialist International is Willy Brandt of West Germany, his assistant is Francois Mitterand of France, and a third very important member is Pierre Trudeau of Canada. Brandt traveled to Moscow where he was treated as "one of the Communist faithfuls." A Brandt-Brezhnev Alliance was formulated, the chief aim of which might be paraphrased as "the merging of the nations of Europe into an expanded Warsaw Pact" which would leave the United States isolated, NATO totally ineffective, and with Canada Socialized and Mexico Communized. Mitterand of France has endeared himself to the Kremlin, by taking Communists into his cabinet - an act that was accepted without apparent concern by our own government in Washington. Trudeau is presently engaged in formalizing the Socialization of Canada, complete with a new Constitution and a centralized government. Jose Lopez Portillo is steadily moving Mexico into Castro's Communist camp. Most of this is the work of the revived Socialist International, which would leave the United States ready to fall like ripe fruit into the hands of the Communist-Capitalist Alliance. (Lest any reader misunderstand, our reference in this Report is to Monopoly Capitalism, not to free enterprise capitalism which helped to make our Nation the most prosperous the world has ever known).

We spoke of Brezhnev's aim: to gain control of those two treasure houses: the Persian Gulf (oil) and central and southern Africa (minerals). To accomplish this goal, the USSR has taken on a new axis partner: Libya. From now on, as the situation grows more tense in these areas, we'll be hearing more and more of this Soviet Axis, which includes the USSR, Cuba and Libya. Americans in general knew little or nothing about Libya or its dictator, Muammar Qaddafi, until Billy Carter's strange connections with Libya became front-page news. But, since the downing of two of his planes by American airmen (an act which made us proud to be an American) we'll be hearing more and more about this North African madman. In 1969 he overthrew senile King Idris, came to power at about the same time the oil cartelists began bloating the price of oil. This gave Qaddafi an estimated income of about a billion dollars a month. He used some of that money to help his subjects, most of it to buy arms. He spent billions on Mirage jet fighters from France, Leopard tanks from West Germany and military hardware from Italy. He placed with the Soviet Union a $12 billion dollar order for tanks, planes, artillery and missiles. He also bankrolls a team of atomic scientists in Pakistan, where nuclear weapons are being built for his arsenal. And not satisfied with that $12 billion deal with the USSR he went to Moscow and signed more contracts. Also became an Axis Member!

Here was a real break for the Soviets. In making Cuba a partner, the Soviet found it necessary to bankroll Castro and his government. They say that Cuba costs the USSR as much as $12 million a day. But in the case of Qaddafi and oil-rich Libya, it's just the opposite. Not only does Qaddafi pay his own way, he's also able to help support some of the Soviet's expensive efforts at "liberation" of Third World countries. And the Kremlin must have been overjoyed when it learned that Qaddafi's specialty was the operation of training camps for terrorists. Qaddafi has spent millions in the training and equipping of terrorists from Nicaragua's Sandanistas, Argentina's Monteneros, Uruguay's Tupamaros, the IRA provisionals, Spanish Basques, French Bretons and Corsicans, Turks, Iranians, Japanese and Moslem insurgents in Thailand, Indonesia, Malaysia, the Philippines, and especially the PLO. Qaddafi is a Marxist, but with a difference; he also is an Islamic extremist. In regard to that aim of Brezhnev's, to control the two treasure houses, that axis partnership with Libya was made to order.

African Intelligence Digest observes that "Libya is strategically important because it is close to U.S. air, sea and communication lines with the Middle East and only 150 miles from Italy and Greece.... Among other reasons to watch Qaddafi: 1) He is presently attempting to 'stage manage' a 'Khomeini-style' revolution against President Sadat of Egypt (Sadat's roundup of opponents and dissidents was prompted by Qaddafi's stage managing-Ed.). 2) He has undertaken to oppose by all means possible any negotiated Arab-Israeli peace settlement. 3) In the event of any new Arab-Israeli war, he has threatened to attack America's military bases in the Arab homeland- in Egypt, Oman, Somalia and Saudi Arabia. 4) He is dedicated to the overthrow of the Saudi royal family, and 5) He is determined to establish his 'Islamic Republic of the Sahara' by taking over the states of Niger, Mali, Mauretania, and the Sudan. He has already taken Chad.... In conclusion, Qaddafi is trying to be a big chief, but with a very small tribe. And he is playing with the Russian bear in hopes of aggrandizing himself with a sprawling empire... Anwar Sadat has called Qaddafi 'a vicious criminal, one hundred percent sick and possessed of a demon.' (Quoted from African Intelligence Digest, P.O. Box 22998, Denver, CO 80222. "TO PROVIDE FOR THE COMMON DEFENCE"

At a time when nobody knows how much an unbacked Federal Reserve dollar note will be worth a month from today, a debate is raging in Washington. It's about how much can be spent - not about how much should be spent - "to provide for the common defence." As we go to press, the Reagan Administration plan calls for the chopping off of $13 billion from a previously promised $652 billion that was to have been spent in the next three years. Defense Secretary Weinberger admits that this is far from enough to catch up with Soviet Russia. In an declassified report the Defense Intelligence Agency says the USSR is outproducing the United States by as much as 3 to 1 in strategic and tactical weapons. Soviet annual production for the past five years has averaged 3,000 tanks, 5,500 armored vehicles other than tanks, and 400 short-range ballistic missiles for battlefield use. The report adds that the Soviets outproduced us 11 to 1 in submarines, 700 to 0 in submarine-launched cruise missiles, 3 to 1 in surface-to-air missiles, 5 to 1 in antitank missiles, and 30 to 1 in bombers - this in 1980 alone. So, spending $639 billion in the next three years won't come close to closing the gap. There's also the question of morale. Drugs and alcohol, low discipline, inefficiency, inability to obey orders, lack of esprit, these and other complaints are heard. And, as usual, the suggested remedy: a pay raise! Most likely is the raise of a recruit's monthly pay from $501 to $573. (How times have changed; when we enlisted in the Marines in 1926, our base pay was $21 a month, with 20¢ of that deducted for the Red Cross.)

Just as much of a question as "how much" is "what for"? Should the Navy get three more super-aircraft carriers, or more destroyers and submarines? On the subject of MX Missiles, how should they be deployed? What kind of bomber should be built? What about NATO's attitude toward the neutron bomb? And so on. All this plus the wail of the peaceniks that we don't really need to spend a single dollar in defense because we've already got more than we need for our defense. Example:

Here comes Senator Charles Mathias of Maryland back from Moscow and a visit with Brezhnev and Gromyko with a mouthful of Soviet propaganda. According to AP (9/17/81): "Soviet leaders deny seeking military superiority over the United States and seem interested in negotiating new controls over nuclear missiles in Europe, according to a Republican senator just back from Moscow: 'They said they recognized the danger of a limited war escalating into a total war was very real,' Sen. Charles Mathias (R.Md.) told the Associated Press after reporting on his Kremlin talks to Secretary of State Alexander Haig. 'Secondly, they demonstrated concern over an arms race by repeatedly denying that they are ambitious to have a force superior to that of the U.S. They said they continued to want only a rough parity'."

Another example: Pugwash is back in the news. Review of the News (9/16/81) reports: "The 31st Pugwash conference took place in Banff, Alberta, Canada with a major speech from Paul Warnke, the Carter Administrations' SALT II negotiator. Warnke is now out in the open as a trustee of the Institute for Policy Studies, the radical Marxist think-tank characterized as 'the perfect intellectual front for Soviet activities which would be resisted if they were to originate openly from the K.G.B'." This sudden re-emergence into the open of Pugwash is important. For those who may have forgotten about this Soviet-controlled elitist group, a review may be in order:

Back in 1957 the late socialist professor Bertrand Russell, chief promoter of the slogan "better red than dead," also promoted the idea that there should be an exclusive society of scientists similar to the newly formed Bilderbergers. This elitist group should be composed mostly of scientists from the USSR and the USA who would seek to achieve a "rough parity" between the East and the West in the development of nuclear weapons. Such an effort required financial support, so Russell approached the late pro-Communist industrialist, Cyrus Eaton. Eaton was anxious to bankroll such a project. So, like the Bilderberg Group which took its name from the place where its first secret conclave was held, this first meeting of Soviet and Western scientists came to be called the Pugwash Conference, since the first meeting was held in 1957 at Cyrus Eaton's estate, Pugwash, Nova Scotia. Also like the Bilderbergers, Pugwashers conduct their meetings in a different place each time they meet, and the proceedings are always conducted in secret and kept secret. Pugwash power and influence derived from the fact that the members also held important positions in government and the scientific society, and could present the plans developed at Pugwash as their own. Prominent Pugwashers included Henry Kissinger, Jerome Wiesner, Walt Whitman Rostow, George Kistiakowski (science adviser to President Eisenhower), James Killian, John Phelps, J.P. Riuna of the Institute for Defense Analysis, F.A. Long of the U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency until 1963, Paul Doty of Harvard, David Frisch of MIT and Marshall Shulman, Donald Brennan and Louis Sohn of the Council on Foreign Relations. But the most important Pugwasher of them all was the Communist Commissar of Soviet Scientists, Dr. Alexander V. Topchiev. The U.S. conferees affectionately referred to him as Dr. Top Chief. He served as the Soviet keynoter at the first ten Pugwash Conferences.

The Sixth Pugwash Conference was held in Moscow in 1960. At that time Nikita Khrushchev was at the height of his power, and he gave the chief address at the conference. Walt Rostow applauded often, was reported to have told the gathering, "Trust is easy to develop between individual men who can talk and eat and drink together and look into each other's eyes." In the year following the Pugwash conference held in Moscow, the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee published a report in which it was stated that "Soviet participation in the Pugwash movement was totally controlled by the Soviet Academy of Sciences, which is an arm of the Soviet Government." And in the book Kissinger on the Couch, authors Schlafly and Ward commented: "The Pugwash penetration is the Soviet Politbureau's most brilliant creation in psychological warfare. Not since the Trojan horse has there been such an imaginative yet practical instrument for conquest by trickery and subversion, as well as for essential espionage on a legal and mass-production basis." They also said that:

When Henry Kissinger unfolded his SALT I Agreements...one thing became perfectly clear...Every theory on which he based his "new world order"...originated not in the Kissinger mind but in the Pugwash conferences....

Since Paul Warnke was President Carter's chief negotiator at the SALT II conferences, and was major speaker at the recently concluded 31st Pugwash conference, it may be said that every part of the SALT II Agreement is aimed at promoting this same "new world order." Incidentally, fresh from his Pugwash assignment, Paul Warnke was interviewed by U.S. News (9/21/81). The question was asked, should we "Build Antimissile System Now?" Warnke said NO - because "there's no way to defend U.S. cities against Russian warheads

...Russia knows what our strengths really are and what our vulnerabilities are." Did they learn this at the Pugwash conferences which they control?

It will be remembered, of course, that this treasonous practice of giving secrets to the Soviet did not begin with Pugwash. As early as 1943 Major George Racey Jordan discovered the giveaway of uranium, atomic secrets, and other classified information to the Soviet while serving at the Great Falls lend-lease air base. It was his duty to clear all flights going to Russia. As the story is told by Cleon Skousen in The Naked Communist, and we quote:

"One night the Russian commander at the base almost demanded that Jordan go into Great Falls as his dinner guest. Jordan was suspicious but accepted. About midnight he received an excited telephone call that a plane had just landed and the Soviets were going to take off for Russia without waiting for Jordan's clearance. Jordan raced back to the airfield. Sure enough, the plane was a joker. In it were fifty black suitcases protected by armed Russian guards. Jordan ordered a GI to hold the guards at bay and shoot to kill if they forcibly interfered with his inspection. Jordan later testified under oath before a congressional committee that he found each suitcase to contain a file of information about U.S. industry, harbors, troops, railroads, communications, and so forth. In one suitcase Jordan said he found a letter on White House stationery signed by Harry Hopkins and addressed to the number three man in the Russian hierarchy. Attached to the letter was a map of the top-secret Manhattan (atomic energy) Project, together with descriptive data dealing with atomic energy experiments! One folder in this suitcase had written on it, "From Hiss."...When Major Jordan reported the facts to Washington he was severely criticized for holding up the plane!" (Emphasis as in the original).

Throughout our dealings with Communist Russia, there has existed a kind of two-route communications system. By one route, spies are sought out, sometimes even executed as with the Rosenbergs. But along the other, the official route, there was always an attempt to exonerate, whitewash or forgive agents who worked for the Kremlin. There was Hiss who was a CFR member and had the unalloyed backing of Secretary of State John Foster Dulles; Harry Dexter White, Lauchlin Curry, whole nests of spies and double agents, who supplied the Kremlin with classified information surreptitiously. But in addition to the spy-route, there was the official give-away of vital information, technology, materials, whole factories. In view of what we are about to report, perhaps the most dangerous practice of all was the buddy-buddy sharing of space secrets with the USSR.

The media will mention the fact that the Soviet has outstripped us in the field of conventional weaponry and in nuclear developments. But that we have been outstripped in space-war techniques seems to be some kind of a secret known only to top echelon officials and elitist minorities. This all had its beginning back in the 1930s, even before the Power Monopolists had determined that a Second World War would be a necessary and profitable venture. There was in the United States at that time an electrical genius named Nikola Tesla. We've told this story in previous Reports, so we'll be brief. Tesla had perfected a way to transmit electricity without the use of wires. He had developed a way to control the weather. He also had invented a "death ray" which could disintegrate oncoming ships, missiles or airplanes. He pioneered in particle beam weaponry and other important scientific fields. He offered his discoveries and developments to the United States. His offer was refused and his papers were impounded on the grounds that he was a dangerous alien. When he died in 1941 his papers were sent to a museum in Yugoslavia, where they were made available to Soviet scientists in 1977. Since that time the Russians have been developing and perfecting Tesla's theories, much to the detriment of the United States, and this accomplished with equipment supplied by the United States!

In this connection we should like to quote a Special Office Brief from London, just published by the newsletter Globescan (9/12/81):

"Until the launch of the Columbia, the United States had not undertaken a manned space mission for more than five years. In stark contrast to its disappointing performance, the Soviet Union had maintained a virtual commuter service to and from space with the Soyus/Salyut space craft. During 1980 alone, in addition to numerous communications, reconnaissance, meteorological, intelligence, early warning and ocean surveillance satellite launches the Soviets launched six manned flights including a 185-day mission - the longest in the history of space flights. The Soviet space program has now amassed more than double the manhours achieved by the United States. The U.S. space shuttle mission was an important step in establishing permanent space stations for a wide range of activities among which will be the deployment of defensive systems, including high-energy lasers and charged and neutral particle beam weapons. The revolution in strategic space armaments now taking place represents a war potential greater than the discovery of nuclear weapons. With sufficient funding such strategic weapons could begin to become operational towards the end of this decade, increasing the effectiveness in the 1990s to the point where all ground-based and submarine-launched ballistic missiles would become highly vulnerable in the boost phase of their trajectories. The Soviet Union is striving relentlessly to acquire the capability to dominate space militarily. The United States has at long last begun to take the threat seriously, and the one that wins will control the planet." (Quoted from Globescan. 1 year [24 issues] $125. U.S. Subscription Service Center: P.O.Box 2100, Rolling Hills Estate, CA 90274.)

COMMENT. "It may sound simple, but nevertheless absolutely true, that with the development of unbacked paper money and the dual techniques of frightening opponents into borrowing to build armies and the creation of enemies to collect debts became highly refined. All in order to lend vast sums to despotic rulers who are trying to steal the assets of others." A Communist enemy was created by the money monopolists who needed a permanent force to pose a frightening military threat to any nation or group of nations which failed to go along with their plans for a New World Order. Trouble is, so much money and technology has been poured into that created enemy that it has developed to a point where it could defy its creator and carry out its own plan for a World Government! The Soviets could develop a space-war system that would enable them to destroy totally our entire Western missile system as well as all other ground, sea and air defenses. One wonders, is it practical to build more conventional defense weapons when they could easily be destroyed by space-stationed laser and particle beam weapons? Is our proposed defense system obsolete before it has even been built? Are we allowing an unpredictable enemy to dominate space? Let's pray this Special London Report is correct in saying "The United States has at long last begun to take the threat seriously," since "the one that wins will control the planet."

EAST-WEST CONFRONTATION - OR COALITION?

Harry Schultz publishes a much respected International Newsletter that tops the field in circulation for its type of publication. For some time past he had included in his letter a column containing a countdown of "the number of days of total freedom-of-movement left till the USSR Finlandizes the West, unless we're able to miraculously catch up with their vast military superiority. But, he gave up the column, explaining: "...not everyone can face such a prospect (and some may disagree). One confessed to me she skips this section because it's too upsetting'. Another says he doesn't like to pay for bad news. The fact that our very survival is at stake is apparently a minor consideration with many, who can't handle it emotionally. Gary North, Remnant Review publisher who writes much more about the Soviet threat, says: 'The public, including the conservative public, is asleep at the wheel. Even the newsletter industry is experiencing defections, as people cancel subscriptions to bad news, as if the message-bearers were the cause of the problems. The Soviets don't want to destroy us and our high productivity. They want to defeat us. They want a strategic victory. What we need is a defensive strategy to make it riskier for them to try to checkmate us.' So I will rename this section, cut its size and try to be more subtle in the hope of its message being more palatable. The same medicine but with sugar coating. You can keep your private countdown of days of freedom left if we don't do much more than we, the West, are doing now. The space I save from cutting this section will be used in part for suggestions on how to survive whatever happens, and the rest of the space for money-making ideas because that's what our surveys show people want. They don't want to survive. They want to get/stay rich. Never mind if they end up in a Gulag. They'll be happier until that day." (Unquote).

Our subscribers are far fewer in number. But we thank God that they are of a different breed. We give you bad news, because we try to give you facts. You often tell us that our Reports are frightening, distressing, awful, filled with things you'd rather not read about. But many of you order extra copies to send to people you hope you can wake up before it's too late for all of us. You understand that a statement made concerning personal salvation can also apply nationally; that if we know the truth, the truth shall make us free - if we also remember that faith without works is dead. So, get ready for more bad news.

On August 31, a State Department spokesman said the Reagan administration was "taking precautions" to protect its diplomats and American citizens overseas. The occasion for the statement: a bomb had exploded at the U.S. Air Force Base in Ramstein, West Germany, injuring 15 Americans, one of whom was a Major General. Other bombs went off in Lima, Peru, damaging the U.S. Embassy, the residence of the U.S. Ambassador, and factories and offices of the Bank of America, Ford Motor Co., Coca Cola and Carnation Milk. Next, five cars bearing American military license plates were burned at a military housing in Wiesbaden. Also, bombs were discovered and defused in time on a railroad line over which military supplies were to travel next day. Alexander Haig was in Berlin on September 13. As he signed the city's guest book at the Schoeneberger Town Hall, tens of thousands of people took part in a noisy and violence-filled protest against the Reagan administration's decision to station

Pershing 2 and cruise missiles in Western Europe, and with the production of neutron bombs. over 1,000 militants battled with police, 40 policemen injured and 100 protestors arrested. Meanwhile, as the Warsaw Pact Satellite States concluded their massive war games around the border of Poland, NATO troops were beginning maneuvers that bore the uncomfortable title Certain Encounter. To make matters seem more crucial, the London-based International Institute for Strategic Studies reported that the Warsaw Pact military force had better than a three-to-one advantage over NATO in nuclear weaponry, a much greater numerical advantage in conventional armament and manpower. What is called, by President Reagan, that "window of vulnerability" was wide open, and could be closed very slowly indeed, because of that other "economic window of vulnerability."

On the diplomatic front, the words were hardly diplomatic. Haig returned from his world travels to go to the UN rostrum and point out that the Soviet Union and the Vietnamese have willfully violated the national integrity of Afghanistan and Cambodia, etc. Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko retaliated from the same platform with charges the the U.S. was oppressing Cuba, etc. Then the two met elsewhere, smiled at the camera and at each other, announced they had agreed on an agenda for talks about a SALT III treaty, to begin in Geneva on November 30. Barry Dunsmore of ABC summed it up nicely when he said that both the Soviet Union and the United States want to impress Europe with the fact that these talks are very serious.

Lots of military maneuvering, diplomatic threat, and an atmosphere of unrest, but one gets the general idea that this all resolves itself into a game to gain the favor and trust of the Nations of Western Europe. "Neutralism" is the key word. And such a condition would work to the distinct advantage of the Soviet Union. Mired down with a political stalemate in Poland and a military checkmate in Afghanistan, the Soviet seeks not to conquer Europe, but to neutralize it, so they can concentrate on winning those two "treasures", that are the oil of the Persian Gulf area and the minerals of Southern Africa. The British Intelligence Digest of September 16 commented: "...to an American observer visiting Western Europe, the evidence of a growing refusal on the part of West Europeans to do what is necessary to defend themselves is persuasive. What appears to be growing in West Germany, in Holland, in Belgium, in Denmark, in Norway and, to a lesser extent, in other West European countries has been called 'neutralism' and 'pacifism' by some, and a move toward 'Finlandization' by others. Whatever the proper name, the tendency is widespread - and growing."

From various sources, especially Allen Keyte's World Affairs Review, H du B Reports, Globescan, American Opinion's July-August Scoreboard Almanac, and Intelligence Digest Weekly Review of September 16, we have compiled the following information:

WEST GERMANY. Willie Brandt, who heads the resurgent Socialist International, has great influence in Berlin as well as Moscow. His goal is to neutralize the EEC, marry it to the Warsaw Pact Regional Government Combine. Also in West Germany, there is a popular front made up of an Ecological party, the left-wing Social Democratic party, and the Trilateral-type intellectuals. Chancellor Helmut Schmidt tries desperately to keep his country allied to the United States and supportive of NATO. But it has cost him dearly, and Brandt might defeat him in any coming election. Schmidt has announced that he would resign if the neutralist forces in his party should gain the upper hand. They might, and he might. If West Germany went "neutralist," NATO would fold up and fade away, like the League of Nations, SEATO, and similar "defensive" arrangements.

HOLLAND. The Netherlands has devoted little effort to defense. Its military force of 115,000 is unionized, therefore virtually impotent. The new Queen, Beatrix, is the daughter of Prince Bernhard, founder of the Bilderbergers. A few years ago Beatrix married a German diplomat who had served in the German Army under Hitler. On the day of her coronation, she called for closer ties between the Netherlands and the Third World. Politically the Dutch Labor Party once was pro-NATO, but has been taken over by left-wing radicals. In addition, both the Roman Catholic and Protestant churches have been radicalized, now openly propound the pacifist doctrine that the traditional Christian idea of a "just war" is no longer valid. Prime Minister Andreas van Agt tries to support NATO, but has no support from his own party.

FRANCE. Francois Mitterand lost to Charles de Gaulle in 1967, to d'Estaing in 1974, needed the vigorous backing of the Communist Party in order to win on his third attempt. In payment, he included Communists in his government. He has nationalized French banks and her principal industries, is a ranking member of the Socialist International, is in a splended position to play East against West while seeking control of the EEC. NATO can expect little from a Socialized France.

BELGIUM. The leader of the influential Belgian (Socialist) Party, Karel van Miert, deplores the fact that "we have become permanent vassals and nuclear hostages of the U.S. We have become an American protectorate, more than ever." Here is another case of Church-and-Socialist cooperation neutralizing a country, thus making real support against Communism virtually impossible.

NORWAY. Once a staunch pillar of the Western alliance, Norway has become neutralized. Socialist leader Jens Evensen led the march into apathy. Aiding and abetting was "Women For Peace" leader Eva Nordland, who declares that "If women had their way in running the world, we would never have had nuclear weapons." Norway will still support NATO - if no nuclear weapons are involved.

DENMARK. Danish Prime Minister Anker Jorgensen has joined the Norwegian Prime Minister, Gro Harlem Brundtland, in advocating a Scandanavian nuclear-free zone.

Intelligence Digest comments: "How much the Soviet Union is influencing these developments in Western Europe remains unclear. Yet, the evidence that Moscow is deeply invloved is persuasive. It is reported for example, that the Soviet Union, aware of the fact that Denmark and Holland are now the weakest links in NATO, has decided to concentrate its activities on these countries. Shortly after President Carter reversed his position concerning production of the neutron bomb, Leonid Brezhnev personally decorated the former Soviet ambassador to the Netherlands, Alexander Yosipovitch Romanov, for his success in marshalling 'the resistance of the people of the Netherlands' against the weapon. This year, Radio Moscow had for weeks led its broadcast with news of the progress of the '1981 March For Peace,' a six-weeks, 750-mile procession that began in Copenhagen and wound up in Paris on August 6, the 36th anniversary of Hiroshima. In a June interview with a Finnish newspaper Brezhnev vaguely hinted that if the idea of a Scandanavian nuclear-free zone catches on, the Soviet Union might pull back weapons from the Scandanavian border areas. In June, Brezhnev invited Willie Brandt, the increasingly anti-defense West German Social Democratic leader, to Moscow, and raised once again the Soviet proposal for a moratorium on Soviet and Western missile deployment in Europe. Brandt returned home overawed by Brezhnev, described the manner in which he 'trembles when he speaks of world peace.' Earlier this year, the Soviet-sponsored World Peace Council met in Havana to plan a 'calendar of mass solidarity action, in favor of unilateral nuclear disarmament by the Europeans."

So, regardless of what the media may be feeding us, it would seem that Western Europe is sold on neutralism, with the exception of the United Kingdom so long as Margaret Thatcher remains in charge. And it seems equally true that the Soviet Union is gaining the position she wants to be in, insofar as Europe is concerned, giving the Soviets time to concentrate on Persian oil and South African mineral wealth, while the U.S. concentrates on the defense of an unwilling Europe. One leading question remains: If this is what the Soviet Union wants, is it also what the World's Monopoly Capitalists want? Perhaps we can find an answer if we look at the situation in Angola.

Namibia is the door to that South African treasure Brezhnev talks about. And Angola was being used to provide sanctuary for communist-led terrorists that were trying to take over Namibia. So the military forces of South Africa invaded southern Angola. A superb job, and some Russian soldiers were taken, proving Soviet presence and participation. Then came the diplomatic furor - the UN Security Council sought to condemn South Africa, and the U.S. calmly vetoed the resolution. Result: hysteria. Russia's "Non-Aligned" states led by Cuba, Vietnam, North Korea, Libya, South Yemen, Ethiopia - all railed and ranted at the "shameless connivance of the Reagan Administration with the apartheid regime of Pretoria." The Reagan Administration held firm. But - - -

Angola is ruled by a totalitarian Marxist-Leninist gang calling itself the Movement for the Liberation of Angola/Workers Party (MPLA). It is kept in power by the presence of 20,000 Cuban troops and swarms of Soviet and East German "advisers." Gulf Oil Company negotiated with the communists for the right to pump 160,000 barrels of crude petroleum per day. Part of the deal: several thousand Cuban troops commanded by a Soviet general were provided to protect the operation. Also, the Massachusetts-based consulting firm of Arthur D. Little was retained to handle Communist Angola's oil negotiations. Since 1977, the Communist gang that rules Angola has been enriched by oil exploration and production contracts with Gulf, Mobil, Texaco and Cities Service, as well as with other multinationals from France, Belgium and Brazil. Angola's Cuban-guarded airfields are doubly protected by radar installations by Westinghouse. The General Tire Company became involved, while Boeing provides jet planes on very favorable terms. Moreover, a combine of American based banks led by Morgan Guarantee Trust and including Chase Manhattan, loaned Communist Angola $50 million for the purchase of oil development equipment. And last July 8th the U.S. Export-Import Bank signed an agreement with the Communists to lend them $85 million of our taxpayers' money for an offshore oil project.

But the Reagan Administration didn't "get the message," called Angola a surrogate of the Soviet Union. This hurt David Rockefeller and he wrote a letter to President Reagan saying U.S. policies toward Angola "are hurting American business in that country and in the rest of black Africa." The big question: Will the Reagan Administration have the backbone to continue to resist or will it cave in to the pressure of the Trilateral bankers and multinationalists? . . . Need we give you the answer?

A TIME OF TROUBLE, TURMOIL AND TERROR

Another murdered president interred with honors. Another president elected and installed. Other presidents, prime ministers and kings returned to their homelands to take up other burdens. But in the Middle East the chaos remains, wars continue, and rumors of future wars permeate the area. And the United States has become more deeply involved in the problems of other peoples and other nation-states. A reappraisal seems essential.

By now we should know that assassination has become a regular policy of the political extremists, taking its place alongside coups, organized terrorism, rebellions, revolutions, insurrections, incursions, civil wars, military occupations, and wars between nations. President Anwar Sadat of Egypt was the fifth head of state to become the victim of planned assassination in the past two years. President Park Chung-kee of South Korea was the victim of a murder plot led by a member of his own staff. Anastasio Somoza, former president of Nicaragua, was killed in a barrage of machine gun fire in Paraguay. William R. Tolbert, Jr. president of Liberia, died in a gun battle. Former president Nihat Erim of Turkey was assassinated. President Ziaur Rahman of Bangladesh was murdered with his whole family. President Ali Rajai of Iran died in a bombing. And now President Anwar Sadat of Egypt, assassinated October 6, 1981. This does not include assassinations of diplomats and ranking government officials in Italy, West Germany, Ireland, Iran and other countries. It does not include the near misses such as President Reagan in March, or Pope John Paul in May. Indira Gandhi of India has survived four attempts by assassins; there were two tries at Prime Minister Mugabwe of Zimbabwe (Rhodesia), President Sekou of Guinea survived when attackers threw two hand grenades at him and his party. There was an attempt on the life of King Hussein of Jordan last summer. In addition to outright assassination attempts, the media has provided us with sufficient evidence that there is a very active International Terrorist Network which operates in all parts of the world.

But, let's focus on the Middle East and its trouble, turmoil and terror. This is a strategic region which forms a land bridge connecting three continents: Europe, Asia and Africa. Like the Cathay of old, this ancient, historic part of the world was in sort of political, economic and religious state of lethargy until awakened by World War I and the discovery of great oil reserves in the area. With the exploitation of those reserves of "black gold" - the Rockefeller lackeys were the chief exploiters - there began a period of great unrest in the Middle East. This was intensified with the peace treaty arrangements which threw peoples of different customs and different religions together in the new nation-states: Iran, Lebanon, Afghanistan, etc. But extreme unrest followed the establishment of Israel as a nation-state in 1948. There were wars: 1948, 1956, 1967, 1973. And there'll probably be more wars. Also, there exists a continuing war along the Lebanese border, on the West Bank of the Jordan. A war continues between Iraq and Iran. There is war in Afghanistan. There is a virtual civil war in Iran. And wars are bound to continue so long as there exists an international contest for control of the Persian Gulf oil riches, and so long as the Palestinians that were displaced by Israelis are left homeless and stateless. Even Jerry Ford and Jimmy Carter agree on this latter fact. Following the assassination of Sadat, a Saudi Arabian official told a reporter that "the proof now is overwhelming. Being America's friend in the Middle East is fatal!" The statement was made to Karel Elliot House, a reporter for The Wall Street Journal, who then commented:

"As that remark indicates, the assassination of Egypt's Anwar Sadat following the downfall of the late Shah of Iran, another of America's closest friends, has created a crisis of confidence in U.S. leadership that threatens to undermine vital American interests in the Middle East. Because this country is increasingly seen as unable to influence events in the region while Moscow and its surrogates thrive, Arab nations such as Saudi Arabia, Jordan, Oman, Morocco and Tunisia are likely to be even more reluctant to identify with the U.S. At the same time, the emergence of Hosni Mubarak as Egypt's new leader opens the possibility of rapprochement between Egypt and those moderate Arab nations. Mr. Mubarak, who has never been to Israel, has quietly maintained contact with many of the governments that broke diplomatic relations with Egypt after the Camp David peace accords in 1978. These twin currents - doubt about American effectiveness, and desire for Arab rapprochement - could significantly alter political alignments in the Mideast, complicating prospects for peace.... 'Look who survives,' says a Saudi official. 'It's the Soviets' friends - Qaddafi [of Libya], Assad [of Syria], Haseini [of Iraq]... These guys who are gone are those who turned to America: the Shah, Sadat, and Numiery [of Sudan]'." (End of quote).

The evidence corroborates: nations that have depended upon the United States include Saudi Arabia, Jordan, Oman, Yemen, the Emirates, Kuwait, Qatar, Egypt, Sudan, Morocco, Tunisia, and Iran under the Shah. All have had, or are having, trouble politically, economically, with terrorists, etc. However, those Mideast nations that are aligned with the USSR - Libya, Syria, South Yemen, Iraq - all seem to be doing quite well, all things considered. So, the consensus in Washington after the assassination of Sadat: If the United States didn't do something quickly to avoid increasing distrust and even hostility in the Arab-Moslem world, for the love of Israel a world might be lost. A show of extreme friendship and power had to be displayed immediately. So, American armed forces in the Mideast were placed on the alert. Since Reagan was told not to go, a most unique trio was directed to accompany Haig and other officials, consisting of the three living ex-Presidents of the U.S. Democrat Carter and Republican Ford returned to say there could be no enduring peace in the Mideast until after the Palestinian question had been resolved - a mild, bi-partisan statement designed to appease the Arabs without antagonizing the powerful Zionist Lobby. But Nixon remained, began a series of personal calls on heads of government in the Arab-Moslem Mideast, beginning with oil-rich Saudi Arabia. When it was hinted that Nixon was on a personal mission for the President, Nixon denied this, leading one to believe that his mission was undertaken in behalf of someone bigger than Reagan; to wit, the founder of the Trilateral Commission, who is rumored to be working out a deal with the Soviet Union whereby oil exploitation and distribution rights for the whole area would be divided between the Communist Monopolists and the Monopoly Capitalists. However, for the time being at least, the idea that competition - even to the threat of war - must be maintained in order to keep the masses from knowing what's really being planned. Perhaps it was said best by the British journalist Douglas Reed, who wrote: "The plan, I think, is the old one of world dominion in a new form.... Today the scene is set for the third act, intended to complete the process. The money-power and the revolutionary power have been set up to give sham but symbolic shapes ('Capitalism' or 'Communism') and sharply defined citadels ('America' or 'Russia').... Suitably to alarm the mass-mind, the picture offered is that of bleak and hopeless enmity and confrontation....Such is the spectacle publicly staged for the masses. But what if similar men, with a common aim, secretly rule in both camps and propose to achieve their ambition through the clash between those masses? I believe any diligent student of our times will discover that this is the case."

Whatever you may think of the Conspiracy Theory so clearly defined by Reed, it follows as day follows night that America's "crisis of confidence" in the Mid-east must be overcome, and this without seriously disturbing the existence of political Israel. So, Haig has promised vast military and economic aid to Egypt and Sudan. And Reagan has promised that Egypt will be protected and defended from any and all external enemies, even intimating that American servicemen could be involved directly in such a defensive war. To emphasize the promises, two AWACS planes, manned by American crews, have been sent to act as aerial watchmen on behalf of Egypt and Sudan. Asked if the AWACS are to be protected, a Pentagon spokesman answered that fighter planes from aircraft carriers in the area would provide the protection. This alone could involve the U.S. in a shooting war. But, regardless of risk, it was necessary to relieve and dispel that "crisis of confidence" in America on the part of the Arab world. This determination to protect Egypt and Sudan, when confined to the nations now friendly with Israel, would not disturb the Zionist Lobby. But aid to the Arab nations that talk about a "holy war" against Israel, especially Saudi Arabia, is anathema to the Israelis.

Thus, whatever Reagan may do to restore confidence on the part of the Arab-Moslem States has been placed in jeopardy by the Zionist Lobby's objection to the sale of AWACS to Saudi Arabia. Prime Minister Begin came to the United States to organize opposition to the sale and a large section of fundamentalist Christians joined in the opposition. The result: the House voted three-to-one against sale of the AWACS, the Senate Foreign Affairs Committee voted nine-to-eight against the sale, and Reagan may suffer his first really important defeat when the full Senate votes on the sale on or about October 26. Reagan's inability to keep his promise to Saudi Arabia will make all Arabys exceedingly dubious about America's ability to keep any promises. And more Arab leaders will say it's fatal to be friendly to the United States, and point to the fate of the Shah and Sadat. A Saudi editorial that was reprinted in the October 8th issue of Straight Talk requires no comment. We quote portions of it:

"Israel wants to reinforce its military power in the Middle East in the name of peace and security by obtaining more U.S. aid in the form of F-16 aircraft. Furthermore, Begin wants the United States to limit or halt any military purchases by any Arab country....Note that Saudi Arabia will be paying $8.5-billion in cash for the AWACS, while Israel is receiving U.S. equipment under the terms of military aid or at low interest, long-term rates....Reagan's decision to endorse the sale of AWACS to Saudi Arabia was not very well received by Begin. But who is Begin to question Reagan? Why does the United States even give Begin the opportunity to approve or disapprove decisions that are based on the best interests of the United States in the Middle East?.... Would the state of Israel survive if U.S. military aid were stopped? The answer is very clear that Israel's survival depends heavily on U.S. aid and also American Jews' donations and tax-deductible contributions. Since that is the case, Begin needs to come off his U.S.-made high horse and face reality.... U.S. interests and Israeli interests do not coincide in the Arab countries. Rather, they clash head to head. The Arab nations are tired of waiting for the day when the United States uses the diplomacy of force with Israel. Why not use U.S. military and economic aid to bring peace to the area? The technique to be used is very simply called the golden rule: The one with the gold makes the rules." (Unquote).

So the "crisis of confidence" remains and regardless of whether Saudi Arabia receives the AWACS, F-16s, auxiliary fuel tanks for extended flight, and the deadly Sidewinder rockets that never seem to miss their target, that "crisis of confidence" will remain - as all seem to agree - until there is a satisfactory resolution of the Palestinian Problem. There has been great confusion, ever since President Truman recognized political Israel as a legitimate government in 1948. There is ever greater confusion now that Sadat is gone and the future of the Camp David accord is in doubt. The future policies of Egypt also are in doubt, as is the future of Sudan since Kadaffi of Libya, having swallowed up Chad, now seeks to add Sudan - and hopefully Egypt - to his Moslem Empire. Libya has joined Cuba and East Germany as militant and terror-promoting satellites of the USSR and members of the Communist International that seeks to bring "peace" to the whole world. As for the other Arab-Islamic states: Syria has its partnership with the USSR. So does Iraq. Afghanistan is resisting Soviet "protection." Lebanon is torn asunder by a four-sided civil war which could escalate into a regional conflict. Iraq and Iran are engaged in an interminable war. Once Khomeini dies or is deposed, the Russians can be expected to rush in as they did in Afghanistan, to "protect" what's left of the country. South Yemen is loaded with Soviet military bases "to protect the Persian Gulf oil states." North Yemen could fall at any time. That leaves the moderate and important oil-producing Nations that have tried to remain friendly with the United States despite our extreme favoritism toward their mutual enemy, which is Israel. Most important of these is Saudi Arabia, which may turn to England for Nimrods if AWACS are denied, and may turn to the USSR for other military equipment, paying cash for same. Jordan, Qatar, Oman, the Emirates, all prefer to look to the U.S. for protection. But this could change.

All is confusion. And to add to it, Brezhnev is said to have a plan. He called Yasir Arafat to Moscow last June. As a result, the leopard-topped leader of the Palestine Liberation Organization is supposed to try to change his spots. The PLO has a very bad name as a terrorist organization, will never be accepted by the Trilateral Nations in conferences, etc. So, it is reported that Brezhnev told Arafat that the PLO must become the "Palestinian Provisional Government." And Fatah, the armed branch of PLO, is to cease being called a terrorist organization, and become a Regular Army. The man chosen to head this regular army is a former Egyptian colonel who turned against Sadat, was trained at the Frounze military school in Moscow, did post-graduate work in terrorism at camps in the Crimea and East Germany, had some field training with the Sandanistas in Central America, speaks fluent Russian and has taken the name of Ibrahim al Shaier. The master plan calls for Soviet recognition of the Palestinian Provisional Government (nee PLO), with an Embassy opened in Moscow, full recognition by all Warsaw Pact countries, and by all pro-Soviet Asian and African States. And a direct confrontation between U.S. troops in the Persian Gulf area and this Moscow-backed Libyan-Palestinian Army might become inevitable. As if Korea and Vietnam were not enough, it seems that the powers that be may be determined to involve us in another limited war, which could easily become an unlimited war.

THE CANCUN CONSPIRACY

In the course of human events, there have been times when the leaders of the governments of nations could engage in the gentle arts of diplomacy with some hope of success in their efforts to untangle presumed and sometimes real external problems. If gentler methods failed, then these leaders might resort to that extremist form of diplomacy: war. Nowadays, however, there are leaders of governments who seek to gain the fruits of war without incurring the risks and responsibilities that might be entailed. Leaders of this type resort to the use of primitive and bestial methods: irresponsible terrorism carried out by surrogate vandals and assassins within nations. In this sense, we are back in the Middle Ages, but with twentieth century weapons. As a result, simple diplomacy has become a dangerous activity, although the leaders of governments still try to negotiate, even as assassins try to 'waste' them. We suspect that the world's last real diplomat disappeared with the assassination of Anwar Sadat, whose practice of diplomacy brought about his death.

Yet, despite the epidemic of global terrorism, and the admitted fruitlessness of conferences without agendas, the heads of government of twenty-two states and nations assembled on a remote and lavish resort island called Cancun, off the coast of Yucatan where the Gulf of Mexico meets the Caribbean Sea. They would talk about food, trade, energy, money and finance, and discuss ways in which the world's wealth might be divided equally among nations (if not among the people of these nations.) Twenty-two heads of government were at Cancun without an agenda. Fourteen of them were representative of some ninety-three non-aligned, developing nations. Eight were representatives of the countries that were supposed to help all the others. It's all worked out so that whatever the help that is given, it will be paid for by you and me and taxpayers from the other "Trilateral" countries. But this was not the unique thing about the Cancun Conference. And, to explain this, we need to look at the record:

There have been seven Economic Summits, from Rambouillet in 1975 to Ottawa in 1981. Each of them was planned and controlled by members of the Trilateral Commission. They all were parts of the plan to complete the building of The New World Order. But there is another plan with a similar goal but travelling a different road toward that goal. It is the United Nations plan which is called the New International Economic Order (NIEO). The plans are different in this respect: The New World Order is the plan followed by the controllers of the Developed Nations, while the New International Economic Order is a plan that was created to control the Developing Nations. Or, to put in another way: the New World Order is the program of the Monopoly Capitalists, while The New International Economic Order is the program of the International Socialists, and the Communists. They seem to compete, but they always cooperate. And, here is the important and unique part of the overall Conspiracy: This Cancun Conference was the first time the two met together openly! Cancun was a UN Conference attended by Trilateralists. Now, some blacked out history:

The background was like this. A Third World was about to collapse because of the debts owed to the megabankers which they couldn't pay, partly because of the creation of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) and the sudden jump in energy costs. The Megabankers had to find ways to recoup their losses, else a world-wide economic collapse might eventuate. The Tri-lats, Bilderbergers, Fabians, representatives of the Organization for Economic and Commercial Development (OECD), and Money Barons got together to find ways and means of surviving. Among other things, a new kind of international currency was devised, and a new and reduced schedule for aid to developing countries was planned. About this time the so-called Nonaligned countries in the UN began to organize and present their own program. It began as the "Group of 77," at the UN. The members held their own ministerial meeting in Belgrade just before the annual meeting of the World Bank and the IMF. As this Group of 77 grew (it's now a group of 93), it was taken over by the Communists and International Socialists (even as the United Nations General Assembly had been taken over by Communists and International Socialists.) The Sixth Annual Conference of the Non-aligned countries of the UN was held in Havana, Cuba. President Tito of Yugoslavia was its leader at the time. In his address to the delegates, he said: "We have initiated long-term actions for the establishment of the New International Economic Order. We have contributed to the realization of the universality of the United Nations and to the strengthening of its role and importance....The establishment of the New International Economic Order is the only way to cope with the pressing problems of development and the profound crisis into which the world has fallen."

Immediately after that Havana Conference, Fidel Castro spoke to the United Nations General Assembly, telling the Assembly of the imperative need for the development of NIEO, demanded the allocation of a minimum of $300 billion in the form of grants and low-interest loans, from the industrial nations to the Third World nations. A few days later the World Bank and the IMF held their annual general meeting in Belgrade, and Tito the Communist, who was to die shortly thereafter, was on hand to open that conference, and he demanded the introduction of the New International Economic Order.

A year later, the Soviet Union published its official view of NIEO and claimed credit for its creation. Soviet professor Ernest Obminsky, one of almost 400 Soviet Communists on the UN payroll, wrote: "The questions of restructuring international economic relations on a just and equitable basis was originally put on the agenda of international affairs by the first socialist state in the world....The new international economic order cannot be anything but a mechanism possessing the ways and means of curbing the negative consequences of the capitalist method of production which is still continuing to function on a part of our planet. Equally obvious is the transitional nature of such a mechanism which can, none the less in Lenin's words, make up an 'entire epoch' in the period of transition from capitalism to socialism."

Despite the backing of the Communists, Socialists, and Third World activists in the UN, the "transition from capitalism to socialism" was not progressing as fast as the radicals hoped, nor was the NIEO gaining the recognition which was desired. That's when Robert Strange McNamara attempted to come to the rescue. Begetter of the Edsel, Secretary of the Vietnam War, now head of the World Bank, McNamara long had been a promoter of any plan for distributing the wealth of big governments among poor governments (poor in more than one respect). Now he must do more. The story is told in a few lines of a lengthy article appearing in the current (Fall 1981) issue of the CFR organ, Foreign Affairs. Titled "Robert McNamara at the World Bank," the article by William Clark includes the following:

"But the tide of sentiment against increased aid to developing countries continued to grow; the United States in particular dropped its foreign aid proportion of GNP steadily...and other donor countries began to flag as well...His [McNamara's] response was the creation, in 1978, of a new commission headed by Willy Brandt, winner of the Nobel Peace Prize, and former Chancellor of the Federal Republic of Germany." The author fails to mention that Brandt had been forced from office by the disclosure of his sanctioning of a top Soviet agent in his own Cabinet, that he would become head of the reorganized Socialist International, or that he would accept a commission to help to neutralize Western Europe and destroy the effectiveness of NATO in behalf of the Soviet Union. Members of this Brandt Commission included former British Prime Minister Edward Heath, former French Prime Minister Mendes-France, Washington Post publisher Katherine Graham, and former Chilean President Eduardo Frei Montalva; all of whom were associated with the Trilateral Commission, the Bilderberg Group, or the Fabian Society. The commission recommended: creation of an international energy agency operating through the UN, a global food program administered by FAO, major reforms in the international economic system, the introduction of an international income tax to be collected and used by the UN, and large-scale transfer of resources to developing countries along the lines advocated by the UN's New International Economic Order.

William Clark, in his tribute to Robert McNamara, ended his article with this significant paragraph: "Robert McNamara believed that lifting people out of absolute poverty was the foundation upon which development must be built. He acted on the assumption that it was a correct use of his power to create in the World Bank a machine that if used to the full could lead many poor countries to end absolute poverty in their midst while building a reasonable level of development. There are many who believe that the creation of that machine was his finest achievement, and that if it is not used, soon and fully, it will be a historic blunder, which may shatter the possibility of creating a planetary order that can accommodate six billion people by the end of this century."

In order to better understand the difference between the Trilateral New World Order and the Third World's New International Economic Order, we quote the following from a recent publication of the Trilateral Commission, The Dialogue Papers: 21, which concerns "North-South Partnership." It states: "The eventual establishment of UNCTAD as a permanent organ [of the UN] in 1964 gave new impetus...to the formal call for a New International Economic Order....Much has been written about the NIEO - by advocates and defenders, by opponents and critics, and by analysts of a sympathetic or unsympathetic stripe. This is not the place to rehearse the debate....[but] the NIEO is no longer center stage...."

It is certainly true that when Ronald Reagan was elected President the NIEO suffered a near collapse. The Trilateral Commission was in clear command, and its plans for North-South development were proceeding apace. But there the proponents of the NIEO had a card up their sleeve, and a chance to be on center stage, with the Trilats even approving that position. It had to do with Reagan's obsession about creating a North American Regional Economic Community composed of Canada, Mexico and the United States. Reagan had already had two meetings with Trudeau and two with Portillo to discuss the plan. Now Trudeau of Canada was a professing Socialist and a One Worlder, while Portillo of Mexico admits openly that Fidel Castro is one of his best friends. But bewitched by this dream of a North American Common Market, which certainly had the Trilats' blessing, Reagan might be induced to overlook Portillo's pro-communist leanings and agree to attend a NIEO Summit if hosted by Portillo in Mexico. The Trilats had just staged an Economic Summit in Canada, why not a NIEO Summit in Mexico. It would be of inestimable propaganda value to the One Worlders of every stripe, and the Trilateral Commission would have to go along with the idea. There was just one hitch: Reagan refused to attend such a conference if Fidel Castro were invited. The concession was made, Castro and other heads of Communist Governments stayed away, although there were three Socialist heads at Cancun.

So, Cancun was a success, at least for the NIEO. It is true that Reagan remembered his lines and followed the script, speaking out for free enterprise, individual initiative, the creation of incentives to work, save and succeed, as opposed to the idea of giving more and more money to governments that helped themselves but seldom helped their people. However, the principal purposes of the Cancun Conference were to gain recognition for the UN as the dispensing agency for aid to the Third World, and to get Reagan to approve – and to attend future global summits that were staged by the UN-backed-NIEO. And in these areas, Reagan weakened, even agreed to further negotiations at the UN. This revives the power and prestige of the Communist-Third World controlled UN at a most dangerous time. In an article, "Dramatic New Developments at the U.N.," appearing in the current (10/21/81) The Review of the News, John Rees writes:

"This fall saw the convening of the 36th General Assembly of the United Nations. As the session opened in New York City the smoldering hatred of the so-called 'Nonaligned' group of 93 nations burst into flames. Their target was as usual the United States. In a 21-page document adopted at the end of September, the 'Nonaligned' group, led by its chairman, Cuban Foreign Minister Isidoro Malmierca, made it plain that as far as these friends of Moscow were concerned the time had arrived to declare their total hostility toward the United States. Issued on the letterhead of the Cuban U.N. Mission in New York, the document was grandiously entitled 'A Communique On The Meeting Of The Foreign Ministers And Ambassadors To The U.N. From The Nonaligned Nations Present At The 36th General Assembly.'...Let's look at what the 'non-aligned' group is complaining about. First, it 'deplored' the veto of the U.N. Security Council Resolution that sought to condemn only South Africa for its raids into Angola against the bases of Soviet-controlled terrorists there.... our government was accused of attempting to 'destabilize' the pro-Soviet military dictatorships in Cuba, Grenada. and Nicaragua....On and on went this attack against the United States, following the Soviet line at every jot and curve..."

To be brief: The Soviet Communists dictate to the "nonaligned" group in the UN, and the nonaligned group in the UN dictates to the UN General Assembly. And yet, the United States Government insists upon playing host to the United Nations, paying most of its bills, giving its communist spies diplomatic immunity, and regarding most of the declarations and decrees of its many agencies as international law! It costs us nearly a billion dollars a year, it provides cover for foreign terrorists to enter the United States, it houses the largest nest of spies in the country. It is dedicated in every way to the destruction of our national sovereignty. And we retaliate by promoting global economic summits for its NIEO which would make of us an administrative region in a One World Government. And the media call Cancun a great success!

THE MENACE OF A MONEY MONOPOLY

The following dull and depressing (to gold bugs) story was published by The Miami Herald on Tuesday, October 27, 1981:

"Washington - Five members of the U.S. Gold Commission indicated Monday that they will steer clear of any recommendation that the nation returns to a direct gold standard, one in which paper money would be only a substitute for the precious metal. But three of the panel's 17 members said they supported at least some linkage of gold and the U.S. monetary system. One of them, Republican Congressman Ron Paul of Texas, called for a return to a direct gold standard. The commission, appointed by President Reagan, is to report to Congress by the end of March on what steps, if any, the nation might take to include links to gold in its monetary policy. Advocates of a gold system argue that basing money on gold - a commodity whose supply grows slowly - would automatically put the brakes on inflation. Paul suggested that 'a direct link would be the best way.' But he added that he was not so optimistic as to 'anticipate this in the next six months.'

"In a pure gold standard, Paul said, no price per ounce would be set for gold, but the value of goods would be calculated in the weight of gold someone would be willing to give for them. He got no direct support for the suggestion, and he was pointedly questioned about it by other commission members representing Congress, the Federal Reserve Board and the Reagan Administration. Did he mean, asked Federal Reserve Governor Henry Wallich, that 'a car would cost 10 ounces of gold?' That was just what he meant, Paul replied....

"Rep. Stephen Neal (D., N.C.) said he was unconvinced of the need for a move to a gold standard, speaking of the 'uncertainty and very damaging possibilities' in such a big change in the U.S. monetary system. Other commission members - including Federal Reserve Governors Wallich, Emmet Rice and J. Charles Partee, and Rep. Henry Reuss (D., Wis.) - are openly hostile to the idea of returning to a gold standard or developing a new one. Only three - Paul and businessmen Lewis Lehrman and Arthur Costamagna - have seemed sympathetic so far." (There are 17 members of the U.S. Gold Commission, four from the House of Representatives, three from the Senate, three governors of the Federal Reserve System, two from the President's Council of Economic Advisers and four from the public. The 17th member is Treasury Secretary Donald Regan. Anyone wishing to communicate his views about gold to the Commission, should write to the Commission's Chairman, Donald Regan, Secretary of the Treasury, 15th and Pennsylvania Ave. N.W., Washington, D.C. 20220.)

The day after the foregoing story appeared in the press, we received a report from the principal gold bug at that meeting, Rep. Ron Paul. He reports on a different, but related, subject and we quote:

"Recently, the U.S. Postal Service raised its rates for first-class mail from 15 to 18 cents. Now, they are raising rates again - this time to 20 cents - and a lot of Americans are understandably upset by these constant increases.

"Considering the poor quality of service the Post Office has provided in recent years, you might think they deserved to have their rates decreased, rather than continually increased. To make matters even worse, it was announced recently that the U.S. Postal Service is building what amounts to a Postal Service resort in Maryland, which of course will be subsidized by American taxpayers. The cost of this plush resort is estimated to be between $30 and $50 million. The resort currently consists of 80 acres of land, an Olympic-size swimming pool, and a large gymnasium. Also planned are eight tennis courts, a jogging trail and a 22,000 foot recreational area. All of this, paid for at your expense, so selected postal supervisors will be able to enjoy themselves while receiving postal training. This outrageous example of government waste is just one reason why postal service and rates, to say the least, are not what they should be.

"I believe we could end such bureaucratic extravagance in the U.S. Postal System simply by legalizing postal competition, and I have introduced legislation in Congress to do this. By allowing competition and enabling free enterprise to help move our first-class mail, we could (without any interruption in service) make great strides toward improving mail service, holding down and even reducing rates, and preventing the kind of waste and abuse exemplified in the Maryland postal resort. Private competition, not government monopoly, is what we need to strengthen our economy and improve service to consumers. This is true for every area of our economy - including mail delivery - and my legislation will help to bring this about." (Unquote).

We have reprinted two articles, one concerning the nation's money supply, the other concerning the nation's postal service. There is an important point of similarity: both concern monopolies. An accepted definition: A monopoly is a condition in which there is only one seller of a commodity or service, this by virtue of the control over supply, by a person, a corporation, a cartel, or a government. The Federal Reserve System sells a commodity: public debt. In order to maintain this monopoly, it issues what is known as the nation's money supply (it isn't really money, it's evidence of debt.) Similarly, the U.S. Postal Service has a monopoly on the delivery of first-class mail, and in order to maintain such a monopoly, it sells postage stamps. There are other government-approved monopolies in the U.S., such as power companies and other public utilities. But the governments maintain a form of control over monopolies of this type, so that prices never become too unreasonable or service unacceptable. On the other hand, the Federal Reserve System is uncontrolled. Congress is supposed to have some control over the FED but when someone, like the late Rep. Wright Patman, tried to exert any kind of control, he is ignored, or silenced. Congress also is supposed to have some control over the Postal Service. But you'll remember all that attempted control did was delay the increase of the price of first-class stamps to twenty cents.

But our chief concern (though the postal increase hurts) is the money monopoly that is exercised by the Fed, and which is responsible for the current inflation, ridiculously high interest rates, and idle stores and factories. As we have stated many times in many different ways, we have two central governments. There is the federal government, which is visible for all to see. And there is a hidden economic government which stands above the elected government and which is controlled by what is called the Eastern Establishment. It has its various affiliates emanating from the Control Cabal that is called the Federal Reserve System, such as the Trilateral Commission, the Council on Foreign Relations, and so on and on. H.S. Kenan, in his book, "The Federal Reserve Bank," gave an excellent comparison between the two great money dictatorships that have been established in the world. Kenan wrote the following in 1968, but there has been no basic change since that time. We quote:

"...the parallel between the setup of the Communist Party in Russia and the Federal Reserve System in the United States is startling...In both countries a small group of people have knowledge of, and benefit from, the decisions of tightly knit cliques. In the United States, monetary policy is basically controlled by the 7 members of the Federal Reserve Board, the 12 presidents and the 108 directors of the 12 Federal Reserve banks. These 12 people, operating in a secretive manner, have absolute power over monetary decisions. In the Soviet Union there are 133 members of the Central Committee of the Communist Party. This is the group that runs everything in Russia.

"Both the Federal Reserve System and the Communist Party in Russia also have a more elite group - a small super committee...In the Federal Reserve System this group is known as the Federal Open Market Committee, and it is composed of the 7 members of the Federal Reserve Board and 5 of the 12 presidents of the Federal Reserve banks - 12 in all - with the other 7 presidents participating. In the Soviet Union, there is a small committee within the Central Committee known as the Politbureau. This has 11 members compared with the Federal Open Market Committee's 12.

"When the Federal Open Market Committee meets every three weeks in Washington it goes behind locked doors....We never know what goes on at these meetings...It is in these sessions that the monetary decisions, interest rates and the money supply are decided. Not even the President of the United States can attend these secret sessions. In the Soviet Union, the Politbureau meets several times a month in Moscow in totally secret sessions...Like the Federal Open Market Committee, the decisions of the Politbureau are kept secret until the party decides to release the information. In both the Soviet Union and the Federal Reserve System, favors are dispensed to a select few...I am not accusing anyone of being a communist. But I am saying that both systems operate as dictatorships against the will of the people." (Unquote).

There is something that must be understood by those who hope for a recovery of our sick economy. The treatment of symptoms, administration of placebos, and giving of promises that can't be kept, will never restore the Nation's economic health. We have an excellent example: The Reagan Administration tries to reduce taxes to increase production. But even as taxes go down the national debt goes up. It's the same old story of trying to make ends meet by borrowing more money and going deeper into debt. No matter what old scheme or new innovation is tried out, so long as printing presses can create money, and so long as a monopolistic control over the issue of that created money remains, There cannot be any significant improvement in our situation. Two things must happen if free enterprise is to survive: The Federal Reserve System must be abolished, and the ability of the government or any agency thereof, to create money must be forbidden by law. This is another way of saying that we must return to the use of gold - and silver - exactly as the Constitution dictates. An excellent statement of the problem appeared in Newsletter Digest, a quote from Common Sense Viewpoint, in which John Pugsley comments:

"Historically, two groups have been preeminent in gaining control of the money creating process: the politicians and the bankers. Usually they wind up working in concert, and sharing in the spoils of their efforts....You can't create precious metals with bookkeeping entries. You must find some type of commodity that can be easily manufactured if bankers and politicians are to produce it. The commodity they eventually discovered was debt. It took over a century and a half for the bankers and politicians to gradually eliminate the gold and silver from our money, and replace them with the printing press. Once gold backing was removed from our currency, those in control had the power to plunder the producers without restraint. What most of the gold advocates miss however, is that it wasn't the gold in itself that had any magical quality that prevented inflation or stabilized the currency. It was just that having any form of money that couldn't be created at the stroke of a pen prevented money creation. The real objective is not the return to gold, as such, but rather to return to any effective system that prevents the creation of money. The real issue in the great gold standard debate...should be the abolition of the power to create money.

"It is inconceivable that those who benefit from this power would willingly give it up. Who will be the first businessman to refuse the government subsidy? Who will be the first social security recipient to send back his check? Who will be the first banker to turn away fresh money from the Fed? And which political candidate will run for office on the platform that he is going to cut off the benefits to these groups? It must be clear that there are too many political interests at stake for a real gold standard to be adopted. Individuals in this society have learned that they can vote themselves a free lunch, to be served at the public trough, and a gold standard is going to eliminate that power. My opinion is that a true gold standard will be argued, but not adopted. The most probable outcome, once inflation has reached the stage it has in this country, is for it to intensify until it finally destroys the money creators, either with hyperinflation or a massive bank collapse. The only other reasonable alternative (and the most probable outcome of all) is that government will gradually nationalize all private property, justifying this action by blaming the free market for the effects of inflation. I think an attempt to reinstate the gold standard is a misguided approach to the whole problem [because] the only mechanism that can be used [to reinstate a gold standard] is the vote, and the plunderers will outvote the victims every time. What should you do? Educate those around you. Bring peoples' attention to the real issue - that of plunder. The answer is a free market in which individuals understand the importance of preventing the creation of money." (Underlining added for emphasis. Quoted from "Common Sense Viewpoint," 711 W 17th St. G-6, Costa Mesa, CA 92627. $75 per year).

We must agree that reinstating a gold standard is a rather vain hope, because of those who insist upon voting themselves free lunches. However, if we are to "educate those around" us, we must try to make them understand that inflation can be abolished and a stabilized currency established only if we are using precious metals instead of printing press paper. There are two ways in which we can help. First, the U.S. Gold Commission is to report to the Congress on gold by March 31, 1982. Rep. Ron Paul is a member of that Committee and he deserves every possible support. Second, there now is a national organization created for the purpose of abolishing the Federal Reserve System and replacing it with an honest Constitutional money system. Named ROC (Redeem Our Country), it can really help to "educate those around you." For further information write Jim Townsend, 1110 S. Pomona Ave., Fullerton, CA 92632. Be sure to enclose a self-addressed, stamped envelope. On these two stands our hope of economic survival: Death to the Fed, and to creators of money!

DEFENSE - BUT AGAINST WHAT, AND WHOM?

Hundreds of thousands of people in the capitals of the various United States of Europe demonstrating, protesting the NATO plan to provide for their common defense by placing nuclear weapons in strategic spots in Western Europe; this in response to the common knowledge that the Soviet Union already has placed its own nuclear weapons in all its satellite countries bordering the so-called free world. To intensify the drama, a Soviet submarine goes aground in restricted Swedish waters and isn't allowed to leave until after it is discovered that it's carrying nuclear-tipped torpedoes. Almost simultaneously, before a Senate Committee in Washington, D.C., Secretary of State Haig admits that a limited nuclear war is possible in Europe, that "There are contingency plans ...to fire a nuclear weapon...to demonstrate to the other side they are exceeding the limits of toleration." Secretary of Defense Weinberger was quick to deny Haig's statement. The Pentagon was quick to announce that both Haig and Weinberger were right. And the White House was quick to explain: that "a possible nuclear warning shot in the event of war in Europe has been considered as a NATO option - but always with 'significant doubts' that it ever would be done." To further confuse foreign policy direction President Reagan called both National Affairs Director Richard Allen and State Secretary Alexander Haig into a private conference and told them to "stop bickering" and try to get along. As a matter of record, ever since the post of National Security Advisor was created, there has been disagreement between the man who held that post and the Secretary of State, with one exception: that was when Henry Kissinger held both positions at the same time. To further confuse the issue, Major General Robert Schweitzer, who was top military advisor to the National Security Council which Allen heads, was fired from that job when he spoke out in public and said much the same thing that Haig said later, regarding the use of nuclear weapons. Schweitzer said the Soviets have nuclear superiority (which is true), and "are going to strike (which is questionable). Other military men have been saying much the same thing. Generals Keegan and Singlaub are outstanding examples. They insist, as does Schweitzer, that "the United States is in the greatest danger that the Republic has ever faced since its founding days."

They are right. But not because of a possible "nuclear holocaust". The Communists, in secret collaboration with the Monopoly Capitalists, want our resources, our industries, our farms and our factories. They don't want to capture a continent of burned out junk on a vast scorched and uninhabited earth.

Nevertheless, as in the 1950s and 1960s, the idea of what is now being called a potential "nuclear holocaust" is being promoted in all parts of the Western World. For example, the CIA recently reported that the Soviet Union's massive civil defense program is aimed at protecting the country's leaders. The CIA even has figures: a selected 100,000 people are to be protected in event of nuclear attack. This includes 5,000 top-ranking Party and Government officials at national and republic levels, 63,000 Party and Government officials at city level, 2,000 managers of key installations, and about 40,000 others. To counter this, our National Security Council is said to be in the midst of a review of its civil defense policy, is expected to recommend a big increase in spending to build more shelters for more of the so-called "elite" and their top officials and bureaucratic civil servants. According to "Globescan," a highly reliable news service, there already are 19 emergency facilities situated in a 300-mile radius of Washington, D.C., called the "Federal Arc." These installations are supposed to protect Government officials and Invisible Government "elitists" from potential nuclear attack. But they can also be used by the "leaders" for protection against a 1776-type counter revolution on the part of the people of the United States, if they ever discover - and believe - what has been done to them in the destruction of their Republic, and their freedoms.

These 19 emergency installations are supposedly "top secret." But, a few of them have been exposed. One of the most important is a subterranean city inside Mt. Weather, about 50 miles west of Washington in the Blue Ridge Mountains. This is a complete underground city managed by the Federal Emergency Management Agency, is designed to provide refuge for top Federal officials. The Federal Reserve System has its own deluxe underground city, which has been blasted out of solid rock in Mt. Pony near Culpeper, Va. about 80 miles southwest of Washington. There are three-story houses, complete with all the comforts of regular residences. Another similar Hideout is located within Iron Mountain, near Hudson, N.Y. "Survival West" is located approximately half-way between San Francisco and Los Angeles. Another is in Little Cottonwood Canyon in the Wasatch Mountains of Idaho, another is 15 miles west of Spokane, Washington. According to investigative reporter Robert Aldridge, of the Los Angeles Times, "Jimmy Carter's Presidential Directive 58 touched off a new flurry of relocation plans. Although not available to the public, its 18 secret pages reportedly ordered a new network of blast shelters and underground control stations for dispersing government officials during crises...The Federal Emergency Management Agency currently plans to relocate only 18 million people...." (Unquote). Since President Reagan has issued his own Executive Order confirming and strengthening the Regional Government System, and since the Federal Emergency Management Agency is the key federal agency in case of a declared national emergency, we can assume that FEMA continues to build underground cities for key officials. But if Douglas Casey, the author of the "International Man" is correct, Washington, D.C. is one place that will never be attacked by an outside enemy because "Washington would be spared, otherwise there would be no one to surrender the U.S."

Barring the possibility of a full scale nuclear attack there remains the potential danger of a conventional attack against Western Europe, the Middle East, or even somewhere in the Americas. In case of war, what of our chances of defending ourselves and allies? Ray Heaps of the American Independent Party edits the "Bay Area News," for the benefit of party members. In his October 1981 issue, he published an analysis of our defense position which is worthy of study. We quote from that analysis:

* * * * *

If we made here the statement that we shall make at the end of this review our readers might find it too fantastic to be true. So, let us review a bit of the history of U.S. defense. In the 1930s a man haunted military and political leaders in Washington, D.C. trying to get someone interested in rockets as a weapon of war, but no one would listen to such a crazy idea. In 1945 when peace terms with Germany were being signed, U.S. military leaders asked the Germans: "May we meet the man who is responsible for such fantastic weapons as the V-2 rockets with which you bombed London?" The Germans replied: "But you will have to go back to your own country to meet Dr. Goddard -- we only bought his book." Dr. Goddard had haunted military and political leaders with his "crazy ideas" after launching the first rocket into the stratosphere at White Sands, New Mexico. The United States had missed the boat. Still, the U.S. was militarily supreme.

Beginning with Robert S. McNamara, one U.S. Secretary of Defense after another has spent more money than any other nation on earth, but at the same time reducing U.S. defensive capability. Through all of these years, U.S. military technological developments led the world, but very few reached production for our military forces. We still fly old B-52 bombers that are older than their pilots. We still have the old, old Minuteman ICBMs in silos that would require several days to get ready for load and launch of a second Minuteman after the first was fired.

The MX-Mobile missile has been ready for production for several years, but has been stalled. When production was discussed under the Carter Administration, the "race track" basing mode, which would cost $60 billion and take nine years to complete was considered. Now, the Reagan Administration is considering building 100 MX missiles and deploying them in the old Titan silos. This should make the Kremlin very happy - they have had those silos targeted for many years for a first strike; it will change the MX-Mobile missile to the MX-non-mobile missile, making it easily destroyed on the ground.....

"The Laser and Particle Beam weapons also were invented in the U.S. Carter's Secretary of Defense, Harold Brown, decided that to develop them would be impossible. A couple of years later, the Soviets had solved the problems that were so impossible. Robert Moss, a columnist for the London Daily Telegraph, has written a new novel in which he tells (fictionally) of "star wars" beam weapons being deployed by the Soviets. In an interview with Review Of The News, Moss tells of Klaus Fuchs, the atom bomb spy, giving the Soviets the theory of the electromagnetic pulse and related ideas in the 1940s...He tells of General Keegan and Air Force Intelligence insisting in the 1970s that the Soviets were building a beam weapon, but the CIA was uncertain. Then it was later firmly established that the Soviets were testing a beam weapon like a lightning bolt, to shoot down U.S. planes in the atmosphere and lower areas of space. In March 1981 the Soviets successfully homed in a killer satellite and destroyed a dummy satellite in space. 80% of U.S. military communications depend upon space satellites. There is the possible blinding of the U.S. early warning systems based space satellites....We know from defectors and other sources that the Soviets have been working on a super-giant neutron bomb for at least 20 years. The Pentagon even has a code-name for it - "Four Sevens."

It is a fact well known by every military man that strict discipline is essential in any effective military organization. If you destroy its discipline, you destroy it as an effective military organization. After World War II the accidental drowning of a recruit in the U.S. Marine Corps was used as a wedge to begin the erosion of discipline in most, if not all, of the U.S. Armed Forces. It reached the point that a private was made to believe that he had the right to question every order given him by a superior. As discipline deteriorated so did the morale of career men. If discipline could not be maintained, what was the use? The armed forces began losing their most experienced and valuable men.

Next came the widespread use of "pot" or marijuana, followed closely by the use of hard narcotics such as cocaine and heroin. 85% pure cocaine went for 50¢ a "fix" in the Panama Canal Zone. Almost pure heroin went for 50¢ to $1 a "fix" in Vietnam. On Okinawa and in Europe the going rate was a little more. Soon, our Armed Forces were sending back for discharge thousands of narcotic addicts. They are trying to clean it up today, and we'd better pray that they will succeed.

The Soviet war buildup has been supported with U.S. products, technology, and dollars. Year after year, from four to ten metric tons of U.S. grains have been shipped to the Soviets at subsidized low prices, much of which they then sold at a high price on the international market. The U.S. produced the Centalign-B - the only machine in the world that can make micro-miniature ball bearings that are accurate to one 25-millionth of an inch - and are essential in the guidance systems of ICBMs for high accuracy. The U.S. shipped to the Soviets more than half of all the Centalign-B machines that we had produced, so that Soviet ICBMs could be as accurate as our own. The U.S. built on the Kama River in the Soviet Union the world's largest and most modern factory for making trucks and military vehicles. The U.S. has supplied to the Soviets advanced, exotic computers that they needed to guide and control their nuclear warhead ICBMs. Countless U.S. technological developments have been freely given and, year after year, the U.S. has extended to the Soviets many billions of dollars in Foreign Aid.

We submit that all of the above items can be checked and verified - that so many successive detrimental acts could not have been coincidental, or the result of ignorance. Do you doubt that they are the strategy and tactics of the planned betrayal of the United States into slavery under a Totalitarian Socialist One-World Dictatorship? Or are you one of those who insists that our government could not have been so saturated with infiltrators at the top level? Where but at the top? (End of article by Ray Heaps of the American Independent Party, editor of the "Bay Area News," 64 Joost Ave., San Francisco, CA 94131.)

Observe the inanity of our officially admitted situation. Secretary of Defense Weinberger concedes that we are militarily inferior to the Soviet Union, especially in nuclear capability. He says that we must seek to become "equal" to the USSR militarily, this in accordance with the recognized restrictions of the MAD (Mutual Assured Destruction) theory of arms control. It is conceded that it will take us a matter of years to catch up and become "equal" with the Russians militarily. Yet, from such a position of admitted weakness our Government declares that it is our national duty to protect the Middle East, the Free World and the Third World from the evils of Communism; while at the same time helping to build up the military strength of Communist China, and while feeding the Soviet and "giving her the technological rope with which she could hang us"!

In this MAD Crusade to replace the former British Empire as the savior of the world, let us think of the current odds against us. According to one respected analyst, the Soviets are executing a four pronged attack: 1) Elimination of all pro-Western governments in the Middle East, as with the Shah of Iran, Sadat of Egypt, with the ruling family of Saudi Arabia said to be next.. 2) Neutralization of Europe and the subsequent collapse of NATO. 3) An attack on South Africa launched from Angola, Botswana, Zinmabwe and Mozambique....4) The conquest of Central America and the drawing of Mexico into the Soviet Orbit. And we are to halt this program with inferior forces? Only fools or traitors could have placed us in such an intolerable position. And there are few fools among the Old Guard in Washington and New York City.

THE MEDIA RECEIVES A MANDATE

There is a power that can shape the opinions and command the actions of the masses, that can destroy governments and create nations, and make or break politicians. This is the power of the Communications Media. It is a controlled power, in part by a Zionist Lobby, in part by an Eastern Establishment, both of which are controlled by International Megabankers and Multinational Power Brokers. We often hear editors and publishers, radio and television executives, and other communications chieftains speak out in defense of freedom of the press. In reality, there is no such thing as freedom of the press, except where it still is exercised by editors of small independent newspapers and in an ever expanding sphere of independent newsletters and other patriotic publications of limited circulation. Today's Communications Media is a Controlled Media.

Regardless of what one may think of the Nixon Administration, it was the Controlled Media which destroyed it, sent many of its officers to prison and many others to retirement. And now, regardless of what one may think of the Reagan Administration, it would seem that the Controlled Media has been given the command to destroy it. The word was given by James Reston of The New York Times, and Joseph Kraft of the Los Angeles Times. Reston wrote:

"In the fifth news conference of his nearly 10 months in the White House President Reagan defended his foreign policy and made some astonishing remarks. . . . Even Reagan's best friends know that most of these claims by the president in his press conference are false. Prime Minister Trudeau of Canada and President Lopez Portillo of Mexico are challenging his militaristic approach to the problems of the world, and not agreeing that all is well in the hemisphere. . . . The European allies are not stronger on Reagan's side, as he says, but much weaker, more doubtful of his military attitude toward the Soviet Union, and increasingly alarmed by his Cold War propaganda. As a result the allies are not following Washington's lead. . . . Israel is appalled by Reagan's efforts to give sophisticated weapons to Saudi Arabia. . . . Reagan. . . didn't even concede that there was any conflict within his own administration. . . ."

And Kraft wrote: "Far more than gossip is involved in the recurrent stories of deep rifts within the Reagan Administration. There is a basic problem of structure. It arises from the special character of President Reagan and it is not going to go away. Mr. Reagan came to the White House with very limited experience in the major issues of foreign affairs and national economic policy. . . . (He) regularly commits howlers. Thus, he set off the latest spate of transatlantic confusion by asserting, at a session with out-of-town editors, that Europe might be the battleground in a tactical war that did not touch Europe or the United States. At the same meeting, he amazed informed people in the world by declaring that the Soviet leadership could not expand its military program because it had already put the Russian people on 'a starvation diet of sawdust' . . . in running the Government, allowance has to be made for a President who is apt to get wrong the details of critical business."

As opinion molders like Reston and Kraft lead the way, the media lackeys follow. And, so the campaign begins to destroy the Reagan Administration, even as The New York Times and The Washington Post began with Watergate, then followed through to destroy all but Kissinger and Haig, and put Nixon on hold. The Media's opinion molders were fairly tolerant of Reagan and his principal staffmen; Meese, Baker, Deaver, Allen, and Stockman, until two things happened. First, Reagan won a battle (but not the war) by defeating the Zionist Lobby in the sale of weapons to Saudi Arabia, then by twisting the knife when he praised the Saudi peace plan and stating that parts of it could be tied into the Camp David package. As an aide explained, it is good for Israel to be a client of the United States, but it is not good when the United States becomes a client of Israel. But to take a stand against the Zionist Lobby has meant the political demise of many a man, and Reagan is feeling the after effects of his victory in the Senate. His second error (in the eyes of Trilateralists and the Third World medics, that is) was the fact that he kept right on proclaiming the merits of private enterprise and initiative at both Ottawa and Cancun. He was supposed to listen and make promises, not listen to a different drummer, read from a Horatio Alger script and give advice instead of money. And he may have meant to tell the reporters at his recent press conference that he understood the cost when he told them: "We were supposed to be destroyed at the Ottawa summit and suddenly you decided by some fluke we weren't. And then came Cancun and I was not burned at the stake." But he may have destroyed himself politically because he did not lend his support to the plans of the New International Economic Order which had been approved by the UN, and which were to have their trial flight at Cancun. Just before the Cancun Conference, there had been a UN meeting of the heads of the Least Developed countries in Paris. The NIEO program had been launched, and it was supposed to receive its blessing and approval by the Developed or Capitalist countries at Cancun. But plans went awry and if the Trilateral Commissioners and the Third World Mendicants had had their way, Reagan might have been "burned at the stake." This may be a bit difficult to explain, but the New International Economic Order (NIEO) means a different thing to different groups. To the least developed and lesser developed countries (the Third World as well as the UN majority), NIEO means a division of wealth among the nations of the world. To the Trilateralists NIEO means monopoly control over the world's commodities. To the taxpaying citizens of the developed nations of the world, it means the end of free enterprise, and global socialism under a New World Order.

Five years ago a conference was held by UNCTAD, a UN agency, at Nairobi, Kenya, a new "republic" made famous by Jomo Kenyatta and his Mau Mau terrorists when they rebelled against British rule in 1963. At that UNCTAD conference the NIEO program was presented, discussed, and debated. It called for a four point program:

- 1) The transfer to the Least Developed Countries (LLDCs) and the Lesser Developed Countries (LDCs), with no strings attached, of the financial assets of the Developed, or Capitalist Countries in the amount of seven percent of the Gross National Product (GNP) of each of the world's Developed Countries.
- 2) The transfer to the LLDCs and the LDCs of an equitable share of the technology and productive facilities of the Developed Countries.
- 3) The further transfer of wealth to the LLDCs and the LDCs in the form of the cancellation of their economic debts to the Developed Countries (and this is where that new provision on the U.S. Monetary Control Act of 1980 comes into play. We'll explain later).
- 4) The guarantee of "permanent sovereignty" of every State over its resources and its economic activities (this "permanent sovereignty" is an important ingredient of the U.S. Monetary Control Act of 1980).

Now bear with us and we'll try to explain how this U.S. Monetary Control Act ties in with NIEO. In a previous Report we explained how this secretly inserted provision of the Monetary Control Act gives the Federal Reserve Corporation the right to purchase at face value any debt owed to American Banks by Communist or Third World countries (it's called "monetizing"). Another part of this Act provides that before this "monetizing" can be accomplished, the sovereignty of the debtor country must be established. This is the reason for points three and four of the NIEO program. What it means is that the debts of any Communist or Third World country can be purchased by the simple process of "creating" that much more money and issuing it into the American monetary system, which means super-inflation! It also means that American Megabanks can cover their previous losses and make huge profits out of loan transactions with the LDC and LLDCs, and also out of the multinational corporations which no longer stand any chances of expropriation, confiscation or nationalization of any of their installations or facilities in Third World countries. This means that American-based Megabanks and Multinational Corporations cannot lose, and American taxpayers and other victims of super-inflation cannot win.

But we are not alone. This is a Global Conspiracy and it follows that the same arrangements are being made in the other Developed or Capitalist Countries. This was brought to our attention by developments in South Africa. Ivor Benson of that country explained in his August issue of Behind The News how the scheme is being worked in his Republic. With the least possible public notice there was created a "Credit Guarantee Insurance Corporation, Ltd." with its headquarters in Johannesburg. This new corporation issued a pamphlet, from which we quote:

"A new field of operations is at present being opened by allowing the company to issue investment guarantees which will be re-insured with Government and which will protect South African entrepreneurs making investments in a foreign country against such risks as expropriation, confiscation, and non-convertibility. The issue of such investment guarantees can be considered in connection with the promotion of export trade but also as an instrument to promote economic aid to developing countries. The pursuit of economic cooperation between countries in Southern Africa will most probably be assisted by the availability of the protection afforded by these guarantees." (Unquote).

In short, the pattern repeats: South African Megabanks and Multinational Corporations cannot lose, and South African taxpayers and other victims of inflation cannot win. We are informed that similar arrangements have been or are being made by the power brokers in England, Germany, Australia, Japan and the other Trilateral Nations.

Getting back to this New International Economic Order, it has been approved and adopted as an official policy of the UN, is backed by at least 124 members of that organization, is being promoted by Willy Brandt who heads the Socialist International, and its Cancun debut was hosted by Fidel Castro's admirer President Jose Lopez Portillo of Mexico. In line with point one of the plan of NIEO, a "common fund" has been established. This is the nucleus of the seven percent of GNP of each Developed Nation that is to be doled out to the mendicants. Germany was first to announce its contribution, reported that the common fund already amounted to $750 million, with donations from all the other Trilateral Nations to follow. Whether the United States has anted anything to this common fund, as yet, we have not been able to determine.

At the risk of some repetition, here is the way this NIEO is expected to function. Those running the operation will "create" the money to finance the LDCs and buy up their commodities and natural resources. In order to accomplish this, the IMF will become a Global Central Bank, or a Universal Federal Reserve System, which will finance the operations by creating whatever monetary reserves are required and loaning at whatever rate suits their purpose. But this will produce a flood of counterfeit money all being spent with nothing to back it up. This means that super-inflation will devalue everyone's assets. The debts of the LDCs will then be monetized and this will cause more super-inflation and, as Globescan comments: "This will mean your house, your car, your business and your nation can be bought up cheaply with valueless money by those who mint the stuff." The final result: Worldwide Socialism, which is economic slavery.

In an excellent commentary on Cancun by Susan Huck appearing in The Review Of The News of November 11, the author comments: "Too bad that President Reagan has not seen fit to reverse policies which mean commercial advantage for the Rockefeller coterie at the price of every principle for which we claim to stand... That we will continue to disgorge foreign aid, that we still feed the World Bank, that we still support and host the United Nations - All these remain unsatisfying aspects of Reagan policy, just as they have been under so many previous Presidents of both parties..." And there is one other very important way in which Reagan continues to promote the Trilateral line. This is in his attempts to create a North American Common Market, which would be a giant step toward the establishment of a North American Regional World Government, composed of Canada, Mexico, the United States, with the Nations of Central America and the Caribbean to follow; this administrative department of a World Government then taking its place alongside a Regional United States of South America. This, too, is a part of the Global Conspiracy, for we are informed on unimpeachable authority that Prime Minister P.W. Botha of South Africa has been promoting the concept of a "Constellation of Southern African States," which is pure Trilateralism and promotion of the New World Order. Also, Prime Minister J.M. Fraser of Australia is reported to be promoting a similar scheme: the creation of a Regional Economic Union which is to include New Zealand, Malaysia, Indonesia, Singapore, Hongkong and other developed lands in the Indian and South Pacific Ocean area. Again, the Regional Government approach to the New World Order with its Socialist World Authority. In considering all these summits, the creation of Regional Constellations of Nations, NIEO and New World Orders, we are reminded of the excellent description of Conspiracy that was voiced by Abraham Lincoln: "When we see a lot of framed timbers, different portions of which have been gotten out at different times and places and by different workmen - and when we see these timbers joined together, and see they exactly make the frame of a house or a mill, all the tendons and mortises exactly fitting, and all the lengths and proportions of the different pieces exactly adapted to their respective places and not a piece too many or too few - not omitting even scaffolding - or if a single piece be lacking, we can see the place in the frame exactly fitting and prepared to yet bring such piece in - in such case we find it is impossible not to believe the conspirators all understood one another from the beginning and all worked upon a common plan drawn up before the first lick was struck."

President Lincoln understood Conspiracies. He was assassinated. But he did preserve our Republic. Such sacrifice is hardly in vain.

PLANNED RETREAT, OR STRATEGIC WITHDRAWAL?

In this Third World War, in which few realize we are engaged, the President of the United States has conceded to the President of the Soviet Union a psychological victory. Ronald Reagan has changed courses. He has bowed to the wishes of the pacifist and neutralist gangs of Europe. He has lent assistance to the promoters of Interdependence and World Government. He has given aid to the Kremlin's propaganda machine. And he has acceded to the demands of the Power Elite that controlled the President before him. Ronald Reagan did all of this in a half hour speech delivered on the morning of November 18th. There are hints that he also made his peace with the Communications Media by giving his address at the Washington Press Club. The Media had received its mandate to "get tough" with the Reagan Administration, and especially with its "ultra right" members who had been causing difficulties for the Trilateralist policies that were to be carried out. Reagan's selection of the Press Club for his appeasement address was hardly fortuitous, and as he concluded his address he was handed a complimentary membership card. His change of course may have so pleased the Commissars of Communications that they called off the hunt.

We dislike to imply that a recent series of events were all 'planned that way,' but these unusual happenings could lead to such a conclusion. A little over a month ago, on October 16th, President Reagan was hosting a group of out-of-town editors and publishers at a White House luncheon. He made a remark that was supposedly off-the-record, but received wide publicity nevertheless. He said that "a battlefield exchange of tactical nuclear weapons would not necessarily lead to a full-scale nuclear war between the United States and the Soviet Union." Leftwing newspapers in Western Europe picked it up and claimed that Reagan's words meant that there would be no nuclear bombings of the US or the USSR, but that a nuclear war could be fought within the confines of the countries of Western Europe. Another "limited and controlled" war like those fought in Korea and Southeast Asia, except that this time nuclear weapons as well as conventional weapons would be used, thus destroying Western Europe. This Communist-inspired reaction was enough to send hundreds of thousands of people into the streets of European cities demonstrating, not against their supposed enemy the Soviet Union, but against their alleged ally the U.S.A.! Next, fuel was added to the smouldering fire when State Secretary Haig told the Senate Foreign Relations Committee on November 4th that "there are certain contingency plans in the NATO doctrine to fire a nuclear weapon for demonstrative purposes to demonstrate to the other side that they are exceeding the limits of toleration..." Defense Secretary Weinberger and President Reagan then exacerbated the propaganda value (to the communists) of the original statement by first denying and then trying to explain what Haig really meant. Of course, the anti-American agitation in Western Europe intensified. Then, perhaps coincidence was involved, just three days after Haig's remarks about a "nuclear demonstration shot" in Europe, the Soviet Union held its 64th anniversary celebration of the Bolshevik revolution. Defense Minister Ustinov referred to American "warmongering", stood on top of Lenin's tomb and said: "We shall not allow anyone to create...military superiority over us. The Soviet armed forces have everything needed to give a crushing rebuff to any aggressor...The decision of the NATO bloc to deploy U.S. medium-range missile nuclear weapons in Western Europe would tend to undermine the process of detente, cause a serious deterioration in the international political climate and intensify the war threat." Thus, in the ears of the listeners, the United States wanted war, the Soviet Union sought peace. And how did our President respond to this charge? He sent a message of congratulation to the bosses in the Kremlin, extending "best wishes for prosperity and peace to the people of the Soviet Union..."

Then came the turn to the left. On November 18th President Reagan delivered his disarmament address at the Washington Press Club. He called for a policy of "zero option," removal of all nuclear weapons from the European theater. As one editor commented, "It will never happen, of course. The Soviets like to flex their muscle, and they don't let world opinion get in the way of the flexing. The odds against their removing their missiles resemble the size of the U.S. national debt-to-1." Besides, considering the fact that Russia proper is in Europe, no matter where the Soviets might put their nuclear missiles, they could still be aimed at the European theater. Moreover, experience should be our teacher in such matters. We have signed disarmament treaties in the past; we have kept our part of the contract, have stopped building and even reduced our stockpile of weapons. But the Soviet Union has ignored treaty promises,

The Following Warning has been published by "Pro Family Forum" regarding Senate Bill 1630 which, if passed, will apply to the entire nation:

The bill is a recodification and revision of Title 18 of the U.S. Criminal Code and for years has been a pet project of Sen. Ted Kennedy. As written it would radically liberalize many existing criminal laws and build a liberal agenda for the 1980s without attracting much attention from conservatives. Hidden in its 425 pages are provisions which would:

- * Eliminate all death penalty provisions now in existing law.
- * Rewrite the substantive Federal anti-pornography laws, making pornography virtually unpunishable.
- * Reduce maximum penalties for sexually exploiting a child from ten years (fifteen years for the second offense) to six years (twelve years for the second offense).
- * Lower the maximum penalty for rape from death or life imprisonment to twelve years maximum.
- * Reduce the maximum statutory rape penalties from fifteen years (thirty years for the second offense) to six years (one year if the defendant is under 21, even if the victim is only three or four years old).

These are only a few of the provisions found in the 425 pages of S 1630 (similar House bills are H.R. 1647 and H.R. 4711, which are as bad, if not worse than the Senate version). These bills further reduce penalties for criminal offenses and make a mockery of our justice system. They must be stopped.

The following members of the Senate Judiciary Committee are also sponsors of S. 1630: Thurmond (SC); Laxalt (NV), Gatch (UT), Dole (KS), Simpson (WY), East (NC), Denton (AL), Specter (PA), Biden (DE), Kennedy (MA), DeConcini (AR). We feel sure that many of these Senators have not had time to study the 425-page bill. Urge them to do so, and to withdraw their sponsorship.

Members of the House Judiciary Subcommittee who are also sponsors of H.R. 1647 are: Conyers (MI), Sam Hall (TX), and Kindness (OH). Other members of the subcommittee (who are not sponsors) are Edwards (CA), Seiberling (OH), Sensenbrenner (WI) and McCollum (FL). (This information submitted to us by "Pro Family Forum," P.O. Box 8907, 3602 E. Lancaster, Fort Worth, Texas, 76112).

has kept right on building until it holds an advantage over us on land, in air, in space, even on the sea where a landlocked Russia has a navy that is larger than our Nation which is surrounded on three sides by deep water. All of this President Reagan admitted. And yet, he offered the Soviet Union a chance to double cross us once again. This to appease the pacifists, the neutralists and the builders of the New World Order. To the dismay and disgust of this reporter, The Washington Post gave the most nearly accurate analysis of Reagan's message. Michael Getler of the Post wrote:

"The speech could change the tone of his [Reagan's] administration and the way it is perceived by friends in Europe and foes in Moscow. The belligerency that has characterized administration statements about the Soviets was absent from Reagan's speech Wednesday... The President said all the right things to calm America's Western European allies, many of whom have become alarmed by the administration's off-the-cuff and ill-timed comments about nuclear war..... Reagan adopted a position that has been favored more by the West Europeans than by members of his administration.... The Europeans have pushed Reagan toward a course he may not have foreseen six months ago... Reagan did not attack the pacifist and neutralist demonstrators who have directed their protests at this country rather than the Soviet Union...(but) the Soviets will not accept Reagan's proposals....."

Our admittedly prejudiced analysis: The Soviet Bear was in deep trouble. He had overstepped himself in Afghanistan. In spite of much aid from Cuban, East German and native surrogates, things were not going well in Africa. Even in the Middle East there was an inability to push forward as was desired, and in the Caribbean and Central America a sort of stalemate had developed. And the Polish problem continued unsettled. Now, if Western Europe could be neutralized or "Finlandized," then the Red Bear would be free to concentrate on the problems of "liberating" Africa, those parts of Asia that Red China had not already "liberated," and on the encirclement of that last bastion of free enterprise, the United States of America. So, a mammoth propaganda campaign to make Europe neutral was initiated. Among other things, the energy crisis was utilized. The USSR would construct (with US supplies and technology), a gas pipeline stretching from the fields of Siberia to the factories of Europe. This was something of a clincher. Leonid Brezhnev will be in Bonn, West Germany from November 22 to 25. While there, the contract will be signed, and all of Western Europe will become dependent upon the USSR for its energy supply. Europe needed the natural gas, but there are fields in the gas-rich North Sea that could have been tapped, and this would have been far less expensive than the Soviet pipeline. But this plan was ignored, because some American companies stood to make profits from the Soviet pipeline deal; among them are the Caterpillar Tractor Company, General Electric, Exxon, and Texaco.

You see, even as Lenin predicted, American based multinational corporations are "selling the rope" which the Bolsheviks will use to hang us! And, when a great wave of anti-American sentiment was generated in Western Europe by a combination of Soviet propaganda and multinational lobbying, it would follow that the Reagan Administration would be forced to change course, assist in the neutralization of Western Europe, so the Soviets and the Monopoly Capitalists could continue their joint drive - by different routes - toward a Socialist New World Order.

Not only is our Trilateral-guided Government feeding the Russian Red Bear, assisting it in the building of arms and the subjugation of peoples, our Federal Government is doing the same for the Chinese Red Dragon. Spurning the free enterprisers and freedom lovers of Taiwan, the Rockefeller-directed team of

Kissinger and Nixon awakened the Dragon; the Rockefeller-ruled duo of Carter and Brzezinski started to nourish, provide technical know-how, and arm this enemy. And the Rockefeller-influenced Reagan Administration continues to carry out the program set in motion by previous Administrations. A Washington Post article of November 2nd boasts that "China [is] on the way to becoming the leading U.S. farm customer." The article begins: "Sales missions and scientific teams have been crossing the Pacific with little fanfare for months, but behind that lies the biggest agricultural trade story in years; the dramatic inroads American farmers have made in China." Reference is not to independent American farmers, but to Agribusiness Associations which supply food while other multinationals supply the rope. There is the American Soybean Association, the U.S. Feed Grains Council, the Cotton Council International, the U.S. Wheat Association, the National Renderers Association and other organizations that supply the food while other multinationals supply the rope. Such as the Burroughs Corp., whose head, Trilateralist Michael Blumenthal, is negotiating the sale of a sophisticated large-scale computer to Red China, a $3.7 million computer that is needed by the four-million man Chinese Army to organize and direct the troops in battle. This B-7830 computer would be the center of a network of 20 computers operating on the Chinese mainland. But there is nothing new about this business of strengthening our enemies for megabank and multicorporation profit. The late Carrol Quigley, author of the book "Tragedy and Hope," explained that "...the powers of financial capitalism had another far reaching aim, nothing less than to create a world system of financial control in private hands able to dominate the political system of each country and the economy of the world as a whole." And, the eminent researcher Antony Sutton dated the modern beginning of this plot with the beginning of World Wars (so did Reagan in his Press Club address). In one of a trilogy of books, "Wall Street and the Rise of Hitler," Sutton explains:

"Looking at the broad array of facts.... We find persistent recurrence of the same names: Owen Young, Gerard Swope, Hjalmar Schacht, Bernard Baruch, etc.; the same international banks: J.P. Morgan, Guaranty Trust, Chase Bank; and the same location in New York, usually 120 Broadway. This group of international bankers backed the Bolshevik Revolution and subsequently profited from New Deal rearmament in the 1930s... On May 1st, 1918, when Bolsheviks controlled only a small fraction of Russia (and were to come near losing even that fraction in the summer of 1918), the American League to Aid and Cooperate with Russia was organized in Washington, D.C. to support the Bolsheviks. It was a committee created by Wall Street, with George P. Whalen of Vacuum Oil Company as Treasurer and Coffin and Oudin of General Electric, along with Thompson of the Federal Reserve System, Willard of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, and assorted socialists.... When we look at the rise of Hitler, and Naziism, we find Vacuum Oil and General Electric well represented... So, in but one of many examples, we find the Rockefeller-controlled Vacuum Oil Company prominently assisting in the creation of Bolshevik Russia, the military buildup of Nazi Germany, and backing Roosevelt's New Deal."

Some of the names have changed, the "far reaching aim" has not. And history lessons unlearned often are retaught, at terrible cost and suffering.

PERZONAL

THE GIFT

As the mother gazed upon the Perfect Face of her First Born Child, she saw Prophecy made Flesh.

Words came back to her mind; words spoken by the Angel of God months before.

First, a Hymn of Praise:

"Fear not, Mary; for thou hast found favor with God!"

How wonderful! How deeply moving, to have found favor with God!

Second, a Promise of Fulfillment:

"And, Behold, Thou shalt conceive in thy womb, and bring forth a Son, and shalt call His Name JESUS."

And the mother recalled her trembling response to the Angel of God. Not quite understanding her Glorious Mission, she obediently answered, "Behold, the Handmaiden of the Lord; be it unto me according to Thy Word."

And, as the mother paused in her dreamy reverie, the Child stirred in His sleep. He had not cried but only looked upon all who came to worship Him with the loveliest of smiles. His Halo seemed to fit His Head in the merest suggestion of a Crown.

"How like a little Prince He is," thought Mary.

Suddenly, a cold damp wind blew through the cave where the Child lay. A frown creased the mother's brow. More words were coming now. She felt a small separation between her and The Babe.

"How is it that ye sought me? Wist ye not that I must be about My Father's Business?"

The Child still slept serenely, but the Words echoed hollowly about the cave.

Mary's heart grew cold. Ah! It was the mother and the woman of her, not to see the Glory of this Moment. Nay, her mother's heart could only feel the wracking of the Awful Pain to come.

More words came: "Who is my mother? and who are my brethren?"

The Child stirred in His sleep. The mother's mood had reached Him.

Again the Words, and their Voice was the Voice of the Son of Man.

"To this end was I born, and for this cause came I into the world, that I should bear witness unto the Truth."

Suddenly, the cave was filled with sounds as of many, screaming, the very air poisonous with hate. Mary shrank within herself, as the words rang out clearly above the din:

"Crucify Him! Crucify Him!"

And the mother leaned over her Babe, as though to enfold Him within her protective love, that His very Destiny might be prevented.

A tear fell upon one tiny Hand. Instantly, beneath her tear, appeared A Spot of Blood.

Listen, Mary, to the Words again:

"Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do."

A shudder passed through the Body of the Babe. A shadow passed across His Face.

The Drop of Blood dried upon the Rosebud Hand and disappeared.

A last whisper of Words came through to Mary:

"It is Finished."

Suddenly, a Light from Heaven filled the cave. The Babe slept on.
Serenely now. Mary fell upon her knees.

She saw the Angel of God, and His Words came clear:

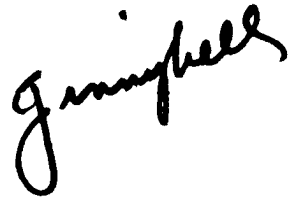

"Fear not, Mary. For thou hast found favor with God."

"And Behold, Thou hast conceived in thy womb, and brought forth a Son, and hast called His Name JESUS."

And Mary, smiling through her tears, answered and said,
"Behold the Handmaiden of the Lord; Be it unto me according to Thy Word."

* * * * *

"And the Angel departed from her."

POPULAR DELUSIONS

Bernard Baruch, financier and successor to Colonel Edward Mandel House as Advisor to U.S. Presidents and Administrator of the Invisible Government of the United States, wrote: "Have you ever seen, in some wood, on a sunny quiet day, a cloud of flying midges - thousands of them - hovering, apparently motionless, in a sunbeam?...Yes?...Well, did you ever see the whole flight - each mite apparently preserving its distance from all others - suddenly move, say three feet, to one side or the other? Well, what made them do it? A breeze? I said a quiet day. But try to recall - did you ever see them move directly back again in the same unison? Well, what made them do that? Great human mass movements are slower of inception but much more effective."

Baruch said he had made his millions by observing, acting upon and sometimes activating such "human mass movements." especially when they concerned the stock market. The statement was made in the foreword to the 1932 republication of a non-fiction classic, "Extraordinary Popular Delusions and the Madness of Crowds," by Charles Mackay, LL.D. First published in 1841, it was republished in 1852, again in 1932, and finally in 1980 by Harmony Books. In the author's preface to the 1982 edition, Mackay wrote something very similar to what Baruch had added in 1932. The author wrote: "In reading the history of nations, we find that, like individuals, they have their whims and their peculiarities, their seasons of excitement and recklessness, when they care not what they do. We find that whole communities suddenly fix their minds upon one object, and go mad in its pursuit; that millions of people become simultaneously impressed with one delusion, and run after it, till their attention is caught by some new folly more captivating than the first. We see one nation suddenly seized, from its highest to its lowest members, with a fierce desire of military glory; another as suddenly becoming crazed by a religious scruple, and neither of them recovering its senses until it has shed rivers of blood and sowed a harvest of groans and tears, to be reaped by its posterity." Even as Baruch was able to observe, act upon and even activate "human mass movements" for personal advantage; isn't it reasonable to assume that a company of people like Baruch can also observe, act upon, and even activate the movement of nations to their own advantage?

Which brings to mind the events of Monday, November 16th, when hundreds of thousands of people went into a panic because President Reagan vetoed a bill. It was an appropriations bill and the word was spread that the government had run out of money, was broke and would have to go out of business (actually, it has been broke for years and was still doing business). To add drama to the ploy, all nonessential workers on the federal payroll were told to pack up and take an indefinite furlough. So, a delusion was fabricated and some panic ensued, especially among nonessential workers and dole getters. Of course, it was a political gambit in a contest between Congress and the President. The President won, at least until December 15th, and it is well that he won since it should mean another couple of billion dollars less overspending. However, it seems to this reporter that it would have been a far better thing that he had done if the President had placed all those nonessential workers on permanent furlough. In times like these, if they're not essential, then why keep them on the overtaxed public payroll?

The popular delusion of a bankrupt government unable to write welfare checks was soon dissipated. We say it's a popular delusion because just so long as a government is able to create what is accepted as money simply by making an entry in a ledger and then starting the printing presses that government is also able to write welfare checks. How much such checks will buy is a different story. So, here we are, like the midges Baruch mentioned, engaged in mass movement from right to left and then back again, without a rational or logical explanation, probably with a company of Trilateral-types "observing, acting upon, and activating" the movements for their own profit. You will remember how it has happened. Carter came in acting as if he were the President of the world. The masses cheered, and then they jeered. Carter went out in abject defeat because a new man had come along with a "New Economic Plan" which carried with it a promise of moral recovery. The masses cheered so long as they believed the popular delusion that financial and social salvation was just around the corner. The idea of cutting taxes created a kind of mass hypnotism and the accompanying idea of cutting federal expenditures was considered to be a natural corollary. Nobody was told that the result was going to be an increase in the public debt and more money in interest for the Trilateral-types. So the popular delusion and madness of crowds continued until suddenly it was discovered that social services and federal handouts would have to be cut, or even discontinued in some cases. Then came the mass movement that had been the result of the new popular delusion that Reagan was "recklessly reactionary." Media exposures concerning Stockman, Allen, Casey and others of the Administration added to the consensus of scorn and scare. So, as Gary North wrote in an addenda to his Remnant Review of November 20th: "...President Reagan's economic recovery program is visibly headed for the rocks...Congress, obviously, is in no mood for further cuts. In an election year it's more likely that they will increase expenditures." Which is exactly what Congress tried to do, when Reagan's veto brought on the popular delusion concerning a bankrupt government. It became obvious that, in the mass mind the honeymoon was over and, as Gary North noted: "He [Reagan] shot his wad; now the voters are scared. They think that their welfare benefits will be cut off in a recession year."

Let's face it: The whole "New Economic Plan" was just another popular delusion, promoted by those who felt it profitable to have a change in administration. It hurts to try to tell it like it is. But, as a subscriber recently wrote as she renewed: "I really don't want to hear all that gloom and doom. But it is better to be informed. One thing - it has turned me back to my church and the Bible - where the answers are." We also know of a Congressman who has dared to tell it like it is, popular delusions and the madness of crowds" notwithstanding. He is Ron Paul of Texas. Being a doctor by profession, he likes to diagnose, and then prescribe a cure. But his cure is rejected because it's strong medicine: Adopting a gold standard; Doing away with the Federal Reserve System, even limiting the number of terms a Representative or Senator may serve in the Capitol; thus eliminating the prevalent habit of professional politics, of spending and spending our money to get themselves re-elected and re-elected. Congressman Paul recently wrote:

"We must take steps to restore our economy. But this will not occur so long as Congress refuses to bite the bullet and make real cuts in spending. It is imperative that we end the dangerous spending game in which many congressmen vote for the give-aways and costly government programs in order to get themselves reelected, and I have introduced legislation in Congress to do this. By doing away with the lifetime politicians we will be able to finally correct the economic mess these big-spending career politicians have created. My bill to limit congressional terms will enable us to slow down the giveaway game. Only by placing political interests behind the more important national interest will we succeed in solving our economic problems. Limiting terms of Congressmen would provide some badly needed courage to help bring this about."

What Congressman Paul proposes is exactly what was intended by the writers of our Constitution, although this was not spelled out in the document. President Washington established the precedent when he refused to serve for more than two terms. That precedent was not violated until the Power Brokers decreed that Franklin Delano Roosevelt should serve for the rest of his life. In Congress, of course, there was no such precedent and with most Representatives and Senators, especially after the War Between the States, politics became a career for profit rather than a service to fellow citizens. Here again we find a fixed popular delusion: that the longer a person stays in Washington the better he or she becomes as a representative of the grass roots.

There is a long string of popular delusions that stretches all the way back to the time of the adoption of our Constitution of the United States. It is concerned with the business of "making money mysterious"; and in this respect the Constitution was violated even before the ink was dry on its Bill of Rights. At the Constitutional Convention the Founders determined that they would make the American dollar completely independent of any power or combination of powers outside of the American people. So they gave the exclusive power to issue and control money to the people's representatives, the Congress; and forbade anybody, even the States, to meddle with it. All money was to be "coined" in metal. Paper "notes" were not money; they were just "promises to pay" in gold or silver; were not to be considered legal tender and could be redeemed, at any time, in gold or silver. The States were forbidden to allow debts to be paid except in gold or silver. But the Constitution was immediately violated. The issuing of money was turned over to a company of bankers who set up a private bank, called the Bank of the United States. (A similar arrangement exists today in the Federal Reserve System). Alexander Hamilton promoted the plan, to the benefit of foreign bankers. Thomas Jefferson opposed the plan, saying: "If the American people ever allow the banks to control the issuance of their currency, first by inflation, and then by deflation, the banks and corporations that will grow up around them will deprive the people of all property until their children will wake up homeless on the continent their fathers occupied. The issuing power of money should be taken from the banks and restored to Congress and the people to whom it belongs." But the country was coming out of a devastating depression because of the expenses of war. So Congress ignored the Constitution, President Washington was talked into signing the bill. Then came step two of the banking plan: "fractional banking" was allowed. The bank was allowed to have only a "fraction" of the gold and silver needed to back up its issue of paper "notes" and credit. Again Jefferson protested: "The banks themselves were doing business on capitals [assets], three-fourths of which were fictitious." Came the boom and then the bust which he had predicted and Jefferson lamented: "This fictitious capital...is now to be lost...[people] who have suffered themselves to...be in debt...must now sacrifice their property of a value many times the amount of the debt. We have truly been sowing the wind, and reaping the whirlwind." These cycles of "boom and bust" have been repeated off and on for over 200 years, without its unconstitutional cause ever being corrected.

The charter of the original Bank of the United States expired in 1811 and Congress refused to renew it. But a second Bank of the United States was set up in 1816, ceased to function as a "federal" bank in 1836. And the International Bankers tried again, bringing on our War Between the States (the popular delusion was "slavery"). They finally succeeded in 1913 with the passage of the Federal Reserve Act and the enactment of the Federal Income Tax. And so in 1981 we can still lament as did Jefferson in the latter days of his life: "We are overdone with banking institutions, which have banished the precious metals, and substituted a more fluctuating and unsafe system... These have withdrawn capital from useful improvements and employments to nourish idleness.... We are completely saddled and bridled. and... the bank (substitute Federal Reserve) is so firmly mounted on us that we must go where it will guide."

The popular delusion that paper is money has been with us for two centuries, despite the prohibitions of the Constitution, in spite of the sincere efforts of such great Presidents as Jefferson, Jackson and Lincoln to correct the evil. Can we in our generation dispel this popular delusion and force Congress to assume the Constitutional power and control it has never exercised?

Other popular delusions; That this is a Democracy and that Jefferson was our first Democrat President. The Founding Fathers rejected the term and all it implied. Jefferson called himself a Republican, as opposed to the Federalists. This was stated quite clearly in his "creed of political faith", which forms a part of his first inaugural address, as follows:

* * * * *

We have called by different names brethren of the same principle. We are all Republicans, we are all Federalists... Let us, then, with courage and confidence pursue our own Federal and Republican principles, our attachment to union and representative government.

A wise and frugal government, which shall restrain men from injuring one another, which shall leave them otherwise free to regulate their own pursuits of industry and improvement, and shall not take from the mouth of labor the bread it has earned. This is the sum of good government.

Equal and exact justice to all men, of whatever state or persuasion, religious or political, peace, commerce, and honest friendship with all nations, entangling alliances with none; the support of the state governments in all their rights, as the most competent administrations for our domestic concerns and the surest bulwarks against antirepublican tendencies... economy in the public expense that labor may be lightly burdened, the honest payment of our debts and sacred preservation of the public faith....

These principles.... should be the creed of our political faith, the text of civil instruction, the touchstone by which to try the services of those we trust; and should we wander from them in moments of error or alarm, let us hasten to retrace our steps and to regain the road which alone leads to peace, liberty and safety.

I repair, then, fellow-citizens, to the post which you have assigned me.. And may the Infinite Power which rules the destinies of the universe lead our councils to what is best and give them a favorable issue for your peace and prosperity. (Abridged from Thomas Jefferson's first inaugural address, March 4, 1801).

THE ANGOLAN EXAMPLE

On December 1st in Communist Angola, an American owned and operated oil refinery was bombed and partially destroyed. After the initial announcement the news was suppressed and we were unable to learn which of the four United States based oil companies suffered the loss. Nor were we able to learn just which of the guerrilla outfits operating in that area was responsible for the bombing. Cuban troops are supposedly guarding and protecting American installations in Communist Angola. Maybe the guards were caught off guard. But the fact that an American installation was bombed is significant; almost as significant as the news blackout. They are indicative of a certain change that is taking place in Communist-Super Capitalist strategy in that part of Africa. We are told by European intelligence experts that there are about 32,000 Soviet-bloc troops in southern Africa: more than 28,000 Cubans, 2,800 East Germans and a command framework composed of about 1,000 Russians. Hilaire duBrier, by way of his column in The Review of the News (12/2/81) tells us that Dr. Vasily Solidovnikov, a senior KGB officer, directs operations from his command post in tiny Zambia, where he has a staff of 400 Russians from Moscow assisting him. Military commander is Gen. I.S. Maganov, who is the Soviet's man in charge of selecting and training guerrillas in the countries of the so-called Third World. H du B believes the Soviet-directed disarmament campaigns in Europe and America, and the uprisings in Latin America, are to detract from Russian aggression in Africa and other parts of the world.

There are indications from other sources that the Soviets have already done their assigned task in Angola, however, and that the Soviet-bloc troops are in Angola just for purposes of "show and deception" and will soon be moving into other parts of the world where there is still "liberation" of the natives to be accomplished. The completion of their work in Angola simply means the International Bankers and Monopoly Capitalists have been thoroughly installed in Angola, so Communist assistance is no longer needed (we'll explain this later). Lending credence to this theory: the U.S. Export-Import Bank has just lent Communist Angola $85 million for off-shore oil development, a consortium of bankers led by Rockefeller's Chase Manhattan and Morgan Guarantee Trust has lent Communist Angola $50 million for the purchase of development equipment, to be supplied by Westinghouse, General Tire, Boeing and other Rockefeller-Trilateral related companies. Communist Angola's vast oil business is being conducted primarily by Gulf, Mobil, Texaco and City Services (Exxon has been pumping oil for Soviet-oriented Libya).

Further evidence of a change in Angolan affairs: the ruling Marxist MPLA is beginning to lose control of the country. Jonas Savimba, head of the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola (UNITA) is now getting considerable support from international sources, both Communist and Capitalist. Over 550 tons of weapons have been delivered to UNITA from Communist China, including recoilless mortars, anti-tank mines, rocket-propelled grenades, and anti-aircraft guns. Over 500 UNITA officers have received advance military training in Morocco; another 300 are now being trained. And Saudi Arabia has been induced to contribute $10 million a year to help support UNITA. And not only this kind of support, but UNITA has officially recognized representatives in Washington, London, Bonn, Geneva, Paris, Lisbon, Dakar, Kinshasa, and Lusaka. Also interesting: while both Zaire and Zambia have diplomatic relations with the Marxist MPLA which currently rules Angola, these countries also allow Savimba to maintain UNITA offices in their capital cities, and even to operate from their territory. Savimba is building his forces so fast that he says by the end of this year he'll have 15 battalions of regular army, 80,000 guerrillas and village militiamen operating in Central Angola. And early next year he expects to start moving north to take over the whole country. So, the Angola situation seems to be changing very rapidly.

The importance of all of this to American taxpayers is pointed out by a Paris/Geneva based newsletter, Globescan, which is "dedicated to free enterprise and individual freedom, opposed to economic intervention and collectivism." Its U.S. Subscription Service Center is at 1545 New York Avenue, N.E., Washington, D.C. 20002 (24 issued per year, $125). After naming the Banks and Multinationals with interests in Communist Angola. Globescan comments:

So money taken from U.S. citizens by taxes along with their money deposited in private banks flows through a Communist Regime to the oil and related companies. They use it to find, recover, transport, refine and sell fuel to the same Americans who fund the operation. Americans get to pay for their fuel twice at least - plus the part the bankers take in interest when they lend your money in the first place!

Ivor Benson, South African editor, lecturer, and political philosopher, once commented: "The mystery of mysteries of the 20th century, an enigma all mummified and wrapped in mystery, is the weird relationship of super-capitalism, or international finance capitalism; and Communism, or Marxist socialism. There are two indisputable facts of history, although still not generally known: (1) The Bolshevik Revolution in Russia could never have taken place without massive financial support from the West, mainly Wall Street; (2) The industrial and military might of the Soviet Union is almost entirely a creation of Western high finance and big business, especially American. Not surprisingly, therefore, most Western governments can still be seen to be implementing, in all kinds of ways, Karl Marx's own ten points of policy calculated to bring the whole world under a socialist imperium." One of the most difficult tasks of a Christian patriot is to convince others that there is an actual partnership between Communism and Finance Capitalism, and that Western Governments are also involved in promoting this Socialist New World Order. A study of the history of Angola will show how this is being done. We mentioned Globescan. In its issue of November 21, it has rendered a real service in its analysis of the Angolan situation. The following is taken in large part from that analysis.

Back at the beginning of the so-called Industrial Age, the Nations of Europe began seeking for new regions in other continents in order to develop and expand their industry and trade, as well as to spread the Gospel among heathen peoples of the world. The United States didn't need to seek colonies, because there was a vast undeveloped land stretching from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and from Canada in the north to Mexico in the south. And save for the Barbary Pirates, there was nominal freedom of the seas for American ships. A fear of too great a foreign influence in the Americas caused the proclamation of the Monroe Doctrine. "Darkest Africa" became a favorite continent for the establishment of colonies by Britain, France, Spain, Portugal, Germany, Belgium and the Netherlands. "The white man's burden" became a descriptive phrase. Angola became a colony of Portugal. About the size of Texas and California combined, it was rich in diamonds, iron, copper, manganese, sulphur, phosphates, and then undiscovered oil. Portuguese businessmen did the deals and made the profits. This, of course, was not to the liking of international financiers and monopolists who sought to control the resources of the world. And, after World War II came a change in the world's economic and industrial balance. The International financiers decided that decolonization throughout the world was the next step in their plans for creation of their New World Order. Three important steps had been taken as a result of World War II:

- (1) The United States had been established as the controller and the supplier of money needed for the worldwide control and development of the world's resources;
- (2) A Communist Empire had been created to pose as an enemy, and to supply the military power and the surrogate manpower for the "liberation" of the people of the colonies and undeveloped lands;
- (3) The United Nations had been formed to act as a World Headquarters and a liaison to coordinate Communist and Monopoly Capitalist activities through its various international agencies (IMF, World Bank, UNCTAD, FAO, ILO, UNICEF, UNESCO, UNIDO, WHO, etc.)

The policy of decolonization became a priority program with the UN, the plan was backed by the United States, and the Communists began their campaign of "liberation" of the peoples of Africa. All the former empires of the world began to disintegrate, except the Soviet Empire which grew and grew. In those parts of the world where British, French, Dutch, Portuguese and other businessmen were doing business, they were out of business; and in their places were the International Money Monopolists, "the super institutions who thrive on political manipulation and legalized monopoly, and who somehow convince Americans to continually finance their operations" while Communist surrogate forces pave the way for the New Order.

In our Report of September 25th we referred to the situation in Angola, said that at that time the Reagan Administration had been calling Angola "a surrogate of the Soviet Union." And we wrote: "This hurt David Rockefeller and he wrote a letter to President Reagan saying U.S. policies toward Angola 'are hurting American business in that country and in the rest of black Africa.' The big question: Will the Reagan Administration have the backbone to continue to resist or will it cave in to the pressure of the Trilateral bankers and hurting American business in that country and in the rest of black Africa.' The big question: Will the Reagan Administration have the backbone to continue to resist or will it cave in to the pressure of the Trilateral bankers and multinationalists?...Need we give you the answer?" (unquote). Well, we have the answer. Our government is cooperating just as Rockefeller desired. An excellent analysis of the situation was published by Globescan in its issue of November 21. We quote from that analysis:

"The arms came from China, the newly-laundered Communists. New members of the World Bank and the IMF. China who hosted the latest Rockefeller Trilateral Commission plenary session whose agreements with the Chinese bosses were hastily ratified as U.S. policy by Rockefeller's CFR member, Alexander Haig. America now provides weapons to Communist China. Communist China now provides weapons to non-Communist Savimbi. Do you think Mr. Haig and Mr. Roosevelt don't know this? And Savimba's leaders are trained in Morocco under the nose of Ambassador Joseph W. Reed, Jr., a long-time confidential aide to Rockefeller. And Saudi Arabia provides the financing...Saudi Arabia, a nation created by Standard Oil out of sand, nomad tents, and mirage. Saudi Arabia whose incredible oil capacity can make or break countries and governments...who has been instructed by the super bankers how to lend and recycle their petrol-profits...who would be bankrupt tomorrow if they didn't cooperate with the world's oil monopolists who recover, transport, refine, and put Saudi's oil and gas in your can. Why does Saudi lend to Savimbi who is trying to take over a 'competitive' oil-rich country? Does Saudi Arabia have a choice? And South Africa? Well, American business is flowing in and the Council of Churches and Andrew Young are strangely quiet. The pressure seems to be off. Zaire and Zambia have both been recently bribed; that is, re-funded with U.S. tax money from the IMF and World Bank. That should keep them quiet for a while.

"So here's what seems to be happening in South Africa and how it fits into the world situation. Soviet influence will diminish in Africa, and the African nations will develop closer ties with the West, particularly the U.S. Africa will be depicted as good socialists, not non-Marxist. Libyans and Qaddafi will probably continue to be the bad guys in Africa, but the Cubans will leave and Samvimi will take over the job of guarding American interests in Angola. And where will the Soviet surrogates, the 40,000 Cubans in Angola, go? Home to Cuba? Sure, for rest and more training - then probably to Central America: Nicaragua, El Salvador, Honduras, Costa Rica, Belize and even Mexico. And to South America, starting in Colombia. Then the Philippines?.. And look for renewed Russian activity in Southeast Asia now that they've done their job in Africa.

"Done their job in Africa? What job? Decolonization and Socialization?...Who planned and directed the show in the 'decolonization process' that transferred the control and wealth from the portuguese and the French and the English? The Russians supplied the arms (just like China). Castro supplied the training and soldiers (just like Morocco). And the finance? Where did the finance come from? The Soviets are in debt to Western governments and Western bankers and they have been since Trotsky and Lenin were sent in. Russia doesn't have any money to give or lend to anyone unless it is supplied from outside. Then who else could provide the finance that energized the Marxist decolonization and ownership transfers that have taken place around the world since the end of WWII? The finance comes from the internationalist supra-national bankers who control government granted monopolies to create money through the Federal Reserve System and other privately owned central banks. And why shouldn't they finance the destabilization processes? They have a money machine that will allow them to print as much money as is necessary to gain control over the world's resources and markets. And it is we who put our money in Chase, Bank of America, Citibank, First Boston, and other international lenders, so that they can finance - with your money - the transfer of others' assets to their control....The process of transferring the wealth you and others produce will speed up drastically when their IMF begins issuing Bancor reserves, created out of absolutely nothing - the ultimate counterfeit money to go along with ultimate control through centralized, planned and directed World Government - as dreamed of throughout history; the 18th century Illuminati's Novus Ordo Saeculorum; President's Wilson's (Col. House's) New Order; the Swope Plan that became Roosevelt's New Deal; and Hitler's New Order; the United Nations' and the Socialist International's New International Economic Order; and sadly, Mr. David Rockefeller's Trilateral Commission and Council on Foreign Relations' New World Order.

"And now that we understand more about the geo-political and financial manipulations that control our money and our lives, will we do something about it?"

THE LOT OF SINFUL MONEY

Headlines can give clues to the condition that has propertied Americans most concerned about the future of their families, their property and their country. The following headlines were among those appearing in a local newspaper on the mornings of December 9, 10 and 11, 1981:

- "Wholesale Inflation Pace Slows."
- "Budget Outline Approved By Narrow Vote In Senate."
- "Aid Bill Trimmed To Satisfy Reagan."
- "House Panel Rejects Cuts In Spending."
- "House OKs $12-Billion Foreign Aid Measure."
- "Jobless Rate Surges To 6-Year High."
- "House Cuts $4-Billion Out Of Bill.
Measure Will Keep Government Going."
- "Tax Hikes To Cut Deficit Weighed."
- "New High In Deficit Predicted, Economists Foresee Massive Problems."

Let's follow up on that last two-line heading. The AP report under that headline begins: "In the gloomiest forecast yet, Reagan administration economists estimate the budget deficit could soar to a record of $109 billion in 1982, and $162 billion by 1984. The bleak projects...point to the 'monstrous problem' confronting Reagan in his quest for a balanced budget and a strong economic recovery, one administration official said yesterday....In September the administration forecast deficits averaging about $60 billion a year through 1984 without any further cuts or new tax increases. But now, with the economy in a deepening recession that the administration had not predicted the deficit projections are ballooning for the three fiscal years that began October 1.... By comparison, the 1981 deficit was $57.9 billion and the record deficit, $66.4 billion, occurred in 1976 during President Ford's last year in office. President Carter's largest deficit was $59.6 billion in fiscal 1980. As a candidate, Reagan attacked Carter's budget and pledged to balance the budget by 1983 at the latest. As President, he postponed that goal, first to 1984, and now to an unspecified date...."

While Americans were being reminded of that "day of infamy" that was planned by our own administration of that day and carried out by our greatest supplier of imported cars and trucks, cameras and television sets of this day, a Congressman was reminding the Nation of another "day of infamy" which occurred less than two months ago. Representative Bill Dickenson of Alabama remarked that we should "Mark Thursday, October 22, 1981 as a fateful day in the economic history of our nation - the day our national debt reached one trillion dollars for the first time. This unmeritorious happening is the result of a national practice of gross overspending - largely during the past 50 years. We have played the role of generous 'Uncle Sam', the benevolent uncle who gives away and spends money he doesn't have. A trillion is one hundred billion. What a staggering number. Several years ago someone gave me a thought provoking statement: Most of the people in Washington have lost sight of what a billion dollars is. One billion seconds ago, the first atom bomb had not been exploded; one billion minutes ago, Christ was still on earth...yet one billion dollars ago

- in terms of government spending - was yesterday....The fact is, today the federal government is spending nearly $2 billion per day and adding $100 billion annually to the federal debt.

"Historically, the U.S. began in debt. In 1789 the federal government assumed the $75 million debt for the Revolutionary War. By 1836 this multi-million dollar debt had been reduced to $38,000. By the end of the War Between the States the U.S. debt had risen to $2.7 billion and by the end of World War I it had reached $24 billion. Following World War I, the Nation began the process of reducing the debt to $16 billion by 1930. During the next ten years and the beginnings of the Roosevelt 'New Deal', the debt reached $43 billion. By 1946 and the end of World War II, the debt had risen to $269 billion.....We again started reducing the debt until it was down to $257 billion in 1950... Through the next 31 years - up to today - U.S. governments have increased the debt to the one trillion dollar mark that we reached on October 22nd....The interest costs on this huge national debt will be $100 billion. This debt is held in U.S. Treasury bills, notes and bonds by individuals, banks, corporations, federal agencies and foreign governments. Foreigners hold about 15% of the debt and this year we will send $15 billion in interest payments abroad. Service of the debt is the third largest expenditure in this year's federal budget....."

One of the chief reasons for the national debt having grown so great so fast was the removal of the gold and silver backing from our dollar and the making of Federal Reserve notes legal tender in the payment of debts. Since it was no longer necessary to back dollars with anything more stable than political promises, the printing presses began working overtime on behalf of the politicians who buy their terms in office, and for the benefit of the Federal Reserve System which "manages" our money and our national debt. So that, in the past 10 years, the U.S. money supply has more than doubled, even though the population has increased only 12 percent and the Gross National Product has increased only 37 percent. But prices have increased 149 percent, the interest rates have soared to levels never before seen in our country and bankruptcies, especially of small businesses, have more than doubled. Real income and personal savings have declined alarmingly.

When President Reagan entered the White House he took with him plans which, he promised, would reverse the trend toward economic catastrophe. But, no matter how serious he may have been, no matter how promising this program with the new name (supply side economics) seemed to be, it is now evident that nothing has really changed. except that the national debt gets bigger and bigger with each passing budget. Dr. James Davidson of the National Taxpayers Union called the tune when he said "No government has ever voluntarily reversed the drift toward greater spending in modern times." Reagan must have known that there was already three strikes against him when he came to bat: 1) There was no gold standard; 2) there was no hope of balancing the budget, because entrenched politicians and bureaucrats would prevent it; 3) there was a Federal Reserve Corporation operating on its own issue of fiat money, and had no intention of allowing anyone to interfere with their system. In case any reader is unfamiliar with the term fiat money; it is money that is money only because government decrees that it is money. The eminent political historian Clarence B. Carson gives us this definition: Fiat money is money because the government has decreed that something worthless in itself is money and the government does not promise to redeem it in anything of intrinsic value, (like gold or silver). Dr. Carson also gives the following excellent description of the fate awaiting fiat money, which appears in the current (12/9/81) issue of The Review Of The News (weekly, $20 per year, 395 Concord Ave., Belmont, Massachusetts 02178):

"The fate of fiat money may be best understood in terms of the traditional Christian prognosis for sinful man. Man is bent by nature to sinfulness. Because of his sinfulness, his case is hopeless so long as he relies on himself alone. By his own efforts, he might cut down on his sins, sin less from time to time, but all of this is of no avail. In his unregenerate state he is condemned to damnation. He can only be redeemed, saved from his ultimate fate, by Something outside and beyond him. So it is with fiat money, i.e., fake money, worthless in itself. It may prosper for a time, even appear to be improving on its own merit, but ultimately it is condemned money. It must either be redeemed by something of value beyond itself or become worthless... Our money is worth less and less, not simply because the amount of it has been increased, but because it is, ultimately, worthless...."

This "ultimately worthless money" that we must use to buy things, pay debts and taxes, is the Federal Reserve note or its checkbook substitute. It is not really money at all, but it has been declared "legal tender" by our government. By definition legal tender is "a legally approved currency to be given in payment of a debt and which must be accepted by the creditor, which may not be refused by the creditor." The legal tender doctrine holds that the State has the power to define money and to enforce its use. Thus, the State forces us to use ultimately worthless Federal Reserve notes as legal tender. This was an important issue at the time of the writing of the U.S. Constitution. That is why Article I, Section 10 states that no State can make "anything but gold and silver coin a tender in payment of debts." However, the unconstitutional legal tender laws hold that States, companies and individuals, must accept the ultimately worthless fiat paper notes instead of gold or silver, as though the notes were real money. The result is a form of legalized theft. So believed Madison, Patrick Henry, Noah Webster of dictionary fame, and others. They all opposed paper money, as well as Hamilton's idea of a National Bank which was similar to the Federal Reserve Banks.

To heal our ailing economy and restore real money, our first job is to get rid of the Fed. Rep. D. Lee Jones of the Arizona State Legislature proposes that this be done through action by State Legislatures, since it will never be done through appeal to the U.S. Congress. So, he will introduce a memorial in the upcoming 1982 session of the Arizona Legislature. We commend, recommend, and reproduce that memorial, with one omission: we have deleted the name of the State of Arizona and substituted a space for writing in the name of another - your own - State. Then send the memorial to your State Senator and Representative.

A CONCURRENT RESOLUTION

URGING THE PRESIDENT AND THE CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES TO REPEAL THE FEDERAL RESERVE ACT.

To the President and the Congress of the United States of America:
Your memorialist respectfully represents:

Whereas, article I, section 8, Constitution of the United States provides that only the Congress of the United States shall have the power "to borrow Money on the credit of the United States;" and

Whereas, article I, section 8, Constitution of the United States directs that only the Congress of the United States is permitted "to coin Money, regulate the Value thereof, and of foreign coin, and fix the Standard of Weights and Measures;" and

Whereas, the Federal Reserve Act of December 23, 1913 (Act of December 23, 1913; Stat. 251; 12 United States Code section 221 et seq.) transferred the power to borrow money on the credit of the United States to a consortium of private bankers in violation of the prohibitions of article I, section 8, Constitution of the United States; and

Whereas, the Congress of the United States is without authority to delegate any powers which it has received under the Constitution of the United States established by the People of the United States; and

Whereas, article I, section 8, Constitution of the United States provides that "all legislative Powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and a House of Representatives;" and

Whereas, the Federal Reserve Act of December 23, 1913 was imposed upon the People of the State of in violation of the provisions of article I, section 1, Constitution of the United States; and

Whereas, members of the Federal Reserve System, a consortium of private bankers, have threatened the very integrity of our national government through their arbitrary and capricious control and management of the nation's money supply; and

Whereas, testimony entered into the Congressional Record on April 19, 1971 by one observer, Mr. Archibald E. Roberts, indicates that past and present members of the Federal Reserve Board may be guilty of criminal conduct and there is evidence to support his view; and

Whereas, the United States is facing, in the current decade, an economic debacle of massive proportions due in large measure to a continued erosion of our national currency and the resultant high interest rates caused by the policies of the Federal Reserve Board; and

Whereas, a consortium of private bankers which is not subject to any official periodic review or oversight by Congress has unconstitutionally controlled the economy of the United States through the Federal Reserve Act since 1913; and

Whereas, this nation faces an immediate economic crisis, it is extremely urgent that the Congress of the United States act before it is too late by repealing the Federal Reserve Act and restoring the economy of this nation to a sound basis through a withdrawal of all "fiat money" now in circulation -- the so-called Federal Reserve Notes -- and return to the gold standard.

Wherefore, your memorialist, the House of Representatives of the State of, the Senate concurring, prays:

1. That the Congress of the United States immediately enact such legislation as is necessary to repeal the Federal Reserve Act and restore the gold standard.
2. That the President of the United States immediately sign the necessary enabling legislation once it reaches his desk.
3. That the Secretary of State of.....transmit copies of this Memorial to the President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States and to each Member of the.....Congressional Delegation.

"Thou shalt not have in thy bag divers weights, a great and a small. Thou shalt not have in thy house divers measures, a great and a small. But thou shalt have a perfect and just weight, a perfect and just measure shalt thou have: that thy days may be lengthened in the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee."

Year Twenty-Eight.....Number Forty-Nine.....December 18, 1981

THE TRANSFER OF POWER STRATAGEM

Most of our United States Senators and Representatives have, or pretend to have an endemic blind spot. It is evidenced whenever anyone mentions a very dangerous citizen-control system known as Regional Government. Recently a dedicated researcher, Bernadine Smith of Hanford, CA sent us a copy of the presentation she had submitted to her State Assemblyman. She deals with the beginnings, development, and impact of Regionalism, and she begins by asking the question, "What does Regional Government mean?" Then she answers:

This is what regional government means: No more States...No more Counties...No more special districts...No more American Constitution...No more Bill of Rights...No more Declaration of Independence...No more "Check and Balance" System...No more state sovereignty...no more national sovereignty...No more personal sovereignty...No more elected Representatives (appointees shall rule, because voting is not in conformance with the "command and control" systems)...No more right to control those who control you (people are to have a new classification. They are to be reduced to the term "Human Resources" - with all its ramifications!)...No more right to recall...No more right to initiative...No more right to referendum...No more local control...No more state or national control...No more right to be called "The government"...No more recognition of "unalienable rights" given under God...No more true assurance of freedom of religion...No more true assurance of freedom of speech...No more right to own a gun...No more assured right to own property...No more right to fully operate your own business...No more right to freely use your own car...No more assured right to choose where you will live...No more assured right to choose where you will work...No more assurance that you may raise your child according to your own values...No more Army...No more Navy...No more Air Force...And no more right to withdraw as it is being written in perpetuity, with no withdrawal rights.

Is the above an exaggeration, an overstatement, the hysterical summation of a paranoid patriot? Well, to substantiate her conclusions, Bernadine Smith has submitted a brief which is the result of her many years of research. She calls it a study in "The Transfer of Power" from all levels of state and local government to the centralized, federal level, and then to the level of totalitarian world government. She begins her thesis with reference to Charles Merriam, who wrote in depth on the subject of the "Study of Power," advocated a "moderate planned collectivism" and proposed Regional Government as a means to that end. He headed the political science department of Rockefeller's University of Chicago, chaired the Spelman (Rockefeller) Fund, then was brought into government service by President Hoover as a social science adviser. Still later he became a member of FDR's National Resources Planning Board. "He possessed the expertise to devise a stratagem that would ensure that the power structure of the U.S. government was reorganized." A part of that stratagem consisted of aligning the nation into nine standard federal regions, then abolishing the States. He is quoted as having said: "Revolution is the OLD way. The NEW WAY is 1. Education, 2. Persuasion, and 3. Co-operation." He also advocated using the Constitution itself to bring in centralization of power, through regionalization. He said, "Fortunately, our constitution is broad enough in its terms, flexible enough in its spirit, and capable of liberal enough interpretation by the judiciary to permit the adaptation of democracy to changing conditions without serious difficulty. And fortunately, the temper of our American people is such as to look with favor upon necessary changes in industry and government alike." Merriam's definition of democracy was synonymous with communism. What was to happen was acceptable to the people since it would be gradual. Public officials were sold on the various plans, because compliance indicated their co-operation in 'modernizing,' 'updating,' 'making more efficient,' 'cutting out waste,' 'streamlining,' and 'decentralizing'!

However, with Merriam's Fabian formula of "education, Persuasion, and Co-operation" it was thought that people would never notice the gradual transfer of power changes that were to occur. We weren't supposed to notice that power was being moved away from our elected officials to unelected officials.. We weren't supposed to notice that, when ten men were first appointed to chair the newly-created positions in the Ten Standard Federal Regional System that these men were to Govern our Governors, were also appointed and unelected officials. We weren't supposed to notice that the Ten Standard Federal Reg-

CALIFORNIA SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION No. 2

Introduced by Senator John G. Schmitz

Relative to Federal Regional Councils

Whereas, The United States has been divided into ten federal service regions by Presidential Executive Order No. 12149, and the states, encouraged by the promise of federal dollars or threat of the withdrawal of federal dollars, have been further divided into planning and service districts; and

Whereas, Executive Order No. 12149 provides 10 federal regional councils for each of the 10 designated service regions, which are composed of appointed officials selected by the appointed heads of 17 federal executive agencies, and

Whereas, Executive Order No. 12149 directs the 10 councils to ensure that federal programs are implemented in a manner consistent with overall federal policy; and

Whereas, There is no provision in Executive Order No. 12149 for the states to approve or deny the formation of the federal service regions, nor the formation of the federal regional councils, nor to approve or deny appointments to the councils; and

Whereas, Federally mandated regionalization often results in an undesirable centralization of power and overrides the authority of state and local governments, and may well conflict with the Tenth Amendment of the United States Constitution, dealing with state rights; now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and the Assembly of the State of California, jointly, That the Legislature of the State of California respectfully memorializes the President and the Congress of the United States to rescind that portion of Executive Order No. 12149 which divides the United States into service regions, and restrict the tendency toward further federally imposed regionalization; and be it further

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate transmit copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each Senator and Representative from California in the Congress of the United States.

ional System was turning the Governor's job into a "go-between" job so that the federal government could dictate to and control all of our cities, counties and other units of government. As our cities and counties became federalized we weren't supposed to notice that this was being accomplished through monetary trade-offs: recreation bonds that mandated adherence to federal plans if granted, planning grant money that had to be "matched" with local funds, so that we could participate in this massive transfer of power. We weren't supposed to notice that when the federal government teasingly dangled those block grants and categorical grants, that a first requirement was that a plan to regionalize had to be filed with the federal executive, and approved, before the Revenue Sharing money was allocated through the Governor's Office. And we weren't supposed to notice the total disregard of the Check & Balance System mandated by our Constitution that was occurring when the President, through his Executive Orders became the Chief Legislator of the Land. And we weren't supposed to notice that the Congress backed up these Executive Orders with bills forcing States to align with other States in various Interstate Compacts, so the federal government could operate a Comprehensive Planning Process which robbed the States of more power. We weren't supposed to notice that the Sub-State Districts were being established to do away with our county system of government. We weren't supposed to notice that when the LEAA finished its restructuring of the California court system and law enforcement system, that we were left with a Regionalized Law & Court System which gave the federal government its greatest tool: an "On-Going Planning Process" for future control of California in its law enforcement system, its criminal justice and its courts system. When it was all over, we weren't supposed to notice that our law enforcement system had been merged with the military, which is necessary for the operation of Regional Government.

But we did notice that when this merging of the military, the regular law enforcement system, and other civilian administrative functions, the man who is now President of the United States was then Governor of California. He also approved PPBS, the federal Planning, Programming and Budgeting System, which requires that all planning and budgeting must come out of Washington's Office of Management and Budget (OMB); thus making the OMB Director a kind of Second President of the U.S., in charge of Regional Government.

As this transfer of power was being accomplished domestically, there also was an International Transfer of Power underway. Most obvious were the "Human Rights" treaties which would form a "Global Bill of Rights" that would usurp our Constitution, its Bill of Rights, and all State Constitutions. The Genocide Treaty would allow the World Court to supersede our federal and state courts. Thus would be accomplished the total transfer of power: from cities, counties and states to a federal authority; then through treaties, conventions, declarations and other piecemeal advances, the transfer of power from the federal authority to the international authority, which is called the New World Order! It is important to understand that Regionalism is a plan for World Government. In addition to the United States, the following countries have been Regionalized, and this list may not be complete: Australia, India, China, USSR, Pakistan, Saudi Arabia, Israel, Italy, Poland, West Germany, United Kingdom, France, the Netherlands, Denmark, Hungary, Belgium, Spain, Canada, Mexico, Brazil, Ecuador, Chile, Venezuela, and Japan. Of course, this process of worldwide regionalization is being financed mainly by the United States.

Returning to our national situation, the following is quoted directly from the ERRATA. In our last issue (12/10/81), near the bottom of page one Rep. Dickinson is quoted as saying, "A trillion is one hundred billion." It should have read, "A trillion is ten hundred billion."

conclusion of Bernadine Smith's presentation to her State Assemblyman:

"How can we help but notice the changes being made to federalize our election process? We remember that Charles E. Merriam had said: 'Legislative bodies are incompetent, it may be said, or corrupt or dilatory, or unrepresentative of the general interest of the community....The elective process is not favorable to the choice of leaders of the community.' We could not help but notice the changes in our election processes which threaten the sanctity, the stability and the structure of the voting system as a result.

"Am I saying that Merriam was solely to blame for the transfer of power that has been occurring in our Nation's governmental structure? Of course not! He was but one of many people that were active in the redesigning of our government....One day I took a pencil and I listed all the dates of the administrative years that each president served his time in office, beginning with the first president on to the current president. I then went through my library of regional legislation, listing opposite each president's term the regional legislation that was enacted during his term....The results were astounding! I found that each president, from Theodore Roosevelt on, had been an active participant in the development of the regional movement. Each president from Theodore Roosevelt on (he being backed by J.P.Morgan) picked up the reins of the centralization and the regional government work of his predecessor, carried on that work, and added to it his own achievements in the restructuring of the United States for World Government. Not one of the presidents ever cancelled out any of the intensifying framework which was markedly proliferating. The conversion was always a prime presidential function. This is corroborated by the evidences in the Executive Orders; the treaties; the reorganization plans; the transmittal letters from the Disarmament Agency; the Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations; the Revenue Sharing Act; the various pieces of federal legislation which delegate Congressional authority to and for use of the President of the United States, for purposes of regional command and control. One of our presidents is on record as having addressed the Congress with the statement that he fully realized that he was asking the Congress to yield to him some of their power, relative to the reorganization. Richard Nixon even spoke of it as 'The New American Revolution.'...The proponents of World Government secured the Office of the Presidency for themselves, with every president since Theodore Roosevelt being chosen for that purpose. If the Senate ratifies those (previously mentioned) treaties; or agrees to accession, thus transferring over enormous power for a Global Bill of Rights, what then is next? They have already cinched the world judiciary and world army.Regionalism is an international thing...How much time do you suppose we have left? Although they may not consider it of much importance, our presidents are going to have to realize that we did not hire them to put us under Regionalism and World Government rule. Meanwhile, how are we going to reverse the leverage they have, so that we may return to the States their rightful power? The Safety of the State is the Supreme Law. For the time being we are asking that you give every type of legislative support to John Schmitz and SJR 2 (which is reproduced in this Report)." (Unquote).

POLAND, A PAWN IN THE GAME

In the last few weeks of the year of our Lord 1981, the world has been shaken by two important geopolitical happenings, highlighted by the internal misery that has been visited upon Poland, and the external audacity of the man-made state of Israel. There is a connection, in that Israel's Begin took advantage of the brutal action ordered by Moscow and commanded by Jaruzelski against the people of Poland. Begin obviously believed that world leaders would be so obsessed with the Polish problem that he would be able to announce the political annexation of Syria's Golan Heights without much reaction. He was wrong because the whole world reacted, and Begin's reaction to Reagan's reaction caused considerable condemnation by Zionists abroad, and Israelis at home. But the furor subsided, Begin got away with the conquest - at least for now. However, the Polish persecution will not so easily be dismissed.

Few people have suffered so much so long in their fight for freedom, and few have been so indomitable as the Polish. Partitioned four times in the past 200 years, Poland has remained a pawn in the game of the Power Brokers, been shifted from domination by Prussia to Russia to Austria to Nazi Germany, and finally to enslavement by the USSR. Once again the people are as pawns, used by their own leaders for further gain by the Power Brokers and their accomplices, the members of the Politburo in Moscow. While the civilized peoples of the world must feel the deepest sympathy for the people of Poland, there is a situation that has been glossed over or ignored by the Communications Media and by our own President in his peroration for Poland on the night of Dec. 23. It is this: Solidarity is not an anti-communist movement. It's a protest against mismanagement and mistreatment by overlords. but not because they are communist overlords. The Detroit Free Press came close to exposing the plot in its issue of Dec. 15 when it affirmed editorially: "Here were the workers, the supposed essence of the Communist Party, proclaiming that their government gave them neither the freedom of expression nor the basic foodstuffs that were rightfully theirs. By establishing their own rival governingbody, by co-opting the communist slogan 'solidarity',...they robbed the government of all legitimacy." The editor is right. Solidarity is a Communist Slogan. Yet President Reagan used the word as though it were a synonym for freedom. It should be understood that the Communist leadership allowed Solidarity leader Walesa to incite the people, build up a membership of ten million and create a real threat to the government before taking its brutal action against the movement. It was a thing unheard of in a communist police state. And Walesa really was saying to his followers, "Workers of Poland, Unite!" which is a paraphrase of one of Karl Marx's original slogans. While manifesting great sympathy for the people of Poland, we must also understand that (even as we) are pawns in the game, and that the Polish horror is a socialist reaction against a socialist government, although they people themselves see it as a fight for survival, which it is, of course. The USSR robbed Poland of its resources, allowed the nation to accumulate a foreign debt, owed mostly to Megabankers, of more than $25-billion. And now this Soviet Satellite has become another victim of wholesale genocide as practiced by the Communists in Russia, China, Cambodia, and in parts of Africa whenever force seemed expedient.

There is a Brezhnev doctrine which applies, and which is being upheld: "Once a country has been "liberated" by the Communists, it must never be allowed to free itself from communist control. This doctrine has been upheld by force in Hungary, Czechoslovakia, East Germany, and now Poland. However, there is another Brezhnev doctrine that has had to be delayed once again, because of the pressure of debts to the Megabankers and the possibly planned Solidarity resistance in Poland. This doctrine has to do with the creation of a Regional World Government, a necessary step before de facto Socialist World Government can be proclaimed publicly. Related to this doctrine is the creation of the European Common Market which is fact becoming a political United States of Europe, and also President Reagan's promotion of a similar North American Common Market composed of Canada, Mexico and the United States. Brezhnev has the Warsaw Pact, but he is to go one step further, and make the Satellite countries integral parts of the USSR itself. The story is told in detail by the British Weekly Review, Intelligence Digest. We quote:

BREZHNEV'S GLOBAL PLANS

The extent to which the Polish crisis has thrown a monkey wrench into the Soviet plans for the consolidation of Moscow's empire is only now emerging more fully. The consolidation was to have been announced by Brezhnev at the 26th Soviet party congress early this year but had to be postponed – and perhaps cancelled – at the last moment. All Brezhnev was able to do was to refer to a project envisaged to establish a 'new and historically unprecedented kind of interstate relations' within the 'socialist community' in which a single, collective Politburo would rule. But the time for it was not quite ripe, he had to acknowledge.

To place the project in a proper perspective it is necessary to go back some years. In the early 'sixties, under Khrushchev's leadership, a plan was worked out for the virtual annexation of the East European Satellites and their incorporation into the Soviet Union, starting with Bulgaria. It was then that Todor Zhivkov, the Bulgarian leader, declared his country's willingness, even eagerness, to be proclaimed the 16th Soviet republic. After Bulgaria, Zhivkov said at the time, other East European countries would be 'free to decide' whether or not to merge with the Soviet Union, adding that he saw no reason why other countries proclaiming themselves socialist should not join the Soviet Union. At the time the only outspoken objection came from Romania. The plan was in an advanced stage when, in 1964, Khrushchev was overthrown, and Brezhnev took over. The decision to get rid of Khrushchev was not unanimous. It was taken in the absence of several members of the Politburo (Khrushchev was on holiday in the Crimea) and even among those present there was dissent.

Brezhnev's assumption of power, with a new coterie of his own choosing, made necessary a period of consolidation in Moscow itself and this in turn called for the temporary shelving of the plan. The explanation given within the party was that the project had been deemed premature. Then, when Brezhnev was firmly in the saddle other more immediate problems arose, for instance the so-called counter-revolution in Czechoslovakia and the seemingly irrevocable break with China, also the Vietnam war which preoccupied Moscow much more than it pretended. When the plan was again considered, Brezhnev had launched his so-called detente strategy and on balance it was decided that pushing ahead with it might kill the prospects of the West swallowing the detente bait Brezhnev was dangling.

But the project was not abandoned and about three years ago it surfaced again, this time as allegedly Brezhnev's own grand idea. It now called for the 'unification' into a federation comprising the Soviet Union itself, Poland, East Germany, Czechoslovakia, Bulgaria, Hungary, Romania, Cuba, Mongolia, Vietnam and Laos, with a similar option later to be extended to Ethiopia, Angola, and Mozambique. It was again considered that the major obstacle might be Romania, but that under pressure from the entire bloc Ceausescu, the Romanian leader, would not be able to hold out for long. The timing of the implementation of the grand design was considered to be of great importance, and its announcement was deferred several times. Finally it was agreed that the 26th party congress at the start of this year would be an appropriate occasion.

And then Poland erupted, in fact blew up in the collective face of the Soviet Politburo, with nobody able to foretell what the wider consequences in other European satellite countries might be. On the eve of the party congress the project was hurriedly reconsidered and a much watered-down version of it was all that was deemed prudent to make public. So watered-down in fact that it hardly made an impact at all - a plus factor in the Soviet view. The major innovation was the dropping of Brezhnev's earlier doctrine of 'limited sovereignty' for the satellite countries and its replacement by 'collective sovereignty within the socialist community', to create a supranational single entity. An 'international Politburo' would ensure that the collective burden was shared collectively. Of course the major part of the burden would fall upon the Soviet Union and it would become Moscow's responsibility to ensure stability everywhere within the new Red Commonwealth. In view of this the international Politburo would have two tiers, an inner and an outer circle.

What it would amount to in effect is the creation of Crown colony status for the satellites, each to have representation in the second or outer tier of the enlarged Politburo. But it would also make Cuba, for instance, an integral part of the Soviet Union, with major implications for the U.S. It is a grandiose project, but Poland has for the moment brought it to a halt... Much now depends upon what happens in Poland. And, of course, time is slowly running out for Brezhnev. But a further shelving of the project, once more to gather dust, seems unlikely.... (End of extended quotation from article in the weekly review Intelligence Digest, 17 Rodney Road, Cheltenham, Glos. GL50, 1HX, U.K.)

In this reconstructed Soviet Empire, Cuba has a very special role. It is to create a "Federation" or another Regional World Government composed of the countries in Central America, the Caribbean and South America. Like the incorporation of the Eastern European bloc of nations into the Soviet Union, the original plan was the work of Khrushchev. When Fidel Castro, with the able assistance of such men as Herbert L. Matthews of The New York Times drove out Batista and Communized Cuba, Che Guevara and other trained terrorists were to go into other Latin American countries and "liberate" the masses. At the time they had little real success. But later the Communist conquerors got a real boost from our own State Department and a cajoled, bribed, consenting or misguided Senate. Panama's dictator Torrijos was paid to take over our Panama Canal, in return for which the Megabankers were given very special banking privileges and the Communists were given freer rein. Then West Point trained Anastasio Somoza of Nicaragua was ousted and later assassinated and that country was taken into Cuba's budding federation of states. And now that Cuban surrogate troops are no longer needed in such great numbers in North Africa, they can return for future assignments nearer home. And the original Khrushchev plan - now Brezhnev's grand design - can be revitalized. Walter Riley reports in Spotlight of Dec. 28 that "The Soviet Union and Fidel Castro plan to consolidate victories after takeovers in Latin America and the Caribbean into a new federation, according to free Cuban intelligence reports..." Just as a "Federation of Arab States" (another Regional World Government) is being planned for North Africa and the Middle East, a similar regional government in our hemisphere is to include Nicaragua, Guatemala, Surinam, Tobago, Trinidad, Santa Lucia, Guyana, Honduras, Costa Rica, Belize, etc. And finally, the Communist federation plans to move southward from Panama to communize strategic Colombia, Venezuela, Guyana, Ecuador, Peru, Bolivia, and the rest of Latin America. Guerilla activity is to be stepped up, the strategies that worked so successfully in Africa will be adapted to the Americas. As Globescan notes: "It's a worldwide transfer game. Training a guerilla is easy. Give him a little ideology, a lot of promise and a gun and he's ready to go. But he must be financed. And where does the money come from? Cuba? They get it from Russia. Russia? Sadly, they get it from the West, principally from the U.S. through the taxpayer-funded Ex-Im Bank, followed by Chase, Citibank, Bankers' Trust, Bank of America and the rest. They lend your money to Russia. That means your money supports the world's overt enemy of freedom and its worldwide destabilizing apparatus. But why? For the answer watch who ends up making the money and directing the power Watch who makes the 'development' loans and who gets control over the resources and the industries: the tin, the rubber, the food, the oil - particularly the oil" (from Globescan, Paris, Geneva. U.S. office, 1545 New York Ave., N.E., Washington, D.C. 2002).

Poland is a very important pawn in this worldwide game. Here again a leading question is who finances this bankrupt country? Russia can't. The debt is so great ($25,000,000,000) that the Megabankers can't continue the financing and must get their original loans back or themselves go bankrupt. Since the Conspiracy originally planned that Communism should supply the manpower, and Capitalism should supply the moneypower, guess who is slated to bail out the Megabankers? But, as in similar cases in the past, it seemed very necessary to generate a world-wide wave of sympathy for the people of Poland, who are near starvation and can do no other than rebel against a murderous situation which was planned that way. In his Poland-directed television address, President Reagan outlined the way things are to develop: Martial law will be gradually lifted, a more responsive government will be established, a semblance of peace will return, the government will make the appropriate promises. Food, and then money, will be poured into Poland from the West, especially from the United States. But one thing must happen before that $25 billion debt is to be taken care of: Poland must be admitted to membership in the IMF, because the taxpayers' money will be channeled through that channel. Originally the USSR opposed its Satellites' membership in the IMF. But Romania has already been allowed to join. The International Herald Tribune of Paris reports that "One high-ranking Soviet economist reportedly said that the time might come when all socialist countries would join the IMF in a coordinated action." That's so all debt-ridden socialist countries can pay their debts to the Megabankers with U.S. dollars created out of nothing by the Federal Reserve (through Monetizing foreign debts).

This is why the Moscow Politburo has had to postpone the consolidation of all its satellites into one gigantic USSR. Poland's bad debts to Chase, et al must be taken care of, along with other bad debts of socialist and Third World nations. Then can come the factual establishment of the gigantic Soviet Empire of Western Asia, Northern and Eastern Europe. But the creation of the "Federation of Central and South American States and the Caribbean" can proceed apace. As one European source states: "Perhaps 1984 is, after all, a target date for world control - starting with financial control."

THE NATURE OF WORLD WAR III

Toward the end of each calendar year many editors and publishers look back and catalog what they consider the most important news events of the year. The Associated Press polled its scattered editors and publishers, and asked them help construct a consensus. AP's top ten news stories for the year 1981 were listed in this order of importance: 1) The assassination attempt on President Reagan; 2) The return of the hostages from Iran; 3) The assassination of Anwar Sadat; 4) The attempted assassination of the Pope; 5) The new conservative administration in Washington; 6) The American economy; 7) The flight of the space shuttle Columbia; 8) The air controllers' strike and their dismissal by President Reagan; 9) The appointment of Sandra Day O'Connor as first female Supreme Court Justice; and 10) Developments in Poland (it is obvious that this list was compiled before the invoking of martial law in Poland, otherwise Polish developments would have ranked much higher in this poll.) Some of the other important stories that failed to make AP's top ten hit list: The wedding of Prince Charles and Lady Diana, the death of 113 people in the collapse of the walkway over a crowded dance floor at the Hyatt Regency Hotel in Kansas City, the strike that eliminated one-third of the baseball season, the arrest of a suspect in the two-year run of deaths and disappearances of young blacks in Atlanta, Israel's bombing of Iraq's nuclear reactor, the destruction of two Libyan fighter planes by American airmen, etc.

The first four of AP's top ten stories are crimes of international importance. Attempts to rid the world of its leaders, illegal takeover of an American embassy and the holding of hostages who had diplomatic immunity, the many kidnappings of VIPs and military officers, bombings of buildings and acts of arson, sabotage and skynapping of airplanes, and wholesale terrorist activities throughout the world; these form a new definition for war. As H du B Reports in his issue for November/December 1981: "The blunt fact is, the world is already at war. (But) the days of Pearl Harbor are over. The act of formally going to war involves risks which a nation that has perfected subversion - and is the only one pledged to impose its ideology on the world - is not going to take. Moscow knows that Pearl Harbors bring Hiroshimas. (But) democracies do not think of war in terms of terrorism. The new form of war is through terrorism within nations, for which the aggressor can deny responsibility. The objective of all wars is to destroy the enemy's capability of continuing the war or the will of its people to wage a war. Destabilization through terrorism accompanied by subversion accomplished the same objective. The first move in the the softening of a nation is to lead its press to attack any manifestation of loyalty as 'super-patriotism.' In war there is no substitute for patriotism. After that, move to the enemy's planning table..."

Crime at the international level has replaced the original concepts of war and few people in the West realize that we really are at war. But this is not a war of nations against nations. It is a war against Christian society, against civilization itself. The enemy has four universal objectives: the abolition of traditional religion in favor of atheistic humanism, the destruction of the family, the abolition of private property, and the suppression of individuality in favor of communalism. Hence, we find the enemy using crime at every level of human existence in order to achieve its four goals. Crime has reached the level at which we are turning our homes and schools, our places of business and our churches into fortresses. We see and read ads for deadbolt locks, electrical alarm systems, trained watchdogs, security guards, and, among the wise, a pistol in the dresser drawer despite efforts to disarm us. The national average is fearful: some member in one out of every three households in the land has been a victim of crime during the past year. Even worse: more than half of the crimes have been committed by children or young adults.

But, as Dr. John A. Howard, President of The Rockford Institute, has said, "The problem is much larger than crime. It isn't only the public laws that are losing their effectiveness as restraints on human conduct, all the informal rules which make it possible to live together amicably and productively are being just as widely disregarded as the public laws. Courteousness, pride in doing one's work well, faithfulness in marriage, truthfulness, patriotism and many, many other norms of behavior which make for a pleasant and workable and unified society are falling by the wayside" (from an address delivered before the Tucson Rotary Club, December 2, 1981).

Too many of us keep thinking only in terms of an enemy that might attack from outside our borders, invade and destroy our way of life, enslave us and take away our remaining freedoms. But there also is an enemy which is among us, and within us, an enemy that is destroying our society, abolishing our civilization, using ideas and words as weapons which we fail to recognize as weapons of war. This is an enemy that is waging a third world war against us, and so few of us are fighting against this enemy.

How has this enemy brought about such a condition? Dr. Howard names three related causes: 1) The disintegration of the traditional family; 2) The system of schooling; and 3) The destruction of religion. He explains a Biblical truth in terms that even an avowed atheist should be able to understand: " The human being is not born with the knack of getting along with his neighbors. That kind of conduct must be learned. We can wish that everyone were born friendly and considerate, but our instincts, for the most part, incline us to look out for ourselves and trample on the folks who get in the way. Self-restraint, cooperation, helpfulness, the willingness to sacrifice in order to keep a marriage together, or a nation together - these are attitudes and skills which must be taught to the young and continually reinforced for all generations And the most powerful and effective training center is the family. It is within the family that the child learns best that he can't have his own way all the time, that there are rules which everyone must obey."

So, the first line of defense against this enemy that is destroying our society and our civilization is the traditional family, a family in which all its members are related by marriage or by blood. In such a family it is the duty of the parents to feed, protect, care for and train the children during their formative years; and in later years the process is reversed. This first line of defense has been breached, is no longer holding against the enemy. The second line of defense should be the school. It has been pointed out that virtually every society in history - until quite recently - has recognized that a chief purpose of education is to train the young how to live responsibly and effectively in their own tribe or nation. Again quoting Dr. Howard, former president of Rockford College and now president of Rockford Institute, educating the young means "teaching them about the ideals, the things that make life worth living . . . and teaching about the obligations and the taboos. The young are introduced to the heroes who are revered for the sacrifices they made and the traitors who damaged everyone by their harmful acts." But today heroes are forgotten and men who offer new "lifestyles" are extolled. Educationists insist that each person regardless of age or knowledge, must decide for himself what is right or what is wrong, then do what he thinks is right. It's okay to smoke marijuana, even in grade school. "It doesn't hurt anyone else and it brings you pleasure." In the book "The Family, America's Hope," it is pointed out that the enemies of our society have perverted language to advance their destructive methods. As an example, "situation ethics" is one of the more popular perversions. Ethics is the study of what is either right or wrong on all occasions. Situation means sometimes; sometimes something is right, sometimes it is wrong. This denies the very meaning of ethics. So "situation ethics" is a perversion of language, but a very neat trick for promoting "the new morality." Another such popular perversion is "freedom of choice". It is used to justify abortion, any kind of sexual activity, any "life style" - and that's another language perversion. Of all the weapon-phrases in the arsenal of the armies attacking our form of society and our Christian civilization, the one which has probably inflicted the deepest wounds on the institution of the family is the innocent-sounding "life style." Quoting "The Family - America's Hope": "This is an ingenious verbal sleight-of-hand which in one stroke abolished the standards and models for adult behavior. It proclaims that marriage is simply one option among many, no better than the others. It places a stamp of approval on temporary liaisons, homosexual partnerships, recurring group sex or whatever suits the preference of the individual....Anarchy, that is, the absence of any rules and laws, is the underlying objective." Another popular weapon-word which has become generally accepted is "parenting." Joyce Taylor, in "Pro-Family Forum" has exposed this weapon-word for what it really is. We quote:

"The distasteful word 'parenting' is a rank example of faddist nouning when they should be verbing. After all, we don't speak of sisting, brothering, aunting, uncling, and cousining. It would seem the nation's educators have spent too much time wording and not enough thoughting, leaving almost no time at all for teaching. Even more unfortunate, this distasteful word describes a program crippling to the American family and the social and moral climate of our nation. Probably the most popular Parenting programs nationwide, stem from Dr. Thomas Gordon's books "Parenting Effectiveness Training" (PET), and "Teacher Effectiveness Training" (TET)....The author himself describes it [parenting] as 'humanistic' and calls it 'a complete system that differs dramatically from tradition'....The program would abolish the authority of parents, instead stresses 'effective management of conflict'...Hence, we have 3 common characteristics of all Parenting Programs: 1) Don't be the kind of parent you have (authoritarian); 2) The family is a democracy and children should have equal rights in decision-making; and 3) Children should never be subject to physical punishment.....Unfortunately, many churches are using the same Parenting programs rapidly being embraced by public education. State legislatures are funding Parenting programs without the foggiest idea of the content. National organizations, including the PTA, advocate the teaching of Parenting. The following quotes are taken from PTA publications: 'The PTA's concern with parenting is part of its larger effort to introduce comprehensive programs of school health education in all public schools, kindergarten, high-school.....Teachers should be comfortable with and accepting of students who use 'street language' in conveying their knowledge, concerns, and ideas related to sexual behavior. Teachers who use 'street language' in communicating with students should not fear reprisal from school authorities."

Alongside this weapon-word "Parenting" there has been developed yet another potent weapon-word, one that is being used very effectively by our enemies. Unfortunately, the word is also being used as an action word by those people who, unthinkingly or ignorantly, accept any new fad that is being promoted by the Media and recommended by some alleged "expert." This weapon-word is

"Unisex." Any Christian knows that God made women different from men both physically and psychologically, so they could become a team and supplement each other in the building of families, which form the nucleus of any and all human societies that can endure. There are those who know not God, or deny His Laws. But, as St. Paul might have written, they still must know by the universal laws of nature, and understand in their hearts, that the roles of men and women are not totally interchangeable. Current literature (?), movies and television productions continue to stress the idea that men can replace women even as mothers, and that women can replace men in any role of society. That is a lie, of course. But many are made to believe a lie. And this unisex myth has penetrated so deeply into public consciousness that the very important development of sexual identity among the youth is blurred and inhibited. The increasing frequency of homosexual activity among the nation's youth is but one manifestation of the potency of this unisex myth. Today's parents, instead of "Parenting" and "Unisexing", ought to take pride in their respective roles as fathers and mothers, and as partners who supplement each other in the God-commanded activities of the family enterprise. To do otherwise is to play into the hands of the enemy - and reap the whirlwind.

The problems and challenges that will confront us in 1982 are likely to have a profound effect on all our lives, and on the lives of future generations. There are so many things that seem impossible to overcome; because behind all these things which we read, see, hear or experience, there is a great conspiratorial struggle for control of the earth's resources, and in the eyes of these Power Brokers, any form of human labor or endeavor is a natural resource. It is this struggle of the Power Brokers that causes wars, food shortages, such wholesale suffering as is presently being visited upon the people of Poland, and all manner of social and civil disturbances over which we seem to have no control. Currently there is a movement in Europe called "democratic socialism," similar to the "economic democracy" which now threatens America. We will hear much of this in 1982. And again, we'll feel we have no control. But there is One Who always has control, and He has given us dominion over His earth. We should never fear, but remember that the exercise of that dominion begins at home, in the family, for there lies the future of America. Dr. Howard, whom we have quoted so profusely in this Report, reminds us:

"It is easy to become discouraged in the face of the powerful disintegrating forces loose in the land. Nevertheless, much of the folly of our time is the result of boredom. Once the basic activities of life are provided the human being seems to need a cause to espouse... The cause of the God-centered disciplined life has been upstaged by a whole menagerie of prophets advocating silly departures from their religious norm, not because their alternatives were superior or even made sense, but because far too many of us rooted in and committed to our religious values, have like the campus professors of the sixties taken our heritage for granted and gone about our daily business. The ideological war is being lost by default. We must bring our affirmative message to center stage so that it becomes the cause that fills the vacuum in the hearts and lives of a confused people. It is the banner of permanent and ennobling obligations that we must raise on high and which we must joyfully and consistently commend to our children by word and deed and prayer."

THE "PIECEMEAL FUNCTIONALISM" PLOY

When Richard Allen resigned, or was dismissed, as the White House Security Adviser and was replaced by William Clark, Allen insisted that "politics was involved" in his resignation, or dismissal. He didn't elaborate but it was obvious that he had reference to more than the fact that Nancy had grown to dislike Allen because of his handling of the Japanese interview and wanted Ronny to fire him. The "politics" to which Allen referred in his farewell statement probably had to do with the significant victory the Trilateralists were about to win through Deputy Secretary of State William Clark. Clark was the selected promoter of a scheme that would tie the United States irrevocably into a plan for acceptance of the UN-promoted New International Economic Order, a pet scheme of the Trilateralists, but a scheme which has to be divorced from any direct UN control. The need was to make the United Nations Industrial Development Organization an international authority independent of parent, the UN. We'll explain this later, but the story really begins in the time when Nixon was President. At that time both Allen and Clark, as well as Reagan and the rest of his inner circle (except Weinberger) were still in California awaiting a call to national service. In 1972 a "change in direction" on the march to The New World Order became expedient. David Rockefeller, Zbigniew Brzezinski, and others of the Conspiracy were planning the creation of a new organization to be known as the Trilateral Commission, and were also planning some changes in the White House management and staff. First, Spiro Agnew was ousted, so Gerald Ford could become Vice President. Then came the Watergate Scam, to get Nixon out without impeachment and Ford in without election, so that Ford could appoint Nelson Rockefeller as Vice President (failing health made this last action a failing ploy). But the Watergate aftermath required an able manager who could affect the necessary changes in personnel without involving a few Rockefeller agents, especially Henry Kissinger. Kissinger had to be protected from public exposure, Nixon got out without impeachment and with pardon, and Ford and Nelson got in without a national election. For this careful engineering job, Alexander Haig was just the man. He was just a colonel when Kissinger chose Haig as his military deputy. In four short years he became a four-star general. And he handled the Watergate transition magnificently. As further experience he became NATO chieftain, did a short tour of duty in the "military-industrial" complex, and was ready for more important assignment. So that President-elect Reagan found it expedient, perhaps mandatory that he select Haig as his Secretary of State (in lieu of Kissinger who was hardly acceptable to the public at the time). But that usually reliable source informs us that Reagan didn't quite trust Haig, so he appointed one of his trusted friends Deputy Secretary of State, to keep an eye on Haig. That man was one William Clark, and he was completely unqualified for a responsible State Department post. As Hedrick Smith of The New York Times reported: "At his Senate confirmation hearings, he was sharply criticized for admitting he did not know the names of the leaders of South Africa and Zimbabwe, knew little about aversion to American nuclear weapons in Europe, and was unwilling or unable to state his policy position on many issues. One Western European newspaper reacted to his appointment with a story headlined: 'Reagan chooses nitwit as minister'.

But Clark's job was to keep his eye on Haig. Instead, Haig entranced him and instead of being an informer, Clark became a "peacemaker" between Haig and the White House, and between Haig and Defense Secretary Weinberger. Clark "also earned Haig's high regard by alternately defending and restraining him." remarks Newsweek. While Deputy Secretary of State, says the NYTimes, "he has had overall responsibility for devising an economic development plan for the Caribbean basin." The Times should have added that he had overall responsibility for proposing that the United States become a full-fledged partner in the New International Economic Order. This World Government tie-up can be even more successfully promoted when Clark has daily access to President Reagan's Office.

Now, concerning Regional Functionalism: Harlan Cleveland of the Aspen Institute is given credit for pointing out that if they were ever to create a World Government, it was essential that there be a change in plans. In this century two different tries had been made; both were unsuccessful. The first attempt at building a New World Order was the Wilson-House plan, the old League of Nations. According to Cleveland it "could not survive the rise of fascism, Nazism and militarism." The second try was the United Nations. But "the poor country majority took over from us the practice of bloc voting on symbolic resolutions, thus intensifying our isolationist superfears and disappointing our internationalist superhopes....As presently organized it [the UN] is ill-adapted to arrange the new bargains that are urgently needed, or for getting decisions on a lengthening list of new global issues." (unquote). There has been no lack of support for these attempts at creating a New World Order. There were the Trilateral Commission, the Council on Foreign Relations, the Foreign Policy Association, the Royal Institute for International Affairs, the German Society for Foreign Policy, the International Affairs Institute, the Swedish International Institute of International Affairs, the Aspen Institute for Humanistic Studies, the Atlantic Institute for International Affairs, the Bilderberg Meetings, the Ford Foundation, the Rockefeller Foundation, the German Marshall Foundation, the Guggenheim Foundation, the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD), the Atlantic Council of the United States, the Brookings Institute, the Rand Corporation, Exxon, General Electric, Xerox, Mobil, Standard Oil of California, Sony Corporation, Texas Instruments, Royal Dutch Shell, ITT, Chase Manhattan Bank, Bank of America, Citicorp, Deutsche Bank, Banque Nationale de Paris, J.P. Morgan & Co., IMF GATT, World Bank, EEC, and many, many more. There were plenty of generals, sufficient manpower, overflowing munitions and armaments, but no plan of battle that had succeeded. So Cleveland suggested this supposedly new approach which he called Piecemeal Functionalism. The Trilateral Commission adopted the plan and a Triangle Paper explained the concept in the following words: "In general, the prospects for achieving effective international cooperation [control] can often be improved if the issues can be kept separate - what we call piecemeal functionalism.... Coalitions of specialists can be built across national boundaries in specific functional areas, blunting the nationalism that might otherwise hinder agreement.... Functionally specific international organizations succeed far better than multipurpose organizations in accomplishing concrete tasks...." In easier language, trying to create a New World Order through one all-encompassing control mechanism like the League of Nations or the UN hasn't worked. But, if we do it piece-by-piece, function-by-function, area-by-area, organization-by-organization, then eventually all of the pieces can be put together, like a global jigsaw puzzle. Thus a New World Order, created piece by piece!

It should be noted that Harlan Cleveland didn't propose anything new with his process of piecemeal functionalism. The process actually began as a spinoff from the League of Nations. Encyclopedia Britannica explains: "The League of Nations provided a focal point for intergovernmental organizations and also for the growing network of nongovernmental agencies. Following World War II the United Nations became a kind of 'roof organization' for the major enterprises in systematic international cooperation [and control-Ed.]. In accordance with its Charter, the UN entered into agreements with intergovernmental agencies operating in economic, social, cultural, educational, health and related fields." These agencies are autonomous, authoritarian, independent, jigsaw pieces of World Government affiliated with the UN. They include the International Labor Org. (ILO), Food & Agriculture Org. (FAO), UN Educational, Scientific & Cultural Org. (UNESCO), World Health Org. (WHO), International Monetary Fund (IMF), General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT), International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank), International Development Association (IDA), International Finance Corp. (IFC), and others.

We repeat, these were independent organizations, affiliated with but not under the control of the UN. They have their own secretariats and governing bodies. They are 'pieces' in the complex of 'piecemeal functionalism". This arrangement is in accord with the wishes of the Monopoly Capitalists who, as Harlan Cleveland had pointed out, "it is ill-adapted..for getting decisions made on a lengthening list of new global issues." More accurately, control of any United Nations agency by the Power Brokers is no longer assured. However, in 1964 the UN created a new agency, United Nations Commission for Trade and Development (UNCTAD), out of which had come the New International Economic Order with its promotional agency, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO). Now, this was a desirable idea in the eyes of the Trilatals and the Megabankers, but there was this one drawback: UNIDO was established as an agency of the UN. It was necessary, therefore, that UNIDO be divorced from UN control and set up as an independent organization. Only in this way could the Monopoly Capitalists be assured of control over it. Trilateral Commission Triangle Paper #21, dealing with trade with the Third World explains: "The eventual establishment of UNCTAD in 1964 gave new impetus to the elaboration and persistent advocacy of an agenda that evolved in the 1970s into the formal call for a New International Economic Order...Much has been written on the NIEO...This is not the place to rehearse the debate. The essential point is that even while arguing for equal opportunity some supporters of the New Order seemed to call into question the underlying principles of liberalism under which the old order had prospered...In the words of Thierry de Montbrial in the January 1977 meeting of the Trilateral Commission: 'These kinds of protectionist measures will come whether we like it or not. My point is that we should organize them and not let them appear in disorder'." Translation: NIEO is a good idea, but it must be organized and managed by us. So, UNIDO must become an independent organization, affiliated with but not controlled by the United Nations!

This is where William Clark, former Deputy Secretary of State, comes on the scene. He was assigned to specialization in economic matters. And it was he who was given the job of promoting the adoption and ratification by the United States Senate of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization. As a matter of fact, this was some left-over business that the Carter administration couldn't complete. UNIDO had been adopted as a "specialized agency" of the UN on April 8, 1979. It was signed on behalf of the United States on January 17, 1980. But, like Carter's signing of those UN Declarations on Human Rights, the Senate had not ratified the UNIDO Constitution. So, the Trilateral Commission wanted the Reagan administration to complete the sellout of one more "piece" of the "piecemeal functionalism" complex. Accordingly, on September 12, 1981 William Clark, then Deputy Secretary of State, sent to President Reagan a "letter of submittal." Then, on October 5, 1981 President Reagan sent to the United States Senate a "letter of transmittal" which called for approval of its Constitution and ratification of UNIDO as an authoritarian and independent "piece" in the "piecemeal functionalism" process that the Trilateral Commission had adopted as the third - and best - way to build their New World Order.

In submitting the UNIDO Constitution to the President, Clark wrote in part: "The Constitution would establish UNIDO as an independent specialized agency of the United Nations system...UNIDO has a mandate to provide developing countries with industrial-related technical assistance, including establishment and management, training, feasibility studies, and investment promotion... It is truly a precedent setting document for the United Nations system which deserves our earnest and rapid support. The other agencies most concerned, the Department of Labor, the Agency for International Development, and the Department of commerce have no objection to the ratification of the Constitution. I hope that you will ask the Senate to consider the Constitution and give its advice and consent to the ratification as soon as possible.William Clark"

President Reagan's letter of submittal to the Senate reads in part:

"In recent years, there has been growing recognition of the need to formulate more effective institutions within the United Nations system [Piecemeal Functionalism-Ed.] to deal with the problems of development in an increasingly interdependent world. Such institutions need to serve the interests of all member nations and be governed in a manner that realistically reflects the political and economic situation in the world today... In addition to helping create a better institutional framework, ratification of the Constitution by the United States will be a strong reaffirmation of our commitment to the industrial development of the less developed countries and to demonstrate our political will to pursue beneficial relations with these countries. I recommend that the Senate give prompt consideration to the Constitution and advise and consent to its ratification. (signed) Ronald Reagan."

The Constitution of UNIDO which, in a piecemeal manner superseded our own Constitution of the United States, reads in part: "Bearing in mind the broad objectives adopted by the sixth special session of the General Assembly of the United Nations on the establishment of a New International Economic Order ...Declaring that it is necessary to establish a just and equitable economic and social order to be achieved through the elimination of economic inequalities...implementation of dynamic social and economic changes and the encouragement of necessary structural changes in the development of the world economy...The primary objective of the Organization shall be the promotion and acceleration of industrial development in the developing countries with a view to assisting in the establishment of a new international economic order. The Organization shall also promote development and co-operation on global, regional and national, as well as sectoral levels...The seat of the Organization shall be Vienna...." (Emphasis added in the above quotes).

Constitution by constitution, treaty by treaty, convention by convention, declaration by declaration, like water dripping drop by drop upon the civil rock which is our Constitution of the United States. This is the action and purpose of the enemy's "Piecemeal Functionalism." We must plug the leak, or else...

THE STATE OF ENIGMATIC REAGANOMICS

Television reporter Mike Wallace of the "Sixty Minute" program would like to respeak about sixty seconds of dialogue. He didn't know that the recorder was loaded and on target when he referred to certain puzzling financial dealings he was discussing which, he said, would be hard to understand "over a watermelon or a taco." His implied reference to the intelligence level of blacks and Latins was duly published and his defense was typical and characteristic. He said that sometimes he even made jokes about Jews. Disregarding any ethnic or minority class overtones, we should like to observe that Wallace's remark could apply to almost any American when we try to understand the things that Establishment and Rockefeller-oriented economists are telling us and asking us to believe about the financial, industrial and labor situations which we face in this hard freeze winter of 1982. Without thinking of watermelons or tacos, these contradictory promulgations and projections are hard to digest over any kind of food one might mention. The statements of these "experts" never seem to jibe, their predictions depend entirely on what they want us to believe, and not on what they think will really happen. For example, let's take the diametrically opposite views of Lyn Nofziger who is President Reagan's chief political adviser, and Robert Dole who heads the Senate Finance Committee.

Nofziger is against tax increases of any kind, because he must be loyal to his boss. He says a tax increase at the federal level would be disastrous to the Republican Party, even bad for the country. He knows that deficit spending is the chief ingredient of the Reaganomic system, but he thinks that is okay. He says that a $100 billion deficit in fiscal 1982 would be meaningless. He says, "If people are feeling good about the country, if they are feeling good about the economy, if joblessness is on the decline, then nobody is going to give a damn about the deficit. If people really cared about deficits, the Democrats wouldn't have been re-elected and re-elected over all these years. I don't know anybody who has ever lost an election because of a federal deficit."

But Senator Dole says Congress disagrees, believes that there should be an immediate increase in taxes of some sort. "I think there is a consensus in the Congress for raising revenues in order to lower the deficit.... I'm going to tell him (Reagan) to do whatever he has to do to bring down the deficit. We do not want to increase revenue, but I think we have to...I don't see any other course...."

What worries most conservatives (Reagan and Nofziger obviously not included) is the fact that the deficit for fiscal 1981 for which the Carter Administration was responsible, was about $58 billion; but the Reagan deficit for 1982 will be at least $100 billion; and for 1983 at least $150 billion; and no balanced budget as originally promised. But the Reaganomic theory is that it makes no difference how high the deficit climbs. This must fill the Federal Reserve Bankers and stockholders with glee, because the bigger the principal, the bigger the amount of interest they'll get. The Reaganomic theory is that the less that people pay in taxes, the more they'll save or spend, production will increase, unemployment will decrease, and prosperity will be just around the corner. But, in practice it isn't working out as it's supposed to. On Jan. 14th, AP carried the report that "The nation's businesses, starting the year mired in recession, intend to ignore the Reagan administration's plea for a 1982 surge in expansion a government survey showed yesterday. And another federal report showed retail sales gaining by a sluggish 0.4 percent in December, an apparent indication that Christmas sales weren't strong enough to make much headway against the current recession. A Commerce Department poll of executives concluded that they now plan to actually cut back spending for new plants and equipment by 0.3 percent this year, . . ."

Hans Sennholz of Grove City College is a recognized authority when it comes to economic and associated matters. He says many Americans just love to be deceived, and they are seldom disappointed. And all this talk about balancing the federal budget is one way they're really deceived. Most people think that a balanced budget would reduce inflation, make more jobs for more people and restore the old time economy. Example: A poll was taken recently by the Los Angeles Times and Ted Turner's Cable News Network. The poll showed that a vast majority of people insist that the most important step to be taken is to balance the budget. Unfortunately, this is the biggest deception of all, since a balanced budget would not stop deficit spending. That's because so much of federal spending doesn't even appear on the budget. They refer to it as off-budget spending. So, remarks Sennholz, "when there is talk of a budget deficit of, say, $60 billion, they think that's all the deficit there is. But there are three additional sets of expenditures that never show on the budget:

1. The expenditures of the Federal Financing Bank within the Department of the Treasury;
2. The spending of government-sponsored enterprises which are already earmarked and can't be changed; and

CONGRESSMAN RON PAUL REPORTS

Congress Gives Itself a "Black Lung" Pay Raise

While the average American continues to be hard hit by government caused inflation, high interest rates and unemployment, Congress has given itself what amounts to another back door pay raise. Hidden within a recent Black Lung Benefits bill for coal miners, was a measure to provide Congressmen with an unlimited tax exemption for their Washington, D.C. living expenses. Prior to passage of this bill Congressmen had a $3,000 ceiling on the amount they could deduct on their income tax for living expenses. Now, they can deduct virtually all of their costs. Characteristically, Congress waited to the last minute as it was preparing to adjourn to sneak this bill through. Unfortunately, I was only one of less than fifty Congressmen who stood in opposition to this bill, which beyond the tax exemption, also increased the government excise tax on coal - thus raising the price of energy to consumers. This legislation, which is the equivalent of Congress giving itself another big pay raise, demonstrates the lack of concern that Congress has for the average American who is (unlike Congress) unable to insulate himself from rising living costs. Recent surveys have shown that a majority of Americans can no longer afford to even purchase a home. Yet Congress, which is rightfully responsible for our disastrous economic problems, continues at taxpayers' expense to assure that their own lifestyles are not disrupted. Moves such as this make it little wonder why polls show that Congress continues to be held in very low esteem by the American people. The Administration's belt-tightening and cut backs should apply across the board - and should especially include Congress which is responsible for our economic problems in the first place. In the real world only those who do their jobs well get pay raises - but then, few would argue that Washington, D.C. bears much resemblance to the world.

3. The government-guaranteed credit operations and their shortfalls."

In regard to this Federal Financing Bank, which most Americans have never heard of, a surprisingly frank and revealing article was published in the Wall Street Journal on December 15, 1981. John J. Fialka, a staff reporter for the WSJ says it is the second largest bank in the land, an institution that has more than $107 billion in assets, operates out of one small office in Washington, D. C., and its only outward sign is "a hand-lettered one that someone has taped on a paint-chipped wall." Staff reporter Fialka says this obscure lender is bigger than Citibank, is a growing giant, and masks federal debts and deficits and drives up interest rates. Following are direct quotes from this important article.

* * * * *

It is called the Federal Financing Bank, or FFB, and it started from scratch in 1974. This summer it shot past Citibank N.A. ($106.1 billion in assets) and next year [1983] it will probably overtake the biggest of them all, Bank of America ($115.7 billion). But whereas Citibank has 22,000 employes and Bank of America has 76,000, the FFB has just seven full-time employes. The success story of this bank, which was intended to streamline the federal government's borrowing, is based on several attributes unique in the world of banking:

- The FFB borrows money from the Treasury at the Treasury's bargain rates and lends the funds to federal agencies and to all users of federally guaranteed loans, including businesses, foreign governments and rural electric cooperatives, at only one-eighth of an interest point higher.
- It is guided in the financial markets by the very brains that run the Treasury itself. For example, Francis X. Cavanaugh, the Treasury's director of government financing, is acting secretary of the FFB.
- Through a variety of arcane procedures, the FFB can be used to "hide" federal debt that would otherwise appear in the federal budget. This aspect of the FFB has attracted a number of eager, well-heeled customers, but it has also attracted critics who charge that the bank's "off-budget" wizardry is making a heavy contribution to the nation's $1 trillion public debt.

Part of the success story of the FFB relates to the fact that there are relatively few members of Congress who understand how it works. Those that do understand are often members of the agriculture committees, and their constituents are solidly for it. "This is such a big honey pot and the lobbies that use it are so powerful that if you just put it higher on the shelf, they'd respond by getting a taller ladder," says one banker who has studied the FFB.... Critics of the FFB, a chorus that has been led by David Stockman, the director of the Office of Management and Budget, argues that it obscures the government credit process and drives up interest rates by providing stiffer competition for private borrowers.... Mr. Stockman has even called it a money laundry.... If Mr. Cavanaugh was the father of the FFB, then the midwife would have to be Paul Volcker, currently the chairman of the Federal Reserve Board....

.... The FFB could simply borrow from the Treasury and the obligations would go to Wall Street in the form of Treasury notes. And there was no legal limit on the amount of credit that could be extended that way. So that is how an obligation of the government of Sudan (guaranteed by the Defense Department), a lease signed by Western Union Corp. (guaranteed by the National Aeronautics and Space Administration), and a debt of the Corn Belt Power Cooperative (guaranteed by the Rural Electrification Administration) all came to be financed at exactly the same rate.... For some federal agencies, the FFB has provided a fiscal renaissance. Take the Farmers Home Administration. As an entity of the Agriculture Department, the FmHA operates three revolving funds that make loans to farmers, ranchers and small communities for a variety of purposes. Through the use of the FFB, the agency expanded its loan capabilities far beyond the amount budgeted for it by Congress. It did this by offsetting the loans with notes...that it sold to the FFB. Although the government still wound up holding the loan, the farm agency cancelled the debt on its books, showing a zero outlay....Since 1974, according to the General Accounting Office, the FmHA has used the FFB to make about $41 billion in loans that are not counted in the federal budget. The REA was even more innovative...it began to guarantee notes of rural electric cooperatives, entitling them to discount the notes at the FFB for cash. Since the FFB is also an "off budget" agency, the transactions didn't appear on the federal budget...In 1976 NASA signed a $786 million, 10-year agreement with Western Union...The arrangement freed the OMB from the burden of budgeting the funds for the system and relieved Congress of the burden of appropriating money for it. The public debt however, was burdened. In 1979 TVA found that it had purchased too much nuclear fuel. So the authority created a California corporation, the Seven States Energy Corp., and sold the fuel to it. Then it arranged for a five-year $2 billion loan through the FFB for Seven States to use in buying the fuel. As it needs the fuel, TVA leases it back from Seven States. As far as the TVA's books are concerned, the fuel is gone - but its memory lingers on - in the public debt. (End of quotes from Wall Street Journal, December 15, 1981).

Hans Sennholz points out that the Reagan Administration is encouraging "off-budget" spending through FFB. There is, for instance, a $21.9 billion item, for purchase of a Strategic Petroleum Reserve. The Energy Secretary is empowered to secure these funds through the FFB, so the amount will not show on this 1982 budget "that cannot be balanced." Such off-budget financing abuses, according to Sennholz, "are the primary cause of the exhaustion of our capital markets, and therefore of high interest rates in the United States.... How can we expect economic recovery and improvement if the 'enlarged federal sector deficit' in the coming year will exceed $150 billion?"

"We must understand," Dr. Sennholz concludes in an article appearing in the January 1982 issue of American Opinion, "that an off-budget loan has the same deleterious effect on the capital markets as a direct budget deficit. As total off-budget demands are at least twice as high as the budget deficit itself, the damage inflicted on the national economy by the former greatly exceeds that inflicted by the latter. Both together manage to keep the economy depressed, raise unemployment, and lower our standards of living. Both are feeding the fires of inflation."

So the "enigma of Reaganomics" is another sham, a cruel deception so long as there are hidden deficits that even Congress knows nothing about. And these deceptions will continue as long as money can be created out of thin air, and as long as there is a privately controlled banking and financial system which issues the currency, sets interest rates, restricts or loosens credit requirements and creates inflation or deflation at will." Can nothing be done about it? Well, there is a clause in the Federal Reserve Act, Section 30 which states: "The right to amend, alter, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved." But wresting control of Congress from the International Money Lords would be a battle like that of David versus Goliath.

PRESIDENT REAGAN'S FATEFUL FIRST YEAR

Sometimes a political cartoon is worth a thousand words. This one was not a typical cartoon. That is, there was no caricature or drawing, it consisted of letters only, spelling out a question and an answer. It appeared in our local daily just after President Reagan had celebrated his first full year in the White House. The question: "What famous Republican President has six letters in his last name, enjoyed the reputation of being a very nice man and told Americans not to worry about his economic policy because the system would work if they gave it the chance?" And the answer, spelled out in upside down, underlined letters: "Herbert Hoover."

The message is portentous because Herbert Clark Hoover was selected by the financial elite of the 1920s to prepare the way for the coming of one Franklin Delano Roosevelt and the socialist New Deal. Hoover's one term was featured by the stock market crash in October 1929, which heralded the Great Depression that was to follow. He was overwhelmingly defeated by Roosevelt in 1932, just as planned. Hoover half a century ago, like Reagan today, tried to stem the tide by introducing new economic policies. In the first year of his administration he pressed for tariff revision (the Hawley-Smoot Tariff Act), he installed a Federal Farm Board, recommended a large public works program, was responsible for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the Emergency Relief Act and some other measures for which Roosevelt has been given credit by establishment historians. But it all was to prepare the way for the coming of Roosevelt and the New Deal. Today, there is much similarity between those days of the Great Depression of fifty years ago and what is today being called a recession. And there is - as our cartoonist suggested - a growing fear that like Hoover, Reagan has been selected by the financial elite to usher in, not a domestic new deal, but a universal new deal called the New World Order. Without calling a spade a spade, or a Trilateralist a Trilateralist, and while displaying an overweening zealotry for the Reagan program, columnist M. Stanton Evans suggests what may be happening. In an article in the conservative weekly Human Events, January 23, Evans writes and we quote while adding an occasional bracketed note of identification in the case of certain people he names.

THE BAKER NETWORK

REAGAN REVOLUTION - OR BUSH REBELLION?

The dumping of Richard Allen and the departure of Lyn Nofziger [who resigned on January 21st] from the White House staff together highlight one of the most bizarre reversals in the history of our politics. With these leave-takings and associated changes in the government, the Administration of Ronald Reagan is about to be captured by "moderate" [Eastern Establishment] Republicans who opposed his presidential aspirations [?]. The White House itself is heavily tilted toward the followers of George Bush (and others of even more liberal persuasion), while the management of foreign policy is firmly in the grasp of those who came to power as acolytes of Henry Kissinger. Here and there some pockets of Reaganite resistance remain, but they are isolated and under siege. The soulful plaint of Reaganites in one department after another is that they are surrounded by Bush-style "moderates," careerists, and Carter holdovers [that is, by Trilateralists, CFRists, and one-worlders]. Numerous followers of the President, meanwhile, are on the streets, hoping some Bush or Kissinger type will look with favor on their application for employment.

By all accounts, the dominant force inside the White House is Chief of Staff James Baker [CFR], who fought against Reagan as a delegate hunter for Gerald Ford in '76 and again as Bush's campaign manager in 1980. Unsuccessful in electoral politics, Baker is apparently a master of inside maneuver. His influence is spread through the White House staff, communications setup, congressional liaison, and the Republican National Committee. Most publicized of Baker's aides is Richard Darman [CFR], a follower of liberal GOPer Elliot Richardson [CFR], who controls the flow of information to the President and is considered a rising presence in the White House. Darman is joined by the new chief of lobbying efforts, Kenneth Duberstein, a former aide to Senator Jacob Javits of New York. Over at the RNC [Republican National Committee], Baker's man, recently installed, is Deputy Chairman Richard Bond, former staffer for Senator Charles Mathias of Maryland and assistant to Bush.

It would be hard to imagine three appointments in more critical spots, drawn from sources more distant from the grass-roots conservatism that boosted Reagan to the presidency. Add to these the control of White House communications by Baker's shop and the pervasive influence of the non-Reaganite wing becomes apparent. Even the Washington Post, not given to hard-line comment on such matters, observes that the White House staff today has a distinctly non-conservative look.

At the State Department, the paradox is just as evident. Alexander Haig, a protege of Kissinger, has dashed the wistful hopes of those who thought he had been converted to a hawk-like posture. On most issues he has pursued the Kissinger line, and he has staffed his agency with followers of his one-time boss such as Lawrence Eagleburger [CFR], and with careerists such as Walter Stoessel [CFR]. The Reagan State Department looks very much like a Kissinger State Department, minus Kissinger himself. Similar problems exist in other agencies, including Justice, Education, Defense, the Peace Corps, the Arms Control and Disarmament agency, etc., and the policies followed are of a pace with the appointments. There are Reaganite Cabinet officers of course but most of these don't have the clout of State and Justice, and many of them have "moderate" underlings. The net result must be, and is, an erosion of the Reagan mandate. At the White House Reaganite hopes are pinned to presidential counselor Edwin Meese, but his influence is perceived as waning while that of Baker rises, the kind of perception that acts as self-fulfilling prophecy. Allen's ouster is being treated as a Meese set-back and the media abound with stories leaked by "White House aides" downgrading Meese and questioning his staff, and singing the praises of Baker's operation. One story went so far as to suggest Meese himself was on his way out (vehemently denied by the White House). The transfer of William Clark from State to national security adviser is an imponderable in all of this. He is a long-time Reagan loyalist. But his knowledge of foreign policy is thin, and a major argument for his new appointment was compatibility with Haig and the State Department professionals. Unless Meese and Clark assert themselves strongly in the days ahead the Reagan revolution could soon become the Bush rebellion. (End of article by Stanton Evans).

With apologies to Mr. Evans, there remains one leading question: Does all of the foregoing reveal a plot against President Reagan, or is President Reagan privy to the plot and a part of it? Leaders of the New Right suggest the latter.

On a national TV broadcast, Paul Weyrich said. "I think that President Reagan offered hope in the first few months of the administration. but that has diminished and we're back to the old traditional Republican way . . .of looking at things . . .the politics of sacrifice, and it isn't working." Another leader of the New Right observed that the President had said "The buck stops here," must be held responsible for what has happened to his Administration. Again comes the leading question: Is the record one of disappointment, or of deceit? Some concerned citizens see an answer to that question in the news that a New York luncheon for Ronald Reagan was given last week by David Rockefeller.

Ronald Reagan the candidate received a majority of the votes because he said among other things: "The federal government must balance its budget in order to avoid runaway inflation. No other cure can work." But he has retreated or has been forced to retreat from that stand and now virtually conceded that this is an impossibility. And the voters remember; and this is an election year. He said that the Carter-created Department of Energy must be liquidated. But it continues to function; and the voters remember. He was very insistent on his promise that the Carter-created and NEA-operated Department of Education be eliminated and control of schools returned to the local level. But Terrel H. Bell still controls so-called public education from his offices in Washington, D.C. And the voters surely remember; and this is an election year. In all of these matters he has retreated or been forced to retreat. He promised to reduce taxes, and this he did. But he did it by borrowing money, increasing the federal debt and the fiscal deficit. He promised to cut down on the regulations that were hamstringing the economy. He has done so, but he has also restructured the Regional Governance System so that those regulations which remain can be better enforced. And in some cases, he has eliminated a regulation in order that it may become a law. This, he said, was the reason for his allowing tax-exemptions for private and church schools. He said, in effect that the IRS should not make such a regulation (and could not enforce it, perhaps), so he ordered IRS to cease and desist so that Congress could pass a law dealing with the matter (laws are easier to enforce than administrative regulations). Whether this was a copout on the part of Reagan who had to backtrack on one more decision, we'll probably never know. But it amounts merely to an argument over which is the better weapon to kill non-government managed schools, the IRS or the Congress.

Also, Reagan said that he would abolish the draft registration, and here again he has reversed himself, and this is an election year. What his aides consider the biggest and most serious reversal had to do with the bankrupt Social Security System. He put out certain orders and then had to recall them. And this is an election year. He kept one other promise: he put a woman on the Supreme Court, but a woman about as conservative as that other woman, UN Ambassador Kirkpatrick. Another real loss of Presidential confidence and integrity, one that pleased the anti-Reaganites no end, had to do with the unemployment situation. Unemployment is said to be 8.9%, is slated to go much higher. In an attempt to justify this, President Reagan displayed some very bad arithmetic. At his latest press conference he said there are "a million more people working than there were in 1980." He also claimed the rise in unemployment was a "continuation of an increase that got under way in the last several months of 1980." He then used some wrong figures to prove his point, and his opponents were quick to contradict him, as did the official records of the Labor Department. Deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes said the President had "misspoke." But that flap, plus the one he made in his attempt to explain the school tax mixup, gave the media a chance to really denigrate the President. The Miami Herald, a Knight-Ridder biggie, carried a lead editorial that was headlined "President Misspoke." It asked: "Is President Reagan really ignorant of the nation's economy, or was he deliberately misleading the television audience?...His was no error of detail. The President completely reversed the trends of unemployment and of the growth in total jobs since 1980.

Such a fundamental distortion suggests that he either doesn't understand those trends, which would be shocking, or that his intent was to deceive, which is unthinkable...."

Whether there be distortions or deceptions, there are these facts, which we have gleaned from a number of "hard money" newsletters:

- 1) Auto sales are the worst in 20 years, meaning real depression for workers in that industry, and all other industries associated with auto production.
- 2) The real estate market is in a kind of coma, with little signs of returning activity so long as interest and mortgage rates remain so high.
- 3) The Reagan Administration has, to use Howard Ruff's term, "run out of steam legislatively and emotionally." It is beset with internal strife: The resignation of Richard Allen, of Lyn Nofziger, the rumored resignation of Edwin Meese, David Stockman's embarrassing disclosures; problems like those of Jimmy Carter in his administration: Bert Lance, Bourne, Brother Billy, etc.
- 4) There is no real trend to the economy, except for the continuing mergers of big corporations and a record number of bankruptcies of small businesses that can't find any place to merge.

In addition to this, here are some important things that have not been told the people by the controlled media:

- 1) Congress has passed a law allowing emergency "bank holidays". All older readers will remember what happened when FDR declared a bank holiday in 1932.
- 2) The real federal debt is said to be over twelve trillion dollars and is still growing at a dangerous rate because Reagan prefers deficit spending over budget balancing.
- 3) The Social Security system is bankrupt, despite the massive increases in the Social Security taxes that are already scheduled by law.
- 4) It is now legal for the Federal Reserve System to buy up foreign government bonds as a reserve for the U.S. dollar - fiat money to bail out Third World and Communist-controlled countries that might otherwise default on billions of dollars of loans to U.S. Megabanks.
- 5) The Megabankers earn most of their profits from loans made to foreign nations and businesses - loans that are "secured" by collateral the banks can not repossess; therefore the IMF-Federal Reserve guarantees, with U.S. taxpayers' and fiat money.
- 6) Hundreds - perhaps thousands - of U.S. banks are technically bankrupt and the only reason they can still keep their doors open is that the government allows them to count as assets loans that are only worth a fraction of their official "book" value.
- 7) U.S. farmers are facing a crisis that rivals any slump seen since the 1930s. And so are rural banks.

It's a terrible economic course we're running. But as an old departed friend once said, "We know things will get better because things are getting worse."

THE MAKE-BELIEVE RETURN OF STATES' RIGHTS

Six months ago, on July 29, 1981 at a Conference of State Legislators held in Atlanta, President Ronald Reagan said, "My administration is staging a quiet federal revolution." Today that federal revolution is no longer a quiet one. In what was purported to be a "State of the Union" address to Congress, Reagan laid out the broad principles of his "New Federalism" program. As he spoke, there was much cued applause at appropriate places. But when he finished, a storm broke out. Some called his address little more than a diversion to shift the spotlight from deficits, unemployment, and other fiscal and economic problems that have been growing more and more serious. They said that instead of trying to solve today's problems, the President talked about a long-term plan - an eight year plan - that Reagan wouldn't be in the White House long enough to see it completed even if Congress approved it. Others insisted that regardless of the merits of his New Regionalism, first things had to come first. And first things had to do with hungry people, people out of a job, factories closing down and businesses going bankrupt. Still others, especially the Governors of States and Mayors of Cities, wanted to know where they were going to get the money to finance all these welfare programs that the federal government was trying to shift onto them. The arguments became so intense, and so confusing, that it was difficult to know who was promoting what, and why. The President probably started it all by reversing himself several times on several important issues. He was not going to let the Red Chinese government tell him what weapons he could or could not sell to Nationalist Chinese government on Taiwan. Then on January 11 he reversed himself and said he wouldn't permit the sale of sophisticated jet fighters to the Free Chinese government. No sale of advanced aircraft is required "because no military need for such aircraft exists," said State Department official Alan Romberg. There arose immediate cries of protest from the New Right which had been growing tired of Reagan's disregard of issues they thought important. Possibly as an attempt at appeasement came an order disallowing IRS persecution of private and church schools and other non-profit institutions on charges of practicing race discrimination. Then came an immediate outcry from "civil rights" advocates and Reagan reversed himself once again; said he did it so Congress could pass a law denying tax exemption to schools practicing racial discrimination. By this time, those leaders of the New Right decided some action was required. They met on January 21 in Washington, issued a biting critique charging that Reagan had made a turn to the left and abandoned the policy goals which had caused them to vote for him in the first place. Said a White House aide, "We badly need the enthusiastic backing from this base group of Reagan's supporters." So, again an act of appeasement: Reagan formed a Commission and named William Buckley and Clare Booth Luce as members. Somebody must have thought they were conservatives. But the protests continued: The real conservatives demanded no new tax increases, an all-out effort to cut social-entitlement programs, support of bills barring abortions, end of busing to achieve school integration, the State Department must be cleansed of all pro-Kissinger (Rockefeller) influence; the Department was labeled "Haig's plague." U.S. News reported that when asked if they had anyone to turn to except Reagan, Paul Weyrich, President of Coalitions for America, "chilled White House officials by warning that in the upcoming November elections the voters "can vote for conservative Democrats or they can stay home."

This warning may have had some effect, at least temporarily, because Reagan had been straddling the political fence on whether to ask for bigger taxes on luxury items (gasoline being called a luxury), or to hold out for no increases in taxes of any kind. And in his State of the Union address he stuck with his original promise not to raise taxes, but to continue to cut them. Further tries at appeasement of this "base group of Reagan's supporters" might be read into the fact that Reagan again spoke of "dismantling" the Departments of Education and Energy. And, at least on the surface, Reagan's so-called New Federalism seemed to be a sincere plan for returning to the Sovereign States the rights and powers that belonged to them Constitutionally, but had been gradually gobbled up by a power-hungry federal monster that had got beyond control of the States or the people.

A national election year, a time when all of the Representatives and one-third of the Senators can be replaced or re-elected, is a time for political expediency on the part of "ins" who don't want to become "outs." And it was obvious to every politician who heard Reagan's address that he was proposing a long-range program that had little or nothing to do with the immediate problems of today and now. So, since nothing could be done about the recession, deficits, unemployment, bankruptcies and idle industrial plants, a scapegoat had to be found. The blame for all this must be placed on something besides Reaganomics. And, wonder of wonders, a previously sacrosanct and untouchable institution was selected. The Federal Reserve System was the culprit. It was the goat that would bear the sins of the Reagan Administration and the 97th Congress! And, lo and behold, people in high places began saying out loud some of the things some of us have been saying about the Federal Reserve for many years.

In a recent press conference President Reagan said that the Federal Reserve System is autonomous. That means the Fed is its own boss, governs itself and nobody can give it any orders except its own stockholders. Reagan as much as admitted that he could do nothing about the Fed, could only appeal to it for the support he had not been getting. Then in his State of the Union address, President Reagan again referred to the Fed. He said that economic recovery depended upon, among other things, "a healthy dollar and a stable monetary policy - the latter a responsibility of the Federal Reserve System." Unquote. Then, when the political storm broke after the President's address, a person who had supported, lived with and worked with the Federal Reserve System for all of his professional life, came out with an unexpected blast against the Fed. Treasury Secretary Donald Regan told a joint Economic Committee of Congress that the Federal Reserve was to blame for the current deep recession. He warned that further "erratic" control of the money supply could derail Reagan's program for economic recovery. But Regan wouldn't go all the way. He said "the president is not going to call for (the) resignation" of Paul Volcker, present chairman of the central bank. Still, said Regan, "A steady monetary policy is absolutely essential if we are to steady the financial markets and reduce interest rates. Stability is the key requirement for any permanent recovery in output and unemployment." So, we have our scapegoat -- our present economic predicament is the fault of the Federal Reserve System but, supposedly, there isn't a thing we can do about it. Because the Federal Reserve Corporation is "an independent, autonomous agency which makes its own decisions."

However, says President Reagan, there is something else that can and should be done: The Congress should approve and proceed to implement his New Federalism program, which at least is a diversion and at most is presented as a long-range cure of our economic ills.

It is important to understand that there is nothing new about this slogan "New Federalism." It's been used before, and for a similar purpose. On August 8, 1969, President Richard Nixon said: "After a third of a century of power flowing from the people and the states to Washington, it is time for a New Federalism in which power, funds and responsibility will flow from Washington to the states and the people." This statement was made when Nixon was urging Congress to approve his "revenue sharing" plan; which Congress did. It should also be understood that it was President Nixon who first initiated the Concept of Regional Governance. He divided the Nation into Ten Federal Regions each with its own regional capital and its appointed Regional Council to govern and administer the disbursement of those revenue sharing funds. In short, Nixon's New Federalism consisted of the establishment of a new fourth, and unconstitutional branch of federal government. In theory, it was expected that State and local governments would be free to use Nixon's "shared revenue" as they saw fit (and as Nixon had indicated). But it didn't work out that way. Regional and Sub-Regional authorities were set up, and before any of this "shared revenue" could be used, the express purpose of its use had to be approved by the appropriate federal agency. Revenue Sharing simply provided a way that could be used by the federal administration to control state and local administrations in all their development and promotional projects. This was the basis of that first "New Federalism."

Seven and a half years later a new Republican President borrows the same old slogan, "New Federalism," and proposes another step in the development and completion of the Regional Governance Concept. Again, the operation of some programs, especially welfare programs, will be turned over to the States for administration and operation. But, because there is much money involved, the president proposes that a federal trust fund be established to provide some of the money the States will need. So, here is nothing more than an extension of the Revenue Sharing program. The power to administer will be turned over to the States and their agencies, but the money will be provided, but only after the particular program has been approved by the appropriate federal agency! And for this purpose, the Ten Federal Regional Councils are in the appointed positions in their respective Regional Capitals to control and direct! This is hardly a returning to the States the powers and rights conferred by the Tenth Amendment to the United States Constitution:

The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people.

One more peculiar aspect of President Reagan's New Federalism concerns the Departments of Education and Energy. Among President Reagan's many campaign promises was the assurance that as soon as he was able, he would eliminate these two new departments that had been created by President Carter. But Secretaries were duly appointed, they continued to operate. In fact, when he restructured and re-established the Ten Federal Regions with their respective capitals and appointed administrative councils, Reagan included these two departments in the Regional makeup. Still, in his State of the Union address, possibly to appease the New Right, he said: "The budget plan I submit on February 8 will realize major savings by dismantling the Departments of Energy and Education, and by eliminating ineffective subsidies for business." Notice the phrase "by dismantling the Departments." Not by eliminating, but by dismantling. Which implies that the departments may disappear in name but that their activities will be shifted to other federal agencies. That is, if the departments are even dismantled. For, if Reagan really intended to do away with them, then why include them specifically in his Executive Order # 12314, establishing Federal Regional Councils?

One other thing. It is known that, along with President Nixon, Governor Reagan was a proponent and an official participant in the creation of the Federal Regional Governance System. In fact, California became a test State for some of the experiments in federal power-grabbing. As President, he has a dream: that of not only operating a National Regional Government; but of establishing a Regional World Government, composed initially of Canada, Mexico, and the United States. Unlike Reagan's proposed federal revolution, Canada under the leadership of Trudeau has already undergone its revolution. It has involved a change in principles, values and direction. The Trudeau policy entails federal control of every major activity in every region of Canada. His is the socialist credo: personal freedom must be subordinated to the collective good. The only way to achieve this: centralization of power is essential. A government is not created to serve the individual, it is created for the individual to serve it, for the common good. Moreover, Trudeau is dedicated to the United Nation's New International Economic Order and to the One World Government which must follow. Trudeau described his navigation of the Canadian Ship of State in these words: "I have spun the wheel and I know that the rudder is beginning to press against the waves of the sea... The observer who is on the deck and smoking his pipe, or drinking his tea, sees the horizon in much the same direction and he doesn't realize that he will find himself disembarking at a different island than the one he thought he was sailing for!" (Quotation compliments of Globescan, U.S. office, 1545 New York Ave., N.E., Washington, D.C. 20002. 1 year (24 issues) $125).

So much for the plight of our longtime friend and ally Canada. Trudeau seeks to legalize a new constitution which would make of our northern neighbor a totally Socialized State, a thinly disguised dictatorship with all property rights sacrificed and individual freedoms curtailed. As for our neighbor to the south, it has been publicly proclaimed that the Mexican government looks upon Cuba's Castro as its best friend, and looks to Washington with dislike and distrust. Currently much agitation is being stirred up through a Communist-inspired demand for the return of "stolen Mexican land" in Texas, Arizona, Mexico and California. And against this background, with Socialism to the north of us, incipient Communism to the South of us, and with Welfarism and Corporate Socialism polluting our own body politic, President Reagan voices the hope that he can create a North American Common Market similar to the European Common market which already has integrated its members into a Regional World Government. Its latest move: the call for installation on January 1, 1985 of a "European Community passport" for all of its inhabitants, regardless of country of original origin. Again quoting Globescan: "The pincer is closing on the U.S.! Europe and Africa are Socialist; and most of Asia and South-East Asia also. Latin America is unstable - the world is in a terrible crisis provoked by Socialism and financed by an International Establishment intent on having now - right now - a unified world that they can control."

WE WOULDN'T "LET POLAND BE POLAND"

If the national polls are correct, most Americans seem to believe the Reagan Administration has no sound and effective foreign policy. We believe that they are wrong. Our foreign policy has been the same under every President since FDR, ever since the Council on Foreign Relations began influencing or dictating that foreign policy. Basically, it has been the policy of spending money we don't have to win friends and bribe enemies for the benefit of a financial elite. A case in point is the recent spending of $71 million of our money to pay the interest on the Polish Communist government's debt to U.S. Megabankers. We can add a second example: That of sending food to Poland and offering to cooperate with its Totalitarian, Police State government in the distribution of that food, on the trumped-up excuse that the Polish Catholic Church which is potentially the biggest service organization any country ever had, is not able to handle food distribution to its people. And there is a third current example of a slightly different kind:

The International Communications Agency, new name for the old United States Information Agency, spent half a million dollars for a lavish propaganda production called "Let Poland Be Poland." It was a television show that included messages from allegedly allied world leaders, featured narrations by Charlton Heston, Orson Wells, Henry Fonda, Glenda Jackson, Max von Sydow; Frank Sinatra sang a song in Polish; Bob Hope talked about the jamming of programs radioed to Russia. There was some good Polish music; and it was a complete flop. Even the Washington Post and the New York Times said so. Some of the European television stations broadcast bits of the program in which their own leaders spoke, cut out the rest of the 90-minute propaganda extravaganza. A British reviewer who sat through it called it a "devastating flop." The London Times said it was "almost as dull as an East European propaganda film." The Amsterdam de Volkskrant commented on the lack of good taste on the part of the American producers, said the use of movie stars to help steer foreign policy "ill fits our norms." The only success for "Let Poland Be Poland" was the fact that in Israel a half hour of the 90-minute program was televised. But the independent Ha'aretz daily said that the Kremlin and the Polish government would have been much more impressed by strong economic measures than with a television show.

All things considered, our alleged allies in Europe and the Pacific have not been impressed, or cooperative, in our dealings with Poland since the Solidarity campaigns began. Their memories are longer than ours, especially the countries that were ravaged by the forces of Hitler's National Socialism, or the USSR's International Socialism. Let us recall a few facts that Americans may have forgotten, but Europeans will remember.

The World Almanac for 1982 briefs the background sufficiently: "A worldwide financial panic and economic depression began with the Oct. 1929 U.S. stock market crash and the May 1931 failure of the Austrian Credit-Anstalt. A credit crunch caused international bankruptcies and unemployment.....The condition continued almost unabated on a worldwide scale." The financial elitists had milked the globe dry and in order to prevent total worldwide chaos it was decided that another world war was necessary. Hitler had come to power in Germany, was ripe for such a move, if he could be supplied with enough money and munitions. American, British and German financiers supplied Hitler with the necessary funds to build his war machine. Anyone finding this difficult to believe should read Antony Sutton's thoroughly documented book, "Wall Street and the Rise of Hitler" (176 Press, Seal Beach, CA 90740). Revisionist history will indicate that, just as the Great Depression was planned, just as the war was planned, just as the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor was planned, there also was a Master Plan which had to do with World Government and world control of world resources, including human resources. To establish this New World Order, it was planned to create two gigantic powers that would oppose each other in the squeezing together and shaping of the New Order. Those two powers were to be the United States of America, the seat of Finance Capitalism; and the Soviet Socialist Republic of Russia, the seat of International Communism. A second world war would serve to put these two giants in their respective places. Germany would provide the instrument, and Poland would be the spark that would ignite a continent. Note this careful timing:

The green light apparently was given on Sept. 30, 1938 when Adolf Hitler and Neville Chamberlain signed the deceptive Munich Pact. This marked the start of a period of ten months of feverish activity on the part of Nazi Germany, and a time of placid appeasement on the part of Great Britain. Chamberlain called it "peace in our time." Then, after the stage was set:

- * On August 23, 1939 Germany and the USSR signed a nonaggression treaty, one which included clauses providing for the conquest and the partition of Poland between them.
- * Two days later, on August 25 a treaty of alliance between Poland and Great Britain was signed, whereby Britain would immediately come to the aid of Poland if that country were attacked.
- * Seven days later, On September 1 Germany invaded Poland.
- * Two days later, On September 3 Britain declared war on Germany. France followed a few hours later.
- * Meanwhile, Russia invaded and took over Eastern Poland, attacked Finland took Latvia, Estonia and Lithuania; and the Allies did nothing about this aggressive action; merely accepted Russia as a full-fledged ally when Hitler and Stalin split, and the United States poured lend-lease materials into the USSR, at the expense of our own fighting men, especially those with General MacArthur in the Pacific.

Still later, when Germany had been defeated, the Allied leaders permitted the Soviets to take over most of the countries of Eastern Europe, East Germany, and Poland. We gave Poland to Russia in 1945!! Yet, speaking on April 9 1944, the then Secretary of State Cordell Hull declared that "Liberation from the German yoke will give the people of Europe a new and magnificent opportunity to fulfill their democratic aspirations. It is important to our national interests to encourage the establishment in Europe of strong and progressive governments."

Remember that World War II began for the publicly avowed purpose of protecting Poland from conquest by a totalitarian, Police State. Kenneth DeCourcy in "The English Review of World Affairs," March, 1945, wrote: "If the war is to end with the Poland we guaranteed blotted out, . . . then the whole continentalist theory will have been shattered and the object of war not attained. . . This will be treating an ally worse than we treat ex-enemy nations." And Congressman Hamilton Fish in his book, "The Challenge of World Communism" (1946) wrote: "When the San Francisco [United Nations] Conference, and the Potsdam Conference failed to undo the great wrong done to the Polish people as a nation, President Truman should have insisted on fair and unfettered elections, and the establishment of a democratic government free of Communist control. Instead, he joined in the betrayal of Poland following the appeasement policy of his predecessor...President Truman and Secretary Byrnes, those two worried heirs of Roosevelt's foreign policies, let the millions of Polish allies down."

When the United Nations had been formed, the Communist-established government at Lublin, Poland was accepted as a bona fide government of the Polish people, without any say-so on their part whatsoever. The Polish people had been sold out to the Communists, by our own leaders. Who then was there to "Let Poland Be Poland"? The Soviets took charge, a constitution was written in 1952, was forced upon Poland and make it a "people's republic" copied after that of the USSR. Poland then was told to join the Communist Council for Mutual Economic Assistance (COMECON), and in 1955 Poland became a charter member of the Warsaw Treaty Organization. From that time onward Poland was a slave state of the USSR. And who then was there to cry "Let Poland Be Poland"?

What did the people of Europe think when official America at this late date said "Let Poland Be Poland"? One of the most perceptive answers was given us by Intelligence Digest, a British weekly review. On January 13, 1982, the following was published and we quote:

* * * * *

The leaders of the Soviet Union are genuinely puzzled over all the fuss that is being kicked up over events in Poland. They have a clear recollection that the United States in particular and the West in general agreed to the political and geographical fact that Poland was in Moscow's sphere of influence, and that Warsaw must have a government which is fully approved of by Moscow. When was all this agreed? In 1945 in San Francisco when the UN was being set up. The West, through the UN, gave in to Stalin's insistence that the Soviet-appointed, communist Lublin government be recognized and that its delegation be accredited to the UN. By that act and from that moment Poland, which was already occupied by the Red Army, was ceded to the Soviet Union, before the world forum of the UN. The seeds of Solidarity's destruction were sown then. That was the time when the West should have drawn lines, dug in heels and refused to fudge or compromise.

You have to admit that Moscow has a point. If we recognized, however reluctantly, the reality of Soviet hegemony over Poland, then why should we pretend that today such hegemony does not exist? Or are we trying to terminate it without offering anything in exchange? This is what Moscow means when it talks of US interference....The Soviets negotiate from the basic premise that what is communist must remain so, but what is not is negotiable. Or, to put it simply, what is theirs is theirs to keep, while what is ours we will talk about. What a tragedy that this was not understood in 1945. What a disaster that it is still not understood today.

Poland is not a problem for the Soviet Union, it is an opportunity. And it is exploiting the opportunity to the full with considerable success.... The main thrust of Soviet foreign policy in Europe has always been to weaken Europe's ties with the United States. This will create both a feeling of isolation and the conditions for Finlandization. Thus Europe will eventually be absorbed in the Soviet sphere by political and economic means. Already US foreign policy is portrayed as being 'simplistic' and therefore fraught with danger, particularly for Europeans. Moscow hopes that the Europeans will not give the Americans the full backing they expect. This will encourage latent isolationism in America, particularly if the grain embargo hits the Mid West while the Europeans continue to trade with the Soviets.

This potential development is in fact the most dangerous aspect of the entire crisis, and it is one which the Soviet Union and its allies are exploiting for all its worth. The prize is very tempting. A neutralized or non-aligned Europe would in fact become by degrees a pro-Soviet Europe. With the disintegration of NATO acting as an effective shield, the change in the balance of power would have a great impact on the Middle East and northern Africa.

The Polish crisis, while posing serious problems for the Soviets, is therefore seen as a great opportunity to further Soviet foreign policy. It will be interesting to see, when all the dust has settled, which side comes out with an increased advantage. At the moment it looks as though the Soviet Union, in the long run, will finish ahead. Of course there will be nothing dramatic in Western Europe, just a shifting of positions and a change of attitudes which will find a response among pro-isolationists in the US Congress. (End of comment from Intelligence Digest, 17 Rodney Road, Cheltenham, Glos. GL50 1HX, United Kingdom. Subscription rates upon request).

The foregoing provides an excellent commentary on the attitudes and opinions of the Soviet and the governments of Western Europe. But it should be understood that this digest concerns governments. So, Intelligence Digest predicts that Moscow should be the winner in this round and could succeed in weakening NATO so much that Western Europe might become Finlandized. But, we must realize that behind governments, behind countries, behind peoples even, there is a financial elite that controls governments, countries, and peoples, because it controls the money and the economy which are needed for national survival. So, in the final analysis, no government will win, only that financial elite can win. The $71 million we have paid to the Megabankers via Poland is a drop in the bucket. Poland's debt is estimated at $25 billion, owed to Chase Manhattan et al. But they won't lose that money, though it won't be paid by Poland. Thanks to the infamous 1980 Monetary Control Act and similar measures, that debt will be paid by you and me. Not only that, but Poland, and the Soviet bloc, needs more money, and we'll foot the bill. Example: Zycie Warszawy is a Polish newspaper owned by the Communists. Its deputy editor, Janusz Stefanowicz, was recently asked how other nations could help Poland. He answered: "First, leave us alone for the moment. Then let us talk about help, but let it be substantial... I hope that in a month or two we can tell our partners, 'We have introduced a new economic system and in order to start the motor we must have some fuel. So please help us.' This may be the situation this spring. We will certainly need over $10 billion. Anything less would be merely cosmetic."

Unless something drastic and unforeseen occurs, Poland will get the $10 billion or more, Communist control will continue, Solidarity will just melt into the mass of enforced labor. And, thanks to the Fed, the Treasury and an obliging Congress, we'll foot the bill. This seems to be what the Trilateral controlled Reagan Administration really means when it says, 38 years too late: "Let Poland Be Poland."

Year Twenty-Nine.....Number Seven.....February 12, 1982

STATE'S NEW WAR AGAINST CHRISTIAN SCHOOLS

Congress shall make no law respecting the establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof;...

THE EMERGENCY. The following was written under date of January 28, 1982: "This is an emergency letter of very great importance and urgency. As you know, the administration has introduced a bill which is supposedly to control racism in Christian Schools. My father, the Rev. R.J. Rushdoony, was one of eight men who met with presidential aide Edwin Meese and several Justice Department lawyers in the White House for almost two hours on Tuesday, January 26. He took with him the great constitutional lawyer William Bentley Ball, to give a legal analysis of the Reagan bill....My father said that the following things stood out clearly in the meeting:

- 1) Public policy is given priority over religious freedom. If public policy can require this step today, will not the IRS have the power tomorrow to require women pastors and priests, as well as homosexual ones, as public policy? Mr. Meese said, yes, if Congress chooses so, but it was not likely to happen in this administration.
- 2) Former IRS Commissioner Jerome Kurtz has admitted on the stand, before a Congressional Committee, that in their study of 538 Christian Schools (in areas where they expected to find racial discrimination) only one did discriminate. Add to this Bob Jones University, which forbids inter-racial dating and marriage of its students. Racism is clearly not a problem if only two out of over 12,000 schools have discrimination! Why tar the whole movement as racist? There was no answer given.
- 3) Every effort is being made to rush this bill through at once. Normally, except for a declaration of war, a bill is in committee for months, for hearings and testimony by all sides. They refuse now to give us time. Is this a declaration of war on the Christian School?.....

Write or telephone, or both, at once: the White House, your senators and your congressman, and ask that the bill to control Christian Schools be killed....

Very sincerely,
(Mrs.) Joanna Monesajian
P.O. Box 673
Angels Camp, CA 95222 "

This was followed by a second letter, dated January 30, 1982:

".....As you know, the president has introduced a bill into Congress to control Christian Schools and to place them under the IRS as supposedly racist institutions. Now we have another bill, Senate Concurrent Resolution no. 59, which has been introduced by over 30 senators. This resolution says that all Christian Schools are under the Civil Rights Act and cannot therefore discriminate.

What Does This Mean? The Civil Rights Act forbids discrimination with respect to race, sex, or creed. This will mean that these Christian Schools (and the churches of which they are a part) cannot refuse to hire, for example, a homosexual, an atheist, a Buddhist, or raise any questions about the faith of prospective staff-members.

Both bills are very bad, and very dangerous....To call the White House and register your protest by telephone, dial 202-456-7639."

THE BILLS. S.2024 is "A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to prohibit the granting of tax-exempt status to organizations maintaining schools with racially discriminatory policies; to the Committee on Finance." This bill was introduced by Senator Dole, by request of the president. A similar bill, HR 5313, was introduced in the House of Representatives at the same time.

Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 59 is the more dangerous bill. It was introduced on January 28, 1982 by the following senators. Hart, Durenberger, Moynihan, Weicker, Bradley, Kennedy, Schmitt, Tsongas, D'Amato, Cranston, Bumpers, Glenn, Sarbanes, Williams, Pell, Percy, Riegle, Dixon, Exon, Burdick, Proxmire, Baucus, Jackson, Leahy, Levin, Gorton, DeConcini, Eagleton, and Biden. The bill was referred to the Committee of Finance. Here is the text of that Resolution, as published in the Congressional Record:

"Whereas, the Congress provided the legislative basis for denying tax exemptions to private schools that discriminate on the basis of race when it passed the Civil Rights Act of 1964.

"Whereas, in 1971, the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia stated in Green vs. Connally that: 'The Internal Revenue Code provisions on charitable exemptions and deductions must be construed to avoid frustrations of Federal policy. Under the conditions of today they can no longer be construed so as to provide to private schools operated on a racially discriminatory premise the support of the exemptions and deductions which Federal tax law affords to charitable organizations and their sponsors.' and the Supreme Court of the United States has affirmed that decision.

"Whereas, it has been the policy of the Internal Revenue Service since 1970 to deny the benefits of tax-exempt status and deductibility of contributions to racially discriminatory private schools.

"Therefore be it resolved, It is the sense of the Congress that current Federal law clearly authorizes and requires the Internal Revenue Service to deny tax exempt status and deductibility of contributions to private schools that practice racial discrimination."

THE INTENT. Though loosely written and ambiguous, this S. Con. Res. 59, all set to be rushed through Congress as though it were a Declaration of War, does two things: It places Christian Schools (and by inference, the churches that conduct them) under the Civil Rights Act of 1964, and it becomes retroactive to 1970, an ex post facto law, therefore clearly unconstitutional. But, bypassing, overriding or ignoring the Constitution has become a common practice since the time of FDR. In discussing this bill, the constitutional lawyer, William B. Ball comments:

" [The bill] permits IRS to investigate and influence all of the policies, programs, rights, privileges, and activities of religious schools, it violates the constitutional proscriptions against excessive church-state entanglements. It ... singles out for express disapproval (and consequent penalty) and religious 'belief that requires discrimination on the basis of race.' It is absolutely incredible - and completely without valid precedent - that an Act of Congress would so specify a sincerely held point of religious conviction for secular punishment. The precedent such a provision would set, in the hands of future legislators, courts, and Government officials, is frightening to consider. "Free exercise of religion' would become, instead of a preferred freedom, a mere privilege, to be enjoyed only at the sufferance of Government..."

THE BACKGROUND. Under the title "Mass Psychology," Ben Barker, editor of "Crisis Advisory Newsletter," remarked that "Our educational system is the cruelist hoax of all. Without the ability to think, to activate his intellectual processes, man is very similar to the lower animal forms. He cannot postpone appetite gratification, acts impulsively and selfishly and appears incapable of long-range planning. This describes the product of our state-run schools that I see about me today. They [the products] are mass creatures and respond to mass psychology and motivational techniques ..." Of course, that is the way Big Brother would want the masses to be. And the Socialists, Humanists, and assorted Change Agents have worked hard to achieve this product through the state-run schools.

However, because of rampant amorality, lawlessness, and approaching social chaos, there has begun a slow but definite awakening on the part of many parents, especially Christian parents. The result: attendance at schools run by the government has decreased rapidly, even as the costs of maintaining state-run schools have risen just as rapidly. And attendance at constantly increasing Christian and private schools has grown amazingly - and satisfactorily to both parents and students. There are solid reasons for the phenomenon. Parents who have chosen to send their children to schools of their choice, want their children to escape from the state-mandated religion, Secular Humanism. They want their children to be taught the basics: reading, writing, arithmetic, Bible-based morality, honest history and civics, free and private enterprise, and the ethical and religious absolutes which are essential to good citizenship and lawful living.

Now, this shrinking of state-run schools and expansion of church-run schools has caused near panic within the ranks of the humanist-oriented educationists and change agents. They began to react by trying to drive out of business all schools not run by or subservient to the state. That very powerful labor union known as the National Education Association was able, through the efforts of President Carter, to obtain a Federal Cabinet Department of Education. The Internal Revenue Service also was called upon to make new regulations concerning tax-exemptions and other obstacles to church and private schools, so much so that all such schools would have been either liquidated or placed under strict government control. But there was such an outcry against this illegal and unconstitutional action that Congress found it expedient to step in, and cause a postponement of such administrative action. And Ronald Reagan, as a candidate, promised that he would, if elected, dismantle the Department of Education. But, after the election, there was such an outcry from left-wing lobbyists and politicians that President Reagan failed to fulfill the promise, although he still promises. In the meantime, the socialist-oriented did what they have been doing ever since the Swedish Socialist Gunnar Myrdal showed them the way by changing our Supreme Court from a law-minded to a socially-oriented body: it took to the courts to win its war. Most important of its recent cases have been that of Bob Jones University and Goldsboro Christian Schools of Goldsboro, Mississippi, although other cases have been pending. Dr. Paul A. Kienel, Executive Director of the Association of Christian Schools writes that since 1978 his association has "raised and disbursed more than $300,000 in litigations" attempting to resolve "the questions concerning such cases." He cites the Grace Brethren Church vs. United States which was scheduled to be argued before the Supreme Court this month. The Clarksdale Baptist Church and School, in Mississippi, also was scheduled for a hearing, presumably this month. In a number of such cases, the IRS was being seriously challenged.

It may have seemed that - or federal officials may have feared - that the Supreme Court might actually rule in favor of religious liberty, might adhere to the mandate enjoined by the First Amendment to the Constitution, and overturn the IRS attempts to make all Christian and private schools federally controlled institutions. There seemed a very strong indication that Bob Jones and Goldsboro might win their cases. Such might establish a precedent favorable to all Christian Schools! It was against this background that President Reagan was advised to step in and halt the action of the Supreme Court! William Ball, the constitutional lawyer pleading the cases, explained:

"On Friday, January 8, the situation was dramatically changed when at 4 p.m., the government suddenly went before the Supreme Court and announced that it was revoking all the illegal ITS rulings, restoring tax exemption to Bob Jones and Goldsboro Christian School cases as moot. Lawrence Wallace, Esq., of the Solicitor General's Office, having informed me of this, we then warned Christian school representatives that a nationwide explosion was sure to ensue. In this we have also witnessed an awesome triumph of media distortion. The avalanche of telecasts editorials and cartoons have almost totally omitted any reference to: (a) whether Congress gave IRS the power it has asserted, or (b) whether religious institutions must lock-step their practices to 'federal public policy' as the price of their tax-exemption (and thus their existence)... The Administration's action, though ostensibly favoring Bob Jones and Goldsboro, has resulted in imminent and extreme danger to the whole Christian school movement.... This sudden, last-minute reversal looked like an attempt to 'throw' the case. We did not need that kind of 'help'."

Mr. Ball was certainly right about "the awesome triumph of media distortion." Current Newsweek is an example, tells a tale titled "Tax Exemptions: Congress vs. Reagan." It is distorted, fabricated, left-leaning and confusing. One correct statement is quotable: Tip o'Neill and other leading Democrats believed that "no new law was needed" and "the likely compromise was a face-saving resolution of Congressional intent in support of the IRS position." So, they approve of Sen. Con. Res 59 which we quoted on our page 2, a resolution that would place all Christian schools under the Civil Service Act. And Human Events also reports under the heading "White House Continues to Fumble School Tax Issue." Here again, confusion reigns, but there is one factual statement: "Neither the Administration measure (S 2024) nor an alternative resolution such as Sen. Con. Res. 59 would be acceptable to most conservatives. At the same time, most conservatives will support legislation denying tax exemption to segregated schools providing that sufficient safeguards are included to protect 1st Amendment rights and to assure that innocent schools are not unfairly harmed. Unfortunately, such legislation (the Helms bill, S. 2029) although considered, was shot down by the senior White House staff.

CLARIFICATION. The most dangerous and most likely to pass is Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 59, which not only supports the IRS position but also places Christian and private schools under the Civil Service Act. This would mean Christian schools and churches could not refuse to hire homosexuals, atheists, persons of heathen religions, as staff members, teachers, pastors, or priests.

THE POLITICS BEHIND STATIST EDUCATION

You may have seen the article. It appeared on pages 73-4 in the current issue of U.S. News (2/22/82), and dealt with the difficulties entailed in any attempt to kill an established Federal agency, especially with a controversial agency such as the Humanist-oriented Department of Education. This article is significant in that it contains a number of important facts about this battle for the control of monopoly education in the United States. It also leaves out some of the important facts concerning the growing opposition to federal control of the schools in America. As a starter, let's check the chronology of the conflict:

1. On May 4, 1980, in tardy fulfillment of a campaign promise by Jimmy Carter to a labor union known as the National Education Association, a Federal Department of Education came into existence. The move was delayed because there was considerable opposition to the idea of taking the "E" out of the Socialized "H.E.W." and making of it an independent pet of N.E.A. But the leaders of the Parent Teachers Association, the National Congress of Parents and Teachers, the American Federation of Government Employees, and assorted other teachers organizations were able to combine their lobbying efforts with those of N.E.A., and the U.S. Congress submitted.
2. Sensing the growing public opposition to what many saw as an attempt of a labor union to dominate the American educational institution, Ronald Reagan the Candidate immediately denounced Jimmy Carter's newly created Department of Education, promised that if elected one of his first acts would be to wipe out that Department. And, speaking at a National Affairs Briefing at Dallas in August of 1980, Candidate Reagan also promised that if he were elected he would "take the IRS off the backs of Christian Schools."
3. After his election, President Reagan found little time to deal with his campaign promises concerning schools. He was too busy selling that economic program called Reaganomics. He did, however, take time to give approval to, and restructure, that fourth and unconstitutional branch of federal government known as Regionalism. And when he named "the nine Federal agencies located in the ten standard Federal regions," it was obvious that the Department of Education was one of the Nine within the odious Ten.
4. On January 8, 1982, delayed educational controversy caught up with President Reagan because of some anticipated action by the Supreme Court. It was about to render some decisions regarding Bob Jones and some other Christian Schools. Reagan found it expedient to remember that promise to "take the IRS off the backs of the Christian Schools." So he intercepted the play in the Court and rendered a decision of his own: that no tax-exemption would be denied Christian Schools regardless of charges concerning race discrimination, etc. When the smoke had cleared, this was seen as an act of gross duplicity seldom matched by a President of the United States since 1933, when Franklin Delano Roosevelt renounced his splendid Democratic Party platform and adopted the fascistic New Deal Program instead. This was discussed in our last Report, so we'll delay further comment.
5. On February 6, 1982, President Reagan saw fit to remember another campaign promise concerning schools. He said he would dismantle the Federal Department of Education on October 1, this as a part of his 1983 Federal-Budget proposal. However, here again we encounter duplicity and double-crossing. Because Reagan no longer proposed to actually "kill" the depart-

THE NEW IMMIGRATION ORDER

Following is the copy of a Presidential Document that was entered in the Federal Register on Monday, November 9, 1981. The allocation of immigrants should be noted especially.

Presidential Documents

Presidential Determination No. 82-1 of October 10, 1981

Determination on FY 1982 Refugee Ceilings

Memorandum for the Secretary of State, the Attorney General, the Secretary of Health and Human Services

Pursuant to Section 207(a) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (INA), and in accordance with Section 204(d)(1) of Public Law 96-212 (94 Stat. 109), I hereby determine, after appropriate Congressional consultation, that the admission of up to 140,000 refugees to the United States during FY 1982 is justified by humanitarian concerns or is otherwise in the national interest. I also determine that providing an additional 5,000 refugee admission numbers to be available for the adjustment to permanent residence status of aliens who have been physically present in the United States for at least one year after being granted asylum, in accordance with Section 209(b) of the INA, is justified by humanitarian concerns or is otherwise in the national interest.

Pursuant to Section 208(a)(3) of the INA, I determine, after appropriate Congressional consultation, that the 140,000 refugee admission ceiling shall be allocated as follows:

Asia	100,000
Soviet Union	20,000
Eastern Europe	9,000
Near East	5,000
Latin America and Caribbean	3,000
Africa	3,000
Total	140,000

Pursuant to Section 101(a)(42)(B) of the INA, I hereby specify, after appropriate Congressional consultation, that special circumstances exist such that, for the purposes of admission under the limits established herein, the following persons, if they otherwise qualify for admission, may be considered refugees of special humanitarian concern to the United States even though they are still within their countries of nationality or habitual residence:

persons in Vietnam with past or present ties to the United States; and present and former political prisoners, and persons in imminent danger of loss of life, and their family members, in countries of Latin America and the Caribbean.

The Secretary of State is requested to inform the appropriate committees of the Congress of these determinations.

This memorandum shall be published in the Federal Register.

THE WHITE HOUSE,

ment as he had promised. Instead, he would merely reduce it from cabinet level department to a "subcabinet education foundation." Not only this, but the various activities previously assigned to the former department, would be maintained and distributed among the other departments and agencies of the Federal Government. The Department of Education would be wiped out in name only. Here was Ronald Reagan reversing himself once again, and probably because the Trilateral Commission was telling him, paraphrasing Sir Walter Scott's charge: "Yours not to reason why, yours but to do as we say or die, at least politically."

Bringing the controversy up to the present, U.S. News observes that "Ronald Reagan's proposal to abolish the Department of Education draws the lines for a battle in which the President has few allies and a formidable array of enemies....The opposition lineup provides a classic illustration of the fabled 'iron triangle' - the three-cornered alliance of special-interest groups, bureaucrats and members of Congress that traditionally united to defend federal agencies under fire....With no comparable muscle on the President's side of the fight, many analysts see the opposition as far too strong for challenge in this election year....It can be much harder to abolish a government agency than to create one."

After identifying the supposed "millions" of opponents who are against change of any kind in the present setup of the Department of Education, reporters for U.S. News then supply the clincher: "Still, the crowning blow may come from the opposite quarter; disillusioned conservative groups that have crusaded for the abolition of all federal education controls and that now fear the compromise plan may be a sellout. 'It's neither fish nor fowl,' declares Onalee McGraw of the Heritage Foundation, a conservative think tank. 'The problem is that it doesn't authentically abolish the department. It retains a federal entity - the proposed education foundation.' Widespread conservative defection on this issue would kill off the only vigorous public lobby in Reagan's corner. The Washington-based Public Service Research Council, for instance, has mailed out 2.5 million letters denouncing the department as a tool of 'NEA union bosses' and urging its abolition. The Taxpayers Education Lobby, based in Mobile, ALA., has invested about $500,000 in citizen donations in a similar anti-department mass-mail campaign. Reagan's half-loaf compromise proposal left both groups in a quandary....What started as a stock campaign promise - to abolish what he considered to be a wasteful and intrusive agency - has turned into a donnybrook with fired-up opponents and disgruntled conservatives alike."

U.S. News is right in this conclusion. Once again in the battle over education Reagan has compromised an issue that puts him right back on the same side as Jimmy Carter. All Reagan would do would be to change the name of the department from cabinet to subcabinet, and distribute whatever power it might lose to other cabinet level departments. It is true that millions of parents cling to the hope that public education will finally clean itself up and become an actual educational institution, not merely a training camp turning out so many young people fit for nothing better than prisons, labor camps, or to become merely contented slaves in a New World Order. However, most of these sincere and hopeful people who long for a better public school system know in their hearts that government control of schools may work out well enough in Communist and Statist countries, but are diametrically opposed to life in a free society. Karl Marx knew this well when he wrote into the Communist Manifesto, the demand for universal public education.

One of the best statements on this subject comes from Samuel L. Blumenfeld, among whose several books on the subject is his latest, "Is Public Education Necessary?" (Devin Adair Company, 143 Sound Beach Ave., Old Greenwich, Connecticut 06870. 264 pages, hard cover, $12.95). He traces the history of public education in the United States and then in a postscript he writes:

"Is public education necessary? The answer is obvious... Schools are necessary, but they can be created by private enterprise today as they were before the public school movement achieved its fraudulent state monopoly in education. Subject education to the same competitive market forces that other goods and services are subjected to, and we shall see far better education at much lower overall cost. Instead of a 'crusade against ignorance' to reform the world, we shall have schools capable of performing the limited and practical functions that schools were originally created to perform.

"The failure of public education is the failure of statism as a political philosophy. It has been tried. It has been found wanting. Having learned from our mistakes, would it not be better to return to the basic principles upon which this nation was founded? Education was not seen as a cure-all for mankind's moral diseases. But it was on that premise that the reformers built the present system. They were wrong. The system cannot work because in a free society government has no more place in education than it has in religion. Once Americans grasp the full significance of this idea, they will understand why the return of educational freedom is essential to the preservation and expansion of American freedom in general..."

But, if Americans really understood the failure of statist education and if the whole country suddenly demanded Christian, private enterprise and community controlled schools, would the operators of such schools start looking to Big Brother Government for tuitions, tax-exemptions, and other handouts? There are today few schools that reject any and all help from Caesar and look solely to God and His children for the support and sustenance that would permit their children to grow in stature and knowledge. We say God bless the schools that reject all federal aid and may their number increase. All others are still part slave, and not to their Christ.

Finally, there is this solemn warning to all Christian and independent schools: The statist educational monopoly is in trouble. State-run school attendance is falling fast and money to keep public schools operating is harder and harder to come by. The education monopolists see one answer: Soak the church schools or close them down so public school attendance will increase; make state-run education an absolute monopoly. To do this bills have been introduced into the Congress, bills whose power is far more effective than any previous IRS regulations. Racism is the excuse, and every school will be presumed guilty and forced to prove its innocence. Then, after the schools are conquered or destroyed, comes the attack on the churches that run the schools. Churches will then suffer the same treatment. Your senators and representative may not even know about this betrayal; it's all been very hush-hush. Hearings have already been held and quick passage of one of these anti-Christian school bills can be expected. So, action is essential. If good men do nothing.....

THE NORTH AMERICAN COMMON MARKET

The event was preceded by a masterpiece of manipulated misinformation on the part of the media, stretching all the way back to before the ouster of Batista in Cuba. And President Reagan was at his very best in regard both to the content and the delivery of the address he delivered at high noon, eastern time, before the assembled leaders of the countries of Central America and the Caribbean. The media treated it as simply an aid program, coupled with promises of peace and security for all those "democratic" countries that would cooperate. Actually and unheralded as such, however, this was another step toward the creation of one more Regional World Government, one more economic union of formerly independent states, like those of the Soviet Comecon, the European Parliament, the ASEAN Bloc dominated by Japan, the three-nation Common Market in South America (SACOM) - and now a North American Common Market (NACOM), which President Reagan prefers to call "The Accord." And it seems remarkable that so very soon after President Reagan had presented his "New Federalism" program for the United States, he presented a surprisingly similar "New Federalism" program for the American States.

Susan Kaufman Purcell, Senior Fellow at the Council on Foreign Relations, specializing in Latin American and the Caribbean, wrote in the CFR's official publication, Foreign Affairs, winter of 1981-82 issue: "Even before his election to the presidency, Ronald Reagan publicly supported the idea of a North American Common Market or Accord that would eventually allow goods and people to move freely among Mexico, Canada and the United States." In this connection, in our DBR #1, January 2, 1981, we outlined the steps that were to be taken in the development of this North American Common Market, which were confirmed by President Reagan himself when he spoke before the leaders of the Organization of American States (OAS) on Wednesday, February 24th. He said: "Some two years ago, when I announced as a candidate for the Presidency, I spoke of an ambition I had to bring about an accord with our neighbors here on the North American continent... I met with President Lopez Portillo in Mexico before my inauguration and with Prime Minister Trudeau in Canada shortly after I had taken office; we have all met several times since in the United States, in Mexico, in Canada. And I believe that we have established a relationship better than any our three countries have ever known before."

But, like his confusing Kennedy and Johnson in the escalation of the Vietnam War, President Reagan again confused some facts. Relationships are not better between Canada and Mexico. And he did not establish his "Accord" as he had hoped. As CFR Senior Fellow Purcell observed: "As President, Reagan continued to support the idea of a North American Accord until August 1981, when the administration announced that the lack of Mexican and Canadian enthusiasm made the concept unfeasible for the present." Actually, Trudeau was busyssetting up a totalitarian socialist state in Canada, while Portillo was too friendly with Castro of Cuba to agree to any Common Market arrangement until Cuba and other communist states (Nicaragua and Grenada) could be brought in to the fold. This was the subject of Portillo's "peace proposal" of February 21, which was "welcomed" by President Reagan.

So, without gaining agreement or support from Canada and Mexico, President Reagan decided to go ahead with the plan anyway, develop his North American Common Market which would involve all the "democratic" states of the Caribbean and Central America, plus Venezuela because of its oil, hoping that Canada and Mexico would at least cooperate. The original plan was different and more comprehensive. As explained by Michael Lord Chadwick, Director of the Center for Global Studies:

"The nations of North and South America are ideally suited for implementation of the concept of republican government. It would involve a re-evolution process. The countries of North and South America would evolve from nationhood to statehood in a constitutionally federated republic [that is, the present independent and sovereign nations, including the U.S., Canada, Mexico, et al, would become integrated states in a federated Regional World Government-Ed.] This process could occur in three major phases. The first phase would include the linkage of Canada, Mexico and the states of the United States. The second phase would include linkage of the U.S., Canada and Mexico with the nations of Central America. The final phase would include linkage of the above areas with the nations of South America". (Unquote). Chadwick then goes on to state that "Because state sovereignty is a vital precept of republicanism, the former nations would enjoy greater status and prestige as their Senators, Governors and Representatives would assume their preeminent positions of honorable service in the new federation."

Since Canada and Mexico wouldn't amalgamate, it was decided to go ahead with the second phase of the plan and bring the Caribbean Basin countries into the "Accord." This required what we described as 'that masterpiece of manipulated misinformation on the part of the managed media.' The planners long ago had learned that to bring about such a "union of states," a crisis must be engineered, making such a union desirable, even demanded, on the part of the people involved in the integration and amalgamation. Col. House found this out while masterminding President Wilson. He attempted to create a regional world government in the Americas as early as 1914 through his Pan-American Pact. A created financial crisis had brought about the creation of the Federal Reserve System. House wrote in his intimate papers: "I advised him (President Wilson) to pay less attention to his domestic policy and greater attention to the welding together of the two western continents. I thought the Federal Reserve Act was his greatest constructive work and was the thing that would stand out and make his administration notable. Now I would like him to place beside that great measure a constructive international policy." House wrote to Wilson a few days later, telling him, "The opportunity to weld North and South America together in closer union is at your hand; do you not think you should take some initiative in this direction before your speech at the Panama Exposition?"

House's plan for a North and South American Common Market flopped because there was no desire on the part of the nations involved to sacrifice their sovereignty to any Regional World Power. And there was no created crisis which would induce them to change their national minds. However, House didn't give up, he merely made his Pan-American Pact to model for a greater Covenant of the League of Nations, which would have succeeded had it not been for a handful of U.S. Senators who refused to give in to a World Government.

The plan to unite the Americas did not die, however. The Rio Treaty of 1947 led to the Organization of the American States (OAS) in 1948, which is a regional organization under the aegis of the United Nations. President Kennedy bolstered its importance through a Rockefeller-sponsored Alliance For Progress in 1961. And it was this OAS that President Reagan was to use as a vehicle for the promotion of a North American Common Market. But, as we said before, there had to be a created crisis to make any such amalgamation plausible or worthy of consideration. So, enter the power of the media.

It was the media, led by The New York Times, which made it possible and acceptable by the American public, for Fidel Castro to take over, establish and maintain Communism in Cuba. It was mostly the media which induced our Senate to pay Panama for taking charge of the Canal in that State, so the International Bankers might establish another free money-laundering sanctuary. It was the media which led the people to accept the exile and death of Somoza and the conquest of Nicaragua by the Communist-oriented Sandanistas. And finally by publishing so much inflammatory and sensational misinformation concerning El Salvador, it became almost essential that something be done about that unhappy country. It was this "crisis creation" which gave President Reagan an excuse for bypassing Canada and Mexico, and presenting his Accord directly to the countries of the Caribbean Basin.

President Reagan says this is not a proposal for the creation of a North American Common Market, it is merely an "Accord." But would a mere aid proposal involve an unprecedented free trade area for all the nations of the North American continent? This to be a duty-free treatment for the next 12 years? Would a mere "accord" encompass "significant tax incentives for investment" in the area? Would a simple "Accord" provide promised technical assistance and training, to tell the Latin countries how to run their businesses? And if this were merely assistance to the beleaguered Caribbean, then why should we make it a point to "work closely with Mexico, Canada and Venezuela" and perhaps with Colombia?" Does it not sound like a groundwork for the beginnings of a Regional World Federation when President Reagan tells the members of OAS: "We have to ask ourselves why it has taken so long for us to realize the God-given opportunity that is ours. These two great land masses - North and South, so rich in virtually everything we need - together our more than 600 million people can develop what is undeveloped, can eliminate want and poverty, can show the world that our many nations can live in peace, each with its own language and culture, but sharing a love for freedom and a determination to resist outside ideologies that would take us back to colonialism.... We can create a peaceful, free and prosperous hemisphere based on our shared ideals and reaching from pole to pole of what we proudly call the New World."

Do these words of President Reagan comprise a plea for a simple "Accord," or is this a call for North American Federation, which would eventually become one of the several expanding and developing Regional World Governments which are the aim of the Trilateral Commission and its affiliated and cooperating elitist power groups? For a possible answer, let's explore this scheme from the viewpoint of the Trilateralists.

Writing in favor of the creation of a North American Common Market, Jeremiah Novak wrote in The Christian Science Monitor of April 17, 1980:"As the [presidential] primaries are now shaping up, it appears increasingly likely that a trilateralist, Jimmy Carter, will be facing a continentalist, Ronald Reagan, in the race for president." Novak thought, as did almost all conservatives at that time, that Ronald Reagan was what he claimed to be: an outright and confirmed opponent of the trilaterals, a man who had publicly condemned George Bush, Jimmy Carter, Walter Mondale, and all the others who were or had been members of the Trilateral Commission. But Novak wrote his article before Reagan had capitulated to the Trilateralists by accepting and praising George Bush as his running mate, and later naming Trilateralists or members of the senior club, the Council on Foreign Relations, to every important post having to do with foreign affairs or economics in his administration.

In this reporter's opinion, here's what happened. The Trilateral Commission was founded in 1973 at the insistence of David Rockefeller. He reckoned that by forming three Regional Coalitions (the U.S. and Canada, Japan, and Western Europe), and by operating through annual economic and political Summits and occasional intramural conferences, the New World Order could be established and maintained; a World Order in which Monopoly Capitalists (of which the Communists are a part) could control the world's resources - people being a human resource. The Trilateralists operated on a wide range of issues from money to energy, and the first step was to gain control over governments, especially that of the U.S. Government. Hence, Jimmy Carter, Walter Mondale, Zbigniew Brzezinski and 18 others were placed in their appointed places. But before Carter was even settled in the Oval Office, things began to change, especially in Western Europe and Japan. The EEC started discriminating against the U.S., particularly in agricultural products. In 1978 Europe formed a new monetary system designed to replace the U.S. dollar. Japan built its own protectionist economy, formed the ASEAN Regional Market. A new Franco-West German axis began to develop. All of Western Europe was being neutralized, and NATO was in jeopardy. Jim Wooten, an issues man with the now defunct Connally bloc, wrote: "When the crunch came in Iran, both Japan and Britain signed contracts for oil with Khomeini's government. When the crunch came in Afghanistan, Europe and Japan reacted slowly because, for example, Western Europe trades almost as much with the Soviet Union as it does with the United States, and Japan receives a high percentage of its raw materials from Siberia. Europe and Japan no longer are dependencies of the U.S. They have their own policies vis-a-vis the Soviet Union, and these may not coincide with ours." CFR-man David Calleo, a professor at Johns Hopkins School of Advanced International Studies, wrote in 1979 that "The world economic system is breaking into three competing, semi-isolated blocs: Europe-Africa, U.S.-Western Hemisphere, and Japan-Asia." This was not the trilateral setup that Rockefeller had originally plotted. Another commentator, Mary Kalder, in her 1978 book, The Disintegrating West, wrote: "Only if the US succeeded in establishing its former economic dominance and solving its balance of payments problem, would a new dollar-based SDR (the Trilateral-backed IMF currency) standard become a reality." In short, the Trilateral scheme as it was originally mapped by Brzezinski and his colleagues, was not succeeding...Changes had to be made.

So, out went Jimmy Carter and the One World Plan he was told to promote and in came Ronald Reagan with a Regional World Government plan which could be sold as a conservative policy, which would save the Rockefeller coterie, and one which would allow a greater economic concentration on a home Region: a North American Common Market that would complement, perhaps even supplant the original Trilateral Regions, because of the latter's lack of proximity that made them geopolitically unsound in the first place. So, with Reagan's "New Federalism" disguising a restructured domestic Regional Government and with his "The Accord" disguising a potential Regional World Government, the new program for the establishment of the New World Order becomes clear to those "with ears to hear and eyes to see." We hope and pray.

THE SEPARATION SYNDROME

In many of our public gatherings, we often pledge ourselves to the proposition that this is a Republic and "one Nation under God." As a people, we have deceived ourselves on both counts. This is no longer a Republic according to the letter and the spirit of the Constitution of the United States, which supposedly remains the "Law of the Land." We have become a Democracy and since democracies cannot long exist, we are fast becoming a Socialist Welfare State, and are well on the way toward becoming a North American Administrative Region in a Socialist World Government. We still give lip service to the phrase "one Nation under God," but it has become meaningless to the majority, thanks to our politicians, the media, the state schools, and the institutional churches. Although it is not always recognized by its court-established name, Secular Humanism has become our state religion in these United States. And since it has become so well established, there has been a constant hullabaloo about a perverted and misunderstood doctrine called "The Separation of Church and State." It is never levelled at Humanism, of course; the humanists and those they have been able to deceive promote the idea. And it's levelled against the Christians who take any active part in the affairs of government and society. But while this wholly unconstitutional slogan is being bruited and ballyhooed throughout the land, there is another wholly Constitutional doctrine which is seldom, if ever, mentioned seriously. It has to do with Separation of Powers in our governmental structure. The Constitution has it all worked out in detail and it was splendidly successful so long as we had a Constitutionally ordained Republic - which wasn't for very long. However, since the Constitution, even as the Holy Bible from which it derives its authority as the Law of the Land, is ignored, rejected, misinterpreted; let us pause and consider some important facts which should be brought to the people's attention, facts which lie at the root of our national social, political, fiscal and economic distress.

First, any Christian American should realize, with a certain sickness of heart, that those little gummed stickers that we see on so many patriotically-inspired papers and envelopes are no longer true. These little stickers insist that this is a Republic, and that we should keep it that way. Too little and too late. We became a Democracy some years ago, and since democracies are merely here today and gone tomorrow, we are now a Regional Socialist Welfare State, and are headed toward becoming an Administrative Region in a Socialist One World Government.

We were not really surprised to read in the 1981 edition of the American Heritage Dictionary that a republic is defined as "any political order that is not a monarchy." The second definition: "A constitutional form of government, especially a democratic one." Webster and most other standard dictionaries now agree with those definitions. But this is not at all what our Founding Fathers meant when they said we had a Republic. Nor is it what the Constitution means when it says that every State shall be guaranteed a Republican form of government. As the term was understood by the authors of our Constitution, a Republican form of government is a state headed by a president or governor who is elected by a qualified electorate. That word "qualified" makes most of the difference that separates a Republic from a Democracy. A Democracy means a rule by the majority; which sounds okay until we realize that a majority of the voters are tax-consumers rather than tax-payers. Tax-consumers rank from a Rockefeller to the meanest welfare recipient, and they greatly outnumber the hard-working, tax-paying producers. And, just as honest statesmen have said ever since the word was introduced into the English language, any democracy is bound to destroy itself because when tax-consumers voting as a majority, write and pass laws which force the producing individuals to share the wealth we get into the situation in which we find ourselves today. And when the politicians, in order to get more votes, spend more money than the government can collect through honest revenue, they resort to counterfeiting. Aided by a Central Banking System that is happy to comply, the printing presses begin to turn out more and more supposed wealth whose value the people are not sup-

PRAYER IN PUBLIC SCHOOLS DOES GOD REALLY WANT IT ?

There is a cherished myth that when our fathers were children, they went to public schools, and that the public schools always had a ritual of reading from the Bible or a morning prayer of some kind. The myth further contends that this ritual was the dam holding back the flood of evil in the schools and among the younger generation, and that its removal by the Supreme Court opened the floodgates. The conclusion of the myth is that the restoration of the ritual by Constitutional amendment will banish evil once again from our schools and from their students.....

But...two years before the Supreme Court decision [only] 8% of all public schools in the Midwest had Bible reading and [only] 6% had full-on "devotional homeroom exercises." Percentages for the West Coast were even lower. That meant that at least 82% of students in the fifties were unprotected against evil! We have reason to hope that parents sometimes made up for this "deficiency." But the cause of the decline is a complicated one, and the repeal of classroom religious exercise was only a symptom.

But do we want the ritual back? Prayer is either in the name of Christ or it isn't. Public school prayer in the name of Christ would require a drastic change in the Constitution and in the beliefs of most people regarding the relationship between government and religion. And the 'name of Christ' is no guarantee of orthodoxy. The Gallup Poll showed that about 25% of the American people believe that Christ is fully God and fully man; 53% take the Arian view that He is the Son of God, but not God the Son.

And "neutral" prayer? If I were the devil, I could think of no more effective way to convince a generation of school children that it really doesn't matter what you believe about God. After all, aren't Christian, Jew, Muslim, and Hindu together in that classroom? Worse than that - all the legal barriers against chanting or Transcendental Meditation in the schools, which we have struggled so hard to defend, will be laid to rest. Why can people not see this?

First, many parents are looking to public school to make up for their own failures. Since the public schools have failed, many have diverted their children to more consistently Christian schools. If the ritual is restored in the public schools, will these Christian schools be emptied? If so, the people have misunderstood the issue. The issue is learning all things under the Word of God. The issue is not a matter of rituals.....

posed to question. This is what is bound to happen when an unqualified electorate is allowed to vote.

That's why our Founders were so very careful about voters being qualified to vote. The States already had their own laws. In many of the States only confessing Christians were allowed to vote. In other States, ownership of real property was a qualification for the franchise. James Madison, known as the "father of our Constitution," was very firm on this latter qualification, said if people without property were allowed to vote, this would eventually lead to an abolition of private property by the nonproperty owners. Which is a good way of defining Socialism-Communism. But the Constitution is not specific in the matter of voter qualifications, because there was the matter of States Rights, and the States were handling the situation by themselves. Also, the only federal officials for which the people were to have a direct vote were the Members of the House of Representatives. The electorate had no direct voice in the election of Presidents and Senators. That's what made ours a Republic, not a Democracy. However, as time passed things began to change. First, the Electoral College, supposedly an independent nonpartisan group of respected citizens, were to vote for a President and a Vice President. But almost from the very beginning, this was taken over by political parties. Now we vote for a group of electors selected by party bosses. The electors, in their turn will meet and vote, not according to their conscience or knowledge of the nominee, but according to the dictates of their political bosses. Then we the electorate every four years vote for a group of selected party pigeons, under the quaint assumption that we are voting for a President. Later on, there came another step toward Democracy. Instead of Governors and State Legislators selecting two United States Senators who would represent their State for the next six years, a direct vote of the people was instituted. Right after the Federal Reserve Act and the Income Tax Amendment, came the 17th Amendment, providing that the people should vote directly for their Senators. This destroyed the very important House of the States, and converted the Senate into just another House of the People; another giant step toward total Democracy. Still later, it was decided that the States could no longer be trusted to decide who could, and who couldn't be qualified to vote in any election. The Democratic ideal of "one man, one vote" became the law. That's when the non-consumers became the majority and the distribution of wealth in accordance with the doctrines of Democracy, and Socialism, really began. It was all spelled out in The Great Society policies that had been written by a Fabian Socialist and adopted by a Democrat who came to power by virtue of a President having been murdered.

So much for the manner in which our Constitutional Republic became a Democracy. The story of the destruction of our Constitutionally demanded Separation of Power is equally important. We have seen this terminal illness of our Nation develop in our own lifetimes. Article 1 of the Constitution declares that the Congress - the exclusive Legislative Branch of our federal government - shall have certain specific and limited powers. But these powers were to be separated, divided between the Senate and the House so they could check each other. The Representatives were to serve but two years. That was designed to make them more responsive to the electorate. And, because they were responsible directly to the people, only the Representatives could initiate laws dealing with taxes or the spending of tax money. The Senators, serving for a period of six years, were to have their own specific duties and limitations; and both the Senate and House could check each other, and be checked by the President through the veto power. These checks and balances were essential in the Constitutional Separation of Powers. Also most important and now ignored: The Congress, and only the Congress, has the power to pass laws, and the Congress, not the Treasury, the IRS not any other administrative or independent agency; only "The Congress shall have Power To Lay and collect Taxes, Duties, Imposts and Excises, and to pay the Debts and Provide for the common Defense and general Welfare of the United States;" also "to coin Money (and) regulate the value thereof." This means it is thoroughly unconstitutional for the IRS or any executive agency to collect taxes, or for any of the federal agencies in the Ten Federal Regions to have anything to do with the dispensing of welfare funds, revenue sharing, or other matters dealing with the spending of federal tax money. Only Congress has such power, and it has no power to turn over such duties to the Executive branch of government.

The Executive branch of government is made up of the President, Vice President and the necessary staff. Their power is limited to administrative functions. Making new laws through Executive Orders and Presidential Proclamations is a violation of the Separation of Powers. As an interesting sidelight to this subject, it was President John Kennedy speaking at Columbia University, who said: "The high office of President has been used to foment a plot to destroy the Americans' freedom, and before I leave office I must inform the citizen of his plight." Ten days later he was assassinated.

Article 3 of the Constitution defines the powers and limitations of the judicial branch of government. Here is where we could wish, as did Thomas Jefferson and John Adams, that the Constitution could have been more detailed in limitations upon the judiciary. But it is specific in stating that its power shall extend to "all Cases in Law and Equity arising under this Constitution." There is no power to make laws, or to impose regulations such as school bussing, or tell city governments how they shall elect their officials.

Another most important Separation of Power has to do with those powers that have been taken from the States by all three branches of the federal government. The framers of the Constitution established a fundamental check on the exercise of governmental power, and at the same time protected the rights of State, County and Local governments. The right of such local government was further reinforced against the threat of expanding central power by the Tenth Amendment: "The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people." In unlawful disobedience to this Constitutional prohibition the Central Government has erected a system of Ten Regional Councils which are designed to establish centralized control over the legislative, administrative, and judicial branches of State governments, and to assume control over all of the activities and duties of County and Local governments. This regional control is, in fact, a fourth branch of the federal government. And it constitutes one further unconstitutional step leading from an already failing Democratic system toward a Socialist-Welfare system which can end only in a totalitarian system "to prevent total collapse of society".

It was President John Adams who remarked that "Our Constitution was made only for a moral, religious people. It is wholly inadequate to the government of any other." Since our answer to our national dilemma involves restoration of the Constitution, and repeal of all unconstitutional laws, and if Adams was right, then it must be the moral, Christian people who must do the job.

PIPELINE SCAMS AND OTHER SWINDLES

When former Senator Harrison Williams, victim of the controversial ABSCAM entrapment, tendered his resignation to the jury of his senatorial peers, he was much quoted by the media for having used the words the Apostle Paul had written to Timothy when nearing the end of his ministry: "I have fought a good fight. I have finished my course. I have kept the faith." More appropriate for the time and the occasion would have been the quotation he had intended to use had Williams continued his own fight. It is reported that he had searched the Bible and had decided that he should look at his accusers and quote the words found in the Gospel of John, 8:7. The scribes and the pharisees of that day had tried to entrap Jesus by asking Him to judge a woman who had been caught in adultery. The words of the Lord might aptly fit our 97th Senate: "Let him who is without sin first cast the stone..." For, to the close observer, the machinations of our national politics has been a wonder to behold; and it has been a wonder that the people of the United States continue to tolerate the many sins of commission and omission on the part of those supposedly representing them in Washington, without casting hypothetical stones. The evidence of swindles in which so many of our "democratic" legislators are engaged can be seen in a series of pipeline decisions, about which the media has been not surprisingly silent. There are three connected instances: The Trans-Alaskan Pipeline, the gas pipeline that is being built at our expense from Siberia to Western Europe and the proposed gas pipeline that is to be laid from Prudhoe Bay in Alaska to run through Canada to San Francisco and Chicago.

These pipelines all have connections with the New World Order movement and the promotion of INTERdependence on a global scale. And the tie-in: the fake energy crisis that had been created to raise and equalize petroleum prices on a world-wide scale. Court historian Henry Steel Commager had presented the proposition clearly in the "Declaration of Interdependence," that he wrote and delivered, and was signed by 125 U.S. Senators and Representatives in 1976. He said: "We affirm that the resources of the globe are finite, not infinite, that they are the heritage of no one nation or generation, but of all peoples, nations and of posterity, and that our deepest obligation is to transmit to that posterity a planet richer in material bounty, in beauty and delight than we found it. Narrow notions of national sovereignty must not be permitted to curtail this obligation." The idea that "the resources of the globe are finite" was the idea behind the creation, by the Rockefeller-established Trilateral Commission, of the European-based International Energy Agency (IEA) in 1974. This was an organization that was to oversee the world's use of energy. It was created to oversee the created worldwide energy crisis. The Trilateral Commission told the world's opinion makers through its Trilateral Paper #5 that "We can see the end of the hydrocarbon age...The (energy) crisis poses fundamental questions about how our expanding industrial societies....will fare in the coming decade when oil supplies are neither cheap nor secure.... All our countries have got to get along with less energy." The Triangle paper concludes: "Our peoples need a wartime psychology to fight this (energy) war against ourselves. They should be prepared to share sacrifices among themselves because it will be a long, uphill battle."

This fabricated threat of running out of hydrocarbon produced a secondary reaction: There was a rush to seek out new sources of oil and gas. Even before the energy crisis was announced, nine oil companies formed a consortium, the Alyeska Pipeline Service, to construct a pipeline across Alaska so that some of that State's fabulous oil reserves could be provided consumers. However, for reasons we won't go into at this time, just as the project was getting under way in 1969, the federal government halted it. We'll also omit the machinations and manipulations that went on for half a decade; but in 1974, when the Trilateral Commission was overseeing its energy crisis through Congress and the Administration, the Alyeska Pipeline Service Company was given permission to continue the pipeline construction. However, a project that was estimated to cost $600 million now was going to cost $12 billion! And the oil companies had to make up the difference. However, oil companies don't pay taxes - they just collect them for the government. And they don't pay out billions to build pipelines, they just transfer the costs to the consumers. Then there followed that "Windfall Profits" tax, which was just another ploy to weaken private enterprise. As Lindsey C. Williams remarked in an excellent article appearing in the March 1982 The National Educator: "The energy crisis which began in 1974 was a test to see how much you would allow yourself to be controlled." It also was an almost foolproof way of promoting interdependence -- because that Alaskan oil reportedly isn't sold in the United States. It's transported to overseas markets, especially to Japan. Incidentally, only the Prudhoe field was permitted to be pumped. There are two other fields in that part of Alaska, Kuparuk and Gull Island - both of which are said to be far greater than Prudhoe, and potentially the richest fields on the face of the earth. Lindsey Williams refers to the Alaskan Scam as "a scandal greater than Watergate since whoever controls energy controls the people." For a detailed account of the Alaskan Swindle, we suggest you read (if you haven't already) the story of "The Energy Non-Crisis," Write to Energy, P.O.Box 7, Kasilof, Alaska 99610. $3.70 postage paid.

More important to our national security was the next Pipeline Promotion, from Urengoy in Siberia through the USSR to West Germany, where it is to deliver natural gas to European (NATO) buyers. An excellent article was front-paged in Human Events of March 13, 1982. A few important quotes: "How committed is the United States to stopping the Soviet natural gas pipeline? The Administration has been sounding a bit tougher of late... But words are cheap... The Department of Commerce on August 3 approved a deal for Caterpillar to sell 100 super pipe-layers to the Soviets for $40 million, a deal that would clearly facilitate the pipeline transaction... [Secretary of State] Haig pushed for approval of the Caterpillar sale, as did Robert D. Hormats [CFR], assistant secretary of state for economic affairs, and Myer Rashish [CFR], under secretary for economic affairs... On December 9, President Reagan decided to approve an export license for Caterpillar Tractor Co. to sell 200 more pipelaying machines to the Soviet Union for its oil and natural gas projects. On February 10, The New York Times reported from Lisbon: 'Secretary Haig said today that, despite differences with the Western Europeans over a natural gas pipeline from the Soviet Union, the United States should not use the Polish crisis as an excuse to pressure them or cancel or cut back on the project.'..

"The embrace of the Soviet pipeline... is what may well end the NATO alliance, as American lawmakers such as Majority Whip Ted Stevens (R-Alaska).. have already begun to suggest a U.S. pullout from Europe if the pipeline goes forward. The pipeline is a jeweled dagger aimed at the heart of Europe. Under the proposed project... the Soviets would be transmitting gas to as many as 10 European countries... Not only would Western Europe be far more dependent on the Soviets for energy supplies, but the Russians would be earning enormous amounts of foreign currencies." (unquote).

Here again, we see the sacrifice of national sovereignty in the name of Interdependence. As Leonid Brezhnev said, "The accelerated development and exploitation of Siberian natural gas resources is a matter of highest economic and political priority." The idea of eventually merging the Soviet Union and the United States has long been the goal of the financial elitists. And, just as the Trilateral Commission has indicated in its own papers, control of energy leads to control of countries and of peoples. It also leads to financial gains of enormous amounts to those politicians who become tools of the "elitists." Here is an example, which comes to us from Globescan, a Paris/Geneva based news source which provides "real news behind the media coverage." We quote:

EVER GET THE FEELING YOU'VE BEEN HAD?

The recent passage of the $37 billion Alaskan pipeline waiver has enabled the public to view the machinations of politics in America at their worst. In this latest test of the "government of the people," the clear winners were an influential private businessman, three major oil companies, an assortment of major banks, and the coffers of the political machinery in Washington. And the losers? The American people who could end up paying for gas they will never use. Here's the way it was done:

- 1) In 1977 the Northwest Alaskan Pipeline Company (NAPC) was granted the exclusive right by the Federal Government to build a 4,800-mile natural gas pipeline from Prudhoe Bay through Canada to San Francisco and Chicago.
- 2) The government stipulated that the entire project was to be privately financed; that gas consumers would not be charged until gas was delivered; and that oil companies owning Prudhoe reserves would be prohibited from having an interest in the pipeline.
- 3) But the banks wouldn't finance; Chase Manhattan, Citibank, Morgan Guarantee and Bank of America, even with their tight links to the oil companies, considered it too risky. So behind the scenes the power brokers, with their favors, pressure and money went to work. Result: John G. McMillian, chairman of NAPC, got Congress to change the law.
- 4) First he made friends with the President's top advisers and Mr. Rockefeller's top aide in the White House, Mike Deaver. Mr. McMillian hired the public relations firm of Peter Hannaford, former partner of Mr. Deaver. Mr. Hannaford had purchased his consulting firm from National Security Adviser Richard Allen. That took care of the Republicans.
- 5) Next he hired former Vice-President Walter Mondale as a consultant and contributed to his political action committee. Also among the Democrats was Robert Strauss, former chairman of the Democratic Party. McMillian also hired White, Fine and Verville, one of whom was the chairman of the Federal Power Commission under Lyndon Johnson. Also the law firm of Charles Mannatt, the current chairman of the Democratic Party. Even the oil companies kicked in and showered Congress with $80,000 in January alone.
- 6) On September 22nd McMillian met with Presidential counsellor Edward Meese, The President endorsed the necessary waiver on October 6th. It was sent to Congress on October 15th and on November 19th the Senate passed the bill, after just one hour of debate.
- 7) In the House there was not much opposition either, but Representative Edward E.J. Markey (D-Mass.) rightly observed that the bill was "nothing more than a subsidy for the oil companies and the banks:" and Rep. Tom Corcoran (R-Ill.) declared that the bill had the potential to be "The greatest consumer ripoff in the history of the United States."

8) On December 15th 1981, President Reagan signed the waiver bill. The entire legislative process took exactly two months - for a $37 billion project which nearly equals the budget cuts Congress had been haggling over since the beginning of the year (and our legislators congratulated themselves two weeks later by raising the ceiling on members' additional outside income to $100,000 and giving themselves a special tax break for maintaining two homes.)

9) "We lobbied hard," said Mr. McMillian afterward. "I don't know how much I've given. I don't mind giving money away. Politics and the people who run our country are very important to our country's future." Obviously, Mr. McMillian never knew, and the Congressmen "forgot," that their job is not to create and change laws but to represent the people. (Globescan plus Research Reports, Great Barrington, Mass.)

Globescan Comment: The pipeline is supposed to be paid for by pre-billing the consumers whether or not other segments of the pipeline and even though the consumers may never receive any gas at all. In other words, the financial risks and none of the rewards are transferred to the consumer. The government has forced the consumers to invest and assume the risks of a project on which the banks wouldn't lend. And the economic feasibility still remains unanswered. You may be pre-billed anywhere from $1.50 to $12 a month!

Now the banks are eager to lend because you are going to guarantee their loans. There is no cost limitation. The consumers are committed to guarantee the project. $37 billion? $100 billion? And to add insult to this terrible injury, no one, not even the proponents of the pipeline, denies that the Alaskan gas will be more expensive than domestic gas. One member of Congress said it will be four times more costly. This could give "forced" consumer-investors higher monthly gas bills than the return on their investment!

So the bankers are guaranteed and thanks to the new waiver, Exxon, Atlantic Richfield, and Standatd Oil (Ohio) now can own an interest in the pipeline. One of the curiosities of the whole pipeline's scam is that the oil companies which were prohibited from the program originally when financial risks were involved can now participate freely with virtually all financial risks transferred to the consumer. But the laws can always be changed - can't they? Mr. McMillian and the other sponsors are gifted with foresight; the new law states that the concessions cannot be amended by Congress in the future.

Evidently American citizens have forgotten and the government no longer cares about the legislative process embodied in the Constitution. Americans used to elect and send their representatives to Washington. Now, unquestioning Americans democratically select legislators (law-makers), not representatives, who create laws and compel the people who elect them to comply. Poor America - or more appropriately - poorer Americans - $37 billion poorer, at least. (Reprinted from Globescan, Paris/Geneva. Three Pipeline Scams. One helps overseas consumers. One helps the USSR. All help the Money Barons and the Washington Politicos. None help the people who end up paying the bills. We pray this Report may awaken some of them.

IF A MONROE WERE WITH US TODAY

"It was the late Adlai Stevenson who, in a naive moment, said he would campaign for the office of President by trying to 'talk sense to the American people.' The voters responded by voting overwhelmingly for the other guy. Since then, any politician who threatens to talk sense is ordered by his campaign advisers to go lie down and sleep it off. President Reagan has a much more effective approach. His policy seems to be, 'Let's talk nonsense to the American people.' Or, 'When in doubt, confuse them'." So commented Mike Royko, a not-so-conservative columnist for the Field News Service. The rest of his article deals with the confusion that exists in policy making circles. So does a column by Flora Lewis, a New York Times foreign affairs correspondent. She wrote from Paris that "It's hard to remember when there was more confusion in the world about signals from Washington...The messages from press conferences by Secretary of State Alexander Haig and other statements in recent weeks have seemed so contradictory that there is a tendency among foreign officials to read them according to their own temperament and leanings."

However else we might find fault with the comments of Royko and Lewis, they are not confused in their references to confusion in Washington, in the United States and in the world at large. But they might have added that much of it is planned confusion, created deliberately to keep the people from knowing what is really going on in higher circles. This confusion making is not necessarily confined to the agents of the Power Elite, or to the controlled communications media. There are scores of pressure groups that try to influence policies and confuse issues, for their own purposes. The Washington Post of March 7 lists more than twenty "principal groups seeking to influence U.S. policy and public opinion on Central America." These are a part of the reason why there is so much confusion concerning what's really happening in Central America today. A sampling of these pressure groups includes:

- * The American Institute of Free Labor Development, an AFL/CIO propaganda group which is supposed to represent the interests of laborers, but which is largely funded by the U.S. Agency for International Development (AID).
- * Caribbean-Central American Action; a Business Council type and CFR adjunct composed of about 50 leading business and industrial organizations that seek exploitation and resources development in the area, and work with the State Department and the Trilateral Commission. More about this organization in the next paragraph.
- * Coalition for a New Foreign and Military Policy. The name speaks for itself.
- * Committee in Solidarity With the People of El Salvador; a holding organization composed of about 300 different groups, anti-Reagan administration and supported principally by grants from tax-exempt foundations.
- * Inter-Religion Task Force; an ecumenical group affiliated with the National Council of Churches and Liberation Theology Catholic groups. It organizes protests and demonstrations against all Reagan administration policies, and gives support to "liberation" movements throughout Latin America.

Editorial Note: Due to unpremeditated and unavoidable circumstances beyond our control, we were unable to publish our usual weekly Report on March 19. We hope it won't happen again, either unpremeditatedly or unavoidably.. and thanks for your patience and understanding.

This is just a sampling; but among the most important of "these groups seeking to influence policy and public opinion" is a recently created coalition that was formed at the instigation of David Rockefeller. It is very similar to the Trilateral Commission in that it is composed of three groups having a membership of some 200 corporations that have investments in Latin America. The coalition is called "The American Society" and is headed by one Sam Hayden who also is president of the Rockefeller-slanted "Council of the Americas." In addition to this Council, there is the "Center for Inter-American Relations" and the third side of the triangle is "The Pan-American Society." This "American Society" which is analogous to the Trilateral Commission, has an affiliate that might be considered a Latin American Council on Foreign Relations. It is the previously cited "Caribbean-Central American Action," which is headed by a former State Department official, Peter Johnson. According to The Washington Post, this trilateral-type "The American Society" and its affiliated "Caribbean-Central American Action" that, and we quote, "submitted ideas to the government for President Reagan's recent speech to the OAS [Organization of American States] proposing the dropping of tariff barriers and increased economic aid for the Caribbean and Central America." This was the speech which we mentioned at length in our Report #9 of February 26th. In that address he told the Latin American leaders: "I have already expressed our support for the coming election in El Salvador. We also strongly support the Central American Democratic Community formed this January by Costa Rica, Honduras, and El Salvador. The United States will work closely with other concerned democracies inside and outside the area to preserve and enhance our common democratic values." However, those common democratic values, when analyzed, become common socialistic values.

Our Federal Administration, like all Administrations preceding it for the past 50 years, takes a public stand against Communism. It does this publicly while at the same time trading with, cooperating with, sometimes collaborating with and forever financing the promotion of Communist advancement throughout the world. It helps Communists build military might while at the same time spending billions to defend against that military might. Still, our government insists that it is anti-Communist. But it never says that it is anti-Socialist! The Soviet Socialist Republics can make giant steps toward total world control as a result of this two-sided administration policy. There is one theoretical difference between these two totalitarian sister systems, between Big Stick Communism and Carrot Socialism, that can be utilized by the New World Orderers to make the former seem like dictatorship, and the latter seem like democracy: Communism implies ownership, by the state, of all means of development, production, and distribution of goods and services. Socialism implies control of all means of development, production and distribution. To carry this one step further, our "democratic system" is built on federal controls, of development, of production, of distribution, of services such as schooling, welfare, abortion, minimum wages, working conditions, and a multitude of rules and regulations that are diametrically opposed to our Constitutional, representative and free enterprise system. So, when President Reagan speaks of preserving and enhancing our common democratic values, he is actually embracing, perhaps, our common socialistic values.

Hence, our previous administration was greatly disturbed when the people of Chile got rid of a Communist leader and installed a so-called right-wing form of government. Secretary of State Alexander Haig seemed equally disturbed, and virtually speechless when the right-wing military of Guatemala kicked out a left-leaning president and substituted a three-man junta without first telling Haig what was happening. Likewise, in the elections in El Salvador, one now concluded and the really important one still to come, our State Department and its Trilateralist controllers will be exceedingly dismayed if Jose Duarte, the Socialist, should lose to Roberto d'Aubuisson, the right-wing leader. It isn't ever mentioned by our administration or the media that this Duarte they and the Trilateral Controllers are backing is a pro-Communist, and a thorough-going Socialist.

In El Salvador, where the constituent assembly elections will have been held, or disrupted and made meaningless by the time this Report is read, there are five major militant parties ranging from Guillermo Manuel Ungo's Revolutionary Front on the left, to Roberto d'Aubuisson's Nationalist Republican Alliance on the right. The Communist Party is officially outlawed but its front man and party platform bearer is Ungo, who has boycotted the elections, tried by terrorist tactics to prevent them, and will say they are corrupt and meaningless. On the other hand, d'Aubuisson campaigned actively, had the support of local businessmen and farmers. More or less in the middle politically between Ungo and d'Aubuisson is Jose Napoleon Duarte, junta leader who is favored by our Administration and the Rockefeller Cabal. How Duarte came to be a leader in El Salvador is interesting. In 1972 the Communist Party as such was outlawed officially, so an electoral coalition was formed. Duarte was its presidential candidate, and Ungo was his vice presidential running mate. Thus, as was reported by The Review of the News, "Duarte and Ungo were the de facto candidates of the Salvadoran Communist Party (PCS)." They lost that election to Colonel Molina, and Duarte promptly staged a coup, which failed, and Duarte fled into exile in Venezuela. He returned later, was able to gain control of the government through a coalition of left-wing parties. President Jimmy Carter in his "human rights crusade" recognized and adopted Duarte, and the Reagan Administration inherited him. Duarte has attempted to install a radical socialist program which includes the usual agrarian reform, nationalization of the banks, state control of agricultural exports, etc.

Although Duarte ran for election on a Communist platform in 1972, and is a confirmed and dedicated Socialist, both our Administration and the Rockefeller coalition have done and are doing their utmost to keep Duarte in control of El Salvador, in order that he may establish his program of Socialization. This may seem strange to those who still do not or refuse to comprehend that there is an alliance between the International Bankers and the Communist Inner Circle. Here is a current example of how this works:

David Rockefeller recently completed a 10-nation tour of the Communist capitals in Africa. After conferring with Communist leaders in Angola, he went to Salisbury in Zimbabwe. There, according to the International Herald Tribune: "David Rockefeller, whose name is the epitome of capitalism, has said that he does not think that African Marxism is a threat to the United States, or to American business interests." Rockefeller said that "Dealing with socialist or Marxist countries does not cause any problems at all." To the statement that Rockefeller's name is "the epitome of capitalism," Globescan gave the perfect response:

Mr. Rockefeller is not a capitalist. Bankers do not produce capital. They only lend capital produced by others. The Supra-Bankers' way of using the capital of others is exactly like the methods of the Socialists - - both take and use the capital produced by others in order to increase their power and profits.

Rockefeller made his stand quite clear. He said: "I don't think an international bank such as ours ought to try to set itself up as a judge of what kind of government a country wishes to have. We have found we can deal with any kind of government, provided they are orderly and responsible." If this were a true statement, then one must wonder why Rockefeller has judged and controlled so many governments - including our own - through the Council on Foreign Relations, the Trilateral Commission, and the newly formed "American Society," which is attempting to judge and control El Salvador and other Latin Nations?

Perhaps as a reward for what Rockefeller says, or perhaps he can do no other if he is to remain in the White House, President Reagan gave David Rockefeller and Henry Kissinger formal appointments to the National Security Council "Board on East Bloc Credit"!! Lawrence Patterson wrote: "No doubt about it now - the Carter puppet from Plains has been replaced by a suave sophisticated puppet - who will fool Americans 10 times more effectively than could Jimmy Carter!!"

We have attempted to illustrate how the Supra-Banker - Socialist Alliance has worked, and is working. Behind this Alliance, which we call a Conspiracy, there always seems to be a plan to create chaos within a country, in order to convert it either to Carrot Stick Socialism or Big Stick Communism. The plan worked in Cuba, it worked in Nicaragua, it is working in El Salvador. Caribbean dominoes will continue to fall unless we finally awake to the realization that as a Constitutional, free enterprise, representative Republic, we cannot compromise or concede to political coalitions on the part of either the International Bankers or the International Communists.

Once before in our comparatively short history we were faced with a similar situation. The War of 1812 had been fought primarily as a result of alien efforts to destroy American business and industry, and create sufficient chaos to force our government to submit to the tyranny of the then European based International Bankers. As a result of that war, our still small Nation of only 12 million souls had been weakened financially, and our military establishment diminished and almost non-existent. At such a time, the newly independent nations to the south of us were being threatened with an alien takeover by a coalition of European monarchies including Spain, France, Russia, Prussia and Austria. We were in a poor position to do anything about it, President James Madison was worried, but determined. In a message on the State of the Union delivered to Congress on December 2, 1823, he spoke out boldly, pronounced the words that later would come to be known as the Monroe Doctrine. Although it never became a treaty or an official document, that Monroe Doctrine became one of the most important statements ever made by an American President. It was honored by all Nations, enforced when dishonored. In his historic address President Monroe made four basic points:

1) No European power would be allowed to alter the status quo in the Americas; 2) The American system of Republics was utterly distinct from the European monarchical system (now the Socialist system-Ed); 3) Any European effort to export its system to the Americas would be viewed as an unfriendly act, dangerous to the peace; 4) The United States of America recognized existing colonial relationships in the Americas, and disclaimed any intent to interfere in European domestic affairs.

HUMANISM ON THE OFFENSIVE, OR JUST OFFENSIVE?

A half-page advertisement in The New York Times Book Review announces that "Corliss Lamont at Eighty celebrates a distinguished life with the publication of The Philosophy of Humanism." This is the sixth edition, is revised and enlarged and features an introduction "exposing the Moral Majority." The blurb openly confirms that "The Moral Majority has particularly targeted Humanism, claiming 'most of the evils in the world today can be traced to Humanism... It is destroying our culture, families, country and...the entire world.'"

The claim can be considered accurate, accurate enough that we felt someone ought to just as accurately expose Corliss Lamont, who is much more than the author of books about Humanism, or honorary chairman of The American Humanist Association, or 'chairperson' of the National Emergency Civil Liberties Committee, or a multimillionaire whose daddy left him an inheritance gained by the financial manipulations of an International Banker who took charge when the late J.P. Morgan went to his ultimate reward.

Putting our attitude into action, we started digging into some of our old files and books to refresh our memory. One of the first things we came upon was a Report on Communist Activities in the United States which was issued April 1, 1935 by the Intelligence Bureau of the United States Navy. This kind of documentation can be suppressed, but it can't be disproved. And the Naval Intelligence Report contained this statement:

"Therefore the Robert Morss Lovetts, Roger Baldwins, Clarence Darrows, Arthur Fishers and a long string of Communist-minded intellectuals (Harry F. Wards, Jane Addamses, Frederick J. Libbys, Dorothy Detzers, Kirby Pages, Corliss Lamonts, George S. Countses, Sherwood Eddys and William Kilpatrick) that are busily engaged in spreading the philosophy of discontent destructively, not constructively, are the primary factors in the situation which loyal Americans must contend for the preservation of American ideals, traditions, institutions and government. These are the 'fringe revolutionists' too lacking in intestinal fortitude to go all the way with Communism, but who stand by and urge the Communist to do his worst, and provide him with protection, sympathy and defense, while he commits the overt act they have not the courage to commit themselves." [Underlining to Corliss Lamont's name added.]

Almost all of these aiders and abettors of Communism named by the Naval Intelligence Bureau have, with the passage of time, been whitewashed and made image-pure in the eyes of the public. They have been exalted to Humanistic sainthood by the mind-benders and people-shapers by the controlled communications media, the institutionalized church and the state school. Since birds of a feather do flock together - especially ducks, as our late friend Senator Joe McCarthy used to tell us - it seems appropriate that we of the Lamont opposition cite some of past Un-American accomplishments of these birds who were identified with Comrade Lamont. So, briefly, some cases and characters:

ROBERT MORSS LOVETT. A peripatetic professor who was president of the League for Industrial Democracy, the U.S. counterpart of the British Fabian Society, Lovett also served as director of the American Civil Liberties Union, as a trustee of the communistic Federated Press, and a trustee of the Communist-aiding Garland Fund. While teaching at the Rockefeller-supported Chicago University, he was investigated in 1935 by the Illinois Senatorial Investigating Committee which charged: "Professor Lovett's activities in communistic or unpatriotic organizations and associations with communist speakers prove that Professor Lovett cannot be an asset to any forward-looking American institution." So he 'retired' and was appointed governor of the Virgin Islands by President Roosevelt, but was promptly removed by an Act of Congress and his pay withheld. Whereupon he is said to have said in anger, "I hate the United States! I would be willing to see the whole world blow up, if it would destroy the United States!" An equally subversive friend of his, Milton Mayer, wrote of Lovett: "The associate of so many Communists, the defender of so many more, and the tool of all of them has never been a Communist. Yet, of the four hundred organizations which the FBI connected him with, it is safe...to name three that were not at any time and in any degree infested by Commies."

ROGER BALDWIN. When organizing the American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU) Baldwin wrote to his associates: "Do steer away from making it look like a Socialist enterprise. We want to look patriots in everything we do. We want to get a good lot of flags, talk a good deal about the Constitution, what our forefathers wanted to make of the country, and to show that we are really the folks that really stand for the spirit of our institutions." But his deceptiveness was shown when he wrote in a Socialist symposium published by the radical Vanguard press in 1929: "I believe in revolution - not necessarily in the forcible seizure of power in armed conflict, but in the process of growth of class movements determined to expropriate the capitalist class and to take control of all social property. Being a pacifist...I am opposed to revolutionary violence... But I would rather see violent revolution than none at all..."

CLARENCE DARROW. This agnostic lawyer was a charter member of the Intercollegiate Socialist Society, later named the League for Industrial Democracy. He became nationally known for his defense in the Loeb-Leopold trial. A year later he unsuccessfully defended against William Jennings Bryan in the Scopes evolution trial. However, his attacks on Bryan and Bible truths opened the way for the teaching of the theory of evolution in state schools, which was an essential tenet of the religion of Secular Humanism.

HARRY F. WARD. Author of the Methodist Social Creed of 1908, Ward was an active member of the Communist Party while also serving as associate secretary of the Federal Council of Churches, now named the National Council. The House Un-American Activities Committee Report (1953) states that Ward "had for many years been the chief architect of communist infiltration into and subversion of the field of religion, and that he had used his role as professor of social ethics at Union Theological Seminary in New York for this purpose."

JANE ADDAMS. A Fabian Socialist and member of the national committee of the ACLU, this forerunner of the Women Libbers organized Hull House in Chicago, was a great friend of Eleanor Roosevelt.

KIRBY PAGE. Posing as a Social Gospel Christian, Page was successful in spreading propaganda in favor of Communist Russia throughout the church organizations affiliated with the Federal and National Councils of Churches.

SHERWOOD EDDY. Another religious leader who used his ministry to promote Communism.

DOROTHY DETZER. She became executive secretary of the HUAC-cited Women's League for Peace and Freedom. Another favorite of Eleanor Roosevelt's.

GEORGE S. COUNTS. A disciple of John Dewey of progressive education fame, Counts "went beyond Dewey" in his promotion of a New World Order which was to be achieved through the state schools. Like Dewey, he went to Soviet Russia as American Adviser to the Communist State Summer University in Moscow and translated a Communist "New Russia Primer" for use in American schools. Perhaps best known in educationist circles for his revolutionary book, "Dare the Schools Build a New Social Order?"

WILLIAM KILPATRICK. A follower of Dewey, Kilpatrick was vice president of the League for Industrial Democracy, also visited Communist Russia where he was warmly welcomed. He was taught, accepted and upon his return to the United States promoted "the Soviet ideal of a supranational government to be achieved by the employment of the national state in a revolutionary program." (Quoted from "The Messianic Character of American Education," by Rousas Rushdoony). A fixture at Columbia Teachers College, he has been called "the symbol of radicalism in education" and credited with "having influenced more teachers and children than any other person in this generation, according to many educators" (from "Bending the Twig," by Augustin A. Rudd.)

These were a few of the Communists, Fabian Socialists, radicals, social gossellers and educationists mentioned by the U.S. Naval Intelligence Bureau in connection with Corliss Lamont, who is the principal subject of this report because he has made a direct attack on Christian American activity, in behalf of what has now become a state religion: Secular Humanism. Having noted briefly a few of his associates, let us now regard this honorary president of the American Humanist Association.

CORLISS LAMONT. The story really begins with the parents of our subject. Thomas W. Lamont was a Harvard graduate who was working as a financial reporter on a New Jersey newspaper. According to Rose L. Martin in her "The Selling of America," Lamont "displayed a rare gift for ingratiating himself with the most imposing figures of Wall Street." And the most imposing figure of the time was J.P. Morgan, who spotted Lamont and gave him a position in his firm. Soon Lamont was a junior partner in the company. Then came a brief hiatus in his climb to money power. Colonel House was organizing his "The Inquiry," a team of young intellectuals who were to accompany him to Paris and the Peace Conference that was to end the war and set up the League of Nations. And Lamont was selected as one of the group. Here was born what came to be called The Council On Foreign Relations, Lamont being a charter member. Also, he had connections with the super-secret Round Table Group, and in 1940 became president of the super-super-secret Pilgrim Society USA. He and his wife became officers in the Foreign Policy Association. Mrs. Lamont was a trustee of the pro-communist New School for Social Reserach (Eleanor Roosevelt was a member of the board). Meanwhile, back on Wall Street, Thomas had become a senior partner with J.P. Morgan, had become sufficiently important that it was he who signed to so-called "Bankers' Report" advocating diplomatic relations with Soviet Russia. President Roosevelt duly followed suit and in 1933 established full diplomatic relations with the Bolshevik regime.

Meanwhile young Corliss had grown up, graduated from Harvard, which school had received a two million dollar donation from Lamont Senior. Corliss, while a student had become active in the League for Industrial Democracy, began his career of writing and teaching to promote Communist causes. His first important public notice came about as a result of his relationship with the Carnegie foundations. In his well documented book, "Prejudice and the Press," Frank Hughes wrote: "The Carnegie Endowment's 1946 Yearbook, reported that the Carnegie Endowment had distributed to its 'international mind alcoves' in high schools and universities copies of 'The People of the Soviet Union,' by Corliss Lamont. Lamont was a lecturer in the Jefferson School of Social Science, the Communist Party school in New York City, and has been affiliated with a host of Communist Front organizations." The HUAC and other Congressional investigating committees have listed Corliss Lamont as having been a member of 56 Communist and/or Communist Front organizations. A brief but accurate account of the pro-Communist activities of the Lamont family can be found in an unexpected place, in the pages of the book "Tragedy and Hope" which is subtitled "A History of the World in Our Time," by the late Carroll Quigley. Beginning on page 945 of this book we read:

"Our concern at the moment is with the links between Wall Street and the Left, especially the Communists. Here the chief link was the Thomas W. Lamont family. . . . Tom lamont had been brought into the Morgan firm. . . became a partner in 1910. . . Tom Lamont was simply Morgan's apostle to the Left. . . . The chief evidence, however, can be found in the files of the HUAC, which shows Tom Lamont, his wife Flora, and his son Corliss as sponsors and financial angels to almost a score of extreme Left organizations, including the Communist Party itself. . . . During this whole period of over two decades, Corliss Lamont, with the full support of his parents, was one of the chief figures in 'fellow traveler' circles and one of the chief spokesmen for the Soviet point of view both in these organizations and also in connections which came to him either as the son of the most influential man in Wall Street or as professor of philosophy at Columbia University. . . . In January, 1946, Corliss Lamont was called before HUAC. He refused to produce records, was subpoenaed, refused, was charged with contempt of Congress. . . . Adverse publicity continued, yet when Thomas Lamont rewrote his will on January 2, 1948, Corliss Lamont remained in it as co-heir to his father's fortune of scores of millions of dollars."

Permit us to hypothesize. Corliss Lamont the multimillionaire was a dedicated if not a card-carrying Communist. He had devoted his life to the proselytization of his Godless religion. He was doing this as a writer of books, as a lecturer to students, and as a financier of the Communist Party and its scores of Fronts. But he was exposed, publicly charged and condemned at a time when the preaching of outright Communism was on the wane. The time of the McCarrans and the McCarthys had come, and even a few serious attempts were being made to drive the Red Tares out of the gardens of administration and academy. Lamont sensed that the preaching of Communism was no longer sufficiently productive if preached in the name of Communism. So, Lamont and his ilk sought a new approach, a different name, another way to delude and deceive, and win people away from Christian tradition and Bible-centered law and morality. And this was found in the very philosophy that was preached by Satan in the Garden of Eden: the philosophy of humanism, belief in the unrestricted ability of man. The belief that man is able to save himself, to guide his own evolution and that of society; to control himself, his world, and all things else. Of course, if man can control and re-order all things, then man will have recreated the world and made it into a paradise, a kingdom of gods. And this, whether you call it Communism, Socialism, Fabianism, Fascism, or Democracy is the dream of Secular Humanism. And where Communism can fail, people will still fall for that satanic lie when called by the name of Humanism. But - Glory to God - its two strongest institutions, the state and the state school, are in rapid decay, and Christian reconstruction may become the wave of the future. Again, God willing and at least a remnant be found worthy.

NIEO, ECOSOC, ESCAP, AND ALLIED ACRONYMS

Pope John Paul II has affiliated his followers with that crowd of International Socialists and One Worlders who are promoting NIEO, the New International Economic Order. That crowd includes the World and the National Councils of Churches, a group calling itself the Action for World Development, the Trilateral Commission, the Council on Foreign Relations, the Club of Rome, OECD (Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development), the United Nations, the Socialist International, and a host of other organizations promoting World Government, including the recently formed (1981) Parliamentarians for World Order. Regarding the Pope's affiliation, we quote:

"NEW ECONOMIC SYSTEM CALLED FOR BY THE POPE"

"ROME, April 3 (AP) - Pope John Paul II called today for a global economic order that would assure human dignity and 'just sharing of the property of God' with special concern for the people in developing nations. "Human dignity remains the decisive criterion for a world that wants to build itself in justice and peace,' the Pope said in a keynote address to a Vatican-sponsored international symposium called 'Toward the Year 2000.' 'If we are guided by this principle, we can overcome false and partial systems as well as materialistic and capitalist ideologies,' the Pope said, speaking in Italian. He characterized the world's present economic system as unresponsive to the well-being of the people and 'insufficient' and 'inadequate' to meet social challenges of the third millenium... 'We are committed to the cause of social justice,' the Pope told 200 guests and panelists gathered at the Vatican's Synod Hall, including the United Nations Secretary General, Javier Perez de Cuellar." (Unquote). In addition to attending the Pope's symposium, Perez de Cuellar also contributed an article in the latest Trilateral Commission's quarterly Dialogue 28. The new UN Secretary General said, "I have always favored a global negotiation,' adding that "To me, a new international economic order is clearly necessary."

This Dialogue 28 deals exclusively with comments and suggestions concerning the Cancun Conference held last October and co-hosted by President Portillo of Mexico, a friend of Fidel Castro of Communist Cuba; and Pierre Trudeau of Canada, a confirmed International Socialist. That Cancun conference was reported by the media in the United States as being a great success on the part of President Reagan, who delivered the message that "the free market system is the best way to improve the lot of the developing nations." But, as is often the case, the media misinformed the people. Because, it wasn't Ronald Reagan who was the star of the show; it was Willy Brandt, the International Socialist who wasn't even there in person. The real "spirit of Cancun" was described by Henri Konan Bedie, currently the president of the national assembly of the Ivory Coast, once an ambassador to the United States and a trusted adviser to Robert Strange McNamara while the latter was president of the World Bank. In this same issue of Dialogue 28 Bedie wrote:

"The Summit Meeting of heads of state and government of 22 industrialized and developing countries, held in Cancun on October 22 and 23, 1981, translated into reality a proposal formulated by the Brandt Commission in an effort to rekindle international cooperation and, in particular, cooperation between North and South, in order to promote the development of poor countries. The Brandt Commission had been created at the initiative of then World Bank President Robert McNamara to encourage further the momentum of ideas on third world development."

The Brandt Commission Report, which is the blueprint from which the New International Economic Order (NIEO) is to be constructed, is much in the minds of the World Planners since it was accepted by the Trilateral Commission after Cancun. In charge of plans for the distribution of wealth in behalf of the Trilateral Commission are Takeshi Watanabe, its Japanese chairman; Robert McNamara, former World Bank President, now Bank of America President, and Jacques Lesourne, professor of economics and industrial statistics at the Conservatoire National des Arts et Metiers in Paris. Chairman Watanabe is of the opinion that changing the world from free enterprise to socialist economy will take a little time. He says to his Trilateral Commissioners: "We must realize that immediate difficulties cannot be solved by short-term expedencies alone. More fundamental, long-term measures often prove more effective. A dose of medicine may help relieve pain, but only a healthy body can overcome disease. This is why I welcome the decision taken at the meeting of the Chairmen of the Trilateral Commission in Paris in November 1981 to take up the theme of 'strategies for assistance to developing countries' as one of the topics on which a new task force will prepare a paper to be discussed at the plenary session in 1983."

However, other world planners are not as patient as the Japanese chairman. And a kind of climax can be expected to occur in June in Paris. The Heads of State and Government are holding another Summit, at the Versaille Palace, in June. At the same time a meeting of the Trilateral Chairmen is planned. Also, a NATO conference is scheduled. So, we may conclude that, while President Reagan is busy delivering well-written, excellently-delivered and popularly-received messages extolling the merits of free market, free enterprise, other freedoms and securities, the real rulers of the world will be meeting in secret and well-guarded sessions in which the equal division and controlled distribution of wealth may be accomplished in such a way that the Money Barons can reap profits and power as a result.

Having a heavy hand in all of this will be the United Nations, its Economic and Social Council (ECOSOC) in particular. Taking it for granted that NIEO will be established, last month (March 1982) ECOSOC released its "Special Survey on Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP). It will serve as a type of codicil to Brandt's blueprint for the fulfillment of NIEO. More about this later, space permitting. But before delving deeper into the current global melange, let's go back a few decades and trace its development:

1942 is a good starting time. The U.S. had been jockeyed into World War II, and this may have seemed a good time to make plans for for remaking the world and its methods of governance. John Maynard Keynes wrote a memorandum that was seen only by the World Planners prior to its publication in 1974. It's title: "The International Control of Raw Materials." Also that same year, the Federal Council of Churches (now the NCC) published the report of its "Commission to Study the Basis of a Just and Durable Peace." Chairman of the panel was John Foster Dulles, member of Colonel House's "The Inquiry," a charter member of the Council on Foreign Relations, later to become the Secretary of State under Eisenhower. Time magazine of March 16, 1942 reported the conclusions of the Federal Council-Dulles Commission: "...Individual nations, it declared, must give up their armed forces except for preservation of domestic order and allow the world to be policed by an international army and navy..." The ultimate goal: "a duly constituted world court with adequate jurisdiction, international administrative bodies with necessary powers, and adequate international police forces and provisions for enforcing its world-wide economic authority." Also a universal system of money, world-wide freedom of immigration, and a democratically controlled world bank.

Also in 1942 the Council on Foreign Relations effectively assumed control of the U.S. Department of State. The CFR boasts of how it happened. Finances were provided by the Rockefeller Foundations and the CFR produced a series of "War and Peace Studies" composed of five sections covering economic, security, political, territorial and post-war foreign policy areas. Cordell Hull, then Secretary of State, accepted the studies and brought into the Department the chairmen of each of the sections. Out of this CFR takeover of the State Department developed, with the help of some Communists who were also members of the CFR, the IMF, the World Bank, the United Nations, and our country's post-war programs such as the Marshall Plan. After solidifying its control of the State Department, came the amalgamation of War, Navy and Air Force into a Department of Defense and a Pentagon with control over same, this followed by firmer control of Treasury and foreign trade. With the establishment of the Ten Federal Regional Districts, considerable control over State, County and local governments was gained by agencies promoting welfare statism, centralized authority and resources control and management.

Meanwhile at the "people's level" in contrast to the leaders' level, many other organizations and associations were being formed. Norman Cousins of "Union Now," United World Federalists financed by James Warburg and headed in the beginning by Cord Meyer who later found the CIA a richer field, many similar organizations were formed, most of them following the Fabian line of "making use of the amendment process of the United Nations to transform it into a world government." Such groups are too numerous to detail in one short Report.

The Socialist International, European based, originally established in 1864 to promote world government through means more peaceful than those used by the International Communists, became dormant until 1951, when it re-awakened to establish headquarters in London and, at a Milan congress that year issue a "Socialist Policy for the Underdeveloped Territories." The statement said it is "the primary task of Socialists to create a public opinion favourable to active participation in a programme of assistance to underdeveloped countries, even if this effort should entail sacrifices from the peoples of the more advanced countries."

In May 1954 the Bilderberger Group was formed. Over 80 internationalists attended the first conference where it was decided, according to strictly confidential minutes later revealed, that "Insufficient attention has so far been paid to long-term planning, and to an evolving international order which would look beyond the present-day crisis. When the time is ripe our present concepts of world affairs should be extended to the whole world." In 1974 David Rockefeller added yet another control group, the Trilateral Commission. Last year, a new organization was formed: The Parliamentarians for World Order. Its promotional brochures read, "Parliamentarians for World Order is a newly formed network of 550 legislators in eighteen countries, working in national parliaments and at the United Nations to help build a more just and secure international system." Its chairman is a Canadian M.P., Douglas Roche; its American officer, designated a councilor, is Paul Simon, (D.Ill.), 1980 chairman of Members of Congress for Peace through Law, a Carter-appointed delegate to the UN Special Session on Disarmament in 1978. The Review of the News Conservative Index for March 31 gives Simon 9 points out of a possible 100. Simon is but one of many members of this coalition, but we don't have a complete list. We do have this statement: "Parliamentarians for World Order...

calls upon parliamentarians throughout the world to work in their own parliaments and in the United Nations Organization to fully implement the Report of the Independent Commission on International Development issues under the Chairmanship of Willy Brandt,..."

Another organization, "The Institute for World Order," headed by Saul Mendlovitz of the Brookings Institution, advocates the dividing of the world into Territorial Regions, similar to the Ten Federal Regions into which the United States has been divided. Ultimately these Territorial Regions would be absorbed into a World Federation. The Club of Rome also favors the creation of Regional World Governments as a preliminary step, and disguises its goal as the establishment of worldwide Humanistic Socialism. A Canadian publication, Enterprise, comments: "It is quite clear that the World Government idea was to be hidden in the altruistic garb of 'development and aid' - much more appealing to gullible Christians. Indeed, in 1954 and 1955, two specific conferences - the First and Second London Parliamentary Conferences on World Government - were held under the chairmanship of British Fabian M.P. Ernest Davies.... At the second of these it was decided to set schemes of World Government aside temporarily, in favour of a World Development Programme." And this is where Willy Brandt's Socialistic scheme takes precedence. It is a plan for the establishment of a World Government disguised as a program of aid and development especially to the Third World countries, a group of countries headed by Communist Cuba! In this same connection, it is seldom understood that in promoting the Atlantic Alliance and its NATO, we are actually helping to develop a Socialist World Government. Globescan carries a headline: "NATO Makes the World Safe for Socialism." Pointing out that all the countries of West Europe (except Britain recently) have Socialist Governments, the article adds: "From the time NATO was founded in 1949 the top political posts have been held by Leftists. First was NATO's Belgian Secretary General Paul-Henri Spaak, a Socialist Internationalist, whose admitted objective was one-world government by merging the West with the Soviet Union. Since this time, all of NATO's leaders, all the Secretary Generals, have advocated one-world government. They still do today. The United States foreign policy is directed by members of the Rockefeller-led Council on Foreign Relations and the Trilateral Commission. Their published plans call for a 'New World Order.'...A New World Order policy is not an American policy against Socialism;...it is a policy of World Socialism. It appears as if the role assigned to the United States by the International Establishment is to make the world safe for Socialism." (Accent added. Quoted from Globescan, U.S. subscription center: 1545 New York Ave. N.E., Washington, D.C. 20002).

Enterprise, previously quoted, summarizes: "Many capitalists in the West believe a World Government would be a means of offsetting the advance of Communism. Many idealistic Communists sincerely accept that World Government would deal a death-blow to monopoly capitalism. The real truth is that World Government would be in the hands of an unholy alliance that has worked as one since the revolutionary process started - International Bankers, International Communism and the Socialist International. The real objective is power."

THE POWER TO "CREATE" MONEY

Ron Paul, Member of Congress from the 22nd District in Texas, is a minority (Republican) member of the House Committee on Banking, Finance, and Urban Affairs. He is a dissenting member of that Committee. He objected to the monetary policy taken by that Committee in its semi-annual Report. He sent to us a copy of his dissenting views, along with a letter of explanation. In view of our present national financial and economic situation we believe that his opinions on the subject of money should be published for all to read. However, we don't expect to see information of this nature published in organs of the controlled press. Therefore, we are taking the liberty of publishing Ron Paul's letter of March 5th, 1982, along with his dissenting views on monetary policy.

* * * * *

Dear Friends:

I am enclosing a copy of my dissenting views on monetary policy for your information. There is some background explaining these views which I think you ought to know.

When the Banking Committee circulated the first draft of its semi-annual Report on Monetary Policy, it was reliably reported that the Report emanated from Representative Reuss's office, specifically from James Galbraith, son of John Kenneth Galbraith. The Report quoted the Constitution as authorizing Congress "to create money, regulate the value thereof." Mr. Reuss, Chairman of the Joint Economic Committee, also put a statement in the Congressional Record on March 22 containing this revealing misquotation of the Constitution.

After I submitted my dissenting views, several members of the Banking Committee majority staff telephoned my office to say that they had enjoyed reading my views and that I had really caught the majority in a major gaffe. No doubt that explains why all references to the Constitution were deleted from the final Committee Report, which was a major revision of the first draft of the Report. So major were the revisions that the publication of the Report was delayed a week. The dissenting views are my final version; I simply added a few paragraphs criticizing the Report in its final form.

* * * * *

DISSENTING VIEWS OF RON PAUL ON MONETARY POLICY

I was astonished when I read the draft of the Committee's views, for their last paragraph quoted from the Constitution. It is a rare occasion when any Committee takes cognizance of the Constitution, and the majority deserves our commendation.* But not our highest commendation. I would be more lavish with my praise were the Constitution quoted accurately. The Committee writes: "The Constitution (Article I, Section 8) entrusts the Congress of the United States the power to create money, regulate the value thereof." If the Federal Reserve should refuse, on its own initiative, to alter its present, dangerous policy, then Congress must exercise its constitutional mandate and its public responsibility."

my to coin

* All references to the Constitution, erroneous or otherwise, have been deleted from the final version of the Committee Report.

I don't understand why Congress should defer to the Federal Reserve and postpone performing its "constitutional mandate," but more importantly, that mandate is to "coin" money, not "create" money as the Committee has it.

Article I, Section 8, clause 5 says: "The Congress shall have power.... to coin money, regulate the value thereof, and of foreign coin, and fix the standard of weights and measures." Nothing is said about "creating" money. In fact it was the creation of paper money that caused the authors of the Constitution to use the language they did. D
M

When the Founding Fathers wrote the Constitution, in the summer of 1787, they had, fresh in their minds, the debacle of the paper money printed and issued by the Continental Congress during the Revolutionary War. The paper notes, "Continental" as they were called, eventually fell to virtually zero percent of their original value because they were not redeemed in either silver or gold. They were "greenbacks," and were the first of three major experiments with "greenbacks" that this nation has conducted.* The Continental greenback failed miserably, giving rise to the popular phrase "not worth a Continental."

Consequently, when the Constitutional Convention met in 1787, the opposition to paper money was strong. George Mason, a delegate from Virginia, stated that he had a "mortal hatred to paper money." Delegate Oliver Ellsworth from Connecticut thought the Convention "a favorable moment to shut and bar the door against paper money." James Wilson, a delegate from Pennsylvania, argued that "It will have a more salutary influence on the credit of the United States to remove the possibility of paper money." Delegate Pierce Butler from South Carolina pointed out that paper was not a legal tender in any country of Europe and that it ought not be made one in the United States. Mr. John Langdon of New York said that he would rather reject the whole Constitution than allow the federal government the power to issue paper money. On the final vote on the issue nine States opposed granting the federal government power to issue paper money, and only two favored granting such power.

The framers of the Constitution made their intention clear by the use of the word "coin" rather than the word "print," or the phrase "emit bills of credit." Thomas M. Cooley's Principles of Constitutional Law elaborates on this point: "To coin money is to stamp pieces of metal for use as a medium of exchange in commerce according to fixed standards of value."

In his explanation of the Constitutional provisions on money, James Madison, in Federalist No. 44, referred to "the pestilent effects of paper money on the necessary confidence between man and man, on the necessary confidence in the public councils, on the industry and morals of the people, and on the character of republican government." His intention, and the intention of the other Founders, was to avoid precisely the sort of paper money system that has prevailed for the past ten years. This intention was well understood throughout the 19th century, and was denied only when the Supreme Court found it expedient to do so. For example, Daniel Webster wrote:

If we understand, by currency, the legal money of the country, and that which constitutes a lawful tender for debts, and is the statute measure of value, then undoubtedly, nothing is included but gold and silver. Most unquestionably, there is no legal tender, and there can be no legal tender in this country under the authority of this government or any D

In 1832, the Select Committee on Coins of the House of Representatives reported to the Congress that "The enlightened founders of our Constitution obviously contemplated that our currency should be composed of gold and silver coin. . . . The obvious intent and meaning of these special grants and restrictions [in the Constitution] was to secure permanently to the people of the United States a gold or silver currency, and to delegate to Congress every necessary authority to accomplish or perpetuate that beneficial institution." The Select Committee stated its conclusion that "The losses and deprivations inflicted by experiments with paper currency, especially during the Revolution; the knowledge that similar attempts in other countries were equally delusive, unsuccessful, and injurious; had likely produced the conviction [in the minds of the framers of the Constitution] that gold and silver alone could be relied upon as safe and effective money." Twelve years later, in 1844, the House Committee on Ways and Means concluded that:

✓
The framers of the Constitution intended to avoid the paper money system. Especially did they intend to prevent Government paper from circulating as money, as had been practiced during the Revolutionary War. The mischiefs of the various expedients that had been made were fresh in the public mind, and were said to have disgusted the respectable part of America. . . . The framers [of the Constitution] . . . designed to prevent the adoption of the paper system under any pretext or for any purpose whatsoever; and if it had not been supposed that such object was effectively secured, in all probability the rejection of the Constitution might have followed.

Later in the century, Justice Stephen Field presciently wrote in the case Juliard v. Greenman (1884):

There have been times within the memory of all of us when the legal tender notes of the United States were not exchangeable for more than half of the nominal value. The possibility of such depreciation will always attend paper money. This inborn infirmity, no mere legislative declaration can cure. If Congress has the power to make the [paper] notes legal tender and to pass as money or its equivalent, why should not a sufficient amount be issued to pay the bonds of the United States as they mature? Why pay interest on the millions of dollars of bonds now due when Congress can in one day make the money to pay the principal; and why should there be any restraint upon unlimited appropriations by the government for all imaginary schemes of public improvement if the printing press can furnish the money that is needed for them?

Justice Field foresaw exactly what would happen in the 20th century when the federal government had used the printing press -- and the computer -- as the means of financing all sorts of "imaginary schemes of public improvement."

A measure of value

Under the Constitution, Congress has power to coin money, (not print money) substitutes. Such money is to be gold and silver coin, nothing else. It is significant that this power of coining money is mentioned in the same sentence in the Constitution as the power to "fix the standards of weights and measures," for the framers regarded money as a weight of metal and a measure of value. Roger Sherman, a delegate to the Constitutional Convention, wrote that "If what is used as a medium of exchange is fluctuating in its value, it is no better than unjust weights and measures... which are condemned by the laws of God and man..."

Rather than urging Congress to execute its "constitutional mandate" to "create" money, the Committee should urge Congress to "coin" money as the Constitution requires. But the Committee recommends instead that "The Federal Reserve should ease the monetary targets in effect for 1982 so as to permit interest rates to fall." The Committee is recommending, to be candid about it, the rapid creation of paper money this year in order to compensate for what the Committee views as its too slow creation last year.

After reading the Committee's Report it is obvious that inflation is and will continue to be a deliberate policy of the government. Inflation is not an accident, nor an Act of God; it is a man-made phenomenon, a deliberate policy of this government. The Committee thinks that "easing the monetary targets" will "permit interest rates to fall." The Committee ignores all the data which shows that the market has become so alert to fluctuations in the money supply that increases in the money supply cause interest rates to rise, not fall. In his testimony before the Domestic Monetary Policy Subcommittee, Undersecretary of the Treasury for Monetary Policy Beryl Sprinkel called the attention of the Subcommittee to this phenomenon. But his data have apparently been lost on the majority.....

Until confidence in our money is restored, interest rates will continue to fluctuate at high rates. The only practical way to restore that confidence permanently is to fulfill our constitutional mandate and institute a modern gold standard.

The Committee dimly recognized that the present interest rate problems are a-historical. The Report states:

Historically, even under the most stable (sic) economic conditions, nominal interest rates have normally been no more than 3 percentage points higher than the inflation rate, resulting in a real interest rate of about 3 percent."

The Committee fails to realize that "historically" the dollar was tied to gold, and even the most tenuous of gold-paper links such as that under the Bretton-Woods System seem to stabilize interest rates. Interest rates today are a-historical precisely because our present monetary system is a-historical.

It is time that the Committee examined its premises. There can be no proper monetary policy unless the system is changed. Managing a central bank - and through it the entire economy - is as impossible as squaring a circle.

THE POWER TO "CREATE" MONEY

Ron Paul, Member of Congress from the 22nd District in Texas, is a minority (Republican) member of the House Committee on Banking, Finance, and Urban Affairs. He is a dissenting member of that Committee. He objected to the monetary policy taken by that Committee in its semi-annual Report. He sent to us a copy of his dissenting views, along with a letter of explanation. In view of our present national financial and economic situation we believe that his opinions on the subject of money should be published for all to read. However, we don't expect to see information of this nature published in organs of the controlled press. Therefore, we are taking the liberty of publishing Ron Paul's letter of March 5th, 1982, along with his dissenting views on monetary policy.

* * * * *

Dear Friends:

I am enclosing a copy of my dissenting views on monetary policy for your information. There is some background explaining these views which I think you ought to know.

When the Banking Committee circulated the first draft of its semi-annual Report on Monetary Policy, it was reliably reported that the Report emanated from Representative Reuss's office, specifically from James Galbraith, son of John Kenneth Galbraith. The Report quoted the Constitution as authorizing Congress "to create money, regulate the value thereof." Mr. Reuss, Chairman of the Joint Economic Committee, also put a statement in the Congressional Record on March 22 containing this revealing misquotation of the Constitution.

After I submitted my dissenting views, several members of the Banking Committee majority staff telephoned my office to say that they had enjoyed reading my views and that I had really caught the majority in a major gaffe. No doubt that explains why all references to the Constitution were deleted from the final Committee Report, which was a major revision of the first draft of the Report. So major were the revisions that the publication of the Report was delayed a week. The dissenting views are my final version; I simply added a few paragraphs criticizing the Report in its final form.

DISSENTING VIEWS OF RON PAUL ON MONETARY POLICY

I was astonished when I read the draft of the Committee's views, for their last paragraph quoted from the Constitution. It is a rare occasion when any Committee takes cognizance of the Constitution, and the majority deserves our commendation.* But not our highest commendation. I would be more lavish with my praise were the Constitution quoted accurately. The Committee writes: "The Constitution (Article I, Section 8) entrusts the Congress of the United States the power 'to create money, regulate the value thereof.' If the Federal Reserve should refuse, on its own initiative, to alter its present, dangerous policy, then Congress must exercise its constitutional mandate and its public responsibility."

* All references to the Constitution, erroneous or otherwise, have been deleted from the final version of the Committee Report.

I don't understand why Congress should defer to the Federal Reserve and postpone performing its "constitutional mandate," but more importantly, that mandate is to "coin" money, not "create" money as the Committee has it.

Article I, Section 8, clause 5 says: "The Congress shall have power.... to coin money, regulate the value thereof, and of foreign coin, and fix the standard of weights and measures." Nothing is said about "creating" money. In fact it was the creation of paper money that caused the authors of the Constitution to use the language they did.

When the Founding Fathers wrote the Constitution, in the summer of 1787, they had, fresh in their minds, the debacle of the paper money printed and issued by the Continental Congress during the Revolutionary War. The paper notes, "Continental" as they were called, eventually fell to virtually zero percent of their original value because they were not redeemed in either silver or gold. They were "greenbacks," and were the first of three major experiments with "greenbacks" that this nation has conducted.* The Continental greenback failed miserably, giving rise to the popular phrase "not worth a Continental."

Consequently, when the Constitutional Convention met in 1787, the opposition to paper money was strong. George Mason, a delegate from Virginia, stated that he had a "mortal hatred to paper money." Delegate Oliver Ellsworth from Connecticut thought the Convention "a favorable moment to shut and bar the door against paper money." James Wilson, a delegate from Pennsylvania, argued that "It will have a more salutary influence on the credit of the United States to remove the possibility of paper money." Delegate Pierce Butler from South Carolina pointed out that paper was not a legal tender in any country of Europe and that it ought not be made one in the United States. Mr. John Langdon of New York said that he would rather reject the whole Constitution than allow the federal government the power to issue paper money. On the final vote on the issue nine States opposed granting the federal government power to issue paper money, and only two favored granting such power.

The framers of the Constitution made their intention clear by the use of the word "coin" rather than the word "print," or the phrase "emit bills of credit." Thomas M. Cooley's Principles of Constitutional Law elaborates on this point: "To coin money is to stamp pieces of metal for use as a medium of exchange in commerce according to fixed standards of value."

In his explanation of the Constitutional provisions on money, James Madison, in Federalist No. 44, referred to "the pestilent effects of paper money on the necessary confidence between man and man, on the necessary confidence in the public councils, on the industry and morals of the people, and on the character of republican government." LEGISLATION TO DECEIVE THE ELECTED AND THE ELECT IF IT WERE POSSIBLE

At one time He said, "Woe unto you, scribes and pharisees, hypocrites! for ye are like unto whited sepulchres, which indeed appear beautiful outward, but are within full of dead men's bones, and of all uncleanness." If this statement were impersonalized it well could be applied to certain laws and regulations that appear beautiful, functional, economical and desirable at first reading, but when examined more closely are shown to be deadly deceptions and pitfalls to entrap the gullible. President Reagan recently suggested just such a measure, an old idea with a new name. It's called The Educational and Opportunity Equity Act, but it's nothing more than the old "Tax Tuition Credit Vouchers for Education" idea. When explained without going into detail and background, this seems to be a beautiful bill, one that would grant tax write-offs for all parents who send their children to private, church and parochial schools. To parents who have been paying taxes to support government schools and also paying the tuition costs to send their children to private or church schools, a tax break of this kind sounds wonderful. So, a great number of conservative educators who ought to know better, right-wing legislators and dedicated promoters of private/church/parochial schools are falling head-over-heels for the plan.

It all began this time when President Reagan went to Chicago to address members of the National Catholic Education Association. He told them that working Americans "are overtaxed and underappreciated." And he proposed tax credits "of up to $500 for families earning as much as $75,000 who send their children to private or parochial schools." Under this plan, said President Reagan, "working families would be able to recover up to half the cost of each child's tuition. Our proposal is fair, equitable and designed to secure the parental right to choose."

Newsweek called it a political gesture, reported that "When Ronald Reagan's advisers gathered at Camp David earlier this year to review his latest polls, they discovered that he was slumping badly with Roman Catholics. Last week they came up with what they hoped might be a quick fix. The President flew to Chicago, home of the country's largest Catholic school system, and announced his intention to give tuition tax credits to families that send their children to nonpublic schools." But the Newsweek article was but an opening blast, since soon - probably next month - both Time and Newsweek will carry a four page spread publicizing this education voucher plan. Heading a national promotional effort will be David Packard of Hewlett-Packard Co. Behind the program is a think tank calling itself the Education Voucher Institute, which is associated with an ever larger organization called the Center for Independent Education. Both EVI and CIE provide "expert testimony on vouchers, tax credits and related issues before Congress, state legislatures and local school boards."

It should be noted that both EVI and CIE are opposed to government schools, are solidly behind all programs to expand private and church schools. We have a promotional brochure from EVI which correctly asserts that "We taxpayers spend over 100 billion dollars a year to support a public education system that is not working... Many schools are not teaching children to read and write... Many schools are teaching subjects parents find objectionable.... Too many schools have become centers of violence, vandalism, drug abuse and alcoholism...These conditions and problems will continue to exist as long as we allow the government's virtual monopoly to be responsible for the education of 90% of our children..." Yet, this Education Voucher Institute is actually promoting a program that would give the government a 100% monopoly on all American education! On April 29-30, 1982, a "conference on education vouchers and tax credits" is being held and attending and speaking will be some of the men who have been the best friends of those promoting private education. Among them will be George Roche, president of Hillsdale College, who has been a strong and effective opponent of government control of private schools. He has been elected to the governing body of EVI and now promotes the voucher system. So does William B. Ball, noted constitutional lawyer who has defended Bob Jones University in its stand against federal control of its institution, and who has long been a leading advocate for church and private schools. Also active in the promotion of the educational voucher system are Milton Friedman, monetarist, Nobelist, successor to the Maynard Keynes system of economy; Mrs. Onalee McGraw of the Heritage Foundation; Robert E. Baldwin of the Council on Foreign Relations; and a large number of educationists. All of these dignitaries say they are solidly against a federal monopoly on education. Yet all of them are promoting the voucher system. They all may have overlooked the fact that whatever the federal government subsidizes, the federal government controls. So says the Supreme Court. And they may have failed to recognize the type of umbrella control over American education which the federal government maintains.

In introducing his Educational and Opportunity Equity Act, President Reagan proposed a bill that would 1) provide a maximum tax credit of $100 per child in 1983, $300 in 1984, and $500 in 1985; 2) allow parents to deduct the amount of the credit from total taxes owed; 3) allow full credit to families with incomes of up to $50,000 while families earning up to $75,000 would get partial credits and families with incomes of over $75,000 a year would get no tax break; and 4) families who send their children to schools that discriminate because of race would get no tax breaks at all. This is the schedule that professing conservatives who ought to know better are promoting. Perhaps these dupes - we use the word advisedly - would know how they are being deceived if they knew how federal agencies control American education. From experts in this field who are far more knowledgeable than your reporter, we have learned that the entire process of educational control comes under the umbrella of a set of regulations called Interagency Day Care Standards. Adopted June 18, 1971, they were not printed for public sale and are difficult to obtain, the master control system hinges upon the federal government's definition of "day care." Here is the definition:

Day care is defined as the care of a child on a regular basis by someone other than the child's parents, for any part of the 24 hour day....

Day care services and programs are further defined as:

Comprehensive and coordinated sets of activities providing for care, protection and development of infants, preschool and school age children on a regular basis during any portion of a 24 hour day... Comprehensive services include, but are not limited to, educational, social, health, and nutritional services and parent participation activities. A day care program constitutes a particular set of day care services.

And here are the clincher statements:

As a condition of federal funding, agencies administering day care programs must assure that the requirements are met in all programs or facilities which the agencies establish, operate, or utilize with federal support...[An Operating Agency is] any agency, public or private, which receives federal funds directly (as an administering agency), or indirectly through a grant or contract with an agency acting as administrator of federal funds in the area, by way of reimbursement through a vendor payment made by the administering agency or by way of a voucher given to the child's parent(s) by the administering agency for day care services provided for the child and his family.

All of the above are excerpts or definitions found in the "Federal Interagency Day Care Requirements" with underlining added. Interested parents are advised to ask their Representative or a Senator to obtain for them a copy of the "Interagency Day Care Standards," dated 18 June 1971, from the Department of Education. The Freedom of Information Act supposedly guarantees access to such records.

Here, briefly, is the method of operation by which federal agencies control all education that is subsidized directly or by voucher payments or tax credits:

1. The State Education Department of each State receives Federal funds (directly or indirectly from another agency such as Welfare, Mental Health, Social Security, etc.) for a program that complies with the federal definitions of "day care." These include but are not limited to Head Start, Neighborhood Youth Corps, Manpower Development and Training Act, Title I of Elementary and Secondary Education Act; also any federally funded program providing for day care services such as work incentive programs for welfare mothers, or other child care services purchased for welfare mothers under Title IV of the Social Security Act.

2. The State Education Department is obligated to coordinate its activities on a statewide basis with the Federal Interagency Day Care Standards.

3. The State Education Department also is obligated to apply the Interagency Day Care Standards to "all programs or facilities which the agencies establish, operate, or utilize with federal support."

4. Thus, the use of federal funds places the school receiving those funds - or the entire State school system when the grant is statewide - under the obligation of complying with the "umbrella type" Interagency Day Care Requirements in all its operations, whether it be the one school or the entire State's school system! This would seem to be the chief reason why the States are trying so desperately to include the policing of all private and church schools under the control of the State Educational System. The State risks the loss of federal funds if all schools in the State do not comply in all respects with the federal requirements!

5. These Interagency Requirements are imposed directly on State and local school systems, by-passing State and local elected officials, as well as State laws and local ordinances. The intention is to penetrate all private and church schools as well; much of which has already been accomplished.

6. Under these Interagency Requirements public school education is defined as a "day care" activity. The Interagency Manual, which your elected representative or senators probably have never seen, admits that "a variety of different definitions appear in federal and State legislation particularly in laws relating to day care licensing." But, the bureaucrats aren't interested in the legal definitions, because "For the purpose of this manual, day care is defined as the care of a child on a regular basis by someone other than the child's parent(s), for any part of the 24 hour day."

7. Under this Interagency definition of "day care," "All administering agencies at the State level and the local level in a State must coordinate their day care program planning and operations activities.... It is the responsibility of administering agencies at all levels to pursue joint program pre-planning and continued coordination." In short, obey the federal agency guidelines as laid out by the Regional Council in your Regional Capitol, or else no federal funds for your State Education Department!

8. In addition to these "Interagency Day Care Standards" we have discussed in this Report, there is yet another "umbrella" regulation under which public (government) schools are expected to operate. This is the "Juvenile Delinquency Prevention Program. It's stated objective is to "develop techniques and practices leading to a solution of the nation's juvenile delinquency control problems based on the assumption that delinquent behavior is rooted in the fabric of society." The basic objective of this program is not to stamp out delinquency as such. The program is focused on behavioral research and admits that its objective is to "bring about changes in youth and society, and to train all levels of...police, teachers, probation officers, judges, community leaders, and social workers" to "prevent" delinquency. Furthermore, the program is "directed at all youth - ages 0 to 24." If you have read Orwell's "1984" recently, you will recognize the pattern: to change youth and society by eliminating all Biblical standards of morality and installing instead the tenets of Secular Humanism! To do this, private and church schools must be "controlled."

This is why the tuition tax credits and voucher plans are so deadly. If private and Christian schools are required to accept federally-backed vouchers, this would place them in a position where they would be forced to apply all federal regulations, including this Juvenile Delinquency Prevention program, in all of the school's activities. Don't be deceived by this as so many are: The federal takeover of private and church schools is the objective; and the granting of tax tuition credits and vouchers is the means!

What is to be done about it? A legal research expert associated with the National Association of Home Educators gives us this advice: The place to begin is with your local and State elected officials. Show them how they have been by-passed, how the State and local governments have been made mere administrators for the policies of federal agencies - policies that the agencies themselves admit are quite alien to the laws passed by our Congress and the State governments, and are controlled from a source that eliminates legitimate citizen participation in government, while imposing a single, alien ideology which attacks the very substance of American institutions.

Get this information to your Congressman and Senators. Demand a public investigation, and action. Inform your friends and neighbors. Insist that elected officials carry out their Constitutional obligation to represent the people. Federal control of local schools is unConstitutional but it exists under the process briefly described here. That this stems from government action in areas where government action is forbidden by the Constitution is both the major problem and the hope for solution. The seizure of the Nation's institutions by a single ideology has simply derived from the ability of certain agents controlling Federal Agencies to foist their programs upon a deceived and unwary citizenry.

The control of education is a function not permitted and specifically denied the Federal Government under the United States Constitution. Therefore, control of education, public or otherwise, by federal regulations or laws, is intolerable. Let your elected officials know you know this.

THE FALKLANDS CONFRONTATION

To the British it's the Falklands. To the Argentinians it's the Islas Malvinas. To the Chileans it's a part of the long-standing Terra Del Fuego feud. To the International Socialists it's a means of challenging conservative leadership in Britain and causing confusion to those they intend to overcome, wherever they may be. To the International Communists it's a means of gaining strength in terms of propaganda, trade, and military power while weakening the strength and stamina of those they intend to conquer. To some 1800 Britons living there it has been a good land, a bit of Britain away from Britain, similar geopolitically to Hong Kong and Gibraltar. But to most people it's just a description in a book: a lonely, cold, windswept and rain-chilled set of islands hundreds of miles off the coast of that icicle-shaped point of land where the cold Southern Pacific meets the colder Southern Atlantic off Cape Horn. But to the world at large, even as you read this, these remote bits of land may have become the stage on which a ridiculous sort of pre-planned, limited war is being waged. And, as with other pre-planned, limited wars that began with Korea, the only winner will be the International Communists, in terms of propaganda, diplomatic leverage, trade and expansion. All in all, this one has been a cleverly manipulated operation typical of the tactics employed by Fabian Socialists.

English language history books tell us the Falklands were first discovered by the navigator John Davis in 1592, who claimed them for England. But the islands were so distant, so lonely, so unproductive that little attention was paid them and they changed hands several times, were in turn claimed by Spain, by France, by Argentina. But in 1832 an American sealing vessel was seized by whalers residing in the Falklands. This was at a time when the United States government believed in America first, and a punitive expedition was launched to regain the vessel and free the American sailors. Britain stepped in to act as arbitrator, reclaimed sovereignty over the Falklands and, since that time, has maintained the Falklands as a Crown Colony. Argentina has disputed that claim ever since. At times Chile has disputed the claims of both nations, has long been engaged in a feud with Argentina over the question of the ownership of land at the Southern tip of South America and of the islands in the area.

While the Falklands maintain the status of crown colony, little has been done to develop or protect the islands. Sparsely populated, little economic potential, 8,000 miles from London, the British government has kept watch over the islands mostly because its inhabitants are passionately British and attached to their lonely but British way of life. Also, there is a bit of pride involved: In one of the most stirring naval engagements of World War I, a British fleet under command of Sir Frederick Sturdee, on December 8, 1914, met in combat and completely destroyed a German squadron under the command of Graf von Spee. Another factor among conservatives in England: Crown colonies remain as strong reminders of a time when there was a British Empire that ruled the waves, and there remains a small but powerful pro-Falklands lobby in London. However, the Argentinians have always believed that the Islas Malvinas are a part of their country, that the British have no claim over the islands, and that sovereignty should be returned to Argentina.

So, the Anglo-Argentine controversy has continued for years and years, and the British Foreign Office has done a commendable job of keeping the situation under control so long as it suited the purposes of the Supranational Fabian agency which still controls the Foreign Office, even as the Trilateral Commission still controls our own State Department. As Hugh O'Shaughnessy wrote in the influential London Financial Times: "British diplomats in London, Buenos Aires, Port Stanley and the UN had successfully balanced a welter of contradictory interests. With the ease of consummate jugglers the Foreign and Commonwealth Offices kept a dozen balls in the air. These diplomatic jugglers can be faulted for only one thing: they did not realize how close the Argentines were in recent weeks to tossing a hand grenade....Caught in the center and aware of the scant international appreciation of their position, British diplomats sought to win time with a carefully graduated program that involved Argentina in island life. YPF, the Argentine state oil company, was given the job of fueling the islands; LADE, the Argentine Air Force's feeder air line, was allowed to run a service from Comodoro Rivadavia on the Patagonian coastline to Stanley. The islanders were encouraged to send their children and their sick to Argentine schools and hospitals. The theory was that the insular Falklanders would get to know their neighbors are the Argentines would see that they did not want the Argentine rule." It was a Falklander political leader who proposed what came to be known as the "Hong Kong Solution." Most of Hong Kong is on land leased from the mainland Chinese government, but is administered exclusively by the British as a Crown Colony. Under a similar arrangement the Falklands would continue to be administered as a British Crown Colony, but sovereignty would gradually be transferred to Argentine, the deal to be consummated in a couple of generations. But this scheme fell through as strange things began to happen, not by accident, we might add.

First, in Argentina an ambitious general, Leopoldo Galtieri, had elbowed his way into the presidency of the country. Communist agents knew about his ambitions and were anxious to make deals to obtain beef and wheat from Argentina. Galtieri is said to be a shrewd man and an intelligent leader. But almost any politico is anxious to be sure of votes. Galtieri apparently was influenced into believing that he should keep his political promises by doing some heroic and spectacular act that would win the applause and support of Argentinians. In addition, there was great need to divert the people from their worries about the awful inflation and the devastating economic depression from which the country suffered. One way to win plaudits and divert minds from thoughts of hunger and desperation would be for the General - now President - to seize the Islas Malvinas and kick the British Marines out of the islands.

Secondarily, the Fabians and leaders of the new Social Democratic party in Britain were seeking ways to embarrass and end the leadership of Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, by forcing her to submit to a General Election, one that she would almost surely lose, to her arch Labour party leader and enemy, Michael Foot. So, on a global scale the propaganda mills began grinding out stories about how Britain was no longer interested in defending the Falklands and a liability would be lifted if some country just took them over. The Fabian types in the British Foreign Office began to influence then Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington, and he did nothing about it when someone in his department issued an order for the withdrawal of the naval forces that had been stationed at Port Stanley, leaving the islands guarded by but a handful of Royal Marines.

Thus the trap was baited and set. The Falklands were there for the taking and Leopoldo Galtieri would become an instant hero if he gave the order to seize and occupy the Islas Malvinas. He walked right into the trap, and Lord Carrington was caught in the trap. Carrington and his aides resigned because of their lack of alertness and consequent error in judgment. And President Galtieri found his country faced with a potential war which he had not intended, did not want, and didn't know how to prevent without loss of pride and political prestige. Like Caesar before them, President Galtieri's and Lord Carrington's best friends had been their worst enemies. And the International and Fabian Socialists who had baited the trap for Britain, and the International Communists who had baited the trap for Argentina, sat back and awaited the explosion which was planned and expected, gloating and hoping. Actually, the Fabians guessed wrongly. What happened was certainly an unexpected shock and crisis to "iron maiden" Thatcher, but she didn't react as her political enemies expected. Instead, she took charge of the situation bravely, refused to give an inch politically, militarily or territorially. If those Argentine troops got off those British Islands post haste, she might talk. But if they failed to move then she would tell the Royal British Navy to do whatever seemed necessary to re-establish British control of the Falklands. She figuratively "stuck to her guns" and what was intended as a humiliation and defeat for the Thatcher government rebounded in its favor. The "Market & Opinion Research International" (MORI), a kind of British-based Gallup poll, reported through the London Economist of April 17: "On the government's actual handling of the crisis, 60% profess satisfaction with only 30% professing dissatisfaction. The Labour party's response is favoured by just 40%, with 39% dissatisfied. The government has clearly found itself in the benign position of wrestling with an issue which a large number of people regard as important and on which their performance is actually well regarded. After the apparent political debacle two weeks ago this is an achievement...The conclusion would appear to be that the public want the government to save its national pride..." So, what was intended to sink Margaret Thatcher has actually become a political buoy.

However, while Fabians may be groaning, Communist leaders may be gloating. This not as a result of the British government's troubles, but because of the situation into which the United States government has been squeezed. We were warned by our very first President about getting involved in foreign entanglements. Well, the chickens came home to roost. Our government got caught in a vise between a Rio Treaty and a NATO Treaty, with no honorable way out.

There are treaties which guarantee the defense of Argentina against any foreign power; and there also are treaties which guarantee aid to Britain whenever such aid is required. Secretary of State Alexander Haig was placed in a most embarrassing position. Like Dulles and Kissinger before him, he became a traveling salesman with a product he couldn't sell. Jaunts were made to London, to Buenos Aires, to Washington, to London, to Buenos Aires, and all to no avail. Finally, he was forced to choose sides. Logically, he chose Britain and the Senate hastened to back up his decision. But that caused Fidel Castro to opt for Argentina, and the majority of the members of OAS did likewise. So the sides had been chosen and all the world waited to learn whether yet another limited war had been forced upon it.

Without mentioning the part played by Fabian and Communist propaganda, the World Press Review for May 1982 gave this summary of the buildup for potential war: "In Argentina an ambitious general...was committed to carving his name on the tablets of Argentine history. His plan was soon reported in the Argentine press, and in British newspapers. Why such clear signals did not immediately lead to a quiet reinforcement of the British naval presence is still a mystery." But it was less of a mystery to the editors of The British Weekly Review, Intelligence Digest, which explained: "Argentina occupied the British Falkland Islands because a British government representative let it be known that Britain was not interested in the Falklands, that they were a political and military embarrassment, and that the sooner the 'problem' was out of the way, once and for all, the better. There can be no doubt that the Argentine government became aware of this attitude and so launched the invasion that has produced the present crisis. The British government official responsible is not among those who recently resigned with Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington. However, it was the knowledge of this attitude of the British Foreign Office...that played a major part in convincing Lord Carrington and his two subordinate ministers that they must resign. There is no question that Britain intends to fight...unless Mrs. Thatcher can achieve an honourable solution she will not survive politically. Her government could possibly fall and there would be a General Election."

In this British Intelligence Report there lies between the lines an affirmation that the British Foreign Office, an entrenched bureaucracy that long has controlled the United Kingdom's foreign affairs, is itself under the control of that coalition of powers that began with Lord Milne, and which now includes besides the original Round Table, the Fabian Society, the Socialist International, the Communist hierarchy, the International Banking coterie, and those other international organizations associated with the London-based Institute of International Affairs (Chatham House), and the New York-based Council on Foreign Relations. Of course, what can be said of the British Foreign Office also can be said of our own State Department. There is this Supranational Power that controls or effectively influences all national governments, including that of Argentina. In this connection, although it is generally believed that Communism and Fascism are bitter enemies and are at opposite ends of the political spectrum, they are sister socialist systems, their chief difference being that one has a global goal, the other is mainly national in outlook. But it should be easy to understand why Soviet Russia is supplying arms to Argentina, spying on the British fleet and informing Buenos Aires of its every move, and is cooperating with Argentina in the development of nuclear technology. Also important: since our government sided publicly with Britain, Brazil is supplying fighter planes to the Argentine Air Force, and Mexico has offered aid to the blockaded Argentina.

To the United States there is a most serious aspect to the Falkland affair. The reason for this Anglo-Argentine confrontation lies partly with the question of Falkland sovereignty. But while the spotlights are focused on the Falklands, in the shadows they cast is concealed a plan to separate all of Latin America from U.S. relations, trade and commerce. The so-called Third World is not being exploited for the benefit of the United States or any other Nation. There is a movement to develop international control over all areas of the world, an aim that already has been partially realized in that most Latin Nations, including Argentina and Brazil, are deeply in debt to International Bankers, cannot pay even the interest on their debts. Ownership of the world's resources by a clique of international financiers and developers is the ultimate aim. Beef and grain in Argentina, almost untapped forests and mineral resources in Brazil, oil and minerals in Mexico, unmined riches in other South American countries! And a Falkland Confrontation is another step toward the supranational control of national governments. If people only understood, perhaps the Conspiracy could be checkmated.

Year Twenty-Nine.....Number Eighteen.....May 7, 1982

WHO REALLY RUNS AMERICA?

For the ninth time in nine years, U.S. News has conducted its annual survey to find out "Who Runs America." The newsmagazine called on "1,548 opinion molders in 30 fields" and the majority of them agreed that Ronald Reagan exercises "the most influence in national life." This would be an obvious assumption of opinion molders, since Reagan is the Nation's chief administrator and announces most new policies or changes in policy, signs all bills before they can become laws, or vetoes them in the hope they won't become laws, is responsible or must bear the responsibility for everything that is published in the Federal Register, is commander-in-chief of U.S. armed forces, etc. As President Harry Truman observed, the buck stops at the oval office in the White House. Hence, the President of the United States, whoever is in that office, would appear to "exercise the most influence in national life." But, actually, these 1,548 opinion molders came closer to the truth when they said that Paul Volcker, Federal Reserve chairman, was the second most influential man in American life, since President Reagan admits that he has no control over the Federal Reserve's actions and decisions. Ranked third in this opinion molders survey was State Secretary Alexander Haig. After the usual ranking members of Cabinet and Congress, Supreme Court Justice Warren Burger came in tenth while influence-maker David Rockefeller was relegated to eleventh place.

Most Americans would accept the list without question. But if the whole truth were told, number eleven on the list should be number one, with Paul Volcker ranked second, Alexander Haig third, and then possibly Ronald Reagan. This can be said because there really is an unelected government that really runs America; an unelected government that includes Rockefeller, Volcker, Haig, Regan, Weinberger, and about eighty other unelected leaders all of whom are members of the Rockefeller-led Council on Foreign Relations, the Trilateral Commission, or both, some few of them having resigned upon becoming a part of the visible federal government, like George Bush and Donald Regan.

Readers of Don Bell Reports are familiar with the position of influence occupied by David Rockefeller in America as well as the world. But, perhaps the whole story has never been told about the influence exerted by Paul Volcker. Donald McAlvany, Intelligence Adviser, has recently published a review of the activities of this man who represents the special interests of a handful of private investors, many of whose names have never been made public. We quote the following from the May issue of The McAlvany Intelligence Adviser.

* * * * *

An Excellent subject for a doctoral dissertation would be a study of who owns the U.S. Federal Reserve System. It is not owned by the government, nor the banking system, nor the people of America. The U.S. central bank, like its sister central banks in Western Europe is privately owned by a small handful of private investors - the list is a more closely guarded secret than the 'actual' amount of gold in Fort Knox. Certainly a strong clue as to the ownership group is that a majority of appointees to the Federal Reserve Board and the powerful Open Market Committee come from the liberal Eastern Establishment group headed by David Rockefeller. Today, since Fed Chairman Paul Volcker and the twelve man 'Open Market Committee.' (the unelected officials who control the U.S. money supply and interest rates), wield more financial power than President Reagan, the entire U.S. Congress and the U.S. judiciary combined, it might be well to ask - 'who are these men and where do they come from?' Five of the eight permanent members of the Federal Open Market Committee are Carter appointees. Four of the seven Governors of the Federal Reserve Board are Carter appointees. (This Board must approve the Presidents and Vice Presidents of the twelve Regional Fed Banks.)

When Paul Volcker was appointed by Carter as Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, the New York Times commented that David Rockefeller had a 'strong influence' in the Carter selection... Paul Volcker (a liberal Democrat and graduate of Princeton, Harvard and the London School of Economics), rose to prominence first at the New York Fed Bank and then as an assistant in the Kennedy Treasury Department. He later served in the Johnson and Nixon Treasury Departments and has held several management positions (e.g. Director of Planning) at David Rockefeller's Chase Manhattan Bank. In addition, he is a trustee of the Rockefeller Foundation, a board member on the Council on Foreign Relations and a member of Rockefeller's Trilateral Commission. As Under Secretary of the Treasury for Monetary Affairs under Nixon, Volcker was the man who in 1969 engineered the inflationary boondoggle whereby the IMF created billions of dollars of SDR's (called 'paper gold') out of thin air. In 1971, Volcker engineered the final severance of the dollar from gold, and the move away from fixed currency exchange rates to floating exchange rates... These three Volcker achievements set the stage for the massive global inflation of the 1970's and prompted a number of the leading European bankers to comment, upon Volcker being named by Carter to head the Fed that 'it closely approximated placing Dracula in charge of the blood bank.'...

Conclusion: The Federal Reserve, a small group of unelected bank officials, has too much power. The power to manipulate the economy of the United States and indirectly much of the world, in conflict with the wishes of the elected U.S. executives and legislative branches, was never intended by our founding fathers to be vested with a small handful of private bankers. Such incredible power could obviously be used (and abused) to manipulate economies and governments, and for the concentration of vast political and economic power.

* * * * *

It should be conceded that all of the blame for our country's financial and economic distress cannot be laid at the feet of unelected officials in the Fed. The majority of elected officials in our Congress seem to have a positive lust for giving away American wealth in the form of foreign aid, loans, and guarantees to private banks to protect their loans to governments that have no hope and no desire to repay the loans. Howard Ruff recently wrote: "One bit of irony that seems to have escaped most commentators on the subject of Soviet military superiority is that they wouldn't even have been in the arms race had it not been for the incredible volume of loans made directly to the Soviet Union by U.S. banks and other Western banks. Even the hard money credits granted to other Iron Curtain countries have benefited the Soviet Union because that is foreign aid they [the Soviets] didn't have to come up with. The dimension of the communist loan problem is awesome. The Soviet Union is in hock to the West for at least $19 billion. The total outstanding debt to the United States, Western Europe and Japan is $82.5 billion. A decade ago it was $37.8 billion. Interestingly enough, that last decade was the period in which the huge military buildup occurred."

"Loans to the communist countries give us two problems: the aforementioned military buildup that would not have occurred without it, and the fact that it is virtually inevitable that sooner or later all those loans will default and, as a result, our banks will be in deepest trouble. As I have consistently said, the government will bail out the banks because most of these loans are federally guaranteed, and even if they weren't, the government can't afford to let the banking system fail. But, this is an immensely inflationary event. There is an old adage that says, 'If I owe you $10 and can't pay you, you've got me. If I owe you $10,000 and can't pay you, I've got you.' The Soviet Union has pulled off the incredible feat of getting us to finance their military buildup, which forces us to engage in a higher military buildup, resulting in a huge increase in domestic debt and more inflation. They have left us in a position where we have to continue to finance them because the consequences of default are so great. So we continue to throw good money after bad, and that money some day could come flying across the North Pole with a tail of fire. The Soviet Union's economy and its military effort would collapse in no time if it became the policy of the West to refuse to loan or do business with the Soviet Union....Lenin was right when he said that we capitalists would braid the rope by which we would be hanged."

Congressman Ron Paul was one of the few legislators who have tried to stop the giving of loans to sustain communist regimes. In introducing a bill, H.J. Res. 414, which would prevent such "rope braiding," he said: "A staggering $57 billion in various loan guarantees and credits has been provided by the U.S. government for the benefit of foreign governments. This is just the sort of government activity which has kept interest rates high in the midst of a terrible recession. If it weren't for these government credit programs those 57 billions would be available to American consumers and businessmen, to buy homes or cars, or to improve outmoded plants and equipment....Our foreign policy is being wagged by the tail of global debt. It is the U.S. government, not the regimes in Poland or Russia, which is being held hostage by the big banks and their overextension of credit abroad."

Ron Paul's H.J. Res. 414 will undoubtedly go unheeded by the majority of Representatives and Senators. For months Congress has wrestled with problems concerning spending and taxing, and attempts to present an acceptable budget for the coming fiscal year. But, it seems the consensus of Congress that we who are broke must keep trying to keep other countries from going broke. An example is that incredible act that permits the Fed to "monetize" the debts of foreign countries so that we, the taxpayers, must pay the bills. Then there is the case of the $1.9 billion paid to Poland to save that country from default. It did nothing for the Polish people, hurt us, and helped the Soviets. Another example surfaced about two weeks ago. A Commodity Credit Corporation official, Lester LeCompte, said the CCC will soon begin to reimburse American banks for some $138 million they loaned to the Communist Government of Poland. Since Poland can't pay her bills, we'll pay them for her, through CCC. Payments will be made to the First National Bank of Chicago, Bank of America, Marine Midland Bank of New York, and the Girard Bank of Philadelphia. This will be a kind of first payment, because Poland will still owe American banks some $679 million, and our government will reimburse the banks. Even worse, Poland owes free world governments and banks some $28 billion, and if the "handful that rules the world" decides Poland has to be kept afloat, they have the permission of our government to "monetize" those debts - which will also help to keep Soviet Russia afloat.

And now comes Argentina's bill. Before the shooting started, Argentina had a foreign debt of $38 billion, a debt on which the government couldn't even pay the interest. And eaten up by inflation (13,500 inflated Argentine pesos equal one inflated U.S. dollar at this writing), going deeper and deeper in debt and the government about to be juntaed out of existence, something had to be done. Now, by a strange kind of magic seemingly known only to "that handful," war has become a good way to turn bad debts into good profits, usually at the expense of the United States. Therefore, it was clever strategy to drag Alexander Haig into the mess as mediator. When the smoke has cleared the United States Government will undoubtedly assume responsibility for the debts, and we, the people, will indirectly reimburse the banks, at the very least in the amount of $6 billion, which is owed to American-based banks.

And Red China must not be overlooked. At this writing Vice President George Bush is in Peking making deals. For the past many months, through arrangements of the government, American businessmen have been going to Red China to arrange for trade and commerce with a Nation that has little, if any, hard money and little except opium products to trade. So, whatever deals that can be made will be guaranteed by our government. In this connection, an article appearing in the British Intelligence Digest of April 28 1982 is important. We quote:

"Know Your Enemy: China.... Some little time ago, Huang Hua, the Foreign Minister of Communist China, delivered a secret report in Peking. It makes interesting reading as Americans prepare to 'do business' with Communist China. [Huang Huo said]:

'We need to learn from the United States advanced technology and know-how, and advanced experience in scientific management and to buy from the U.S. equipment, sophisticated instruments, and research facilities. It is also necessary to gain from the U.S. much more information on industrial buildup....The United States is an advanced capitalist country, with powerful industrial workers and great potentialities for revolution. Through mutual exchanges we can disseminate among Americans Marxism-Leninism...which are like seeds taking root, sprouting and growing strong in the United States and will thus quicken the pace of the U.S. revolutionary movement. If the door to Sino-American relations is opened, we will open the road to revolution in the United States...the U.S. revolution shows promise.'

'Now we quote from an American businessman who was with a party of top American business and oil men on a trip to Communist China.....

'Dear Editor:....I thought that my traveling companions should know the true facts of the country they are visiting...I know, even though I am going reluctantly, that we will give them everything we know so that they can hang us with it, just like the free world is going to help Russia build that gas pipeline which will make Free Europe vulnerable to the Communists. Be they in Moscow or Peking they are all Communists motivated by the same basic doctrine of revolutionary Marxism-Leninism'."

THE GROUND ZERO RIP-OFF

Whatever may be the outcome of the Battle of the Budget and the struggle for a return to economic sanity, one thing is sure: the Communists have won a clear and resounding victory in one phase of the Propaganda War. There has been a constant and intensive drive to disarm the United States, unilaterally if necessary. The alleged goal is universal peace and the supposed means of attaining this objective involves the scrapping of all nuclear weapons and the shutting down of all nuclear power plants. Such plants, the anti-nukes affirm, are a hazard to life (except when they are located in the Soviet Union or its satellites). They also are looked upon as potential producers of fissionable materials needed to manufacture nuclear weapons. In observance of this propaganda victory the Communist Daily World of April 20, 1982 carried the largest possible headline on its front page declaring that "Peace Protests Sweep Nation" and announcing the news that there is to be a "giant action set for June 12." The bottom half of the front page was occupied by a picture of César Chavez, Bella Abzug and Harry Belafonte, huddling together and making plans on behalf of the Communist Party for the carrying out of the "giant action" which is to coincide with the opening of the UN's Second Special Session on Disarmament. Inside this Communist West Coast tabloid was the lead story written by Tim Wheeler. It began: "With simulated detonations of mock nuclear bombs at 'Ground Zero' in towns and cities across the nation, a week of rallies, marches, teach-ins and vigils against nuclear war began....The activities reached millions in towns and cities never before involved in antinuclear activities..."

Lending support to the mass movement which involves the Nations of Western Europe as well as the United States, was a "religious" activity in Moscow. The KGB-controlled Russian Orthodox Church sponsored a four-day World Conference of Religious Workers for Saving the Sacred Gift of Life from Nuclear Catastrophe. Some 25 U.S. church leaders attended the Communist-led conference, the most prominent of them being Billy Graham. Graham had been traveling between colleges and universities preaching to students against nuclear buildup and defense strategy on the part of the U.S. He interrupted his schedule to go to Moscow. Even Vice President George Bush advised Graham not to attend the Communist conference. But the 63-year-old evangelist disregarded all advice, decided to spend a whole week in Moscow, preaching and "communing" with Communist leaders. He conferred for three hours with George Arbatov, the Kremlin's top North American affairs specialist. The Los Angeles Times noted that "Graham, who once called communists Satan worshipers, pointed to Arbatov and said, 'I have met a very wonderful official here.' Arbatov said, 'Dialogue between atheists and believers - this is what we need.'"

It was understood from the beginning that this was to be a religious conference, but that Communist officials - atheists, not believers - would also attend the sessions. Among U.S. church leaders attending the conference were the chief executives of several denominations, including William P. Thompson of the United Presbyterian Church, the Rev. Avery Post of the United Church of Christ, and Bishop David Press of the American Lutheran Church. As an appointed leader of the U.S. delegation, Graham read a prepared statement which began: "I was born, reared and educated in America, and I am a loyal citizen of America. But I also consider myself a member of the world community with responsibilities not only to one nation but to the whole human race. As a Christian and a follower of Jesus Christ, I believe the threat of nuclear war is not only a political but a moral and spiritual issue. It is an issue which is concerning me more and more."

A well documented answer to this disarmament and anti-nuke crusade was answered by G. Russell Evans, a retired Captain of the U.S. Coast Guard. We are not acquainted with the writings of Capt. Evans, but we came across his column which was published in the excellently edited Mountain Lakes Shopper, a weekly published by Ogden and Florence Brouwer of Andrews, NC. 28901. Because Capt. Evans names names and supplies documentation, we are taking the liberty of republishing his article, as follows.

* * * * *

The mushrooming movements in both Europe and America against nuclear weapons are aimed at converting us to pacifism, but none of the reformers seem to care about the vital question: What is your solution to the danger of communist enslavement? The essays and monographs of religious activists and other writers and the pronouncements and warnings of the major church spokesmen are really promoting Bertrand Russell's old slogan, "Better Red than dead." ¶ These crusaders vividly describe cataclysmic annihilation by nuclear holocaust, along with raging fire storms, vast gamma radiation and medical problems too extensive to imagine. Tragically true. Professor Walter Wink of Auburn Theological Seminary, writing in The Christian Century, calls the government paranoid and the people paralyzed, as "we quietly make ready to die together." (March 3, 1982, p. 234). His solution is (1) a nuclear freeze by mutual treaty with the USSR, (2) peace coalitions in America's churches, praying, demonstrating in the streets, and refusing to pay "war taxes," and (3) faith - "exercise the bit (of faith) we do have."

In the same issue, a full page ad features the Harvard Divinity School, led by Harvey Cox with his 210 faculty members and students - all calling for the abolition of nuclear arms which they declare to be "contrary to the will of God." Excellent. But what about the Soviets? And their record for abolishing armaments? Cox's record is impressive: career pacifist agitator, counselor for draft dodgers, and advocate for Christian Communism - the latter, a genuine "non sequiter." Cox, the man who told Communist bigwig Herbert Aptheker that Communists are more virtuous than Christians, now asks Americans to lay down their arms.

Not to worry, however, for America's mainline churches will not be upstaged by Harvey Cox: Listen to the American Baptist Church, the Episcopal House of Bishops, the disciples of Christ, the United Presbyterian moderator, the National Conference of Catholic Bishops, and others in their pleas for disarming America. Indeed, hear United Methodist Bishops John B. Warman and LeRoy Matthiesen, Roman Catholic Archbishops John R. Roach and John Quin, Sweden's former prime minister Olof Palme, Japan's Professor Mitsuo Okamoto, and dozens of others give their formulas for universal peace, including: quit paying "war taxes," walk off jobs involving armaments, and "voice a loud NO to...nuclear weapons." But what about the Soviets?

Of course, the World and National Councils of Churches, flushed with generous American church support, are in the van of the anti-nuke parade. Also flushed with American support (foreign aid and U.S. Army troops) are our European allies, some of whom, unfortunately, are aiding in the anti-nuke procession too, and showing little interest in defending themselves. Among these are the governments of Rome, Bonn, Paris, Amsterdam, and Vienna. French writer Ray Aron reports that Europe is "decadent" and "condemning itself to death when it loses interest in the future" (Virginian-Pilot, Jan 1, 1982, p. A10). Alan Geyer, United Methodist and editorialist, decries the "repeated putdown of European dupes of Soviet propaganda" and rejoices that the United Nations Second Special Session on Disarmament (June 7-July 3) will "open American minds to the views of representative non-Americans." Very clever. This "opening of minds" will be supervised by a Communist (the Under-Secretary for Political and Security Affairs), a post guaranteed to the Communists by Alger Hiss since 1945 (In the Cause of Peace, by Trygve Lie, p. 45). Need we ask: What about the Soviets?

At this point, we need the logic of Pierre S. DuPont who told the French General Assembly in 1790: "Gentlemen, it is necessary to be gracious as to intentions...but we do not have to be gracious at all to inconsistent logic and absurd reasoning. Bad logicians have committed more involuntary crimes than bad men have done intentionally." We have been exposed to "bad logicians."

Moreover, we need no grace to understand the awesome military advantages of the Soviets and their intentions to dominate the world. The former Air Force intelligence chief, Maj. Gen. George Keegan sets Russian superiority at 2-10-1-overall, and most analysts agree. President Reagan is laboring mightily to gain parity for America before negotiating another SALT Treaty, knowing full well that power is the only thing Communists respect. Does anyone doubt, for example, that a nuclear freeze today means second place for America?

The current hysteria for pacifism neglects the responsibility of free men to preserve liberty. The churches know what they want, but do they know the price? Indeed, they offer no Scriptural justification that nuclear weapons are "contrary to the will of God" or that man will destroy the earth. There are none because these are God's prerogatives. [But] the Bible has much to say about national defense... (End of article by G. Russell Evans, Captain USCG Ret.)

Under the heading "Communist Disarmament Lobby in High Gear", Straight Talk of May 13, 1980 presents further information concerning this disarmament movement which is sweeping the world. Again we quote:

"The Communist anti-nuke, disarmament lobby is having a field day. Everywhere you turn you hear about the 'Ground-Zero' group and their assorted hangers-on. Our media is playing it to the hilt with the 'news' shows interviewing Senator after Representative after 'Expert' proclaiming that two-thirds of the American people want a nuclear freeze. This is pure hogwash. Loaded questions and doctored reports can indicate anything the questioners want them to indicate.

"The campaign to unilaterally disarm America is reaching its zenith. It began with Sputnik and seems destined to end with their elusive one-world government, -controlled of course, by the multi-national corporations and the international bankers. The goal is one-world monopoly, the machinery is one-world government and the tactics are the disarming of the western world.

"The 'nuclear hoax' has brought the conspirators very close to their goal and that, with world-wide disorder brought on by a manufactured depression and then hyperinflation, is calculated to push us over the edge. Out of the land will come a great cry to 'do something!' and when that happens the ripe fruit will fall into patient communist hands. If Reagan fails in his apparent effort to rebuild our defenses then it is all over but the bleeding and the American Republic will be purged from the history books. George Orwell's 1984 will be the reality and the world will slide back into the dark ages, probably never to shine again until after Armageddon.

"The time has come for drastic action on the part of the American people. Like the 'letters of correspondence' of Revolutionary days, the hard money newsletter industry is trying to warn the people but we are seemingly being ignored. But, if the fabled 'Man on a White Horse' appears, riding in from nowhere, what will be the outcome? Will he save the day or will he, once he gains power, turn on his followers and impose his own brand of dictatorship?

"But if we are faced with certain conquest by the Communist Monster and if the man arises, we'll have no apparent choice but to follow him and hope for the best."

At his prime time press conference on May 13th President Reagan read from a prepared statement, said he is convinced "America's highest mission is to stand as a leader among free nations in the cause of peace. That's why, hand in hand with our efforts to restore a credible national defense, my administration has been working for a reduction in conventional and nuclear forces that can help free the world from the threat of destruction." So, a conference aimed at reducing the number of nuclear weapons is convened in Geneva. Another conference aimed at reducing the number of conventional weapons is going on in Vienna. But the stumbling block is inspection, finding a way to be sure that the Soviets are keeping their end of whatever bargain is struck. So, said the President, "It will not be a short or easy work. But I believe the Soviet people and their leaders understand the importance of preventing war." We can be reasonably sure that the Soviet people understand the importance of preventing war, but we can't be sure about their leaders, and the people have no say in the matter. "Theirs not to reason why." Of course, in the final analysis, people don't make wars; they just fight them, and perhaps die in them. Nor do governments, as such, make wars. There is what the late Carroll Quigley called "The Select Group." This is the group that makes wars. Its members have no real sense of patriotism, no thoughts of the importance of national sovereignty, or of the defense of a homeland or a people. Again: people don't profit from wars. Governments don't profit from wars. But there is a group that always intends to profit from wars. A current example: A war is being fought over The Falklands. The people understand one set of reasons, are willing even to die for those reasons. But beyond the people is the knowledge that a drilling team brought in one oil well in the area. There are expectations that this is an oil-rich area newly discovered and there is this "Select Group" which intends to control the world's resources. The Argentine Government hoped to develop those sources and enrich Argentina, or at least its leaders. But "The Group" has no thought of allowing any national government to control any potential natural resource of this nature. Make no mistake about it: the war will be settled on "The Group's" terms.

There is a formula: to gain control of the world's resources the United States is to supply the financing, the USSR is to supply the policing. As for the threat of any nuclear war, it should be remembered that the goal is control, not destruction of resources. However, if our elected leaders are impotent or deceived or traitorous, and if war should come, even a nuclear war, by accident or intent, the words of Dr. Petr Beckman of the University of Colorado make sense:

"The morality of war does not depend on the weapons with which it is fought. You have exactly one life to risk in the defense of everything that makes it worth living, and it matters little whether you lose it to a spear, a bullet, or nuclear radiation. Your forefathers risked, and often gave, that one life for your life, liberty and pursuit of happiness. You have no right to squander that heritage, to invite war by weakness, and to leave your children to the demeaning cancer of serfdom."

Bear in mind, this is still just a propaganda war, probably incited by the need to divert attention from the economic mess "The Group" has created. There is one way out: Elimination of the privately-controlled money monopolies, especially the Federal Reserve, and a return to real un-debt money. If there is no profit for "The Group," there should be no war.

BOOKS THAT SHAKE THE WORLD

"History," remarked Cicero, himself a historian and Roman patriot, is the witness of the times, the torch of truth, the life of memory, the teacher of life, the messenger of antiquity." He laid down certain rules by which a historian should be judged: "The first law is that the historian shall never dare to set down what is false; the second, that he shall never dare to conceal the truth; the third, that there shall be no suspicion in his work either of favoritism or prejudice." Unfortunately, with the passage of time and the development of more sophisticated methods of conspiracy, Cicero's words have been unread, forgotten, or ignored by those who have been accepted as historians by the agents who censor and control all communications media, including history books. Thus, these so-called historians are not so much historians as opinion molders, writers who are willing to set down what may not be true, who commit sins of omission by concealing much of what they may know to be true. One of the first rules of The Conspirators, as declared by one of the first of our historical era, Adam Weishaupt, is to control all writings and to set up a system of censorship so that all avenues of communication are banned if not favorable to The Conspiracy, and that are prejudiced in favor of what has been called "The Society of the Elite."

It is unusual, therefore, to find any such "accepted" historians breaking loose from the bonds of such censorship and writing revisionist histories that really expose certain facets of the overall Conspiracy. As one reviewer observed:

On rare occasions a book is published which must forever alter the way in which we view the world around us. Within a short while it becomes difficult to understand how we could have functioned without the knowledge gained from it.

In less than twenty years three such books have been published, books dealing with history, books that are quite possibly the most important studies of modern history since de Tocqueville's "Democracy in America." One of these books was written by James H. Billington: "Fire in the Minds of Men - Origins of the Revolutionary Faith." The other two are by the late Carroll Quigley. Most of our readers will be familiar with what is contained in Quigley's "Tragedy and Hope, A History of the World in Our Time." Equally important, there has been published posthumously and quite recently, "The Anglo-American Establishment." This latter book was written and prepared for publication as early as 1949. But its contents were so sensational, and so very truthful, that no publisher could be found until recently, 1981 to be precise. This is a book which traces the development of the One World Conspiracy from the time of "The Round Table," "Milner's Kindergarten," Rhode's Secret Society, and the Royal Institute of International Affairs, through the establishment of the Council on Foreign Relations, the Institute of Pacific Relations, and other organizations of the Anglo-American Establishment. In his introduction to this book, Quigley wrote:

It is not easy for an outsider to write the history of a secret group of this kind, but...it should be done, for this group is...one of the most important historical facts of the twentieth century...I suppose in the long view my attitude would not be far different from that of the society...but agreeing with the group on goals, I cannot agree with them on methods...In this group were persons who must command the admiration and affection of all who know of them. On the other hand, in this group were persons whose lives have been a disaster to our way of life. Unfortunately, the influence of the latter have been stronger. I have been told that the story I relate here would be better left untold...but I feel the truth, once told, can be of injury to no men of good will.

In his book "Fire in the Minds of Men," Billington delineates and documents a different phase of the One World Conspiracy. When taken together, the works of Quigley and Billington illustrate the fact that there are two broad highways leading to World Government. One is usually referred to as the Socialist Route, which includes any number of mass movements and political parties that promote "equality" as well as collectivism, such as Communism, Fascism, Fabianism, Social Democracy, Welfare Statism, etc. The other broad highway leading toward the New World Order is in no sense a movement involving masses of people. It is a closely knit secret society whose members are International Bankers, Industrial Monopolists, Media Managers, and their carefully selected agents who usually are found in such exclusive "clubs" as the Council on Foreign Relations, the Trilateral Commission, the Committee for Economic Development, the Organization for Economic and Commercial Development, the Bilderberg Group, the Club of Rome, and the rest of the organizations not specifically identified with and supposedly in opposition to the Communist wing of the Socialist movement. It is with the Socialist Route that Billington deals, and favors. He insists that it is more than just a revolutionary movement as such; it is a kind of new religion, a "faith" which as a secular religion is due to replace Christianity (even as Secular Humanism is about to do in the United States). Billington writes:

This book seeks to trace the origins of a faith - perhaps the faith of our time. Modern revolutionaries are believers, no less committed and intense than were the Christians and Muslims of an earlier era. What is new is the belief that a perfect secular order will emerge from the forcible overthrow of traditional authority. This inherently implausible idea gave dynamism to Europe in the nineteenth century, and has become the most successful ideological export of the West to the world, in the twentieth.

This "faith" about which Billington writes began, as he documents it, with the Masonic Lodges of the eighteenth century; its ritualism and orders copied from the Jesuits. The "faith" progressed from Germany to France where it inspired the French Revolution, to the other countries of Europe, was especially promoted by Karl Marx who found both Germany and France too hot for his presence, settled in London from where he lived on the bounties of his associate Frederick Engels. Billington notes that "the city is the crucible of modern revolution." Although the first revolutionary leaders were intellectuals (still are), Marx originally had the idea that the revolution would be accomplished through the proletarian class, the "workers of the world" who "had nothing to lose but their chains." He soon learned, however, that though it still was called a "revolution of the proletariat," the proletarian masses provided a poor army, that he must continue to depend upon the intellectuals and the men with money who would support him (as did his partner, Engels). In writing about it, Billington agrees that if this new "faith" is to overturn the world, it must begin in the cities. He writes that "The revolutionary tradition, seen from below, is a narrative of urban unrest successfully dominated by Paris and St. Petersburg (now Moscow)." But, most important in his history of this "fire that is a faith," Billington starts at the proper beginning of the "Socialist Route" to the New World Order. He writes:

If freemasonry provided a general milieu and symbolic vocabulary for revolutionary organization, it was Illuminism that provided its basic structural model. It may be well to trace in some detail the nature and impact of this baffling movement, because its influence was far from negligible and has been as neglected in recent times as it was exaggerated in an earlier era.

The Order of Illuminism was founded on May 1, 1776, by a professor of canon law at the University of Ingolstadt in Bavaria, Adam Weishaupt, and four associates. The order was secret and hierarchical, modelled on the Jesuits and dedicated to Weishaupt's Rousseauian vision of leading all humanity to a new moral perfection freed from all established religious and political authority. Weishaupt did not so much invite intellectuals to join his new pedagogic elite as taunt them to do so. He radiated contempt for men of the Enlightenment who 'go into ecstasies over antiquity, but are themselves unable to do anything,' and insisted that 'what is missing is the force to put into practice what has long been affirmed by our minds'."

In a review of Billington's book by Medford Evans, appearing in the October 1981 issue of "American Opinion," Evans writes: "The logical link with Marx and with Lenin is obvious. The link with the French Revolution is established, through Mirabeau and others. The point I want to leave with you...is simply this: Why have a thousand scholarly experts for two decades treated with a show of silent contempt, as if the Illuminati were all a fairy tale, the well established position...that in this order was the central focus of what is now a Master Conspiracy?"

The answer to Evans' question might be considered academic. Any number of qualified and reputable historians and researchers have recognized that the Order of the Illuminati was the beginning of what is now a Master Conspiracy. John Robison in 1797 published the first English-language book exposing the Illuminati and explaining how it had penetrated into certain Masonic Lodges. He titled his book "Proofs of a Conspiracy." Nesta Webster, in her books on the subject, especially "The Socialist Network," identified the movement as a conspiracy. In later times there have been many accredited writers who accept "The Conspiracy" as a fact, not a theory.

The same is true of the "second avenue" toward the New World Order, which Quigley has identified as "The Society of the Elect." It too has been thoroughly identified, and the facts documented, proving it to be the other side of the Master Conspiracy. But, following the pattern laid down by Weishaupt, control and censorship of the communications media have been so firmly established that books and articles revealing the truth are never mentioned in such publications as The New York Times Book Review section. Historians and researchers who dare to call it a conspiracy are criticized, condemned, subjected to character assassination, and their works suppressed whenever and wherever possible. As the author of the blurb on the dust jacket of "The Anglo-American Establishment" comments:

While the notion of conspiratorial influence on world events has gained credence with both extremities of the American political spectrum, and to a degree with the general public, the more academically-oriented person has tended to downplay such influence, largely because of the lack of scholarship in the presentation and analysis of the facts by those supporting the conspiracy theories. In addition, many such supporters have made themselves easy to ignore and, in fact, have themselves always assumed that they would be ignored. Professor Quigley's work does not suffer from these defects. The evidence he presents...appears irrefutable.

In this denigrating statement concerning us other Conspiracy buffs, the writer (not Quigley) makes our point and also emphasizes the real importance of books written by men such as Quigley and Billington. The blurb-writer indicates that we others - John Robison, Nesta Webster, Dan Smoot, Gary Allen, or name your own favorite Conspiracy advocate - can be treated with "silent contempt." Not because what we write is neither factual nor truthful, but because we can be labeled as "extremists." Therefore we are prejudiced and our works deserve to be burned. On the other hand, take a writer who is in favor of the aims of the Conspirators, has examined their files and records with approval, but merely dislikes the methods used by the Conspirators; let such a person write the same message as ours, perhaps even in the same words, and those who won't believe us will probably believe him. That is why Quigley's witness is important. Our evidence is labeled "Questionable," but his (the same evidence) becomes "irrefutable." Of course, Quigley did overstep the limits a bit. When the members of the "Society of the Elect" learned what Quigley had actually written in his "Tragedy and Hope," there was an attempt to ban the book, and his sudden death did seem a little strange. Billington, on the other hand, is being accepted wholeheartedly by the "elitists." His book is being advertised in Foreign Affairs and being promoted in intellectual publications. This probably because he wrote only about the Socialist wing of the Conspiracy, wrote not a word about the more sinister, controlling, closed "Society of the Elect." Furthermore, the affiliations and connections between the Socialist and Super Capitalist forces of the Conspiracy were spelled out by Quigley, left untouched by Billington. Nevertheless, "Fire in the Minds of Men" is a very important book, because it fills in those times, events and spaces between Weishaupt in 1776 and Lenin in 1917. This information, so thoroughly documented, has been hard to come by previously.

A final word about the Quigley contribution. In his book that was written first (1949) but published last (1981), Quigley wrote of the Conspiracy as plotted by Cecil Rhodes and Nathan Rothschild, Arnold Toynbee and Alfred Milner and others of the "Society of the Elect" from 1875 to 1945, at which time, according to Quigley, "it would seem that the great idealistic adventure which began in 1875 had slowly ground its way to a finish of bitterness and ashes."

So he wrote in 1949. But apparently he discovered that the Conspiracy had not ended: the power base of the "Society" had just been shifted from London to New York City, from Rothschild to Rockefeller, from Chatham House in London to the Harold Pratt House in New York City where the CFR is headquartered. So Quigley began to write again, this time chronicling the continuing Conspiracy up to 1966, at which time the book which he wrote last but was published first, "Tragedy and Hope" appeared in book stores for a brief spell.

It was Taylor Caldwell who said: "I have fought these enemies of liberty in every book I have written. But too few have listened to me, as too few have listened to others who have warned of these conspirators. The hour is late. Americans must soon listen and act. . . or endure the black night of slavery that is worse than death."

THE FALKLANDS - MALVINAS CRISIS REVISITED

An unidentified AP analyst reporting from Buenos Aires almost exposed the news behind the news of the Falklands-Malvinas conflict when he wrote: "It is a war of bitter ironies. The United States is blamed increasingly in Buenos Aires for the Falklands war it sought to prevent. If Argentina loses, Secretary of State Alexander Haig is the likely scapegoat. Argentina, whose leaders rallied behind a popular cause at a moment of internal dissension, has paid an enormous economic, political and social price. And Argentines have convinced themselves that military setbacks are because the Western powers ganged up against them unfairly. . . The conflict is even referred to as 'Haig's War' in some Argentine circles. . . In New York, a top-ranking Argentine foreign ministry official said he felt the U.S. backed Britain because it wanted to establish a U.S.-British base on the Falklands 'to dominate the South Atlantic'."

There is one serious but never generally understood flaw in reasoning behind the foregoing quotation. It is not the United States which is behind the conflict, or is aiming to establish a U.S.-British base in The Falklands. Nor is Alexander Haig representing the United States in his "moderating" activities, which now have been turned over to the United States. If that is difficult to understand, think of it this way: In conflicts such as this the nations are instruments, the people are pawns, but the initiators of the moves are a select group of people who are seeking to gain certain ends and advantages as a result of the conflict. Haig, supposedly acting as Secretary of State of the United States, actually is acting as an agent of the man who he says "made him what he is," and is responsible for placing Haig in a position where he can serve interests other than those of the United States, or of any other country or its people.

Something very important happened as April 1982 was drawing to a close. The event was reported by The New York Times of April 30 in these words (excerpts): ". . . The United States is prepared to reject a sweeping United Nations treaty that would fix rules for the use and exploitation of the seas. . . . After eight years of negotiations, the code is due to be adopted by some 150 Nations. . . . In addition to providing for seabed mining, the treaty would give Nations sovereign power over waters 12 miles from their coasts. Beyond that, there would be free passage for all ships and planes, civilian and military. The document provides each Nation with an economic zone 200 miles from its shore. This means that every coastal State would have exclusive rights to the fish and other marine life in these waters. Each Nation is also given rights to the oil and gas lying on the continental shelf 350 miles off its shores." While it is true that the United States refused to sign this seabed treaty, 150 other Nations did. And The Falklands are said to be in the very heart of vast oil and gas fields. In addition, the surrounding seabeds are loaded with important minerals that are growing scarce on land. Perhaps even more important, The Falklands are the gateway to the as yet undeveloped mineral riches of the Antarctica. And again, with the Panama Canal in potentially hostile hands, the only sea route connecting the Atlantic with the Pacific lies around Cape Horn; and The Falklands could form the perfect guardian and barrier to any such passage..

This new Law of the Sea Treaty which took eight years of negotiation to complete is a part of the "piecemeal functionalism" program which was adopted by the Trilateral Commission as the best means for further developing the New World Order. The program calls for the setting up of separate Specialized Agencies, preferably under the United Nations, as supranational authorities that would deal with specific areas of tions world wide. Plus the multinationals. These are industrialists always ready to subdue conscience to making a fast buck. The Zionists are also a vital part. We will call the Bankers the R-R boys (meaning Rothschild-Rockefeller).

Asked how the Big Bankers are involved, the answer given is: "The Bankers have stolen the sovereign right of individual nations to issue new money. They call them 'loans' which they are not. These 'loans' are mere book entries and are made out of nothing . . . This is the power source behind the enemy."

Also roped in: "The world's media. With vast financial funds this is not difficult. Trade unions were infiltrated to make newspapers unprofitable. Multinationals in return for promised favours were made to take these over, and of course they kept their papers in line. The relatively new Radio and TV were a godsend to the Conspirators.

As to how this concerns the Falklands, the answer given should remind you of how we lost the Panama Canal and started turning the Caribbean into a Red Lake: "The enemy has since 1950 been building an enormous Soviet Navy. It is now the world's biggest and is growing rapidly. To operate, and to control the world, this Navy wants all the world's vital strategic bases. The Falklands is such a base. Great Britain had almost all of these bases in 1950, and so the two R-R's set about to get them out of British hands. Task forces were set up and told to devise schemes for achieving these objectives.

"The first thing was to infiltrate agents into British Governments - Wilson, Heath and almost every Foreign Secretary since 1950, with the one great exception of Earnest Bevin, were all working for the Soviets. Singapore, Malta and Aden were easy. The media blazed away; the pro-Soviet Government traitors did the rest, and three vital strategic areas were gone. Suez was more difficult. It took a very involved plan indeed. But (Anthony) Eden fell for it and Suez was gone.

Rhodesia had to fall, to lay open South Africa to attack. Rhodesia was a tough nut, but successive British Prime Ministers - MacMillan, Hume, Wilson, Heath and their Foreign Secretaries worked industriously at it. In the end tricksters Carrington and Soames succeeded in deceiving the splended Rhodesians into submission. Rhodesia is now a Soviet State. And South Africa is now open to attack from the north.

And now the Falklands, controlling the vital strategic point of The Horn . . . The R-R boys got to work. Used Banker funds to work up nationalism in Argentina for the return of the Falklands. Promised the Argentines Soviet support . . . Got cracking on the Argentine media. . . But how will this help the enemy with its Soviet Navy?

"The Argentine is hopelessly in debt. Its junta is atrocious. The Argentines can be taken over by the enemy and turned into a Soviet State at any time; and, bingo, in goes the Soviet Navy."

The end result of this "little war" may please the Exxon-Chase Manhattan-British Petroleum-Communist Cartel. But only one nation can win. Argentina will return to her role as debtor-slave to Money Barons. Britain will face a geographic situation she can neither accept nor reject comfortably. The US will be estranged from her Southern neighbor Nations. Those Nations will suffer if they turn to the USSR in rejection of the US. Castro, as on-the-spot agent of the International Communist Conspiracy, will seem to gain some glory; but this will not aid his suffering subjects. And men will still cry peace when there is neither peace nor victory.

THE STRATEGY BEHIND ECONOMIC SUMMITRY

United States Communications Chief David Gergen calls it "public diplomacy". His reference is to the ten day presidential tour of the capital cities of Europe: Paris to confer with Socialist Mitterand of France. Then to Versailles for the Economic Summit. From there to Rome for an audience with the Pope. Next to London for dinner and a horseback ride with Queen Elizabeth II and a conversation with Margaret Thatcher at 10 Downing Street. Bonn comes next, where the 15 nations of NATO will have some serious discussions, followed by a trip to the Berlin Wall and finally an inspection of U.S. troops in West Germany. Sandwiched in between these personal appearances will be major addresses before the British and West German parliaments, and a speech at the Vatican - all of which being live broadcasts by European television. "A lot of people in Europe have not seen Reagan and don't understand him," explained Communicator Gergen, "so this will be an attempt to introduce the man and his message."

His "message" consists of a series of appeasements and compromises. He will hold out great hopes for the arms limitation talks with the Soviets, beginning on June 29 in Geneva. He will promise that interest rates will drop. But this is a rather idle promise, because it is the independent Federal Reserve and not the Federal Administration which determines how high or low interest rates are going to be. And the strangest promise of all: Reagan will hold out hope for "a quasi-governmental program aimed at promoting democracy in developing countries and, where possible, in communist nations." Quite frankly, the people in most developing countries would interpret democracy as license to rebel and terrorize, and in communist countries the people already have their "people's democracy."

"Public diplomacy" is an apt name for this series of appearances by President Reagan. However, the Economic Summit at Versailles - probably concluded as you read this Report - is not public diplomacy in any sense. These annual Economic Summits are very private and very serious. For this is the nearest approach to World Government in action that is possible at this stage of the game. We'll explain later.

For this particular Economic Summit a vast amount of briefing on the part of President Reagan was necessary. Steven R. Weisman of The New York Times reported on May 30 that "In between horseback riding and clearing brush at his Santa Barbara ranch last week, President Reagan pored over a fat briefing book on the conference of leaders of the big industrial democracies that he will attend this week in Versailles. Before leaving for Europe on Wednesday, he will have studied five more briefing books on issues and personalities he will encounter." Also, AP reported that "Reagan spent much of the 7½-hour flight studying three thick books of briefing papers."

This intense study of briefing books has more significance than one would suspect. This Economic Summit was not merely a meeting of the heads of seven governments getting together to talk over their mutual problems as Presidents, Prime Ministers and Chancellors of independent, sovereign nations. This was a meeting called, arranged and managed by the Trilateral Commission and the Paris based Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD). It was, therefore, very important to the leaders of the Supranational, or World Government, that the seven leaders of the national governments know exactly what was to be expected of them after the Summit had ended and the heads of government had gone home.

For these Economic Summits, from the Rambouillet Summit near Paris in 1975 to the Ottawa Summit of 1981 and the present Versailles Summit of 1982, the plans and programs submitted the seven heads of government had to be studied beforehand, then discussed at the Summit, and implemented by each of the Trilateral Governments after the meetings had ended. It may be recalled that when the TLC and OECD arranged Economic Summits while Jimmy Carter was President of the leading nation of these seven trilateral countries, things didn't go quite as expected by the arrangers. To use an appropriate colloquialism, Carter made an ass of himself, did little good for the Planners of the New World Order and no good at all for the people of the United States. We can be sure the Trilateralists had no intention of permitting things to get out of hand at Versailles, and after Versailles. This time Ronald Reagan was to represent their interests, and Ronald Reagan was not one of their members. However, being surrounded by members of the CFR and the Trilateral Commission, things should go much better for the Supranational Government. There was a precedent. In his first term Richard Nixon had done things for the New World Order Planners that a Democrat could never have done and gotten by with. The ping-pong diplomacy and the opening of the gates to Red China, for example. Now with Ronald Reagan in the leader's seat, let's see if we can come up with a reasonable explanation for all those fat briefing books.

Now, Ronald Reagan was (and is) an actor, and a good one. His outstanding ability in that field has to do with his reading, and memorizing, difficult scripts. Some say he has a photographic memory. So, a far better way to be assured of Reagan's performance would be, not to have him coached by a Kissinger or Brzezinski, or even a Halg; but to have him study the scripts in private and in his own time. Like resting after a horse ride or a brush clearing, or during a long ride in an air jet. By the time he arrived at Versailles, or Bonn where the NATO Summit would be held, he would be letter perfect in his part.

Does this sound too harsh and denigrating when we discuss President Reagan? Well, let's remember that he has on his official team more members of the Council on Foreign Relations and Trilateral Commission members and graduates, than Carter ever had. Remember, too, that almost every time Reagan makes a positive statement or official action that can be sincerely applauded by the "new right," a few days or weeks later he has found it necessary or expedient to reverse himself and accept some compromise or watered-down policy. Jeremiah Novak, in an article entitled Trilateral Governance, published in 1979, stated very candidly that:

"Policy making in the age of Trilateralism has shifted from the Congress and even from the Administration of the United States to the Supranational Summits, where it is directly influenced by the members of the Trilateral Commission, the supranational preparatory groups and the supranational OECD. President Carter is not the President of the United States, but the general manager of a subsidiary institution. Policy comes from the Summits to the Administration, and is not the desires of the American people or the people of the summit countries, who are unaware that the summits have been institutionalized into a semifederal supranational directory." What Novak said of Carter can also be said of Reagan, or of any other future President of the United States who may be selected for that office by this supranational institution. If we are to understand the important role of these annual Economic Summits, and if we are to understand U.S. Foreign and Economic Policy in 1982, it is necessary to trace the origin of these arranged conferences.

Henry Owen has been a long-time Director of Foreign Policy Studies at Brookings Institution. He is a ranking, policy-planning member of the Council on Foreign Relations. As a charter member of the Trilateral Commission he assisted Commission Co-ordinator George Franklin and Commission Director Zbigniew Brzezinski in the training of Candidate Jimmy Carter in foreign policy affairs. Owen then stayed on as Special Representative on Economic Summitry under President Jimmy Carter, with the rank of U.S. Ambassador at Large. When Brzezinski broached to David Rockefeller the idea of creating the Trilateral Commission, it was Henry Owen who suggested that Trilateral Commission Summit meetings attended by members only would not be sufficient; that there also should be annual Economic Summits to be attended by the heads of state and/or government of the nations represented in the Trilateral Commission; especially the United States, United Kingdom, Canada, West Germany, France, Italy and Japan. In 1968 Owen had written an article entitled Foreign Policy Premises for the Next Administration. He probably wrote it in the expectation that Hubert Humphrey would be the next President, but Richard Nixon won the election by a very narrow margin. In any case, Owen's blueprint was accepted by the Eastern Establishment, probably by President Nixon, definitely by Henry Kissinger. Owen declared that:

"It is now clear that the modern industrial nation-state is simply not adequate to the needs of the day. . . . Traditional notions of the power and authority of national governments no longer command the allegiance they did in times past. . . . The current transitional period presages: the increasing emergence of institutions which will permit like-minded people to direct their efforts to common ends, without regard to traditional limitations imposed by the sovereign prerogatives of national governments. . . . The task for the developed world is thus one of concerting the sum total of its economic policies in respect not only of aid but also of trade, monetary policy and private investment - in ways which will create an environment congenial to growth in the developing, as well as the developed, world. Here is a task which can give substance to the concept of a community of developed nations made up of the United States, Western Europe and Japan. For only if these three industrial giants cooperate closely can the task be discharged. And it is hard to see how the West European nations can play their proper role in this concert, except as they come together increasingly in joint action and joint institutions. . . ."

As director of foreign policy at the Brookings Institution, Henry Owen continued to press for creation of a "community of nations" at first composed of the United States, Canada, Japan and the industrial nations of Western Europe. In this he was joined by Zbigniew Brzezinski and others of the Rockefeller administration. In 1973 he served as editor of a Brookings Institution book entitled The Next Phase in Foreign Policy. In its preface he echoed his 1968 cry for a New World Order, and wrote that "The day When Americans could speak, as John Adams did, of producing a grand design that would illuminate the future of all mankind is gone. . . . In the seventies, the focus will shift to economic needs within the non-communist world, and these will have to be met multinationally, as our unilateral role diminishes. Helping to create a world order in which international action for this purpose can be mounted should be a chief objective of U.S. strategy in the post-cold war era we are now entering."

After the Trilateral Commission had been established, Owen then explained that Economic Summits of "the elite" would not be sufficient. There also should be Economic Summits to be attended by the heads of state and government. He wrote: "Bending the political prerogatives of the nation-state to the economic needs of interdependence will require that the larger political considerations involved be brought to the attention of the public. This is more likely to occur if negotiations can be launched with a powerful impulse involving the active participation of heads of government." What Owen proposed in 1973 became a reality in 1975 with the first Economic Summit held at Rambouillet. This accomplished, Owen then was joined by two other Trilateralists; Francois Duchene, Director of the International Institute of Strategic Studies in London; and Kinhide Mushakoji, Director of the Institute of International Relations for Advanced Studies on Peace and Development in Tokyo. These three produced the Trilateral Commission's Triangle papers; 2. Their proposal was that, to put it bluntly, the United States, Japan, England, France, West Germany and Canada cease governing themselves as though they were independent nation-states, and submit to management by "international institutions and inter-governmental mechanisms. The IMF, World Bank, OECD, GATT, and other international institutions would form segments of a world economic order, and the Summit Preparatory Committee, drawn from the ranks of the three sections of the Trilateral Commission, would become a kind of supranational administrative group that would make plans and programs for the nation-states, which now would be little more than subsidiary administrative branches of a world government. No longer would any nation be able to claim itself to be independent or sovereign.

In 1977 Henry Owen was named Special Representative of the President for Economic Summits, and President Carter gave him the rank of Ambassador at Large. This gave Owen an opportunity to complete the work of establishing that Preparatory Committee which was made up of carefully selected individuals from the U.S., Western Europe and Japan. This Preparatory Committee would "arrange for the agenda of subjects to be discussed, identify the issues or problems on which harmonization of policy is inadequate, serve as an 'early warning system' with respect to potentially critical situations and, if necessary, recommend ad hoc Ministerial meetings." In other words, this Preparatory Committee sets up the agenda, and manages the Economic Summits in behalf of the Trilateral Commission and its affiliated internationalist organizations.

However, much of this was merely window dressing. Because we are told that there is not just one Economic Summit such as the Ministerial Summit just concluded at Versailles. There is another Summit, being conducted simultaneously; a Summit attended by the money managers of the seven countries. And this is said to be the really important summit.

We have no authentic information about how this Versailles Summit was managed. But Jim Cochran, who was a member of Jimmy Carter's National Security Council Staff assigned to Henry Owen's office, in an interview with Michael Lord Chadwick, then editor of the Freeman Digest, published shortly after the Tokyo Summit of 1979, Jim Cochran referred to this Preparatory Committee as the Owen Preparatory Committee. Cochran explained that all joint decisions, policies and programs are worked out privately before the Economic Summit is called. Then the leaders of the industrial nations are called together at the Summit, and are told how these policies and programs are to be carried out by each nation.

"Jim Cochran," Chadwick reported, "stated that when a summit meeting is held there are really two summits being conducted simultaneously. One meeting is between the official heads of state, such as President Carter, etc. The other meeting is between the Finance Ministers, Special Representatives for Economic Summits, Treasury and State Officials, etc. This latter meeting, Mr. Cochran states, is the real summit meeting. The other meeting is held for the press to stimulate public acceptance of the joint decisions and programs worked out previously and finalized at the summit by the Preparatory Group." (Emphasis added).

As Freeman Digest concludes: "There has been a constant effort to converge the economies of the West. Each of the summit declarations demonstrates the evolutionary movement of individual nations into a global system of governance. With each summit international institutions are being strengthened to facilitate the new demand of 'decision-making in an interdependent world.' With each summit more and more decisions which affect domestic policy are being made at the international level. The end of the nation-state and national sovereignty is being heralded by influential members of the Trilateral Commission, the Council on Foreign Relations, the Atlantic Council, Brookings Institution, etc.

TO TRAIN TOMORROW'S NEW WORLD ORDER BUREAUCRATS

Cecil Rhodes was never in doubt as to what he wanted to accomplish. Enthralled by the charismatic eloquence of Professor of Arts John Ruskin while still an undergraduate at Oxford University, the twenty-four-year-old Rhodes wrote the first of his seven wills. This first will provided that his fortune be used for "The extension of British rule throughout the world, . . . the ultimate recovery of the United States of America as an integral part of a British Empire, . . . and finally the foundation of so great a power as to hereafter render wars impossible and promote the best interests of humanity." To accomplish these aims, Rhodes would have his vast personal fortune plus the financial support of Lord Rothschild and a number of the merchant bankers in "The City." The problem was not how to finance such a project or how to obtain helpers for its accomplishment. Rather, the problem was: what kind of a program should be adopted to achieve the goal? By the time Rhodes had written his fourth will, he believed that a secret society would be necessary, as well as a scholarship program that would complement the secret society, and provide young, new members for it. Historian Carroll Quigley observed:

"The secret society, after much preliminary talk, took form in 1891, the same year in which Rhodes drew up his fourth will and made (W.T.) Stead as well as Lord Rothschild the trustee of his fortune. . . . About the same time, in February 1981, Stead and Rhodes had another long discussion about the secret society. First they discussed their goals and agreed that, if necessary to achieve Anglo-American unity, Britain should join the United States. Then they discussed the organization of the secret society and divided in into two circles: an inner circle. 'The Society of the Elect,' and an outer circle to include 'The Association of Helpers'." It should be noted that this secret society was not to include formal initiations, oaths, secret signs of recognition, etc. as did, for example, the Order of the Illuminati. To these members of "The Society of the Elect," secret signs and oaths were neither necessary nor desirable, for the initiates knew each other intimately and had implicit trust in each other. Thus, to again quote Quigley: "The melodrama envisioned by Rhodes was watered down (after his death-Ed) without in any way reducing the seriousness with which the initiates determined to use their own personal influence and Rhodes's wealth and power to achieve the consolidation of the British Empire." Thus, this "Society of the Elect" later came to be known as the "Round Table" while the outer circle, the "Association of Helpers" helped stock the administrative posts in the Royal Institute of International Affairs and other internationalist groups. This "outer circle" was supplied to a great extent by selected Rhodes scholars. These were young graduates of colleges and universities who had been chosen to receive Rhodes Scholarships and thus be subjected to special indoctrination at one of the colleges at Oxford University. Each year, some 170 are selected from the former British colonies and Commonwealth Nations, the United States and Germany. Again quoting Quigley: "These scholarships were merely a facade to conceal the secret society, or, more accurately, they were to be one of the instruments by which the members of the secret society could carry out his purpose." It should be observed that these scholars usually find important positions awaiting them in Internationalist, Eastern Establishment, and/or political circles. Much of the control has shifted to the Rockefeller group, although the Rothschild influence also remains. Which brings us to the principal theme of this Report.

into conversation about a project dear to Lord Mountbatten's heart – the creation of a network of new two-year schools to educate selected students, ages 16 to 19, from around the world. The first such school – the United World College of the Atlantic – had been designed in the early 1960s in Wales by a group of Englishmen, including Kurt Hahn, who had started the Outward Bound program. Students who attend the Wales school were selected from over 60 countries, including many poor and developing nations. The rigorous two-year program, Lord Mountbatten explained, emphasized physical development and community service as well as intellectual growth. It prepared students to compete, through standardized exams, for the international baccalaureate certificate, an internationally recognized degree that is equivalent to the last two years of high school in Europe or the senior year of high school and the freshman year of college in the United States. Under the direction of an international council, which Lord Mountbatten then headed, and with government assistance and private donations, three other campuses had been built in Singapore, Canada and Swaziland. At least three more were planned in Italy, Venezuela and India.

But Lord Mountbatten said his real dream had been to establish a United World College in the United States. Upon hearing this, Prince Charles turned to his uncle and said, "If anyone can do it, Dr. Hammer can. Why not give him the job?" Hammer, a philanthropist interested in international causes as well as one of the world's most powerful capitalists, took to the idea of a "world" college immediately. Besides, Hammer had lent a helping hand to world leaders before in a variety of circumstances, and such actions had never hurt the fortunes of Occidental Petroleum. Hammer flew to Vancouver, B.C. with his wife and Prince Charles to visit the Lester Pearson (World) College of the Pacific. Hammer said that what he saw there – 200 capable students from more than 40 countries learning not only to tolerate the cultural and political differences of others, but to appreciate them – so impressed him that he immediately instructed his newly appointed assistant, James Z. Pugash, vice president of Occidental, and a small army of real estate agents to find a site for an American campus. The task was not easy. They looked, Pugash said, at close to 100 places – existing institutions that had extra facilities, schools that had gone out of business, resorts that were no longer operating. "We had to find something that was just right," said Theodore D. Lockwood, the 57-year-old retired president of Trinity College in Hartford, Conn., who was then serving as an adviser to the planning committee and is now the college's first director.

. . . When the planners saw Montezuma in the rugged desert lands of the American West, they knew they had found their spot. The people were friendly and they represented the span of cultures, Spanish, Indian and American, that had settled the American frontier. "I took one look at the place and I said, ' This is it'." Hammer said in a telephone interview. 'It's so typically American.' Indeed, even before the campus – which is to be called The United World College of the American West – is opened, the farmers and shopkeepers in Montezuma and nearby Las Vegas, N.M. are giving it an old-fashioned American reception. . . .

Hammer is having his way in getting the kind of students he wants. When Prince Charles expressed his disappointment that the Soviet Union had not been participating in the program, Hammer simply spoke to his old friend Soviet Premier Leonid I. Brezhnev about the matter the next time he visited the Kremlin. As a result of that discussion, which is perhaps typical of the man who is said to have more influence over world leaders than many U.S. Presidents have had, two Russians will join 73 other foreign students and 25 Americans when the college opens Sept. 9.

ABOUT AMY CARTER'S APPOINTMENT as a Senate page. Yes, it took considerable political influence to accomplish the trick. But, then, that's true of all such appointments. The jobs are pure patronage. Amy will be paid $174 a week; not a bad salary for a 14-year-old. However, there's some discrimination involved which is said to be causing a bit of a juvenile bureaucratic brouhaha: the Secret Service will continue to provide round-the-clock protection for Amy. This is a privilege not provided for the other 29 Senate and 51 House pages.

The American selection process, which is now being completed for the fall, follows that of the other world colleges in allowing each country to choose a predetermined number of candidates, either through special selection committees or by the governments themselves. "These are extraordinary students," said Jack Matthews, director of the world college in Canada and adviser to the U.S. college. "They are more than just academically talented. They have friends, they are on sports teams, they are student leaders. If you are willing to give all that up and leave your home and family, you have to be pretty adventurous." Much the same can be said for the dozen or so faculty and staff who will open the college this fall. Most are experienced educators, including Lockwood and William McGill, former president of Columbia University, who is chairman of the board. Many of their academic credentials are as impressive as the financial portfolios of the board of directors, which includes Anna Bing Arnold, a major Los Angeles educational philanthropist; Gilford Glazer, a California real estate developer; John Kluge, president and chairman of the board of Metro Media Inc., and Abigail Van Buren ("Dear Abby").. . .

Whether the curriculum and the unusual collection of people will combine to make a successful educational enterprise is yet to be determined. . . . Because it does not fit into the traditional system of American education, the North Central Assn. of Colleges and Schools, which officially evaluates most educational institutions in the region . . . has yet to decide whether it can be called a secondary school. . . . Some educators also are concerned that because of his generous financial support, Hammer may exert too much control over the operation of the school. While Prince Charles (who will travel to New Mexico in October for the official opening of the American college) is thought by many to be as devoted to the idea as his uncle was, some have speculated that Hammer's motives may be more cynical. Some skeptics argue that Hammer is simply currying favor with the future king of England to keep open Occidental's vast oil interests in the North Sea.

Hammer firmly denies that there are any business interests whatsoever associated with his involvement in the college. He views the college as a place to train the future leaders of the world: "Arabs and Israelis, blacks and whites - people from various cultures - (who) can get along with each other." Hammer does not deny that the United World College of the Americas is something of a memorial to himself. Not only was the $1-million property bought with Armand Hammer money, the Armand Hammer Foundation and the Occidental Petroleum Corp. will pay another $5-million or so by the end of the year to renovate the campus, pay faculty and staff salaries and provide scholarships for those students who cannot afford to pay the $8,500 tuition the first year and the $9,400 tuition the second. Moreover, Hammer said, whatever other expenses the college incurs, he will cover, too - not just this year but as long as he lives. After his death, the college will be provided for in his will .

(End of Article)

Syntheses: Rhodes sought to unite the United States with the British Empire, or vice versa. As a means to that end he provided scholarships for students he hoped would become future leaders of the world. 80 years later Hammer seeks to unite the United States with the Soviet Union, or vice versa. As a means to that end he endows colleges and provides scholarships for his future leaders of the world.

BIG BROTHER'S EDUCATION MONOPOLY

Big Brother's change agents are pulling every available string in an effort to tie down the American education system and bind it to the limiting and absolute control of the Central government. It's as though the Supreme Court, Terrel Bell and his Department of Education, and the NEA are conspiring to destroy all that's left of our traditional system of education in these United States. The latest move in this direction occurred last Tuesday, June 15th, when the liberalest components of the U.S. Supreme Court decided it had the right to interfere with the right of the State of Texas to determine the manner in which schools should be run in Texas. The Court decreed that the children of all illegal aliens, undocumented immigrants and others - be they communists, terrorists, felons or otherwise - must be given free education at the State's - not the federal government's - expense. It is estimated that there are at least twelve million illegal aliens in these United States. It is also estimated by some that about eleven thousand of these are children presently located in Texas. This Mexican influx had caused a serious drain on the State's ability to keep these undocumented individuals in a manner to which they were hardly accustomed. So, State officials decided that if these illegal aliens wanted their children to receive an education in state-supported schools, then they'd have to pay a tuition for the privilege. Of course and as expected, this decision was immediately challenged by the usual "liberal" crowd. And, also of course and as expected, the Supreme Court agreed to hear the case, and sustained the challenge. However, the vote was the narrowest possible: 5 to 4, and the dissenters - Warren Burger, Byron White, William Rehnquist and Sandra Day O'Connor - made an important but an overruled point: Why should States be forced to pay the costs of "educating children whose presence in this country results from the default of the political branches of the federal government?"

A result to be expected almost immediately: States that are suffering from invasions by hordes of illegal immigrants, particularly Texas, California and Florida, will be forced to appeal to the federal government for the necessary funds to take care of these aliens. And when the federal government supplies the funds which it also doesn't have, this gives the central government that much more power and control over State and Local Governments. And a probable final result of this Supreme Court ruling: A precedent will have been set whereby all the "undocumented" people be they communists, terrorists or otherwise, will be able to demand and receive all the other forms of social welfare: health care, food stamps, housing, etc.

This court ruling concerning childrens' education was the most recent attempt to establish centralized monopolistic control over education in this country. Just a few days earlier, another rather ludicrous series of events occurred which have some bearing on our presentation. This also occurred in Washington, D.C., but it concerned another branch of government.

Ed Curran was head of the National Institute of Education (NIE). This happens to be one of Secretary Bell's favorite agencies. According to Donald Lambro, a noted expert on government waste, NIE also is "one of the ten worst agencies in the entire federal rathole." Well, Curran wrote a letter to President Reagan during the last week of May, suggesting that NIE - the agency that Curran headed - ought to be abolished. This action infuriated Secretary Bell, who called Curran into his office and demanded: "How can you head an agency that you think should not exist?" It's difficult to fire a federal employee, even for a good reason. So, it wasn't until June 9th that Curran was actually fired. and this because the action was approved by exchange of ideas, people and information, and that can continue to grow and to function even after the work of the project is completed. Specifically, the project will provide training and technical assistance to State Education Agencies (SEAs) in the areas of basic skills and technology. Increasing the abilities of SEAs to utilize advanced telecommunications technology and adding to their awareness of successful applications in the field will, in turn, strengthen state efforts to improve Local Education Agencies and school capabilities. The project staff will develop a variety of products, services, and linkages with people and resources in the public and private sectors to accomplish the above goals. They will include:

- * written materials on the use of technology in basic skills education
- * audio-visual teleconferencing to present information on successful applications in the field
- * an electronic mailbox to encourage information sharing
- * a data bank that will include information on software; names of local experts available to assist SEAs and local school districts; and bibliographies of materials on educational technology, the use of technology in education, and the application of technology to basic skills education.
- * a series of ongoing working relations with industry, professional associations, state, regional, and local education groups. (Unquote).

Project BEST is a part of Secretary Bell's Technology Initiative, and includes a National Diffusion Network which, in the final analysis will go far beyond the school-room. The outcome, as stated in a Department publication, is explained in these words:

"At the national level, working jointly with technology and basic skills professional associations, data bases are to be made available on technology supported education in reading, communication skills, and mathematics. A series of written and audio-visual training materials is also to be made available.

"In addition, the State Team approach and the communications network with professional associations and other groups established by the project will serve as a model for the states in implementing similar efforts in other areas of education, or in such program areas as health, human services, housing transportation, etc."

When the title "state teams" is used, it refers especially to an organization called the Council of Chief State School Officers, 379 Hall of the States, 400 North Capitol Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20001. This non-profit organization believes that education "is the responsibility of the individual states." Not of the parents, not of the church, not of the community, but of the states. However, it also believes that "each level of government has appropriate roles and responsibilities which are complementary to one another. Thus, each level of government must provide strong leadership in its educational efforts . . . the federal government should provide a proportional share of education's financial support (and) if special national educational goals are developed, federal programs to achieve them must allow states to have some flexibility in putting them into practice."In the matter of Education for Global Interdependence "the Council urges state education agencies, with the aid of the federal government, to set up, maintain and coordinate programs of international education. Based on the concept of global interdependence, such programs can lead to increased understanding and help in the struggle to attain world harmony and peace."

As for Terrel Bell's "Project BEST", "National Diffusion Network", and "Technology Initiative", the Council "supports the wise and well-planned use of available technology to extend the effectiveness and efficiency of instruction. The Council advocates increased federal financing for the development of important educational and instructional programs, i.e., the Corporation for Public Broadcasting, computer-assisted or monitored instruction, and instructional television, including the use of satellites."

This "National Diffusion Network" has recently been strengthened by moving it into regional offices. At least 45 States have received over a period of five years an average of half-a-million dollars each to set up a sophisticated computerized dissemination system through which State Departments of Education provide pre-selected and pre-programmed curriculum materials from computerized data banks. Such materials are prepared by those same change agents and educationist organizations that have already done so much to bring about the decline in public education. Through Project BEST such materials are to be made available on a wholesale basis to every public school in the nation. Remember, so long as the Department of Education continues to exist, America's children will be compulsory attendants at a nationally telecomputerized project aimed at making them wards of the state and contented socialist slaves in a humanistic society devoid of any hope beyond their graves. For some there remains a way of escape: enrollment in a private or church-operated school. But in times like this, millions of parents would find the paying of the necessary tuition difficult, or even impossible. Therefore, if our country is to be saved, its schools must first be saved. And parents must be alerted to this necessity, and must act as independent citizens, not as the spiritless slaves Big Brother expects them to be.

Guardians of Traditional Education, P.O.Box 606, Bowie, Maryland 20715, insists that "The moment of truth has arrived on education - not only for President Reagan but for all of us. Over and over again the American people have demonstrated by their votes and their concerns that they care deeply about what has happened to American public education. Now is the time for action! . . . Under Bell's "New Technology Initiative" the agenda for education has once again been turned over to the same coterie of national education interest groups whose perverse priorities and betrayal of the public trust precipitated a national crisis. Education is the most important domestic issue of the eighties. You Must Prove It!"

And Betsy Kraus, president of Missourians for Educational Excellence and also head of the educational network exchange Committee for Educational Research & Analysis, issues the following warning:

URGENT

The situation has become critical. Terrel Bell, Secretary of the U.S. Department of Education, is spending dollars fast and furiously to establish an even broader Computer Technology network, "A New Initiative" around the country which is called Project BEST. This project is one of the final, if not the final "jerk" of the MBO noose around our children's necks. "If Project BEST is not stopped, it's going to be curtains for our kids," states Charlotte Iserbyt. Mrs Iserbyt is the Senior Policy Advisor to Donald Senese, who in turn is the Assistant Secretary of Educational Research and Improvement with the Department of Education. Mr. Senese's department is the cutting edge for all educational policy which has tremendous consequences at our local level. Mrs. Iserbyt has been in the battlefield of education, fighting to save our children for the last ten years. She has been in Washington for about a year, watching these latest developments. Now she has courageously and accurately reported what is happening within the Department. But she cannot fight this alone. We must demand that Project BEST be stopped! Write to your Congressman, your Senators, your President. . .

A TURNING OF THE TIDES?

Could things really be looking up? Within the paper-money cloud that threatens to bring about even greater economic storms, is there a silver lining; or even a glint of a returning gold standard? Despite the wars and rumors of wars is there yet hope of some peace and some good will toward men? In spite of the soaring "Volckernomic" interest rates, has the administration been correct in saying the recession has bottomed out? Disregarding the sudden jump back into double-digit inflation, can we expect better times; even with the sudden revelation that "the law is a ass" when it permits a man to shoot a President and three others and suffer less than any of them? These all seem to be signs of the times that, when considered carefully, seem to point to a potential change in the moral and political air.

On the longest day of the year in our northern hemisphere, that ever faithful sign of the times indicating that summer has come, brought with it other signs that may indicate a possible change in the weather politically and morally, if not yet economically. First, there came the admitted defeat of ERA when the Florida Legislature turned down the proposed amendment for the last time. That cleared the air a bit. But then came the nation-wide outrage brought on by a jury's declaring that John Hinckley was not guilty of planning the death of President Reagan by reason of insanity. It was a good thing because it made important people realize that our man-made laws favor criminals at the expense of their victims, and of society itself. Yet another sign of the times: As Menachem Begin visited Washington seeking to justify his actions in ordering the invasion of Lebanon which led to the death of perhaps hundreds of thousands of innocents, he was not greeted with the customary "hail fellow, well met" attitude which has characterized his previous visits. This man who was a murderer from the beginning (ask any Briton about the King David massacre, the torture of British Tommies, and the assassination of Count Bernadotte), gained little sympathy and no outright promise of more military aid for having used American-supplied war machines and armament for the destruction of Tyre and Sidon, and now of Beirut. A fourth sign of the times: At long last important people are beginning to demand that something be done about the invasion of the United States from places like Mexico, Haiti, Guatemala, El Salvador, the Dominican Republic, the Philippines, the countries of Southeast Asia, India; from almost any part of the globe not inhabited by Caucasians. Yet another sign of the times: people in high places are beginning to demand that something be done about that monopolistic, independently owned corporation known as the Federal Reserve System. Let us consider some of these signs that came with the summer, and think of their possible portent.

The ruling that John Hinckley is not guilty by reason of insanity may have been one of the best things that could happen to our country, because men in important places have been forced to admit, publicly, that our system of anti-Biblical, man-made laws give all the breaks to the criminals and none to the victim, or to society. Donald Regan was best qualified to speak out because, as Secretary of the Treasury he is in charge of the Secret Servicemen who are supposed to protect high officials. Regan said, "Frankly, I'm outraged at that jury decision. I think it's wrong. It's not the type of thing that society should condone. I think that when a person stalks a leading citizen of this country, shoots him and three of the people surrounding him and then goes scot-free, I think that's absolutely atrocious." Attorney General William French Smith also was qualified to speak because this was his sphere. "There must be an end to the doctrine that allows so many persons to commit crimes of violence, to use confusing procedures to their own advantage, and then to have the door open to them to return to the society which they victimized." Of course, we should add that whether Hinckley goes to prison or to a mental institution differs chiefly in the time of confinement. If he had gone to prison it would take a parole board to free him and his "rehabilitative treatment" would be a matter of a few years at the least. But since he went to the relaxed atmosphere of a single room in a wing of St. Elizabeth's hospital, he could be declared by psychiatrists to be no longer a danger to society and released within a few months.

Remember Charles Colson of Watergate connections? Confessing himself to be a converted Christian, he now heads a prison ministry with a staff of 140 helpers. Colson says that the view that imprisoning people solves crimes is a myth. "The prisons are justifying their existence on the notions of rehabilitation and public safety. But rehabilitation is a myth. . . We are putting more people in prison per capita than any country except South Africa and the Soviet Union, and yet we have the highest crime rate." Colson says that when a person is locked up for some crime, he is more likely to commit another crime after coming out than he was before he went in. The average cost of a prisoner is about $17,000 per year, plus the $70,000 to $80,000 per cell. He points out that unless the system is changed, "we will bankrupt this country by turning it into one gigantic prison." Colson urges that we return to the Biblical principle of restitution, requiring that criminals restore property to the victims. If property cannot be restored, in the case of murder, for example, execution is commanded. As Rev. Curtis Dickinson points out, God had no prisons in the nation of Israel. One either made restitution or was executed. "Punishing people by locking them up is neither helpful, nor humane. Until we get back to God's system, the crime problem will worsen." The treatment accorded John Hinckley may cause the Nation to at least take a step in the right direction.

As for our constant official coddling of Begin and the political nation he represents, we must face the fact that a vast majority of Christians actually believe that the present state of Israel is a kind of reincarnation of the Israel of God of Old Testament times. "Touch not mine elect" is a phrase instilling such fear in most Christians that they think anything done by Socialist Israel and its leaders must be accepted as though it were the very voice of God. This "enigma of twentieth century Christianity" was explained by Smyrna Publications in the following words:

"Many Christians undoubtedly believe Smyrna to be too politically oriented for them. But we are convinced that political neutralism practiced by many contemporary Christians is a recent phenomenon. We believe that those Christians who compartmentalize their lives have in fact aided and abetted the anti-Christ system. Perhaps these brethren are so "heavenly" minded that they are no earthly good. On the other hand, there are those who are so earthly minded that they aren't any good for heavenly purposes. A wise balance must therefore be struck. Where is that balance? The balance is to be found in the great foundational precepts taught in God's Word. However, these precepts are not understood by literalizing all of Scripture. One must understand the spirit of God's laws and then apply them to everyday life. This is not easy.

"For instance, when the ancient Israelites got the message that they had been chosen to demonstrate to other nations what God really desires for mankind, they misread this commission and became provincialized, ingrown and holier-than-thou. In short, they became the "chosen people" who could do no wrong. Consequently, throughout history their religious descendants have maintained an attitude of superiority and have now re-established themselves in the land of Palestine for the purpose of bringing in their long awaited but never received millenium. A millenium without the Messiah Whom they rejected. . . .

"Now, Christian brethren, comes the most astounding part of a most astounding history. Many Christians, who have believed and trusted Christ as Saviour, who know full well the Scripture that says 'For if God spared not the angels that sinned, but cast them down to hell, and delivered them in chains of darkness, to be reserved unto judgment; . . . (then) The Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptations, and to reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment to be punished:' (II Peter 2:4-9) - these Christians maintain that the nation of 'Israel' today, the religious descendants of those who crucified the Christ, are God's chosen people and will inherit the earth from God. Does God maintain a double standard? Does He condemn to hell all those who reject Christ - except the Jewish people? " (Smyrna Publications, P.O.Box 41054, Sacramento CA 95841).

As we mentioned previously, when Begin came to Washington this time there was a difference in his reception. A headline blared: "Senators Level Barrage At Begin Over Invasion." Senator Larry Pressman (R-S.D.) said Begin "encountered a great deal of opposition" from senators, including some who usually supported Israel. "This is the first time I have seen a confrontation between the prime minister of Israel and senators in terms of head-to-head disagreement." The Knight-Ridder daily, The Miami Herald, which serves a city with a Jewish population said to be second only to that of New York City, carried an unusually critical leading editorial in its June 24th issue. It said that "Israel's invasion of Lebanon began as a legitimate act of self-defense, but it is not that any more. Now it is a campaign of savage destruction, and its present course is neither defensive nor legitimate...The Israeli offensive already has killed thousands of innocent Lebanese civilians. Tens of thousands - or hundreds of thousands depending on the figure's source - of Lebanese are homeless. Israeli's artillery methodically levels whole streets of Beirut and errant shells fall on schools and hospitals. President Reagan, heeding the advice of Secretary of State Alexander Haig, is condoning Israel's excessive overreaction. The President should listen instead to Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger, who says that the Israelis have gone too far. Mr Weinberger is correct." This kind of public and official criticism is another sign of the times that could portend some spiritual, as well as political progress.

Yet another sign of the times that could be important: people are beginning to demand some answers to questions about the "mysterious" Federal Reserve System. An excellent article by Carolyn Fling appearing in the June 21 issue of The American Sunbeam begins with the statement that "the rapidly increasing interest concerning the Federal Reserve System which is springing up all around the nation gives proof to what has been said many times - that the only thing that will arouse the apathetic grass roots will be a severe pinch in the wallet. At present we see signs of economic agony in all quarters. And it is encouraging to see that many victims blame their misfortunes on the ones who control our money system. Our best hope can be that the energies of the disgruntled and desperate victims of the FED's manipulations can be directed to putting pressure on Congress to get us out of this mess which they [the group of international bankers and their representatives] have saddled upon the nation almost 70 years ago."

Reacting to this grass roots economic agony, AP reports that "The Treasury Department...is considering ways to place the independent Federal Reserve Board under administrative control." And with the passage of a $770-billion budget with an understanding that there's going to be at least a $104-billion deficit, some people are beginning to point out that this proposed deficit is almost the precise amount that we must pay in fiscal 1983 in interest on the national debt. And with the debt going even higher because money must be borrowed to pay the interest on it! On the editor's page of the U.S. News (6/28/82) Marvin Stone points out that "One thing that unbridled spenders need to admit to themselves is that we have to pay interest on the national debt, and if we must borrow to pay the interest, the borrowings also demand interest. This is the annual budget item, which already stands at about $100-billion, and it can only tend to get bigger and bigger. It leaves less and less to feed the destitute, bolster defenses and carry on the multitudinous business of government. To avoid the vicious cycle, we can only cut spending or raise revenue - or both" (Unquote). Or, we can do something about getting the Federal Reserve System off our backs! That so many officials, congressmen, economists, and businessmen are demanding changes in the Fed should be a good sign of the times.

And now comes a sign suggesting that Emma Lazarus's sonnet engraved on the pedestal of the Statue of Liberty is a dangerous symbol for our immigration and open borders policy. Congressmen George Hansen, Jim Jeffries and Larry McDonald along with Generals Wedemeyer, White, O'Meara, Holloway, and U.S. Border Patrol Deputy Chief MacDonald (Ret.) and a number of other concerned citizens have formed an organization called the Advisory Board of Conservatives for Immigration Reform. They say we are being invaded. Invaded by illegal aliens and placing our country in real danger from within. Chief MacDonald writes:

"Thousands (of illegal aliens) sneak across our borders every night. Others come into our country using false documents or posing as students, tourists, or businessmen...William French Smith, the Attorney General of the United States, told the Cabinet last year that between 1.5 and 2 million illegal aliens enter the country every year. That's in addition to legal immigration of 700,000 to 800,000 each year! Smith told a Senate Subcommittee, 'We have lost control of our borders.' Even though the flow of illegal aliens has increased ten-fold in the last decade, Congress has failed to provide adequate manpower to guard our borders...How does this alien invasion threaten America? Look at the tragic increase in crime:

- * The waves of Cubans, Haitians, and others that have landed uninvited on the Florida beaches have given Miami the highest per capita murder rate in the nation.
- * Mexican gangs roam the streets in Los Angeles and other cities of the Southwest.
- * Illegal aliens from Colombia and elsewhere in Latin America are behind the illegal cocaine traffic that has virtually taken over the Miami economy and destroyed the lives of thousands of young Americans.
- * Cuban criminals have gone on a crime spree of murders, rapes, and armed robberies in New York City, according to Bronx District Attorney Mario Merola...

"Let's not forget that there are over ten million unemployed Americans looking for work today. My old boss, Commissioner Leonard Chaplan, said in 1976: 'At least one million illegal aliens are holding good jobs that pay well...probably another two or three million are holding lesser paying jobs.' The number of Americans thrown out of work by illegal aliens is at least twice as large today, six years later. The Congressional Budget Office estimates that every million unemployed Americans costs the federal treasury seven billion dollars in unemployment payments, food stamps and other assistance. No matter how successful President Reagan's economic program may be, we cannot provide jobs for all of our citizens plus millions of illegal aliens. To add insult to injury, many illegal aliens are on welfare and food stamps and living in public housing projects. And you pay the bills. But perhaps the greatest threat of all is the danger illegal immigration poses to our national security!

. . . He answered and said unto them, When it is evening, ye say, It will be fair weather: for the sky is red. And in the morning, it will be foul weather: for the sky is red and lowring. . . . Ye can discern the face of the sky; but can ye not discern the signs of the times? (Matthew 16: 1-2-).

MORE SIGNS OF THE TIMES?

In our last newsletter (DBR # 25) we listed a number of signs of the times that may indicate a possible change in the weather, politically and morally if not economically. We mentioned the death of ERA, the atrocious Hinckley decision, the awful Israeli invasion of Lebanon, the current and expanding invasion of the United States which is causing official concern, and the growing demand that the Federal Reserve System be curbed or killed. But the most sensational sign of the times occurred while we were printing last week's Report, therefore couldn't be included. It is not the most important, simply the most sensational sign of the times. We refer, of course, to the sudden resignation of Alexander Haig as Secretary of State. The actual resignation is not an important event, because he is to be replaced by a "team player," George Shultz, multinational executive and long standing member of the Eastern Establishment's Council on Foreign Relations. His appointment to replace Haig already is being described as a matter of "jumping out of the frying pan into the fire." However, the circumstances surrounding Haig's resignation are of extreme importance in that, for a little while at least, Ronald Reagan is back on the track that brought him to the White House a year and a half ago. He and his administration, Haig excepted, are abiding by foreign policy promises that place the interests of the United States first - for a little while at least.

Among the many, there were three important foreign policy disputes which found Haig at odds with other members of the American Security Council. There was Haig's attitude toward the Israeli invasion of Lebanon, which our administration condemned, though with moderation, and which Haig applauded. This is best shown in an item by UPI, datelined London, June 9th. We quote: "Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. apparently had an identity problem speaking to reporters aboard Air Force One about the Israeli invasion of Lebanon. 'We not only lost an aircraft and a helicopter yesterday,' he told reporters Monday, according to the official transcript. 'There's a claim a second aircraft has been shot down, a second helicopter and a number of army vehicles.' By 'we,' Haig apparently was referring to Israeli." (unquote). The Reagan administration was pointing out that certain weapons supplied by the United States to be used for defensive purposes only, were being used offensively and illegally in the invasion of Lebanon. But at the same time Haig was applauding their use and bemoaning some of their losses. Haig, at the wrong time, was out front speaking as if Israel really were the fifty-first State in our Union. Haig was incensed because the Security Council wouldn't back him up.

The second important policy dispute involved the two Chinas. From the very beginning of his term, President Reagan had promised that we would continue to sell - not supply at our expense - needed arms for the defense of the National Republic on China on Taiwan. Haig opposed the policy. In a June 26th dispatch, "Rep. John Rousselot (R-CA) speculated Haig resigned because of a combination of clashes over policy with members of the Reagan administration. . . He noted that a memorandum from Haig opposing U.S. arms sales to Taiwan was circulated at a meeting he attended with National Security Adviser William P. Clark. The memo put Haig at odds with, among others, Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger, who supports the sale. Rousselot said Haig also expressed disagreement with Reagan during the President's recent visits with European heads of state."

But the policy disagreement that really caused Haig to submit his resignation had to do with that proposed Siberian gas pipeline. There's a lot of natural gas in the fields around Urengoy, and the Soviet bosses would like to sell it to the industrial nations of Western Europe, who are short on energy. This would require the building of a pipeline some 3,500 miles long, and would cost an estimated $10 billion to complete. But if the gas could be delivered, the USSR could make a profit of about $8 billion a year for at least 25 years. That would, as Lenin might say, cause the capitalists to buy a lot of rope with which to be hanged. In addition to the money, which the USSR could use for the building of a bigger war machine, the sale of gas to the Nations of Western Europe would make them subservient to as well as dependent upon the Soviet Union for the needed supply of energy to keep their factories running. But the USSR would be in complete control for, as President Reagan commented, all the valves that control the gas flow would be on the other side of the wall. Now, most of the materials and equipment needed for the building of this pipeline would have to be supplied by American firms, such as General Electric, Caterpillar Tractor and about 60 other firms. Most all of them are connected in some way with that Rockefeller-Eaton-Hammer coalition of Eastern Establishment Multinationals and Megabanks that have traded with and kept the USSR alive and reasonably well for the past fifty-odd years. So, when President Reagan extended and expanded that ban on selling oil and gas equipment to the Soviets, or to any European middle-men who might like to purchase and re-sell, he defied, not only the Soviet Union, but the Eastern Establishment multinationals and megabanks, the Trilateral Commission and the Council on Foreign Relations, most of the leaders of the Nations of Western Europe - and Alexander Haig as well as his Secretaries of Agriculture and Commerce. At a National Security Council meeting which Haig did not attend (he was talking to the Soviet ambassador at the time), President Reagan made his decision, slapped the table and said, "If the Soviets want to build that pipeline, they're going to do it without the United States." Human Events of July 3 commented: "The President's toughening posture can be traced to several factors, including . . . the rising tide of criticism from conservatives . . . the gradual 'settling in' of Bill Clark at the National Security Council . . . the Pentagon's Fred Ikle and Tal Lindstrom also played essential roles [as did Caspar Weinberger]. No one likes to talk about waging 'economic warfare' against the Soviet Union, a phrase that perceptibly scares the Europeans [and angers the Trilateral Commissioners and the CFRers-Ed.]. But this Administration - thanks to the President - has finally decided to wield trade as an important weapon in the battle for the West's survival."

It must be noted, however, that President Reagan did hedge a bit in his decision. He said what he did was in retaliation for what the USSR was doing to Poland, and that if and when Poland is treated honorably and decently, his sales ban on oil and gas equipment might be lifted. Nevertheless, the fact that the Administration acted in favor of the United States instead of the Trilat, is a sign of the times that is bound to give hope.

However, let us be warned. Reagan hedged in yet another way in order not to antagonize the Trilat-CFR combine: when CFR member Haig resigned, he was replaced by CFR member Shultz. And in regard to trade with the Soviet, Haig and Shultz seem to be in agreement, and opposed to the principles expressed by Reagan and his administration. A situation similar to the pipeline case arose under the Carter administration in 1978, and the Carter administration also was divided on whether to cancel permission to sell some advanced oil-drilling technology to the Soviets. At that time Shultz, then an executive of what is known as the world's largest private multinational corporation, wrote an article for Business Week which appeared in its issue of May 28, 1979. We quote from that article written by George P. Shultz:

"An extra element has been injected into international trade in the past few years; a political dimension overlaid on commercial transactions. This political element is a vigorous and flamboyantly administered initiative that uses foreign trade as a tactical instrument of foreign policy. I call it light-switch diplomacy. . . . Government should provide a stable and predictable set of rules under which trade can take place on individual and corporate initiative, as free as possible from the uncertainties inherent in the ad hoc exercise of government authority. Rules instead of authorities - rules that we can read, rules that are predictable. Traders, individual or corporate or government, must keep their bargains, and government must not place private parties in the position of breaking a bargain properly arrived at. We cannot ignore the essential importance of trust, confidence and continuity. . . . And so, to guide this complex relationship between trade and foreign policy, I urge our government: Operate insofar as possible on the basis of rules, not authorities. Avoid actions that undermine the ability of U.S. companies to be reliable suppliers. . . "

Now, this is exactly the stand that Haig was taking in regard to the gas pipeline controversy. So, Haig and Shultz - and GE and Caterpillar - and the Trilateral Commissioners and Councilors on Foreign Relations - are all agreed, and against the stand taken by Reagan and his advisers. So, they tell us that Shultz "is a team man." But which team ?

Nevertheless and despite the awful power of the Eastern Establishment and its owned/or/controlled Communications Media, there are signs and portents which indicate that changes have been in the works ever since Keynesianism and Welfarism began to fail, and are about to be made. Whether such changes will be for the good of America and its people are still questionable. But, take the case of the writings of Theodore H. White as an example. He's the author of that series of books about The Making of the President. We first met Teddy in Chungking, China during World War II. Then he was sure that Communism was the inevitable way of the future, world-wide. We had been shot down over Amoy, made our way with other survivors to Chungking where we were awaiting medical clearance to return to America and reassignment to General MacArthur's command. To pass the time a riverboat party was arranged, in the midst of which Teddy stood on the riverbank, addressed a crowd of curious but not understanding Chinese, delivering the most emotional, pro-Communist speech we had ever heard. We met him later in Washington, D.C. where he tried to get us to use our regularly scheduled radio commentaries as a diatribe against Chiang Kai-shek who was then seeking arms to resist the forces of Mao Tse-tung (he didn't get them). Anyway in 1945 Teddy White sang the Red Song. Today his tune is entirely different. Apparently he has seen the light. But whatever his personal commitments may be, his analysis of the situation as it appeared in the July 5th U.S. News is objective, makes good sense. He writes:

"The election of 1980 marked the rejection of a whole system of ideas that dominated American life ever since early 1960. The basis of those ideas was high promises to everybody - promises to save cities, promises to take care of the sick, the old, the universities. By 1980 we had promised ourselves almost to the point of national bankruptcy. Now we have a budget that is uncontrollable, and the promises are rubbing against the reality of life. We can't keep the promises we made to ourselves and the rest of the world. It's that rub of promise against reality, of dream against fact, that confronts us with the social, political and economic crisis we face today. . . I believe that the solutions to these problems will come because we can't go on this way."

We prefer the way Congressman Larry McDonald says much the same thing, perhaps because our confidence in him has never been shaken. Or perhaps because he's not a lawyer or a millionaire who could buy a seat in the House. He's just a doctor who felt the body politic could stand some treatments, like his Texas compatriot Dr. Ron Paul. He's a member of the Armed Services Committee and probably the top expert in Congress on the subject of international terrorism. He's also something of a historian and author of We Hold These Truths, a "reverent review of the U.S. Constitution." He puts our case in a historical perspective, says the United States is in a third transitional stage. First was the transition from the Articles of Confederation to the Constitution and a Republic. Then came the change from a Constitutional Republic to a Welfare State, which he says began fifty years ago. Now, changes are in the offing, another transition is about to occur because people are seeking a formula to rebuild the country. "The patient is in a raging fever, and has been in a coma for a long time. The good news is that the body is developing a defense mechanism. The question is: Will we hold together?"

Alan Stang, writing an article for the July-August 1982 issue of American Opinion, asked Dr. McDonald what problems stand in the way of recovery? We quote a part of his answer: "The Budgetary impact will be bad. . . . To finance L.B.J.'s Great Society, money was drained off from military research and development. Year after year, we postponed it and said we would get to it in the early 1980s. Now we're here, but everybody is talking about how we must compromise. Now, entitlements are so big that even robbing from defense does not produce enough to pay for them. There is also the fact that the mass media, 'the most powerful branch of the federal government,' don't want a turnaround. They have a vested interest in collectivism. And the same people have been at the top of both parties for forty years." The Congressman said it is essential to get reinforcements on the Americanist side in Congress. . . . The trouble is that people who otherwise would be good candidates cannot afford to run. As a result, we usually get three types: (1) the Teddy Kennedy rich boy, who has never held an honest job; (2) the political prostitute who sells himself to the labor boss or other special interest; and, (3) the attorney, for whom congressional office is an enhancement on his key chain. "I'm a surgeon. The fact that I've been in Congress won't help my practice. It won't help the businessman or the preacher. It's therefore difficult to get good people. . . . On the other hand, people are very angry. This is not just another year: This is the point of division between the life or death of Western Civilization. The days we are living through will decide. . . My message to any Conservatives who are lagging is: If you ever put out for the cause, do it now. Don't say, 'If it gets bad, I'll do something.' The time is now - or dig a hole and crawl in."

MORE FOREIGN ENTANGLEMENTS TO ALLEVIATE DOMESTIC CRISES?

National elections begin on the first Tuesday in November. Consequently, official election registration and campaigning began on the first Tuesday in July. Incumbent U.S. Senators and Representatives may not take full advantage of the four months of open hunting. But this did not deter President Reagan, who came off the starting pad with a celerity that would give credit to much younger runners in the political races. Off from another brief vacation, he hadn't time even to settle himself in the Oval Office before he was addressing a selected group of state, county and city officials, selling them on a revised edition of his New Federalism and promoting the respective candidates of his party who can be expected to assist him in carrying out his much-delayed programs. During the course of the address he was able to express much interest in the suggested flat rate tax system which has a good chance of sometime replacing the present hated and unconstitutional graduated income tax which has placed us all under a condition of involuntary servitude. He also was questioned about the Federal Regional Councils which preside over the Ten Federal Regions into which our fifty States have been apportioned. He gave some hope in that he now felt this was "another complicated" way of keeping federal bureaucratic control over the States and communities of the Nation. If he really meant it, his New Federalism will gain much support from those of us who detest that Fourth - and unconstitutional - Branch of Government that was first foisted upon us by Richard Nixon.

Next, President Reagan was addressing a group of senior citizens, telling them that unless something is done about it, the Social Security System will be completely bankrupt by July 1984. However, there was a task force studying the situation, and he could assure them all that something, he knew not what, would be done to save the system and that none should feel socially insecure. But the most important thing about this meeting: Reagan turned down an invitation to address an NEA convention, and spoke to the senior citizens instead. This would indicate that the President is not necessarily in sympathy with Education Secretary Terrel Bell's idea of teaching the nation's children by computerized programs prepared by Humanist educationists and supplied by a corporation controlled by the NEA. However, after a good start in the new campaign season, President Reagan may have committed the worst mistake of his entire presidential career when he agreed that U.S. troops might be sent into Lebanon.

If columnists Evans and Novak, reporting from Jerusalem, have their information straight, it was Alexander Haig who started it all. The columnists wrote: "Israel's once dominant Labor Party is convinced that secret machinations between Alexander Haig and Menachem Begin not only paved the way for the invasion of Lebanon but pushed Israel into an exposed position carrying the danger of boomerang."

When Begin ordered the invasion of Lebanon almost every American official with the exception of Haig, criticized the move. And when it was known that President Reagan might agree to send U.S. Marines into Lebanon, most Washington officials voiced real alarm. Wire services reported that "leading members of Congress voiced deep concern over President Reagan's decision to involve American troops in a peace-keeping role in West Beirut. Senate Majority Leader Howard Baker said it 'is not wise to introduce American fighting men in the Lebanese conflict.' Rep. G.V. Montgomery (D-Miss.) said Reagan should be prepared for American casualties if forces are sent to Lebanon. Sen. David Pryor (D-Ark.) said he thought it would be a grave mistake." And so on down the line. It was later learned that the retiring Alexander Haig was responsible for this event also. Haig, talking by telephone to the President, kept insisting that Reagan should make such an offer. So, Haig, apparently in defeat, was able to insure the vote of the so-called Jewish block and all those who think Israel is God's chosen Nation prior to the coming of Armageddon, if and when he decides to run against Reagan and/or Bush in 1984. There is reason to believe that Reagan was influenced by the feeling that Congress and his administration had been "too tough" on Begin because of the invasion. The offer to aid in a peacekeeping move would serve as a kind of penance and restore relations with Israel. So, Haig won out over Reagan even as he was packing his bags.

More and more people are asking why Israel should be treated as though she were our 51st State. And the question has come close to the boiling point as officials mull over the plan to "risk another Vietnam" in behalf of Israel. For, if U.S. Marines were sent into Lebanon, they would not assist with the removal of PLO activists to other Arab States and then leave. They would stay on as a buffer force between the Lebanese Christians and the Lebanese Moslems, who are almost sure to start fighting each other as soon as the Syrian troops and the PLO terrorists are gone. We have no brief for Arafat, but we are pleased that he has rejected the offer of any kind of aid from the U.S. And that another PLO spokesman, Bassam Abu Sharif, said the whole idea is "ridiculous" because "you don't expect the aggressor to come to the rescue of the victim." To which Arafat responded that "We are not in need of American help. The weapons and the 6th Fleet that helped kill my women and children cannot protect us. Definitely, I won't accept." Of course, he could be overridden in his resolve.

If Newsweek is correct, this whole ridiculous and dangerous proposition began when Begin suggested (to Haig) that a "peace keeping force" of American troops be sent into Lebanon, seemingly to replace the Israeli troops when the latter begin to pull back toward Israel. The Pentagon was immediately alarmed, concluded that "an American military presence in that no-man's-land would be so tempting a target for terrorists that nothing short of a full armored division of 15,000 men with artillery would be needed to make it secure." Furthermore, "Placing such a large U.S. force within striking distance of Damascus, officials fear, would be seen as a provocative strategic action in the highly sensitive region." Defense Secretary Weinberger added that "Working out conditions that would allow the entry of a peacekeeping force into besieged West Beirut is proving to be hideously difficult, because of the many factions involved. There are groups without spokesmen and spokesmen without groups." But it seems that only Weinberger and other officials in his Department are opposed to the proposal. Actually, the Palestinians are opposed, the Lebanese are opposed, and the Israelis are opposed unless far better arrangements can be made. Those better arrangements now seem to involve the creation of a UN peacekeeping force, of which the U.S. Marines would be a part. Thus, instead of referring to the situation as another Vietnam, it could become another Korea. We lost both of those wars at terrible cost in American lives, it should be remembered.

Reaction from the Arab Women's Council in Washington, D.C.: full page advertisements were run in leading metropolitan dailies headlining the ad with the words "Begin's Holocaust in Lebanon." This was followed by a picture of some of the devastation in Beirut, then came the copy: "In One Week: 600,000 Lebanese and Palestinians were made homeless, 10,000 Lebanese and Palestinians were killed, 30,000 Lebanese and Palestinians were wounded, 10,000 Lebanese and Palestinians were made captive, and whole cities, towns and villages were levelled." Even Meg Greenfield of Newsweek was shocked, spoke of the visit of Begin to Washington, D.C. as "a kind of boiling-point discourse we have not heard before. . . A number of senators and other politicians are heard to say that they will not be intimidated by the Israeli lobby, but will vote and act as they damn please. The papers and magazines are full of no-holds-barred attacks on the Israeli action; living rooms and the lunch places resound with argument about it." Greenfield ends her "Plain Talk About Israel" with this paragraph:

"And we should thank Begin. His utterly outrageous go-to-hell behavior in Washington was nothing if not human and normal and wanted nothing so much as a kick in the pants or at least a good shout back. I think he got the latter from the assembled senators. The Israelis and the Americans could see each other as they were and hear each other plain for once. This is the way it ought to be." So wrote Meg Greenfield. If it had been written by a conservative columnist, little would be thought about it. But by Meg Greenfield! However, all is now forgiven and everybody but the people in the Pentagon are anxious to get ourselves involved in another Korea-type mess.

Making the situation even more dangerous: As soon as it seemed that no immediate plan could be worked out, the Israeli guns started booming again, and the Soviet Embassy was hit. The Kremlin immediately said that "Israeli artillery heavily damaged buildings at the Soviet Embassy in Beirut and the Soviet government cannot be indifferent to what is going on in the Middle East. That area is in direct proximity to borders of the U.S.S.R. Therefore our country is interested in what is going on there not in abstract terms, but from the viewpoint of its own security." The author of that statement was Leonid Zamyatin, chief of the international information department of the Communist Party's Central Committee. So, American military involvement in Lebanon could lead to American military involvement with the Soviet Union. And who wants that?

As we went to press with this issue of DBR, no resolution of the situation in Lebanon was in sight. Still indirectly involved were the United States, France, the Soviet Union, and possibly the United Nations. Involved directly were the Israelis, the Syrians, the Palestinians and the PLO, the Christian Lebanese, and the Moslem Lebanese. Not one of these groups was in accord with any other group. And in addition to the danger presented to the U.S. by the Lebanese situation itself, there is the growing antagonism toward the U.S. of all the Arab Nations. This hostility was shown rather subtly by the Saudis who have a pavillion at the Knoxville World's Fair. There they are giving out maps of the Middle East in which Israel doesn't even appear. The land now called Israel is included as a part of Jordan; which it was before the British grant of that part of Palestine to create the State of Israel. That the next Secretary of State, George Shultz, as a multinational developer has had much business with the Saudis and none with the Israelis is supposed to temper the situation insofar as Saudi Arabia is concerned. But in the final analysis Shultz is not a Reagan-type, Western Republican from California. In fact, he's just another member of the Council on Foreign Relations, is firmly (and by his firm) connected with the Rockefeller-controlled Eastern Establishment. The appointment of Shultz will in no way stem that slow drift of the Arab Nations toward further business accommodations with the U.S.S.R.

In this same trend, there is an ever widening split between the U.S. and its allies in Western Europe. Despite warnings that they are buying the rope with which they are to be hanged, the United States of Europe insist that the building of the Siberian gas pipeline "is just good business," and has no serious political overtones. Margaret Thatcher recently joined the chorus, lent her voice to criticism of Reagan, said the building of the pipeline was just a good business deal. And Moscow, to seal the deal, said it doesn't matter whether the U.S. suppliers cooperate, the pipeline will get built anyway - with slave labor if necessary. At least, that's what we read into the announcement from the Kremlin that the workers of the Communist world have united themselves in a pledge that they will build the pipeline, regardless of the misery and suffering that its construction with U.S. technological aid may entail. In all of this European leaning toward the U.S.S.R., it is becoming clear that the United States of Europe are beginning to assume that they are bigger, wealthier, more productive industrially, economically and financially more powerful than the United States. In every way except military power and agricultural production, we have built a part of a developing Trilateral World Order composed of the United States, the Soviet Union, and the United States of Europe. Yes, we've built them all! And sooner than we think, the Marshall Plan may be back to haunt us.

But that isn't all. Our taking sides with Britain when we should have remained neutral, has alienated us with most of Central and South America. As U.S. News remarked: "Repairing ties with Latin America, damaged by U.S. support of the Falklands war, calls for early and imaginative action by Washington. The administration will find itself in a difficult bind - with Britain pressing for participation by the United States in a multinational force to protect the islands under an independent government, while Latin Americans seek greater sympathy for Argentina's claim to sovereignty."

Yet another area with which there can be trouble involves the two Chinas. The Trilateral Commission plan was to open up Red China for industrial development and expansion. But relations have been strained from the very beginning. Haig had spent much of his time trying to get the U.S. to limit arms sale to Taiwan. In exchange, Peking would seek a peaceful settlement with both the United States and the National Republic of China. But Haig is gone; officially, that is. He's still a strong man on the Rockefeller team and may be playing his cards in the hope of replacing Ronald Reagan in 1984.

STOP PRESS: As we were finishing this report it was revealed that Brezhnev of the USSR and Reagan of the USA have been in communication regarding Lebanon. Brezhnev released a letter to Reagan, warning that the Kremlin might take action if U.S. troops are sent into Lebanon. Just what action was not specified. In reply: "State Department spokesman Dean Fischer said the Brezhnev letter would not derail plans to send a contingent of U.S. troops to Beirut. Deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes said American policy in Lebanon remains unchanged despite the Brezhnev message." Meanwhile, "The Soviet Union has started an apparently major replacement of Syrian weapons and equipment destroyed or captured by the Israelis." Surrogates again?

There are indications that more than the Pentagon officials are worried about the possibility of another Vietnam or Korea. Saul Friedman of Knight-Ridder reports: "There is growing skepticism within the White House over Israel's motives in Lebanon and fear that the United States could be drawn into a military role in the Mideast. . . . "The President now is almost alone in his unstinting commitment to Israel. . . Officials added that while most advisers support the President's offer, they fear that if Americans are killed or wounded, or even fired on, the United States could be put into the position of having to fight on the side of Israel. . . . Indeed, there are some suspicions, the official said, that some elements of Israeli leadership would welcome this. 'They've been wanting U.S. forces to become involved for some time.'

We began this Report with the headlined question: "More Foreign Entanglements To Alleviate Domestic Crises?" When the "Society of the Elite" fears financial collapse, a war is started. Are we falling into the same old trap?

DETHRONING THE I.R.S.

Congressman George Hansen is very concerned about "the awful truth of big government snooping and interfering in the lives of American taxpayers." He is talking about "the bone-chilling effect the Internal Revenue Service has on citizens across the country when the IRS decides to play prosecutor, judge and jury." He contends, and most Americans will agree, that "as prosecutor, judge and jury, the IRS ruthlessly tramples the Constitutional rights of taxpayers; individuals, small businesses, church groups, farmers, any and every group is subject to their brazen and often illegal tactics." Congressman Hansen put his charges in a letter which was not prepared or mailed at government expense. Here is a part of what he wrote in the letter:

"The IRS has taken upon itself the role of intimidator of the public. A former IRS agent expressed the problem to me with a story: 'I was talking to a lady from Germany who said the IRS is getting like the Gestapo was. She said that when the Gestapo first started, nobody thought much about it, but within a few years, every time you heard the name Gestapo, you'd really get a chill. That's the way it is now with the IRS. I'm not sure the lady wasn't absolutely right. I think people are afraid. The IRS even intimidates its Congressional creators to go virtually unchallenged in its illegal exercise of awesome powers against the American public.

"The story of the IRS is a history of a tax collection agency gone wrong - drunk with power, ruthlessly smashing dissent among its own personnel and brazenly roughing up taxpayers as well. If the IRS decides that you have underpaid your taxes, it can assess what it decides you owe and then, without court proceedings or order, it can and often does place liens and take all but $50 of your weekly wages. Also without court order, it can seize your home and sell it, no matter how much or little you owe. Also, upon the sole signature of the local IRS office supervisor, it seizes bank accounts, automobiles and anything else it can find, all without you, the victim, ever having a chance to make your case in a court of law.

"The people of this country are afraid. They are frightened by this runaway arm of government which has powers that no business or no government agency would dare to claim or use.

- * Only the IRS can invade the privacy of a citizen without court process of any kind.
- * Only the IRS can seize property without a court order.
- * Only the IRS can force a citizen to try his case in a special court government by the IRS.
- * Only the IRS can, with impunity, publish a citizen's debt.
- * Only the IRS can wiretap your phone without a court order.
- * Only the IRS is free to maintain listings of citizens guilty of no crime for the purpose of harassing and monitoring them.
- * Only the IRS is free to violate a written agreement with a citizen.
- * Only the IRS can take property on the basis of conjecture.
- * Only the IRS is free to violate a written agreement with a citizen.
- * Only the IRS can take property on the basis of conjecture.
- * Only the IRS publicly admits that its purpose is to instill fear into the citizenry as a technique of performing its function.

"There are countless cases documenting these charges. On the element of fear alone, two recent IRS Commissioners testified before Congress that fear is an essential element in the collection of taxes. This was demonstrated in Colorado recently.

The IRS seized and sold the $80,000 home of a delinquent for $1600, not one cent of which went to reduce the alleged tax delinquency. The seizure and sale were purely punitive - to teach the taxpayer and the rest of us a lesson. A Federal court condemned this seizure without notice, but it was too late to stop the IRS. . . . I now have facts to prove the IRS is so determined to smash the public, rather than deal with it through proper legal channels, that no corrective analysis can be complete without a review of the system's reckless practice of illegally revealing tax returns, to rig everything from GAO audits, to juries, to elections. Violence and brutality are becoming an all too common practice of the IRS - and dangerous to the public. . . "

Congressman Hansen has written a book, "How the IRS Seizes Your Dollars and How to Fight Back," published by Simon and Schuster. He also has organized a grass-roots organization, the "Association of Concerned Taxpayers" (ACT). He hopes to generate enough public support to get Congress to curb our national gestapo before it's too late.

Perhaps an even better way to abolish these assumed powers of our national gestapo is to support those who are promoting the Flat-Tax Rate. Although any number of Senators and Representatives are laying claim to its authorship, and have started arguments about whether it should be 15%, 17% or what have you, and how many loopholes should be permitted; the two really responsible for actually introducing legislation calling for a 10% Flat-Rate Tax are Ron Paul in the House and Jesse Helms in the Senate. On March 15, Senator Helms introduced S. 2200, known as the "Flat Rate Tax Act of 1982". The bill would replace our entire present income tax system with a 10% across-the-board flat rate income tax on all sources of private income, with just one qualification: a $2,000 basic exemption for all taxpayers. On May 11, Congressman Ron Paul introduced H.R. 6352, also known as the "Flat Rate Tax Act of 1982," and it would replace our present complex and unfair income tax with a 10% tax on all income over $10,000.

It should be understood that the Flat-Rate Tax Act is a compromise measure. Any person with a fair knowledge of the Constitution will understand that anything like a personal income tax was anathema to the Founding Fathers. They carefully worded all references to federal taxation in order to prevent any such invasion of a person's property, and to prohibit involuntary servitude, which is exactly what is happening whenever any employer is acting on behalf of the government in withholding the taxes of an employee. When the "Society of the Elect" determined that it must solidify its rulership by creating a Central Bank (the Fed), by establishing an income tax system, and by establishing tax exempt foundations and legal loopholes so the "Elect" could avoid payment of such taxes, it was discovered that the Constitution strictly prohibited this form of taxation. So, an Amendment (the 16th) had to be ratified by three-fourth of the States. This was accomplished by promising that the tax would never get above two or three percent of income; and the very idea of a Marxist progressive income tax was unthinkable. Without the almost clandestine passage of the Federal Reserve Act and the ratification of the Income Tax Amendment, there might never have been an American entry into World War One. And certainly this nation would never have become a Socialist Welfare State.

However, like it or not, our Constitutional Republic has become a Democratic (synonym for Socialist) Welfare State. To abolish the Fed and install an honest money system could be accomplished without too much suffering on the part of the citizenry. But to abolish the system of income taxation completely at one fell swoop, would bring on a kind of catastrophe, perhaps outright anarchy. So, the better first step (in regard to the income tax) should be the elimination of the illegal powers of the IRS and the establishment of an honest and equitable income tax system. Hence the 10% Flat Rate Tax Act of 1982, which would actually bring in more taxes for the Federal Government, and perhaps stop it from borrowing another billion or so every fiscal year, thus adding to the illegal public debt on which we are now paying a hundred billion a year in interest. We avoided using the word dollar in that statement, because we're really talking about book entries and promissory notes, not dollars.

Ron Paul says the Flat Tax Rate is "an idea whose time has come" because "Four out of ten taxpayers are now driven to hire professionals to fill out their tax returns, at a cost of over $60 billion a year. And this doesn't even include the billions that the government spends to process returns, catch tax evaders, etc. It is high time that Congress scrapped this lousy tax system of ours, which is broken beyond repair." Congressman Paul says a chief merit of his legislation "would be its utter simplicity and fairness: everyone would pay the same 10% on all their income over $10,000 with no exemptions, no deductions, and no exceptions. To allow even one deduction (say, for charitable expenses) would surely open the flood gates and ruin the whole thing. Some proposals call for a higher percentage tax. I believe that if the Church asks for only 10% of our earnings, then this should be sufficient for the government as well. . . . Our present, so-called 'progressive' tax system, with its absurd number of tax shelters and loopholes, allows some to get away without paying their fair share of taxes. I believe that the simple, fair flat rate tax should appeal to people of all ideological persuasions."

When introducing his bill (S. 2200) in the Senate, Helms quoted a former Secretary of the Treasury, Andrew Mellon. It is true that Mellon was a megabanker, financier, multimillionaire and creator of foundations. Yet when he gave up his business activities to become U.S. Secretary of State, he compiled one of the finest records of any man in that office. He lowered taxes drastically and at the same time reduced the national debt from $24 billion to $16 billion in ten years, under Presidents Harding, Coolidge and Hoover. He wrote a book, "Taxation: The People's Business." It was from this book that Senator Helms quoted, which gave this definition of the proper role of a good tax system:

"The problem of the government is to fix rates which will bring in a maximum of revenue to the Treasury and at the same time bear not too heavily on the taxpayer or on business enterprises. A sound tax policy must take into consideration three factors. It must produce sufficient revenue for the Government; it must lessen so far as possible the burden of taxation on those least able to bear it; and it must also remove those influences which might retard the continued steady development of business and industry on which, in the last analysis, so much of our prosperity depends. Furthermore, a permanent tax system should be designed not merely for one or two years nor for the effect it may have on any given class of taxpayers, but should be worked out with regard to conditions over a long period and with a view to its ultimate effect on the prosperity of the country as a whole. . .

"I have never viewed taxation as a means of rewarding one class of taxpayers or punishing another. If such a point of view ever controls our public policy, the traditions of freedom, justice and equality of opportunity, which are the distinguishing characteristics of our American civilization, will have disappeared and in their place we shall have class legislation with all its attendant evils. The man who seeks to perpetuate prejudice and class hatred is doing America an ill service. In attempting to promote or defeat legislation by arraying one class of taxpayers against another, he shows a complete misconception of those principles of equality on which the country was founded.

"Any man of energy and initiative in this country can get what he wants out of life. But when that initiative is crippled by legislation or by a tax system which denies him the right to receive a reasonable share of his earnings, then he will be deprived of the energy on which his continued energy depends." (Unquote).

And under this definition, our system of taxation is intolerable, said Senator Helms. He continued: "If we simplify our tax system so that every American can fill out his or her income tax literally on the back of a post card, we will put an end to the huge and burdensome tax avoidance industry. The complexities of our Tax Codes are mind-boggling - nearly 52 percent of the 1040 forms and 16.9 percent of the 'simple' 1040A forms were filled out with professional assistance in 1981, and then over half of the Itemized returns contained mistakes - according to IRS. This complexity is especially unfair to those who cannot afford to pay for the services of a professional tax accountant. . . . It is no wonder that people are losing faith in their Government. There is something Orwellian about a government that subjects its citizens to rules that are too complex for them to understand. As one shrewd commentator has observed, 'How can you obey a law when you cannot understand it? They tell you that ignorance of the law is no excuse. Catch 22.' The IRS today is a 'big brother,' a force that, to many people, acts mysteriously, arbitrarily, and, often, viciously. Perhaps ominously, too, the IRS represents a taxpayer's most intimate tie to his Government."

"At present," Senator Helms continued, "America has the lowest savings rate of any major industrial country, and our economic growth has come to a virtual standstill. I was personally surprised to find that Americans have been net disinvestors in corporate equities for 18 out of the past 19 years. The crux of our problem is . . . we are paying people not to work. . . . Our present tax system is unworkable and intolerable. The need for a complete overhaul of the system should be obvious to everyone - The problem is not solved by piecemeal reform, which can only add to the confusion and inefficiency. We should wipe the slate clean of tax preferences, deductions, exemptions, exclusions, and all other complicating factors. We must take the stand that the flat-rate across-the-board tax rate is the only possible solution to our tax system's inequities and inefficiencies. If we adopted a 10 percent flat-rate tax we will collect more revenue and at the same time fuel economic growth. . . ."

* * * * *

If you're still with us, you have read the presentations, in their own words, of three elected representatives; Congressmen Hansen and Paul, and Senator Helms; who are seeking to curb the powers of the IRS and reorder the intolerable tax system with which we are beset. Yet they must know that this is but a compromise measure for each of them also has introduced legislation to curtail or kill the Federal Reserve System, and to restore an honest money system through passage of a Gold Standard Act. None of these measures is apt to pass in the near future, because of the Eastern Establishment which supports the Fed, and the entrenched bureaucracy which has and will oppose any real movement to restore the Republic we have lost. As early as 1926 a social critic, H.L. Mencken, observed that the State "has taken on a vast mass of duties and responsibilities; it has spread out its powers until they penetrate to every act of the citizen, however secret; it has begun to throw around its operations the high dignity and impeccability of a State religion; its agents become a separate and superior caste, with authority to bind and loose, and their thumbs in every pot. But is still remains, as it was in the beginning, the common enemy of all well-disposed, industrious and decent men."

Yet there is this assurance from the God of history: When a great crisis arises, there is always provided a Remnant which shall build and restore. This is our hope and His promise.

THE COMING OF THE THOUGHT POLICE

In most editions of George Orwell's 1984 there is an Afterthought written by the German-born American psychiatrist, the late Erich Fromm. He explains in detail the development of Orwell's Newspeak, that simplified, emotionless, colorless socialist language designed to replace Oldspeak, or the traditional English language. Fromm explains that in Newspeak all words such as honor, justice, morality, religion, freedom, etc. no longer exist. All such words have been replaced by one word: Crimethink. Any person who expresses a thought or an idea contrary to the current party line (Ingsoc) is hunted down and punished, brainwashed or exterminated by one of Big Brother's special agencies called Thinkpol, or Thought Police in Oldspeak.

As the year draws near, many of the props for Orwell's scenario are already in place. In our last Report we quoted Congressman George Hansen, who is very concerned about the way the IRS is playing the part of an American Gestapo. He pointed out that the people of this country are afraid, frightened by this runaway arm of government which has assumed powers that no other government agency would dare to use. Well, now pending before Congress is a Post Office Bill which is even more dangerous, and if passed could convert postal officials into thought police. The shocking thing about this bill is that it has already been passed by the Senate, has been approved by the Reagan Administration's Office of Management and Budget, is sponsored by more than 300 Representatives and now awaits action by the House Post Office Committee.

We can understand how this bill could be approved by legislators if they failed to read it carefully. It purports to be a new bill aimed to curb mail fraud. But this bill does much more than that. It was introduced in the House by Rep. Claude Pepper of Florida as H.R. 3973, and in the Senate by David Pryor of Arkansas as S. 1407. As amended and passed by the Senate, here are some of the things this bill would do:

*Authorize a $10,000-per-day penalty against any person who continues to write or distribute a pamphlet, newspaper, magazine, newsletter or book after being ordered by the Postal Service to cease and desist from such activity. This one provision could kill any newsletter, such as this one, if it should publish any thought, idea or statement contrary to the established political line of any agency of the government.

* Authorize the Postal Service to designate any or all of its more than 60,000 post office employes to "demand access' without a search warrant to any home, business, private library, files, bank vaults or safes "to inspect and copy books, records, documents or other objects that the Postal Service has reason to believe relate to any matter under investigation."

*Forbid the shipment or transportation of a banned book not only by mail but by any other "instrumentality of interstate commerce" including airlines, parcel services, buses, trucks or your own automobile.

As Maureen Soloman, president of the National Health Federation of Monrovia, California said in regard to this proposed bill: "This new proposal violates freedom of speech, freedom of the press and freedom of thought in general. When you hear the gentle rapping on your door, when the postman rings your bell but has no mail to deliver to you, ask not for whom the Thought Police come, they come for you." In an article published in Spotlight July 5th, this health promoter and opponent of been struck by two facts. First, most of them, if suspect, are written in a kind of legal newspeak that only lawyers are supposed to comprehend and judges to interpret. Secondly, the bill, especially if it is an amendment to an existing Act, begins with a short description of the purpose and intent of the bill. The statement usually is so worded that the casual reader feels it to be a thoroughly worthwhile and needed bill. The only thing that makes its suspect is that final phrase: "and for other purposes." Those "other purposes" are seldom spelled out and explained, and their interpretation is left to lawyers and judges who use the bill when passed for their own "other purposes." Then, so very often, a bill that isn't even needed may be proposed, ballyhooed and approved with great fanfare simply because it's a good vote getter in an election year. Take for example this balanced budget amendment which President Reagan took great pains to endorse publicly. We appreciate the manner in which Marvin Stone, editor of U.S. News, explained it in his July 26th editorial:

"A powerful train moving down the track - that's how Representative Henry Hyde sees the balanced-budget amendment now under debate with President Reagan's blessing. Hyde has his misgivings about being run over, and, like many of us, he asks: 'Will it work?' Well, it has a chance, if you don't expect it to work miracles with an undisciplined Congress. Basically, this proposed amendment to the Constitution would order that every fiscal year must start with a balanced budget unless three fifths of the members of Congress vote to unbalance it. And a strict limit of placed on revenue increases unless a majority of all members of both houses sanctions them. It would thus be perfectly legal to unbalance the budget. So why bother with the amendment?"

Now, just how dangerous this H.R. 3973 really is can be understood only if you read the proposed bill very carefully. And we suspect that's what a majority of the Senate and 300 members of the House failed to do when they voted for or sponsored such a bill. Introduced by Claude Pepper of Florida, who himself has always been a thoroughgoing socialist, and by Ms. Oakar, Ms. Ferraro, Mr. Ratchford and Mr. Biaggi, with an additional 398 sponsors to make the bill passable as soon as it clears the House Ways and Means Committee, it is a bill "To amend Title 39, United States Code, by strengthening the investigatory and enforcement powers of the Postal Service by authorizing inspection authority and by providing for civil penalties for violations of orders under Section 3005 of such title (pertaining to schemes for obtaining money by false representations or lotteries), and for other purposes. (Emphasls added).

FOLLOWING ARE SOME OF THE KEY PROVISIONS OF H.R. 3973:

* * * * *

Sec. 2 (a) Chapter 4 of title 39, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

§413. Inspection authority.

(a) The Postal Service may require, pursuant to a written demand made under this section, that any officer or employee designated by the Postal Service be given access at reasonable times to inspect or copy any books, records, documents, or other objects that the Postal Service has reason to believe relate to any matter under investigation by the Postal Service pursuant to its authority under section 404(a)(7) of this title. . . (b) If any person issued a written demand under subsection (a) refuses to obey such demand, any district court . . . may order such person to comply with the written demand. . . . Any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by the court as contempt thereof.

§3005. False representations; lotteries.

(a)(1) The Postal Service may issue an order described under paragraph (1) or (2) of subsection (b), or both such orders, upon determining on the basis of evidence satisfactory to the Postal Service that any person--

(A) is engaged in conducting a scheme or device for obtaining money or property through the mail by means of false representations, including the mailing of matter which is nonmailable under section 3001(d) of this title; or

(B) is engaged in conducting a lottery, gift enterprise, or scheme for the distribution of money or of personal property, by lottery, chance, or drawing of any kind.

The mailing by any person of matter which is nonmailable under section 3001(d) shall constitute prima facie evidence that such a person is engaged in conducting a scheme or device described by subparagraph (A).

When permitted under subsection (a), the Postal Service may issue an order which-- (A) directs the postmaster of the post office at which mail arrives, addressed to any person engaged in an activity described by subsection (a)(1) (or to any representative of such person), to return such mail to the sender appropriately marked as in violation of this section; and

(B) forbids the payment by a postmaster to such person or representative of any money order drawn to the order of either, and provides for the return to the remitter of the sum named in the money order. . .

If the Postal Service issues to any person a written demand, under section 413 of this title, to inspect documents or other items in the course of investigations to determine whether such person is engaged in activities described by subsection (a)(1), any unreasonable refusal by such person to comply with such demand shall . . . constitute probable cause to believe that such person is engaged in activities described by such subsection.

Civil Penalties.

Any person--

(1) who evades or attempts to evade the effect of an order issued under section 3005(b)(1);

(2) who fails to comply with any order issued under section 3005(b)(2); or

(3) who has actual knowledge of any such order, is in privity with any person described by paragraph (1) or (2), and engages in conduct which assists any such person to evade, attempt to evade, or fail to comply with any such order (as the case may be);

shall be liable to the United States for a civil penalty in an amount not to exceed $10,000 for each day that such person engaged in conduct described by paragraph (1), (2), or (3).

If any person fails to pay an assessment of a civil penalty the Attorney General shall recover the amount assessed (plus interest at currently prevailing rates) in an action brought in any appropriate district court of the United States. In such an action, the validity, amount, and appropriateness of such penalty shall not be subject to review. . . .(end of quotes from H.R. 3937).

Tedious reading; but important reading. Notice that "false representations" and lotteries are the only violations specifically mentioned; and "false representation" to the Postal Service could mean almost anything. Also, like the I.R.S., under this bill the Postal Service would become its own prosecutor, judge and jury. This is a Thought Police bill which must be killed before it can become law.

THE GREATER WAR IS ECONOMIC, NOT MILITARY

For the fifth time since its recognition as an independent State, Israel is at war. And, as would be expected, even though that war has almost run its course, the invasion of Lebanon and the shelling of sections of Beirut still dominate the news - at least in the Middle East and in the Western World. There are some references to the stalemated Iraqi-Irani War. On rare occasions there's an item about the Soviet attempts to dominate the people of Afghanistan. Poland receives little attention by the media. The same is true of the Vietnamese atrocities in Cambodia, the actions of the Turks in Cyprus, the continuing little wars, revolutions, invasions, incursions and coups in all parts of Africa save within the Republic of South Africa, the only stable - and therefore most hated - government in that part of the world. Now that the Falklands forays are finished, the Middle East, especially Lebanon, dominates the news.

However, even while concentrating on the destruction and bloodletting in the Middle East, seldom if ever does a reporter, commentator or editor ever refer to these military conflicts as being but a part of a much greater, an economic war, which has to do with control of the oil centers of the world, and with the waterways which control the distribution of oil and the world's other resources. And this economic conflict makes the military conflicts seem very confusing. An important European news source commented just prior to the Israeli invasion of Lebanon, that Israel, "the defender of American interests" in the Middle East, was shipping arms to Iran, and also helping Iraq. Likewise, the Soviet Union had a mutual aid and defense treaty with Iraq, but at the same time was sending arms and an estimated 2,000 Soviet advisers to Iran. While the USSR was aiding the PLO and Syria it was at the same time currying favor with Israel. Said an observer: "Obviously, none of the people of America, Israel, Syria, Iran and Iraq want war. But it's evidently wanted by Russian leaders and the U.S. State Department's foreign oil-profit policy (a Trilateral Commission policy-Ed.) And since the USSR doesn't have any money of her own, but lives on U.S. loans, it stands to reason that the oil-money monopolists who 'guide' U.S. foreign policy finance all sides of the Mid-East conflicts." If this is true, then why? Well, let's look at the record:

In 1952 there was published a book that certain interests tried to "burn." But so far as we know, the facts contained in the book have never been denied. It's title: "Rockefeller, Internationalist. The Man Who Misrules the World," by Emanuel Josephson. We quote from pages 212, 213 of that book:

"In March 1926, Vacuum Oil Co. entered into an agreement with the Russian government monopoly, the Naptha Syndicate, for the purchase of 800,000 tons of crude oil and 100,000 tons of kerosene, primarily in order to ingratiate itself with the Russians. This was the first direct commercial postwar transaction between the Soviet Government and the Rockefeller Standard Oil interests. The terms of this agreement entered into by the Rockefeller interests and Soviet Russia have never been published. It was well known, however, that the monetary price paid by Standard Oil was most favorable and low. Price was no object to the Communists. World conquest on the basis of the plans laid down by Lenin was for them the prime consideration, and the oil deals were, for the Soviets, merely bait and the means to that end. Bearing in mind this fact and the subsequent course of events, however, it is not difficult to arrive at a reliable conclusion concerning the terms that were demanded by the Soviets and accepted by the Rockefeller interests."

telite through the device of a 'popular front.' A 'popular front' in Communist language means a Communist government. The setting-up of a Communist controlled government in the United States is the ultimate Soviet purpose of any deal that the Rockefeller Standard Oil interests could have entered into on the basis of surrender to the Soviets in exchange for control of their oil. . . . Finally since both of the contracting interests (Rockefeller and the Soviet Union in 1926-Ed.) aimed at world conquest and dominion, there was undoubtedly an initial agreement to divide the world between them as a beginning. (Unquote).

Of special interest is the fact that at about this same time the Rockefeller and Carnegie controlled foundations, the Council on Foreign Relations (which the Rockefellers had taken over in 1927) and our State Department all adopted and began to promote the policy that they should all work toward an eventual "merging" of the United States and the Soviet Union.

Added to the Soviet demand for "popular fronts," was a dream that began with Peter the Great in the seventeenth century. It was he who attempted to make Russia a part of Europe proper, had buttons sewed on the sleeves of his troops for sanitary reasons, taught them the beginnings of western military tactics, and made French the social language of his royal court. Russia then was virtually landlocked, had no navy or ports of any importance. Peter knew that open corridors to seas and oceans were essential if Russia were to become at all "westernized." His one great dream was the conquest of the lands between the Russian border and the ports of the Indian Ocean. Now that the USSR has built the world's largest navy, access to the Indian Ocean is ever more important than in Peter's time. For, in addition to free access to the world's third largest ocean, control of the flow of oil from the Persian Gulf and the Gulf of Hormuz was possible. Consider these facts. There is this worldwide peace drive which originated in the Soviet Union and which has virtually neutralized the Nations of Western Europe, and caused a campaign for unilateral disarmament among the socialist and liberal elements in the United States. Add to this, there is the anti-nuclear movement which would make us more than ever dependent upon oil to keep our factories running and our industries producing. Also important in this connection is the report that the Soviets are preparing for war. Not necessarily a war that would involve Soviet troops, but another series of pressure-imposed "popular fronts," in which more Nations become Communist nations through infiltration, terrorism, revolution, and the use of surrogate troops trained and supplied by the USSR. On June 14 Paul Scott wrote a column headed "Soviets Prepare For War." He warned that "President Reagan's tightly packed nine day voyage to Western Europe was designed to warn leaders of NATO countries and France that while Soviet leaders talk peace and nuclear disarmament, they are preparing to cut off Western Europe's life line from the oil-rich Middle East. When pieced together the evidence is: planned are a major Soviet military thrust from newly established bases in Afghanistan through Pakistan to the Indian Ocean in the April-June period of 1983." To further cut off the United States and Western Europe came this Siberian gas pipeline scheme. Fear that they must deal with the USSR for their future supplies of energy, oil as well as gas, caused the Nations of Western Europe to reject Reagan's counsel and provide the money and materials to build the pipeline, while the USSR would supply the necessary slave labor to build it.

Speaking of military developments, Hilaire du Berrier wrote: "It would be wrong to think of the Israeli blitzkrieg into Lebanon and the seemingly hopeless predicament of Yasir Arafat's encircled Palestine Liberation Organization as creating a prelude to peace in the Middle East. From unimpeachable information reaching your correspondent, it is clear that what we are seeing now is only the beginning of a struggle which could make the word holocaust seem an understatement." Here is a list of sequence of events which seem to confirm du Berrier's prediction:

1. On November 13, 1979, Yasir Arafat presented a proposal to the Kremlin officials.

Since his PLO and the Syrian troops occupied Lebanon, why not make it the headquarters and supply base for the coming war to win control of the entire Middle East? After much discussion, Brezhnev & Co. decided to "shoot the works." Planning started immediately and "what the Palestinians and Soviets together accomplished since that time defies imagination. In addition to piling huge stores of armaments, intelligence materials were also hidden in huge underground vaults. Said Cleon Skousen of The Freeman Institute who has recently returned from the Middle East: "The Soviet Union has made Lebanon its principal ammunition dump and supply base for ANY war which might break out in the Middle East. Prime Minister Menachem Begin said it would take many weeks to transport these captured supplies . . . out of Lebanon." Which could be the reason for the Israeli slowdown in the war these past weeks.

2. While the Lebanese military buildup by the Soviets was being carried out, Cuban soldiers moved into Southern Iran, began installing electronic listening devices for the purpose of monitoring Pakistanis in preparation for moves against that country. Soviet advisors and technicians are building, with Iran's approval, a military base and seaport on Iran's southern coast near the Strait of Hormuz. Meanwhile, to divert attention from what is really going on, the Soviets are also aiding Iraq in its war against Iran (the old game of confuse and conquer).

3. The Scott Report of July 15 noted that the Russian Army and Air Force in Afghanistan are methodically turning that country into a forward operational base for military moves against Pakistan. "By driving to the Indian Ocean through Pakistan," said Scott, "the Russians will be able to control the strategic Strait of Hormuz, and thus the oil flow from Saudi Arabia and other oil-producing States in the Persian Gulf. This control would mean the neutralization of Western Europe, Japan, South Korea, and the Republic of Free China, all of which depend heavily on oil from that region. This is the giant prize the men in the Kremlin are now seeking and this is why the Russian economy and its military are now on a 'war footing' while its diplomats cover these war preparations by publicly talking about peace and arms reduction.

A final note about that Soviet occupation of the Southern coast of Iran. At Chah Bahar and Bandar Abbas are huge military establishments, complete with dock facilities, airfields, sophisticated weaponry and computerized operational systems. This gives Russia one of its long desired "warm water ports" as well as control over all the shipping via the Strait of Hormuz. But the Soviets did not build these facilities. They were built and left intact when President Carter ordered the evacuation of U.S. personnel from Iran. The facilities remained unused until, allegedly, Arafat and Brezhnev had their conference in November 1979, when it was decided that the big push would begin in the spring of 1983. The Kremlin made a deal with the government of Iran, reportedly paid U.S.$4 billion for the whole thing. Reminds one of how Cam Ranh Bay and other military facilities were left for the Communists when U.S. troops left Vietnam. Commented Globescan: "What a way to transfer technology and wealth to the created enemy. At least, this way, it looks as if it was all a mistake." Actually Russia paid nothing for the facilities in Iran. American taxpayers paid twice. Once when they were built. Second through continual American loans to Russia which makes such purchases possible. Russia's socialist empire would collapse tomorrow without financial aid from Western bankers and suppliers. So who is the real enemy?

CUBA, OUR DEPENDENT ALLY?

There is plenty of news about Cuban activities these days. But it's the kind of news you won't be reading in your daily newspaper or hearing on your TV. Because it's news about Cuban terrorist activities and Cuba's new role in the international scheme of things. However, there'll be a different kind of news about Cuba which probably will receive the fullest possible treatment by the controlled American communications media. This second kind of news will comprise a "laundering" job; stories of how relations between Cuba and the United States are improving, how we should consider extending complete diplomatic recognition, let bygones be bygones, send help to the hungry people of Cuba, etc. We predict you'll soon be hearing a lot of this kind of "good news" about Cuba; but it won't be truthful news. It's just that the International Bankers are finding themselves in a sort of embarrassing situation because of so much lending to socialist nations that can never pay their bills, and people are beginning to wonder about it. This is especially true of the loans to countries that are controlled by the USSR but aren't considered to be satellites. Already the media are telling us that the Soviet Union and its satellites currently owe more than $85 billion to nations and banks of the free world. This includes debts owed by the Soviet Union, Poland, Rumania, East Germany, Czechoslovakia, Hungary and Bulgaria. But there also are nations like Cuba and Somalia which are associated but aren't satellites. That's where the embarrassment seems to lie. We are told that the USSR must spend $4 billion a year - $11 million a day - to keep Cuba living in the manner to which her people have been forced to become accustomed. There are ways of monetizing the debts of the satellites; but Cuba and Somalia, for example, are in a slightly different category, and are something of an embarrassment to the International Bankers. Almost a year ago we first heard that Somalia was due to be "sanitized" just as soon as feasible. And now the same treatment is to be accorded Cuba. As Globescan recently reported: "On June 10th, the (London) Economist poured on the soft soap, saying that Russia can no longer afford Cuba. They cried that the Russians pump in roughly $4 billion a year. Obviously Russia cannot continue to finance Cuba. Russia doesn't even produce enough wealth to feed herself - no socialist country does. They must continually borrow from countries where freedom to produce and keep things creates surplus capital. If socialism in Cuba or in Russia were allowed to fall, then the game would be over for the international bankers who live to lend to socialists who can never repay - and who are hooked on loans forever." Of course, the international bankers have a way of having American taxpayers foot those bills, by monetizing the debts if required. So the business of lending to countries that can never repay is still a very lucrative practice. But, as we noted, Cuba seems to have become something of an embarrassment and changes must be made. Likewise Angola.

It will be recalled that there are Cuban troops in Angola, chiefly for the purpose of guarding the installations of multinationals like Gulf Oil General Electric, and similar firms. But, as the Patterson Strategy Letter of July 31 notes: "Castro's troops are now an embarrassment and a liability. Cubans in Angola are now a stumbling block to Marxist plans. Why? Because Angola is bankrupt and desperately needs funds. The economy has collapsed because of Marxist management, and the USSR can no longer afford to funnel scarce hard currency and foodstuffs which it needs to feed Poland and its own people. Some other way must be found to finance the Marxist government of Jose Eduardo dos Santos. Naturally, the New York banks stand ready to funnel U.S.$ capital into the Marxist Angolan camp, and relieve the pressure on the East bloc. However, to do so at this time would be just a bit embarrassing. Therefore 'the way must be paved' before Chase Manhattan and its London affiliates can organize a syndicate to funnel money into Angola. The way must be paved for a U.S. media laundering and cleaning of Angola's image. To do this Cuban troops must go, as they are, after all, a paid Invasionary force acting on orders from Moscow - and the whole world knows it. . . Here is why we see such frantic efforts being made by the Trilateralist, Chester Crocker (U.S. ambassador to South Africa) to meet with the Swapo leader, Sam Nujoma, to explain the new realities - and why you see the New York Times running dozens of column inches on the 'Angolan revolution.' The Times is in the process of explaining to their readers why the Cuban troops have served their purpose in Angola (see New York Times of June 18th and 19th.). What will be done with the Cuban troops? Unfortunately, the Cuban troops in Angola have been counted and estimated. Their numbers are well known to international news media and government bodies. There are between 20,000 and 30,000 troops in Angola and the surrounding countries. The plan on the surface is to return them to Cuba, while secretly re-deploying some troops to support the collapsing Sandanista regime in Nicaragua." (Quoted from PSL Strategy Letter, July 31, 1982. 12 issues, $149.95 per year. P.O.Box 37432, Cincinnati, Ohio 45237.)

So, as Globescan and PSL affirm, the first step is to launder and cleanse Angola and Cuba, so their financial burdens can be transferred from the USSR to the USA. Then, as PSL indicates, the Cubans have a new assignment. They are to concentrate on the Nations of Central and South America and the Caribbean. It would seem that the Soviet leaders have discovered that direct intervention and invasion by foreign, uniformed troops, is not as productive as they might wish. True, it was necessary to invade Afghanistan militarily, because Communist governments had already been established in that country, and the Afghan Communists simply couldn't keep the people under control. Control of the borders of that country was essential to the Soviet planning. The whole scheme of taking control of all Middle East oil regions, and also securing warm water ports on the Indian Ocean demanded at least nominal control over Afghanistan. So the Soviet was forced to invade, however costly and impossible of completion the job might be. But in contrast, they have been careful not to send Russian troops into Poland; and the transfer of Cuban and other surrogate troops from Angola and other countries that already have Marxist governments, seems practical to the Soviet. Hence the enormous buildup of arms and the setting up of training camps throughout Lebanon, which the Soviets expected their allies, Syria and the PLO, to keep under control. Now that new arrangements must be made, Dr. Fred Schwarz of the Christian Anti-Communist Crusade has come up with some very important information. We quote from his newsletter of August 1, 1982:

"A few days after the Sidon base (PLO base in Lebanon) was destroyed, the Libyan prime minister, Abdel Salam Jalloud, conferred in Tehran with top Iranian leaders and urged close cooperation between the Libyan and Iranian revolutions to offset the grave blows he said the Israelis had meted out to revolutionary fundamentalist Islam. It is reported that an agreement was signed on June 19. They decided that, with the help of Libyan financing, Iran would try to replace Lebanon as the new center for training violent revolutionaries. Recruits would be assigned to bases in North Teheran, near Gom and near Zahadan in the Iran-Afghanistan-Pakistan frontier district of Baluchistan. Those who manage to get out of Lebanon, and those in Libya, would be transferred to Iran, where they would be trained by North Vietnamese, North Koreans, Cubans and Bulgarians. Khomeini's presumed successor, Ayatollah Hossein Ali Montazeri, would be in charge." (Unquote).

This is quite an optimistic venture for Iran, and could be accomplished only with the full support of the USSR. There is documentary evidence to show that in Lebanon there were training grounds accomodating 33 different guerrilla organizations. Ten from Western Europe, seven from South America, three from the Far East, five from the Indian subcontinent and eight from the Gulf and the Middle East. In addition to the Palestinians affilliated with the PLO, Israel claims to have captured terrorist trainees and instructors from Iraq, Syria, Jordan, Egypt, Morocco, Tunisia, Algeria, Libya, Turkey, Pakistan, Somalla, Bangladesh, North Yemen, Niger, Sri Lanka, Brazil, Canada (one Quebec nationalist), Nigeria, India, Saudi Arabia, Iran, Abu Dhabi, Kuwait, Mali, Sudan and Maritania. Also captured were about 800 very dangerous men from western terrorist organizations: Japanese, West Germans, British, Irish, French, Italian, Swiss, Armenians, Portuguese, Spaniards and South Koreans. They came from terrorist groups including the Bader Meinhof gang, the IRA, France's Direct Action, Italy's Red Brigades and Spain's ETA. All of the training camps originally in Lebanon are to be transferred to Iran. And, according to Hilaire du Berrier, the Khomeini has lent his personal support in a special way:

"The latest development in the Ayatollah Khomeini's conspiracy to dominate the Moslem world is a campaign being run through Iranian Embassies. In all capitals where Moslem students are present in numbers, Iranian agents are offering expensepaid trips to Teheran. Visas are stamped on loose sheets the size of the student's passport, so that his own government will have no indication that he has made a visit to Iran. On arrival at Teheran, the student learns that he has been granted a scholarship for a period of training in an Iranian military and terrorist training school where the instructors are North-Korean, Syrian, and Asiatic Soviet experts. The direction of these 'schools' has been turned over to Khomeini's bloodthirsty henchman, the Ayatollah Montazeri." (Unquote).

But about those Cubans and their future assignments. As we said, first comes the "laundering" and cleansing so the Soviet's financial burden in supporting Cuba can be transferred more directly to the U.S. taxpayers. How is this being done? Here is an explanation: "The International Monetary Fund has lots of money, thanks to U.S. taxpayers, and so does the World Bank, thanks again to Americans who put their money in banks that buy World Bank bonds. So, in order to spring loose all that money for Fidel, simply soft soap Americans to change the way they think about Cuba and Dr. Castro. Make Cuba out as struggling to obtain the good life, but misunderstood; driven into the Russian camp only because of America's twenty-year-long cold shoulder. The operation is under way. The IMF, as the emerging World Central Bank and lender of last resort, will take over the Cuban financial burden, using American money, as usual. The IMF is already doing it in Eastern Europe. Soon all of Russia's satellites and socialist regional governments will be re-financed - then, as banker to One-World government and the New International Economic Order, the IMF will take over the financing of Russia as well." Quoted from Globescan, Paris, Geneva. 24 Issues (one year), $125. U.S. Subscription Center, 1545 New York Avenue, N.E., Washington, D.C. 20002).

And when the Cuban surrogates have returned home from Angola and other parts of Asia and Africa, what will be their next assignment? Allen Keyte, Editor of World Affairs Review, gives us this description as of July 30, 1982:

"A country-by-country examination of Cuba's activities in Latin America and the Caribbean makes clear that Cuba has renewed its campaign of the 1960s to promote armed insurgencies. In particular, Cuba has stepped up efforts to stimulate violence and destabilize its neighbors, turning away from its earlier policy of strengthening normal diplomatic relations in the hemisphere. Since 1978 Cuba has:

- * Worked to unite traditionally splintered radical groups behind a commitment to armed struggle with Cuban advice and material assistance;
- * Trained ideologically committed cadres in urban and rural guerrilla warfare;

- * Supplied or arranged for the supply of weapons to support the Cuban-trained cadres' efforts to assume power by force;
- * Encouraged terrorism in the hope of provoking indiscriminate violence and repression, in order to weaken government legitimacy and attract new converts to armed struggle; and
- * Used military aid and advisors to gain influence over guerrilla fronts and radical governments through armed pro-Cuban Marxists.

"Unlike Che Guevara's attempts during the 1960s, Cuban subversion today is backed by an extensive secret intelligence and training apparatus, modern military forces, and a large and sophisticated propaganda network. Utilizing agents and contacts nurtured over more than 20 years, the Castro government is providing ideological and military training and material and propaganda support to numerous violent groups, often several in one country.

"Cuba is most active in Central America, where its immediate goals are to exploit and control the revolution in Nicaragua and to induce the overthrow of the Governments of El Salvador and Guatemala. At the same time, Cuba is working to destabilize governments elsewhere in the hemisphere. Cuba provides advice, safehaven, communications, training, and some financial support to several violent South American organisations. In the Caribbean, Cuban interference in the post-election period has been blunted in Jamaica, but Grenada has become a virtual Cuban client.

"Cuba's new drive to promote armed insurgency does not discriminate between democracies and dictatorships. And attempts by Cuba to destabilize governments occur in spite of the existence of diplomatic ties.

"The long-range campaign is directed by the Cuban Communist Party, which oversees farflung operations that include secret training camps in Cuba, intelligence officers abroad, training programmes for select foreign students, networks for covert movement of personnel and material between Cuba and abroad, and propaganda support.

"Cuba's enormous investment of energy, money, and agents in this campaign would not be possible without Soviet help. Soviet assistance, now totaling over $8m a day, enables Cuba to maintain the best equipped and largest per capita military forces in Latin America and to channel substantial resources abroad. In return, Cuba usually is careful not to jeopardize ongoing government relationships in Latin America important to the Soviet Union." (Unquote).

Likewise, Cuba usually is careful not to jeopardize ongoing financial transactions in Latin America that are important to the Multinationals and International Bankers. Example: Panama has been set aside as a bankers' sanctuary, this being arranged through our gift of the Panama Canal. Recently Panama was used as a transit point for Colombian guerrillas. This led to sharp criticism of Cuba's "manifest disregard for international standards of political and economic co-existence." The supranational authorities were very upset. For Panama is set aside for money laundering and supersensitive financial dealings. Otherwise Cuba is free to Communize the Americas at our expense. But not at the International Bankers' and certain multinationals' expense. We the people are caught in the middle; supporting both. And if the media are successful, we will comply without a whimper. That is, most of us will.

PERZONAL

THE TRENDY TANK

Q. Any truth to the story that the Philadelphia Eagles have bought one of those immersion tanks like we saw in the movie "Altered States"?

A. The Eagles hope to soar straight to the Super Bowl again this year, with the addition of the trendy tank, in which players can float endlessly while contemplating missed blocks and uncaught passes.

"You're going to what?"

"You heard me. I'm going to write a sports column."

"Ha. Ha. Ha. Ha. Ha. Ha. Ha."

"Go ahead. Laugh. But you'll have to admit that I have a socko beginning."
"I'm afraid to ask."

"Ready?"

He groans.

"There is only one trouble with sports. They don't pay the athletes enough."

"Ha. Ha. Ha. Ha. Ha. Ha. Ha."

"I know. I know. You think I don't know anything about sports. There are 10,000 Cuban socker players in South Florida and you don't know how to recognize one."

"How?" he asks, fascinated in spite of himself.

"If a guy can't scratch or blow his nose except with his knee, he's a socker player."

"I thought that was Rugby. Anything more?"

"Well, there's a lot of talk about the medfly destroying the earth, but I think we're in much more danger from the athlete's foot brought in by the Spanish Armada."

"Alright. So you're an expert on socker. But you know nothing about football."

"I do so."

"You can't name a single Dolphin."

"Ha. Ha. Flipper."

"The team. The team."

"Oh them. Anyone can remember them. Bennett, Woodley, Strock. Back in the twenties when West Virginia U. played Pitt, we had Wyjkoski, Koji Liniski, Sicksklocky."

"Wy . . . ? Koj . . . ?"

"That's easy for you to say."

"They came out of the coal mines and the steel mills. They played TOUCH-DOWN, not FIELDGOAL. The Dolphins don't have the guts to run for a touchdown."

Sarcastically he concedes, "Alright. Alright. So you are a football expert, too."

"I know you are remembering how I thought the Dolphins Taxi Squad was a flock of checkered cabs. But I'm smarter now. I even have plans for the Orange Bowl.

"Ha. Ha. Ha. Ha."

(Eagerly) "All Miami has to do is to get rid of football and introduce bull-fighting. Think how the Spanish would run for tickets!"

"And this from an animal lover?"

"Oh, you don't understand. I didn't say bull-man fighting. I said BULLS fighting." I would have the bulls fight each other. Not people. Just bulls.

"What would these bulls do?"

"How about mud wrestling?" And may the best bull win!"

(Glumly) "I don't like it."

"Well, how about a Floating bowl? It could go down the inland waterway and furnish all kinds of entertainment. We could give the gondola concession to the Cubans for a hobby."

Expecting a protest, I put up my hand. "It beats armed robbery. There's money in chickens, too."

"Chickens ?"

"Chicken sports. Legalize cock fighting. It's hard on the feathered losers, though. They get sold to the Haitians for voo doo!"

"Please," he says weakly, "Don't attack baseball."

"Do you know my very best thing about baseball?"

"Frankly, no."

"My very best thing about baseball is the spit."

(Helplessly) "The spit?"

"You know - spitting on the ball."

"But that's illegal."

"I don't care. I love it. Did you know Billy Martin gets his big mouth from his mother? My second most favorite part of baseball is when they hit the referee."

(Helplessly) "The umpire."

"I love it when there are more strikes on the umpire than the batter!"

"But that's illegal!"

"By the way," he says, suddenly alert, "What's that crazy outfit you've got on?"

"These are my old Fairmont Sr. High gym bloomers. I thought they might inspire my sports column."

Grimly, he commented: "You've come a long way, Amelia Bloomer, but what you need is knowledge, not nostalgia. Now go take off those ridiculous pants and let me enjoy my football game in peace."

"But I need a socko ending for my sports column."

FAREWELL TO REAGANOMICS

Once upon a time there was discovered a new and pleasant land, one that was oceans apart from the old and intrigue-infested lands in other areas of the earth. This new and pleasant land was in time occupied by industrious and, for the greater part, God-fearing men and women. They severed their old world political and economic, and sometimes their religious ties, battled and won their independence, wrote a new and unique compact called a Constitution, formed a government according to its provisions, and the people prospered as no people had ever prospered since the dawn of history. However, as always seems inevitable in the course of the rise and decline of civilizations, a strange kind of evil began to infest the land. It grew slowly, step by step, Act by Act, so gradual that even today few people realize what has happened to them and their land. It began when a small group of New York gnomes began to take control of the Government in Washington. The dictionary defines gnomes as a race of creatures who live underground and guard treasure hoards. Hence the phrase gnomes of Zurich in reference to International Bankers. Such gnomelike creatures are indigenous to the Empire of the City in London, to Wall Street in New York, to the privately controlled Reichsbank in West Germany, the Banque de France, the Bank of Italy, and other tax havens where international banking activities prosper.

With government authorization the people of this new and pleasant land were deceived into giving their real money, which consisted of minted pieces of gold and silver, in exchange for little rectangular pieces of greenish paper purporting to be of certain values, but actually worth nothing more than the cost of printing. The year 1913 was the year of the great betrayal. The Federal Reserve Act was passed on the twenty-third of December and signed by President Wilson that same night. The Sixteenth Amendment was ratified and became a part of the Constitution. The seventeenth Amendment was ratified and the States lost their right to appoint Senators to represent them in Washington and had to have them popularly elected instead, which unbalanced the whole federal system so carefully laid out in the original Constitution. Also in that year tax-exempt foundations and other tax shelters became prevalent among the gnomes and their associates, so that David Rockefeller could testify before a Congressional committee: "You know, gentlemen, that I do not owe any personal income tax. But nevertheless, I send a small check, now and then, to the Internal Revenue Service out of the kindness of my heart."

But the one act that was perhaps the most monstrous of all was the turning over of the Nation's gold to the gnomes of New York, now in charge of the Federal Reserve System. Dr. Martin Larson, probably the foremost authority on the Federal Reserve System (outside of its members, who seldom talk about it), recently told those attending a Freeman Institute Century Club Banquet: "When Franklin D. Roosevelt went into office in 1933 he followed the desires of the bankers, just as Woodrow Wilson had done before him back in 1913 when he promised in his campaign speech to get the Federal Reserve Act passed. One of the first things that Roosevelt did ... was to close all the banks. Then he got the Gold Reserve Act passed in 1934 under which the United States government gave the Federal Reserve System all the gold that was in Fort Knox. They gave it to them as an outright gift. They didn't even ask for a receipt in return for the gold. (Emphasis added). This was at a time when gold could be produced for about $12 an ounce. Americans who owned gold were told, under penalty of felony, that they had to turn in all their gold coins to the United States government or to the Federal Reserve System. As of 1954, the Federal Reserve System owned about 28,000 tons of gold in Fort Knox - worth something like $30 billion at $35 an ounce. Now between 1955 and 1972 this gold was sold to foreign investors at $35 an ounce. Today it is worth several hundred billion dollars. As it was sold, the gold was taken out of Fort Knox and placed in the vaults of the New York Branch of the Federal Reserve System. So far as I know, it lies there at this date and is stored there for its foreign owners at the expense of the American taxpayers." (Unquote).

In this connection, there has always been much speculation about who owns the Federal Reserve System. We don't mean the managers of the twelve Federal Reserve Banks who run them for the owners, or the members of the Federal Reserve Board who make decisions in favor of the owners, or those who sit in the Open Market Committee which operates only through the New York Branch of the Federal Reserve. We mean the owners of the Federal Reserve. This has been one of the best kept secrets of this century, because the Federal Reserve Act of 1913 provided that the names of the owner banks must be kept secret. However, R.E. McMaster, publisher of the newsletter The Reaper is said to have asked his Swiss and Saudi Arabian contacts which banks hold controlling stock in the Federal Reserve System. The answer: Rothschild Banks of London and Berlin, Lazard Brothers Bank of Paris, Israel Moses Seif Bank of Italy, Warburg Bank of Hamburg, Lehman Brothers Bank of New York, Kuhn Loeb Bank of New York, and Chase Manhattan Bank of New York. We cannot verify this list personally, but believe it to be authentic. And it would explain why the President of the United States admits that he has no control whatsoever over the Federal Reserve.

To continue with our story, from the administrations of FDR through the administrations of Nixon, the Federal Reserve gradually manages to have the Federal Government sever all monetary connections with gold. In a less complicated way, the same thing happened to silver in 1965. Even the present copper-based penny is due to be discontinued next October, because of its value in copper. So, what we actually are using in place of any money of real value, are these Federal Reserve notes - notes which are not redeemable and must be accepted as legal tender for all debts, public and private. There is also checkbook money, computer-entry money, and credit card money, none of which represent money of real value. All they have is the peoples' confidence in them, and when that has disappeared . . .

Now, when the Federal Reserve System began to slowly deprive American taxpayers of all their money of real value, there also began a whole system of economic theories and national planning schemes which would slowly convert our Constitutional Republic into a Social Welfare State, even though there wasn't enough tax revenue to sustain any such programs. That's when unbalanced budgets began and the national debt started mounting into monetary infinity. So that, at a time when the National debt had legally topped a trillion alleged dollars, and when the annual interest on that debt had become $100 billion, unemployment was dangerously high and inflation had become a double-digit affair, up stepped Candidate Ronald Reagan with a plan that was supposed to solve all these problems, slowly, yes; but surely, definitely. The people elected him because they were sure he had something better to offer than Jimmy Carter. By sheer force of personality and acting ability, he put through the first part of the biggest tax reduction program in all history. But a year and a half later here he is cancelling vacations and stumping the grass roots for passage of the greatest tax increase in peacetime history (although he disputes its size).

So, like it or not, Reaganomics is dead! The largest tax cut in history is to be replaced by the largest tax increase in history. The amazing part of this is that the tax increase was engineered by Republicans in an election year with the blessing of the White House. Not only this, but all these men who swore to uphold the Constitution of the United States have violated it openly and flagrantly by writing the tax bill in the Senate, when all revenue bills must originate in the House. Furthermore, all bills calling for tax increases for the past fifty years have been written and sponsored by Democrats. This largest bill in peacetime history, however, was written by ranking Republican Robert Dole of Kansas, was passed by Republicans in the Senate, who then sent it to the House. The Democrats were gleeful, because if such a massive tax bill actually becomes law, there'll probably be a Democratic landslide in the November elections. But the Republicans in the House, more wary than their Senatorial colleagues, saw the dangers and came out against the bill. This in spite of the fact that their leader, President Reagan, had approved the bill and was actively campaigning for its passage. In fact, Reagan is spending day and night pressuring House Republicans, trying to get them to change their minds, with some success but probably not enough to get the bill passed in the House. In any case, this is the end of Reagonomics, and just what will be tried next seems to be anybody's guess.

President Reagan made his mistake at the very beginning. His economic program, described as a kind of "cross between Keynesian and Monetarist economics," might have worked out if, while calling for and getting his big tax cut, Reagan had also called for a drastic reduction in Federal spending. Here he compromised and, instead, called for an increase in the public debt to make it more than a trillion dollars while adding to that annual interest that must be paid to the stockholders of the Federal Reserve Corporation.

So, the situation went from bad to worse. A couple of weeks ago the Congressional Budget Office estimated that federal deficits would be about $110 to $112 billion for 1982, $141 to $161 billion for 1983, and $145 to $160 each for 1984 and 1985. In addition to the budget deficits, there are those ever present "off budget" deficits (such as Social Security and other insurance programs) which amount to somewhere between $20 and $30 per year. Considering these astronomical "over the budget" spendings, no kind of a tax bill that could be passed would ever take care of such deficits. The only real solution includes drastic reductions in spending, a return to an honest money system, and Congressional action which will do away with the Federal Reserve System. But most Senators and Representatives don't even seem to know what that payment of over $100 billion a year is doing to us.

Meanwhile, the recession continues, threatens to get worse. Unemployment increases. Re-inflation is beginning. And on the foreign policy side of the ledger, even under the alleged "conservative" Reagan administration, the leftward march continues. Taiwan is being sold out and support for Red China is accelerating. The people of El Salvador gives us an excellent example of our present policy toward our Latin neighbors. El Salvadorans voted overwhelmingly against the Marxist program that was being forced upon them by Communist supported terrorists. But now Washington is forcing the same kind of Marxism upon them. They call it "made in Washington socialism" and the dominant feature of it is the insistence upon land redistribution. The federal government is going ahead with plans for that great electronic program (Radio Marti) which aims to sell American style socialism to the Cuban Communists. The U.S. government continues to give financial aid to the communist government of Zimbabwe. We wrote previously of that bill in the House to outlaw the importation of the Krugerrand from South Africa and the severance of trade relations with that country. The U.S. continues to lend aid to the Communists Nations, continues to trade with the U.S.S.R. and Red China.

Occasionally, one sees rays of hope, hope that our Congressmen will remember that they are supposed to represent the interests of their constituents, rather than the interests of Trilateralists and Eastern Establishmentarians. Senator Steve Simms of Idaho provides an excellent current example. Sensing the policy of softness being cultivated by our State Department toward Cuba (we wrote of that in our DBR # 31)

Sen. Symms decided to do something to halt the trend. He wrote a resolution regarding Cuba, presented it to his colleagues and called for a voice vote. Made a rider to a supplemental appropriations bill for the rest of fiscal 1982, the resolution asserts that the United States is determined to:

* Prevent by whatever means may be necessary, including the use of arms, the Marxist-Leninist regime in Cuba from extending by force or the threat of force its aggressive or subversive activities to any part of this hemisphere.

* Prevent in Cuba the creation or use of an externally supported military capability endangering the security of the United States.

* Work with the Organization of American States and with freedom-loving Cubans to support the aspirations of the Cuban people for self-determination.

As might have been expected, Senator Percy, chairman of the powerful Foreign Relations Committee, stormed against the resolution, hinting that it would embarrass Cuba and give President Reagan power similar to that given to President Johnson by the Tonkin Resolution of 1964, etc. Nevertheless, the Symms resolution passed by a roll call vote of 68 to 28. Unfortunately the resolution is just an expression of the attitude of the Senate and has no binding effect. So our official foreign policy will continue to call for developing friendlier relations with Communist Cuba. As Don McAlvany, publisher of the Intelligence Adviser which bears his name, remarked: "U.S. foreign policy can best be described as 'love thy enemies, betray thy friends'."

There also are very disturbing developments domestically. The Administration now is determined to raise taxes, which will work a greater hardship on all of us. The IRS is being strengthened, as we noted in our DBR # 27, titled "Dethroning the I.R.S.". The CIA has been granted domestic surveillance powers. Already the government maintains nearly 1½ billion information files on American citizens (though the files on criminals and terrorist groups and individuals have reportedly been destroyed at the instigation of the old L.E.A.A.). It is said that there is an average of 15 different files on each citizen in the United States. The Post Office is seeking power to censor all newsletters, even stop their distribution, this in violation of the First Amendment. (We covered this story in our DBR #29, "The Coming of the Thought Police".)

The following is quoted from The McAlvany Intelligence Adviser, P.O.Box 39870, Phoenix, AZ 85069: "Whether from the federal bureaucracies or its agencies, the Congress or State or local governments, the attacks from the left on our freedoms and privacy are continuing to spread like a prairie fire. Three remaining 'loopholes of freedom' which this writer expects the left to target in the near future are gold, guns and newsletters. "1984" is approaching like a freight train, but most Americans haven't even noticed. They are too busy playing their video games or watching television.

The world is not coming to an end, but we are on a global monetary, economic and geopolitical rollercoaster ride and the ride is accelerating. Preservation of our assets and of our freedom will be a real challenge over the next five years. While preservation of our assets and of our freedom is essential, it should be remembered that 'the richest man in a sinking lifeboat still sinks.' Americans had better start reordering their priorities to stop the incredible erosion of our freedoms, or as with so many people behind the Iron Curtain, our wealth will be meaningless. As Solzhenitsyn said, 'The hour is very late'."

"ON PRESENTATION . . . OF A GRAND JURY"

They're doing it to us again. With variations, of course, so people won't notice what's being done to them. But it's the same old double-cross that was employed so successfully by the Money Barons seventy years ago. We refer to the grand scheme to so divide the majority of voters in such a way that a minority group is sure to win the next election; this time in November, less than three months away. Here's how the scam was worked back in 1912:

In 1907 the people were told that the American economy was going into bankruptcy unless we had a Central Bank. A panic developed because J.P.Morgan spread rumors that the Knickerbocker Bank and Trust Company of America was insolvent. The public believed it, started a run on the banks, and the rumor came true. Next, Congress set up a National Monetary Commission to study how central banking could be brought to the United States. Senator Nelson Aldrich (David Rockefeller's maternal grandfather) headed a group of sixteen Congressmen that spent two years at taxpayer's expense studying central banking in London, Berlin, Paris, Rome, etc. Nothing much came of this particular study. But Paul Warburg, a German banker, came to the United States, worked as an employe of Kuhn, Loeb & Company at a salary of $500,000 a year. Quite a salary in 1907. Warburg took charge of the project and where the Aldrich Committee failed, Warburg had great success. However, a presidential election was coming up in 1912, and the man most likely to win, William Howard Taft, was an enemy of the central banking scheme. So, the Money Barons worked a double whammy. First, they got Teddy Roosevelt to come out of semi-retirement and organize the Bull Moose Party and thus take votes away from Taft. Meanwhile, the Morgan agent Edward Mandell House took charge of the campaign of Democratic candidate Woodrow Wilson, and Wilson thus won the election in 1912, because the Republicans had been divided into two camps. Even so, the Central Bank scheme would never have been approved except by a clever deception. The ones who wanted the central bank to be established appeared to be against it. That swayed enough Congressmen to vote for the bill (the Federal Reserve Act) because they thought the bankers were against it! The smokescreen of opposition worked, so that on December 22, 1913 the Federal Reserve Act was passed, and President Wilson signed it that night.

The obviously unconstitutional Federal Reserve Act was passed because:

1. The majority party was divided so that Wilson and those that rode in on his coat-tail, could control the government, and
2. Those insiders who were for the Act appeared to be against it, and the Congressmen were thus deceived into voting for something they didn't really understand.

We say the Federal Reserve Act was - and is - unconstitutional for two obvious reasons. First, the Constitution declares that Congress alone shall have the power "to coin money, regulate the value thereof, and of foreign coin." This power has been transferred to a private corporation over which neither the Congress nor the President has any real control. Secondly: "No State shall . . . make any Thing but gold and silver Coin a Tender in payment of Debts;" One of the purposes of this provision in the Constitution was to prevent States from permitting the payment of debts in paper money! Although officials choose to ignore this provision, the fact remains that when you pay your taxes in anything other than gold or silver coin, and when the State accepts anything other than gold or silver coin, you both are violating the Law of the Land! The Fed has made it impossible for you or the State to comply, however, by doing away with both gold and silver coin; so that we no longer have a legal dollar; only unredeemable pieces of paper.

Now, notice how this same "divide and conquer" technique is being used by the Money Barons to solve a current problem. We quote from the lead article appearing in Human Events of August 21, 1982:

"It was quite a spectacle in the Nation's Capital last week - the President of the United States, flanked by his old political comrade, Lyn Nofziger, twisting the arms of Reaganite Republicans to support the largest tax hike in U.S. History. Conservatives could hardly believe what was going on. Hadn't this President told them over and over again that it was wrong - positively harmful - to weigh the economy down with tax increases, let alone burden it during a recession? Hadn't he repeatedly - and vigorously - stressed that the country can't tax itself into prosperity or a balanced budget or lower interest rates? Well, he had, but last week he was singing a far different tune.

"The irony was there for all to contemplate. Here was Ronald Reagan leading the charge for a huge tax hike . . . and he had his avid supporters: liberal Democrats, the New York Times, the Washington Post and The New Republic. The most conservative President we've ever had had also decided to pit himself against his strongest conservative supporters. In the Congress, he was battling such stellar Reaganites as Representatives Mickey Edwards (Okla.), Jack Kemp (N.Y.), Newt Gingrich (Okla.), and Bob Walker (Pa.). He was at odds with virtually every prominent conservative organization in the country - from the American Conservative Union to the Conservative Caucus to the Chamber of Commerce. Not a single prominent conservative publication was in his corner, and virtually every conservative columnist . . . was vehemently in opposition to this 'revenue enhancement' measure. Nevertheless, the President was pushing hard, insisting that defeat of this kingsized hike would be a disaster to the country. He posed the problem to the country this way: 'For a conservative President like me to have to put his arms around a multi-billion-dollar deficit . . . well, it's like holding your nose and embracing a pig.' And so unless his revenue raising measure passes, he contended, the alternative is 'larger budget deficits,' higher interest rates and higher unemployment."

So here we see a repeat of the Teddy Roosevelt act of 1912, with this variation: This time it is the "great conservative leader" who becomes the "great liberal spender" and splits the conservatives right down the middle, some to follow the lead of their conscience, others to follow their leader. The huge tax bill passed narrowly, may be challenged because of its unconstitutionality, but it makes little difference in that the liberals will have won all those seats they lost to the conservatives in 1980. Reagan has become the Money Baron's political Judas. You see, the stockholders in the Federal Reserve Corporation aren't interested in balanced budgets, or tax reductions, or smaller deficits. The more the federal government owes as a national debt, the more interest they will collect. To them, the principal means nothing, except when it increases the interest to be paid them. So, they're not about to let a Jack Kemp alter their system. And Reagan was their man from the very beginning. That should have become very obvious when Bush became his running mate, and when he named members of the Trilateral Commission or the Council on Foreign Relations to every post having to do with foreign affairs, or federal finances.

Not only is this "divide and conquer" scam similar to that used when the Federal Reserve Act was sneaked in and enacted into law; there is yet another important similarity in that this 1982 taxscam is patently unconstitutional. This measure originated in the Senate. It was introduced by Senator Robert Dole of Kansas, was passed by the Senate, and then sent to the House for discussion and eventual approval. The Constitution, however, is very specific in that "All bills for raising Revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives; but the Senate may propose or concur with amendments as on other bills." There are rumors that this huge tax bill may be challenged because of its unconstitutional origin; although this fact was ignored or considered unimportant by a majority in both the Senate and the House. So much for our "representatives" regard for the covenant they swore to uphold and protect when they assumed public office.

WE ARE CONVINCED THAT NO TAX BILL, no budget-balancing amendment, no deficit-diminishing action, no man-made measure of any kind is going to solve our economic and monetary problems. The economy will continue to be strangled, interest rates will remain high, inflation will continue and unemployment will remain a problem just so long as our national economy is based on dishonest, debt money. No matter what type or variation of Keynesian-Monetarist-Supply Side man-made measure of relief is attempted, nothing is going to help so long as the dollar is an I.O.U nothing. And fighting to get our Nation into an attitude where God will heal our land is going to be a painful battle. Because our first enemy is the solidly implanted Federal Reserve System. And its owners aren't about to let us see even an audit of their private corporation.

However, recently there has been brought to our attention a way in which the battle against the Fed might be won. The controlled communications media have done their best to have the story killed. But thanks to an independent patriotic news service including such publications as The Main Street Journal, The Review of the News, The Upright Ostrich and certain newsletters, the story is being told. And it's an important story. (See footnote below for addresses and other information).

To begin at our story's beginning, last year "Red" Beckman of Billings, Montana wrote a paperback, "Born Again Republic," in which he explained the forgotten importance of the Grand Jury system. The Grand Jury, by the way, like our common law, comes to us from England. Back in the 12th century, Henry II established it as a means of reducing the power of the baronial and ecclesiastical courts of medieval England. It evolved into a protection against tyranny and injustice, but also could be misused because of the power of its jury members. The grand jury is mentioned in our U.S. Constitution: "Article V. No person shall be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous crime, unless on presentment or indictment of a Grand Jury." This is repeated at the beginning of the Fifth Amendment. In his book, Beckman points out that "The Grand Jury is made up of people like you and me. The fifth amendment tells us the government must get permission from the Grand Jury in the form of an indictment for violation of government-passed law. The government must go to the people for permission to even prosecute. The Grand Jury also has tremendous investigative power to keep watch on governmental activities.) Beckman adds:

"If a Grand Jury gives the U.S. Attorney General permission to prosecute an individual, the Jury becomes the final check on our system. The Jury must first try the law, as to whether it is a just law and if it is good for the country. Remember this law was written by politicians who may be very dishonest, so when we are on the Jury we have an opportunity to approve or disapprove of our politicians' performance." Later Beckman writes: "We need informed people on our Grand Juries to investigate the Federal Reserve Bank system and find out why our government has no control. We need Grand Juries who will indict any who would promote Democracy as our form of government. 'We the people' have not understood our power when we serve on the Grand Jury.

In June 1981, 23 American citizens from various walks of life "got the message." They became a Federal Grand Jury impanelled at the United States Court House on Main Street in Salt Lake City, Utah. Meeting regularly to discuss possible violations of the law, and to try the laws with which they were dealing, they came to the conclusion last March that there is no gold and silver coin in circulation today, that this is due to some high-level trickery in our Nation's banking agent, the Federal Reserve system, and that there was evidence of criminal activity in the way the Federal Reserve system was being operated. So, the Grand Jury indicted the Federal Reserve system. But, as might be expected, the indictment was dismissed by Judge David K. Winder. The Grand Jury handed down a second indictment. It met that same fate. . But Jury Foreman Hans V. Anderson wouldn't give up. This time a quorum of Grand Jury members rewrote the dismissed indictments and submitted it as a petition for a civil suit against the Fed. A Salt Lake City attorney, Gary James Joslin helped out. Fearing that "the sanctity of the Grand Jury system under common law and the Constitution is at stake," he filed a petition with the court on behalf of the Grand Jury, charging that Judge Winder and U.S. Attorney Brent Ward "were designedly thwarting, obstructing, and otherwise refusing to assist the Grand Jury in this investigation."

And what was the reaction of the Fed when this story broke? Absolute denial. A concerned citizen, Emil Grohman, wrote to his Senator, Carl Levin (Mich.), asking for information. Sen. Levin in turn wrote to the Fed and received a reply on a letterhead of the "Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System," signed by Donald J. Winn, Assistant to the Board. The letter said in part: "The Board has no knowledge of any such indictment. Staff of the Board's Legal Division contacted Brent D. Ward, Esq., the United States Attorney for the State of Utah, to discuss the facts described in Mr. Grohman's letter. Mr. Ward said that the Federal Reserve System has not been the subject of a U.S. Grand Jury indictment, and thus, he had not 'quashed' any such indictment. Moreover, after searching the major news services, the Board's Legal Division has found no stories remotely similar to the story described by Mr. Grohman. I hope this information is helpful to you. Please let me know if I can be of further assistance."

We have no knowledge of the Fed's reaction after the Utah indictment became a civil suit. But there must be much concern because in addition to the Grand Jury action, two State Legislatures have taken action against the Fed. Legislators in Alabama, encouraged by Governor James, passed a resolution which calls the Fed "an oppressive and extortionate privately owned economic monopoly," and calls for passage of H.R. 4358, a bill introduced by U.S. Congressman Henry Gonzales of Texas, demanding a repeal of the Federal Reserve Act. Also, both houses of the State of Washington passed a resolution requesting that a suit be brought in the U.S. Supreme Court challenging the constitutionality of the Federal Reserve and demanding that an independent audit be made of the system. It is hoped that other Grand Juries, and other State Legislatures, will follow suit; and maybe we'll really have the unconstitutional and nation-devouring Fed on the run.

TO SO ALTER AMERICAN SOCIETY. . .

As we watched the children climbing into the dirt-brown bus to be transported into another town for their statist indoctrination, we were reminded of the statement made recently by Eleanor Howe, research editor of The National Educator. She wrote: "Recently deceased Dr. Max Rafferty once told me the school establishment had no need to change to meet any demands by the citizenry. The then Superintendent of Public Instruction for California schools told me on one of my many trips to the State Capitol that battling sex instruction, textbooks, etc., was an exercise in futility. He said, 'On the one hand you wear yourself out mentally, physically and financially trying to get the establishment to see your point of view. Why should they change the course they have charted when, on the other hand, you continue to supply them with all they need to stay in business - your children and your money?' Since he told me that in 1970, I have been trying to get people to understand that they can in no way change the humanist seminaries better known as public schools."

The answer, then, is obvious. Quit paying more and more money into the statist education system; and stop sending your children to statist schools. U.S. News in its issue of Sept. 6, cites a trend: "Last March, Illinois voters in 31 of 37 districts refused requests for tax increases or bond issues to aid local schools. In Michigan, 12 percent of the appeals to sustain current funding were rejected. Fifty-eight Oregon districts may have to shorten their school year unless voters approve more funds. . . . Growing local resistance comes as state and federal officials are reducing school aid. Federal funding for elementary and secondary education could drop as much as 9 percent this fall. . . . Congress has approved higher spending levels, but President Reagan has yet to agree. . . . In Minnesota support for elementary and secondary education dropped to 2.1 billion dollars . . . About 2,500 teachers in Minnesota were laid off . . . The American Federation of Teachers estimates a record of 55,500 teachers will be out of work when schools open this fall."

As funds for statist schools drop off, more and more independent and church operated schools are opened. And an important new development has been spreading like a forest fire. Parents in ever greater numbers are deciding to teach their own children. Where there are no Christian schools available, or where the tuition cost is too high for the family, parents are schooling their own children at home, with dramatically good results. Best source of information on this subject is an excellent manual by Virginia Birt Baker (Mrs. Charles N. Baker), Teaching Your Children At Home, can be ordered from Ginny Baker, Rt. 1, Box 25, Fairfield, Montana 59436; $7 plus $1.75 for postage and handling. Listed in the manual are the compulsory attendance statutes of the various states, court decisions regarding home education, a grade-by-grade curriculum, how to teach, etc. Essential questions are answered plainly and specifically. And for those interested in the development of the home education movement, there is an excellent Home Education Newsletter, a publication of The National Association of Home Educators, Rt. 3, Box 324-B, Gallatin, Missouri 64640. Monthly, $17.50 per year. Please understand that these are not "paid advertisements." It is essential that dedicated Christian Americans see to it that their children are not subjected almost daily to the humanistic and atheistic indoctrination that they are sure to receive in the statist schools of today. The only legal alternative is the Christian school or Christian home education. For this reason, those aiding in the home education movement are literally doing a service to both God and their country.

nesses are extending a hand to the public schools. Among the most popular partnerships are 'adopt a school' programs in which businesses assume responsibility for donating money, equipment or instruction to a particular school. In Atlanta, 104 businesses have adopted 50 schools. Telecommunications giant Scientific Atlanta, for example, works with a magnet school of math and science, lending equipment and engineers to teach classes. . . Apple Computers, Inc., has offered to put a computer in every school if Congress passes a law that would let the firm write off the cost of making the equipment. Observers give the bill an even chance of passing next year, but the Reagan administration opposes the measure. Anthony Sutton and Patrick Wood in their book Trilaterals over Washington, Vol. II, page 13, comment: "A prime Trilateral objective is to blur the distinction between 'private' and 'public' operations so as to divert public funds into private projects set up by Trilaterals to achieve Trilateral objectives."

Zbigniew Brzezinski's book "Between Two Ages" is said to be the bible of the Trilateral Commission. It deals with the development of the "Technetronic Era," the aim of which is, among other things, to do away with all religions, especially Christianity, and all traditional ethical standards, replacing them with what he calls "rational humanism on an international scale." In his book he mentions briefly the educational systems of France, West Germany, India, Italy, Japan, Latin America and the Soviet Union. When he discusses education in America, he begins with the acceptance of PPBS, then concentrates on the technological and electronic development which will alter American society. A computer in every classroom, data banks from which will be issued software, that is, computer discs on all subjects, prepared by "experts" and used instead of textbooks. There is to be distribution of electronic mail, the very latest audio-visual equipment. The final plan is the creation of a controlled and directed society, and a society that is to be dominated by an elite. To tie this all together properly, let's start where Brzezinski started, with PPBS.

In 1954 a series of reports was introduced at the Rand Corporation, a think tank which does much business with our Defense Department. Out of these reports was born the Programming, Planning, Budgeting System (PPBS), often referred to by other names, especially Management By Objective. PPBS, in 1956, was introduced into the Defense Department by Robert Strange McNamara, then its secretary. In 1965, President Johnson initiated the program on a government-wide basis. When the computer came along, PPBS found its home and under the guise of efficiency and financial accountability, the computerized (or technetronic) system has been promoted by the Federal Department of Education, by the State Departments of Education, and certainly by computer producers and programmers. So, pre-programmed instruction found its way into the classrooms of the nation. It should be apparent that whoever controls such programs, controls the minds of the future generations. And, as one critic pointed out, "Objectionable change-agent programs can be hidden within the coded security of the computer - known only to the change-agent who placed them there, down in the bowels of the machine where they will escape the notice of even the most knowledgeable parent!"

There is another side to this technetronic era: Programs are not produced and developed by the "elite" unless there is going to be a profit in the venture. A corresponding friend took the time and trouble to check Standard and Poors at the local library. The research revealed some very interesting information concerning the connections between technetronic equipment producers and members of the Council on Foreign Relations and/or the Trilateral Commission. We quote:

Burroughs Corporation. President, W. Michael Blumenthal (CFR, TC, Rockefeller Foundation).

Control Data Corporation Accountants: Peat, Marwick Mitchell. Bank: Chase Manhattan. On board of directors is listed Phillip M. Morse who is also to be found on the board of Rand Corporation from '48 - '62. Also word has it that CDC has appointed former Vice President Walter Mondale (CFR, TC) to its board of directors.

Texas Instruments, Chairman and Chief Executive Officer, Mark Shepard, Jr. (CFR), President, Fred Bucy (CFR). On board of directors Paul W. McCracken (CFR) and Frederick Seltz (CFR).

Radio Shack, Executive Vice President, James E. Baker (CFR).

Atari, (Warner Communications Corporation), S.J. Ross, Chairman and Chief Executive Officer, President, Jay Emmett (see Spotlight, 28 June '82 p.4). On Board of Directors, Bess Meyerson (CFR).

Borg-Warner Educational Systems, A division of Borg-Warner Corporation on whose board we find William B. Graham (also on the board of Bell & Howell); Thomas C. Theobald (CFR); Robert S. Ingersol (CFR), Aspen Institute, Trilateralist, First Chicago Bank, ARCO, Caterpillar, Weyerhaeuser Corporation. Accountants, Peat Marwick Mitchell.

And so it goes. While the list is far from complete, it should serve to make the point, as to who is in control of the technology designed for the 'Technetronic Era.'

Though not a computer manufacturer, let us take a quick look into the RAND Corporation - the folks who brought you Delphi Technique/Consensus, PPBS, and a public school voucher demonstration; "The First Year at Alum Rock." Chairman and director is listed as J. Paul Austin, (Coca-Cola, CFR, TC, Hudson Institute, Woodruff Foundation, Russell Sage Foundation). Vice President, George K. Tanham (CFR). On the board of directors we find William T. Coleman (Brookings Institute, CFR, TC, Chase Manhattan Bank); George H. Weyerhaeuser (TC.) Six other members of the CFR are listed as directors of RAND in addition to the above named persons: Lewis M. Branscomb, Lloyd N. Morriset, Wesley W. Posvar, Donald H. Rumsfeld, Eleanor B. Sheldon, and Walter B. Wriston.

In view of the aforementioned facts, can there be much doubt about the 'Technetronic Era' being a quantum leap into cybernetic suicide? Is there any doubt but what this does indeed constitute a society dominated by an elite who would not hesitate - in fact has planned to achieve its political ends by using the latest modern techniques for influencing public behavior, opinions, and at the same time keeping society under close surveillance and control? (End of extended quotation).

On the subject of "Global Schooling: The Re-Education of America" for the Technetronic Era, the following article appeared in the Oct. 1980 issue of Trilateral Observer under the sub-heading "Parents Need to be Educated Also": "John I. Goodland wrote in "Schooling for a Global Age": 'Parents and the general public must be reached also. Otherwise, children and youth enrolled in globally oriented programs may find themselves in conflict with values assumed in the home. And then the educational institution frequently comes under scrutiny and must pull back. (Emphasis added.)

The greatest obstacle to the implementing of global education is not lack of funds, of change-agents or computers. It is the parent who rejects statist, atheistic training for his children. Persecution sometimes results, but perseverance for Christ-oriented teaching always receives its own rich reward.

IS THE MEGABANKER CRISIS FOR REAL?

"They took away our gold, they took away our silver, now they're taking away our last hard money - the copper cent," said the rare coin dealer who usually thinks of coins far more valuable than the popular Lincoln Cent. And he was disturbed because "they're doing it in the sneakiest way imaginable. In 1965 silver was removed from our coinage without any attempt at deception. But in 1982 things are different. The 1982 cent is not 88% to 100% copper as all cents have been (with the exception of the war-year 1943) since 1793! The 1982 cent is copper-plated zinc. I see the 1982 zinc cent as a symbol of all that is wrong with our fiat money system. Perhaps we'll see a balanced budget amendment. Perhaps we'll go back on the gold standard. Perhaps we'll see a true fixed-rate income tax system that doesn't penalize the productive members of our society. Perhaps the size of the bureaucratic monster will decrease. This is my hope. But investment decisions should not be based on hope. Realistically, what we are witnessing is the destruction of our currency and the possible death of the American Dream" (David Hall's "Inside View," August, 1982.)

Here is a kind of paradox: If the International Bankers, the IMF and its auxiliaries and the supporting governments had been making their deals in real, honest money, they all would have become bankrupt years and years ago. However, since they are not dealing in honest money but in unbacked paper money that can be created in any given quantity simply by making a computer input and starting a printing press, this economic world that, like Humpty Dumpty, should fall completely to pieces, never seems to do anything except make the very wealthy elitist few very much wealthier, make the ever growing poor welfare recipients, and the ever-dwindling middle class the suckers who pay the bills. ~~These money~~ manipulators have worked out a scheme whereby everybody seems to get along except the productive citizen - until the final collapse, that is.

Some insist that there was a chance that this Great American March Into Economic Chaos might have been stopped, or at least slowed down, with what came to be called Reaganomics. But we can only guess because the experiment was never completed. Reagan did a complete about face and still is trying to prove that he didn't do so. Gary North, in his Remnant Review of Sept. 3, refers to the "new, improved Reaganomics." He comments: "Reaganomics is dead, long live Reaganomics! . . . The fact is, the Republicans have adopted the Dole mentality. It's a replay of 1930 and 1953; hike taxes during a recession. Balance the budget. But the game is far different today. The mentality of the public has shifted dramatically in the last five years. The tax revolt is more open today."

Reflecting that "change in mentality" is the bitter denunciation by Lawrence Patterson in his PSL Newsletter of August 31. Referring to Reagan's promotion of that biggest in history tax bill, Patterson wrote: "The President has turned on his countrymen with a vicious ferocity which surprises even me. The candidate who campaigned for the biggest tax cut has evolved into the President who has aided the Trilateral Party in changing our form of government! He has participated in dishonesty, fraud, immortality, blackmail and harrassment in his secret deal with Trilateral Party member Paul Volcker."

Howev~~er~~much Reagan may have had to do with it, the fact remains that the late summer of 1982 was filled with some strange contradictions. None of the alleged experts seemed to know exactly what has happening. Corporate and private bankruptcies continued occurring at a dangerous pace. More workers were being laid off. Suddenly interest rates began dropping. The stock market exploded. Gold and silver suddenly became more precious in the eyes of the paper-holders. But the economy continued to slip downward. Then came the biggest tax increase in our history. Here are a few of the figures that were released by the government. Business failures had been running at a weekly rate of 572 by late August. This meant 50 failures for every 10,000 companies. Johns-Manville was one of the biggest. Among the failures were more and more banks. All in all, the situation in the United States was bad, and was getting worse. Meanwhile, some bad news was being spread by the International Banking sources. Examples:

POLAND owes $27 billion to 503 Western banks, of which $7 billion in principle and $3 in interest are due this month. These debts can't be paid, must be rescheduled. Poland is demanding major concessions from the bankers; otherwise it has threatened to default. If that happened, we are told that an avalanche will follow.

ROMANIA owes 10.2 billion to the West, about half due or overdue this year, and Romania is now demanding that 80% of its 1981-82 debt be stretched out for another 6½ years, with no payments due for the next three years.

HUNGARY owes $7.8 billion and is asking for massive new and the rescheduling of its existing debts.

YUGOSLAVIA has $4.2 billion in interest and principle due this year and, instead of paying is demanding rescheduling of old debts and more loans. All of the foregoing are Soviet Sattelite countries that keep getting more loans even when they can't, or won't pay the old loans. Now the megabankers have new troubles in Latin America:

MEXICO has the world's largest debt: $80 billion. It owes $22 billion to 55 U.S. banks and $12 billion of that is owed to the biggest megabankers: Chase Manhattan, Manufacturers Hanover, Citibank, Morgan Guaranty Trust, Bankers Trust, and Chemical Bank. After Mexico was about to default, representatives of 100 international banks held an emergency meeting in New York. They agreed to delay Mexico's debt payments, to reschedule $10 billion in loans due this year, and loan Mexico another $1 billion. In addition, the U.S. Government will give Mexico $4 billion. ~~Mexico needs even more than that to stay afloat, and even more dangerous:~~ this current economic crisis could easily lead to a Marxist revolution and takeover within the next few months.

ARGENTINA was in real trouble before its war over the Falklands. Has a foreign debt of nearly $40 billion; owes U.S. banks $9 billion and the bankers are arranging to provide another $17 billion this year.

BRAZIL has a total foreign debt of almost $80 billion, and is seeking new loans.

All of the above does not include the loans that have been made, and may never be repaid by the third world nations. As for our own domestic banking system, The McAlvany Intelligence Adviser has published the following information:

PENN SQUARE was the biggest bank failure since the Depression. It cost Continental Illinois $1 billion, Chase Manhattan $212 million, Seattle First $400 million, etc. CITIBANK has loaned to 3rd world nations 200% more than its reserves, or enough to wipe out its entire shareholder's equity twice.
